TRADE COMMISSIONER SERVICE

UNITED KINGDOM

THE United Kingdom Trade Commissioners are the representatives in India, of the Board of Trade. The department of the Board which is mainly concerned with external economic relations is the Commercial Relations and Exports Department which is responsible for general external commercial policy and for the promotion of export trade.

In foreign countries the counterpart of the work performed by Trade Commissioners is undertaken by Foreign Service Officers in Commercial, Diplomatic and Consular posts The Board of Trade is associated with the Foreign Office in the staffing of commercial posts in foreign countries But the trade policy of the United Kingdom is a matter for the President of the Board of Trade acting, as do all other Ministers, in consultation and agreement with those of his colleagues whose interests are also concerned

The primary duty of the United Kingdom Trade Commissioners consists in the giving of assistance to governments, organisations, firms and individuals who wish to establish contact with sources of supply in the United Kingdom The Trade Commissioner, in addition, himself collects information in regard to trade opportunities which may arise within his territory He reports to the Board of Trade on all matters affecting the trade, industry and commerce of the area entrusted to him He is responsible for maintaining close personal relations with ministers and officials of governments in his area, with chambers of commerce, trade associations and the principal importers and manufacturers. He aims at visiting the principal commercial centres, reporting upon foreign competition, on financial and trade conditions, and new legislation affecting trade He is also expected to maintain a regular flow of commercial information of all kinds to the Board of Trade, to maintain active correspondence with firms in the United Kingdom who wish to extend their trade, and to give all possible assistance to representatives of United Kingdom firms who may visit this territory. The senior U K. Trade Commissioner in India acts in addition as Economic Adviser to the U.K High Commissioner.

The United Kingdom Trade Commissioners in India endeavour to maintain contact with United Kingdom representatives and agents in India. The offices are equipped with a wide range of directories and reference books of all kinds, including libraries of catalogues of the leading United Kingdom manufacturers Firms desiring information with regard to specific manufacturers are invited either to call personally or to communicate their requirements in writing It is hoped that local importers and buyers will not hesitate to make more extensive use of the information available in these offices, and to bring to the attention of the United Kingdom Trade Commissioners any cases where difficulties may have arisen over the harmonious development of trade between the United Kingdom and India

AUSTRALIA

Australian Government Trade Commissioners are stationed at Bombay and Calcutta

The territory covered by the Australian Trade Commissioner Service in India and Pakistan includes India, Pakistan, Burma, Nepal, the Persian Gulf area and Aden

The Trade Commissioners deal with enquiries from all the above mentioned areas, their main function being concerned with putting Australian exporters and manufacturers in touch with organizations and merchants interested in importing Australian merchandise.

They maintain a flow of trade information to the Department of Commerce, Australia, for dissemination to Australian exporters and information on specific openings for trade, including Government contracts and tenders for which Australian products might be suitable. They watch the demand for specific goods and give information concerning competition to be met in their supply. An important function is to provide details of credit conditions and terms of payment. Market surveys on specific commodities are prepared and sent for the information of trade interests in Australia.

Information and literature is available on all aspects of trade with Australia

CANADA

The Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce comprises, as one of its principal divisions, the Foreign Trade Service, formerly described as the Commercial Intelligence Service This service had its beginnings prior to the establishment of the Department in 1892 and has undergone considerable expansion. Before the war it included a headquarters staff in Ottawa and thirty-four Trade Commissioner offices abroad Several of these were closed during the war years but are being progressively reopened and at the beginning of 1949 the service comprised offices in the United Kingdom, the Dominions, Newfoundland, Eire, the West Indian Colonies, the United States, Cuba, Egypt, the principal countries of Central and South America, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Portugal, France, Belgium, Italy, Turkey, Greece, India, China and other centres of the East The service still continues to expand both in respect to offices and trained personnel in order to assist in the transition of Canada's extensive wartime trade to a normal commercial basis

In those countries where Canada has established diplomatic representation the Trade Commissioner's office has been incorporated into the Canadian embassy or legation.

The office of the Canadian Trade Commissioner for India, Burma and Ceylon was established in Calcutta in 1922 and was transferred to Bombay on April 1st, 1940 In the summer of 1947, the office of the High Commissioner for Canada was established at New Delhi where a Commercial Section is also located The services of Canadian Trade Commissioner offices are at the disposal of Canadian firms interested in the export of their goods to the Indian, Burma and Ceylon markets and to Canadian manufacturers and others who may be interested in the purchase of local products These offices are also in regular touch with import houses in these countries and are prepared to co-operate as well with exporters interested in the Canadian market

FOREIGN POSSESSIONS IN INDIA

FRANCE and Portugal are now the only remaining European powers with territorial interests in India after the withdrawal of the British. Of these, Portugal was the first to establish a maritime Empire in Indian waters and France but one of the powers that disputed among themselves the Indian market on the partial eclipse of Portugal following upon the union of that nation with Spain under Philip II in 1580.

FRENCH SETTLEMENTS

The French establishments in India, as defined by the Anglo-French treaties of 1814 and 1815, comprise an aggregate area of 203 square miles, with a total population of 323,295 according to the census of 1941 The establishments are

(1) On the Coromandel Coast (a) Pondicherry, the capital, together with the adjoining territory, divided into 8 communes, (b) Karikal and the dependent districts divided into 6 communes;

(2) On the coast of Orissa Yanam, with the dependent villages, the lodge of Masulipatam and the garden Francepeth,

(3) On the Malabar Coast Mahé with the adjoining territory, and the lodge of Calicut,

(4) In Gujerat The factory of Surat, and

(5) in Bengal Chandernagore with Goretty, and the lodges of Kassimbazar, Jougdia, Dacca, Balassore and Patna.

Following India's achievement of Independence in 1947, the Government of France made a gift of the various lodges, which were but isolated plots of land where formerly French factories had stood, to the Indian Union

The de facto administration of Chandernagore was also transferred to India following a referendum (June 19, 1949) in that territory The formal change-over is now awaiting the signing of a treaty between India and France

The merger with India was decided on by 7,473 votes to 114 The process of de facto transfer of power began on August 15, 1949 when the police administration of the territory was handed over to the city's municipal council The transfer of power was completed when a West Bengal Government official B K Banerji took over the whole administration on 2nd May 1950 French officials were replaced by Indians and Indian law became operative

France further agreed as a result of negotiations with India to hold referenda in their remaining settlements in order to ascertain the people's will as to whether they would continue within the French Union or be merged in India

HISTORY

Long before the days of Louis XIV, efforts were made by the French to establish direct trade relations with India In 1601, a Company of the St Malo merchants fitted out two ships in an attempt to reach the East Indies In 1604-9 followed the attempts of Henry IV who, emulating the example of the Dutch and the English, set up a French East India Company In 1616, a French fleet sailed from St Malo for the Moluccas while in 1619 the two so-called "fleets of Montmorency" sailed for Malaya and Japan.

Though these early efforts met with scant success, interest in Eastern trade was kept up by the success of French merchants and travellers in exploring the sea route by the Cape as well as the much shorter land route via the Levant and Asia Minor In 1642 Rigault obtained from Cardinal Richelieu the privilege of sailing to Madagascar and establishing colonies and trade there The charter granted to him led to the foundation of the La Compagnie d'Orient which was granted the monopoly of Eastern trade for 20 years, and to whose endeavours was due the establishment at Fort Dauphin, the first port easily accessible to ships sailing to and from India. On the accession of Louis XIV, the great minister Colbert, convinced that French maritime trade could best be promoted by means of joint stock companies, proposed and carried out the establishment of a national institution uniting all the resources of the country This was the famous Compagnie des Indes Orientales The King contributed three million livres free of interest from which were to be deducted all losses incurred during the first ten years, and the royal example was expected to be emulated by the nobles The new Company was an official body The King undertook to protect it and to escort its ships with his own men-of-war and granted it extensive powers including the powers to fly the royal flag, depute ambassadors, enter into treaties with and make war on Indian princes and in order to signify the great hopes he and his minister reposed in the venture, he also granted it arms and a motto Florebo quocumque ferat

Thus equipped, the Company's fleet succeeded in occupying Madagascar and making Fort Dauphin the base of operations It was not till 1668, however, that the ferat Comptoir or factory was founded at Surat by the Company's Resident Caron At about this time, the Dutch, whose power had reached its apogee in Indian waters, canvassed with the Indian princes against these newcomers, and Colbert, urged by the Company's factors to give the Indian princes a "sample of their master's power", despatched a squadron of 10 vessels under De La Haye with instructions to establish the French position firmly in India and also neutralise the propaganda of the Dutch by inspiring the Indian princes with a high opinion of the power as well as the justice of His Majesty In the course of his expedition, De La Haye secured for the French the grant of Trincomalee from the King of Kandy, but failed to engage the Dutch fleet which had securely established itself in Trincomalee Bay. The result was that no sooner had the French squadron quitted the bay, than the Dutch seized the handful of men who had been left behind and took possession of Trincomalee, ejecting the French from Ceylon De La Haye, however passed over to the Coromandel coast where he conquered St Thome, a Portuguese position in the neighbourhood of Madras, which had ten years earlier been taken by the King of Golconda At St Thome the French expeditionary forces were besieged for two years It was then that Bellanguer de Lespenay sent to Porto Novo to seek from the rival government of Bijapur provisions for the besieged, obtained from Sher Khan Lodi, the Governor, in addition to munitions and victuals, a site for a factory in a fishing village Pondicherry, which the Danes had previously occupied and abandoned.

The city of Pondicherry was founded by Francois Martin who devoted himself wholeheartedly to its fortification and embellishment But the Dutch, who had sworn to drive the French out of India, attacked and took it in 1693 Convinced of the decided superiority of their arms, they, too, gave themselves to beautifying the city and improving its defences certain that it would never be restored to the French But in 1697 by the treaty of Ryswick, the French obtained the rendition of the settlement, and the Dutch had to rest content with the compensation of 16,000 pagodas which they were paid in return for the improvements they had effected In the time of Dumas, the next governor, Pondicherry was attacked by the Marathas under Raghoba, fresh from their victory over the Portuguese at Bassein, but was defended successfully.

In 1746 while France and England were ranged on opposite sides in the War of the Austrian Succession in Europe, the French La Bourdonnais captured Madras and in retaliation an English squadron tried to seize Pondicherry only to be repulsed with heavy losses by Dupleix, the Governor-General. Fortune however, was not so partial to French arms in India during the Seven Years' War when France and England were again fighting on opposite sides. In the course of hostilities again the French commander Lally took Madras which was given to pillage and rapine. He also took and demolished Fort St. David near-by. But it was not long before the tide turned and the French were forced to capitulate at Pondicherry in 1761 The English took the town and wreaked vengeance by razing it to the ground with its fortifications, walls, and buildings Simultaneously too France lost to the English all her other possessions in India She secured their restoration at the Peace of Paris, which settled the disputes of the Seven Years War.

During the American War of Independence, France having made common cause with the rebel colonies against England her possessions in India were, again, seized by the English and remained in their possession till they were restored a second time by the Peace of Versailles, in 1783

For yet a third time the French Settlements were seized by the English in 1793 during the Revolutionary and Napoleonic wars They were ordered to be restored after the Peace of Amiens in 1802 But with the renewal of the war in 1803 the restoration of the settlements which had been retained by Lord Wellesly was cancelled They were finally restored to France for the last time in 1816-17

Chandernagore was acquired by the French in 1688 from the Delhi Emperor, Mahe was seized in 1725-26, Karikal was secured in 1739 under a grant from Chanda Sahib and Yanam was seized in 1750 and formally taken possession two years later

COMMERCE AND INDUSTRIES

Domestic commerce is insignificant as the area is too small The chief crops are rice, groundnuts, peas, lentils, vetches, onions and other vegetables, betel, indigo, sugar-cane, bananas and other fruits, coconuts and oleaginous grams The major portion of these products is consumed in the districts themselves the only markets being the towns of Pondicherry, Karikal, Yanam, Mahe and Chandernagore

The chief exports are oil-seeds which are sent from the ports of Pondicherry and Karikal The imports are mainly manufactured goods, textiles and luxury articles from France and the countries on the Continent.

There are at Pondicherry 3 cotton mills and at Chandernagore 1 jute mill The cotton mills have in all about 2,000 looms and 86,000 spindles giving employment to some 7,000 people Besides these there is one oil factory, several oil presses for goundnuts and one ice factory.

There is a Chamber of Commerce elected by the leading merchants at Pondicherry

The only bank is La Banque D'Indochine, which caters for the needs of the local business.

Pondicherry is served by the Messageria Maritimes whose ships sail monthly from France to Indo-China and by the steamers of the B I S.N. Co plying fortnightly between the East Coast ports and the Straits Settlements. A railway line also connects Pondicherry with Villupuram, a junction on the South Indian Railway.

The Customs Union which was established as a result of negotiations with the Government of India in 1941 expired in 1948 and has so far not been renewed.

EDUCATION

At Pondicherry alone, there are at present, besides the Law School, and the Medical College, one undenominational college for secondary education, one secondary school, 5 public institutions for higher primary education, four schools preparing students for English examinations, fifteen public schools for boys, eighteen public schools for girls and twenty-nine co-educational, all imparting primary education.

At Chandernagore, the chief institution is the College Dupleix formerly called St Mary's Institution, under Government control. The minor settlements possess good churches and school buildings and provide primary education. An excellent public library and a model record office at Pondicherry cater for all the needs of scholarship.

PONDICHERRY

Pondicherry is the chief of the French settlements in India and its capital is the seat of the Government. The city is situated in the district of South Arcot in Madras State, about 89 miles from Madras. It is divided by a canal into two parts, the Ville Blanche (or white city) and the Ville Noire (the dark city). The Ville Blanche is towards the east, on the sea-shore, and has a European appearance, the streets being broad and spacious, laid at right angles to one another. Numerous public buildings and charming hotels, magnificently laid out with courtyards and embellished with gardens and venetians, all in the Louis XIV style give the city an original and pleasing architectural aspect.

There is no harbour, but only a roadstead which is the best on the entire coast. Ships lie at a distance from the shore and contact with land is maintained by means of the usual masula boats peculiar to this part of South India. There is a pier to facilitate the loading of ships. With a view to enhance its value in loading and unloading cargo, the pier has been extended for about 265 ft. giving it a total length of about 1,105 feet. Pondicherry is well placed as a centre of tourism, being but a few hours' motoring distance from the main beauty spots of South India, such as the famous fortress of Ginji, the Seven Pagodas of Mahabalipuram, the temples of Chidambaram, Tiruvannamalai, Vellore and the city of Madras.

KARIKAL

Karikal is situated in the Tanjore District, and consists of a single tract of territory stretching along the east coast between Tranquebar and Nagore. It is at a distance of 90 miles from Pondicherry. It covers an area of 53 sq. miles and is divided into 6 communes containing 110 villages. The soil is very fertile and is watered by eight tributaries of the River Cauveri, which by the periodical floods adds to the fertility of the land. The five canals with their ramifications complete the irrigation system. Karikal is the terminus of a line from Paralam on the Tanjore District Railway. The establishment has a population of 60,555, according to the 1941 census.

YANAM

The town is situated in the delta of the Godavari covering an area of 5 miles and is an enclave of the District of Godavari in Madras State. It is bounded on the south by the Godavari river and on the north by the River Coringa. The Godavari falls into the sea 12 miles from Yanam. As the mouth of the river is blocked the approach to Yanam is made by the River Coringa. The soil is fertile, and supports a population of 5,711.

MAHE

The territory of Mahé on the west coast consists of the town of Mahé on the left bank of the river of the same name; and the isolated district of Nalutara on the right bank containing the 4 villages of Chambara, Chalakara, Palour and Pandaquel. It lies within the District of Malabar in Madras State, and covers an area of 26 sq. miles. The river is navigable by boats of 20 to 25 tons for a distance of one to two miles in the interior.

The entrance of the river of Mahé is blocked by rocks, and the bar is dangerous except in very smooth water. An estimate in 1941 gave the population as 14,092. Rice is grown where water is plentiful.

CHANDERNAGORE

With a small surrounding territory on the right bank of the Hooghly, 22 miles by rail from Calcutta, Chandernagore is a beautiful town with large streets laid at right angles to one another with elegant houses on either side. There are vestiges of a park and a chateau constructed by Dupleix. The establishment has a population of 38,284.

PORTUGUESE SETTLEMENTS

Goa, Daman and Diu are all that remains to-day of Portugal's once vast and glorious maritime empire in the east. In its heyday it extended over a coastlength of thousands of miles from Aden on the Red Sea to Macau and Timor in the Far East. But after the annexation of Portugal by Spain in 1580 Portugal lost, one by one, her bastions, Aden, Ormuz, Bassein, Chaul, Ceylon and Malacca, and, shorn of their splendour, these three remnants of her supremacy on the seas constitute desolate mementoes of an age that is past.

All the three settlements are situated within the State of Bombay. Goa is on the Konkan Coast, Daman, along with the small territory of Pragana-Nagar-Avely lies on the Gujarat coast at the entrance to the Gulf of Cambay, and Diu is a tiny islet and along with the isolated spots, Gogola and Simbor lies on the southern fringe of the Saurashtra peninsula. All together, they constitute what is styled under the new Portuguese Constitution the Estado Portugues de India. They cover an aggregate area of 4,240 square kilometres and comprise a population of 624,177 inhabitants, according to the last census held in 1941.

HISTORY

The genesis of Portugal's "adventure in the East" is to be found in the establishment by Prince Henry the Navigator of his school of navigation at Sagres in the middle of the 15th century. Following up the exploratory achievements of his predecessors who set out from here, Vasco da Gama landed at Calicut on the 20th May 1498. Within a decade the Portuguese, waging constant wars against the Arabs, Negroes, Ethiopians, Persians and Turks had succeeded in establishing themselves firmly at strategic points on either side of the Arabian Sea which they had converted into a home lake.

Alphonso de Albuquerque, who succeeded da Gama and other captains sought not merely to fix the broad limits of the Portuguese power but to lay and stabilize the foundations of an ambitious empire. Goa, which by reason of its ideal geographical position was at this time a flourishing and opulent trade centre, appeared to him indispensable for the realization of his dreams. This was to be the centre of all commercial and imperial activity, and along with Ormuz, the naval base at the head of the Persian Gulf commanding the approaches to the Red Sea and Malacca, another bastion in the East Indies, controlling the spice trade, would ensure the security of the vast maritime empire, opening up at the same time perspectives of fresh conquest in the Far East. Political conditions in India assisted these schemes and helped in the establishment of a regime of protectorates over the warring rajas who vied with one another to put themselves under the protection of the feringhi flag. Albuquerque easily annexed the city and island of Goa which was ruled by the Adil Shahis of Bijapur in 1510 with the aid of the Vijayanagara admiral Timoja, and gradually consolidated the Portuguese sway over the land.

In 1546, dissentions broke out in the Adil Sahi family still ruling at Bijapur. Prince Meale Khan, one of the contestants for the throne called in the assistance of the Portuguese, who at the close of hostilities remained with the territories of Salcete and Bardez. These, together with the city and island of Goa make up what is known as the Velhas Conquistas or old conquests. The Novas Conquistas or new conquests comprising the rest of the present day Goa territory were acquired at various times after 1745.

In 1521 a Portuguese sailing vessel was driven by storm on the shores of Daman. An expeditionary force was subsequently sent to conquer it under Nuno da Cunha. Taken from the sultan of Cambay in 1529, it was reconquered by that potentate but was finally ceded to the Portuguese in 1556.

In 1535 Bahadur Shah, the sultan of Gujarat, hard pressed by the forces of Humayun was compelled to come to terms with the Portuguese and ceded to them Salsette, Bassein, and the islands of Bombay, Karanja, Elephanta and Trombay along with rights to construct a fortress on the island of Diu.

The Portuguese power continued to prosper till the appearance of the Dutch and the English in Indian waters in the beginning of the 17th century. These powers contested the maritime supremacy of Portugal now weakened considerably by her union with Spain. In 1603 the Dutch blockaded Goa but were compelled to withdraw after a month. They returned to the blockade in 1610, this time assisted by the Muslim powers on land. In 1622 the English and the Shah of Persia joined forces to wrest the naval base of Ormuz. Then the Dutch seized one after another the other important possessions. Malacca in 1641, Ceylon in 1656, Quillon in 1661, Cranganore in 1662, Cochin and Cannanore in 1663.

With the rise of the Maratha power, Portugal suffered further losses in her domains. In 1683 Sambhaji invaded Bardez and Salcette and all but succeeded in taking the city of Goa itself, but was compelled to withdraw by an incursion of the Mughal forces into his own territories. It was on this occasion that the Portuguese Governor Count of Alvor, feeling that all was lost, placed himself under the protection of St. Francis Xavier and as a symbol thereof surrendered into the Saint's hands his staff of authority, so that when the Maratha armies withdrew it came to be believed that the Mughal armies had appeared on the scene at the right moment by the Saint's intercession. To this day, in grateful memory of this miraculous deliverance, every new Governor accepts the staff of office from the hands of the Saint where it is deposited by his retiring predecessor.

In 1739 the Maratha general Chimnaji Appa annexed the entire province of the North comprising Bassein and Salsette. Only Daman and the fortress of Diu were now left to them out of this vast stretch of territory.

During the Napoleonic Wars in Europe, the English under the pretext of protecting the Portuguese settlements from the French occupied them and their military forces continued there with brief interruptions till 1815 the year of Waterloo.

Since then the Portuguese have ruled undisturbed what was left of their empire in India, though there have been periodic revolts in Goa. The Ranes, a Rajput tribe who had manned the Maratha armies, raised the banner of revolt in Satari in 1852, 1871, 1895, 1901 and 1912 finally to be put down with great severity. In the 1871 and 1895 revolts, they were joined by the native garrisons On the latter occasion the brother of King Carlos himself came to India to suppress the rebellion. The Ranes were defeated and broken up in 1912 and the pick of their youth deported to the African colonies where they perished. No further revolts have taken place in Satari.

The successes obtained by Indian nationalism have had their repercussions in Portuguese India. In 1946 a non-violent movement, with the object of securing civil liberties for the people was initiated in Goa under the leadership of the Indian Socialist leader Dr. Rammanohar Lohia The satyagraha, however, proved ineffective in the face of mounting repression used by the Government and the only result was deportation of several popular leaders to Portugal after trial by a military court.

The Goan National Congress continued to agitate for the end of Portuguese rule in Indian Portuguese territory and pressed for the merger of that territory with India The Goan representative in the National Assembly in Lisbon urged the grant of some sort of autonomy to the Portuguese possessions in India

Early in 1950 the Government of India sent a note to the Portuguese Government in Lisbon, asking that the Portuguese possessions in India might be transferred to the Indian Union It was also suggested that the method of transfer might be through a plebiscite The Portuguese Government sent an official reply refusing to discuss the question of transfer of sovereignty at all

Meanwhile the Portuguese Government issued a decree freeing all political prisoners by an amnesty The Padroada system by which the Portuguese Government had rights of ecclesiastical patronage in India was also abolished

GOVERNMENT

The advent of Dr. Oliveira Salazar to power and the establishment of his Estado Novo has led to increasing centralization in the administration of Portuguese India All measures of importance must be initiated by and carry the sanction of the home government in Lisbon The powers of the Governor-General are considerably reduced and his functions may now be said not to pass beyond supervisory and executive. The Governor's Council, Conselho do Governo which assists him, is shorn of what little legislative powers it formerly possessed and its functions are now purely advisory, the nominated majority being predominant in all deliberations. Local self-government has been all but abolished There are no elected municipalities and local boards in the villages as in former days. Each municipality is in charge of an administrative committee nominated by the Governor-General, who also appoints the presidents of all charitable and cultural associations in the country. A stringent censorship controls the freedom of the press, and every article, book or pamphlet has to be submitted to the board of censors before it appears in print. Infringements of the press laws are severely dealt with and newspapers are required to keep security deposits with the Government before being licensed for publication Freedom of association is likewise controlled No public meeting or assembly, be its purpose ever so innocuous, may be convened without previous permission of the authorities, and every intended talk and speech must bear the censor's visa.

The Governor-General is the head of the administration and is stationed in the capital Cidade de Goa formerly known as Nova-Goa and also Panjim. Secretariats for Home and Political Services, Finance, Customs, Education, Military Forces, Navy, Agriculture, Health Services and Public Works assist him. There are also three Departments for Posts and Telegraphs, Survey and Fiscal of the West of India Portuguese Guaranteed Railway. Associated in the task of government is the Conselho do Governo possessing restricted legislative and advisory powers. The Governor-General is its ex-officio president. Five members are elected by means of a very exclusive franchise, three to represent the Velhas Conquistas, one the Novas Conquistas and one the districts of Daman and Diu Five others are nominated to represent the minorities, agriculture, commerce and the press. Besides these, four officials, the Attorney-General, the Director of Finances, the Director of Civil Administration and the Director of Public Works sit at the Council's deliberations in their own right. Daman and Diu have each a district Governor.

In each district there is a District Council for the supervision of the various municipalities and other local bodies in its jurisdiction For administrative purposes the district is divided into Concelhos, each Concelho being in the charge of an official styled the Administrador, and for judicial purposes it is divided into circuits or Comarcas each having its own court of original jurisdiction. An appeal lies from the decisions of these courts to the Tribunal de Relacao or High Court sitting in the capital and side by side with the latter there is also a Tribunal Administrativo to dispense justice under droit administratif.

The maintenance of law and order in the province of the Comandante-Geral da Policia with headquarters in the Cidade de Goa and having under him a descending hierarchy of various Comandantes and Chefes de Policia in the administrative sub-divisions Each village or parish which is the smallest unit has its regedor corresponding to the Indian patel.

A striking feature of the rural administration is the continuance of the ancient Indian institution of the village community which has disappeared elsewhere in India In places where the resistance to Portuguese domination has continued almost to our own days, as in the southern communes of Goa, Assolna, Cuncolim and Velim, the village communities were suppressed and their estates confiscated by the Government But on the whole they have continued in operation.

The village community is an autonomous institution, socialist in its organization under which land is held in common by the original settlers of the village here called the Gaunkares, thus preventing concentration of land in the hands of a few and promoting a rough equality, while preventing the domination by privileged few The management is vested in a committee elected by the constituents. The community undertakes various duties in regard to the maintenance of schools, roads, dispensaries, etc. and of religious services without distinction of creed It is responsible to Government for land revenue and compounds all the taxes by a lump sum paid into the exchequer It is subject to supervision by the Administrarcao das Comundades and cannot spend moneys without Government sanction

The towns of Portuguese India though few in number, serve as commercial centres for their districts; but with a restricted road mileage across the frontiers and in the absence of means of transport away from the only railway line and the rivers, commercial activity is confined normally to the local markets, except in isolated instances as in the case of the town of Margao in Goa which lies at the centre of rail and road traffic converging from the various points of the district.

The chief agricultural products of Goa are rice, coconuts, cashew-nuts, betel-nuts, mangoes, and sugar-cane. Of these only cashew-nuts, betel-nuts, coconuts and mangoes are exported in any considerable quantities, the rice grown not being sufficient for local consumption. Other exports include copra, bamboos, salt, salt-fish and manganese ore. The only industries worthy of note are soap manufacture, tile manufacture, sugar and tinned food products and jaggery. The imports consist of rice, textiles and other manufactured goods, an unrestricted supply of which is just now available owing to the uneven situation created by the currency export regulations in force in the Indian Union, there being no such regulations in Portuguese India.

The economic situation in the territory has become very acute in the last few years During the war, an artificial panic created by the Portuguese Goverment's decision not to accept any longer Indian Rupee notes in their offices gave rise to a flourishing blackmarket where Indian currency was exchanged for the local rupee at a fabulous discount, varying from 10 to 25 per cent The scarcity of the essential consumer goods drove thousands of people abroad into India to earn their living and the majority of these have not returned to their homes, thus maintaining the uneven situation created by the war exigencies There is a chronic adverse trade balance which is partly made up from the remittances from emigrants, numbering over a lakh, who earn their living in India, Pakistan, Africa and other parts of the Commonwealth

Most of the trade of Portuguese India is with the Indian Union, Pakistan, Portugal, Portuguese African colonies and the countries of the Continent Just at present, owing to the world currency situation, there is a glut of American goods on the market.

There are no banks operating in Portuguese territory with the exception of the Banco Nacional Ultramarino which has offices in the major towns

A railway line maintained and run by the West of India Portuguese Guaranteed Railway Company, once a subsidiary of the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway, joins the port of Mormugao with the junction of Londa on the M & S M Railway It fulfils a very important role by providing an outlet to the sea for the products of this part of the Mahratta country.

Marmugao, which is the chief port, is also one of the major ports on the west coast of India and is open to ocean-going vessels of every size from all parts of the world It is used by the ships of the B I S N Co Ltd , going south to Colombo and the ports on the east coast as also by ships bound for the East African ports. Marmugao is a port of call for every coasting ship of India's merchant fleet.

EDUCATION AND CULTURE

Primary education is free and compulsory in schools maintained by the State of which there is at least one in every village There are at present some 200 primary schools controlled and administered by a Board of Primary Education, Conselho da Instrucacao Primaria with offices in the capital. In the Cidade de Goa there is a Lyceum for the study of Portuguese secondary education, a Normal School, and a Medical School A Theological Seminary trains young men for the priesthood at Rachol. Over and above these, there are a number of English teaching High Schools run by private enterprise and by religious orders preparing students for the S S C. examination of the Bombay Government and the Entrance Examination of the University of Bombay.

There is in the capital the Instituto Vasco da Gama, a research association with an exclusive membership and its own research journal. The Bibliotheca Nacional houses what is perhaps one of the best libraries of rare books and manuscripts on the west coast of India while the Arquivo contain an inexhaustible wealth of hitherto unexplored historical material.

GOA

The territory of Goa lies between the parallels of 15° 48′ and 14° 30′ latitude North by 73° 40′ and 74° 19′ longitude East. It has the island of Angediva, once an important watering station for sailing vessels but now deserted, as a dependency at its southern extremity opposite Karwar.

The temperature varies between the highest mean of 90° F. recorded in April-May and the lowest mean of 70°-71° F. recorded in December-February. The year divides itself easily into two well distinguishable seasons: a dry season from October to the end of April, and a wet season from May to the end of September. The former is marked by land breezes and the latter by the south-west monsoon with almost incessant heavy rains from June to the middle of August.

The population of Goa is 540,925 of whom Christians form roughly one half, the rest being Hindus and Muslims. The latter, who were once the rulers, and were actually responsible for the foundation of the Old City of Goa now in ruins, have dwindled into insignificance both in number and influence. Racially, the people belong to the Aryo-Dravidian stock, speaking Konkani, a language having close affinities with Gujarati and Marathi, but entirely different as regards inflection of words, grammatical construction and syntax. The various Powers that ruled Goa have left their legacies in the form of loan words to be found in the present-day Konkani Originally using the Kannada script, Konkani is now written by Christians in the Roman script and by Hindus in Devanagari

The old social structure native to the Hindu society has persisted in spite of the influence of Christianity. The Goan Christians preserve the old castes and are proud to be the descendants of the ruling or priestly castes, Kshatriyas (Charados) or Brahmans (Saraswats) For the rest, they are completely westernized in their habits and mode of life

Under the Portuguese regime and with the advent of western civilization, increasing numbers of Goans have left their homeland in search of better opportunities of earning a livelihood Goans are to be found occupying posts of every category in India, Pakistan, Africa, the Far East and even Europe and America

The capital, Cidade de Goa, situated on the left bank of the Mandovi, stands on the site of an outpost of the Adil Shahs, one of whose residences is still being used as the Government secretariat Cidade de Goa is a charming city, laid out amidst the luxuriant vegetation of the river valley, and has a cosmopolitan population of 20,300 inhabitants It possesses some magnificent public buildings, and elegant villas rise above the water-front. Some very good hotels, with excellent cuisine, western and Indian, cater to the needs of the tourist and the casual visitor. The port is visited by sailing craft and during the dry season coastal steamers call there regularly from Bombay and the intervening ports There is also a ferry-boat that maintains hourly runs across the river to Betim and Verem on the other side for the benefit of people wishing to travel to Bardez and beyond.

Margao is the capital of Salcete. It is a thriving business centre lying midway between the port of Mormugao and the frontier on the railway line It is served with many excellent arterial roads joining the various points in the district. It is also a centre of educational activity and possesses several English teaching convents and schools.

Vasco da Gama, another town, lies within two miles of Mormugao on the railway line. It is altogether a new city planned on modern lines and fostered by the Government's desire to promote the economic and industrial progress of the harbour, for which a special Department has been created with headquarters here. The only airport is within easy reach from here.

Old Goa, the old capital and the metropolis of the Portuguese Empire in the east is now deserted and in ruins. The only standing edifices are the Cathedral of Goa, the Basilica of Bom Jesus where the body of St. Francis Xavier is enshrined, and a number of other churches and convents, all of them magnificent examples of well known styles of classical European architecture Every few years the body of the Saint is exposed for public veneration and thousands of pilgrims from the world over crowd here, reviving for a few days the past grandeur of the city. The Government have recently drained and cleansed the place of the malarial scourge which was primarily responsible for its depopulation, and after inspection by a committee of international experts, the city is now used to quarter troops.

Calangute is a popular sea resort with a splendid sandy beach In the hot weather months of March to May, the place becomes the haven of thousands of holiday-makers from all parts of Goa and the neighbouring places in the Indian Union.

Dud-Sagar is a magnificent waterfall, a regular cascade with milky white waters rushing down hundreds of feet from the heights of the Ghats It lies on the railway line between Castle Rock, the last station in the Indian Union, and Collem

Arvalem is another beautiful waterfall in Bicholim.

There are four major hospitals, the Hospital Central in the capital attached to the Medical School, the Hospicio de Sagrado Coracao de Maria in Margao maintained by a charitable trust, the Hospital of Ribandar run by the Santa Casa de Misericordia, another non-official charitable trust and the Asylo de Nossa Senhora de Milagres at Mapuca

DAMAN

This remnant of the old province of the north lies between 20° 25′ 26″ latitude north and 72° 55′ 12″ longitude east in Gujarat It also includes the two isolated enclaves of Drasa and Pragana-Nagar-Avely, lying to the south-east and crossed by the Daman-Ganga river

The climate does not differ from that of Goa, the country forming part of the same littoral of Konkan But on the whole it is pleasanter and the temperatures are lower than those of Goa. During the south-west monsoon Pragana has a healthier climate than Daman The entire territory has a total area of 62 square miles and a population of some 60,000 inhabitants, mostly of Gujarati extraction. It is easily reached from Bombay by the B B & C I Railway, being at a distance of 4½ hours' journey

There are some very interesting historical relics here such as the old fort and a few surviving churches reminiscent of the old times

DIU

About 150 miles to the north-west of Daman lies the tiny islet of Diu off the southern coast of Saurashtra, between 20° 42′ 50″ latitude north and 70° 59′ longitude east It is a small town separated from the mainland by a narrow arm of the sea. Dependent on it and surrounded by the territory of Junagadh is the enclave of Gogola and also the island and fort of Pani Cota in the bay of Simbor.

Diu is reached from Bombay by the B B & C I Railway via Viramgam and Delwada. Access by sea is easier and more rapid but there is no harbour There is an excellent roadstead where ships can safely anchor in two fathoms of water

The mean temperature is round about 70° F. and in winter it is very cold The population is estimated at 19,731

AIMS AND OBJECTS

Besides the establishment of 'Akhanda Hindustan' the aims and objects of the Hindu Mahasabha as first adopted at a meeting of the All-India Council held in New Delhi on December 27, 1948, still stand

(1) The establishment of a really democratic State in Hindustan, based on the culture and tradition of the land,

2) The organisation and consolidation of all sections of the people into one organised whole;

(3) The creation of a new social order in which all nationals will enjoy equal rights and opportunities and share equal responsibilities;

(4) The assurance to each national of the dignity of human values and full freedom of thought, expression, association and worship,

(5) The revival and promotion of the ancient Indian motto of plain living and high thinking, and the glorious ideals of Indian womanhood,

(6) Adoption of (Sanskrit-Nishta) Hindi as the national language and Devanagri as the national script of India,

(7) Making of Hindustan politically, economically and materially strong and self-reliant;

(8) Removal of all forms of social inequalities and disabilities,

(9) Reclamation of all those who have left the Hindu fold and welcoming of others into the community;

(10) Ending of gross inequalities in the distribution of wealth, assurance of a decent standard of living to each national, and securing for workers and peasants their rightful share in the economy of the country,

(11) Industrialisation of the country as rapidly as possible,

(12) Promotion of cow protection and abolition of killing,

(13) Cultivation of friendly relations with other nations with a view to maintaining international peace and progress.

THE YEAR IN REVIEW.

The Hindu Mahasabha was renamed as 'Akhil Bharat Hindu Mahasabha' in accordance with a resolution of the Working Committee passed on 27th November, 1949

One major item among the general aims and objects was specially emphasised and that was the reunion of India and Pakistan The economic programme on paper appeared to be much the same as that of the Socialists though it was explained from time to time how the Mahasabha programme differed from that of the Socialists A cardinal belief of the Mahasabha was that there were only two parties in India with clear-cut well defined policies, one was the Communist Party and the other the Mahasabha, and the future was seen mostly as a conflict between these two sides. The Mahasabha, came fully back into politics after its retirement consequent on Mahatma Gandhi's assassination, and as the year progressed the organization appeared to gain in confidence The members firmly believed that there were areas in the Punjab, Rajasthan and Delhi where they could win many electoral victories over the Congress in the coming general elections.

The trouble in Bengal gave the Mahasabha its real opportunity On the question of solution to the problem the Mahasabha appeared to be divided into a moderate and an extreme side. The extremists seemed to press for some kind of military dicision, while the moderate wing represented chiefly by Dr Shyama Prasad Mookerji urged one of three solutions 1. Pakistan must declare itself a secular State, 2 There must be an exchange of population on an area basis, 3 India and Pakistan must reunite In general the Mahasabha reacted so vigorously to the Bengal situation that during the peace talks between the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan many Mahasabha leaders had to be silenced in order that talks might proceed under the best possible auspices

The four important meetings of the year, were the Working Committee meetings at Delhi on 27th May, 11th September and 27th November, 1949, and the annual session at Calcutta on 24th December, 1949

The following is a more detailed factual account of the year's happenings —

At its meeting on 7th May the Working Committee adopted an eight-point political and economic programme of nationalization of land and key industries Other points from the programme are as follows 1 Land shall belong to the State, the tenants shall enjoy the full fruit of his labour, the minimum requirements of a family must be fixed 2 All key industries must be nationalized and decentralized Credit, transport and communications must be controlled Workers shall become part proprietors

The Committee disapproved of India's membership of the Commonwealth It also held that there was no longer any justification for holding a plebiscite in Kashmir

At its meeting held on Sept 11, a sixteen-point resolution to solve the financial crisis was formulated The points include prohibition of import of luxury goods and foreign textiles, gradual relaxation of control over food grains, and textiles, stoppage of the sumptuary allowance of the Governor-General and Governors for parties, etc, the issue of a 'national development loan' The other items adopted were, 1 Hindi in Devanagri script with Hindi numerals should be forthwith introduced in official business and administration, 2 A special tax must be levied on those States which were unaffected by partition for relief and rehabilitation of refugees

At its meeting on 27th November the Working Committee decided to rename the Mahasabha as 'Akhil Bharat Hindu Mahasabha' It adopted a resolution expressing its "strong disapproval" of "Government callousness" in safeguarding the interests of East Bengal Hindus It also recorded its disapproval of the recently promulgated Evacuee Property Ordinance as "it utterly fails to afford adequate relief to the refugees" from Pakistan The Committee deplored the Government's refusal to hand over the bodies of Nathuram Godse and Narayan Apte to their relatives

Further, the Committee protested against the Sachar formula on the language controversy in the Punjab. The Mahasabha wanted Hindi to be the only compulsory language there

There was much discussion throughout the year on policy and programme From time to time statements were issued and speeches made clarifying some point or elucidating some other Thus the ex-Secretary of the Party Mr Asutosh Lahiry explained that there were real differences between the Hindu Mahasabha and the Socialists or Communists The emphasis of the Mahasabha was primarily on cultural unity and secondarily on economic readjustment The ideal of Hindu Rashtra did not mean that the State would be governed exclusively by the Hindus in Hindu interest.

In a statement on July 14, 1949 Mr. L. B. Bhopatkar, the President (1949) of the All India Hindu Mahasabha asserted that the greatest danger to the country came from the Communists He appealed to the Government to forge a common national front which would administer the country both at the Centre and in the States He expressed the view that one party rule was bound to land the country in chaos and disaster. Mr. Asutosh Lahiry said at a press conference in August, that there were only two parties in India which had a clear-cut ideology—the Communist Party and the Hindu Mahasabha. All other parties were bound to be eliminated as the final struggle for power entered its crucial phase He believed that the Communist Party would be ultimately rooted out of the country. Mr Lahiry dismissed the Socialists as futile, a mere 'alias' of the Congress and went on to make a bitter attack on the latter He said that the Congress had fully demonstrated its incapacity to reform the present structure, it was just maintaining an Indianized alien system of rule

Mr. Lahiry further elucidated the position of the Mahasabha in a statement made at Calcutta on November 4 Politics was inseparable from religion In bringing about a new social order India must aim at securing cultural unity If India was to rediscover her soul the people must go back to their ancient moorings The Hindu Mahasabha alone was capable of helping the process forward as they alone believed in the superiority of Indian cultural heritage.

Mr Deshpande reverted to the same theme in inaugurating the annual session of the Uttar Pradesh Hindu Mahasabha at Lucknow on 11th December He said that secular nationalization had been the cause of the downfall of the nation Only Hindu nationalization could bind together all the disintegrating forces in the country As for the economic programme of the Party it was different from either capitalism or Communism The Mahasabha believed in private initiative and enterprise and yet capitalism must be controlled to prevent it from exploiting the masses The Mahasabha's economic programme was to save the country from being overwhelmed by the rising tide of Communism.

In Nagpur Mr. Savarkar said that the talk of a secular state was absurd in a country that was inhabited largely by Hindus It was their proud task to establish a Hindu Rashtra. Pakistan and Hindustan would soon be united under the banner of Akhanda Bharat.

ANNUAL SESSION.

The annual session of the All-India Hindu Mahasabha was held in Calcutta on 24th December, 1949 under the presidency of Dr. N. B. Khare. Here are some of the more important points made by the President in his draft speech which could not be delivered owing to the failure of loud-speaker arrangements

The Hindu Mahasabha stands for a secular, or more correctly a non-communal Government where all people, to whatever religion or community they may belong will be equal before the law, and will have equal opportunities.

At the same time the Sabha could not reconcile itself to Pakistan as a 'fait accompli', as its ideal is "Akhand Bharat"

The Mahasabha had adopted a "more or less Socialistic programme," with a view to remedying the unequal distribution of wealth and thus appealing to the common man, but with an emphasis on "Bharatiya culture."

"We harbour no ill-feelings against the Government. But we have got acute differences of ideology. Neverthless, we declare that in the event of external aggression, or internal chaos, we shall stand by the Government."

The association of the Indian Republic from January 26, 1950 with the Commonwealth is "a gross betrayal" of all Congress declarations in the past.

" Although Pakistan is following a policy of genocide we are still negotiating, while complaining that Pakistan never carries out agreements arrived at." In Western Pakistan, hardly any Hindus or Sikhs were left. A few thousands who might be left were still being persecuted, and migration of small numbers was still taking place. In Eastern Pakistan also, Hindus were being persecuted, their property and honour were not safe.

As a solution for the sufferings of Hindus in Eastern Pakistan, and in view of the common factors between West Bengal and East Bengal, it was clearly in the interest of East Bengal to " align with India " Failing this they should demand " cession of two or three border districts from Eastern Pakistan to rehabilitate our refugees there "

The recognition of the Nizam as a constitutional monarch was clearly " not justifiable," and Hyderabad should be divided into its three linguistic areas and attached to their neighbouring States

" If the principle of linguistic provinces was accepted, then it should be sumultaneously applied everywhere, and provinces of Maharashtra, Gujarat, Karnatak, Andhra, Tamil Nad and Kerala should be created.

If it was a secular State, Government should show equal insistence on reforming Muslim and Christian laws The Hindu Code Bill could not be wholly either acceptable or unacceptable It was "clearly wrong to get it voted upon by Muslims, Christians and other communities "

The Kashmir People's Convention had already voted for staying in the Indian Union, and a plebiscite was " absolutely unnecessary " In any event, the people of India must have a voice and vote in this matter.

There is no doubt that there is no organisational connection between the R S S. and the Hindu Mahasabha But it cannot be denied that there is " a vital organic connection between the two consisting of identity of ideology " Both of them were based on the " Bharatiya " culture.

The satisfactory solution of the refugee problem, must be the primary obligation of the State. The Gandhi Memorial Fund should be utilised to help refugees

The Hindu Mahasabha should collect a crore of rupees as a minimum target to finance its work. They must enrol at least 100,000 volunteers not as a private army but to carry on the work of the Sabha The Sabha should have a social front for adjustment of caste disabilities, uplift of scheduled castes and tribes and also " nationalisation " of about three and a half crores of Muslims who are left in Bharat so that they might be converted into loyal citizens of India

The Hindu Mahasabha was an organisation open to all sections of Hindus and Sikhs as well as non-Hindus believing in its programme The Sabha would also open a Parliamentary front

Two interesting points were made at the session Mr Savarkar claimed that but for the pressure exerted by the Mahasabha the Congress would not have abandoned separate electorates or adopted Hindi with Devanagri script as the national language He also asserted that the winning of independence was not the achievement of the Congress alone, it was, in fact, the summation of the effort of ' Hinduism '

The Party also made one memorable promise If at any time the country was threatened with external agression or internal disorder the Mahasabha would stand solidly by the Government no matter what their differences with the Congress were.

Pandit Nehru replied to the speeches made at the Mahasabha Conference at a public meeting which he addressed in Nagpur He said that to talk of bringing about a reunion of India and Pakistan at the present juncture was meaningless. Such statements were in fact most irresponsible, ' I wish to make it perfectly clear,' the Prime Minister declared ' There is no question of Pakistan coming back to India.' He then proceeded to attack the whole Mahasabha view-point. Fresh attempts were being made by some people to rouse communal feelings among Hindus and make them look at problem from a narrow restricted point To preach the same policy that had resulted in great killings and inhuman brutality was sheer madness.

Mr Deshpande issued a rejoinder to Pandit Nehru's speech He said that the Mahasabha as a party had the right to advocate a reunion of India and Pakistan ' Pakistan has forfeited her right to function as a separate sovereign state on account of the treatment meted out by it to the Hindus '

Dr Khare claimed that there was really no conflict between the Nehru-Patel point of view and that of the Mahasabha In Pandit Nehru's own opinion a war between India and Pakistan was not impossible And it was clear that should a war come it could only end in a victory for India Then Pakistan would either be annexed or united with India. That was just what the Mahasabha was also saying Besides, Pandit Nehru did not say that a reunion was impossible for all time He merely said that it was impossible at the present juncture

It may be noted here that the general theme of the speeches made at the Mahasabha Conference led to a diplomatic protest by the Pakistan Government The Pakistan Government declared that they took a serious view of the threats made at the Mahasabha meeting to forcibly seize Pakistan especially East Pakistan if East Pakistan did not cede some Districts of East Pakistan to resettle Hindu refugees coming from there The Pakistan Government hoped that the Government of India would take appropriate action under Section 1 of the Indo-Pakistan Agreement which forbids propaganda for the amalgamation of India and Pakistan

Dr Khare returned to the subject in a speech in Bombay in which he advocated a policy of tit for tat in India's relations with Pakistan Pakistan respects only strength he said The Government ought to withdraw their High Commissioner from Pakistan and break off all trade relations The Government treatment of the refugee problem was most unsatisfactory In the fight against Communism, however, he offered the Government full support The ideology of the Hindu Mahasabha alone could withstand the Communist onslaught He blamed the Government for the economic crises and asked them to follow a definite and consistent policy

Meanwhile disorders were spreading in Bengal and the Mahasabha was reacting vigorously The Bengal branch of the Mahasabha began to publish reports from time to time and the figures which it gave of happenings in East Bengal were much higher than those quoted by news agencies One such report complained that Delhi estimates 'simply played down the gravity and extent of the disorders in East Bengal' According to the Mahasabha ' the number of Hindus killed in three weeks was 31,000 while the number wounded was much larger The value of property looted or destroyed came to about 200 crores ' The Mahasabha followed this up with a public meeting in Calcutta in which their spokesmen severely criticized the Prime Minister and demanded armed intervention in East Bengal to protect the life and property of Hindus A resolution passed at the meeting declared that the Prime Minister had ' completely forfeited the confidence and goodwill of the people of the Indian Union by his offer to issue a joint statement with the Prime Minister of Pakistan . . By such statements the Prime Minister wanted to preach to the world that the Indian Union was as guilty and barbarous as the miscreants of East Bengal . .' The meeting urged the two Bengal Ministers in the Central Cabinet to publicly dissociate themselves from the Prime Minister's proposed joint statement or in the alternative to tender their resignation.

During the Nehru-Liaquat talks the Government enforced what was described as a precautionary measure in taking a number of Mahasabha leaders into protective custody. It was explained on behalf of the Government that they were taking care to see that nothing happened that might imperil the success of the talks between the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan

On April 1, 1950 Mr. Asutosh Lahiry was arrested in Delhi and Dr Khare was served with externment orders by the District Magistrate of the City They had arrived in Delhi to take part in an emergency meeting of the All-India Committee and the Working Committee of the Mahasabha The Working Committee, however, met at Mahasabha Bhuvan under the presidentship of Dr Gokul Chand Narang. The main items on the agenda were the communal situation in East and West Bengal and the prohibitory orders passed on Mahasabha leaders. The District Magistrate had, however, banned the publication of ' proceedings, resolutions or statements made either by the Working Committee or the All-India Committee ' Later Dr. Khare was interned in Nagpur and prohibited from making any public speeches or issuing statements for publication regarding refugees from East Pakistan or Indo-Pakistan relations A number of Mahasabha leaders including Mr V D Savarkar were rounded up in various parts of the country particularly Bombay, Poona, Sangli, Indore, New Delhi and Kanpur

An adjournment move in the Bombay Legislative Council to discuss the Bombay arrests failed In Parliament in New Delhi Sardar Patel told Mr H V Kamath that Mahasabha leaders had been externed from Delhi as their presence might prejudice the maintenance of law and order, but refused to reveal on public grounds what the objectionable activity might be

On May 7, the Working Committee met at Dr Khare's residence in Nagpur and adopted a resolution that ' the Indo-Pakistan agreement violates the constitution, namely secularization and non-discrimination '. The Committee also endorsed ' the dignified stand ' taken by Dr. Shyama Prasad Mookerjee and Mr K C Neogy in resigning their offices as Ministers in the Central Government

The beginnings of the Hindu Mahasabha can be traced to the first years of the current century, almost simultaneous with the awakening of Muslim consciousness in 1906 and in vigour equal but opposite to that of the Muslim communal organisation.

During the first twenty-five years of its life, the Hindu organisation had to struggle for its existence, what with the proverbial indifference of the Hindu masses, the inherent inability of majorities the world over to organise, and the better response which the Congress with its wider nationalistic appeal evoked among the Hindus All this time, however, the causes which hampered the growth of the Hindu organisation were gradually, if imperceptibly, neutralised.

For instance, the Hindu community's indifference began to give place to communal consciousness as a result of a number of Hindu-Muslim riots in which the majority community came out second best. The waves of conversion from the Hindu fold, partly due to the discontent of the outcastes and partly because of the proselytising nature of the Islamic and Christian religions, opened the eyes of Hindu leaders to the growing decrease in the number of people owing allegiance to the Hindu faith

Those who first urged the community to organise were actuated by a fear lest the numerical strength of the community should be adversely affected by the proselytising activities of the champions of other faiths. A Hindu leader, for instance, remarked: " Political power in democracies hinges more and more on the population strength of a community which in the case of the Hindus must depend in the main on the proportion in which the Hindus succeed in stopping the dreadful conversion activities of alien faiths and in accelerating the reclamation of the alienated members back to the Hindu fold. In a country like India where a religious unit tends inevitably to grow into a cultural and national unit, the Suddhi (reconversion to Hinduism) movement ceased to be merely theological or dogmatic, but assumed the wider significance of a political and national movement. If the Muslims increase in population, the centre of political power is bound to be shifted in their favour."

For these reasons, the early years of the Hindu Mahasabha were more or less associated with the activities of the Arya-samaj, an allied organisation which worked for the reclamation to Hinduism of those who had been converted to other faiths.

Apart from the denominational aspect of its activities, the Hindu Mahasabha claimed that India belonged to the Hindus—the term "Hindus" being interpreted as meaning people belonging to the Hindu race, irrespective of their denominational affiliations.

The modern history of the Hindu Mahasabha dates from the inauguration of the 1935 constitution The Communal Award, which formed the basis of elections to the Legislatures under the 1935 constitution, and the attitude of neutrality observed by the Congress towards it provided the raison d'etre for the agitation of the Mahasabha.

About this time there appeared on the Mahasabha platform Mr. V. D Savarkar, the ex-revolutionary who had just been released after long years of incarceration with a virile programme for the regeneration of the Hindu community.

In 1940, for the first time in its history, the Mahasabha was recognised as an organisation influential enough in the country to be reckoned with for purposes of representation in the Central Government This was, however, neutralised subsequently as far as official recognition was concerned , at the Simla Conference, for example, not only was the Hindu Mahasabha denied representation but its demands found no place.

During the war years, the Mahasabha figured prominently—advocating, from the communal point of view, more aggressive opposition to the Muslim claims than the Congress and, from the political stand-point, a less militant programme and policy than the Congress.

When the Congress went into the wilderness in August 1942, the Hindu Mahasabha came into the limelight as it was the only organisation to which the Hindus could look up both for urging the Hindu cause as against the militant communalism of the Muslim League and generally to propagate nationalism which, so to say, went by default as the result of the then Congress policy. When the Congress returned to public life the Mahasabha had to take second place

During 1939-40 particularly the Hindu Mahasabha was considerably exercised over the demands of the Muslim League for the division of the country into Muslim and Hindu India. Anxiety was also expressed over the statements made by the Secretary of State for India on this subject, which were interpreted by the Mahasabha as conceding too much to the Muslims. The Working Committee of the Mahasabha claimed that India should be granted Dominion Status within a definite time

The annual session of the Mahasabha in 1940 met at Madura in South India and passed a resolution to the effect that while reiterating faith in the goal of complete independence, the Hindu Mahasabha was prepared to accept Dominion Status of the Westminster type as the immediate step.

The resolution concluded: "In case the Government fails to make a satisfactory response to the demands embodied herein before March 31, 1941, the Mahasabha will start a movement of direct action."

When the Cripps proposals were announced, the Hindu Mahasabha was one of the earliest to reject them on the ground that they divided India.

The months that immediately followed Cripps's visit witnessed a strong denunciation by Hindu Mahasabha leaders of the demand for Pakistan

When disturbances broke out in the country after the arrest of the Congress leaders on August 9, 1942, the Mahasabha President appealed to his followers not to extend any active support to the Congress move, as the Congress resolution was bound to prove detrimental to Hindu interests and to the integrity and strength of India as a nation and State. At the same time he urged Government to appease Indian discontent by an unequivocal Parliamentary declaration giving India the status of a completely free and equal partner in the Indo-British Commonwealth equal to that of Great Britain herself, and invest India with actual political power

The period when the Congress was behind prison bars witnessed the growth of certain new elements within the Hindu Mahasabha. A right wing came into being—rather the right wing forces which were already there came to the fore This comprised leaders like Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee who were, in comparison, for example, with Mr. Savarkar, less communally minded, and more politically conscious.

For a time there was a tussle between the old and the new forces, and the official policy of the Mahasabha fluctuated in consequence.

The 1943 session which celebrated the silver jubilee of the organisation, was inaugurated by the Maharaja of Cossimbazar, whose late father was the first President of the Hindu Mahasabha Bhai Parmanand and Dr Moonje, stressed the need for Hindu unity and claimed that India belonged to the Hindus and should have its constitution based on the Vedas just as the pan-Arabic countries were endeavouring to base their constitution on the Quran He made a stirring appeal to the audience for the militarization of the Hindus.

The failure of Mahatma Gandhi to evoke any response from the Viceroy soon after his release led the Mahasabha Working Committee to express deep concern at the constitutional deadlock which "continues to exist at a time when the war menace to India has become so real and so imminent" and regret that "Government have taken no practical steps towards resolving the deadlock and the establishment of national coalition Governments at the Centre and in the provinces."

Ironically enough, within a few weeks of the adoption of this resolution, Mr C. Rajagopalachari published the details of his negotiations with Quaid-e-Azam Jinnah on the basis of the Gandhi-cum-C. R. Formula conceding the right of secession on certain conditions This roused vigorous protests from Mahasabha leaders.

Mahasabha suspicions were further accentuated by the prospect of Gandhi-Jinnah negotiations.

The 1944 annual session of the Mahasabha adopted a draft constitution for the future free India embodying the principles for which the Mahasabha stands. The draft said . "Hindustan shall be a free State and her constitution shall be styled 'The constitution of the Hindustan Free State.' Historically, politically, ethnologically and culturally, Hindustan is one whole and indivisible, and so shall she remain. The form of Government shall be democratic and federal. Elections to the legislatures, whether federal or provincial, shall be on the basis of adult franchise and of 'one man one vote.' Distinctions between martial and non-martial races shall no longer exist, and the military strength of the Hindustan Free State shall, as far as possible, be equibalanced amongst its various provinces, consistently with its standard of discipline and efficiency."

When Lord Wavell broadcast his plan for an Interim Central Government the Working Committee of the Mahasabha registered its strong protest against the proposal which it described as a "deliberate device on the part of the British Government to perpetuate British rule over India to camouflage the issue of India's independence, to break the solidarity of the Indian nation, to reduce the Hindus who constitute about 75 per cent of India's population to a minority by the introduction of parity between caste Hindus and Muslims and disparity between Muslims and the Scheduled Castes, and to divide the politically-minded Hindu community into separate entities as Caste Hindus and Scheduled Castes."

When the British Cabinet Mission arrived in India in the spring of 1945 and carried on negotiations with the Indian political parties, Mr L B Bhopatkar, Acting President of the Mahasabha, met the Mission and submitted a ten-point memorandum. The points made were: (1) immediate declaration of independence of India, (2) formation of an interim Government with complete transfer of all power and authority of Government of India to this Government, (3) recognition of India's integrity and indivisibility; (4) opposition to territorial self-determination; (5) India's constitution to be of the federal type with (6) provisions for the grant of the utmost measure of autonomy to the federating units, the Provinces and the States, but with residue of powers vested in the Centre; (7) the governing principle of the constitution to be democracy, which means the rule of the majority, (8) representation in legislatures on the principle of adult franchise; (9) no division of India into British India and the Indian States, and (10) the setting up of a sovereign constituent assembly.

The memorandum emphatically declared that historically, ethnologically, politically and even culturally India was one whole and indivisible and it must remain so in future.

The Sabha was opposed to the principle of territorial self-determination which it said would prove as dangerous as Pakistan itself.

In the historic events which led up to the independence of India, the stand-point of the Hindu Mahasabha was explained by Mr Bhopatkar

Mr. Bhopatkar declared that, in the crisis then prevailing, it was the duty of the Hindu Mahasabha to run to the help of the Hindu community The work of the Mahasabha was to be on the following lines:—

Firstly, it must educate both the Hindu masses and classes in the ideology of the Mahasabha and make them communally conscious.

Secondly, it should organise a Hindu front composed of Caste Hindus, Scheduled Classes, Sikhs and others with a view to confronting successfully all "open or veiled aggression" in any part of India.

Thirdly, it should remould the Hindu mind by making it more self-reliant and, if necessary, even militant.

Fourthly, to carry out this stupendous work, the Mahasabha should start a fund called "The Hindu Reconstruction and Relief Fund".

The highlight of the session was the unanimous adoption of a resolution embodying a future programme for Hindus envisaging the formation of the Hindusthan National Guards for the purpose of self-defence.

Later the Working Committee of the All-India Hindu Mahasabha, which met at New Delhi passed a resolution expressing the opinion that "the Constituent Assembly, as it is, is a properly constituted legal body with full sovereign power and authority and competent to frame the political constitution of Akhand Hindustan" The Mahasabha was of the opinion that now as the Congress and other representatives had started the work of the Constituent Assembly they should complete it whether the League joined it or not or even if the British Government withdrew the Cabinet Mission's proposals.

At another session of the Working Committee in New Delhi, a resolution was adopted declaring that, except for the deadline, H.M.G 's Statement of February 20 on the withdrawal of British power by June 1948 was vague and likely to lead to unrest and strife in India The resolution opposed transfer of power to provincial Governments "with regard to areas which are not fully represented in the Constituent Assembly owing to their own perversity".

The reaction of the All-India Committee of the Hindu Mahasabha to H.M.G 's announcement of June 3 was in keeping with its avowed policies. The Committee reiterated its opposition to partition of the country and declared that there would not be peace in India unless the separated areas were brought back into the Indian Union and made integral parts of it The Committee declared the tentative allocation of territories in the proposed partition of the Punjab and Bengal was "unjust and unfair to the non-Muslims".

Deploring that the Indian National Congress, after solemn assurances to the Hindu electorate that it stood by the unity of India, had agreed to the partition of India without a referendum, the Committee declared that "the Hindus were not bound by this commitment of the Congress".

The session of the All-India Hindu Convention, which met in New Delhi on August 9, 1947 under the Presidentship of Mr. V. D. Savarkar, also passed a resolution expressing opposition to the partition of India on the basis of religion and urging the Hindus not to accept the division of the country and criticising the Indian National Congress for having acceded to it without getting a verdict from the people on this issue.

Following the murder of Mahatma Gandhi in January 1948 the Hindu Mahasabha suspended its political activity by a resolution passed at a meeting of the Working Committee on Feb. 14

Simultaneously the members of the Working Committee also issued a statement condemning unequivocally the murder of Mahatma Gandhi.

Meanwhile the Government took strong action. In almost all provinces leading members of the Mahasabha and R S S were taken into custody. There was a great deal of mob violence against the person and property of the Mahasabha and the R S S , particularly in Maharashtra where demonstrations assumed an anti-Brahmin turn Sometime elapsed before the Government were able to bring the whole situation under control

But the storm blew over. A number of issues like Kashmir and Hyderabad were coming to the fore. Active anti-Mahasabha feeling was gradually dying and conditions were slowly evolving in which it was just possible for the Mahasabha to re-enter the political arena from which it had been driven with such sudden violence only six months before

The first signs that a change was taking place in the political climate of the country was a statement made by the general secretary of the Mahasabha, Mr. Asutosh Lahiry on July 5. Mr. Lahiry declared that there was among the rank and file of the Mahasabha members certain impatience at the continued inactivity of the Mahasabha. National unity and strong leadership were necessary at a time when the Congress was heading for disintegration. But it was not just revival that Mr. Lahiry was pleading for. For the Hindu Sabha as it existed before the advent of freedom had no longer any functions to fulfil. Neither had Hindu-Muslim unity any meaning after the vivisection of the subcontinent. The Mahasabha had to resume political activity but the policy needed to be reorientated.

On December 26 took place a very important meeting of the Council of the Mahasabha during the year when by an overwhelming majority it decided to revive its political activities and adopted a programme which was indistinguishable from that of political and economic socialism.

Mr Bhopatkar characterised the decision to remain in the Commonwealth as the "height of inconsistency" and as a "sad betrayal of the trust reposed in the Indian leaders by the people" He said that it amounted to an entry by the back-door into the capitalist-imperialist bloc of the U S A and the U K. Mr Bhopatkar also disapproved the report of the committee on linguistic provinces and said that it had shelved this long-standing grievance and thereby had not only embittered provincial feeling but had also arrested the growth of the provinces.

(c) Provincial Election Committees shall be elected by the general meeting of the respective P C C 's They shall recommend candidates for Central and Provincial Legislatures The final selection, after hearing objections and appeals, shall be made by the Central Election Committee.

CHANGE IN THE CONSTITUTION

ARTICLE XXVIII

The foregoing constitution can be amended, altered, or added to only by the Congress except when the A I C C has been authorised to do so. In case such authority has been given by the Congress then the constitution can be amended, only by a majority of two-thirds of members present and voting at a meeting of the A I C C, provided notice of such proposed changes has been given to each member at least one month before the date of the meeting.

EFFECTIVE MEMBERS' PLEDGE

Effective members of the Congress, that is to say, those who are entitled to hold elective posts in the Congress organization have to give the following pledge:

"I accept the following objective of the Congress 'The object of the Indian National Congress is the well-being and advancement of the people of India and the establishment in India by peaceful and legitimate means of a co-operative commonwealth, based on equality of opportunity and of political, economic and social rights and aiming at world peace and fellowship.'

"I am a habitual wearer of Khadi made from hand-spun yarn and a teetotaller I do not observe or recognise untouchability in any shape or form I am a believer in intercommunal unity and have respect for the faiths of other people I also believe in equality of opportunity and status for all irrespective of race, creed or sex.

"I devote regularly a part of my time to activity or activities indicated in the following list by my initials (1) communal unity, (2) removal of untouchability, (3) prohibition, (4) Khadi, (5) other village industries, (6) village sanitation, (7) new or basic education, (8) adult education, (9) education in health and hygiene, (10) uplift of women, (11) propaganda for "Rastra Bhasha" and provincial languages, (12) working for economic equality, (13) organisation of "kisans," (14) organisation of labour, (15) organisation of students, (16) service of "adivasis", (17) relief work, (18) parliamentary work, (19) Congress organisation or any other activity recommended by the Working Committee or the A-I C C

"I am not a member of any other political party, communal or other which has a separate membership, constitution and programme."

PARLIAMENTARY BOARD

The primary function of the Board is to select candidates for election to the various legislatures. A list of nominees is sent by the P C C 's along with the full report of the nominees' qualifications sometime before nomination is due Out of that list the Board makes its final selection With the formation of Congress Ministries in all the Provinces however the Board tended to assume a second function, that of advising Provincial leaders on the composition of ministries and on the content of Provincial bills of an all-India importance Thus the Zamindari Abolition Bills in Bihar and Madras were referred to the Board for suggestion and approval If necessary joint consultation takes place between the Board, the ministries and the parties whose interests are involved Of late this work has been carried a step further in an attempt to bring uniformity into the laws passed by the Provincial Legislatures on questions of common interest to all Provinces This work is now carried on through the A.-I C C Secretariat in New Delhi under the direct control of one of the General secretaries Mr Kala Venkat Rao All Congress Parliamentary work both at the Centre and in the Provinces is being pooled and coordinated The main provisions of all important bills are summarized and sent round to all Provinces so that every Province may profit by the experience of every other Province Part of the object of all this activity is to give the country a comprehensive idea of Congress achievement when the next general elections come round

REVIEW OF THE YEAR

The major part of the time and the energy of the Congress during the year was taken up with matters of internal organization Broadly speaking these fell into two classes. There were the group bickerings in the various Legislature parties, and second, there was the lowering of the old standards of honesty and public service Some of the group bickerings led to open revolt as in U.P. where the dissidents formally broke away and formed a party of their own called the People's Congress Party In Madras the leader of the 'opposition' group made a series of charges against some of the Ministers, which led to an enquiry. In West Bengal differences in the Congress Party appeared to be so deep-rooted as to threaten the very existence of the Ministry Pandit Nehru was presented with a memorandum containing seventeen charges of corruption and maladministration against some of the State Ministers In the Punjab there was no revolt as such, but the Sachar Ministry was driven out of office, and later a number of Congressmen who belonged to the Sachar group resigned not only from the Congress Legislature Party but from the Congress itself An enquiry similar to the one conducted in Madras was also held in Bihar where charges of corruption in the disposal of molasses were openly made against one of the Ministers Sardar Patel who enquired into the allegation expressed the view that the responsibility for the procedure rested not with the Minister in question but with a permanent official of the Government Finally, in Travancore-Cochin a small group (14 members) was expelled because it voted against the Hindu Religious Institutions Bill sponsored by the Government

Leaders were also worried by a certain loss of popularity and a general lowering of tone in the whole organization But in such concrete tests of popularity as in an election, for instance, the Congress did not do as badly as most observers predicted In fact the Party more than held its own If these elections proved anything at all they proved beyond any doubt that however low Congress prestige might have sunk no coherant, well-organised party of national dimensions had yet arisen to challenge Congress supremacy in the country's politics

A notable accretion to Congress strength was the decision of Sir Mohemad Saadulla of Assam to join the Congress There were some notable desertions too Mr Hemanta Kumar Bose, Secretary of the West Bengal Congress Parliamentary Party, resigned in protest against India's acceptance of the Security Council's resolution on Korea 'I cannot be a party to bring the devastation of war on my country", Mr Bose said on resigning his membership of the Congress He went on to accuse the Congress of curtailing civil liberties He also asserted that the Congress had lost touch with the masses A second resignation also in Bengal followed that of Mr Hemanta Bose This was the resignation of Mr Sudhir Chandra Roy Choudhury, the Vice-President of the State Congress Committee and an ex-Mayor of Calcutta He gave no concrete reasons for his resignation but merely said that he was 'disgusted' with the present activities of the Congress

The Working Committee of the Shiromani Akhali Dal also caused some stir by directing all Sikh members who were elected on the Panthic ticket to sever their connections with the Congress This decision if it had been obeyed would have affected three Ministers including Sardar Baldev Singh But there was no indication that any of the members so affected had decided to take any drastic action in the matter

The Congress appointed a small sub-committee presided over by Govind Vallabh Pant, U P Chief Minister, to draw up a short-term economic plan of reconstruction The recommendations of this Committee did not break any new ground, but were notable for the way in which the Committee tried to seek some kind of synthesis between Gandhian and industrial ideas of planning. A meeting of Chief Ministers and Provincial Congress Presidents which took place in New Delhi subsequent to the publication of the economic sub-committee's report also served a useful purpose in bringing the two halves of the Congress, the 'Parliamentary' and the 'constructive' into the closest possible contact.

The Congress did not hold any annual session in 1949 as the enrolment of primary members and the election of Congress panchayats was not completed till after the end of the year. By a decision of the A-I C C effective members were disenfranchised in order to purify the election of delegates to the 1950 Congress. This meant a change in the Congress constitution and it was therefore agreed that the change would be in force only till the next general session

It might be pointed out here that there are three types of members in the Congress –primary, qualified and effective Under the constitution, primary members elect village panchayatdars from among qualified members Qualified members, so elected, plus effective members, form an electoral college to elect Congress delegates and members of other Congress Committees It was found that because effective members had also a vote in the electoral college, many Congressmen tried to enlist themselves as effective members The voting right of effective members was therefore withdrawn by means of an amendment to the Congress constitution, as mentioned above

The result is that only primary members will now elect village panchayatdars And the panchyatdars in a delegate's constituency, will, elect the delegate to the Congress from among the effective members

SELF-CRITICISM

We will now proceed to deal with some of the items mentioned above in greater detail We may start off by noting what was being said and thought by Congressmen in self-criticism during the year Mr Shankerrao Deo made the point that Congressmen were in danger of forgetting the masses in their pre-occupation with 'office' 'administration', 'legislation', etc They ought to think more of vitalizing the Congress constructive creed, for if the Congress died the country would dissolve in chaos The Congress was like a family, said Mr Deo, and Congressmen ought not to criticize one another in public

Pandit Nehru also called attention to the same danger in a speech in Delhi 'I have come to feel', he said, 'that more contact with the people was desirable' 'I want to understand their difficulties and tell them what I have to say' The Congress, Mr Nehru thought, stood in need of some sort of renewal There was slackening of enthusiasm among Congressmen. The tendency which had been growing of expelling Congressmen for misconduct instead of winning them over was regrettable Whatever the position may be, Pandit Nehru concluded, if the Congress weakened there would be chaos and disorder

According to Mr P S Hirey, President, M P C C, also the Congress needed new blood to maintain the good work which had earned for it great popularity in the past

Mr Vinoba Bhave deplored the unhealthy tendency now witnessed among Congress workers in looking for positions of power, and suggested that this should give place to a spirit of service to the country

Acharya Kripalani in a speech in Ranchi expressed the opinion that the trouble with the Congress was that it had ceased to be revolutionary. If the Congress wished to survive it should recapture the spirit of the Gandhian revolution Acharya Kripalani thought the introduction of new blood into the Congress was quite essential

Maulana Azad declared in a speech to Assam Congress workers that the influence of the Congress would disappear if the old cordial and close relations were not maintained between the people and the Congress organization on the one hand, and the Congress organization and the Ministers on the other. They ought to learn from the happenings in China where people overthrew the Nationalist Government not because the people there had any positive love for the Communists, but because they were disgusted with the record of the Nationalist Party.

Dr. N. S. Hardikar, the founder of the Congress Seva Dal, addressing a group of Congress workers was also of the same view He said that a sort of deterioration had crept in among Congressmen. This was due to a lack of discipline and of a spirit of service

Mr. Kripalani repeated his earlier sentiments in a speech at Bettiah in Bihar He said that the Congress had become corrupt in general and Congress prestige had suffered on account of misdeeds committed by Congressmen The Congress would altogether disappear if the leaders failed to follow Mahatma Gandhi's advice

Mr. Hare Krushna Mahtab declared in a speech at Poona that the Congress could not afford to go under for if it did 'the country would be thrown to the tender mercies of reactionaries' No other party was strong enough to defend the dearly-won freedom of the country The mutual recrimination rampant among Congressmen must be brought to an end, and the Party must recapture some of its old prestige

Finally, Pandit Nehru made three striking points at an important meeting of the A I C C He exhorted Congressmen to cultivate the masses with the same energy as before The world was fast changing and Congressmen ought to keep abreast of developments everywhere Thirdly, there should be a search for new talent with the object of revitalizing the Congress organization In fact among Congress leaders the question of future leadership of the Party remained a constant preoccupation all through the year though it was not often mentioned in public There is reason to believe that one of the objects of the meeting of the A I C C that took place in 1950 February was to give an opportunity to hidden talent to declare itself. From this point of view the meeting was a disappointment for no new leaders in fact emerged

At this meeting of the A I C C Pandit Nehru took the opportunity of urging the need for hard work He said that according to reports he had received from certain areas, the Communist workers there held a meeting every week, the Socialists every fortnight and others more or less frequently while Congressmen had not met for one and a half years Similar complaints of Congress inactivity were heard during the last session of the All-India Congress Committee

Although Congressmen claimed that they did work, in reality no work was done Most of the time was frittered away in petty squabbles or party politics The Congress could not be made a vital dynamic organisation through such methods It would only weaken the "roots of the Congress organisation"

He urged that elections to the Congress should not be delayed any further Congressmen had developed a static mentality and wherever elections had been postponed, especially in States like the Punjab and West Bengal, Congress had weakened.

Congressmen should not entangle themselves in constitutional hair splitting If Congressmen continued to waste their time in mutual bickerings the "reins of office" would go out of their hands and others would come and take their place

ELECTION RECORD

The elections that took place to the various local bodies showed that in comparison with the past Congress stock had heavily slumped The by-elections in Maharashtra were the ones which were most depressing. In the Ahmednagar District Board elections the Workers' and Peasants' Party captured as many as 18 seats out of 50. In the Jalgaon Municipal elections the Party which the Congress un-officially supported got only 8 out of the 29 seats the Party contested. In the election to the Sholapur Municipality the Congress won 33 out of the 52 seats, while the percentage of votes cast was only 47 per cent The results of Local Board elections in Assam were also most unsatisfactory. In Silchar the Congress lost 11 out of 30 contested seats; in Sibsagar 16 out of 28, in Mangaldai 16 out of 27; in Dibrugarh 12 out of 31 and in Gauhati 12 out of 20 The Congress suffered a complete defeat in the elections to a village Panchayat in Sholapur District—all the 13 seats being lost to the Shetkari-Ramgari Party. Only in West Khandesh District did the Congress secure a decisive majority by capturing 28 out of 38 seats which had become vacant

We may next pass in review the group rivalries which were such a prominent feature of Congress politics during the year Antagonism generally expressed itself in the form of charge-sheets drawn up by dissident groups against the groups in power, the framing of the charges inevitably leading to some kind of investigation or other The trouble started in Madras and spread to other Provinces.

The chief complainant in Madras was Mr Prakasam He charged six Ministers and four others with being guilty of a number of irregularities The enquiry was conducted by Mr Deo on behalf of the Working Committee He took four days to complete his enquiries after which he submitted a report to the Working Committee The enquiry did not go without a hitch the men who made the charges asked to be shown the replies of the Ministers to the charges, a request that was turned down Mr Prakasam also asked that a special tribunal should be appointed as he had no confidence in the investigations which Mr Deo had conducted Mr Prakasam complained that Mr Deo had heard only one side of the story, and to refuse to furnish the complainants with the Ministers' explanation was to render the whole enquiry valueless

The report when completed recommended the holding of a further detailed enquiry either judicial or semi-judicial, public or private In reference to the general charges, Mr Deo thought that although most of the allegations were of a serious nature they were too vague and nebulous to prove anything against anyone About the charge that the Ministry was guilty of communalism, Mr Deo pointed out that on general grounds communalism was bad because it also lead to nepotism and corruption and waste of much valuable talent But one could not ignore history Neither could one ignore the wishes of the overwhelming majority of the people, however, unjust the wishes might be In regard to the charge that the judiciary was demoralized by the treatment meted out to the Chief Justice by the Chief Minister, Mr Deo thought that this was a matter that concerned high policy relating to a Central rather than a State subject Turning to yet another charge, Mr Deo said it might be true that many M L A 's obtained licenses to buy cars and then sold the permits to make a profit But this was a country-wide scandal and was not confined to Madras alone

The Working Committee giving its decision requested the State's Chief Minister to investigate the matter for a second time and report to the Working Committee Should an enquiry be found necessary after the Chief Minister's report Sardar Patel, Pandit Nehru and Babu Rajendra Prasad would nominate one or more persons of repute and judgment to conduct a searching final enquiry Charges of a political or civic nature were, however, to be dropped

At this stage, Mr. Prakasam and 14 of his followers decided to sit on the opposition side, but separately from the official Opposition This step of Mr Prakasam's annoyed the Congress Working Committee which considered taking disciplinary action It actually wrote to Mr Prakasam and others and asked why disciplinary action should not be taken against them Mr Prakasam in his reply charged the Working Committee with acting in a vindictive manner He said he had done nothing which would lower the prestige of the Congress. On the contrary his sole object in pressing his grievances was to ensure that the good name of the Congress was not sullied In threatening disciplinary action the Working Committee was also acting beyond its powers.

Meanwhile, Mr. Prakasam, moved in the Legislature itself He gave notice of a privilege motion for the appointment of a Select Committee to investigate the charges against the Ministers The Speaker, however, disallowed the motion.

Eventually the Working Committee withdrew its notice of disciplinary action The Committee explained that Mr Prakasam had accepted the advice privately offered by Pandit Nehru and Sardar Patel It was not known for certain what this advice was It was believed, however, Pandit Nehru and Sardar Patel had expressed their readiness to investigate Mr Prakasam's charges during their prospective South Indian tour and had assured him that if the charges were proved to be substantial, the Ministry would be reconstituted

MADRAS REPORT

Later Dr Rajendra Prasad conducted an enquiry, and his report was counter-signed by Pandit Nehru and Sardar Patel Dr Prasad in his report declared

"All the charges have been carefully looked into The statements of the Premier, Mr. Prakasam, the Ministers concerned and the final report of the Premier have been considered in detail The impression left on one's mind after considering all the charges is this they appear to be serious and formidable charges in the form in which they are made

"A close scrutiny of the facts and circumstances relating to them does not make out a case for further investigation In some cases there is no prima facie evidence in support of any charge and a mere statement of suspicion cannot be considered sufficient for holding formal inquiry.

"There is, however, one thing which should be noted The action of Ministers should not only be in strict accordance with rules and procedure laid down for dealing with particular matters which come up before them but they should do nothing which might leave room for any reasonable person to entertain any reasonable suspicion The matter should be dropped and the complaints filed"

Pandit Nehru and Sardar Patel, agreed with Dr Rajendra Prasad's report Endorsing the conclusions they drew "particular attention" to the above paragraph and added "Some of the instances mentioned in the report relate to loans being made or permits given to relatives of Ministers Dr Rajendra Prasad has shown that the normal procedure was followed.

"It is also clear that we cannot rule out completely relatives of Ministers from applying for permits All such cases deserve special scrutiny, and the Ministers concerned would have been better advised to refrain from dealing with these cases themselves They should have referred the papers for the orders of the Premier or the Cabinet, as the case may be, at as early a stage as possible We trust that this convention will be adhered to in future"

The report was prepared by Dr Rajendra Prasad and counter-signed by Sardar Patel and Pandit Nehru with a joint concurring note. The charges, which have been put under six different heads, were jointly investigated by the Madras Premier, Mr P S Kumaraswamy Raja, and Mr T Prakasam and a report was made by the Premier to the Working Committee.

Mr Prakasam, however, demanded the appointment of a judicial tribunal to investigate the charges.

The charges under the six heads were against the Ministers in charge of the departments and were grant of loans and State aid to persons or parties in whom the Minister was interested, purchase of Italian buses, grant of permits of steel and iron, cement and bus routes, to enable the party to benefit out of the transactions, grant of manure for sale, abuse of executive power by the local Administration Minister in regard to the auction of right to collect market fees in the Guntur Municipal Market and interference in Bezwada Municipal market suit and use of legislation to favour particular individuals

The first four charges were against the Ministers of Finance, Industry, Transport and Agriculture and the last two against the Minister for local administration

A counter-charge against Mr T Prakasam in regard to a forest contract was also made

In regard to the first charge, Dr Rajendra Prasad pointed out that in all the cases the procedure established under the States Aid to Industries Act of having the applications put before the Industries Board and approved had been adopted The loans had been given in the ordinary course In regard to one case where it was alleged that the loan had not been utilised for the purpose, Dr Prasad said that it was open to Government to make inquiries and take action

"Any question of mala fide on the part of the Ministers", he said, "did not arise in the case" He did not think that in any of the five cases there had been any abuse of the authority by the Minister in charge

In regard to the allegations regarding the purchase of Italian buses and the excess of money paid for them, Dr Prasad said "It appears, considering the whole thing, that this matter of purchase of buses was mismanaged" Giving the explanations of the Ministers concerned he said that Mr Gopal Reddi had stated that he had only, initialled the file on the guidance of the Home Secretary's note and the matter did not concern him

Mr M Bhaktavatsalam, who was in charge of transport, after the illness of Mr David Thomas had also stated that he had no occasion to deal with the matter while he was temporarily in charge.

Dr Prasad dealt individually with the eight cases under the third charge relating to grant of permits of iron and steel, cement and bus routes to certain M L A 's, M C A 's and the wife of a Minister In six cases as he stated there was no material to proceed against any Minister In regard to two other cases, one relating to the grant of an iron and steel quota and the other over the grant of a bus route, he pointed out that even if there was anything it was done during the time of the previous Ministry

In the fourth charge, which related to grant of manure for sale, Dr Prasad, while recommending that "there is nothing to inquire about" remarked "There is no doubt, that party politics had played its full part in the district and this incident was not free from it"

As regards alleged interference with local administration by the Minister, Dr Prasad stated in regard to the case of the Guntur municipal market "The circumstances in which the order was issued are fully explained and it seems that in a case like this it is difficult to interfere with the discretion exercised by the Minister unless there is a definite charge and proof of corruption"

In connection with the allegation regarding the Bezwada municipal market, Dr. Prasad stated that "there does not seem to be any reason to question his (Minister's) bona fides in the matter"

In regard to the sixth charge, namely, use of legislation to favour particular individuals with exemption from the operation of the Rent Control Act, Dr Prasad after analysing the case stated thus "The matter was considered not only by the Minister in charge but also by the Premier, Mr. Ramaswamy Reddiar and by the then Governor who also agreed to the exemption being granted In this connection it is difficult to hold that the Minister in charge, Mr. Daniel Thomas, who is dead, was to blame or that any other Minister can be held guilty of any improper conduct.

"It is true, however that in matters like this it is not enough to be strictly correct but in appearance also action should be such as not to allow any misunderstanding."

Dr Rajendra Prasad also dealt with the counter-charge against Mr T Prakasam in regard to the contract for the Silent Valley forest After going through the allegations and the defence Dr Prasad said "Mr Prakasam complains that this case is mentioned as a counter-charge only for the purpose of linking it up with the allegation of bribery levelled against him The suggestion was that a bribe was given to Mr Prakasam to secure the Silent Valley contract

"The bribery theory was false and has been abandoned and he wants an inquiry regarding the person who made this charge It appears that this charge against Mr Prakasam's Ministry cannot be sustained All Ministers have to exercise discretion in such matters and no work will be possible if every decision taken by a Minister is viewed with suspicion and made the subject of inquiry"

Incidentally the Andhra Provincial Congress Committee demanded by 58 votes to 2 the resignation of the Madras Government on the ground that it had failed to protect the people from 'the Communist menace'

UTTAR PRADESH

Then there is the quarrel in the U P Congress Party The first revolt that occurred was not very serious It was organized by a group called 'Keep Straight Group' The revolt ended abruptly following a forthright condemnation of group politics by Pandit Nehru and the group was quickly dissolved But trouble was always simmering in the Congress Legislature Party At one of the meetings of the Provincial Congress Committee some members walked out because they were refused adequate representation on selection boards for choosing candidates for various elections Things then began to take a serious turn Some of these members sent a signed petition to the Congress President charging the group in power with misusing Zamindari abolition funds for purposes of sectarian propaganda The U P Congress Committee struck back by expelling two of the leading members of the dissident group from the Congress on the ground of indiscipline (they were sitting separately), and of making false allegations against the Ministry The expelled members appealed to the Central Parliamentary Board They contended that occupying opposition benches was a mere symbolic gesture and not an actual defiance of Congress authority They then went on to do something which made the schism wider They constituted themselves informally into a Peoples' Democratic Front with all the appurtenances of a separate party such as a voluntary corps, Shant Raksha Dal, and mass contact programme

The Congress Working Committee then decided to take action It asked the two leaders of the group Mr Triloki Singh and Radhe Shyam to resign their seats in the Assembly as they had forfeited the confidence of the Congress, the rest of the members were asked to return to their original seats in the Assembly and to express their regret so that the Working Committee might have a chance of exonerating them.

Soon after the 'rebels' in all about 150 strong inside and outside the Assembly formally started a new party in opposition to the main Congress organization with headquarters in Allahabad. They also resigned their primary membership of the Congress Among those who resigned were members of the A I C C. and State, District and Ward Congress Committees The strength of the new party which will be the main Opposition in the Legislature is 21 Out of the original 24 members one expressed regret to the Chief Minister, and another said he was back on the Congress benches before the Working Committee sent out its directive.

The rebel members declared that they were not going to resign from the Legislature as directed Later, the Peoples' Party was granted recognition by the Speaker of the Assembly. The members finally issued a statement which ran as follows "For over a year we have alleged that the State Congress has functioned as a party caucus. Similar charges were also made against the administration and specific cases in support thereof were cited While making the representation we honestly believed we were committing no mistake in bringing to the notice of the High Command the prevailing corruption in the administration and the partisan functioning of U P Congressmen The decision of the Working Committee has pained us All our expectation in regard to the future of the real organization to which we had the proud privilege of belonging have been dashed to pieces We do not, however, despair We treaded a virtuous path and it must needs lead us to our destination"

WEST BENGAL

We next pass to West Bengal where group jealousies were endemic Here the split which extended to both the provincial committee and the parliamentary party was almost complete and all efforts which were made to bring the two sides together failed There was the inevitable charge-sheet against the Ministry Pandit Nehru, who looked into the allegations numbering 17 found that in the case of 12 of these allegations the explanation offered was generally satisfactory from the point of view of a person exercising authority About the rest Nehru thought that it was possible to conduct the affairs differently

The allegations were briefly as follows

(1) Purchase of an aeroplane by the West Bengal Government at the instance of the Premier, from an airways company, of which the Premier was a director and a shareholder.

(2) Giving charge of maintenance of Government planes to an airways company, in which the Premier was interested, in preference to another company which used to do the job before the partition of the province

(3) Order by the Premier for the purchase of 100 "bighas" of land for State bus workshops as against the original proposal of 30 "bighas" of land for the purpose and the order for immediate advancement of Rs 10,00,000 for the same, "although the titles of the land had not been examined"

(4) Alleged securing permits through the Civil Supplies Minister for cement and steel for building any number of cinema houses in contravention of definite instructions of the previous Minister of Civil Supplies

(5) Purchase of the Vizianagram Palace in Calcutta for converting the same into residential flats for the low-paid staff, which was obviously a difficult proposition as the house was too big for such conversion

(6) Allegations against the Acting Premier, Mr Nalini Ranjan Sarker, of having stood guarantee for Rs 50 lakhs to a bank in favour of a private individual in connection with cement business in preference to firms of longer standing.

(7) Appointment of a High Court Judge on a salary basis, as Chairman of an inquiry committee which was suggested to have been done "as a recompense in not being appointed a Minister, although he took leave of the High Court and announced his decision to join Dr. Roy's Cabinet"

(8) Police firings.

(9) Flouting and circumventing the Public Service Commission and regulations

(10) The appointment of an ex-Minister, first as the Government of West Bengal's representative in New Delhi, and, secondly, as the Government of West Bengal's Director of Information (not Director of Publicity).

(11) Appointment of French experts to investigate the feasibility of an underground railway in Calcutta, and an alleged proposal for making a musical film for popularising the "grow-more-food campaign"

(12) An alleged payment of an advance of Rs 10,000 to Dr B C Roy by amending the rules for payment of advance for the preparation of his foreign tour

REMAINING CHARGES.

The remaining five allegations related to (1) the dropping of investigation in a case of black marketing in cloth by a police officer from the Central Government, at the intervention of the Premier, (2) allotments of wagons and permits for salt by the Central Government to a favourite of the Premier, on his recommendation, (3) prosecution against a well-known Indian firm being dropped at the instance of the Premier, although the Anti-Corruption Department had good evidence, and the head of the Anti-Corruption Department being insulted and severely taken to task and ultimately transferred as he had insisted on the prosecution, (4) allegation about the West Bengal Provincial Co-operative and Industrial Procurement and Distribution Society, and (5) serious irregularities and mismanagement of funds in the affairs of the said Procurement Society

With regard to the first of these allegations Pandit Nehru said that the explanation given had some force in it He added "But I do not understand why the police officer of the Central Government was not allowed to carry out the search and find the stocks held by the firm Bona fides of the firm could have been established by such a search I think it was unfortunate that the search was not allowed on some kind of an assurance being received from the firm about the equal quantity of cloth being made available for Assam Even if Government are satisfied that there is no mala fide, it is far better to go through the normal processes of inquiry and search from the point of view of both the public and the firm Otherwise, all kinds of insinuations are made and it is not easy to answer them"

As to the second allegation, Pandit Nehru said "The result of the report which I received made it clear to me that the Premier of West Bengal, Dr B C Roy, had little to do with the matter except formally But I was not satisfied with some other aspects of the transactions I tried to inquire further into it, but could not get sufficient proof to proceed with the inquiry"

Referring to the third allegation, the Prime Minister said that it was very unfortunate that the prosecution of some agents of the firm concerned was dropped It was possible that the error was not due to mala fides, but it appeared clear that there was an error and that the firm's officers were trying to pass off indegenous cement for imported cement.

"Normally no case of this kind should be withdrawn from court, even when the Government feels that the case is not a strong one," added Pandit Nehru "Once started, the case must go through, because otherwise needless suspicion is aroused in the minds of the public In the case of a very prominent firm, it is still more necessary that Government should not interfere in any way with the course of an investigation or prosecution"

As regards the other two allegations, which dealt chiefly with the administration of the Civil Supplies Department, Pandit Nehru said that he could not go into vague and general charges which were incapable of being scrutinised "But," he added "if it is a fact that such charges are made by any considerable number of people, it is desirable that in the interest of both the public and the Department that the fullest inquiry should be made, whenever a proper charge is preferred"

Pandit Nehru, in this connection referred to a circular issued earlier to the effect that no member of the Civil Supplies Advisory Board should be allowed, either directly or indirectly, through a close relation, to participate for personal gain in any business or contract supervised by the Advisory Board

Referring to the Provincial Co-operative and Industrial Procurement and Distribution Society Pandit Nehru said that it was obvious that there was much to complain of in the way the business of the Society was handled The fact that the affairs of the Society had to be subjected to a thorough inquiry by the Registrar of Co-operative Societies was itself evidence that there was something wrong about its functioning He had not seen the report of the Registrar and the whole matter was now under examination of a Cabinet Committee

GROUP DISSENSIONS

To solve the larger question the Congress Working Committee put forward alternative suggestions It recommended that both the Provincial Committee and the Ministry should be reconstituted to include the two rival groups, or if this was not possible fresh elections should be held both for the legislature and the Provincial Congress Committee so that the electorates have an opportunity to express its will The Working Committee further recommended that the elections would be held on the existing franchise, but fresh electoral rolls would be prepared In the interim period a 'care-taker' Government should be formed in which the rival groups should be included

None of these proposals materialized as they came up against a good deal of opposition from the group in power It was objected that a general election was impracticable under the conditions then prevailing in the State The Working Committee then changed its mind and ruled that the existing Ministry might continue subject to any changes which the Chief Minister might think fit to make The Committee also appointed a smaller body consisting of Pandit Nehru, Sardar Patel, Dr Sitaramayya, Maulana Abdul Kalam Azad and Dr Rajendra Prasad to guide and control the Provincial Congress Organization on matters like selection of candidates etc Finally a peace move was initiated by Sardar Patel who paid a visit to Bengal Some kind of agreement came about between the opposing sides, and the Executive Council of the Bengal Congress Committee passed a resolution that at the existing juncture when the State was threatened with disruption and chaos it was the duty of all Congressmen to forget personal differences and stand together to restore peace and prosperity to the State.

The Working Committee was caught up in the much larger and the more serious East Bengal – West Bengal dispute On the communal upheavals the Committee gave its considered view 1 that the emphasis on the Islamic character of the East Bengal State inevitably leads to nervousness and insecurity among the minorities, 2 conditions must be created which would enable the refugees to return to their original homes, 3 all available resources must be used to rehabilitate refugees who have decided to stay in West Bengal

The full text of the resolution said

"The Working Committee have viewed with horror the tragic occurrences which have recently taken place in East Bengal, with their deplorable repercussions in West Bengal and Assam, resulting in acts of brutality and inhumanity and in large scale migrations of people The Committee especially deplore outbursts of violence and communal strife, which can never lead to the solution of any problem The Committee are convinced that this problem can only be solved by strict adherence to the ideals of the Congress and the maintenance of a secular State which offers full security and opportunity to its citizens, regardless of religion and puts an end to communal divisions which breed hatred and conflict.

"Ever since the partition of India, followed by the great tragedies in the Punjab and consequent migrations, fear and distrust have grown. Emphasis on the Islamic character of Pakistan has further unnerved the minorities, and created an atmosphere of uncertainty. As a consequence millions of people continued to migrate in subsequent years from Sind and East Bengal to India Nearly all the Hindu minority left Sind in the course of these migrations The tragic occurrences of the past few weeks have brought matters to a head, and it has become imperative to put an end to these evil forces which threaten to bring ruin to millions of people

"The Working Committee, therefore, trust that in this hour of deep crisis, every right-thinking man and woman will help in bringing about a real and peaceful solution of this problem so as to avert the catastrophe which otherwise might become inevitable" The Committee hope that the efforts that are now being made to find a peaceful solution will succeed

"While the old refugee problem continues to demand attention, a new refugee problem of vast dimensions has now arisen The nation's resources must be used to aid these refugees by giving relief and providing rehabilitation and above all helping in creating condition so that refugees from either side might return to their original homes

"It is the duty of every Congressman and Congresswoman to face this crisis with dignity and strength and, ever remembering the ideals of the Congress, to work for their fulfilment It is further the duty of every Indian to refrain from any word or deed which worsens an atmosphere which is already clouded with fear and passion.

BIHAR

What is called the 'molasses scandal' in Bihar should also be mentioned This refers to recommendations made by highly placed and unauthorized persons to sugar factories about the disposal of molasses Sardar Patel who made a report to the Working Committee put the responsibility on the Excise Commissioner of the State

In the course of his report Sardar Patel said "Papers do not show that the Ministry had any connection either directly or indirectly with the origin or conduct of this practice None of the Ministers were directly involved in making recommendations or influencing the Excise Commissioner It was a purely departmental practice for which the responsibility must rest with the Excise Commissioner."

"One cannot avoid the impression" the report said, "that the practice of issuing letters of recommendation was adopted deliberately with a view to obliging friends or acquaintances and Congressmen, either by themselves or through others in whom they might be interested I feel that for a head of a department to indulge in this practice is not only objectionable but reprehensible

"The practice does not appear to have been authorised under any Government instructions and was discontinued in April, 1947, under the orders of the Revenue Minister"

The report continued "It appears that when certain impressions in an exaggerated form about the transactions and implications of some Congressmen became known, there was a considerable public outcry The matter was ventilated in the press and members of the Legislature also became agitated about it Interpellations were then put and the Revenue Minister then answered them as a short notice question While giving a statement of persons in whose favour letters of recommendation were issued their connection with some leading Congressmen of Bihar was brought out in an indirect manner by giving the addresses of recipients of letters in the statement as 'care-of such-and-such persons'

"The allegations in this connection are that the Minister either manœuvred to have a question put, so that he might be able to involve some of his political opponents, or in the manner in which he gave the answer there was an implication that the persons who were referred to as connected with the recipients had either recommended the applicants or were indirectly the cause of the letters of recommendation having been given."

Holding that the papers did not show that the practice either owed itself to or was exploited by the Ministry, Sardar Patel said "I see no impropriety in answering the question as a short notice question The matter was of sufficient public importance having regard to the agitation that had been aroused to justify its being treated as a short notice question and answered as such The only thing to which objection might be taken is the description of many persons as 'care of certain important personages and omission to consult the Cabinet as a whole as to the terms and manner of reply"

The report added "This is, however, a purely procedural matter and, therefore, one in which we need not necessarily find fault with the discretion used, particularly when the unfortunate consequences of the description of addresses adopted fell on friends and opponents alike There is no evidence to show that in adopting this particular mode of description the Minister concerned was guided by any political motives

"There are, however, four cases in which a recommendation was made by Mr. Shukla Singh, Parliamentary Secretary In my opinion it was improper on his part to have done so"

The Punjab did not escape its share of the trouble In that State 47 out of 79 Congress members started a move to dethrone the then Chief Minister, Lala Bhimsen Sachar, and succeeded The rebels got a free hand so to speak, and a new Ministry was formed headed by the majority group leader, Dr Gopinath Bhargava The result was that 125 workers including 23 women all belonging to the Sachar group resigned their membership of the Congress In a letter to the Provincial Secretary they made a number of allegations against the official organization 'We feel the Congress in the Punjab is heading towards destruction', they said. 'We expected honesty, trust, justice and democracy under the Congress rule, but our hopes have been dashed to the ground The masses are dissatisfied, the workers are fallen and helpless, national character is sinking and moral deterioration has set in'

These differences found their echo in local committees such as Amritsar and Ludhiana, where the organizations became unworkable In Ludhiana for instance, the office-bearers simply shut down the Congress office and announced that they would hand over only to the All-India Congress Committee

PANCHAYAT ELECTIONS

The Congress Panchayat elections which took place towards the beginning of 1950 were fought with the utmost bitterness The conflict as might be expected was chiefly between the group in power and the group in opposition (Rajasthan, Andhra) All kinds of charges were made by each group against the other, the elections themselves giving rise to many appeals both to the Congress High Command and the country's law courts The Congress Executive intervened in a number of cases and either stayed the proceedings (parts of Andhra) or ordered fresh elections (Andhra, Rajasthan, Berar) In one or two instances the law court took official notice (Calcutta area, Bombay, Calicut) but elsewhere notably in Madras the High Court of the State ruled that the cases were not sustainable in law. The Congress Committee itself disapproved of any reference to law courts on internal organizational matters and ruled that any Congressman who took such cases to court would forfeit his membership. Those who had already gone to court were given a week's time to withdraw their cases Madras, Bengal and Bombay had as many as 23 election suits, and Andhra and Karnatak had 3.

Some leading figures were defeated in these elections. In Madras the most notable defeat was that of Mr. R. Madhava Menon, Minister for Law and Education in the Madras State. He had stood for the Kerala Provincial Congress Committee. The President of the Congress Committee too was defeated.

The elections in Bihar were fought with exceptional ferocity. Here, for instance, is a list of the misdeeds alleged to have been committed in the course of the elections, removal of names of old Congressmen, change of constituencies, at the eleventh hour, appointment of servile men as returning officers, intimidation, non-intimation of date and place of election to secure uncontested returns, non-scrutiny and tearing of nomination papers

The Executive Council of the West Bengal Congress Committee charged Mr Kala Venkat Rao with having rushed the Panchayat elections As a result of such hustle, it said, a number of irregularities had occurred. In Allahabad elections to the provincial executive were attended with scenes of open rowdyism

IMPROVING MORALE

Inevitably all this led to a great deal of heart-searching on the part of the Congress

From time to time various suggestions were made to overcome the general sense of frustration, and minimise the scope for corruption and irregularity.

The Bihar Congress Committee put forward a 12-point programme for revitalizing the Congress These were preparation of a constructive programme to utilize the energies of all capable Congressmen, selection of Congress candidates for election on the basis of their work, ban on Congress office-bearers accepting business contracts from local bodies or dealing in controlled commodities, a plan of action for the Congress Ministry, enquiry into charges of interference by Congressmen in administrative matters and suitable action, non-participation of Ministers in parties or feasts while on tour, abrogation of all controls as a source of corruption

The Bihar Committee accordingly ordered all Congressmen in the State trading in controlled commodities to return their licences before a certain date

Mr Kala Venkatrao, the General Secretary for this part directed all Provincial Congress Committees to make a list of elected Congressmen who were holding permits or licences for rationed commodities The Committees were also to find out if these licence-holders held their licence on hereditary grounds or otherwise

The Working Committee decided that the selection of candidates for the State and Republican Legislatures in the coming general elections would be done by a committee of eleven of which six were to be members of the Congress Parliamentary Board. This, it was hoped, would prevent local manœuvring The Working Committee also ruled that the leader of the Parliamentary Party in a state legislature was to be elected not for a year as was the practice till then, but for the life of the legislature in question Second, in passing a vote of no-confidence in an executive body the next highest organization was to be invariably consulted

There was also a general feeling that it would help morale if closer relations were promoted between Congress organizations and the administration Accordingly it was agreed that in the matter of national planning the Congress Planing Sub-committee should work in close unison with the National Planning Commission. A place would thus be found for Congress constructive workers and due recognition accorded to them.

An ex-Minister of State Mr. Mohanlal Saxena put forward a series of proposals of his own towards the same general end. He proposed: 1. The Congress President should be ipso facto Prime Minister of India, 2. No Minister with the exception of the Prime Minister and Deputy Minister should be a member of the Working Committee or Provincial Committee, 3. A definite programme of work for a year should be discussed and adopted at the annual Congress session, 4. The Provincial Committee and Provincial Parliamentary Party should fix a time-table for the implementation of the programme, 5. There should be a six-monthly review of the work done by the A I.C C. and the Provincial Congress Committees, 6. There should be a Complaints Committee in the Central and State Parliamentary parties to go into the complaints and report to the leader or the executive body, 7. All Ministers except the Prime Minister and Deputy Prime Minister of India and the Chief Ministers of the States, should place before the parties an annual progress report of the work done by the Ministry and obtain a vote of confidence

ECONOMY POLICY

Most of these measures for restoring Congress morale were of a negative sort The Congress had also to think of something positive to offer. The general elections were coming round and the various parties had to be prepared with their programme and policy statements In the back-ground of Indian politics this programme had to be of an economic nature Accordingly, the Working Committee first set down the main objectives towards which the country was to strive Secondly, it visualized the setting up of a National Planning Commission Thirdly, it decided that it might help if Congress constructive workers were intimately associated with the Government's reconstruction movement. Thus a sub-committee was set up to prepare the broad outlines of a national plan When the outline had been drafted, a conference of Chief Ministers and State Congress Presidents was called at which the outline plan was discussed and approved Pandit Nehru finally followed this up with a note to all Chief Ministers asking that they should as far as possible give concrete shape to the resolutions passed at the conference It was expected that the economic sub-committee would work in unison with the Planning Commission of the Government of India

Here are the final objectives of Congress economic policy as set down by the Working Committee on 19th January 1950

The principal objectives to be realised through a national reconstruction plan are

(1) The establishment of a just order of society, providing for,

(a) The operation of the principles of decentralisation, co-operation and individual freedom to the utmost feasible extent

(b) Equal opportunity for all,

(c) Adequate means of living for all,

(d) Just and humane conditions of work,

(e) Full and suitable employment, and

(f) The growth of the human personality in all its aspects.

(2) Adequate and expanding volume of production to secure a progressive rise in the standard of living and the achievement of a national minimum in respect of all the essentials for physical and social well-being, within a reasonable period.

(3) The best utilisation of the material and human resources of the nation and the improvement of the skill and the productive capacity of its man-power by suitable technical education and training.

(4) As near an approach to national and regional self-sufficiency as would be compatible with the requirements of an adequate standard of living and the country's internal and external security.

"The Planning Commission should have the following duties," the resolution said: "(1) to make a full assessment of the resources and the requirements of the nation; (2) to determine priorities, to work out a proper allocation and distribution of the resources and their constant adjustment to the changing requirements with a view to obtaining the speediest and the maximum realisation of the objectives of the plan;

3) to lay down the various stages, each covering a defined period, for the development of the country's economy and to undertake the necessary preparatory work in connection with each stage, and (4) to secure full and all round co-ordination in the process of planning and in the execution of the plan.

"In the context of the present needs and the circumstances of the country and in view of the acute economic difficulties which are being experienced, the Commission should devise immediate measures (a) to reduce to the minimum the dependence of the country on foreign sources in the matter of consumers goods, to bring about a speedy elimination of the import of luxury goods and such other articles as are not indispensable regardless of the inconvenience that may be felt by any section of the population, (b) to secure the necessary capital goods for increasing the internal production of the needed articles as quickly as possible, (c) and to maximise the production of the essential primary goods, specially foodstuffs and raw materials for the principal industries, in the shortest time possible, (d) to speed up projects for increasing the irrigation facilities and power supply of the country, which are the basis of its prosperity and progress"

The gist of the memorandum prepared by the economic Sub-Committee (Pandit Pant, Chairman, Mr Shankerrao Deo, Mr Jagjivan Ram, Mr Gulzarilal Nanda, and Prof N G Ranga) says as follows

"By intensifying efforts in 'Grow More Food' and essential raw material and consumers' goods in a manner yielding quick results and offering productive employment to a large section of unemployed and under-employed population, by mopping up surplus purchasing power specially in sectors least habituated to capital formation through a scheme of voluntary but nation-wide austerity, by increasing efficiency of labour, agriculture and industry, through provision of better conditions of life and by stimulating production through removal of restrictive unplanned and out-moded controls, by rationalising control of capital issue on a positive basis of priority-rating, by gearing our export and import control to the demands of our national economy in investment, production and consumption, and by imposing more stringent control on unhealthy speculation, this programme of decentralised co-operative economy which has been framed essentially from a practical point of view bearing in mind the limits of our resources, the capacity and character of the people and the potentialities of such institutions as panchayats, agricultural and industrial co-operatives, will go a long way in solving the economic crisis of low production, price inflation and unemployment and under-employment"

The objectives resolution passed by the conference of Chief Ministers and State Congress Presidents (25th April, 1950) followed the same lines as those of the Working Committee resolution of 19th January.

"The Congress has declared the establishment of a democratic classless society in a non-violent and peaceful manner as its ultimate objective. The Constitution of India has guaranteed fundamental rights to her citizens and has enunciated the directive principles of State policy to promote the welfare of the people by securing and protecting as effectively as it may, a social order in which justice—social, economic and political—shall inform all the institutions of the national life. For the achievement of these objectives, it is necessary to formulate not only a short-term but also a long-term plan initially to cover a period of five years.

"While the long-term plan will necessarily have to be well-integrated and all-inclusive and will require a clear demarcation of the phases through which it should be worked out by the country and the people, for the purpose of the immediate programme, attention will have to be concentrated on a few major items and priorities will have to be determined to indicate the order in which action for the fulfilment of the programme can most effectively be taken.

