PREFACE TO VOLUME V.

THIS volume contains the words beginning with the letters H, I, J, K. Including the Main words, to which separate articles are allotted, the special Combinations or compounds, explained and illustrated under the Main words, and the Subordinate entries of obsolete and variant forms entered in their alphabetical places, with a reference to the Main words under which they are treated and illustrated, the number of words amounts to 32,700. The Combinations of simple and obvious meaning, of which lists are given under the Main words, without further explanation, but in most cases with illustrative quotations, number 4,318 more, raising the actual total of words treated in the volume to 37,018

These words are thus distributed among the four letters:

	Main words	Subordinate words	Special Combinations	Obvious Combinations	Total [1]
H (516 pages)	8,900	2,145	2,260	2,708	16,013
I (630 ,,)	11,350	1,636	683	778	14,447
J (116 ,,)	1,727	402	441	419	2,989
K (112 ,,)	1,577	1,084	495	413	3,569
Total	23,554	5,267	3,879	4,318	37,018

Considered as to their status in the language, the Main words are distinguished approximately into those native or fully naturalized, and still current, those now obsolete (marked †), and those considered as alien or imperfectly naturalized (marked ‖). The distribution of the Main words is as follows.

	Current	Obsolete	Alien	Total [2]
H	7,061	1,463	376	8,900
I	7,847	3,333	170	11,350
J	1,361	280	86	1,727
K	1,098	267	212	1,577
Total	17,367	5,343	844	23,554

The differing proportions of the various classes of words here tabulated reflect the different parts played by H, I, J, and K, as initial letters in English H is, on the whole, a normal letter, containing the usual proportion of old words, Old English and French, with additions from all the sources that normally contribute to the English vocabulary, none of these being in excess, unless, perhaps, the modern learned words from Greek; it contains no Latin prefix. I, on the other hand, containing the words formed with the Latin prefixes in- (il-, im-, ir-), inter-, intra-, intro-, is preponderatingly Latinic. Hence, whereas in the Bosworth-Toller Anglo-Saxon Dictionary H occupies five times as many pages as I, in the modern English dictionary I requires rather more pages than H. But few of these Latinic words are

[1] If to these be added the words in Volumes I-IV, we have for the contents of the first eleven letters of the alphabet, the following figures old enough in the language to have sustained any phonetic or even orthographic change, and few of them are of the kind (simple substantives) that readily form compounds, hence, the number of variant forms requiring to be registered as 'subordinate words', and especially of 'combinations', is small in proportion to the whole. On the other hand a great number of the words that have been at various times derived or formed from Latin, have failed to become permanent constituents of the language, they have again gone out of use, hence, the 'obsolete words' in I are disproportionately numerous. J and K are imperfect letters, more than half the words which would belong to them phonetically, are actually spelt with G and C, hence they are lexicographically among the small letters. Also, they were not properly Old English letters; but J contains old words from or through French, while K was substituted in early Middle English for Old English C 'hard' before e, i (y) and n The proportion of 'combinations' in J and K is somewhat normal, as is also that of 'subordinate words' in J; but in K, owing to so many C words having variants in K, the proportion of 'subordinate words' is enormously large, three times as great as in H and J, and five times as great as in I. Both letters contain a very large number of words adopted from Oriental, African, American, Australian, and Oceanic languages (these being phonetically usually written with J and K, in preference to G and C); hence, the 'alien words' in J are proportionally thrice as many as in I, and one-fourth more than in H; and in K three-and-a-half times as many as in H, and seven times as many as in I. In those pages of K which contain the non-English initial combinations Ka-, Kh-, Kl-, Ko-, Kr-, Ku-, Ky-, these exotic words may be thought to superabound, yet it would have been easy to double their number, if every such word occurring in English books, or current in the English of colonies and dependencies, had been admitted; our constant effort has been to keep down, rather than to exaggerate, this part of 'the white man's burden.'

Many workers have contributed to the production of this volume. In addition to the volunteer Readers, by whom so many of the quotations have been collected, and of whom the chief have been mentioned in Vol. I, the services have to be recorded of Mr S. Taylor, of the White House, Crossings, Chapel-en-le-Frith, who at an early period arranged the materials for HO- alphabetically and chronologically, and of Mr. A. W. Longden, of Hook Green, Marple, Stockport, who did the same for those of HU- and HY-. The sub-editing of HA- was undertaken by the late Mr. G. A. Schrumpf, who, however, at his death, had only partially put the quotations in order as far as Har-. A portion of HE-, including Head and its derivatives, was arranged by Mr. H M. Fitz-Gibbon, of 49 Merrion Square, Dublin. The materials for HI- were skilfully sub-edited by Dr R J Lloyd, of Liverpool, parts of HO- and HY-, Hoo- to Horus, Hyp- to Hyz-, by the late Mr John Peto, another part of HO-, Hos- to Hoz-, and the whole of HU- by the late Mr. W Noel Woods, B A, and Mrs. Woods, part of HY- to Hym-, by Miss M. Quick, Clifton. The whole of the rest of the materials (with the exception of the pronominal words) were sub-edited between 1883 and 1890, by E. L. Brandreth, Esq, Member of Council of the Philological Society, who subsequently also (1895–8) revised and re-subedited the greater part of the letter. For preliminary assistance with I we are indebted mainly to the indefatigable labours of Miss J E A Brown, of Further Barton, near Cirencester, and to the Rev. Canon Rupert Morris, D D., the former having sub-edited most of the materials as far as the end of Into, the latter the remainder from Intra onward. A section from Inconcealable to Indiscriminate was prepared by the Rev. E. H. Sugden, now Master of Queen's College in the University of Melbourne, before he left England in 1887, and a small portion by Mr T Wilson, of Rivers Lodge, Harpenden. The whole of the letter I was subsequently revised, with incorporation of new quotations, by Miss Brown, whose work at the materials for this letter thus extended from 1887 to 1900. The materials for J were, at an early stage (1882–6), arranged by the late Rev Walter Gregor, D D, of Pitsligo, the whole was subsequently (1896–9) sub-edited, with much addition of material and investigation of difficult points, by the Rev. C. B. Mount, M A, Oxford. The materials for K were originally put in order for the Philological Society by Mr. H. Hucks Gibbs, now Lord Aldenham; they have been sub-edited for us during 1892–3, and again in 1899–1900, with great research into the literary history of the Oriental words, by Mr Brandreth. No fewer than five of these excellent helpers have passed away without seeing the printed sheets of any portion of the letters at which they worked; of their esteemed services, as of those of the survivors above-named, and especially of those of Mr. Brandreth, Miss J. E. A. Brown, and Mr. Mount, whose assistance has been so continuous and so effective, the heartiest acknowledgement is now made.

