Heteropathic (-pæ·pĭk), a [f as next + -ic]

1 Med = Allopathic

1830 Edin Rev L 513 First stands the homœopathic Then the allopathik, or heteropathic the method which hopes to cure disease by exciting some dissimilar affection

2 Of different operation, differing in their effect

1843 Mill Logic I III vi 403 Though there be laws which, like those of chemistry and physiology, owe their existence to a breach of the principle of the Composition of Causes, it does not follow that those peculiar or, as they might be termed, heteropathic laws, are not capable of composition with one another 1870 Jevons Elem Logic xxiii 252 It is distinguished by Mr Mill from cases of the heterogeneous or as he says the heteropathic intermixture of effects

Heteropathy (-pă·pi) [f Gr ἑτερο- Hetero- + πάθεια, f πάθος suffering]

1 Med = Allopathy opp to homeopathy

1847 Craig Heteropathy, the method of attempting, to remove one disease by inducing a different one

2 Path See quot

1886 Syd Soc Lex, Heteropathy Berthold's term for the form of idiosyncrasy in which the organic susceptibility behaves itself in a different fashion to the normal in the presence of any irritation

3 Antipathy or aversion excited by suffering opp to sympathy nonce use

1874 Mrs Count in Heart Rest Jan 74 At the sight of pain animals generally feel an impulse to destroy rather than to help This emotion will be indicated by the term Heteropathy 1881 — Nature How to 118 It is hard to sing and horrible to witness how the deepest and truthful human passion, which I have elsewhere named Heteropathy, develops itself in such circumstances

‖ Heterophasia (-fē·zĭă) Path [f Gr ἑτερο- Hetero- + φασία, f φάσις speech] = Heterophemy (as a result of mental disease)

1879 Gould Lincoln Jour Insan Pneumonia 315 Perversion of language In the case of Heterophasia has been given 1882 in Keb Dis Mem 153 Sometimes the patient retains an extensive vocabulary of sound signs, but cannot use it correctly (cases of heterophasia)

Hence He terophasiac, one who is affected with heterophasia' (Cent Dict)

He terophemy (-fĭmi) [f Gr ἑτερο- Hetero- + φημή, f φάναι, φήναι voice, speech] The saying or writing of one word or phrase when another is meant

1875 R G White in Galaxy Nov 603 The assertion made is most often not merely something that the speaker or writer does not mean to say, but its very reverse, or at least something notably at variance with his purpose For this reason I have called it heterophemy when means merely the speaking otherwise 1881 — Words Mostly Alike As to the writing twice of Verona instead of Milan it seems plainly a mere case of heterophemy 1894 Nation (N Y) 22 Mar 218/3 We are forced in charity to credit the bishop with a kind of 'heterophemy'

So Heterophe mism, an instance or result of heterophemy Heterophe mize v intr, to say something different from what one means to say

1875 R G White in Galaxy XX 603 (Cent) Henry Ward Beecher appears among the heterophemists He heterophemizes in a very striking manner Ibid 608 (Cent) Examples in which creditor is used for debtor—perhaps the most common of all heterophemisms

Heterophyllous (-fi·lŏs), a [f Gr ἑτερο- Hetero- + φύλλον leaf + -ous In F hétérophylle]

1 Bot Bearing leves of different forms upon the same plant

1828 Webster cites Trnl Sci 1827-8 H Macmillan Trnl Linn 11 Examples of heterophyllous and dimorphic plants, in which there is a very considerable difference in form in the same organs, not only at different times, but even simultaneously 1882 Vines Sachs Bot 467 In nearly all of the heterophyllous species which have been arranged in four rows, possess stomata on their inner surface

2 Belonging to the group Heterophylli of cephalopods

He terophyl lly. Bot [f as prec + -y in mod F hétérophyllie] The condition of being heterophyllous

1870 R Brown Man Bot Glossc 1886 Encycl Brit XX 619/1 (Redrigues) Variability of species and heterophylly are characteristic of the flora to quite an unusual degree

‖ Heteroplasia (he tĕroplā·siă) Path Also anglicized as heteroplasy (-plāsi) [f Gr ἑτερο- Hetero- + πλάσις moulding, formation + πλάσσειν moulding, formation + hetero plasie] The formation of a tissue different from the normal tissue of the part in which it occurs