MASS ENTHUSIASM

"For the implementation of such programme emphasis should be laid on the rousing of mass enthusiasm and consciousness which alone can make it a people's programme It will also be necessary to create such institutions as co-operatives in agriculture and industries and panchayats and to arrange for the training of local leadership to man these institutions

"In the background of our limited resources, economic planning presupposes a period of austerity on the part of the people Efforts should be made to create a sense of equality of sacrifice among all sections of the community

"In the immediate programme every effort has to be made to raise the level of production and employment and to repair the damage to the economy of the country caused by the neglect of the past and the ravages of the Second World War, the economic consequences of partition as well as the devaluation and its aftermath

"The successful implementation of the immediate programme will create conditions for the attainment of a stable and fair price level and for a more comprehensive planning with a view to

(A) Promoting a balanced economy in agriculture, large-scale and basic industries, village industries and social services

(B) Rationalising production in agriculture and industry and taking steps for the establishment and administration of a just and decentralised co-operative economy.

(C) Bringing a definite rise in the standard of living of the people as a result of planned economy which guarantees a fair remuneration to those who participate in the creation of wealth"

The other resolutions on controls, labour and housing, rural development, small-scale industries, capital formation and import and export policies are as follows

The resolutions on controls said "Controls are a legacy of the war and were in operation when the National Government came into power On account of the inevitable strains imposed by controls the question whether they should continue or not has attracted considerable attention, roused acute controversy and widespread feeling

"Some two years ago the Government decided to lift controls from food and cloth, but their expectations were not realised and controls had to be reimposed, in view of the developments that have taken place since such as devaluation, as well as the lack of social consciousness against anti-social elements and inability of Governmental machinery to enforce the controls effectively and strictly, a review of the entire position is called for.

"It is necessary to examine this question dispassionately in its true setting and correct perspective so that controls which are considered to be unnecessary may be lifted at the earliest suitable opportunity consistently with the interests of the community and the demands of a planned economy In regard to certain articles at any rate there would appear to be prima facie case for removing controls from salt, paper, coal and cement.

The resolution on labour and housing welcomed the appointment by the Central Government of working parties for effecting rationalisation on comprehensive lines in certain industries with due safeguards for the interests of labour.

It added: "Considerable unemployment has arisen in certain industries owing to closure of mills and the retrenchment of a number of employees. Steps should be taken to avoid unemployment as far as possible. Where it becomes inevitable, safeguards should be provided for employees in the shape of suitable gratuity in the case of retrenchment and facilities for reabsorption in other establishments or occupations A proposal for retrenchment by an employer should, however, when dispute arises, be subject to the approval of the agency to be set up by the State Governments"

Pleading for a planned development of village and small-scale industries, the conference, in another resolution, stated "In the background of our limited resources in money and capital and vast manpower, the decentralised co-operative economy has a double virtue of increasing production as well as employment speedily without consuming much capital

"The policy of restricted import, closure of certain mills, growing unemployment and the recent flow of refugees from East Pakistan have further enhanced the urgency for and underlined the importance of the organisation of such industries in a planned manner"

The conference felt that a "practical programme" of adult education had a special significance and should receive priority in any scheme of economic development This was specially so because the organisation and development of a decentralised co-operative economy largely depended on the "initiative, spirit of self-help and leadership on the part of the common man"

The resolution on agriculture said "The immediate object in agriculture that the country has set before itself is self-sufficiency in food, to be attained by the end of 1951, as well as in cotton and jute and concerted measures to this end are already under way These consist of reclamation of land, the offering of incentives and assistance for the diversion of land from other crops to the cultivation of cotton and jute, and improving the yield and quality of agriculture produce"

What is needed for the purposes of the immediate programme, the resolution added, is an intensification of some of these measures, as well as creation of conditions conducive to better farming

"Increased efficiency of agriculture postulates more than improvement in facilities, organisation and techniques, the maintenance and restoration of soil fertility, and the provision of irrigation. All this will fail to confer full or lasting benefit unless the tiller of the soil is given a sense of security and self-respect and the economic and social condition of the agricultural worker is improved"

Regarding an agrarian programme the conference said. "Agriculture will remain in a state of flux so long as the structure and pattern of rural economy does not become clear and definite It is, therefore, necessary to shorten the period of transition by expediting the abolition of zamindari and malguzari by paying the compensation, if necessary in bonds

FOR a complete history of the movement represented by the Indian National Congress the reader is referred to earlier editions of the Indian Year Book.

The Congress was founded in 1885 by Mr. Allan Octavian Hume, a retired member of the Indian Civil Service, and it held its first session in Bombay during Christmas of that year.

In 1927 the Congress adopted independence as the goal of India. In the following two years the Congress made what the extremist Left described as a climb-down. At its 1928 session the Congress, while adhering to independence, agreed to accept Dominion Status, if granted, before the end of 1929

Things were tending towards a satisfactory settlement when in the latter half of 1929 the Congress insisted on the immediate grant of Dominion Status or an assurance that Dominion Status would be the basis of discussion at the prospective Round Table

Conference to be convened in England between representatives of England, British India and the Indian States.

In fulfilment of the "ultimatum" issued at its previous session, the Congress, at its 1929 session, declared itself for complete independence or "Purna Swaraj." Throughout the year 1930 the Congress was engaged in a campaign of civil disobedience

Early next year the Congress suspended civil disobedience by virtue of an agreement arrived at with the Government.

As a result of this Mahatma Gandhi, on behalf of the Congress, went to London to take part in the Round Table Conference. While he was away things took a turn for the worse in the country, and matters reached a crisis at the beginning of 1932 In that year the Government bent all its efforts to making it impossible for the Congress to carry on its normal activities and succeeded fully in its object All forms of Congress work throughout the country were successfully prevented

In the middle of 1934 the civil disobedience movement was withdrawn In the autumn of that year Mahatma Gandhi retired from the Congress, although he remained in practice the virtual dictator of the organisation. During the next four or five years, the Congress functioned as a constitutional organisation It was actually in charge of His Majesty's Government for more than two years in eight provinces under the 1935 Constitution

This parliamentary phase proved to be short-lived Soon after the declaration of the Second World War the Congress withdrew its Ministers in the provinces as a protest against the fact that India was made a belligerent without consulting the people, and two, that India could not assist the war effort unless one of the aims of the war was the grant of freedom to India. The Congress gave the supreme command of the organisation and its members to Mahatma Gandhi who launched another campaign of civil disobedience—this time on the issue that Congressmen should have the right non-violently to preach against India's war effort.

Thousands of Congressmen answered the Mahatma's call, uttered anti-war slogans and courted jail This civil disobedience campaign was not of the mass type, but restricted to individuals carefully chosen by Mahatma Gandhi himself Even so, close upon 25,000 representative Congress leaders took part in the campaign.

Ramgarh.—The first great event in the history of the Congress after the war started was the annual session at Ramgarh in April 1940. Maulana Abul Kalam Azad presided. Only one resolution was adopted by the Ramgarh session. It stated inter alia:

"The Congress hereby declares again that nothing short of complete independence can be accepted by the people of India . . .

"The Congress is further of opinion that, while it will always be ready, as it ever has been, to make every effort to secure communal harmony, no permanent solution is possible, except through a Constituent Assembly, where the rights of all recognised minorities will be fully protected by agreement, as far as possible, between the elected representatives of various majority and minority groups, or by arbitration if agreement is not reached on any point. Any alternative will lack finality . . ."

(For full text of the resolution see past issues of The Indian Year Book).

The weeks that followed the Ramgarh session of the Congress were occupied by intensive preparation for a direct action movement under the guidance of Mahatma Gandhi, side by side with expressions of hope by the Mahatma and other Congress leaders that such a struggle might be avoided. Mahatma Gandhi's notion of "preparation" was as usual on the constructive plane, that is, hand-spinning, removal of untouchability and promotion of Hindu-Muslim unity.

As for communal unity, Mahatma Gandhi stoutly resisted the Muslim League demand for Pakistan but declared that, although, as a man of non-violence, he could not resist the proposed partition with force, he could never be a willing party to a vivisection of the country.

POONA OFFER

A few weeks later the war took a sudden turn for the worse The invasion of the Low Countries, the capitulation of Belgium and the collapse of France produced in India a new feeling in favour of Britain. There was clear evidence of a desire on the part of many Congress leaders actively to help in the war in spite of Mahatma Gandhi's known convictions on the subject.

The feeling grew among Indians that the war had come closer to this country and that the danger of external aggression and internal disorder were not remote possibilities This realisation caused a revolution in the minds of most Congressmen who did not adhere steadfastly to the Mahatma and his non-violence in any eventuality The Congress Working Committee virtually abandoned him and offered to co-operate in the war effort provided a fully representative National Government was formed at the centre Apart from the ideological separation from the Mahatma, this offer constituted a big change for the Congress—from non-participation in any war to active help in the prosecution of current war.

The resolution said, among other things :—

"The Working Committee are more than ever convinced that the acknowledgment by Great Britain of the complete independence of India is the only solution of the problems facing both India and Britain and are, therefore, of opinion that such an unequivocal declaration should be immediately made and that, as an immediate step in giving effect to it, a provisional National Government should be constituted at the Centre, which, though formed as a transitory measure, should be such as to command the confidence of all the elected elements in the Central Legislature, and secure the closest co-operation of the responsible Governments in the provinces

" . . . The Working Committee declare that if these measures are adopted, it will enable the Congress to throw in its full weight in the efforts for the effective organisation of the defence of the country"

Government Response—Then came the famous statement by the Viceroy, known as the British Government's August offer (For full text see past issues of The Indian Year Book.) It said inter alia:

"Last October His Majesty's Government again made it clear that Dominion Status was their objective for India. They added that they were ready to authorise the expansion of the Governor-General's Council to include a certain number of representatives of political parties, and they proposed the establishment of a Consultative Committee . . .

"They (His Majesty's Government) have authorised me accordingly to invite a certain number of representative Indians to join my Executive Council.

"They have authorised me further to establish a War Advisory Council, which would meet at regular intervals and which would contain representatives of the Indian States and of other interests in the national life of India as a whole . .

"With regard to the machinery for building, within the British Commonwealth of Nations, a new constitutional scheme.....

"His Majesty's Government authorise me to declare that they will most readily assent to the setting up, after the conclusion of the war, with the least possible delay, of a body representative of the principal elements in India's national life in order to devise the framework of the new Constitution."

The Congress, however, rejected the Viceroy's offer as being wholly opposed not only to the principle of democracy, acclaimed by the British Government in their war aims, but also to the best interests of India.

In order to meet the League objections to the Congress idea of a National Government Mr. C. Rajagopalachariar made what has come to be known as a "sporting offer". He said: "In answer to Mr Amery's difficulty as to the minorities, I may make a sporting offer that if His Majesty's Government agree to a Provisional National Government being formed at once, I will undertake to persuade my colleagues in the Congress to agree to the Muslim League being invited to nominate the Prime Minister and to let him form a National Government as he would consider best" Nothing, however, came out of this "sporting offer"

CIVIL DISOBEDIENCE

When this "last gesture" was ignored, the Congress returned to Mahatma Gandhi and his programme. This was the outcome of the deliberations of the All-India Congress Committee held in Bombay in the middle of September 1940 The A I C C. passed a resolution confirming the August resolution of the Working Committee rejecting the Viceroy's offer and requesting the Mahatma to take over the leadership of the Congress.

About a fortnight after this, Mahatma Gandhi unfolded his plan of individual civil disobedience restricted to a limited number of satyagrahis

He chose as his first satyagrahi Mr. Vinoba Bhave who had been doing village uplift work Accordingly Mr Vinoba Bhave set out on a marching tour from village to village preaching non-participation in war on grounds of non-violence He enjoyed complete freedom for a couple of days but was arrested on the third day and sentenced to imprisonment for doing an act prejudicial under the Defence of India Ordinance.

Then followed a series of arrests of persons chosen by the Mahatma. They included most of the members of the Congress Working Committee, most of the Premiers and Ministers of the former Congress Governments and a large number of members of the Central Legislature and other prominent Congressmen all over the country.

The general feeling of political inaction engendered by the satyagraha movement, the restlessness of the public at the absence of any gesture from the Government, the conviction that the country's war effort was being adversely affected, ever so slightly, by the continuance of leaders in prison, and the insistent demands of non-Congress leaders led the Government to release the prisoners towards the end of 1941. The Government of India announced that "confident in the determination of all responsible opinion in India to support the war effort until victory is secured, they have reached the conclusion that those civil disobedience prisoners whose offences have been formal or symbolic in character can be set free." Accordingly the bulk of satyagrahi prisoners were released.

Co-operation Offered.—From the statements issued by the Congress President, Pandit Nehru and others soon after their release it became apparent that once again they favoured active participation in the armed defence of India and the prosecution of the war to victory if Indians were given complete control of affairs and if steps were taken to lay the foundations of Indian freedom.

The Congress Working Committee met at Bardoli and made an important change in Congress policy. Civil disobedience was suspended and the door was left open for negotiations with the British Government for a political settlement.

A resolution was passed reiterating their attitude towards the war as set forth in their statement issued on September 14, 1939, wherein they condemned the Nazi and Fascist aggression and expressed their willingness to help the cause of freedom and democracy, provided the objectives of the war were clearly stated and acted upon insofar as was possible at present.

Another resolution relieved Mahatma Gandhi of the responsibility laid upon him by the A.-I.C.C. in September 1940, while reiterating that the policy of non-violence adopted under his guidance for the attainment of 'swaraj,' and which had proved so successful in leading to mass awakening and otherwise would be adhered to by the Congress. (For details see past issues of the Indian Year Book.)

Japan's entry into the war and her early gains in Malaya, the Netherlands East Indies and Burma impelled the British authorities to consider whether the time had not arrived for settling the political problems in India if only to promote unity of purpose and co-ordinated endeavour in this country in order effectively to meet Japanese invasion of India. It is also widely believed that Russia, China and the United States of America brought their influence to bear upon the British authorities in this behalf.

CRIPPS' OFFER

Shortly thereafter the Prime Minister made a statement in Parliament announcing that Sir Stafford Cripps, the Socialist leader who had recently returned to England from his diplomatic successes at Moscow and had been made the Lord Privy Seal in a reconstituted War Cabinet, would go to India immediately on a special mission.

Sir Stafford Cripps flew to India in a few days and held consultations with representatives of the Congress, the Muslim League, the Hindu Mahasabha, the Princes' Chamber, and a number of other political and sectional organisations Here is the text of the offer which he brought to India in the name of the British Cabinet .

" His Majesty's Government, having considered the anxieties expressed in this country and in India as to the fulfilment of promises made in regard to the future of India, have decided to lay down in precise and clear terms the steps which they propose shall be taken for the earliest possible realisation of self-government in India The object is the creation of a new Indian Union which shall constitute a Dominion associated with the United Kingdom and other Dominions by a common allegiance to the Crown but equal to them in every respect, in no way subordinate in any aspect of its domestic or external affairs.

" His Majesty's Government, therefore, make the following Declaration .—

"(a) Immediately upon cessation of hostilities steps shall be taken to set up in India in manner described hereafter an elected body charged with the task of framing a new Constitution for India.

"(b) Provision shall be made, as set out below, for participation of Indian States in the Constitution-making body.

"(c) His Majesty's Government undertake to accept and implement forthwith the Constitution so framed subject only to :—

"(i) The right of any Province of British India that is not prepared to accept the new Constitution to retain its present constitutional position, provision being made for its subsequent accession if it so decides.

" With such non-acceding Provinces, should they so desire, His Majesty's Government will be prepared to agree upon a new Constitution giving them the same full status as the Indian Union and arrived at by a procedure analogous to that here laid down.

"(ii) The signing of a Treaty which shall be negotiated between His Majesty's Government and the Constitution-making body. This Treaty will cover all necessary matters arising out of the complete transfer of responsibility from British to Indian hands , it will make provision, in accordance with undertakings given by His Majesty's Government, for the protection of racial and religious minorities , but will not impose any restriction on the power of the Indian Union to decide in future its relationship to other Member States of the British Commonwealth

" Whether or not an Indian State elects to adhere to the Constitution it will be necessary to negotiate a revision of its Treaty arrangements so far as this may be required in the new situation

" During the critical period which now faces India and until the new Constitution can be framed His Majesty's Government must inevitably bear the responsibility for, and retain the control and direction of, the defence of India as part of their world war effort, but the task of organising to the full the military moral and material resources of India must be the responsibility of the Government of India with the co-operation of the peoples of India. His Majesty's Government desire and invite the immediate and effective participation of the leaders of the principal sections of the Indian people in the counsels of their country, of the Commonwealth and of the united nations Thus they will be enabled to give their active and constructive help in the discharge of a task which is vital and essential for the future freedom of India "

After protracted negotiations, in which representatives of the principal Indian organisations met, in addition to Sir Stafford, the Commander-in-Chief and Col. Louis Johnson, the personal representative in India of President Roosevelt, the Congress rejected the scheme The Hindu Mahasabha had already rejected it and the Muslim League followed suit, while other organisations expressed disapproval in more or less strong language

CONGRESS OBJECTIONS

The Congress Working Committee, which held what was perhaps the longest session in its history, passed a resolution of which the following are the material clauses ·

" The Committee, while recognising that self-determination for the people of India is accepted in principle in that uncertain future, regret that this is fettered and circumscribed . Even the constitution-making body is so constituted that the people's right to self-determination is vitiated by the introduction of non-representative elements. . .

" The complete ignoring of the ninety millions of the people of the Indian States and their treatment as commodities at the disposal of their rulers is a negation of both democracy and self-determination. . .

" The acceptance beforehand of the novel principle of non-accession for a province is also a severe blow to the conception of Indian unity and an apple of discord likely to generate growing trouble in the provinces. . .

" Nevertheless the Committee cannot think in terms of compelling the people in any territorial unit to remain in an Indian Union against their declared and established will . Each territorial unit should have the fullest possible autonomy within the Union, consistently with a strong national state.

Freedom Now.—" Any proposal concerning the future of India must demand attention and scrutiny, but in today's grave crisis, it is the present that counts, and even proposals for the future are important in so far as they affect the present. . . For this present the British War Cabinet's proposals are vague and altogether incomplete, and it would appear that no vital changes in the present structure are contemplated.

" It has been made clear that the defence of India will in any event remain under British control . . The Committee would repeat that an essential and fundamental prerequisite for the assumption of responsibility by the Indian people in the present is their realisation as a fact that they are free and are in charge of maintaining and defending their freedom. . . . It is manifest that the present Government of India, as well as its provincial agencies are lacking in competence, and are incapable of shouldering the burden of India's defence.

" The Committee, therefore, is unable to accept the proposals put forward on behalf of the British War Cabinet "

Sir Stafford Cripps then announced that the draft declaration of the British Government had been withdrawn and that the position reverted to what it was before he came out to India, " though not quite perhaps to that position "

Rajagopalachari Resigns—In spite of the failure of the effort of Sir Stafford Cripps and the bitter tone of the final remarks in the controversy, responsible Indian leaders reiterated their determination to defend the country against aggression

Just at this time, on the eve of the meeting of the All-India Congress Committee, called at Allahabad at the end of April 1942, the Madras Congress Legislature Party, under the guidance of Mr Rajagopalachari, passed a resolution recommending to the A -I C C to "acknowledge the Muslim League's claim for separation should the same be persisted in when the time comes for framing the future constitution of India " and to " invite the Muslim League for consultation for the purpose of arriving at an agreement and securing the installation of a National Government to meet the present emergency."

The meeting also passed a resolution voicing " the general feeling in this part of the country that there should be at this critical juncture a popular Government in this province doing its utmost to secure the requisite conditions for the people to play their part The party is of the opinion further that to facilitate united and effective action in this regard by such a popular Government, the Muslim League should be invited to participate in it."

These resolutions met with a storm of protest from Congress leaders outside Madras, but were welcomed by some moderate leaders and by Muslim League circles

The Madras resolution acknowledging the Muslim League's claim to separation came up for consideration before a meeting of the A -I C.C. at Allahabad in April 1942, but was defeated by 120 votes against 15, while a counter-resolution, moved by Pandit Jagat Narain, opposing any proposal to disintegrate India, was carried by 92 votes to 17.

When the bold line suggested by him proved unacceptable to the bulk of Congressmen Mr Rajagopalachari had to resign his membership of the Congress Working Committee and his leadership of the Madras Legislature Congress party.

"QUIT INDIA"

The weeks that followed the Allahabad meeting of the All-India Congress Committee witnessed Mahatma Gandhi's advocating in his weekly organ, Harijan, policies outlined in the resolutions adopted at Allahabad and resisting Mr. Rajagopalachari's proposal to settle with the Muslim League on the basis of dividing India The South Indian leader, for his part, carried on a raging and tearing campaign in favour of making peace with Quaid-e-Azam Jinnah and thereby facilitating the establishment of a National Government, which, he affirmed, was essential not only for the well-being of India but also for the object of effectively defending the country against Japanese aggression.

It became apparent from Mahatma Gandhi's writings and utterances that he was growing more and more restless and bitter towards Britain for the latter's refusal to concede the Congress demand. Towards the end of April the Mahatma conceived an idea which later crystallised into what has come to be known as the "Quit India" demand. He urged the withdrawal of the British from India not only in India's interest but also for the sake of Britain. He wrote in Harijan "Hitherto the rulers have said, 'we would gladly retire if we know to whom we should hand over the reins' My answer now is, 'leave India to God; if that is too much, then leave her to anarchy'."

As time rolled on Mahatma Gandhi appeared to abandon the policy of non-embarrassment to Britain's war effort in India. He also hinted that his views on the moral basis of Britain's war had undergone a change. In an interview to the press in Bombay in the middle of May he stated "I used to say that my moral support was entirely with Great Britain I am very sorry to have to confess today that my mind refuses to give that moral support" He added. "This ordered, disciplined anarchy of British rule should go, and if there is complete lawlessness in India as a result, I would risk it, for I believe that 22 years of continuous effort at educating India along the lines of non-violence will not have gone in vain and people will evolve real popular order out of chaos"

Not Pro-Japanese.—The Mahatma took care to avoid giving the impression that his demand for the withdrawal of Britain was the outcome of pro-Japanese sentiment He wrote: "Of course, the people must not, on any account lean on the Japanese to get rid of the British power That were a remedy worse than the disease. But in this struggle every risk has to be run in order to cure ourselves of the biggest disease, a disease which has sapped our manhood and almost made us feel as if we must for ever be slaves. .

"Assuming that the national Government is formed and it answers my expectations, its first act would be to enter into a treaty with the United Nations for defensive operations against aggressive powers, it being common cause that India will have nothing to do with any of the Fascist powers and India would be morally bound to help the United Nations. . .

"It should be understood that the Indian army has been disbanded with the withdrawal of British power. Again if I have any say in the councils of the National Government, all its power, prestige and resources would be used towards bringing about world peace."

Answering the criticism that the withdrawal of Britain might lead to Japanese occupation of India, Mahatma Gandhi wrote: "Abrupt withdrawal of the Allied troops might result in Japan's occupation of India and China's sure fall. I had not the remotest idea of any such catastrophe resulting from my action. Therefore I feel that if in spite of the acceptance of my proposal, it is deemed necessary by the Allies to remain in India to prevent Japanese occupation, they should do so, subject to such conditions as may be prescribed by the National Government that may be set up after the British withdrawal.

With the country thus prepared, the Working Committee of the Congress met at Wardha in the middle of July and passed a lengthy resolution embodying the Mahatma's ideas. The resolution ran:—

"Events happening from day to day, and the experience that the people of India are passing through, confirm the opinion of Congressmen that British rule in India must end immediately, not merely because foreign domination, even at its best, is an evil in itself and a continuing injury to the subject people, but because India in bondage can play no effective part in defending herself and in affecting the fortunes of the war that is desolating humanity. . .

"Ever since the outbreak of the world war, the Congress has studiously pursued a policy of non-embarrassment Even at the risk of making its satyagraha ineffective, it deliberately gave it a symbolic character, in the hope that this policy of non-embarrassment, carried to its logical extreme, would be duly appreciated and that real power would be transferred to popular representatives, so as to enable the nation to make its fullest contribution towards the realisation of human freedom throughout the world, which is in danger of being crushed. . .

"These hopes, have, however, been dashed to pieces. The abortive Cripps proposals showed in the clearest possible manner that there was no change in the British Government's attitude towards India. . .

"The Congress representatives have tried their utmost to bring about a solution of the communal tangle. But this has been made impossible by the presence of the Foreign Power whose long record has been to pursue relentlessly the policy of divide and rule. . .

"In making the proposal for the withdrawal of British Rule from India, the Congress has no desire whatsoever to embarrass Great Britain or the Allied Powers in their prosecution of the war. . . The Congress is, therefore, agreeable to the stationing of the armed forces of the Allies in India, should they so desire, in order to ward off and resist Japanese or other aggression, and to protect and help China.

"Should, however, this appeal fail, the Congress cannot view without the gravest apprehension the continuation of the present state of affairs. . . The Congress will then be reluctantly compelled to utilise all the non-violent strength it might have gathered since 1920. . Such a widespread struggle would inevitably be under the leadership of Gandhiji . . ."

"OPEN REBELLION"

Commenting on the resolution, Mahatma Gandhi said "it will be a mass movement of a strictly non-violent character It will include all that a mass movement can include I do not want rioting as a direct result . My intention is to make the thing as short and swift as possible But if I am dragged into jail, it is difficult to say what I may do But I can fast, as I have fasted before now, though I should try to avoid such an extreme step so far as possible" Discussing the possibility of negotiations, he said "There is no room left for negotiations in the proposal for withdrawal Either they recognise independence or they don't After that recognition many things can follow. After all it is an open rebellion . ."

In the period between the adoption by the Working Committee of its July resolution and the meeting of the A-I C C in August Mahatma Gandhi indicated that he was prepared to meet the Viceroy and discuss his demand with him and that he would call off the movement if he were convinced by anyone that in the midst of war the British Government could not declare India free without jeopardising the war effort. He intended to handle the movement gently, but he would not hesitate to go to the extreme limit if he found that no impression was produced on the British Government or the Allied Powers.

A Warning.—Publication of the Working Committee's July resolution aroused much hostile comment abroad in reply to which the Mahatma wrote ".. The Justice of the demand for the ending of British Power has never been questioned, the moment chosen for enforcing it is the target of attack It is clear as crystal in the Working Committee resolution why this moment is chosen . . We know, that if India does not become free now, the hidden discontent will burst forth into a welcome to the Japanese, should they effect a landing. . ."

Apart from Indo-British relationship Mahatma Gandhi made an important change in his policy in the summer of 1942 when he gave up his old belief that internal unity must precede political emancipation and declared instead that, communal unity could only follow the removal of the third party.

Throughout this controversy, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru steadfastly advocated that nothing should be said or done which would render India vulnerable to Japanese attack.

For a time, there seemed to be some difference of opinion among the front rank Congress leaders on the wisdom of launching a political movement when the enemy was at the country's gates, but eventually unanimity was reached and the resolution given above was passed declaring that the withdrawal of the British from India was necessary both for Indian independence and for effective resistance to the Axis and that if the British refuse to yield, the Congress had no alternative but to launch a campaign of civil disobedience

AUGUST RESOLUTION

On the eve of the meeting of the A-I C C in Bombay, the Working Committee of the Congress met and drafted the following resolution for submission to the A-I C C.:—

"The Committee has viewed with dismay the deterioration of the situation on the Russian and Chinese fronts and conveys to the Russian and Chinese peoples its high appreciation of their heroism in defence of their freedom This increasing peril makes it incumbent on all those who strive for freedom and who sympathise with the victims of aggression, to examine the foundations of the policy so far pursued by the Allied Nations, which had led to repeated and disastrous failure. It is not by adhering to such aims and policies and methods that failure can be converted into success, for past experience has shown that failure is inherent in them. These policies have been based not on freedom so much as on the domination of subject and colonial countries, and the continuation of the imperialist tradition and method . .

Constituent Assembly.—"The peril of today, therefore, necessitates the independence of India and the ending of British domination . . The A-I C C therefore repeats with all emphasis the demand for the withdrawal of the British Power from India. On the declaration of India's independence, a Provisional Government will be formed and Free India will become an ally of the United Nations, sharing with them in the trials and tribulations of the joint enterprise of the struggle for freedom The Provisional Government can only be formed by the co-operation of the principal parties and groups in the country . . The Provisional Government will evolve a scheme for a Constituent Assembly which will prepare a constitution for the Government of India acceptable to all sections of the people This constitution, according to the Congress view, should be a federal one, with the largest measure of autonomy for the federating units, and with the residuary powers vesting in these units

"The freedom of India must be the symbol of and prelude to this freedom of all other Asiatic nations under foreign domination . . .

"While the A.-I C C. must primarily be concerned with the independence and defence of India in this hour of danger, the Committee is of opinion that the future peace, security and ordered progress of the world demand a World Federation of free nations, and on no other basis can the problems of the modern world be solved . . . An independent India would gladly join such a World Federation and co-operate on an equal basis with other countries in the solution of international problems . . .

The Coming Struggle.—"The A-I C.C would yet again, at this last moment, in the interest of world freedom, renew this appeal to Britain and the United Nations But the Committee feels that it is no longer justified in holding the nation back from endeavouring to assert its will against an imperialist and authoritarian Government . . . The Committee resolves, therefore, to sanction for the vindication of India's inalienable right to freedom and independence, the starting of a mass struggle on non-violent lines on the widest possible scale, so that the country might utilise all the non-violent strength it has gathered during the last twenty-two years of peaceful struggle. Such a struggle must inevitably be under the leadership of Gandhiji . . .

" . . . The people must remember that non-violence is the basis of this movement A time may come when it may not be possible to issue instructions or for instructions to reach our people, and when no Congress Committees can function When this happens, every man and woman, who is participating in this movement must function for himself or herself within the four corners of the general instructions issued

" Lastly, while the A -I.C C. has stated its own view of the future governance under free India, the A -I C.C wishes to make it quite clear to all concerned that by embarking on mass struggle it has no intention of gaining power for the Congress The power, when it comes, will belong to the whole people of India."

The A.-I.C C. met in Bombay on the 7th August in a tense atmosphere. Maulana Abul Kalam Azad, opening the proceedings, refuted the suggestion that once India was given freedom she would ally herself with Japan Mahatma Gandhi, who followed the President, maintained that he had no hatred for the British. " In fact," he remarked, " I am the greatest friend of theirs now, as they are in trouble I have always believed that they would never lose."

Six amendments were moved, three of which stressed the need for a communal settlement as a condition precedent to the starting of any mass movement. After Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, the mover of the resolution, had replied to the debate, the President, Maulana Abul Kalam Azad, appealed to the movers of the amendments to withdraw them and save time. Three amendments were then withdrawn, and the remaining three were rejected. The resolution was carried, 13 members voting against it The total number of members present was nearly 240.

Do or Die.—On the declaration of the result of the resolution, Mahatma Gandhi spoke for nearly 70 minutes in Hindi and for 20 minutes in English.

He observed that he had no objection to the transfer of power to Muslims The Muslims would then have a body to administer the affairs of the country. That body would command the allegiance not only of Muslims but of Hindus and other communities as well.

Continuing the Mahatma said that he would write to the Viceroy intimating to him the contents of the resolution and the implications thereof. It would not be very long before the Viceroy's reaction was known. Meanwhile he would advise the members and through them other Indians to feel that very day that they had shaken off the bonds of slavery and that they were free men and women.

The Mahatma concluded : " Every man is free to go to the fullest length under ahimsa (non-violence), by complete deadlock, strikes and other non-violent means Satyagrahis should go out to die and not to live. It is only when individuals go out to seek and face death that the nation will survive Karenge ya Marenge (We shall do or die)."

It was reported that on the eve of the A.-I C C. meeting and during this session vigorous efforts were made by Congress leaders to contact Quaid-e-Azam Jinnah with a view to arriving at an agreement with the Muslim League.

Just as the Congress was eager to arrive at a settlement with the Muslim League, similarly it was obvious that the Congress would have accepted any genuine gesture from the Government and cheerfully submitted to negotiations in respect of details. The view was widely held at the time that subsequent events would have taken a different course if a week or fortnight had been allowed to elapse after the adoption of the A.-I.C.C. resolution.

GOVERNMENT CHARGE

Government, however, took a different view of the situation. They were convinced and they claimed they had evidence, that the Congress had no genuine desire to negotiate a settlement but that with peace on their lips they were secretly planning a widespread subversive movement. The Government, therefore, decided to act firmly and quickly.

Within a few hours of the adoption of the " Quit India " resolution by the A -I C C and the termination of its proceedings, Mahatma Gandhi and the other Congress leaders were rounded up under the Defence of India Rules and kept under detention, completely isolated from the outside world. Strict measures were taken to prevent the movement from spreading or taking root In a resolution of the Governor-General-in-Council published on the morrow of the A -I C C meeting Government expressed regret at the Congress resolution and affirmed their determination to meet the challenge contained in it The resolution said inter alia :—

" . . The Governor-General-in-Council has been aware, too, for some days past of dangerous preparations by the Congress Party for unlawful and in some cases violent activities, directed among other things, to the interruption of communications and public utility services, the organisation of strikes, tampering with the loyalty of Government servants, and interference with defence measures, including recruitment

" The Government of India have waited patiently in the hope that wiser counsels might prevail They have been disappointed in that hope To a challenge such as the present there can only be one answer.

"The Government of India would regard it as wholly incompatible with their responsibilities to the people of India, and their obligations to the Allies, that a demand should be discussed the acceptance of which would plunge India into confusion and anarchy internally, and would paralyse her effort in the common cause of human freedom

" Nor can the Government of India accept the claim of the Congress Party to speak for India as a whole . . Acceptance of the proposals now put forward by the Congress Party must mean the abandonment of all those large and powerful elements in the population which have condemned the course of action proposed by the Congress Party. . . But for the resistance of the Congress Party to all constructive endeavours, India might even now be enjoying self-government.

No Flinching.—" British policy for India's future stands clear. It is that once hostilities cease, India shall devise for herself with full freedom of decision, and on a basis embracing all and not only a single party, the form of Government which she regards as most suited to her conditions, and that in the meantime Indian leaders shall fully participate in the Government of their country and in the councils of the Commonwealth and of the United Nations. The fullest opportunity for the attainment of self-government by the people of India has been guaranteed by His Majesty's Government. .

" There is nothing that the Government of India regret more than this challenge at so critical a juncture But on them there lies the task of defending India, of maintaining India's capacity to wage war, of safeguarding India's interests, of holding the balance between the different sections of her people without fear or favour. That task the Government of India will discharge in face of the challenge now thrown down by the Congress Party.

LEADERS ARRESTED

On the morning of August 9, Mahatma Gandhi and other Congress leaders were arrested in Bombay and simultaneously throughout the country a round-up of important Congressmen took place. The total number of arrests on that day amounted to a few hundred. In the words of an official publication, the first reactions to the arrests were surprisingly mild. On August 9 there were disturbances in Bombay, Ahmedabad and Poona, but the rest of the country remained quiet On August 10 disturbances occurred also in Delhi and a few towns in Uttar Pradesh ; but still no serious repercussions were reported from elsewhere. It was from August 11 that the situation began to deteriorate rapidly

From then onwards, apart from the hartals, protest meetings and similar demonstrations that were to be expected, outbreaks of violence, arson, murder and sabotage unfortunately took place, though in no sense could they be regarded as an integral part of the protest movement. In almost all cases these latter were directed either against communications of all kinds (including railways, posts and telegraphs) or against the police The outbreaks started almost simultaneously in widely separated areas in the States of Madras, Bombay and Bihar and also in Madhya Pradesh and Uttar Pradesh. The damage done was extensive, and in many instances the manner in which it was done displayed a great deal of technical knowledge. Block instruments and control rooms in railway stations were singled out for destruction, and the same technical skill appeared over and over again both in the selection of objects for attack—on the railways, in Post and Telegraph offices and lines, and on electric power lines and installations—and also in the manner in which the damage was carried out On the other hand, industrial plant and machinery, even where it was fully employed on Government work, escaped any serious injury.

Violence.—In the course of a debate in the Assembly, Sir Reginald Maxwell declared that till the middle of November 1942 49 fatal and 1,363 non-fatal cases amongst the police force were reported from general violence This was also responsible for destroying or badly damaging 192 police stations and posts, 494 Government buildings 318 railway stations and 309 post and telegraph offices There were 103 cases of serious damage to railway track and 11,285 cases of serious damage or destruction of telegraph and telephone lines and installations. There were three cases in which military property and installations were destroyed or damaged. There were 14 fatal cases and 70 non-fatal cases amongst the military from mob violence. These figures would indicate the seriousness of the rebellion Government had to face in the country.

Muslims as a community kept out of the disturbances, so did the followers of Dr Ambedkar. Except for cessation of work for a few weeks in the Ahmedabad textile industry, the industrial population was generally unaffected by the movement The public services, the police, the post and telegraphs, the railways and urban utility services carried on as usual. Students were enthusiastic for a few months, but inevitably their zeal flagged as time passed.

Most of the moderate leaders condemned the less attractive features of the protest movement in unmistakable terms Mr. C Rajagopalachari was among the foremost of the critics. Many of them however disputed the Government's contention that the movement was initiated and inspired by the Congress, contending that it was more the expression of the peoples' frustration and disappointment at Britain's attitude towards Indian aspirations and an expression of the people's resentment over the arrest of Mahatma Gandhi and the Congress leaders They were anxious that something must be done to put a stop to the movement and to restore normal political life. They suggested that negotiations be undertaken with the Mahatma both for a settlement for the Indo-British question and the inter-party disputes within the country.

THE FAST

There was complete frustration in the Indian political world. There seemed no way out of the deadlock, both Indo-British and internal. At this juncture, on the 9th of

February 1943, exactly six months after his arrest, Mahatma Gandhi announced his intention to undertake a fast for 21 days He had earlier written to the Viceroy reiterating his faith in non-violence abhorring the violence both of the people and of the Government in the shape of repression, protesting against the charge that he and the Congress were responsible for all that had taken place in the country, demanding an opportunity to rebut that charge, and asking for facilities to go over the whole question, in consultation with the members of the Congress Working Committee, with a view to an examination of the political situation de novo

His letters to the Viceroy and the latter's replies are published in extenso in past issues of The Indian Year Book.

The Mahatma successfully survived the 21-day fooдless ordeal, although on two occasions his condition caused anxiety. On the conclusion of the fast the commotion which had prevailed between February 10 and March 4 gradually subsided

Marking Time —The apparent determination of Government to face the situation in the country should the fast prove fatal rather than give an "unrepentent rebel" facilities for normal political life, coupled with their refusal to encourage non-Gandhite Congressmen and non-Congress leaders to explore possibilities of an internal settlement in consultation with the Mahatma, produced a stifling stillness in the political atmosphere

The only activity directly concerning the Congress or emanating from Congressmen was Mahatma Gandhi's letter to Quaid-e-Azam Jinnah in the summer of 1943 and an occasional move by released Congressmen to meet together and evolve an agreed policy in the absence of official Congress leadership

In response to an appeal made by the Quaid-e-Azam in the Delhi session of the Muslim League inviting the Mahatma to write to him, the latter addressed a letter to the League leader offering to meet him Not only were the contents of the letter not published, but Government refused to forward it to the Quaid-e-Azam.

Throughout this period there was no authoritative and comprehensive statement of Government's policy towards the Congress, although there were occasional announcements on specific issues Lord Linlithgow, in his farewell address to the Central Legislature in the autumn of 1943, adopted an attitude of studied silence in respect of the Congress People thought that it was done in order not to anticipate any new policy which his successor might unfold This belief was re-inforced by broad hints thrown by the Viceroy-designate, Lord Wavell, on the eve of his assumption of office

One of the first acts of the Mahatma after his release in May 1944 was to release the text of his letter to Quaid-e-Azam Jinnah which was written from detention about a year previously and which was withheld by Government.

Here is the text of the letter: "Dear Quaid-e-Azam, When sometime after my incarceration, Government asked me for a list of newspapers I would like to have, I included Dawn in my list. I have been receiving it with more or less regularity. Whenever it comes to me I read it carefully I have followed the proceedings of the League, as reported in the Dawn columns. I noted your invitation to me to write to you Hence this letter. I welcome your invitation. I suggest our meeting face to face rather than talking through correspondence. But I am in your hands I hope this letter will be sent to you and, if you agree to my proposal, that the Government will let you visit me. One thing I had better mention. There seems to be an 'If' about your invitation. Do you say I should write only if I have changed my heart? God alone knows men's hearts. I would like you to take me as I am. Why should not both you and I approach the great question of communal unity as men determined on finding a common solution, and work together to make our solution acceptable to all who are concerned with it or are interested in it?"

The publication of this letter produced no effect.

In the weeks immediately following his release Mahatma Gandhi concentrated on the collection of facts and opinions regarding what had happened during his detention and on efforts to gauge the feeling in the country as he emerged out of his detention

About this time also the correspondence which passed between Mahatma Gandhi while he was a detenu in the Aga Khan's Palace and Lord Wavell, the Viceroy, saw the light of day. For details see Year Book 1948.

C. R. FORMULA

The next stage arrived shortly after Mr C Rajagopalachari, who had spent a few days with Mahatma Gandhi while the latter was recuperating at Panchgani, announced in July that, he had carried on negotiations on behalf of the Mahatma with Quaid-e-Azam Jinnah for a settlement on the basis of virtual agreement on the principle of Pakistan The Quaid-e-Azam declined to express an opinion on the proposals, but said, he would submit the scheme to the League Working Committee if it was forwarded to him by Mahatma Gandhi himself Mr. Rajagopalachari felt that it was futile to allow the Quaid-e-Azam if he could not himself wholeheartedly back it, to put the proposals before the League Working Committee The personal negotiations, therefore came to an end and Mr. Rajagopalachari released the correspondence between himself and the Quaid-e-Azam as he wished to take the public into confidence.

(The correspondence on this subject between Quaid-e-Azam Jinnah and Mr Rajagopalachari was published in the issue of The Indian Year Book for 1945-46.)

Close on the heels of the publication of the Gandhi-cum-C R. offer to the Quaid-e-Azam, Mahatma Gandhi made another gesture, this time to British authority. According to a British journalist, who had had a series of interviews with the Mahatma, the latter "is prepared to accept and to advise the Congress to participate in a wartime National Government in full control of the civil administration, leaving the Viceroy and the Commander-in-Chief in full control of the British and Indian armies It would be expected that the establishment of such a Government would be accompanied now by a guarantee of Indian independence after the war."

(For details see the issue of The Indian Year Book for 1945-46).

APPROACH TO GOVERNMENT

Mahatma Gandhi followed this up by writing direct to the Viceroy. He regretted the premature publicity in the Indian press given to his interview with Mr. Gelder of the London News Chronicle outlining his proposals for a solution of the Indian deadlock. But the Viceroy, in his reply, still insisted on what he called "a definite and constructive policy". Thereupon the Mahatma rejoined:—Here is my concrete proposal. I am prepared to advise the Working Committee to declare that in view of the changed conditions, mass Civil Disobedience envisaged by the resolution of August 1942 cannot be offered and that full co-operation in the war effort should be given by the Congress if a declaration of immediate Indian Independence is made and a National Government responsible to the Central Assembly be formed subject to the proviso, that, during the pendency of the war, the military operations should continue as at present but without involving any financial burden on India. If there is a desire on the part of the British Government for a settlement, friendly talks should take the place of correspondence."

The Viceroy's reply said: "His Majesty's Government remain most anxious that a settlement of the Indian problem should be reached. But proposals such as those put forward by you are quite unacceptable. They are indeed very similar to the proposals made by Maulana Abul Kalam Azad to Sir Stafford Cripps in April 1942 and His Majesty's Government's reasons for rejecting them are the same as they were then.

"Without recapitulating all these reasons in detail, I should remind you that His Majesty's Government at that time made it clear: (a) That their offer of unqualified freedom after the cessation of hostilities was made conditional upon the framing of a constitution agreed by the main elements of India's national life and the negotiation of the necessary treaty arrangements with His Majesty's Government; (b) That it is impossible during the period of hostilities to bring about any change in the constitution, by which means alone a 'National Government,' such as you suggest, could be made responsible to the Central Assembly . .

"It is clear, in these circumstances, that no purpose would be served by discussion on the basis which you suggest If, however, the leaders of the Hindus, the Muslims and the important minorities were willing to co-operate in a transitional Government established and working within the present constitution, I believe good progress might be made. . . The period after the termination of hostilities for which the transitional Government would last would depend on the speed with which the new constitution could be framed I see no reason why preliminary work on that constitution should not begin as soon as the Indian leaders are prepared to co-operate to that end"

Blocking the Way.—Commenting on the Viceroy's reply, Mahatma Gandhi said: "It is clear as crystal that the British Government do not propose to give up the power they possess over the 400 millions, unless the latter develop strength enough to wrest it from them I shall never lose hope that India will do so by purely moral means."

Political circles in India generally welcomed the Mahatma's double gesture to the Viceroy and Quaid-e-Azam Jinnah although some Liberal leaders questioned the wisdom of the acceptance of the Pakistan principle, while a Hindu Mahasabha spokesman derisively referred to it as "from 'Quit India' to 'Split India'"

A fierce controversy raged for weeks As for the Mahatma he said: "I myself feel firmly that Mr. Jinnah does not block the way, but the British Government do not want a just settlement of the Indian claim for independence which is overdue, and they are using Mr. Jinnah as a cloak in denying freedom to India." He denied the interpretation put in certain quarters that the 1942 August Congress resolution had lapsed.

If the Mahatma was cold-shouldered by Whitehall, he met with poor response from Quaid-e-Azam Jinnah who in his address to the Lahore session of the League Council was highly critical of the manner in which the Gandhi-C.R. Offer was handled from Panchgani

Thereupon the Mahatma sent a communication to the Quaid-e-Azam conveying to the latter the C.R formula. This was the basis of a meeting between them which took place in September 1944.

Meanwhile, Mahatma Gandhi gave further evidence of his disapproval of violence by advising underground Congress workers to give themselves up to authority on the ground that sabotage and all that it meant, including the destruction of property, was in itself violence.

"I swear by the constructive programme. Let me recount the items of that programme:—

(1) Communal unity, (2) Removal of untouchability, (3) Prohibition, (4) Khadi, (5) Other village industries, (6) Village sanitation, (7) New or basic education, (8) Adult education

(9) Uplift of women, (10) Service of the so-called aboriginals, (11) Education in health and hygiene, (12) Propaganda of rashtra bhasha, (13) Love of one's own language, and (14) Working for economic equality.

The Mahatma also seemed to contemplate a new drive among India's 700,000 villages

DESAI-LIAQAT PACT

In the winter of 1944-45 an interesting development occurred which at least provided an opening for big political changes in the summer of 1945. Mr. Bhulabhai J. Desai, Leader of the Congress Party in the Assembly at the time initiated negotiation with Mr. Liaqat Ali Khan, then Deputy Leader of the Muslim League Party in the Assembly These led up to a proposal by the former which met with a measure of encouragement from the latter. At one time it was believed to have resulted in a pact between the two in their individual capacity, it being assumed that neither would have continued in his efforts without the tacit approval of the respective principals, namely, Mahatma Gandhi and Quaid-e-Azam Jinnah.

The facts (as revealed by Mr Liaqat Ali Khan in September 1945), showed that Mr. Desai had suggested a formula for an interim agreement between the Congress and the League. It is known that Mr Desai discussed this formula with Lord Wavell and that, although its main provisions were varied, it provided the basis for the proposal made by the Viceroy in June 1945 and in a sense for the Simla Conference which met later. Here is Mr Liaqat Ali's version (quoted in part), which is the only authoritative statement on the subject.

"Mr. Desai met me after the last autumn session of the Central Legislative Assembly and we informally discussed the prevailing distressing condition in the country, economic and otherwise Mr Desai, during the course of the conversation, asked me about the attitude of the Muslim League with regard to some interim arrangement at the Centre and a temporary reconstitution of the Governor-General's Executive Council in a manner which would secure for it the confidence of all the peoples He told me his plan was to meet the Viceroy and Mr. Jinnah in this connection. I told him that in my personal opinion the proposals were such that they could be made a basis for discussion, but I did not see any prospect of his making any headway unless he could either get Mr Gandhi to move in the matter personally or get his definite approval and open support for the move that he was making .

"During my talks with Mr. Desai, which were purely of a personal nature, I made it absolutely clear to him that whatever I had said was my individual view and I was not speaking either on behalf of the Muslim League or anyone else . . ."

The following is the Desai-Liaqat Pact —

"The Congress and the League agree that they will join in forming an interim Government in the Centre The composition of such Government will be on the following lines .—

(a) An equal number of persons nominated by the Congress and the League in the Central Executive (the persons nominated need not be members of the Central Legislature),

(b) Representatives of minorities (in particular the Scheduled Castes and the Sikhs),

(c) The Commander-in-Chief.

"The Government will be formed and function within the framework of the existing Government of India Act. It is, however, understood that, if the Cabinet cannot get a particular measure passed by the Legislative Assembly, they will not enforce the same by resort to any of the reserve powers of the Governor-General or the Viceroy. This will make them sufficiently independent of the Governor-General.

"It is agreed between the Congress and the League that, if such interim Government is formed, their first step would be to release the Working Committee members of the Congress.

"The steps by which efforts would be made to achieve this end are at present indicated to take the following course.

"'On the basis of the above understanding, some way should be found to get the Governor-General to make a proposal or a suggestion that he desires an interim Government to be formed in the Centre on the agreement between the Congress and the League and when the Governor-General invites Mr Jinnah and Mr Desai either jointly or separately, the above proposals would be made declaring that they are prepared to join in forming the Government

"'The next step would be to get the withdrawal of Section 93 in the provinces and to form as soon as possible, provincial Governments on the lines of a coalition'."

WAVELL PLAN

In the summer of 1945 Lord Wavell paid a visit to Great Britain and had prolonged consultations with members of the British Cabinet On his return in June His Excellency unfolded the proposals of His Majesty's Government to ease the Indian political situation. He said in a broadcast to the people of India "I have been authorised by His Majesty's Government to place before Indian political leaders proposals designed to ease the present political situation and to advance India towards her goal of full self-government.

"This is not an attempt to obtain or impose a constitutional settlement

"His Majesty's Government had hoped that the leaders of the Indian parties would agree amongst themselves on a settlement of the communal issue, which is the main stumbling-block, but this hope has not been fulfilled . . .

"I propose, with the full support of His Majesty's Government, to invite Indian leaders both of central and provincial politics to take counsel with me with a view to the formation of a new Executive Council more representative of organised political opinion

"The proposed new Council would represent the main communities and would include equal proportions of caste Hindus and Muslims It would work, if formed under the existing constitution But it would be an entirely Indian council, except for the Viceroy and the Commander-in-Chief, who would retain his position as War Member

"It is also proposed that the portfolio of External Affairs, which has hitherto been held by the Viceroy, should be placed in charge of an Indian member of the Council, so far as the interests of British India are concerned.

"A further step proposed by His Majesty's Government is the appointment of a British High Commissioner in India, as in the Dominions, to represent Great Britain's commercial and other such interests in India

"The Council will work within the framework of the present constitution.

The main tasks for this new Executive Council would be .—

(1) to prosecute the war against Japan with the utmost energy till Japan is utterly defeated,

(2) to carry on the Government of British India, with all the manifold tasks of post-war development in front of it, until a new permanent constitution can be agreed upon and comes into force; and

(3) to consider when the members of the Government think it possible, the means by which such agreement can be achieved. . . .

The Invitees.—"I have considered the best means of forming such a Council, and have decided to invite the following to Viceregal Lodge to advise me .—

Those now holding office as Premier in a provincial Government; or, for provinces now under Section 93 Government, those who last held the office of Premier,

The leader of the Congress Party and the Deputy Leader of the Muslim League in the Central Assembly, the leaders of the Congress Party and the Muslim League in the Council of State, also the leaders of the Nationalist Party and the European Group in the Assembly,

Mahatma Gandhi and Mr Jinnah as the recognised leaders of the two main political parties;

Rao Bahadur N Siva Raj to represent the Scheduled Classes, and Master Tara Singh to represent the Sikhs

"Invitations to these gentlemen are being handed to them today, and it is proposed to assemble the conference on June 25 at Simla, where we shall be cooler than at Delhi

"I also hope that it will be possible for ministries to re-assume office and again undertake the tasks of Government in the provinces now administered under Section 93 of the Constitution Act and that these ministries will be coalitions.

"If the meeting should unfortunately fail, we must carry on as at present until the parties are ready to come together

"With the approval of His Majesty's Government, and after consultation with my Council, orders have been given for the immediate release of the members of the Working Committee of the Congress who are still in detention, I propose to leave the final decision about the others still under detention as the result of the 1942 disturbances to the new Central Government, if formed, and to the provincial Governments "

SIMLA CONFERENCE

Mahatma Gandhi gave a lead to the Working Committee by observing that the composition of the Simla Conference was 'a very great advance upon all similar bodies" This was echoed by the Congress President who observed that "we are very near our goal of complete independence"

The Congress Working Committee met in Bombay after nearly three years Most members seemed to welcome the political content of the Wavell Plan inasmuch as it dealt only with interim machinery without prejudice to the ultimate goal After a few hours' deliberation, the Working Committee decided to take part in the Simla Conference and authorised its President to proceed to Simla The other Congress invitees were asked to do likewise

The political centre of gravity then shifted to Simla Mahatma Gandhi, Maulana Azad and Quaid-e-Azam Jinnah met the Viceroy on the day previous to the opening of the Conference and it was revealed that, in pursuance of the emphasis laid by the Mahatma on his individual capacity, he would not attend the meetings of the Conference, though he would stay on in Simla The Conference opened at the Viceregal Lodge on June 25, under the Presidentship of the Viceroy, to discuss the proposals of His Majesty's Government which were designed ' to ease the present political situation and to advance India towards her goal of full self-government."

Failure

When the Conference reassembled on July 14, the Viceroy announced the failure of his efforts and said :

"As you know, my original intention was that the conference should agree upon the strength and composition of the Executive Council, and that thereafter the parties should send me lists of names. To these lists I would, if necessary, have added names of my own

"Unfortunately, the Conference was unable to agree about the strength and composition of the Executive Council, and on the 29th June I undertook, with the approval of the Conference, to endeavour to produce a solution not based on any formula agreed in advance . .

"I received lists from all parties represented here except from the European Group, who decided not to send a list, and the Muslim League . . I therefore made my provisional selections, including certain Muslim League names I did not find it possible, however, to accept the claims of any party in full. When I explained my solution to Quaid e-Azam Jinnah he told me that it was not acceptable to the Muslim League and he was so decided that I felt it would be useless to continue the discussion. In the circumstances, I did not show my selections as a whole to Quaid e-Azam Jinnah, and there was no object in showing them to the other leaders. The conference has therefore failed

"Nobody can regret this more than I do myself. I wish to make it clear that the responsibility for the failure is mine . . ."

Following the failure, spokesmen of the Congress and the League gave their respective versions of the Simla Conference (See the issue of The Indian Year Book for 1945-46).

Meanwhile, the British General Elections had been held. They resulted in an overwhelming majority for Labour Of particular interest to India was the defeat of Mr. L S. Amery who had directed Britain's policy towards India over a period of five years during which the Congress was very much persona non grata with the British Government

Then came the surrender of Japan and the end of the Far Eastern war This created a new situation in Indian politics inasmuch as the war emergency ceased

Shortly after, the British Government announced general elections in India, both to the Provincial Legislatures and to the Central Legislature Simultaneously with this announcement Lord Wavell was summoned to England for fresh consultations with the British Government.

A NEW SPIRIT

Shortly after the Simla Conference, the Government lifted the ban on the various Congress organizations, and Congress activity was resumed in full swing Leaders who went straight from the prison to Simla, as it were, and had therefore no time to meet the people after their imprisonment, now had the opportunity to go round the country and survey the effects of the movement.

All confusion regarding responsibility for the disturbances in 1942-43 was dispelled by Pandit Nehru not only owning them up, but also applauding those who participated in them and sympathising with those who suffered in consequence. "Victims of repression" were designated "martyrs".

Condonation, nay, approbation of violence misled the people at large into the belief that the Congress policy of peaceful struggle had undergone a change. The depression and helplessness which characterized the political outlook in the preceding months soon gave place to a spirit of defiance and militancy. This found expression in various demonstrations, accompanied inevitably in some cases by acts of violence, in connection with the trial of officers of the Indian National Army. Students and others, encouraged in this outlook by Congress Socialists and the Communists, created disturbances in several parts of the country and violence was so much in the air that the Congress Working Committee felt called upon to issue a warning to the public in this behalf. It passed the following resolution in December 1945 :—

"After the arrest of the principal Congressmen in the August of 1942, the unguided masses took the reins in their own hands and acted almost spontaneously. If many acts of heroism and sacrifice are to their credit, there were acts done which could not be included in non-violence It is, therefore, necessary for the Working Committee to affirm, for the guidance of all concerned, that the policy of non-violence adopted in 1920 by the Congress continues unabated and that such non-violence does not include the burning of public property, the cutting of telegraph wires, the derailing of trains and intimidation . . .

"The Committee is further of the opinion that the constructive activities of the Congress, beginning with the spinning wheel and "khadi" as the centre, are emblematic of the policy of non-violence and that every other Congress activity, including what is known as the parliamentary programme, is subservient to and designed to promote the constructive activities as explained by Mahatma Gandhi "

An event of considerable importance to the internal organization of the Congress occurred in the latter half of 1945 when it was decided that Communists should be expelled from the All Indian Congress Committee as a punishment for their opposition and obstruction to the policy and programme of the Congress for a considerable time.

Learning a lesson from the Simla breakdown and wishing to make yet another effort at a communal settlement, Maulana Abul Kalam Azad, who was resting in Kashmir, proposed that the Congress should clarify its attitude to the Muslims in order to reassure them that their interests would be safe in any future constitutional reconstruction

His suggestion, on the details of which it is not necessary now to dwell, was hotly discussed for a few weeks until the matter came up before the Congress executive in September 1945. In an effort to clarify the Congress attitude to the separation demand and to remove the confusion arising from the apparently conflicting 1942 resolutions on the subject, the Congress Working Committee adopted a new resolution. It contained no new offer in the shape of an approach to the League view-point, nor did it make any reference to the "C R." formula or Mahatma Gandhi's offer to Quaid-e-Azam Jinnah It was just a reiteration of Congress policy with the emphasis on unity subject to the proviso that no territorial unit inhabited by a homogeneous people would be forced to stay in against its will.

Apart from this, the Congress Working Committee which in September 1945 held its first business session after August 1942, had a heavy agenda before it. The formation of a Labour Government in Britain, the end of the Japanese War, a fresh consideration of the Indian question in the light of the changed situation, Lord Wavell's second visit to Britain and the announcement of general elections in India—these were all post-Simla developments

Clarification.—After taking into account the altered circumstances and the rapidly changing situation, the Working Committee decided that the Congress should contest the general elections "on the issue of immediate transfer of power" and "to demonstrate the will of the people" This announcement came at the tail-end of a two-thousand word statement split up into three resolutions drafted for the All-India Congress Committee. The first of these reaffirmed the August Resolution of 1942. The second reviewed the various policies pursued by the Congress during the past sixty years and declared that the Congress policy would be 'negotiation and settlement when possible and non-co operation and direct action if necessary." All the three resolutions were evidently framed on the one hand, to emphasize the revolutionary ideology of the Congress and, on the other, to leave the door open in the event of the British Government announcing any new approach.

The Congress review of the events of the months immediately preceding was full of disappointment and resentment over the British Government's determination "to hold on to its authoritarian power and to exercise it arbitrarily autocratically", yet there was no desire to allow frustration and pessimism to express themselves through any form of direct action. For the moment, Congress policy was one of negotiation and conciliation but the method of non-co-operation was doubtless held in reserve. This was evidently a continuation of the spirit which informed the Congress attitude at Simla.

H. M. G. PROPOSALS

Between then and the meeting of the All-India Congress Committee the Viceroy had returned from London. His Excellency made a broadcast embodying the conclusions of His Majesty's Government.

These were that H. M. G were determined to do their utmost to promote, in conjunction with the leaders of Indian opinion, the early realisation of self-Government in India It was their intention to convene as soon as possible a constitution-making body, and as a preliminary step, they had authorized him to undertake, immediately after the elections, discussions with representatives of the Legislative Assemblies in the Provinces, to ascertain whether the proposals contained in the 1942 declaration were acceptable or whether some alternative or modified scheme was preferable. Discussions would also be undertaken with representative of Indian States with a view to ascertaining in what way they could best take part in the Constitution-making Body. Further H. M G. were proceeding to the consideration of the content of a treaty which would require to be concluded between Great Britain and India. His Majesty's Government had authorized His Excellency, as soon as the results of the provincial elections were published, to take steps to bring into being an Executive Council which would have the support of the main Indian parties.

Not Acceptable.—The All-India Congress Committee which met towards the end of September 1945 adopted its Executive's recommendation to contest the general elections.

Two of the three political resolutions submitted by the executive were endorsed almost unanimously by the A-I C.C They first reiterated the "Quit India" resolution passed on August 8, 1942, while the second declared that the Congress policy was one of negotiation when possible and direct action when necessary. Amendments calculated to "stiffen" the Congress attitude were negatived. One of these suggested that the Congress should abandon the "humiliating" path of negotiation; another sought not to "regret" but simply to "admit" acts of violence during the disturbances that followed the adoption of the "Quit India" resolution. Others wanted to denounce Communist "traitors" who had "allied themselves with the alien Government in sabotaging the people's struggle for independence."

The speakers, including Pandit Nehru, Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel and Mr. J. B. Kripalani, felt no regrets for what had happened but, on the contrary, expressed pleasure at the people's spirit of resistance to Government's "repression of their urge for freedom" Sardar Patel was inclined to replace "Quit India" by "Quit Asia" demand, for the world could have no freedom without a free India. Whereas the resolutions were couched in more or less moderate language, the speeches both of the leaders and the rank and file were keyed to a high pitch, they seemed to ask, "How can we 'forget and forgive'?"

The resolution on the Wavell proposals, which was ultimately carried by the A-I C C stated: "The A-I C.C. has carefully considered Lord Wavell's and the British Prime Minister's broadcasts on the steps proposed to be taken by British authority in India. These proposals repeat with unimportant variations, the offer made in March, 1942 by Sir Stafford Cripps on behalf of the British Government, an offer which was not accepted by the Congress. Nothing short of independence can be acceptable to the Congress and the country. The proposals now made are, in the opinion of the A.-I.C.C., vague, inadequate and unsatisfactory ..."

ELECTION MANIFESTO

The Congress election manifesto, issued a fortnight later, stated:

"For 60 years the National Congress has laboured for the freedom of India During this long span of years its history has been the history of the Indian people, straining at the leash that has held them in bondage, ever trying to unloose themselves from it From small beginnings it has progressively grown and spread in this vast country, carrying the message of freedom to the masses of our people in the towns as well as the remotest villages ...

"The career of the Congress has been one of both constructive effort for the good of the people and unceasing struggle to gain freedom ... After the recent three years of an unprecedented mass upheaval and its cruel and ruthless suppression, the Congress has risen stronger than ever and more loved by the people by whom it has stood through storm and stress

"The Congress has stood for equal rights and opportunities for every citizen of India, man or woman. It has stood for the unity of all communities and religious groups and for tolerance and goodwill between them It has stood for full opportunities for the people as a whole to grow and develop according to their own wishes and genius It has also stood for the freedom of each group and territorial area within the nation to develop its own life and culture within the larger framework, and for this purpose such territorial areas or provinces should be constituted as far as possible, on a linguistic and cultural basis. It has stood for the rights of all those who suffer from social tyranny and injustice and for the removal for them of all barriers to equality.

"The Congress has envisaged a free, democratic state with the fundamental rights and civil liberties of all its citizens guaranteed in the constitution.

"This constitution, in its view, should be a federal one with a great deal of autonomy for its constituent units and its legislative organs elected under universal adult franchise.

"A hundred and fifty years and more of foreign rule have arrested the growth of the country and produced numerous vital problems that demand immediate solution There is no way to solve any of these urgent problems except through freedom and independence. The content of political freedom must be both economic and social.

"The most vital and urgent of India's problems, is how to remove the curse of poverty and raise the standard of the masses..."

Co-operative Commonwealth.—"For this purpose it will be necessary to plan and co-ordinate social advance in all its many fields, to prevent the concentration of wealth and power in the hands of individuals and groups, to prevent vested interests inimical to society from growing, and to have social control of the mineral resources, means of transport and the principal methods of production and distribution in land, industry and in other departments of national activity, so that free India may develop into a co-operative commonwealth.

"In international affairs the Congress stands for the establishment of a world federation of free nations.. In the Far East, in South-East Asia and in Western Asia, India has had trade and cultural relations for thousands of years and it is inevitable that with freedom she should renew and develop these relations. She will also champion the freedom of all other subject nations and peoples, for only on the basis of this freedom and the elimination of imperialism everywhere can world peace be established.

"On the eighth of August, 1942, the All-India Congress Committee passed a resolution, since then famous in India's history By its demands and challenge the Congress stands today. It is on the basis of this resolution and with its battle-cry that the Congress faces the elections for the Central and Provincial Assemblies.

"The Central Legislative Assembly is a body with no power or authority and is practically an advisory body whose advice has been constantly flouted and ignored Yet, with all these and other handicaps and drawbacks, the Congress has decided to contest the elections to show that the inevitable result of elections, however, restricted, must be to demonstrate the overwhelming solidarity of the opinion of the voters on the issue of independence

"So the Congress appeals to the voters for the Central Assembly all over the country to support the Congress candidates in every way at the forthcoming elections, and to stand by the Congress at this critical juncture, which is so pregnant with future possibilities."

The Congress election campaign was conducted on the assumption that the Congress could secure easy victories in general constituencies and that it should concentrate instead on Muslim seats In many cases the Hindu Mahasabha candidates withdrew in favour of the Congress, either with a view to giving the Congress a free hand in the light of its unequivocal declaration of hostility to partition or because the Mahasabha realized that it had no chance in the face of the strong wave of pro-Congress feeling that was sweeping over the country.

ELECTION RESULTS

The elections fulfilled Congress expectations as far as general seats were concerned Such Hindu Mahasabhaites as dared to oppose the Congress nominees were badly defeated. Moderates and Independents had no chance at all In Sikh constituencies in the Punjab, the Congress captured one-third the number of seats, although in terms of votes recorded nearly half the electorate supported it

It was different, however, in the case of Muslim seats. In all the Hindu-majority provinces the Congress suffered a heavy defeat except in Uttar Pradesh and to a smaller extent in Assam Of the four Muslim majority provinces the Congress emerged successfully in the Frontier, though even there the League did much better than in the general elections held ten years previously. In the Punjab and Bengal, the League secured signal triumphs In Sind, the League captured the majority of the Muslim seats, while a rebel-section of the League and a pro-Congress group of Muslims secured sufficient number of seats to form a coalition with the Congress and thereby threaten the solidarity of the League there.

All this while, the Congress was waiting events, expecting His Majesty's Government to implement the policy outlined by the Viceroy in his broadcast in September 1945.

Then came Premier Attlee's statement in Parliament in March 1946 followed by the British Cabinet Mission's visit to India to settle the basis of the country's future constitution (For details see under Government of India in the Year Book for 1948).

On the eve of the Mission's return to England, the Congress announced its acceptance of the long-term project but turned down the specific proposals for an Interim Government. This decision was endorsed by the All-India Congress Committee which met in Bombay early in July 1946. It was an easy victory for the Congress executive.

Shortly after the A-I C.C. meeting, various provincial assemblies elected their representatives to the Constituent Assembly. Most of the "general" seats were filled by Congress nominees, who included representatives of the various cross-sections of Indian life, vertical and horizontal, communal and economic.

Certain statements made by the new Congress President—Pandit Nehru was declared elected in place of Maulana Abul Kalam Azad, who relinquished his office as Congress President after a period of six years—regarding the status and powers of the Constituent Assembly and the Congress intentions in that behalf alienated the Muslim League, which was already labouring under a sense of grievance. For instance, the Congress President said that the Constituent Assembly would be a sovereign body with complete freedom to mould the future India. This was interpreted by the League to mean that decisions in the Assembly would be taken by a majority vote, leaving the Muslims helpless Similarly he said that the Congress was committed to nothing except to enter the Constituent Assembly, which raised a grave doubt in the League mind that the Congress did not accept the framework and procedure laid down in the State Paper of May 16, 1946.

These impressions were corrected by the Congress Working Committee early in August, 1946, but the mischief had already been done: for, late in July, the League decided altogether to withdraw its co-operation from the Mission's plan The August 1946 resolution of the Congress Working Committee said:—

The Working Committee regretted to note that the Council of the All-India Muslim League, reversing their previous decision, had decided not to participate in the Constituent Assembly.

The Committee had noted that criticisms had been advanced on behalf of the Muslim League to the effect that the Congress acceptance of the proposals contained in the Statement of May 16 was conditional. The Committee wished to make it clear that while they did not approve of all the proposals contained in this Statement, they accepted the scheme in its entirety They interpreted it so as to resolve the inconsistencies contained in it and fill the omissions in accordance with the principles laid down in that Statement. They held that provincial autonomy was a basic provision and each province had the right to decide whether to form or join a group or not. Questions of interpretation would be decided by the procedure laid down in the Statement itself, and the Congress would advise its representatives in the Constituent Assembly to function accordingly.

The Committee had emphasized the sovereign character of the Constituent Assembly, that is, its right to function and draw up a constitution for India without the interference of any external power or authority But the Assembly would naturally function within the internal limitations which were inherent in its task, and would therefore seek the largest measure of co-operation in drawing up a constitution of free India allowing the greatest measure of freedom and protection for all just claims and interests.

Immediately after the Viceroy invited the Congress to make proposals for an Interim Government Pandit Nehru accepted the invitation on behalf of the Congress and sought Quaid-e-Azam Jinnah's co-operation. The League leader declined. (For the correspondence see Year Book for 1948).

INTERIM GOVERNMENT

Pandit Nehru then proceeded to Delhi and submitted to the Viceroy the names of twelve persons constituting the Interim Government. These included six top-ranking Congress leaders namely, Pandit Nehru, Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, Dr. Rajendra Prasad, Mr. C. Rajagopalachari, Mr. Sarat Chandra Bose and Mr. Asaf Ali. This was on the basis of a Cabinet of fourteen. Two seats were to be filled later. Of the 12, three were Muslims, five caste Hindus and one representative each of the scheduled castes, Indian Christians, Sikhs and Parsis The Congress also suggested the name of an Anglo-Indian as an additional member, but the Viceroy was apparently reluctant to increase the strength of the Cabinet.

On August 24, 1946 an Interim Government was formed

The new Government assumed office on September 2, 1946 It could not, however, settle down to any very useful work of administration or preparation for the Constituent Assembly, because grave breaches of the peace in Calcutta and elsewhere, resulting in the deaths of thousands of persons and considerable loss of property, cast a gloom over the country Even so, the Government strove to consolidate its position by establishing conventions intended to invest it with real political power For instance, it stopped the practice of Secretaries having direct access to the Governor-General It also began to function as a Cabinet with joint responsibility under the leadership of the Vice-President, Pandit Nehru

Meanwhile, the Congress Working Committee met in Delhi and passed a resolution on the Calcutta carnage For the text of the resolution see Year Book for 1948

The history, since the formation of the Interim Government at the centre in June 1946 of the Indian National Congress as the party, in the vanguard of India's political struggle, has been largely determined by the stormy and momentous events in India culminating in the granting of independence to the country and its inevitable partition.

After independence, India's problems continued no less to tax the ingenuity and resources of Governments, Central and Provincial, and of the majority party representing the people

At the All-India Congress Committee meeting at the end of September 1946 the steps taken by the Congress Executive leading up to the formation of the Interim Government were ratified by an overwhelming majority The resolution was moved by Maulana Abul Kalam Azad ratifying the Working Committee's decision Twelve members out of about 250 present were against the motion. Mr. Jai Prakash Narain announced that he and his group would remain neutral on the resolution

Commending their resolution ratifying the Working Committee's decision to form the Interim Government, Maulana Abul Kalam Azad said that the step the Congress had taken was the only correct one "Our achievement today is a result of the methods we employed in the past," the Maulana said, and added, "today our goal—freedom—is within sight. With the change, in the circumstances and the particular situation in which we find ourselves we must change our methods as well Today we are in such a position that, by joining Government, we could increase our strength enormously."

On the following day the A-I C C. by a comfortable majority, passed Pandit G V Pant's resolution enabling members of the Interim Government to serve on the Congress Executive

New President.—In the middle of October, it was announced that, in the election of the President to the A.-I. C C. the names of Maulana Abul Kalam Azad and Acharya Kripalani were proposed, but that as the former had withdrawn the latter remained the only candidate and would be duly elected.

Later Acharya Kripalani, in a statement on his election as President, said "I am not unconscious of my limitations . My first task I conceive is to exert my utmost in the cause of Hindu-Muslim unity so that the inhumanities and barbarities that recently disfigured and disgraced Calcutta and still do East Bengal become things of the past. My second concern will be the purification and consolidation of our organisation."

STRUGGLE FORECAST

On the eve of the Meerut session Nehru speaking at the Subjects Committee, drew a gloomy picture of the prevailing political situation. In a fighting political speech, he made grave and direct charges against the Viceroy and the Muslim League, hinting at an "inevitable struggle" if things did not improve Pandit Nehru hoped, however, that the League would join the Constituent Assembly but even if it did not he declared, the work of constitution making would proceed Pandit Nehru was speaking on a resolution declaring, on the eve of summoning of the Constituent Assembly (which was to meet on December 9), that the Congress stood for an independent sovereign republic

The following day, clear reference was again made to the "struggle ahead" and the need for preparing for it A resolution was presented by the Working Committee for adoption by the Congress reviewing the events and tendencies of the six and a half years ending then since the last session of the Congress and calling upon the people to put an end to internecine conflict

Moving the resolution, Pandit Nehru said, "Ours is not an empty threat We have fought the British in the past and we shall fight them again if necessary"

A further definition of the Congress objective was contained in a resolution adopted by the Working Committee, which said that, in the opinion of the Congress, swaraj could not be real for the masses unless it made possible the achievement of a society in which democracy extended from the political to the social and economic sphere, and in which there would be no opportunity for privileged classes to exploit the bulk of the people, nor for gross inequalities such as exist at present A resolution on the revision of the Congress constitution altered the basis of the four-anna membership and pleaded for broader franchise in the election of Congress representatives

At the open session of the Congress, Pandit Nehru and Sardar Patel lashed out at the Muslim League and the permanent officials, who were charged with acting as if they were members of the League

Speaking on the resolution ratifying the decision to form the Interim Government, Sardar Patel, in one of the most fighting speeches of his career, said "The sword must be met by the sword" This was a stern warning to those who, he said, were trying to achieve a political objective by violent means. "We are not resigning from the Interim Government," he asserted It was for the League to make up its mind whether it was joining the Constituent Assembly.

Acharya Kripalani in his presidential address, said: "If the Congress had not taken up the challenge of British Imperialism in August 1942, we would not have been occupying the position we do today." He said that the British could no longer deny freedom to them whatever their intentions. If today they missed their goal, the fault was theirs (Indians).

Moving the resolution on "retrospect", first moved by the Subjects Committee, Pandit Nehru, spoke with emotion about the resurgence of freedom fervour in the land. Administering a stern rebuke to the British members of the Services who, he said, "were in league with the Muslim League and with reactionarism", he also referred to those killed in the 1942 movement He conceded that the British Government might be sincere in their intentions but the British bureaucracy in India had not changed. Correcting the impression that the Congress Government might leave the Central Government in a huff, he declared they would refuse to resign—they would have to be dismissed.

Grouping Of Provinces.—At the end of December the Congress Working Committee decided not to clinch the issue of grouping of provinces beyond declining to pursue the proposal to refer it to the Federal Court. It left the decision to the A. I. C. C., of which an emergency session was called in Delhi, on January 5 following. The purport of the lengthy statement issued by the Working Committee on the occasion was that the statement issued by the British Government on December 6, 1946, giving their decision on the grouping issue, as well as other statements made subsequently in Parliament were clearly additions to and variations of the British Cabinet Mission's Statement of May 16, 1946, on which the whole scheme of the Constituent Assembly was based.

The Congress Working Committee, in a draft resolution, submitted to the A-I C C early in 1947, however recommended agreement with the British Government's interpretation of the State Paper relating to grouping of the provinces The step was stated to be due to the Congress anxiety to facilitate the work of the Constituent Assembly with the goodwill of all parties and to remove all complications created by a variety of interpretations At the same time it was made clear that the Congress would not be a party to coercion by any province of any other province or part of a province

The A-I C C passed on the following day the Working Committee's resolution by 99 votes to 52

ATTLEE DECLARATION

The Congress Executive which met at New Delhi early in March considered the different interpretations of the Labour Government's "Quit India" announcement (Mr Attlee's declaration of British withdrawal from India made in the House of Commons on February 20) It was generally agreed that the declaration should be welcomed as a bold and courageous enunciation of policy On the question of the method of transfer, the Committee seemed to be of the view that the best course for Britain would be to hand over power to a Central authority in conformity with the British Cabinet Mission's Plan of May 16 as subsequently interpreted by the British Government and agreed to by the Congress. If however the authority so constituted was repudiated by certain elements in the country then, it was suggested, the secession of authority should be in favour not of existing provinces but of areas in which the dissidents predominated

It was also discussed what the nature of the intervening period of 14 months before the final withdrawal of the British authority should be. The Punjab developments were deplored by the Committee which attributed the trouble to the possibility envisaged in the statement of February 20 of a transfer to "existing provincial governments".

Later the Congress Working Committee invited the Muslim League to nominate representatives to meet Congress representatives to consider the situation that had arisen from the impending transfer of power and to devise means to meet that situation The Committee declared that the transfer of power, to be smooth, should be preceded by the recognition in practice of the Interim Government as a Dominion Government with effective control over the Services and administration, and the Viceroy and Governor-General functioning as the constitutional head of the Government The Committee asserted that, in view of the tragic events in the Punjab, it was necessary to find a way out involving the least amount of compulsion that would necessitate the division of the Punjab into two provinces

At the end of March the Congress Constitution Committee, under the Presidentship of Dr. Pattabhi Sitaramayya, commended that the Congress should ordinarily meet every three years, that all Congress elections should be triennial and that the Working Committee should consist of 21 members instead of 15 as then prevailing, as there would be three classes of Congress members—ordinary, qualified, and active. Each lakh of population would be entitled to send one delegate to the Congress provided there were 500 ordinary and qualified members in that area and also provided that no constituency should be bigger than five lakhs of population.

The following day the Committee sent to the Viceroy's House an important memorandum reiterating the Congress stand on the issue of the division of India It was made clear in the document that if there was to be a division of India, it should be as complete and thorough as possible, including the partition of the Punjab and the Bengal.

PARTITION INEVITABLE

Meanwhile, events had moved fast in India. The country was engulfed in communal frenzy and carnage, especially in the northern parts There seemed to be no alternative solution, however inadvisable, and unpalatable to the partitioning of the land This inevitability was recognised in the British Government's Statement of June 3 envisaging the partition of India and a union of India with Indian States.

The Working Committee, ten days later, passed a resolution explaining the inevitable The draft resolution for the A -I C C said that H M Government's proposals of June 3 were likely to lead to the secession of some parts of the country from India However much this was to be regretted, the A -I C C accepted the possibility in the circumstances then prevailing Welcoming the decision of the British Government to transfer power to the Indian people completely by the following August, the resolution appealed to Congressmen to forget their differences and petty disputes and to stand by vigilant, disciplined and prepared, to serve the cause of India's freedom and defend it with all their strength from all who might seek to do it injury.

On June 14, 1947, the A -I C C commenced a historic session at the Constitution Club at New Delhi Pandit Govind Ballabh Pant, moving the resolution accepting H. M Government's plan of June 3, said that this was the only way to achieve freedom and liberty for the country the choice then was between accepting the Statement of June 3 and committing political suicide Pandit Pant argued that it was better to accept the Statement of June 3 than fritter away the energies and to keep unwilling people in the Union

Maulana Abul Kalam Azad seconding the resolution, said that the choice before the Congress was not which plan to accept and which to reject, but whether the prevailing state of indecision and drift should continue. The Congress stood by the ideal of united India and it also conceded to the principle of self-determination and was against coercing unwilling areas to join the Union. Mr. Purshottamdas Tandon, the principal opponent of the resolution, declared in an impassioned speech that the A.-I. C C must reject it and that it was not sufficient to say that an adverse vote would hurt the prestige of the Working Committee. Acceptance of the resolution would mean abject surrender to the British and to the Muslim League. The Working Committee had failed India, but India with the strength of millions behind her must reject this resolution. The Working Committee had accepted the plan in weakness and out of a sense of desperation.

Mahatma Gandhi, in a 40-minute address to the Committee, commended the Working Committee's resolution If at that stage the A -I C C. rejected the Working Committee's decision, he said, what would the world think of it? All the parties had accepted it and it would not be proper to go back on its word If the A -I C C. held so strongly on this point, continued Mahatma Gandhi, that this plan would do injury to the country, then it could reject the plan. The consequence of such a rejection would be the finding of a new set of leaders who could constitute not only the Congress Working Committee but also take charge of the Government

After eight hours' lively debate, the following day, the A -I C C endorsed the stand taken on their behalf by their Executive in accepting the British Government's proposals

The official resolution was adopted by an overwhelming majority— in a house of 218, 157 voted in favour of the resolution and 29 against.

The 500-word official resolution recalled the policy of the Congress: "It cannot think in terms of compelling the people of any territorial unit to remain in an Indian union against their declared and established will" and explained the proposals embodied in the Statement of June 3 which "have laid down the procedure for ascertaining the will of the people concerned".

The resolution added: "The A -I C C earnestly trusts that when present passions have subsided India's problems will be viewed in their proper perspective and the false doctrine of two-nation will be discredited and discarded by all The proposals of June 3 are likely to lead to the secession of some parts of the country from India"

FUTURE ROLE

On the eve of India's independence, Mr Shankerrao Deo, General Secretary of the A -I C C explained the future role of the Congress. If India's destiny was to be fulfilled, he declared, and if it had to take its proper place in the comity of nations, then unity was essential "

There was no other organisation more fitted for this task than the Congress, he added, and, therefore, the need was greater than before. Besides at a critical period in her history India required for its progress one big political party large enough to guarantee a stable government and strong enough to maintain its hold and influence over the people The Congress alone, he pointed out, could secure all the requirements.

On August 15, 1947, India celebrated Independence Day with great country-wide rejoicing.

The Congress Working Committee met at the end of September to consider, among other things, the situation arising out of the disorders in the Punjab, with particular reference to the refugee problem and the safety of minority in East and West Punjab In a statement the Committee gave an assurance to the minorities that the Congress Government would continue to protect to the best of its ability their citizen rights against aggression At the same time it emphasised that it expected from the minorities the same allegiance and loyalty to the State as from the majority community.

At the A -I C C, which met in mid November, Mahatma Gandhi declared that no Muslim in the Indian Union should feel his life unsafe and all those Muslims who had left India under coercion should be brought back He thus gave the lead to two resolutions, earlier approved by the Working Committee, moved by Mr Shankerrao Deo and seconded by Mr Jai Prakash Narayan one laying down the "national policy" to be followed by the Government of India in dealing with relief and rehabilitation problems, and another on the question of protection of minorities in India

Dr Rajendra Prasad was later elected President of the Indian National Congress in place of Acharya Kripalani who had resigned. Dr Prasad resigned the ministership in the Central Government but retained presidentship of the Constituent Assembly

The post-independence history of the Congress was not so very happy Congress politics were bedevilled by group and personal rivalries. The 'Parliamentary' and the 'Constructive' halves of the organization could not get on well together The latter who had consolidated themselves into a single organization complained that there was a tendency to ignore them The Congress was also weakened by the secession of Socialists and a minor revolt of Left Wingers in Maharashtra The handling of the problem of linguistic redistribution of Provinces, also led to a great deal of discontent particularly in Karnatak and Maharashtra After the Jaipur session a new constitution for the Congress came into being

NASIK SESSION

The 56th session of the Indian National Congress was held at Nasik on the 20th and 21st of September, 1950 Mr Purushottamdas Tandon of Uttar Pradesh was elected President by a majority of 214 votes Mr Tandon obtained 1,306 votes while the two rival candidates Acharya Kripalani and Mr Shankerrao Deo obtained 1,092 and 202 votes respectively

About 2,600 delegates out of a total of 3,600 attended the session, while it is estimated as many as 10,000 people watched the proceedings from the galleries

PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS

In his presidential address Mr Tandon unreservedly denounced communalism and declared. "The world is rising above communalism All patriots among us have to be vigilant so that this poison of communalism does not spread here in India."

He added that he hoped "in course of time the progressive forces of the world will compel even Pakistan to rise above communalism, and then with psychological affinity between the two countries leading them to come closer to each other, no community will feel insecure in any part of the two countries"

Mr Tandon made no direct reference to the Indo-Pakistan agreement of April 8, but only remarked, "Our Government has entered into several agreements with Pakistan, but they have not led to a solution of our difficulties It seems to me that we shall have to be more firm in our attitude towards Pakistan"

On the refugee problem, Mr Tandon remarked that the Government of India and the State Governments had "acted with sympathy" and "done their best to help, but their power is limited" Mr Tandon however, thought that the aid that the refugees now received from Government was "very meagre", and urged that, if the Government did not consider his earlier suggestion of a capital levy, "they should find some other means to get the necessary finances with a view to helping the displaced persons"

Mr Tandon went on to say, "It is the responsibility of the nation to make good, according to need, the loss suffered by a community owing to a policy adopted by the nation. It is the collective responsibility of all of us to remove the suffering, of which our collective good is the cause"

We need several hundred crores of rupees to alleviate the sufferings of displaced persons. This money can be raised only by a planned scheme

The new President commended the Government of India's foreign policy of non-alignment, but added, "It is not impossible that, at some future date, for the protection of our country, we may have to consider the question of establishing closer relations with one of these two blocs"

"Our country enjoys a special position on the Asian continent The responsibility for freeing this continent from the exploiters of the West is ours At the same time we have to shoulder the burden of maintaining peace in Asia."

Mr Tandon expressed gratification at the fact that India's Constitution had laid down Hindi as the national language of the country, and saw the reasonableness of the provision of retaining the English medium for a period of 15 years, but hoped that an earnest and patriotic effort would be made to displace the foreign language earlier than the time stipulated.

By giving the Hindi language recognition for official work the constitution has further reinforced the urge for unity He believed that that part of the constitution would work like magic in bringing about the unity of ideas and developing a feeling for one another among the various regions.

He also expressed satisfaction at Government's achievements in the realm of amelioration of the lot of peasants and workers within the brief period of three years of independence, notwithstanding the many difficulties in their way

The President whole-heartedly backed Mahatma Gandhi's philosophy of "khadi" and village industries, and admonished State Governments for paying only lip service to it

"There should be no person without work in the whole country Everyone should make a proper use of his time and should give whatever time is left after his ordinary avocation to the production of useful things To create enthusiasm for this programme in the country will be a part of our work Both man-power and machine-power will be utilised in this work of production"

Referring to the Kashmir issue, Mr Tandon observed that India could have driven Pakistan troops out of Kashmir without any aid from the United Nations but she tried to raise the U N 's prestige by raising the issue there The U N however, did not act impartially and its policy had foisted a problem on India

The President assured the Central Government that they could have the firm support of the Congress and of the people in their demand for the removal of Pakistan troops from Kashmir and for full control of the State to vest in Sheikh Abdullah's Government

PLENARY SESSION

The Congress adopted nine resolutions, seven of which pertained to foreign, domestic and economic matters

On foreign policy, the Congress endorsed Pandit Nehru's policy and further approved the Government of India's stand on the Korean issue.

The Congress reaffirmed its faith in a secular democracy, endorsed the Indo-Pakistan Agreement and voted for a peaceful solution of Indo-Pakistan disputes by negotiation and arbitration if necessary

Other resolutions which the Congress adopted included those on the question of refugee rehabilitation, foreign possessions in India and khadi and village industries

The High Command took cognisance of Pandit Nehru's demand for reform of the Congress election machinery and promised to devise proposals as soon as possible.

Mr Tandon, winding up the proceedings of the session, said, "The enthusiasm and confidence shown by delegates and the public during this Congress session has dispelled all doubts expressed by some members that the Congress has become weak, and is not going to last very long This session has proved that the Congress is still very powerful Critics of the Congress gleefully predicted that there would be a rift in the Congress and it would break up, and that they would be able to capitalise on that in the coming general elections. All these critics of the Congress must have been sadly disappointed by the enthusiasm exhibited during this session"

Appealing to Congressmen to develop a sense of self-abnegation and service to the country, Mr. Tandon said that the country could not become strong and great by a Congress victory in the elections or by Congressmen getting into high posts A country became great when the character of the people was spotless and their moral integrity unquestionable.

THE RESOLUTIONS

Below we give the full text of some of the more important resolutions passed at the Congress. The first resolution is concerned with secularism and Indo-Pakistan relations. It says, "The Jaipur Congress drew particular attention to the menace of communalism, and urged the people to put an end to all communal and separatist tendencies, which had already caused grievous injury, and which imperilled the country's freedom Anti-national and socially reactionary forces have continued to function, and come in the way of progress

"The partition caused deep wounds in the political, economic, and emotional life of the country. Passions were roused and many difficult problems arose, leading to continuing tension, and ill-will between India and Pakistan These problems can only be solved satisfactorily with patience and goodwill, tolerance and firmness, keeping always in view the honour and interests of India

"These interests of India, as of Pakistan, require peaceful and co-operative relations between the two countries.

"This Congress, therefore, commends and approves of the proposal made by the Government of India to the Government of Pakistan for an agreement that all disputes should be solved by peaceful methods, and without resort to armed conflict

"For this reason, among others, the Congress records its approval of the Indo-Pakistan Agreement of April 8, 1950, which represents a peaceful and effective approach to the solution of a very difficult problem and which is in keeping with the traditions and policy of the Congress It is with this approach, and in this spirit, that such problems can be most effectively dealt with, and can yield enduring results

"Whatever disputes and conflicts may exist now, or may arise in future, they should be considered as political problems between the two countries and should be treated as such

"In no event should the spirit of communalism, or the misuse of religion be allowed to mar and distort the consideration of our internal problems We cannot forsake our own policy in a spirit of retaliation We have not only to treat our minorities with full justice and fairness, but should make them feel that they are so treated

"This Congress, therefore, declares that it is the basic policy of the nation, as reaffirmed in the Constitution, that India is a democratic State which, while honouring every faith, neither favours nor discriminates against any particular religion or its adherents, and which gives equal rights and freedom of opportunity to all communities and individuals who form the nation

"It is the primary duty of every Congressman to carry this great message, and to live up to it, and to combat every form of communalism or separatism in India"

Economic Policy

"The economic progress of the country is the most urgent task before the nation in the attainment of the Congress objective, which is the establishment of a welfare State, wherein there is economic democracy, a national minimum standard in respect of the essentials of physical, and social well-being, a rise in the standard of living of the people, full employment, the elimination of exploitation, the progressive narrowing down of disparities in income and wealth, so that there may be equality of opportunity to add for self-development, and the growth of personality Every step towards this goal must be judged from the point of view of the good of the masses, and vested interests should not be allowed to divert us from the larger good Ordered progress will necessarily have to be planned, and this implies a planned and more or less controlled economy.

"The Congress has repeatedly emphasised the need for planning, and the Working Committee, in a resolution passed in January, 1950, recommended to the Government of India to set up a statutory Planning Commission. The Congress welcomes the establishment of the Planning Commission by the Government of India.

"The Second World War seriously impaired the economic structure, and strength of the country, and the partition and the tragic events that followed independence, disrupted the country's economic life still further Progress has thus been greatly hampered by limitations in respect of finance, capital equipment, trained personnel, and raw materials

"These limitations necessitate a careful husbanding of the available resources, and the laying down of strict priorities in regard to development schemes It is of the utmost importance, in the existing conditions, that measures should be devised to secure increased production, and every factor militating against this aim should be discouraged

"Capital formation will have to be increasingly shouldered by the common man, and the small savings of large numbers of people will have to be an essential feature of the ways and means of the country's development programmes

"So long as there are conditions of scarcity the need for the control on essential articles will continue Such controls should be effective and must be so worked as to avoid undue inconvenience to the people and eliminate evasions Anti-social elements seeking to exploit controls to their advantage should be drastically dealt with

"Immediate action is necessary, more especially in regard to the following matters —

1 "Basic and essential lines of development, such as power and irrigation, and the prior allocation of available resources for this purpose,

2 "Early realisation of self-sufficiency in food,

3 "An adequate supply of essential raw materials for industry,

4 "An orderly and progressive reduction in the general price-level,

5 "Full and efficient utilisation of installed capacity in industries, reducing costs of production to a reasonable level and providing at the same time conditions in which the workers can put forth their best efforts, and

6 "The expansion of opportunities for gainful employment by planned development of village and small-scale industries, on co-operative lines as far as possible, and on the basis of the highest attainable technical efficiency Priority should be given in this respect to khadi and the handloom industry.

"No system of planned economy can succeed, and no large-scale advance is possible unless there is full public co-operation It is, therefore, necessary to evoke public enthusiasm, and harness it for the promotion of nation-building activities, to raise the low productivity in industry and agriculture

"Efforts should, therefore, be made to utilise the experience, energy, free time and other resources of the people on a voluntary basis, and on a nation-wide scale In any such scheme, Congressmen should give their full, and active support."

The resolution on the refugee problem stated

"This Congress recognises that the Government of India, and many of the State Governments have given priority to the problem of the displaced persons from West and East Pakistan, and have applied their energy and resources to its resolution They have given relief to, and rehabilitated, a substantial proportion of them. Nevertheless, a large number still remains unprovided for, and in great distress.

"It is the duty of the Government to rehabilitate and provide opportunities for productive and gainful occupation to all these displaced persons who have suffered so much because of circumstances beyond their control.

"The delay in solving the evacuee property problem has been a constant source of distress and frustration to vast numbers of persons, and it is urgently necessary that a solution of this should be found as speedily as possible.

"In the opinion of the Congress, if a solution of this problem is not arrived at between India and Pakistan in the near future, it should be referred for arbitration to a tribunal consisting of representatives of India and Pakistan of high judicial standing"

The resolution on the Congress Constitution said: "The working of the new Congress Constitution has revealed some serious defects and difficulties. It is necessary to amend the Constitution so as to remedy these and other defects and ensure the smooth and efficient functioning of Congress machinery

"The Congress, therefore, under Article 28 authorises the A-I.C.C. to make necessary amendments in the Constitution and to this end the Working Committee will make proposals to the A-I.C.C. and inter alia, give its consideration to the following matters

"The Working Committee shall circulate these proposals by the end of November, 1950

1 Reintroduction of primary membership,

2 Appointment of a Central Tribunal and Central Credentials Committee,

3 Vesting the Working Committee with adequate powers to deal with abnormal situation, and

4 Providing machinery for selecting candidates to legislatures and parliamentary activities"

Foreign Policy

"The Jaipur Congress, in its resolution on foreign policy reaffirmed the principles that had guided the Congress in previous years and formulated a policy which should be pursued in the new circumstances that had arisen Since then India has become a Republic and has as an independent sovereign nation continued her association with the Commonwealth of Nations She has also continued to participate fully in the activities of the United Nations In furtherance of her aim, she has developed diplomatic contacts and friendly and co-operative relations with a large number of independent nations

"She has avoided any entanglement in military or other alliances which tend to divide up the world into rival groups and thus endanger world peace She has maintained her freedom of action in foreign affairs and in the economic development of the country

"Recent developments in the Far East, leading to war in Korea, have led to an intensification of the international crisis and have brought the prospect of a devastating world war far nearer

"India, in accordance with her basic policy, associated herself with the United Nations in resistance to aggression At the same time, she has laboured for peace and for the prevention of the war in the East from spreading beyond Korea

"The Congress approves the policy pursued by the Government of India, and is of opinion that every avenue of peaceful settlement should be explored. While aggression, in any shape or form has to be resisted it must be remembered that the aim of the United Nations to which India, in common with other nations is committed, is the maintenance of peace and not the encouragement of any activity which leads to war.

"The United Nations Organisation was the outcome of the passionate hope of mankind for peace and co-operation among nations, and for the avoidance of war. It was the basic feature of this organisation to bring together all countries however they may differ from each other, on a common platform, so that they might develop the habit of co-operation and of settlement of disputes by peaceful methods.

"If important nations are excluded from this great world organisation, it loses its distinctive feature and significance, and its power for good is lessened.

"The Congress is, therfore, of the opinion that their great neighbour, China should be represented in this Assembly of the nations of the world, through her present Government, so that she may be in a position to co-operate with other nations in the maintenance of peace

"While aggression had to be resisted in Korea, the objective of the United Nations should be clearly stated That objective must be the establishment of a free and independent and united Korea whose future is to be determined by her own people

"This Congress earnestly hopes that the great nations of the world will not permit fear and passion to endanger the cause of peace for which they all stand, and will not encourage any activities which add to the bitterness and hatred which unhappily fill many people's minds today.

"The world crisis demands from every country forbearance and restraint, the banishment of fear and a ceaseless endeavour in search of peace."

THE DEBATE

Below we give a brief account of the general debates that took place on the more important resolutions reproduced above

Mr N V Gadgil moved the resolution on communalism which endorsed the Indo-Pakistan Agreement

Speaking in Marathi, he said that for some years in the past India had been afflicted with the malady of communalism Events shortly before and after the achievement of independence had aggravated communal antagonism. He claimed it was the Nehru-Liaqat Ali Agreement which arrested the drift towards extreme bitterness The Agreement had laid the path of peace

Communalism, Mr Gadgil said, could only be solved by seeking a solution from the national point of view There should be a spirit of amity and co operation which the Agreement sought to foster Conflicts with Pakistan and other disputes must be solved at a Governmental level Retaliation by individuals would weaken the State and the people as a whole, he added

Dr P C Ghosh asserted that the path of secular democracy was the ideal path Communalism would lead to ruination

Talk of war with Pakistan was a dangerous trend Wars never solved any problems and talk of war for a solution of the Indo-Pakistan dispute would only create more harm Whatever might be the policy pursued by Pakistan, India should endeavour to stick to the right path

Pandit Nehru, intervening in the debate, spoke for 45 minutes on the resolution

He said that India had suggested to Pakistan about ten months earlier that they should solve all disputes between the two countries peacefully without resort to arms Pakistan's reply to the suggestion was that they should not approach matters in a "round about way" but should specify the disputes and take them up accordingly.

India had agreed to this and specified the disputes, which included the evacuee property issue, the canal waters dispute, Kashmir and the Bengal question. India had also said that if this suggestion was accepted, the atmosphere in the two countries would clear and become conducive to the solution of all disputes

A month ago India had again drawn Pakistan's attention to this suggestion and the answer was awaited If Pakistan accepted this suggestion, it would clearly mean that an agreement between the two countries had been reached and the way opened for a peaceful consideration of all questions

India had decided, said Pandit Nehru, to adopt the international procedure of negotiation to solve Indo-Pakistan disputes. According to this procedure, States resorted to negotiations whenever a dispute arose If negotiations failed there was mediation and even if that failed, arbitration was resorted to. Such disputes went up to independent judicial tribunals failing agreement That was why they had reiterated this principle of negotiation in the resolution Similarly, it was urged in another resolution that the evacuee property question be decided by a tribunal on which should figure experienced judges of both the countries These were attempts to solve these disputes peacefully. If they were also to fail, they would then think of some other methods

Pandit Nehru said that their disputes with Pakistan had to be treated on a different political plane That was a matter between two independent States On no account could the attitude of Congressmen or others towards communalism in India depend on what happened in Pakistan In India, they had been following democratic principles for the last 30 years. These principles could not be shelved or given the go-by just because of certain happenings in Pakistan That would mean the very negation of democracy Whatever happened in Pakistan, they had to remain firm in their support of democratic principles

Referring to what he described as the "Hindu-Muslim question," Pandit Nehru said that no doubt it was true that in the resolution it had been mixed up with Indo-Pakistan relations, but it stood on a different footing The question of communalism was an internal matter and the direct concern of Indians If it were to depend on what Pakistan did, then it would be tantamount to Indians surrendering the "reins of Government" to another Government

The resolution was passed after all the amendments were rejected by the House

Economic Objectives

Mr Jagjivan Ram, Labour Minister, moving the resolution on the Congress economic programme said that it sought to remove "exploitation of man by man"

Government had accepted the principle of mixed economy Government were conscious of the need of affording incentive to industrialists and agriculturists to increase production, but Government were also alive to the need of giving incentive to labour

Controls, Mr Jagjivan Ram added were indispensable to a system of planned economy. They had to impose control on industry, profits and distribution People would have to bear the controls, as without them a system of planned economy could not be established.

Mr Shibbanlal Saxena in an amendment to the foreign policy resolution criticised the United State's policy on the Korean issue and asserted that the United Nations was being used "as a cloak to hide the selfish ends of American policy" He condemned 'the inhuman and barbarous bombing of civilian Asian population" by the American air force

A resolution stating that foreign possessions in India should be incorporated in the Republic of India was moved by Mr N Narendu Dutt Mazumdar, West Bengal Minister for Law.

The resolution, which was seconded by Mr. Kala Venkata Rao, was passed unanimously

CONGRESS WORKING COMMITTEE

The members of the Congress Working Committee for the year 1950-51 are Mr Purshottamdas Tandon (President) Sirdar Vallabhbhai Patel (Treasurer), Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, Maulana Abul Kalam Azad, Mr C Rajagopalachari, Mr Jagjivan Ram, Pandit Govind Ballabh Pant (U P), Mr S K Patil (Bombay). Mr. Kamaraj Nadar (Tamil Nad), Sardar Pratap Singh Kairon (Punjab), Mr N. G. Ranga (Andhra), Mr Atulya Ghosh (W Bengal), Mr Siddheswar Sharma (Assam), Mr Laxmi Narain Sudhansu (Bihar), Mr B S Hirey (Maharshtra) Seth Govinddas (Mahakosal), Mr Gokul Lal Asawa (Rajasthan), Shrimati Pushpa Behn (Gujerat), Mr Kala Venkata Rao and Mr Mohanlal Gautam (General Secretaries).

THE MUSLIMS

So far as internal politics during the year were concerned it did not seem as if there was such a thing as a purely Muslim point of view. There was in fact more confusion than order in Muslim political thinking Muslims seemed to be unable to make up their minds whether to retain separate political identity or merge with any of the larger non-communal parties The two outstanding bodies were the Muslim League and the Jamiat-ul-Ulema One of the suggestions made was that all Muslim bodies should combine to form a non-political organization which should foster cultural, social and educational interests of the Muslims

The tension which prevailed between India and Pakistan was bound to affect the life of the ordinary Muslim Throughout the year there were charges and counter-charges made by one country against the other—a state of affairs which at last culminated in wide-spread public disorder on both sides of the Indo-Pakistan border in the East Chowdhury Khaliquzzaman was responsible for the suggestion that one way of solving the minority problem was a complete exchange of population between India and Pakistan and the ceding of territory by India to accommodate the extra population which would migrate to Pakistan as a result The agreement between India and Pakistan on the minorities question led to lessening of tension and brought a new sense of security into the lives of the minority communities both in India and Pakistan

Development in Muslim politics could be grouped under three heads First, the decision of the Muslim League to re-enter politics Second, the remark made by the Pakistan Prime Minister, Mr Liaquat Ali Khan about Indian Muslims' lack of freedom to celebrate festivals and the reactions the statement produced, and finally a long series of protests and counter protests by India and Pakistan which continued till the time when the minorities pact was signed in Delhi

The following is a detailed chronological survey of the year's events

MUSLIMS AND CONGRESS

A major pre-occupation of the Muslims during the year was organization The Muslims were realizing that the time had come for them to decide what organization they were going to work in in the new India It transpired that certain Muslim leaders had consulted Mahatma Gandhi on this point and he told them to wait until the position became a little clearer At that time none of the Indian parties including the Congress were prepared to receive Muslims as Muslims in the minority States had played a decisive part in the division of India and the formation of a new Muslim State Now that the new constitution had come into force and the first general elections were not far off the time had arrived for the Muslims to take stock It was apparent that the Congress with its long tradition of Hindu-Muslim collaboration was the obvious party to join A lead was given by Begum, Aizaz Rasul of Uttar Pradesh who joined the Congress with her husband She also worked hard to bring other Muslims in She opposed separate electorates and reservation of seats for minorities Another Muslim leader who was very active in this movement was Mr Latifur Rahman of Bihar, a member of the former Working Committee of the Muslim League.

The attitude of the Congress to this question was far from clear There was no formal bar to the entry of Muslims into the Congress But among the rank and file of the Congress a certain opposition was crystallizing A vague desire was forming to keep out at least those Muslim leaders who had played a prominent part in the agitation for Pakistan It was argued that this was necessary as they might once again play the part of a fifth column if an opportunity presented itself. One instance which was cited was that of Chowdhury Khaliquzzaman who after a few days of his declaration of loyalty to India suddenly left the country to become a citizen of Pakistan In short there was doubt about the good faith of those Muslim leaders who had changed their outlook almost overnight This suspicion was fully shared by Nationalist Muslims who had stood by the Congress when that body was regarded as an enemy of the Muslim Community by vast numbers of Muslims The Nationalist Muslims felt that ex-Leaguers could be admitted into the Congress only on the condition that they did not hold any office in the Congress for five succeeding years during which time, they were to give ample proof of genuine conversion to the new creed Muslim Leaguers for their part put this last objection down to jealousy and fear lest the Nationalist Muslims should lose their old privileged position in the Congress The case for free and unconditional admission was argued in the following manner by Muslim Leaguers who wanted to join the Congress, 1 The Congress ought not to display a spirit of revenge, with the establishment of Pakistan there was no major issue which divided the Muslims as Muslims from the Hindus as Hindus 2 The Muslims had freely agreed to the abolition of communal electorates and reservation of seats There could be no greater proof of their good faith 3 Muslims were a hard headed practical people And they realized that the best guarantee of safety was identification with the Congress 4 If the R S S could have free admission into the Congress why not the League ? The League was already dissolved as a separate body 5 The Congress for its part needed the Muslims They would bring it a vast accession of strength when it was fighting to maintain its position against attack from Socialists, Communists and the Hindu Sabha 6 India as a country would also benefit Whole-hearted acceptance of Muslim Leaguers as members of the Congress would be regarded as extra proof that India was really a secular state It would also help to counteract anti-Indian propaganda conducted by Pakistan in the Muslim countries of the Middle East

This was the manner in which the pro and the con were argued by the two sides to the controversy

Independent of this controversy there were appeals from political leaders to the Muslims to join the Congress Some of these appeals were successful and Muslims in certain areas did join the Congress in a body as in Dharwar, Sholapur and parts of Madhya Pradesh

It may be mentioned incidentally that in this general controversy about the future of Muslims and their organisations in India the Jamiat-ul-Ulema also became involved particularly in Uttar Pradesh where there was some exchange of argument between the Ulema leaders and Government spokesmen The feeling was apparently growing among sections of Muslims that the Jamiat was usurping functions which did not intrinsically belong to it

The future of the League and of Muslims in particular also came up for consideration at a convention of Muslims in Madras Some proposed the liquidation of the League while others warned against any hasty decisions All, however, stressed the need for a spirit of friendliness and co-operation between Hindus and Muslims. Mr Abdul Hamid Khan who presided over the convention stated that guarantees for minorities were secured in the Constitution and in the present set-up there was no room for communal political parties. Referring to the suggestion that Muslims should join the Congress he remarked 'After all the Congress is a leaky boat today, why should we get into it and sink ?' The convention finally decided to consult public opinion on the question.

In Lucknow about 200 prominent Muslims from Uttar Pradesh gathered together to take counsel. The meeting declared, 'in order to shake off their present lethargy and play their due part in the administration of the country the Muslims of Uttar Pradesh should join some non-communal party' The meeting appealed to all Muslim religious or cultural organizations to merge into one body so that they could work for the betterment of the community more effectively. One resolution asked for the setting up of a minority board for the protection of the rights of the minorities

The President of the All India Shia Political Conference, Syed Sultan Ahmed advised the Shias in particular and the Sunnis in general to join the Congress The aim of the Muslims should be to do all that lies in their power to aid unity

ATTEMPT TO REVIVE LEAGUE

Meanwhile the President of the All India Muslim League Mr Mohammed Ismail sent an important circular to all provincial and primary Leagues, which caused some stir in Indian politics. 'Muslims are a community,' the circular said 'And for their religious, cultural, educational, social and political purposes the League cannot remain inactive' This need for an exclusive body was justified on the following ground 'Recently we demanded religious training and recognition of Urdu as the medium of instruction for those whose mother-tongue is Urdu But the majority community was against us How could such of our demands reach the Government through the majority community organization ?'

The circular also declared that the revivified League would protect the interests of other minorities too It further argued that the League would be of help to the Government in securing the loyalty of the community and in keeping it contented

This circular gave rise to much protest among Muslims in India Mr M. M Moledina, the President of the Poona District branch of the Jamiat-ul-Ulema was among the first to question the wisdom of the decision He said that the revival of the League would harm Muslim interests and that there was, in fact, no need for communal organizations

The editor of a Urdu paper Al Hafiz wrote that the Muslims would never again follow the lead of the Muslim League On political questions the Muslims would support the Congress and on religious issues they would consult the Jamiat-ul-Ulema

The President of the Bombay Provincial Muslim League also declared in a statement that the Provincial League stood by the latest resolution of its Working Committee in which it was categorically stated that the Provincial League had divested itself of politics.