In the proof stage we have again to record the help of (alas! that it should be necessary so to describe him) the late Fitzedward Hall, D C L, of Marlesford, Wickham Market. This help was continued till within a few weeks of his death, which took place on February 1, 1901, at the age of seventy-six. We have had in every volume to record the supremely valuable services gratuitously rendered to the Dictionary by this eminent English scholar, who, as a pure labour of love, for many years devoted several hours every day to the examination of our proofs, in order to make additions to them from his enormous collections of notes on English words, phrases, and idioms, containing quotations from, or references to, thousands of books of the last four centuries. To the Dictionary his death is an incalculable loss, a loss that would indeed have been irreparable but for the fact that he left directions that all his MS. quotations, references, notes, and memoranda, should be handed over to the Editor, and that we should have the free use of the books in his own extensive library to which these referred. We have accordingly begun, with the assistance of many willing hands, to have the quotations indicated in his reference-lists excerpted, put upon slips, and added to our materials, so that the Dictionary may continue in some measure to profit by his researches, although at the cost of much time and labour which during his lifetime he himself bestowed. Hearty acknowledgement is made of the way in which Mr. Richard D. Hall has done everything to facilitate this completion of his honoured father's services to the Dictionary and to English lexicography.

Second only to the contributions of Dr. Fitzedward Hall, in enhancing our illustration of the literary history of individual words, phrases, and constructions, have been those of Dr. W C. Minor, received week by week for words at which we were actually working. For other help in the proof stage we have to thank the Right Hon Lord Aldenham; the Rev Canon Fowler, of Durham; the late Mr Russell Martineau, M A (down to his lamented death in December, 1898); the Rev J B Johnston, B D, Falkirk, Monsieur F J Amours, Glasgow; Mr. A. Caland, Wageningen, Holland, and especially Miss Edith and Miss E. P Thompson, now of Lansdowne, Bath, and Mr. R. Jowitt Whitwell, of Oxford, whose researches, both in the Bodleian Library and at the Public Record Office, have added much to our illustration of the history of legal and historical terms. Grateful acknowledgement is also made of the etymological assistance rendered by Professor Eduard Sievers, of Leipzig, and by M Paul Meyer, Member of the Institute of France, as also, in particular words, of that of Professors Napier, J. Wright, Bywater, Robinson Ellis, Driver, Margoliouth, Morfill, and Rhŷs, of Oxford; Professors Kluge and Schroer (Freiburg-im-Breisgau), Luick (Graz), Morsbach (Gottingen); Dr J. W. Muller, Leyden, of Mr. J. T. Platts, M.A. with Persian and Indian words, and of Professor Bullock with Chinese words; and especially, in J and K, of Mr James Platt, junior, of 77 St. Martin's Lane, London, whose researches have enabled us to give the exact history of many words from far-off languages. The friends who have helped in the treatment or investigation of the history of historical, legal, philosophical, scientific, and technical words in this volume are too numerous to mention, most of them have already been named in earlier prefaces; but particular mention must here be made of the help of Mr. R E Baynes, M.A.; Rev Andrew Clark, M A., Mr W. A Clarke, F L S, Mr C. H. Firth, M A, LL D, Mr. W. W. Fisher, M.A; Professor Gotch, F R S., Mr. Horace Hart, M A., Mr R R. Marett, M A, Professor H. A. Miers, M A, Professor Odling, F.R.S., Sir Frederick Pollock, D C L; Mr G F. Stout, M A.; Mr V. H Veley, F R S, Mr C C. J. Webb, M A, Professor J Cook Wilson, and the late Sir John Stainer, of Oxford, of Professor Alfred Newton, the Rev. Professor Skeat, and Dr W Aldis Wright, Cambridge; Mr. W. W. Dobell, Dr. F. J Furnivall, Mr James Hammond, Dr J. A Kingdon, London, Dr. S R. Gardiner, the Deputy-Keeper of the Public Records; the Director of the Royal Gardens, Kew, the Director of the Natural History Museum, South Kensington, the Secretary of the Zoological Society, Mr Barclay V. Head and Mr. E. J Scott, of the British Museum; Mr. E. W. Hulme, of H M Patent Office; also of Sir J S Burdon-Sanderson and Dr W. Sykes, F S A, of Woking, with the history of medical terms, of Professor J K. Laughton and Mr M Oppenheim, with the history of naval terms, of Professor Albert H. Chester, of New Brunswick, N.J., with names of minerals, and of Mr. Albert Matthews, of Boston, U.S, with the history of many American uses of words, especially during the Colonial period.

The Assistants in the Scriptorium, who have been engaged on this volume, are Messrs C G Balk, A. T. Maling, M A.; F J. Sweatman, M.A.; A R. Sewell, and H. Price. On parts of the work earlier or later, there have also been engaged Messrs C. T. Onions, M A, A H Mann, B A, E J. Thomas, B A, and Miss Hilda Murray. Mr. Alfred Erlebach, B A, a valued member of the Scriptorium staff in earlier times, who continued to render occasional assistance, died on October 7, 1899 In the latter half of this volume I have also had the collaboration of Mr. W A. Craigie, M A., who has taken a large share in the preparation of K, especially of the etymological articles, and has now been entrusted with the preparation of volume VIII

H.

H (ēɪtʃ), the eighth letter of the Roman alphabet, ancient and modern, representing historically the Semitic Ḥ, Ḥeth or Ḥaṯh, through the Greek H, Ḥeta, Eta, originally the eighth, but, in the later Greek alphabet, after the omission of ϝ (see F), the seventh letter The Semitic letter represented a laryngal or guttural spirant, or a rough aspirate, and it was with the aspirate value that the letter was originally used in Greek and passed thence into Roman use (In the later Greek alphabet, H was used as a vowel, to express long ē, which had previously not been distinguished from short e see E.) When the Roman alphabet was applied to the Germanic languages, H was used initially for the similar aspirate or breath sound, which had arisen out of a pre Germanic or Aryan k, through the stages of guttural aspirate (kh), and guttural spirant (χ), medially and finally h was put for the guttural spirant itself, which, in later times, came to be written gh or ch thus, Gothic haiuh, OHG hōh, OE hēah, mod English high (gh mute), Scotch heich, Ger hoch In Old English, h occurred not only before the vowels, but also before the consonants l, n, r, w (representing the pre Germanic kl, kn-, kr-, kw-, or gl, as in hlāf loaf, hnecca neck, hræfn raven, hwā who, it now stands initially only before vowels Its power is that of a simple aspiration or breathing, with just sufficient narrowing of the glottis to be audible before a vowel It is also used to form consonantal digraphs (sh, th, etc.) with simple sounds; and it is often silent, or merely lengthens a preceding vowel

