II As an auxiliary verb As in the other Germanic (and Romanic) languages, the various moods and tenses of have are used with the pa ple of another verb, to form a series of compound or 'perfect' tenses of the latter, expressing action already finished at the time indicated, and answering to the Latin perfect tenses dedi, dederam, dedero, dedisse, etc

This use arose directly from sense 2 b, the object possessed having in agreement with it a passive participle of a transitive verb as attribute or complement, thus I have my work done — 'I possess or have my work in a done or finished condition', whence, by inference of antecedent action from result, the actual sense 'I have done my work' of the series have you the article ready?', 'have you the article completed?', 'have you completed the article?' In some dialects the distinction between the original and developed forms, e g 'He has the house built', 'he has built the house', is still in a passive stage, with some past participles, as begun, completed, done, finished, etc, it is recognized generally With transitive verbs the developed use was already frequent in OE., the pa. pple. when it originally agreed in number and case with the object, was sometimes left unaffected In early ME the usage is found with verbs of action without an object, whence it was extended to intransitive verbs, especially, at an early date, to the verb to be (as in French and other Romanic languages, and in addition to its continental transitive use), as he has been, had been, will have been, etc (cf h it a tit (see er it gewesen) Verbs of motion and position long retained the proper use of the auxiliary be, and have is still used to express resulting state, while he has gone expresses action See Bk iv 4 b

Hazy (hē'zi), pret. 3rd sing. masc. nom. Forms see below. [The simplest form of the (orig. demonstr.) base hi-, which supplies not only the pronoun forms him, his, her, (h)it, (h)em, but also the adverbs here, hence, hither. OE. he, hie was cogn. with OFris. hi, hē (see hin), neut. hit, OS. hi, he, hie. The other old Teutonic langs. (with OS. in the objective cases) have parallel forms from stem ei-: OHG. er, Goth. is. Fragments of a hi- stem, in sense 'this', are found, however, in Gothic, in dat. himma, acc. m. and n. hina, hita, they differ only in the initial h from the corresponding inflexions of is 'he.' In OHG. the Last Franconian had also her in place of the usual OHG. er; 'he' in English, the typical form in all ages has been he, from which emphasis probably produced heo, hye, hee, and tonelessness hi, i, which last long prevailed in representations of familiar speech, as in the dramatists, and is still a prevalent dialect form. In OE. the base he- supplied all parts of the third personal pronoun, singular and plural, it was thus inflected

1 In all the cognate languages, even in the early period, certain parts of the he or s group were lost, and supplied by the corresponding parts of the demonstrative base syā, s, derivatives of sā, sō. This extended to English also in the 11th or 12th c. when the fem. hēo, hie, became supplanted by the fem. demonstr. sēo, sīo, which appears as sco, sche=she in northern, and scē–she in midl., now Sc., y. In the south and west heo (he, hee) survived in literature till the 15th c. and is still native in the dialects in various forms, but she has been the only literary f. pron. since the introduction of printing. The plural pronouns have fallen into

2 The original plural has been supplanted by a plural of the demonstrative that. In the northern dial. c1250, the O.F. hī, plural of hē, was often used instead of hai, hei, within the next two centuries the equivalent ON þeir must have been adopted, as it appears c1300 in full use in Sc. as þei whence the later they, thay, they. But as it gradually spread south, and before 1500 superseded hy, hy, first in the nominative, and then also in the other cases, so that the plural forms are now they, them, their. But a relic of the earlier pronoun survives, in southern dialect and colloquial use, in the dat. acc. form em, commonly written 'em

3 The original accusative forms have every where, except in the neuter, been replaced by an extended use of the dative: this began in the midl. dial. before 1000, and was completed in the southern by 1450. In this change, the analogy of the 1st and 2nd persons was followed: see Me). Traces of the original use sing. masc. him remain as em, 'm (um), in southern dialects: see HIM

4 In the neuter the acc. hit remained, and also displaced the dative him, in all constructions. hit lost its initial h between 12th and 15th c. in Standard English, and in the 17th c. the original neuter genitive his was displaced first by it, and then by it's, its

5 The genitive cases his, hire, hir., (their), were treated after 1100, on the earlier analogy of mīn, thīn, our, your as adjectives, and inflected to agree with substantives, the plurals hises, hire (heres) being used by Wyclif. Like the other possessives, they also developed two forms, an adjective and an absolute, the latter being hirs, theirs (the -s of which was originally the possessive -s). hirs was used by Wyclif, but in mod. Eng. his and its take no additional -s in the absolute form. Hism, herm, theirn (perhaps by false analogy with my, mine) appear in 16th c. in midl. counties, but are now only dialectal. The changes which these, originally genitives of the Personal Pronoun, have undergone, make it more convenient in modern grammar to treat them separately as Possessive Pronouns.

The present inflexion of this pronoun (with its derived possessives) is therefore -headed (hed), suffix, later form of ME. hēde, hēd, found already in 12th c., but not known in OE., though pointing etymologically to an OE. hadit*, ? old case hādi, fem., beside OE. had masc., corresp to OHG. -heit masc. and fem.