Prominent Muslims of the West Bengal State meeting in conference declared that in the altered political set-up of the country Muslims should not continue as a separate political entity The meeting expressed the opinion that Muslims should go back to the fundamentals of their political faith—socialist economy and democratic polity Another resolution demanded the formation of linguistic provinces and the inclusion of Bengalee-speaking areas of Bihar and Assam in West Bengal and the merger of Cooch Behar and Tripura

A point worth mentioning is the formation of a new Muslim organization called the Bharat Momin Panchayat It pledges itself to work for the principles advocated by Mahatma Gandhi.

ID MESSAGE

An incident which caused great stir was an Id message from Mr Liaquat Ali Khan the Pakistan Prime Minister who said there were 35 million Muslims in India who were not celebrating the Id as free and independent people. The message gave rise to vehement protests from many quarters in India.

Sir Mirza Ismail a former Dewan of Mysore deplored that the Pakistan Premier should have sent a message which was unfortunate and uncalled for 'It is only fair to say,' declared Sir Mirza, 'that the Muslims of India are as free as the Muslims of Pakistan or as their Hindu brethren in India They have full confidence in their Government and are perfectly loyal to it' Mr Abdul Qaium Ansari the President of the All India Momin Conference appealed to Indian Muslims 'to observe an all-India protest day to express their sense of high indignation at Mr Liaquat Ali Khan's false and mischievous statement and use the occasion to affirm their loyalty to India' A Nationalist Muslim leader of Calcutta Shaikh Mohammed Jan asserted that the Muslims in India enjoyed full religious liberty They said their Id congregational prayers as peacefully throughout India and as freely as Muslims of any other country

A member of the Bombay Legislative Council Dr k A Hamied asked the leaders of Pakistan 'not to shed crocodile tears over the fate of Indian Muslims as Indian Muslims were quite happy and proud of being citizens of India'

Sir Sultan Ahmed, a former member of the Viceroy's executive Council also condemned the Pakistan Premier's speech It was absolutely untrue to say that the Indian Muslims were not celebrating Id as free and independent people

A former Governor of Uttar Pradesh Nawab Ahmed Syed Khan of Chhatari remarked that the fact that so many Muslims were living in India of their own free will showed that they had confidence in the Indian Government and in the good sense of the Hindu community

A meeting of the leaders of the Muslim community in Bombay passed a resolution strongly disapproving of the statement of the Pakistan Prime Minister, characterizing it as a misrepresentation of the position of Indian Muslims

The Pakistan Prime Minister's remarks also led to an official protest by the Government of India to the Government of Pakistan It was understood that the protest emphasized that such periodic statements which were baseless would only further embitter the relations between the two countries Statements of that kind constituted an affront to India's sovereignty and an incitement to Indian Muslims to rise in revolt against the established Government

Meanwhile tension between India and Pakistan was mounting From time to time there were complaints, charges, protests from the Pakistan Government Here are some of the charges made against India 1 Mosques and other religious institutions were closed or desecrated 2 Muslims were hampered in the celebration of their religious festivals 3 Muslim property was being taken over as evacuee property 4 Indian military units posted on the Sind-Rajasthan border were harassing the Muslim population of the border villages 5 The Assam Government was pursuing a policy which might result in a mass exodus of Muslims 6 Pakistan Afghan relations were being systematically misrepresented in sections of the Indian press. 7. Indian Muslims who had returned to India on temporary permits and overstayed their time were physically deported after conviction and left on Indo-Pakistan border. Permanent permits were cancelled in certain cases 8 Muslims in general were being driven out of India The Pakistan High Commissioner's Office for instance, issued 250,000 permits between October 1948 and October 1949 9. About 100,000 Muslims in the Punjab were forced to embrace Hinduism during the 1947 disturbances and most of the mosques there had been converted into temples. To all these charges the Government of India made suitable reply. In regard to (1) the Government of India described most of the allegations as baseless. There was one mosque in Amritsar which was occupied by evacuees but the latter were quickly evicted. Muslims were absolutely free to celebrate their festivals like every other community. About evacuee property the Government of India pointed out that laws were more liberal in India than in Pakistan In fact, Pakistan laws were such that it looked as though the Pakistan Government were bent on driving all non-Muslims from West Pakistan The complaint that Muslims were being driven out of India was fantastic The large number of permits said to have been granted by the Pakistan High Commissioner's Office related to temporary visitors to India who came for the purpose of collecting their belongings The charge that over 100,000 Muslims were forcibly converted to Hinduism or Sikhism during the 1947 disturbances were exaggerated and mischievous

BENGAL DISORDERS

Meanwhile reports were coming through of ill-treatment of the Hindu community in East Bengal as a consequence of which temper began to rise inside India Outbreaks against minorities occurred on both sides of the Indo-Pakistan border in the east and after a time they assumed such proportion that even war did not seem impossible In this critical situation Muslim leaders in India spoke up with one voice On the one hand they asserted their resolution to stand solidly by their mother country, and on the other they warned Pakistan that if the Government did not stop the persecution of the minorities India would be forced to take such steps as would have grave consequences for the future of the sub-continent

To give a few instances, at a meeting of Delhi Muslims held in the Jumma Masjid a resolution was passed condemning 'the sad happenings' in East and West Bengal The meeting urged the Government of India to stop its 'policy of appeasement towards Pakistan, to take effective steps to resolve all points of dispute and put an end to the ever-growing tension between the peoples of the two countries'

A number of prominent Muslim leaders of Bihar issued a joint statement in which they said that they 'felt thoroughly ashamed of all that has happened in East Pakistan and we, Muslims of India, must raise our unanimous voice in unequivocal condemnation of such atrocities committed on the minority community there

Mr Mahomedbhoy I. M Rowjee a former Mayor of Bombay declared 'If Pakistan brings the threat of Mr Liaquat Ali Khan into action by declaring war on India they can expect nothing but contempt from us Indian Muslims who are loyal to their motherland will do everything in their power to protect the freedom of India at the cost of their lives'

Seven Muslim members of the Indian Parliament in a joint statement warned the Pakistan Government that 'if no solution to the tragic happenings in East Bengal were found speedily it might lead to grave consequences If Pakistan has any genuine concern for Indian Muslims it should desist from its policy of terrorizing the minority community We hope Pakistan will read the writing on the wall and desist from actions which always involve destruction to the wrong-doer.'

A meeting of Bombay Muslims vehemently condemned the 'untold atrocities' perpetrated on Hindu minorities in East Bengal It expressed grave concern over the situation and called upon the Government of Pakistan to accept the no-war proposals of Pandit Nehru

The statements made by Pandit Nehru in the course of a tour of the Punjab also inspired four Indian Muslim leaders to make an appeal to the Prime Minister and Governor-General of Pakistan to get together with their Indian counterparts and conclude a definitive peace These four Muslim leaders were the Nawab of Chhatari, Mohamed Ismail Khan of Meerut, the Nawab of Bhagpot and Mr. S. Rashid Ahmed of Meerut. In a joint statement they said, 'the speeches delivered by Pandit Nehru should dispel completely the apprehensions sometimes entertained of a armed conflict between India and Pakistan Pandit Nehru categorically stated that there was no intention on the part of India to resort to war with its neighbour, and all the outstanding disputes could be solved by mutual negotiation He further made it clear that recourse could be had to arbitration on specific points' The statement mentioned the question of evacuee property as one of the main obstacles to understanding, and suggested the setting up of Committee at Ministerial level to make suitable recommendations

Tension finally subsided when India and Pakistan signed a minority pact, an event which was widely held to have ushered in an era of peace and trust between majority and minority in the two countries

HISTORY

[For details see Year Book for 1949]

The awakening of political consciousness among Muslims in the sub-continent as a separate entity dates back to 1906 when the All-India Muslim League was formed It worked up its influence steadily, so that when it was hardly ten years old it became sufficiently important to enter into an agreement—known since as the Lucknow Pact with the powerful Indian National Congress The League fell on evil days in the 'twenties and differences set in among its members When enhanced powers were conferred on India by the Montford Reforms, Muslims became more and more politically minded and began to aspire to greater share in the control of the administration of the country and in Government posts This feeling gave rise to the formation of a new body whose promoters concentrated on an aggressive presentation of Muslim demands With the prospect of still further constitutional reforms at the end of the first ten years of the working of the Montford Scheme these leaders strove to organise Muslims into an influential body which would safeguard their interests more effectively than the League The result was the All-Parties Muslim Conference in 1928 The publication of the Communal Award and its inclusion in the White Paper Scheme of Reforms in 1933 helped the process of consolidation

An attempt was made early in 1934 to consolidate the community by healing the split within the Muslim League and, if possible, bringing the League and the Conference together to work as a united body The latter failed, but the former object was largely successful and the League marched from strength to strength until it emerged as one of the most powerful organisations of the Muslim community on the eve of the first elections to the provincial legislatures under the Government of India Act of 1935 For the first time in the political history of Muslims their representative institution functioned as a vigorous and active all-India organisation although the success of League nominees was not very striking

Mr Jinnah's influence among the Muslims increased rapidly in the years following the advent of the 1935 constitution The Muslim League grew into a powerful organisation with branches all over the sub-continent At Lucknow in 1937 its creed was tightened up, at Lahore three years later it adopted a resolution demanding the partition of the country into Hindu and Muslim India, and in 1941, the creed was again changed into what amounted to a demand for secession The idea of Pakistan was beginning to take shape

The Muslim League gathered strength in the years rolled by, especially during the war when the Congress was in jail and there was no effective opposition to the League An attempt was made by Lord Wavell in the summer of 1945 to form a coalition government including the Congress and the League as a temporary measure without prejudice to the claims and aspirations of the two organizations The move failed and elections were ordered throughout the country. The League came on top at the polls, and soon after the British Government sent a Cabinet Delegation to settle the Indian problem once and for all

The Delegation, after elaborate investigation and personal discussion, came to the conclusion that Pakistan was impracticable and inadvisable It decided to set up a Constituent Assembly to frame a three-tier constitution, comprising a limited union centre, three groups of contiguous provinces (one in the north-west, the second in the centre and the third in the east), and 11 provincial constitutions It also decided to set up an interim government, pending the evolution of a future constitution The League at first accepted the British Cabinet Mission's proposals, but later went back on its decision and resolved upon direct action. In the late autumn of 1946, the League again decided to co-operate and sent its nominees to the Interim Government at the centre formed earlier by the Congress.

Events then followed one another in quick succession First came the British Prime Minister's declaration setting a time-limit to the withdrawal of British troops, and Lord Mountbatten's plan for a procedure to divide the country. On August 15, 1947 the country was formally divided and two Dominions came simultaneously into existence In the wake of the division there came widespread disturbances in the north-west of the sub-continent, and the minorities in either country passed through a period of acute fear and anxiety.

The chief features of Muslim politics since the partition of the sub-continent have been 1. a decline in the strength and influence of the Indian Union Muslim League 2 the rise in power of a number of non-League bodies like the Momins, Shias and more especially the Jamiat-ul-Ulema-e-Hind with which Maulana Azad is associated, 3 the dissolution of purely communal-political bodies, and a shift in their emphasis from political work to social, cultural, religious and educational work

THE SIKHS

A KNOWLEDGE of the main issues which agitate the Sikhs is quite necessary for any-one who wishes to follow the year's events as they affect the Sikh Community

Broadly speaking there are three groups among the Sikhs One group forming the main body of the Central Akahli Dal is led by Master Tara Singh It is in favour of maintaining the separate identity of the Sikh community The second group is represented by the Panthic Durbar led by the Maharaja of Patiala. This group favours discarding the separate identity of the Sikhs. In 1949 February the Working Committee of the Durbar held a meeting in Patiala at which it decided not to have a political programme and not to fight elections as a party. To find a workable programme for the advance of Sikh culture it appointed a sub-committee In addition to the Panthic Durbar there is also a large body of Sikhs who follow the Congress and think that the Sikhs should not have a separate organization

Most Sikh demands came from a feeling that since Hindus have India and the Muslims have Pakistan there must be some part of the sub-continent which the Sikhs could call their own More concretely the Sikhs ask for the creation of a new administrative unit in the Punjab with the Sikh States as a nucleus Alternatively they demand that the overwhelmingly Hindu District of Gurgaon should be separated from the Punjab so as to secure an even balance between Hindus and Sikhs in the new Province so formed. The Sikhs also claim that Punjabi and not Hindi should be the provincial language.

The Sikh point of view as such is underlined by two memoranda which are worth quoting The first is a four-page memorandum presented by Sikh members of the Minorities Advisory Committee of the now defunct Constituent Assembly to the sub-committee which was specifically set up to consider the Sikh case. This memorandum can be regarded as the most authoritative statement of the demands made by the Sikhs from time to time since independence The following demands were set out in the memorandum

1. To avoid becoming a permanent minority equality of representation must be secured in the Punjab or the boundaries of the State must be so redrawn that the resulting province contains a majority of 'Punjabi-speaking people.'

2. There must be adequate weightage in the Indian Parliament. When the Anglo-Indians, for instance, are given six seats the Sikhs must have proportionate representation.

3. In U.P and Delhi cognizance must be taken of recent migrations. For instance, in U.P. there would be about 500,000 Sikhs and in Delhi about 100,000.

4. In the Punjab and Central Cabinets there must be a convention which assigns a certain number of seats to Sikhs. One seat must be assured in the Central Cabinet, while in the Punjab Cabinet if the present boundaries are retained one half of the seats must be allotted to Sikhs.

5. In all committees, commissions and delegations there must be one Sikh.

The theory on which the claims are justified is that as in undivided Punjab the Sikhs are opposed to communal majority rule In fact, the opposition is even stronger today because the proportion of Sikhs in the Indian Punjab has increased on account of the partition. Other grounds for justification are Sikh suffering in the cause of undivided India, Sikh contribution to the defence of the country and distribution of the community on the strategic borders of India The creation of a Punjabi-speaking State is justified on the linguistic principle which is recognized by the Congress. The new State it is claimed can be formed by cutting off the Districts of Rohtak, Gurgaon and the Tehsils of Bhiwani and Hansi in the Hissar District To make the area more compact the Punjab States could merge with the new province The Sikhs finally, remind the Congress of its promise to Sikhs that the Congress will not be a party to any solution of the communal problem that does not satisfy the Sikhs

About the same time as Sikh members of the Constituent Assembly handed in their memorandum four Sikh scholars issued a lengthy statement discussing the question of what the Sikhs really wanted.'Only a little imaginative sympathy is needed,' the statement said, 'to realize the great and unprecedented sufferings of the Sikhs in the recent terrible happenings in the Punjab' After describing the sufferings the statement added, '. Almost 40 per cent of the entire Sikh community can be described as refugees in some form or other.' The statement then goes on to say that being a self-reliant and sturdy people all that the Sikhs need is opportunity—opportunity to create, construct and thus carve out their prosperity as they did in the old Punjab. Among the most urgently-needed relief were the following. 1 An announcement that the question of the Gurudwaras left behind in Pakistan was being taken up by the Government of India with the Pakistan Government. The Nankana Sahib Gurudwara should be created a free city like the Vatican. The other Gurudwaras in Pakistan should be administered by the Nankana Sahib authorities. An equivalent of the land attached to the Nankana Sahib and other Sikh shrines in Pakistan should be allotted to the S.G.P.C. in the Punjab thus giving the Sikhs an opportunity to re-establish their educational and social life, 2 As the worst sufferers among land-holders they should be given a generous share in the new colony areas in Hissar and Karnal Districts to make up for their losses in the colony areas of Pakistan, 3. All Sikh refugees no matter where they come from West Punjab, N.W.F.P., Bahawalpur or Sind should be accommodated in the Punjab. This will provide a homeland for Sikhs in India; 4. In their rehabilitation policy Government should make no distinction between landlords and tenants; 5. To provide houses work on new townships should be taken in hand immediately, and the site of the new capital of the Punjab should be announced without delay.

Of the general demands of the Sikhs as a community two were conceded before the present Constitution came into force—first that backward sections among their community should be included in the Scheduled Castes for purposes of representation in the legislature

Second, along with other minorities the Sikhs would also have the right to claim fair representation in the services consistently with the maintenance of efficiency in administration under the new Constitution

THE YEAR 1949-50.

Having described the frame-work one could now proceed to review Sikh politics during the year The struggle for the control of the Sikh Gurudwara Prabhandhak Committee continued between the two rival groups—the Nagoke group and the Tara Singh group, though at one time it was reported that the two groups had reached an agreement on certain broad questions In this struggle the Nagoke group held its own. And second, the two old questions the demand for a Punjabi-speaking province and the recognition of Punjabi in the Gurmukhi script as the official language remained in the front, though large groups of Hindus and Sikhs had agreed that both Hindi and Punjabi should have equal status. Master Tara Singh was the dominating personality in Sikh affairs and a review of Sikh events reads like a chronicle of Master Tara Singh's public activities in the course of the year. Below is given a detailed factual narrative of political events in the Sikh world

Some of the prominent Sikh leaders who had been arrested during the agitation in Delhi in February-March 1949 were released Among those released were Master Tara Singh, Master Ajit Singh, the General Secretary of the Shiromani Akali Dal and Sardar Swarup Singh, the Vice-President A point of personal interest is that Mr Niranjan Singh Gill of the I.N A and a former dictator of the Panthic Board joined the Indian National Congress

There was again trouble in New Delhi in connection with Guru Nanak's birthday According to an official report, permission had been granted to the Prabhandak Committee to take a procession on Guru Nanak's birthday along a prescribed route. But the Committee took out a procession a day previous to the birthday and along a route different from that followed in the past The police fired four rounds and made a lathi charge and a number of persons were arrested.

The election of a President for the S G.P.C. resulted in a victory for the Nagoke group. Jathedar Udham Singh Nagoke was elected President defeating his Akhali rivals. The Ahkali Party, however, decided to question the validity of the Committee's resolution extending the term of the then office-bearers.

Later an agreement was said to have been arrived at between the two groups At the time of writing the terms of the agreement were still a secret. But it was understood that the terms included the following points: 1. The S.G.P.C would be a purely religious body.

Government servants and members of local bodies and legislatures would be prohibited. 2 Both the groups would support the political demands of the Sikhs particularly the demand relating to the establishment of a Punjabi-speaking province. 3 Punjabi in the Gurmukhi script should be the official language of the province and also the court language 4 The two groups would work under the leadership of Sardar Baldev Singh, the Defence Minister.

If all this was true it would change the whole face of Sikh politics But some parts at least of the reported agreement were not borne out by a speech made by Jathedar Udham Singh Nagoke ten days after the agreement was said to have been reached In a public speech he reiterated that a separate province would be harmful to the Sikhs. He went on to add, however that if the creation of such a province was considered necessary at a later stage representative Hindus and Sikhs would sit together and find a solution

And for his part nothing that Master Tara Singh said or did seemed to bear out the claim that an agreement between the two groups had been reached Master Tara Singh continued to go the same way as he did before

At the first public meeting after his release he advised the Sikhs to unite with the Hindus He also declared that later he would announce a comprehensive programme which he would like the Sikhs to propagate in every town and village In an interview he told the Government that the Sikh problem could be solved if they authorized the formation of a Punjabi-speaking province

On October 23, 1949 Master Tara Singh announced the programme which he had promised before Addressing a Sikh political conference in Amritsar he stated that in the interests of the country's future there should be a separate Punjabi-speaking province or sphere of Sikh influence Sikhs should not live under 'Hindu domination' Master Tara Singh proposed the formation of a new Sikh force 'Sri Khalsa' devoted to the Sikh religon. It should undertake a programme of self-purification through pious life with daily prayer pledged to love other Sikhs and to see that no Sikh starved It would develop the community's character and would not be open to people who aspired to places in the legislature and the Government The Sikh leader also seemed to say that the Sikh community was much happier under the Unionist regime in undivided Punjab than under Congress rule Other points he made off and on were that Sikh shrines in Pakistan should be inviolable and freely accessible to Sikhs Some Sikh leaders had in fact suggested that this particular question might be referred to the U N O In a later speech (Nov 8, Simla) Master Tara Singh seemed to hint at the possibility of grave trouble if the next elections based on joint electorates were held without the settlement of his demands

A point which caused some controversy was whether Master Tara Singh wanted a Sikh State or a Sikh province for at one stage he referred to defence arrangements of the new unit with India. Master Tara Singh himself denied that he had asked for a separate State But he insisted that there was discrimination against Sikhs in the matter of appointments and important portfolios had been taken away from Sikh Ministers in the Punjab Cabinet

Some days later Master Tara Singh made some conciliatory gestures and left all doubts at rest in a speech in New Delhi on Guru Nanak's birthday He said he did not ask for a separate State for the Sikhs but only justice and a due share in the administration of the country. It was never his intention to harass the Government Hindus and Sikhs must live together Any rift in their ranks would be disastrous to both

The problem of the Sikhs was also raised in a debate in the Constituent Assembly on October 14 Sardar Hukum Singh charged the Congress with having gone back on its promise to the Sikhs in the matter of reservation in legislatures and Services This brought a reply from the Deputy Prime Minister who said that Sikh representatives were always consulted whenever questions affecting the community's interests came up for a decision He reminded the Sikhs that even the partition of India was agreed to only after the Sikhs had given their consent Sardar Patel deplored 'the psychology of distrust and animosity' exhibited by the Sikhs from time to time and appealed to them to join with other communities in strengthening the morale of the border province.

Sardar Hukum Singh, however, returned to the charge later During a constitutional debate in the Constituent Assembly he said that while the Muslims had got Pakistan and the Anglo-Indians and Scheduled castes safe-guards and guarantees the demand for a Punjabi-speaking province has not been met. Despite repeated assurance of equality of status for the Sikhs by the Congress the Sikhs had been ignored He therefore found it difficult to support the constitution

There was, of course, much opposition among the Sikhs to the general trend of Master Tara Singh's policy The Secretary of the Nationalist Sikh Party, for instance criticized Master Tara Singh's attitude as likely to affect the position of the Sikhs in a free India If there is discrimination against minorities the question could be taken to the Supreme Court The President of the Shiromani Gurudwara Prabhandak Committee also strongly opposed the demand for a Sikh province There were two and a half million Sikhs outside the Punjab who would not benefit in any way by the formation of a separate Sikh province Defence problems would also be complicated and Sikhs might also lose their present position in the Indian Army

About the middle of 1950 Master Tara Singh resigned the presidentship of the Shiromani Akali Dal and Sardar Hukam Singh was unanimously elected President

Also Akali politics took an exciting turn when the Working Committee of the Dal asked Sikh members elected to the legislatures on the Panthic ticket to sever their connection with the Congress The resolution adopted by the Working Committee stated that the Shiromani Akali Dal had allowed the Panthic M.L.A 's to join the Congress Assembly Party at the Centre and the Provinces as a gesture of goodwill and in the full faith and belief that the Congress, with men of eminence like Pandit Nehru, Dr. Rajendra Prasad and Sardar Patel at the head, would respond particularly at a time when the Sikh community in its displaced, ruined and uprooted state, needed constructive sympathy and support and due status in the new set up.

The Shiromani Akali Dal, therefore, "after deep and considered deliberations direct the M L A 's who had succeeded on Panthic tickets to resign forthwith from the Congress Party and create separate Panthic blocs"

This resolution affected a number of Ministers including Sardar Baldev Singh Up to the time of writing (1950 August) there was no striking response from Sikh members

THE LEFT WING IN INDIAN POLITICS

FOR many years after 1919 the Indian National Congress was the party of the Left in Indian politics. And all the Left Wing parties of today (except the Communists) which are now separate from the Congress began as protestant groups within the Congress itself Thus the Socialist Party, the Forward Bloc, the Revolutionary Communist Party, the Peasants' and Workers' Party which together with the Communist Party constitute the Left Wing today were all in the Congress some time or other.

Broadly speaking the parties of the Left in the Congress differed from the moderates on two points. First, the Left Wingers were opposed to all compromise with the British, and were in favour of complete independence outside the British Empire as the institution was then called. Second, they believed in some kind of economic equality and collectivism, and worked hard to bring the workers and the peasants into the national movement. The Left Wing groups generally worked together and were at their best whenever the Congress launched a movement against the authorities.

When the Congress decided round about 1934 to take office the Left Wing groups made a strong effort to get a Socialist programme accepted by that body; but the effort failed. It is from the failure of this attempt to convert the Congress that the gradual separation of the Left Wing groups from the main body of the Congress began. The Socialist Party, for instance, was formed soon after.

Until lately the position of the Left Wingers was not easy For the Congress under the dual leadership of Mahatma Gandhi and Pandit Nehru had a complete plan of action both for urban and rural conditions, a plan which could also be described as Socialistic—of the Gandhian type. Pandit Nehru, in fact, has the reputation of being a Socialist himself. Once he even went so far as to describe himself as half-Communist In any case, the Congress had not only a plan but had the power to vitalize it by action. For a long time, therefore, the parties of the Left were unable to make much headway, they had nothing strikingly different from the Congress to offer. But with the cessation of war and the advent of freedom came a great deal of unrest among the peasants and industrial workers. Many baffling political problems also presented themselves. To make the situation worse there were incompetence, corruption, low morality among those who were running the Government machinery. All this inevitably resulted in dissatisfaction and discontent with the party in power and helped the growth of Left Wing opposition in the country It must be pointed out however, that though conditions were favourable the Left Wing groups did not score any striking success against the party in power. Some of the reasons for this failure are fairly obvious. The parties of the Left had no coherent, workable plan. They did not possess the necessary strength which comes from a vast country-wide organisation. And they were very much disunited among themselves. Thus though the Left Wing parties were strong enough to harass the Government at many points nowhere did they have the capacity to form an alternative Government

We shall now proceed to give a brief account of four of the Leftist groups mentioned at the beginning of this article The Socialists and the Communists will have fuller treatment as they are the biggest and the most powerful of the parties on the Left. In fact, the others can hardly be described as parties Some of these are more in the nature of groups which formed round a dominating personality

The Forward Bloc was started by Mr. Subhash Chandra Bose in 1938, because of a suspicion that the Congress might in the ultimate resort compromise with the British Power and agree to take less than complete independence. It had some vogue during the war on account of its affiliations with the I N A But when the Congress took up the I N A cause and made it part of its own history the Forward Bloc found the ground cut from under its feet. In 1948, it split into two groups, one led by Mr. R. S Ruikar and the other by Mr. K. N. Joglekar. At a conference in Calcutta, Mr Ruikar declared that the Party stood for Socialism which was to be achieved by co-ordination of parliamentary and extra-parliamentary methods. In this, Mr. Ruikar explained, the policy of the Forward Bloc differed from that of the Socialists

WORKERS' AND PEASANTS' PARTY

Chairman. Keshavrao Jedde

General Secretary S S Moray.

This is a Marxist-Leninist Party following the guidance of the 'Cominform'

At a three-day conference in June 1950 at Malegaon in Nasik District it adopted an 18,000 word political thesis explaining its own ideological position

The Party's programme as outlined in the thesis includes 'severance of all connection with British imperialism, abolition of landlordism without compensation, confiscation of foreign capital invested in banks and industries' The programme also urges nationalization of big industries, banks and insurance companies and the reorganization of States on a linguistic basis

Here are the 18 points of the thesis

1 Establishment of complete independence after severance of all connections with British imperialism

2 To establish a democratic State of workers, peasants and middle classes—the classes which are opposed to Anglo-American imperialists and which are inside the Peace Front

3 To frame a Constitution giving full independence and democratic rights to the people and to protect their fundamental economic rights

4 To accept the right of nations to self-determination and to reorganise India on a linguistic basis

5 To provide constitutional protection to language, culture, etc, of the minorities

6 To abolish vestiges of princely rule and feudalism

7 To abolish all kinds of economic, political and cultural repression

8 India and Pakistan to give mutual aid to each other in the interest of the progress of the toiling people in both States

9 To abolish landlordism without compensation, to redistribute land, to abolish usury, to give a living wage to the agricultural labourers

10 To confiscate foreign capital invested in big industries, banks, means of communications, plantations, mines and various other enterprises

11 To nationalise big industries, banks, insurance companies To secure workers' control over them To give a living wage, seven-hour day, old age pensions, sickness benefits, etc, to workers

12 Right to work to every one

13 Control on profits of private enterprise

14 To abolish all repressive laws

15 To abolish bureaucracy and appoint officers elected by the people, the latter having the right to recall

16 Right to every one to bear arms and the creation of a People's Army

17. Free and compulsory primary and secondary education, less expensive higher education.

18 Equal rights to women To put into practice the principle of equal pay for equal work.

Mr. Moray later explained the decision to adopt Marxism as a guide to a group of journalists in Poona The metamorphosis was not a sudden one, he said. The Party's past leanings towards Marxism had now been expressed in precise and clear terms The doors of the new Marxist party would be open not only to workers and peasants but also to middle classes and even to capitalist sympathisers. The Party had accepted Marx, Engels, Lenin, Stalin and the Cominform as the true exponents of Marxism This does not mean that they would slavishly imitate everything done elsewhere without examining the peculiar conditions of this country The aim was to create a united democratic front under the hegemony of a genuine workers' party which would include all classes sympathetic to the programme of the Party.

Attempts have been made from time to time to bring the W & P Party and the Socialists together for the purpose of contesting the general elections against the Congress But relations between the two Parties have never been very cordial One element that causes trouble is their attitude towards the Communists While the W & P Party is sympathetic to the Communists the Socialists regard them as mortal enemies The P & W Party has, in fact, been pressing all the time for a triangular agreement with the Communists Also the P & W does not find the Socialists sufficiently revolutionary But experience in a number of by-elections appears to have convinced the leadership that Congress could be defeated only if the two Parties joined forces at least for electoral purposes It appeared as though the Communists were also willing to join a Leftist combination They were due to change their policy to more constitutional ways In fact the Party's official organ made an open overture to the Socialists and the Workers' Parties to form a 'United Left Front' The intensity of Communist criticism of the Socialists also considerably abated But while the chances of the Communists being admitted into a Leftist combination were considered slight the chances of the Scheduled Castes' Federation joining the others for specific purposes were considered to be brighter

THE SOCIALIST PARTY OF INDIA

Chairman, Party Executive, Acharya Narendra Dev

General Secretary, Asoka Mehta

Jt. Secretaries, Prem Bhasin, Rohit Dave, Madhu Limaye

Treasurer, M Harris

Members, National Executive, Dr Ram Manohar Lohia, N G Gore, Dr K B Menon, Sibnath Banerjee, Ajit Roy, Ram Nandan Mishra, Manganlal Bagdi, Surendra Dwivedi, Damodar Swarup Seth, ; Sukumar Tagore, Hareshwar Goswami, Swami Bhagwan, Jagdish Joshi, Tilakraj Chhadha, Mahadev Singh, A Chakradhar, S R Subramaniyam, Jayaprakash Narayan, G S Sinha

The numerical strength of the Party is not very great chiefly because (as Socialists explain) membership was restricted to active workers only, that is to say, those who did fourteen hours' work for the Party every week. Candidates for membership have also had to go through a period of probation With the broadening of access to the Party under the new constitution however Socialists expect that membership will increase to a level commensurate with the Party's influence in the country.

Andhra, 5,423, Assam, 2,500, W Bengal, 5,000, Bihar, 16,880, Bombay, 8,920, Bombay-Karnatak, 400, Madhya Pradesh, 4,964, Delhi, 1,800, Punjab, 5,033, Gujarat, 2,380; Hyderabad, 12,113, Mysore, 924, Madhyabharat, 2,314, Maharashtra, 10,235, Rajputana, 735, Tamilnad, 2,908, Travancore-Cochin, 1,679; Uttar Pradesh, 30,000, Utkal, 3,943, Vindhya Pradesh, 2,000, Saurashtra, 199, Malabar, 1,300, Total, 1,19,850, Affiliated organisations: Bombay City, 15,500, Maharashtra, 2,000; U.P., 5,000, Bihar, 2,000.

The Party has two members in the Bombay Legislature (Mr. Purushottamdas Trikumdas, and Mr Peter Alvares) and one in the Indian Parliament (Damodar Swarup Seth). The poor representation in the Legislatures is explained by the fact that the Legislatures were elected before independence and through a restricted franchise. Besides, the Party attached little value to Parliamentary activity and gave all its energy to extra-Parliamentary work in trade unions, co-operatives and so on The Party boycotted elections to the Constituent Assembly; a lone member, however, found himself elected as he happened to be the President of a Provincial Congress Committee at the time.

In general the Socialists claim that the Party's influence in the country is out of all proportion to its representation in the Legislatures The Party is strongly entrenched in industrial areas, where the Socialist trade union, the Hind Mazdoor Sabha has a large membership In the working-class, the Socialists are specially influential among coal-miners, railway workers, dock workers, textile workers, and workers in the sugar industry Among peasants, the Socialists have always had great influence. As early as 1936, they set up a Kisan Sabha, and today under a new name Hind Kisan Panchayat the Party has its largest following in Bihar and U P The Socialists have a youth organization called 'Samajwadi Yuvak Sabha' The Rashtriya Seva Dal is not affiliated to any party, but a majority of the members of the organisation sympathize with the ideals of the Socialist Party In fact, Socialists claim that their influence in the country is much greater than any figures can indicate for a Socialist or a near-Socialist ideology is now part of all national thinking

The Party publishes 22 weeklies in different languages—the best-known of which is the Janata, published in English—while the Central Office issues a fortnightly letter A foreign news bulletin is also issued and is sent to Socialist Parties, trade union offices and leading journals in foreign countries

The various branches of the Party conduct training camps where members are instructed in Party policy and where a knowledge is also given of subjects of special interest such as agrarian economics, trade union theory and practice, and so on Local centres too, often conduct study circles In big industrial areas like Bombay labour schools and colleges are organized where workers can get instruction in subjects which are of importance in their day-to-day work.

The Socialist Party observes all 'national days' such as 30th January, 15th August, 2nd October and the whole of the national week In addition it celebrates special occasions like 1st May, as indication of the international solidarity of labour, 9th August, as the day on which the final struggle for national freedom was launched, and 14th November as Kisan day

CONSTITUTION

The final object of the Party is the establishment of a democratic Socialist society in India The Party will also work with Socialist forces in other countries for the eradication of imperialism, racialism, colonialism, and all other forms of national oppression and economic inequality among nations and create a democratic Socialist world.

There are two classes of members, individual members and affiliated members. As regards individual membership any person who is above 18 and who accepts the objects, policy, programme and the discipline of the Party is eligible provided he does not believe in or observe caste or communal distinctions. Affiliated members are not individuals but groups of persons like a trade union, a kisan sabha, organizations of professional men, of youth or just cultural organizations, provided as before they accept the objects, policy, programme, and the discipline of the Party An individual member pays a minimum membership fee of one rupee a year, an affiliated trade union an affiliation fee of five rupees and an additional fee of four annas a member, while a kisan sabha pays an affiliation fee of five rupees and an additional fee of two annas a member.

The smallest territorial organization is a ward or local unit comprising all the individual members resident in that area. Above a ward unit is a constituency branch. Above the constituency branch are district and city branches Above these again are the provincial organizations, and finally at the very top is the national organization

The organization at each of the different levels mentioned above consists in the main of a larger deliberative body called Council and a smaller executive body called Committee The Council lays down the policy and programme, considers reports and statements of accounts and elects the office-bearers such as Chairman and Secretary The Executive Committee carries out the policy and programme laid down by the Council, organizes branches, supervises their work and generally initiates such activity as may further the objects of the Party in the area which comes under its purview

At the national level the organization consists of a National Conference, a National General Council and a National Executive The National Conference which consists of delegates elected by individual and affiliated members is the highest constitutional organ of the Party It lays down the policy and programme of the Party for the ensuing year It elects the Chairman, the General Secretary and members of the Executive It can amend the Constitution Its decisions are binding on all the members of the Party, the various branches of the Party and the affiliated organizations The National Council is a smaller body than the National Conference and consists of one-fifth of the number of delegates to the National Conference It meets at least once between any two Conferences and takes such decisions on policy and organization as are not inconsistent with the decisions of the National Conference The National Executive which is the highest executive organ of the Party consists of a Chairman, a General Secretary and 23 members all elected by the National Conference The Chairman of the Executive Committee also presides over the General Council and the following meeting of the National Conference During the year in which he is chairman he acts as the chief spokesman of the Party.

A unique feature of the National Conference is that at least 10 per cent of the delegates elected by individual members from each Provincial Branch should be women

The National, Provincial, District and City Secretaries of the Party are all full-time workers

Part of this constitution came into force on May 1, 1949, and the rest will come into force on a date to be fixed by the Executive Committee

COMMUNISTS, RUSSIA

The Kanpur Conference of 1947 has defined the attitude of the Party to the Communists

"The Communists do not consider any party other than their own to be either revolutionary or socialist, accordingly, a policy of unity is to them only a means of infiltration into other parties in order either to capture the parties or destroy them So there can never be unity with the Communists.

"The war years revealed a yet more fundamental obstacle to unity or co-operation with the Communist Party. These years showed conclusively, what was previously only vaguely felt, that the Communist parties all over the world are completely under the control of the Russian Government Their policies everywhere are attuned to the policies of that Government and, under the ideological cloak of communism, they function everywhere as its permanent and loyal fifth column

"The Communists in this country, as elsewhere, are often described as leftists, but they are neither leftists, nor rightists

"There is a third basic difference between the Socialist Party and the Communist Party The Socialist Party aims at the establishment of democratic socialism, whereas the objective of the Communist Party is totalitarian communism The Socialist Party desires to establish a proletarian democracy, a Kisan Mazdoor Raj, while the Communists desire to establish the dictatorial rule of their party over the workers and peasants There can be nothing in common between the two parties working for such divergent aims"

The Kanpur statement then went on to describe the Socialist Party's attitude to Russia

"Denunciation of the Communist Party as a Russian fifth column is represented by the Communists as hostility to Russia herself, and they denounce the Socialist Party in turn as anti-Russian This is only an example of their dishonest tactics The Socialist Party declares that it is not only not hostile to the Soviet Union but is even its friend The Party firmly believes that free India, in her own interest, must live on the friendliest possible terms with Russia While the Party shall always endeavour to promote this friendship, it wishes to make it clear that this friendship must always be on the basis of complete equality and that free India will never brook any interference with her affairs by any country, however friendly

"The Party wishes further to make it clear that while it does believe that valuable work has been done in Russia in the sphere of planning and nationalized economy, and while it also believes that it is not for outsiders to meddle in the affairs of Russia, the Party considers it a duty to the Socialist movement in this country to draw lessons from the success and failure in Russia"

CASE AGAINST CONGRESS

The Socialist case against the Congress may be summarized as follows —

The Congress ideology is capitalist The Congress believes whole-heartedly in free enterprise and thinks that prosperity can be attained by supplying more and yet more incentive to the capitalist No bold or progressive policy has issued from any of the Congress Governments On the other hand they have inflicted fresh burdens on the poor

The more specific charges run as follows —

The Central Government promises an economy of control and regulation with a National Planning Commission to regulate the flow of economic life (Planning Commission has just been set up Editor) The failure to plan and regulate has led to lack of co-ordination between different branches of the Government, thus preventing a full and adequate use of the productive resources of the country The Government has no long-range import and export policy It lives from hand-to-mouth and is susceptible to pressure from organized business interests

The Government follows a policy of appeasement towards the industrialist while it is overcritical of organized labour The very mention of the word 'strike' serves in the nature of a red rag to the Government The Essential Services (Prevention of Strikes) Bill shows that the Government is doing its best to crush all independent labour organizations The two Labour bills now under discussion in Parliament reinforce this suspicion

The industrial truce agreement promised a fair wage to the worker General inflation actually resulted in lowering the real wage of the working man

The budget proposals of the Government are frankly weighted in favour of the capitalists While the Government makes every concession to rich businessmen and industrialists, it taxes the necessities of the poor It has also decided to maintain a group of Princes in affluence and idle luxury at the cost of anything between one and a half rupees and five to the general tax-payer

The State Governments are delaying the abolition of zamindari and jagirdari systems In fact, instead of working out a policy of redistribution of land some State Governments are actually permitting the zamindars to increase the area of their home farms, thus indirectly encouraging capitalist farming, and the ejection of tenants. What is even worse, the primary and essential producers are denied any relief in rent or rise in wages in proportion to the cost of living and of cultivation

In general, the Government is more partial to industry than to agriculture In the employment of foreign capital, for instance, it places more emphasis on big industrial projects than on the rehabilitation of agriculture No effort is made to plan a large-scale investment in agriculture from a new angle commensurate with its position as the hub of the country's economic life

In the political sphere there is steady and persistent encroachment on the liberties of the people Certain sections of the Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure Code are being unfairly used to limit freedom of speech, press, assembly, association, movement Efforts are made to usurp the power of the judiciary by circumscribing the use of the habeas corpus There is also much emergency legislation There is, in fact, an unmistakable tendency on the part of the police to using more force than is necessary. The police machinery is also being used to help vested interests against workers and peasants. Government officials often connive at the maintenance of bodies of goondas by landlords for the purpose of terrorizing peasants

The Government machinery is far from impartial in certain aspects of administration. For instance, there is discrimination in the matter of enrolment of non-Congressmen in the Home Guards, Raksha Dal, Prohibition Guards The INTUC and Congress-dominated Kisan Sabhas are given full freedom to carry on political activities such as holding meetings, organizing voluntary corps while similar freedom is denied to non-Congress organizations

Such, broadly speaking, are the principal charges which the Socialists bring against the Congress and the Governments which the Congress had formed at the Centre and in the States

THE YEAR IN REVIEW

The questions that agitated the Socialist Party during the year were chiefly two —coalition with Congress and unity among Leftist parties and the whole question of civil liberties On the first question Socialist spokesmen said that they were prepared for a coalition with the Congress provided the Congress agreed to carry out a minimum economic programme which they defined In the event of foreign aggression however they would give the Congress Government unconditional support In regard to civil liberties the Socialists agitated for the repeal of certain measures which they regarded as a transgression of personal freedom But they agreed that in spite of various restrictions enough freedom remained to enable Socialists to organize for a new economic order

A question that is allied to Congress-Socialist coalition is unity among Leftist parties A few half-hearted attempts in this direction were made but they came to nothing Even such a purely local agreement for election purposes between the Socialist and the Workers' and Peasants' Party proved infructuous and was formally scrapped

On the question of Indo-Pakistan relations subsequent to the communal disturbances the Socialists took a strong line They argued that if peaceful means failed India would be justified in adopting police measures to protect minority rights in Pakistan The Socialists also put forward proposals for a long-term agreement between India and Pakistan

The Socialists were anxious that steps should be taken to ensure that the coming elections were fair and free They took the initiative in calling a conference of all 'Opposition' parties for organizing public opinion

Below is given a more detailed account of Socialist 'politics' during the year

Economic Policy

The Party placed an 18-point programme for 'national revival' in the course of the year. In this 5,000-word document the Party pledged itself to put forth every ounce of energy for the fulfilment of the programme.

The document analyses the various problems confronting the country and suggests remedies for existing evils Among the subjects discussed are: poverty and unemployment, industrial production, village reconstruction, trade, education, health and refugees

The programme will not "take us to the achievement of the ultimate objective of a classless and casteless society" but the Party claims it will be a big jump towards the final goal

The document continues, "A vital part of the national revival programme is for the people to compel Government to adopt the necessary positive measures Mere condemnation of Government or dissatisfied sullenness is fruitless. The people must either force Government to act or dismiss it and choose another that will carry out their will."

Disintegrating tendencies like provincialism, linguism and communalism are denounced, and the Party calls for the organisation of "Gandhi Centres of Culture" and "Centres of National Revival" in towns and villages for the release of socially oppressed millions from "the humiliation and pain of social inferiority"

"Like one nation we are all of one caste—the human caste"

The minimum income, the document says, should, as soon as possible be raised to the living standard "The fantastically high allowances of the Princes must be stopped and their huge treasures must be taken over and applied to productive use" Land must belong to the tiller and all intermediaries must go No peasant should have less than 12½ acres of land and the maximum holding should not be more than 30 acres of good land Ejectment from land homesteads should stop, and pasture and other common lands should not be settled Except for rehabilitation compensation to small landlords, no compensation should be paid for the abolition of landlordism

"All this requires legislation," adds the document, "but if vested interests delay the law too long, the peasants will have to carry through these reforms by their own motion That would not be anarchy but the smashing of the dams of stagnation"

Reconstruction

People in every village, the document goes on to say, should band themselves together and devote one hour's collective labour each day to the work of reconstruction, such as making of village roads, bunds and channels, compost making and opening grain banks The State should come forward with such assistance as may be necessary, and there must be a movement "back to the village"

While capital, machinery and technical personnel for large-scale industrialisation are not available in an adequate measure in a backward economy, there is one factor of production that is plentifully available—man-power The harnessing of the immense man-power of this country requires not only the climate of egalitarianism and social justice but also industrial activity suited for its absorption

The lack of adequate capital, which is at the root of the present industrial stagnation, can be removed, the document says, only by stimulating saving at home and by import of foreign capital and technical know-how on terms suitable to the national development All available and created factors of production must be applied in accordance with a plan "Banking and insurance must be nationalised. The basic industries, without the control of which industrial development cannot be planned and executed should also be nationalised"

A new economic civil service should be raised and trained to carry out this planned economic development.

In the sphere of foreign trade, the document advocates State monopoly in such commodities as mica and manganese which are of strategic economic importance and State control in other respects "The import-export policy of the country should be a part of the larger national economic plan and should be an instrument of economic development"

Increased industrial and agricultural production, coupled with compulsory saving on a wide scale, deferred payments to the high salaried groups and control of consumption is the proper solution of the problem of high prices.

Black money, the document urges, should be ferreted out by adopting more stringent measures

The Party's views on other subjects are:—

Unemployment The working of the economic programme as outlined in the document can alone solve the problem

Refugees The plan of rehabilitation should be co-ordinated with the larger national economic plan

Corruption The greatest single enemy of the nation The anti-corruption departments should be replaced with independent anti-corruption commissions like the election commissions defined in the Constitution.

Administration Officers in high places should be made clearly and concretely responsible for achieving specified results within a specified time-limit

Democracy and Decentralisation: District, State and Village States with distinct economic and political (including administrative) powers, should be brought into being to give the entire Indian State a sort of four-pillar structure

Education Primary education should be free and compulsory Secondary education should, as far as possible, be vocational and technical University education should be restricted to those who intend to pursue higher studies and research

Population Raising the age of marriage and enforcing the law in this regard and provision for proper birth-control clinics are the preliminary steps towards a solution of this problem.

Peoples' Freedom The fundamental freedoms of the people guaranteed by the Constitution must be made real Arrests and imprisonment without trial must be outlawed except in times of war or other national emergency

A 13-point peoples' plan to end poverty drawn up personally by Dr Ram Manohar Lohia may also be mentioned here These points included 1 lowering of prices on the basis of parity between industrial and agricultural goods, 2 taking over factories running below production capacity, 3 equal sacrifice, austerity to be shared by all so that no income exceeds Rs 1,000 per month

Mr Asoka Mehta also emphasized the idea of austerity and hard work In a speech in Bombay he said that austerity and more work would alone solve India's economic problems. Workers could be persuaded to play their part, but only after those who were more highly placed had set an example Mr. Mehta felt that no man, however eminent his position, should get more than ten times what the lowest paid worker in the country got. Foreign capital could not help except to a negligible degree

The Socialists staged a number of big rallies from time to make to ventilate mass grievances. The one organized in Bombay was probably the biggest rally of the year

About 20,000 industrial and office workers bearing banners of the Socialist Party marched in procession through the streets to draw attention to their twin-demands for work and housing. The procession terminated at Chowpatty when Mr. Asoka Mehta addressed the demonstrators. He said that Government should step in to check growing unemployment. Housing accommodation should be provided for all workers. There was a threat to cut dearness allowance which should also be removed.

Kisan demonstrators organized by the Socialist Party in U P. and Bihar were also on a comparable scale A huge Kisan demonstration marched through the streets of Lucknow, for instance, shouting slogans 'Bread,' 'Clothing,' 'Houses' In the coal-fields of Bihar two marches were staged; 15,000 miners from different collieries went to Dhanbad in a procession. This march was organized chiefly as a mark of protest against the withdrawal of food grains distribution to miners. Other demands were later added fixation of standardized and graded wages and dearness allowance and revision of bonus and provident fund rules The march was preceded by a one-day strike in which 70,000 miners were said to have taken part

A case of Satyagraha organized by the Socialists at Etawah in U P may also be mentioned This took place outside the District Magistrate's bungalow when a group of one hundred Socialists demanded the withdrawal of all grain procurement cases and the establishment of ration shops for landless labourers.

A point of minor interest which is worth a note is the Socialist Party's acceptance of a challenge to run the textile Mills in Bombay Mr Asoka Mehta revealed in a speech in Surat that the Ministers concerned had asked the Labour leaders if they were prepared to take over the textile Mills to solve the textile crisis in the country The Socialist Mazdoor Panchayat expressed readiness to take them over It was three months since a plan was sent, Mr Mehta said, but no reply had been received

Coalition, Unity

An authoritative statement on possible coalition with the Congress was made by Mr Tilak Raj Chadha who said he was making the statement on behalf of Mr Prem Bhasin the acting General Secretary of the Party Speaking at Jullundur on 26th July 1950 Mr Chadha declared that the Socialists were prepared to form a coalition with the Congress Party if the Congress agreed to carry out the following seven points — 1 abolition of landlordism at one stroke without exhorbitant compensation 2 redistribution of land and creation of economic units of cultivation 3 procurement of food-grains on a rational basis and provision for the needs of the kisans at cheap controlled rates 4 compelling industrialists to change production policy so that they do not enjoy war-time profits 5. taking over of key industries—British undertakings to start with, which might be set off against sterling balances. 6 industrialization to be based more on planned economy than on foreign aid 7 refugee rehabilitation policy to be changed. Ejectment of refugee tenants must cease, and land must be allotted only to actual tillers on a collective and co-operative basis

Meanwhile Dr Ram Manohar Lohia declared in an interview in Bombay that the Socialists were ready to work with other Labour organizations on specific issues like bonus, profits etc. They might even go further and agree to a common policy on political and agricultural questions

It did not look as though there was any concrete response from the Congress Talks on Leftist consolidation were equally discouraging except for local understanding for specific purposes here and there On this question the attitude of the Socialist Party was somewhat as follows One might meet the problem in one of three ways, it said All parties could be dissolved and merged in one organization Or, all parties could dissolve and join the Socialists. Or, the Leftist parties could co-operate on specific issues, like fighting an election.

There was only one instance of a pact between the Socialist Party and another Left wing Party This was the so-called Khandala Pact with the Workers' and Peasants' Party But this was formally scrapped by the Socialists though not before the subject was debated for five long hours at a conference of the Executive of the Party and of the Maharashtra and Bombay City Regional Socialist Committees

The opinion of the leaders was sharply divided on the subject Some expressed themselves strongly in favour of scrapping the pact while a few stoutly defended its retention The latter group argued that the pact could be conveniently used by the Socialist Party for "tactical purposes" to persuade the masses to join the Socialist Party.

Mr. Jayaprakash Narayan, recalled his talks with Mr S S More, General Secretary of the Peasants' and Workers' Party, in 1948 and said that his talks had made him believe that though Mr More expressed some minor differences with the local Communist leaders, he accepted the philosophy, ideology and methods of work of the Communist Party

The Dhabhadi thesis, he claimed, had confirmed his belief Mr Narayan felt that in view of the policy adopted by the Peasants' and Workers' Party it would be futile to seek its co-operation He, therefore, personally did not favour the continuance of the pact

The resolution as finally passed said that in view of the developments that had taken place after the Khandala talks, particularly after the adoption of the so-called Dhabhadi thesis accepting the lead and directive of the Cominform by the conference of the All-India Peasants' and Workers' Party, in which the bona fides as well as the role of the Socialist Party had been questioned, the tentative agreement arrived at between the Socialist Party and the Peasants' and Workers' Party should not be endorsed

If the opposition parties cannot unite to fight the ensuing general election they can at least join together to ask that the elections would be free and fair The Socialists thus called a general conference and also made a series of suggestions to ensure that the elections would not be rigged in favour of the party in power For instance, the Socialist asked that there should be enough pooling booths at short, enough distances from every locality, plenty of transport or ban on the use of private vehicles by candidates for conveying voters, and the delimitation of multi-member constituencies with cumulative voting or as the second best alternative single member constituencies

Civil Liberties

The question of civil liberties remained very important all through It came to a head when Dr Ram Manohar Lohia was arrested while leading a protest demonstration in Delhi against the policy of the Nepal Government

Mr Jayaprakash Narayan came out with a statement in which he addressed a stern warning to the Government He observed that 'the Government by their present policy of suppressing civil liberties are feeding the fires of anarchy and it is clear that if they persist in this policy not all the ordinances and forces of coercion will be able to save the country from chaos All that Dr Lohia asked was that he should have the freedom to march peacefully in a procession

Mr. Narayan returned to the charge in a public speech later at Monghyr He declared that the Government were making a mockery of democracy by a deliberate curtailment of civil liberties They were trying to crush minority parties by an iron hand It was not an academic question, it was woven with the question of bread and happiness for the common people The people must have an opportunity of showing what was wrong and how the wrong could be righted

In a subsequent speech in Patna Mr. Narayan went so far as to threaten Satyagraha on the question of civil liberties. The argument often used by the Congress that civil liberties were not important under a national Government was dangerous inasmuch as in the absence of civil liberties there might be fascism. It was worthy of note, he said, that the constitution did not specifically guarantee civil liberties.

The General Council of the Bihar Provincial Socialist Party backed Mr Narayan by a resolution declaring that if the Bihar Government did not restore civil liberties the Party would be compelled to organize a mass satyagraha in the State

On foreign policy the attitude of the Party was explained in a statement issued by the National Executive in Bangalore The statement said inter alia "The Socialist Party stands for the ideals of world Government and peace, the pursuit of which necessitates adoption of a positive foreign policy. This policy comprises four elements Freedom of people, democracy and social justice, comparatively equal returns to human labour throughout the world and active neutrality

"India should not do anything that is likely to increase the influence of either the Anglo-American or Soviet blocs, but should strive to create a third camp of active neutrality

"India has not, however, played a positive role in the U N uptil now It has failed to give a lead on issues of world significance.

"Foreign capital should be welcome provided that no strings are attached and further that all such aid is brought in by the Government"

In a speech in Madras Mr Asoka Mehta further criticized the foreign policy of the Government He declared that Pandit Nehru and the Congress were in effect committing the country to one of the two power blocs a decision which was bound to involve India in a third World War if it came The London decision by which India remained in the Commonwealth, Mr Mehta further contended, was against the declared pledge of the Congress Acharya Narendra Dev took the same view In a statement in Lucknow he said that Pandit Nehru beyond indulging in platitudes has not produced a single argument to show how membership of the Commonwealth would help to promote peace in the world

So far as Hyderabad was concerned the Party's final solution was partition between Andhra, Maharashtra and Karnatak At a meeting in Patna the National Executive passed a resolution on this subject

The resolution expressed 'concern over the deteriorating situation in Hyderabad' The only effective way of dealing with the situation was to abolish military administation and hand over the administration to people's representatives The final solution was to merge the State into Andhra, Karnatak and Maharashtra

Pakistan

The attitude of the Party on this question was explained by Mr Jayaprakash Narayan in a statement issued from Hyderabad There were three main points which the statement made First, India must hold fast to its secular character and must give full security to its Muslim citizens no matter what happened in Pakistan Second, India should through friendly persuasion get Pakistan do the same for its minorities, grant them full freedom for practising their way of life Lastly, in case these efforts fail and the Government of Pakistan persist in its communal policy India must act on her own and take every measure to protect minority rights in Pakistan.

As a long term solution the Socialists proposed a treaty of amity providing for a common border, dual citizenship, joint defence and an integrated foreign policy

Some of the points in the Hyderabad statement were elaborated from time to time

Thus in a speech at Nagpur Mr Narayan declared that if the Pakistan Government failed to protect the minorities and persisted in their present policy India should move her armed forces into Pakistan or invite armed intervention from an international body As a first step India should put the whole case before the world particularly before neighbouring Muslim States and tell them exactly what the sources of conflict are Mr Narayan further insisted in a speech in Darbhanga that 'goondaism in Pakistan must be stopped forthwith' If Pakistan was apathetic the Indian Government should solve the question through military intervention. Mr Narayan then went on to explain what he meant by military intervention By military intervention he did not mean regular warfare between the two countries but only that goondaism should be brought to an end The minorities of East Pakistan were looking wistfully to India for help and India must protect them

Mr Lohia also spoke about the 'danger from Pakistan' at Lucknow This danger must be met by a common front of the major parties of India The Socialist Party, Mr Lohia revealed, was going to 'observe' March 19 to press for a firm policy towards Pakistan It was India's plain duty to protect the human right of the minorities in Eastern Pakistan and restore civilized conditions there, Mr Abinath Banerjee a Socialist from West Bengal urged the same line of policy He said in Calcutta that the Indian Government should make it clear to Pakistan that the Indian Union would not tolerate the state of affairs obtaining there for an indefinite period and that if necessary they would take military action to end the massacre of minorities in Pakistan

Mr Jayaprakash Narayan also urged the calling of a conference of representative Indians to evolve a common policy of action for solving the minorities problem India was in great peril and there must be unity and joint effort and no exploitation of the difficulties for party purposes In a national crisis such as war his Party was prepared to join the Government

Acharya Narendra Dev also said in a speech elsewhere that in the event of war the Socialists would join the Government

During the Nehru-Liaquat talks the National Executive issued a statement expressing the hope that the talks might lead to peace and result in a treaty of bilateral guarantees for minorities and human rights The statement also urged the convening of a conference of thinkers, artists, writers, etc for the purpose of creating a better atmosphere in the country

GENERAL COUNCIL MEETING

The General Council of the All-India Socialist Party opened its deliberations in Bangalore on 4th October 1949 under the Chairmanship of Mr Yusuf Meherally

In his presidential remarks, Mr Meherally reiterated that the time was opportune for the Socialist Party to attain power and find a solution for the present day evils like food shortage, inroads on the civil liberties of the people and general discontent among the masses with the existing economic and political conditions in the country

Mr Meherally criticised the Congress administration for not having fulfilled its promises made during the last elections and for 'tinkering with economic and political problems" He said that the economic situation was fast deteriorating, that it had to be stopped and Socialism was the only solution

On the question of "Left Unity," Mr Meherally emphasised the need for merging small Leftist groups under the Socialist banner Regarding the food problem, he observed that the Congress had produced "more reports than food." He emphasised that the Socialist Party was willing to co-operate with Government on the food front He urged that a "land army" or national militia of agricultural technicians should be constituted Mr Meherally also said that civil liberties were dwindling owing to the anti-social activities of Communists

In short, socialism was the only solution for present day economic and political ills

Mr Jayaprakash Narayan, General Secretary, presenting the report said that much headway had not been made but measures were being taken to organise the Socialist Party all over the country

It was suggested at the meeting that efforts should be made to bring about more co-ordination between unions of workers and of technical and supervisory staff It was also necessary to develop a sense of leadership among the workers themselves The workers must have a share in the control of industry

Mr Asoka Mehta proposed the appointment of a national planning commission to carry out an over-all survey of the country's economy

Mr Achyut Patwardhan enunciated the policy of the Socialist Party regarding Indian States The Socialist Party, he said, welcomed the establishment of Madhya Bharat and Rajasthan Unions Their Party, he observed, proposed the formation of new provinces, i e, Karnatak, Kerala and Gujerat Hyderabad, he said, must be broken down into its natural parts, Telugu areas to go to Andhra, Marathi areas to Maharashtra and Karnatak areas to Karnataka

Finally, with regard to Foreign Settlements in India, Mr Patwardhan said that it was the inalienable right of the people in these settlements to revolt against foreign tyranny and it was the duty of the Indian people to support them

The Party also came out with a policy statement in regard to the technique of Socialism The statement declared that taking into account the entire situation in the country and the future possibilities, democratic means appeared to be the only correct means to follow, "the only means that can be effective"

The statement, which also makes it clear that unity is impossible between the two main groups of Leftist parties in India, says "In India, the course towards Socialism seems to be fairly set The framework of Indian democracy is nearly complete, and though the picture is not that of full political democracy, there is large scope for democratic functioning."

"There is going to be adult franchise, and though there are limitations, civil liberties under the new Constitution still exist to a degree where the Socialist movement may grow steadily"

"The existing restrictions on the people's liberties are no doubt an impediment but their effect can be exaggerated Further enlargement of democracy is dependent largely on the growth of the Socialist movement itself The stronger this movement grows the fuller shall be our democracy."

ANNUAL CONFERENCE

The eighth annual conference met in Madras Mr Asoka Mehta was the year's president In his report to the Conference the General Secretary Mr Jayaprakash Narayan admitted that the achievements of the Party in respect of mass individual membership and collective affiliation of kisan panchayats and trade unions were "unsatisfactory"

Claiming that the Party had come out "with flying colours" through the "wave of communalism which manifested in Bengal," Mr Narayan emphasised the need for "faith in ourselves and in the ideals that we hold and the methods we follow," particularly in the next twelve "crucial months"

"The Socialist Party," Mr Narayan declared, "is not patterned after maxims mechanically lifted out of Marxian text-books, nor is the Party a puppet show the leading strings of which are in the hands of powerful agents outside"

Pointing out that since the declaration by the Party of its faith in democratic socialism, two attitudes had developed among the members Mr Narayan stated "A common and rather widespread attitude has been that of acceptance of the objective but without any living faith in it For these comrades, democratic socialism was intellectually satisfying perhaps, but it failed to evoke the emotional response which makes men die for their ideas This was due to the preoccupation with theories and neglect of values"

Mr Narayan reaffirmed the determination of the Party to "eschew the unclean and unscrupulous methods that the Communists follow" "There is evidence that there are some in our Party who too are not averse to these unclean methods," he said "These methods will be given no quarter and where reasonable proof is available, drastic action will be taken"

Mr Narayan warned against formation of groups within the party "mainly based on personal ambitions, sometimes under an ideological cloak"

He averred that conditions today were all in favour of a peaceful evolution of socialism

Mr Narayan expressed his confidence that "if the democratic forces in the country functioned properly and effectively," it would be possible to prevent "Fascism and to build up and preserve democracy"

Mr Narayan summed up the different kinds of activities of the Party under five main heads—organisation, propaganda, agitation, struggle and constructive work which, he said, were all included in the term "democratic method"

Refuting all reports of dissension in the Party ranks, Mr. Narayan expressed his "misgivings" about "the future line of action of Mrs Aruna Asaf Ali, member of the national executive."

Presidential Address

A great part of Mr Mehta's presidential address was taken up with recent international developments In his speech he advocated a "federative approach" by South-East Asia countries to all common problems

"The countries of South-East Asia must be encouraged to have common foreign and defence policy, and co-ordinated economy and its development," he said

"Such a comity of nations would prevent a vacuum from arising anywhere in South-East Asia that would be filled in either by Russian infiltration or American intervention.

"Democratic Socialists must also encourage and support the movement for World Government," he added "Villages, tehsils, wards and towns should be prepared to declare themselves, through democratic expression of the people's will, as parts of the domain of the World Government World Government can succeed, not precede, world consciousness"

"Democratic Socialism demands," he said, "a policy that will be wider than that of passive neutrality We cannot be inert spectators of nations losing freedom and peoples forfeiting liberties An active policy demands an ever widening circle of influence Our federative approach must grow"

"In international politics, as in national economy, he observed, lassez faire is dead Only a multitude of States, through intricate alliances and balance of power, can ensure peace. Where only two big Powers exist, there is no scope for honest brokers of peace except through the federal approach that would embrace the small States"

The Socialist leader stressed that there was no substitute to the United Nations in the prevailing conditions of the world as an effective means of ensuring security.

"The two big Powers are unlikely to oblige us by leaving us alone" Mr. Mehta said "Their interference in the affairs of the small nations will tend to grow. The sole effective safeguard lies in collective security. Until the third force gathers strength to assert the people's will for peace the UNO is the sole institutional expression of collective security"

Danger of Chaos

Mr Mehta than turned to domestic affairs. He said that "only a rapid movement towards socialism can make this country a bastion of peace, as our effectiveness in foreign policy will depend upon our influence over international policies," Mr Asoka Mehta warned against "reliance on big business"

He said "With war clouds gathering, the present economic policies of Government become doubly dangerous Reliance on big business in the context of war must lead India to chaos Profiteering and corruption, and people's apathy and irritation will grow as polar opposites We can face the world in arms, we can meet the challenge of invasion and infiltration, of external enemies and enemies within the gate, only if the people are united and they are filled with hope So long as the economic policy of Government continues to be shaped by the presses and pulls of just a score of men who hold 800 directorships and control, directly and indirectly, the main industrial and financial concerns in India, there can be neither unity nor hope Between 1939 and 1949 the concentration of economic power has grown and in the coming years, with the world's drift towards war, whether India gets sucked into its vortex or not, the concentration will be intensified The economic pyramid cannot stand, for long on a petering apex, that must lead to chronic disequilibrium

"The war crisis, if faced in the cavalier manner characteristic of the present Government, must lead to sky-rocketing of prices, pauperisation of the middle and lower classes, economic disintegration and political polarisation"

Mr Mehta urged a drastic revision in the economic policy, "a determined movement towards egality, austerity and socialism," which, he said, "can save the land from catastrophic centrifugal tendencies that have been the bane of our people for centuries"

Mere denunciation of the party in power would not result in new economic policies or in the achievement of a shift towards socialism, Mr. Mehta observed

"Its (the party in power) unenviable record undoubtedly provides a broad target for shafts of criticism On the negative plane, however, criticism will be met by counter-criticism and people's interest will flag Democratic life cannot be built up on trafficking in dirty linen", he said

The forthcoming general elections, Mr Mehta stated, could prove to be a mighty force of social churning "If the people are prepared to insist on fair elections and early elections, an easy way out can be found from the cul-de-sac that frustrates them today", he added

Mr Mehta cautioned "those in our ranks who yearn to live in the white-heat of struggle all the time" To these who favoured "the climate of revolution, and sought to intensify discontent," Mr Asoka Mehta's advice was

"There is enough discontent in the country. There is no point in stirring that brew stronger. What is needed is to bring courage and cohesion to the people to resist injustice The conservation of strength does not come through struggles alone".

In the programme of national revival to be considered by the conference, "the combative and constructive elements are meaningfully blended together," he observed

Socialism, in the peculiar conditions of India, had to be a vast cultural force that would restore to the country the social mobility and social equality it had not experienced for centuries, Mr Mehta said The distinctiveness of different regions and religions need not be destroyed, they must however become parts of an integrated whole as the varied petals of a flower.

Mr. Asoka Mehta asserted that in the conditions of today, "socialism is the sole basis of national survival".

He made a passionate appeal to the middle classes—whose "developing hostility towards the working people is not only short-sighted but self-destructive"—not to despair of the situation. The future belonged to the trained and the technocrats, he said. "If the talented men of the middle classes back the Socialist efforts at planned and rapid economic expansion, broadening avenues of useful employment would open out before them," he said

CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS

The following are among the more important resolutions passed at the National Conference

This Conference strongly feels that the Constitution of India falls considerably short of the democratic principles enunciated in its preamble The legislative authority is vitiated by bicameralism which has invariably proved to be a clog in the working of democracy and a hindrance in the implementation of people's wishes It is also adversely affected by the ordinance-making powers of the executive The Constitution, though federal in form, is unitary in spirit It is highly centralised in character and leaves only limited autonomy to the constituent units. Emergency powers are so wide in character that the Federal Executive may at its sweet will suppress liberties of the people and the autonomy of the States and with the consent of the Parliament establish its dictatorship over the States Princes are guaranteed privy purses and titles and Rajpramukhs are allowed to act as heads of States Unions and Civil Services are guaranteed high salaries Even representative institutions are not provided for Chief Commissioner's Provinces

Rights and liberties could be made more absolute Limitations, conditions and provisos, to which they are subjected in the interests of the general public and safeguarding of public order, morality, etc have deprived these rights of much of their guarantees Persons can be deprived of their life and personal liberty in accordance with the procedure laid down by the executive through ordinances and political opponents can be detained under preventive detention order

Provisions with regard to economic rights and property are very clumsily drafted and are definitely pro-capitalist in character While no guarantee is given against the exploitation of property-less workers, the interests of property-holders, specially capitalists, are safeguarded through specific guarantee with regard to compensation for the acquisition of property for public purposes Powers of legislative authorities of the States with regard to the acquisition for public purposes are restricted by the provision that all laws on the matter shall require the consent of the President

Directive principles of State policy are kept purposely vague They include no directive to the State with regard to the liquidation of landlordism and capitalism or the protection of economic interests of peasants who constitute the bulk of the Indian nation....

The Socialist Party pledges itself . to ensure full democracy through amendments in Parliament or by a new Constituent Assembly.

Economic Situation

The National Conference of the Socialist Party notes with regret the continuing economic stalemate in the country. Prices maintain their upward trend, essential goods are still scarce, capital formation is almost at a standstill and unemployment grows apace in the country....

There is all evidence to show that the Government have no consistent and coherent policy in economic matters. They rather fight shy of radical changes in the existing economic structure, as a result of which they have more and more gone for appeasing vested interests . .

This policy of retreat from nationalisation and planned production and appeasement of reactionaries, has resulted in a piecemeal, half-hearted and haphazard system of control which has helped only in giving spurt to black-marketing and corruption .

Further, the Government has yet not grasped the logic underlying the development of a backward economy Such a development demands an inspired campaign for investment of labour as a mainspring of economic development, and a planned direction of consumption based on austerity, and the need for saving, especially in the sectors where there is conspicuous consumption and mis-spending

Under the circumstances the National Conference is convinced that the only solution of the present impasse is through the nationalisation of the key sector of our economy .

The plan should define in clear terms the sector of industry and trade to be reserved for public enterprise. This should include banking and insurance and all basic industries It should lay down the terms on which the private sector will be allowed to function The ceilings on income should be fixed and the maximum rate of profit prescribed. Hoarding, black-marketing and corruption should be severely punished .

Such a plan should also prepare estimates of available natural resources, technical personnel, manpower and capital resources It must clearly lay down priorities for production, prepare patterns of consumption and determine the amount of savings Once prepared, the programme should be adhered to and enforced .

At the same time we must realise that for a major portion of our productive efforts we must depend on local resources and manpower The initiative for planning and control of this sector should be left to the local bodies enjoying the confidence of the local population It should be the responsibility of these bodies to mobilise the manpower and the resources in their locality and to fix targets of production These plans should be integrated into a general plan of production in the whole economy . .

Agrarian Resolutions

The crux of the Indian problem is the problem of millions of peasantry The history of the doings of the party in power during the last two years is a history of a great betrayal of the 300 million village-poor Millions of tillers have been dispossessed of the lands they were cultivating in spite of the protective laws and promises of Congress Ministries

This Conference directs all Party members to turn their attention towards villages The unnatural pre-occupation with urban problems of the current politics must be corrected by the Socialist Party Under the slogan one hour to the country millions should be mobilised for construction of a network of irrigation works, village roads, sanitation centres, etc Similarly struggles against oppression and exploitation should be organised on as wide a scale as possible Initiative must pass from the State to the people.

The National Conference of the Socialist Party views with grave concern the brutal suppression of peaceful efforts made in various parts of the country like Ferozpur, Jhabua, Giladhri, Salpalgur, Madura, Chengalput, Mangalpur in Puri, Piparia, Tinnevelly and Deoria to bring light and hope to the oppressed village-poor The manner of their suppression is a challenge to the democratic conscience of the country It is a cruel irony that people have to fight and face repression even for enforcing the accepted programme of the party in power No serious attempt has been made to enforce the demands of either the Hind Kisan Panchayat or even the recommendations of the Kumarappa Committee. Such criminal neglect and suppression of the cause of millions of village-poor are bound to nullify all efforts of national reconstruction.

This Conference directs the National Executive to secure the co-operation of such impartial and upright persons as Shri J C Kumarappa, Shri M L Dantwala, Rao Saheb Patwardhan and Shri Anand Kaushalyan in the investigation of these or other similar incidents.

Despite the Indo-Pakistan Pact the flow of refugees across the frontier shows no sign of coming to an end The return of a sense of security and confidence in the future in the mind of the minority communities which was the main justification for the Pact has not yet been achieved This Conference is of the opinion that to bring about an effective solution of the minority problem in the two Bengals it is necessary to eliminate the force of landlordism and capitalism, throughout India and Pakistan The Socialist Party while pledging to combat all manifestations of communalism in India appeals to the people of Pakistan to fight against the same forces in their own country An effective solution of the problem facing the people of Bengal requires the unification of East and West Bengal on the basis of the ultimate and inevitable unity of a Socialist India and a Socialist Pakistan.

This Conference notes with concern the mounting dimensions of the refugee problem in West Bengal without any serious effort to tackle it. This Conference welcomes the decision of the Union Government in taking full responsibility for refugee rehabilitation, but demands that this responsibility should be carried out in deeds in co-operation with all the State Governments and public organisations There must be an end to eviction of refugees from unused land. All available cultivable land not in use has to be taken over by the State and distributed among the refugees A serious effort must be made by the Government in co-operation with public initiative to reclaim cultivable waste land for refugee resettlement

This Conference views with grave concern the violation of civil liberties that have been occurring in some of the districts of the Madras State In the name of putting down Communist atrocities and ferreting out the underground Communist workers the Madras Government has unleashed a virtual reign of terror. In the Tanjore District particularly various units of armed constabulary have been drafted into the villages and the citizens subjected to acts of violence, harassment and humiliation This Conference calls on the Madras Government to immediately institute inquiries and to set up a Committee which will command public confidence to investigate into this police terror

The Labour Bills

The Socialist Party is firmly of the opinion that the Trade Unions Bill and the Labour Relations Bill, now before the Parliament, violate the fundamental trade union rights of workers and will not help to fulfil their basic human needs . .

The Socialist Party is opposed, in principle, to the main provisions of the two Labour Bills on the following grounds The right to organise into Trade Unions is completely denied to employees in domestic services The right of Association is denied to Civil Servants.... The right of collective bargaining of the working class through trade unions of their own choice has been reduced to a farce by the provisions for compulsory conciliation and compulsory arbitration and by illegalisation of effective strikes, all at the instance of the Government .. The Labour Bills in their present forms will inculcate a litigious spirit among the workers and will seriously hamper free collective bargaining Government interference at practically every stage of a labour dispute and particularly with the independence of the judiciary, is one of the most obnoxious features of the Bills These Bills will call for a revolt from the entire working class in the country, in view of the freedom given to employers to retrench workers These vital issues affecting the workers as to their very right to work and to have protection against unemployment and the right to live coupled with the freedom from hunger, will be outside the jurisdiction of the Tribunal, being not covered by the definition of "Labour dispute"

The Socialist Party, assembled in its National Conference, therefore, calls upon the Government of India to withdraw the two Labour Bills, in response to public opinion, and to introduce fresh legislative measures in Parliament for the enactment of a Labour Code ..

In case, the Government of India disregard the voice of the workers and the public opinion, and proceed, post-haste, as they appear to do, with enactment of the Bills, the Socialist Party calls upon its members and the working class in the country to raise an avalanche of opposition to them and to extend the fullest co-operation to the Hind Mazdoor Sabha in every item of this programme, including a call for such direct action as they may deem proper to give against the obnoxious Bills

Korea

....This Conference appreciates the stand taken by the United Nations to safeguard the territorial integrity and liberties against external aggression of the people of South Korea It, however, cannot fail to point out that an opportunity should have been given to the representative of the North Korean Government to explain the point of view of its Government before the Security Council reached its decision The Conference, however, deprecates the action of the United States Government in anticipating the decision of the Security Council and thereby reducing the decision to a mere endorsement of a fait accompli

This Conference records its strong disapproval of the unilateral intervention of the United States of America in Formosa Such an intervention is bound to further complicate the international situation and aggravate the tension between the two great powers

This Conference notes with regret the failure of the Government of India to adopt a positive policy in the recent Korean developments and use this opportunity to galvanise small nations into a peace bloc It however feels that mediation at this late hour is both desirable and possible The Conference therefore urges the Government to seek the co-operation of the free countries of South-East Asia and West Asia and raise the united voice of the peoples outside the two power blocs for the return of warring forces to 38th parallel and to reopen the Korea issue in the U N O

This Conference is firmly of the opinion that in the world that is fast drifting towards a new and more terrible war, it is the responsibility of the Asian countries to develop through federal approaches a peace bloc that would be able to play an effective role in world politics The policy of Third Force has to be conceived in a dynamic spirit of united efforts made for consolidating the diverse peoples of Asia and Africa into such an impregnable bloc of peace.

This Conference desires that the United Nations Organisation should develop into a more reliable instrument of collective security That, however, demands the admission of Communist China into the Security Council The refusal to permit the new Government of China to play its legitimate part in the councils of the world further disturbs the precarious balance of world politics While this Conference throws its full weight on the side of admission of Communist China to the United Nations, it cannot approve of the policy pursued by the Soviet Union of boycotting the United Nations In the United Nations, as elsewhere, the rules of democracy have got to be accepted and faith maintained in the effectiveness of public opinion

Colonialism

The re-emergence of Asia as an active force in world politics has been one of the most significant happenings of the post-war years and one, which is bound to have far-reaching effect on world history India, Pakistan, Burma, Ceylon and Indonesia have attained the status of independent nations while China has emerged as a new nation with a new leadership and ideology

Before the upsurge of the forces of nationalism during the war and the after years, the concept of colonialism in Asia has become obsolete and dead But it is unfortunate that in certain sectors of South-East Asia, Malaya and Indo-China, its fading vestiges seem yet to be entrenched, turning the whole of the S-E Asian region into a danger spot of international intrigue and conflict

This Conference sends its greetings to the peoples of Indo-China and Malaya in their struggle for independence and demands the immediate withdrawal of all foreign armies of occupation and other kind of foreign intervention The Conference also draws the attention of the peoples of these countries to the danger of armed Communist groups establishing their dictatorship and annexing these countries to the Soviet bloc The Conference is firmly of the opinion that only the strengthening of the Third Force of Socialism and Peace can avert such a situation and bring about real emancipation of the people in these countries

In this context, the National Conference of the Socialist Party views with alarm the recent extension of great power rivalry to Asia The frontiers of neutrality and freedom are ever contracting and more and more countries are being drawn in the vortex of this international struggle for power It has become difficult for newly freed countries of Asia to keep out of these rivalries, preserve their freedom and embark upon any programme of re-construction A close association with either of the Power blocs would drag them into military pacts and international arms race which can only ruin their already retarded economies, entail loss of initiative in international affairs and even spell the end of their national independence Such association by dividing the world into two hostile camps might even lead to another war

Instead of becoming victims of great power rivalry, the National Conference feels that it is high time that Governments and peoples of the free countries of S-E Asia came closer together and achieved co-ordination of policies in regard to foreign relations, defence, trade and economic development Such a consolidation and rallying of the forces of freedom and democracy, neutrality and peace, in Asia would transform the relationship of political forces and would help destroy the remnants of colonialism in this region, by generating a movement away from the colonial Powers and the Soviet Union This will ultimately compel these Powers to withdraw and by strengthening the forces of democracy and freedom also enable them to resist the Communist attempts to create chaos and disorder and eventually annex them to the Russian bloc

This Conference views with concern the fact that as in South-East Asia so also in North Africa there are still large areas which are under the domination of European Powers The fact that even five years after the Second World War and the functioning of the U N O for several years, millions of people should still be labouring under slavery and be victims of colonialism is indeed disturbing This Colonialism by some of the Western powers and consequent division of certain regions of the world into spheres of influence is one of the potent causes of international conflict In the present state of the world when a single spark might lead to a conflagration, there is a danger that these areas might be dragged into war irrespective of the wishes of these peoples

It is the inherent and inalienable right of these peoples to be completely free and to manage their own affairs in a manner that would enable them to become equal partners in a Society of free Nations. This Conference sends its greetings to the peoples of African countries like Tunisia, Morocco, Algeria and others who are struggling for freedom from imperial domination This Conference expresses its sympathy with the sufferings of these countries and assures them of its solidarity and full support in their struggle for emancipation

Racialism in South Africa

The National Conference of the Socialist Party expresses its strong sense of resentment at the policy of gross racialism followed by the South African Union Government

The South African Union Government . have continued vigorously following their arrant policy of racialism

The National Conferences of the Socialist Party warns the South African Union Government that their policy of racialism is opposed to all modern concepts of democracy and is a gross affront to Asian sentiments The resurgent spirit of new Asia will refuse to tolerate the insult. As this apartheid policy offends against the Declaration of Human Rights and the very principles and purpose of the U N Charter, this National Conference would appeal to all the democratic nations of the world to take steps to put an immediate stop to it, if necessary by expelling this racial-minded State from the community of the United Nations and denying it all outside help

The Socialist Party has been consistently demanding India's withdrawal from the Commonwealth The National Conference believes that when Indian nationals are in this manner degraded and discriminated against by a member of the Commonwealth, India's continuance as an equal co-partner in the Commonwealth is reduced to a mockery and the sooner the Government of India withdraws from it the better.

A SHORT HISTORY

The Socialist Party was really born in the Nasik Jail in the early thirties when Mr. Jayaprakash Narayan, Mr. Achyut Patwardhan and Mr. Asoka Mehta who were all fellow prisoners,—met together and talked about their plans for the future. The Party was formally launched in May 1934 in Patna with Mr. Jayaprakash Narayan as organizing Secretary. For many years the Party worked inside the Congress as well as outside. Inside the Congress it focussed attention on economic questions, fought for affiliation of working class and peasant organizations and worked tirelessly to give Congress ideology a Socialist orientation Socialists and Congressmen strongly disagreed on many points. But the Socialists had no desire to push their differences with orthodox Congressmen to the point where a rupture became unavoidable. The reason for this was fairly obvious. Socialism as an economic system was not feasible until the country was free from foreign rule. Hence the unity of the Congress as the spearhead of the national struggle had to be maintained at all cost. With the acceptance of office by the Congress, the rift between Socialist and orthodox Congressmen began to grow. Socialist criticism of the Congress became harsher and the general attitude of the Party more hostile The Socialists were opposed to the very idea of office acceptance, which connoted to them a slackening of the national will to freedom Then came the war, the 'quit India' movement, and finally the Government ban on the Socialist Party. Following the imposition of the ban the leaders of the Party went underground and from there kept up an unceasing attack on the British authority all through the war. At the end of the war the Congress Governments returned to power, and lifted the ban on the Socialist Party The Socialist leaders came out of their prisons and hiding places with a new consciousness of their strength and power in the country They were also full of self-confidence born out of their underground struggle against the British Power. The Party, in fact, underwent an experience which was akin to rebirth Under the circumstances, there did not seem to be any particular reason why the Socialists should not organize on their own now that freedom was nearly won and the old need for unity in the Congress did not exist Accordingly when the Party met in Conference at Kanpur in 1947 March it took the first step towards independence of the Congress It decided to drop the word Congress from its title and throw open membership of the Party, to Congressmen and non-Congressmen alike.

A resolution passed at the same Conference declared that the aim of the Party was to establish 'democratic socialism' as opposed to 'totalitarian communism'. If constitutional means failed to bring 'democratic socialism' the party would be forced to resort to a revolutionary struggle Even open dictatorship might become necessary for a short period before the country was safe for democracy.

THE COMMUNIST PARTY OF INDIA

General Secretary : Rameshwar Rao.

The Communist Party was started in 1924 but it did not become legal till 1948 when because of its support to the war effort the British Government lifted the ban which had been in force for nearly twenty years. The legalization order enabled the Party to meet for the first time in open session when it held a Party congress. This session framed a constitution for the Party and chalked out a programme.

The strength of the Party was about 7,000 in 1942. In 1946 it rose to 60,000. Today the Party claims a membership of about 80,000

The Communist Party controls the All-India Trade Union Congress, the All-India Kisan Sabha and the All-India Students' Federation. It is represented in the Bombay State Assembly by S A. Dange, in the Madras Assembly by K A Namblar and P. Venkateshwaralu, in the West Bengal Assembly by Jyoti Basu and Ratanlal Brahman, and in the Indian Parliament by Somnath Lahiri.

The parts of India where it has great influence are Malabar, Andhra, West Bengal, Telangana and the Punjab.

The Party conducts eleven weeklies in all the major Indian languages (Lokayug in Marathi, Janayug in Gujarati, Janayug in Hindi, Nayazamana and Azadi in Urdu, Janashakti in Kannada, Deshabhimani in Malayalam, Praja Shakti in Telugu, Swadhinata in Bengali and Janashakti in Tamil).

(N B —Most of these papers are now under a ban)

The unofficial English organ of the Party (the official organ is banned) is skilfully got up and ably edited though the mode of expression is sometimes very crude and intemperate The Party has an efficient publications department and a well-kept showroom The F S U (Friends of the Soviet Union) organizes periodical exhibitions and shows films with a political moral (N B —The Communists say that the F S U and the Communist Party are absolutely separate bodies) Besides holding innumerable meetings and conferences, the Communist Party observes Lenin Day on January 21, May Day on May 1, and October Revolution Day on November 7.

The Party derives its strength from the fanatical devotion of its members, their capacity for self-sacrifice, and the thoroughness and unanimity with which the party as a whole goes to work whenever the call is sounded

CONSTITUTION

As regards the structure and organization of the Party anyone who is above eighteen years of age and is a citizen of India can become a member of the Party provided he wholeheartedly believes in Communist philosophy, is willing to do field-work and agrees to carry out the programme chalked out from time to time.

Application for membership has to be endorsed by at least two members of the Party and when a candidate is accepted he must take an oath of loyalty to the Party and agree to pay a monthly contribution to the Party funds Discipline is very strict

The nucleus round which the whole structure is built is the 'cell' consisting of two or three members Their duty is to spread the faith among the people with whom they live Such 'cells' may be established in a mill or factory, workers' quarters, civic ward and so on, whenever conditions are propitious.

The hierarchy consists of a series of village, town, district and provincial congresses with their respective executive committees Each committee generally consists of five members with two in reserve and an elected secretary. The congresses may meet once a year while the day to day work between any two congresses is carried on by committees Periodical reports are sent from one body to another which is immediately above it.

The supreme body of the Communist Party of India is the All-India Party Congress which generally meets once a year. The Congress elects the Secretary of the Party and also its Central Committee which is the executive body of the Congress. The Committee makes a report to the annual Congress which among other things has the right to change the Party's policy or constitution. Each member of the Committee is assigned the responsibility for some particular aspect of Party work. For instance, one member is in charge of Party newspapers, another directs work in allied organizations, a third looks after accounts, a fourth conducts Party schools and study circles and so on. Within the Central Committee itself there is a smaller body called the Politburo whose Secretary is identical with the Secretary of the Party. The Politburo is the most influential body in the whole organization being for all practical purposes the maker of the Party's policy.

AIMS AND OBJECTS

The basic aim of the Party as defined in the preamble to the Constitution is 'the organization of the toiling masses in the struggle for the victorious anti-imperialist and agrarian revolution for complete national independence, for the establishment of a people's democratic state led by the working class, for the realization of the dictatorship of the proletariat, and the building up of socialism according to the teachings of Marxism-Leninism'.

In more concrete terms the aims as described in a statement issued by the Central Committee of the Party after the Congress in Calcutta in 1948 January are as follows The Congress has not met since. The programme then chalked out thus holds the field (See also report of Mr Dange's press conference given at the end of the section) —

(1) Complete severance from the British Empire and full and real independence

(2) A democratic government representing the workers, peasants and other sections of the petty bourgeoisie, opposed to collaboration with Anglo-American imperialism, allied to the democratic States working for peace and freedom of all nations

(3) A constitution based on adult suffrage and proportional representation, guaranteeing full freedom and democracy to the common man and fundamental economic rights.

(4) Self-determination to nationalities including the right of secession A voluntary Indian Union, autonomous linguistic Provinces.

(5) Just and democratic rights of minorities to be embodied in the constitution; equality and protection to the language and culture of minorities, all liabilities, privileges and discriminations based on caste, race and community to be abolished by law and their infringement to be punishable by law.

(6) Abolition of Princedom and feudal rule in the Indian States and the establishment of full democracy .. The urgent and primary task inside the States is abolition of Princedom and feudal rule and establishment of a people's Democratic State

Accession before that is only slavery of the States peoples both to Princely autocracy and to the bourgeois rulers of the Indian Union. It is only after the people of the States become completely free that they can have real liberty to decide the question of their relation with the rest of India At that stage the question will be decided by the wishes of the people.

(7) Freedom of the tribal and such other backward peoples from economic, cultural and political oppression, extension of full democratic rights to them, prompt and adequate State aid for their development, so that they may rapidly catch up with the advanced nationalities.

The people of all contiguous, compact, predominantly tribal areas shall have regional autonomous areas within the Provinces. .. The people of such areas or Provinces shall have the right to secede from the State by democratic verdict

(8) Co-operation between the Indian Union and Pakistan for economic help, military and political alliance for defence, to pursue a democratic foreign policy in co-operation with the democratic States against the Anglo-American bloc.

(9) Abolition of all forms of landlordism without compensation and distribution of land to the tillers of the soil Abolition of landlordism must mean confiscation of khas lands of the non-cultivating land-owners and ensure land to the sub-tenants and share-croppers Liquidation of rural indebtedness and abolition of usury; living wage for the agricultural labourer.

(10) Confiscation by the State of interests of foreign capital in banks, industrial and transport concerns, plantations, mines, etc, and nationalisation of these concerns.

(11) Nationalisation of big industries, big banks and insurance companies, guarantee of workers' control, minimum living wage, eight hours' day, etc

(12) Economic plan to develop India's resources and removal of Big Business from strategic economic points Control of profits in the industries in private hands.

(13) Repeal of all repressive legislation.

(14) Elimination of the bureaucratic administrative State apparatus and the establishment of a democratic administration with elected officials guided by people s committees.

(15) General arming of the people and the establishment of a democratic army.

(16) The right to free education and compulsory primary education.

(17) Equal democratic rights to women

EXPULSION FROM CONGRESS

During the Second World War, the Communist Party in India supported the British Government against the declared policy of the Indian National Congress though individual Communists were regular members of the Congress and subject to Congress discipline This open defiance of official Congress policy resulted in bitterness and conflict between Congressmen and Communists and a loud demand arose for the expulsion of the Communists from the Congress. A number of grave charges were made against the Communists such as disloyalty, spying, bribery, collusion with the British authority, betrayal of the country's cause, and so on. Mahatma Gandhi eventually asked the late Mr. Bhulabhai Desai to investigate the whole question and make a report. The report came out after some months and the conclusions to which the investigation pointed amounted to the virtual acquittal of the Communists of almost all the charges including the one about betrayal of Congress leaders into the hands of the police. A Congress sub-committee which included Pandit Nehru also investigated certain of these charges such as spying and came to the conclusion that most of them were frivolous and beneath notice.

The fact remains, however, that Communists were unable to rehabilitate themselves in public estimation though at the end of the War they began to conduct a virulent anti-British campaign and announced whole-hearted support of the National Government formed by Pandit Nehru. The new attitude though in complete harmony with orthodox patriotism failed to clear the Communists of the charge of unpatriotic conduct during the War. Neither did it save them from eventual expulsion from the Congress, a step which that body authorized in 1945. The Communist Party, however, did not immediately go into opposition to the Indian National Congress For a time the majority group in the Central Committee continued to offer partial support to the policy and programme of the National Congress, and later to the Governments the formation of which the Congress had authorized. In other words, the group pursued what orthodox Communists would call 'right deviation policy'. For instance, it emphasized the need for more production and disapproved of strikes as a political weapon. It joined the other parties in asking the peasant to grow more food when orthodox Communism would demand a frontal attack on the whole land system Finally, this group in the Party upheld the Congress acceptance of the British Government's plan of 1946 June as a contribution to national freedom Not all Communists in the Central Committee approved of the policy described above In fact, a minority group led by Mr B T Ranadive strongly opposed any sort of co-operation with the policies of the Congress or the Muslim League. This group denounced the Congress leaders as 'bourgois collaborators with British and American imperialism', and asked that the Party should return forthwith to its original faith and start organizing the masses for the seizure of power so that they might establish a real democratic Government in the country

COUNTRY-WIDE AGITATION

Whatever the differences in the inner councils of the Party, agitation among workers and peasants or in the country at large had never really ceased The Communists were throughout active in a hundred different places among the R I N ratings in Bombay, the Worli tribesmen in Dahanu, the textile workers at Amalner and Coimbatore, the railway workers at Golden Rock, and among the peasants of Malabar and Telangana. Strikes occurred in Kanpur, Madura and in the industrial areas of Calcutta There were peasant demonstrations in West Bengal, Bihar and U P. The Communists also initiated political movements in some of the former States of Rajasthan, and Central India, and in Kashmir and Travancore

Thus trouble was being stirred up from one end of the country to the other, just at the moment when the nation needed peace and quiet to consolidate its newly-won freedom. As time passed it was becoming clear that Government could not permit this agitation to go on without detriment to the larger economic and political interests of the country But it refrained from taking any action against the Party as a whole yet, for it was anxious to preserve the whole structure of political liberties which the nation had so long enjoyed What Government did do was to meet local agitation by local measures intended to maintain law and order and keep the economic life of the place going

It is also possible that part of the reason why the Government did not take decisive action was that the annual Communist Congress was due to meet in Calcutta later in the year, when the Party was expected to define its general attitude to the Government of the country and decide its course of action The Government was possibly aware of the struggle in the Central Committee and was waiting to see which of the two policies 'reformism' or 'revolution' would eventually prevail at the Party Congress Actually there was little doubt about the final issue. For all the time that the agitation was in progress opinion among the rank and file was slowly swinging away from the point of view represented by Mr. Joshi, the majority leader towards the policies advocated by Mr. Ranadive, the minority leader Feeling was greatly exacerbated by repeated clashes with the Government, and members came to the conference in a fighting, defiant mood. The result was a complete victory for the group led by Mr. Ranadive; Mr Joshi who had been the General Secretary of the Party for twelve long years failed to get elected to the Central Committee.

CRITICISM OF CONSTITUTION

The new Central Committee in a statement setting out the policy of the Party criticized the draft constitution of India:

"The Constituent Assembly manned by the same leaders as lead the 'National Government' has prepared an authoritarian constitution The toiling people will not get anything except the right to vote at long intervals. It provides for arrest without warrant and detention without trial It authorises the Provincial Governors to act in their discretion, legislate by ordinance and rule by proclamation. It makes the reactionary provision for Second Chamber in the Provinces, allows for nomination of members to the Second Chamber by Governors, thus ensuring that the vested interests and their spokesmen will get a dominant voice in the Chamber.

"The model constitution for the Provinces does not accept the basic right of nationalities to self-determination, it does not provide for proportional representation without which the progressive political parties and the various minority groups cannot get fair representation. It does not provide for regrouping of tribal and other backward areas and formation of autonomous regions or Provinces without which these backward people cannot economically and culturally protect and develop themselves.

"Under the constitution the basic and fundamental rights of the toiling people, such as right to work, right to living wage, equal pay for equal work, right to old age, sickness and unemployment aid, do not find a place as fundamental rights constitutionally guaranteed by the State.

"But the property and privileges of the vested interests are granted legal and constitutional protection by a clause in the fundamental rights that no property of a person or corporation shall be taken over for public use except by payment of adequate compensation, thus preventing through a constitutional guarantee all plans of nationalisation of industries including foreign concerns."

ATTACK ON GOVERNMENT

The Central Committee then turned on the National Government including in one wild orgy of denunciation the Government's economic, social, political and foreign policy

"Since August 15 the so-called National Government has been carrying out the plan of the Indian bourgeoisie to oppose nationalisation, suppress the workers, intensify their labour and freeze wages in the name of stopping the wage-price spiral

"It is ruthlessly suppressing all peasant movements to the complete satisfaction of the landlords Even its halting agrarian reform proposals are saddled with compensation to the landlords and with no provision for land to the tillers. They retain landlordism under a different form The proposed agrarian legislation is an attempt to split the peasant movement and to broaden the basis of the present bourgeois Government.

"The Provincial Governments under the guidance of the Central Government have passed Public Safety Acts which are freely used against the democratic movements of the workers, peasants and students.

"The so-called National Government is crushing the States people's struggles against the Princely order and suppressing agrarian struggles in the native States It is saving Princedom and side-tracking people's attention from democratic struggles by parading accession as a big popular triumph . .

"The policy pursued by the Nehru Government is one of collaboration with British and American imperialism The British and American imperialists are securing strategic positions in India by 'agreement' with the 'National Government' who has agreed to no discrimination against foreign capital but encouragement to it, no nationalisation, no tariffs which are not agreed to, and joint concerns for the exploitation of the Indian people. This policy logically means no full-scale industrialisation of India but the growth of only such industries as suit the interests of American and British capitalists.

"The foreign policy of the Nehru Government illustrates the same collaboration

"From the very beginning Pandit Nehru adopted a line of forming a so-called third bloc—a line which represented the interests of Big Business inasmuch as it kept India away from the Anti-Imperialist Democratic Camp At a time when the Anti-Imperialist Democratic Camp is engaged in a life-and-death struggle with the Imperialist Camp led by American imperialism Nehru refuses to take the side of the former camp and poses neutrality. This so-called neutrality between the aggressor and the non-aggressor, between the war-monger and the peace-loving and between the expansionist and the freedom-loving camps is only a mask to cover collaboration with the Anglo-American imperialists.

"Recent months have torn the mask of 'neutrality' from the Nehru Government's foreign policy. On all crucial issues the Indian delegation in UNO, has taken an anti-democratic and pro-imperialist stand. It voted for "Little Assembly" devised to paralyse the democratic forces inside UNO, it voted against immediate withdrawal of foreign troops from Korea, and on the question of representation of Ukraine in the Security Council it allowed itself to be exploited by American imperialism. . . .

"The British imperialists are giving open hints about an anti-Soviet bloc including their overseas Empire Along with this come reports about an alliance of South-East Asian countries embracing India, Pakistan, Burma and Ceylon in agreement with Britain. There are also reports about Military Missions from Britain coming to India to keep her defence properly organised.

"This shows how the 'National Government' representing the Indian bourgeoisie is dragging India into an anti-Soviet and anti-democratic bloc, in a scheme of defence of American and British Empires in the East"

So ran this astonishing indictment The speeches made at the Congress, the resolutions passed, and finally the statement of policy issued by the new Central Committee left no room whatever for any compromise. To the Government watching the proceedings of the Congress the statement looked like a declaration of war. It had to take warning.

ACTION AGAINST COMMUNISTS

A month later the machinery of the Government began to move against the Communist Party. On March 28, 1948, the Government of West Bengal declared the Communist Party illegal in that Province, and almost immediately arrested a number of leading Communists The main charge of the Government was that the Communists were arming the people for the purpose of capture of power. On April 2, the Government of Bombay rounded up seven Communist leaders including Mr S. A Dange, President of the All India Trade Union Congress and Mr S S. Mirajkar, President of the Provincial Trade Union Congress The authorities explained that the activities of the arrested men were dangerous to public safety and tranquillity The Government of Madras which had for long been harassed by Communist activity in Malabar and the Andhra Districts tightened its security measures still further, and sent troops to some of the disturbed areas. Action against the Communists extended in fact to almost all the States in India. Simultaneous arrests of Communists were effected at Cuttack in Orissa, Nagpur and Amraoti in Madhya Pradesh, Jharia and Patna in Bihar, and at Simla in the Punjab

A year later the Government struck again The immediate cause of the Government's action against the Communists this time was the preparations which were then in full swing for a general strike on the railways.

The projected railway strike proved in fact to be a turning-point in the history of the relations between the Government of India and the Communist Party The Government took the view that the railway strike agitation simply represented the culminating point in a series of actions the whole purpose of which was to create chaos and anarchy so that the Communists might be enabled to seize political power in the country The Communists, of course, denied the charge: they said that the railway strike was a trade dispute pure and simple with no ulterior political objective.

UNDERGROUND ACTIVITY

The Government however was unable to eradicate Communist activity, for such of the leaders as escaped arrest went underground where Communist agitation went on without a break Every day the newspapers reported acts of rioting, murder, loot, arson by persons 'described as Communists' It was never easy to say whether such acts were committed by Communists properly so-called or by bandits intent on loot or devilry Whoever was responsible there were parts of the country where law and order was continually breaking down Among such areas might be mentioned West Bengal, chiefly Calcutta, Andhra and Malabar in Madras, the Ahmednagar District of Bombay, the eastern parts of U P where a party called Soshit Sangh was passing under Communist influence, and the rural parts of Amritsar District in the Punjab where Communism seemed to have a special appeal to refugees Trouble also spread to the Indo-Burma border with Manipur as the focal point of trouble The case of Telangana lying on either side of Hyderabad-Madras border deserves special mention Over large stretches of the countryside the Government machine simply ceased to function and with little or no authentic news coming through it was impossible to make out what was really happening there One set of reports described the conditions as sheer reign of terror where bandits were running wild in an orgy of murder and loot A second set of reports declared that the cultivators had taken over the land and had set up a sort of peasant communism which they were prepared to defend by force of arms if necessary Authentic reports were indeed few and far between: it was as though an iron curtain had been put up between Telangana and the rest of the country The case of Telangana was also unique in the sense that was the only place for which the Communists accepted full responsibility They declared that a 'new order' had been set up in the area and asked that independent-minded journalists should be sent there to see things for themselves Altogether Telangana presented an awkward problem for the Governments of India, Hyderabad and Madras Both Hyderabad and Madras sent periodical police expeditions to the area to restore Government authority But any concrete results so achieved proved to be of a wholly temporary character The Andhra Provincial Congress Committee and the Government of Madras split on the question of how to tackle the problem The A P C C insisted that the Central Government should take over the responsibility while the Madras Government claimed that their forces were adequate enough to cope with the situation and no special help was needed from the Central Government Eventually, a conference of the officials of the Government of India, the Government of Hyderabad and the Government of Madras met in Hyderabad and prepared a plan of campaign in which economic measures were mixed in with police action

TROUBLE IN JAILS

Elsewhere Government action against the Communists never ceased Outstanding members were constantly rounded up under the various public safety and preventive detention measures The total number of persons in detention in all India was a little under 2,500 on 15th August 1949 Madras had the largest batch with 640, West Bengal had 500, U P 230, Punjab 250, Bombay 350, Bihar 190 and Delhi 5

The detention of prisoners without trial gave rise to a secondary wave of agitation Inside the jails there were frequent clashes between the detenus and the jail officials Outside the relatives of the detenus and sympatizers organized many demonstrations asking that either the detenus should be released or that they should be brought to trial The detenus generally put forward three demands —That their families should be given an allowance, that they should have free access to legal advisers, and that they should have ample supply of specific newspapers and periodicals. The non-fulfilment of these demands sometimes led to hunger-strike Government for its part charged the detenus with indiscipline such as refusal to attend monthly parades or disrespectful behaviour towards jail officials All in all there were violent outbreaks which often resulted in casualties, both killed and wounded Thus in Sabarmati Jail in Bombay State 2 persons were killed and 42 injured both police and prisoners when the police opened fire during a disturbance. In Cuddalore in Madras one person was killed and more than 80 injured In the Calcutta Presidency Jail one person was killed and 49 injured In Dum Dum 3 were killed and 18 injured Among the demonstrations outside the most spectacular was the one organized by women relations of detenus in Bombay when the demonstrators invaded the Secretariat shouting slogans and showering pamphlets.

Four State Governments put an outright ban on the Communist Party These were Madras West Bengal, Hyderabad and Travancore-Cochin. The reason given was that the Communist Party had for its object 'interference with the administration of law and order and constituted a danger to public peace' To quote parts of the Madras communique announcing the ban "For nearly 18 months, the provincial Government have watched the situation very carefully to see if the Communists of this province showed any inclination to change their violent tactics and adopted constitutional and peaceful methods. They even released hundreds of persons who had been in detention

"Government, however, regret to note that there has been no evidence whatever of any change of attitude on the part of their leaders or members The Communists, including some of those who have been released, have spared no opportunity to create trouble . .

"During the last three months, the activities of the Communists have extended to general attacks on the police and open defiance of authority

In other States there was no legal ban as such on the Communist Party but the provisions of the public safety and preventive detention acts were frequently put into motion, and the Communists had only a sort of semi-legal existence.

A crucial question affecting the Communists' rights was decided by the Bombay High Court on 5th February, 1950 when it gave a ruling that the Communists had a right to state their point of view publicly The question arose when two papers appealed against an order of the Government demanding security from one paper and forfeiting the security of the other The relevant parts of the judgement read as follows: 'The masses should be politically educated They are entitled to know the pro and the con of every political system and ideology So long as it is legal for a particular party to put its views and principles before the people it would be improper for the court to interfere with that right not only of the party but also of the people'

One of the articles in question pointed out the virtues of the Communist Party and Communist philosophy and told its readers how the Communist Party helped the Chinese to achieve their freedom and to defeat American imperialism and the Fascist tactics of Chiang Kai-shek. Tribute was paid in the article to the Communist Party for eradicating the Zamindari system in China and giving the land back to the tillers

The judges in their verdict observed the writer did not contend the regime of the Congress was like the regime of Chiang Kai-shek. The Congress itself was pledged to the abolition of Zamindari

GOVERNMENT CHARGES

Four Governments brought out pamphlets describing Communist activity—Madras, Bombay, Hyderabad and the Central Government The Madras pamphlet which was entitled 'charge-sheet against the Communists,' alleged that since 1948 the Communists had been responsible for 17 cases of murder, 18 attacks on police, 16 cases of loot and arson and many cases of attempted sabotage on the railways.

The Bombay Government's case against the Communists might be summarized as follows The Communists have formed an underground organization, they organize cells in factories and other institutions, they collect funds, they infiltrate non-Communist and non-Political organizations and teachers', students', women's organizations, they forge a common front with other parties, they are active in areas where conditions are backward and they carry on propaganda through cultural squads

The Hyderabad booklet which is entitled 'Communist Crimes in Hyderabad' sets out in detail the activities of persons alleged to be Communists

"From August 15, 1946, to September 13, 1948" the booklet says, "they (Communists) brutally murdered nearly 2,000 persons, attacked 22 police outposts, seized and destroyed village records, manhandled a large number of village officials, burnt 'chadris' and Customs outposts, captured 230 guns, looted or destroyed paddy and robbed cash and jewellery worth more than a million rupees"

It adds "They attempted large-scale disruption of communications and lines of supply and transport and steadily and systematically adopted the technique of guerilla fighting with the arms and resources at their disposal"

The booklet alleges that "in order to keep the people under their control, the Communists seized land belonging to absent owners who had fled during the time of the Razakar atrocities, and distributed the property among their supporters During the time of the police action they took advantage of the vacuum created and sought to strengthen their hold, particularly on the Telangana districts They spread a reign of terror in the countryside As these villagers gradually came under the control of the Union forces, they became desperate and stopped at nothing to re-establish their control or to defeat the purpose of the Government"

The Government of India's pamphlet was the earliest It quoted a large number of examples to prove that 'the Communists have preached and planned violence on a large scale' The pamphlet said, 'The Communists have declared war on the State To train their men to defeat the armed forces they have issued detailed instructions for the formation of guerilla bands and shock brigades' The pamphlet reproduced extracts from Communist writings "Every day practical exercises on silent killings must be done, one party attacking a police station and the other defending; concealment, camouflage, taking cover both in day time and night, crawling practice" "The weapons dealt with are rifle, shot-gun and revolver bombs" "Tommy gun, sten gun and revolver are included in the higher course" "The activities of the guerillas mean the raiding of police stations, zamindars' or jotedars' houses, sabotaging enemy communication lines, cutting of telephone and telegraph lines" "Refuse to obey the orders of the Nehru Government Turn your guns and bayonets on the Congress Fascists, arrest the hated officers" "Set fire to the whole of Calcutta and the whole of Bengal" (During the police action in Hyderabad) "The goondas (Indian Union Troops) should not be allowed to escape Loyal Razakars will be given shelter."