1854 Mayne Expos Lex, Heteroplasia, Heteroplasy, terms for abnormal organic formation Heteroplasy 1876 tr Wagner's Gen Pathol 354 The so called Heteroplasia, Heterologous new formations, that is to say, tissues which bear no resemblance to normal tissues

He teroplasm Path [f as prec + Gr πλάσμα anything moulded, a figure F hétéroplasme] A tissue formed in a part where it does not normally occur

1898 R Druitt Surg Under M (ed 11) 84 As Virchow clearly showed, no such thing as heteroplasm 1886 Syd Soc Lex, Heteroplasm, Burdach's term for a morbid tissue foreign to the economy

Heteroplastic (-plæ·stik), a [f as prec + Gr πλαστικός fit for moulding F hétéroplastique]

1 Path Of or belonging to heteroplasia, of the nature of a heteroplasm

1854 in Mayne Expos Lex 1876 tr Wagner's Gen Pathol 360 Fibrocle, carcinoma, and other heteroplastic new formations

2 Biol Dissimilar in formation or structure, as the different tissues of the body

Heteroplastide (-plæ·stid) Biol [f as prec + Gr πλαστός moulded, formed + -ide] An organism composed of tissues of different kinds, as most animals and plants opp to homoplastide

1889 Vines in Nature 24 Oct 621 Death is a character istic feature of differentiated multicellular organisms (heteroplastides) Ibid 622 How the most heteroplastides can have been evolved from the unmoted monoplastides or homoplastides

Heteropod (he tĕropŏd), a and sb Zool [f next] A adj Of or belonging to the Heteropoda B sb One of the Heteropoda

1835 Kirby Hab & Inst Anim I 15 g1 The animal of the Heteropods having a proboscis with only two teeth 1884 Nicholson Text Bk Zool 618/1 The Heteropods, so characteristic of Palæozoic time, Pteropoda

‖ Heteropoda (hetĕrŏ·pŏdă), sb pl Zool [mod L, f Gr ἑτερο- Hetero- + πούς, ποδ- foot] A group of Crustacea including forms with 14 feet, some of which are adapted for swimming b An order or subclass of Gastropods, having the foot modified into a swimming organ c A group of Chinoderms

1834 Penny Cycl III 74 2 1838 Ibid XI 297 b For the plan of the Heteropods of Cuvier under his genus Pterotrachea 1872 Nicholson Palæont 218 Both families of the Heteropoda are represented in fossil forms 1878 Huxley Invertebrata Comp Anat 224 The foot of the Heteropoda is differential d into a more independent organ

Hence Hetero podan = Heteropod b, Hetero podous a = Heteropod a

1835 Penny Cycl III 74 2 A genus of the heteropodous mollusca of Limarck

Heteropter (hetĕr·pter) Entom One of the Heteroptera 1862 in Webster

‖ Heteroptera (hetĕrŏ·ptĕră, sb pl Entom [mod L, f Gr ἑτερο- Hetero- + πτερόν wing] A suborder of Hemiptera, comprising those insects whose wings consist of dissimilar parts, being coriaceous at the base and membranous at the tip, the true bugs Opp to Homoptera

1826 Kirby & Sp Introd Entom (1828) IV 38, He denominated the first of the sections Heteroptera 1874 Packard Guide Study Insects 125 The Heteroptera cannot exactly be said either to sting, or bite

Hence Hetero pteran = Heteropter, Hetero pterous a, belonging to or having the characters of the Heteroptera

1824 Brande Dict Nat Hist (Heteropterans Heteroptera) the name of a section of Hemipterans comprehending those in which the hemelytrs terminate abruptly by a membranous appendage 1895 Naturalist 143 Mr Mason recorded it out of about 400 heteropterous hemipters known to inhabit the British Islands

Heteroscian (hetĕrŏ·shiăn), sb and a [f mod L heteroscii (usually in nom pl used subst), a Gr ἑτερόσκιοι diversely shadowed (f ἑτερο- Hetero- + σκιά shadow) + -an]

A sb A name applied to the people of the two temperate zones in reference to the fact that, in the two zones, noon shadows always fall in opposite directions (Cf Amphiscian, Perscian) Usually in pl, the 1 at pl heteroscii is also frequent

'Heteroscii, in statibus, and according to the sign and reason of the word is a term of relation, and denotes those inhabitants which, during the whole year, have their noon tide shadows projected different ways from each other Thus, we are heteroscii with regard to those who inhabit the southern temperate zone and they are heteroscii with respect to us' (Chambers Cycl)