The name aitch, which is now so remote from any connexion with the sound, goes back through ME ache to OF ache = Sp ache, It acca, pointing to a late L accha*, akkha*, or ahha*, exemplifying the sound, cf It effe, elle, emme, etc (The earlier L name was ha) The plural occurs as aitches, aches, hs, h's

In late Latin, and in the Romance languages, the aspirate was no longer pronounced, and consequently often not written, in modern Italian it is entirely omitted, as in eretico, istorico, orribile In Old French simil arly the mute h was originally not written, and it was in this form that many Old French words, such as abit, abīe, air, erbe, eritage, anest, onor or onur, ure or oure, ympne, were originally adopted in English From this stage we derive the still existing forms able, ability, arbour (herbere), estler But at a later period, imitation of the Latin spelling, by scribes who knew that language, gradually led to the restitution of h in the writing of most of these words in French, and thence also in English. In French the h, though thus artificially reinstated in spelling, remained mute, but in England it was gradually, after the usage of the native words, restored in pronunciation, so that at the present day only a very few words, viz herr, honest, honour, hour, with their derivatives, remain with h mute, though others, such as herb, humble, humour, were so treated very recently, and are by some people still, and hostler (also spelt ostler) is so pronounced by the majority A trace of the former muteness or weakness of h in other words is also seen in the still prevalent practice of using an before words with initial h, not accented on the first syllable, as hereto-fore, historical, humane, hypothenuse, and in such archaic forms as 'mine host', and the biblical 'an Hebrew' In the ME period, during which h was being gradually reinstated in words from Old French, these show great variety of spelling, the same word appearing now with, and now without h, this uncertainty reacted upon other words beginning with a vowel, so that these also often received an initial h (due probably in some instances, as habundant, to a mistaken notion of their etymology). This spelling has been permanently established in the words hermit and hostage, among others

In Old English, as in the Teutonic languages generally, initial h was strongly and distinctly aspirated. But early in the Middle English period it was dropped in pronunciation and writing before l, n, and r The old hw was from the 12th c commonly written wh sometimes so only, in Scotch quh, qwh, indicating a variety of pronunciation (see W) Before vowels, in words of Old English or Norse origin, h has been regularly retained in the standard spelling and pronunciation but in many English dialects, especially those of the mid and southern counties (not in Scotland, Ireland, or the United States), the aspirate has disappeared as in ordinary etymological element, and is now employed only with other functions, viz to avoid hiatus (e g the egg, pronounced thē h egg), and especially in the emphatic or energetic utterance of a syllable with an initial vowel, being then prefixed without distinction to words with or without etymological h, thus horse, ass, usually ess, iss, emphatic illy (or after a vowel) hiss, hiss In earlier periods, the h dialectal habits naturally affected the written language of literature, where their influence was reinforced by the uncertainty that prevailed as to initial h in words of French and Latin origin So that during the Middle English period, and down to the 17th c, we find numerous instances of the non etymological absence or (more often) presence of initial h in native words also In exchange for not confining to English some modern Dutch and Flemish dialects, especially those of Zealand, Flanders, and North Brabant, have retained the non etymological h as an orthographic device it to avoid hiatus, and to impart emphasis, exactly like the English dialects, while in Old High German, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and, above all, Middle Flemish literature, the non etymological absence and presence of initial h is even more marked than in Middle English In this Dictionary, some of the chief forms found in earlier use with adventitious initial h are mentioned in their alphabetical order, with a reference to their proper spelling, especially when this is not seen by simple omission of the h, but in other cases it is to be presumed that, when a ME word in h is not entered here, it will be found in the form without h

In recent times, the correct treatment of initial h in speech has come to be regarded as a kind of shibboleth of social position, this has resulted in the cultivation of the educated usage in many quarters where it is not native But even in educated pronunciation, there are cases in which h is usually mute, e g at the beginning of a syllable after certain consonant groups, as in exhaust, exhortation, and in such suffixes as -ham, -hop, in Chatham, Clapham, Durham, Greenhope, Stanhope, Thirlspot, Aberd in Aberdeen, as which we have for indicating a long vowel in foreign or dialect words The silence of h in certain positions contributed to the currency of such spellings as the obsolete prehaunmire, prohme, abhominable

By the combination of h with consonants, numerous digraphs are formed for the expression of simple sounds, the origin of this goes back to the ancient Greek alphabet, which used PH, TH, KH, for the aspirated consonants, which were afterwards provided with single symbols Φ, Θ, Χ, and sank into simple spirants In Latin the digraphs were retained, and thence th, ch, and often ionally ph, were taken to represent German spirants or sounds In Old English, which had þ, ð, for the sound or sounds represented on the continent by th, these digraphs had little currency until after the Norman Conquest, when introduction of th, ch, gh, and sometimes ph, for certain English sounds, and substituted th for OE þ, w, the development of a simple sound (j) from the OE combination sc, the th through ash, as the digraph sh, ph and wh (pronounced f and hw) were adopted from Latin as the representatives of Gr φ and χ, in more recent times kh has been used to express Slavonic and Semitic guttural spirants, bh, dh, gh, ph, th, kh, to represent Sanskrit and Indian aspirates, or other alien sounds, and zh (on the analogy of s : sh :: z : zh) for the phonetic representation of French j in déjeuner, symbolized in this Dictionary by ʒ (For the history and use of these digraphs, see under their respective initial letters, C, G, etc.)

The sense development, as seen in Latin and the modern languages taken together, is thus ref Holding, having, 'havour', hence the way in which one holds or has oneself, i e. the mode or condition in which one is, exists, or exhibits oneself, a) externally, b) in connexion with pertinence, fashion of body, mode of clothing oneself, dress, habitation, b) in mind, character, or life, hence, mental constitution, character, habitude of acting, comporting oneself, or dealing with things, habitual or customary way (of acting, etc.), personal custom, accustomedness This development was completed in ancient Latin and had received some extension in OF, before the word became English. In our language, senses were taken, from time to time, from Fr or L, without reference to their original order of development, hence the chronological order in Eng is in no way parallel to the original, and the arrangement below is only partly chronological In mod F, the word is narrowed down to our branch I, other senses being supplied by habitude, thus Eng 'habit' is co-extensive with two of the French words, and its chief sense corresponds not to F. habit but to F. habitude.