It is needless to say that many of the allegations of loot, murder or sabotage the Communists angrily repudiated The ordinary man was not always able to make up his mind The newspapers throughout used such expressions as 'alleged Communists', 'persons described as Communists,' 'persons believed to be Communists' and so on How many of them were Communists properly so-called? And how many were mischief-makers and freebooters masquerading as Communists? That the Government itself was aware of this difficulty was shown by a speech made by Sardar Patel during a visit to Travancore-Cochin. "Young man who were grustrated because they did not have jobs," said the Sardar, "should not be allowed to go astray under the respectable name of Communism"

SCHISM IN PARTY

Off and on Government spokesmen appealed to the Communist Party to give up sabotage and violence and adopt constitutional ways Thus the Prime Minister of Orissa appealed to the Communist member of the Orissa Assembly to come out of his hiding and fulfil his constitutional duties as member of the Legislature The Government for its part was prepared to give him every freedom The Minister for Police in U P declared that if the Communists gave up violence and sabotage and adopted constitutional ways the Government would remove all restrictions and give the Party full opportunity to do its work in the open

All the time evidence was piling up that the Party itself was engaged in one of its periodical mental stock-takings out of which a new policy could emerge News of differences among Party members was coming through—serious differences which resulted in resignations or expulsions Thus early in 1950 it was reported that twelve members from Maharashtra had resigned because they thought that the policy of the Party was much too 'sectarian' The Home Member of the Bombay Government told a press conference that many Communist detenus had come forward to give an undertaking not to participate in subversive violent activities and had subsequently been released One newspaper came out with the report that many detenus faced expulsion as they disobeyed Party 'instructions' to discredit the Nehru Government by creating trouble inside the jails The rift was also noticeable in Madras There were two sections in every jail The cleavage was indeed so deep that the prisoners themselves had asked that they might be allotted separate blocks Many had given an undertaking not to participate in lawless activity if released The differences between the two groups were even more pronounced in Assam where the whole Party had split from top to bottom Many prominent members had been suspended or expelled. Many more had voluntarily resigned.

Then came news of the expulsion of an ex-General Secretary of the Party Mr P C Joshi It appeared that Mr Joshi was so very out of touch with Party developments that he learnt of his formal expulsion from the Press In a statement which he then issued he strongly condemned the Communist Party leadership which 'was expressing itself in terrorist acts'

It was clear that the Party as a whole was moving towards a more moderate and constitutional point of view Three causes might have led to this change of attitude There was probably a vague realization that unconstitutional methods had been tried and had been proved to be a failure, second, the Party might have been influenced by Communist China, and the broader-based policies of the Mao regime Third, there was the trenchant criticism by a 'Cominform' periodical which described the methods of the Indian Communist Party as so many essays in text-book revolution

THE NEW POLICY

The change in outlook was expected to work out in some such way as this —1 A united front of all Leftist Parties against Anglo-American imperialism, 2 An alliance with rich peasantry (not landlords), middle business and progressive capitalists, 3 The preparation of a blue print which would take into account the interests and aspirations of all these different elements in the community. Thus while the Communists will insist on the abolition of the Zamindari system and the confiscation of the big landed estates, they will not insist on the total nationalization of land Similarly while they will press for the nationalization of key industries they will not ask for the total abolition of private property in industry. Broadly speaking this is also the sort of programme that Mao Tse-tung has popularized in China, also called 'the new democracy.'

To set the seal of approval on the new policy the Politburo of the Communist Party was expected to meet somewhere in Central India. Mr. Ranadive the General Secretary of the Party and the author of the present policy was expected to confess his errors of judgement, while Mr P C Joshi the ex-General Secretary would be readmitted into the Party and given a 'clean bill of health' after an investigation. A new leadership would emerge with Rajeshwar the Communist leader from Andhra as the new General Secretary It might be recalled that Rajeshwar presented a thesis advocating the association of the middle classes with Communist aspirations at the last open meeting of the Communist Party at Calcutta in 1948 His thesis was rejected at the time, while that of Ranadive was accepted

These forecasts proved to be correct when the Party's headquarters issued a communique on the question in Bombay on 19th July, 1950. The communique announced a change in Party policy from "violence and sabotage" to a new movement of agrarian reform for "national liberation" "The new policy will be based upon the experience of the national liberation movement in China"

The communique also announced the reconstitution of the Central Committee and the Politburo

The old Politburo had been following a "Left sectarian" policy not in line with Marxist-Leninist principles "leading to disruption in the unity of the peasantry in the countryside and keeping them helpless in the face of brutal repression"

The communique announced that Mr Rajeshwar Rao, the Andhra Communist leader, had replaced Mr B T Ranadive, till recently General Secretary of the Party, who was removed from office "for adopting a policy of Left adventurism"

It said the newly constituted Central Committee recently met to take stock of the situation in the country vis-a-vis the Party's policy.

"The Central Committee has decided to ensure full inner-Party democracy coupled with strict centralism in the functioning of the Party organisation"

The Central Committee, said the communique, also adopted a resolution tendering an apology to Mao Tse-tung, President of the Chinese Republic for "utterly wrong, irresponsible and slanderous criticism made against him by the old Politburo and withdrew them unreservedly."

UNITED FRONT

An authoritative exposition of the Communist point of view was given by Mr S A. Dange, the Communist leader and Vice-President of the World Federation of Trade Unions at a press conference on 19th July, 1950 in Bombay. Mr Dange had been released from prison two days before As it was the first time that a Communist publicly explained his party case after the Calcutta Congress early in 1948 it is worth-while reproducing the full text of his statement

"The people have been wanting to know whether the Communist Party still follows the former line," Mr Dange said "But what do the people understand by our former line? The impression that was given by Government propagandists and certain newspapers was that the Communists in India were interested in doing nothing but planning armed insurrections anywhere and everywhere, at all times and at almost every street corner

"Unfortunately that impression was strengthened to some extent by the ill-planned behaviour of some part of the leadership of the Communist Party. I wish to convey that that impression is wrong, and I wish to state most emphatically that in the present conditions we do not hold that a successful armed insurrection is the only way to overthrow the Nehru Government and establish a People's Democracy in India. That definitely is not on the agenda of the Communist Party today Appropriate changes have been made in the leadership of the Party

"As you are aware, our former policy was characterised as Left-sectarian, which in its popular interpretation means, we consider many of our friends as not being our friends but as our enemies That policy has now been changed For instance, sections of peasants and even of manufacturers agreeing to our policy being carried out on a democratic basis were treated by us in the past as not our friends Already the General Secretary has been changed and has been replaced by another member of the Central Committee"

The former General Secretary, Mr B T Ranadive, had not been expelled from the Party. He was still an "honourable member" of the Party.

Explaining the immediate programme of the Communist Party of India, Mr Dange said "It is dependent on the question whether the present Government is going to allow us all the democratic liberties to function as a political party—liberties which are allowed to every political party in a really democratic country.

"We do wish to solve many of our problems such as food, employment, work and wages for all the toiling masses We do wish to utilise all the democratic methods that may be available, including the most legal, because a democratic method is not necessarily always legal For instance, Gandhiji's satyagraha was not perfectly legal, yet it was democratic A demonstration, for instance, is disliked by the present Government But we may resort to it At present the law is such that it is difficult to find out what is legal and what is illegal My lawyer friends tell me that what is legal in the morning becomes illegal in the afternoon sometimes"

Mr. Dange added "We wish to utilise the promised elections, if we are allowed to do so We do wish to utilise the legislatures also For this purpose, we want all democratic parties to come together and form a united front—a united front against (1) Anglo-American capital, (2) against those who do not agree to the abolition of landlordism, by the abolition of which alone the food problem in the country can be solved, (3) against those who do not agree to the abolition of the power of the big syndicates who have ruined every economic nerve in this country, (4) against those who do not support the demands for minimum living conditions for the toiling masses

"We also wish to establish along with this united front a united trade union and kisan organisation, and in the establishment of these, we do not wish to exclude any party which would satisfy the above conditions Summing up, therefore, I should say that we wish to build a democratic united front of all democratic parties in order to achieve a real People's Democratic State in India That is as far as I understand myself and my party"

Answering questions, Mr. Dange denied that Communists were responsible for the recent frequent derailment of trains "We have never derailed trains because we never started guerilla warfare in the country Derailment of trains has a place in Communist strategy when guerilla warfare has begun against the State."

Explaining the term "ill-planned behaviour," Mr Dange said that, for instance, a call for a strike when it was not mature would amount to "ill-planned behaviour" Certain people had used acid bulbs and some of those who had used them were Communists But the Communist Party was realistic enough to think that acid bulbs were not good enough to overthrow any Government in the world, least of all a Government which was spending 60 per cent. of its entire revenue on the armed forces

Mr Dange said that there were differences on matters of policy within the Communist Party. But there were no distinct and strong groups. Party policy details were under discussion."

The new outlook was reflected in a Central Committee directive to Communists on the eve of the Independence day of 1950 The Party appealed to 'all the anti imperialist and democratic sections to unite in a democratic front to solve the day-to-day problems of the people, such as, unemployment, rising prices, rationing difficulties, refugee rehabilitation, and restoration of full civil liberties' The statement also urged the Congress leaders to quit the Commonwealth and concede full civil liberties to the people.

The developments in Communist policy outlined above did not appear to have made any difference to the attitude of the Government to the Party This attitude was fully defined by Sardar Patel in the course of an answer to a question in Parliament Sardar Patel maintained that whatever the tactics of the Party might be so far as fundamental policy was concerned the Party was still wedded to violence Its object remained the same as before—the overthrow of the Government by force of arms any time an opportunity presented itself As long as the Party believed in violent methods the Government for its part could not change its policy

THE WOMEN'S MOVEMENT

THE last 20 years have seen many changes in the position of Indian women in social, cultural and political spheres They have come a long way since the early years of the Home Rule Agitation (1914-1917), when first they awakened to a consciousness of their rights. From that day onward there has been no looking back and the movement, gaining momentum with the years, has achieved remarkable results The measure of success attending the endeavours of women in this country during the last two decades can best be gauged from a study of the rights, social and legal, no less than political, that they have acquired since the movement was launched.

Today the Indian woman is not only represented in almost every field of national activity but is also making her mark in international affairs. At home, a woman—Rajkumari Amrit Kaur—holds the Health portfolio in the Central Cabinet. Abroad, another woman—Mrs Vijayalakshmi—is India's ambassador to the United States of America A woman has been a provincial governor and minister, there are women members in the Constituent Assembly and provincial legislatures; women have figured on delegations to U N. and have represented India on the U N.E S C.O and the various subordinate organisations of the United Nations There are women doctors, lawyers, engineers, architects, artists, journalists, business executives and nurses.

Although Indian women hold important posts in various Government Departments, the problem of employment is very acute Retrenchment in recent years has thrown so many men out of jobs in the towns that women's employment becomes a secondary matter. Apart from that, the prejudice against women working still persists to a great extent. It would, however, be worth while mentioning that the majority of Indian women work a full day on the land and in the factories Wages of women working in factories are considerably lower than those of men The appalling working conditions of women in coalfields is a reminder that equal rights have not yet been won and the struggle still continues

WOMEN'S SUFFRAGE

It would not be wrong to say that Indian women have accomplished much more in much less time than the women of the West, and seemingly with much less effort and opposition, the last because of the sympathetic attitude of political leaders and elder statesmen as far back as 1917 It was in that year that the first claim for suffrage for Indian women was made in an address presented to Mr. Montague at the historic All-India Women's Deputation, which waited upon him in Madras on December 18, 1917 The section referring to enfranchisement merits full quotation.—

"Our interests, as one half of the people, are directly affected by the demand in the united (Hindu-Muslim Reform) scheme (I. 3) that 'the Members of the Council should be elected directly by the people on as broad a franchise as possible,' and in the Memorandum (3) that 'the franchise should be broadened and extended directly to the people.' We pray that, when such a franchise is being drawn up, women may be recognized as 'people,' and that it may be worded in such terms as will not disqualify our sex, but allow our women the same opportunities of representation as our men. In agreeing with the demand of the abovementioned Memorandum that a full measure of Local Self-Government should be immediately granted, we request that it shall include the representation of our women, a policy that has been admittedly successful for the past twenty years in Local Self-Government elsewhere in the British Empire. The precedent for including women in modern Indian political life has been a marked feature of the Indian National Congress, in which, since its inception, women have voted and been delegates and speakers, and which, this year finds its climax in the election of a woman as its President. Thus the voice of India approves of its women being considered responsible and acknowledged citizens; and we urgently claim that, in the drawing up of all provisions regarding representation, our sex shall not be made a disqualification for the exercise of the franchise or for service in public life."

The year 1918 was devoted to converting the Government forces to the justice and expediency of Indian Woman Suffrage, but this proved a more difficult matter. It was a disappointment first, that, though the Secretary of State had given a sympathetic reply to the All-India Women's Deputation, yet when the Scheme of Reforms, drawn up by him and Lord Chelmsford was published, no mention of women was made though the widening of the electorate was one of the reforms suggested. When the Southborough Franchise Committee was formed to investigate the suggestions regarding the franchise in this Scheme, the women suffragists took every means to bring to the notice of the Committee all the evidence which pointed to the need for, and the country's support of, the inclusion of women in the new franchise.

FRANCHISE GRANTED

After the introduction of the Government of India Bill into Parliament in July 1919, a number of Indian deputations proceeded to

London to give evidence before the Joint Select Committee of Members of both Houses of Parliament which had been appointed to place the Reforms on a workable basis. Mrs. Annie Besant, Mrs Sarojini Naidu and Miss Herabai Tata were heard by the Committee in support of the extension of the franchise to women in India

The House of Commons decided that the question was one for Indians to answer for themselves and while retaining the sex disqualification in the Reform Bill they framed the Electoral Rules in such terms that if any Provincial Legislative Council should approve by a resolution in favour of women's franchise, women should be put on the electoral register of that Province. This was the only provision regarding franchise matters which might be changed before a 10 years' time limit Until after that period women were ineligible for election to Legislative Councils.

Madras led the way in the matter of women's franchise and under the operative provision of the Government of India Act, women were enfranchised. Other provinces followed suit, and by the time of the inquiry by the Simon Commission seven out of the nine provinces had acquired the right. And the women justified the confidence placed in them by sponsoring and successfully carrying through many measures of uplift and reform in regard to the status and influence of women.

Though the Municipal franchise was granted to the women of the Bombay and Madras Presidencies over fifteen years ago it was so limited in numbers that it did not make any large impact on women's consciousness, and indeed no protest was made when it was suddenly withdrawn from Madras women some years later.

A unique step has been taken in Bombay city with the adoption of adult franchise All women, above the age of 21, are qualified to vote for the Bombay Corporation although the percentage of those who voted in recent elections did not exceed 15 In other Municipalities in that Presidency too, women exercise their vote intelligently Since 1922 scores of women have become Municipal Councillors and members of Local Boards Their appointment has chiefly been by nomination but there have been notable instances of seats won by election in open contest with men, such as the election of all the four women who first entered the contest for seats in the Bombay Corporation, or the one in which the single woman contestant in the Municipal elections in Lucknow secured the largest poll of any of the candidates. Many important local reforms have been secured by this large band of women councillors, and every year sees a greater number of women serving on these local Councils and Boards

Some of the provisions of the 1935 Act are as follows. Women have been enfranchised who have the property qualification in their own right, or are wives or widows of men so qualified, or are wives of men with a service qualification, or are pensioned widows or mothers of members of the military or police forces, or who possess a literacy qualification. Women not holding the requisite qualification in their own right are required to apply to be enrolled, stating their derived qualification, but this procedure has been waived in some provinces Through these means it is estimated more than six million women (against 315,000 under the Act of 1919) have been given the right to vote, compared to 29 million men.

It is noteworthy, too, that men and women can vote both in general constituencies and in special constituencies. Women can vote in and contest elections to the Upper House in provinces where bicameral legislatures have been set up.

The general elections expected to take place in 1951 will of course, be based on adult franchise

Both evidence and result of the awakening among Indian women are to be found in nearly half a dozen legislative measures sponsored by women legislators, notably in the Bombay Assembly, calculated to confer greater rights and freedom on women

The right of divorce which was unknown to Hindu Law has been secured under certain conditions. In Bombay, antipolygamy and divorce laws have been placed on the Statute Book

ALL-INDIA WOMEN'S CONFERENCE

It was the Home Rule agitation in the years 1914-17 which first made women conscious of their own rights. The internment of one of their own sex, Dr. Besant, stimulated political activity and political self-consciousness amongst women to a very great extent The moment for giving public expression to their feelings came when the Secretary of State for India arrived in India in 1917 to investigate and study Indian affairs at first-hand.

Indian women have in the past ventilated their grievances and demands through their many organisations. Even today these are the official organs of the voice of India's women The All-India Women's Conference is still the principal body claiming a membership of about 27,000 with 40 branches and 164 constituent branches

The All-India Women's Conference came into existence, as a result of the initiative taken by Mrs. Margaret Cousins, towards the end of 1926, the first session of the conference being held at Poona in the first week of January, 1927. In the beginning it was inclined to concentrate its attention on the basic question of women's education The resolutions passed at the first conference were almost wholly devoted to the different aspects of women's education, the only exception being a resolution condemning child marriage and supporting Sir H S Gour's Age of Consent Bill Even this subject was touched upon only because it was felt that early marriages were a very serious impediment in the progress of girls' education

Such a narrow programme could not, however, be expected to satisfy the leaders of the women's movement for a long time and it was not surprising that at the third session the scope of the conference was definitely widened to include social reform Education of women, raising the age of marriage, removal of untouchability and caste restrictions, rural uplift, and reform of the laws of inheritance as affecting women are some of the more important of the subjects in which the conference has today interested itself

A satisfactory feature of the women's movement in India has been the spirit of unity and co-operation behind it. A mere glance at the list of presidents of the All-India Women's Conference—which includes the Maharani of Baroda, the Begum of Bhopal, Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, Lady R Nilkanth, Lady Abdul Qadir, Mrs Faridoonji the Maharani of Travancore, Mrs Cousins, Rajkumari Amrit Kaur, Mrs. Rameshwari Nehru, Shrimati Vijayalaxmi Pandit, Shrimati Kamaladevi, Lady Rama Rau and Shrimati Anasuyabai Kale,—should suffice to show that the Conference has never been affected by differences of caste, community, race or class.

This organisation, it may be noted, has latterly shown a tendency to move beyond the requirements of sectional plea and strayed into wider political activity. It is not, however, difficult to explain this development. The women's movement gained considerable impetus by the part played by and the status accorded to, women in the intensive political movement conducted by Mahatma Gandhi and the Congress since 1920.

Speaking at the twentieth session of the All-India Women's Conference, Lady Rama Rau, referred, with legitimate pride, to the recognition of the work of the women's organisations in India not only by the people in this country but by the leading organisations of the world. She also referred to the recognition, the Conference had received from the United Nations Organisation and stated: "This is the first time that a national organisation like ours has been so honoured."

Delegates from several parts of the world, including the United Kingdom, France, Sweden, U.S.A., China and Indonesia were present. They all conveyed the greetings of their countries to the Conference.

Presiding over the Conference, Mrs Anasuyabai Kale stressed the need for a Ministry of Social Affairs at the Centre and in the Provinces. "The importance of social problems has been overlooked in our fight for political freedom," she observed. "It is essential now," she pointed out, "that we should co-ordinate the two if we wish to achieve our goal of social justice and equality. No country can make headway even politically unless and until social disabilities are removed. For this purpose, I humbly suggest the establishment of a Ministry of Social Affairs both at the Centre and in the Provinces. It will be the function of this Ministry to frame a new Manusmruti to govern social relations of all the subjects of the State to remove social injustice and to regulate the population according to the needs of the country. We must remember that we have to do all this immediately as there is a danger of a third world war."

By a resolution, the Conference appealed to the Government of India to revise the Hindu Code and to this end, it directed the Standing Committee of the Conference to appoint a deputation to wait on the Prime Minister, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru The Conference also appealed to all the States to adopt the draft revision of the Hindu Code as embodied in the recommendations of the Rau Committee.

Other resolutions adopted by the Conference include: the need for implementing on a nation-wide scale schemes for the immediate introduction of compulsory and free basic education; the adoption of films as a medium of instruction; the compulsory study of ethics, civics and physical training in all schools and the need of imparting sex education to boys and girls in high schools.

"We must think in terms of the millions of those ignorant, dumb women who live not in cities but in far off corners of India, who dress not as we dress and talk not the language we talk," said Mrs. Urmilla Mehta, President of the A I.W.C. for the year 1949 in her address to the 21st Session of the Conference at Gwalior in January 1949.

Mrs Mehta in her speech covered all aspects of Indian national life—political, economic, moral, social and cultural—and asked women to help the builders of India in their great task. She added that she had no doubt that women were just as capable of shouldering the burden of administration as men.

Stating that the women's movement had grown out of an urge which was mainly political and that many of the women who had actively participated in the national movement were today the leading lights of the Conference, Mrs Mehta appealed to the women of India for a new purpose and a new objective, and to create new values.

She added: "We must speedily raise the educational and cultural level of India's women, not necessarily by destroying the harmony of their present life, but by gradually modernising it with a view to fitting it into the changing environments. Yet in our enthusiasm to uphold and jealously guard the rights of women, let us not lose sight of the fact that rights bring in their wake duties and obligations. Our duty and obligation to society and to the nation at large are to raise the downtrodden women of India and to make them feel that they too have a part to play in national life".

"The poverty and squalor that permeate our country are now our headache. There is so much to be done in every sphere of national life, yet so little is actually being done. What our country needs today is a new social conscience and in awakening this the women of India can play no insignificant part. They should undertake the organisation of centres for training future mothers in the right way of bringing up their children so that they may become the pride of India tomorrow. It should also be the duty of the Women's Conference to take a hand in educating the masses by organising a net-work of literacy classes for women all over the country."

Mrs. Mehta prefaced her remarks by a reference to the tragedy that had followed in the wake of partition and to the glorious work which women had done in succouring the victims of this tragedy. She deprecated the formation of linguistic provinces. Referring to labour unrest and the rising spiral of prices, she expressed the hope that leaders of both labour and industry would come together in this hour of national crisis.

Mrs. Mehta adverted to the problem of population and suggested intensive propaganda to bring home to the people that a limited family was not only an advantage from the economic and hygienic point of view, but also from the standpoint of the strength of the nation. She also advocated the necessity of social organisations taking up the training of the people in the principles of sanitation, health and hygiene. In conclusion, Mrs. Mehta stated that social education and improvement in the general standard and values of life must go hand in hand with the enforcement of law against social evils.

The Prime Minister Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, in a message wishing success to the Conference said, "I have long held that a country's progress can be measured by the status and progress of the women of the country."

RESOLUTIONS

The Conference passed a number of resolutions covering problems of health, social service, legal disabilities of women, inflation and the necessity for world peace and freedom. The resolution dealing with safeguarding the health of women in India stated that, provision should be made for medical advice and help to married women in matters of ante-natal and post-natal care. While appreciating the growing interests in women's education, the Conference deplored the prevailing tendency to have a separate curriculum for girls, excluding such important subjects as mathematics from the syllabus Realising the important role that women play in giving effect to all plans of national reconstruction, the conference insisted that up to the end of the secondary stage boys and girls should have the same curriculum, so that a modicum of intellectual training would be available even for those who did not wish to pursue an independent career in one of the professions. The conference demanded that social service be included in the curriculum for all schools and that field work be encouraged as an integral part of this training.

Another resolution reiterated the women's demand for a separate Ministry for Social Affairs at the Centre as well as in the Provinces. It also appealed to all women's organisations to give their active co-operation to Government in carrying out its various schemes for the alleviation of social and economic distress, particularly among women, caused by the partition of India.

An important resolution adopted by the Conference read: "In view of the fact that the new Constitution removes all disqualifications on grounds of sex, it is necessary that existing discrepancies in the law should be removed by necessary legislation. This Conference, therefore, demands that the Bill to Codify Hindu Law which has already been discussed for years be passed into law without any more delay"

The Conference affirmed its belief in the achievement of lasting world peace through the establishment of social justice and freedom for all nations. Mankind, the resolution on the subject stated, faced the threat of another war because of the domination of the world by large powers. The existing system of exploitation of industrially undeveloped countries, it stated, perpetuated their long bondage and hampered the economic and social progress of the world. In spite of the struggle for freedom carried on by the peoples of Asia, the conference noted with deep regret, many of the countries were still in a semi-colonial condition. Even in a free India small foreign settlements continued to exist. The conference strongly condemned the Dutch aggression in Indonesia and extended its heartfelt sympathies to the Indonesian people.

KASTURBA FUND

The work in connection with the emancipation of Indian womanhood and the improvement of the lot of Indian women, particularly in rural areas, obtained an enormous stimulus in 1944-45, thanks to the Kasturba Memorial Fund created for the commemoration of Mrs. Gandhi who died under detention in February 1944. At Mahatma Gandhi's request the trustees of the fund used the money for the establishment of a country-wide organisation to improve the lot of Indian women, especially in villages. Attempts have been made to provide opportunities for Indian women to secure education, acquire knowledge of basic sanitary and hygienic lines and to become alive to their social and political rights An essential part of the plan is to equip rural areas with up-to-date maternity hospitals and clinics. In order to fulfil this ambitious project a large number of women were trained in special camps so that after adequate equipment they could scatter themselves throughout the length and breadth of the land to carry the message of women's uplift to every corner of rural India. At these training camps instruction was given in first-aid and home nursing, child welfare, village nursing, health visits, rural sanitation, balanced diet and cheap remedies. The object of these training camps was the raising of an army of experts called "Gram Sevikas" (servants of the village).

ORGANISATIONS IN BOMBAY

In Bombay city there are at the moment over 80 organisations working for the betterment of women and children and the women of this city have been foremost in every movement social, political and cultural.

Bombay's oldest organisation is the Bombay Presidency Women's Council started in 1919 under the presidentship of Lady Willingdon. It is among the pioneer organisations in India possibly the very first, and has grown and, expanded greatly since its inception. Its original aims and objects to centralise all social and philanthropic work throughout the province have not been forgotten and today the Council has 31 local bodies affiliated to it and branches at Ahmedabad, Poona, Sholapur Belgaum.

Creche work in mills was the first problem which was tackled followed by infant and maternity welfare. The Council played a leading part in the revision of factory laws, maternity benefit, housing conditions of workers living in chawls, regulation of wage payments, better conditions for bidi workers. The Council also submitted a memorandum to the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the conditions of working women.

Through its Parliamentary Sub-Committee the Council does propaganda for social legislation and in the past two years has been very active in the discussions on The Hindu Code Bill, the Bill to regulate and validate Marriages between various castes and sub-castes, the Bill to further amend the Child Restraint Act, 1929, the Bill to restrain the Custom of Offering and Taking of Dowry in Marriages, Bills to amend the Indian Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure Code, the Bill to abolish the matriculation examination, and the Bill to prohibit Excommunication in the Province of Bombay.

It was the B P. W. C which initiated the agitation for controlling beggary 21 years ago and propaganda from then to this day has resulted in the legislation which came into force in March 1946

One of the most important activities of the Council is the Rescue Home for Indian Women at Umerkhadi where hundreds of girls have found shelter Provision is made in the Home for medical treatment, and facilities for education and vocational training are afforded. Government have recognised the importance of this work and have provided accommodation for the institution, a nominal grant for its upkeep is also being given.

The Council's Labour Sub-Committee has been doing a considerable amount of social work in a labour camp in the north of Bombay The Council runs a dispensary and conducts sewing and literacy classes for the women in the camp. The workers of the camp have been persuaded to form a co-operative society through the Committee's efforts

Another important activity of the Council has been the running of a holiday library for children for the last four years This effort has been very successful, the average daily attendance at the library being 600 The Council has approached the Government of Bombay with a request to put the holiday library on a permanent basis.

The Literacy Sub-Committee of the Council has for several years been conducting literacy classes, while the Health Sub-Committee has been helping the Municipality in maintaining sanitation in markets and other public places

The Bombay Presidency Women's Council is affiliated to the National Council of Women in India which in turn is affiliated to the International Council of Women

Another very old organisation in Bombay is the National Indian Association which devotes its energies to promoting higher education among women. Other old organisations doing good work include the Seva Sadan, the Bhagini Samaj, the Gujerati Stree Mandal and the Bhatia Stree Mandal.

India's first hospital for the treatment of Infantile Paralysis is being set up in Bombay on the initiative of Mrs F Ismail One wing of the hospital has already been built and will start functioning as soon as the water connection is secured.

HINDU LAW REFORM

As the result of increasing consciousness on the part of Indian women of their social and political status, there has in recent years been a move to revise and codify the somewhat vague and contradictory law governing the Hindu home, especially as it affects marriage, divorce, succession to property, etc In 1937 the India Legislature enacted the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act. Four years later, the Government of India set up a Committee to overhaul and codify the Hindu Law. This Committee, which is known as the Rau Committee, drafted two bills dealing with Hindu intestate succession and Hindu marriage. When the measures came up for consideration by the two Houses of the Central Legislature, a joint committee of the two Houses recommended the revival of the Rau Committee with a view to the codification of the entire Hindu Law. Consequently the Rau Committee was revived early in 1944. During 1944-45, the Committee made a tour of the country and elicited public opinion on the proposals embodied in the two measures and on the codification of the Hindu Law as a whole They gathered evidence from leading lawyers and representative organisations of various shades of Hindu opinion on a draft Hindu Code prepared by them.

The draft code is divided into six parts dealing with intestate and testamentary successions and matters arising therefrom, including maintenance, marriage and divorce; minority and guardianship; and adoption. In an explanatory statement the Committee say that it is generally felt that the evils of piecemeal legislation on the subject should be avoided and that an entire code acceptable to the general Hindu public should be formulated.

Divorce.—According to the proposed changes daughters are allowed a share—hitherto denied them—in property left by their fathers. Both wives and daughters are given absolute control of their inheritance. Marriages are divided into two classes, sacramental marriage and civil marriage. Either can be performed only when there is no other spouse living, thereby enforcing monogamy. Divorce is a new feature sought to be introduced by the draft code, although the grounds on which dissolution of marriage can be sought are limited; but equal rights in this behalf are given to husband and wife.

Although at the outset, there was much opposition to some of the recommendations of the Rau Committee, the country has now recognised the need for advance as can be seen by the provision contained in the constitution of the Democratic Republic of India.

The Hindu Code Bill, was put before Parliament. Due to strong orthodox opposition however it was shelved for the time being.

ROTARY

THE first Rotary Club in India was started in 1919 at Calcutta. It took eight years to have the second club—Lahore—and in the next two years there was a total of seven clubs Since then, by the end of 1941 there were 43 clubs in undivided India, Burma and Ceylon Then came the war and with the Japanese occupation of Burma five clubs were lost and three other clubs' charters were withdrawn, so that there were only 35 Rotary clubs.

There was only one district for the whole area of undivided India, Burma and Ceylon until 1939, when the area was divided into two districts and in 1942 into four districts With the increase in the number of clubs it became necessary in 1946 to set up 7 districts, with 7 Governors to administer them.

FREEMASONRY

IN 1728 a dispensation was granted by the Grand Lodge of England to Geo. Pomfret, authorising him to "open a new Lodge in Bengal." Of his personage nothing further is known but under Capt. Farwinter, who in the following year succeeded him as Provincial Grand Master of India, a Lodge was established in 1730, which in the Engraved Lists is distinguished by the arms of the East India Company, and is described as "No. 72 at Bengal in the East Indies." The next Provincial Grand Masters were James Dawson and Zesh Gee, who held office in 1740; after whom came the Hon. Roger Drake, appointed 10th April 1755. The last named was Governor of Calcutta at the time of the attack made on the settlement by Surajah Dowlah in 1756 Drake escaped and was accused of deserting his post, but, though present at the retaking of Calcutta by Admiral Watson and Clive, it is improbable that he resumed the duties of his masonic office after the calamity that befell the settlement.

The minutes of the Grand Lodge inform us that William Mackett, Provincial Grand Master of Calcutta, was present at the meeting of that body, November 17, 1760, and we learn on the same authority that at the request of the "Lodges in the East Indies" Cullin Smith was appointed P. G. M. in 1762 At this period it was the custom in Bengal "to elect the Provincial Grand Master annually by the majority of the votes of the members present, from amongst those who passed through the different offices of the (Prov) Grand Lodge and who had served as Dep. Prov. Grand Master." This annual election as soon as notified to the Grand Lodge of England was confirmed by the Grand Master without its being thought an infringement of his prerogative. In accordance with this practice, Samuel Middleton was elected (P. G. M.) in circa 1767; but in passing it may be briefly observed that a few years previously a kind of roving commission was granted by Earl Ferrars in 1762-64 to John Bluvitt, Commander of the "Admiral Watson," Indiaman "for East India where no other Provincial Lodge is to be found." Middleton's election was confirmed October 31st, 1768, and, as the dispensation forwarded by the Grand Secretary was looked upon as abrogating the practice of annual elections, he accordingly held the office of D. G. M. Unfortunately the records of the P. G. L. date back only to 1774, and thus much valuable information is lost to us. This Grand Lodge continued working until 1792 when it ceased to meet. It seems that the officers were selected from only two Lodges much to the dissatisfaction of the other Lodges, and resulted in most of the dissatisfied bodies seceding and attaching themselves to the Athol or Ancient Grand Lodge. In 1813 at the Union both the Ancients and Moderns in Calcutta combined and gave their allegiance to the United Grand Lodge of England and have since been working peaceably under the Provincial Grand Lodge of Bengal which was revived in that year and in 1840 created a District Grand Lodge

Madras.—The earliest Lodge in Southern India (No. 222) was established in Madras in 1752. Three others were also established about 1766. In 1767 Capt. Edmund Pascal was appointed P. G. M. for Madras and its Dependencies and in the following year another Lodge was established at Fort St. George. In 1768 the Athol (or Ancients) invaded this District and in 1781 established a Provincial Grand Lodge and both these Provincial Grand Bodies continued working peaceably side by side until the Union Indeed, though not generally known, these two Grand Bodies made an attempt at coalition long before any such movement was made by their parent bodies, the Grand Lodge of England, and the Ancient Grand Lodge, and Malden in his History of Freemasonry in Madras states that in a great measure they succeeded. At the Union in 1813 all the bodies in Madras gave their allegiance to the United Grand Lodge. One event worthy of note was the initiation in 1774 at Trichinopoly of the eldest son of the Nawab of Arcot, Umdat-ul-Umra, who in his reply to the congratulations of the Grand Lodge of England stated "he considered the title of English Mason as one of the most honourable that he possessed." This document is now stored in the archives of the United Grand Lodge.

Bombay.—Two Lodges were established in this Presidency during the 18th century, Nos. 234 at Bombay in 1758 and 569 in Surat in 1798 both of which were carried on the lists until the Union when they disappeared. A Provincial Grand Master, James Todd, was appointed but there is no record that he exercised his functions and his name drops out of the Freemasons' Calendar in 1799. In 1801 an Athol Warrant was granted (No. 822) to the 78th foot which was engaged in the Maratha War under Sir Arthur Wellesley. In 1818 Lord Moira was asked to constitute a Lodge to be known by the name of St. Andrew by eight Masons residing there and also to grant a dispensation for holding a Provincial Grand Lodge for the purpose of making the Hon. Mountstuart Elphinstone a Mason, he having expressed a wish to that effect The Petitioners further requested "that his name might be inserted in the body of the warrant, authorising them to instal him after being duly passed and raised a Deputy Grand Master of the Deccan" Of the reply to this application no copy has been preserved Lodge Benevolence was established in Bombay in 1822.

In 1823 a Military Lodge "Orion-in-the-West" was formed in the Bombay Artillery and installed at Poona as No 15 of the Coast of Coromandel. It seems from Lane's records that in 1830 it was discovered that this Lodge was not on the records of the United Grand Lodge of England. A Warrant was subsequently issued bearing date 19th July 1833. According to the early proceedings of this Lodge, members were examined in the Third Degree and passed to the chair in the Fourth Degree for which a fee of three gold mohurs was charged. In the following year a second Lodge was established at Poona by the Provincial Grand Lodge of Bengal which however, left no trace of its existence In 1825 the civilian element of "Orion" seceded and formed the "Lodge of Hope" also at Poona No. 802.

Here "Orion" unrecognized in England aided in the secession of some of its members, who obtained a warrant, on the recommendation of the Parent Lodge from the Grand Lodge of England Two years later it was discovered that no notification of the existence of "Orion-in-the-West" had reached England, nor had any fees been received, although these including quarterages had been paid into the Provincial Grand Lodge, Coast of Coromandel, it was further ascertained that in granting a warrant for a Bombay Lodge the Provincial Grand Master of Coromandel had exceeded his powers. Ultimately a new warrant No. 598 was granted as already stated in 1833. Lodge "Perseverance" was started in Bombay No. 818 in 1828. Up to this time the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of England in India had not been invaded, but in 1836 Dr. James Burnes was appointed by the Grand Lodge of Scotland P G.M. of Western India and its Dependencies. No Provincial Grand Lodge however was formed until 1st January 1838. A second Scottish Province of Eastern India was started which on the retirement of the Marquis of Tweedale was absorbed within the jurisdiction of Dr. Burnes, who in 1846 became Provincial Grand Master for all India (including Aden) but with the proviso, that this appointment was not to act in restraint of any future sub-division of the Presidencies. Burnes may be best described as being in 1836 in ecclesiastical phrase as a Provincial Grand Master "in partibus infidelium" for whatever Lodges then existed throughout the length and breadth of India were strangers to Scottish Masonry. But the times were propitious. There was no English Provincial Grand Lodge in Bombay and the Chevalier Burnes, whom nature had endowed with all the qualities requisite for Masonic Administration, soon got to work and presented such attractions to Scottish Freemasonry that the strange sight was witnessed of English Masons deserting their mother Lodges, to such an extent that these fell into abeyance, in order to give support to Lodges newly constituted under the Grand Lodge of Scotland. In one case, indeed, a Lodge "Perseverance" under England went over bodily to Scotland, with its name, jewels, furniture, and belongings, and the charge was accepted by Scotland. This Lodge still exists in Bombay and now bears No. 338 on the Register of Scotland. From this period, therefore, Scottish Masonry flourished, and English Masonry declined until the year 1848 when a Lodge "St. George" No. 549 on the Rolls of the Grand Lodge of England was again formed at Bombay, and for some years was the solitary representative of English Masonry in the Province In 1844 Burnes established a Lodge "Rising Star of Western India," at Bombay for the admission of Indians the result of which is seen at the present day Thus the seed planted at Trichinopoly in 1774 by the initiation of Umdat-ul-Umra has borne fruit resulting in the initiation of thousands of Indians of all castes and creeds, and which has gone far in establishing that mutual trust between West and East a distinguishing characteristic of Speculative Freemasonry A Provincial Grand Lodge was re-established in Bombay in 1860, and converted into a District Grand Lodge in 1861.

ADMINISTRATION

All three constitutions of the United Kingdom, the United Grand Lodge of England, the Grand Lodge of Scotland and the Grand Lodge of Ireland hold jurisdiction in India The largest of these is that of England which has four districts under District Grand Masters, totalling over two hundred Lodges The Grand Lodge of United Scottish Freemasonry of India and Pakistan which comes under Scotland has some seventy-five Lodges, but the Grand Lodge of Ireland which is governed in India by a Grand Inspector has only eleven Lodges.

Bengal.—Founded 1728 74 Lodges

District Grand Master:—Rt. Wor. Bro. A. Barr Pollock Deputy District Grand Master —Wor. Bro Major-General H Williams, C B E

Grand Lodge meets in Bombay, its installation being in November.

Grand Lodge of Ireland

The Irish constitution is governed in India by a Grand Inspector, who has two assistant Grand Inspectors, one for Bombay and the other for Bengal It has eleven Lodges working, three in Bombay, six in Calcutta, one in Pakistan (Lahore) and one in Simla

Royal Arch Masonry

In England the District Grand Master is nearly always created Grand Superintendent of the Royal Arch Chapter, his deputy generally being second principal, while the third principal is appointed every year The Districts adopt the same practice, Bengal having 31 Chapters, Madras 21, Bombay 25 and the Punjab 22.

Royal Arch Masonry in Scotland has a separate constitution from the craft. The Grand Chapter of United Scottish Royal Arch Freemasonry in India and Pakistan is at present ruled by MOST EX Companion, Sir Shapoorji Billimoria, Kt , M B E , under whom there are 33 Chapters The Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of United Scottish Freemasonry of India and Pakistan is also Grand Scribe 'E'.

There is only one Irish Chapter situated in Calcutta.

Mark Masonry

Mark Masonry is worked under the Grand Mark Lodge of England and Wales and is divided into several districts, but in most cases, the District Grand Master is also the District Grand Mark Master. There are nineteen Lodges under Bengal, 15 under Bombay, 16 under Madras and 12 under the Punjab Attached to the Mark degree is that of Royal Ark Mariner, which, under the English constitution, is worked in a separate Lodge attached to a Mark Lodge. Its ruler is the District Grand Mark Master and only Mark Master Masons can take this degree

Under Scotland, the Mark degree is usually worked in Royal Arch Chapters, but it is conferred on candidates in some Lodges under the Scottish constitution

Under Ireland, the Mark Degree is incorporated in that of the Royal Arch.

Other Degrees

There are many other Degrees worked in India, including the Ancient and Accepted Rite, but no degree higher than 18th is actually worked in India under England, but under Scotland the 30th is worked There are fourteen 18th degree Chapters working in India

The Knight Templar degree is worked in several places under both England and Scotland

The Red Cross of Constantine has two conclaves working in India at Bombay and Simla and one in Pakistan at Lahore

The Order of the Secret Monitor has eight conclaves under Bombay, seven under Madras, three under Calcutta and one under Kanpur

BOY SCOUTS

THE Boy Scouts movement initiated in England by Lord Baden-Powell (the first Chief Scout), spread widely in India The Viceroy was Chief Scout and the heads of Provinces and Princely States were Chief Scouts in their own areas The aim of the Association was to develop good citizenship among boys by forming their character —training them in habits of observation, obedience and self-reliance—inculcating loyalty and thoughtfulness for others—and teaching them services useful to the public and handicrafts useful to themselves The Association was directly affiliated with the Boy Scouts International Bureau In 1937

The Boy Scouts of India and the Hindustan Scouts were due to merge sometime end of 1950

THE INSTITUTE OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS OF INDIA

Address President's Office, Hamam House, Hamam Street, Fort, Bombay 1

The Institute of Chartered Accountants of India was established on 1st July, 1949, as a result of the enactment of the Chartered Accountants Act, 1949, by the then Dominion Parliament on 9th April, 1949, which came into force on 1st July, 1949 This Institute is an autonomous body of all accountants with perpetual succession and is entrusted with the performance of all the functions so far carried out by the Central Government in respect of the profession of Accountancy

There were several practical difficulties in administering a Central subject by a State government and in 1932 the Central Government took charge of the accountancy profession—the youngest of the learned professions.

In order to give effect to an All-India scheme of Registration of Public Accountants and Auditors and the creation of an Indian Accountancy Board to advise the Central Government on all matters relating to the Accountancy Profession in India, the Indian Companies Act, 1913 (VII of 1913) was amended by the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act, 1930, under which the Central Government framed the Auditors Certificate Rules, 1932, in this behalf Every person who was desirous of practising as a public accountant in India had to be enrolled on the Register of Accountants maintained by the Central Government under those rules and was styled as "Registered Accountant" Those rules also brought into operation a strict scheme of professional examinations, registration of apprentices for the practical training, recognition of coaching institutions for the theoretical aspect, registration for the practising public accountant and an elaborate code of professional ethics, all conducted and rigorously enforced by the Central Government on the advice of the Indian Accountancy Board

From 1932 to 1939 the members of the Indian Accountancy Board were nominated by the Central Government out of the ranks of the leading public accountants throughout India In 1939 the Central Government changed the rules and introduced a progressive element of elected members from the practising accountants. The ultimate goal was to form an autonomous body of accountants to take charge of the profession. The Indian Accountancy Board consisted of 21 members, the term of membership being 3 years

With a view to achieve the goal of the formation of an autonomous body of accountants, on 4th September, 1948, the Central Government introduced a Bill to provide for the regulation of the profession of accountants in India The Bill sought to incorporate by statute an autonomous body of accountants under the nomenclature of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of India This Bill was passed into law by the then Dominion Parliament on 9th April, 1949, as mentioned above In accordance with the provisions of the Chartered Accountants Act, 1949, a Council has been constituted for the management of the affairs of the Institute and for discharging the functions assigned to it under the Act The Council is composed of 5 persons nominated by the Central Government and 15 persons elected by members of the Institute throughout India The Council came into existence on 15th August, 1949, when it was inaugurated by the then Commerce Minister, Shri K C Neogy, replacing the Indian Accountancy Board The President of the Council is its Chief Executive Authority

The members of the Institute have been divided into two categories, namely, practising members and non-practising members The practising members are designated as "Chartered Accountants" while non-practising members cannot style themselves as such Further, there are two categories of members, namely, Associates and Fellows Every member on admission to the Institute is known as Associate member and a practising member after a practice of 5 years is entitled to become a Fellow when he acquires the right to train articled clerks

THE NATIONAL LIBRARY, CALCUTTA

The National Library was founded in 1902 by Lord Curzon, the then Viceroy of India, by amalgamating the former Calcutta Public Library with the then Imperial Library which itself had been founded in 1891 by combining a number of Departmental Libraries of the Government of India Secretariat. One of them, the Library of the Home Department, contributed a very important and interesting collection of books, which formerly belonged to the East India College, Fort William, Calcutta, and to the East India Board, London The Calcutta Public Library also contained a fairly large number of valuable and rare books and pamphlets. In 1904, Maulvi Sayyid Sadrud Din Ahmad al Musavi, Zamindar of Buhar (Burdwan District), endowed a collection of 1,500 printed Arabic, Persian and Urdu books, along with 950 Arabic and Persian manuscripts which collection is named "Buhar Library" after the name of the place to which the donor belonged.

The Ministry of Education of the Government of India, is responsible for the maintenance of the Library; while its management is vested in a Council appointed by the Government of India. The Educational Adviser to the Government of India is the ex-officio Chairman and the Librarian, National Library, its ex-officio Secretary The members represent the University of Calcutta (1), the Government of West Bengal (2) and other States (4).

The aim of the National Library in the words of its great founder is that "it should be a Library of reference, a working place for students, and a repository of material for the future historians of India, in which, so far as possible, every work written about India at any time can be seen and read" The Library contains most of the important and rare works in English and Indian languages dealing with India The Library is also in possession of a collection of important books of reference and of standard works on various subjects which is kept up-to-date by the addition of new books The present strength of the stock of the Library is a little over 423,400 which makes it the biggest Library in India

The Library is provided with Reading Rooms, public and private, where facilities are offered to students, research workers and general readers There is a separate Reading Room for women Books are also lent out to any one living in any part of the Republic of India, against cash security. The membership of both the Reading Rooms and the Lending Section is free General and special reference enquiries are also attended to

As a war measure the Library was temporarily housed in 34, Chittaranjan Avenue, Calcutta from February 1942 The Library is, however, now on the move to its permanent abode, the Belvedere, Alipore, Calcutta, the old Viceregal Lodge

proposals for research work on their respective subjects and make recommendations to the Scientific Advisory Board The Nutrition Advisory Committee has been recognised by the Government of India as the National Nutrition Advisory Committee for India These Advisory Committees and the Scientific Advisory Board meet once a year to examine proposals received from research workers and make recommendations regarding their suitability or otherwise, and to draw up programme of research for the next year In order to ensure the closest co-operation between workers and to prevent overlapping of effort, research workers and administrative heads of Medical and Public Health Departments in the country are also invited to attend the annual meetings of the Advisory Committees

The Scientific Advisory Board annually publishes a technical report describing the research work done by the various enquiries carried out under the auspices of the Association during each calendar year This report is obtainable from the office of the Secretary, Governing Body and Scientific Advisory Board, Indian Research Fund Association The results of researches carried out under the auspices of the Association are published in the "Indian Journal of Medical Research" and its "Memoirs" and the "Indian Journal of Malariology"

Since the inception of the Association, a large number of enquiries have been carried out Enquiries include investigations on cholera, bacteriophage, malaria nutrition, leprosy, plague, vaccines, tuberculosis, pharmacology, indigenous drugs, maternal mortality, helminthology, medical mycology, dracontiasis and filariasis, protozoal parasites, cancer, epidemic dropsy, kala-azar, dried blood plasma, sandfly fever, typhus, bacillary dysentery, snake venoms, fluorosis, clinical problems, etc Besides financing investigations which are conducted by workers in its direct employment, the Association gives grants-in-aid to institutions and also to outside workers The expenditure for the last few years has amounted to between eight to ten lakhs of rupees per annum The Association maintained the Malaria Institute of India, which now enjoys International recognition, till April 1940, when the Public Health Section of the Institute was taken over by the Government of India The Association however, continued to maintain the Research Sections of the Institute at Delhi and Coonoor until March 1946 when they were also taken over by the Government of India

The Association maintains the Nutrition Research Laboratories at Coonoor, which is the premier institution in India entirely devoted to research in nutrition and allied sciences The Laboratories were founded by the Association in 1925 in order to provide a strong centre for research on nutritional problems, to act as an information bureau so as to make the results freely available to all concerned and, in collaboration with public health officers, to translate these results into practical nutritional work The Laboratories are fully equipped with latest equipment and are manned with highly qualified and competent staff, with wide experience in nutrition research More than three hundred papers have been published from the Laboratories in various scientific journals in India and abroad The diet surveys undertaken by the laboratories have provided very valuable information as to food requirements The publication of Health Bulletin No 23, "The Nutritive value of Indian Foods and the planning of satisfactory diets" has made available to the public useful knowledge about Indian foodstuffs The Laboratories besides being a research centre also serve as a teaching institution and annually impart training to medical and science graduates who wish to undertake nutrition work as their career Nutrition classes are held once a year for a period of about three months and are attended by students from all over India

The Association has set up nutrition units at the Seth G S. Medical College, Bombay, University College of Science and Technology, Calcutta, and at the Indian Institute of Science, Bangalore, a clinical research and neuropathological unit at the Tata Memorial Hospital, Bombay, a Polio research unit at the Grant Medical College, Bombay, and an Industrial Health Research Unit at the All-India Institute of Hygiene and Public Health, Calcutta

In order to foster medical research in the country and to encourage young medical and science graduates to take to research work the Association annually awards Research Fellowships tenable for two years of the value of Rs 250 p m with a contingent grant of Rs 500 per annum for each fellowship

The Maharaja of Parlakimedi in the year 1929 donated a munificent sum of rupees one lakh to be utilized for nutritional research The income derived from this sum is used to pay for two scholarships of the value of Rs 150 per month each tenable for three years for research on human, animal and plant nutrition The Parlakimedi Scholars are attached to the I R F A Nutrition Research Laboratories, Coonoor

The Association maintains a library at the Central Research Institute, Kasauli The Association has also established a Micro-film Service Unit at the Institute and it is proposed to start a photostat Unit also A Micro-film Service Unit has also been established at the Tata Memorial Hospital, Bombay, under the auspices of the Association

INDIAN SCIENCE CONGRESS ASSOCIATION

Office 1 Park Street, Calcutta 16

The Indian Science Congress Association was founded in 1914 largely through the efforts of Prof. P S. Macmahon and Dr. J. L. Simonsen who were Honorary General Secretaries of the Congress till 1921. The general administrative work of the office of the Congress was under the management of the Royal Asiatic Society of Bengal till 1939.

The main objective of the Association is the advancement of science in India, and the annual sessions are organised for the purpose of (1) encouraging research and making the results generally known among science workers in India, (2) giving opportunities for personal intercourse and scientific companionship in order to overcome to some extent the isolation in this large country of workers in science; and (3) promoting public interest in science.

Membership of the Association is open to all interested in the activities of the Congress. The Association has an average total membership (Ordinary Members) of 1,500. The annual subscription is Rs 12. There are also Sessional Members, and Associate and Student Members who are enrolled at concession rates. The members receive free of cost the proceedings of the annual sessions, which are issued in four parts. No educational qualification is generally insisted upon at the time of enrolment.

The Congress meets in January each year in one of the principal cities and the proceedings last for six days. The session is opened by a Presidential Address delivered by the President for the year. The President is chosen annually, the different branches of science being usually represented in turn. The work of the Session is divided into thirteen sections: (1) Mathematics, (2) Statistics, (3) Physics, (4) Chemistry, (5) Geology and Geography, (6) Botany,

(7) Zoology and Entomology, (8) Anthropology and Archæology, (9) Medical and Veterinary Sciences, (10) Agricultural Sciences, (11) Physiology, (12) Psychology and Educational Science, (13) Engineering and Metallurgy. The Sections meet separately, and each section is presided over by its own President also chosen annually The mornings are devoted to the reading and discussion of the papers Special discussions and symposia are held in the mornings or in the afternoons during the Session. Social functions and visits to places of scientific and industrial interest are arranged in the afternoons by the Local Reception Committee which is formed at the venue of the Congress to arrange for the work of the Session. Popular lectures by eminent scientists and specialists are delivered in the evenings for the general public.

With effect from 1947, a programme for international scientific co-operation has been initiated through invitations to eminent foreign scientists and representative scientific bodies In January, 1947, as many as 30 foreign scientists representing Great Britain, Canada, Australia, America, France, China, etc., were present at the Annual Congress A similar representative body of scientific delegates attended the 1948 and 1949 Session of the Congress.

INDIAN RED CROSS SOCIETY

Headquarters · 20, Talkatora Road, New Delhi

President, Dr Rajendra Prasad, President of the Republic of India

Chairman, Managing Body, The Hon'ble Rajkumari Amrit Kaur.

Vice-Chairman, Sir Usha Nath Sen, C.B E.

General-Secretary, Sardar Bahadur Balwant Singh Puri, C I E, O B E.

When the First World War broke out, what is generally termed Red Cross work was undertaken in the country and Mesopotamia by the St. John Ambulance Association and by a number of State organisations working on independent lines. From August 1916, the central work was taken over by the Indian Branch of the Joint War Committee of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem and the British Red Cross Society.

The Committee closed its career in June 1920 under the following circumstances. In the summer of 1919, an invitation was received to join the International League of Red Cross Societies, having for its object the extension of Red Cross work in the sphere of purely civil activity. Though there was then no formally constituted Red Cross Society in India, the invitation was accepted, thus securing for India a distinct position in a world-wide League of humanitarian societies. A Bill to constitute an Indian Red Cross Society was introduced in the Imperial Legislative Council in March 1920, and duly passed into law as Act XV of 1920, This Act handed over the balance of the funds of the Joint War Committee to the new Society, and authorised it not only to direct the utilisation for war purposes of the capital funds if need be at its disposal but also to utilise the interest for peace time Red Cross Work As contemplated in the Act of Constitution of the Society, its activities are decentralised, and are carried on through 26 State Branches under which there are 292 District Branches

The objects on which the funds of Society may be spent are.—

1. The care of the sick and wounded men of Indian Forces, whether still on the active list or demobilised.

2. The care of those suffering from Tuberculosis, having regard in the first place to soldiers and sailors, whether they have contracted the disease on active service or not.

3. Child welfare.

4 Work parties to provide the necessary garments, etc, for hospitals and health institutions in need of them.

5. Assistance required in all branches of nursing, health and welfare work, ancillary to any organisations which have or may come into being in India and which are recognised by the Society.

6. Home Service Ambulance Work.

7. Provision of comforts and assistance to members of Indian Forces whether on the active list or demobilised.

The Society has five grades of subscribing members, namely, Honorary Vice-Presidents, Patrons, Vice-Patrons, Members and Associate Members. Their respective subscriptions are Rs. 10,000, Rs. 5,000, Rs. 1,000, Rs. 12 annually or a consolidated payment of Rs. 150 and anything between Re. 1 and Rs. 12 annually or consolidated payment of Rs. 50. The number of adult members of all categories enrolled at the end of 1949 was 15,732.

Constitution —The President of the Republic of India is the President of the Society The Managing Body ordinarily consists of a Chairman nominated by the President and 25 members of the Society, of whom 12 are the Vice-Presidents nominated by State Branches, 8 selected by the Society at the Annual General Meeting from among the members of the Society, and 5 nominated by the President.

Junior Red Cross.—The Junior Red Cross movement is an important item of the Society's work This movement which strives to instal Red Cross ideals in the minds of growing children, is rapidly making headway. It seeks to promote the health of the young, develop their sense of service and foster international friendliness. Its vitality and popularity in the country is evidenced by the fact that most of the State Branches have organised Junior Red Cross groups among the juvenile population in their respective areas. At the end of 1949 the total membership of the Junior Red Cross was 7,04,855 in 13,826 groups The Director of the Junior Red Cross at the headquarters who is in charge of the movement, is guided by a Sub-Committee Several new lines of activity in furtherance of the objectives of the movement have been initiated during recent years.

Bureau of Maternity and Child Welfare.—The development of child health services is another of the important peace-time activities. The various branches of the Indian Red Cross Society have initiated and maintained Maternity and Child schemes in the States. Until 1947, when a Maternity and

Child Welfare Section was established in the Directorate General of Health Services, the Maternity and Child Welfare Bureau of the Indian Red Cross Society has functioned as the Central Office for information and technical advice for the Red Cross Branches and other voluntary and official organisations conducting Maternity and Child Welfare schemes

In view of the importance of a qualified staff to conduct Maternity and Child Welfare schemes, the Indian Red Cross Society has all along encouraged training schemes for health personnel. The State schemes for training of Health Visitors, Midwives and dais have received assistance from the Maternity and Child Welfare Bureau.

The Director of the Bureau keeps in touch with other activities which help to promote maternity and child health services and as such she is the Secretary of the Maternity and Child Welfare Advisory Sub-Committee of the Indian Research Fund Association, the Delhi Maternity Services Co-ordinating Committee and the Association of Medical Women in India She also represents the Indian Red Cross Society on the Inter-Services Benevolent Fund Committee dealing with Indian Forces' Families Maternity and Child Welfare Services and on the Girl Guides Association.

The Indian Red Cross Society supports schemes for the inauguration of Public Health Nursing in the country and offers scholarships to candidates for such training. The Society, in addition to the endowment fund for post-graduate scholarship under the Indian National Committee of the Florence Nightingale International Foundation, has recently created a few scholarships for post-graduate training of nurses to enable suitable candidates to have a year's training in Public Health Nursing abroad.

Health Education —Popular health education is carried on steadily by the Society by varied methods Health lectures in several Indian languages illustrated by films and slides are regularly organised under Red Cross auspices

Hospitals —The Society provides amenities for servicemen in all Military Hospitals, and numerous civil hospitals also receive regular assistance from Red Cross funds The Society also maintains a Welfare Service manned by 48 trained workers who conduct occupational therapy amongst patients in military hospitals and assist them in letter writing, games, recreation, etc The cost of the services provided to Military hospitals through the Society's Hospital Services during 1949 amounted to about Rs 9 lakhs, which included the maintenance of the Home for completely disabled ex-servicemen at Bangalore

Nursing Service —The number of trained nurses registered on the Red Cross roll maintained for civil emergency service is 52. These nurses live in different parts of the country and in order to ensure immediate availability in times of need, the headquarters maintains an accurate and up-to-date record of their addresses

Medical After-Care of Ex-Servicemen —With a view to grant relief for medical treatment and cognate purposes to sick ex-Indian Army personnel in India, who participated in the Second World War, the Indian Forces Medical After-Care Fund was instituted at the headquarters towards the end of 1941 Assistance of the Fund is invoked by an increasing number of ex-servicemen The total number of applications dealt with until the end of 1949 was 2,206 During last year about five hundred ex-servicemen suffering from tuberculosis, leprosy, mental and miscellaneous ailments were helped, a sum of Rs 92,966 being given in grants, raising the total of disbursements from the fund during the last eight years to Rs. 5,50,052.

Finances.—With the dissolution of the Joint Council of Indian Red Cross and St. John created at the close of the Second World War and the addition of the share of its balances, the investments of the Society at the end of 1949 stood at Rs. 2,16,27,900 and the floating and fixed deposits at Rs 3,21,442. From the total income of Rs 7,02,020 derived from investments of the Society, a sum of Rs. 1,98,000 is distributed under the Act to the State Branches in the Republic of India and those in Pakistan in proportion to their contributions to the Central "Our Day" Fund raised in the First World War

ISMAILIA ASSOCIATION

This Institution—a philanthropic and humanitarian body—was established by the members of the Ismaili Dharmic Library in 1911 under the name of the Recreation Club with the object, of uplifting and elevating the poor, without distinction of caste or creed It also tries to improve the social, economic and spiritual condition of the depressed and poor classes of people and with this intent has founded primary schools, associations and such other departments in order to ameliorate their condition and to achieve these objects by constructive and constitutional means. SERVANTS OF INDIA SOCIETY, POONA 4

The Servants of India Society, founded by the late G. K. Gokhale in 1905, is a body of men who are pledged to devote their life to the service of the country on such allowances as the Society may be able to give. Its objects are to train national missionaries for the service of India and to promote, by all constitutional means, the interests of the Indian people. Its present strength is 24 members. The Society has its headquarters in Poona with branches at Madras, Bombay, Allahabad and Nagpur, and other centres of work at Mayanur, Mangalore and Calicut in the Madras State , Shendurjana in Madhya Pradesh , Lucknow and Kotdwara in U P , Ambala in the Punjab (India), Cuttack and Raigada in Orissa

The Society's work is primarily political but as it believes in all-round progress of the Indian people, it has always laid equal emphasis on social, economic, educational, labour and depressed class activities and has worked in these fields. The political work is done through the legislatures, the non-official political organizations deputations to foreign countries and propaganda.

In the field of social, economic and educational work, the Society's activities are equally varied. Some of its members are practically the founders of such institutions as the Poona Seva Sadan, Bombay and Madras Social Service Leagues, the U.P. Seva Samiti, and the Bhil Seva Mandal catering for the needs and uplift of the aboriginal tribes in Gujerat The Society is also doing tribal welfare work in the Mirzapur Dist (U P.) and in Malabar on a considerable scale The Society has been conducting a model Depressed Class Mission in Mangalore and the Devadhar Malabar Reconstruction Trust activities in Malabar district. By its work in the Mopla rebellion, the Society has become a household name in Malabar During natural calamities such as floods, famine and epidemics, the Society has done relief work in every part of India During recent years several members of the Society have paid special attention to rural reconstruction, including rural education.

The Society is a non-communal, non-sectarian body which does not recognise any caste distinctions.

The Society conducts two papers.—The Dnyan Prakash, the oldest Marathi daily, and the Hitavad, an English daily issued from Nagpur. The Society has also published several pamphlets on public questions of the day.

Dr. H. N. Kunzru is the President, A. V Thakkar, the Vice-President and D. V. Ambekar, the Secretary.

WESTERN INDIA NATIONAL LIBERAL ASSOCIATION—(Founded in 1919)

Office.—107, Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

The Association was formed, in pursuance of clause (b) of Resolution XI of the First Session of the All-India Conference of the Moderate Party, with a view to do sustained work for the political progress and the moral and material welfare of the people, to give expression from time to time to the considered opinion of the Party on matters of public interest; and to inform and educate public opinion in Bombay State in support of its views, policy and methods.

The object of the Association is to foster a spirit of broadminded liberalism based on principles of liberty, equality and fraternity among the different classes and communities of the people. For the fulfilment of these objects the Association carries on educative and propagandist work by means of leaflets, pamphlets and other publications, (a) representations to Government, (b) meetings or conferences, lectures and all such methods as may be deemed practicable and expedient to educate public opinion, and (c) for advancing the interests of the Liberal Party by organising and influencing elections to the legislatures, Central and State, to Municipalities and District Local Boards.

The affairs of the Association are conducted by a Council consisting of 46 members who are elected every two years.

WOMEN'S INDIAN ASSOCIATION "MERU," TEYNAMPET, MADRAS

This Association was started in Madras in July 1917, with the aim of service

Aims and Objects:—To present to women their responsibilities as daughters of India. To secure for every girl and boy the right of education through schemes of compulsory primary education, including the teaching of religion. To secure the abolition of child-marriage and other social evils. To secure for women the vote for Municipal and Legislative Councils on the same terms as it is or may be granted to men. To secure adequate representation of women on Municipalities, Taluk and Local Boards, Legislative Councils and Assemblies. To establish equality of rights and opportunities between men and women.

The Association is actively engaged in the promotion of adult education, the training of women in industrial occupations and slum welfare work.

It interests women in maternity and child welfare work, in the uplift of the depressed classes and in other social and welfare activities for the general betterment of Indian society; has worked successfully for securing franchise for women in India (see pages 93 and 94 of the Simon Report, Vol. II), and compulsory education for girls. It was the initiator of the All-India Women's Conference and the First All-Asian Women's Conference at Lahore. The Madras Seva Sadan, the Madras Children's Aid Society, The Avval Home for Orphan Children and the Montessori School owe their origin to the efforts of this Association. The Association opened a Rescue Home to facilitate the working of the Rescue Section of the Immoral Traffic Act, enforced by Government. The Home was opened on 21st March 1934 by Lady Beatrice Stanley and is now under the Madras Vigilance Association.

It has four branches in the city, where cultural, recreational and educational activities for women are provided

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION

This Association, which was founded by Sir George Williams in 1844, is now a world-wide movement, well established in almost every country in both the hemispheres The aim of the Association is, through its religious, social, educational, and physical work to answer the fourfold—spiritual, social, mental and physical—needs of young men and boys.

The Young Men's Christian Association, though relatively new to India, is spreading rapidly. The 'local' Associations are autonomous and governed by local Boards of Directors These Associations in Convention elect a General Board which is responsible for the supervision and expansion of all forms of the Association work in India, Burma and Ceylon.

There are now 65 Associations in large towns and cities and many village Associations with many thousands of members of all races and creeds.

The work of the Council and of the local Association is carried on by numerous voluntary workers and Committees, assisted by 93 specially trained full-time Secretaries. Fully cognisant of the generous help in men and money the Association has received in the past from overseas organisations, the Indian Y.M C A today have their own men conducting their affairs, seven secretaries from foreign Councils still contribute their share to the work of the Indian Movement but all the rest are recruited in India and financed in India.

The work of the Council (excluding that of the 65 local Y M.C A.'s) called for a Budget of Rs. 1,13,537 in 1948. Of this sum Rs 28,000 had to be raised from the public in India.

The Bombay Association now possesses four well-equipped buildings at Wodehouse Road, Lamington Road, Rebsch Street and Reynolds Road Patron of the Association, His Excellency the Governor of Bombay, President H M Mulleneux; General Secretary J S B Abraham In connection with each branch there is a well-managed hostel providing accommodation for over 200 young men These branches are managed by a Committee working under the Board of Directors Each Branch organisation directs many and varied activities designed to meet the physical, spiritual, social, and mental needs of their members. A Welfare Service agency for labourers started in 1924 is now conducting a centre at Naigaum, Parel, serving mill workers, Municipal menial employees, Port Trust and Railway employees. A programme of education, lectures, physical culture, play and general uplift, profitably fills up the leisure time of the workers and their families The Association is responsible for the direction of three public playgrounds in the city, which are financed by the Municipality.

The Headquarters of the Council of Y M.C.A. is 5, Russell Street, Calcutta. The officers are:—

President of the Council:—H E. Raja Maharaj Singh, Bar-at-Law.

General Secretary.—T. D. Santwan, 5 Russell Street, Calcutta 16.

YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION OF INDIA, PAKISTAN, BURMA AND CEYLON

This Association founded in the year 1875 was organised nationally in 1896.

The aim of the Association is to unite women and girls of India, Burma and Ceylon in fellowship and mutual service for their spiritual, intellectual, social and physical development. The Association exists for women and girls of all communities There are the following branches General 121, Fellowship Groups 31; School Girl and Junior Branches 32, Girl Guide Companies 11 The needs of girls are met by recreation, clubs and classes, lectures, commercial classes, Bible Study and devotional meetings, and meetings for social intercourse. Hostels, some of them holding as many as 175 girls, are established where there is a demand for them and the Association, at present owns 25, including 6 holiday homes in the hills. These hostels accommodate working girls, teachers, nurses, students and apprentices In addition to holiday homes, Summer conferences are held annually in Ootacamund in South India and at Mussoorie, Special Girls' Camps are arranged from time to time in many centres.

Traveller's aid work is done in the large ports, and a large number of transient guests and visitors are accommodated in the homes in these centres. The Association also runs Employment Bureaux through the agency of which many girls find positions The commercial schools train girls for office and business life. These larger Associations are manned by trained Secretaries, some of whom come from India, Great Britain, America, Australia, New Zealand and Canada, though the majority of staff members are found and trained in India In many of the smaller branches where the work is of a simpler nature, it is carried on by voluntary workers who render faithful service year by year The Delhi School of Social Work is the latest achievement of the Association It is a post-graduate School affiliated to Delhi University offering M A degree and is open to men and women

The Association, which is affiliated to the World's Young Women's Christian Association is international and inter-denominational. Full membership is open to all who declare their faith in Lord Jesus Christ and desire to serve others in His spirit of love, and Associate membership is open to any girl or woman, regardless of what her religion may be, who wishes to join the world-wide fellowship of the Y. W. C. A. and declare her sympathy with its purpose, and to share in its activities.

The official organ of the Association is the leaflet Everymember which is issued each month and sent to members and friends of the Association.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE AND STATISTICS

1, COUNCIL HOUSE STREET, CALCUTTA

The Department of Statistics was re-absorbed into the Department of Commercial Intelligence with effect from the 1st December, 1922 The joint department has its office at No 1, Council House Street, Calcutta, and is administered by the Director-General of Commercial Intelligence and Statistics assisted by a Deputy Director-General and an Assistant Director. It embraces two distinct classes of work, (a) the collection and dissemination of information connected with overseas trade which may be of use to Indian firms and (b) the compilation and publication of All-India statistics relating to trade, commerce, customs, tariff, and cognate subjects

Among the important publications for which the Department is responsible are the following annual volumes —Statement of the Foreign Seaborne Trade and Navigation of India, Indian Coal Statistics, and Indian Customs Tariff The department also publishes a weekly journal—"The Indian Trade Journal"—the principal features of which are (a) information as to tariff changes in foreign countries which affect Indian interests, (b) notices of tenders called for and contracts placed by Government departments and public bodies, (c) crop reports and forecasts, (d) Government orders, communiques and other notifications affecting trade, (e) analysis of Indian trade statistics, (f) market reports, price and trade movements of the staple exports and imports, (g) trade enquiries for securing trade introductions, (h) fortnightly, monthly and annual reports of the Trade Commissioners, Consuls and other Trade and Commercial representatives of the Govt. of India abroad, (i) trade agreements, and (j) graphical representation of price changes of important commodities.

The Department also administers the COMMERCIAL LIBRARY AND READING ROOM located at No. 1, Council House Street, Calcutta This was at first a small departmental library used for the purpose of answering enquiries, but in 1919 the Government of India agreed to the formation of a combined technological library of reference in Calcutta in place of the separate libraries attached to the Departments of Commercial Intelligence and Statistics, and Patents and Designs, and the resultant Commercial Library and Reading Room was placed under the administrative control of the Director-General. It has now been expanded into a first-class technical library containing about 30,500 volumes on different subjects of commercial, economic and industrial interest as well as Indian and foreign statistical publications, and about 330 technical and commercial journals and market reports. Ordinarily books are consulted in the Library but they are also available on loan upon deposit of value throughout India.

The Department works in close co-operation with the Directors of Industries and other Government Departments in India, with the Indian Trade Commissioners and other Trade Representatives in various countries throughout the world, as well as with the Trade Commissioners and other Trade Representatives and Consular officers of foreign countries stationed in India.

EAST INDIA COTTON ASSOCIATION LIMITED

The Association is the outcome of the findings of the Indian Cotton Committee which was appointed by the Governor-General in Council under a resolution dated September 27th, 1917. The necessity of a system of periodical settlements, such as existed in Liverpool, was badly felt, especially when speculation was rife in figures which was so excessive in 1918 that the Trade had to invoke the aid of Government to prevent a financial crisis.

Since April 1948 the Association has been functioning under the Bombay Forward Contracts Control Act, 1947 under which it is the only recognized Cotton Association in the State.

The constitution of the Board of Directors is as under .—

The Indian Central Cotton Committee was constituted by the Government of India in March 1921, as a result of the recommendation of the Indian Cotton Committee of 1917-18 Originally the Committee was purely an advisory body but with its incorporation under the Indian Cotton Cess Act in 1923, it became an administrative body having at its disposal funds for the improvement and development of the growing, marketing and manufacture of cotton in India. The funds of the Committee are derived from the Cotton Cess of four annas per bale which was imposed under the Indian Cotton Cess Amendment Act of 1948. Having complete control over its funds the Committee has been able to build up a satisfactory reserve and is at present spending about Rs 10 lakhs per annum on cotton improvement, mainly on agricultural and technological research and seed distribution and marketing schemes.

The activities of the Committee now extend to all branches of cotton improvement in India, and, as an authoritative body to advise the Central and State Governments on important matters of cotton policy, it has attained an outstanding position. The Committee provides funds for research into cotton problems of All-India importance and for the development, extension and marketing of improved varieties of cotton The aim, however, has always been to supplement the work of the Agricultural Departments in the cotton growing States and States Unions Including as it does representatives of growers, agricultural officers, traders, spinners and manufacturers, it has been an invaluable forum for the discussion of many problems of general concern

Amongst the research schemes of the Committee, plant breeding schemes for the improvement of quality naturally take pride of place. The agencies employed by the Committee for its research work have varied little in character since 1923, though they have grown in number. It continues to maintain a Technological Laboratory at Bombay which includes a complete experimental spinning plant and a scientific laboratory for research on the cotton fibre and a Testing House which is recognised by the B I S.F.A. The Committee also provides a large proportion of the funds for the Indore Institute of Plant Industry.

The Committee has not stopped at the production of better cotton, but from its inception has devoted special attention to better marketing, to the prevention of adulteration and other abuses and to many other problems connected with the cotton trade of the country. Regulated

Cotton Markets existed in Berar before the establishment of the Committee, and that system which had stood the test of time was commended with certain modifications for general adoption Regulated Cotton Markets have now been established in Bombay Madhya Pradesh, Madras, Punjab (India), Hyderabad, and Madhya Bharat Similarly, on the recommendation of the Committee, the Cotton Transport Act was passed in 1923 by which State Governments are empowered to exclude from any specified area cotton, kanas or seed from outside unless required for a special purpose and covered by a licence The Act is now in force in almost all the important staple cotton areas of Bombay, Madras, Madhya Pradesh and Hyderabad In 1925, on the recommendation of the Committee, the Cotton Ginning and Pressing Factories Act was passed This provides for a certain measure of control of ginning and pressing factories and especially for the marking of all bales of cotton pressed with a press mark and serial number which enables them to be traced to their origin Recently the Act has been used for the prevention of watering and for the mixing of non-cotton articles with cotton The Committee has also taken steps to bring to the notice of the trade, both in India and abroad, those improved varieties which have now reached a commercial scale.

It may be stated that, as a result of the efforts of the Committee, the last twenty-seven years have seen a marked change in the character of the Indian crop, particularly in the percentage of short and medium staple Equally important is the result of agricultural research and its application to the yield of cotton per acre. The average yield per acre in the quinquennium 1942-47 for the whole country (undivided India) was 113 lbs As a result of the partition of the country the acreage under cotton in India was greatly reduced The average yield per acre in 1947-48 was 120 lbs The ascertained area under improved cotton in India during 1947-48 was about 47 per cent of the total as against 45 per cent in 1946-47 The ultimate ideal is to encourage the establishment of single variety tracts wherever agricultural conditions and the limitations of irrigation supply and soil make this possible

NATIONAL EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

As a means of ensuring the maximum utilisation of available manpower and supplying employers with the right type of workers, the Government of India is running an Employment Organization This Organization consists of a network of Employment Exchanges in the Republic of India and a large number of technical, vocational and apprenticeship training centres.

The Employment Exchanges were set up in pursuance of various recommendations of the International Labour Organization and in implementation of the I L O. Unemployment Convention of 1919 The scope of these Exchanges, which was first limited to ex-Services personnel, now covers all classes of employment-seekers.

The objects of the organization are —(1) to place applicants in suitable employment ; (2) to increase the mobility of labour both territorial and occupational , (3) to substitute a free, impartial and scientific system of recruitment for the one through jobbers and mistries which was condemned by the Whitley Commission on labour about two decades ago , (4) to assist in organizing training and retraining courses ; (5) to provide the necessary machinery and suitable data for the adoption of social security measures by the State , and ultimately (6) to promote full employment for the manpower available in the country

The organization is under the administrative charge of the Directorate-General of Resettlement and Employment which exercises powers of control and supervision over the ten Regional or State Offices.

Each Employment Exchange includes a branch dealing specially with problems of employment assistance to women and another with those of candidates possessing high-grade qualifications of a professional, scientific or administrative nature The needs of people living in areas far remote from the Exchanges are met by mobile units which are attached to many of the Exchanges These units visit villages and towns and perform Employment Exchange duties on the spot

After the partition of India, when the mass migration of displaced persons from Western Pakistan demanded the provision of an agency for the resettlement of these people, the Employment Organization extended its scope to displaced persons.

During the year 1949, the Employment Exchanges registered 1,066,351 applicants of whom 163,452 were displaced persons, and placed in employment 256,809 of whom 43,737 were displaced persons

By the end of December 1949, the Employment Exchanges had registered 3,188,394 persons of whom 5,01,562 were displaced persons, and placed in employment 794,259 of whom 126,777 were displaced persons

In Madras, U P , Punjab and Bihar the work of Employment Exchanges is supplemented by District Employment Offices

As an integral part of the Employment Organization, the Directorate-General of Resettlement and Employment is running technical and vocational training centres where training is imparted in more than one hundred technical and vocational trades In addition, those who have had some training already are given apprenticeship training at various firms and factories which are participating in the scheme. At the end of December, 1949 there were 70 Technical Training Centres, 75 Vocational Training Centres and 221 Apprenticeship Training Centres where 8,914 persons including 3,848 displaced persons, were under training These Centres have been catering so far only for ex-servicemen and displaced persons except in Madhya Pradesh and Bombay where a limited number of civilians also have been admitted for training by special arrangement with the State Governments At the end of December, 163 civilians were under training at Koni-Bilaspur and 222 Primary School teachers at Aundh, Bombay It has since been decided to throw open the Centres to all classes of people

A feature of the training imparted at the vocational and technical training centres is that the trainees are given practical training in the production of articles A permanent exhibition of articles made by trainees has been organised at the Directorate-General of Resettlement and Employment in New Delhi.

With a view to ensuring a steady supply of trained instructors for running technical and vocational training centres, both Government and private, a Central Institute for Training Instructors has been set up at Koni near Bilaspur in Madhya Pradesh By the end of December, it had turned out 226 Instructor-Trainees and there were another 146 under training

MEDICAL AND NURSING

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR SUPPLYING MEDICAL AID BY WOMEN TO THE WOMEN OF INDIA

Office —Red Cross Buildings, 20, Talkatora Road, New Delhi

The National Association for Supplying Medical Aid by Women to the Women of India was founded by the Countess of Dufferin in 1885, the object being to open women's hospitals and women's wards in existing hospitals, to train women doctors, nurses and midwives in India An endowment fund of about 6 lakhs was obtained by public subscription In addition, branches were formed in each State, each branch having its own funds and each having a number of Local Committees and Zenana Hospitals affiliated to it

The Central Fund gave grants-in-aid to several State branches: it gave scholarships to a number of women students at the medical colleges of Bombay, Calcutta, Madras and Delhi. It has in the past brought from England a certain number of European medical women. It has assisted by grants-in-aid the building of a number of zenana hospitals in different parts of India. It had affiliated to it 12 State branches and a number of Local Committees.

The Government of India subsidised the Countess of Dufferin's Fund to the extent of Rs. 8,500 per annum for each officer to maintain a Women's Medical Service for India—this service in the past consisted of 45 officers, with a training reserve of 25 doctors and one officer in the junior service. Medical women either British or Indian, holding registrable post graduate qualifications, were eligible for the senior service

In view of the provincialisation of health services under the Government of India Act 1935, the Countess of Dufferin's Fund Council decided in 1948, that the Women's Medical Service be disbanded and that steps be taken to absorb the personnel of the Women's Medical Service into the Central and Provincial Health Services, under conditions of service not less favourable than they enjoyed under the Women's Medical Service As the Women's Medical Service officers staffed the Dufferin Hospitals in the States, the Council recommended to the Local Hospital Committees and the State Governments to provincialise the Dufferin Hospitals The winding up of the Women's Medical Service was completed in 1949, and most of the doctors have been absorbed into the Medical Services of the State Governments and the Central Government The control and management of the Dufferin Hospitals have been taken over by the States concerned

The balance of the endowment fund will be divided between Pakistan and India on the proportions agreed to by the Joint Committee of representatives of the two countries It is proposed that in India the balance of the fund will be utilised for providing medical relief to women by women especially in rural areas

The National Association has appointed the Countess of Dufferin's Fund Council to formulate policies for the promotion of medical aid, and its day to day affairs are managed by an Executive Committee of which Dr Jivraj Mehta is the Chairman and Dr. S Pandit, Secretary

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE BOMBAY NURSES, MIDWIVES AND HEALTH VISITORS' COUNCIL

Office – Old Yacht Club Building, Apollo Bunder, Bombay 1

The legislation for the registration of Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors with a view to protecting the public from persons who misrepresent themselves as fully qualified Nurses, Midwives or Health Visitors was passed by the Bombay Government, in April 1935, namely the Bombay Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors' Registration Act In the absence of State Registration the nurses trained in this State were subject to certain disabilities and were refused Registration in other States and in other countries, where state registration prevailed The Act obtains for them the necessary status and secures their registration in other States and States Unions in India

The training and registration of nurses, midwives and health visitors in Bombay State is controlled by the Council Nurses who are trained and registered in this State can now get registration with the General Nursing Council of England and Wales and the General Nursing Council of Scotland and can practise as qualified nurses in these Countries

ST JOHN AMBULANCE ASSOCIATION (INDIA) AND ST JOHN AMBULANCE BRIGADE (INDIA)

Office —20, Talkatora Road, New Delhi 3

The St John Ambulance Association was founded in 1877, by the Order of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem in England, and has for its objects :—

(a) The instruction of persons in rendering First Aid in cases of accident or sudden illness and in the transport of the sick and injured,

(b) The instruction of persons in the elementary principles and practice of nursing, and also of hygiene and sanitation, especially of a sick room,

(c) The manufacture, and distribution by sale or presentation, of ambulance material, and the formation of ambulance depots in mines, factories and other centres of industry and traffic,

(d) The Organisation of Ambulance Corps, Invalid Transport Corps, and Nursing Corps,

(e) And generally the promotion of instruction and carrying out of works for the relief of suffering of the sick and injured in peace and war independently of class, nationality or denomination

An Indian Council of the Association was constituted on a regular basis in 1910 It has since issued over 7,12,000 certificates of proficiency in First Aid, Home Nursing, Hygiene and Sanitation and Domestic Hygiene and Mothercraft and over 45,200 tokens such as Vouchers, Medallions, Labels and Pendants for special proficiency in these subjects In addition over 1,34,200 certificates have been issued in the elementary course for school students known as Mackenzie School Course in First Aid, Hygiene and Sanitation.

During the year 1949, 33,593 persons attended courses of instruction in First Aid, Home Nursing, Hygiene and Sanitation and Domestic Hygiene, and Mothercraft Of these 25,867 qualified for the Association's certificates i e, 24,004 in First Aid, 1,182 in Home Nursing, 325 in Hygiene and Sanitation and 56 in Domestic Hygiene and Mothercraft

The Association has five grades of members, namely, Patrons, Honorary Councillors, Life Members, Annual Members and Annual Associates Their respective subscriptions are Rs. 1,000, Rs 500, Rs 100, Rs 5 and Rs. 2.

The income of the Indian Council at headquarters consists primarily of interest on securities, a fixed annual grant from Government, fees for certificates and membership subscriptions

The President of the Republic of India is the President of the Association Its general business is conducted by an Executive Committee of which The Hon'ble Rajkumari Amrit Kaur is the Chairman and Sardar Bahadur Balwant Singh Puri, CIE, OBE, the Secretary-General

The St John Ambulance Brigade is a uniformed, disciplined body of men and women, all of whom are holders of First Aid, and, in the case of women also Home Nursing certificates They meet together regularly for practice, are inspected and re-examined annually and undertake to turn out for public duty whenever required

The Brigade in India is commanded by The Hon'ble Rajkumari Amrit Kaur as Chief Commissioner for India Under her are 18 Districts covering almost all the States and major railways in India with headquarters at Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Bangalore, Lucknow, Nagpur, Patna, Delhi, Shillong, Indore, Cuttack Secunderabad and Simla

In charge of each District there is an Assistant Commissioner or a Commissioner according to the membership strength of the District, and as the work of the Brigade lies so much in the medical and surgical sphere, the Officers-in-Charge of the Districts are generally the administrative heads of the Civil Medical Departments of the respective provinces. It is their business to organise and maintain the training and efficiency of Ambulance and Nursing Division and to see that they are available for public service on occasions when they are required.

Both the St. John Ambulance Association and Brigade work under the ægis of the Order of St John of Jerusalem and as their work is complementary to that of the Indian Red Cross Society, close co-operation exists between the Order and the Society.

THE TRAINED NURSES' ASSOCIATION OF INDIA AND THE ASSOCIATION OF NURSING SUPERINTENDENTS OF INDIA

Office —1, Underhill Lane, Delhi 2

The Trained Nurses' Association of India was founded in 1905 and incorporates the Association of Nursing Superintendents of India. It is affiliated with the International Council of Nurses, the National Council of Women in India and the Indian Conference of Social Work, and the Nurses' Auxiliary of the Christian Medical Association is an affiliated Association Its objects are —

(a) to uphold in every way the dignity and honour of nursing profession,

(b) to promote a sense of esprit de corps among all nurses,

(c) to enable members to take counsel together on matters affecting their profession,

(d) to elevate nursing education and to raise the standard of training,

(e) to strive to bring about a more uniform system of education, examination, certification and registration.

The Association has accomplished a great deal in raising the standard of nursing throughout India, in improving nursing legislation and in providing post-graduate courses for nurse administrators, sister tutors and health visitors and in promoting the Founding of a College of Nursing, in Delhi, which gives a 4-year B.Sc. Honours course in Nursing (leading to a degree from Delhi University)

It strives in every way to promote efficient and adequate nursing for the sick and to improve conditions, not only for nurses but primarily for patients The Association is self-supporting and is maintained by the nurses themselves.

CHURCH ORGANIZATION

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH

The Catholic community is composed of the following elements :—

(1) The "Syrian" Christians of the Malabar coast, traditionally said to have been converted by the Apostle St. Thomas. They were brought under allegiance to the Pope by the Portuguese in 1599, and placed first under Jesuit bishops and then under Carmelite Vicars Apostolic. They are at present ruled by an Archbishop and three suffragan Bishops of their own Syriac rite.

(2) Converts of the Portuguese missionaries from 1500 onwards, starting from Goa and working in the south of the peninsula and up the west coast, Ceylon, Bengal, etc.

(3) European immigrants at all times.

(4) Modern converts from Hinduism and Animism in recent mission centres.

(5) Recent converts from the Jacobite community in Malabar, of which 3 Bishops, 71 priests and some 28,000 laity have been received into the Catholic Church.

The Portuguese mission enterprise, starting after 1500, continued for about 200 years, after which it began to decline. To meet this decline fresh missionaries were sent out by the Congregation de propaganda fide, till by the middle of the 19th century the whole country was divided out among them except such portions as were occupied by the Goa clergy. Hence arose a conflict of jurisdiction in many parts between the Portuguese clergy of the "Padroado" or royal patronage, and the propaganda clergy. This conflict was set at rest by the Concordat of 1886 (amended by the Agreement of 1928, abolishing "double jurisdiction") At the same time the whole country was placed under a regular hierarchy, which after subsequent adjustments now stands as follows .—

Under the Sacred Congregation of Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs:—

The archbishopric of Goa and Damaun with suffragan bishoprics at Cochin and Mylapore (both in Indian Union)

Under the Sacred Congregation of Oriental Churches:—

The archbishopric of Ernakulam, with suffragan bishoprics of Changanacherry, Kottayam and Trichur.

The archbishopric of Trivandrum, with suffragan bishopric of Tiruvella.

Under the Sacred Congregation of Propaganda Fide :—

The archbishopric of Agra, with suffragan bishoprics of Allahabad, Ajmer and Lucknow and the Prefectures Apostolic of Indore, Jhansi and Gorakhpur

The archbishopric of Bombay, with suffragan bishoprics of Poona, Mangalore, Calicut, Tiruchirapalli, Tuticorin, Mathurai and the Dioceses of Karachi and Ahmedabad.

The archbishopric of Calcutta, with suffragan bishoprics of Ranchi, Dacca, Chittagong Krishnagar, Dinajpur, Patna and Shillong and the Prefecture Apostolic of Sikkim.

The archbishopric of Madras, with suffragan bishoprics of Nellore, Hyderabad, Vizagapatam, Nagpur, Bezwada, Cuttack and Guntur, the Prefecture Apostolic of Jubbulpore, and the Diocese of Bellary.

The archbishopric of Pondicherry (French) with suffragan bishoprics of Mysore, Coimbatore, Kumbakonam, Salem, Malacca and Bangalore.

The archbishopric of Delhi and Simla, with suffragan bishoprics of Lahore, Multan and Rawalpindi.

The archbishopric of Verapoly, with suffragan bishoprics of Quilon, Kottar, Trivandrum and Vijayapuram

The archbishopric of Colombo (Ceylon), with suffragan bishoprics at Kandy, Galle, Jaffna, Trincomalee and Chilaw.

Three Vicariates Apostolic and three Prefectures Apostolic of Burma.

The European clergy engaged in India almost all belong to religious orders, congregations or mission seminaries, and in the great majority are either French, Belgian, Dutch, Swiss, Spanish or Italian by nationality. They number over 1,500 besides which there is a body of secular clergy mostly Indian, etc., numbering about 4,000, and over 11,000 nuns The first work of the clergy is parochial ministration to existing Christians, including railway people. Second comes education, which is not confined to their own people ; their schools being patronized by large numbers of Hindus, Mahomedans, Parsis, etc. Among the most important institutions are St. Xavier's College, Calcutta, St Peter's College, Agra, St. Xavier's College, Bombay, St Joseph's College, Tiruchirapalli, St. Aloysius College, Mangalore, Loyola College, Madras, teaching university courses, besides a large number of high schools and elementary schools The education of girls is supplied for by numerous convent schools worked by religious congregations of nuns to say nothing of orphanages and other charitable institutions The total number under education in 1948 exceeded seven lakhs As to missionary work proper, the country is covered with numerous modern mission centres, among which those in the Punjab, Chota-Nagpur, Krishnagar, Gujerat, the Ahmednagar district and the Telugu coasts may be mentioned. (Full particulars on all points will be found in the Catholic Directory already quoted) The mission work is limited solely by shortage of men and money, which if forthcoming would give the means to an indefinite extension The resources of the clergy besides the ordinary church collections are derived mainly from the collections of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith and of the Holy Childhood helped out by private or other donations secured from home by the different local missionaries. In mission work the fathers count as enrolled only those who are baptised and persevering as Christians, and no baptism, except for infants or at point of death, is administered except after careful instruction and probation This, while keeping down the record, has the advantage of guaranteeing solid results

The Holy See is represented by an Apostolic Internuncio for India residing at Delhi He continues to be the Delegate Apostolic to places other than the Indian Union, e g for Pakistan, Ceylon, Burma, etc At present this post is occupied by the Most Rev Archbishop Kierkels, D.D., appointed in 1931

CHURCH OF SOUTH INDIA

(The Diocesan Office, Cathedral P O , Madras 6)

After negotiations which began with a meeting at Tranquebar in 1919 and continued until 1947, the Church of South India was inaugurated at a great service held in St George's Cathedral, Madras on September 27, 1947. Distinguished representatives from Churches and Organisations from many parts of the world were present By this Union Christians in South India who previously belonged to the Church of India, Burma and Ceylon (Anglican), the South India United Church (Congregationalist and Presbyterian) and the Methodist Church became one Church of South India The Missionary Societies and Boards which work through this Church draw support in personnel and money from Great Britain, Ireland, United States of America, Australia, New Zealand, Switzerland and Germany. The Church is divided into 14 Dioceses, 13 in India and one in the North of Ceylon, has 14 Diocesan Bishops and one retired Bishop It includes about 10 lakhs of Christian and has over 700 ordained Ministers. In addition to carrying on evangelistic, pastoral, educational and medical work within South India it also supports its own Missionary Work in Papua and among the Gonds The Church of South India is a member of the World Council of Churches and one of its fundamental purposes is that the union here achieved between Churches of different traditions should provide stimulus both to wider union among Christians in South India and to union in other countries between those Churches that are there still separated but here united The government of the Church is designed to preserve all that is of lasting value in the Congregationalist, Presbyterian and Episcopal traditions Each Diocese has a Diocesan Council composed of clerical and lay representatives, and decisions affecting the whole Church rest with the Synod, a body of some 200 ordained and unordained representatives, drawn from the 14 dioceses The Officers of the Synod, elected at each ordinary meeting, which normally occurs at intervals of two years are —

The Moderator .—The Rt Rev A M Hollis

Deputy Moderator —The Rt. Rev F Whittaker

Secretary —G V Job

Treasurer —Rao Sahib S J Augustus

The names of the Dioceses and Bishops are as follows —

Rt Rev C K Jacob (Central Travancore), Rt Rev H Sumitra (Cuddapah and Anantapur), Rt Rev. ANGLICAN

Down to March 1st, 1930, the Church of England in India (and Ceylon) though possessing its own bishops and Metropolitan, was in the eyes of the law an integral part of the Church of England, and subject to the general supervision of the Archbishop of Canterbury By the Indian Church Act and the Indian Church Measure passed by Parliament in 1927 this legal connection was severed, and on March 1st, 1930, for the fixing of which date provision was made by the Indian Church Measure, the Church of England in India and in Ceylon, in future to be known as the Church of India, Burma and Ceylon, and, for short, the Church of India, (or of Burma or of Ceylon, in these countries, became wholly responsible for the management of its own affairs, although, as it states in the Preamble to its Constitution, it has no intention or desire "to renounce its obligations to the rest of the Holy Catholic Church and its fundamental principles, but on the contrary acknowledges that if it should abandon those fundamental principles it would break spiritual continuity with its past and destroy its spiritual identity "

Anglican work in India dates from the first establishment of the East India Company in the 17th Century on the shores of India at Surat, Madras, and Bombay, where the servants of the Company were ministered to by a continuous succession of chaplains The first chaplain was the Revd. Peter Rogers, Surat, 1612. The first Church built was St George's, Madras, in 1680, followed by Bombay Church, now St Thomas' Cathedral, in 1716 In South India the work of Danish and German Lutheran missionaries was assisted by the English S P C K. (Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge), but missionary work was not attempted by the Church itself till the beginning of the 19th Century.

Like all other branches of the Anglican Communion the Church of India is episcopal The first bishopric was not, however, founded until 1814 when the See of Calcutta was set up, the first bishop being Thomas Fanshaw Middleton. His jurisdiction at first included not only India but the British settlements in Australia, the Straits, the Cape and St Helena's At the same time India was divided into three Archdeaconries, and two of these, Madras in 1835 and Bombay in 1837, were later erected into bishoprics The three dioceses thus formed have been repeatedly subdivided, until there were sixteen, the dates of their creation being as follows Calcutta 1814, Madras 1835, Bombay 1837, Colombo 1845, Lahore 1877, Rangoon 1877, Travancore 1879, Chota Nagpur 1890, Lucknow 1893, Tirunelvell 1896, Nagpur 1903, Dornakal 1912, Assam 1915 Nasik 1929 Bhagalpur 1943, Delhi 1947 There are assistant bishops in the dioceses of Lahore, Calcutta and Colombo Since September 1947, and the inauguration of the Church of South India the dioceses of Madras, Tirunelvell, Travancore, and Dornakal have ceased to be part of the Church of India.

Rules for the government of the Church are contained in its "Constitution, Canons and Rules" adopted by its General Council in session at Calcutta in 1930 All clergy before receiving a license from their bishop make, in addition to an oath of canonical obedience to their bishop, a declaration accepting the Constitution, Canons and Rules, as well as a declaration concerning the faith and formularies of the Church. Lay members of the General and Diocesan Councils also make declarations of assent and acceptance The government of the Church is through these Councils, the General Council being for the whole ecclesiastical province of India, Burma and Ceylon Its membership consists of the bishops of the State, and houses of clergy and laity elected by the Diocesan Councils The Diocesan Councils consist of the Bishop of the Diocese and all its clergy, together with lay representatives elected by the parishes To exercise a vote in the election of lay representatives parishioners must be adult communicant members of the Church It is open to a diocese to add to these qualifications that of having contributed some specified amount to the expenses of the Church In addition to these councils every parish has a Church committee or council with a recognized constitution and these are in many areas organised into district Church councils, particularly where Indian parishes are numerous Again in addition to these councils the bishops of the State meet in Synod, with clerical and four lay assessors if a matter of faith or order is being dealt with, and the bishop of a diocese can at any time hold a Synod of his clergy Determinations on matters of faith and order are made only by the House of Bishops of the General Council and cannot be made subjects of disciplinary action unless adopted in the form of a canon by the whole Council.

The additional title of Metropolitan was given to the Bishop of Calcutta when the Sees of Madras and Bombay were formed It is an ancient title similar to archbishop and indicates that its holder has jurisdiction over the other bishops of the State. Before consecration a diocesan bishop takes an oath of canonical obedience to the Metropolitan. Under the Constitution of the Church bishops are elected by the diocese, subject to confirmation by the bishops of the State In the Constitution, Canons and Rules, the Constitution consists of Declarations laying down the position of the Church of India as a part of the One, Holy, Catholic and Apostolic Church; the Canons lay down principles of government and organisation; the Rules arrange in detail for the carrying out of the Canons, and are more easily altered or added to than the Canons. The salaries and allowances of the Bishops of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay were from the foundation of those Secs paid out of the Revenues of Government, as also in part those of the Bishops of Lahore, Rangoon, Lucknow and Nagpur. Down to 1930 these bishops were appointed by the British Crown Since 1930 vacancies have been filled by election, and Bishops elected to the Sees of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, instead of being paid wholly by Government were till 1947 so paid only in part. For the other seven bishoprics, and for any others, set up, Government was in no way responsible.

The Ecclesiastical establishment of the Government of India was an inheritance from the East India Company That Company from the first provided chaplains for its servants The chaplains of the establishment were till 1947 maintained for ministration to the Government's British born servants, civil and military They were chosen by the Indian Chaplaincies Board sitting in London, were appointed by the Secretary of State, were posted to Dioceses by the Governor-General in consultation with the Metropolitan, and within their Dioceses were posted to stations by the Provincial Governor on the recommendation of the diocesan bishop Their pay and allowances were wholly met by Government In spiritual matters they were subject to the supervision and jurisdiction of their bishop and while Government servants, civil and military were their primary charge, they were the parish priests of the chaplaincies to which they were appointed and were responsible for the care of all members of the church in their parish except in so far as Indian Members of the Church were cared for by missionaries or Indian clergy Besides providing chaplains the Government of India, again following the practice of the East India Company, provided or assisted in the provision of churches and their maintenance, and also of cemeteries Where numbers did not warrant the provision of an Establishment or chaplain Government assisted in the provision of clergy by grants-in-aid, and when from time to time the number of Establishment chaplains was reduced special grants-in-aid were granted The Establishment ended in 1947, and the block grant for aided Chaplaincies ended on March 31st 1948. A lump sum grant was paid for the financial year 1948-1949 Then all grants from Government ceased

The great influx of British troops caused by the war had necessitated the provision of additional religious ministrations This need was met by the organisation in 1942 of an Indian Army Chaplains Service It provided ministrations for Indian Christian as well as British Christian troops

[Note The Ecclesiastical establishment included besides Anglican chaplains, Church of Scotland, Free Church, and Roman Catholic chaplains, for ministrations to members of those communions, and churches and grants-in-aid were provided or given on the same principles as for Anglicans]

Members of the Church of England or any of the branches of the Anglican Communion are, while resident in India, full members of the Church of India There are no racial distinctions whatever in the Church Indian clergy frequently preach or celebrate for European congregations, and in a few instances are in permanent charge of European parishes. The Indian laity though usually preferring services in their own languages are everywhere free to attend English churches, and to be enrolled, if they wish, as parishioners.

The education of European children, and more particularly the children of the Domiciled and Anglo-Indian community, has from early days been a concern of the Church. In addition to day-schools it has established over 70 boarding schools for boys and girls, many of them in hill stations. The State Governments assist these schools with grants-in-aid both for building and current expenditure, just as they do to all other schools, according to the rules of the education codes The schools are inspected by Government inspectors Indian boys and girls are admitted to these schools, but the number that may be taken is limited to a percentage fixed by the local Government. An appeal issued by the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1938 for the endowment of these schools had produced by June, 1939, just under £30,700 The fund is known as The Anglo-Indian Schools Fund and is still open for the receipt of donations. Indianisation of Government services, especially of the railways, customs and post and telegraph departments has severely hit the Domiciled and Anglo-Indian community, and the ability of parents to pay fees is steadily decreasing. Hence the urgent need for increased endowments. The existing endowments of all the schools yield an income of less than £1 per child per annum.

[Note The Church of India is not the only community responsible for European education in India. The Roman Catholics, the Church of Scotland and the various free churches provide schools for their children, and receive similar assistance from Government]

UNITED CHURCH OF NORTHERN INDIA

In 1904 all the Presbyterian Missions that were working in India came under one General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, but in 1910 the Synod of South India of this Presbyterian Church separated from the All-India General Assembly so that it could start union negotiations with other Churches This Union was consummated in 1947. The Presbyterian Church while continuing its work was also engaged in negotiations for union with other Churches, specially with the General Aikya of the Congregational Churches in Western India and this union was also consummated much earlier in 1924 This is how the United Church of Northern India came into being

This Church now controls the Church work of 11 foreign Missionary Societies, namely, The American Presbyterian Mission, The American Marathi Mission, The Church of Scotland Mission, American Evangelical Mission, United Church of Canada Mission, Irish Presbyterian Mission, Welsh Presbyterian Mission, Newzealand Presbyterian Mission, English Presbyterian Mission, Canadian Presbyterian Mission (which united in 1944), London Missionary Society (Bengal), (united in 1945).

The Church numbers 90,000 communicant members and a total community of about 300,000

The work of the United Church of Northern India is carried on through Church Courts — the first Court is the session of a local organized congregation, there being over 1,200 organized congregations. The next Court is a Church Council gathered together from 15 to 50 organized congregations. There are 25 Church Councils in the United Church of Northern India A Synod is composed of 3 to 6 Church Councils on a State linguistic area There are 6 such Synods and the supreme governing Court of all these is the General Assembly of the United Church of Nothern India.

The following are the officers of the General Assembly —Moderator.—The Rt Rev. Dr A. Ralla Ram, Allahabad; Vice-Moderator —The Rev. Dr. J. Kellock, Wilson College, Bombay, Treasurer.—Dr. B B. Malvea, Ewing Christian College, Allahabad; Statistician.—Rai Saheb George Mahbert, Siliguri, Bengal, Executive Secretary —The Rev. Kenneth Yohan Masih, Mission House, Mhow.

The General Assembly of the United Church of Northern India has its own property and Trust Fund holding association recognized by the Government under the Indian Companies Act of 1913; it is called U C.N.I. Trust Association with its registered office at the Inter Mission Business Office, Hornby Road, Bombay.

The detailed working out of the Church work is being carried on through Standing Committees of the various Church Courts. The General Assembly itself has 18 such Standing Committees. The Church at present is also engaged in carrying on negotiations with some of the larger churches in Northern India for an organic union, under one organization.

THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND

The Chaplaincy work of the Church of Scotland dates from 1814, when the Rev. Dr Bryce landed in Calcutta and organised a congregation of his Scottish fellow countrymen. The centenary of the churches in the three Presidency towns was celebrated · Calcutta 1914, Bombay 1919, Madras 1921 Up till August 15, 1947, the Indian Ecclesiastical Establishment (Church of Scotland) had from 12 to 15 Chaplains on its staff. Some of these were attached to the Scottish Regiments in India, while others administered to the civil population of the towns where they were stationed and to those living in the smaller outstations in their respective areas In addition to the regular establishment, there were a number of ministers throughout India who were maintained by the various communities to whom they ministered and by the additional Clergy Societies in India Missionaries of the Church also maintained, and still do, regular services in English at a number of centres In consequence of Constitutional and other changes in India, the Ecclesiastical Establishment was abolished after Aug 15, 1947, and the churches which had ministers of their own became entirely responsible themselves for the maintenance of religious ordinances The whole of the work of the Church of Scotland amongst Scots and other Europeans in India is now under the Colonial Continental Committee of the Church, and is maintained entirely from Church funds.

The main centres are now Calcutta, Bombay, Madras and Karachi, where there are strong and flourishing congregations

The Mission Work of the Church of Scotland officially dates from 1829, but Scottish Church Missionaries were in India before then John Wilson, who left Scotland in 1828 for Western India, and was the founder of Wilson College in Bombay, was with other Scots working under the auspices of the Scottish Missionary Society, until in 1835 the General Assembly took the missionaries under its charge Alexander Duff, one of the greatest of modern missionaries, was sent to Calcutta in 1829, and was the first to open schools where English was made the medium of instruction Mrs Wilson was the first in Bombay to open a Boarding School for girls a revolutionary step in 1834 Alike in Calcutta, Bombay, and in Madras from 1837, the early Scottish Missionaries made a deep mark in the educational life of the time

This educational contribution has been maintained up to the present (1950) and shows no signs of diminishing. The Church today has many schools in all parts of its field, and it has five well-known Christian Colleges at work The Scottish Church College, Calcutta, The Madras Christian College, Wilson College, Bombay, Hislop College, Nagpur, Murray College, Sialkot (Pak). The Madras Christian College has been rebuilt on a magnificent site at Tambaram, and it became known to many all over the world when in 1938 it became the meeting place of the World Missionary Conference. In a number of these educational institutions, the work is now shared with other societies and missions. On the women's side, the Women's Foreign Mission does invaluable service in school, medical and Zenana work, having in India 41 European Missionaries, 163 teachers, over 50 schools, 4 hospitals and 6 dispensaries. On the men's side: there are 15 Mission Hospitals at different centres.

As a result of the Evangelistic work carried on for over 100 years, an Indian Church has been established In the Punjab, Evangelistic work is carried on from 8 centres, and the Baptised Christian Community now numbers over 30,000 Work commenced in Darjeeling in 1870, is now carried on throughout the whole eastern Himalayan District, and there is a Christian Community there of over 15,000. In the 8 mission districts of Calcutta, the Eastern Himalayas, Madras, Santlia, Rajputana, Nagpur, Western India and the Punjab there were at the end of 1938 over 70,000 Baptised Indian Christians.

The Church has also played a large part in educational work for the Anglo-Indian Community. In Bombay the Scottish Congregation there has 6 statutory representatives on the Governing Body of the Anglo-Scottish Education Society, while the Scottish Community in Bombay is responsible for the Bombay Scottish Orphanage Society's School at Mahim, over which the Scots Kirk, Bombay, exercises pastoral supervision. The well-known St Andrew's Colonial homes at Kalimpong, in W Bengal, though not directly part of the work of the Church of Scotland, were initiated by and are being locally managed by Missionaries of that church The homes exist for the benefit of the domiciled European and Anglo-Indian Community and are doing magnificent work. There are now over 20 cottages and about 700 children in residence.

THE METHODIST CHURCH IN SOUTHERN ASIA

The Methodist Church in Southern Asia is the official title of that branch of world Methodism which is found in India and Pakistan, and has its source of origin in the Missionary enterprise of the Methodist Church in the United States of America It was originally known as the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was started in India in 1856 first at Bareilly, U.P The work of the Church in India spread extensively and rapidly reaching out to far distant points outside India The largest development and progress in India however, have been in the Uttar Pradesh, the Punjab, the Gujarat and the Telugu Country around Hyderabad, Deccan The membership of the Church in India and Pakistan today is over half a million adult full members

The other statistics of the Church may be noted as follows —Number of organized Churches, 570, Number of ordained clergy, 510, Number of total Church membership, 503,764, Number of men workers (Christians), 2,166, Number of women workers (Christians), 1,371, Amount raised last year for support of work in India, Rs 416,206

Under its own Central Conference brought into existence in 1885, it enjoys autonomy, makes its own legislation, elects its own Bishops and has general control over the administration of the whole Church in India and Pakistan

The Government of the Church is through Councils called Conferences, The General Conference is for the entire Church of world Methodism and meets once in four years in the United States of America India sends about twenty or more delegates to it. It has full legislative power in all matters distinctively connectional Central Conferences are organized for the work of the Church in countries outside the United States of America, and meet once in four years succeeding the meeting of the General Conference The Annual Conferences are composed of all the ordained ministers in full connection with them, and of the lay members elected by each organized Church within their boundaries The Annual Conference is the basic body of the Methodist Church Every Annual Conference is divided into a number of Districts, each of which corresponds to a Diocese in the Episcopal system in other such Churches These Districts are organized under District Conferences meeting once a year In addition to these every pastoral charge has a Quarterly Conferences with a recognized constitution, which meets four times a year under the presidency of the District Superintendent.