[1559 W Cunningham Cosmogr Glasse 68 Of the diuerse site of shadowes, ther ar iij diuers distinct habitacions of people found, Amphiscii Heteroscii, Periscii and we want apt English termes for them] 1616 Bullokar Eng Expos, Heteroscians, any people dwelling vnder a temperate zone so called because their shadowes at noone tend still but one way 1652 J Squhart Zeiuel Wks (1834) 259 Which to withhold from them whether Periscians, Heteroscians, or Amphiscians, would prove very absurd 1706 Hutton Math Dict I 156/1 Heteroscii in Geography, are such inhabitants of the earth as have their shadows at noon projected always the same way with regard to themselves, or the 2s contrary ways with respect to each other]

B adj Of, pertaining to or of the nature of noon-shadows in the temperate zones

a 1646 J Gregory Posthuma Astronl Globe (1650) 300 Of Oxford the Sign Regent is Capricorn, the Noon shadows are Heteroscian

‖ Heteresis (hetĕrē·sis) Med [f as Gr ἑτερωσις alteration, f ἕτερος different] A figure of speech by which one form of a noun, verb or pronoun, and the like, is used for another Webster, 1864

Heterostatic (-stæ·tik), a Electr [f Hetero- + Static] Applied to electrostatic instruments in which there is electrification independent of that to be tested

1867 Sir W Thomson in Rep Brit Assn 501 The electric system here described is heterostatic there being an independent electrification besides that whose difference of potential is to be measured 1881 Maxwell Electr & Magn I 309 Thus method of using an auxiliary electrification besides the electrification to be measured is called the Heterostatic method in opposition to the Idiostatic method, in which the whole effect is produced by the electrification to be measured.

Heterostrophic (-strǫ·fik), a [f Gr ἑτερο- HETERO- + στροφή a turning + -IC cf Gr στροφικός]

1 Turning or winding in another direction, spec in Conch applied to univalve shells in which the usual direction of the spire is reversed, as in a 'reversed' whelk

2 Gr and Lat Poet Consisting of two systems of different metrical form, as, a heterostrophic song or chorus presage' (cent Dict)

So Hetero strophous a prec 1, Hetero-strophe, Hetro strophy (hē·trǫstrăfi), a Bot [f HETERO- + STYLE + ED²] Having the styles or pistils of different individual plants of different lengths relatively to their stamens, the same as heteromorphic or heterogonous

1876 DARWIN in Life & Lett (1887) 321 The nature of heterostyled plants may be illustrated in the primrose 1877 Trans Bot Soc Edin XII 82 Mr Darwin's term dimorphism has the disadv antage of not indicating what parts of the blossom are dimorphic. This has been supplied by Hildebrand, in Germany, who has introduced [Bot Zeit 1871] the term heterostyled and the counterpart homostyled

So Heterostyly lism, Heterostylism, the condition of having the styles of different lengths relatively to the stamens, heteromorphism, heterogony

Heterosty lous a = HETEROSTYLED

1875 BENNETT & DIXON Sachs' bot 811 809 Another contrivance for the mutual fertilisation of different individuals of plants with heterostylous flowers,—Dimorphism or Heterostylism In one individual the flowers all have a long style and short filaments, while in another individual all the flowers have a short style and long filaments 1876 DARWIN in Life & Lett (1892) 53 This account was published before I had discovered the meaning of hetero stylism 1889 WARD in Sachs' Hist Plants 792 The same principle is also employed in the case of heterostylous flowers 1887 GOEBEL Morphol Plants 405 A further method for securing the mutual fertilisation of different plants of the same species is heterogony (heterostyly)

Heterotactous (-tă·ktŏs), a [f Gr ἑτερο- HETERO- + τακτός ordered, arranged + -OUS] Characterized by heterotaxy a Inst and Bot Having organs shamefully placed or arranged b Geol Without regularity of stratification

1889 G K GUILFORD in Worcesters Suppl, Heterotactous mountain mass

Heterotaxy (-tăksi) [f Gr ἑτερο HETERO- + τάξις, ἑ τάξις arrangement]

1 Anat and Bot Aberrant or abnormal disposition of organs or parts

1854 MAYNE Expos Lex, Heterotaxia, applied by Geoffroy Saint Hilaire to those complex anomalies, which, while they are of anatomical importance, do not hinder the performance of any function, and are not apparent externally, heterotaxy 1881 Gard Chron XVIII 583 I believe this case might be reported as partial heterotaxy 1897 Brit Med Jrnl 28 Mch 34 The anomaly known as hetero taxy, or transposition of viscera totalis