The suffix was orig an independent subst (OTent hauds masc. = Goth. haidus, manner, way (see HAD s., HEDE), which, after coming to be used only in comb., was practically only a suffix of condition or quality. In its present use, -headed appears to have been appropriated to bold-hede, lite-hede, drunkenhede, fairhede, falsehede, etc.; but it was soon extended to shs, as in longhithede, manhede, unspotlethede, womanhede (all in Chaucer), and was then used indiscriminately with hād (hede, hood) from OE. hād. In Cursor M. Maiden-hede, godshede, prestes hede, prestis hede, occur as MS. variants. Thus first the tendency to the obsolescence of hede, head, and the substitution, even in wds. of hood as second, fatherhood, childhood, etc. One or two special forms in -head = godhead, maidenhead (thus distinguished from godhood, maidenhood), only remain. In Scotch, on the contrary, -hede, -head, remained the current form, but is now more or less obsolescent. See also HEAD sb., HEDE sb., and HOOD.

Headache (he·dĕik). Forms see HEAD sb. and ACHE. Also 5–8 -ake, 7 q-oach.

1 An ache or continuous pain, more or less deep-seated, in the cranial region of the head

Beside the simple vb., OE had, like the other old Teutonic tongues, the compound gehéran (Goth. gahausjan) in the same sense, but perhaps with a distinct implication of completeness of action. In some uses gehéran was more frequent in OE than the simple vb., so that the latter is rare or not evidenced, it occurs more frequently in Old Northumbrian, and becomes commoner after 1200 perhaps under Norse influence. The pa. ppl. in -ed, in early ME., southern dialect, may belong to either verb. See Yhear

Cognates of han jan outside Teutonic are unknown. Conjectures of its relationship to the root are Far. to I. audire, and of Lat. cavere are still extremely doubtful.]

Heart of grace, phrase. Forms 6 herte a grease, 6 hart a grase, hart of grease, grease, grace, 6–7 hart at grase, 6–7 heart of grasse, h at grasse, 7 h to grasse, a grasse, 7 h a grace, 6– heart of grace [Not known before 1530; origin and early form uncertain.]

The simple take hart (= pluckup courage) is as old or older. The words heart of grace were both written herte of hart in 16th c. Hence it has been surmised that take herte a grese or hart of grease, was orig. a punning or sportive expansion of take herte, after the earlier herte of grease, hart of grease, for hart (see HART 1 b), and that when the expression became proverbial, attempts were made to put sense into it by substituting grace and grace. Of course, heart of grace might be the original, and all the other forms popular corruptions of it, but it is not easy to explain grace in such a connexion: there is no corresponding h cause de grace in any case, the number and variety of the forms show that the analysis was not clear even in the 16th c.]

3 Latent heat (Physics) the heat required to convert a solid into liquid or vapour, or a liquid into vapour, which, as it does not raise the temperature and so become sensible to the touch as warmth, was regarded as being absorbed and remaining latent in the resulting liquid or vapour

Now viewed as the energy absorbed during the change of state, partly in increasing the molecular potential energy of the body and partly in compressing external bodies

As this word is used in all the Germanic langs. in the sense ‘non Christian, pagan’, when it could only have arisen after the introduction of Christianity, it is probably a parallel formation, like some other terms of Christian origin (e g church), it was first used in Gothic, and thence passed to the other Teuts. This is supported by the use by Ulfilas in Mark vii 6, of the fem form haiþnō (Vulg mulier cananea, all OE versions hæðen). The word has generally been assumed to be a direct derivative of Gothic haiþi, Heath, as if dweller on the heath, taken as a kind of loose rendering of L pāgānus rustic, villager, rustic, later after Christianity became the religion of the country districts, ‘pagan, heathen’ were still retained in rural districts, ‘pagan, heathen’ But in this there are difficulties chronological and etymological, in reference to the form and use of the word, and Prof S Bugge (Indog Forsch V 178) includes this among several words which point to Armenian influence on the language of the Goths. Hanf was undoubtedly a loan haipanis, which he refers to Armenian hetanos ‘heathen’, and sēr sēron ‘nation’, pl ‘nations Gentiles, heathen This would explain the OHG form heidan, with d for th, the suffix was, as in crestan, is veiled under the ordinary in, an, from n But even so, the stem vowel has probably to be explained by some influence of the i of sēr]

Strictly in the 17th c. the Scripture phrase is found with the two words improperly hyphened, which led the way to the use of help-meet, helpmeet, and then helpmate. But the recognition as a word is chiefly of the 19th c. It is unknown to Johnson, Todd, Richardson, and to Webster 1828. In the 19th c. they are used more grammatically meet help, meet help of one's heart, one's heart.]