The Administrator polity of the Church is Episcopal, and the work is administered by four Bishops, each in charge of a division called an Area The areas with their Bishops and their residence are as follows —Delhi Area, which includes Western Pakistan: Bishop J W Pickett, 12, Boulevard Road, Delhi; Hyderabad Area, Bishop S. K. Mondol, Chapel Road, Hyderabad, Deccan; Lucknow Area, which includes Eastern Pakistan, Bishop C. D. Rockey, 37, Cantonment Road, Lucknow, U.P.; Bombay Area, Bishop John A. Subhan, Robinson Memorial, Byculla, Bombay 8.

Then there are ten Annual Conferences in India and Pakistan such as the one described above Bengal, Bombay, Madhya Pradesh, Delhi, Gujarat, Hyderabad, Indus River (Pakistan), Lucknow, North India and South India.

Two of the Administrative Offices with their heads are as follows —Office of the Central Treasurer Methodist Church, Lal Bagh, Lucknow, U P Treasurer Miss E L Whiting. Executive Board Among its duties are to work for the establishment and advancement of all the institutional and other activities of the Church, to care for all its property and legal matters and to promote and safeguard its financial interests. Secretary · Rev. E Ahmed Shah, C.I.E., 9, Fyzabad Road, Lucknow, U P Treasurer: Rev. I. A Harris, Robinson Memorial, Byculla, Bombay 8.

The Church from the very outset has laid special stress on the preparation of evangelists, pastors and teachers for rural work, and on developing an indigenous ministry.

Marked attention is also paid to educational work in general, higher, secondary and vocational. The Church has some twenty High Schools and 441 Village Schools, in various parts of India and Pakistan with some 41,000 scholars in all classes, and spends some Rs 27,45,570 annually for their maintenance The current expenditure on Hostels amounts to approximately Rs 13,76,310. The Lucknow Christian College, for men and the Isabella Thoburn College for women are the crown of its educational system.

The Church is also very strong in its medical work Well-equipped hospitals staffed with highly qualified surgeons and nurses have been built up These are found in Bareilly and Brindaban in U P, Baroda and Nadiad in Gujarat, Bidar and Vikarabad in Hyderabad, Kolar in Mysore, Madar (for tuberculosis) in Rajasthan and Sironicha in Madhya Pradesh. At Bowringpeth in Mysore the All-India Tablet Industry is doing a unique work with up-to-date machinery for production of every type of medicinal tablets

The Lucknow Publishing House was established by the Church in 1860 and publishes the Indian Witness, the weekly organ, in English.

In the general administration of the Church there is no room for racial distinction All the offices are equally open to Indians and to non-Indians Two of its four Bishops are Indians. It being the aim of the Church from the very beginning to establish an indigenous Church in India, it has rapidly developed a national leadership and most of the responsible positions are held by Indians The funds received from the United States of America are administered by the Finance Committee which is largely composed of Indian members.

THE APOSTOLIC CHURCH OF THE INDIES

The Apostolic Church of the Indies was Established as the Church of India, Ceylon and Malaya by the Government of India Act XXI of 1860. It is a distinct Province of the One, Holy, Catholic and Apostolic Church of which the Lord Jesus Christ is the Supreme Head. The Church is neither Roman Catholic nor Protestant, but Syrian and Orthodox. It is Syrian because it derives its Historic Episcopate, Mission and Jurisdiction from the First See of Saint Peter in Antioch (A D 35) and Orthodox because it repudiates Jacobitism, Monophysitism, Nestorianism, and all other 'heresies' condemned by the first seven Ecumenical Councils of the undivided Church of the first thousand years. Supreme Hierarch under God: His Eminence the Most Reverend Mar Petros I., Archbishop of India, Primate of all the Indies and Catholicos of the East. Address: Saint Peter's Cathedral, Ambur, S. India,

MISSIONS

In Malabar, on the south-west coast of India, there have been Christians certainly from the 6th century, probably from the 4th century and possibly from the 1st century A.D. They are called "Syrian" Christians owing to their connection with the Church in Syria. They do not appear to have attempted to spread the Christian faith in India The Portuguese may therefore be regarded as the first missionaries in India, and from their arrival at Goa the Franciscans and Dominicans who accompanied their fleets in large numbers threw themselves with great activity into the work of evangelism. The formation of the Society of Jesus led to one of its first members, the famous St. Francis Xavier, being sent to Goa, where he arrived in 1541. Under his leadership the preaching of Christianity was carried on with great earnestness. The missionary work of the Roman Catholic Church thus begun has been continued, and at the present day the number of Indian members of that Church is given as 5,000,000 to which may be added over 800,000 Syrian Christians attached to the Roman Church. The number of independent Syrian Christians (Census 1931) is given as 525,607.

Protestant missions did not begin till the 18th century, and as missionaries were not allowed to establish themselves in the Company's territories they worked from Danish territory and in the former Indian States These missionaries were Lutherans, but as stated before, were in the latter part of the 18th Century assisted with funds from England Famous men among them were Ziegenbalg, Kiernander, Schultze and Christian Friedrick Schwarz. By the end of the 18th Century it is believed that there were in South India about 30,000 Lutheran converts In 1800 the famous Baptist trio, Carey, Marshman and Ward established themselves at Serampore in W. Bengal (Carey had come to India in 1793). Men of humble origin and education, one was a cobbler, one a ragged-school teacher, and one a printer, they displayed great ability and enterprise, and threw themselves not only into evangelism but into the scientific study of India, its languages and culture, and its flora and fauna. Books and translations poured from their printing press. Carey was made professor of Sanskrit in Lord Wellesley's College for the training of civil and military officers

The 19th Century saw a great increase in missionary effort of every sort This was due to the opening of the Company's territories to missionaries by the Government of India Act of 1813, and it was only after that date that Anglican (Church of England) missionary Societies took up work in India, namely the Church Missionary Society and the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, by sending as missionaries ordained clergy of the Church of England, those hitherto subsidised or sent by the S.P.C.K. being Lutherans The first missionaries to arrive after the passing of the Act were American Congregationalists. The London Missionary Society were also early in the field and Presbyterians from America and Scotland soon followed In the course of the century India became covered by a network of missions, engaged not only in evangelism, but in educational work in schools and colleges, in medical work and in industries Among famous names of missionary educationalists are those of Dr. Duff of Calcutta, Dr. Wilson of Bombay and Dr. Miller of Madras. In the education of women missions may fairly claim to have taken the lead. The total number of missionary societies from Europe and America working in India is now over 150. For consultation and common action there is a National Christian Council with headquarters at Nagpur, first organised in 1914, and in connection with this there are 10 State Christian Councils. Membership of these councils is by election or appointment by local churches and mission councils.

In the meantime the Missions of the Catholic Church had grown considerably and been organized. On January 25th, 1887, an Ecclesiastical Hierarchy was established in India by Pope Leo XIII. The number of Dioceses then established was 22 divided into 7 ecclesiastical provinces. At present the number of ecclesiastical units are 52. Out of 52 bishops and archbishops, 22 are Indians; of the 5,500 priests, 4,000 are Indians. In January, 1950 the first Plenary Council of the Catholic Church was held in Bangalore, under the presidentship of Cardinal Norman T. Gilroy, Archbishop of Sydney, appointed by the Pope, his Legate to exercise this function.

ANGLICAN MISSIONS

In addition to the two principal missionary societies of the Church of England, the S.P.G. (Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts) and the C.M.S (Church Missionary Society) already mentioned, there are also certain smaller, but important missions, namely the Oxford Mission to Calcutta working in Calcutta among students and also at Barisal, the Cowley-Wantage-All Saints Mission, working in Poona and Bombay; the Dublin Mission at Hazaribagh, the Cambridge Mission at Delhi, the Cawnpore Brotherhood, the Scottish Episcopal Church Mission at Chanda, Madhya Pradesh, the Bible Churchmen's Missionary Society (12 ordained missionaries in the Lucknow and Nagpur and Rangoon dioceses); the Christa Seva Sangha, Poona, 1927, which divided in 1934 into the Christa Seva Sangha, and the Christa Prema Seva Sangha, the Canadian Church Mission (4 ordained missionaries in the Lahore Diocese), the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society, in several dioceses; the Sisters of St. Margaret (East Grinstead) in the Colombo diocese; Sisters of St Denys (Warminster) in the Chhota Nagpur Diocese, Sisters of the Holy Family, Naini Tal, the Winchester Brotherhood, Mandalay, and the Sisters of the Church, Maymyo. The first two of these, and several of the others in the list, consist of communities of priests or sisters under religious vows Members of the brotherhoods mentioned are in most cases not under life vows. The work and influence of these communities is a most important element in the life of the Church of India.

The Church of India has taken its full share in educational, medical and industrial work in India Among colleges founded and managed by its missionaries St. Stephen's, Delhi, St John's, Agra, St. Columba's, Hazaribagh, Christ Church, Kanpur, and Trinity College, Candy are well-known A college at Tiruchirapalli has been amalgamated with the inter-denominational Madras Christian College. For the training of Indian and Anglo-Indian ordination candidates Bishops' College, Calcutta, serves the whole of India. In the various language areas are other colleges for the training of ordinands and lay church-workers through the medium of the local language. Among hospitals made famous by the work of the doctors in charge are those at Quetta (Sir Henry Holland), Bannu (the late Dr. Pennell) and St. Stephen's, Delhi (for women). The C.M.S. High School at Srinagar is distinguished among the many High Schools of the Church for the methods adopted to develop manliness and esprit de corps in the boys. Kanpur in the north and Nazareth in the extreme south are well-known centres of industrial work and training. The Diocesan Press at Madras was built up into a very large and efficient institution by a retired C. M. S Missionary. At Hubli, in the Bombay Diocese, S. P. G Missionaries have, since 1919, done extremely good work in charge of an Industrial Settlement (for the reformation and training of members of criminal tribes) committed to their care by Government.

CHRISTIAN COUNCIL OF INDIA AND PAKISTAN

This Council (formerly known as the National Missionary Council, later as the National Christian Council) was organised in 1914 as the result of the first World Missionary Conference held in Edinburgh in 1910 Similar Councils have come into existence in China, Japan, Korea, the Near East, Siam, Philippine Islands, Indonesia, Congo and other Mission fields. The Missionary Societies of the 'sending countries' are also linked together by similar national organizations. All these National Christian Councils and Conferences of Missionary Societies head up in the International Missionary Council which has its offices in London (Edinburgh House, 2 Eaton Gate, London, S W 1) and in New York (156, Fifth Avenue, New York City).

Basis—The Council is established on the basis that the only bodies entitled to determine the policy of the Churches and Missions are the Churches and Missions themselves. Questions of doctrine and ecclesiastical policy lie outside the province of the Council.

Objects—1. To stimulate thinking and investigation on missionary questions, to enlist in the solution of those questions the best knowledge and experience to be found in India and other countries, and to make the results available for all Churches and Missions in India.

2. To help to co-ordinate the activities of the State Councils and to assist them to co-operate with each other where such co-operation is desirable.

3. Through common consultation to help to form Christian public opinion and bring it to bear on the moral and social problems of the day.

4. To be in communication with the International Missionary Council regarding such matters as call for consideration or action from the point of view of the Indian mission field as a whole.

5. To make provision for the convening of a National Christian Conference when such is in the opinion of the Council desirable

SPORTS

FOR India the 1949-50 sports year has been an exceptionally busy one and a most satisfying one, to boot, in terms of endeavour and achievement After many vicissitudes the International Championships of Asia were inaugurated at Calcutta through the initiative and enterprise of the All-India Lawn Tennis Association's energetic Foreign Secretary, Mr Chinna Durai, and two Indian stalwarts, Dilip Bose and Sumant Misra, overcame a wealth of foreign talent to contest the singles final and, as a pair, claimed the doubles title as well These gratifying successes were followed soon after in the same centre by an Indian player's triumph in the Amateur Golf Championship of India for the first time in the long and illustrious history of that popular event Later this country's cricket representatives redeemed their defeat at the hands of the redoubtable West Indies tourists by winning the rubber in their series of unofficial Tests against the equally formidable Commonwealth touring team And, finally, polo enthusiasts were given the unique opportunity of seeing leading exponents from Argentina in action at Jaipur, Bombay and Delhi.

Although there were no actual top-grade stars among the foreign male competitors in the Asian Championships the performances of Bose and Misra in the men's events certainly imparted a tremendous fillip to Indian aspirations, particularly at a time when this country's stock in international lawn tennis was at a low ebb, and the former's straight-set victory in the singles, at the cost of only nine games, must rank as a notable achievement. Greater interest, however, centred on the women's events, which attracted such leading personalities as Mrs Patricia Canning Todd, Miss Gertrude Moran, Mrs Betty Hilton, Miss Kay Tuckey, Miss Gem Hoahing and Miss Jean Quertier, and the first-named eventually claimed the title, with Mrs. Hilton as the losing finalist.

Most of the foreign players extended their stay in India to make a round of the usual tournaments, and, as at Calcutta, the women stars invariably commanded the main interest American superiority here was so pronounced that finals between Miss Moran and Mrs. Todd followed each other with almost monotonous regularity, with honours fairly evenly shared, though the latter established considerable weightage to her successes by adding the national title, at Allahabad, to her Calcutta triumph In partnership the two American stars, recognised as one of the world's strongest combinations for the event, proved virtually invincible, but the two British gals Mrs Hilton and Miss Tuckey managed to defeat them in the Northern India Championships, at Delhi

India's golf triumph was registered by Mohinder Bal, the champion of Srinagar and Gulmarg After obtaining a walk-over from that distinguished stalwart H S Malik, who was unable to arrive in time, he accounted for T S Prosser, T MacLetchie, W R Taylor and F R Bagley, in that order, in a field of fifty-two entries, and then capped these performances with a magnificent victory over D J Paton in the thirty-six-hole final, winning by eight and seven The nearest approach to Mohinder Bal's success, incidentally, has been that of I S Malik, who qualified for the final four times

Despite the pessimism engendered regarding the strength of the visiting Commonwealth cricketers, mainly as a result of the limitations apparent in their attack, the tourists struck a powerful blow early by winning the first unofficial Test, at Delhi, by nine wickets, and they followed this up by compelling the Indian side to follow on in Bombay, though the match eventually ended in a draw. India, however, drew level with their rivals at Calcutta, when they won by seven wickets, and after another draw, on a matting wicket at Kanpur, they clinched the rubber with a thrilling three-wicket victory at Madras.

Owing to the distraction caused by the visit of a foreign team and the notorious tendency of the Board of Control for Cricket in India to give pride of place to such tours in preference to the interests of the Cricket Championship of India, the national tournament managed to eke out a precarious existence last season, but, thanks to the genuine enthusiasm of loyal Associations, it was completed as usual, and an excellent final between two of its keenest adherents Baroda and Holkar, provided an appropriate climax to what is really the mainstay of the game in this country, as well as merited success for the former side.

An unfortunate accident at Jaipur, which led to the death of one of the visiting polo players and the return home of another, obviated the possibility of any representative matches, as such, between India and Argentina, but the Zavaleta brothers, Carlos and Jose, participated in a series of exhibition matches at Jaipur, Bombay and Delhi, together with two of India's most famous veterans, the Maharaja of Jaipur and Rao Raja Hanut Singh, and a number of other promising stalwarts, who included Prithi Singh, Prem Singh and Bijai Singh, and their presence undubitably revived interest in an ancient game which adverse circumstances have virtually reduced to a state of decay The mechanisation of cavalry units, always a fruitful nursery for polo, has been a deadly blow to the game, and, despite the enthusiasm that still exists in certain quarters, its future appears nothing but bleak

Two other outstanding events in India's sporting life during the year under review were the visits of the British amateur billiards champion, Frank Edwards, and two of the world's most famous exponents of table tennis, Victor Barna and Richard Bergmann Wilson Jones, the national champion, recorded a great triumph in defeating Edwards in the semi-final round of the All-India Championship and then proceeded to account for T A Selvaraj, but the British cueist obtained recompense by claiming the Snooker title The foreign table tennis stars, both former world champions—Bergmann achieved that honour again this year—played exhibition matches in several centres against the country's leading exponents but were never really extended

In the hockey world Tata Sports Club achieved a notable treble when they won the Aga Khan Cup in Bombay and then retained Calcutta's famous trophy, the Beighton Cup, after an all-Bombay final against the Lusitanians. Football and athletics have made little progress. Bombay staged the Fourteenth Indian Olympiad, but this produced nothing that was encouraging, according to international standards, while the All-India Football Federation after creating quite a stir by impetuously entering for the World Cup Tournament, at Rio de Janeiro, eventually beat an ignominious retreat.

Racing continues to be the best patronised sport in India, and the encouragement accorded to indigenous horses has produced very heartening results The Royal Western Indian Turf Club and the Royal Calcutta Turf Club continue to control the various centres, but in view of the Bombay Government's avowed policy of stopping racing eventually, the former organisation's future is uncertain, and this factor is exercising an adverse influence on the plans of horse-breeders

Amateur boxing and badminton are holding their own, but squash rackets appears to be making appreciable strides, and its progress will, doubtless, assimilate added momentum from the remarkable debut of Abdul Bari in international competition overseas The Indian professional champion qualified for the finals of four major tournaments in the United Kingdom, though without gaining a title, and earned recognition as the world's number-two player, inferior only to the incomparable Mahmoud el Karim of Egypt.

Puri : famous for the Jagannath Temple, is a coastal town in the State of Orissa and is the State's summer capital. The car festival when an image of Jagannath is taken in procession in a huge rath is an event of India-wide importance. The temple has a black marble pillar in front and a 24-feet high stone wall all round. There are four entrances. The presiding deities are Krishna, Balaram and their sister Subhadra One interesting feature of the place is that in the matter of taking the prasad no caste distinctions are recognised, a practice unknown elsewhere in the country. A reason given is the influence of Buddhism. Besides the Jagannath Temple other places worth a visit are the monastic establishments (maths).

Rameshwaram : an island to the south-east connected with the mainland by railway across the Palk Straits It contains the Ramnathswamy Temple believed to be the richest in India Legend says that the temple was built by Sri Rama himself before voyaging across Ceylon to do battle with the kidnapper of his wife. Rameswaram is thus one of the most famous centres of pilgrimage in the whole country. According to history the temple which took 350 years to complete was built in the 15th century with the help of a Ceylon prince. The temple is typical of Dravidian sculpture and architecture Off Rameshwaram where the Arabian Sea meets the Indian Ocean is a sacred bathing ghat. Other places worth a visit 1 the tombs of Cain and Abel near the railway station, 2 Noah's Ark on the Dhanuskodi Beach, a funny-shapped stone structure. 3 the other temples of Rameshwaram all of which are noted for their style. Rameshwaram is reached from Pamban Junction on the Madras Dhanuskodi Railway.

Sanchi : small village in Bhopal State, famous for the Buddhist stupa which is the largest and the best preserved in India. The stupa is built with red stone and is about 103 feet in diameter and 42 feet high The sculpture is remarkable in that there is no anthropomorphic figure of Buddha. Sanchi is on the main G I P. line between Bombay and Delhi. There is a state-owned dak bungalow at the place where lodging and boarding are available by previous arrangement.

Shatrunjaya Hills.—Shatrunjaya, near Palitana in Saurashtra, is also known to the Jains as Siddhagiri or Siddhachala or the Hill of the Perfected Ones It is the most sacred place (tirtha) of Shvetambara Jains There are a great number of temples in groups on touks or summits The most important one is the touk of Adishvara Bhagavan. The ancient image, consecrated by the prophet's son, Batubal, has been replaced This is perhaps the most holy site within the most sacred precincts of the Shatrunjaya Hills At this place a large number of saints attained Nirvana or absolution. A number of inscriptions have been found here, which have been utilised towards writing the history of Western India and the history of the different schools of Jainism.

Simla : the summer capital of the Government of India and the Government of the Punjab, it is situated on a spur of the Himalayas at a height of 7,100 feet. Among the recreations of the place are hiking, riding and shooting The roads are excellent. Places worth a visit : 1 President's House, 2. Race Course, 3 Jakko Hill, 4. Observatory Hill, 5 Prospect Hill, and 6. Mashobra, seven miles away There is a very good road into the interior and hikers to Narkunda, Kotgarh, Rampur and Bushahr can lodge in rest-houses that line the road There is also a motor bus service on this road and holiday-makers who leave in the morning can be back in Simla by evening Simla is also well provided with a number of excellent schools. The chief means of conveyance are rickshaws and horses Clubs . 1 Anandale Gymkhana, 2. Catholic Club, 3. Y. M C. A.

Simla is reached from Delhi via Kalka on the Delhi-Ambala line From Kalka there is a mountain railway upto Simla. At Kalka motor cars are available for those who prefer to travel by road, the journey taking 3½ hours. For cheaper travel there are buses which regularly run between Kalka and Simla All through the scenery is superb, with mountain peaks or luxuriant foliage.

Srirangam: an island on the Cauvery, two miles north of Trichinopoly, contains the largest temple in India. The temple is consecrated to Ranganath. Changes were made from the 9th to the 16th centuries and inscriptions of Chola, Pandya, Hoysaala and Vijayanagar are all found on it. The north gopuram is 152 feet high.

Trichinopoly: the third largest city in Madras State is situated on the Cauvery. It is a very ancient city and was the strategic capital of the Chola and Naik kings Trichinopoly is also known as the Kashi of the South It is now a great educational centre Places worth a visit: 1. the Rock and the temple on the Rock, 2. the two huge masses of granite known as the Golden Rock and Fakir Rock, 3 the Jambukeshwar Temple, two miles north of Trichinopoly dedicated to Appulinga or the water-phallus. Clubs: Trichinopoly Club Hotels. Roberts Hotel.

Tanjore: in the delta of the Cavery river in Madras State is noted for its temples and palaces. It was the capital of the Cholas under whom it grew in name and fame as a great centre of culture. Places worth a visit: 1. the temple of Brihadishvara built by Raja-Raja the great, 2. Naik's Court, 3. Mahratha Court (the two together are often called the Palace in Tanjore), 4. the Bull Nandi. The chief means of conveyance are jutkas and taxis. Clubs: 1. Cosmopolitan Club, 2 Union Club Hotels: Ananda Lodge. There are also good dak bungalows Tanjore is reached from Madras by the South Indian Railway.

Travancore (constituent part of Travancore-Cochin Union) the most beautiful and fertile region in all southern India has many charms to offer the traveller within its domains It has scenery ranging from a countryside of lakes, creeks and canals, to low hills, undulating land, rice fields and forests of cocoanut and areca palms, with a heavy undergrowth of pepper vines and tapioca

It has also a wonderful highland zone with mountains touching heights of from 5,000 feet to over 8,000 feet, and hills covered with the densest of virgin jungle, the home of great herds of wild elephants and bison, tiger, bear, black panther and wild boar, and where lies the lovely Periyar Lake over which one may cruise in comfort and see wild life in its natural habitat.

Trivandrum, the capital, is accessible by well-kept roads and railway, and is also now connected by air with Bombay, Madras and Colombo, except during the monsoon.

About seven miles south of Trivandrum is Kovalam, a pleasant seaside resort with good facilities for bathing.

Cape Comorin, the Lands End of India, is the southern most point of Travancore where the sunrise and sunset are magnificent sights. It is a sacred spot to Hindus and a place of pilgrimage as the reputed abode of Kanyakumari, the virigin Goddess to whom the temple there is dedicated.

North of Trivandrum is the ancient town of Quilon and to the north of this again, a pleasant trip by boat along delightful backwaters or by car along a good motor road, is the busy seaport of Alleppey

The Dominion

THE BACKGROUND OF PAKISTAN

PAKISTAN was established on August 15, 1947 as a Dominion by the division of the sub-continent, according to an agreed plan between the British Government and the two main Indian political parties—the Indian National Congress and the All-India Muslim League The word Pakistan has variously been construed but the general Muslim view is that it stands for all that is pure and noble in Islam.

The conception of Pakistan was first put forward by the poet philosopher Allama Sir Mohammad Iqbal in the course of his presidential address to the Muslim League in December 1930 The scheme was, however, not officially adopted by the Muslim League, and remained an ideal till after a decade Meanwhile, Mr C. Rahmat Ali, a barrister, founded the Pakistan movement in 1931 with the object of dividing India into Pakistan and Hindustan His Pakistan comprised the Punjab, North-West Frontier (the land of the Pathans), Kashmir, Sind and Baluchistan, the rest was Hindustan This proposal was circulated to the members of the First Round Table Conference, but the Muslim League spokesmen did not at this stage officially sponsor the scheme in spite of the general sympathy of Muslims for the movement

QUAID-E-AZAM

Although, since its inception in 1906, the Muslim League sought to arouse political consciousness among Muslims, this organisation did not become very powerful till Quaid-e-Azam Jinnah became its President at the Bombay session in 1926. The next ten years saw slow but steady consolidation of the Muslim League under his leadership All the rival Muslim groups and parties, both inside and outside the Indian National Congress, were losing ground rapidly by the time the Second Round Table Conference concluded in London As the Congress and the Muslim League could not reach any agreement on a future constitution the then British Prime Minister Mr Ramsay Macdonald gave a decision generally called the Communal Award under which the Muslims got separate representation When the first elections were held under the 1935 Government of India Act reforms, the Muslim League did not win as great a victory as was expected, although a majority of Muslim seats were captured by it Nothing daunted Mr. Jinnah continued to organise provincial branches The hope that under the new constitution both Congress and the League would work Provincial Autonomy in such manner as would prepare them for a joint shouldering of higher responsibility under a federal centre, as conceived under the 1935 India Act, disappeared when the Muslim League declined to sign the Congress pledge and merge its parliamentary party with that of the Congress, a condition on which the Congress insisted for the formation of Coalition Ministries The Quaid-e-Azam refused to convert the League into as he called it "an understudy of the Congress."

The Lucknow session of the Muslim League in the autumn of 1937 found the League the most authoritative and representative organisation of the Muslims of India, although it was not the only spokesman for the community as many Muslims still remained outside the League either as members of the Congress or as members of other parties. When the Congress Ministries took non-League Muslims into the Government, it was construed as adding insult to injury, and a widespread campaign against the Congress administration ensued

The outbreak of the Second World War came also as a blessing in disguise for the Muslim League which enhanced its power and prestige among the Muslims and its bargaining position with the British Power Again the Congress attitude of neutrality to the war and its opposition to the war effort also helped the Muslim League whose Working Committee declared that it was ready to offer whole-hearted co-operation if the Government recognised the League as the sole representative organ of the Muslims The rift with the Congress became wider still when the resignation of Congress Ministries was celebrated as a "Day of Deliverance" by Muslim Leaguers throughout India.

In October 1939, the then Viceroy, Lord Linlithgow, initiated a series of negotiations in order to bring about rapprochement between the two parties One of the purposes of the Conference was to make known the British war aims vis-a-vis India The subsequent Viceregal pronouncement was hailed as a charter of freedom for minorities, particularly for the Muslims of India

THE RESOLUTION

The next and in fact, the most important landmark in the history of Indian Muslims, is the resolution passed at the Lahore session of the Muslim League, urging the establishment of Pakistan The resolution stated

"While approving and endorsing the action taken by the Council and the Working Committee of the All-India Muslim League, as indicated in their resolutions dated the 27th August, 18th September, 22nd October 1939, and 3rd February 1940, on the constitutionnl issue, this session of the All-India Muslim League emphatically reiterates that the scheme of federation embodied in the Government of India Act 1935 is totally unsuited to, and unworkable in the peculiar conditions of this country, and is altogether unacceptable to Muslim India

"It further records its emphatic view that while the declaration dated the 18th October 1939 made by the Viceroy on behalf of His Majesty's Government is reassuring, in so far as it declares that the policy and plan on which the Government of India Act 1935 is based will be reconsidered in consultation with the various parties, interests and communities in India, Muslim India will not be satisfied unless the whole constitutional plan is reconsidered de novo and that no revised plan would be acceptable to the Muslims unless it is framed with their approval and consent

"Resolved that it is the considered view of this session of the All-India Muslim League that no constitutional plan would be workable in this country or acceptable to the Muslims, unless it is designed on the following principle—viz, that geographically contiguous units are demarcated into regions which should be so constituted with such territorial adjustments as may be necessary, that the areas in which the Muslims are numerically in a majority as in the north-western and eastern zones of India, should be grouped to constitute "independent states" in which the constituent units shall be autonomous and sovereign

"The adequate, effective and mandatory safeguards should be specifically provided in the constitution for minorities in these units and in the regions for the protection of their religious, cultural, economic, political, administrative and other rights and interests, in consultation with them, and in other parts of India where the Mussalmans are in a minority, adequate, effective mandatory safeguards shall be specifically provided in the constitution for them and other minorities for the protection of their religious, cultural, economic, political, administrative and other rights and interests in consultation with them.

"The session further authorises the Working Committee to frame a scheme of constitution in accordance with these basic principles providing for the assumption finally by the respective regions of all powers such as defence, external affairs, communication, customs and such other matters as may be necessary"

In a nutshell the resolution intended that the provinces of Sind, Punjab, N-W.F P and Baluchistan in the north-west region and Bengal in the eastern region, should be constituted into independent states, and there should be no common centre for the Hindustan and Pakistan parts of the sub-continent

THE BIRTH

From this day onwards, Quaid-e-Azam Jinnah who had become the permanent and undisputed President of the Muslim League, refused to consider any arrangement which did not recognise the validity of the two-nation theory. He explained that Pakistan alone would save Muslims from the tyranny of the Hindu majority in India The two-nation theory caught the imagination of the Muslim mind and the stronger the Congress objection the more insistent the Muslims became At the Madras session of the Muslim League in 1941, the Quaid-e-Azam called on the British Government to divide India and establish separate western and eastern zones where Muslims were in majority so that they were free to manage their affairs as they chose while adequate safeguards were to be provided for Muslims in Hindu areas Later the League declared its opposition to the Cripps proposals which conceded the principle of provincial autonomy partly on the ground that the Congress had already rejected them and partly that they did not go far enough It was about this time that the Quaid-e-Azam sought to establish League Ministries in provinces where Muslims were in a majority, and except in Sind and N-W F P he quickly succeeded, later Sind also swung into line when Khan Bahadur Allahbaksh, Sind's non-League Premier was dismissed from office, for renouncing his titles

The "Quit India" movement started by Mahatma Gandhi in 1942 actually gave the Muslim League a new slogan' divide and quit". But efforts were made to find a solution by both Mr C Rajagopalachari, the Madras Congress leader (later Governor-General of India), and later by Mahatma Gandhi himself, which would meet the League claim for Pakistan without loss of Indian unity But it was too late Still a last effort was made by the British Cabinet Mission consisting of Lord Pethick-Lawrence, Sir Stafford Cripps and Mr A V Alexander to preserve Indian unity. These three formulated a scheme which conceded the substance of the League demand of autonomous governments in the Western provinces of the Punjab, Sind, N-W F P and Baluchistan, and the eastern provinces of Bengal and Assam, with an All-India federation having only three common subjects of defence, communications and foreign affairs The League agreed, but the Congress rejected the grouping principle unless the provinces were given the right to opt out of a group, prior to the framing of the constitution, which was not acceptable to the League This again resulted in deadlock and having failed in their last effort to maintain the unity of India the British Government at last decided with the agreement of the two parties to divide the country And so a new state called Pakistan came to be established

The provinces of the Punjab and Bengal were partitioned, the boundaries being decided finally by a Boundary Commission

The Eastern Pakistan was composed of East Bengal and included Sylhet (a district of the province of Assam)

The Western Pakistan was composed of Sind and West Punjab It included N-W F P. and Baluchistan

In the June 3 Plan, the Indian States were left free to join either India or Pakistan, subject, however, to geographical consideration or to remain independent The States of Bahawalpur, Khairpur, Chitral, Swat, Dir, Las Bela, Kharan acceded to Pakistan, and Kalat followed suit after some months

The Dominion of Pakistan and the Indian Union came into existence on the 15th August, 1947, when the power of the British Government in India was transferred to the two newly created States in their respective areas.

The transfer of power was unfortunately marred by outbreak of disturbances followed by mass migration of people The migration of population on an unprecedented scale and under such distressing conditions put very great strain upon the economy of Pakistan

Pakistan is the fifth biggest State in the world, and the largest among Muslim States It is bifurcated into two zones, separated from each other by over a thousand miles—one lying to the north-west of the Indian Union and the other in the east sandwiched between two of India's eastern-most provinces. It comprises Sind, N.-W F P, Baluchistan and the western part of the Punjab in the west, and the eastern part of Bengal coupled with the Sylhet district of Assam in the east.

CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY

The first meeting of the Pakistan Constituent Assembly took place in the Assembly Chamber at 10 a.m. on August 10, 1947 Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan, The Prime Minister proposed and Khwaja Nazimuddin (now the Governor-General of Pakistan) seconded that Mr. Jogendra Nath Mandal be the temporary Chairman Taking the Chair, Mr Mandal said .

"It is hardly necessary for me to impress on you the gravity and solemnity of the occasion I hope you will agree with me when I say that the free independent state of Pakistan will bring to one and all citizens, prosperity, happiness and peace. I believe and it is my firm conviction, that the state of Pakistan will be one of the most powerful, resourceful and magnificent states in the world

"I cannot help expressing on this momentous occasion my gratitude to and admiration of the Muslims of India, for Quaid-e-Azam Mohammad Ali Jinnah, the great creator and architect of the state of Pakistan. I have every confidence that under his able leadership, astute statesmanship, and through his untiring devotion to the cause of Pakistan, all prosperity and happiness will come to the people of Pakistan It is needless for me to reiterate that Quaid-e-Azam Mohammad Ali Jinnah is the greatest statesman, and one of the greatest men in the world today.

"I would like to point out that not only will the people of Pakistan and India, but the people of the whole world, look to the Pakistan Constituent Assembly and find for themselves that the Muslim community which was determined to acquire their legitimate rights and privileges and determined to have a separate state of Pakistan, will never lack in the quality of doing not only justice and fairness, but acts of generosity towards the people of minority communities"

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT

The election of the President took place the next day.

Quaid-e-Azam Jinnah was proposed and seconded by seven members for the Presidentship and as there was no other candidate, he was declared elected. The President was then congratulated by Messrs. Liaquat Ali Khan, M. A. Khuhro, Abdul Kasem Khan, Begum Shah Nawaz (League), Jogendra Nath Mandal (Depressed Class League) and the late Kiran Shanker Roy (Congress).

Mr Liaquat Ali Khan said "You have been rightly described as the architect of Pakistan and what greater fortune could we have than to have you as the President of this sovereign body to build the State which we have got through your devotion, untiring zeal, selfless service and unshakable determination ?"

Mr. Kiran Shanker Roy said that having been a dreamer of Pakistan, it was but fair that Mr. Jinnah should also have the privilege of giving shape to his dream and be architect of its constitutional structure. He said that the Quaid-e-Azam was a great leader of Muslims and now the time had come for him to take up the leadership of the State which included not only Muslims but all communities.

The President, Quaid-e-Azam Jinnah, thanked the members for their tributes and said .

"I sincerely hope that with your support and your co-operation, we shall make this Constituent Assembly an example to the world" He said that they had the very onerous and responsible task of framing Pakistan's future constitution. They had also to function as a full and complete sovereign body and as the federal legislature of Pakistan."

SOCIAL EVILS

Describing the functions of the new State, the Quaid-e-Azam said

"The first duty of a government is to maintain law and order, so that the life, property and religious beliefs of its subjects are fully protected by the State. The second thing that occurs to me is this one of the biggest curses from which India is suffering—I do not say that other countries are free from it, but I think our condition is much worse—is bribery and corruption. That really is a poison We must put that down with an iron hand, and I hope that you will take adequate measures as soon as it is possible for this Assembly to do so Blackmarketing is yet another curse. Now you have to tackle this monster too which today is a colossal crime against society in our distressed condition when we constantly face shortage of food and other essential commodities of life."

The Quaid-e-Azam continued "I know there are people who do not quite agree with the division of India and the partition of the Punjab and Bengal Much has been said against it, but now that it has been accepted, it is the duty of every one of us loyally to abide by it and honourably act according to the agreement which is now final and binding on all A division had to take place In my judgment, there was no other solution, and I am sure future history will record its verdict in favour of it And what is more, it will be proved by actual experience as we go on that that was the only solution of India's constitutional problem

"Now if we want to make this great State of Pakistan, happy and prosperous, we should wholly and solely concentrate on the well-being of the people and especially masses of the poor If you will work in co-operation, forgetting the past, burying the hatchet, you are bound to succeed"

MAJORITY AND MINORITY

"We should begin to work in that spirit and in course of time all these angularities of the majority and minority communities—the Hindu and the Muslim community—because even as regards Muslims you have Pathans, Punjabis, Shias, Sunnis and so on, and among the Hindus, you have Brahmins, Vishnavas, Khatris, and also Bengalees, Madrasis and so on,—will vanish Indeed, if you ask me, this has been the biggest hindrance in the way of India's attaining its freedom and independence and but for this we would have been free peoples long ago No power can hold another nation, and especially a nation of four hundred million souls in subjection Nobody could have conquered you, and even if it had happened nobody could have continued its hold on you for any length of time but for this Therefore, we must learn a lesson from this You are free, free to go to your temples, you are free to go to your mosques or to any other places of worship in this State of Pakistan. You may belong to any religion, or caste or creed—that has nothing to do with the business of the State. We are starting with this fundamental principle that we are all citizens and equal citizens of one State."

In conclusion, the President said: "I shall always be guided by the principles of justice and fairplay, I am sure that with your support and co-operation, I can look forward to Pakistan becoming one of the greatest nations of the world."

The President then read the goodwill message he had received from the United States of America which hoped that the Constitution which the Pakistan Assembly would present to the world would reflect the steadfast devotion of its leaders to the principles of democracy and peace.

NATIONAL FLAG

Moving the resolution on the National Flag of Pakistan, Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said that it was three fourth green with inset of Crescent and Star, and one fourth white at mast end. He then unfurled it before the House saying that it would stand for freedom, liberty and equality. "This flag will protect and defend the integrity of the State We have been exploited for the last two hundred years and we should be the last people to use our flag for the purpose of exploiting other nations. Therefore, this flag of freedom will not only be for the people of Pakistan, this flag will be an emblem of peace to help in maintaining the peace of the world."

Then the West Punjab Congress member, Mr. Bhim Sen Sachar (now Prime Minister of East Punjab) asked the President whether he would be permitted to address the House in Hindustani. The President ruled that the language of the House was English, unless any member was unable to express himself adequately in English Speaking in English, Mr. Sachar suggested a Committee of seven members to determine the design of the flag and report by next morning as the flag presented to the House by Mr Liaquat Ali Khan did not have the previous approval of the minorities concerned.

The mover Mr Liaquat Ali Khan, explained that as they had to have a flag on Pakistan Dominion Day (August 14) and as the time factor was important, he could not consult all members including even Muslim members He pointed out that the white portion stood for the minorities. He asked the mover not to press his amendment The mover however pressed the amendment which was negatived. The original motion on the flag was then accepted.

The President nominated the following members on the panel of Chairmen Mr Tamizuddin Khan, Dr Omar Hayat Malik, Khan Sardar Bahadur Khan and Kiran Shanker Roy

No division was called during the session.

KING'S MESSAGE

On August 14, the then Governor-General of India, Lord Louis Mountbatten, having arrived in procession with the President of the Constituent Assembly of Pakistan, Quaid-e-Azam Jinnah took his seat. His Excellency read out His Majesty the King's message which stated

"I send you my greetings and warmest wishes on this great occasion when the new Dominion of Pakistan is about to take its place in the British Commonwealth of Nations In thus achieving your independence by agreement, you have set an example to all freedom loving people throughout the world.

"I know that I can speak for all sections of opinion within the British Commonwealth when I say that their support will not fail you in upholding democratic principles I am confident that the statesmanship and spirit of co-operation which have led to the historic developments you are now celebrating, will be the best guarantee of your future happiness and prosperity.

"Great responsibilities lie ahead of you and your leaders. May the blessing of the Almighty sustain you in all your future tasks. Be assured always of my sympathy and support as I watch your continuing efforts to advance the cause of humanity."

PHYSIOGRAPHY

PAKISTAN consists of two geographical units. Eastern Pakistan with one large province, East Bengal, including the rich Sylhet district of Assam, and Western Pakistan comprising West Punjab, Sind, Baluchistan, North-West Frontier Province and the States which have acceded to Pakistan

Western Pakistan adjoins Afghanistan and Iran in the west and north-west and the Indian Province of East Punjab and the Great Indian Desert in the east To the north lies the State of Jammu and Kashmir, to the south and south-west the Arabian Sea

East Bengal, the largest and the most thickly populated province of Pakistan is separated from Western Pakistan by more than a thousand miles of Indian territory It is bounded on the north by the hilly regions of Jalpaiguri, Darjeeling and parts of Assam, in the south by the Bay of Bengal, in the west by the Indian provinces of West Bengal and Bihar and in the east by the Assam Province The narrow strip of the Chittagong Hill Tracts adjoins Burma

From its most northerly point to the sea-coast in the south, Western Pakistan covers a distance of nearly 800 miles, while its western tip at Killa Robat is separated from the Indian border by about 700 miles The entire area to the north and west of the land is covered by the great ranges of the Hindu Kush and the Sulaiman mountains rising, in places, to a height of 14,000 feet The Salt Range and its arid plateaux lie slightly towards the east of these mountain systems To the south and south-west of this region stretches a vast plain right up to the Arabian Sea

All the five rivers of Western Pakistan, Indus, Jhelum, Chenab, Ravi, Sutlej rise in the Himalayas and after long courses amid the snow-clad ranges debouch on the plains The slope of the low country is to the south and south-west and this determines the course of the rivers With the passage of time each stream has cut for itself a wide valley which lies well below the level of the plain.

Of these five rivers the longest is the Indus A mighty stream when it emerges from the Hazara Hills, it flows almost due south past Attock—the oil district of Western Pakistan—where it enters a deep gorge It flows on through the Punjab and enters the Province of Sind where the huge Lloyd Barrage spans its waters The other four rivers which help to make West Punjab one of the richest wheat and cotton growing areas in Asia, also rise in the Himalayas and after traversing the plains of the West Punjab join the Indus which flows into the Arabian Sea

LANDSCAPE

Western Pakistan presents great variations in landscape, from the snow-covered peaks of the upper Himalayas to the grey, sombre desert of Sind In the North-West Frontier Province where the land lies on an average more than 4,000 feet above sea level, the scenery is rugged At places there are vivid expanses of green In the Salt Range of the West Punjab the landscape takes on a gentler tone, the slopes are often covered with green box and bogmyrtle But the true beauty of the West Punjab and Sind landscapes lies in the plains As harvest time approaches the traveller sees an endless expanse of waving crops of varying shades of colour above which the villages seem to rise like islets in a sea of green After the harvest the whole aspect is changed and the rich brown of the fields contrasts sharply with the dull green foliage of groves and plantations

In Baluchistan the general outlook resembles that of the Iranian plateau and, though sometimes oppressive in the severity of its lines, the landscape is not without a certain rugged charm Barren, sunburnt mountains rent by huge chasms and gorges alternate with arid deserts and stony plains The colours vary from a monotonous drab to warm brick-yellow, orange and sometimes even deep mauve. There are intermittent valleys of considerable size where the land is irrigated and rich crops of all kinds and fruits are grown. Within the mountains lie narrow glens, fringed in early summer by the brilliant green of carefully terraced fields The clear streams are bordered by rows of willow trees often interlaced with a profusion of vines

The sea-coast is arid and devoid of vegetation, but there is a good harbour at Karachi and many fine sandy beaches Western Pakistan, except for the coastal strip in Sind, is subject to extremes of climate In January and February the night temperature reaches freezing point, while during the day the temperature does not rise above 75° The bright sunshine and the keen invigorating air make Western Pakistan in winter one of the healthiest spots in the world In the summer months, on the other hand, the heat is fierce and the temperature ranges between 90 and 120°. The nights, however, are usually cool These extremes of temperature have bred a people remarkably hardy and vigorous, endowed with good physique great energy and stamina

EASTERN PAKISTAN

Nearly the whole of the 54,000 square miles of Eastern Pakistan is a vast alluvial plain with hardly a hill or even a rock visible for miles Only on the south-eastern frontier a succession of low mountain ranges cover the east of the Chittagong Division The most outstanding feature of the Province is the network of its rivers - the Ganges and the Brahmaputra with their tributaries These rivers furnish an admirable and cheap means of transport, they contain an inexhaustible supply of fish and bring down vast quantities of fertilizing silt which they deposit over the surface of the land

Although East Bengal is largely a plain, the landscape cannot be described as dull, for even in the dry months the groves of bamboo, mango, the graceful areca and cocoanut palm, tamarind, peepal and other trees afford a profusion of green vegetation In the rainy season the young rice-seedlings cover the ground for miles with a delicate green In December the mature plants turn golden and are ready for the sickle

The dense forests of the famous Sunderbans in the south abound in big game such as tigers, leopards, bears, wild hog and other animals

Although East Bengal is situated almost entirely outside the tropical zone, its climate for about two-thirds of the year (from the middle of March to the end of October) has a tropical character, i.e., high temperature and humidity and a dry season following heavy rains From November to February, the climate is delightfully cool, the humidity is slight and the rainfall generally scanty Eastern Pakistan does not suffer from the same rigours of climate as Western Pakistan, the mean temperature during the cold months being 64° and during the hot season about 83°

SOME STATISTICS

The total area of Pakistan according to the Indian census of 1941 is 360,780 square miles, which is distributed as follows —

	Sq Miles
East Bengal	49,270
Sylhet District	4,650
TOTAL FOR EAST PAKISTAN	53,920
Baluchistan	54,460
N-W F P	14,260

POPULATION

The total population of areas now comprising Pakistan, including the States that have acceded to it so far, according to the 1941 census, on the basis of the Boundary Commission's Award, is as follows —

	Population in millions
West Punjab	15·80
Sind	4 53
Baluchistan	50
N.-W F P	3·04
East Bengal & Sylhet	42 07
Bahawalpur	1·34
Khairpur	·31
Makran	·09
Kharan	·03
Las Bela	07
Tribal Areas including Dhir, Swat and Chitral	2 38
Total	70 33

Previous census have revealed that the average annual increase in the population is about 1¼ per cent for the whole sub-continent There is every likelihood that the same rate of increase has been maintained in the present census decade, 1941-51 in Pakistan It is therefor estimated that during the eight post-census years the population of Pakistan may have increased by 9 93 millions, thus bringing the total population from 70 33 millions in 1941 to 80 26 millions in 1949

The population figures however have been further affected due to the influx and outflux of population as a result of the communal disturbances after the partition of the sub-continent Making allowance for these changes the present population may be surmised as follows.—

East Pakistan	46,720,000
Baluchistan	560,000
N-W F P	3,200,000
Sind	5,180,000
West Punjab	19,740,000
Bahawalpur State	1,480,000
Other States	3,380,000
Total	80,260,000

DENSITY

The density of population per square mile according to 1941 is as follows —

	Area in square miles	Population in millions	Density per sq. mile
Eastern Pakistan	53,920	42 07	780
Western Pakistan	306,860	28 26	92
Pakistan	360,780	70 33	194 9

The density of population for 1948 is estimated as follows —

Eastern Pakistan	53,920	46 72	870
Western Pakistan	306,860	33 54	109 3
Pakistan	360,780	80 26	222 4

RURAL AND URBAN

The distribution of urban and rural population according to the 1941 census was as follows :—

	Percentage of urban to total population
Eastern Pakistan	4·8
Western Pakistan	14 5
Pakistan	11 1

The very low percentage of urban population in Pakistan indicates the importance of agriculture in the economy of the country and the comparative lack of development in industries and the trade. This is particularly so in Eastern Pakistan where the urban population is only 4·8 per cent of the total.

There is reason to believe that there has been a substantial increase in the urban population of Western Pakistan due to the recent exchange of population, as a large number of refugees coming from rural areas have settled down in towns and cities But this is altogether unlike the natural urbanization of population as a result of economic development. It has in fact created serious problems in housing, public health and transport It is likely, however that the concentration of people in towns and cities would create conditions in which trade and industry may prosper.

THE PEOPLE

THE 80 million odd inhabitants of Pakistan do not all come from one racial stock. There has been a great mingling of races and cultures—Indo-Aryan, Semitic, Mongol and Dravidian The result is like the U.S A, a variety of physical types, language groups, food habits and local customs and usages Thus in the West Punjab (pop : 16 million), the physical type is distinctly Aryan, there being few traces of aboriginal or foreign blood. The typical Punjabi is of medium height, spare but muscular, broad-shouldered with dark eyes and an ample beard His hair is invariably black but the complexion varies from a deep olive-brown to fair. His language is Punjabi though Urdu is the literary language and is widely understood and spoken.

The Pathan of the North-West Frontier Province (pop . 3 million) is taller, somewhat heavier in build, the rigours of life and climate in his barren hills making him broad-boned and capable of harder living In stature and physique the Frontier Pathan can stand comparison with any other people in the world His general bearing is proud and resolute, with courage writ large on his face His language is Pushto but he understands Urdu.

The Baluch (Baluchistan pop · half a million), differs markedly from his Pathan brother. His build is shorter, more spare and wiry. He has a long, oval face, an aqueline nose and wears his hair in long oiled curls The Baluch Pathans are expert horsemen and generally carry swords or long knives for their defence.

Sind has a population of more than 4,500,000 The Muslims of the province are by race Pathans, Arabs, Baluchs, Brahuis, Jats, Makranis and original Sindhis The Jat and the Makrani are allied to the Baluch and have the same physical characteristics The descendents of the Arabs who settled in Sind after having conquered it in 712 A.D , are chiefly Saiyyids and number more than 100,000 They are of medium height and fair with long noses and a narrow facial index.

The original residents of Sind are tall, robust, dark-complexioned and of muscular build They make strong and hardy cultivators and are by temperament gentle Of the numerous tribal divisions among the Sindhis, the Sumro and Samo represent the dynasties which ruled in Sind from the 11th to the 16th century The Mushanos are boatmen and fishermen, forming a distinct group with their own customs and folklore.

In East Bengal (pop.: 42 million) there has been an admixture of the Mongoloid and Dravidian strains. The average Bengali is, therefore, different in physical characteristics from the average Western Pakistani. He is shorter in stature than the Pathan and of smaller build. His language is Bengali.

The great unifying force amidst these diversities of race, language and physical environment in Pakistan is its culture and civilisation Nearly 80 per cent of the people of Pakistan are Muslims. Islam has given them a single social, ethical and legal code, and thus they form a single brotherhood. For the vast majority of the people of Pakistan the times of prayer, the days of fasting, the places of pilgrimage, the laws of marriage, succession and inheritance are the same So are the essential ceremonies attending birth, marriage and death, days of rejoicing and of national mourning. This consciousness of common beliefs, rights and duties has given the people strong social and political cohesion.

FESTIVALS

THE greatest and the most popular Muslim festival is Id-ul-Fitr which marks the end of Ramazan, the month of fasting It is a day of rejoicing as it marks the successful conclusion of 30 dawn-to-dusk consecration fasts and a month spent in prayer and austere self-denial It is celebrated with equal enthusiasm by all classes of people. Everyone, however humble his position, puts on new garments About 9 in the morning the entire male population moves towards the Id-gah, the place of Id-prayer, where a congregational prayer is led by an Imam (congregation leader) After the prayer it is customary for Muslims to embrace one another irrespective of wealth and position At an Id gathering you will see Cabinet Ministers embracing their domestic servants, Ruling Chiefs embracing court-peons, and big landlords embracing small tradesmen.

The day is spent in visiting friends and relatives and the commonest refreshment served is a kind of fine spaghetti called sewayyan prepared in sugar, milk and cream.

Another important festival is Id-ul-Zuha which is held in commemoration of Abraham's intended sacrifice of Ismail. This festival has all the features of Id-ul-Fitr except that the animal sacrifice is enjoined on all who can afford it. Camels, sheep, goats or calves are sacrificed according to the person's means and it is obligatory to give away the skin of the animal as charity and to distribute two-thirds of the meat among the poor

Moharram, the first month of the Muslim year, is a period of mourning although the elaborate and symbolic expression of grief is sometimes mistaken by foreigners to be the celebration of a festival The first twelve days of the month are devoted to the commemoration of the martyrdom of Hussain, the grandson of the Prophet, who was killed in a religious war on the battlefield of Karbala in Iraq 1,300 years ago. The main items of the Moharram commemoration are the Majlis and the Tazia processions The former is a meeting at which a learned theologian gives a discourse on the historical and religious significance of the tragedy of Karbala The Tazias which are taken out in procession are artistic and often colourful replicas in wood, paper and other materials of the tomb at Karbala

These, however, are not the only festivals of the people At many places local fairs are held to commemorate the birth or death anniversary of saints or holy men. These fairs are not without their social and economic significance, for at every fair, which usually continues for a number of days, bazaars are set up and business is transacted Most of the participants being villagers, the fair furnishes an excellent opportunity for the exchange of information and the propagation of new ideas.

In East Bengal where there is a large and cultured Hindu minority, some Hindu festivals are celebrated with great enthusiasm. Hindu festivals are largely seasonal Thus the festival of Holi, which is held in March-April, signalizes the beginning of spring It is a joyous festival and on that day the Hindus sprinkle coloured water on each other.

Deepavali, commonly called Devali, is celebrated in October-November and marks the beginning of the Hindu commercial year. The festival is celebrated by lavish illumination and Hindu shops and houses are decorated with lights. On this day many Hindu merchants renew their account books and whitewash their houses. The festival is dedicated to Lakshmi, the goddess of Wealth.

Dussehra, the most important festival for Bengali Hindus, is celebrated in September-October and commemorates the victory of Durga, the consort of Shiva, over the buffalo-headed demon, Mahishasur. Durga's image after being worshipped for nine days is immersed into the river. The ceremony is accompanied by offerings of flowers and devotional music.

LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE

WITH its several provinces, each inhabited by a largely homogeneous racial group and each having its own tongue, it is only natural that Pakistan should have variations of language from province to province But there is a common language which is spoken and understood in every province and which is the lingua franca of Pakistan This language is Urdu When the Muslims first came to India in the 8th century they found several languages spoken in this country The necessity of communicating with the inhabitants of the country gave rise to the first faint beginnings of a new language consisting of elements of Persian, Arabic, Turki and the various dialects spoken in India, known as the prakrits Since the Muslims made Delhi their capital, Saurseni and Brij Bhasha, the two dialects spoken around Delhi and its environs, Meerut, Agra and Mathura, became the main base of Urdu and supplied it the grammar, syntax and the largest part of its vocabulary The other prakrits, spoken in the various provinces of the country, supplied it with innumerable words, with Muslim sufis, divines, soldiers, administrators sent to all parts of the country absorbing its language and culture Thus a language of the common people was evolved which was a blend of Arabic, Persian, Turki and native dialects

By the beginning of the 14th century poetical and mystical works were being written in this new language Under the Moghals (1526-1857) it rose to high literary standards This language, which was called Hindi (Persian word meaning 'pertaining to India') up to the time of Akbar, now came to be called by the Turkish word Urdu—meaning the language of the camp When Shah Jahan (1627-58) built the Red Fort at Delhi and established his new capital there, he raised the status of the language by calling it Urdu-e-Moalla or "exalted Urdu" The court language was still Persian, but the language of the people and of the ladies of the palace was henceforth Urdu While Urdu had been maturing in the zenanas and bazaars of Delhi in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, it was being nourished and used for literary expression in the south under the Bahmani Kingdom (1347-1526) and its successors Thus the first definite school of Urdu poetry made its appearance in the first decade of the 16th century and flourished in the Deccan until the rise of the Delhi school in the first decade of the 18th century

URDU LITERATURE

The early specimens and works of Urdu are religious in character or are long tales in verse The style often lacks perfection and grace and the images and similes are simple Although Persian influence is easily discernible, the poetry of the Deccan was essentially Indian in theme and inspiration With the 17th century, however, Persian influences became more active, and when Delhi took to writing in Urdu her poetry became modern, and the classical age that thus began with the commencement of the 18th century lasted till the first two decades of the present century.

During the last 50 years, or so, Urdu has been profoundly affected by Western thought and literature under whose influence new literary forms have sprung up. Moreover, a vast body of scientific work from English and the continental languages has been translated into Urdu. In the first decade of the 20th century Muslim political consciousness found a vivid and forceful expression in this language Hali, Akbar, and Iqbal were three outstanding figures who instilled a new life into Muslim thought through their poetry. Urdu poetry can justifiably claim a high place among the literatures of the world. The poetry of Mir Anees, Ghalib, and Iqbal has attained an extremely high stature in world poetry

The birth of Pakistan has generated impulses, cognitions and modes of feelings which have yet to attain fruition in literature Fruition is a slow process of inward growth, and three years are all too short to give proper scope to a nation's resurrected awareness of life Some of Pakistan's new inspirations send out for the present only faint vibrations in the literary atmosphere The present attempt, therefore, can at best be a survey of beginnings rather than of achievements

Urdu literature in Pakistan is described as an infant only by compulsion of political logic Actually, this literature has a venerable past coeval with the cultural history of Muslim India Our position in Pakistan is identical with that of the American lady, who when asked why America had produced so few great poets, immediately retorted "Why, among others, we produced Chaucer, Shakespeare and Milton"

Urdu literature blends the best traditions of three ancient cultures—Arabian, Persian and Hindu During the last century it has absorbed European influences with ever-accelerated pace In point of richness—both notional and verbal—it has few parallels among Asian literatures Long before Pakistan's inception, Urdu poets had evolved a diction strikingly terse, meaningful and harmonious, to portray almost every variety of human mood to write with subtlety and effect of friendship and love and fate, to record with sweetness or vigour their observations on social and religious, moral and philosophical themes Prose style enriched itself from diverse sources through one of the most extraordinary fusions in linguistic history Urdu literature is a complex its infinite variations of tone and colour come from the Indian Prakrits, from Arabic, from Persian, from Turkish, and from many other sources And the prose-writers have turned this material to excellent account From the transparently simple to the magnificently ornate, from the airily frolicsome to the seriously reflective Urdu prose covers a wide field both in matter and manner

Notwithstanding these manifold accomplishments, Urdu literature has not kept up with the rapidity of advance in the modern age Modernism, in the form of "popular appeal" and "realism," was first experimented upon by Nazir and Insha at the eighteenth-nineteenth century cross-roads The experiment was continued with increasing vigour throughout the last century But a genuine democratic outlook was still far away, awaiting the hour of national deliverance Most (though certainly not all) of pre-Pakistan Urdu literature bears the hallmark of feudalism In its courtly grace, in its aristocratically confident values of life, in its devotion to the ideal rather than the real, this literature speaks of a bygone age of pageantry and power

Aftermath of Pakistan

Pakistan came into being on August 15, 1947 We look in vain, however, for the songs of joy that should have ushered in the new State The first fine careless rapture of newborn freedom will forever remain unheard in Urdu poetry August 15 and the days that followed were artistically barren the emotional tranquillity necessary for literary creation had become impossible, even normal life had come to a standstill Months before freedom dawned, the streets of some of the bigger cities were desolate except for blood and fire. The transfer of power brought a semblance of peace, a peace with which came a new terror Millions upon millions of panic-stricken refugees came pouring in from across the border and added horror to the devastated scene—the literary scene with which we begin.

The poets, as usual, were the first to speak They spoke as all horrified men must speak—with distress, with bitterness, with something like loss of hope The more sensitive were almost overwhelmed with a sense of defeat.

This murky daylight, this night-bitten morn
Is this the happy Dawn, the long awaited ?

But the voices which spoke of defeat were few. A much greater number plucked new courage from the calamity For example, poignant schemes of abduction were described. The key-note, however, was not anguish, but high indignation against the men who deserted their women-folk to save their own lives Even silver-tongued Hafeez, Pakistan's lyrical poet, has a ring of steel as he turns to fellow writers pleading for a cleaner human order

O ! the bodies, like pennons, winging aloft on the pikes !
O ! the maidens pure with heads bent low on their breasts !
Despite their nakedness, the daughter of Adam
Seem shrouded in the hem of Mary's robe.
See you the bashfulness of those meek eyes ?
See you those amputated hands in prayer ?

Prose writers too were not long in taking note of the gruesome record of these early days The Urdu short story had acquired psychological depth and technical finish during the thirties—before Pakistan had appeared on the map This newly learned art was not expended on the harrowing tales that were on the tip of every tongue throughout the year of horrors The atmosphere of these stories is that of pathos, irony or cynicism, according to the constitution of the men who wrote them Even humour, however incredible it may seem, has found vent round this catastrophic scene. S H. Mantu's "Black Margins" is a collection of such type of sketches The dedication is characteristic of the whole book

TO THE MAN

Who recounting his homicidal exploits, said :
"When I killed an old woman, I had a feeling that I had, in a way, committed murder"

The year of horrors brought another calamity in its wake, later, when on a September night in 1948, an already harassed people were stunned by the sudden death of the Father of the Nation, Quaid-e-Azam Mohammad Ali Jinnah Strangely enough this great blow acted as a sedative The nation having resigned to the will of the Almighty, stiffened its back and thereby discovered its own inherent strength No other single event during the last three years has evoked such a resurgence of patriotic fervour The Quaid-e-Azam's death put the poets on their mettle Yusuf Zafar is, with many others, voicing a common sentiment when he says

We learnt of thee that Life and Death alike
Are targets of Man's conquering will,
The glance revealed that the whole expanse of the world
Measure no more than a single stride of Man
Thy mind, robed in Reality, proclaimed
"We are more real than Reality"

Prose

To descend to prose from poetry, speeches and statements of the Quaid-e-Azam became the focus of publishing activity This interest in the Father of the Nation could have been easily foreseen, but what had not been foreseen was the popularity of biography in general Portraits of contemporary personalities were especially relished obviously a symptom of the new keenness to understand the world around Another evidence of the new interest in personality was the appearance of books on psychological subjects and what is more, of psychological magazines The number of weeklies too, considerably increased They did not supplant the dailies or the monthlies; they came to satisfy the common man's interest in current affairs.

Another notable development of the last two years is the vogue of the novel Till two years ago the main fictional form was the short story The recent drift towards the novel does not, of course, result from ampler leisure, the people of Pakistan are busier than ever before The explanation seems to be that a larger canvas is establishing its suitability for a more elaborate study of life and persons

Women have figured with distinction among the ranks of recent novelists But a still more striking phenomenon is the greater and a more complete understanding of woman as woman displayed by men writers in both the novel and the short story Till a short time ago she was shown as loving, mothering, sistering man Now she appears in her own independent right She has been an object of passionate, critical or reverential interest This is as it should be The glory of the women who suffered for Pakistan's independence in 1947 has won for them an independent place in the literature of the country

Literary criticism tends more and more to concentrate on the exposition of Iqbal's philosophy or art, while the periodical literature of the time is concerned with aspects of the country's reconstruction A typical illustration is the Humayun of Lahore, one of the oldest literary magazines in Pakistan, which suddenly forswore "empty æstheticism" and dedicated itself to the cause of reconstruction Magazines which pursued a policy obnoxious to national sentiment, either underwent complete metamorphosis or closed down, and new ones took their place

Another instance of Pakistan's present mood of practicality is the plentiful prose literature on constitutional theory and practice The titles of many recently published books are self-explanatory "The Future of Pakistan", "The New System", "Our Pakistan", "The Foundation of Islamic State", "The Democratic System", etc

Even "pure literature" is not without its own reform movement New forms are being experimented upon N M Rashida's "Strangers in Iran" a long blank verse poem written in line of unequal length, breaks new ground In Qayyum Nazar's lyrical drama, "The Soldiers March Away", characters are indentified with metrical patterns through which they reveal themselves Apart from original work, English poets so diverse as Shakespeare, Wordsworth and T S Elliot have appeared in Urdu translations of remarkable felicity All this experimentation shows that the new urges are steadily carving their way into expression

But the most characteristic—and the really essential work of this period has been done not by the artists but by the "rude mechanicals" who have planned, organised and put in gear the mechanics of Urdu literature There is the Kul-Pakistan Anjuman-e-Tarraqui-e-Urdu, jealously watching and directing the trend of events into channels favourable to the development of Urdu There are the educationists who strove successfully to make Urdu literature a University subject up to the Master's degree and are now trying to make the Urdu language the medium of instruction and examination in all Pakistani Universities There are others who are busy writing text-books or standardising technical terms, as also those who are devising ways and means to make Urdu the official language of the country Among these workers, too, are the experts who are trying (with ever-increasing success) to make it possible for Urdu print to change from lithograph to type

The inspiration of both literary creation and literary organisation is patriotic Urdu has a peculiar place in Pakistan it is not only the national language, it is also part of the national creed One of the explicitly-stated objectives of the fight for the attainment of Pakistan was the survival of the Urdu language Thus the devotion to Urdu springs from the omnipresent sentiment of nationality The librarian who compiles our original work on the classification and cataloguing of books, and the shop-keeper who enthusiastically changes his signboard from English to Urdu, are both equally devoted to the cause

PUNJABI LITERATURE

Although the province of the Punjab has played a leading role in the development of Urdu and some of the most famous writers of Urdu today belong to the Punjab, the spoken language of the province is Punjabi It is a sister dialect of Prakrit and bears a close resemblance to Urdu It is thus easy for an inhabitant of the Punjab to speak and understand Urdu and nearly everybody is able to speak it. Nevertheless, Punjabi has a literature of its own and poetry and folk-songs are still written in that language One of its classics, the famous Hir Ranjha of Waris Shah, a mystical poem of several thousand verses, is ranked amongst the great poems of the world Another great poem is the Sohani-Mahinwal, a love story written by Fazal Shah Both these poems are extremely popular, particularly in the villages Education in the Punjab is imparted through the medium of Urdu except in the Universities where the medium of instruction is English Urdu is also the court language in the Punjab

SINDHI LITERATURE

Sindhi is the language spoken and written in Sind Although an offshoot of the Indian Prakrit, it was the first language of the subcontinent to come under the influence of Arabic due to the Arab occupation of Sind in the 8th century A D Sindhi is written in the old Naskh Arabic script and 30 per cent of its vocabulary consists of Arabic words Its literature is, comparatively speaking, small but contains some excellent poetry such as is found in highly cultivated languages only. Among the Sindhi poets the works of Shah Abdul Latif are universally popular.

PATHAN LITERATURE

The language of the Pathans is Pushtu which does not belong to the Indo-Aryan family of languages and is, therefore, very different from Urdu, Sindhi, Punjabi and Bengali, the main Pakistani languages of Indo-Aryan origin It is written in a modified Arabic script and contains many words of Arabic and Persian which bring it close to Urdu Pushtu literature has been traced back to the 7th century and consists mainly of poetry, lyrical as well as mystical Khushal Khan Khattak and Rahman Baba, both belonging to the 17th century, are regarded as the national poets of the Pathans They have left complete deevans, or collections of poems Pushtu is spoken both in the North-West Frontier Province and Afghanistan with some variations in vocabulary and script

BENGALI LITERATURE

The language of East Bengali—Bengali—has a highly developed literature of its own Belonging to the Indo-Aryan group of languages it has a predominantly Sanskrit vocabulary although a large number of Persian and Arabic words have become part of the language as a result of Muslim influence Its script is also of the same family as Deva Nagari although it has existed independently for at least eight centuries A hundred years ago Bengali prose and poetry were so heavily enfettered by Sanskrit words as to be unintelligible to the common people In the early years of the 19th century, however, Raja Ram Mohan Roy, Akshay Kumar Datta and Ishwar Chandra Vidyasagar initiated a movement for simpler expression and a greater use of the spoken word in lit rature This movement later blossomed into a renaissance which produced such great literary figures of modern Bengal as Bankim Chandra Chatterji, Madhusudhan Dutta and Rabindra Nath Tagore. Of these, Tagore achieved international recognition with his lyrics and plays which were largely inspired by Bengali folk-songs and many of which have been translated into English. He also wrote a large number of novels, short-stories, plays and philosophical discourses Bengal has also produced some great Muslim poets and the songs of Alaul, Qazi Nazrul-Islam and Jaseem-ud-Din are sung throughout East Bengal, and some of Jaseem-ud-Din's poems have been admirably translated into English under the title, The Painted Quilt

Although it is expected that Urdu will in due course replace English, yet it is obvious that this process must be gradual, and since English has now become an international language it will continue to be spoken, read and written, perhaps as widely as at present

FINE ARTS

MODERN times have seen a revival of painting among the Muslims. Abdur Rahman Chughtai and Fyzee Rahmin are two Muslim painters whose works have been exhibited in Europe and widely appreciated. Among the younger painters of today the powerful yet sensitive work of Zainul Abedin deserves special mention.

Painting, like architecture, received a great impetus under the Moghal Emperors and here too, it was the Persian tradition which held sway for nearly three centuries beginning with the reign of Akbar The Moghal school used mainly mineral colours of lamp-black where black was used Beginning with some specimens which have a strong religious element akin to calligraphy and book-illumination, the art developed in the later periods into extremely delicate and accurate portraiture combining a brilliant use of colours with perfect draughtsmanship.

Some of these specimens, happily preserved in the various museums and private collections show keen insight into character and extraordinary mastery of detail. Lack of encouragement in the reign of Aurangzeb led to a rapid decline of the art, and Persian masters, who had been brought to Delhi by the earlier Emperors and had enjoyed their patronage, ceased their visits to India. Muslim genius for this particular form of art was consequently smothered by neglect.

In music, as in architecture and painting, Muslim influence introduced profound changes. The cultural renaissance initiated by Muslims in North India influenced music to a greater degree than it did architecture and painting, so that it is hard to tell what the Indian musical scale was prior to the Muslim era By the 13th century, i e in the reign of Allauddin Khilji, Arabian musical instruments had come into use. Thus the Arabic word mizrab for plectrum, Tabla, the Indian percussion instrument from the Arabian tabla and the classical drone instrument for accompaniment, Tamboor, have all Arabic roots. The elaborate Qanoon, the rich-toned Rabab, the Taiab and the large drums called Naqqarah also came from Arabia The most popular string instrument—Sitar—was invented by the great Muslim poet and savant, Amir Khusro, in the reign of Allauddin Khilji.

In the reign of Akbar (1556-1605), the great court musician, Tansen, gave a new orientation to Indian classical music by introducing scores of new ragas or musical modes, such as the varieties of Todi, Darbari, Adana, Kafi, Bahar, Sarang and many others. Tansen also left nearly 500 compositions in the Dhrupad style which form the main bulk of the true classical Indian music today

In the 18th century an entirely new school of music was founded by Muslim composers which in the course of two centuries has superseded the rigorously classical Dhrupad. This is known as the Khayal style which combines elegance with a greater freedom of rhythm, phrasing and intonation than the Dhrupad.

In the 19th century the Punjab developed an extremely charming style of singing known as the Tappa in which greater emphasis is laid on voice-culture and sweetness than on the strict observance of rules

Music in the sub-continent was melodic or modal, and harmony was never attempted by Indian musicians However, Allaudin Khan and his son, Ali Akbar, two gifted Muslim musicians have successfully introduced certain forms of orchestration In Pakistan, Lahore and Dacca are active centres of musical learning, and Muslim artists are still the acknowledged masters of music, both instrumental and vocal, in the entire sub-continent

A new artist from East Bengal with the potentialities of an Uday Shankar, Bulbul Chaudhury, and his wife Begum Chaudhury are now making their debut in Western Pakistan. He was due to go on a trip to India and other countries

ARTS AND HANDICRAFTS

SKILLED craftsmen in Pakistan have a long tradition of exquisite workmanship, but the advent of machinery led to the decline of cottage industries This decline has been specially noticeable in the handloom industry Until the early 19th century, Dacca muslin was popular with the world's dress connoisseurs, and large quantities of it were exported to the European markets Subsequently, however, the machine-made products of Manchester killed this industry though the material is still produced in small quantities The finer hand-woven and hand-spun varieties of fabrics are in no way inferior to silk in softness and are as durable Another product of great beauty is the Dacca Jamdani which consists of delicately woven white patterns on a white background of fine muslin

Embroidery of a high standard is common among the Brahuis of Baluchistan The finest is called mosam and consists of very close work in the form of satinstitch, the designs being primarily geometric Saddle-bags and handbags richly ornamented with shells are also made in the Barkhan Tehsil (Loralai District) of Baluchistan

Dera Ismail Khan, Kohat and Peshawar in the North-West Frontier Province produce fine silk fabrics, generally woven for turbans and mostly in grey or blue, with richly worked end-pieces in gold thread In the Hazara District of the same province beautiful striped and check material is woven for turbans and loin cloth

An interesting product of Peshawar is a cotton fabric decorated with a substance called roghan, a preparation of oil made by Afridis whence the material derives its name—Afridi Momjama (wax-cloth) The roghan is applied in a plastic condition to the fabric by means of an iron style on the lines of the required pattern It is then pressed into the cloth with the moistened tip of the finger when it adheres firmly to the texture

The Kohat turban is ornamented with coloured silk and stripes at the ends which recall the Algerian stripe pattern The Bangash, as this pattern is called, is distinctive of a particular khel or clan Multan in West Punjab and Bahawalpur State also produce beautiful silk fabrics, specially turbans and waist-bands

Pottery for every day use is made in almost every village in Pakistan but some districts specialize in art pottery Earthen vessels decorated with water-colours are made at Peshawar, while Gujrat in West Punjab produces beautiful light pottery called 'paper pottery' because of its extreme fineness Coloured faience or tiled work of Persian origin is done in Multan.

Swords and hunting knives of good quality are made in the North-West Frontier Province and in Baluchistan while surgical instruments (largely used in the last war) are made in Sialkot Sialkot also produces world famous sports requisites and E P N S ware Copper-ware, specially trays, ewers with basins and wine bowls are made in Peshawar and are often exact reproductions of famous Persian originals so familiar to the students of art Silver filigree work of a very high quality is done in Dacca in East Bengal Bengal is also famous for its fine ivory-carving, and Rangpur produces exquisitely carved decorative pieces which require as many as eight different tools before the finished product is ready.

The leather workers of the Frontier Province and West Punjab make sandals and shoes and handbags which are richly embroidered in gold and silver thread and are exported abroad Good leather work is also done in Bengal where decorations on leather are first drawn with a fine needle and then coloured with specially made pigments

ARCHÆOLOGY & ARCHITECTURE

BURIED cities dating back more than 5,000 years, and monuments of outstanding architectural and artistic interest form part of Pakistan's archæological heritage and furnish one of the richest fields for antiquarian research Of the standing monuments, 172 lie in West Pakistan and 79 in Eastern Pakistan While it has been ascertained that ancient mounds in Eastern Pakistan contain the structural remains of Buddhist monasteries and Brahmanic sanctuaries of the first millennium of the Christian era, those in Western Pakistan contain extensive remains of ruined cities and citadels of that highly developed pre-historic culture which is now known as the Indus Valley Civilisation Four such ancient sites have been excavated so far in Western Pakistan The one at Nal in Baluchistan has yielded vast remains of what was probably a royal cemetery At Mohenjodaro in the Larkana District of Sind, a city of metropolitan proportions has come to light which, together with the portable finds it has yielded, has made archæological history At Chanhu Daro, in the Nawab Shah District of Sind a town of the same period as that unearthed at Mohenjodaro has been revealed, while at Harappa in the Montgomery District of the Punjab, the remains of a vast citadel of the Mohenjodaro period have been exposed to view. Evidence of the immense variety of finds recovered from these sites of more or less contemporary period of pre-historic antiquity has established the fact that 3,000 years before Christ the people of those areas which are now known as Baluchistan, Sind and the Punjab, though not aware of iron and its uses and still making implements of chert and quartz for occupational purposes, were living in planned cities and well designed houses and had, in respect of the art of living, attained a high degree of culture and refinement in the development of which pictographic script played a conspicuous part The Indus Valley Civilisation flourishing 5,000 years ago is one of the three oldest civilisations discovered so far in the world.

In Pakistan the archæological remains of the known period of history, as opposed to pre-history, embrace a period of more than 2,600 years beginning with the 7th Century B C The famous ancient city of Taxila, situated 21 miles north of Rawalpindi in Western Pakistan and extensively explored during the last 30 years, has furnished a great field for antiquarian research of absorbing interest. The excavations have brought to light the remains of three cities which flourished from the 7th Century B C. to the 5th Century A.D under the successive political and cultural domination of the Achæmind Persians, the Macedonians of Alexander's army, the Mauryas of Asoka's time, the Hellenised Bactrians, the Sakas or the Scythians, the Pahlavas of Parthia and the Kushans of Purushupura, or modern Peshawar For about ten centuries—between 500 B C and 500 A D—Taxila was a great seat of culture and learning and a meeting ground for diverse cultural influences of Eastern and Western countries.

The Yusufzai tract with its neighbouring valley of Swat, north of Peshawar, is a happy hunting ground for the students of ancient plastic art This tract in ancient days was called Gandhara and, during the first centuries of the Christian era its people developed a school of sculpture which specialised in applying the classical forms of Greek art to Indian and particularly Buddhist subjects Known as the "Gandhara School of Art", or "Græco-Buddhist sculpture", specimens of these beautifully handled sculptured pieces are to be found in abundance in the whole of the Yusufzai tract They have excited much interest and admiration in art circles in Europe and U S A.

ISLAMIC ARCHITECTURE

The architecture which has left the deepest impress upon the buildings of Pakistan, however, as of the entire sub-continent, is the Muslim architecture of Turkish, Persian and Central Asian origin brought to India by its Muslim conquerors.

The period of Muslim rule over India, beginning with the 13th century and extending right upto the middle of the 18th century, is the greatest building era in Indian history which is also the history of Pakistan This is exemplified in its spectacular achievements no less than in the elaboration and full realization of certain principles and forms which became fundamental to all later Indian architecture The most valuable contribution of Islamic architecture is the dome of monumental size used in the building of mosques, shrines and tombs throughout the sub-continent The minaret, the niche, the monumental arch and other achievements in the sphere of architectural decoration, such as stucco, mosaic faience, pietra dura and the colourful inlay work along with thousands of other decorative devices, are some of the gifts which Islam later bestowed on all Indian architecture through the Moghals Thus the famous Taj Mahal at Agra, the Pearl Mosque in the Red Fort at Delhi, the Jama Masjid at Delhi, the buildings of Fatehpur Sikri and of the Agra Fort are essentially Muslim in inspiration and execution and, though situated in India today, are a fundamental part of the heritage of Pakistan

Muslim monuments which have survived in Pakistan belong mostly to the Moghal period Even some of these were destroyed during disturbances in the Punjab previous to the beginning of British rule The most important Moghal monument in Pakistan is the Fort at Lahore. Its existence can be traced back to the 10th century, but it was Akbar who enlarged and rebuilt it when he held his court here between 1578 and 1598 Various structures were, however, added by the Emperors Jehangir, Shahjahan and Aurangzeb The Elephant Gate, which was the royal entrance is gorgeously decorated with tile mosaic The unique feature of this decoration is that some panels depict living beings, a practice not found in Islamic architectural decoration The ornamentation is continued on the Fort wall which is 500 yards long and 16 yards high, in other words a surface of nearly 8,000 square yards is covered with these brilliant tiles In these panels elephants, camels, horses and human figures have been depicted with vigour and restraint The other important buildings of the Fort are a palace built in parts by Jehangir and Shahjahan, a lovely mosque in white marble called Moti Masjid or Pearl Mosque, the Shish Mahal or Palace of Mirrors with its wonderful pietra dura decoration and the ornamental Shah Burj or Royal Tower, built by Shahjahan There are also mausoleums of Jehangir and his queen, Nur Jahan

Wazir Khan's Mosque, built in Lahore in 1634, is an extremely beautiful building Its brick walls are covered with inlaid work of the Kashi type, a kind of mosaic of glazed tiles The structure and the decorations are notably Persian in character. From the gallery round the minarets one can have a very fine view of the city. The Badshahi Mosque, built by Aurangzeb is a structure remarkable for its enormous size, though not so much for its elegance It is the largest mosque in the world and can hold a congregation of 100,000 at a time

Sind provides archæological material worth a life-time of study and research Nearly every district of this ancient land is strewn with monuments dating from pre-historic times to the middle of the last century. At Mohenjodaro relics contemporaneous with and similar to those at Babylon have been discovered, while Brahmanabad, Mirpur Khas, and Jarak have Buddhist stupas and antiquities Alor, Hyderabad, Sukkur and Larkana have many interesting monuments worth studying. Thatta 50 miles from Karachi, is full of Muslim monuments dating from the 13th century The most important among these is a great mosque built by Shahjahan as a memorial to his visit to Thatta when, having quarrelled with his father, Jehangir, he was for the time being an exile from the Court This mosque is one of the few surviving Moghal buildings in brick Its great feature is its coloured tile-work within, the whole interior being covered with it The tiles are of beautiful colour and show an infinite variety of pigments and design

At Paharpur in the Rajshahi District of Eastern Pakistan a 10th century Buddhist temple and monastery of brick masonry, the largest of its kind in the sub-continent, has been recently unearthed and is now being preserved with care Gaur and Pandua in Eastern Pakistan possess a remarkable array of Muslim monuments.

Apart from the pursuit of archæological exploration and excavation of ancient sites, and preservation and conservation of standing monuments which are its primary functions, the Department of Archæology of the Government of Pakistan is also responsible for the maintenance of three museums of exclusively archæological exhibits at the three famous antiquarian centres of Mohenjodaro, Harappa and Taxila which have long since become places of pilgrimage for the serious as well as the casual students of the history of this ancient land.

The establishment of the Pakistan National Museum which has been housed in the Frere Hall at Karachi is worth mentioning Karachi being one of the most important traffic-centres in the country the Government propose to develop the Museum into one of international importance All important exhibits are being collected in this Museum.

It presents for the first time a reasonably adequate synopsis of the successive cultures and civilizations which have gone to the making of what is now Pakistan Its collection of relics of the Indus civilization is the best in the world, and its "Gandhara" sculptures combine with a fine series from East Pakistan to illustrate the famous era of Buddhist art A small but good collection of paintings and drawings represents Moghul pictorial art and its influence upon contemporary Hindu schools, whilst the more modern arts and crafts of Pakistan have contributed glazed pottery from New Hala, lacquer-work from Hyderabad, and embroidered cloth from elsewhere in Sind There are also collections of coloured tiles, arms and armour, and a few manuscripts, among which is a lavishly decorated Holy Quran bearing the seal of Prince Salim, afterwards the Emperor Jahangir, the only great Moghul Emperor buried in Pakistan

THE NEW CONSTITUTION

THE Constituent Assembly of Pakistan has not made much progress in the drafting of a new constitution for the Dominion The only important step was the passing of an objectives resolution moved by the Prime Minister A Basic Principles Committee was set up to report as early as possible, in accordance with the motion adopted by the Assembly, on the main principles on which the constitution of Pakistan is to be based The work of some of the committees set up earlier was also reviewed

The Objectives Resolution, extracts from the Prime Minister's speech, the personnel of the main and the sub-committees, short notes on the functions which are assigned to them, and the work that the committees have done so far are all given below.

OBJECTIVES RESOLUTION

"In the name of Allah, the beneficent, the Merciful:

Whereas sovereignty over the entire universe belongs to God Almighty alone and the authority which He has delegated to the State of Pakistan through its people for being exercised within the limits prescribed by Him is a sacred trust:

This Constituent Assembly representing the people of Pakistan resolves to frame a constitution for the sovereign independent State of Pakistan.

Wherein the State shall exercise its powers and authority through the chosen representatives of the people

Wherein the principles of democracy, freedom, equality, tolerance and social justice as enunciated by Islam shall be fully observed,

Wherein Muslims shall be enabled to order their lives in the individual and collective spheres in accordance with the teachings and requirements of Islam as set out in the Holy Quran and the Sunna,

Wherein adequate provision shall be made for the minorities freely to profess and practise their religions and develop their cultures;

Whereby the territories now included in or in accession with Pakistan and such other territories as may hereafter be included in or accede to Pakistan shall form a Federation wherein the units will be autonomous with such boundaries and limitations on their powers and authority as may be prescribed;

Wherein shall be guaranteed fundamental rights including equality of status, of opportunity and before law, social, economic and political justice, and freedom of thought, expression, belief, faith, worship and association, subject to law and public majority;

Wherein adequate provision shall be made to safeguard the legitimate interests of minorities and backward and depressed classes;

Wherein the independence of the judiciary shall be fully secured,

Wherein the integrity of the territories of the Federation, its independence and all its rights including its sovereign rights on land, sea and air shall be safeguarded;

So that the people of Pakistan may prosper and attain their rightful and honoured place amongst the nations of the World and make their full contribution towards international peace and progress and happiness of humanity".

PRIME MINISTER'S SPEECH

Moving the Resolution the Prime Minister said among other things "Pakistan was founded because the Muslims of this sub-continent wanted to build up their lives in accordance with the teachings and traditions of Islam, because they wanted to demonstrate to the world that Islam provides a panacea to the many diseases which have crept into the life of humanity today....

"All authority is a sacred trust, entrusted to us by God for the purpose of being exercised in the service of man, so that it does not become an agency for tyranny or selfishness. I would, however, point out that this is not a resuscitation of the dead theory of divine right of kings or rulers, because, in accordance with the spirit of Islam, the preamble fully recognises the truth that authority has been delegated to the people, and to none else, and that it is for the people to decide who will exercise that authority.

"For this reason it has been made clear in the Resolution that the State shall exercise all its powers and authority through the chosen representatives of the people.

"This is the very essence of democracy, because the people have been recognised as the recipients of all authority and it is in them that the power to wield it has been vested

"I just now said that the people are the real recipients of power. This naturally eliminates any danger of the establishment of a theocracy... In the technical sense theocracy has come to mean a Government by ordained priests, who wield authority as being specially appointed by those who claim to derive their rights from their sacerdotal position. I cannot overemphasise the fact that such an idea is absolutely foreign to Islam. Islam does not recognise either priesthood or any sacerdotal authority; and, therefore, the question of a theocracy simply does not arise in Islam If there are any who still use the word theocracy in the same breath as the polity of Pakistan, they are either labouring under a grave misapprehension, or indulging in mischievous propaganda.

"You would notice that the Objectives Resolution lays emphasis on the principles of democracy, freedom, equality, tolerance and social justice, and further defines them by saying that these principles should be observed in the constitution as they have been enunciated by Islam. It has been necessary to qualify these terms because they are generally used in a loose sense For instance, the Western Powers and Soviet Russia alike claim that their systems are based upon democracy, and, yet, it is common knowledge that their polities are inherently different. It has, therefore, been found necessary to define these terms further in order to give them a well-understood meaning When we use the word democracy in the Islamic sense, it pervades all aspects of our life, it relates to our system of Government and to our society with equal validity, because one of the greatest contributions of Islam has been the idea of the equality of all men Islam recognises no distinctions based upon race, colour or birth Even in the days of its decadence Islamic society has been remarkably free from the prejudices which vitiated human relations in many other parts of the world.

"Similarly, we have a great record in tolerance, for under no system of Government, even in the Middle Ages, have the minorities received the same consideration and freedom as they did in Muslim countries When Christian dissentients and Muslims were being tortured and driven out of their homes, when they were being hunted as animals and burnt as criminals—even criminals have never been burnt in Islamic society—Islam provided a haven for all who were persecuted and who fled from tyranny It is a well-known fact of history that, when anti-Semitism turned the Jews out of many a European country, it was the Ottoman Empire which gave them shelter. The greatest proof of the tolerance of Muslim peoples lies in the fact that there is no Muslim country where strong minorities do not exist, and where they have not been able to preserve their religion and culture Most of all, in this sub-continent of India, where the Muslims wielded unlimited authority, the rights of non-Muslims were cherished and protected I may point out, Sir, that it was under Muslim patronage that many an indigenous language developed in India My friends from Bengal would remember that it was under the encouragement of Muslim rulers that the first translations of the Hindu scriptures were made from Sanskrit into Bengali It is this tolerance which is envisaged by Islam, wherein a minority does not live on sufferance, but is respected and given every opportunity to develop its own thought and culture, so that it may contribute to the greater glory of the entire nation. . ."

ISLAMIC SOCIETY

"The next clause of the Resolution lays down that Muslims shall be enabled to order their lives in the individual and collective spheres in accord with the teachings and requirements of Islam as set out in the Holy Quran and the Sunna It is quite obvious that no non-Muslim could have any objection if the Muslims are enabled to order their lives in accordance with the dictates of their religion. You would also notice that State is not to play the part of a neutral observer, wherein the Muslims may be merely free to profess and practise their religion, because such an attitude on the part of the State would be the very negation of the ideals which prompted the demand of Pakistan, and it is these ideals which should be the cornerstone of the State which we want to build. The State will create such conditions as are conducive to the building up of a truly Islamic society, which means that the State will have to play a positive part in this effort. You would remember that the Quaid-e-Asam and other leaders of the Muslim League always made unequivocal declarations that the Muslim demand for Pakistan was based upon the fact that the Muslims had a way of life and a code of conduct... Indeed, Islam lays down specific directions for social behaviour, and seeks to guide society in its attitude towards the problems which confront it from day to day Islam is not just a matter of private beliefs and conduct It expects its followers to build up a society for the purpose of 'Good life'—as the Greeks would have called it, with this difference, that Islamic 'good life' is essentially based upon spiritual values For the purpose of emphasising these values and to give them validity, it will be necessary for the State to direct and guide the activities of the Muslims in such a manner as to bring about a new social order based upon the essential principles of Islam, including the principles of democracy, freedom, tolerance and social justice

"These I mention merely by way of illustration, because they do not exhaust the teachings of Islam as embodied in the Quran and the Sunna. There can be no Muslim who does not believe that the word of God and the life of the Prophet are the basic sources of his inspiration In these there is no difference of opinion amongst the Muslims and there is no sect in Islam which does not believe in their validity Therefore, there should be no misconception in the mind of any sect which may be in a minority in Pakistan about the intentions of the State No sect, whether majority or a minority, will be permitted to dictate to the others, and, in their own internal matters and sectional beliefs all sects will be given the fullest possible latitude and freedom Actually we hope that the various sects will act in accordance with the desire of the Prophet who said that the differences of opinion amongst his followers are a blessing It is for us to make our differences a source of strength to Islam and Pakistan, not to exploit them for narrow interests which will weaken both Pakistan and Islam Differences of opinion very often lead to cogent thinking and progress

MINORITIES

"In our desire to build up an Islamic society we have not ignored the rights of the non-Muslims Indeed, it would have been un-Islamic to do so, and we would have been guilty of transgressing the dictates of our religion if we had tried to impinge upon the freedom of the minorities In no way will they be hindered from professing or protecting their religion or developing their cultures The history of the development of Islamic cultures itself shows that the cultures of the minorities, who lived under the protection of Muslim States and empires, contributed to the richness of the heritage which the Muslims build up for themselves I assure the minorities that we are fully conscious of the fact that if the minorities are able to make a contribution to the sum total of human knowledge and thought, it will redound to the credit of Pakistan and will enrich the life of the nation Therefore, the minorities may look forward, not only to a period of the fullest freedom, but also to an understanding and appreciation on the part of the majority which has always been such a marked characteristic of Muslims throughout history.

"The Resolution envisages a federal form of Government because such is the dictate of geography. It would be idle to think of a unitary form of Government when the two parts of our country are separated by more than a thousand miles I, however, hope that the Constituent Assembly will make every effort to integrate the units closer and forge such ties as would make us a well-integrated nation I have always advocated the suppression of provincial feelings, but I want to make it clear that I am not an advocate of dull uniformity. I believe that all the areas and units which form Pakistan should contribute to the richness of our national life. I do, however, want to make it clear that nothing should be permitted which, in any sense, tends to weaken national unity, and provision should be made for bringing about a closer relationship amongst the various sections of our population that exists today. For this purpose, the Constituent Assembly will have to think anew as to what will be the best method for the distribution of subjects between the Centre and the units, and how the units should be defined in our new set up. . . .

"It is our firm belief and, we have said this from many a platform, that Pakistan does not stand for vested interests or the wealthy classes It is our intention to build up an economy on the basic principles of Islam which seeks a better distribution of wealth and the removal of want Poverty and backwardness—all that stands in the way of the achievement of his fullest stature by man—must be eradicated from Pakistan. At present our masses are poor and illiterate We must raise their standard of life and free them from the shackles of poverty and ignorance.

"So far as political rights are concerned, everyone will have a voice in the determination of the policy pursued by the Government and in electing those who will run the State, so that they may do so in the interests of the people We believe that no shackles can be put on thought and, therefore, we do not intend to hinder any person from the expression of his views Nor do we intend to deprive anyone of his right of forming associations for all lawful and moral purposes.

"In short, we want to base our polity upon freedom, progress and social justice We want to do away with social distinctions, but we want to achieve this without causing suffering or putting fetters upon the human mind and lawful inclinations

"There are a large number of interests for which the minorities legitimately desire protection This protection the Resolution seeks to provide The backward and depressed classes are our special charges We are fully conscious of the fact that they do not find themselves in their present plight for any fault of their own It is also true that we are not responsible by any means for their present position But now that they are our citizens, it will be our special effort to bring them up to the level of other citizens, so that they may bear the responsibilities imposed by their being citizens of a free and progressive State, and share them with others who have been more fortunate than themselves We know that so long as any sections amongst our people are backward, they will be a drag upon society and, therefore, for the purpose of building up our State we must necessarily look to the interests of these sections "

COMMITTEE WORK REVIEWED

Besides passing the Objectives Resolution the Assembly considered at the same session the report of the Committee on the Addition and Re-distribution of Seats and passed a Bill whereby 6 new seats were created in the Constituent Assembly, 5 for Muslims from West Punjab, and one for Muslims from Sind

A considerable amount of work was also done by the several Constitutional Committees which had been set up earlier.

The Committee on Fundamental Rights of Citizens of Pakistan and on Matters Relating to Minorities which had appointed two sub-committees to deal with the two questions separately, considered the report of the Sub-Committee on Fundamental Rights of Citizens of Pakistan and directed that the Sub-Committee should re-draft its report in the light of the Human Rights adopted by the U N O General Assembly. A fresh report in the light of these directions was then rapidly prepared It is expected that the report will be dealt with at an early date.

The other Sub-Committee which dealt with Matters Relating to Minorities, elicited public opinion on this subject by means of a questionnaire and prepared a statement which is to come up at the next meeting of the Sub-Committee

Two other Committees, namely, the States Negotiating Committee and the Tribal Areas Negotiating Committee have also made some progress The latter Committee, however, has been hampered in its work by the absence of data which is now being collected.

FUNCTIONS

A Board of Experts set up by the Basic Principles Committee will recommend the basic principles of Islamic political ideology to be incorporated into the Constitution in order to fulfil the purpose of the directives laid down in the Objectives Resolution The task of this Board would be of a technical nature It will, therefore, consist of well-known scholars who are reputed for their knowledge of Islamic History, Jurisprudence and polity.

The Federal Constitution Committee will deal with the question of the type of federation to be set up, the number of units and distribution of powers, etc. This Committee will in the first instance make recommendations on the general features of the Federal Constitution, as for example, the composition of the Legislature, powers and functions of the two Houses, if it happens to be bicameral, and the extent to which the principles of the separation of powers between the Executive, Legislature and Judiciary is to apply.

The question of the Head of the State, his functions and powers also falls within the scope of this Committee.

The Franchise Committee will deal with the question of the electorates, constituencies and the method of election, both to the Central as well as Provincial Legislatures

The Judicature Committee will examine the entire organisation of the Judiciary and make recommendations with regard to the composition, powers and functions of all the Courts, and will suggest what provisions should be incorporated into the constitution in order to secure the independence of the Judiciary as laid down in the Objectives Resolution

It is understood that the reports of some of these Committees are completed but they have not yet been presented to the Assembly.

EDUCATION

Pakistan's educational problems were considered in detail by the first Educational Conference which the Education Minister of Pakistan convened at Karachi, barely 3 months after the establishment of the new State The Conference passed a large number of resolutions covering not only all stages of education but other important subjects such as the medium or media of instruction, technical and vocational education, scientific and industrial research, liquidation of illiteracy, provision of facilities for a minimum standard of free, compulsory and universal primary education, improvement in the status, emoluments and training of teachers and the establishment of cultural relations with foreign countries.

But the most important resolution passed by the Conference concerned the ideological basis of education The fundamental weakness of the existing system was that it ignored the spiritual or moral element of education The Conference accordingly passed the following resolution "Resolved that the educational system in Pakistan should be inspired by Islamic ideology emphasising among many of its characteristics those of universal brotherhood, tolerance and justice"

A Central Syllabus Committee which was formed for the purpose of preparing new syllabi concluded its work, the new syllabi are now under the consideration of the Government Similarly the History Board is preparing a new history of the Indo-Pakistan sub-continent

Urdu has been declared as the lingua franca and the state language of Pakistan to bring Muslims of various provinces on one politico-cultural platform It has become the medium of instruction at the school stage throughout West Pakistan with the exception of Sind where, as in East Bengal, it is being introduced as a compulsory subject at the Secondary stage The Advisory Board of Education has set up a Committee to lay down the general lines of the development of the national language In appreciation of the work done by the Anjuman-i-Taraqi-i-Urdu for the development of Urdu the Central Government has increased its grant from Rs 20,000 to 50,000

The Central Government is also encouraging the study of Arabic to bring Muslims of the whole world on one common socio-political platform An initial grant of Rs 6,000 has been provided to the Arabic College run under the auspices of the Pak-Arab-Cultural Association Special stress is also laid on the study of Arabic in Schools.

PRIMARY EDUCATION

The problem of free and compulsory education is one of colossal dimensions as educational facilities have to be provided for nearly 50 lakhs of school-going children of the primary stage. On a conservative estimate this would involve an expenditure of Rs. 40 crores per annum on the basis of Rs 60 per student per year. This expenditure does not include the cost of buildings, equipment and of the training of a vast number of teachers. Nevertheless, despite their limited financial resources, almost all the Provincial Governments have already introduced compulsion in certain areas within their jurisdiction As far as the Central Government is concerned, it has under its active consideration, a scheme for the introduction of compulsory free primary education in the Federal capital

A scheme for the establishment of an institute for training of primary school teachers, involving an expenditure of Rs 64,350 recurring and Rs. 12,500 non-recurring, has also been sanctioned The Institute is expected to start functioning in the near future. It will provide for the training of 100 male and 50 female teachers

Pakistan Universities suffered greatly as a result of the partition and their rehabilitation has been engaging the serious attention of the Government A sum of Rs 10 lakhs has been ear-marked for the University of the Punjab to enable it to strengthen its Science Departments A sum of Rs 10½ lakhs is also being given to the University of Dacca for the development of Science and Technology. Government is also considering the question of giving a suitable grant to the proposed Peshawar University

A University Grants Committee is being set up by the Central Government very shortly to scrutinise the development schemes of Pakistan Universities for grants

A first grade Central Government College for Women has been established in Karachi In order to build up an up-to-date Science Laboratory on various subjects apparatus worth Rs 48,000 and a Gas Plant have already been ordered from U S A and United Kingdom Most of the apparatus has arrived and is being fitted

TECHNICAL EDUCATION

Pakistan is especially weak in the sphere of technical education Under the aegis of the Council of Technical Education, a thorough survey of existing facilities for technical education throughout Pakistan were made, and the Committee of Experts appointed by the Council recommended the establishment of a number of Polytechnics and technical schools throughout the country. The Committee of Experts has also revised the existing curricula and syllabi for technical institutions and engineering colleges with a view to bringing about a uniformity of teaching standards As an immediate measure a Technical High School will be started in Karachi

A comprehensive survey of all scientific institutions in Pakistan has also been undertaken in order to assess their requirements of staff, equipment, etc, and during the Education Minister's visit to Europe he tried to explore the possibility of obtaining the services of suitably qualified technical and scientific personnel

Along with the re-organisation of technical and scientific education, the problem of commercial education has also been examined by a Committee appointed for the purpose

After the partition the Central Government had to take responsibility for 140 overseas scholars who had opted for Pakistan Out of these, 104 scholars have already returned to Pakistan after completing their studies and nearly all of them have been absorbed in suitable employment Considering the overall development needs of Pakistan, it is inevitable that for some time to come the country should continue to send scholars abroad for advanced training in technical and scientific subjects Accordingly the Central Government sanctioned a scheme under which 70 scholars are to proceed for higher studies abroad These scholarships are intended to meet the immediate and inescapable requirements of the Central Government alone. A supplementary scheme to cater to the requirements of the Provincial Governments, Universities and private industry is under preparation and it is hoped that when it is finalised there will be further expansion in the scope of overseas training

ADULT EDUCATION

The Advisory Board of Education in its meeting held at Peshawar in February, 1949, made the following recommendations:

"The Central, Provincial and States Governments should take immediate steps to make literacy compulsory for all their employees including those in army, constabulary, inmates of jails, railway establishments, etc It will be the duty of Government Departments to implement this recommendation with the assistance of their literate employees and under the guidance of their respective Education Departments."

Necessary steps are being taken to implement this recommendation

A large number of Adult Education Centres have been organized in Baluchistan, N-W F P, the Tribal Areas and East Bengal under the auspices of the Central Government

In East Bengal 20 experimental Adult Education Centres are established to carry out an experiment in the teaching of Bengali in the Arabic (Naskh) Script The main object of this scheme is to test the suitability of the Arabic (Naskh) Script as a medium of Adult Education throughout Pakistan

To give a much needed fillip to women's education within the Provincial spheres an amount of Rs 70,000 has so far been given for the establishment of a Women's College at Peshawar and a further amount of Rs 22,000 has been provided for 1950-51

A sum of Rs 1,00,000 has also been provided for 1950-51 to enable the East Bengal Government to start Science classes in the Eden College for Women, Dacca

In order to promote the education of the Scheduled Caste community, the Central Government has set apart a sum of about 10 lakhs for its educational and economic development Up to date 336 internal scholarships have been awarded at a total cost of Rs 1,48,000 to the Scheduled Caste students of Pakistan for post-Matriculation scientific, technical and professional studies

EDUCATION IN CENTRAL AREAS

The Central Government is directly responsible for the educational development of Baluchistan and the tribal areas of N-W F P. which happen to be educationally the most backward parts of Pakistan In order to bring these parts into line with the rest of the country the Central Government have initiated a plan of educational development under which 80 primary schools for boys, 2 primary schools for girls, 3 middle schools for boys, one middle school for girls, 4 high schools for boys and one Degree College have already been established in Baluchistan This is in addition to the institutions which existed before the partition of the sub-continent Provision has also been made for the opening of 60 Adult Education Centres out of which more than half have started functioning

Similarly, in the tribal areas of the N-W.F P. 35 primary schools for boys, 2 primary schools for girls, 3 middle schools and 3 high schools for boys have been established While the number of existing institutions at the time of partition was 56 primary schools, 6 lower middle schools, 2 middle schools for boys, and 2 high schools for boys In addition the Education Division have sanctioned the establishment of 30 Adult Education Centres

As a result of the partition, educational life in Karachi suffered a severe dislocation as most of the Institutions that were run by non-Muslims were closed down. The influx of a large number of refugees put a severe strain on the existing capacity of the few institutions that were left functioning after the partition with the result that the Central Government had to open 20 institutions for the education of the children of its employees

Most of the abandoned educational buildings were occupied by and are still in occupation of the refugees. This as well as the inadequacy of funds have been mainly responsible for the Government's inability to establish more schools. In order, therefore, to find ways and means of dealing with the various educational problems of the Federal capital, a committee called the Karachi Educational Inquiry Committee was appointed in November 1948 This Committee submitted its report in April, 1949 and on the basis of its recommendations arrangements for the establishment of a Directorate of Education and a Board of Secondary Education have been completed.

CULTURAL RELATIONS

A National Museum has been established at Karachi to promote general interest in the cultures and civilizations of East Bengal and West Pakistan from the earliest times to the present day.

This Museum will not only give a comprehensive idea of the famous Indus Civilization of four thousand years ago but will contain examples of the Buddhist Art of the N -W F P and of East Bengal between the 2nd and the 9th centuries A D , and will also represent the Arts and Crafts of Islam.

Another step in the direction of promoting unity among the Islamic people is the forging of cultural links with other Muslim countries With this object the Central Government have sanctioned 19 scholarships and earmarked them for the students from various Muslim countries intending to prosecute studies and research in Pakistan on Medicine, Agriculture, Engineering, Teaching and Theology.

Pakistan has already established four Cultural Associations, viz., Pak-Arab, Pak-Iran, Pak-Turkish and Pak-Afghan Associations with branches in Dacca and Lahore, and most of these Associations have done good work in promoting and consolidating friendly relations between Pakistan and the countries concerned.

As a gesture of goodwill towards Indonesia, the Government of Pakistan have awarded a scholarship of Rs 200 per month to Mr. Mohammad Bin Mohsin Assagaff, an Indonesian student, with effect from 1st February, 1950, for the study of Law in the Punjab University The award will cover the whole duration of the course Another scholarship has been awarded to a student from East Africa and there are eleven other scholarships of this nature reserved for foreign students and steps are being taken to award them to deserving students on the recommendations of the countries concerned. In addition to these, six scholarships in Theology have been offered to students from Malaya to study Islamiyat in Pakistan.

The Central Government have also sanctioned a scheme to provide the teaching of some of the more important foreign languages spoken outside the world of Islam such as Chinese, French, Spanish and German Four lecturers are being appointed in this connection to be attached to the Universities in Pakistan.

UNESCO convened several important conferences and seminars which were held in different countries Pakistan, being a member-State, participated in its multifarious activities which were of great educational importance. Pakistan was represented at the following conferences —1. Fourth Session of the General Conference of UNESCO held at Paris in October, 1949 , 2. UNO Technical Classes at Tehran in February, 1950 ; 3. International Meeting on Braille Uniformity held at Paris from 20th to 29th March, 1950 , 4 Fifth Session of the General Conference of UNESCO held at Florence from 22nd May to 17th June, 1950 , 5 Second Meeting of National Commission held at Florence from 17th to 20th May, 1950 , 6 13th International Conference on Public Education held at Geneva in July, 1950

PUBLIC HEALTH

As in all other spheres, Pakistan has had to face immense difficulties in Public Health both in the procurement of trained men as well as of material, and had virtually to start from scratch. Two of the major provinces of the proposed State of Pakistan had been partitioned, resulting in the dislocation of service and the loss of central Public Health Institutions like the Central Research Institution at Kasauli, the All-India Institute of Public Health at Calcutta, the Malaria Institute of India and the Central Drugs Laboratory at Calcutta and the College of Nursing at New Delhi, all of which fell to the share of the Indian Republic. Consequently Pakistan had to plan afresh the establishment of similar institutions. During the last three years, it has been able to set up the following : the Malaria Institute of Pakistan and the Bureau of Laboratories. To combat malaria and cholera epidemics medical officers are getting the necessary training in the Malaria Institute. The Bureau of Laboratories is manufacturing vaccines and sera and is now not only meeting the demand of the whole country, but is also exporting them to foreign countries.

In October 1948 a Medical Council was constituted under the Pakistan Medical Council Act, to establish a uniform standard of higher qualification in medicine for all provinces and to establish reciprocity with the Medical Councils and Boards of Commonwealth and Foreign countries for the mutual recognition of medical qualifications.

The Jinnah Central Hospital in Karachi, started by the Central Government had a very humble beginning. To day it has grown into the biggest hospital in Pakistan It has 430 beds and is equipped with separate departments for Medicines, Surgery, Gynæcology and Eyes, Ear, Nose and Throat, under fully qualified specialists. It has also a first class laboratory and an efficient X-ray Unit. The T.B. Annexe has room for an additional 100 beds.

To make up for the shortage of qualified medical staff in the medical institutions in Pakistan, 18 to 20 medical graduates are being sent abroad annually for advanced studies under the Central Government scholarships scheme.

The shortage of nurses in Pakistan is even more acute than that of doctors and an extensive programme has been drawn up to train the maximum number of nurses within the next few years.

A Central Nursing Council for the purpose of laying-down syllabi for the training of nurses, assistant nurses, midwives, assistant midwives and health visitors throughout Pakistan, was constituted in June, 1949 under the provisions of the Central Nursing Council Ordinance. The first batch of nurses for advanced training has already been sent to the United Kingdom. Three Nursing Training Schools are to be established at Karachi, Lahore and Dacca. Meanwhile temporary arrangements have been made to train 120 nurses, 40 each at the local hospital at Karachi, Lahore and Dacca. This nurses' training scheme is in addition to the schemes sponsored by Provincial Governments for the training of nurses and midwives.

To ensure inter-provincial co-operation in the field of public health, the Central Advisory Board of Health for Pakistan was formed in 1948 and the question of framing a Public Health Act for the whole of Pakistan was taken up in the same year. This question is now to be discussed and finalised at a meeting of the Central Advisory Board of Health

To avoid the adulteration of food a Central Committee for Food Standardisations was set up by Government in 1949, and to intensify the work of health propaganda and publicity it was expected a Health Education Bureau would be set up.

Further to subsidise, develop and co-ordinate medical and scientific research in the country and to maintain liaison with other scientific bodies with similar aims, it has been decided to set up a Pakistan Medical Research Association.