2 Geol Want of uniformity in stratification (Worcester Suppl 1889)

Heterotomic (-tǫ·mik), a Bot [f Gr ἑτερο HETERO- + τομός cut + IC cf Gr τομικός of or for cutting] = next, sense 1

1886 Nat Sci Heterotomic, applied to a calyx or a corolla in which the alternate divisions are dissimilar

Heterotomous (-tǫ·tŏmăs), a [as prec + -OUS] 1 Bot Applied to a perianth having unequal or dissimilar divisions 1847 in CRAIG

2 Min Having cleavage different from the ordinary 1864 in WEBSTER

Heterotopy (hetĕrǫ·tŏpi) Phys [nd mod L. heterotopia (also in Eng[L use), f Gr ἑτερο- HETERO- + τοπία, f τόπος place] Displacement in position, misplacement a Path The occurrence of a tumour in a part where the elements of which it is composed do not normally exist b Biol (See quot 1879)

1876 tr Wagner's Gen Pathol 355 Tumors are abnormal only because they occur in a locality in which their elements do not normally exist (Heterotopia) 1879 tr Haeckel's Evol Man I 12 The homogenetic variations of the original palingenetic incidents of evolution depend in great measure on a gradually increasing displacement of the phenomena by adaptation to the changed conditions of embryonic existence This displacement may affect either the place or the time of the phenomena—If the former, it is called Heterotopy of the latter, Heterochrony Ibid 13 Displacement of position, or heterotopy, especially affects the cells or elementary parts which compose the organs, but also affects the organs themselves

Hence Heteroto pic, Hetero topous adjs, of, pertaining to, or of the nature of heterotopy; Hetero topism = HETEROTOPY

1878 BELL Gegenbaurs Comp Anat 45 The different position occupied by visual organs forbids us to suppose that they have had a common hereditary origin, and is in favour of those hetero to pic organs having been independently differentiated from an unlike rent apparatus 1879 tr Haeckel's Evol Man I 12 An analogous heterotopism affects the primitive kidneys in the higher Vertebrates

Heterotropal (-tr·ŏpăl), a Bot [f Gr ἑτέρωτρο- or turning another way (f ἑτερο- HETERO- + τρόπος turning) + -AL] = HETEROTROPOUS

1848 BRANDE Dict Sci etc, Heterotropal, a term applied to the embryo of a seed when the former lies across the latter, that is to say, neither pointing to its base nor apex 1866 Treas Bot 588 Heterotropal, lying parallel with the hilum A term applied only to the embryo

Heterotropic (-tr·ŏpik), a Physics [f as prec + -IC] = ANISOTROPIC, Anot OTROPIC

1885 WATSON & BURBURY Math Th Electr & Magn I 293 Dissertation Have to determine value at every point in a heterotropic shell in which the thermal conductivities vary from point to point

Heterotropous (-tr·ŏpŏs), a Bot [f as prec + -OUS] = HEMITROPOUS

1830 LINDLEY Nat Syst Bot 209 Embryo supposed by Mr Mirbel to be heterotropous (that is, to have its radicle not turned towards the hilum) Ibid 229 In Rhinanthaceæ it must be antitropous or heterotropous 1857 HENFREY Elem Bot § 344 Another condition [of the ovule] is more rarely met with, the amphitropous or heterotropous or hemianatropous, intermediate between orthotropous and anatropous

A captain or military commander in Poland and countries formerly united or subject to it, whence still retained as a title among the Cossacks

Under the suzerainty of the Sultan, the hetman of the Cossacks' was a semi independent prince or viceroy His title and authority were at first continued after the acceptance of Russian suzerainty by the Cossacks in 1654, but the power and privileges of the office were gradually curtailed and abolished At present the title 'Hetman (ataman) of all the Cossacks' is an appanage of the Czarevitch, who is represented by a 'hetman by delegation', for each of the territorial divisions Subordinate Cossack chiefs have also the title atamans

Higgledy-piggledy (hi·g'ldi pi·g'ldi), adv sb a Forms 6–8 higle-pigle, 7– higgle-piggle, hickle-pickle, 6–di, -dle, 6–7 -de, -tee, 7– -dy, 8 -te, 9 -ty. [A riming compound of obscure origin

Mainly an example of 'vocal gesture', the odd conformation of the word answering to the thing described: whether founded on pig, with some reference to the disorderly and utterly irregular fashion in which a herd of these animals huddle together, is uncertain, though examples show that such an association has often presented to persons using it. If the collateral Higly-tigly were the original form, the sequence hig, pigly higly pigly would be not unlikely.]