Hæmato-cry stallin. Chem [f Hæmatoin + Crystalline] The specific form of Constituent Globulin found in the blood corpuscles b 'A name given to hæmoglobin when it is obtained in a crystalline condition' (Syd Soc Lex 1886)

1863-72 Watts Dict Chem, Hæmato-crystallin, a crystal like substance obtained from blood It has the composition of the albuminoids, and, if quite pure, may probably be colourless 1872 H Bennett Textbk Physiol 132 According to Preyer Secchi and Stokes hæmocrystallin exists in the blood in two forms 1878 Kingzett Anim Chem 30 There are reasons for regarding hæmatocrystallins as a distinct chemical individual of probably greater complex constitution than fibrin

Hæmato-glo·bulin. Chem [For hæmatinoglobulin, f Hæmatin + Globulin, as being compos ed of the two] The colouring matter of the red corpuscles of the blood, also called Hæmoglobin (the now usually shortened to Hæmoglobin

1845 G S Davis Simon's Anim Chem I 43 According to Berzelius the hæmatoglobulin of human blood contains 100 parts of globulin to 1 of hæmatin 1848 Lindley Vegetable 235 Blood casts may give up their hæmatoglobuline 1867 J Marshall Outlines Physiol I 83 The compound formed by the substances (i e hæmatin from the iron and globulin) named hæmato-globulin has a great tendency to crystallize even in blood simply set aside

Hæmatoid, hem- (hĭ·mătoid, hĕm), a [ad Gr αἱματοειδής blood-like (see Hæmato- and -oid)] a Resembling blood, characterized by the presence of blood b Consisting of hæmatodin

1840 R Liston Elem Surg 1 (ed 2) 176 There are certainly few hæmatoid fungi 1854 Jones & Sieb Pathol Anat (1874) 484 The hæmatoid crystals are occasionally found in apoplectic clots. 1878 T Bryant Pract Surg I 151 When a soft cancer is filled with blood it is known as a 'hæmatoid variety'

Hæmatoi·din, hem-. Chem [f prec + -in] A yellow or yellowish-red crystalline substance found in extravasated blood, by some supposed to be identical with bilirubin

1845 Todd's Cyclop Anat II 1 115 note, Virchow regards them as composed mainly of a new colouring matter, which he called hæmatoidin 1865 Syd Soc Year bk 18 After the chloroform had evaporated, beautiful crystals of hæmatoidine were left 1885 tr Landois' Hum Physiol I 36 Hæmatoidin crystals have been found in the urine

Hæmatoin (hĭmătō·in) Chem [Differentiated from hæmatin] A derivative of hæmoglobin containing no iron 1876 Quain's Elem Anat (ed 8) II 27 The effects of acids upon hæmatin is to separate the iron and to transform the substance into hæmatoin (acid hæmatin).

Hæmatology (hĭmătǫ·lŏji˙ [f Hæmato + -logy] That branch of animal physiology which relates to the blood 1811 Hodgkin Med Dict, Hæmatology the doctrine of the blood 1850 in Dunglison Med Lex 440.

Hence Hæmatolo gical a, relating to hæmatology (Mayne Expos Lex 1854)

‖ Hæmatoma (hĭmătō·mă) Path Also in anglicized form he matome [mod L, f Gr type αἱμάτωμα*, n of product, f αἱματό ειν to turn into blood] 'A bloody tumour or fungus, a swelling containing blood' (Syd Soc Lex)

1847-9 Todd Cycl Anat IV 1 52 A hæmatoma is then a fibinous mass arising from hæmorrhage 1854 Mayne Expos Lex s v, A hematome 1876 tr Wagner's Gen Pathol 222 Blood tumours, blood boils, Hæmatomyia Ibid 218 A hæmorrhage under the surface especially of cuticular organs, is called hæmatoma or blood boil

Hence Hæmato matous a, of the nature of or affected with hæmatoma (Syd Soc Lex 1886)

1886 Med News XLIX 536 There were hæmatomatous efflorescences in both dural sacs

Hæmatometer, hem- (hĭmătǫ·mĭtəɹ) [see Hæmato- and Meter] a An instrument for measuring the force of the blood = hæmodynamometer (see Hæmo-) b An instrument for numbering the blood-corpuscles So Hæmatometry, the numeration of the blood corpuscles

1854 Mayne Expos Lex, Hæmatometer, Hæmatometry

Hæmatose (hĭ·mătōs), a [f Gr αἱματ- blood + -ose] Full of blood , full blooded

1865 Intell Observ No 43 65 The raw meat is supposed to have a reconstituent action, and the clotted blood a direct effect on the hæmatose

Hæmatosin, hem- (hem , hĭ·mătosin) Chem [a l hæmatosine (Chevreul 1814), irreg f Gr αἱματος, genitive of αἷμα blood + -in] = Hæmatin 2

1834 Grant's Outlines Med (ed 4) I 150 note, Pure oxygen gas will heighten the red colour of hæmatosine 1878 A Hamilton Nerv Dis 77 The Cortical substance of the brain was more or less coloured by hæmatosin

‖ Hæmatosis (hĭmătō·sĭs) [mod or mod L, a Gr αἱμάτωσις (Galen , f αἱματό ειν to make into blood] a The formation of blood, esp of blood-corpuscles , sanguification b 'An old term for hæmorrhage' c The oxygenation of the blood in the lungs (Syd Soc Lex)

1656 Phillips (ed 5), Hematous, Sanguification, or turning into Blood 1727-52 Chambers Cycl, Hæmatosis the action whereby the chyle is converted into blood 1854 Mayne Med Dict, Hæmatosis, an hæmorrhage or flux of blood 1866 A Flint Princ Med (1880) 165 The interruption of the function of hæmatosis in the portion of lung affected 1879-89 J M Duncan Fevt Dis Women xvii (ed 4), Its return to regularity seems to bring with it a healthy hæmatosis

Hæmatoxylin, hem- hĭmătǫ·ksilĭn) Chem [f mod Bot L hæmatoxylon, -um logwood (f Hæmato- + ξύλον wood) + -in] A crystalline substance ($C_{16}H_{14}O_6$) obtained from logwood colourless when pure, but affording fine red, blue, and purple dyes by the action of alkalis and oxygen , its aqueous solution also affords a fluid used for staining vegetable tissues

1847 Craig, Hematoxylum , the colouring matter of Logwood. 1876 tr Wagner's Gen Pathol 317 The calcified parts are not colored by carmine but are colored blue by hæmatoxylin 1888 Vines Sachs Bot 930 The net work readily stains with hæmatoxylin, but the fluid remains colourless.