MALARIA

To control the spread of Malaria in Pakistan, anti-malaria campaigns were started in different parts of Pakistan. The anti-malaria work in villages around Quetta, for instance, which began in 1947 has yielded good results. In the North-West Frontier Provinces, anti-malaria work started in Hangu Tahsil of Kohat District has been effective in combating the spread of the disease.

At Government's request to the WHO a Malaria Control Demonstration Team came to Pakistan in 1949. This team is at present carrying on malaria control work in Mymensingh District of East Bengal with very good results and has been training Pakistanis in the technique of effective control of malaria.

In Sind anti-malaria organisations have been created and work is proceeding for the control of the disease. Since the partition nearly Rs. 200,000 have been spent on this scheme which has brought salutary results.

A severe malaria epidemic which broke out towards the end of 1948 in certain parts of the Punjab was successfully controlled by prompt measures.

With the birth of Pakistan, Chittagong became an important sea-port Proposals made to Government for the development of the Port Health Department, were sanctioned in 1949. The Department is now getting into working order.

To check the tuberculosis menace in Pakistan, a T B. Association was formed in February, 1949 under the patronage of the Governor-General of Pakistan and the presidentship of Miss Fatima Jinnah, and also to conduct sanatoria and clinics Further, as an important T.B. control measure the BCG vaccination campaign against tuberculosis was started in the same year in both East and West Pakistan. The two teams are carrying on vaccination work and also training local teams of doctors.

For the promotion of maternity and child health, a comprehensive scheme was drawn up in December 1949 This scheme envisages obtaining UNICEF aid in a number of projects such as the development of midwifery training schools, the improvement of teaching facilities in hospitals for nursing and midwifery, and the provision of equipment and supplies for women and children's hospitals and maternity and child centres.

A Maternity and Child Welfare Centre has been opened at Bizerta Lines, Karachi.

The Pakistan Red Cross Society was constituted in March 1948. The Countess of Dufferin's Fund Association, and the St. John Ambulance, are affiliated to this Society.

The various activities of the World Health Organisation and the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund in Pakistan have all been incidentally mentioned above

The UNICEF, in addition to several long term projects and schemes to be executed with the help of the Government of Pakistan have two short term feeding programme in operation at present One is the school children feeding demonstration programme at Karachi and the other, a daily supplementary feed to refugee children at various refugee centres in Pakistan Each of these two programmes will last for about one year.

PROVINCES

The most important event in the Punjab in 1949, was the amalgamation of the Medical and Public Health Departments into a single unit responsible both for curative and preventive work under the control of a single officer designated as the Director of Health Services Despite many difficulties, the Provincial Government has succeeded in giving a considerable impetus to the cause of post-graduate medical education by establishing an Institute of Hygiene and Preventive Medicine in Lahore and instituting a diploma in Radiology and Tuberculosis at the King Edward Medical College The Fatima Jinnah Medical College for Women established in Lahore, is the first institution of its kind in Pakistan for the exclusive teaching and training of women in the fields of medicine and surgery. Courses for nurses and health visitors have also been started at the various hospitals and many new schemes are under the consideration of the Provincial Government

In the North-West Frontier Province, a Maternity Hospital at Peshawar, one dispensary in Kohat District and two in Hazara District have been opened The number of mobile dispensaries has been increased from two to six. The Blood Bank in the Lady Reading Hospital at Peshawar, is also being reorganised. Bed strength of the T B Sanatorium at Dadar has been increased and many new amenities have been added and improvements carried out in this sanatorium at a cost of over half Rs 1,00,000.

The Government of Sind have also amalgamated the posts of Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals and Director of Public Health under one officer designated as the Director of Health Services.

The Drugs Act, 1940, and the Drugs Rules, 1945, were enforced in Sind with effect from the 1st April, 1947, but actual work started in January, 1948, with the appointment of an Inspector of Drugs The Sind Foods Act, 1947, was enforced as from March 1949, replacing the Bombay Prevention of Adulteration Act, 1925 The number of mobile health units have been increased from six at the time of partition to 16 to provide medical aid to villagers

The Government of Sind maintains a well-equipped laboratory known as the "Chemico Bacteriological Laboratory" at Karachi

In East Bengal, in spite of innumerable difficulties, the Provincial Government has succeeded in expanding its activities in the various spheres of public health A Vaccine Laboratory has been established at Rajshahi for manufacturing cholera and T A B vaccines. A Malaria Research Institute has also been established for carrying out research into the causes and methods of malaria control Public Health and Drugs Testing Laboratories have been established for the analysis of foodstuffs and drugs Small-pox lymph and anti-rabic vaccine are being prepared at the Pasteur-cum-Vaccine Institute

A mosquito control scheme in Dacca has rid the capital of East Bengal of the mosquito menace

FEDERAL COURT, LAW

During 1949-50 forty-nine bills were drafted and introduced in the Constituent Assembly and were enacted into law. The Government of India Act, 1935, was twice amended—once to make provision for elections to the Punjab Legislative Assembly on the basis of adult franchise, and again to increase the number of seats in the Sind Legislative Assembly.

The Criminal Law of Pakistan contained some discriminations in favour of Europeans and Americans in the matter of trial and detention in prison. These discriminations have been abolished by the Criminal Law (Extinction of Discriminatory Privileges) Act, 1949 The Federal Court (Enlargement of Jurisdiction) Act, 1949 and Privy Council (Abolition of Jurisdiction) Act, 1950 are two other important enactments. They have enlarged the jurisdiction of the Federal Court and abolished appeals to Privy Council in civil and criminal matters. Appeals now lie to the Federal Court, which is the Supreme Judicial Tribunal of the country.

The Federal Court has been constituted by appointing the minimum number of Judges required to constitute the court. The Hon'ble Sir Abdul Rashid has been appointed as Chief Justice and the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Mohemad Akram and the Hon'ble Sir Abdul Rahman as Judges of the Court. From May 1, 1950, the Federal Court of Pakistan has been empowered to hear and determine appeals and petitions from, or in respect of, any judgment, decree or order of any Court or Tribunal in Pakistan, including appeals and petitions in respect of criminal matters The Court has framed Rules which came into force on the 20th March 1950 They are of a comprehensive nature and deal with all aspects of practice and procedure of the Court The seat of the Court is at Karachi, but it may sit "at such other place or places, if any, as the Chief Justice of Pakistan may, with the approval of the Governor-General, from time to time appoint" The Court has for the time being been shifted to Lahore for certain administrative reasons A provision has, however, been made in the Rules to enable a party to file his appeal to the Federal Court in the High Court of origin itself.

After the Rules had been approved by the Governor-General, the Court started its regular sittings early in May, 1950. A large number of Privy Council civil appeals from the various High Courts in which the records were not ready to be despatched to the Privy Council by the 1st February, 1950, now stand transferred to the Federal Court by virtue of the Enlargement of Jurisdiction Act, 1949, and will be heard and decided by the Federal Court Again, a number of criminal appeals and petitions, which have remained undisposed of by the Judicial Committee during their Easter sittings of the year 1950 will also stand transferred to the Federal Court under the Privy Council (Abolition of Jurisdiction) Act, 1950 During the first month about a dozen appeals and petitions for special leave to appeal have been filed

The Law Division is also concerned with Conventions with foreign countries for service of judicial processes Two agreements were concluded in 1949 with the Government of India on reciprocal basis for the execution of summonses and other judicial processes The Statute Book of Pakistan has been revised after partition and printing of the Central Acts which are expected to run into about 12 volumes is in progress It is expected that the work will be finished by the end of 1951 and a complete set of all the Central Acts will then become available to the public

The Income-Tax Appellate Tribunal consists of two members, a Judicial Member, K. B. Syed Ali Khan, B L, who is also the President of the Tribunal, and the Accountant Member Mr. S. Zaman, B A, A C A. The Tribunal's headquarters are at Lahore, but it has visited Karachi, Chittagong and Peshawar to hear income-tax appeals at the headquarters of these Provinces.

POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS

Through the Orient Airways, air mail service was established in West Pakistan as well as between East and West Pakistan in October, 1947. In May 1948, daily air mail service was established between Dacca and Karachi

Soon after its establishment, Pakistan became a member of the Universal Postal Union which entitled her to exchange correspondence both by surface and air with all the other member countries under the rules and regulations of the Universal Postal Convention. Pakistan has also executed so far postal agreements with 18 foreign countries for the exchange of postal parcels.

To give relief to the destitute refugees coming from India, the Government of Pakistan allowed limited withdrawals from the Post Office Savings Banks Accounts in Pakistan from the accounts of those refugees standing in India, as also full encashment of the certificates held by them. The Government also entered into a reciprocal arrangement with India by which the despatch of pass-books as also the application of transfers to the other Dominion was dispensed with This removed the inordinate delays in the transfers of accounts and the risk of losing pass-books.

A wireless link between East and West Pakistan was established on October 26, 1947. The submarine cable between Karachi and Muscat which had been damaged long before partition, was repaired and overseas traffic re-started on November 18, 1947

Plans have been prepared to establish tele-communication training centres in Pakistan for training all categories of staff and utilising the spare manufacturing capacity of the Railway Workshops for the manufacture of tele-communication apparatus and line stores Local telephones have been expanded and long distance circuits, both telegraph and telephone, have been added on various routes Since the establishment of the new state the telephone circuits between Lahore and Karachi have been increased from 3 to 6 The telegraph carrier channels on the same route have been increased from 6 to 18 Arrangements are in hand for adding 3 additional telephone channels from Karachi to Sukkur and from Sukkur to Lahore.

In Karachi alone, over 2,500 new telephone connections have been installed The telephone exchange at Lyallpur has now been replaced and an entirely new automatic equipment has been installed. Expansion of telephone facilities at Lahore and Rawalpindi is also being planned.

A new 500 lines exchange was installed at Dacca in replacement of the old exchange with 300 lines. Three additional trunk telephone circuits were made available between Dacca and Chittagong. New telephone exchanges were opened at Kushtiya and Rajshahi Trunk telephone facilities have also been provided at Kushtiya, Rajshahi, Pabna, Faridkot, Habibganj and Jessore. Dacca has now direct telephone line to most of the places in East Bengal including Sylhet.

New trunk telephone exchanges are being installed at Lahore, Peshawar and Hyderabad (Sind). Three additional carrier channels have been provided between Sukkur and Quetta Installation of "Voice Frequency Telegraph" systems for providing 3 telegraph channels between Karachi and Quetta and Rawalpindi and Peshawar is in hand.

At the time of partition, almost all telegraph lines connecting various stations in Pakistan passed through Indian territory. The work of diversion was quickly taken in hand and before November 30th, 1947, all lines connecting telegraph office and telephone exchanges lying in Pakistan were re-routed to pass within Pakistan territory only. Even telegrams between East and West Pakistan are transmitted by wireless. With this change, Dacca Telegraph Office is becoming a very important telegraph office in Pakistan.

Plans have been drawn up for the installation of wireless links between all important centres. The installation of more powerful transmitters for communication with countries abroad has also been planned.

POSTAL SERVICES

Mail and delivery arrangements have recently been overhauled by cutting down the transit time wherever needed The transit time between Dacca, Narayanganj, Santhar, Bogra, Gaibanda, Bansi, Bhairab, Netra Kona, Mymensingh, Jamalpur, Pabna, Sirajganj and Ashuganj and vice versa, has been cut down by 18 to 24 hours Town delivery system at Chittagong has been revised giving the benefit of 3 postal deliveries a day to the major part of the town A number of Post Offices which had been closed down after the partition, were re-opened and, with due regard to the basic policy of the Department of meeting its own expenditure, 34 new Post Offices have been opened Many additional letter boxes have been installed A Paper Sorting Office has been set up at Karachi City R S to extend the facility of late posting to the Newspapers and of late registration for the general public Direct Air Mail Service between Karachi and Dacca has been increased to 6 times a week Mail Motor Service has been introduced between Muzaffarabad and Dhanni (Kashmir) and the introduction of similar services at a number of other places, e g, between Sylhet and Dawki, Habibganj and Shalstaganj in East Pakistan and Mang Bajra, Rawalakot, Hajeera and Trarkhel in Kashmir is under consideration

In September, 1949, there came about the devaluation of pound sterling and several other foreign currencies, while Pakistan did not devalue Money Order and V P Services with all foreign countries (including India) had, therefore, been temporarily suspended pending settlement of issues arising from the change in the ratio of exchange This also led to the suspension of payment of all foreign money orders (including those of Indian origin) issued prior to the devaluation but not paid till then This was responsible for the accumulation of several thousands of such money orders. Payment of British Postal Orders and settlement of postal accounts with foreign countries had also been stopped No outward money order service from Pakistan could yet be resumed, but money order service from Australia, United Kingdom, East Africa, North Borneo, New Zealand, Nyasaland Protectorate, Zanzibar, Malaya, Hong Kong and British Post Office Agencies in Persian Gulf has since been resumed. Money orders issued from Burma and Ceylon, are, however, still lying unpaid because of non-settlement of certain issues (the exchange rates). Money orders issued in India before the devaluation for payment in Pakistan are being paid at the new rates of exchange, British Postal Orders are also being cashed at the new rate of exchange M O Service in Malta-Pakistan direction has also been introduced from 17th April, 1950

AIR MAILS

As already mentioned, there exists a 6-times-a-week direct Air Mail Service between East and West Pakistan Pan American Airways have been used from 1949 August for the transmission of airmails to the U S A which has resulted in an appreciable reduction in the transit time Pakistan has Air Mail links with almost all foreign countries of the world including India

In order to develop better links with Middle East Islamic countries rates of postage for surface posting of Registered newspapers for Egypt, Iraq, Lebanon and Saudi Arabia have been reduced with effect from 16th January, 1950 to the level of inland rates With effect from 1st April 1950, the rates of inland packets have been revised from 1 anna for first 5 tolas or part thereof and 6 pies for every additional 2½ tolas or part thereof to 1 anna for first 5 tolas or part thereof, and 3 pies for every additional 2½ tolas or part thereof A 50 per cent reduction has also been made with effect from 1st May, 1950 in the rates of postage for newspapers, periodicals, books, pamphlets, sheet-music and maps from Pakistan to foreign countries With effect from the same date, newspapers from Pakistan to Indonesia are being sent by surface post at inland rates Newspapers for Iran by surface post are also being sent at inland rates

The improvements have resulted in a considerable expansion in the volume of traffic handled by the Department which has increased from 322 million of articles handled during 1948-49 to 354 million during 1949-50 In the shape of money orders issued and paid, the Department handled over 50 crores of rupees and in the form of Savings Bank deposits and withdrawals yet another 24 87 crores The gross revenues earned by the Department amounted to nearly 5 crores of rupees as against 4 11 crores in the corresponding year

To commemorate the first death anniversary of the Quaid-e-Azam, memorial postage stamps of 1½, 3 and 10 anna denominations were released on 11th September, 1949 Pakistan Air Mail Letter forms and Air Mail envelopes have been introduced with effect from 16th January, 1950 thereby discontinuing the sale and use of the over-printed air letter forms and envelopes from the same date Indian Postage stamps over-printed "Pakistan" have been discontinued from 1st November 1949 So also Indian 1½ anna ordinary envelopes over-printed Pakistan. The sale and use of over-printed Indian Postcards was to be stopped from 7th August, 1950. Pakistan P O 12-year Savings Certificates of seven denominations were introduced from 31st October, 1949 and Pakistan Savings Stamp from 1st December, 1949

The first edition of the P & T Pocket guide has been compiled and printed, and was released for sale in December 1949

CIVIL AVIATION

DURING the first three years of Pakistan's existence the air services of the country underwent a great expansion Policies and agreements have been reviewed and settled in the light of the new conditions, and the foundations laid for a further development of Pakistan's air services

The Pakistan Civil Aviation Department is planned on a new basis It is now sub-divided into six divisions dealing with (1) Aerodromes and air traffic control, (2) Aeronautical telecommunications and radio navigational aids, (3) Regulations, publications and international relations, (4) General Administration, (5) Air transport operation and aircrew training and licensing, (6) Aeronautical inspection and examination and licensing of aircraft maintenance engineers

Of these Divisions, the work of the first four, which are primarily concerned with the ground organisation, will be co-ordinated by a Deputy Director-General Officers of the Central Public Works Department will also be attached to the Headquarters Office of the Civil Aviation Department and accommodated therein to ensure satisfactory co-ordination in the planning and execution of Civil Aviation works

The sanctioned strength of the Department includes 134 gazetted officer posts, 556 other technical posts and 630 other non-technical posts, making a total of 1,320 posts Compared with these requirements, the regular staff of the Department who opted for Pakistan numbered only 44 gazetted officers, 207 other technical staff and 307 other non-technical staff making a total of 558 personnel The sanctioned posts are being filled, firstly, in the light of the recommendations of Departmental Promotion Committees which are reviewing the suitability of members of the existing staff and, secondly by direct recruitment to vacancies which cannot be filled in by promotion

AIR SERVICES

At the time of partition the Orient Airways was the only air transport company registered in Pakistan and its operations were limited to the Calcutta-Akyab-Rangoon service Under a standstill Agreement with India this service was allowed to continue and new services were introduced under a temporary agreement which came into force on October 1, 1947 Soon air services were started from East to West Pakistan and from Karachi to Quetta Lahore, Rawalpindi and Peshawar and also between Calcutta, Dacca and Chittagong On March 11, 1948 a service was started from Karachi to Ahmedabad and Bombay

Government have also decided to start an air company in which it was to hold 51 per cent of the share capital The name of the air-line was to be 'The Pakistan and Overseas Airways Corporation' and it would start functioning in 1951 January It would have a net-work of daily air service connecting Karachi with various parts of the Middle East countries and the Far East

In the meantime, the Government also formulated its policy and settled long-range questions It decided to leave the operation of scheduled air service to private enterprise subject to control and regulation through a system of licences and definite allocation of routes The number of companies was limited to two with Pakistan capital and under the control of Pakistan nationals An Air Transport Advisory Board presided over by a former High Court Judge was set up and its recommendations accepted by the Government

New air transport licences were granted to the Orient Airways and Pak Air Ltd

The Government's air transport policy included the formation of a company to provide common facilities required by the airlines and by the Royal Pakistan Air Force, particularly facilities for the repair and overhaul of aircraft and for the training of aircraft mechanics and maintenance engineers Accordingly, on June 22, 1948, the Government announced that it had approved the formation of a company to be known as Pakistan Aviation Ltd " to be financed, directed and controlled by the Government and the two Pakistan airlines in partnership Its authorised capital was Rs 40 lakhs of which the Government share was Rs 21 lakhs, the balance of Rs 19 lakhs being subscribed in equal proportion by Orient Airways Ltd and Pak Air Ltd The Government thus has controlling interest The airship hangar at Karachi Airport was taken over by the Company for its operation and it was estimated that the organisation would ultimately be required to overhaul more than 70 air frames and 400 engines annually This requires a staff of at least 500

FLYING CLUBS

At the time of partition two flying clubs were operating in Pakistan, Karachi Aero Club and the Northern India Flying Club at Lahore The former has continued its activities without interruption but in the latter case operations were interrupted for a considerable period by difficulties arising out of partition Provision was made for subsidies to these clubs to be continued and for assistance to be given to an additional club to be started at Dacca to cater for the requirements of Eastern Pakistan

The National Operators have formulated a scheme in consultation with Government, whereby a pilot, after having acquired a minimum experience of 100 hours Solo Flying and A I licence through the flying club, is employed by them as a Cadet pilot This cadet is given advanced training in technical and other ground subjects and drafted as supernumerary pilot on regular services in order to acquire the requisite flying experience and other qualifications necessary for obtaining a B" licence The national operators thus serve a twofold purpose, that of helping to produce national commercial pilots and also finding employment for them The result is that with Government subsidisation and the national airlines' assistance a Pakistan national can now obtain a commercial pilot's licence at a cost substantially lower than previously

To make up for the non-existence of a flying school the Government decided to send for training four Pakistani Instructors at the Air Services Training Ltd, Hamble, Southampton

AERODROMES

Though the development of civil aerodromes has been retarded by financial restrictions and shortage of experienced personnel, the organisation now approved provides for a limited development and operational manning of the following aerodromes to appropriate standards.

Western Pakistan

Karachi Airport, Lahore, Quetta (Samnagli), Hyderabad (Sind) (Bholari), Multan, Rawalpindi, Jacobabad and Peshawar

Eastern Pakistan

Chittagong, Dacca (Tezgaon) and Sylhet.

Karachi Airport and the Flying Boat Base which is maintained by the B O A C at Karachi Creek, have been designated as International Airports and it is proposed to so designate the aerodrome at Chittagong when the need arises and the aerodrome has been developed to satisfactory standards The aerodrome at Bholari, in addition to serving Hyderabad (Sind) will provide a diversionary aerodrome when flying conditions are bad at Karachi In addition to the aerodromes listed above others are being maintained for future development to meet the needs of feeder air services

The prominent position of Karachi Airport on the International trunk routes and the rapid expansion of national air transport activities require the continued development of this airport as a matter of the first importance The shortage of domestic and other accommodation and the need for augmenting the electricity and water supplies to meet the increasing demands are under consideration together with plans for the construction of a new hotel and a new runway designed to take the heaviest types of aircraft likely to be used in future

Soon after partition, the Government of Pakistan notified its adherence to the Convention on International Civil Aviation and to the International Air Services Transit Agreement and on December 5, 1947 the new State became a member of the International Civil Aviation Organisation which has its headquarters in Montreal Pakistan has also become a member of the Commonwealth Air Transport Council which has its Secretariat in London

Before partition, agreements for the operation of air services had been concluded between the Government of India and the Governments of the U S A, France and the Netherlands By virtue of the Indian Independence (International Arrangements) Order, 1947 these agreements were accepted as binding on Pakistan and the other Contracting Parties who have confirmed their acceptance of the position

AIR AGREEMENTS

Pakistan has entered into several agreements with other countries and also joined International Organisations and participated in their meetings

For instance, an air agreement between Pakistan and Ceylon was signed on March 1, 1949 An agreement between Pakistan and Australia was signed at Karachi on June 3, 1949. Among the countries that have permanent bilateral air agreements with Pakistan are the United States of America, Netherlands, France, India, Sweden and Ceylon

A Pakistan Delegation attended the first International Civil Aviation Organisation, South-East Asia Regional Air Navigation, meeting held at New Delhi in November-December, 1948 The third Session of the Communications Division of International Civil Aviation held at Montreal in January, 1949, was also attended by a representative of this Department

Mr D O Bagalkot, Director of Communications, went to Canada to attend the third Assembly of the International Civil Aviation Organisation in June held in Montreal, Canada, 1949.

RADIO PAKISTAN

ON the creation of the Dominion of Pakistan, three regional broadcasting stations were handed over to Radio Pakistan. These were one 5-kW medium wave station at Lahore, one 10-kW medium wave station at Peshawar and one 5-kW medium wave station at Dacca. These stations had a comparatively small range and were primarily intended to meet local needs

Since the partition a further station has been set up at Karachi This station was inaugurated on the first anniversary of Pakistan, the 15th August, 1948, with two small transmitters, one short wave and the other medium wave Another 10-kW medium wave transmitter was set up at Karachi in November, 1948. This enabled the Karachi station to be heard satisfactorily within a radius of 60 to 70 miles

In addition to the above, one 7 5-kW-short wave transmitter has also been set up at Dacca This enables the Dacca station to feed the whole of Eastern Pakistan on medium or short wave and provides a radio link between the Eastern and Western Pakistan

Later still two short wave transmitters each of 50-kW were installed in Karachi These two transmitters give Radio Pakistan a short wave coverage of the entire Dominion and in addition enables it to feed a number of European, Middle East and Far East countries. The future expansion programme of Radio Pakistan envisages installation of medium wave transmitters at places which are out of reach for existing medium wave transmitters.

Pakistan Broadcasting Service comprises among others 1 News Organisation under the Director of News, Radio Pakistan, Lahore 2 Broadcasting stations of Radio Pakistan at Karachi, Lahore, Peshawar and Dacca 3 News Units at Peshawar and Dacca 4 Office of the Research Engineer, Radio Pakistan, Karachi 5 Office of the Engineer-in-Charge, High Power Transmitters, Radio Pakistan, Karachi 6 Office of the Maintenance Engineer, Radio Pakistan, Karachi 7 Office of the Editor-in-Charge, Radio Journals, "Pakistan Calling" and "Ahang," Radio Pakistan, Karachi 8 Director of Training School, Radio Pakistan, Karachi.

All the above offices are subordinate to Radio Pakistan Headquarters (Office of the Controller of Broadcasting), which latter serves as a co-ordinating link between them and the Government of Pakistan through the Ministry of Interior, Information and Broadcasting Division The Controller of Broadcasting is assisted by two Deputy Controllers (Programmes and Administration), a Director of Engineering who is again assisted by an Additional Director of Engineering The Deputy Controller, Administration is assisted by the Administrative Officer and the Deputy Controller, Programmes by the Assistant Director of Programmes.

Programmes.—The existing programmes of Radio Pakistan are directed chiefly to the Home audiences of each region and consist of the following —

Entertainment items, e g, music, dramas, features, etc , spoken word items, e g lectures, talks, debates, discussions, variety programmes, reviews, radio presentations, religious services, recitations, school and university broadcasts, nation building and educative themes and news

General Programmes.—There are broadcasts in Urdu, the regional languages, and English and take approximately 20 to 40 per cent of the total broadcast transmissions of each unit.

News.—Radio Pakistan broadcasts news in Urdu, English, Bengali, Pushtu, Afghan, Persian and Kashmiri which take up 33 per cent of the total broadcast time of each Station The entertainment and music items consume about 40 to 50 per cent of the total broadcasting time.

The percentage of the various items at the stations of Radio Pakistan roughly varies as follows —

Station.	Total Transmission Time Daily Hrs	Percentage of the duration of different items as compared to the total duration of transmissions
		Music	Spoken Word	News
Karachi	9½	30	40	30
Dacca	9	35	35	30
Lahore	9½	27	43	30
Peshawar	9¾	32	38	30

Select Audience Programmes.—These programmes are directed to special audience groups, such as, women, children, rural, troops, schools and universities and take about 1 66 per cent of the total broadcast time of each station

Rural Broadcasts.—Due to the shortage of transmitters and community listening sets in rural areas these broadcasts are at present restricted in extent The Peshawar and Lahore stations broadcast programmes for rural audiences

Steps are being taken both by the Central and Provincial Governments to encourage the installation of community receiving sets in rural areas But Radio Pakistan would be able to arrange such programmes on an extensive scale only after the net-work of medium wave transmitters all over the country has sufficiently progressed

BANKING

Before partition commercial banking was well-developed throughout the areas now forming Western and Eastern Pakistan There were then as many as 367 commercial banks, big and small, with over 900 offices (the majority of whom had their head offices too) in the two areas now included in Pakistan But before 15th August 1947, steps were taken by these banks to shift their head offices to places which were expected to form parts of India Then came formal partition and with it the mass migration of people from and to Western Pakistan On the one hand the rush on the banks in Western Pakistan for the transfer of accounts and funds grew in intensity as people fled in panic from one Dominion to the other and on the other hand the staff working in the banks began to fall away in greater and greater numbers One after another in quick succession the offices of the banks in Western Pakistan closed down Shortly after August 15, 1947, hardly any bank office remained to function in the interior of Western Pakistan In Eastern Pakistan, the position was slightly different, as there was no mass migration of population from that area Nevertheless the banking offices in that area being mostly branches of banks with head offices in India adopted a 'wait and watch' policy Banking services in the interior of both wings of Pakistan thus ceased for all practical purposes to function

Between August 15th, 1947 and June 30th 1948, there was also no separate Central Banking Authority for the new Dominion and thus no effective steps could be taken to repair the serious damage to the banking structure that had been done The State Bank of Pakistan, as the Central Banking authority for the Dominion, was established only from 1st July, 1948 and although the management of the Bank were fully occupied in their initial organisation problems, they did not lose any time in studying the more pressing banking problems of the country in general The peculiar nature of the banking structure which Pakistan inherited, a structure in which most of the banks were branches of foreign banking companies compelled the Pakistan Government to take immediate steps for the protection of the depositors of these banks in Pakistan By December, 1948, the Banking Companies (Control) Act was passed under which the State Bank was vested with the necessary powers to control the operations of all banking companies, and the interests of the depositors were further safeguarded by requiring all banking companies to keep assets in Pakistan upto 75 per cent of their deposit liabilities in Pakistan

In the meanwhile the few commercial banks that were able to continue their operations in a limited manner, recruited Pakistani staff as an emergency measure, and being satisfied with this experiment went on to recruit more Some of the more qualified among the new staff were also given training for appointment as officers The State Bank also introduced a Bank Officer's Training Scheme under which arrangements were made for intensive practical and theoretical training in commercial banking of young and highly qualified Pakistanis The State Bank also introduced a scheme for the training of bank clerks There is still a serious shortage of men for responsible positions in banking, but necessary steps have been taken and foundations laid for the production of qualified staff

There exist in Pakistan now (i) A Central Banking Authority, (ii) Commercial Banks, (iii) Industrial Finance Corporation, (iv) Refugee Rehabilitation Finance Corporation, and (v) Co-operative Banks

(i) Central Banking Authority.—The State Bank of Pakistan, besides being the sole authority for the issue and management of currency also acts as bankers to the Central and Provincial Governments, manages Public Debt and Exchange Control and controls and supervises the operations of all commercial banks It has at present three offices in Western Pakistan and two offices in Eastern Pakistan 51 per cent of its total capital of Rs 30 million, is owned by the state which has provided the Bank with a Reserve Fund of Rs 30 millions

(ii) Commercial Banks.—Besides the 34 big commercial banks which are known as "Scheduled Banks", there are nearly 100 other small banks all over the country, but the operations of the latter are very limited The scheduled banks with 200 offices between them hold deposits to the extent of over 1,150 million rupees Of these banks, 4 Pakistani scheduled banks hold between them about ⅓rd of the total deposits The rest are either branches of banks with head offices in India or of banks with head offices in other countries

In order to meet the urgent need for a premier commercial bank of the Dominion to undertake the financing required for the marketing of Pakistan's valuable agriculture products, such as jute and cotton and also to provide adequate banking facilities in the interior of the country, the National Bank of Pakistan has been recently formed by an Ordinance of the Central Government This bank has an authorised capital of Rs 60 million of which 25 per cent has been taken up by the Central Government It has an ambitious programme of opening out a net work of branches in the interior of the country in both wings of Pakistan

(iii) Industrial Finance Corporation.—To provide long term credits for the development of industries, the Government of Pakistan have established an Industrial Finance Corporation in which 51 per cent of the capital is owned by the State The present paid up capital of the Corporation is Rs 20 million which can be increased to Rs 30 million and the Corporation can further raise funds by the issue of debentures

(iv) Refugee Rehabilitation Finance Corporation.—Some seven million refugees, uprooted from houses in India, came to Pakistan immediately after the partition of the sub-Continent To provide credit to enable them to take up some vocation and earn their living, the Central Government established the Pakistan Refugee Rehabilitation Finance Corporation This Corporation is financed entirely by the State

(v) Co-operative Banks.—Besides the commercial banks, there is a Provincial Co-operative Bank in each of the four provinces of Pakistan and a number of central and urban co-operative banks During the period immediately following the partition, these banks, particularly in Western Pakistan, played an important role in providing the much needed banking services at places where the commercial banks had closed down Between them the co-operative banks have a working capital of over 200 million rupees

With the steps that were taken, the banking structures has not only been saved from a complete collapse but has been put once again on its way to recovery With the growing staff resources resulting from the various training schemes, banks are now in a position to step out for the opening of more offices all over Pakistan Between 1st July 1948, and 31st March 1949, with the previous sanction of the State Bank, as many as 63 offices of big commercial banks had been opened at different important places all over Pakistan

THE STATE BANK OF PAKISTAN

JULY 1, 1948, was a memorable day in the financial history of Pakistan On that day the State Bank of Pakistan was formally declared open by the Quaid-e-Azam

Unlike some of the other Central Banks, the State Bank of Pakistan will not be controlled by a few private individual shareholders The initial capital of the Bank has been fixed at three crores of rupees divided into 300,000 shares of rupee 100 each The majority of these shares (51 per cent) have been, under the law, purchased by the Central Government as the representative body of the people, and the remaining shares (49 per cent) have been made available to the public But here also a limit of 500 shares has been fixed for one person singly or jointly with other persons Shareholders are entitled to one vote for every five shares upto the maximum of 10 votes, but there are restrictions placed upon the purchase of the shares, in order to protect the national interest The shareholders' names are kept in three separate registers maintained in each of the large towns of Karachi, Lahore and Dacca Special preference has been given to small investors.

The cumulative dividend to be distributed among the shareholders will not exceed the rate of 4 per cent per annum The surplus profit will be transferred to the Reserve Fund until this amounts to three crores of rupees, the initial share capital of the State Bank When this target has been reached, the remaining profits will be handed over to the Central Government.

Every scheduled Bank will have to maintain a balance with the State Bank, the amount of which shall not at the close of business on any day be less than 5 per cent of the demand liabilities and 2 per cent of the time liabilities. The State Bank, however, will not engage in trade or influence directly any of commercial or industrial undertakings

The management consists of a Central Board, an Executive Committee and 3 local Boards

The Governor will be the Chief Executive Officer who, on behalf of the Central Board, will conduct all the necessary business of the Bank. The supervision and direction of the affairs and business of the State Bank will be entrusted to the Central Board of Directors. The Board will consist of the Governor, and 9 Directors Six Directors will be appointed by the Central Government and one will be elected from each area by the shareholders registered in Karachi, Lahore and Dacca separately The Central Board has to meet at least six times in a year, and at least once in each quarter The Executive Committee consists of the Governor, 3 Directors elected by the Central Board and a Government official and is authorized to dispose of the matters within the competence of the Central Board when that body is not in session

ADVISORY BOARDS

The Central Board will be, from time to time, advised by the local Boards of the three areas Each local Board will consist of 4 members elected from amongst themselves by the share holders registered in the area concerned and not more than five members nominated by the Central Government from amongst the shareholders registered in that area No shareholder can be registered in more than one of the circles In exercising the power of nomination the Central Government will aim at securing the representation of territorial or economic interests not already represented, and in particular interests of the co-operative banks This provision has been made so as to bring the agricultural class in touch with the central banking authorities of Pakistan Although elections have been held for the local Boards, Government nominations have not yet been made with the exception of two at Dacca The Secretaries of the Local Boards are the Managers of the State Bank branches in Karachi, Lahore and Dacca

The State Bank will thus control the currency and monetary policy, which is a factor of supreme importance in the economic life of the country It is, however, considered necessary that the business of the Bank should be conducted on purely scientific lines under the guidance of the best available experts and that the Bank should be kept as free from political influences as possible. It has been accordingly provided that no member of the Cabinet or any Provincial Legislature will be eligible as Governor or Director of the Bank Similarly all Government or State officials who draw their salaries from the Government Treasury shall be debarred from becoming Directors of the Bank

One of the main tasks of the new Bank was the problem of currency As the separation of the currency of the two Dominions could not possibly be effected immediately after the partition, it was arranged that the existing India notes should be issued in Pakistan upto the 31st of March, 1948 and remain legal tender upto the 30th of September, 1948 From the 1st of April 1948 India notes inscribed with the words "Government of Pakistan" were issued

In the first year of its existence, the State Bank withdrew all the India notes in circulation and in their place issued its own notes of distinctive designs On the 1st of November, 1949 India notes inscribed with the words "Government of Pakistan" were also demonetized, thus completing the process of replacement of India notes by Pakistan notes Similarly India coins are being replaced by Pakistan coins.

As Pakistan had no Security Printing Press at the time of partition, steps were taken to establish a Pakistan Security Printing Corporation which will print all security documents, e g postal orders, stamps as well as bank notes. The building is now under construction, and is situated at the corner of the Jinnah Avenue and the main Hyderabad Road, about two miles beyond the Civil Airport

The State Bank has also taken over the management of the Debt of the Central Government and issued various loans, the total amount outstanding being Rs 85 9 crores It has also issued 3 monthly Treasury Bills in the money market

Another big task has been to start the Exchange Control Department which administers exchange control on behalf of the Government The object is to see that all foreign exchange received or earned by Pakistan is expended in a manner best suited to the national interest For this purpose special departments have been opened at Lahore, Dacca, Chittagong and Karachi

To supervise the commercial banks and to safeguard the interest of the depositors, the State Bank has been, by special legislation, vested with powers to ensure that the development of banking in Pakistan proceeds on a sound basis and a separate department known as the Banking Control Department has been opened in the Bank for the purpose Commercial banks with a capital of over Rs 5 lakhs (which are included in the Second Schedule to the State Bank of Pakistan Order, 1948) are required to maintain balances with the State Bank, the amount of which at the closing of business on any day, as mentioned above, is not to be less than 5 per cent of their Demand and 2 per cent of their Time liabilities They are also required to keep 20 per cent of their Time and Demand liabilities in liquid assets and 85 per cent of their assets in Pakistan The State Bank receives periodical returns from these banks showing their financial position and through this medium it exercises a close check on their activities

The State Bank also renders a number of other services For example, it has appointed an Agriculture Credit Officer to study agricultural credit, a subject of enormous importance to the State A Statistics and Research Department has also been set up not only for the information of the Governor and the Directorate, but also to collect and publish statistics which are of national interest A monthly Statistical Summary first appeared in January 1950

The story of the State Bank has been one of continual expansion At present the staff consists of 190 officers, 1,541 other employees State Bank shares are held by approximately 5,400 persons

RAILWAYS

THE Pakistan Railways comprise two independent railway systems—the North-Western Railway in West Pakistan and the Eastern Bengal Railway in East Pakistan, and are State-managed and State-owned Both of them were carved out of bigger units which existed prior to the Partition of the Indo-Pakistan sub-continent and are separated from each other by a distance of 1,200 miles across the Indian Railways In the case of the North-Western Railway, some 1,818 of the pre-partition route mileage fell to the share of India against which 319 miles of the metre gauge railway situated in Sind and previously managed by the Jodhpur Railway were added to it The North-Western Railway now has a route mileage of 5,362

The partition of India left an area of 49,000 sq. miles in East Bengal which is inhabited by 50 million people It is one of the most densely populated areas in the world but is served by only 1,620 miles of railway which constitutes the new Eastern Bengal Railway

The Eastern Bengal Railway is split into two separate zones by the mighty river Brahmaputra which divides East Bengal into two separate portions and which, owing to its size and ever changing course, has not been bridged at any point so far This river is crossed by means of passenger and Wagon Ferries which the Eastern Bengal Railway operate The Wagon Ferry has a capacity of 400 to 500 wagons per day

During the last World War the Railways in the two zones of Pakistan were subjected to very heavy wear and tear Deterioration was particularly severe on the Eastern Bengal Railway which was situated in the war zone and where during the Burma campaign a large number of troops, war materials and equipment especially for American Armed Forces, moved by rail

SHORTAGE OF EQUIPMENT

Soon after the partition the Pakistan Railways were faced with a problem of another kind, namely, serious curtailment in the supply of that vital commodity, coal, without which the Railway could not function Supplies of coal from India, which from partition onwards had been inadequate, uncertain and irregular, became so low in January 1948, that a drastic cut in goods and passenger services had to be imposed To reduce the consumption and dependence on coal, some of the coal burning engines were converted to oil-firing, and sources overseas were tapped for supplies of coal

The coal supplies from India improved in 1949 but from the 22nd December 1949, they were completely cut off The Railways then got their full requirements of coal from overseas All this has naturally resulted in hastening the programme of converting locomotives to oil burning and hundreds of locomotives have already been converted

Serious difficulties were also experienced in obtaining supplies of stores and materials for the repair and maintenance of locomotives, rolling stock and permanent way A good number of these were made in or supplied through firms in India, and consequent upon the conditions following partition, these sources of supply dried up The Pakistan Government were compelled in the summer of 1948 to send a special Purchase Mission to the U K and other European countries for the purpose of obtaining the vital items of stores and material required These began to arrive from January 1949 onwards

During the last two years the condition of the coaching stock has improved considerably Old and dilapidated carriages have been thoroughly rehabilitated, workshops have been intensively busy and their output has been increasing as materials became available After renovation, such stock is expected to give trouble-free service for another ten years by which time it is hoped that most of the obsolete stock will have been replaced by new stock of modern design Eighty-one broad-gauge and 63 metre-gauge light weight all-steel coaches of the most up-to-date design will be purchased from abroad These new coaches will be provided with fans in inter and third classes also, and will be fitted with other additional amenities for passengers More air-conditioned coaches and dining cars are also being purchased

PASSENGER SERVICES

In the matter of train services, the North-Western Railway made a remarkable recovery For example, while in March 1948, only 74 passenger trains were running daily, by March 1949 the number had risen to 191 per day During 1949-50, a number of additional passenger trains were introduced On the E B Railway also there has been considerable augmentation in train services, and eight extra trains have been run on the main line alone since the date of partition Train time-tables have also been revised so that each civil district is connected directly with the capital of the Province by through trains and ferries and in some cases by through carriages Furthermore, fast trains have been introduced between Dacca and Chittagong and Dinajpur and Dacca Taking both the Pakistan Railways, the number of passenger miles increased from 2,215,502,629 in 1948 (April to October) to 3,075,252,848 in the corresponding period of 1949

There was also a marked improvement in their punctuality, the percentage of passenger trains arriving at destination on time to the total number of trains run rising from 65 during 1948-49 to 80 during 1949-50, and even better results were obtained in the case of Mail and other important trains, the percentage of such trains arriving right time being 91 4

Movement of Goods : The average number of broad-gauge wagons loaded daily during the period 15th August 1947 to 31st March 1948 on the North-Western Railway was only 886 whereas for the year 1948-49 this figure rose to 1,565 The number further increased from 1,565 in 1948-49 to 1,968 in 1949-50 The net ton miles carried also increased from 1,702,003,213 in 1948-49 to 1,767,737,455 in 1949-50 There was a similar proportionate improvement on the E B Railway and taking both the Pakistan Railways, the number of net ton miles increased from 1,078,147,980 in 1948 (April to October) to 1,224,066,625 in the corresponding period of 1949.

Accidents : The efficiency of operation is reflected, inter alia, in the number of train accidents, and the record of the Pakistan Railways in this respect has been excellent During 1949-50 there was no accident involving loss of life to any passenger travelling by any passenger carrying train on Pakistan Railways although the number of passengers carried on these Railways during the year was about 12 millions and the passenger train mileage stood at the figure of 14,586,374

Ticketless Travelling : Shortly after partition, ticketless travelling was rampant on the Railways and special measures had to be taken to eradicate the evil The measures consisted in an intensification of check by crew staff, the introduction of special flying squads and the appointment of Railway Magistrates for summary trials on the train of passengers travelling without tickets, etc As a result of these checks, the number of passengers travelling without tickets who escape detection has been considerably reduced

Compensation Claims : The incidence of claims on Railways is a matter of great concern to them, and every effort has been made to reduce avoidable claims, while improved methods of marking, checking, shunting, delivery, etc have been introduced, pilferage and theft which are the main causes have received careful scrutiny The Railways have had to take special measures to intensify their efforts to eliminate these nefarious activities which had shown a tendency to grow owing to unsettled conditions The Eastern Bengal Railway have had their armed Police Force and Watch and Ward Department reorganized, the former at an additional cost of about Rs 8 362 lakhs All Goods Trains on the Eastern Bengal Railway are escorted at night On both the Pakistan Railways regular meetings are held between the Civil Police, the Armed Police and Railway's Commercial Officers, in which the crime position is reviewed As a result of these activities a very large number of culprits were caught red-handed during 1949 Conditions now have vastly improved

Financial Results : The Pakistan Railways showed a net gain of Rs 7,87,47,000 during the financial year 1948-49 and Rs 5,31,66,000 during the financial year 1949-50 It is expected that the Railway will show a net profit of Rs 4,00,00,000 during the current financial year. These financial results were achieved at a time of virtual stoppage of traffic between the Indian Railways and the E B Railway which occurred on 22nd December, 1949 There was also the increased cost of coal, labour and material to reckon with

DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMME

The development schemes of the Railways are properly planned and arranged in order of priority Those which are important (besides the Chittagong harbour which is under the E.B. Railway), are described below

Much consideration has been given since partition to the question of introducing diesel electric traction on the Railways of Pakistan, and it has now been decided to gradually replace steam locomotives by diesel electric traction and a move has already been made in this direction. When Diesel Electric Locomotives are received and the existing steam locos converted to oil-burning, the Pakistan Railways will not only become almost independent of coal but will also be able to provide better and faster services to the public

New lines under construction are as follows

The construction of the Jessore-Darsana line 43 62 miles (E B R) is well in progress and the line is expected to be opened to traffic by 31st March 1951 With this line, the Benopal-Khulna section will be connected with the E B Railway system without having to pass through Indian territory

The doubling of the Railway line between Bhairab Bazar and Akhaura (length about 19 miles) is also well in progress and is expected to be completed during 1950

New lines under consideration are as follows —

Survey is going on on the following lines (i) Dacca-Aricha Railway, 52 miles (E B R), (ii) Chittagong-Rangamati Railway (E B R), (iii) Chattak-Bholaganj Railway (E B R), (iv) Gunjival-Bhakkar Railway, 80 miles (N W R), (v) Hyderabad-Mirpurkhas-Nawabshah Railway, 122 miles (N W R) The line last mentioned is due for conversion from metre-gauge to broad-gauge

East Pakistan is a land of rivers and as such water transport plays a great part in the economy of the country Another factor which makes transport to and from Chittagong Port difficult is that inland water transport, for want of seaworthy craft, can serve the Port only during about four months in the year In view of all this, the Eastern Bengal Railway have purchased the nucleus of a Railway Flotilla for the transport of goods between Chittagong Port and the hinterland A number of tugs and barges have already been purchased and the Railway Flotilla which will eventually have a capacity of 350,000 tons per annum has been operating from April, 1950

ROAD TRANSPORT

THE road system of Pakistan is altogether inadequate considering the requirements of the country

The national highways were subject to very heavy traffic on account of the movement of troops and supplies during the war After partition, especially in Western Pakistan, these roads were subjected to further strain owing to the movements of millions of refugees As a result of this, national highways in Pakistan have suffered greatly in respect of their surface conditions The renewal of roads that have deteriorated in the past and further extension of the road system are urgently called for

Unlike railways roads are a provincial subject under the present constitution For the last 20 years, the undivided Government of India had been exercising some control in respect of roads through the agency of the Transport Advisory Council and the working of the Central Road Fund But with effect from April 1947 the Government of India decided to accept financial responsibility for the construction and maintenance of national highways

Twenty-two months after the establishment of Pakistan, a Transport Advisory Council was set up at the first Pakistan Road Transport Conference held in Karachi on May 26 and 27, 1949

The Advisory Council consists of the representatives of the Central, Provincial and States Governments Its functions are advisory—to make recommendations designed to evolve a policy for the development of a co-ordinated system of transport and suggest suitable measures to give effect to that policy The special problem of East Bengal waterways also comes under the purview of the Advisory Council

The Pakistan Road Transport Conference also decided to gradually nationalise the road transport system Certain routes were nationalised with immediate effect while the remaining routes were to be nationalised gradually It was also decided that private bus-owners would be allowed to ply their buses on some specified routes That competition with the railways should be avoided was also agreed upon by the representatives They also agreed to give a share to the railways in schemes for operating nationalised transport on roads that run parallel to railways It was also decided to set up a non-official organisation to be known as Pakistan Road Congress which would be composed of specialists and experts to advise the Provincial and Central Governments on technical matters

Another question that the Road Transport Conference discussed related to control over distribution and prices of motor vehicles, batteries, tyres, tubes and spare parts It was further decided that for the present there was no need to impose new controls or continue old ones except in some cases such as import of spare parts from hard currency areas This decision, however, is subject to changes from time to time

The Conference further recommended the establishment of a Road Fund for the utilisation of the proceeds from the extra duty of 2½ annas per gallon on motor spirit Yet another recommendation was the standardisation of the whole road transport system whether private or nationalised

Finally the Central Government were asked to pass legislation to implement the recommendations of the Pakistan Road Transport Conference

CENTRAL ROAD FUND

A Central Road Fund has now been established

The fund derives its revenue from the additional customs and excise duty levied on petrol The accretions to the Central Road Fund are expected to be about Rs 30 lakhs per annum on the average but the position is likely to improve with the abolition of petrol rationing when consumption of motor spirit would increase resulting in more money for the Central Road Fund The accretions in the Central Road Fund amounting to Rs 90,24,000 and Rs 33,19,000 respectively for the periods 15th August 1947 to 31st March 1949, and 1st April 1949 to 31st March 1950 have been intimated to the Provincial Governments, Administrations and acceding States, and they have been asked to submit programmes to be financed out of their shares for the sanction of the Central Government Some of the Provincial Governments have already sent in their programmes which are being examined in the Ministry

The Central Road Organisation is in the process of formation

Another step forward taken during 1950 was the formation of a Pakistan Road Engineers' Association This would primarily be a non-official body consisting of official and non-official road engineers in the country It has been sponsored by Government and would receive a grant from the Central Road Fund for initial expenses A constitution has been drawn up and the main function of this Association will be the co-ordination and dissemination of knowledge about road building and maintenance and the evolution of standards and specifications The Association will also be required to formulate an All Pakistan Road Development Plan on the lines and pattern of the Nagpur Plan drawn up in 1943 under the aegis of the undivided Government of India

Pakistan was represented at two international conferences relating to road construction and transport matters, namely, the Conference of Inland Transport Experts of the ECAFE Region held at Singapore in October 1949 and the 4th Session of the Transport and Communications Commission held at Lake Success in March, 1950 While the latter was a regular session, and Pakistan was represented thereon by virtue of her election to the Commission, the former was specifically convened to study problems of rehabilitation and co-ordinated development of inland transport facilities in the ECAFE Region and the means best suited to promote the solution of these problems Pakistan's delegations made effective and useful contribution to the deliberations of the respective conferences

During the year the process initiated in 1949 by decontrolling spare parts of motor vehicles of non-American origin, was completed by the withdrawal of control on all varieties with effect from 1st May, 1950 A further step in the restoration of normal conditions was taken with the abolition, with effect from 1st July, 1950, of petrol rationing

WATER TRANSPORT

PAKISTAN has an extensive overseas trade, as she is rich in valuable cash crops like jute and cotton, and has good exportable surplus of foodgrains, hides and skins, raw wool and tobacco With the establishment of the new State, Karachi and Chittagong the two big ports have been declared ports of registry at which ships can be registered.

There are three outstanding Pakistan shipping companies, viz, Messrs. Muhammadi Steamship Company Limited, East and West Steamship Navigation Company Limited, and Karachi Steam Navigation Company Limited. These firms control shipping of 1,400,000 tons of cargo vessels A regular passenger service between Karachi and Chittagong was opened in 1950 April.

In April also a new company called the Pan-Islamic Steamship Company was registered with an authorized capital of Rs 5 crores The company conducts Haj traffic and passenger cum cargo service for Chittagong

Pakistan being a maritime country, there is a tremendous scope for the development of the shipping industry Its nationals take readily to the seaman's career. Before the partition about 150,000 seasoned seafarers used to be recruited annually from both East and West Pakistan.

There are two major ports—Karachi and Chittagong Karachi which is both a "port of call" and a "port of registry" serves the entire need of the import and export trade, as well as the passenger traffic of Western Pakistan It is well developed, and quite capable of handling the normal trade passing through it

Chittagong which is situated at the mouth of the Karnafulli River in Eastern Pakistan, enjoys the reputation of being one of the best natural harbours of the world It was, however, not fully developed by the Indian Government because of its vicinity to the port of Calcutta With the advent of Pakistan, the port has assumed great importance and its developments is one of the main concerns of the Pakistan Government.

There is great scope for inland water transport which is extensively used in East Bengal.

THE PORTS

KARACHI

KARACHI, the premier port of Pakistan, is situated in the triangular Bay of Karachi which is separated from the Arabian Sea by a low sandy reef stretching southwards from the mainland to the rocky headland of Manora Of all ports in the sub-continent, Karachi is nearest to south-west Asia and to Europe.

In 1843 Sir Charles Napier, became its first Governor He was the first to realise the potentialities of Karachi as a harbour He saw the necessity of improving Karachi and its harbour as the "Key to Sind and the Indus" He proposed to widen the entrance to the channel, to construct docks for sailing vessels, a timber-pile pier for country craft at Keamari and to connect the island of Keamari with the mainland by means of a causeway or mole

In 1886, the Karachi Port Trust was constituted in the place of the Harbour Board which had been formed in 1880 to levy shipping dues The Trust consisted of eight members with the Collector of Karachi as ex-officio Chairman The number of members rose to 15, representing Government, Municipality, North Western Railway, Labour and Commercial interests, with a whole-time Chairman appointed by Government With the separation of Sind from the Bombay State in 1936, the Port came under the direct control of the Government of India On partition of the sub-continent and with the birth of the Dominion of Pakistan, towards the middle of August 1947, the administration of the port has come under the control of the Central Government of Pakistan

HARBOUR

LIGHTHOUSE on Manora Point is in Latitude 24° 47′ 37″ N, long 66° 58′ 36″ E.

Accommodation.—Entrance channel High Water Spring Tides 38½ ft, at mean neaps 35 ft 11 in. Vessels drawing 30 ft can enter port during monsoon season; but Dy. Conservator may allow vessels of deeper draft to enter at discretion During fair season vessels drawing 31 ft to 32 ft can enter or leave at 8 ft tide

Steamer wharves can accommodate three steamers of 575 ft, with 32 ft dft, and one of 600 ft, with 34 ft dft, nine steamers of 550 ft, two of 500 ft, one of 470 ft, three of 450 ft., one of 400 ft, and one of 430 ft, with 26 to 29 ft of water alongside and one of 325 ft. with 18 ft dft

There are sixteen electric cranes of 2 tons, one steam Derrick Crane of 5 tons, ninety-one hydraulic cranes of 35 cwt, one of 30 tons on the wharves and one 30-ton Floating Crane self-propelled and one 60-ton Floating Crane

Boat Basin, at the south end of the wharves, contains the Commissariat Wharf length of quayage, 150 ft, depth at high water 17½ ft, low water 8ft, One 35-cwt hydraulic crane, the Passenger Landing Pier (length of quayage 450 ft, depth at high water 16 ft, low water 6½ ft and one 1-ton hand crane)

The Railway Wharf—length of quayage, 800 ft; depth at high water 19½ ft, low water 10 ft Three 30-cwt hydraulic cranes.

Bulk oil Pier lies south of the Boat Basin length of the quayage 403 ft, vessels 550 ft can be berthed alongside, depth of low water 31 ft Pipes are laid down from the pier to the oil installations, which are in the immediate neighbourhood. Liquid fuel pipes and connections are available from the Return Wharf and berths 1 to 11 of the Keamari wharves and are connected to the oil installations, permitting two ships to be bunkered with oil fuel simultaneously, or one ship being bunkered and one tanker discharging simultaneously, in addition to the service from the oil pier.

At the north-east end of the harbour are the Juna Bunder (length of quayage 1,235 ft, depth at high water 17½ to 22½ ft.; low water 8 to 13 ft.), with three hydraulic cranes of 35 cwt, five 1-ton hand cranes, one stationary hydraulic crane of 14 tons, and the Napier Mole Boat Wharf (length of quayage, 1,824 ft, depth at high water 21½ ft, low water 12 ft), with three hand cranes of 1-ton each Five lightering piers and two lightering berths of 327 ft and 519 ft length and depth at low water of 6 to 10 ft and at high water of 14½ and 18½ ft, with one fixed 25-ton electric derrick crane at the shorter berth, for landing and shipping stores

The Heavy Lift Pier north of ship wharves accommodation barges, d at high water 15 ft, at low water 5½ ft. One hydraulic crane of 14 tons One ship repairing berth with a length of 300 ft between dolphins and depth of 16 ft and 25½ ft. at low water and high water respectively.

Harbour moorings, five swinging moorings with a draft of 24 ft, and thirteen fixed moorings for vessels of 500 to 600 ft, of which two are with a draft of 17 to 23 ft, four of 32 ft, and seven of 27 to 28 ft.

Dry dock, length on blocks, 236½ ft, breadth at entrance 50 ft, depth on sill at High Water Ordinary Spring Tides 12½ ft Coaling performed at the wharves and from lighters

Cargoes are discharged into and loaded from railway wagons at the steamer wharves on the east side On the west side cargo is loaded from and discharged into both railway wagons and transit sheds.

Charges.—Port dues on sea-going vessels on entering the port, 2 annas per net registered ton once in the same month (month reckoned from the first day (inclusive) of one month to the first (exclusive) of the next month, or from the second day (inclusive) of one month to the second day (exclusive) of the next, and so on Moorings fixed or swinging Re. 1 per day, or part thereof, per 100 tons net registered or part thereof, with a minimum charge of (a) Rs 40 for the period of stay of every vessel under 1,500 tons, (b) Rs 20 per day or part of a day for every vessel of 1,500 tons and over, with maximum Rs 40 Berthing fees Rs 1-8-0 per day or part thereof, per 100 tons net registered or part thereof (1) with a minimum charge of Rs. 40 for the period of stay of every vessel under 1,500 tons, (2) maximum charge of Rs 40 per day, or part of a day, for every vessel of 1,500 tons and over plus a surcharge of 33⅓ per cent Additional charges of Rs 10 per hour or part of an hour, and Rs 50 for every 24 hours, or part thereof for use of pipelines, are payable by vessels bunkering and discharging petroleum respectively plus a surcharge of 33⅓ per cent Water supplied to vessels in the stream at Rs 7-6-0 per 1,000 gallons, and to vessels at the wharves at Rs 4-6-0 per 1,000 gallons

Pilotage—Compulsory on sea-going vessels of 200 tons net reg. and upwards Fair season, 300 tons and under Rs 35, monsoon season Rs 52-8-0 For every additional 100 tons, or part thereof, Rs 4 Pilots board incoming vessels day or night about 2 miles off breakwater plus a surcharge of 33⅓ per cent For services of a tug for assisting in berthing or unberthing Rs 75

Towage.—In or out, 3 annas per net reg ton. Sailing vessels when towed in or out are charged half pilotage Vessels not under steam towed from one part of the port to another for use of one tug, Rs 100, for every additional tug, Rs 75 During monsoon season towage is compulsory for vessels leaving the wharves, charge Rs 75 Otherwise towage is N C in the case of vessels of 1,000 tons and under, and in case of vessels using the west wharf, but if a tug is used a charge of Rs 50 is levied in the case of vessels of 1,000 tons and under, Rs 75 for vessels over 1,000 tons

The principal commodities imported and exported through the Port of Karachi are as under —

Imports.—Coal, Iron & Steel, Kerosene oil, Liquid Fuel, Petrol, Sugar, Textiles, Machinery, Vehicles and Liquors

Exports.—Bones, Cotton Raw, Flour, Grams, Hides & Skins, Oil Seeds, Wheat, Wool, Cement, Rice.

The income and expenditure for financial year ending 31st March 1947 was Rs 1,14,85,176 and Rs 1,27,56,982 respectively.

The volume of traffic at the Karachi Port has been steadily on the increase, as the following figures show

Year	Imports	Exports	Total
1947–48	11,56,353	10,27,521	21,83,874
1948–49	16,02,747	9,39,934	25,42,681
1949–50	19,08,422	9,23,476	28,31,896

The figures attained during 1949-50 almost equalled the record figure of 28,63,567 tons handled during the War period in the year 1944-45

FUTURE

The total wharfage capacity of the Port is far in excess of its present requirements and does not call for its immediate or even early expansion But the existing capacity will increase 50 per cent if the East Wharf is reconstructed and the Keamari Yard remodelled The rebuilding of East Wharf, according to an improved layout, has become necessary because some of its constituent wharves are fifty years old and are maintained at excessive cost. The scheme is already under the active consideration of the Port Trust but its success will depend largely on the availability of more modern cranes and rolling-stock

The partition of the sub-continent has created a need for the establishment of dry docks in Pakistan so that the Dominion may become independent in the matter of facilities for the repair of commercial and Government vessels It is, therefore, proposed to construct two dry docks at Karachi, one for merchant shipping and the other for naval vessels at a cost of about Rs. one crore.

The Port has facilities for the building of small motor launches and other craft, but none for building large ships This leeway is shortly to be made up

Nearly fifty years ago the Port Trust built for their regular employees 1,000 quarters at Keamari and 250 at Manora In spite of efforts on the part of the Port Trust, housing accommodation is far short of the demand

CHITTAGONG

Chittagong is situated in the north-east corner of the Bay of Bengal, about 10 miles from the mouth of the Karnafuli river Being almost a neglected port before the partition of the sub-continent it is now progressively assuming its importance as the major port of Eastern Pakistan

Chittagong has a long history. Centuries ago, fleets from China used to call at Chittagong for trade purposes Being on the Indo-Burma border, it has seen much warfare between the rulers of India and Arakan Prior to its conquest by the Muslims in the fourteenth century, it changed hands several times In the sixteenth century it came under the sway of the Portuguese and was known as the "Porto Grande" In the seventeenth century the British began to cast longing eyes on Chittagong It became the scene of many British expeditions and was finally ceded to the East India Company in 1760 Until the end of the last century, the export trade of Chittagong consisted mainly of jute, rice and paddy, and imports included oil and salt

In 1888 a Board of Port Commissioners was set up The Board was entrusted with the task of procuring a sea-going tug and providing suitable moorings for ships With the completion of the Assam and Bengal Railway in 1895, Chittagong became the natural outlet for the trade of Assam and East Bengal In 1928, the port was officially recognised as a major port and its control was transferred from the Provincial Government to the Central Government.

The river improvement scheme was taken in hand in 1929, and by the end of 1941, three river bars were permanently improved by training walls, thus rendering dredging unnecessary This improvement enabled Chittagong to cope with 1,250,000 tonnage per annum during the last world war.

In 1940, a sea-going tug Juldia was put into commission It was fully equipped to deal with large ships and to do fire-fighting and salvage work

CAPACITY, TONNAGE

Vessels of any size can proceed 9 miles up the Karnafuli to Chittagong at H W draught of 21 ft to 26 ft There are five berths for ocean-going vessels at the East Bengal Railway Jetties, one for salt ships at the Salt Golao Jetties are 2,265 ft long, provided with hydraulic cranes, 17 to lift 35 cwts and 4 to lift 10 tons, ample shed accommodation, and jetties are in direct rail communication with the East Bengal and Assam Railway systems, cargo in bulk being dealt with direct into wagons. Depth at jetties is about 26 feet at L W.S.T. Fresh provisions, good drinking water and coal are obtainable The capacity of the Port is about 1¼ million tons per annum

Towage is done by Port Commissioners' Tug.

The Commissioners for the Port of Chittagong constitute the port authority The Port is controlled by the Eastern Bengal Railway

Port dues 4 annas 6 pies per reg ton, Harbour Master's fee Rs 64, mooring and unmooring in fixed berths Rs 64, swinging berths Rs 32. Berth alongside jetties Rs 60 per day, night work and holidays extra

The following table shows the import, export figures in tons

Imports			Exports
Commodities	1948-49	1949-50	Commodities	1948-49	1949-50
Foodgrains	130,000	253,000	Jute .	207,000	250,000
Salt	110,000	115,000	Tea	14,000	24,000
Misc	120,000	342,000	Misc	19,000	24,000
Total .	360,000	710,000	Total	240,000	298,000

Total imports and exports, 1948-49	600,000 tons	Total number of wagons loaded at Port (1949-50) .	71,250 tons
Total imports and exports, 1949-50 . .	1,008,000 ,,	Jute handled during jute season, during July 1948 to June 1949	184,000 ,,
Total number of wagons loaded at Port, 1948-49	32,000 ,,	Jute handled during jute season, July 1949 to June 1950	311,000 ,,

The above figures indicate that —(i) tonnage handled at the Port has gone up by 67 per cent; (ii) number of wagons loaded at the Port has increased by 125 per cent, (iii) despite suspension of traffic with India, the total number of wagons loaded on the Eastern Bengal Railway increased by 17,000 (381,000 wagons in 1948-49 and 398,000 wagons in 1949-50), and (iv) jute handled through the Chittagong Port during the season increased by 70 per cent, the highest tonnage handled during any one month in 1949 being 22,000 and in 1950, 44,000

The principal articles of import are iron and steel, salt, sugar, coal, oil, paddy and rice, machinery, timber and cotton piecegoods. Exports include jute, tea, wax, raw cotton, tobacco and betelnuts

East Bengal produces over 75 to 80 per cent of the jute grown in the world This 'golden fibre' of East Bengal is in great demand in the markets of the world Of late, ships loaded with bales of jutes have sailed for America, Australia, Italy, England, Canada and Argentina Consignments to Australia and Canada were the first in the history of Chittagong.

The population of Chittagong has now increased to 100,000

In August, 1947, at the time of partition of the sub-continent, Chittagong Port had a jetty frontage of about 2,300 ft comprising of 4 berths —41/51 years old—capable of accommodating 4 ships The handling capacity of the port was between 5 and 6 lakh tons per annum which represented only a fraction of the total import and export trade of the area now comprising Eastern Pakistan, the remaining requirements being met from the Calcutta side

With the creation of Pakistan the port was required to handle the entire foreign trade of East Bengal (estimated to rise in course of time to about 30 lakhs tons per annum), and the Port capacity as well as the rail capacity to and from the Port had to be rapidly developed Plans were, therefore, formulated to extend the jetties and modernize the general facilities They were split into two parts, viz (i) immediate plans and (ii) long terms development plans The immediate plans which were undertaken early in 1948 included construction of a steel pile jetty, extension of existing jetties so as to accommodate ships of larger size, extension and reconstruction of existing sheds, rebuilding of marshalling yards, installation of river moorings, floating jetties and river lighting equipment for night pilotage. Most of these items have been already completed at a cost of about Rs 1,06,58,000

The long-term plans provided for a 13-berth port with a total handling capacity of 30 lakh tons per annum The plans include the construction of five general cargo jetties, two jetties for handling salt and one jetty for handling coal. In addition, the existing four jetties are to be rehabilitated and one more jetty provided by filling up the gap between the existing jetties Nos 1 and 4 Five transit sheds, two salt golas, a large number of bonded warehouses and extensive marshalling yards, etc, will be provided. The new jetties and also the rehabilitated jetties will be provided with electric portal cranes of capacity from 3 to 5 tons In addition, one 60-ton heavy lift crane and 20 ton gantry crane will be provided for handling heavy machinery One salt berth will be equipped with mechanical equipment for handling salt The entire development project is estimated to cost about Rs. 14 4 crores

KETI BANDAR, SHAH BANDAR AND SOKHI BANDAR

These are three minor ports in Sind. They are under the jurisdiction of the Collector of Customs, Karachi. None of them however is of sufficient importance to deserve detailed treatment.

CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE

KARACHI Chamber of Commerce.—The Chamber is established for the purpose of assisting Members in the manner usually associated with Chambers of Commerce all over the world, and its aims and objects, as set out in the Memorandum of Association, include the collection and publication of statistics, action to promote or oppose legislation or other Governmental measures affecting trade and commerce, adjustment of controversies between Members, arbitration in disputes, decisions on references involving a question of the custom of the trade or port of Karachi, etc

Any British or non-British person, having a permanent residence or office in Sind and Baluchistan, engaged or interested in mercantile pursuits, is eligible for election to Membership (British, as defined in the Articles of Association of the Chamber, includes a subject of His Majesty's Dominions or Colonies)

The entrance fee is Rs 750 and the annual subscription is Rs 216

Honorary Membership may be conferred by the Committee on any person interested in the affairs of the Chamber There were in all 118 members of the Chamber in February 1950

OFFICE BEARERS (1949-50)

Chairman—B R Graham, O B E

Vice-Chairman—D B Ashworth

Members of the Managing Committee—A J Bebbington, R N Brunt, C B F, R L Coghlan, Khan Bahadur B A Khan, J N Kerr, N Macleod, C A, A C MacKay

Secretary—H J Martin

Dy Secretary—J S Lobo

Public Measurer—P F Finnigan

The Statistics Department of the Chamber issues a complete range of statements in connection with the import and export trade of Karachi, including a Daily Trade Return, and weekly Price Current and Market Report, and also various monthly and annual statements and statistics The subscription rates for Daily Trade Return and weekly Price Current and Market Report is Rs 100 and 15 respectively for members, and Rs 150 and 30 respectively for non-members

The membership of the Chamber embraces a very wide field of interests and activities, and has shown a steady increase in numerical strength since the establishment of the Chamber in 1860 with 18 Founder Members

The Chamber elects or nominates members to various bodies and institutions including the Sind Legislative Assembly, Karachi Port Trust, Karachi Municipal Corporation, Port Welfare Committee, Sind Cotton Committee, Railway Advisory Committee, and many others

The Chamber is a member of the Federation of Chambers of Commerce of the British Empire, and of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of Pakistan

As already mentioned the Committee give an opinion upon questions submitted to them regarding the custom of the trade or of the Port of Karachi The Committee undertake to nominate arbitrators and surveyors for the settlement of disputes When two Members of the Chamber or when one Member and a party who is not a Member have agreed to refer disputes to the arbitration of the Chamber or of an arbitrator or arbitrators nominated by the Chamber, the Committee will undertake to nominate an arbitrator or arbitrators, under certain regulations Similarly, the Chamber, under certain regulations, will undertake to appoint an arbitrator or arbitrators for the settlement of disputes in which neither of the parties are Members of the Chamber A public measurer is appointed under the authority of the Chamber to measure merchandise arriving at or leaving the port.

The Punjab & N.-W.F.P. Chamber of Commerce.—(Formerly the Northern India Chamber of Commerce) was founded in 1923, and has its headquarters at Lahore. The business of the Chamber is conducted by the Chairman, and a Committee consisting of a minimum of 8 but not more than 11 elected members, and a maximum of 3 co-opted members, and ex-officio members.

The Chamber is represented on the Associated Chambers of Commerce of Pakistan, Government of Pakistan Food Standardization Committee, N.W R Local Advisory Committee, Punjab Board of Industries, Communications Board, Punjab, Board of Economic Enquiry, Punjab, Hailey College of Commerce Managing Committee and Food and Civil Supplies Advisory Board, Punjab.

The Chamber is affiliated with the Associated Chambers of Commerce of Pakistan and with the Federation of Chambers of Commerce of the British Empire, London

A Tribunal of Arbitration has been set up under the Rules of which arbitrations relating to commercial disputes are carried out on behalf of members and non-members. Surveys of merchandise are also frequently held. Certificates of origin are issued for goods manufactured in West Pakistan.

The aim of the Chamber is to protect and further commercial, industrial and agricultural interests in Punjab and N.-W F Province by every possible means, and it is the constant endeavour of the Chamber to achieve as much as possible for the good of the common interest of members—the business prosperity of Punjab and N.-W F Province.

SURVEYS

SOME 6,000 square miles of original and revision survey was carried out by the Survey of Pakistan during 1949 The results are being incorporated in the maps for the publication of new and revised editions

The Map Publication Office at Murree was fully engaged on the drawing and publication of maps of standard series Approximately 400 different maps with a total of 500,000 copies were printed.

The preparation of a general map of Pakistan is in hand on a high priority as a result of a Cabinet decision.

Increasing demands for extra-departmental surveys have been received and the Department was engaged on Irrigation and Hydel Project surveys, such as the Lower Sind Barrage and Fuleli Canal surveys, for the Sind Government, the Helda River Basin, Karnafuli Catchment Area and Subalong Dam Site surveys for East Bengal and the Warsak Hydel survey for the North-West Frontier Province.

Planning surveys such as the Hyderabad and Sukkur Industrial Estate, the New Capital Site Reserved Area surveys and a survey for the Pakistan Employees House Building Society were in hand or projected Various miscellaneous surveys such as a Concession Demarcation for the Burma Oil Co, Mohenjo Daro survey for the Archæological Department, Cemetery surveys for Graves Registration and Chittagong Town survey were also carried out.

The primary duty of the Survey of Pakistan is to keep topographical surveys and maps based on these up-to-date. Indeed accurate maps are a pre-requisite to the proper development of the resources of a country.

The survey and publication resources of the Department have been severely strained owing to lack of stores and equipment. Attempts are being made to surmount this difficulty so that the essential survey and the mapping work required for the development of Pakistan's resources in minerals, power, agriculture and industry and to meet the increased requirement of the army and aviation does not suffer.

WEIGHTS, MEASURES AND COINAGE

100,000 is one lakh (1,00,000)

10,000,000 is one crore (1,00,00,000).

COINAGE

3 pies make 1 pice
4 pice make 1 anna.
16 annas make 1 rupee.

Re 1 is approximately 2sh 1·9 pence and $\frac{100}{331}$ $.

MAUND, SEER AND TOLA

The principal units in all the scales of weight are the maund, seer and tola and the standard weights for each of these are 82·28 lbs., 2·057 lbs. and 180 grains troy respectively.

The tola has the same weight as the rupee, viz., 180 grains troy; the standard or the railway seer is equal to 2·057 lbs., while the standard or Railway maund of 40 seers is equivalent to 82 lbs.-4 oz.-9 drams.

FORESTS

THE total area under forests in Pakistan excluding States is estimated at 14,502 sq miles, which is about 6 4 per cent of the total area of the country This area is very small and is distributed unevenly In Eastern Pakistan, the percentage of forests is 14; N-W F P, 4, Punjab, 3, Baluchistan, 4, Sind, 2 7 According to the accepted standard, it is necessary to have 25 per cent of a country's area under forests Pakistan has thus a great deficiency to make up Government is, however, fully alive to the great importance of forests in the economy of the country Many development schemes are in hand in various Provinces and the extension of plantations is receiving attention

In the Kotri Barrage area, the Forest Department has been promised a large area for plantations In Baluchistan, more area was declared as reserved forests New areas were allotted to the Forest Department for plantation in Mianwali District of Punjab The second measure which will improve conditions is to bring all private forests under proper control This is also being done Guzara forest of Hazra District was brought under the control of the Forest Department in North-West Frontier Province, and a Bill for the control of Zamindary forests was passed in East Bengal A third measure which can be helpful is to exploit forests which are not yet exploited This was also done during the year Some of the unexploited forests of Chittagong Hill Tracts need large and expensive mechanical equipment and proposals to provide these were actively considered during the year A fourth way is to increase the yield from existing forests by research To provide this a Forest Research Institute has been started.

Pakistan's requirements are timber for purposes of furniture, agricultural implements and minor rural needs, industries such as sports industry, packing cases, plywoods, tea chests, and building and heavy constructions including railway sleepers, firewood, and paper pulp, match wood and cellulose In timber, the country is, or soon would be, more or less self-sufficient so far as furniture, agriculture and industries are concerned For packing uses, enough material is available in Eastern Pakistan and self-sufficiency in this respect might be achieved in the near future when facilities for manufacture become available For building and heavy constructions, Western Pakistan is definitely short, but Eastern Pakistan is self-sufficient When undeveloped areas in Eastern Pakistan are exploited, Western Pakistan's requirements of construction timber may be met to a large extent.

As regards firewood, the objective in Western Pakistan is to produce enough quantities at reasonable price For this purpose extensive plantations of firewood species in the new canal irrigated areas are being planned In Eastern Pakistan firewood is plentiful and there is a surplus for export

In paper pulp and cellulose, Pakistan is extremely deficient at present There is practically no pulp, mechanical or chemical Some good raw material such as Bhabar (Eliolops is binata) grass and firs in Western Pakistan and Bamboos in Eastern Pakistan is available, but there are practically no manufacturing facilities

There are a number of match factories, but at present all are suffering from short supplies of timber Apart from a search for new suitable species for this purpose, attempts are being made to increase the production of species of known suitability such as Bombax malabaricum, Poplus enphratica, etc

Arrangements were made for supplying sufficient timber to the match factories in the country And with experiments new substitutes were found for the timber so far imported The possibility of establishing a paper mill in Chittagong has been thoroughfully investigated and the scheme is now in the final stages of the investigation.

In March 1949 the first Convocation of the Forest College at Upper Topa took place when 12 officers and 26 Forest Rangers were awarded diplomas and certificates The Research Section has been strengthened by foreign trained scholars The Institute renders all possible aid to users of forest products and gives practical advice to factory owners industrialists and private individuals An Entamologist has been appointed recently and it is proposed to open two more sections dealing with silviculture and chemistry A survey of medicinal herbs and plants from throughout Pakistan has been started, and a party went to Gilgit in Kashmir for this work

Tree planting was undertaken in the various Provinces and a large number of trees were planted especially in the Punjab and N-W F P Considering the importance of this work two days are now fixed for the whole of Pakistan to be devoted to tree-planting

At present there is only one college already mentioned at Upper Topa. Mr Anvary is in charge of the College The annual examinations at the Forest College were held in April 1950 Four students obtained the diploma in the Officers' Class and 12 students obtained Rangers' diploma

FOREST CONFERENCES

The Pakistan Forestry Conference, held on July 1 and 2, 1949, recommended that the forest research should be conducted by the Central Government, that the emoluments of technical subordinates in the Provincial Forest Departments be improved, that a Central Forest Library including photographs be set up and that forest surveys by air and land should be undertaken The observance of two tree plantation days all over Pakistan, and the publication of official and semi-official journals were also recommended

The Resolution embodying the forest policy said .—

"Whereas it is essential to reserve in perpetuity for the benefit of the present inhabitants and posterity, sufficient land, as well distributed as possible, either already under forests or capable of afforestation, so as to supply the rural and urban population with fuel, fodder and timber for domestic and agricultural requirements, to produce a sustained yield of timber and other forest produce and to maintain a regular flow in the rivers and mitigate the severity of floods, to sustain essential services and industrial development and to improve conditions for the preservation of wild life.

The Conference recommended that —

(1) a high priority be given to the claims of forestry and adequate facilities provided for large scale afforestation and harvesting,

(2) the practice of sound management in privately owned forest should be ensured by legislation or negotiation and by technical and, if necessary, financial assistance,

(3) legislation be enacted appropriate to the needs of the country to provide powers to control utilisation of land and define the scope of work of forest services in a co-ordinated programme of soil conservation and land utilisation,

(4) it is of paramount importance to associate public opinion in the execution of forest policy, through education, propaganda and demonstrations,

(5) forests be classified, on the basis of their utility and objects,

(6) the commercial aspect of forestry be generally subordinated to the over-riding necessity of integrating it into the general context of the economy of the country as far as possible

(7) in view of acute deficiency of forest area in the country, a bold and well-planned action programme be undertaken for increasing forest area by —

(a) reserving at least 10 per cent of canal irrigated land and 10 per cent water supply for raising irrigated plantations under new projects,

(b) growing trees on canal banks, road and rail-road sides and arable waste-land, and

(c) farm forestry, preferably in compact plots of cropland, set apart on co-operative basis by village communities.

(8) existing forests be developed by encouraging the most economical utilisation of timber and other forest products,

(9) policy be executed by the agency of forest service consisting of only trained foresters;

(10) forest research, an important requisite for success of a dynamic science like forestry, be organised on suitable lines and be centralised in Pakistan Forest Institute, with ancillary field units in different problem areas of the country,

(11) more effective measures be taken for the preservation of the fauna of the country.

The Conference recommended the constitution of an All-Pakistan Forest Service, East Bengal dissenting

These recommendations have generally been acted upon

Early in May, 1950, the Third Senior Forest Officers' Conference met at Upper Topa to review the work so far done and to lay down plans and directives for the future A small survey was planned to collect information on many aspects of the various problems, and a Screening Committee was set up to gauge correctly the demand and supply position of timber, firewood and charcoal.

AGRICULTURE, FOOD

PAKISTAN is an agricultural country. Cultivation of land forms the main occupation of the people and 80 per cent of the population is directly or indirectly dependent on it The total area sown in 1945-46 (the year for which the latest figures are available) was nearly 45,000,000 acres of which 38,000,000 was under foodgrains In 1944-45 Western Pakistan, excluding Baluchistan had 9 8 million acres under wheat, 2 3 million under rice, 2 5 million under millets, 1 million under maize and 5 million under barley The acreage under cotton in the same year was nearly 3 million with an yield of about 1.2 million bales of 400 lbs each

The area and the yield of principal crops is given in the table below —

Rice is the principal food crop of Pakistan and accounts for more than half of the total area under food crops. The production is concentrated in Eastern Pakistan, which has about 90 per cent of the total area under rice in Pakistan Rice is the staple food of the population of Eastern Pakistan. Although 97 per cent of the total area under food crops in Eastern Pakistan is under rice, yet the production is insufficient for local requirements and the deficit has to be met from Western Pakistan Though the production of rice in Western Pakistan is much smaller than in Eastern Pakistan, Western Pakistan is able to meet the deficit of Eastern Pakistan This is because wheat which is the staple food of the people is available in abundance so that a substantial part of the rice produced is not required for local consumption

Wheat is the most important food crop next to rice. Out of the total area under food crops about one-fourth is under wheat The cultivation of wheat is concentrated in Western Pakistan, which accounts for 99 3 per cent of the total acreage under wheat in Pakistan This production is more than sufficient for local requirements and a small surplus is available for export.

The other important food crops are gram, bajra, jowar, maize and barley The production of these crops is confined mostly to Western Pakistan On the whole the production of food crops is more diversified in Western than in Eastern Pakistan

The non-food crops are mainly produced for the market and are an important factor determining the volume of purchasing power and the general prosperity of the country In this connection it is significant that the area under these crops is very small, being only 15 per cent of the total sown area Jute, cotton, tobacco, tea, oilseeds, etc , are among the main cash crops

As during the previous year Pakistan was self-sufficient in food In 1949 the wheat surplus was half a million tons In 1950 it was estimated that the wheat surplus would be in the neighbourhood of 300,000 tons If the price fell below a certain level, Government would intervene to buy wheat and export it to foreign markets In Karachi the control price of wheat was reduced by about 20 per cent Pakistan was also self-sufficient in rice the needs of East Pakistan were met from West Pakistan

There was progressive decontrol of food grains It began in 1949 October when control over price and movement of barley, maize, jawar and bajra were removed Then came the decontrol of wheat in the country parts of West Pakistan and of gram in the whole country Next wheat was decontrolled in Lahore and Rawalpindi Rice was dealt with sometime later It was decontrolled everywhere in West Pakistan except in the border area and the towns of Karachi and Quetta Finally came the derationing of wheat in Karachi itself

Soil erosion is an urgent problem From the coast for hundreds of miles deep into the interior in Sind there is scarcely a living plant bigger than a bush to hold the dry soil in place In the Punjab where there are great rivers and heavy monsoon rains the need for afforestation is no less The surplus water has created a very serious water-logging problem 2,350,000 acres have already gone out of cultivation due to water-logging and the process is continuing at a rate of not less than 40,000 acres a year, while reclamation is proceeding only at the rate of 33,000 acres a year So far as forest is concerned Pakistan has only 4 per cent of its surface under forest The minimum necessary for the safety of the soil is 20 per cent The Government is, of course, keenly aware of the dangers inherent in the situation Dr A M Malik who was at one time Minister for Health and Works has advocated the organization of large-scale agricultural and rural co-operative societies which would relieve individual cultivators of their anxieties He has also expressed the hope that the Provincial Governments would introduce a new system of land tenure which would give land to the landless and ownership to land-holders

PUNJAB

Crops and agricultural methods differ from province to province according to soil and climate.

In the Punjab with its sandy loam, a dry climate and an average annual rainfall of about 10 inches, a good irrigation system is vital A network of canals, reputed to be among the best in the world, has made the Punjab the principal wheat-producing area in Pakistan. The most important of these canals are the Upper Jhelum Canal, the Lower Jhelum Canal, the Upper Chenab Canal, the Lower Chenab Canal and parts of the Upper Bari Doab Canal and the Lower Bari Doab Canal

As a result of this network of irrigation many parts of the Punjab are "double cropped" Apart from wheat which is the main crop, millet, barley and maize are also cultivated Oilseeds are grown mainly for export while the most important cash crop is cotton of the "American" or long staple variety.

Agricultural practices in the East are generally old-fashioned and Pakistan is no exception. Agricultural implements are generally made in the village blacksmith's and the village carpenter's shops Draught power is supplied by bullocks, the crops are sown and harvested entirely by hand and the grain is thrashed by cattle These practices are dictated by the economic limitations of the cultivator and the absence of large-scale industry in the country Fruit cultivation in the Punjab has made rapid progress in recent years and large quantities of citrus fruits such as orange, lemon, sweet lime, and grapefruit are grown Other fruits grown in the province are melons, mangoes, mulberries and dates.

Animal breeding is also an important occupation of the cultivator, and the Punjab is famous for some breeds of horses such as the Baluch and Dhani The stock has been improved by the utilisation of Arab and English thoroughbred stallions Sheep are reared for their wool in the south-west Punjab and the Docwba, or the fat-tailed sheep, is found in the Salt Range High yielding milch cattle—cows and buffaloes—are bred in large numbers

Sind with its poor rainfall, the annual average being 4 inches only, is even more dependent on irrigation than the Punjab Formerly irrigation was carried on by what are called "inundation canals" which carry water only when the river is in flood But now a great dam has been built across the Indus at Sukkur and has helped bring nearly 6,000,000 acres under cultivation. The Sukkur, or the Lloyd Barrage as it is also known, is one of the largest works of irrigation ever attempted This great water-regulator consists of 66 spans, each sixty feet wide, the opening being regulated by steel gates each weighing fifty tons The barrage is about a mile long—approximately five times the length of the London Bridge. The total length of channels and water courses connected with it is 36,000 miles.

The chief crops of Sind are wheat, rice, millets and long-staple cotton Large quantities of fruit such as dates, figs and melons are also grown The province rears some of the finest breeds of milch-cows Among the other domestic animals are the one-humped camel, buffaloes and a hardy breed of ponies.

BALUCHISTAN

In Baluchistan the average annual rainfall is from 6 to 7 inches and there are no perennial rivers The agriculturist is certain of his crops only where cultivation is carried on by the curious Karez or underground water channels, by springs and small streams Rice is grown on carefully terraced hillside fields while wheat and millets are sown on the plains.

Baluchistan is the fruit orchard of Pakistan Melons, dates, several kinds of high quality grapes, apricots almonds, apples, pomegranates, peaches, nectarines, quinches, plums and cherries are grown here in profusion Large-scale mulberry cultivation has helped build up a small but growing sericulture industry The province is famous for its horses An exceptionally fine breed comes from Barkhan, the average specimens being about 15 hands in height, with small, delicately modelled heads, and long, slender arched necks

N.-W. F. P.

In the North-West Frontier Province, as in the rest of Western Pakistan, cultivation largely depends on irrigation The Peshawar and Bannu valleys are irrigated by wells and are intensively cultivated In the foot-hills water is obtained by the damming of streams In the riverain strip, wells and the flood water of the Indus and other hill torrents supply the required water. The valleys of Kohat are the most fertile because the soil is a good, clear loam, retentive of moisture and able to resist drought The value of rotational crops is fully realised and crops such as wheat, cotton, tobacco or turmeric are followed by cloves, maize and barley The chief crops in order of importance are wheat, barley, gram, maize and millets Cotton and oilseeds are also produced but the acreage under them is small

The North-West Frontier Province also produces a large quantity of fruits, which find their way to the markets of India The fruits grown are grapes of several varieties Orleans plums, quinces, pears, peaches, figs, pomegranates, melons, loquats, mulberries grow wild almost everywhere.

EAST BENGAL

Agriculture in East Bengal is very different. While the cultivator in Western Pakistan is almost always short of water and is dependent on irrigation for the watering of his crops, the cultivator in East Bengal has to wade waist-deep through water to transplant the young rice seedlings

Here the great rivers are still building up their deltas and every year huge quantities of silt are brought down by the Ganges and the Brahmaputra. With an average rainfall of 60 inches in the year irrigation is unnecessary On the contrary, due to the perennial overflow of rivers large areas of Eastern Pakistan are under water for at least six months in the year The people build their cottages on high ground and move about by boat all the year round in some districts and for a part of the year in others The surface is flat and much of it is covered with huge marshes where rice and jute grow in almost wild luxuriance The total acreage under rice is about 15,000,000 and the entire produce is consumed So fertile is the land that there are two major crops and a subsidiary crop in the year the winter rice, which is the main crop, the early rice and the spring crop.

Winter rice is grown on low lands A piece of high ground is usually selected for a seed nursery. In July or August the seedlings are transplanted to flooded fields which have been ploughed and reploughed till the whole surface is reduced to mud Between November and January the crop is harvested In the swamps, however, a variety of long-stemmed rice is sown broadcast after one or two ploughings.

The summer crop grows with the rains By harvest time the fields are well under water but the ears maintain a fair margin as against the water-level At times the reaping has to be done from boats By the time the winter crop is reaped the fields are half dry

The most important cash crop of East Bengal is jute of which it has an unquestioned monopoly, as it produces about 80 per cent of the world's supply The total acreage under jute is nearly 2,000,000 Jute has been called the "brown paper" of world industry as it makes the best, the cheapest and the most durable packing material Attempts have been made in different parts of the world to produce a synthetic substitute or, failing that, to grow it on a sufficiently large scale, but nowhere has the attempt succeeded The average annual world consumption of this wonderful fibre runs into 10 million bales of 400 lbs each, the principal markets being the U S A and the U K, but almost all countries require it in substantial quantities

The seed is sown broadcast from February to May on finely prepared seedbeds It is weeded and thinned at least twice and is cut after four or five months The plants often grow to a height of 12 feet and are submerged under water for retting In about ten to twenty days the retting is completed and the plants are removed The fibre is then carefully separated from the stalk and after a process of cleaning and drying it is ready for its varied uses The other crops are gram, oats, sugar-cane, chillies, turmeric, ginger, tea and tobacco The last named is grown in very large quantities and is exported while nearly 4 million pounds of tea are produced annually by the Sylhet District alone.

Tropical and sub-tropical fruits such as mangoes, of which the Malda variety is very well known, pine apples, custard apples, jackfruit and bananas grow in abundance Cocoanut and areca palms cover large parts of the countryside and impart a pleasing appearance to the landscape.

ORGANIZATIONS

The All-Pakistan Food and Agricultural Conference has set up a Council of Food and Agriculture An organisation for the study, research and active prevention of plant diseases and in particular locust pest was formed Pakistan and its neighbouring countries, have large breeding areas of locust and the Locust Warning Organisation has, therefore, to keep a vigilant watch

Arrangements for plant protection service have also been made In Baluchistan, 61,345 trees were cleaned and 237,416 hibernating larvæ of codling moth were removed The infestation in the treated orchards was reduced from 80-90 per cent to 10-20 per cent Similarly, hairy caterpillars were dealt with and 13,257 trees were cleaned of the pest, thereby removing 274,568 colonies each having 117 larvæ on an average

The Plant Quarantine Organisation is intended to prevent exotic pests from entering into Pakistan A Quarantine Station has been started in Chaman to prevent the introduction of Palearctic pests from Afghanistan.

Pakistan is rich in its potentialities for the development of horticulture, fruit and vegetable preservation To place this industry on a sound footing, a Fruit Products Control Order was issued An Inspectorate has also been set up to inspect the factories and to give necessary assistance and guidance to the industry To ensure that the products are manufactured under hygienic conditions, the Inspectorate constantly check samples some of which are examined at the Fruit Technological Laboratory, Lyallpur

The Statistical Directorate, Ministry of Food, Agriculture and Health has organised crop forecast work on a sound basis It now issues regular forecasts for the benefit of commercial interests in respect of as many as thirteen principal crops grown in Pakistan, such as rice, wheat, barley, gram, cotton, jute, etc Statistics of the area and yield of the different principal crops have also been compiled on all Pakistan basis for the years 1941-42 to 1948-49

The Directorate has also arranged to collect information regularly regarding the prices of agricultural commodities containing over 100 quotations relating to as many as 26 commodities, and is circulated to all the Ministries, Provincial Governments and Pakistan Embassies in foreign countries In addition to this, a fortnightly All Pakistan Agricultural Index of the wholesale prices of the principal food and agricultural commodities is being issued It also assists the Government in the consideration of important policy questions, and also tenders expert advice on questions relating to price stabilisation, sterling balances, etc

Great importance is attached by the Government to agricultural development schemes to be completely financed by the Centre These schemes cover agricultural research and development, plant protection, co-operation and marketing, fisheries, forests and animal husbandry Priority is given to research and technical training

Most of these schemes are expected to be completed by 1953 The total cost of the schemes is estimated to be approximately Rs 2 71 crores, whereas the cost in the two years, 1950-51 and 1952-53 is expected to be about Rs 1 56 crores Out of this over Rs 22 lakhs is to be spent on research and training schemes These include schemes for the establishment of an Institute of Development Research in herbs drugs, etc , a Central Institute of Agricultural Research, Agricultural Engineering and Traction Technology Institute, Central Fruit Technological Institute, Soil Conservation Research Institute, Forest Research Institute, Forests Products Laboratory, Animal Husbandry Research Institute, Fisheries Department and Laboratory, and sending scholars abroad for training in fisheries Almost all of these are expected to be completed in two years The schemes further include horticultural development, setting up of a fish market at West Wharf (Karachi) and running of fish trawlers, a qualitative cattle census, breeding of cattle and poultry, establishment of wool-washing, shearing and grading centres, eradication of rinderpest, etc.

Besides the above schemes the Centre will also be responsible for the financing of Baluchistan's agricultural development schemes, for Baluchistan under the existing constitutional arrangement is the exclusive responsibility of the Centre The Baluchistan agricultural development plan covers about seven schemes These include distribution of improved variety of seeds, establishment of central and district farms, forest and soil conservation, introduction of machinery in agriculture, pest protection and minor irrigation like sinking of wells The total cost of these schemes is estimated to be about Rs 54 lakhs and almost all the schemes will be completed in two years.

SOME STATISTICS

The classification of areas in different provinces according to the latest available information is as follows :—

(In millions of acres)

Province or State	Forests	Not available for cultivation	Culturable waste other than Fallow	Current Fallows	Net Area sown	Total Area
East Bengal . .	3 0	5 7	3 0	2 4	15 7	29 8

Pakistan .	5 5	29 8	23 6	10 8	43 7	113 4

The area under forests is very small The area which is not available for cultivation is considerable (29 8 million acres), particularly in Sind. Culturable Waste Land other than fallow is also substantial It is largest in the Punjab (10 5 million acres), followed by Sind (5 2 million acres) and in Eastern Pakistan (3 7 million acres) However, substantial parts of this area can be brought under cultivation without further irrigation facilities

LIVESTOCK

LIVESTOCK plays an important role in the agricultural economy of the country. Mechanized cultivation being practically unknown, livestock is the only source of power available for the various agricultural operations.

Besides livestock is the source of milk and milk products, meat, hides and skins, wool, bones, farmyard manure, etc The animal industry of Pakistan is worth about Rs. 90 billion

Though the total bovine population of Pakistan is rather large, its quality leaves much to be desired The poor quality of the livestock means in effect a great drain on the fodder resources of the country.

BREEDS

The well defined breeds of cattle are Red Sindhi and Sahiwal for milk, Tharl, Bhagnari and Dhani for draught Lohani and Rojhan are lighter types, the former especially being useful for hill tracts Ravi and Nili are well-known buffalo breeds The total bovine population is estimated at about 30 million but the bulk of it, particularly in Eastern Pakistan, is of poor quality

Some efforts are being made to improve the quality of animals through better breeding, feeding and management and more efficient disease control, but there is scope for improvement

The important breeds of sheep are fat-tailed Hashtnagri, Harnai, Bibrik, and Waziri, and thin-tailed Damani, Kaghani and Lohi Most of the sheep population is confined to Western Pakistan The important sheep breeding areas are N-W F P, Baluchistan and Sind The total population is estimated at about 6 million and the average yearly production of wool is 289,000 maunds, the rate per adult sheep being approximately 4 lbs Sheep are kept for a dual purpose, mutton and wool though generally speaking the former is regarded as more important Pakistani wool is generally used in carpet-making as most of it is not fine enough for manufacture of good work A scheme of grading is shortly to be introduced in the country

The well-known breeds of goats are Kaghan Valley, Dera Din Panah, Dhanni, Barbari, Kamori, Black Bengal and White Bearded Bengal Their main utility lies in the production of hair, skin and meat Some breeds are good milkers and are being preserved as the poor man's cow Since goats contribute to soil erosion in certain areas, the policy is to restrict the numbers or stall feed them or to replace them by sheep in areas where they cause erosion Goat skins from Eastern Pakistan are of superior quality. The total population of goats is estimated at a little over 9 million Every year 7,564,000 pieces of sheep and goat skin are produced

Horses play an important part in transport Their number is estimated at 540,000 Baluchistan and the Punjab are the best horse breeding areas Pakistani horses are exported to India and Ceylon In addition, Pakistan has about 913,000 donkeys and 41,000 mules which are used mainly for transport

Camels are bred in arid regions particularly in Sind, Bahawalpur and Mekran Mekran produces good race camels They are used for ploughing and transport and as pack animals They also produce hair and hides The total population is estimated at 4,54,000

Poultry exists in Pakistan in large numbers (nearly two-thirds in Western Pakistan) but is not very productive Chittagong, Aseel and Sarail are the important indigenous breeds Replacement of the indigenous stock by suitable foreign breeds is a chief aim In Eastern Pakistan there are a large number of ducks and their breeding is being encouraged in Western Pakistan also The total number of fowls is estimated at about 23,000,000 and of ducks at 5,000,000 A private association—the Pakistan Poultry Association—has been formed for the purpose of assisting the poultry industry and one of its activities is to assist members in getting land Similar associations have also been formed in other Provinces

The cattle have gone to Indo-China, India, Philippines, the horses to India, the poultry to Persian Gulf countries and in part for use as food A few animals, viz, deer, partridge, camels have gone to zoos

Pakistan is recognised as the homeland of some of the best heat-resistant Zebu cattle, which are so much in demand for upgrading Zebu and other cross-bred meat cattle in foreign countries Red Sindhi and Sahiwal are the most popular breeds abroad Owing to heavy demand for cattle within the country and maintenance of normal meat supplies for the people, Pakistan permits only a limited export of cattle Export of all domestic animals is subject to Export Control regulations One hundred and forty-one cattle, 147 horses, 1,257 sheep, 82 ducks and nearly 12,000 poultry were exported during 1949 Apart from export of cattle overseas, Pakistan is required to build up good stocks of Red Sindhi in Eastern Pakistan It is hoped that this policy will, in due course, transform the animal economy of that Province

The Government of Pakistan are engaged in developing a Red Sindhi Cattle Breeding Farm and a poultry at Malir near Karachi with a view to undertaking general improvement of the Red Sindhi breed Rhode Island Red, White Leghorn and Minorca breeding stock will also be maintained Similar provincial breeding farms are doing useful development work

There are two Veterinary Colleges in Pakistan, namely, Punjab Veterinary College at Lahore and East Pakistan Veterinary College at Comilla The Punjab Veterinary College is affiliated to the Punjab University and awards the degree of B V Sc The East Pakistan Veterinary College at present, awards a diploma but negotiations are going on for the rehabilitation of the College with a view to its affiliation with the Dacca University These colleges produce about 60 veterinary graduates every year

Pakistan Animal Husbandry Research Institute, Peshawar with its regional sub-station at Comilla in East Pakistan, is a Federal agency for research, Post-Graduate training and the manufacture of biological products Approximately 400,000 doses of vaccine, sera and diagnostics were prepared during 1949 and supplied to provinces, States and the Army as well as to certain Middle East countries Ranikhet virus vaccine is expected to be supplied to certain European countries also

Very useful research work is being done at the Pakistan Animal Husbandry Research Institute A survey is being conducted on all cattle breeds of Pakistan in accordance with a proforma drawn up by the Food and Agriculture Organisation Work is proceeding on certain important pathological, bacteriological, virus and parasitic diseases Encephelomyelitis in mules and a virulent strain of Salmonella in indigenous fowls was detected for the first time in the country Pathological material is received from the provinces for purposes of diagnosis The research staff is also called upon to actively assist the provinces in their animal husbandry problems The Institute is being expanded and a new regional sub-station at Quetta (Baluchistan) is expected to be set up mainly for research on problems of sheep and wool

A number of national schemes financed by the Central Government are in operation in the provinces and States

Pakistan participated in three International Conferences during 1950 Dr S A Yasin, who is Deputy Animal Husbandry Commissioner and Director of the Pakistan Animal Husbandry Research Institute represented Pakistan at the Annual Conference, in Paris in May, 1950 of the Office International des Epizooties as well as the Food & Agriculture Organisation Meeting on Foot and Mouth Disease and contributed to discussions on a number of animal diseases Mr Abdul Wahid a Research Officer attended a Food & Agriculture Organisation Conference on breeding of livestock held at Lucknow

FISHERIES

PAKISTAN has abundant resources in fish They may be classified broadly into three main categories, namely, marine, estuarine and inland fresh water East Bengal, Sind and Baluchistan have access to marine fisheries The Gangetic delta of the Sunderbans and the Indus delta are extremely rich in estuarine fisheries. So are also the inland fresh water fisheries.

Eastern Pakistan is exceptionally rich in fishery resources. Fish is an important article of diet of the population of that area and large quantities are consumed locally East Bengal exports its surplus fish to West Bengal.

The Governments of East Bengal, the Punjab and Sind have well organised Departments of Fisheries and have formulated schemes for the development of their fisheries resources still further.

Deep sea fishing has been undertaken with the help of a motor trawler, on an experimental basis, in the sea along the coast of Karachi where some of the finest fishing grounds have been located

A scheme for the construction of a new Fish Harbour at Karachi has also been approved in principle as a first step towards the systematic development of marine fisheries This harbour is intended to provide all modern facilities for berthing of fish boats and trawlers, modern hygienic fish curing, extraction of shark liver oils, cold storage arrangements and wholesale marketing of large catches of marine fishes

The question of extending the activities of the Central Fisheries Organisation now working in Karachi to the coast of East Bengal is under consideration Pakistan has become a member of the Indo-Pacific Fisheries Council of the Food and Agriculture Organisation of the United Nations which aims at tackling fisheries problems of the Indo-Pacific region on a collective and co-operative basis

The value of the fisheries of this deltaic region lies primarily in the enormous area occupied by inland waters-rivers, creeks, beels, baors, swamps —to say nothing of paddy fields and more than a lakh small and big tanks All these swarm with fish and, as the population has no aversion to fish the demand is enormous Rice and fish are the staple food of the population and no less than 90 per cent of the people consume fish as a regular item of diet It is estimated that about one per cent of the population is actually engaged in fishing and a higher percentage in connected trades. There are over 2,55,000 families of fishermen in East Bengal and as many as 4,50,000 subsist by fishing.

As a freshwater fisherman, the Bengali is very ingenious his nets, traps and other devices are exceedingly clever and effective. The most lucrative inland fishery is that of Hilsa (Hilsa ilisha) which annually ascends the rivers from the sea and estuaries in big shoals in search of suitable spawning grounds in the Meghna, Padma, Arialkhan and other rivers. Other valued and abundant river and tank fishes are rohu (Labeo rohita), the Katla (Catla catla), mrigal (Cirrhina mrigala), Kalbaus (Labeo calbasu) and some catfishes Prawns and shrimps abound everywhere Of important fishes taken in the lower reaches of the rivers and in the great network of creeks spread throughout the eastern part of the Sundarbans, the Bhetki (Lates calcarifer) and the mullets (Mugil sp) are best liked Apart from these estuarine fishes the most valuable marine fishes are the Mango-fish or Indian Salmon (Polynemus) and pomfrets The sea-fisheries are as yet little exploited Enormous quantities of Jiol fish (Heteropneustes fossilis, Clarias batrachus, Anabas testudineus, Ophicephalus punctatus, Ophicephalus marulius, etc) grow in the derelict tanks, paddy fields, ditches, swamps, etc, almost everywhere in East Bengal and apart from meeting local demand to a great extent, they are much in demand in the local area as they are generally marketed in live condition Some of these fishes are specially good for the invalid and the convalescent Taking all the facts into consideration it can safely be said that the fishery wealth of East Bengal is enormous and is far in excess of any Province in Pakistan and India

History

Following the enquiry begun in 1909 by Sir K G Gupta, an investigation of the steam trawl potentialities at the head of the Bay of Bengal was undertaken, the trawler "Golden Crown" being employed for the purpose As the result of surveys a chart showing important fishery grounds was prepared A suitable area among these was one adjacent to Chittagong abounding in sharks, skates, sea catfish and Indian Salmon This part of the Bay was not, however, thoroughly surveyed on account of its long distance from Calcutta, the main consuming centre, and it is generally believed that a more thorough survey would reveal many more fishing areas Attempts are now being made to requisition trawlers to carry out the preliminary investigation before launching any ambitious scheme

The Directorate of Fisheries was re-established in Bengal in 1942 after a lapse of 20 years, with Dr S L Hora of the Zoological Survey of India, as its Director Dr Hora left the Directorate in 1946, after the expiry of his term and was succeeded by Mr. Q M. Rahman who continues to hold the post after the partition of Bengal

The inclusion of the district of Sylhet in the province of East Bengal, added much to the fish wealth of the province A large quantity of fish is exported to Assam from this district while from the districts of Khulna, Dacca, Mymensingh, Tippera and Faridpur about 5,00,000 maunds of fish are exported to Calcutta every year It is estimated that about 3,00,16,000 maunds of fish are produced in East Bengal annually, the approximate price of which will be in the neighbourhood of Rs 100 crores.

Freshwater mussels are used extensively at Dacca in the manufacture of cheap pearl buttons and in many cases pearls are also found in the mussels which the pearl dealers collect and sell in the various parts of Pakistan and India The Dacca bangle factories constitute an important local industry of very ancient origin, their raw material is largely obtained from Madras and Ceylon chank fisheries.

East Bengal's existing and potential fishery resources are immense, its more than a lakh small and big tanks, numerous beels and baors, when properly developed, can not only make every village self-sufficient as regards fish supply but produce substantial marketable surplus. There is no dearth of suitable areas for nursing and rearing fry and fingerlings and stocking fish for fattening The province has also very important spawning grounds of carps in the rivers Padma, the Brahmaputra and the Halda and in some smaller streams also From all these areas millions of fry are collected and distributed to tank owners within and are also exported outside the province. Fry are also grown in the Government nurseries for distribution to tank owners at comparatively low rates Annually over 5,00,000 young fish were distributed from these nurseries in different districts for cultural purposes

Demonstration fish farms on a small scale have been established in some districts for teaching tank owners the scientific method of carp culture All these farms are run on a commercial basis Similarly a saltwater fish farm has shown wonderful results in a short spell of time Owners of tanks are taking to fish culture now in right earnest and this is bound to add to the fish wealth of the province.

To augment the supply of seeds experiments for collection and hatching of fish eggs were carried out in the district of Chittagong by the officers of the Directorate and recommendations made for the improvement of the industry

One of the greatest needs of the time is the protection of brood fish and young fry during certain months of the year At present the fish at different stages are slaughtered recklessly with the result that sufficient quantities of prime fish are not available throughout the year As soon as steps are taken with a view to their protection, substantial progress will be made in the production of fish.

A very large quantity of dry fish is produced annually for which there is a good demand both in the markets at home and abroad To effect improvement on the existing methods employed by the local fish curers, Government have opened centres at important places to demonstrate scientific and hygienic methods for the production of dry fish Some prime fishes like Hilsa, Pomfret, Bhetki, etc, which are very suitable for canning are available in the estuarine areas and can be suitably canned for use in lean seasons

Refrigeration facilities with respect to fish industry is undeveloped in this country. To solve the fresh fish transport problem cold storage and ice plants are going to be erected in selected fish assembly centres Arrangements for en route refrigeration both by rail and by boat has been included in the long term programme

By-Products

There is very good scope for a by-product industry in the fishing centres of this province The most important of the by-products is Shark Liver Oil Large numbers of sharks are caught annually in the coastal belt of East Bengal The livers obtained from these sharks were generally thrown away by the fishermen With the opening of Shark Liver Oil extraction centres at various places by Government these livers are now utilised for the manufacture of medicinal Shark Liver Oil The species of Shark caught has been found to contain a high percentage of vitamin A Suitable Oil factories can be set up in Cox's Bazar, Khulna and Bakerganj areas Other by-products include fish meal and fish manure These are obtained from waste fish and fish wastes in the innumerable fish curing yards Fish meal and manure are now prepared by the Fisheries Directorate for meeting home demand

Fish-glue is another important product prepared by the Fisheries Directorate from wastes collected from the local markets as well as from the fish curing yards. There is good scope for cottage industries which can utilise these raw materials Floating canneries with equipment for manufacture of glue, meal and manure, etc, can also be set up in coastal areas where permanent stations cannot conveniently be put up With a view to tackling the various scientific problems arising out of the day to day field activities on fish technology, a laboratory has been set up in Comilla for conducting analytical study of fish, fish by-products, waste, soil, preservatives, etc, so as to disseminate research findings to the public interested in the development of fish industry. Pilot plant experiments on the manufacture of various kinds of processed fish and fish by-products are also carried out in the laboratory.