A. adv Without any order of position or direction, in huddled or jumbled confusion and disorder, with heads and tails in any or every direction. Usually contemptuous

IV Combinations and special collocations.

19 In Ol. hēah was very often combined with a subst (= Skr karmadhārāya compounds), instead of standing in grammatical concord with it, several of these combinations or compounds came into ME, where they were often written divisum, and were thus recognizable only by the uninflected form of the adj, when adjective inflexions were lost, there was nothing to distinguish these from the ordinary use of the adj before a sb

Among these may be mentioned the following

a in lit sense 'lofty', as hēah beorg high mountain, tower, hēah cliff high cliff, hēah dēor high deer, stag, hēah flōd high flood, high tide, deluge, hēah lond Highland, hēah sæ high or deep Sea, hēah-setl (Settle) high seat, throne, seat of honour, hēah weofod high altar (Wyfod) the last three passing into b High in degree rank, or dignity, excellent, man, chief, as hēah-ealdor chief ruler, hēah-cræft excellent skill, hēah-freols high festival, hēah-mæsse high Mass, hēah nama great or exalted name, hēah stræt High street, hēah synn mortal sin, cardinal sin, hēah tīd High tide

High-Churchman. [orig high Churchman A good Churchman, stanch Churchman.]

A Churchman or member of the Church of England holding opinions which give a high place to the authority and claims of the Episcopate and the priesthood, the saving grace of the sacraments, and, generally, to those points of doctrine, discipline, and ritual, by which the Anglican Church is distinguished from the Calvinistic churches of the Continent, and the Protestant Nonconformist churches in England

a. Originally applied in the 17th and early 18th c. to those who, holding a de jure Episcopacy, opposed x compprehension, and the admission of different sects, and demanded the strict enforcement of the laws against Dissenters, and the passing of such additional measures as the Occasional Conformity Bill. With these were also associated the doctrine of the divine right of kings (of the House of Stuart), and the duty of non resistance on the part of subjects. The appellation was, in fact, nearly synony mous with Tory, and was at first a hostile nickname, equivalent to the earlier High-flyer, High-flying or High Tory. Churchman (q. v.) in the sense of the Church of England, Low Churchman at began to be accepted as relatively appropriate by the recent times, since 1833, the name has been increasingly appropriated to the adherents of the Oxford Movement led by John Henry Newman, and (after wards) by Edward Bouverie Pusey. The exclusive and partizan styles of these are more or less analogous to those of Old High Churchmen, but exhibit (at least in their extreme form) a much closer approximation to those of the pre Reformation Church. c The name is occasionally applied to those who hold (except as to episcopacy) somewhat analogous opinions in the established Church of Scotland, and perhaps in some other religious communities.

1687 Gd. Advice 43 Against the will of the high Church men 1704 Reasons Ids May to invite Electress 13 Those parties are more or less analogous to High and Low Church men, a few of em Nonjurants, and all of em Torys 1704 [C. Leslie] Staffe I the Wolf Stript by one call'd an High Church man 1707 Hearne Collect. 4. I venture, for it's a Matter at this Time, to own the name of an High Church Man. Eng.* III. x. vi. 234 The Bennett judgment in 1850 definitely, prematurely, put the seal on the most distinctive doctrine of the new High Churchmen.

In this sense often divided for practical convenience into Ancient and Modern, or Ancient, Mediæval, and Modern History. These have no very definite chronological limits, but Ancient History is usually reckoned to end with the fall of the Western Roman Empire in A.D. 476. Mediæval when separated from Modern History, is usually brought down to the period of the Ocean discoveries, or the 15th c. 'Ancient History' is also humorously used in the sense of matters which are out of date, or which no longer form part of practical politics.

The Muse of History One one of the Nine Muses supposed as the patroness of History, also often put for a personification of History.