Hence Hæmatoxy lic a, derived from hæmatoxylin

1892 G S Woodhead Pract Path II (ed 3) 81 Hæmatoxylic glycerine is prepared by adding a saturated solution of hæmatoxylin to glycerine saturated with potash alum.

‖ Hæmaturia (hĭmătūə·rĭă) Path [f Hæmato- + Uria] The presence of blood in the urine

1811 in Hodgkin Med Dict 1835-6 Todd Cycl Anat I 401 An old name subject to hæmaturia 1866 A Flint Princ Med (1880) 920 Hæmaturia, or bloody urine, occurs in various diseases 1894 Watm Cas 29 June 3/2 The great plague (of Uganda) is hæmaturia or 'black water' fever, which kills 80 per cent. of those attacked

Hence Hæmatu ric a, pertaining to, characterized by, or affected with hæmaturia

1866 A Flint Princ Med (1880) 923 Hæmaturic inter mittent fever or miasmatic. 1895 Daily News 14 Oct. 6 6 Hæmaturic fever and jiggers appear to be the prevailing curses of Uganda

Hæmatograph (hĭmăgrăf) [f Hæm(o- + Autograph] The apparatus used in tracing the pulse-curve obtained by opening an artery and allowing the stream of blood to strike against a roll of paper moving in front of it Hence Hæmatographic a, Hæmauto graphy, the operation of recording the pulse-curve in this way

1884 Stirling in Tanners Hum Physiol I 135 Hæmautography Ibid 136 Hæmatographic curve of the posterior tibial artery of a large dog 1886 Syd Soc Lex, Hæmautography The tracing closely resembles a sphygmographic tracing, and consists of a primary wave, a dicrotic wave, and slight vibrations in the downward falling line

Hæmax (hĭ·măks), a [Arbitrary f Gr αἷμα blood + -ic the etymological word being Hæmatic] Pertaining or relating to the blood, applied spec

Hæmic (hĭ·mĭk, hĕ·mĭk), a [f Gr αἷμα blood + -ic] Pertaining to the blood, applied spec

to a difficulty of breathing caused by a disordered condition of the blood 1857 Dunglison Med. Lex. 449 A 'hæmic disease'. 1875 H C Wood Therap. 1879 (ed. 3) Hæmic respiration is, in other words, greatly interfered with but not abolished. 1886 Syd. Soc. Lex., Hæmic asthma, Hæmic dyspnœa.

Hæmin (hī·min). Chem. [f. Gr αἷμα + -IN, differentiated in form from the regular hæmatin.] A deep red crystalline substance obtained from blood, containing hæmatin and hydrochlorine acid. Also altered.

1857 in Dunglison Med. Lex. 1865 Watts Dict. Chem. III 1 Hæmin, crystallised intensely red substance. 1881 Ibid. VIII 922 It is inferred that hæmin consists, not simply of hematin hydrochloride but of a mixture of that compound with hæmatin and a crystallisable phosphorised sub stance. 1893 Mann Forensic Med. 70 Hæmin crystals are composed of hydrochlorate of hæmatin.

Hæmo-, hemo- (hī·mo, hemo), before a vowel hæm-, hem- (hīm, hem), repr Gr αἱμο-, αἱματο-, shortened form of αἱματο- H MATO-, combining form of αἷμα blood or Gr αἱμοώδης = αἱματοώδης blood-drinker, αἱμορραγία H MORRHAGE. Many words in hæmo occur also in the fuller form H MATO-.

Some of these words have been improperly written hema, a few in which this spelling prevails will be found in their alphabetical places: the rest are entered here under the more etymological form. Analogous spellings he and he see note s.v. H MA.

Hæmochrome (hī·mokrōm), erron hæma- [Gr χρῶμα colour] the colouring matter of the blood. Hæmo chromogen, hence Hæmo metre, 'an apparatus for calculating the number of hæmoglobin in a liquid by comparison with a standard solution of normal colour' (*Syd. Soc. 4 Idiomatic uses, in which half is now adverbial, though probably originally the adj. or sb.

a In stating the time of day, half past or after: one or one o'clock, etc. = half an hour past the hour named (In Scotland, 'half' is often prefixed to the following hour, as in Get half-elf, etc.)

1750 G. B. Dandridge Poems (1974) 174 Just as half past twelve she was delivered of a Prince 1791 Gentl. Mag. (1736) 107 C. Three o'clock H. It will be half an- 1818 Jas. Mill *Hist. 1726 Swinden Ess. round World (1755) 17 Bearing South East half East, distant six leagues 1893 Farr Dunmore Painters I. 232 We altered our course from north east to south south by the compass

c Naut. In soundings, half before a numeral adds half to it: thus half four = 4½ fathoms

1809 Thomas Smith in Naval Chron. XXIII. 137 The Ship . . should get her water to a half three 1840 Marryat Poor Jack xliv, We shall have half four directly, and after that the water will deepen 1860 H. Stuart Wortley Three Cruises 37 Suppose 43 fathoms, what soundings would you call? And a half three

Half-, in comb. [OE half, healf, was regularly combined with an adj. or pple, as in healf-este, healfad, healfwilt, healfdead, healfsoden, healf- slæpende, also with a sb., as healfhlafod forehead, healfmann, healfpenig, healfrendel hemisphere In OTeut. half appears to have been a later substitute for the original sâmi-, OE sam, as in OHG sâmiqui, OS sâmquic, OE samcwic half alive, so samhærnd half burnt, sambrice a half-breach, = sâmi- in sâmidoltus, sâmitwîvi, sâmicoltus, sâmitheus, sâmihomo, etc. Gr. ἡμι- in ἡμιθάλασσος, ἡμιπαγής, ἡμιθάνατος, ἡμίθεος, etc.; skir sâmin in sâmiskiran half alive, etc.]

I In adverbial relation.