On the whole the prospect for factories for the large scale manufacture of various fish by-products are very bright. Government has been helping private enterprise especially those run on co-operative basis for developing the by-product industry

The welfare of fishermen is also receiving the attention of Government Capital goods are procured and distributed to bona fide fishermen. They are also being organised into Co-operative Societies and are given preference to others in the matter of settlement of state fisheries There is an overall shortage of fishermen's capital goods (yarn, coal-tar, sail cloth, etc) and the supply is scanty and fitful. This is one of the real reasons why the fish crop cannot be harvested in full

Taking into consideration the limited seaboard and the number of fishing villages, Sind has a rich sea fishery

The fishing grounds are located not only around Karachi, but as far away to the south east as Seer and towards west as Sonmiani and even Pasni, Ormara, Jiwani up to the Gwater Bay Vigorous drift net fishing is carried on in the sea-board specially up to 12 fathoms contour line throughout the coast Fishing industry is better organised on the Sind coast than towards Las Bela and Kalat coast, for Ghol, Surmai, Rawas, Kargan, Pitho, Hiro, Dothar, Sangro, Gissur, Kar, Lisro, Kanatyan, etc, etc

Extensive fish curing operations are carried out on the coast individually with coloured salt as no Government fish curing yards are in existence A fish curing yard has been sanctioned for Karachi along with a modern fish harbour Another yard may be set up at Mai on the Sind coast and others will be set up later

There is a very large export of dry fish to Ceylon and Burma Fresh fish packed in ice was being exported to up-country towns but now owing to the increase of population in Karachi the surplus is very little

Schemes

1 Edible oysters culture and establishment of an oyster park at Ibrahim Hyderi.

2 Development of prawn fishery and manufacture of semi-dried prawns

3 Stabilising the fishing industry and improving the socio-economic conditions of the fisher-folk

4 Deep-sea fishing experiments with modern type of power crafts and tackle One trawler "ALA" is under operation and another "MARY MUDIE" is being rigged up.

5. Research and collection of data for the future development of Marine fisheries.

6. Establishment of an up-to-date wholesale fish market with cold storage, fish-curing yard, Marine Biological and Technological station, pilot plants for the manufacture of fish manure, fish meal and liver oil of sharks and other fishes close to the new fish harbour at Karachi proposed by the Port Trust.

One motor fishing trawler "ALA", 75 footer with 160 H P Diesel engine, fitted with power winch, has been fishing with Otter trawl since 1948 It is at present working towards the Sind coast upto cape Monze and has done many cruises. Another trawler, "MARY MUDIE," 95 footer with 200 H P Diesel marine engine is working towards Baluchistan coast

A fishermen's Co-operative Purchase and Sale Society is functioning at Karachi and many such Societies have been formed in the interior. Steps are being taken to improve the condition of the fishermen and the fishery schools.

Prawn Fishery—Seasonal fishery, which commences from the month of November and ends by end of March, is also a very important fishery of this province On an average 60,000 mds of cured prawns are exported every year to Colombo and other places.

The important fishing areas for prawn fishery are :—

Kurangi creek
Phiti creek
Kudi creek
Patiani creek
Gorablo creek
Dhabo creek
Chaan creek

Of the above, Phiti, Patiani and Dhabo creeks are the most prolific among the prawn fishing areas

The prawns caught in Sind waters belong to a big marine group "Penaeidae" which are normally inhabitants of sea but migrate to estuaries of lower salinity in quest of their food which is predominantly diatomaceous in character

The prawns comprise the following three kinds. The names are naturally in the local language.

1.	"Jhairo"	the biggest	5"-9"
2.	"Kaliri"	the medium	4"-6"
3.	"Kidi"	the small	2"-4"

A good number of sharks (Saw fish, Hammer Head, and several other ordinary sharks) are captured specially during the months of August, September and October and again February and March One variety, the "Basking" shark (Rhineodon typus) which grows as large as 60 feet, is occasionally fished with harpoons Its liver yields a large quantity of oil

There are two distinct oyster-fisheries in Sind,—both present in the creeks which constitute the mouth of the Indus and its net-work, specially between Karachi and Ketibunder These are (1) edible oyster and (2) the window-pane oyster which yields pearls.

The most popular fish from the Indus is the Pulla or Palloh (the well-known Indian Shad). This is under the control of the Revenue Department who lease out different stretches of the Indus The Dumbra and other fresh-water carps and prawns are other items in the Indus fisheries

The Hub River which forms the boundary between Sind and Baluchistan, contains the well-known sporting fish—Mahseer (Barbustor).

The most important fishes, of the inland waters besides Palla, are Dhambro (Labeo rohita), Theli (Catla Catla) and Morakhf (Cirrhina Mrigala). Sind has got many large dhands, one of which Manchar Lake is about 20 miles × 10 miles and yields more than 20,000 maunds of fish annually · 450 miles of river Indus is very rich in fish fauna and steps are being taken to improve the fisheries of other dhands also which are not so productive as they should be, owing to the brackish nature of the water

There are many indigenous larvivorous fishes also which are being utilised in controlling malaria and other mosquito borne disease

MARKETING AND CO-OPERATION

THE Pakistan Government maintains a central organisation which is responsible for co-ordinating activities in marketing and co-operation It is called Co-operation and Marketing Department From April 1, 1950 the Co-operation and Marketing Adviser also took over the duties of the Registrar of Co-operative Societies The Department also maintains close contact with international organizations like Food and Agriculture Organization and so on It carries out detailed marketing surveys of various agricultural commodities and livestock products with the help of the provincial marketing staff and for the preparation of final reports dealing with almost all the aspects of marketing such as supply, demand, preparation for the market, prices, assembling and distribution, transport, storage, grade standards, processing and seed requirements On the basis of these surveys, development work in the marketing of various commodities is undertaken The object is to secure for the primary producer a better return for his produce

The Intelligence Section issues the daily Wholesale and Retail Prices Bulletin to Radio Pakistan and the press and publishes the monthly, Markets and Prices which gives market conditions and prices of more than 200 commodities for Karachi and other important centres all over the country

The Co-operation and Marketing Department also brings out a quarterly journal called the "Co-operation and Marketing Review", which deals with problems relating to the rural economy of Pakistan Arrangements for a monthly Review on various commodities from Radio Pakistan are in hand

The Department also issues brochures dealing with the marketing of certain groups of commodities. One such publication is 'Livestock Wealth of Pakistan' which has already been issued Brochures on 'Agricultural Crops', 'Horticultural Crops' and 'Co-operatives' are in hand

The results of the surveys mentioned above have shown that the present marketing methods leave much to be desired The share of the producer in the price paid by the ultimate consumer is rather low due to a number of reasons, such as, unregulated market, lack of standard weights and measures, inefficient and expensive means of transport and defective storage and containers

Action has been taken in certain provinces to regulate markets under provincial legislation. The regulated markets are looked after by Market Committees in which the producers are in a majority. Market charges have been fixed, market functionaries have been licensed and the markets are looked after by a competent staff. Legislation for standardisation of weights and measures has also been enacted in certain provinces.

QUALITY CONTROL

Pakistan, essentially an agricultural country, has to ensure quality control in respect of agricultural and animal husbandry products, especially those which are exported Measures have therefore been adopted to fix quality grades and standards in the case of certain commodities under Pakmark Pakmark is a Government mark which guarantees the purity of a product bearing this name, according to standard specifications laid down by the Co-operative and Marketing Adviser

Two schemes for the grading of ghee (clarified butter-fat) and eggs are already in operation Another scheme for the grading of cotton-seed under Pakmark is being operated in Western Pakistan The oil-seed crushing industry of the country have specially welcomed this scheme with a view to procuring regular supplies of clean and uniform qualities of cotton-seed

The Development Board of the Government of Pakistan has recently approved this Department's scheme for the grading of wool for export under Pakmark. Two schemes for improving Pakistan's trade in hides and skins have also been prepared by the Co-operation and Marketing Department One relates to improvement in flaying, curing and storage, and the other to Pakmark grading of hides and skins, intended for exports

The Department also scrutinises various proposals and schemes referred to it by various Ministries and other Government organisations and non-officials It supplies relevant statistical and other information to the Government, international organisations and private individuals In short, the Co-operation and Marketing Department acts both as a 'Clearing House' and 'Information Office' for matters connected with Agricultural Economics of Pakistan

The Department's Central Control Laboratory at Lyallpur, deals with the analysis of ghee, oils, fruit and fruit products

The Department also maintains a Model Ghee Grading Station at Lyallpur This Grading Station assists the local packers of Pakmark ghee in refining and testing ghee for purposes of packing it under the Pakmark seal A number of other laboratories, equipped and run by private individuals (Pakmark ghee packers), are under the charge of the Government Ghee Chemists

In addition to assisting the Pakmark Ghee Grading Scheme and carrying out quality control work connected with the grading of agricultural produce, this laboratory also conducts research on several problems connected with agricultural produce and products

CO-OPERATION

The Centre also maintains an advisory service for co-operation, and it co-ordinates the activities of provincial departments. Pakistan being a country of small producers, it is essential that the people should be approached on a collective basis. The need for assisting the primary producers in the disposal of their crops has been realised for a long time and although a satisfactory solution has evaded so far, it is agreed that in any scheme aimed at improving the lot of small producers, the correct approach is through co-operation Co-operative societies can undertake the disposal of their members' produce in a collective and organised manner and can ensure better financial results. Similarly, the requirements of producers can be met through co-operatives A third form of co-operative has been evolved recently, viz, Co-operative Multi-Purposes Societies which combine the above two types Such societies not only undertake the sale of their members' produce after it has been harvested but also make arrangements for purchasing the commodities and articles required by them both for production and consumption.

After the partition of India the staff of various joint-stock companies and banks in Pakistan which were almost wholly manned by non-Muslims left the country and migrated to India This resulted in a complete dislocation of credit facilities in Pakistan. The private money lenders who were almost wholly non-Muslims also left their ancestral homes thus making the credit conditions in Pakistan still worse The Central Co-operative Bank in the Punjab and N W F P, however, rose to the occasion and with the limited resources and insufficient staff at their disposal, opened branches in various districts and markets and met the credit requirements of the people In East Bengal, however, a new provincial bank had to be organised as the provincial co-operative bank of undivided Bengal was located at Calcutta

The Co-operative movement is being utilised in Pakistan in various directions for many purposes It is believed that the salvation of the small man lies only through co-operatives. For the purpose of putting him on his legs, for educating him in the broader sense of the word education and for organising him and canalising his efforts, it is realised that there is no better media than co-operatives An idea of the extent of the co-operative activities in Pakistan can be formed from the types of societies which are operating at present. Primary Agricultural Credit Societies, Co-operative Farming Societies, Fruit Growers' Societies; Consolidation of Holdings Societies, Anti-Erosion Societies, Co-operative First-Aid Centres; Co-operative Medical Aid & Public Health Societies, Multi-purpose Societies, and Co-operative Commission Shops.

The popularity these societies have gained is very encouraging.

DEVELOPMENT SCHEMES

THE Development Board has so far considered 202 schemes at its 15 meetings held so far, and approved of 105 The estimated cost of these, schemes amounts to Rs 112 crores, nd the relative expenditure is planned to be spread over five years

The following are some of the more important schemes approved by the Development Board — Distribution of improved varieties of seeds in Baluchistan, Mechanical Cultivation Scheme in Baluchistan, Horticultural Scheme in Baluchistan Drainage and Re-excavation Scheme in East Bengal, Power Pumping Irrigation Scheme in East Bengal, Mechanised Cultivation Scheme in East Bengal, Distribution of fertilizers in Sind and East Bengal, Scheme for the improvement of marketing, flaying and curing of hides and skins Scheme for the improvement of wool in the N-W F P, The Karnafulli Multi-purpose Project, Hydro-electric Projects of Mianwali, Rasul and Dargai The Warsak Multi-purpose Project, Extension of Malakand Hydro-electric Scheme, The Thal Development Project, Construction of a Weir at Kurram Garhi in the N-W F P The Anambar Weir Project Development of the Chittagong Port, Development of Roads Development of Tele-communications, Setting up of a Paper Mill, Setting up of a Cotton Mill in East Bengal Development of Woollen Industries in the Frontier regions of the N.-W F P and Baluchistan, Establishment of Bureau of Laboratories, Central Testing Laboratory, Central Drugs Laboratory, Pakistan Animal Husbandry Research Institute, etc

HYDRO-ELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT

These schemes cover a wide range of subjects, but topmost priority is given to schemes designed to increase the availability of electric power at all points where it is required for the optimum development of agriculture industry, commerce and communications The total generating capacity of Pakistan at its inception was 40,000 odd kilowatts The major portion of this power was generated by old and inefficient diesel and steam stations, which had been in continuous operation for several years without repair and overhaul due to the ever-increasing demand for power and non-availability of spare parts during the war As regards hydel energy, in spite of the unlimited possibilities of developing water power, Pakistan inherited only two small hydel power houses, generating about 10,000 kW in all The Punjab, which was largely dependent on hydro-electric power generated at Joginder-nagar in India was threatened with stoppage of supply The situation was further aggravated when several electric supply companies ceased working because of the communal upheavals of the time

As an initial step towards improving the power supply position under these circumstances, Government directed their attention to the condition of the existing thermal stations and their rehabilitation, and in order to assist the Central Engineering Authority in dealing with the many complex technical problems, appointed Messrs Rendel & Vatten (Pakistan), M R V (P), a combine of three firms of Consulting Engineers of international repute, namely Messrs Merz & McLellan of London, Messrs Rendel Palmer & Tritton, also of London, and Messrs. Vatten-byggnadsbyrans of Stockholm, Sweden, as their Consulting Engineers A few of the salient points brought out by the survey made by M R V (P) are given below —

The total installed capacity of different power stations in Pakistan (excluding small sets which certain units of industries are using for their own purpose) is 69,074 kW, which is distributed as follows —Diesel, 24,450 kW, Steam, 32,868 kW., Gas, 56 kW, Hydel, 10,700 kW.

In 1948, the average number of units generated per month was 1,13,53,300 kW H In 1949 the average monthly output was 1,45,71,473 kW H, indicating an increase of 3,218 473kW H, i e, approximately 20 per cent in the average number of units generated per month.

An overall plan is under preparation, and will take about another six months, but authorities are going ahead with measures to relieve power shortage, by the improvement of existing and the construction of new hydro-electric and thermal stations at different places. All the existing and projected stations, and others that will follow in their wake, will form part of an all-embracing plan and will be linked up with each other enabling the transmission or flow of electric power from one end of the country to the other, to be tapped wherever it is needed These inter-linking wires carried by high towers or pylons are technically known as "grids".

In terms of improvements expected in the near future in respect of increased power supply in the Provinces of Pakistan, it is hoped that by the end of the current year, the total output of hydro-electric power will be doubled By the end of 1951, or in early 1952, when the Rasul Project comes into operation, it will be quadrupled, the country's generating capacity having risen to 42,000 kW The Dargai Hydro-electric Project is expected to be completed by the end of 1952 adding another 15,000 kW raising the total output to 57,000 kW The Warsak Project in the N.-W F P and the Karnafulli Project in the Chittagong region are still at the investigation stage, but at Warsak these investigations have advanced sufficiently to enable construction to start during 1950 winter Both the projects are expected to be completed by 1956-57

In anticipation of the preparation of an overall Master Plan already mentioned Government have sanctioned the following Hydro-electric Schemes which will be co-ordinated with the long-term plans

Malakand (N.-W.F.P.) :—It has already been stated that the installed capacity of the Malakand Power House which is now 9,000 kW, will be increased to 19,000 kW during 1950

Dargai (N.-W.F.P.) :—This scheme will utilise the water from the tail race of the Malakand Power Station, which makes a further drop of 250 ft, before falling into the Upper Swat Canal, and will have an installed capacity of 20,000 kW Order for machinery has been placed with the Westinghouse Electric Company of the U S A, and the work is expected to be completed in 1953, at an estimated cost of Rs 1 5 crores

Rasul (Punjab) :—This is in fact a pre-Partition Scheme It proposes to utilise a drop of 86 ft between the Upper and Lower Jhelum Canals by the construction of a link channel The Scheme is intended to have an installed capacity of 22,000 kW, and is expected to be completed by the end of 1951

Mianwali (Punjab) :—Stage I of this Scheme has been approved by the Central Government. During this stage, the scheme will have an installed capacity of 21,000 kW, rising to a total of 70,000 kW in its final stage when its cost will be Rs 4 5 crores It is hoped that Stage I of this Scheme will be completed in 1952

Schemes Under Investigations

The Consulting Engineers are engaged in preparing a detailed Project Report on the Karnafulli Hydro-electric and Flood Control Project in East Pakistan It is estimated that the hydel station will have an installed capacity of 40,000 kW, the Project will also mitigate to a very large extent the ravages caused by floods in the Chittagong region Nearly 60,000 acres of land will be brought under cultivation besides making inland navigation possible for approximately 100 miles from Chittagong In conjunction with the hydel station, the Consulting Engineers have been asked to prepare a Project for a 20,000 kW. thermal station at Chittagong as a stand-by to ensure a firm supply It is expected that work on the Scheme will be completed in three years from the date of its commencement

The Warsak Dam Project in the N.-W.F.P. is again a multi-purpose project, and envisages the construction of a dam on the Kabul River in the N.-W F P The hydel station will have a capacity of 1,25,000 kW and will help not only in the rapid industrialisation of the country but also in the electrification of railways, local buses and trolley traffic The Project is expected to promote fish-culture on a large scale and bring under irrigation 65,000 acres of land in the Peshawar District and the adjoining Tribal Areas It will also make the Kabul River navigable between the N-W F P and Afghanistan, cutting out the circuitous Khyber Pass route The Project is estimated to cost approximately Rs 10 crores and will take six years to complete The Consulting Engineers to Government are now preparing a detailed report, and drilling operations to test the foundation rocks are in active progress

A few somewhat small canal hydel schemes under consideration in Sind are —(i) Rohri Canal Hydel Scheme, 9,000 kW, (ii) Eastern Nara Canal, 7,500 kW, (iii) Yusuf Dhri Hydel on Rohri Canal, 5,000 kW, (iv) Kumb Luma Hydel on Rohri Canal, 2,000 kW

These, however, are still only in an embryonic stage as also a scheme for a fair sized hydel station in conjunction with the Lower Sind Barrage which is being worked out by the Central Engineering Authority

From the above it will be observed that within the next six to seven years, about 3 lakh kW of the water power potential of five to six million kW will have been harnessed in the service of the country (For more details see 'Power Resources')

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT

The proposed expenditure on industrial development is relatively low, but it may be mentioned here that the development of industries in Pakistan is aimed largely through private enterprise, and as such, the allocation under this head is meant only for such measures by Government as may aid industrial development In the case of industries for which large capital investment is required, and there is little response from private enterprise, the Government of Pakistan will enter the field. To enable Government to do so the Pakistan Industrial Development Act has been passed Under this Act, Government is establishing a Corporation responsible for the setting up of industries like paper, fertilizers, jute manufacture, heavy chemicals and heavy engineering Government will also subject all development schemes to a very careful examination not only by their own experts and officers but also by foreign experts of international repute

As noted above, the total expenditure to be incurred by the Government of Pakistan during the next five years on the 105 development schemes approved by the Development Board so far, will be in the neighbourhood of Rs. 112 crores This amount, however, does not include expenditure on those schemes which can be met by Provincial Governments out of their own resources (as for example expenditure on the Lower Sind Barrage, which has so far been met by the Sind Government) Similarly, expenditure that is being incurred by the Centre on schemes which are regarded as part of normal departmental activities of the various Ministries is not included in this figure of Rs 112 crores.

Agricultural Development.—The Central Government has made outright grants to the tune of Rs 1 crore (Rs 10 million) to the Provincial Governments for agricultural development during the year 1949-50 The allocation of this direct grant among the various Provinces is as follows —

Punjab, Rs 25,00,000; East Bengal, Rs 32,00,000; N.-W F P., Rs. 15,00,000, Sind, Rs. 25,00,000, Total, Rs. 97,00,000; Balance, Rs. 3,00,000.

It has also been estimated that when all the irrigation and agricultural schemes so far approved by the Board have been implemented, irrigation facilities will be provided for 36 5 lakh acres The increased irrigation facilities and the agricultural improvements planned will yield additional 10 5 lakh tons of crops per annum of which 8 5 lakh tons will be foodgrains and 2 lakh tons other crops. Of these East Bengal's share will be 3 lakh tons per annum composed of 2 lakh tons foodgrains and 1 lakh tons other crops These figures do not include the additional area in which irrigation facilities will be provided by the Lower Sind Barrage, which is estimated to be 28 lakh acres and an additional yield of 2 lakh tons of crops per annum

TRANSPORT

Although a comprehensive road development programme of Pakistan has not yet been prepared, it is estimated that as a result of the schemes which have so far been approved by the Board, 3,500 additional miles of road will be constructed in the course of the next five years

Special attention is being paid to the development of the Port of Chittagong Its capacity to handle cargo, which was of the order of 5 to 6 lakh tons per annum at the time of Partition, will ultimately increase to over 30 lakh tons per annum

Special attention is also being paid to the tele-communication system of Pakistan for the purpose of linking together not only the two parts of Pakistan but also for linking each of these two parts with the rest of the world It is proposed to spend over Rs 8 crores on the development of this system in the course of the next five years

The Development Board has so far been busy with the examination of schemes put forth by the Provincial Governments and the Ministries of the Central Government in compliance with its directive mentioned above The second phase of planning consists of formulating a plan of national development spreading over a period of ten years This will be a comprehensive plan integrating schemes pertaining to all spheres of the economic life of the country

IRRIGATION

WESTERN Pakistan is one of the most intensively irrigated areas in the world Irrigation is made possible by the rivers Sutlej, Ravi, Chenab and Jhelum, which rise in the Himalayas and flow southwards, dividing the great Punjab plain until they join the Indus in its two-thousand-mile journey to the sea The water supply is perennial as it comes from the glaciers of the Himalayas

The preliminary surveys in Western Pakistan have often been carried out under extremely adverse conditions The scorching heat, the constant illness of the staff and the labourers made progress slow and difficult On the frontier the working parties had to be guarded from hostile tribesmen, who however later turned into peaceful cultivators The difficulty of getting fuel to make bricks and lime often hindered construction

After the failure of canal projects depending on private enterprise, Government decided in 1866 to take over irrigation construction The Lower Swat Canal was begun in 1876 with the object of inducing the tribesmen to settle down and become peaceful farmers In 20 years the treeless and uninhabited country became a vast expanse of cultivation dotted with villages, the canal irrigating a total area about 160,000 acres

The canals between the Jhelum and the Sutlej led to extensive colonisation and settlement Though the greater portion of the region had a yearly rainfall of less than 10 inches, the soil was good Colonists were encouraged to occupy irrigated land, and so successful was the experiment that the Government obtained large revenues from the project

The Lower Chenab Canal of 1890 commanding an area of over 3 million acres, is one of the world's great irrigation works The area was mapped out in squares of 27,25 or 16 acres, each square with its separate inlet of water The squares were subdivided into one-acre fields by the cultivators, and grouped in villages of 1,500 and 2,000 acres Peasants were offered land on a square basis, yeomen four to five and the monied upto 500 Each colonist was given land for two or three years, if at the end of that period the settler was satisfactory he was given a permanent right of occupancy and the rights became hereditary Only the purchasing landholder had full proprietary rights The settlers were rewarded by an excellent crop, and thousands applied for land

In the Jhelum and Bari colonies, the railways were built even before colonisation, and towns were laid out In ten years the population increased from 8,000 to 800,000.

The Triple Canals Project is also a remarkable piece of engineering A large area to the west of the Sutlej—the Bari Doab—needed irrigation The Chenab and Ravi had no water to spare and the Sutlej water was required to irrigate the territory on its own banks The engineers in charge proposed to take the water from the Jhelum, the most westerly of the four Indus tributaries, and bring it by canal to the Chenab and turn it into the Lower Chenab Canal The water from the Chenab, which was now not required for its own canal was tapped higher up by a second great canal and the Chenab waters, conducted through another desert waste, which incidentally benefited en route, were taken in a level crossing over the third river, the Ravi, to irrigate the Lower Bari Doab region The great scheme was completed between 1912 and 1915 It consisted of 433 miles of main canals, the total area commanded being 3,997,000 acres, or 6,250 square miles

Till then the irrigation of Sind had received comparatively little attention, and the great Indus itself remained almost untapped The design for a barrage at Sukkur and preparation of the canal projects were finalised in 1919-1920 This project is perhaps the most spectacular yet attempted in Western Pakistan, comprising as it does a mile-long barrage across the Indus and seven large canals, four at one end of the great dam and three at the other It is the largest irrigation work of its kind in the world The following figures give some idea of the immense scope of the project and the planning and labour involved in its construction The canal system irrigates an area of nearly six million acres, equal to one-quarter of the area of England, or about one-fifth of the total irrigated area of Pakistan, which is 30 million acres

The largest of the Sukkur canals, the Eastern Nara and the Rohri, are 226 and 208 miles long respectively The total discharge of the seven canals is 46,617 cusecs The cost of the barrage and canal-head regulators was Rs 4 04 crores, about £ 3 millions The maximum number of the workers working on the project at any time was 60,000, the excavation being divided between manual labour and dredgers.

Work on the site started in 1923 Townships had to be built on both banks, with hundreds of living quarters, hospitals, shops and recreation centres Twelve miles of metalled roads were laid, and 40 miles of track to connect Sukkur with the broad guage railway Cut-stone for the barrage was obtained from a quarry at Rohri, over about three miles of narrow guage rail The immense amount of stores and machinery necessary for this gigantic project had all to be assembled The barrage fleet numbered four steam tugs, four motor-launches, and forty 100-ton barges.

Work on the barrage itself started in 1926, and the whole scheme was formally opened by the Viceroy on the 13th January 1932

A solid construction on sand foundations across the wide, deep waters was accomplished by using "cofferdams" Steel piles were driven into the river-bed projecting well above the flood-water level, like the sides of a huge box, these were supported on the inside by a rampart of sand dredged from the river, and the water was pumped from the hollow enclosure The piers were built on a stone flooring And the piles were removed on completion.

The foundations of the barrage were run out in two cofferdams from either side of the river, and one in midstream enabled the piers to be completed On the piers were built two tiers of connecting arches, the lower tier carrying a roadway Under each arch was fitted a gate of steel plate to be raised or lowered, the gates of both tiers being used in conjuction to control the flow of water

The area irrigated by the barrage, nearly 6 million acres of land with an average rainfall of two to three inches, produces annually over a million tons of rice and millet, and about ninety thousand tons of cotton The barrage changed the desert into the "granary of the East."

Recently some cracks were noticed in the facing stones of aschlary masonry of nine piers of the Sukkur Barrage The Sind Government after a close and thorough inspection of the Barrage and examination of seven different reports submitted by various Pakistani and foreign experts, adopted a Rs 54,000-scheme proposed by the Chief Engineer of Sind

The repairs of the cracks were immediately taken in hand and the work completed soon after

Pakistan has a total area of 200 million acres out of which 155 million is still uncultivated and 170 million unirrigated. Two multi-purpose hydro-electric schemes are under way, one at Warsak in the North-West Frontier Province and the other at Rasul in the West Punjab. These will provide power for Pakistan's industrial expansion programme and water for irrigation.

NEW PROJECTS

The biggest development scheme in agriculture is the Lower Sind Barrage This scheme will be ready in the year 1959 and the area that will come under cultivation, after the completion of this scheme, will be 2 70 million acres As soon as the Barrage starts working, enough foodgrain will be produced not only for supply to East Bengal and other deficit areas, but also for export.

The other major scheme is the Thal Project in the Punjab, which is already under construction There is also the Rasul Tube-well project.

With regard to the North-West Frontier Province a number of schemes have already obtained the sanction of the Centre, one of which the Khashmi Lift Irrigation scheme, for instance, will bring under cultivation, 10 to 12 thousand acres of land Under the Lift Irrigation for Muqam Nullah about 2,000 acres of new land will be brought under cultivation A third scheme which is sanctioned is the irrigation tube wells in Qasba Begram.

Other schemes include the extension of Mama Khel Jadid canal, the remodelling of Takharwat distributary in the N W F P and the Rod Kohi Irrigation scheme, the last of which will bring 6,187 acres under cultivation All these schemes have been sanctioned by the Centre and the Provincial Government can have the money for putting the schemes into execution These schemes have all been approved by the Development Board and by the Ministries of Agriculture and Finance.

About the vast undeveloped area of Baluchistan, which is directly under the administration of the Central Government, it is clear from budget statements that about 30 to 40 Lakhs will be spent on development schemes Three irrigational schemes, bringing large areas of uncultivated and barren land under cultivation have been sanctioned and will be financed by the Centre In addition to that, nine other schemes costing about 30 lakhs have been sanctioned by the Centre and these will also be put into execution soon

A new era of well-irrigation is being planned The Government of Pakistan invited Sir William Stampe, former Chief Engineer of the United Provinces, India, to explore the possibilities of tube-well irrigation A large number of tube-wells are being manufactured in the Tube-well Workshops in Lahore for irrigation purposes in Lyallpur, Jhang, Sheikhupura and Sargodha Districts under the Ravi River system. The electrical power for these wells will be provided by the Rasul Hydro-Electric Works

The Irrigation Research Institute in Lahore started 25 years ago as a modest laboratory to investigate problems in certain aspects of irrigation engineering, is now generally recognised as one of the leading research institutes in the East Work on future irrigation projects and on those now under construction will be greatly facilitated by the work now being done at the Institute as identical conditions can be reproduced by means of models in the Institute, thus avoiding the costly delays caused by faults in the actual construction.

MINES AND MINERALS

ACCORDING to the expert opinion of Dr. E. R. Gee, who helped to establish the Geological Survey of Pakistan, there are mineral resources sufficient in Western Pakistan to enable the Government to industrialise the State to an appreciable degree. Geologically speaking, Pakistan is very young, having been under the Tethys sea for long epochs before its birth The age of the land is hardly 100 million years, while the earth is more than 1,000 million years old.

Limestones, sandstones, clays, calcium, sodium and potassium salts and gypsum are found in abundance in almost all the provinces of Pakistan While there are Tertiary coal and petroliferous shales in several parts, there are quantities of glass sands, sulphur, alluvial gold, iron ore and mica in restricted areas.

Some intrusions of the ultra-basic type took place in the Mesozoic and Tertiary ages as a result of igneous activity in the mountains of the North-Western Frontier Province and the Baluchistan plateau Rare minerals like chromite are thus found in numerous veins.

SALTS

The Khewra mines in the Punjab Salt Range, with hundreds of feet of thick seams of rock salt, are very remarkable The floors, the ceilings and walls are of solid translucent salt, a light torch is reflected from a myriad points About 200,000 tons of pure rock salt are extracted annually from the Khewra and Kohat salt mines.

Very rich potassium salts, which can be used as agricultural fertilizers and in other chemical industries, are intercalated with this salt in the Salt Range in some horizons.

Huge deposits of common salt are located in Tharparkar District (Sind), the beds in some cases, being six feet thick It is believed that these deposits alone would serve the entire population of Pakistan for over 2,000 years Common salt is also manufactured by solar evaporation of brine at Mauripur (near Karachi) Large quantities of this commodity are exported to East and West Bengal About 50,000,000 maunds of salt are produced annually at the Mauripur works.

Over a dozen mineral springs in fractured anticlines of Tertiary rocks in Kohistan, Laki (near Kotri) and Mangho Pir (near Karachi) have medicinal properties and can be developed into first class spas.

Some valuable natron-producing lakes (Kharo chanlho) are also found in Sind, Khairpur State and in the East Nara valley Two to three thousand tons of soda and other sodium salts are extracted every year and exported to Arabia, Bombay and Aden. Kharo chanlho can also be used in making light biscuits, washing clothes, hardening treacle and manufacturing soap and tobacco products.

Another precious possession of Pakistan is gypsum, which is embedded in Tertiary rocks, associated with shales and clays The deposits of gypsum are widespread throughout Western Pakistan in accessible areas and in very large quantities Gypsum which can be useful in the manufacture of calcium salts, plaster of Paris, plasterboards and wall boards, is yet to be worked on a commercial basis Selenite which is a crystal is also available in certain parts of the country.

Glass sand is found in large quantities in Jungshahi (Sind), the Trans-Indus Salt Range, Mianwali and Basharat (the Punjab) and Paniala (N.-W F.P). Glass industry of the modern type was first established in the subcontinent in 1892 in Jhelum, the Punjab One of the chief components in the manufacture of glass and of sodium silicate is silica sand, which is found in abundance in the soft sandstones of Tertiary age. According to Dr. Crookshanks, Director of Archæology, Government of Pakistan, there are about 230,000 tons of silica sand, which with normal exploitation should last about 20 years.

Pakistan has the second largest deposit of high-grade chromite in the world Chromite, associated with serpentine, was discovered in segregated masses of ultra-basic intrusions along the hills, bordering the Zhob valley, and in the Upper Pishin Valley in Baluchistan About two miles east of Khanzai, a mass of pure chromite, 400 feet in length and five feet in breadth, has also been discovered More important than this is a deposit, in the same Zhob valley at Hindubagh with nearly 50 per cent chromium oxide Chromite has also been discovered recently in the N-W F P, on the Dattakhel road in North Waziristan and in Chitral State There is some possibility of finding the ore also in Kalat State.

The mineral is essential for making ferrochromium and other special steels required for projectiles, gun-lining, armour plates, high-speed tools, springs It can also be used for manufacturing refractory bricks for furnaces, pigments and leather tanning The average annual production of chromite during the last decade was nearly 12,000 tons, but lately the output has fallen So far a little over 500,000 tons of chromite have been extracted from the time the mines started functioning

IRON AND COAL

There appear to be substantial deposits of coal below 250 feet in Baluchistan and the Punjab The coal was of sufficiently good quality to raise steam and generate electricity, which, in conjunction with Pakistan's hydro-electric schemes ought to provide motive power for a rapid industrialisation of the country Tertiary coal has been mined from the Dandot coalfield in the Punjab Salt Range for many decades Some of the rocks are of Jurassic age, and the coal is poor in carbon contents A small amount of lignitic coal occurs a mile east of Mira Kawand in the Spi Toi (South Waziristan) and beyond Pir Karal, a hill to the north-west of Kaniguram There are traces of Tertiary coal in Chittagong (East Pakistan) as well The main source of Pakistan's annual production of about 500,000 tons of coal is from the Salt Range (the Punjab), Khost (Baluchistan) and the Sind Kohistan mines. The Pakistan Government is setting up two briquetting plants of 20-25 tons capacity, one for the Punjab and the other for Baluchistan for briquet slack coal

Owing to the devaluation crisis coal deliveries from India were suspended for sometime Pakistan used to get 170,000 tons of coal a month from India, and the stoppage of supplies from this source resulted in a great deal of hardship in the country Pakistan, however, succeeded in finding alternative sources of supply particularly in South Africa, England, France and Poland. An offer of coal from the Chinese Peoples' Government proved abortive on account of transport difficulties

There are iron deposits in the valley of the Panj-Kora river, specially in the Barawl and in the Laspur Jandawal Hills, and also among the Hills south-east of Bannu in the N-W F P Brown hæmatité of low grade is found in the limestone and sandstone beds in some parts of Sind Kohistan At Tatta (about 70 miles west of Karachi) smelting operations were carried on in the past, and swords and other weapons were manufactured Iron ore is also found in association with lead ore in igneous and metamorphic rocks in the Baluchistan region

It is estimated that there are about 200,000 tons of sulphur located in Koh-i Sultan, at Sanni in Kalat State, and in the Chitral State, and Mardan in the N.-W.F P Between 1941 and 1944 nearly 66,300 tons of sulphur ore were extracted and transported from Koh-i-Sultan, which was one of the main sources of supply for the sub-continent during the Second World War Sulphur is also found in the alluvium in the Khairpur and Jacobabad areas and in the neighbourhood of hot springs like the Laki Spring.

An Association of Industrialists has been formed to exploit the sulphur resources of Pakistan, and as a first step the industrialists have decided to instal a pilot-plant to refine sulphur on a semi-commercial scale

Cores of excellent flint nodules are found in the Nummulitic limestones beds, as for instance, near Sukkur and Rohri (Sind) There are also remains near Aror Flint pieces are found in alluvial deposits from Jurassic rocks.

Copper was worked near Mohenjo-Daro (Sind), nearly 5,000 years ago Today copper ore of good quality is found in Mohmand (tribal area country) in Loral Pass (Chitral), North Waziristan, and in the Ras Koh Range in West Baluchistan.

Alluvial gold is secured from the gravels of old terraces in the higher reaches of the Punjab rivers, particularly in the Indus, and in the gravels in the Attock, Mardan, Hazara, Jhelum and Khyber Agency.

Antimony is only found in irregular veins in slates and gneisses in the Chitral State (N-W F P) and Sakrand (Kalat State).

Granite, limestone, marble and slate occur in Sind, the Punjab, and the N.-W F P. Portions of the Lushai and Chittagong Hills in East Bengal also yield good limestone and associated minerals Marble of good quality is found at Maneri in the Swabi Tehsil, Mardan District, Shahimina and Kanbela Khwar.

Good road metal is available throughout Western Pakistan in a large number of open limestone and other quarries worked by the inhabitants for centuries The best use for the Tertiary limestone found in Sylhet, Salt Range and Sind is in the manufacture of cement, which can be exported to foreign countries There are cement factories at Karachi, Sukkur, Dandot, Wah and Sylhet

Fireclay deposits are found in Paniala in the Dera Ismail Khan (N-W F P) to the extent of 15,000 tons Orchre is found in Gaj deposits of Sind Coloured clays are also found in Laki range in Sind

Arsenic in orpiment and realgar deposits occur in Chitral State in Tirich valley.

Lead of galena deposits is available in the Chaghai District of Baluchistan Cerussite or lead carbonate which is found in limestone breccia and is associated with antimony occurs in Sakran (Kalat State) Jamesonite deposits are found in Chitral (N.-W F P) and Hazara Districts, while native lead is also available. There is large scope for oil exploration in Western Pakistan Petroleum rocks which are mostly Nummulitic of Eocene and Miocene ages, can also yield precious oil These extend from the Indus valley across the Salt Range and Sulelman-Kirthar Ranges to the plateau of Baluchistan The Assam belt in Eastern Pakistan and the Lushai Hills in East Bengal, also have petroleum deposits Government asked in the course of the year certain U.S businessmen to help in the development of the oil resources of the Pathaiia forest area.

The Punjab wells have so far yielded about 15 million gallons of petroleum annually There is also an oil refinery established at Rawalpindi

"PAKISTAN would welcome foreign capital seeking investment with a purely industrial and economic objective and not claiming any special privileges," said a statement on industrial Policy issued by the Government of Pakistan on April 1, 1948—the blueprint of Pakistan's industrial development.

The statement ranged over the whole field of the country's economy, dealing with aims, and objectives, the role of the Centre and the provinces in industrial planning and development, the relation of state to industry, state-owned and operated industries, assistance to industry, establishment of industrial trading estates, tariffs, taxation and participation of foreign capital.

Government announced that the following 27 industries would be subject to Central Planning Arms and ammunitions of war, Cement and Cement products, Edible Oil, hydrogenated or otherwise, Electrical communications and broadcasting equipment, Electricity including hydro-electric power, Electrical equipment, appliances and goods; Glass and Ceramics, Heavy chemicals, Iron and Steel, Machine tools, precision tools, guages and workshop equipment, Manufactures of heavy engineering industry, Minerals including salt and coal, Non-ferrous metals and alloy manufactures; Paper, cardboard and pulp, Petroleum and mineral oils, Pharmaceuticals, drugs and light chemicals, Power and industrial alcohol, Preserved and prepared foods; Products of Carbonisation industry, Rubber manufactures, Scientific and mathematical instruments, Sea fish and its products, Ships, barges, river boats and lighters; Sugar, Tanned leather and leather goods, Textiles—cotton, woollen, jute, silk and rayon, and Tobacco.

The Government of Pakistan believes in planned economy as distinguished from the nationalization of industry

In 1949 September a body called the Pakistan Council of Industries was inaugurated It was a further step towards the promotion of industries in the country. The Council consists of the representatives of the Central and Provincial Governments, States and private enterprises and advises the Central Government on all vital matters concerning industries At its first meeting it approved of the targets fixed by the various Advisory Committees

There are today, as many as seven such Advisory committees dealing with the groups of Industries like Heavy Engineering, Ship Building and Ship Repairing, Light Engineering, Chemical and Leather, Glass and Ceramics and Food These Committees have done quite valuable work in spite of the various matters coming before them and as an implementation of their recommendations for developing Pakistan's industrial structure, Government have recently started a regular campaign—"Patronize Pakistan's products"—to popularize the industrial products of the country The hand loom industry and other industries depending chiefly on cotton and wool yarn already occupy a predominant position and have a fairly wide market within Pakistan The Ant-War and Craft Wave, it is hoped, will find an easy market with the foreign connoisseur

The most striking feature of Pakistan's present economy is the marked contrast between its vast natural resources and its extreme industrial backwardness For instance, the country produces nearly 75 per cent of the world's production of jute but does not possess a single jute mill. There is an annual production of over 15 lakh bales of good quality cotton but there are very few textile mills in the country There is also an abundant production of raw material such as hides and skins, wool, sugarcane and tobacco, while the country's considerable resources in minerals petroleum and power also remain as yet untapped.

The aims and objects of the Industrial policy of the State were defined as follows "... Free play will be given to private enterprise and individual initiative subject to certain conditions ."

"In view of the predominantly rural economy of Pakistan, initial emphasis must perforce rest upon the reconstruction and development of agriculture and of industries based upon or connected with it; and on the promotion of medium, small and cottage industries But the development of large-scale industries essential to the security of the state or its general prosperity will also receive the utmost attention and encouragement."

The statement added "Pakistan would therefore seek, in the first place, to manufacture in its own territories the products of its raw materials, in particular jute, cotton, hides and skins, etc for which there is an assured market, whether at home or abroad"

Important legislation in connection with the planning of industries was passed in December 1948 and March 1949 The December legislation placed the entire control of mines and mineral development in the hands of the Central Government The March legislation provided the planning of the 27 industries enumerated above to be under Federal control

To enable the Centre to perform the responsibilities taken upon itself by this legislation the Government of Pakistan set up a Development Board to co-ordinate development plans, Central and provincial, so that the available resources are put to the best possible use, to make recommendations regarding priorities among development plans, and to keep a watch on the progress of development schemes in order to remove bottle-necks and difficulties in the way of uniform progress in all fields.

Industrial Panels and Committees were also established by the Central and Provincial Governments

Regarding assistance to Industry, the Government of Pakistan have made it absolutely clear that their role in industrial development will not be merely negative On the positive side the Government would give all reasonable help for the establishment and development of private industry Pakistan's considerable resources of minerals and mineral oil will be surveyed and energetically exploited. Schemes for development of the country's power resources are being worked out and their implementation will be given the highest priority Plans for the improvement of the important ports of Chittagong and Karachi are in hand and steps are being taken to gear the transport services to the maximum efficiency.

The Government passed the Industrial Finance Corporation Act in December 1948 and a Corporation has since been set up with a capital of Rs 3 crores This corporation has been giving loans for development of cottage industries and other small industries This loan would be repayable in instalments along with a nominal interest.

The Corporation has also been providing implements and other machines on hire purchase to small investors

FOREIGN CAPITAL

Regarding foreign capital, the Government made it clear that they would welcome such capital seeking investment from a purely industrial and economic objective and not claiming any special privileges. Participation of nationals of Pakistan must however be ensured, both in the administrative and technical services manning the industry, and training facilities should be provided to Pakistan nationals by concerns that wish to establish themselves in Pakistan. Where trading facilities rather than establishment of an industry are desired by foreign firms, subsidiaries should be registered in Pakistan. Government consider that in the national interest, nationals of Pakistan should ordinarily be given the option to subscribe at least 51 per cent of all classes of share capital in the following industries —1 Cement, 2. Coal; 3. Cotton spinning and weaving mills; 4 Fish canning and fish oils; 5 Generation of electric power (other than hydro-electric), 6 Glass and Ceramics; 7. Heavy chemicals and dye-stuff, 8 Minerals; 9. Preserved and prepared foods, 10. Power alcohol, 11 Shipbuilding, 12 Sugar and 13 Tanning and leather

With regard to other industries, an opportunity should normally be given to Pakistan Nationals to subscribe at least thirty per cent of all classes of share capital and debentures But if in either case Government are satisfied that the required amount of indigenous capital is not forthcoming the balance might with their approval be subscribed by foreign nationals.

Clarifications of these principles were sought and late in 1948 the Government gave an assurance that the minimal percentage of indigenous capital did not apply to existing units nor to any transfer of an established business nor to foreign companies which start subsidiaries in Pakistan and engage solely in trading activities and not industry If however a trading company established in Pakistan wishes to expand its activities and undertake industrial production, the appropriate association of indigenous capital in the additional issue will be required

Private limited companies would be on the same footing as public companies in regard to participation of indigenous capital

The Government also made it clear that there was no intention to place any restrictions on the remittance of "reasonable proportion of profits" The only restrictions, said the Government, on the remittance of such profits would be those of general application arising from foreign exchange limitations and policy to which such remittances are subject everywhere.

The Government in a statement issued at the time said: "Cases have come to notice where direction and control which would naturally accrue to Pakistanis from their share in the capital of a business is diverted by a managing agency agreement which secures control to the foreign element in the business If the object of such control is the maintenance of the quality of a product and of the standards of raw materials, Government would be prepared to condone this diversion and to let the managing agencies work to the primary objective of creating Pakistani administrative and executive control of the industry during the next ten years."

COTTON

The Indus valley has been the home of cotton cultivation from time immemorial The recent excavations at Mohenjo Daro in the Larkhana District of Sind have brought to light among the relics of prehistoric civilisation a small piece of fabric and a length of string which have been conclusively proved to be made of cotton Other evidence showing that cotton was grown in the Indus valley in ancient times are the Babylonian and Greek words for cotton, Sindhu and Sindon

The total exports of cotton from the Pakistan areas (in undivided India) including cotton received by the Indian mills, amounted to 1,540 thousand bales, which is 15 per cent of all cotton entering the international market. Indian mills absorbed over a million bales of 478 lbs. each, over two-thirds of Pakistan's total cotton exports. The annual production is about 1,200,000 bales of 400 lbs each. The total area under crop is about 3,091,000 acres

Export of cotton to countries other than India from August 1947 to July 1948 totalled Rs. 320 millions

The cotton grown in Pakistan may be classified into two broad groups: Desi (indigenous) and the American varieties. The American varieties occupy the bulk of the cotton area of Pakistan (about 80 per cent) and have found favour with the West Pakistan farmer on account of their better yield per acre and higher prices Due to their superior spinning qualities and longer staple lengths, these varieties are greatly in demand in the textile industries of the world for manufacturing cloth of finer counts.

The trade has however classified the American varieties of Western Pakistan cotton into the following three groups:

1. 4 F, where F stands for Foreign. This has a standard staple length of not less than 3/4 inches and its highest standard warp count is 24

2. L.S S where the initials stand for Labh Singh's Selection This is a selection from 4 F made by Sardar Labh Singh, Deputy Director of Agriculture, Lyalpur in 1928 It has a standard staple length of 27/32 inches and its highest standard warp count is 40 The chief defect of this variety is its late maturing quality which is a drawback from the water supply aspect and which also renders it liable to damage by early frost.

3 289 F N T, where the initials stand for "Foreign New Type" This group comprises American varieties with staple lengths of not less than 7/8 inches The actual staple lengths of the various varieties included in this group extend to over one inch During the pre-war period 4 F occupied the bulk of cotton area under American varieties During the war period, however, 289 FNT came to the forefront and covered over half the area under American varieties This change which was stimulated by war time conditions has come to stay during the post-war period 4F now covers a little over one-tenth of the area under American varieties and the balance is covered by 289 FNT and LSS.

There are a number of cotton research stations in Sind and West Punjab Lyalpur Central station originally conducted all research work but sub-stations were later opened at Multan, Khanewal and Jhang In Sind research stations at Mirpurkhas and Sakrand are doing useful research work in connection with the selection, breeding and expansion of improved varieties A Pakistan Central Cotton Committee has now been established to carry on the direction and control of all such research work.

There is no cotton textile industry in Pakistan worthy of the huge quantities of excellent cotton grown in the country. At the time of partition there were 14 textile mills, with 4,874 looms and 184,616 spindles. Nine of these were in East Bengal, four in West Punjab and one in Sind.

The total productive capacity of these units in terms of cloth output, on the basis of shifts of 8 hours per day, comes to 103 5 million yards as against Pakistan's normal requirements of about 675 million yards per annum.

In order to meet the country's ever increasing demand for cloth Government have decided to permit the establishment of textile mills with a total capacity of one million spindles in the first five years, and 1½ million spindles in the next five years. Machinery for immediate development is being procured from various countries, notably the United Kingdom, United States of America and lately from Japan Three new textile mills, one each at Karachi, Rahim Yar Khan (Bahawalpur state), and Lyallpur (Punjab) have already started working and four others are likely to go into production by the end of 1950.

In East Bengal the Provincial Government have a proposal to set up a big mill of 50,000 spindles.

Cotton ginning and pressing factories account for about one-fourth of the total industrial employment in the country In 1949 there were 322 factories in Pakistan, 244 of which were in the Punjab All raw cotton is exported after being ginned and pressed into bales The gross weight of a Pakistani bale is 400 lbs, about 392 lbs. net after allowing for the weight of hessian wrapping and iron hoops The dimensions of a bale are about 48 inches by 18 inches with a density of 45 lbs per cubic foot, compared with the U S 35 lbs and the Egyptian 23 lbs.

An important provision of the Factories Act is that the owner must put a distinct mark and serial number on every bale. Thus any importer in any land can bring to book the owner of a ginning and pressing factory even six months after the purchase if it is proved that a bale contains a mixture of a variety inferior to what it purports to be

JUTE

Jute is one of the most important commercial fibres grown in the world today In bulk its annual production ranks second only to that of cotton The province of East Bengal, in Pakistan, accounts for about 80 per cent of the total world production, although the acreage under Jute is only 8 to 10 per cent of the cultivated area The exports of raw jute constitute about 75 per cent of the total value of Pakistan's exports, and this extremely valuable crop is obtained only from a fraction of cultivated land

The total production is about 7 million bales a year worth Rs 1,100 million

Jute is extracted from plants of the genus Corchorus The plant is an annual, growing in a single stem, without branches or twigs until it reaches maturity It consists of a woody stick surrounded by a bast layer in which the fibre is developed. It grows to an average height of 8 to 10 feet, the yield varying according to the District, soil, river and weather conditions and seed employed An average crop produces about 1,300 lbs of fibre per acre but yields as high as 2,500 lbs have been recorded.

There are various qualities with different trade-names, the variation in quality usually being attributed to the district in which the jute is grown or the method by which the jute fibre is extracted

Sowing commences in February in low-lying lands and on the highlands as late as May. Capsularis, the white jute, varies in colour from white to dark grey, largely depending on the water in which the plants are soaked It is grown on both high and low lands, sown early and harvested from June to September The Oletorius fibre is of a finer texture, stronger than white jute and varies in colour from golden yellow to slaty brown, also being influenced by the water, it is mainly a highland crop, sown later than white jute and harvested in August and September

The flowering time of the plant is considered best for yield, though earlier cuttings may give finer qualities. After cutting the plants are tied up in bundles and left for about three or four days to allow the leaves to drop off. The bundles are then submerged in water and allowed to remain for ten days to three weeks. This process called "retting" results in the fermentation of the sift pith of the plant, which dissolves and leaves the fibre, which can then be easily separated from the stick. The fibre is then washed, dried, and made ready for sale and transport

Pakistan produces nearly 80 per cent of the world's jute but has a 100 per cent monopoly of the really fine varieties of the fibre, grown largely in the Districts of Mymensingh, Dacca, Commilla, Faridpur, Pabna, Bogra and part of Rangpur. Mymensingh grows about 25 per cent of the total crop.

Jute is a regulated crop and the acreage is controlled by Government.

While Pakistan has a virtual monopoly of jute production, India has almost all the jute mills which are concentrated round Calcutta. The Calcutta mills are naturally the largest importers and consumers of raw jute from Pakistan, requiring a minimum of 4,500,000 bales a year.

The United Kingdom imports form 20 to 25 per cent of the quantity exported from Pakistan. The manufacturers of Dundee produce a wide range of fabrics, yarns, twine and specialised lines for export such as hessian and sacking, tarpaulins, carpet, backing, linoleum cloth, rugs, upholstery, foundations, buckram, etc For these Dundee requires superior qualities of jute grown in East Bengal only About 80 per cent of the total exports of raw jute from Chittagong goes to the U.K

Between 20 and 25 per cent goes to the U S A

Belgium is Pakistan's third best consumer of raw jute This country imports about 15 per cent of Chittagong's export closely followed by Italy which imports about 15 per cent. Another country which imports jute from Chittagong is France It accounts for about 10 per cent of Chittagong's exports. Brazil, Argentina, Australia, Poland, Czechoslovakia and the Scandinavian countries are among other importers of jute

A pucca bale normally weighs 400 to 410 lbs. and is packed by hydraulic presses to a density of 10½ cubic feet A kutcha bale is loosely packed by hand or steam presses and ranges in weight from 120 to 320 lbs, the 280 lbs bale being the most common The carrying capacity of a meter-guage railway wagon is 50 standard pukka bales and 30 to 40 kutcha bales. The Government of Pakistan has made arrangements for the import of baling presses and it is hoped that eventually the uneconomical kutcha bales will be eliminated from the export trade.

But with all this abundance of raw jute there is no jute manufacturing industry in East Bengal Government are encouraging private enterprise to establish jute mills Three private parties have come forward to set up three small units in East Pakistan It is expected that these mills will begin functioning in the near future producing hessian cloth and gunny bags, both of which are in great demand. But on the whole the response from private industrialists for setting up of jute mills has not been encouraging, specially in the matter of setting up large jute mills Government have therefore decided to establish initially five jute mills each of 1,000 looms The first is expected to be working by the middle of 1951, the second by 1952, and the third in 1953

WOOL INDUSTRY

Next to Jute and Cotton, the most important fibre in Pakistan is wool Pakistan produces 26 5 million pounds of wool per year and imports through its land frontiers another 8 3 million pounds There are thus 35 million pounds of the fibre available for the development of a large-scale woollen industry in the country The wool is of eight main varieties, namely Harnai, Bibrik, Baluchi, Kharani, Taraki, Shanwari, Khandhari and Regi The Harnai and Bibrik species have an international reputation and fetch good prices in the Liverpool auctions. Pakistan wool is used in the manufacture of tweeds, rugs, carpets and blankets. Twelve million pounds of wool is required for use by the local cottage industry for the manufacture of rough blankets and carpets With the partition, all centres of organised woollen industry went to the Indian Union, and Pakistan was left entirely dependent on imports for her requirements of woollen and worsted goods. Pakistan has at present only one worsted mill (with 2,000 worsted spindles and necessary weaving capacity) A woollen mill with 4,000 spindles has recently started production at Karachi. It is however, decided to instal some 24,000 woollen and 20,000 worsted spindles in the country by 1954-55 It is also proposed to open finishing centres—each centre comprising 2 sets of raising and finishing machinery.

Woollen spinneries are also being designed to produce woollen yarn, blankets, carpets, coarser, tweeds, rugs and flannels at various centres in Baluchistan and the North-West Frontier Province A portion of the yarn produced by these spinneries will be distributed to the Training-cum-Production centres in Baluchistan

SPORTS GOODS

For three quarters of a century, the name of Sialkot has been synonymous with sports goods Champions have wielded its rackets on the Centre Court at Wimbledon while its hockey sticks have brought fame to teams from undivided India.

A special kind of wood and superior tanned leather are two essential materials required for the manufacture of sports goods, and both are available in abundance in Pakistan White and yellow mulberry wood, which is used in the manufacture of about 80 per cent of tennis rackets, badminton rackets and hockey sticks comes from the N -W F P , and the States of Dir, Swat and Chitral and is found nowhere else in the whole sub-continent Sialkot draws all its supplies of essential wood from these areas The skilled labour of the city has always been predominantly Muslim and remained in Sialkot after partition.

The U K leads the list of importers of Sialkot sports goods with over 39 per cent of the total export from Pakistan Australia comes second with over 9 per cent U S A. comes next with about 8 per cent India is a close fourth Among sports goods, cricket bats are the ones which are most in demand

The total annual production of buffalo hides, cow hides, goat skins and sheep skins is 8 lakhs, 4 5 million, 5 3 million and 2 million respectively There are a number of tanneries in the country There are also a number of factories which manufacture footwear with power machinery Additional tanning and leather goods factories are being established with Government aid

SURGICAL INSTRUMENTS

At a critical stage in the Second World War, when surgical instruments were unobtainable elsewhere, Sialkot came to the rescue and made a notable contribution to the Allied war effort, saving many thousands of lives The surgical instruments manufactured at Sialkot have been widely approved for the design, the fineness of the material and their general soundness Experienced workmen possessing great skill are employed in the factories and every instrument is manufactured under expert supervision

The value of the annual output of surgical instruments at Sialkot during the pre war period has been estimated at about Rs 4,00,000, during the war years it exceeded Rs 35,00,000 With the termination of the war there has been an inevitable decline in production but it remains higher than the pre-war level Pakistan's main customers are the Indian Union, Middle-Eastern countries, East Africa and Burma Many other countries also import smaller quantities.

HEAVY CHEMICALS

Three sulphuric acid plants, two of 10-ton capacity and one of 20-ton capacity will soon be operating, the last in the Punjab In addition there are two small units manufacturing sulphuric acid by the Chamber process—one at Rawalpindi and the other at Sukkur, the first with a capacity of 300 tons per annum and the other with 30 tons per annum

The factory producing soda ash at Khewra which closed down due to the migration of the technical staff after partition and the non-availability of coal, iron and steel required for repairs and the maintenance of the factory, has re-started production since December 1948 and is producing light soda ash at the rate of about 20,000 tons per annum. The production of soda ash (heavy) will also be started at this factory shortly It has further been decided to instal a 10-ton a day capacity plant for the production of caustic soda and chlorine by the electrolytic process. A small unit with a capacity of 5 tons a month will shortly start producing chlorine for the needs of the Federal capital's water-supply system

For the manufacture of fertilizers, it has been decided to set up an ammonium sulphate plant in Western Pakistan with an annual production capacity of about 100,000 tons To work out details of the scheme, two teams of experts one from the Power Gas Corporation of England and the other from the Union Chemique Belge of Brussels, Belgium, were invited to carry out the necessary survey Both teams have completed their survey and have gone back to their countries where they are preparing their final survey reports

PHARMACEUTICALS

Pakistan is rich in some of the herbs required by the pharmaceutical industry It has also substantial quantities of alcohol from molasses for conversion into tinctures like iodine, etc.

The Government have sanctioned the establishment of a Bureau of Laboratories which is already preparing vaccines and will soon start manufacturing Sera A factory at Quetta manufactures Ephedrine Hydrochloride, etc Another for the manufacture of Santonin is being shortly installed

Pakistan wants private enterprise to establish five self-contained pharmaceuticals and drugs manufacturing concerns in the country—three in West Pakistan and two in East—within the next two years These units will meet the internal requirements of Pakistan so far as tinctures and chemicals are concerned Proposals to establish one such unit are already under scrutiny Others are in the process of formulation

GLASS

The glass industry in the sub-continent was initially started in 1892 at Jhelum (Pakistan) Pakistan's annual requirements are estimated at 21,000 tons of glassware and 7 million tons of sheet glass Production capacity is about 3,000 tons of glassware per annum There are three factories working in Western Pakistan and two in Eastern Pakistan which are mainly producing containers, pressed and blown table wares Two units are being erected in West as well as East Pakistan to produce all kinds of glassware like jars, tumblers, dishes, bowls, etc One of these units is located at Chittagong in East Pakistan and is awaiting the supply of power to start production for which arrangements have now been completed The capacity of this factory will be about 7 tons a day The other glass manufacturing plant is to be located at Karachi with a capacity of 20 tons a day for which the machinery has already arrived and the construction of the factory is in progress The plant will include a tube drawing machine and equipment to make lamp shells which are being imported at present from abroad It is also intended to instal a sheet glass factory using the Fourcalt process which will meet part of Pakistan's requirements

PAPER, SUGAR

Papers worth Rs 30 millions is imported annually into Pakistan With a view to meeting the growing demand for newspapers in the country an up-to-date paper factory with a capacity of producing 100 tons of paper per day is being established in East Pakistan. The factory will be located somewhere in the Chittagong Hill Tracts and is estimated to cost about Rs 5 crores. Kuptaimuk has been suggested as a suitable site The mill is expected to go into production by the end of 1952.

Two industries, sugar and power alcohol from molasses which is a by-product of the sugar industry, are in the course of establishment. A 50,000 ton modern sugar factory—the biggest in Asia—is being set up at Mardan in North-West Frontier Province where it is also intended to instal a distillery for the manufacture of power alcohol with a capacity of 10,000 L.P. gallons per day

Permission has also been granted to another sugar mill in the N -W.F P. to instal a distillery of a capacity of 1,100 gallons per day. Another power alcohol plant is being established in East Bengal

At present there are two factories—one at Rawalpindi and the other in East-Bengal —producing industrial alcohol and liquors on a commercial scale There are two other small distilleries, at Kotri in Sind and Quetta in Baluchistan

The most recent achievement on the food industrial front comprise the establishment of two factories—one at Karachi and the other at Hyderabad (Sind) for hydrogenation of edible oil with a capacity of 3,000 tons each To these factories which are expected to render the country self-sufficient in its requirement of 'Vanaspati' cooking medium, will be attached plants for refining the cotton seed oil to be used in the manufacture of Vanaspati

Soap is mostly produced on a cottage-industry scale in Pakistan There are 812 big and small factories and the country is self-sufficient in washing soap A toilet soap manufacturing plant has been installed in Karachi while two more (one in Karachi, one in Bahawalpur) are being installed

Most of the engineering industries that existed at the time of partition were closed when the labour engaged on it, migrated to India The majority of the industries are once again operating up to their previous capacity level

A firm which was previously manufacturing electric lamps of the general service type of certain sizes, is now manufacturing train lighting lamps and higher voltage lamps of the general service type Two more firms are manufacturing battery plates for lead acid accumulator cells

HEAVY INDUSTRY

Besides, industries like steel melting, re-melting and re-rolling, manufacture of hurricane lanterns from brass, complete storage batteries, electric accessories from plastics and fabrication of C I pipes are under planning. One of the existing fan manufacturers hopes to produce very shortly both table and pedestal type of electric fans

For the development of ship-building and ship repairing, a conference of the Industrial Advisory Committee was held on June 25, 1949, in Karachi Three sub-committees were appointed to examine the possibility of immediate provision of a floating dock till such time as a dry dock is constructed , fixation of industrial targets for the next five years and preparation of a scheme for training technical supervisory staff in Pakistan and abroad and also devising ways and means to ensure regular supplies of raw materials

For the exploitation of mines and minerals a team of geologists are investigating the mineral resources of Pakistan Schemes for scientific exploitation of the country's resources are being worked out.

Pakistan has large mineral and ore deposits but its present output of coal is insufficient to meet its requirement Indigenous production from the existing resources is about 300,000 to 400,000 tons per annum. Though of an inferior quality it can be used in specially designed engines for manufacturing briquettes

In the opinion of an expert agency Messrs. Powell Duffryn Technical Services Ltd., London, there are large deposits of coal below 250 feet in the Punjab and Baluchistan.

Production of coal from the Sharigh Mines, Baluchistan, is being stepped up The scheme involves an expenditure of about Rs 7 lakhs including the purchase of certain mining stores and means of transport

In addition to the existing briquetting plant at Quetta it is proposed to instal two additional plants—one in the Punjab and the other in

Baluchistan In the Quetta plant imported coal-tar pitch is being used as binding material The possibility of using indigenous bitumen produced by the Attock Oil Company is being investigated.

Lignite (brown coal) has been discovered in East Bengal It is reported that it is scattered over an area of 170 square miles in Mymensingh and at Habibgunj (Sylhet) Coal in both places is expected to be useful for house-hold consumption as well as for stationary boilers in industries Further survey is in progress

Among the active explorers of Pakistan's mineral resources are the Burmah Oil Co (Pakistan Concessions) Ltd and the Attock Oil Co , Ltd A considerable amount of geophysical prospecting has been done by the Burmah Oil Co in many parts of the country Test wells are in the process of drilling, by the A O C and the B O C in the Potwar region in the Punjab The B O C test operations at Lakhra in Sind have since been abandoned as it proved to be a failure Prospecting stopped when a depth of about 12,000 feet was reached

Pakistan is rich in salt It produces some of the purest rock salt in the world and has also some excellent sea salt It is also rich in gypsum, nitrates and potash Chromite of high quality (the second longest deposits in the world) antimony, copper, lead and sulphur are also found. Glass sands are also available It is round these minerals that Pakistan expects to build its chemical industries

For cement there are four factories at present in West Pakistan with a total annual production of 5,00,000 tons, while in East Pakistan, there is one factory with a production capacity of 75,000 tons per annum

The Associated Cement Companies are expanding their Wah Works so as to produce an additional 10,000 tons of cement The production of the cement factory in East Pakistan is being doubled and for this purpose the Government recently advanced a loan of Rs 8 lakhs to the Assam Bengal Cement Company

West Pakistan is surplus in cement and is exporting the commodity to countries in the Middle East and India

Efforts are being made to manufacture fine bricks to improve the quality of which bauxite has to be added to the fire clay Arrangements have therefore been made to import bauxite

FRUIT INDUSTRY

The N -W F P is sometimes described as the California of Pakistan while the fruit drinks of the Punjab have as wide a reputation

The total area under fruit cultivation is about 409,500 acres, of which 200,000 acres are in East Bengal, 150,000 acres in the Punjab, 50,000 acres in Sind, 80,000 acres in Baluchistan and 1,500 acres in the N -W F P The estimated annual production is 70,000,000 maunds worth Rs 100,00,00,000 (about £75,000,000) Approximately 40 per cent of the fruit is consumed within Pakistan in fresh condition, 15 to 30 per cent is used in canning and preservation industry and the rest is exported to India and other adjoining countries, either in fresh condition or after drying and processing.

Fruit varies from the world's best bananas of Munshiganj (East Bengal) and the Sylhet Orange to the peaches and plums of N -W F P , the grape fruit of Sind, the grapes, apples, cherries, apricots and muskmelons of Baluchistan, the dates of the Makran coast and of Bhawalpur, the mangoes, lemons, sweet limes and " Malta ' oranges of the Punjab plains and the pears grown as far north as Peshawar.

Pakistan has thus a great variety of fruit and some of it is so cheap that the poorest labourer can afford to buy it.

East Bengal grows 43,565,000 maunds of bananas every year. The N.-W.F.P. has the same latitude, elevation and variations of climate and produces the same varieties of fruit as California Perhaps in some respects the N -W F P is even more advantageously placed than California as it has areas which can produce tropical fruit such as mangoes, bananas, and lichis which are not grown in temperate zones

To raise the standard of fruit preservation, the Government passed the Fruit Products Control Order Under this order no factory can manufacture fruit and vegetable products unless it is licensed and agrees to abide by certain quality standards and sanitary and hygienic requirements in the factory premises as laid down in the order. The Fruit Products Control Order is a check on malpractices and as such has played an important part in making available genuine and wholesome products prepared under sanitary and hygienic conditions At present there are nearly a hundred license holders in the country The check samples are analysed at the Central Control Laboratory at Lyallpur

TEA INDUSTRY

The Sylhet and Chittagong districts of East Bengal are the only two tea producing areas in Pakistan Pakistan has been allotted a standard acreage of 76,700 acres and the export quota as fixed under the International Tea Agreement is 35 million lbs In Pakistan there are at present about 130 gardens and the annual production is estimated to be about 50 million pounds.

The 1949 crop was estimated at 45 million lbs and the carry-over of unsold 1948 crop at 5 million lbs , a total availability of 50 million lbs for sale and clearance between April 1949 and March 1950 The export value of the tea crop was thus of the order of Rs 5,00,00 000 and the trade pays about Rs 1,00,00,000 in direct revenue to the Government.

Pakistan's best tea customer is the United Kingdom, which makes bulk purchases through an agent of the U K Ministry of Food under a contract

To facilitate and encourage industrial development in general the Sind Government have undertaken the construction of three industrial Estates situated at Karachi, Hyderabad (Sind) and Sukkur These Trading Estates aim to provide the services necessary to enable manufacturers to establish their factories with the minimum trouble and delay All sites are leased out on a rental of approximately Rs 750 per acre and leases may be obtained for any period desired up to a maximum of 99 years with options for renewal if necessary

COTTAGE INDUSTRIES

Apart from the regular artisans who invariably form an important part of a village community, the peasantry is often engaged in some suitable cottage industry during the slack season The industry is financed either by professional financiers, who purchase raw materials and supply them to workers or by middlemen advancing loans to artisans who purchase their own materials and sell the products to dealers who are either wholesalers or retailers, or the industry is self-financed and sold direct to consumers.

The main products of cottage industries are footwear, leather goods, leather curios, glue, guts and casings

Hand spinning and weaving as a cottage industry is carried on all over Pakistan especially by women as a part-time occupation In East Bengal women earn their livelihood by spinning and weaving Dacca and Chittagong are the chief centres The Dacca Muslins were world famous at one time The Government have today given a fillip to this industry by establishing a Spinners' Association. Jute spinning and weaving is a valuable cottage industry in East Bengal. A spindle is used for turning the jute fibre into thread. In one day over two lbs can be made into yarn Some families have been engaged in this industry for generations. After spinning the yarn, the men turn it into twine or ropes. A primitive loom is used for making gunny bags. Of late the Government have been trying to popularise modern appliances and demonstration parties have been visiting the people engaged in this industry with a view to training them up in the use of modern methods

The silk industry in East Bengal must also be mentioned " hikan" and "Kasida" are two well known varieties of Dacca silks. "Phulkari" in the Punjab and " Makrani " in Sind are made of silk in multifarious colours The N.-W F P has the " Kohat lungi " as an important cottage industry Patterns are distinctive for each clan or ' Khel " " Chikan doz " of Peshawar and some patterns done on muslin are of exquisite fineness and beauty.

Peshawar is famous for copper-ware done on Persian models Metal work is done all over Pakistan and consists of work in brass, bell metal, copper, iron, gold and silver

The Pathans are extremely clever at metal work One Frontier mechanic has succeeded in producing sewing machines entirely by hand. Rifles and revolvers are made by tribesmen on a cottage industry basis both in the Khyber and the Kohat passes On the artistic side gold and silver work is done in all the provinces of Pakistan At Dacca filigree work is done to perfection What is called the " Bidri-work " of East Bengal consists in inlaying of silver with a kind of copper In the Punjab enamelling is very popular

Woodwork in Pakistan ranges from simple photoframe to up-to date furniture Exquisite carvings on furniture, windows, screens and doorways are met with throughout the Dominion. The standard of carpentry is high and stands comparison with the best in the world

Tanning and leather goods form an important item on Pakistan s cottage industry list Side by side with rough and partial tanning there is high class tanning and chrome leather manufacture. Shoes, slippers, belts, purses, suitcases, portmanteaus, saddles, drums, bellows, etc., are produced Glue making is a side industry of tanneries In the Punjab hides and skins are tanned in small cottage tanneries by indigenous processes

The village potter turning out a pot a minute, as it were, is a familiar figure all over Pakistan The chief raw materials used are clay and sand. They are baked in a kiln which burns any available cheap fuel The primitive potter's wheel is still being used Earthenware cooking vessels, tea cups, pots and pans and " hookah tops ' are found in every village home Easily cleaned and cheaply replaced made by local labour from local raw materials they are well suited for villagers' needs In East Bengal tile and brick-making is an important branch of the potters work So is toy making Baking is done in earthen jars so as to prevent direct contact with the flames

Paper making is a supplementary occupation. Some of those engaged in agriculture during the summer and the rainy season are busy with paper making in the winter The raw material used is waste paper cuttings from book binders, as well as rags, old gunny cloth, fibres, and fishing nets The three popular varieties of paper are document, kite and blotting paper The special feature of such paper is its durability.

Bangles, combs, necklaces, caskets, buttons, paper weights are made from ivory in East Bengal where no less than 80 different tools are used Ivory work is also done at Lahore by means of simple tools such as chisels and knives.

Conch-shell work is done at Dacca Buttons, bracelets, bangles, chains, rings and small images are made out of conch shells

A scheme was worked out in 1949 for the rehabilitation of some of the refugees concentrated in Karachi This was estimated to cost the Government under Rs. 3,00,000 in the form of outright grants and Rs 18,00,000 as loans and advances. Under this scheme it was proposed to establish 34 Industrial Co-operatives to absorb 2,000 families of refugee artisans in as many as 17 different types of Cottage Industries.

LABOUR

LESS than one per cent of the total population of Pakistan is employed in organised industry. According to Government estimates the number of industrial workers in the country is about 700,000 The strength and distribution of labour employed in the various categories can be seen from the table given below :—

Factory Industries Group	200,000
Plantations (Tea) . .	150,000
Railways	150,000
Mercantile Marine	125,000
Docks	15,000
Mines .	7,000
Others .	50,000
Total .	697,000

It is extremely difficult to assess the number of landless agricultural labourers and wage-earners employed in quasi-agricultural home and cottage industries but there is no doubt that it runs into millions The problem of raising the standard of living of Pakistani workers both industrial and agricultural is one which the Government is giving the highest priority.

The principal Central Statutes on the subject of labour are —Railways Act, 1890 , Mines Act, 1923 , Merchant Shipping Act, 1923 , Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923 , Trade Unions Act, 1926 ; Factories Act, 1934 , Dock Labourers' Act, 1934 , Payment of Wages Act, 1936 , Employers Liability Act, 1938 , Employment of Children Act, 1938 , Mines Maternity Benefit Act, 1941 , Industrial Statistics Act, 1942 , Weekly Holidays Act, 1942 , Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act, 1946 , Coal Mines Labour Welfare Fund Act, 1947 , Industrial Disputes Act, 1947.

These are reinforced by fifteen I L Conventions coming from the pre-Partition period, one of which has been implemented since

It should be mentioned that in addition there is a volume of Provincial Legislation in each Province of Pakistan bearing on different aspects of labour, e g , subjects like maternity benefits and shops and commercial establishments This situation results from the fact that labour, as a whole, is in the concurrent field of legislation, confusion being avoided by a certain machinery in the Constitution Act relating to repugnancy The country is a member of the International Labour Organization and subscribes to its aims and objects including the Charter of Labour popularly known as the Philadelphia Charter of 1944 Regular visits are paid to Pakistan by experts from the I L O. and expert advice is thus obtained in regard to many important subjects An I L O. Correspondent is maintained at Karachi.

A Pakistan Labour Conference and a Standing Labour Committee have been established on a permanent basis on a tripartite principle, representation being given to Central and Provincial Governments, the employers and the workers This National Tripartite Conference has adopted a 5-year programme of labour legislation and administrative action, which is being progressively implemented The measures under examination include minimum wage fixing machinery, compulsory recognition of trade unions, revision of most of the existing laws, regulation of labour in plantations and transport services, housing and welfare

TRADE UNIONS

There are at present about 250 trade unions in Pakistan with a total membership of over 100,000 which are registered under the Trade Unions Act, 1926. The settled policy of the Government of Pakistan is that industrial disputes are best settled by collective bargaining, and for this comprehensive provision is made in the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 Certain vital needs of the State made it necessary to amend this Act to prohibit lightning strikes and lock-outs at the ports of Karachi and Chittagong and in the defence services undertakings A Bill is under consideration providing for compulsory recognition of trade unions by employers , this will aid greatly in making collective bargaining universal

The happy relations existing between employers and employed in Pakistan is shown by the fact that there has been very little industrial unrest in the country since the Partition There have been only 72 strikes during 1949, involving 44,582 workers and a loss of 101,723 man-days The wages lost amounted to about Rs 49,237

The work of labour administration in the Central sphere is entrusted to the Central Labour Commissioner. The scope of administration is being widened under the discretionary powers vested by law in Government , for instance, the Payment of Wages Act which provides for prompt payment of wages without unauthorised deductions, originally applicable to railways and factories, has been extended to all mines

The Labour Division of the Ministry of Law and Labour is entrusted with the duties of maintaining the industrial peace of the country, setting up conciliation machinery for State undertaking and other industries in the central sphere of Labour administration and ensuring a free flow of technical personnel for Pakistan's industry and for this purpose a number of technical and vocational training schemes have been put into operation

The Technical Training Scheme which was inherited from undivided India has been converted into a Training-Production Scheme The students under this scheme are given training in manufacturing a limited number of marketable utility articles in a period ranging from one to two years After training a student will be given reasonable facilities in procuring raw materials, sale of finished goods and in solving other practical difficulties, if he desires to establish an independent cottage industry Six training centres have been reorganised in this manner without incurring extra expenditure.

Housing, hours of work, wages, education of workers and their children, recreation, employment of women and children are also problems which engage the attention of this Ministry.

A Chief Inspector of Mines assists the Labour Commissioner in the administration of the Mines Act, Coal Mines Labour Welfare Fund Act and the Mines Maternity Benefit Act Under Coal Mines Labour Welfare Fund Act, a cess is levied for welfare measures including housing for colliery labour A scheme has been finalised under the Act for provision of housing, medical aid and education for the mining labour The Mines Maternity Benefit Act has recently been amended in order to extend the leave period from 8 to 12 weeks bringing the provision of the Act in conformity with the standards laid down by the I L O.

LABOUR WELFARE

For a study of the cost of living trends and collection of labour statistics, there is a Labour Bureau which is collecting retail price figures from 17 urban and 9 rural centres. Family budget enquiries into the cost of living of industrial workers have already been completed for Karachi, Lahore, Sialkot, Khewra and Narayanganj, and it is proposed to conduct two more enquiries at Chittagong and Mardan The cost of living indices for all the 5 places for which the family budget enquiries are complete are being prepared.

Labour Welfare on the Pakistan Railways received special attention during the last two years Each Railway, namely, North Western Railway and the East Bengal Railway, has a Welfare Organisation which is responsible for maintaining unimpaired the standard of welfare and for recommending improvements and extension of various amenities

The measures taken for the welfare of Railway Labour include safety, health and protection measures and the establishment of cheap tea and cooked food canteens Medical aid is rendered by 54 hospitals and dispensaries on the N -W.R and 48 on the E B R These hospitals are equipped specially for attending accidents In some centres X-Ray plants and Mobile Medical Vans are being maintained.

Recreational facilities for staff during the midday break are made available and include the broadcasting of news and music There are also facilities for sports, education and conveyance and other beneficial institutions like co-operative stores and co-operative credit societies A large number of employees are provided with houses but a distinction is made between essential and non-essential staff in this matter

The Seamen's Welfare-Directorate looks after the welfare of seamen belonging to the Merchant Navy both ashore and afloat Port Welfare Committees have been formed at Karachi and Chittagong to make recommendations concerning the welfare of seamen A Merchant Navy Seamen's Welfare Fund Committee has been instituted at the Centre to administer the Fund. Since the majority of Pakistani seamen are employed on foreign ships, welfare officers have been appointed to look after their welfare at New York, London, Liverpool and Glasgow It is proposed to appoint welfare officers also at Sydney and Calcutta A grave difficulty at present being felt by Pakistani seamen is that the shipping companies do not recruit them at ports in Pakistan The whole of this question is being examined

The Resettlement and Employment Organisation was originally set up for resettling ex-servicemen and discharged war workers in civil life That work having been completed its scope has been altered since the Partition. Twenty-two Employment Exchanges are open for purposes of voluntary registration They registered 551,744 applicants upto 28th February, 1950 and were successful in finding jobs for 173,817

The work of these Exchanges has been of supreme importance particularly in the resettlement of refugees from India and Kashmir. With the aid of the Training Schemes, a great number of these refugees have been turned into skilled labourers

There are at present 28 Training Centres in Pakistan with room for over 3,500 trainees per year, and this work is supplemented by an apprenticeship-training scheme To encourage diversion of suitable young persons to the ranks of skilled labour appropriate stipends are also offered.

The applicant is interviewed for the purpose of vocational guidance and posted to a Training Centre in accordance with his aptitude and capability. This is not the final check up as the applicant is again vetted after one month's training in the Centre as a final elimination to ascertain whether he is capable of becoming a skilled artisan, or a change of occupation is desirable. The co-ordination of both these phases eliminates to a large extent failures on completion of the training course, and also assures more accurate statistics of available skilled labour for future use.

FOREIGN TRADE

THE main exports of Pakistan consist of raw jute, cotton, wool, hides and skins, foodgrains, dry fruit, rock, gypsum, salt, potassium nitrate and livestock. Jute, cotton and wool form about, 90 per cent of the exports In jute Pakistan has a virtual monopoly, and in cotton it is number four It also exports about half a million tons of wheat a year The only manufactured goods which are exported in any measurable quantity are sports goods and musical and surgical instruments Pakistan's imports consist mainly of manufactured goods, coal, oil, iron, steel and machinery Most important of the imported goods are cotton textiles, which account for about 50 per cent of total imports Other important articles are sugar, woollen textiles, leather and footwear, paper, cycles, tyres and tubes, chemicals and pharmaceuticals.

India, the U.K and the U S.A. are the principal exporting countries Pakistan has a favourable balance of trade with the rest of the world, but for the most part this has been due to an abnormal fall in imports because non-Muslim businessmen who controlled this trade left the country after partition, and it took time to fill the gap so created.

Pakistan has a favourable trade balance even with the dollar area This explains why when Britain devalued her currency and the rest of the countries in the sterling bloc followed suit, Pakistan let-her currency stay at the old level. This resulted in some hardship as trade with India came to a stop This stoppage lasted about seven months till 1950 April when temporary arrangements were made by which trade was re-started With the rest of the world the Pakistan currency found its normal level and the sea-borne trade continued as before

Jute exports in 1948-49 were of the value of Rs 51,85,00,000 Out of this the worth of the fibre exported to India was Rs 22,08,00,000 During the devaluation crisis when jute exports to India were cut off alternative markets were found in Europe

While the biggest single item of export from East Pakistan is jute, from West Pakistan the biggest single item of export is cotton, especially the long-staple variety In 1949-50 the number of bales exported was 800,363, which fetched as much as Rs. 35,50,00,000 The cotton trade was also affected by devaluation and the exports to India fell to zero The exports to the U K and Russia were also reduced, but new buyers came forward—Japan, Hongkong, Italy, Germany, Thailand and Poland, and it was expected that the new buyers would more than make up for the loss of the old

There was a slight fall in the export of wool In 1948-49 the export figure was 25 71 million pounds, while in 1949-50 the exports amounted to only 23 71 million pounds valued at Rs 3,16,00,000 The principal importing countries were Japan, Canada, Italy, U S A and U K, the last two being the two largest

Pakistan is also a large exporter of tea, about 70 per cent out of a production of 45 million pounds being sent out The exports went up in 1949-50 by 7 million lbs The figures for 1948 and 1949 were 26 3 million pounds and 33 3 million lbs respectively The value of the tea exported in 1949-50 was Rs 4,91,00,000, with the U K as the biggest customer

Hides and skins are an important item on Pakistan's list of exports In 1948-49 the best customers were Spain and India, who bought skins worth Rs 1,89,00,000 and Rs 31,00,000 respectively But in 1949-50 the exports to these countries dwindled to vanishing point There were, however, new buyers like U K, U S A, France, Germany, Sweden, Italy and the Netherlands The total value of the exports was Rs 2,40,00,000

Other exports in the year 1949-50 were

	Rs
Fish	52,00,000
Manures	45,00,000
Cottonseeds	40,00,000
Seeds	10,00,000

	1948-49 Rs (millions)	1949-50 Rs (millions)
U K	148	172
India	216	77
U.S A	88	61
Hongkong	24	58
Japan .	12	58
U S S R	44	45
Germany	31	34
Italy	32	30
Belgium	50	24
Czechoslovakia	17	13

The value of imports from the various countries is

	1948-49 Rs (millions)	1949-50 Rs (millions)
U K.	270	348
India	449	176
U S A	90	120
Japan	10	94
Italy	38	82
China	69	54
Netherlands	13	27

Other countries from which Pakistan imported goods were U S S R, Burma, Czechoslovakia Switzerland, Egypt, Iran, Ceylon

PAKISTAN'S THIRD BUDGET

THE budget estimates for the year 1950-51 reveal an excess of expenditure over revenue to the tune of Rs. 1 90 crores, revenue receipts being estimated at Rs. 113 64 crores and expenditure at Rs 115 64 crores The excess is, however, covered by additional taxation measures and the year would close with a surplus of Rs 10 lakhs

The budgetary position may be summarised as follows —

	(In Lakhs of Rs)
	Budget Estimates 1949-50	Revised Estimates 1949-50	Budget Estimates 1950-51

Defending the non-devaluation policy of the Pakistan Government, the Hon'ble Mr Ghulam Mohammad observed that the most outstanding event of the year, in the economic and financial field, was the devaluation in September, 1949 of the pound sterling followed by the devaluation of a number of other currencies

It was decided that it would be in the best interest of Pakistan not to devalue the Pakistan currency This decision was based entirely on economic considerations and was intended to bring about conditions favourable to the country's development The Minister added that Pakistan was on the threshold of industrial development, necessitating the import of a large volume of machinery and capital goods in future years. This decision would, therefore, enable Pakistan not only to obtain capital goods from the dollar area at the same prices as before but also at relatively cheaper prices from other countries. The decision not to devalue the Pakistan rupee was thus taken on purely economic considerations He made the point that it was the increase in the Indian export duty on hessians from Rs 80 to Rs 350 per ton, and not the price of raw jute in Pakistan, which was preventing the Indian mills from entering the Pakistan market.

Reviewing general economic conditions, Mr. Ghulam Mohammad said that with the emergence of new export import agencies things had begun to improve and the revival of export trade, which was the first to take place, was followed by the expansion of import trade The liberalisation of the import policy also gave considerable fillip to trade and commerce This welcome improvement continued during 1949, when goods worth Rs 103 crores were imported from countries other than India as against Rs 43 crores in 1948

GENERAL IMPROVEMENT

Reviewing the financial position, the Finance Minister observed that a feature of the current year was improvement in revenue receipts to the tune of nearly Rs 4½ crores, mainly under Customs and Railway earnings

On the basis of the existing rates of taxation, revenue receipts during the next financial year were estimated at Rs 75 28 crores against Rs 75 46 crores in the current year Government had decided to spend Rs 50 crores under Revenue and Rs 25 crores under Capital on Defence, while increase in Civil Expenditure would be in the neighbourhood of Rs 4½ crores A considerable portion of this increase would relate to expenditure on nation-building activities

A grant of Rs 10 5 lakhs has been provided for each of the Universities of the Punjab and Dacca for scientific and technical research work A sum of Rs 2 lakhs has been earmarked for setting up a poor house in Karachi Considerable sums have been provided for the Central Jute Committee, the Central Cotton Committee, a Technical High School, a training institute for teachers in Karachi and three training centres under the T B Control Scheme

A provision of Rs 60 lakhs has been made for payment of compensation to the Government of Sind for loss of revenue incurred by them as a result of the separation of Karachi from Sind.

An ad hoc payment of Rs 1 crore has already been made by the Central Government to the Government of Sind on account of assets transfered to the Central Government

Dealing with Defence measures, Mr Ghulam Mohammad said that the year 1949-50 had witnessed a steady consolidation and strengthening of the country's Defences Heavy Defence expenditure had strained Pakistan's financial resources, but, added the Finance Minister, "we would have failed in our elementary duty if we had not given the highest priority to this expenditure"

The Finance Minister expressed satisfaction with the continued progress made by the Pakistan Railways as reflected in the surplus of Rs 3 crores during the current financial year against the anticipated deficit of Rs 82 lakhs He estimated gross traffic receipts for the year 1950-51 at Rs 37 33 crores and working expenses at Rs 33 33 crores, yielding a surplus of Rs 4 crores He referred to the large capital programme for 1951-52 estimated to cost Rs 12 crores including Rs 3 73 crores on the development of Chittagong Port Surveys for laying additional lines on the North-Western and the Eastern Bengal Railways were being conducted It had been decided to purchase 63 metre-gauge and 81 broad-gauge light-weight all-steel coaches of modern design Twenty-three broad-gauge and 39 metre-gauge diesel electric locomotives were also being purchased Provision has been made for the purchase of 1,500 wagons for the E B Railway, primarily for the movement of jute from the interior to the Port of Chittagong Conversion of locomotives from coal to oil-burning had continued, and 366 oil-burning locomotives were now in service Capital programme contemplated substantial expansion of telephone and other services for Karachi, Chittagong, Dacca and other places.

CAPITAL EXPENDITURE

Capital expenditure in the current year was expected to reach a total of Rs. 35·16 crores, while expenditure in 1951-52 was estimated at Rs 41·58 crores including Rs 25 crores for Defence, Rs. 7 crores for Railways, Rs 4 crores for Industrial Development and Rs. 3½ crores for Civil Works. An additional capital expenditure of Rs 5 crores on Railways would be met from the Depreciation Fund On residential accommodation, Government would be spending Rs 2·62 crores in 1949-50 Government had also made substantial advances to their employees to enable them to construct their houses The amount advanced during the current year would be about Rs 35 lakhs, while provision of about Rs 70 lakhs had been made for the next financial year It had also been decided to develop 1,000 acres of land in Nazimabad (Golimar) at a cost of Rs 89 lakhs This would provide some relief to 25,000 homeless families in Karachi It was proposed in addition to construct 3,000 quarters for refugees in a part of this area at an extra cost of Rs 60 lakhs

He claimed that India had not yet paid assets worth Rs 49 crores due to the State Bank of Pakistan in respect of Indian currency notes already retired from circulation in Pakistan and returned to India India had also not yet discharged her liabilities in respect of Pakistan's favourable balance of trade The Finance Minister referred to the establishment of the National Bank of Pakistan, to function as a large commercial bank

Turning to the development programme, the Finance Minister said that Pakistan had to start from scratch and to begin by undertaking surveys of the vast natural resources of the country A broad survey of hydro-electric, mineral and industrial potentialities had nearly been completed and the stage of mere planning had been passed He revealed that in the field of private industry, four new textile mills had started production while another would go into production in a short time. A woollen mill at Karachi had started production, while three others had been planned for different centres Work on the 50,000-ton sugar factory, which would be the largest in Asia, had almost been completed He also mentioned the rapid development of tobacco, tanning and goods industries

He added that Government had decided to set up five jute mills, each of 1,000 looms, the first of which would go into production in 1951, the second in 1953 and the third in 1958 It had also been decided to set up a paper mill in East Bengal at a total cost of Rs 5 crores Survey work on the establishment of the fertiliser industry had been completed In this connection, the Finance Minister pointed out that the Development Board set up for co-ordinating the various schemes and assigning priorities had already approved 105 schemes costing about Rs 112 crores over a period of 5 years These figures were exclusive of the schemes of the Railway Department and such other schemes as may be financed by the Provincial Governments from their own resources Notable among the provincial schemes were the multi-purpose Thal Project of the Punjab, the hydro-electric and land reclamation schemes of the N-W F P and East Bengal and the Lower Lloyed Barrage Scheme of Sind A sum of Rs 8 crores had been provided for advancing loans to provinces to execute their respective development schemes

To provide further stimulus to the industrial development of the country, the Finance Minister revealed that Government propose to establish an Industrial Development Corporation He emphasised that the policy of the Pakistan Government had always been to afford the fullest opportunities to private enterprise to develop industries While private enterprise had come forward in some measure to develop certain industries, it had not shown the requisite enthusiasm for other industries requiring substantially large investment and technical skill.

FRESH TAXATION

Fresh taxation, which is expected to yield an additional net revenue of about Rs. 2 crores, includes the imposition of an estate duty under the Estate Duty Act from April which by itself will yield about 20 lakhs.

The rates vary from 6 to 30 per cent over estates ranging between Rs. 1 and 20 lakhs, and 35 per cent over estates exceeding Rs. 20 lakhs in value.

The maximum Super Tax rate for assesses other than companies has been reduced to nine annas from ten and a half annas

The minimum level for super tax has been raised from rupees one lakh sixty thousand to two lakhs fifty thousand.

The differential rates of super tax for earned and unearned incomes and capital gains tax have been abolished The business profits tax continues at the old rates for another year The rate of super tax on companies has been increased from two annas to four annas but, by a system of rebates, companies declaring dividends in Pakistan will pay only two annas in the rupee Companies which have not made effective arrangements for declaration of dividends or deduction tax in Pakistan will pay four annas super tax, if they are private companies, and three annas if they are public companies

There has been an increase in the taxation on luxury goods while relief has been provided for the common man and reduction in taxation has been effected on articles in short supply in Pakistan and on materials used in the country's industries

The luxury goods which have come in for increased taxation include alcohols, fans, motor cycles, costlier cigarettes, cosmetics and silk fabrics

Duties on Drinks

The import duty on beer, cider and certain other varieties of drinks has been raised from Rs 1-5 to Rs 1-8 per gallon while the duty on spirits like brandy and whisky has been raised from Rs 67-5 to Rs 75-8

Costlier brands of cigarettes will be taxed at a rate of Rs 18-12 per pound instead of the existing Rs 15-10

Confectionary including cakes, biscuits and tinned foodstuffs including jams, pickles will be taxed to the tune of seventy-five per cent instead of the existing sixty per cent and forty-five per cent instead of the existing thirty per cent respectively

The duty on motor cars costing Rs 7,500 or less has been raised from 42 to 48 per cent while the duty on motor spirit has been raised from Rs 1-2 to Rs 1-4 per gallon

It is, however, estimated that the retail prices of the goods which have come in for additional taxation will continue to be lower than the price levels which prevailed prior to the devaluation by certain countries of their currencies

The duty on kerosene oil has been restored to its old level of four annas per gallon Even after this increase a bottle of kerosene oil will cost one pice less than it used to in the pre-devaluation days

Goods in Short Supply

Taxation on goods which are either in short supply in Pakistan or are used to feed the country's industries is reduced The existing import duty of 42 per cent on mustard oil and of 30 per cent on jute manufactures has been abolished altogether.

The import duty on linseed oil has been reduced. Reduction has also been made in the case of import duty on pig iron On the other hand, the import duty on tea and betel-nuts has been increased to protect Pakistan's own products

To afford relief to the common man the Sales Tax on the supplies of fresh meat and fish has been abolished.

The Sales Tax payable by exporters of cement will be returned to the exporter even in cases when the exporter may not be the manufacturer

In the case of hides and skins, the tax at the stage of sale to the exporters has been exempted Hides and skins are now assessable for Sales Tax only at the stage of sale to the tanner

The import duty on silk fabrics has been raised from 40 per cent to 60 per cent or from six annas to eight annas per pound, whichever is greater

Sums paid by way of donations to the Quaid-e-Azam Memorial Fund on and after April 1, 1950 have been exempted partially from the payment of income tax The exemption will apply to both income tax and super tax except in the case of a company where it will apply to income tax and the extent of the tax remitted will be restricted to half the amount of the donation

The charges on book parcels have also come in for reduction Upto now book parcels were charged at a rate of one anna for the first five tolas and six pies for every subsequent two and a half tolas From now on every subsequent two and a half tolas will be charged at the rate of three pies

REFUGEES AND REHABILITATION

IN the third year of its existence, Pakistan was still struggling to rehabilitate millions of refugees who had come to seek shelter after the partition of the sub-continent Every 5th person in Western Pakistan would be a refugee, which is a fair index of the dimensions of the refugee problem It was hoped that in 1949-50 the influx of refugees would abate and the Government of Pakistan, would be able to concentrate its efforts on the stupendous task of the rehabilitation of 7,500,000 refugees who had already arrived in Pakistan, but refugees began to pour into Pakistan once again in large numbers towards the end of 1949

The major portion of the burden of rehabilitation fell on the Punjab, as this Province received 1,600,000 more refugees than the non-Muslim evacuees who had left for India The Punjab has, in a large measure, succeeded in absorbing most of these refugees and is ahead of all the other Provinces of West Pakistan in planning their systematic resettlement In the Punjab a detailed survey of abandoned evacuee property, both rural and urban has been completed and a scheme for the rehabilitation of refugees on land has been finalised These operations involving the examination of the claims of millions of landholders naturally took a long time

The urban refugees too are being rapidly absorbed in the economic life of the province

Towards the end of 1948 it was realised that there was a surplus population of refugees in the Punjab who could not be allowed to stay in the Province without jeopardising its economic life A decision was, therefore, taken to move them to Sind where there was more room for their rehabilitation As a census of refugees taken in Sind in May, 1948 revealed only 234,554 refugees had arrived in the Province while a much larger number of non-Muslim evacuees had migrated from Sind to India It was accordingly decided to move nearly two lakhs of surplus refugees from the Punjab to Sind

REHABILITATION STAFF

Both the Central and Provincial Governments have made strenuous efforts to resettle the refugees in the rural and urban areas A Deputy Rehabilitation Commissioner, Additional Mukhtiarkars and Special Revenue Staff had to be employed to cope with this work The Central Government set up the Directorate of Movements and Quartering (Refugees) which rendered the necessary assistance to accelerate rehabilitation Each district was supervised by an Assistant Director, assisted by several Welfare Officers, who worked hard to check and revise the allotments and to give physical possession of land to the refugees The staff received full co-operation from the district officials with the result that a large number of refugees were resettled on land and started cultivation with the aid of taccavi loans advanced by the Provincial Government

Another agency established by the Central Government to help in the rehabilitation work was the Sind Field Publicity Unit The members of this Unit constantly moved from one place to another throughout the length and breadth of the Province to maintain discipline among the refugees and sustain their morale, and to help them in overcoming their difficulties They were a link between the refugees and Authority as well as the local population A fortnightly journal Nai Zindagi was also published by the Central Government for the benefit of refugees and local Sindhis in two separate Urdu and Sindhi editions The object of the publication was to educate the refugees in the new way of life they were to lead in this Province, and to help the local people in understanding the ways of their new neighbours This journal was supplied free to the masses in Sind and was very popular among all classes

Karachi, the capital of the Federation, had a meagre population of 300,000 before partition, but now more than 1,200,000 people live in this town, most of whom are refugees Thousands of refugees in Karachi are taking shelter in buildings which formerly belonged to educational institutions and a vast number is living in huts constructed on open plots and on both sides of the crowded thoroughfares Efforts are being made to provide better accommodation to these unsheltered refugees

With a view to minimizing the pressure on the city, a new colony has been established at a short distance from Karachi where residential accommodation will be provided to poor refugees This colony has been named "NAZIMABAD", after the name of the Governor-General of Pakistan Another area of 500 acres is being developed near the site of the proposed Federal capital for housing refugees

Rehabilitation work in Bahawalpur State has also been in full swing The State authorities have undertaken many fruitful schemes to rehabilitate refugees The most outstanding of these is the extension of the State's canal system and the creation of new colonies in the area thus developed The pressure of refugees on the N-W F P and Baluchistan has not been severe and it is proposed to divert the surplus refugee population from congested areas to these provinces

Upto the end of 1949, the number of refugees who arrived in Eastern Pakistan was not large Most of them had come from Bihar and West Bengal, but the problem suddenly took a serious turn in February 1950, when no less than 1,000,000 refugees crossed the border as the result of large scale disturbances The Central and Provincial Government have maintained large camps where the refugees are provided with free food, clothing and shelter East Bengal has the highest density of population in Pakistan and there is hardly any room for the settlement of agriculturist refugees in the Province The Provincial Government has appointed a Relief Commissioner who has drawn up plans for the rehabilitation of refugees in towns and villages of East Bengal

In February 1950 a fresh influx of refugees also started into Sind via Jodhpur Early in March 1950, refugees were arriving in Western Pakistan at the rate of about 1,500 to 2,000 persons per day, and the tempo of the influx further increased to an alarming extent Early in April, refugees were reaching Pakistan at the rate of three to four thousand persons per day It was not easy to plan their rehabilitation when the influx was so heavy and continuous specially when the resettlement of those refugees who had come earlier yet needed considerable effort A Reception Camp at Pithoro, 60 miles inside the border, was opened where about 1,000 refugees could be accommodated at a time, but soon it was found that the Camp had to take about 10,000 refugees Special trains, with the the co-operation of the rail authorities were run to disperse the refugees who were mostly artisans or unskilled labourers to the various towns of Sind Feeding arrangements for refugees were also made at Khokhropar At Pithoro they were fed by the Central Government and arrangements were made by the Provincial Government to feed destitute refugees at reception centres opened in the towns until they were properly rehabilitated The Pakistan Medical Association rendered valuable medical aid to the refugees at Pithoro Camp and took preventive measures to meet the danger of outbreak of cholera and smallpox With the kind co-operation of UNICEF, powdered milk was supplied to children as well as infirm adults who needed nourishment badly It is estimated that up to the end of May 1950 more than 230,000 refugees crossed the border to take shelter in Sind and Karachi Some of the artisan refugees were rehabilitated by establishing industries on a co-operative basis, and more industries are being established In this connection the Refugee Rehabilitation Finance Corporation took the lead by organising various co-operative societies and rendering financial aid to many refugees. A great deal of work, however, still remains to be done

EAST BENGAL PROVINCE

EAST Bengal, as a province of the Dominion of Pakistan, was constituted under the Indian Independence Act, 1947. It comprises the eastern territories of the partitioned province of Bengal and the former Assamese district of Sylhet, with the exception of certain thanas in the Karimganj sub-division The area of East Bengal is 54,091 sq. miles, and the total population 41,949,710 Out of this 29,481,099 are Muslims, 11,736,026 are Hindus 56,882 are Christians and 1,197 Sikhs. Owing to recent movements of population these figures are subject to alteration The density of the population is 776

The capital of the Province is Dacca and its chief port Chittagong. The language spoken is Bengali

The principal crops are rice and jute The province is rich in raw material but industries are not developed.

The districts included in the province of East Bengal are as follows :—

(1) Dacca Division : the districts of Dacca, Mymensingh, Faridpur and Bakarganj; (2) Chittagong Division : the districts of Chittagong, Tipperah, Noakhali, Chittagong Hill Tracts and Sylhet; (3) Rajshahi Division : the districts of Rajshahi, Dinajpur, Rangpur, Bogra, Pabna, Kushtia, Jessore and Khulna

The districts with their sub-divisions are as follows :—

Rajshahi (Sadar, Nongaon, Natore and Nawabganj); Dinajpur (Sadar and Thakurgaon), Rangpur (Sadar, Kurigram, Gaibanda and Nilphamari); Bogra (Sadar), Pabna (Sadar and Sirajganj), Kushtia (Sadar, Chuadanga and Meherpur); Jessore (Sadar, Jhenidah, Magura and Narail); Khulna (Sadar, Satkhira and Bagerhat), Chittagong (Sadar, Cox's Bazar), Tipperah (Sadar, Brahmanbaria and Chandpur), Noakhali (Sadar and Feni); Chittagong Hill Tracts (Rangamati, Ramgarh and Bandarban), Sylhet (North Sylhet, South Sylhet, Habiganj and Sunamganj); Dacca (Sadar, Manikganj, Narayanganj and Munshiganj), Mymensingh (Sadar, Tangail, Netrokona, Kishoreganj and Jamalpur), Faridpur (Sadar, Goalundo, Madaripur and Gopalganj); Bakarganj (Sadar, Patuakhali, Bhola and Pirojpur)

East Bengal is deficit in cereals. The normal annual production of cereals (excluding seed requirements) is 6 41 million tons and consumption, at 14.8 oz. per diem per capita, 6 57 million tons. The province is subject to frequent floods which damage the crops and increase the deficit. Since the establishment of Pakistan the deficit is being made good mainly by imports by sea from Western Pakistan In order to procure and hold a large stock of rice which can be distributed equitably and at moderate prices, the provincial Government have been trying in addition to optional sale, an experiment of compulsory levy under which people owning 10 acres or more of rice growing land are asked to surrender to Government 75% of their surplus produce after meeting their requirements for food, seed and wages and rent in kind. East Bengal is also deficit in some other essential commodities, such as edible oils, sugar and textiles. Its 4 sugar factories produce annually 25,000 tons of sugar which is about half of its requirements. Its 6 textile mills produce 30,000 bales of cloth annually while it requires about 250,000 bales.

The last 24 months have been spent mostly in drawing up plans, holding surveys, collecting data and statistics and similar other preliminary activities

Four new taxation measures have been passed The Stamps (East Bengal Amendment) Bill, 1950 seeks to increase the present rate of stamp duties by about 50 per cent, the Bengal Amusements Tax (East Bengal Amendment) Bill 1950 proposes to raise existing entertainment tax; the Bengal Agricultural Income-tax (East Bengal Amendment) Bill 1950 provides for levy of super tax on agricultural incomes on a graduated scale the exemption limit being up to Rs 25,000; the Court of Fees (East Bengal Amendment) Bill 1950 provides for the enhancement of court fees by about 50 per cent.

FOOD

Although 80 per cent of the total area of East Bengal is under cultivation, the province is as already mentioned a deficit area so far as food is concerned This is due to the fact that the yield per acre is very small. As against 71 mds per acre in Spain, 34 mds. in Egypt, 42 mds in Japan, only 12¼ mds. is the average yield per acre in East Bengal. This poor productivity has engaged the serious attention of the Government who are taking measures to effect greater yield, thus bringing about a permanent solution of the food problem of the province. In this connection, 15 schemes involving a total expenditure of Rs 24,20,000 are already in operation About 218,000 acres of land have come under these schemes and an additional yield of about 20,00,000 tons of food products is expected Another 15 crores scheme—extending over five years—has been prepared by the Provincial Government and has now been submitted to the Centre The Provincial Government expect to get the necessary funds for the 5-year plan from the Government of Pakistan as loan

All controls and restrictions on food were removed gradually in the course of the last two years

On April 1, 1950 the whole of East Pakistan went 'dry' when the East Bengal Excise (Amendment) Bill 1950 came into force

LAND REFORMS

The tillers of the soil in East Pakistan constituting about 95 per cent of the total population can look forward to the amelioration of their condition as a result of the various agrarian reforms and enactments undertaken by the Provincial Government.

To regulate the rights and liabilities of the tenants of the non-agricultural lands vis-a-vis their landlords—another important legislative measure—the East Bengal Non-agricultural Tenancy Bill, 1949, popularly known as Chandina Satva Bill was passed by the Assembly The incidents of non-agricultural tenancies had so far been governed by the terms of contracts and the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 But as the provisions of that Act did not provide for adequate protection to the lessees, the Chandina Bill was necessary. The Chandina Bill seeks to give to the non-agricultural tenants, possessing non-agricultural lands for a period of twelve years or more, permanent heritable and transferable rights in such lands Provisions have also been made in the Bill for protecting all non-agricultural tenants against illegal exactions and arbitrary eviction and enhancement of rents

A more important measure is the East Bengal State Acquisition and Tenancy Bill which passed the second reading in the Assembly on 15th February 1950. The Bill aims at the abolition of the Zamindari system in ten years' time It provides for the payment of compensation to landlords at a rate ten times the net income not exceeding Rs. 500 at the bottom of the slab and two times the net income exceeding Rs one lakh on the top of the slab

As amended by the Select Committee the total compensation amounts to about Rs. 25 crores spread over a period of 40 years Land thus acquired will be distributed among cultivators with uneconomic holdings and landless agricultural labourers Land in big estates with incomes over Rs one lakh annually and estates under court of wards may be acquired by Government immediately after enactment Ad interim payment at one-third of the annual income and in the case of khas lands at the rate of 3 per cent of the amount of compensation would be arranged.

HEALTH

The rural population has claimed the special attention of the Government. An elaborate health scheme for them has been drawn up and when it is fully implemented East Bengal will have a thoroughly organised rural health service bringing medical aid within easy reach of the villagers in the remotest corner of the province.

Under the scheme already in process of implementation by the Provincial Public Health and Medical Department there will be a well-equipped dispensary for every two unions and the existing thana dispensaries. These will be provided with four beds each for the treatment of emergency cases and will be under the management of the District Boards.

Under the scheme about 300 health centres and over 400 thana dispensaries will be functioning under the direct supervision and control of the Government, within a period of 5 years All the sadar and Sub-division hospitals, hitherto controlled by public bodies, have already been provincialised and attempts are now being made to bring these upto a standard level.