The second Tuesday after Easter Sunday, Hock Tuesday in former times an important term day, on which rents were paid, and the like, Hock day and Michaelmas dividing the rural year into its summer and winter halves It was also, from the 14th c, and probably earlier, a popular festival, signalized by the collection of money for parish purposes by roughly humorous methods see HOCK-TIDE, HOCK-MONEY The plural, hock days, includes also the preceding day, Hock Monday, which was similarly celebrated

The date is sometimes given as the second Monday and Tuesday after Easter etc this appears to originate in different ways of reckoning the quindene Pasche as the fortnight following Easter, or the two weeks before and after Easter Statements going back to the 15th or 16th c assert that Hock-day commenced either the morrow or on the Dunes on 13 Nov 1002, or the death of Hardiknut on 8 June, 1042 From the dates of these events it is difficult to understand how either was associated with Hock tide

The time or season of the hock days Hock Monday and Tuesday (the second Monday and Tuesday after Easter day), on which in pre Reformation times money was collected for church and parish purposes, with various festive and sportive customs, after the Reformation kept for some time as a festive season with various traditional customs, some of which survived into the 19th c

The earlier custom seems to have been the seizing and binding (by women on Monday, and by men on Tuesday) of persons of the opposite sex, who relieved themselves by a small payment After this was prohibited (see 1406 in HOK DAY, 1440 in HALL) recourse was had to the plan of stretching ropes or chains across the streets and ways to stop passers for the same purpose (See 1777 in HOCK TUESDAY)

Hog (hŏg), *sb*1 Also 4(7)–6 hogge, 6–9 hogg [Late ME hogge, hoge, but the derivative Hogster occurs c 1175 origin unknown

The word may possibly be contained in the OF place names Hogestain (Hogston) and Hogestweth, but this is hardly likely, and is more probably that ME hog represented Cornish hoch, Welsh hoch, swine, is improbable on phonetic and other grounds The evidence afforded by the word itself and by its derivatives hoggaster, hoggish, hoggy (the first of which, applied to sheep, offers our earliest example of the word group), makes it probable that the word originally denoted swine, to the age or season of the animal, rather than to either pig or sheep distinctively Hence some have thought hog, possibly related to Hack, with the notion of castration But the notion of castration runs through most of the uses of sb, 4, & 5 In this uncertainty, the order of senses followed is merely one of practical convenience

I 1 A swine reared for slaughter, spec a castrated male swine, a barrow-pig or barrow-hog (see Barrow *sb*2 1 b), hence, a domestic swine generally (Not used in Scotland)

The original application may either refer to the age, swine in the progress of slaughter being seldom allowed to exceed much more than one year in age, or to the fact that the male intended for this purpose are usually castrated see 6 in note)

B Signification

In Gothic, haldan is recorded only in the sense 'to watch over, keep charge of, keep, herd, pasture (cattle)' (Cf the derivative Skandvi hold in observation) This is generally accepted as the original sense in the Teutonic langs (cf Grimm, s v Halten, Verwys & Verdam Middelndl Wdb, s v Houden), whence have arisen the senses, to rule (people), guard, defend, keep from getting away or falling preserve reserve, keep possession of, possess, occupy, contain, detain, entertain, retain, maintain, sustain, in which it is now used In some of these hold covers the same conceptual ground as keep which has superseded it in reference to cattle), in others it is a stronger synonym of have. But its typical current sense is 'to have or keep in one's grasp', uses into which this notion does not enter, literally or figuratively, having mostly become obsolete Hence it is the English equivalent of I tenere, F tenir, and so of contain, retain, etc, as above The verb had already a wide development of sense in OE as far as we can go back; uses akin to the Gothic are here placed as sense 1

It is thus difficult to divide holiday and holy day in sense 1 Under this article are included the combined forms halidai, holiday, holydaye, etc, as well as the uncombined, in which the vocalization shows that the word was analyzed as treated under HOLY DAY But the habits of medieval scribes in writing compound words, especially of the class of compounds were so irregular, and the treatment of the matter by modern editors is so uncertain, that many ME instances might be placed under either article

E. Wal flowing comes untur', the district about Dordrecht, the nucleus of the original county of Holland

This derivation, which though it has been impugned appears to be finally established (C. W. E. Cumulus in Taalkundig Archief II. 197 April 1858) separates the name from that of the island in south Holland, the plural of which seems to have been also used in the sense of the county with Dutch Holland. The English name seems to be f. Holt, Holt + land + Land; but there is the difficulty that it appears in Domesday Book as Holland, a form not easy to account for.]