1 With adjectives and pa. ppples. Already in OE. see above. Very common in later use, esp. with pa. pples, to which half- may be prefixed whenever the sense suits. e.g. half-afraid, -amazed, -blind, -crazy, -deaf, -drunk, -full, -human, -learned, -mad, -open, -raw, -ripe, -savage, -true, -half-armed, -ashamed, -bent, -buried, -cured, -disposed, -done, -dressed, -eaten, educated, -finished, -formed, -hidden, -opened, -roasted, -ruined, etc., etc. With adjs. expressing shape, it implies the form of half the figure, as half cordate, -cupshaped, -ovate

The two elements are often written separately when the adj. is in the predicate (see Half adv. 1), the use of the hyphen mostly implies a feeling of closer unity of notion in the compound attribute, as in half blind, half dressed, half saw, viewed as definite states, but it is often merely for greater syntactical perspicuity, on which ground it is regularly used when the adjective is attributive, thus I am half dead (or half-dead, with cold, a half-dead dog

Handicap (hæ·ndikæp), sb [A word of obscure history Two examples of the sb, and one of the verb, are known in 17th c, its connexion with horse-racing appears in the 18th, its transferred general use, esp in the verb, since 1850 It appears to have originated in the phrase 'hand i' cap', or 'hand in the cap', with reference to the drawing mentioned in sense 1]

1 The name of a kind of sport having an element of chance in it, in which one person challenged some article belonging to another, for which he offered something of his own in exchange (Also fig)
On the challenge being entertained, an umpire was chosen to decree the difference of value between the two articles, and all three parties deposited forfeit money in a cap or hat The umpire then pronounced his award as to the 'boot or odds to be given with the inferior article, on hearing which the two other parties drew out full or empty hands to denote their acceptance or non acceptance of the match in terms of the award» If the two were found to agree in holding the award 'even' or 'off', the whole of the money deposited was taken by the umpire, but if not, by the party who was willing that the match should stand (See Notes & Queries 23 June 1883, 481)
This sport is described under the name of New Fairy, in Pierr Plowman A v 172, B v 328, C vi 377, where 'Clement i s cobelere caste of his clokē', for which 'Hikke be hakeneyman' wagered his hood, and 'Robyn þe ropere' was named for 'a noumpere', to ordain how much 'wholo hauoth the hood shulde haue amendes of the cloke For reference to a similar sport in Scandinavia and Germany (where called Freymarkt), see Germania XIX (1874), Engel Mund V 190. A recent example occurs in R S Surtees 'Mr Sponge's Sporting Tour' ch xlv, in which the challenge is between a gold watch and a horse In later times the result became the subject of further betting on the part of the bystanders see The Sportsman 17 April 1897, 5/5.

2 Horse racing (orig attrib) +a. Handicap match a match between two horses, the arrangement of which was made in accordance with the sport of handicap in 1, the umpire here decreeing the extra weight to be carried by the superior horse, and the parties drawing as in 1 to declare whether the match should be 'on' or 'off', with the same chances as to the forfeit-money Obs
(Such matches are recorded as early as 1680, but the term 'handicap' does not appear)
1754 Hoyle's Racing, Calendar p xxxii, Rules concerning Racing in general, with a Description of a Post and Handy Cap Match Ibid Handy i Ap Match, is for A and C to put an equal Sum into a Hat; C who is the Handy Capper, makes a Match for A and B which when perused by them, they put their Hands into their Pockets and draw them out closed, then they open them together, and if both have Money in their Hands, the Match is confirm'd, if neither have Money, it is no Match In both Cases the Hand-capper draws the Money out of the Hat, but if one has Money in his Hand, and the other none then it is no Match, and he that has the Money in his Hand is entitled to the Deposit in the Hat If a Match is made without the Weight being mentioned, each Horse must carry ten Stone [So in Rules of Racing in Gentl Calendar 1826, and Blaine Encycl Rural Sports ed 1832]

b Handicap race (shortened handicap) a horse-race in which an umpire (the handicapper) decrees what weights have to be carried by the various horses entered, according to his judgement of their merits, in order to equalize their chances So handicap plate, sweepstakes, etc

There is no beast so miserable, but that he may possibly succeed in a handicap 1887 Rules of Racing in J Rice Hist Brit Turf (1879) II 367 A 'handicap' is a race in which the weights which the horses are to carry are to be adjusted after the time limited for entering or naming, according to the handicapper's opinion of the merits of the horses, for the purpose of equalizing their chances of winning A free handicap is one in which no liability for stake or forfeit is incurred until acceptance, and no entry need be made

3 Any race or competition in which the chances of the competitors are sought to be equalized by giving an advantage to the less efficient or imposing a disadvantage upon the more efficient
Besides the method of weighting as in 2, this may be done in various ways, according to the nature of the game, as by requiring the superior competitor to accomplish a greater distance (e giving a start to the inferior), to do it in a shorter time, to play with fewer men or pieces, etc

1875 J D Heath Croquet Player 87 There is a variety called Time Handicaps, in which, if the game be not concluded at the expiration of a given time, the player who is ahead wins. 1895 Badminton Libr., Billiards 439 No two men should play in the same handicap when one can give the other much more than a third of the game.

4. The extra weight or other condition imposed on a superior in favour of an inferior competitor in any athletic or other match, hence, any encumbrance or disability that weighs upon effort and makes success more difficult

1883 E Pennell-Elmhirst Cream of Leicestersh 153 Two minutes at such a time is a heavy handicap on the efforts of hounds. 1890 Pall Mall G. 25 June 1/3 The president will not be called upon for an address, as this is felt to be a severe tax upon the person and a handicap on the post Ibid., His broken wing is a heavy handicap to him, and his chances against fox and stout cover now reduced to a minimum 1894 H H Gibbs Colloquy on Currency 231 If other nations are injured by the absence of that advantage, what is to prevent them from altering their laws, throwing off the handicap, and riding with equal weights?