'Day blindness', a visual defect in which the eyes see indistinctly, or not at all, by daylight but tolerably well by night or artificial light (But used by many in the sense of 'night blindness', Nyctalopia)

'Day blindness' is the etymological meaning of the word, and the sense in which it is used by the contrary of νυκτάλωψ, was used by Galen But, as Nyctalopia was, from an early date, taken by some in the opposite sense, these all to reversed the etym logical sense of hemeralopia, and used it as 'night blindness', 'day sight', a if the word were hemiopia With the exception of Copland and Henry Power, all or most modern authors have used the term in the sense of night blindness The Royal College of Physicians of London have reverted to the true meaning of the word in their Nomenclature of Diseases (1901

So Ital. But the Medical Dictionary of J. P. Foster New York, 1892, continues the non-etymological sense of day vision might blindness. The word was rightly used by Paré in 1582 (Encyc. xv. 3 (Littré) 'Le contraire est quand on voit mieux de nuit que de jour, et se peut dire hemeralopia en grec, et de chat en françois.

Several Gr. words containing this element were in use as technical terms in later L., e.g. hemicyclium, hemina, hemi-pharrium, hemistichium. In the modern langs. they are very numerous, not only in terms adopted or adapted from Gr. (directly or through L.), but in new formations scientific or technical, from Greek, or on Greek analogies. Words from Latin have the corresponding prefix SEMI-, but there are instances of hybridism in the use of both prefixes.]

Half-, one half, the half, pertaining to or affecting one half, esp. in Anat., Biol., and Path. Pertaining to one of the two halves (right and left) of the body, or of any of its symmetrical organs.

The latinized hengestmannus in 1360, suggests immediate formation from OE hengest, but there is the difficulty that no trace of the latter appears after c 1100, exc. in the element of proper names, where OE. Hengestes ea, mod. Hoxe, Hinkes, Hinxhes in accordance with the normal phonetic change of OE eng to later eng. On the other hand though hengst was also MLG., and hinxt, heynst, hensi the MDu forms, and Hans Wynsele in quot 1377 was evidently of Dutch or German nativity, no example of the compound hengstman, or henxtman, is found in these languages. (Mod Gr hengstmann, 'groom of a stallion, is recent and technical.) As to the original sense, the Promp Parv renders henycemann by med L. gerolocutia, a contemporary L. glossary, Wr Wülcker 586/21, has 'gerolotista, somturman' (cf also 582/11 Pala Varus, a somturman, faleratus), a sompterman is Gerulo, vetturinus (in Du Cange also gerulatista) was app a groom of gerulus 'carrier, porter', also 'dumper horse': cf Promp Parv, 'Male hors [OE mula, f mulle trunk], gerulus, somarius', 'somer hors, gerulus, somarius, summarius' Those equivalents seem to point to the sense 'attendant on a pumper horse'; with the original meaning was simply 'attendant on a horse', 'groom', which might rise to be an honourable title, as in the current 'Groom in waiting'. 'Groom, & vshereth' of Ado the history of marshalle (also originally 'horse servant', 'groom' The Hengestmannus, Mustard and Sparkes, of 1360, the 'Harlotter and Henxt Page' in Morte Arthur, and the 'henxtmen and lackes' of P Holland (1618), were apparently of the rank of ordinary grooms; but in connexion with the English court, the word came to connote a position of honour, and the royal hench men of the 15–16th c. were usually young men of rank Into historical sense, the word appears to have become obs by 1650 (see sense 1). For the modern use see sense 2. For discussion of this word in N & Q 7th s II, III 8th s. III, etc., also Skeat, Student's Pastime, several articles.)

Henry, Earl of Derby, afterwards Henry IV, had in his retinue, in his Expedition to Prussy and Palestine 1392–3, 'two henxmen', to whom there are many references in the Accounts published by L. Toulmin Smith (Camden Soc) 1894. quoted in quot 1392 In 1402, two henxtmen accompanied Henry's daughter Blaunche from Cologne to the parts of Almaigne, where she went as a bride From the 14th century henxmen or henchmen formed part of the regular household or suite of English kings and queens, their number rising from three under Edward III to seventeen under Henry VIII. Richard III, under the command of the Master of the House At the coronation of Richard III in 1483, his queen had 'ten five henches and eight on horses with saddles' In the 16th c nobles and knights also had their henchmen, usually three. 16 Here- in combination with adverbs and prepositions

These originated, as in the other Teutonic langs, in the juxtaposition of here and another adv qualifying the adverb verb Thus in Herebyfore 1st quot hier beforan = here (in this document), before it or at an earlier place) Cf Hitherto, Hereafter in which here is similarly used But as many advs were identical in form with prepositions, and there was little or no practical difference between 'here, at an earlier place' and 'before or at an earlier place than this', the adv came to be felt as a prep governing here (=this place), and, on the analogy of this, new combinations were freely formed of here (there, where) with prepositions which had never been adverbs, as herefor, herefro, heron, herewith ?

a with adverbs as here above, here beneath, here within, here without, hereforth, forward in this direction or this way, here next, next to this, immediately after this Also Hereaway, Hereunder, etc b with prepositions = this, this place, this matter, etc as hereabove, here-among, here beside, here-unto, here within, here-without, ? hereafore - Herebefore, ? hereintil (Sc), herein, ? hermid, herewith, ? hereover, in addition to this, ? hertozeines, against this, on the other hand Also Hereabout, Herewith, etc, etc.