Holophote (hɔ·lɔfəʊt) [f Holo- + Gr φως, φωτ-ός light] The adj holophotal was first formed see below]

An optical apparatus, used in light houses, etc., by which the whole or nearly the whole, of the light from a lamp or other source, is made available for illumination by means of reflective or refractive media or both

1859 J Stevenson Fr the Holophotal Apparatus The optical arrangement which produces this result may be termed a Holophote 1852 Arch Journ Brit Archæol Assoc 'All rays coming from the back of the flame are directed through the holophote 1882 Athenæum No 2828 25 Mr J H A Macdonald, Q C, the late Solicitor-General for Scotland, has constructed an electric holophote course indicator' 1884 Lloyd's July, It is the Holophote that reflects the red white, and blue colours on the cascade, also the pure colours on the fountains themselves

So Holophote tal a, of the nature of or belonging to a holophote, reflecting or reflecting, of or with all the light Holophote tally adv Holophote ter, an apparatus for measuring the whole light emitted from a source

1850 J Stevenson Trans Scott Soc Arts IV 5 Such a light I have called the 'holophotal', or light of maximum intensity 1851 Illustr Exhib 1 Polarised Light An arrangement of apparatus has been suggested by Mr Thomas Stevenson Hebes termed a holophotal system 1872 R J Simpson Trans Scott Soc Arts VIII 274 Another mode of holophotally producing the intermittent light 1875 Rutherfurd Stellar Photography (1892) 132 The power of a reflector is much increased by what is termed the holophotal arrangement, where an annular lens is placed in front of the flame, while all the back rays of light which are otherwise lost, are thrown back into the flame by a hemispherical mirror 1888 Times (weekly ed) 11 May 7/4 The holophotometer is a marvellous apparatus of great ingenuity, for measuring, by a careful adjustment of mirrors, the intensity of light all round

Gr.* II. 45 Each syllable or word (in Chinese) has a considerable number of characters made up originally of different elements. Practically each of these homophones may be used, and has, in whatever sense, that word may be employed 1873 R. HALE Med. Lang. 170 note, Homophones, identical to the ear only, as aid and aide, rite, write, right, and wright. 1880 Nature 21 Feb. 369 In which the four homophones rite, wrote, right, and wright By the aid of the variant spelling a child readily learns that these homophones are really four different words.

2 Mus = HOMOPHONY 1 rare

1879 GROVE Dict. Mus. I. 746 Homophone voices or instruments sounding alike—unison passages applied to music written in what was formerly called the Monodic style now ordinarily employed for music in plain harmony as opposed to the Polyphonic or strict

Homophonic (hɒmofo·nik), a Mus [f as prec + -IC.] 1 Producing, or consisting of, sounds of the same pitch, unisonous, in unison Said of ancient music, opp to antiphonic

1881 BROADHOUSE Mus. Scientifica 142 Helmholtz in his chapter on The Identity of Homophonic Music. Enumerates five scales which differ more or less from our modern major scale

2 Loosely Said of music characterized by the predominance of one part or melody, to which the rest merely furnish harmonies, more correctly called monophonic or monodic Opp to polyphonic

1879 F. PROUT in Grove Dict. Mus. I. 55 The homophonic rather than the polyphonic style predominates in the music [Allemande], which frequently consists of a highly figurate melody, with a comparatively simple accompaniment 1880 Athenæum 3 Apr. 429/2 Bach's compositions are polyphonic rather than homophonic

Homophonous (hɒmo·fŏnŏs), a [f as prec + -OUS.] 1 Mus = HOMOPHONIC 1

1753 in CHAMBERS Cycl. Supp. 1872 E. HUTTER in Contin. Arts Mar. 272 The homophonous innocence of the Doric and Mixolydic scales

2 Having the same sound, of the character of homophones See HOMOPHONE B 1.

1826 John Bee XIV. 145 Fuch sound may be represented by several homophonous signs 1892 Athenæum 16 Apr. 501/1 The 'Scott Library' is sure to be confounded with the 'Scott Library,' so homophonous are they.