Hang (haŋ) v. Pa. t and pple hung (hŋ), hanged (hæŋd) Forms see below. The history of this word involves that of two OE and one ON verb, viz. (1) the OE str hōn (–hōhan), hang (hōng), hangen, (hōn, en), trans., (2) the OE weak hangian, hangode, od, (also hong-), intr = Ofris. hanga, Os hangon (for OHG hangēn), (3 the ON causal wk hengja transf OHG hengan, MHG., MDu hengen OF hōn ON and OHG hōhan, MHG hāhen, MLG hān, MDu hāen represented the O1cut reduplicating vb with consonant-exchange (stammatsches Wechsel) hahan from earlier hayhan*, hehāh (pl hehaygun hangan, in Gothic, hāhan, haihāh, haihhun hāhan- (levelled under the present tense form In WGer and Norse, the pa. t had the type hēng, Os heng, OHG hiang, MHG hiene, Ger hieng, ON hekk pl hengu OE hēng, hēng. ME hen, hang, heyng, hung. The pa pple hangen also varied in OE and ME. with hongen (as in lang, long, etc.) Already in ON the present stem hēh- had been ousted by the weak form hanga, and in the Middle period a similar change took place in all the WGer langs. MDu hāhen hangen, MDu hāen, hangen, ME hōn, hangen (hongen). Having identified the old trans vb with the intr hangian, hongian, so that both had now for the pres t hang (hong), in consequence of which the strong pa t and pa pple heng (hung), hangen (hongen), and the weak forms, hangede (hongede), -ed, became also generally confounded in sense, and (with some exceptions) used indiscriminately. Meanwhile the ON causal verb hengja came into northern Eng as heng, e. also (with long change of -eŋ to -iŋ), hing, at first app with weak inflexion and trans sense, hengde, henged, hingde, hinged, but soon, by assimilation to the 3rd ablaut class of str verbs, with a pa t hang, varying in north midl with how, both trans and intr At this period (13-15th c.), therefore, while the south had pres t hang, how, and pa. heng, hing, the north had conversely pres heng, hing, pa hang, how Finally the northern inflexion hang, how, was completed by the pa pple hung, which in the 16th c. penetrated into general Eng., where arose a new pa t hung (like sung, sung, in presence of which the earlier heng, hin, and hong became obs The weak inflexion hanged however continued in use (being the only one used in Bible versions from Coverdale to 1611, though I imitate had also hanne, ; but was gradually superseded by hung in the general sense, trans and intr leaving hanged only in the special trans sense (3. 'put to death by hanging', owing prob to the retention of this archaic form by judges in pronouncing capital sentences The distinction is found chiefly in Bible versions from Coverdale to 1611, in the obligatory expressions 'You be hanged!' 'I'll be hanged if I do', and the like Nevertheless southern speakers and writers still often say 'the man was hung' instead of 'hanged' In the northern dialects, on the other hand, the distinction runs all through the verb, the special sense 'put to death by hanging' being expressed by hang, hangd, hangt, while the correspondg hing, hingd, hingt, hun, a. the pres pt tense hingt extends into Inglond as far south as Northamptonshire SEE A t e quot 1821 In those d alects, therefore, heng and hang are distinct verbs, differing both in sense and inflexion, but in Standard English, the re being only the single form hang for the present tense, it is necessary to treat all the verbs together (Hang is parallel in inflexion to Fang v.)

The distinction of trans and intr has always tended to break down The strong verb was orig trans in WGer and in OE. hangian being the intr but in ON, hengja, hekk, hangen was intr, and the causal hengja trans, hengen is only trans in Orman but Cursor M and Hampole have heng both trans and intr, like the contemporary southern hang, hong Cf also mod Ger, in which the true intr hangen is archaic, and ordinarily superseded by the trans hängen, though the pa tenses hing intr and hing, h trans remain distinct in use.]

military troop, band, company. MHG hanse fellowship, association, merchants' guild.

The early examples of this word relating to England occur in Latin charters and other documents, and in the L form Hansa, the precise sense of which, e.g. in the phrase 'gilda mercatoria et (or cum) hansa', is often difficult to determine. See the discussion of the word in Gross, The Gild Merchant I Appendix C. The following two main senses may be distinguished, but the order of their appearance in Eng. is not clear]

1 A company or guild of merchants in former times, an association of merchants trading with foreign parts; the merchant guild of a town, also, the privileges and monopolies possessed by it, sometimes, app., the guild-hall or 'hanse-house'.

The Old Hanse was the Fellowship of the London Merchants which had a monopoly of the foreign trade of London since Norman times, the New Hanse was the company of Merchant Adventurers first incorporated in 1497 which received charters from Henry VII in 1505 and Elizabeth in 1566.

Haplite (hæ·plīt) Min. [f. Gr. ἁπλόο-ς (see next) + -ite.] (See quot.)

1879 Rutley Study Rocks xii. 211 Aplite or haplite also termed semi-granite or granitell, is a rock consisting of a cryptalline granular admixture of felspar and quartz.

Haplo-, combining form of Gr. ἁπλόο-ς, contr. ἁπλοῦ- single, simple, as in Haplocardiac (haplōkā·diăk), a. [Gr. καρδία heart], having a heart of simple structure, belonging to the Haplocardia or Bivalvipoda. Haplo-cerin (-sē·rĭn) [Gr. κήρινη horn], generic name of the Rocky Mountain sheep, hence Haplo cerine a. Haplocyemate (-sāi·ĭmĕt), a. [Gr. κύημα embryo], developed directly from a more or less elongated gastrula (Cent. Dict. cites J. A. Ryder.) Haplomorphic, -ous (-mō·fĭk, -ŏs), adjs. [Gr. μορφή shape], of simple form, belonging to the Haplomorpha, a division of monads and also, in some classifications, of gastropods. Haplopetalous (-pe·tălŏs) a., monopetalous; also, having a single row of petals (Syd. Soc. Lex. 1886). Haplostemonous (-stī·mŏnəs), a. [Gr. στήμων stamen], having a single circle or row of stamens. Haplotomy (hæplo· tŏmi) [Gr. ἁπλότομος] a simple cutting or incision (Mayne Expos. Lex. 1854).

1880 Gray Struct. Bot. vi. 178 The androecium or the blossom is said to be isostemonous or Haplostemonous when the stamens are of one series equal in number to that of the normal plan of the blossom.

Haplodont (hæ·plŏdŏnt), a. and sb. [f. Haplo- + Gr. ὀδούς, ὀδοντ- tooth.]

A. adj. 1 Having the crowns of the molar teeth simple or single, and not divided into ridges, etc.

2 Belonging to the Haplodontidæ, a family of North American rodents, called sewellels.

B sb. One of the Haplodontidæ.

Haplography (hæplo· grăfi) [f. Haplo- + -graphy.] Single writing, the unintentional writing of a letter or word, or series of letters or words, once, when it should be written twice. (The opposite of Dittography.)

1888 Gow Classics 15 Haplography or Typography is a special and very common case of omission. 1896 W. M. Lindsay Introd. Latin Textual Emend. 111, The commonest kind of omission is that known as Haplography. In Virgil G. iv. 311, for example, Musaeumve, tenuemque mala[e] mea[e] ne carpunt Some MSS offer tenuemque meam carpat, omitting the second mea.

Haplohedral (hæplohī·drăl), a. Cryst. [f. Haplo- + Gr. ἕδρα seat, base + -al.] Applied to a system or form in which each normal bears only one face.

1878 Gurney Crystallogr. 54 1895 Story Maskelyne Crystallogr. v. 105 We shall call the triangle planes the system or form belonging to it has only one plane extant parallel to the origin plane, the system or form will be termed haplohedral.

2 (Short for harmonic tone) One of the secondary or subordinate tones produced by vibration of the aliquot parts of a sonorous body (as a string, reed, column of air in a pipe, etc.), usually accompanying the primary or fundamental tone produced by the vibration of the body as a whole Also called overtones or upper partials (as being of higher pitch than the fundamental tone)

Harmonics are sometimes produced independently, as in the violin and other stringed instruments by varying the point of contact of the bow, or by lightly pressing the string with the finger at special points, and in certain wind instruments by varying the force or direction of the breath Natural harmonics the series of harmonics naturally produced by the vibration of a string, etc., in halves, thirds, quarters, and so on; also, on instruments of the violin class, harmonics obtained from an open string those from a stopped string being called artificial harmonics Compound harmonic a tone sometimes given to a low tone resulting from the combination of two tones—differential tone

1 The early type of portable gun, varying in size from a small cannon to a musket, which on account of its weight was, when used in the field, supported upon a tripod, trestle, or other 'carriage', and after wards upon a forked 'rest'. The name in German and Flemish meant literally 'hook-gun', from the hook cast along with the piece, by which it was fastened to the 'carriage', but the name became generic for portable fire-arms generally in the 16th century, so that the type with the hook was subsequently distinguished as arquebus à croc. see 2.

According to Wendelin Boeheim, Handbuch der Waffen kunde (Leipzig 1890) 447, 455, the hook of the original hakenbüchse was intended to hold up to a wall when other fixed object partly to support the weight of the barrel and partly to diminish the recoil. Maximilian I (early 16th cent.) introduced the portable tripod which could be put together in the field. The forked rest came in about 1520, with the Spanish musket.

Have (hav), v. Forms and Inflexions see below. [A Common Teutonic vb. OF. habban hafde, hafed, = Ofris. hebba, hēde, hevd, OS. hebbian, hadda, habda, -hald hald (MDu., Du. hebben, hadde, gehad, MLG. hebben, hān, hadde, gehat), OHG. habēn, habēta, gehabēt (MHG. habēn, habte, gehabet, Ger. haben, hatte, gehabt), ON. hafa, hafða, haft (sw. hafva hafvde, haft Da. have, havde, havt), Goth. haban, habaida, habands — O Teut. stem hab-*. On account of its correspondence in form and sense with I. habere, generally referred to hypothetical Aryan radical form khabhē-*. The OE., Ofris., and OS. had in all parts of the present, exc. 2nd and 3rd sing. pres. indic., the consonantal hab- (from habb-), reduced by gemination to hath (habb-, hebb-), while these two persons and the past retained hab (hav-, haf-), hence OE. habban ha bbe, habbað, hebbende, etc., beside hafast (hafst), hafaþ (*haf*þ), hafde, hafed. In ME. the hab- forms were gradually reduced by levelling to hav-: have, I have, thy have or havest, he, have, while the original haf- (hav-) forms at length lost their f (v), before the following consonant (ha st ha th, ha s, ha d). Even the later v, for OE. bb was worn down in colloquial and dialect speech, so that OE. habban passed through ME. habben haven han, to later ha, ha', ha' — these phonetic weakenings, due originally to the weakness and stresslessness of the word in most positions, as principal verb and as auxiliary, have given rise to a very great number of historical forms for every inflected part, a number further increased by the graphic interchange of v, u, and b, and by the frequent dropping of initial h. In the plur. tense of all the tenses of the verb, even in the reduction of OE. habban to a, or its entire elision, as in I would a been, occas. Sc. I wad been.] In ordinary English, contracted forms are now only colloquial or metrical, in I've, thou'st, he's, we've, I'd he'd, we'd. By coalescence with ne, this verb had also in OE. and early ME., as in OFris., a negative form habban, nave, which held in OE. the rank of an independent word (cf. will, nill, I wolo, nōlo, it is here included under the positive form.]

B Signification

From a primitive sense 'to hold (in hand)', have has passed naturally into that of 'hold in possession,' 'possess,' and has thence been extended to express a more general class of relations of which 'possession' is one type, instead of which are very vague and intangible For just as the verbs be and do are the most generalized representatives of the verbal classes existing, latent and action (actual) in Aristotle's classification of verbal predications (κατηγορίαι), so have is the most generalized representative of the class eyen (habitus, having) For although there is no primitive sense of 'hold' was verb of action, in the sense 'possess, and still more, in the weakened senses 2, etc below, no notion of any action upon the object connected with it is predicated being merely a static relation between the subject and object. In the older languages this relation was often predicated not of the possessor but of the possessed, what is predicated standing in the dative, thus IL est mihi liber, there is to me a book, I have a book. The extended use of have and its equivalents to express the relation of the subject to any of the modern languages I like the two other generalized verbal types be and do, have also tends to use in which it becomes a mere element in the connected idiom, primitive sense of 'hold was a verb of action, in the sense 'possess, and still more, in the weakened senses 2, etc below, no notion of any action upon the object connected with it is predicated being merely a static relation between the subject and object. In the older languages this relation was often predicated not of the possessor but of the possessed, what is predicated standing in the dative, thus IL est mihi liber, there is

* Phrases

21 Have is used in numerous phraseological expressions, which are treated under their distinctive words, e g to have Ado, h at Avail, h Business, h in Charge, h Conckrn, h Course, h Done, have an Eye on or to, h a Finger in, h at one's Finger ends, h a Hand in, h in Hand, h at Hand, h a Mind, h On (clothes), have it Out, h Part, h Recourse, h under one's Thumb, h in View, h the Wind of, etc

 Idiomatic uses

22 The past Subjunctive had = would have, is used idiomatically with adjectives (or adverbs) in the comparative, as better, lefer, sooner, rather, in the superlative, as best, liefest, or in the positive with 'as', as good, as lief, as soon, as well, to express preference or comparative desirability

In the earliest form of these expressions, in OE the adjs lēofre, betre were construed with be and the dative, e g him wǽre betre a — it would be better for him In ME, side by side with this, appears hēre and the nominative in the sense he (I, etc) would hold or find it better or preferable The use with the positive, and superlative, and the extension to rather are later, the use of as soon, sooner, well, is recent, since liefer and better began to be felt as adverbs (See exhaustive treatment by F Hall in Amer Journ Philol II 281) The following instances illustrate this in its origin generally, fuller illustration will be found under the several words

Q E Chron an 755 Þa cuædon he hæt hun nænes mæg leofra nære 971 Blickl Hom 25 Him wære betre þæt he nafre gebroren nære c 1000 Ælfric Gen xxix 19 Leofre me wæs þæt ic hig sylle þe. c 1330 R.