Homophony (hɒmo·fŏni) [ad Gr ὁμοφωνία unison, f ὁμόφωνος (see HOMOPHONE)]

1 Mus Homophonic music or style a Unison, or music performed in unison opp to antiphony b loosely Monophony, monody opp to polyphony (see HOMOPHONIC)

1776 BURNEY Hist. Mus. I. 137 Antiphony is more agreeable than homophony 1879 Grove's Dict. Mus. I. 111 The leading feature in the 17th century is the development of homophony with its melodious character and its richness of harmony, in contradistinction to the old strict polyphony

2 Philol. The quality of being homophonous, identity of sound (of words or characters)

1842 BRANDE Dict. Sci. etc. s. v. In French, which is peculiarly a dialect of Latin abounding in contractions, homophones are numerous 1892 Spectator 13 Aug. 233/1 Evident corruptions of the texts especially favoured by the homophonies of the characters

Ho moplasmy = HOMOTAXY

1874 R. BROWN Mem. Bot. 158 Cases of homoplasmy in plants are referable to two distinct classes, resemblances in general habit, and resemblances of particular organs

Homoplast (hɒ·moplast) Biol [f as prec + Gr πλαστός moulded] Cf bioplast]

1 An organ or part homoplastic with another (see next), opp to HOMOGEN 2

1870 RAY LANKESTER in Ann. Nat. Hist. VI. 39 Such details of agreement we must set down to the fact that they are to a great degree homoplasts, similar forces or requirements operating on similar materials in the two stocks having produced results in the way of structure which have a certain agreement

2 An aggregate or division of plastids all of the same structure opp to alloplast

1883 [see homogeneous 5 b HOMO]

Homoplastic (-plæ·stik), a Biol [f as prec + Gr πλαστικός fit for moulding] Having a similarity of structure without community of origin said of parts or organs of different animals or plants Opp to HOMOGENETIC

Nearly synonymous with HOMOMORPHIC c, and with ANALOGOUS 2 b; but implying that the similarities are due to similarity of environment

1870 RAY LANKESTER in Ann. Nat. Hist. VI. 40 The right ventricle of the bird's heart is not homogenous with the right ventricle of the crocodile's heart, but is with the left but the two cavities are homoplastic 1872 DARWIN Origin Spec. (ed. 6) xiv. 386 Homoplastic structures are the same with those which have classed as analogous modifications or resemblances

Homoplastide (-plæ·stid) Biol [f as prec + Gr πλαστός moulded + IDE.] An organism consisting of a number of cells all of the same kind Opp to heteroplastide and monoplastide

1889 VINES in Nature 24 Oct. 614 The bodies of multicellular organisms (monoplastides), as also that of undifferentiated multicellular organisms (homoplastides) Ibid. 622 [see HETEROPLASTIDE]

Homoplasy (hɒmp·plăsi) Biol† [f as prec + Gr -πλασία, f πλάσις moulding, formation] Homoplastic condition, similarity of structure produced independently by the operation of similar external circumstances Opp to HOMOGENY 2

1870 RAY LANKESTER in Ann. Nat. Hist. VI. 39 When identical or nearly similar forces or environments act on two or more parts of an organism which are exactly or nearly alike [or] parts in two organisms which parts are exactly or nearly alike and sometimes homogenetic, the resulting correspondences called forth in the several parts in the two organisms will be nearly or exactly alike. I propose to call this kind of agreement homoplasis or homoplasy Ibid. 40 What, exactly, is to be ascribed to homogeny, and what to homoplasy, in the relations of the sense of smell, is a matter for careful consideration 1886 Nat. Sci. 'Homoplasy,' the assumption by organisms of externally similar forms when exposed to similar external conditions. A good example is seen in the similarity of the American aloe, which is an Agave, to the true aloe

-hood (hud), suffix [ME. -hod (-hode) —OE. hād = OS. -hēd, OHG. -heit.] Orig a distinct abstract noun, meaning 'person, personality, condition, quality, rank' (see Had sb), which being freely combined with nouns, as in OE. cild hād child-condition, mægð-hād virgin state, pāpan hād papal dignity, ceased at length to be used as a separate word, and survived as a mere suffix, and is thus noteworthy as a late example of the process by which suffixes arose. The ME. form was regularly -hōd, with open ō, as still in Chaucer, but in the 15th c it had become close ō (rhyming in Hokenham's Seyntys with gōd 'good'), and this duly gave mod. Eng hood.
A parallel suffix, from same root and in same sense, is -head, ME. hed, -hede, = hēd
A considerable number of derivatives in -hood go back to OE hād, e g bishophood, childhood, priesthood; many are of later origin, either with hood substituted for the cognate hede, head, e g falsehood, likelihood, or as analogical formations, in some of which hood has displaced earlier suffixes. Being a living suffix, hood can be affixed at will to almost any word denoting a person or concrete thing, and to many adjectives to express condition or state, so that the number of these derivatives is indefinite None formations are numerous