In continuation of the anti-malaria campaign launched in 1948, the authorities are now taking vigorous measures in this direction with the assistance of malarial experts of the World Health Organisation East Bengal Government have sanctioned Rs 78,000/- in the first instance, in this connection Arrangements are being made by the health authorities to carry on such experiments in several other selected centres simultaneously Anti-Malarial drugs worth Rs 1,50,000/- have been distributed throughout the province through the Rural Health Staff

The East Bengal Anti-Tuberculosis Association was formed with H E the Governor as patron and the Provincial Health Minister as President Twelve 20-bed T I segregation clinics are now functioning in the districts While the construction of a 52-bed T B ward in the premises of the Mitford Hospital has been sanctioned, the question of establishing a permanent T B Hospital near Dacca, as a long term measure is being seriously considered One medical officer was sent to Copenhagen for specialised training in the treatment of T B

A society for the prevention of blindness in East Bengal has been formed recently The Provincial Government sanctioned a capital grant of Rs 16,000 for the purchase of an ambulance for use as an Eye Mobile Dispensary A Blind Relief Camp in the premises of the Medical College, Dacca, is capable of affording relief to over 500 patients per month

For overhauling the present system of education, in conformity with Islamic ideology, East Bengal Government's Education Department has set up a high power committee known as the "East Bengal Educational System— Reconstruction Committee" The Committee has been asked to go into the question of how the system of education can be reconstructed. While these arrangements are in progress, the usual form of teaching is continued to avoid any dislocation in the sphere of education Separate arrangements for suitable education of the minority communities are also being made Along with various other reports, the 'Reconstruction Committee' has been asked to suggest if any change is necessary in the present form of female education

The task of standardising the Bengali language through which education is to be imparted in the province has been entrusted to another high power Committee known as the "East Bengal Language Committee".

While various schemes for the improvement of Dacca University, involving heavy financial commitments are under consideration, a committee appointed by the Government of East Bengal has been asked to enquire into and report about the financial condition of the University.

The Eden Intermediate College for girls, the Dacca Intermediate College and the Jagannath College have been turned into first Grade Colleges. A Primary Teachers Training College, started at Mymensingh in 1948 has been functioning smoothly.

By promulgating the East Bengal Educational Ordinance, Government have transferred the management and control of the Old Madrasas from the Dacca University to a Madrasa Examination Board formed on the lines of the Central Madrasa Examination Board of undivided Bengal. The syllabus of the Old Madrasa has been provisionally determined according to the recommendations of the Madrasa Syllabus Committee of undivided Bengal.

An Institution of Fine Arts has also been established at Dacca.

There are already over 30 Government Secondary Schools and 1,260 non-Government Secondary Schools. The Eden High School for girls which was so long housed in the premises of the Eden Intermediate College has been amalgamated with the Qamrunnisa Girls High School Arrangement for imparting education through the medium of Urdu in all the classes of the Khulna and Jessore Zilla Schools and the Qumrunnissa Girls School at Dacca, is being made Government sanction for opening such classes has already been accorded

The Government of East Bengal have assumed control over the finances of the East Bengal Secondary Education Board, while a Bill for controlling and regulating the secondary education in the province is under the consideration of the Government

Free Primary Education has been introduced in more areas

The Ahsanullah Engineering School which has since partition been converted into a first-grade Engineering College with arrangement for teaching both Degree and Diploma Courses is functioning properly Equipment of the latest model for the Engineering College is being imported from overseas

On the Commercial Education side, B Com., classes have been opened in the Jagannath Intermediate College, while arrangements for imparting such education in the Dacca University, the Chittagong Commercial College and the Dacca Intermediate College continue Facilities for teaching commerce have been provided in M C. College, Sylhet

HOUSING

The most pressing need in the capital of East Pakistan is the expansion of accommodation —residential, office, commercial and for industries, schools, colleges, hostels and a number of other institutions Engineers are now busy with the construction of permanent and semi-permanent buildings for the purpose.

Forty-two three-storied buildings are being erected at a cost of about Rs 67 lakhs containing 504 flats—456 two-room and 48 three-room Another 42 similar 3-storied buildings are also in the offing. Temporary hostels for 500 University students and semi-permanent sheds to house nurses and medical students have already been constructed Besides, extensive additions and alterations have been made to the Medical College Building Construction of a Central Medical Store at Tejgaon at an estimated cost of Rs 4 lakhs is in progress

One of the buildings of the University Hall, the Jagannath Hall which after make-shift arrangements was made to serve as the Legislative Assembly Hall has now been thoroughly renovated.

Similar construction work has been taken up at Chittagong, Khulna and other outlying stations. Nissen huts have been erected at Chittagong while temporary quarters for clerks at Kushtia and 15 additional food storage godowns for the Civil Supplies Department are under construction

Among other projects are quarters for officers and staff of the State Bank of Pakistan, quarters for officers and staff at Mandi where the headquarters of Noakhali district have recently been shifted, construction of a second storey over the Mitford Hospital at Dacca for a tuberculosis patients ward and 25 quarters for members of the University teaching staff

ROADS

Sixteen roads covering 300 miles are under construction Of these the most important are the 50 miles long Mymensingh-Tangail road, the 33 miles Chittagong-Rangamati road, the 20 miles Mymensingh-Haluaghat road, the 23 miles Chuadanga-Jhenidah road, the 18 miles Satkhira-Ellispur road and the 18 miles Meherpur-Chuadanga road With a view to starting work on more projects as soon as those in hand are completed, a survey of 28 projects involving about 550 miles of roads is proceeding at present While work on the immediate needs of the province to improve its neglected road communication system is being pursued, a comprehensive five-year road plan has been prepared for the systematic development of national and provincial highways as well as district and village roads The scheme envisages construction of 5,000 miles of roads at an estimated cost of more than 35 crores of rupees

JUTE

The Government of East Bengal formulated their policy about the production and export of jute in such a way as to maintain the supply of the commodity throughout the world and to create circumstances under which the growers can receive a fair price for their produce

About 75 per cent of the entire world production of jute, and indeed cent per cent of the best quality of it, is grown in East Bengal The normal annual consumption of jute overseas is about 3,000,000 (three million) pressed bales of 400 lbs each. The output of pressed bales from East Bengal increased from 904,674 during the year 1947-48 to 1,135,823 in 1948-49

In order to enable the growers to sell their crop with a full knowledge of the prevailing market rates in Calcutta as well as the baling centres in this province, Government made elaborate arrangements for disseminating quotations of prices of different grades of jute through the 58 jute grading parties and other agencies throughout the province. To further safeguard their interests against all sorts of prevalent malpractices a sub-committee has been formed and entrusted with the task of devising ways and means for fixing definite standards of the different grades of jute, weights used by the buyers while purchasing it, etc. For regulating and controlling the jute prices and for standardising the baling capacity of presses two other sub-committees have been formed, while steps have been taken to acquaint the growers with the art of assortment of jute in different grades.

To minimise the chances of exploitation of the growers by the purchasing parties, the East Bengal Jute Dealers Registration Ordinance, 1948, under which all categories of dealers are to be registered and licensed, has been promulgated while a monthly bulletin giving a summary of jute statistics comprising all possible data relating to the condition of jute markets both inside this province as well as abroad is regularly published The utility of this bulletin having been recognised both in U K and the U S A, many foreigners have become regular subscribers.

The preliminary forecast of jute crop for the 1950 season shows the total licensed area under jute at 1,275,330 acres as against 1,566,675 acres in 1949

To give a lead to private enterprise, which is shy at present, Government are trying to set up two jute mills.

For popularising cottage industries in jute such as carpets, cushions, sacks, etc, a Jute Weaving Demonstration Party has been stationed at Narayanganj.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT

Only 12 per cent of the industrial establishments that were in existence in undivided Bengal fell to the share of East Bengal, where there were only about 7,000 industrial workers on August 14, 1947. Ever since the advent of the British whatever industries developed in Bengal were located in and around Calcutta, the districts comprising the new Province of East Bengal being a mere hinter land supplying raw materials for those industries. The task of development of industries in a Province primarily agricultural is therefore, a very difficult one, requiring well drawn up plans, crossing of many initial hurdles and, above all, time. The Government of East Pakistan have taken up the question of industrialisation in right earnest The past years have been spent mainly in collecting the requisite data and statistics, holding site surveys, and preparing plans some of which have been finalised

While plans are being drawn up for the establishment of various industries, like paper, jute, leather, sugar, etc, which will be set up more or less on a large scale, Government have already chalked out plans for the revival and rehabilitation of cottage industries like shell and horns' button industries, conch industry, hand-loom industry, etc It may be mentioned here that cloth produced by hand-loom has been selling at a proportionately cheap rate in the market and there is a great demand for it specially in the rural areas

AID TO INDUSTRY

To render all possible assistance to private enterprise in developing Industry, Commerce, and Trade, the Provincial Government amended the State-Aid to Industries Act and are now making arrangements for giving loans and grants to bona fide Industrialists Sufficient funds have been sanctioned for the purpose.

The Soap Industry of East Bengal which has had a century old reputation and extensive market, experienced great difficulties during the period of control It has now been thoroughly rehabilitated with a steady supply of caustic soda and soda ash All the factories of East Bengal are now normally functioning with Government assistance

Help is being given to industrialists in the procurement of machinery and raw materials in transport and in the acquisition of land.

A number of schemes relating to the establishment of a Ceramic, a Tanning and a Textile Institute have been finalised and arrangements for imparting Sericultural as well as other Technical Education, have been made Some of these schemes are already in execution.

A Tanning Institute is now under construction at Hazaribagh, Nawabganj, and Dacca Pending establishment of the Laboratory of this Institute, arrangements have been made with the Dacca University to conduct research in tanning questions A Textile Institute has been provisionally started at the Dacca Government Weaving School, Narinda. A site has also been selected at Narayanganj for opening a full-fledged institute, the construction of which will start at any time

NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE

THE North-West Frontier Province of Pakistan is an irregular strip of country lying north by east and south by west and may generally be described as the tract of country, north of Baluchistan, lying between the Indus and the Durand boundary line with Afghanistan To the north it extends to the mountains of the Hindu Kush. From this range a long broken line of mountains runs almost due south, dividing the province from Afghanistan, until the Sulaiman Range eventually closes the south of the Province from Baluchistan.

The greatest length of the Province is 408 miles, its greatest breadth 279 miles and its total area about 39,276 square miles The territory falls into three main geographical divisions the Cis-Indus district of Hazara, the narrow strip between the Indus and the Hills containing the Districts of Peshawar, Mardan, Kohat, Bannu and Dera Ismail Khan, and the rugged mountainous regions on the north and west between those districts and the border line of Afghanistan Hazara and the five districts in the second division contain 14,200 square miles

The mountain regions, north and west, are occupied by tribes subject only to the political control of the Governor in his capacity as Agent to the Governor-General. The area of this tract is roughly 24,986 square miles and in it are situated from north to south, the political agencies severally known as the Malakand, Khyber, Kurram, North Waziristan and South Waziristan Agencies.

Each of the Deputy Commissioners of the six administered districts is responsible for the management of political relations with certain tribes or sections of the tribes across the frontier A few hundred miles of the trans-border territory are internally administered by the Political Agents, but the bulk of the trans-border population is free from any internal interference, so long as offences are not committed and the tribes observe the conditions on which allowances are paid to many of them.

The Frontier Territory was annexed by the British in 1849 and placed under the control of the Punjab Government Frequent warfare occurred with the border tribes The most serious phases of these disturbances were the war with Afghanistan in 1919 and the protracted punitive operations against the Waziris and Mahsuds in 1919-1920 These resulted in the establishment at Razmak, a position dominating the Mahsud Waziri country, of a permanent garrison of 10,000 troops drawn mostly from stations lying in the plains immediately below the hills A circular road from Bannu, through Razmak to Sararogha, Jandola and back to the Derajat provided communications and transport with this force and facilitated its mobility The effect of this measure was a marked improvement in the internal peace of the Tribal Area

The separation of the Frontier Province from the Punjab aimed at achieving the double object of securing closer and more immediate control and supervision of the Frontier by the Supreme Government and of making such alterations in the personnel and duties of frontier officials as would tend to the establishment of improved relations between the local British representatives and the independent tribesmen The province was eventually removed from the control of the Punjab administration in 1901 To it was added the political charge of Dir, Swat and Chitral the Political Agent of which had never been subordinate to the Punjab. The new Province was constituted under a Chief Commissioner and Agent to the Governor-General, with head quarters at Peshawar, in direct communication with the Government of India in the Foreign and Political Department.

In April 1932 the Province was constituted a Governor's Province In political questions there is no intermediary between the Governor and the local officer; an arrangement designed to secure both prompt disposal of references and the utilisation of the expert knowledge of frontier conditions for which the head of the administration is selected.

The advisability of re-uniting the Province with the Punjab was much discussed in certain Indian political circles and as a result of the views expressed upon the matter in the Legislative Assembly the Government of India in 1922 appointed a Committee of officials and non-officials to investigate it The Committee, presided over by D de S. Bray, the then Joint Foreign Secretary, toured the Frontier Province and the Punjab and heard numerous witnesses Its members were Messrs Raza Ali, T. Rangachariar, Chaudhri Shahabuddin, N M Samarth and K B Abdur Rahim Khan, then members of the Legislative Assembly, H N Bolton, I C S (Foreign Dept.) and A H Parker, I C S (Punjab) The inquiry developed practically into a contest between Muslims and Hindus on communal lines The Hindus, allied in sympathy with their co-religionists in the Punjab, demanded the reunion of the administered districts of the Province with the Punjab or, if that were not attainable then the placing of the judicial administration of the Province under the Punjab High Court at Lahore The Muslims on the other hand claimed the right of their Province to a status corresponding with that enjoyed by other Provinces of India and to immediate reforms initiating and providing for progress along that line The Hindus argued that a separate Pathan Province on the Frontier would cause a dangerous sentimental division from the rest of India, with leanings towards the allied racial elements outside British India The answer to that was that a contented Pathan Province would be a valuable buttress against hostile feeling across the border.

The Committee's deliberations ended in disagreement, the two Hindu members writing each a separate report favourable to the Hindu viewpoint already explained, and the majority of the Committee, comprised of all its other members, recommending advance on a Provincial basis. Their principal recommendations were for—

Retention of the Settled Districts and Tribal Tracts as a separate unit in charge of a minor administration under the Government of India,

Early creation of a Legislative Council for the Settled District and appointment of Member of Council and Minister,

Appointment of a second Judicial Commissioner which was later sanctioned and reform of the judicial administration in various directions, including interchange of officers with the Punjab, so that the members of the Service in the smaller Province should have the advantage of experience in the larger one.

"If (concluded the Majority) the Pathan nationality is allowed self-determination and given scope for that self-development within the Indian Empire under the Reforms Scheme after which it is now striving, we are assured that with a contented Frontier population India can face with calm resolution the future that the Frontier has in store for her."

Under the Government of India Act of 1935, N.-W.F.P. became a full-fledged Governor's Province, and on the division of the subcontinent into India and Pakistan the people of the Frontier Province in a referendum voted for joining the latter and so the Province became part of Pakistan.

THE PEOPLE

The total population of the N.-W F P. (1941 census) 5,415,666, is made up as follows:—

Hazara	.. 796,280
Trans-Indus Districts .	..2.241,837
Trans-Border Area ..	.. 2,377,599

This last figure also includes estimated population for these parts of the Agencies and district tribal territory where no census was taken. Peshawar, the capital, had in 1941 a population of 173,420.

There are only 632 3 females per 1,000 males in the towns and 887.6 females per 1,000 males in rural areas. This disproportion of the sexes in the N.-W F P cannot at present be explained. The discrepancy is greater here than in any other Province Both the birth and death-rates of the Province are abnormally low. The birth-rate in the administered districts, according to the last available official reports (1945) is 16 74 and the death-rate 11 14.

The dominant language of the Province is Pushtu and the population contains several lingual strata The most important sections of the population, both numerically and by social position, are the Pathans They own a very large proportion of the land in the administered districts and are the ruling race of the tribal area to the west. There is a long list of Pathan, Baluch, Rajput and other tribal divisions The Muslim tribes constitute almost the whole population and before partition Hindus amounted to only 5 per cent of the total and Sikhs to a few thousand This percentage has further decreased owing to the migration of Hindus and Sikhs to the Indian Union since the establishment of Pakistan The occupational cleavage of the population confuses ethnical divisions.

Under the Muslim Personal Law (Shariat Act) Application Act VI of 1935 Shariat or Muslim Law governs all questions regarding succession, special property of females, betrothal, marriage, divorce, dower, guardianship, minority, bastardy, family relations, wills, legacies, gifts or any religious usage or institution including Waqf (trust and trust property) in cases, where the parties are Muslims, except in so far as such Law has been altered or abolished by legislative enactment or is opposed to the provisions of the North-West Frontier Province Law and Justice Regulation, 1901.

In cases where the parties are Hindus the rule of decision applicable in such matters is usually custom or in the absence of custom the Hindu Law (see Section 27 of the North-West Frontier Province Law and Justice Regulation, 1901).

The climatic conditions of the N.-W.F.P., which is mainly a mountainous region, but includes the Peshawar Valley and the riverain tracts of the Indus in Dera Ismail Khan District are extremely diversified The latter district is one of the hottest areas of the sub-continent, while on the mountain ranges the weather is temperate in summer and intensely cold in winter The air is generally dry and hence the annual ranges of temperature are frequently very large. The Province has two wet seasons, one the south-west monsoon, when moisture is brought up from the Arabian Sea and the Bay of Bengal the other in winter, when storms from Mesopotamia, Persia and the Caspian Districts bring widespread rain and snowfall Both sources of supply are precarious and not infrequently either the winter or the summer rainfall fails almost entirely.

TRADE AND OCCUPATION

The population derives its subsistence almost wholly from agriculture Wheat covers about 972,250 acres of land of which the area under irrigation is about 380,000 acres The total area of the province under maize is about 460,000 acres, and the total area under sugarcane 112,100 acres. The Province is practically without manufactures There is no considerable surplus of commercial products for export. Any commercial importance which the Province possesses it owes to the fact that it lies across the great trade route which connects the trans-border tribal territories and the marts of Afghanistan and Central Asia with Pakistan and India, but the influence of railways is diminishing the importance of these trading interests. The new roads in Waziristan are already largely utilised by the tribal inhabitants for motor traffic. Prices of agricultural produce have in recent years been high, but the agriculturists, owing to the poor means of communication, have to some extent been deprived of access to outside markets and have therefore been unable to profit by the rates prevailing. On the other hand, high prices are a hardship to the non-agricultural classes. The effects of recent extensions of irrigation have been important. The cultivated area of the land amounts to about 25 per cent and uncultivated 75 per cent.

A notable event was the passing of the Tenancy Bill granting occupancy rights to tenants on payment of compensation to landlords. It was explained by the Revenue Minister in the Assembly that the object of the Bill was to raise the status of the peasant and to remove many 'injustices' imposed on them by landowners.

The work of civilisation makes steady progress, both by the improvement of communications and otherwise. Relations with the tribes has generally improved, trade has advanced, free medical relief is vastly extended, police administration is reformed and the desire of people for education judiciously and sympathetically fostered, though in this respect there was complaint against the limitations imposed by financial embarrassments. The inauguration of a system of light railways throughout the Province, apart from all considerations of strategy, must materially improve the condition of the people and also by that means strengthen the hold of the administration over them. The great engineering project of the Upper Swat River Canal, and the lesser work of the Paharpur canal, completed some years ago, are bringing ease and prosperity to a number of peasant homes.

The administration of the North-West Frontier Province is conducted by H. E. the Governor and Agent to the Governor-General with a Council of three ministers:—

His Excellency I. I. Chundrigar (Governor)

(1) Hon'ble Abdul Qayum Khan (Chief Minister)

(2) Hon'ble Mian Jaffer Shah (Education, Revenue & Civil Supplies)

(3) Hon'ble Mohammad Farid Khan (Health & Local Self Govt.).

Nationalization of the key-services was completed during 1949.

The districts under the Deputy Commissioners are divided into two to three sub-collectorates in charge of tahsildars, who are invested with criminal and revenue powers, and are assisted by naib-tahsildars, who exercise similar powers. Some sub-divisions are in charge of Assistant or Extra Assistant Commissioners. The village community characteristic of some other parts of the sub-continent is not indigenous among the Pathans. Its place as a social unit is to some extent taken by the tribe, which is held together by the ties of kinship and ancestry, real or imaginary.

Modern municipal local government has been introduced into the towns. There are also district boards. The district is the unit for police, medical and educational administration and the ordinary staff includes a District Superintendent of Police, a Civil Surgeon, the Superintendent of Jail and a District Inspector of Schools. The Province forms a single educational circle and only possesses two forest divisions, that of Hazara and of Kohat. The P.W.D. of the Province carries out duties connected with both Irrigation and Buildings & Roads. It is organised in two circles (in all seven Divisions) under a Chief Engineer, P.W.D., who is also ex-officio Secretary to H.E. the Governor. The administration of the civil police force of the districts is vested in an Inspector-General. There is a special force of Frontier Constabulary. Of the Agencies only Kurram and Tochi Valley pay land revenue to the Government. The revenue administration of all the six administered districts is controlled by the Revenue and Development Commissioner. For the administration of civil and criminal justice there are Civil and Sessions Judges and additional District and Sessions Judges and several Magistrates and Sub-judges. The court of the Judicial Commissioner which consists of the Judicial Commissioner and another judge is the controlling authority in the judicial branch of the administration and is also the highest criminal and civil tribunal in this Province.

Among the various nation-building schemes of the Province, education has very rightly received prior attention of the Government, provision for this head having been enhanced by as large a sum as ten lakhs.

The outstanding feature of the Province's educational scheme has been the formulation of a 3-year educational expansion programme which provides for the establishment of 3 high, 6 middle, 6 lower middle and 60 primary schools for boys and 4 middle, 12 lower middle and 30 primary schools for girls. It also makes provision for a degree college for women with science and medical courses.

The Government also initiated a scheme for opening more primary, middle and high schools in tribal areas, not neglecting at the same time, the education of refugee children, who were given priority and afforded full facilities for free education throughout the Province.

Female and adult education also received particular attention of the Government, the number of institutions during the year being 8 high, 9 anglo vernacular middle, a vernacular middle, and 136 primary schools in the first category. Altogether 76 adult education centres are functioning in the Province.

Another noteworthy feature was the introduction of compulsory religious education in schools. There is also provision for the establishment of a theological college. All Islamia schools in the Province have been taken over by the Government including the Islamia College.

Tribal education has also received an impetus. An Assistant Director was appointed for the first time. An increase in the salaries of teachers has also been sanctioned.

GENERAL DEVELOPMENT

With its vast resources, the North-West Frontier Province could make rapid progress in industrialization.

While coal prospecting in the Province has been successfully carried out, with a coal-mine already functioning, sugar production in the Province also promises to be very considerable. One sugar mill is already working and another is being built, with an auxiliary distillery, capable of producing not only a very large tonnage of sugar but also power alcohol out of its molasses.

Soaking of hides has begun at a big tanning factory at Nowshera which is capable of handling one thousand hides and skins per day and a pharmaceutical factory established at Peshawar is manufacturing tinctures, spirits, medicinal syrups, etc.

Since no industrial development is possible without cheap power, the Government have been endeavouring to increase the production of cheap power as far as possible by harnessing the Province's hydro-power resources.

The extension of the Malakand Hydro-Electric Scheme to Wah started functioning on May 1, 1949 thereby linking the Frontier Province's power supply to the Punjab Electricity Grid System which marks the completion of another phase of electrical development in the country.

It is noteworthy that this new transmission line was designed, fabricated and erected by the staff of the N.-W.F.P. Electricity Department and it is claimed to be the first extra high tension line in Pakistan which has been engineered entirely by a single Department.

Two other schemes, one designed to produce 16,000 kW of electricity at Dargai, and another ten-crore project at Warsak to produce as much as one lakh kW, are well under way. This power, in addition to irrigating more than 65,000 acres of tribal land, will help the development of sugar, cement textile and other industries and the electrification of railways.

The activities of the Agricultural Department of the Province may be divided into various sections, namely, botanical activity under which a new Basmati variety of rice, much superior in quality to the local variety, has been found, and experiments to produce hybrid corn by crossing suitable combinations, as also the work of inbreeding maize varieties are well under way, chemical activity under which some very useful work was carried out and hundreds of samples comprising soils, manures, sugarcane, juices, drug plants, fruits, etc., were chemically analysed both for the Department and the public, entomological activity, under which valuable work in preventing crops and fruit trees from damage by pests of various kinds was recorded.

In addition to carrying out survey and control of plant diseases, the Department of Agriculture, N.-W.F.P., also produced two very useful sugarcane varieties which are expected to increase the production of sugarcane in the Province.

The question of agricultural development of tribal areas under a planned scheme is receiving the active consideration of the Government.

Agriculture being the chief occupation in the Province, the Government pursued a bold and progressive agrarian policy, aiming at the elimination of middlemen. The tenancy reform has already been mentioned.

Extensive Government lands in the Dera Ismail Khan District which were on long leases with private individuals were resumed by the Government on the expiry of lease periods and split into holdings of 12½ and 25 acres each. They were partly leased out and partly sold to actual tillers of the soil, both local and refugees.

Yet another bold measure on the part of the Government was the abolition of the medieval jagirdari system, directing the savings thus accrued for the welfare of the people of the Province. There were 300 jagirs in the N.-W.F.P. costing the Government over Rs. 1,000,000 annually in one form or another. Some of these jagirs were pre-British while others were granted by the Government of undivided India prior to the introduction of provincial autonomy.

The Government have also inaugurated a scheme of colonisation of tribesmen, specially Mahsuds, on lands on banks of the Indus in Dera Ismail Khan District. The scheme, which involves an area of nearly 10,000 acres, will in addition to help improving the economic condition of the tribesmen, also go a long way towards easing the food problems of the Province. So far a little under 2,000 acres has been allotted for settlement and a further area of 5,000 acres is being cleared and will be distributed as soon as it is fit for cultivation.

As agricultural development without healthy livestock is hardly possible, the Government have in their Animal Husbandry Department a very useful auxiliary to the Agricultural Department. This Department runs about 80 veterinary hospitals treating as many as about 4 lakhs of animals of all description.

The Provincial laboratory produces various kinds of vaccine, with which animals are inoculated against contagious diseases, thereby reducing fatalities to livestock to the minimum.

A testimony to the valuable work done by the Province in this respect is provided by the fact that the Central Pakistan Government chose to convert the Provincial Laboratory into the Pakistan Animal Husbandry Institute.

Training of doctors and compounders and a scheme for the organisation of Blood Banks, in order to meet the requirements of civil hospitals for blood serum and blood plasma in times of emergency has also been initiated.

With a view to increasing production, and thereby diminishing shortage of food from which the North-West Frontier Province generally suffers, several irrigation works of considerable importance, in addition to the remodelling of two important aqueducts, were undertaken by the the Public Works Department. The irrigation works include, among others, remodelling of Katha Jang Distributary, the Toland Flood Irrigation Scheme and the Kri Sheikhan Irrigation Scheme in the Kohat District, the extension of the Mamakhel Jadid Canal in the Bannu District, the remodelling of the Takarwah Distributory in Dera Ismail Khan District, provision of tube-well irrigation in Qasba Bagram, Peshawar, etc.

Seven new roads have been completed, either wholly or partially, in various Districts of the Province at a total cost of Rs. 13,62,803.

Work is in hand on the priority drinking water schemes in the Southern Districts of the Province. An expenditure of Rs 2,82,000 in 1950-51 and 2,11,000 in 1951-52 has also been sanctioned Similarly, a sum of Rs 1,50,000 in addition to the Rs 1,00,000 provided in the 1949-50 Budget has been sanctioned for extending such schemes in the southern half of the Kohat District An expenditure of Rs 2,50,000 in 1950-51 and 1,59,000 in 1951-52 has also been sanctioned for this District.

The North-West Frontier Province has introduced a road transport service of its own, which has proved to be immensely popular with the public, while at the same time financially profitable to the Government.

A fleet of 73 vehicles—40 buses and 33 trucks—is now operating on various routes in all the six districts of the Province, affording to the public regular, quick and comfortable movement.

A notable achievement of the Provincial Government in this sphere of life is the marked decline in violent crime, including murders and dacoities, in the tribal areas. In the Province also complete peace prevailed during the year.

There was also important legislation calculated to wipe out corruption

Development of the Peshawar museum on scientific lines and the establishment of a Central Record Office for the preservation of official records and historical documents for the encouragement of historical research has been yet another notable development in the North-West Frontier Province.

In order to meet the excess in expenditure over the income of the Provinces a subvention of Rs. one crore per annum is given by the Government of Pakistan out of Central Revenues.

THE PUNJAB PROVINCE

THE PUNJAB Province was formed after the partition of August 15, 1947. It comprises the whole of the Rawalpindi and Multan Divisions, the Districts of Gujranwala, Sialkot, Sheikhupura, Lahore minus half the Kasur Tehsil and the Shakargarh Tehsil of the Gurdaspur District.

The correct figures for area, population, etc are as follows —

Area	63,134 sq miles
Density	302
Population	1 crore and 90 lakhs
Males	102 5 lakhs
Females	86 0 lakhs
Muslims	184 25 lakhs
Christians	4 25 lakhs
Others	0 01 lakhs
Villages	19,700

Nearly 50 per cent of the total area (20 million acres) is under arable farming, nearly 3 per cent under forests, and 28 per cent and 19 per cent respectively, lying as 'culturable' and 'uncultivable' wastes. A little less than 50 per cent of the cultivated area depends upon rain and the rest is irrigated from a network of canal system and by surface percolation wells, tube-wells, etc.

The Lower Jhelum, the Lower Chenab, the Sutlej Valley and the Haveli Canals, respectively, command 3 3, 3, 1 3 and 1 3 million acres. A new project, known as the Thal, when completed, will irrigate another 2 million acres Irrigation from this project has already begun.

Wheat and rice are the chief staple crops of the Province and cover about 37 and 5 per cent. (respectively) of the total area sown. Cotton is the chief cash crop of the Province and covers 10 per cent of the total area sown under crops Short-staple indigenous cottons are chiefly for home use and long-staple Punjab American Cottons for export The improved strains are of over 1 inch staple length and spin more than 40 highest standard warp counts. Sugarcane and oilseed are other important cash crops and occupy 1½ per cent each of the area under all crops Other important crops are gram and pulses 13 per cent, millets 12 per cent and fruits and vegetables 4 per cent.; of fruits citrus is by far the most important

The first crop of wheat sown and harvested after partition produced a normal total tonnage in spite of the chaotic conditions which were then prevalent The second crop (harvested in April-May 1949) proved to be a record crop in the history of the Punjab It left the Province with an exportable surplus of well over 5 lakh tons The final figures for the third crop (harvested in April-May 1950) are not available at the time of writing But it is estimated to be as good, if not better than the preceding one. These bumper crops have more than solved the food problem of Pakistan

The Punjab's cotton temporarily received a setback after the partition When the non-standard cotton of 1947-48 reached the buyers abroad, there were some protests which gave rise to several disputes Due to the use of a mixed variety of seed in the sowing of cotton during 1948, the Punjab had a poor cotton crop both in quantity and quality The Government, therefore, felt it necessary to enact a law prescribing the sowing of particular varieties of cotton in particular areas of the Province. The result was that a cotton crop conforming to the old standard was once again sown in 1949 This crop has re-established the position of the Punjab's cotton in the foreign markets It has also given a better total yield than the Punjab had seen for several years, the latest estimate being some 733,000 bales (of 400 lbs. each) which is about 60 per cent of the total produce in Pakistan Surgarcane and oil seeds are other important cash crops and occupy 1½ per cent each of the sown area

Livestock is important from the agricultural as well as food and commercial points of view The bovine population aggregates to nearly 9 million heads and sheep and goats 4 million. Large profits are derived from cattle and dairy trades The productions of hide and skin are also important industries

A special census taken after the partition showed that the total number of cows and bullocks in the Province has decreased since the census of 1945 The number of buffaloes, however, showed some increase over the 1945 figures The decrease in the number of bullocks which were needed for agricultural work has been made up to a large extent through imports from Baluchistan, Sind and elsewhere

Breeding of cattle in the Punjab is mainly the business of the private owners Government helps by providing bulls of suitable breeds, by maintaining the sources of supply from where private individuals can buy foundation stock at reasonable prices and by holding through local bodies exhibitions of cattle of good breeds

The number of factories registered under the factories Act, 1934 can be divided into two categories seasonal and perennial Cotton ginning and pressing factories form more than 90 per cent of the total number of seasonal factories, the remaining are engaged in rice husking, sugar and fruit canning. Among the perennial factories the most important are textile mills, foundries and engineering workshops, cement factories, flour mills, glass and rubber factories, chemicals including turpentine, matches, paints and varnishes, petroleum refineries, sports and surgical goods. The two largest textile mills are situated at Lyallpur and Okara respectively Sialkot enjoys international fame on account of its sports goods and surgical instruments Other industrial concerns of note in the Province are a turpentine and rosin factory at Jallo, a factory for the hydrogenation of vegetable oils at Lyallpur, cement factories at Wah and Dandot, tanneries at Wazirabad and Sialkot, factories for the manufacture of electrical apparatus at Lahore and Rawalpindi and for the manufacture of sewing machines at Lahore.

Small-scale and cottage industries form a heterogenous group comprising industries of a most varied character and of different sizes and forms of organisation Some cottage industries are of considerable importance such as the manufacture of iron safes at Gujranwala, veterinary and surgical instruments at Sialkot and Lahore pottery making at Gujrat ivory carving at Chiniot; cutlery at Nizamabad and Wazirabad and utensils at Gujranwala There is a big factory of footwear near Lahore The manufacture of cycle parts has been taken up at Lahore and Sialkot The sericulture industry has to make almost a fresh start as it has only one silkworm rearing station at Murree but a large number of agriculturists in submontane tracts are taking an increasing interest in silkworm rearing and reeling operations There is an Arts and Crafts Depot at Lahore which provides a market for artistic wares and helps to secure improvement in design and workmanship.

The oil industry has a big future The Attock Oil Company is engaged in extracting and refining mineral oils in the Rawalpindi District

Much reconstruction work had to be done at the beginning as a number of industrial establishments were disrupted by the partition Before the partition there were 800 registered factories in the Punjab More than 90 per cent of these closed down immediately after partition The rehabilitation of these factories has been one of the main problems of the Government By now about 700 registered factories have been restored to normal working, providing employment to about 73,000 persons including about 12,000 employees of seasonal factories

With an abundance of fine varieties of cotton the Punjab offers good opportunities for the growth of the cotton textile industry Two new textile mills, one at Lyallpur and the other at Multan, have come into being since partition A third mill which specialises in the manufacture of towels is nearing completion at Rawalpindi The total number of new spindles and looms that have been installed in the new textile mills since partition is 53,100. Another 80,000 spindles are expected to be installed in the near future Three colonies of hand-loom weavers have sprung up after partition A large number of refugee hand-loom weavers from India have been settled in these colonies Calendering and finishing plants are also being set up for the benefit of this cottage industry. Already 12 calendering plants and 3 woollen cloth finishing plants are working in the Province Another finishing plant for the woollen hand-loom weavers of Jhang is expected to start work during 1950.

The well-known cottage industries of Sialkot namely sports goods, surgical instruments and E P N S goods which were disrupted by the exodus of non-Muslims who financed it are also being revived. It is expected that the pre-partition volume of production will be reached during 1951. An attempt is being made to organise the workers and small producers into co-operative units The cutlery industry of Wazirabad and Nizamabad (Gujranwala District) which came into prominence during the last war is also being reorganised.

The tanning industry has also considerable scope in this province. Three new tanning factories are being set up and three more are at the stage of planning The Provincial Government has sanctioned a scheme for establishing a tanning and leather institute in Gujranwala to produce trained personnel for this expanding industry A big footwear factory already exists near Lahore Sericulture is also being encouraged The production of silk in 1950 was about 2,000 ounces and is expected to rise to 3,000 ounces the following year The Provincial Government is setting up a silk reeling and throwing factory to utilise this raw material. A first rate sugar factory has also been set up at Mardan, North-West Frontier Province.

A Commercial and Industrial museum is being set up in Lahore. It will display to the general public products of cottage as well as large-scale industry in the Province.

The Provincial Government has recently appointed an Industrial Planning Committee to prepare a five-year plan for an all round development of medium and small-scale industries in urban and cottage industries in rural areas This Committee is already at work

COMMUNICATIONS

The P W D Buildings and Roads Branch looks after the communications in the Punjab The mileage so far metalled and maintained is as under —

P W D	.. ..	2,871 miles
District Boards	.. ..	332 miles

In addition to this, it has been proposed to construct the following categories of roads for the post-war period in the first five-year programme —(a) Arterial Roads, 2,391 miles, (b) District Minor Roads, 847 miles; (c) Village Roads (soil stabilized) 1,115 miles

The Department hopes to complete the above programme by the end of 1952-53 when the mileage available for traffic in the province is expected to be as follows —

Metalled roads	6,238 miles
Village roads (soil stabilized)	1,115 miles

In addition to the above existing and proposed road mileage, the Department looks after 1,340 miles of unmetalled roads and controls through the District Boards, a mileage of 11,933 of unmetalled roads, thus bringing the total of unmetalled roads to 13,273 miles.

Capital expenditure on development schemes could only be financed with loans In this respect the provincial Government entered into an agreement with the Central Government early in 1948 that the former would raise no loans in the open market but obtain them from the latter These loans were to be given for schemes which the Central Government approved For capital expenditure on development schemes planned by the various departments the provincial Government prepared an ambitious budget of about Rs 10 crores for the financial year 1949-50, but an allotment of only about 7 crores could be made, and only a little over Rs. 4 crores could be spent actually on account of non-availability of material.

Sec. 92-A GOVERNMENT

The departments remained under the control of an elected Ministry only for a part of the financial year Owing mainly to the abnormal conditions through which the Punjab had passed, certain healthy and important conventions of democracy did not start operating in the province as they should have done in the interests of good administration There was a growing tendency on the part of Members of the provincial Legislature to interfere with the day to day working of the administrative machinery, with postings, transfers and promotions of officials and so on Matters grew worse when the party supporting the Ministry in the Legislature divided itself into two almost equal groups, one of them determined to keep the Ministry in office the other seeking to oust it The extent to which M L A 's were allowed to interfere with the work and discipline of public servants during this period of political intrigues and strife had a most unfortunate effect on the tone and morale of the administration H E the Governor-General at last intervened and dissolved the Legislature and the Ministry on January 24, 1949 and instructed the provincial Governor to take over the administration of the province under Section 92-A of the Constitution Act, pending new elections These, according to the present plans, are to be held towards the end of 1950.

Among the first important steps, taken under the Section 92-A regime to put the progress of West Punjab on a sound basis was a penal law enacted to save the province from the danger of losing foreign markets for its cotton The Punjab had developed over a long number of years special varieties of long-staple and medium staple cottons which had gained distinction and popularity in international markets After Partition the new allottees of ginning factories in their hurry and inexperience mixed up these types with the short staple desi cotton and dumped on the market a commodity very much different from what the buyers were used to get. Muhajir (refugee) agriculturists, used to sowing desi cotton in east Punjab, preferred to stick to it In any case, pure seed of improved types had become rare owing to the admixture of all types of cotton seeds in the ginning factories The most important cash crop of this province, which was the main source of its prosperity in the past, was thus faced with a very dark future To remedy this state of affairs at once a law was enforced in April 1948, making it an offence for any one to grow any but a prescribed type of cotton in a particular area Along with this a hurried, but successful, effort was made to provide the necessary amounts of pure cotton seed for the various areas concerned This and a widespread campaign of publicity by officers of the Agriculture Department has ensured a proper standardisation of the cotton crop that the province will grow in the future

The enforcement of prohibition and the enactment of a series of agrarian laws with far reaching effects are the most important measures of social and economic reforms that have been taken in the province during the past three years Under the Prohibition Law there is total ban on the consumption of liquor so far as Muslims are concerned (subject to individual exemptions on medical grounds) and some restrictions in the case of non-Muslims A law has also been enacted to control opium smoking in the province

The main features of the agrarian reforms are the abolition of the distinction between "agriculturists and non-agriculturists" except for the existing population in the Thal area, the annulment of the eviction of tenants by landlords effected during the past one year whether carried out by means of legal process or otherwise, a permanent protection for the tenants for the future who cannot now be evicted by landlords except under specified contingencies e.g., non-fulfilment of the term of tenancy, and the abolition of certain customary cesses which the tenant in certain cases was paying to the landlord over and above the latter's proper share in the crops or the rent.

Another bold step taken towards emphasizing equal rights of citizenship for all, is the adoption of adult franchise as the basis on which the new Provincial Legislative Assembly will be elected. The law about corrupt practices in elections has also been amended to ensure a greater measure of purity during the election and to discourage any attempt to influence votes in the names of tribes or clans The original cause that produced the dismissal of the Ministry also led in the end to the resignation of the Advisers who had taken the place of the Ministry —namely group politics

THAL PROJECT

Special attention was also paid to a scheme to irrigate and colonise a wide expanse of desert, known as Thal, in the north-west of the province, which is by far the most important scheme of economic development that the province has in hand It is an old scheme, which remained in abeyance for various reasons in the past. Construction work on it was eventually started shortly before the 1939 War and partly completed during the War. The scheme was revised after partition by the Punjab authorities and efforts were made to speed it up. The work of colonization is entrusted to a statutory body called Thal Development Authority which has been created under the Thal Development Act of 1949 on the lines of the Tennessee Valley Authority of America. The colonisation of this inhospitable desert where sand-storms sometimes undo within a few hours what man may take months to build, presents special difficulties in the beginning. Once, however, this area has been properly developed, it will not only add 15 to 18 lakhs of acres to the Punjab's good agricultural land, but also become a beehive of trade and industries. Afforestation and agriculture will, it is expected, completely change the present forbidding aspects of its climate.

The colonization of the Thal is now proceeding at a vigorous pace, and nearly 100,000 acres have already been occupied by the settlers. A considerable area has been reserved for the settlement of the families of refugee soldiers in the Pakistan Army. Land has also been allotted in the Thal to displaced Christian families. The Thal Development Authority takes up land, block by block, demarcates it into chaks and breaks it with the help of tractors and other modern machines, before settlers are sent for colonization. The Authority not only operates on Government owned land but is also competent to acquire privately owned lands in the Thal so as to plan and carry out the development of the area as a whole. The over-all plan of development of the area comprises elaborate schemes of plantation of trees, afforestation, construction of roads, establishment of model farms and the setting up of new markets and industrial towns.

Another of the basic problems of the Punjab is that of arresting the deterioration of land through water-logging in canal-irrigated areas. The remedial measures, never quite adequate, that were taken of before partition, could not be fully maintained during the subsequent years. They are now being changed in the light of the present needs and conditions of the province. Similarly, steps have been taken to give fresh impetus to departmental work in connection with long-term schemes of developing and expanding the provincie's scanty forest wealth, improving the number and breeds of its cattle, developing its supply of electric energy and expanding its industries and other basic factors of economic prosperity. The proposed hydro-electric power plants will make this province independent of the Indian Punjab and will provide a network of grid stations which will supply energy everywhere at economic rates.

After three years of independence conditions in the Punjab present a happy contrast to those which the province has passed through. Nature has helped the efforts of its people by giving the province a bumper wheat crop which has surpassed the records of a long time. The problem of the shortage of food is now a thing of the past. There is practically no black market in the province in any of the essential commodities. About 40 lakhs of the refugee population have been settled in the rural areas and about 15 lakhs in the urban areas. It has been estimated that between 75 and 80 per cent of the refugees resettled in urban areas have been properly absorbed in the economic life of the province at a level not lower than their pre-partition position. The problem of finding full and useful employment for the rest has still to be solved. It is being studied by an Inquiry Committee and whatever interim steps are possible are being taken to solve it. For the agriculturist Muhajir population an elaborate plan of giving semi-permanent proprietary rights to those who were land-owners in their original homes is being implemented. It has meant the study and tabulation of voluminous records and claims. The work of allotment under this scheme has also started and would be in full swing shortly.

ADMINISTRATION

After the establishment of Pakistan, the Provincial Government has been and is being carried on according to the provisions of the Government of India Act, 1935, as modified by the Pakistan (Provisional Constitution) Order, 1947.

The two Financial Commissioners in the Province are also Secretaries to Government in the Revenue and the Resettlement and Colonies Departments. The Development Commissioner and the Secretary, Civil Supplies are also Secretaries to Government in their respective departments. The head of the Police Department is Joint Secretary and of the Education Department a Secretary to Government. The Headquarters of the Government is at Lahore. There are three Commissioners (for Lahore, Rawalpindi and Multan) who exercise general control over the Deputy Commissioners—16 in number—each of whom is in charge of a district.

The principal heads of Department in the Province are the two Financial Commissioners, the five Chief Engineers, the Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals, the Director of Public Health, the Chief Conservator of Forests, the Directors of Agriculture and Industries, the Inspector-General of Registration, the Registrar of Co-operative Credit Societies and Joint Stock Companies, the Development Commissioner, Secretary, Civil Supplies, the Director of Public Relations and the Legal Remembrancer.

JUSTICE

The administration of justice is entrusted to a High Court, which is the final appellate authority in civil and criminal cases, and has powers of original criminal jurisdiction in special cases. The Court sits at Lahore and is composed of a Chief Justice and five Puisne Judges and one additional Judge. Subordinate to the High Court are the District and Sessions Judges (12 in number) each of whom exercises civil and criminal jurisdiction in a civil and session division comprising one or more districts.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT

Local Government is secured in certain branches of the administration by the constitution of District Boards, each exercising authority over a district, of a Corporation at Lahore or of Municipal, Town, and Notified Area Committees each exercising authority over an urban area, and of Panchayats each exercising authority over a revenue estate or a compact group of revenue estates. The funds of District Boards are derived from a cess on the land revenue of the district supplemented by Government grants, profession and other taxes and miscellaneous fees, and those of the Lahore Corporation and Municipal, Town, and Notified Area Committees from octroi and other forms of taxation, from Government grants and from rents and miscellaneous fees. The Panchayat system is an attempt to revive the traditional village community organisation, the elected committee or Panchayat possessing certain powers in respect of taxation, local option civil and criminal justice, the abatement of nuisances and other matters. In order to modernise the towns of the province, the Punjab Town Improvement Act, 1922, which provides for the constitution of Improvement Trusts, has been extended to five important towns.

POLICE

The Police force is divided into District Police, Railway Police, Criminal Investigation Department, Punjab Constabulary and Border Police. The combined force is under the control of the Inspector-General of Police, who is a member of the gazetted force and has under him four Deputy Inspectors-General, three in charge of ranges comprising several districts, one in charge of the Criminal Investigation Department and of the Finger Print Bureau at Lahore. The Railway Police is under an Assistant Inspector-General. The Punjab Constabulary and Border Police are controlled by their commandants. The District Police are controlled by Superintendents each of whom is in charge of a district and has under him one or more Assistant Superintendents or Deputy Superintendents.

EDUCATION

Rapid strides have been made in education in the Punjab since the partition. There has been considerable expansion during 1949-50. The advance has not been confined to any one form of education but is spread over all grades and varieties. A popular adult education programme, the Iqbal Academy, the Translation Board, Overseas Training Scholarships and a programme for the physical development of the youth are some of the features newly introduced into the system. In addition to institutions maintained in all parts of the province by private enterprise, Government itself maintains 16 arts colleges (including one for residential public school and 4 for women), 11 normal schools for males, 10 training classes, and combined institutions for females, 106 secondary schools for boys and girls, 33 centres for vocational training and nine agricultural centres attached to the Normal Schools. Apart from these institutions for general education, Government maintains 10 higher grade professional institutions, viz., the King Edward Medical College, Fatimah Jinnah Medical College for Women, de Montmorency College of Dentistry and Veterinary College at Lahore, the Agricultural College at Lyallpur, the College of Engineering and Technology at Moghalpura, the Central Training College for Women, Lahore, one school at Ghoragali on European model and one school, viz., the Engineering School at Rasul.

At present the Department of Education is in the charge of the Director of Public Instruction who is also Secretary to Government in the Education Department. The percentage of literacy is 11. To raise this percentage the Government has launched a vigorous campaign.

HEALTH SERVICES

As the Medical and Public Health Departments have been amalgamated the Head of this amalgamated Department is the Director, Health Services, Punjab. The present Director is assisted by four Assistant Directors including an Assistant Director of Health Services (Women). Three of the Assistant Directors are P H S Class I Officers functioning as planning officers in their own specialized subjects. The fourth is a non-technical Officer who at present is a P C S Officer meant for administrative work. In ten districts out of the 16 districts of the Province there is a District Health Officer responsible for both preventive and curative work. At the headquarter towns of 5 districts, viz., Lyallpur, Sargodha, Multan, Rawalpindi and Sialkot, Civil Hospitals on the standard of Mayo Hospital, Lahore, have been started. Each of these hospitals is in charge of a Medical Superintendent, and the one in charge of the Civil Dispensary, Lahore, is also Additional District Health Officer.

Besides the District Officers there are 117 Medical Officers (P H S Class II Officers) working in various districts of the Province as well as the King Edward Medical College and other institutions at Lahore. There are in all 303 men Assistant Medical Officers and 54 women Assistant Medical Officers serving in the Health Department.

An Anti-Malaria Organisation consisting of 1 Entomological Assistant, 3 Anti-Malaria Sanitary Supervisors, 15 Anti-Malaria Sanitary Patrols, 1 Laboratory Assistant (Junior grade) in 8 districts and 2 Anti-Malaria Sanitary Supervisors, 10 Anti-Malaria Sanitary Patrols, 1 Laboratory Assistant (Junior grade) work in the remaining 8 districts of the Punjab under the control of the Officer In-charge, Anti-Malaria Operations who is assisted by one Assistant Meteorologist in the district field work.

These units are detailed for duty in the malarious areas of the Province.

A field epidemiological unit for the investigation of outbreaks of epidemics especially malaria is functioning in the Province under the control of an Officer In-charge, Anti-Malaria Operations

There is also a malaria field epidemiological research station the main object of which is to work out biological methods for the control of malaria in the Province, especially in the water-logged areas.

Two chemical laboratories are functioning in Punjab —A Headquarters Laboratory at Lahore and a Divisional Laboratory at Rawalpindi The Headquarters Laboratory is in the charge of the Provincial Public Analyst who is assisted by 4 Analytical Assistants The Divisional Laboratory is in the charge of the Deputy Provincial Public Analyst with 2 Analytical Assistants working under him.

There are 24 Government Food Inspectors employed in addition to those appointed by local bodies, who regularly sample wholesale and retail stocks Samples are examined at the Headquarters laboratory and also at the Divisional Laboratory at Rawalpindi

Government has recently expanded maternity and child welfare work There are now throughout the Province 76 maternity and child welfare centres staffed by fully trained Lady Health Visitors, who supervise the training and work of indigenous dais.

There exists a special organisation under the control of the Officer In-charge, Punjab Epidemiological Bureau for the investigation of hookworm disease in the Province

Other institutions which help to fight disease are given below. The Institute of Hygiene and Preventive Medicine was established in October 1949 The main object of this institution is to train medical graduates for diploma in public health. The Epidemiological Bureau—Bacteriological and Pathological laboratories –trains Sanitary Inspectors.

The Punjab Vaccine Institute trains sanitary inspectors, sanitary supervisors, lady health visitors, medical students and vaccinators and produces vaccine lymph The Punjab Health School trains Lady Health Visitors

Whole-time Municipal Medical Officers of Health are in charge of health work in the towns of Lahore, Rawalpindi, Multan, Sargodha, Lyallpur, Sialkot and Kasur

RURAL, NURSING

With the amalgamation of the Medical and Public Health Departments with effect from 2nd September, 1949, the rural dispensaries of both the departments—204 in all are now functioning in the Punjab under the control of the Punjab Health Directorate. The idea that curative and preventive medicine should go hand in hand, has thus been given a practical shape.

These dispensaries are required to perform both curative and preventive work The doctors in charge of these dispensaries tour within five miles radius of their dispensaries to attend on the sick in their homes and also carry out preventive health work.

With a view to improving the existing condition of the rural dispensaries which, in most cases, are running under the control of dispensers, it has been decided by Punjab Government to provincialize 150 out of 204 dispensaries in the Punjab during the 1949-50 financial year and the remaining 54 dispensaries during the next financial year

In addition to the rural dispensaries mentioned above the Punjab Government have also accorded sanction to the establishment of 20 mobile dispensaries for providing relief from door to door.

Government have decided to provincialize the nursing cadre and all the nursing staff of the Province will be on the regular cadre of the Health Department from 1st April, 1951 A Chief Nursing Superintendent will also be appointed by this Directorate as an administrative officer to control the nursing service.

There are 4 training centres for nurses in Lahore alone, viz, Mayo, Lady Aitchison, Sir Ganga Ram and United Christian Hospitals A scheme for opening a Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting School has been chalked out under the U N I C E F programme and was expected to be started in Lahore from October, 1950

Nurses are also deputed for training abroad both for the basic and post-graduate trainings

The statistics Directorate maintains records of vital statistics and conducts research pertaining to them under the supervision of a Statistical Officer.

There is a Public Health Branch of the Public Works Department, which is concerned with the planning and carrying out of work in connection with the provision of water-supplies and drainage and sewerage schemes in towns and villages The Branch functions under an expert in Sanitary Engineering who has the status of a Superintending Engineer and is assisted by a number of Executive Engineers, Sub-Divisional Officer and Subordinates

There is also a Provincial Sanitary Board consisting of official and non-official members, the Assistant Director of Health Services (Preventive), Punjab acts as the Secretary The functions of the Board are advisory, the Board also give grants-in-aid to local bodies for the execution of sanitary works

FINANCES OF THE PROVINCE

The budget for the year 1949-50 showed a surplus of Rs 9 lakhs Towards the end of the financial year it was found that the budget surplus would be well over Rs. 175 lakhs—Government thereupon sanctioned certain supplementary items of expenditure and decided to refund part of the increased taxation that had been imposed earlier By these operations the expected surplus was reduced to Rs 102 lakhs

For the current financial year (1950-51) the receipts are estimated at 19 62 crores and the expenditure at 18 6 crores, the surplus being 102 lakhs The Provincial Government has on the one hand, abolished the 40 per cent surcharge imposed a year ago on the canal water rates and on the other provided boldly for new beneficial expenditure Provision for this sort of expenditure during the current financial year includes a sum of Rs 38 lakhs for a campaign to expand adult education as well as school and college education in the Province and over 20 lakhs for the expansion of health services A sum of Rs 80 lakhs has been earmarked for giving effect retrospectively to a scheme for revising the scales of pay of the lower-paid Government servants

A part of this scheme has recently been implemented and the scales of pay of peons, constables and head constables and patwaris etc. have been increased.

SIND PROVINCE

SIND is one of the two provinces created in 1936, the other being Orissa Unlike the latter, which has been carved out on a linguistic basis from three older provinces, Sind was a compact unit and was considered a province within a province even before its separation From the point of view of geography, ethnology and language, Sind has greater affinity to the Punjab than to Bombay Nevertheless it has been attached to the Bombay Presidency administratively ever since its conquest by Sir Charles Napier in 1843.

The demand for its separation into a distinct political entity is not of recent origin. It was as early as twenty years ago that Muslim leaders started the demand that Sind, where the Muslims were in an overwhelming majority, should have separate administrative machinery What was started as a bargaining point in inter-communal negotiations later became an accomplished fact.

The Muslim delegation at the first Round Table Conference formally put forward the demand in London in 1930 The question was referred to a committee which accepted the principle of separation, suggested an expert inquiry to ascertain the financial aspect of the separation, and threw the burden of proving the feasibility of separation on those who asked for it An expert inquiry was held and it drew a gloomy picture of the financial future of Sind Its findings can best be summarised by the remark, "There is thus obviously no question of Sind standing surety for the Barrage—the problem is whether the Barrage can stand surety for Sind"

A conference of representatives of the people of Sind met in 1932 to devise measures to meet the financial objections to the separation Wide divergence of opinion prevailed at this conference, whose chairman eventually submitted a report according to which the annual deficit of the new province for the first six years of its life would be Rs 80 lakhs, the revenue from the Barrage being consumed by interest charges. Roughly from 1945 onwards, there would be a surplus from the Barrage to help the province Based on this assumption the authorities set about perfecting the administrative machinery in preparation for the inauguration of the new regime.

With the stage set for the advent of the new province, an Order-in-Council was issued in January, 1936, announcing that the new province would start on its career on April 1, 1936, and creating transitional machinery for the conduct of government till provincial autonomy was inaugurated in accordance with the provisions of the Government of India Act, 1935

The assets and liabilities were divided roughly as follows Lands, forests, buildings property, etc, would pass to the province where they were situated. Arrears of taxes would belong to the province where the taxed property was situated or the taxed transaction took place Of the outstanding Bombay Irrigation Debt incurred before April 1, 1921, Rs 2,74,96,384, including Rs 73,687 of the debt on account of the Lloyd Barrage and Canals system, would be borne by Sind, and the rest by Bombay

Of the debt incurred on account of the Lloyd Barrage and Canals system, all except the portion relating to the Nasirabad section (which is chargeable neither to Bombay nor to Sind) would be borne by Sind The outstanding Bombay debt on account of the Bombay Development Scheme would be the debt of Bombay alone. Other loan works would be chargeable to the province where the works were located.

It was also understood that the Central Government would have to come to the rescue of Sind by providing the funds to meet the deficit in the first few years In order to make arrangements for such a subvention to Sind and Orissa and for other deficit provinces and generally to adjust the financial relations between the Centre and the provinces under the provincial autonomy scheme, Sir Otto Niemeyer, a financial expert was asked to conduct an inquiry. He completed his investigations and submitted his report, according to which Sind got a cash subvention of Rs 105 lakhs for a period of ten years after which the aid would be progressively decreased According to the Niemeyer recommendations, Sind would get after the first five years of provincial autonomy 2 per cent., of the distributable portion of the income-tax revenue.

POPULATION

Sind has an area of 48,136 sq miles and a population of 4,535,008 (1941 census). Of this, the Hindus (including Scheduled castes) numbered 1,229,926 and the Muslims 3,208,325. As a result of the recent upheaval nearly 8 lakhs of Hindus including 20,000 Sikhs have migrated to India since August 1947. There has been a corresponding migration of Muslims into Sind as a result of which the Muslim population has vastly increased.

According to the census of 1941, 889,333 males and 90,020 females in the Province of Sind are literate, representing 15 6 per cent. and 4 4 per cent of the male and female population respectively.

The language of the Province, Sindhi, though it bears many marks of Arabic and Persian influence and is written in Perso-Arabic script, is nearer the original Sanskrit than any other Indian language

On March 31, 1947 there were 3,778 educational institutions of all kinds in Sind out of which 537 were for girls. There were ten colleges in the province with 4,236 students on the rolls. There were 235 secondary schools for boys with 41,922 students on the rolls, and 38 for girls with 9,251 students There were 2,511 primary schools for boys with 168,937 students on the rolls, and 426 schools for girls with 41,735 students

Out of every 100 workers in Sind 59 are engaged in agriculture and animal husbandry Ten per cent. are engaged in manufacturing industries, most of which are, however, of the cottage type, there being only a few factories in Sind

LLOYD BARRAGE

The cultivable area of the province is mostly commanded by the Sukkur Barrage and Sind canals, which, with other canals and the Indus river itself, supply water to 7,500,000 acres The Barrage works have cost nearly 24 crores of rupees.

The Barrage owes its existence largely to the zeal of Lord Lloyd, an ex-Governor of Bombay, whose name it bears Started in July 1923, it was completed in January 1932 It was the completion of the dream of many an engineer and an almost incredible boon to the cultivator, who formerly carried on his agricultural operations in a haphazard manner, being completely at the mercy of the vagaries of the Indus What it means to the Sindhi, the Sindhi alone knows, for the Barrage has converted a waterless desert into a smiling garden flowing with milk and honey.

The Lloyd barrage is a huge water regulator consisting of 66 spans, each sixty feet wide, the openings being regulated by steel gates, each weighing fifty tons The Barrage is about a mile long, about five times the length of London Bridge. Thousands of miles of new channels were excavated varying in width from 346 feet in the case of main canals to only two or three feet in the case of water courses. The total length of Government channels which were excavated was over 6,000 miles, and that of water courses over 30,000 miles. The total length is thus some 36,000 miles.

The total quantity of earthwork involved, excluding that for the watercourses was 628 crores cubic feet of earthwork which means a solid column measuring 100 feet by 100 feet extending to a height of over 115 miles

The function of the Barrage is to head up the river at Sukkur and from that to distribute it all the year round according to the requirements of cultivators The distribution is made through seven great canals through regulators on both banks of the river—four on the left bank, three on the right. Those on the left bank are Rohri, the Eastern Nara, the Khairpur Feeder East and the Khairpur Feeder West Those on the right bank are the North Western Canal, the Rice Canal and the Dadu Canal.

The total number of openings in all the canal Head Regulators is 55, each being of 25 feet span and each opening being equipped with three electrically operated gates. The total discharge of water into all the canals is approximately 45,763 cusecs or 285,100 gallons per second. The total length of all irrigation channels including old and new watercourses is 54,300 miles. To accomplish this staggering feat, excavation of earthwork to the extent of 7,500,000,000 cubic feet was involved, as much as would fill a drain 14 feet wide and four feet deep, dug round the equator It was estimated that the ultimate area of annual cultivation on the scheme would be over 5,000,000 acres and this would be under various crops approximately as follows:

Wheat 2,440,000 acres cotton 850,000 acres, rice 625,000 acres, jawari, bajri, etc., 635,000 acres, and oilseeds 410,000 acres

This denoted in produce would mean the following approximate quantities

Wheat 1,133,000 tons; cotton 549,000 bales, rice 447,000 tons, jawari, bajri, etc., 271,000 tons, and oilseeds 117,000 tons.

PROGRESSIVE BUDGET

In the field of provincial economy a balance has yet to be struck between revenues and expenditure, but the 1950-51 deficit budget with about half of the total estimated revenues allocated to a gigantic development programme cannot be considered typical. One colossal project that of the Lower Sind Barrage alone would account for a capital expenditure of Rs. 3 5 crores provided for in the current year's budget Other productive schemes such as the nationalisation of electrical undertakings, the hydro-electrical project in Lower Sind, the mechanisation of agriculture, bringing under the plough 21 thousand acres of rich alluvial soil by pump irrigation from Indus, which have also been provided for in the budget, would require a total out-lay of about 7 crores of rupees spread over five years.

The previous year's allocations to nation-building departments such as Medical and Public Health, Education and Agriculture have all been increased though there has been no additional taxation

The Sind Government have already started work connected with the building of another barrage across the Indus river in Lower Sind involving a total cost of 23 57 crores The foundation stone was laid by the Governor-General on February 12, 1950 The project consists of a barrage to be constructed above Kotri, a quarter mile below the Jamshoro regulator of the Fuleli Canal a feeder on the right bank of the Indus. The barrage is designed to be strong and big enough to pass a flood of 750,000 cusecs as against a maximum in the last 40 years of 613,000 reduced by future Punjab and Upper Sind withdrawals. The barrage, when completed in 1953 is expected to irrigate 28 lakh acres, out of which 1 7 million will be under peasant proprietorship The consequential increase in out-turn of crop is expected to be more than four times the present yield at a conservative estimate It is expected that by the end of 1950 fourteen out of 44 spans on which will rest the mighty framework of this new Barrage will be completed, and the entire structure is expected to be completed by 1954. The total cost of the Barrage is estimated to be Rs. 20 5 crores

The Sind Government have proposed to develop Hydro-Electric Power for industrial purposes and home use in middle and upper Sind Apart from Kalri-Baghar Scheme, waterfalls in Rohri Canal and Eastern Nara are proposed to be exploited and it is estimated that 16,300 kW of electric power would be generated on the three falls of Rohri canal at Sukkur, Yusuf Dhari and Kumblima and one fall at mile 23 of Eastern Nara.

Final schemes are not yet ready but the preliminary estimates show that the whole project will cost about Rs 559 5 lakhs.

EDUCATION

In the field of education, innumerable changes have been effected during the years 1948-50 They may be summed up as under.

Primary :—(a) Compulsory Primary Education was introduced in 12 more Talukas which bring the total number of such Districts to 25 out of 60 Compulsion will be gradually introduced in all Talukas Urdu primary schools (15) have been started for Muhajir children. In the year 1949-50 alone the number of primary schools (boys' and girls') increased by 324.

(b) Compulsory Quranic Teaching and teaching of Urdu in Sindhi Schools and Sindhi in Urdu Schools were enforced

(c) Training of Primary Teachers for 2 years has been made compulsory for which 4 training institutions—two for men and one for women teachers—have been established

(d) The Sind Zamindari Education Act has been enacted for educating the children of Zamindars in Primary Education compulsorily

(e) 566 scholarships of the value of Rs 2 each and 75 of Rs 5 each were sanctioned in Primary Schools.

Secondary :—(a) 3 abandoned High Schools were restarted and 3 middle schools were raised to the status of High Schools. Suitable Private bodies were encouraged to start abandoned schools

(b) Hur boys were exempted from the payment of Fees

(c) At present in the 14 Government Secondary Schools, there are 50 per cent studentships besides 2,011 School Scholarships

(d) Additional Divisions in several Government High Schools have been opened.

Higher :—(a) Government took over two Arts Colleges (at Shikarpur and Hyderabad) and one Science College at Karachi and one Commercial College also

(b) A special Grant-in-aid was given to the Technical Institute, Sukkur, to accommodate suitable trainees selected by P.W.D of Sind Government

(c) 150 scholarships of Rs 50 each were awarded by the Government to deserving trainees at this Institute and at the N E D. Engineering College, Karachi

(d) 372 College-scholarships were sanctioned by the Government

(e) Government also sanctioned 107 scholarships of Rs. 30 each p m. and 14 of Rs 40 for Arts & Science Colleges and 4 of the value of Rs. 40 each p m. for the Commerce College Technical :—(a) Scholars are awarded stipends every year for overseas training in various technical subjects, under the scheme sponsored by the Central Government.

(b) The Government of Sind arranged a two year special overseer course in 1948 at the Indian Institute Sukkur and the N E D Government Engineering College, Karachi These men will be required at the Lower Sind Barrage where work is in progress

(c) The N E D Government Engineering College has also been arranging classes for training of Ex-service personnel of the Government of Pakistan at their request It will now arrange for the training of Mechanical Engineers for Pakistan Railways

(d) To give impetus to the air and sea training the schemes of (1) Pilot Training Course and (2) Naval Scholarship have been sanctioned.

Women's Education.—(a) 11 Girls' Primary Schools were reopened in 1949 and in the following year 10 more schools were started

(b) The Government has taken over a Girls' High School at Hyderabad and opened additional Divisions and classes in the Middle Schools

(c) 60 College Scholarships and 526 School Scholarships were awarded to deserving girls

In all the Government have taken over a thousand Secondary Schools abandoned by Hindus, and 7 Colleges including the Engineering and Medical College

A compulsory literacy campaign for adults has been in operation since 1949 December.

In order to promote the Education of Muslims in the Province, the Government have also established a fund called "Sind Muslim Education Cess Fund" consisting of Rs 10 lakhs set apart from the proceeds of the cess levied under the Sind Muslim Education Cess Act The interest realised from the investment is utilised for awarding scholarships for higher education abroad.

To enrich the Sindhi Language, two Monthlies "Akhbar-Taleem" and "Mulla Magazine" are published by the Principal Training College, Hyderabad The Government have also constituted a Central Advisory Board of Control for Sindhi Literature, which collects old manuscripts of Sindhi authors and publishes them in original and translations

AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT

The future of Sind depends on Agriculture, which is the chief industry of Pakistan The area actually sown in this Province is more than 5,108,000 acres and the area under current fallows is over 5,006,000 acres The canals issuing from the Sukkur Barrage together with their distributaries and water courses measure nearly 50,000 miles in length—all from a river passing through 300 miles of the territory

The Province grows almost all kinds of agricultural crops—Rice, Wheat, Barley, Jowar, Bajri, Maize, Gram, Pulses and Cotton Sugarcane and tobacco are also grown.

In each Taluka Farm there are demonstrative plots and the Department gives out thousands of maunds of wheat, paddy and gram seed to the registered growers In 1948, for instance, the total quantity of cotton seed given to growers was about 50,000 maunds Their "puttles" are ginned in the presence of Department officers so that there is no mixing Recently a scheme has been evolved by Government to take 7,000 acres of land in the cotton belt and then sublease it to a recognised Co-operative Society, for reproducing nucleus cotton seed, which would come in all to about 30,000 maunds Along with this Co-operative Training Society, a Co-operative Ginning and Pressing Factory will also be established, and only 50 per cent of its shares will be held by the Government. This will push up development work in cotton—the certification and sealing of 2 lakh maunds of cotton will further ensure purity and germination of the cotton seed An Act aiming at the zoning of cotton may also be introduced

The Research Department apart from Research Stations at Sukrand, Dokri and Mirpurkhas maintains four auxiliary Farms, which will be soon mechanised The main research work which is concerned with wheat, tobacco, sugar-cane, manures and control of pests and diseases is carried on at Sukrand Research work on rice is carried on at Dokri, and on fruit at Mirpurkhas, where it is now proposed to establish a Fruit and Vegetable Products Laboratory, to can fruit and prepare Jams, Jellies and Squashes. The Sukrand College and Institute is now being shifted to Hyderabad and is meant to be the biggest and best equipped institute of its kind in the country It is expected that all research work on agriculture will be concentrated here.

Once the agricultural resources of the Province are exploited to the full Sind will be the richest unit of the State Even at present it is helping to feed the people of East Pakistan to which Sind would be exporting 125,000 tons of rice during 1950

As the Province is short of sufficient agricultural labour, the future will depend on mechanised cultivation. Six complete units of wheel-type tractors from Canada have been procured. Three self-propelled turbines have also arrived Two mobile workshops will be made available to the Zamindars interested in mechanised agriculture

The Tenancy Act passed during the Budget Session this year has in a way liberated 25 lakhs of cultivators from vexatious rules. The new Act grants the peasant hereditary 'harap' rights after three successive years of cultivation, awards a more equitable share in the produce, prevents undue exactions and for the settlement of his disputes with the landlord by a tribunal. To create a strong class of peasant-proprietors Government lands with an area of 77 thousand acres have been allotted as "Harap Grants" in the Lloyds Barrage Zone A further area of 2½ lakh acres there has also been reserved for the same purpose The same policy is expected to be followed in the Lower Sind Barrage area too

The allied problems of 'jagirs' and their abolition is also under the consideration of the Government.

Being a surplus Province in all major foodgrains, Sind is feeding today millions in East Pakistan The Province is the chief supplier of the Pakistan Army, too, and through it, it has also given 6,000 tons of rice to Kashmir refugees. In the same way supplies are sent to small States, like Makran, Kalat and Lasbella, etc In 1949-50 the surplus is 75,000 and 20,000 tons of wheat and gram respectively and it might be increased still further to 100,000 and 30,000 tons respectively

STATISTICS OF MAJOR FOODGRAINS (in tons)

		Acreage.	Yield.	Procurement.	Export.

LIVESTOCK

The following is the animal population of Sind :—

Buffaloes	7,01,618	26,60,952
Cattle .	19,59,334
Sheep .	6,38,040
Goats ..	14,14,285
Horses . .	1,05,784
Poultry ..	8,03,438
Camels	1,05,475
Donkeys .	1,25,740

Cattle breeding is receiving due attention The demand for the Red Sindhi Breed, which ranks among the finest in the world, has increased so much after Partition that the Government instituted a special census of this breed to find what number can be exported to other parts of the world The Government proposes to hand over its Willingdon Cattle Breeding Farm to the Central Government and open similar Farms at Mirpurkhas and Hyderabad, instead Research on Bhagnari breed and Thari breed is being carried on at Dokri and Sukrand respectively. The Government also maintains over 200 stud bulls and there is a proposal for the castration of scrub bulls

Sind's poultry is undeveloped But a scheme has now been prepared to control poultry diseases and establish a first class poultry multiplication Centre which should produce 30,000 chicks annually and train Hari's sons in poultry, at the rate of 48 a year.

Sind has 40 Veterinary Hospitals, of which 13 are under the control of the Government and the rest under the dual control of the Government and the District Local Boards

The Veterinary Department has to be in constant touch with the public and besides the investigation and control of disease it has to carry on research work and manufacture Rinderpest Vaccine The deadly disease of Rinderpest is controllable now, but sometimes it is not possible to reach the scene of outbreaks of contagious diseases because means of locomotion on bad roads are slow So the Government are now planning to start mobile dispensaries.

FORESTS

The total area of forests in Sind is about 727,000 acres Of this, the Interior Forests occupy 269,500 acres and the Riverain Forests, 457,500 acres No change occurs in the former, but area under the latter varies from year to year due to erosion and accretion activities of the river Irrigation also varies from year to year according to the size of floods The Inland Forests receive irrigation through sluices provided in the embankment to let in flood water The supply of water is uncertain and irrigation has become more unsatisfactory by the construction of Barrages in the Punjab and Sind

The present annual rate of production of firewood is 12-15 cu ft per acre in Inland Forests, and 25 to 30 cu ft in Riverain Forests Though the firewood requirements of Sind and Baluchistan are about 55 million cu ft, the normal yield of Sind Forests is about 16 million cu ft—the balance is being met by Revenue and Zamindari Forests As with the increase of population in town the demand for firewood will rise to 80 million cu ft within 10 or 15 years, the Forest Department intends to raise Irrigation Plantations in about 350,000 acres, in the Sukkur Barrage, Lower Sind Barrage and Upper Sind Barrage Zones In the Sukkur Barrage Zone plantation work is in progress in about 25,000 acres. Trees will be planted in all the strips along the Sukkur Barrage canals, minors and channels, which cover 6,000 miles This will go a long way in meeting increased demands.

The major Forest Produce of Sind is firewood, charcoal and timber. The principal Forest species are (1) Babul, (2) Kandi, (3) Lai, and (4) Bahan Babul yields timber used for carts, agriculture implements, poles, etc Kandi and Babul also make excellent charcoal. Lai gives firewood of medium quality. Bahan is used for building, turnery, lacquer work and packing cases After the creation of Pakistan there has been a keen demand for Bahan in match manufacture and in 1948, 17,000 cu. ft. of it were supplied at the rate of Rs 2 per cu ft to West India Match Company, Lahore.

The minor Forest produce are (1) Kauh Sar and reeds, (2) Babul Bark, (3) Lac, (4) Lai brushwood and branches of mulberry, (5) Gum Of these 10,000 tons of Kauh Sar is available and can be used to establish Straw Board Mills Babul bark is utilised in Tanning Factories and there is one at Hyderabad. The estimated out-turn of lac is about 120 maunds.

As for the production of Exotics, useful for industries, the following species have been tried with good results (1) Tali, (2) Mulberry, (3) Simal, and (4) Bamboos Of these Tali makes excellent timber for building construction, mulberry is suitable for sport goods and its leaves for silk worm Rearing Farms. Simal and Bamboos can be grown easily in Sind

In 1949 the Province exported 5 lakh maunds of charcoal and 6 5 lakh maunds of firewood to Quetta and the Punjab For achieving a balanced economy for the Province in this respect a "Tree Day" was celebrated in 1949 August and a "Grow More Trees" campaign launched

Early in 1949 some very useful experiments were conducted with Mulberry plants in order to make a beginning in sericulture in Sind Researches and experiments connected with Simal or Silk Cotton Tree, useful for match manufacture, African Wattle Tree for tanning purposes, bidi wrapper leaves and with Sabai grass, which is excellent for paper-making are also in progress

By virtue of the unique geographical features of the coast-line and the so far unexploited vast expanse of water replete with large-sized fish, Sind is destined to become one of the leading centres of fish industry in the country Extensive surveys have already been conducted in inland waters and schemes for the development of edible oyster, manufacture of semi-dried prawns and fish meal, the construction of fish-canning yards have been worked out Some concrete steps have been taken to ameliorate the lot of Sind's fishermen, who total about fifty thousand Until recently half of their income fell to the share of the money lender who gave them money But now Fishermen's Co-operative Societies have been formed.

MEDICAL FACILITIES

The Medical Department of Sind maintains 8 District Civil Hospitals in which there is a total indoor accommodation of over 900 beds. Most of the rural dispensaries have provision of 4 male and 6 female indoor accommodation The total number of dispensaries in the Province is about 90

The Province of Sind is singularly fortunate in that plague is totally absent Nor is influenza a public health problem any more Likewise cholera has never been a serious menace.

Smallpox is the only principal epidemic disease prevalent in this Province throughout the year, but generally it assumes a mild form. Vaccination, therefore is compulsory in all towns and arrangements for it exist in each Taluka.

The post-partition era has brought in its wake a rise in the incidence of Malaria, by the influx of shattered refugees The resources of the Department were therefore harnessed and drugs issued liberally—6 million anti-malaria drugs have been given free, at a cost of Rs 1,30,000 to the Department. A special anti-Malaria drive was also undertaken in Larkana District and Lower Sind.

Local Self-Government in the Province comprises 8 District Local Boards, 6 Borough Municipalities and 20 District Municipalities. Notified Area Committees and Sanitary Committees in towns and villages respectively also come under Local Self-Government.

Conditions, though better than before are not yet normal A number of Municipalities are under supersession. They will be restored when conditions become normal At present their administrators are assisted in matters of general policy by Advisory Committees appointed by the Government.

The administration of the local bodies will further improve, as the Government have decided to take over the control of key posts of Local Bodies services

LAW AND ORDER

Immediately after Partition due to political upheavals, the state of security in the Province deteriorated Serious crimes reached their highest peak by the first quarter of 1948 And so an additional armed force, about 1,600 strong, was raised That did not help much, for the Hurs were regularly absconding from Camps and committing violent offences, and there were plenty of bad characters everywhere

Operations and surprise raids by the police continued, patrolling was speeded up and several police posts were established on the border

At first the Hamzo Rind gang was liquidated Then members of the Usman Bingoro were engaged and destroyed Next Abdul Mari, Miro Nizamani and Phul Machi, terror of Sind were all dispersed Operations against Khosas were equally successful

In order to curb the Hurs and other criminal tribes the members were all transferred to criminal settlements of which there are eleven in all, with a total population of 6,237 Settlers placed in them are engaged in agriculture or other avocations by which they earn their living The settlers are not only usefully employed but an attempt is made to reform them by religious discourses and adult instruction Free Primary Education is provided for their children.

Incidence of crime in the interior has thus on the whole considerably decreased of late. The Hur settlements have been a useful factor in checking criminal tendencies There are now only about 20 serious crimes per week as against 40 two years ago The main disturbed area is now the eastern border which extends over 400 miles.

On the anti-corruption front, out of 384 registered offences 204 cases have been charged Of these 114 have been disposed of the number convicted being 65 Besides, 46 departmental cases have been launched and due publicity given to all such cases Among highly-paid officials, an Inspector-General of Prisons, two Superintendents of Jails, one Divisional Forest Officer and one Mukhtiarkar have been forced to retire from public service

INDUSTRY

After partition, the rate of progress of industry in Sind has been steady. The different Sections of the Department of Industries have been well co-ordinated The Industrial and Commercial Intelligence Section attended to thousands of enquiries, made progress in the compilation of a Trade Directory, conducted a census of Industrial Production and economic surveys of handloom, pottery, oil milling, lacquer, soap industries, etc The Section for "Dissemination of Technical Information" is building up a technical library.

The "Technical Assistance" Section carried out a rapid survey of the Province regarding the availability of raw material The Department of "The Development of Cottage Industries" also did good work in its handloom Cotton Centres, Demonstration Parties, Training Schools, Wool Centres and its Handicrafts School for Women

Sind has great industrial possibilities particularly for the development of those industries which may help the agriculturists directly or indirectly, such as (a) Glass, Cement, Pottery and Paints; (b) Fish oils, Fish meal and Manures, Fish Glue and Gelatine and Pearl Buttons, (c) Biscuit and Confectionery, Starch, Glucose, Cotton Textiles and Oil milling, Soap and Glycerine, Straw Boards, Sericulture and Cigarettes, (d) Tanning Extracts, Match Industry, Sugar, Plywood and Shellac; and (e) Tallow, Leather, Animal Glue, Bones and Bone Fertilizers, Wool and Animal Hair, Dairy Products and Fruit Canning.

The Central Government has assumed full responsibility in respect of the more important of the large-scale industries while the Provincial Department of Industries is concentrating on the development of cottage industries

The most important of the Province's cottage industries is Textiles, providing employment for roughly 7,000 weavers and 3,000 other workers scattered all over the Province and producing about 2 crore yards of cloth as against the total requirement of 5 crores for the whole of Sind Of the older industries silk factories at Sukkur, Rohri, Shikarpur and Hyderabad are still flourishing Embroidery employs a fairly large number of women and has a good market abroad Pottery and lacquer industries are concentrated in the hands of a few craftsmen in some of the older towns

Since partition many new cottage industries have sprung up with the influx of refugee artisans and craftsmen Soap-making, toy-making, Zari manufacture, manufacture of cutlery, utensils and reed chairs have recently developed into promising industries Blanket making is also a lucrative trade Factories manufacturing durries, woollen carpets and hosiery have only recently been started The shoe-making industry is also rapidly expanding

Of the large-scale industries Sind has about 111 rice-husking factories, 128 ginning factories, 7 roller flour mills, 10 oil mills—the one at Hyderabad being the biggest in Pakistan—and two big tanneries Glass industry is also making steady progress The Mangharam Biscuit Factory is still the biggest of its kind in this country.

A review of the Province's progress will not be complete without some reference to the Government's nationalisation policy The Government Commercial Transport has done well in its new venture The original fleet of 20 buses at the inception of the scheme in June 1948 is now enlarged and consists of 60 buses operating on nine routes The other important undertaking which was nationalized is the production of electric power So far five out of 20 concerns in the Province have been nationalised The rest will follow suit as soon as equipment and personnel become available

The Sind Foodgrains Nationalisation Board which replaced Sind Purchasing Board tackled the procurement scheme very efficiently ensuring a high standard of quality along with maximum procurement Its main function has been to procure foodgrains from the Province and make them available to the Central Government for feeding the deficit areas of the country, specially East Pakistan

The Sind budget for 1950-51 shows a deficit of Rs 61,72,000 The estimated revenue is Rs 670,63,000, and the expenditure Rs 732,35,000 No additional taxes were imposed to cover the deficit. The Minister in charge explained that he expected the deficit would be made up partly by the Central Government which would compensate Sind for the loss of Karachi Part of the deficit had already been made up by economy in accordance with the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee About Rs 13 lakhs had accrued from the nationalized transport run jointly with the Centre The educational cess would continue as it was necessary for the development of education The abolition of jagirdari would bring an extra Rs 18 to 20 lakhs a year

With the arrival of about 8 lakhs of refugees from all parts of India Sind is today the most cosmopolitan province of Pakistan Out of these refugees, about 5 lakhs have been settled on agricultural land, and due care has been taken not to create a new class of petty or absentee landlords In pursuance of the Pakistan-Sind Refugee Council's policy evacuee holdings were evenly distributed between the native haris and the new settlers The Checking Committee consisting of Central and Provincial staff revised and verified allotments and enquired into grievances on the spot

The Government incurred an expenditure of more than Rs 2 crore in advancing taccavi and supplying rations to the refugees. Another 2¼ lakhs were spent from the Premier's and the Quaid-e-Azam's Relief Funds. The desertions which occurred in the first half of 1949 caused the Government a loss of 20 per cent of taccavi

After enacting necessary legislation a scheme for permanent settlement has now been worked out which will confer permanent rights on refugees as in the Punjab In order to fill the vacuum in the urban economy of the Province created by the large-scale exodus of Hindus, the refugees in Sind have been allotted 75 per cent of the evacuee shops, business premises and abandoned houses

BALUCHISTAN is an oblong stretch of country occupying the extreme western corner of Pakistan.

It is divided into two main divisions: (1) what was called British Baluchistan with an area of 9,476 square miles consisting of tracts assigned to the British Government by a treaty signed in 1879; (2) Baluchistan Leased and Tribal areas with an area of 44,345 square miles composed of tracts which have, from time to time, been acquired by lease or otherwise brought under control and placed directly under British officers. The States of Kalat, Las Bela, Makran and Kharan with an area of 79,546 square miles, which were also regarded as parts of Baluchistan have acceded to Pakistan.

The legal position in regard to the former British Baluchistan and the Leased and Tribal territory is fluid.

The whole Province embraces an area of 134 002 square miles and according to the census of 1941 contains 857,835 inhabitants.

The country, which is almost wholly mountainous, lies on a great belt of ranges connecting the Safed Koh with the hill system of Southern Iran. It thus forms a watershed the drainage of which enters the Indus on the east and the Arabian Sea on the south while on the north and west it makes its way to the inland lakes which form so large a feature of Central Asia. Rugged, barren sun-burnt mountains, rent by high chasms and gorges, alternate with arid deserts and stony plains, the prevailing colour of which is a monotonous sight. But this is redeemed in places by level valleys of considerable size in which irrigation enables much cultivation to be carried on and rich crops of all kinds to be raised.

The political connection of the British Government with Baluchistan commenced from the outbreak of the First Afghan War in 1839, the country was traversed by the Army of the Indus and was afterwards occupied until 1842 to protect the British lines of communication The districts of Kachhi, Quetta and Mastung were handed over to the Amir of Afghanistan and Political Officers were appointed to administer the country After the First Afghan War, the British withdrew and these districts were assigned to the Khan of Kalat

The founder of the Baluchistan Province as it now exists was Sir Robert Sandeman who broke down the close border system and welded the Baluch and Brahui Chiefs into a close confederacy In the Afghan War of 1879 Pishin, Shorarud, Sibi, Zawara Valley and Thal-Chotiali were handed over by Yakub Khan to the British Government and retained at Sir Robert Sandeman's strenuous insistence

Baluchistan lies outside the monsoon area and its rainfall is exceedingly irregular and scanty Shahrig, which has the heaviest rainfall, records no more than 14.72 inches in a year. In the highlands few places receive more than 10 inches and in the plains the average rainfall is about 5 inches, decreasing in some cases to 3.

The majority of the indigenous population are dependent for their livelihood on agriculture, care of animals and provision of transport The majority of the Afghan and the Baluch, as a rule, cultivate their own lands. The Brahuis dislike agriculture and prefer a pastoral life. The establishment of peace and security has been accompanied by a marked extension of agriculture which accounts for the increase in the numbers of the purely cultivating classes.

The Mekran coast is famous for the quantity and quality of its fish and the industry is constantly developing Fruit is extensively grown in the highlands and the export is increasing

Coal is mined at Sharigh and Harnai on the Sind-Pishin Railway and in the Bolan Pass also in Sur Range in Qu tta-Pis i District Chromite is extracted in the Zhob District near Hindubagh Limestone is quarried in small quantities Gypsum is mined in the Sibi District near Spintangi Railway Station.

Education is imparted in public schools of all kinds. There is a widespread desire for education among the more enlightened headmen round about Quetta and other centres, but on the whole education or the desire for it has made little or no advance in the outlying districts

GOVERNMENT

The Baluchistan administration is directly under the Centre.

The Interim arrangement for associating the people of Baluchistan with the administration of the province, the Baluchistan Council, was installed on June 11, 1949 at Quetta, almost fifteen and a half months after the historic announcement by the Quaid-e-Azam at the Sibi Durbar in 1948.

Baluchistan has much the same kind of Government as the British Indian Provinces had under the Reforms of 1919

The Baluchistan Council advises the Agent to the Governor-General and Chief Commissioner on the following :—

1. Matters of general policy relating to administration, schemes of development and proposals for legislation but NOT on matters relating to day to day administration and to individual appointments,

2. Financial matters including proposals for budget estimates,

3. Questions affecting the implementation of general policy and schemes of development and

4. Such other matters as the A G G may refer to it for advice In case of dispute as to whether any matter falls within the scope of the Council, the decision of the Chief Commissioner, who is also the President of the Council is final

The rights and privileges of the member of the Council in regard to resolutions and interpellations are analogous to those of the members of the Central Legislature, but the President may in public interest prohibit the discussing or asking of questions on or giving information on any matter

The Council meets at least once in four months.

The Advisers discharge their functions under the direction of the Agent to the Governor-General and Chief Commissioner and may be dismissed by the Governor-General The Governor-General may, if he considers it in public interest to do so, suspend or dissolve the Council at any time.

Political Agents and their Sub-Divisional Officers discharge many functions They are Magistrates, Revenue officials, Customs officials, Excise officials, Rationing officials, Custodians of Evacuee Property, Assistant Rehabilitation Commissioners, Registrars of Marriages, Commissioners under the Workmen Compensations Act, etc.

The Marri and Bugti tribes enjoy a special position in that no land revenue is collected from them and in the case of the Marri tribe, the tribe is administered through the Tumandar who maintains his own jails and levies

Apart from Quetta where there is a Municipality, other large towns are Bazar Fund areas The Political Agents concerned administer the Bazar Fund funds.

Individual Service Allowances are granted to important Sardars and Maliks and the system of tribal responsibility is strictly enforced

Apart from tribal levies, there are four corps of Civil Armed Forces for the protection of the frontiers with Afghanistan and Iran They are Zhob Militia, Pishin Scouts, the Chagai Levy Corps and the Mekran Levy Corps

Magistrates in Baluchistan exercise powers both under the F C R and under the regular law.

There is a small separate Judiciary consisting of the Judicial Commissioner, the District and Sessions Judge and the Sub-Judges Civil cases under the regular law are referred to the Sub-Judges.

The Baluchistan Police Force operations in "A" areas which are the larger towns and villages where the Headquarters are located In these areas the regular Law is enforced, but under the provisions of the F C R certain cases where the parties are tribesmen and a more satisfactory solution is likely to be found under the F C R, cases can be referred to the Jirga

In "B" area the Police have no jurisdiction and law and order is maintained by the tribal levies The cases are referred to Jirgas under the provisions of the F C R and orders passed by Magistrates having powers under the F C R.

Jirga members are appointed by the Political Agents and are always men of standing in their tribes.

Cases referred to these Jirgas are decided according to riwaj which varies between tribes

Important cases and all changes in riwaj are referred to the Shahi Jirga whose members are appointed by the Agent to the Governor-General Members of this Jirga are all important Sardars and membership is almost hereditary.

Cases between the members of tribes of two different Agencies are referred to Joint Jirgas, and these are held between Agencies and States and inter-Provincial Jirgas with other Provinces.

KARACHI ADMINISTRATION

THE Karachi Administration came into existence on July 23, 1948 after the separation of Karachi from Sind This was the time when all Provinces were faced with the refugee problem Karachi being the Federal Capital attracted more people than it could accommodate According to census taken by the Sind Government in May 1948, 422,184 refugees had come to Karachi by then The population of Karachi has during the last three years shot up to nearly 1,200,000 from the pre-partition figure of 3½ lakhs.

The Karachi Administration took over 22 Refugee Camps from the Sind Government In these camps refugees were given free food, milk, blankets and warm clothes Arrangements for free medical aid were also made A Mobile Dispensary is still functioning in all the existing Camps. A sum of Rs 15,000 per month is being spent on the sanitation of the refugee camps.

The Rehabilitation Department of the Karachi Administration is carrying on the allotment of evacuee property This Department allotted by the end of 1949, 582 shops and godowns, 8 unregistered factories, 1 hotel, 2 cinema houses, 6 incomplete buildings, 60 miscellaneous properties, 125,000 square yards of non-agricultural land for building purposes and 1,514,772 square yards of agricultural land

The Government of Pakistan, constituted in July 1949 the Karachi-Sind Industrial Rehabilitation Board for the purpose of allotting evacuee industrial concerns so that the economic dislocation caused by the exodus of non-Muslim owners of these concerns might be restored The Board has so far allotted in Sind and Karachi 123 industrial concerns which include cotton ginning and pressing factories, cinemas, rice husking and flour mills

The problem of housing has been one of the most difficult problems in Karachi in the post-partition days When the Karachi Administration was created, the position was that a number of people were in occupation of accommodation much in excess of their needs and had intentions to part with that accommodation on payment of pugree money. In order to stop this anti-social activity the Pakistan Parliament passed an Act by which the Rent Controller was authorised to allot excess accommodation Since the separation of Karachi from Sind the Rent Controller was able to issue about 6,000 allotments But what is really needed in Karachi is more housing as no scheme of distribution of the present accommodation can satisfy the needs of all those who have found shelter in Karachi Since the separation of Karachi from Sind the Central P W D has constructed 3,000 houses for the employees of the Central Government.

Nearly 3,000 acres of land has been granted to the various housing societies of whom the most important are the Pakistan Employees' Housing Society and the Karachi Co-operative Housing Society which comprehends 17 other housing societies These societies have not yet started construction of houses because the land is not quite ready.

The Jinnah Central Hospital is expanding rapidly and has now 430 beds There are separate departments for Medicine, Surgery, Gynæcology and Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat under highly qualified specialists There is a first class laboratory working under an experienced pathologist and an X-ray Clinic.

To cope with the demand of more beds for pulmonary tuberculosis the old Ojhha Sanatorium has been taken over as the Jinnah Central Hospital Tuberculosis Annexe. An Outpatient Department has been opened with a 24-hour service for casualties and emergencies A Blood Transfusion Unit has been opened in the Hospital The affairs of the Jinnah Central Hospital are managed by a Committee of which Begum Liaquat Ali Khan is the President.

As a result of the Primary Education Act of 1947 the control of primary education was taken over by the Government of Sind from the Karachi Municipal Corporation with effect from April 1, 1948 On the separation of Karachi from Sind the control passed to Karachi Administration from the Sind Government on July 23, 1948.

The Central Government have opened 5 new secondary schools for boys, 4 secondary schools for girls and 12 primary schools for boys and girls.

A Central Government College for Women teaching upto the Degree Course is now being run by the Central Government. An Urdu College started by the Anjuman-e-Taraqui Urdu is also functioning in the capital.

The police force is now adequately manned The increase in crimes is only due to the fact that there has been an increase in the population and a number of bad characters flocked to Karachi after partition Still the proportion of crime to the population is not higher than it was at the time of the partition

A scheme called the Nigheban scheme under which volunteers from the public are being enlisted to help the police in emergencies and also in the suppression and detection of crime was started on the 8th February 1950 and so far 4 platoons consisting of 148 officers and men have been formed Rifle Clubs are another important scheme which was started at the end of 1948 to train the people in drill and use of arms 100 persons including women and boys have already been trained, and another batch of 80 persons is under training in the Jinnah Arms Club Another club called the Bahadur Yar Jung Club has also been started.

Prostitution has been banned in Karachi under the Bombay Prevention of Prostitution (Karachi amendment) Act 1949 Schemes are now under preparation for providing honest living to the prostitute

The labour situation has been peaceful on the whole Though the number of factories has increased from 134 before partition to 282 and though the labour population has also increased considerably, there has been no corresponding increase in the number of strikes and lock-outs The number of trade unions has also increased to 46

Complete prohibition of dangerous drugs like charas, ganja and opium-smoking has been enforced and the use of other drugs restricted. Full control under the Dangerous Drugs Act is exercised on the chemists and druggists whose number has shot up from 150 to 750. Fresh licences for liquor shops have been stopped.

A number of new mosques have sprung up during the post-partition period. A mosque which is under construction in Karachi will be the biggest when completed It is called Memon Mosque and will cost nearly Rs 16 lakhs

THE STATES OF PAKISTAN

THE 1947 June 3 plan of Lord Mountbatten met the somewhat baffling question of the States by by-passing it It gave to the States what technically amounted to "freedom of action" It also implied a similar freedom for the two successor States, India and Pakistan, to formulate their own policies towards the States Pakistan's policy in this matter was to respect the right of every State to decide its own future The success of this policy was amply demonstrated by the ready and willing accession of all the States expected to accede to Pakistan except Kashmir.

The ties which now bind these States to Pakistan are all the stronger for having been freely entered into.

BAHAWALPUR

It is the only State in the former Punjab which, due to its geographical position acceded to Pakistan. This it did on October 7, 1947.

Situated in the extreme south-west of west Punjab, it lies 300 miles from north-east to south-west, while its breadth is nowhere more than 40 miles. The state has an area of 17,494 sq. miles. The general appearance of the land is one of barrenness There are no hills, and no streams except a few pools and back-waters of the rivers, Sutlej, Chenab and Indus Three separate tracts can be distinguished —(a) Rohi or Cholistan which is the eastern part of the State and western part of the Rajasthan desert This part gets hardly any rain Water level being 80 ft below the sandy surface of the earth, subsoil irrigation is also not possible Hence there is hardly any cultivation (b) The soil of the central tract consists of clay mixed with sand The Sutlej Canals have been instrumental in bringing a large part of this tract under cultivation The State is in fact the major partner in the great Sutlej Valley Project (c) The western strip called Sind is an old dry river valley This is the most fertile part of the State because the river Indus has always been the ch ef source of the country's irrigation Th climate is abnormally hot and dry

Apart from the main agricultural products such as wheat, gram, dates, mangoes, fruits and cotton, 'kankar' abounds in several places—more especially in the Minchinabad Tahsil Manufacture of carbonate of soda and saltpetre from saline earth is a common industry in most of the villages in Minchinabad and Khairpur Leather goods, metal and porcelain vessels are also made and exported to the neighbouring Provinces

The average revenue of the State is over Rs 3,35,00,000 per year

Considering the area of the State, the total population is low, 1,341,209 About 9,000 sq. miles being desert the majority of the population live in the Sind tract

In the upper parts of the State the language is Multani or Bhawalpuri whereas the dialects of Rajasthani, Jathi and 'ubhechar' are commonly used in the rest of the State.

The rulers of Bahawalpur claim their descent from the Abbaside Caliphs of Egypt. During the days of Nadir Shah Durrani, Daud Khan occupied this part of the country, and his son Mubaruk Khan and grandson Bhawal Khan later consolidated their position as Chiefs of the State

In 1833, Bhawal Khan III entered into a treaty with the British Government, by which his independence under British suzerainty was recognized

The present ruler, Nawab Haji Sadiq Mohammed Khan, succeeded his father in 1907

The administration is in charge of the ruler as the head of the State He is assisted by a number of Ministers who are in charge of different portfolios The whole State is divided into three Nizamats, and each Nizamat is under one Nizam who is the chief executive of the area The principal court of judiciary known as Sadr Adalat was established in 1870 A large number of the Acts, including the Penal Code and Procedure Code, in force in the area formerly known as British India have been adopted

The sixteen municipalities in the State are administered by the official and non-official representatives of the State The P W D working under the Mushir-i-Tamirat has carried out some very useful schemes of reconstruction

KALAT

Bounded on the west by Persia, on the east by Bolan Pass, the Marri and Bugti Hills, on the north by Chagi and Quetta-Pishin Districts and on the south by Las Bela and the Arabian Sea, Kalat, the biggest State in Baluchistan lies on the western border of Pakistan It has an area of 53,995 sq miles Except for the plains of Kharan, Kachhi and Dasht in Makran the whole country is mountainous The main ranges of mountains are the central Brahui, Kirthar, Pab, Siahaw, and Central Makran They are intersected here and there by many small rivers the biggest of which is the river Rakhshan flowing from south to north.

The country consists of rugged, barren and sunburnt mountains, rent by chasms and gorges, alternating with arid deserts and stony plains, so that the whole State is deficient in water The soil is sandy but here and there alluvial deposits of bright red clay are found in the northern parts of Makran.

Permanent irrigation is possible only in the few tracts where water is obtained from karez, springs and rivulets of which there are not many, for the rest most of the vegetation depends upon the flood-water of the rivers

The staple food of the people is wheat and jawar but on the coast of Makran dates are consumed in very large quantity Rice, barley, millet, tobacco, potatoes and melons are also cultivated on a comparatively small scale Pomegranate, apricot, almond, mulberries, vine and apple are also grown and exported.

Marri, Kachhi and Sarawan are famous for the excellent breeds of their cattle and horses. Among the forest products are medicinal drugs, and gum Arabic All these products are exported but not in large quantity.

A few minerals have been discovered but no schemes for developing them on scientific lines have yet been prepared In the Sor Ranges of Sarawan coal is mined but it is not of superior quality Good earth salt, which is a very profitable industry in Kalat, is obtained from swamps by means of lixiviation Ferrous sulphate is obtainable in Jhalawan while iron ore, sulphur and petroleum are found at Shoran

Cloth is made from cotton at Kachhi and Brahui. The womenfolk of these places are expert at needle work. Experiments in sericulture were conducted at Mastung but the industry could not thrive. Dark, coarse wool from sheep and goats is exported in large quantities. Fine and artistic embroidering, the Persian type pile-carpet making, manufacturing of leather goods, palm bags and mats are the commonest professions of the men and women in Kachhi, Mastung, and Kalat.

The total population of the State is 2,53,305. The people live in small villages in huts and tents In the whole area of 53,995 sq. miles there are not more than 1,500 villages.

Brahuis, Baloch, Dehwars, and Jats form the agriculturist class, "Loris" are artisans, while fishermen and seamen, who live on the Makran coast come from "Meds" and "Koras" communities The whole of the population is organized in tribes who usually pay their revenues in kind Barter is still in vogue in some parts of the country. The languages spoken are Balochi, Brahui, Dehwari and Sindhi

Before the birth of Pakistan, the revenue of the State used to be derived from three main sources —(1) Subsidies and rents by the British Government according to the treaty of 1876, (2) Interests on the investments and, (3) Land Revenue From the first two the average annual income amounted to about Rs. 1,30,000 The land revenue is paid in kind, the rates varying from ¼ to ⅛ of the produce There are some other taxes as well which bring the total rate of taxation up to almost ⅓ of the total produce Zar-i-Kalang and Zar-i-Shah are also levied at some places Transit dues and Octroi (Sung) are additional sources of income The total average revenue is over Rs. 14,00,000 per annum

The whole State is divided into 5 divisions, Kachhi, Sarawan, Jhalawan, Makran and Kharan, the last being quasi-independent In Makran the Gichkis, Nausherwanis, Bizanjans and Marwaris are the principal holders of Jagirs They enjoy almost complete independence in revenue, civil and criminal matters. But they are still under the suzerainty of Kalat in accordance with the practices of the feudal system.

The forefathers of the present ruling dynasty were under the suzerainty of Kabul, but during the Afghan War of 1838, they established direct relations with the British Government.

In 1854, their alliance with the British was further strengthened and the Kalat rulers came under complete British protection.

The present ruler, H H. Sir Ahmad Yar Khan, takes a keen interest in the welfare of his people and pays Rs 50,000 out of his own privy purse towards the cost of education which is free.

The State which until sometime back was absolutely without any regular means of communication is now closely linked with Quetta, Pasni and other places of importance in the neighbourhood.

The State acceded to Pakistan on March 31, 1948 Since then all possibilities of development have been and are being explored

KHAIRPUR

This State covering an area of over 6,000 sq miles lies in Upper Sind The climate is hot and dry and the average rainfall is never more than 15" a year.

The soil is cultivable and agriculture is the chief occupation of the people Wheat, cotton and other grains are the main products Irrigation is by canals branching off from the river Indus at the Lloyd Barrage.

Oil seeds, ghee, tobacco, hides, wheat and cotton are exported and fetch a good price Carbonate of soda, Fullers' Earth and wool are also produced Among the manufactures are cotton, silk and woollen cloth. Lacquer work, carpet making and pottery are other important means of livelihood which are open to the artisan class The population of the State is about 3,05,787 and the language spoken Sindhi. The average annual revenue of the State is about 52 lakhs.

The founder of Khairpur was a nephew of the ruler of Sind with the name Mir Sohrab Khan Talpur. The State was recognized by the British in 1882. The present ruler, H. H. Mir Faiz Mohammed Khan, succeeded to the gadi in 1935.

LAS BELA

The State of Las Bela lies one hundred and fifteen miles to the north-west of Karachi. It is separated from Sind by the river Hub The greater part of the State consists of the valley and delta of the Purali river. The area of the State is 7,043 sq miles and the population 69,067 The average annual revenue is a little over Rs. 5,00,000 per year.

The rulers of the State claim their descent from Abdul-Manaf of the Quraish tribe of Arabia. The name of the present ruler is Jam Mir Ghulam Qadir Khan He is assisted in matters of administration by a Wazir The State acceded to Pakistan on March 17, 1948.

KHARAN

This small State lying in the south of Kalat has an area of 18,508 sq miles The geographical and economic conditions are almost identical with those of Kalat

The ruling dynasty belongs to the tribe of Nausherwanis who are the descendants of the old Kiani dynasty of Persia. The present ruler Sardar Bahadur Nawab Habibullah Khan Nausherwani is assisted by a Wazir in matters of administration The State is divided into fifteen Naibats, five major and ten minor ones The Naibs are appointed by the Chief himself

CHITRAL

This is another border State lying in the north-west of Pakistan Surrounded by the Hindu Kush mountains on the north, Badakhshan and Kafiristan in the west, Dir in the south and Gilgit, Mastuj and Yas in the east, it covers an area of about 4,000 sq miles

The State can be divided into the valleys of Turikho Mulkho, and Tirich These valleys are extremely fertile, and wheat, barley, maize and rice are grown in abundance

Iron, copper, and orpiment of superior quality are found in Kashkar. The mines are not however, fully worked. According to geologists it is possible the State contains more mineral wealth which is not yet explored.

The population of the State is 80,000 and the average annual revenue about Rs 80,000 The exports of Chitral consist of daggers, sword hilts, and embroidered pieces of cloth, while fruits are another important source of income Under British rule the Mehtar of Chitral used to receive an annual subsidy in return for services in the defence of the border line

H. H. Mohammed Muzzaffarul Mulk, the present Mehtar of Chitral, is a descendant of Baba Ayub who in the beginning of the 17th century settled in Chitral and entered the service of the then Rais of Chitral, who was a member of his own family After a hundred years the Rais line became extinct and a descendant of Baba Ayub, Muhtaram Shah known as Shah Kator I, became the Chief of Chitral

DIR

The territory of this State, over 3,000 sq. miles in area, includes the country drained by the Panj Kora and its affluents down to its junction with Bajaur Rud.

The Nawab of Dir is also an over-lord, drawing tributes from a number of petty chiefs. In Dir proper live the Yusufzai Pathans while the non-Pathans are confined to the upper valley of Panj Kora known as Dir Kohistan. The river valleys are fertile and produce fruit in abundance There are some forests on the flanks of the mountains wherefrom timber is procured and exported. The average annual revenue of the State is over Rs. 3 lakhs. This income is mostly drawn from the forest of Panj Kora Valley. The population of the whole State is a little over 80,000.

The State was founded in the 17th century by Mulla Ilias known as Akhund Baba, but real power was first acquired by his grandson, Ghulam Khan.

Recently much improvement has taken place in the State A motor road has been constructed to join Dir to Malakand A private telephone line has also been established between Chakdara and Dir.

SWAT

This small State is situated in the valley of river Swat flowing on the borders of the N-W F P The State can be divided into two sections, Swat Kohistan and Swat proper The former is drained by the upper reaches of the Swat river and its affluents as far South as "Ain". The area of the State is about the same as that of Dir, about 3,000 sq miles The lower valley is peopled by the Akazai branch of the Yusufzai Pathans while Swat Kohistan is peopled by Torwals and Garhwis The fertility of the State depends upon the Swat river The main commodity which is exported is fruit

The ruler who consolidated his position in Swat during the period 1917-22, is a descendant of Akhund Saheb The ruler's headquarters, Saidu Shareef, are 38 miles from Malakand and are linked with it by a motor road

AMB

This State is situated in the upper valley of the Indus where the river divides the State territory into Trans-Indus territory and Feudal Tanawal The latter section lies on the left bank of the Indus and occupies the centre of the western part of Hazara district The area of the state is only 225 sq miles and the population 47,916 The main occupation of the people is agriculture

The capital contains an arms factory where breach loading mountain guns, rifles and ammunitions are made by hand

PHULERA

This is a minor portion of feudal Tanawal It consists of 98 small villages with a population of 8,757 The name of the ruler is K S Abdul Latif Khan

ADMINISTRATIVE SERVICES

OWING to the small number of Muslims in the Civil Services of undivided India, one of the main difficulties which Pakistan encountered immediately after Partition was shortage of officers Efforts were made to reduce this shortage to some extent by reemploying certain European officers of the former Secretary of State's Services on contract terms These contracts were offered only to officers whose records showed that their ability and experience were above the average and the terms offered to them were attractive but not extravagant In order to obtain officers for Junior Secretariat and Administrative posts, the General Administrative Reserve, which had been constituted in India, was expanded in Pakistan and 50 candidates were selected for appointment to it towards the end of 1948 from those who had been recommended as suitable by the Pakistan Public Service Commission.

Nine war-service candidates, who had been recommended by the Federal Public Service Commission (India) as suitable for appointment to the war-reserved vacancies in the Indian Civil Service, and 18 candidates who qualified in India in the July 1947 examination for recruitment to the Superior Services have been appointed to the Pakistan Administrative Service, which is the successor of the Indian Civil Service Another examination was held at Karachi, Lahore and Dacca, in January, 1949

An Academy for the training of P A S probationers was established at Lahore The probationary course is for two years, the first year to be spent at Lahore and the next year, or the major part of the next year, in East Bengal The Director of Academy is a senior member of the former Indian Civil Service The probationers are given instruction in law and in Islamic culture In addition they visit various centres of Government activity in West Pakistan, e g, G H Q at Rawalpindi, the Secretariat at Lahore, the Agricultural College at Lyallpur. They are also taught to ride.

SUPERIOR SERVICES

During the year under review, 27 candidates passed out of the P A S Academy. Subject to their passing the final examination held by the Pakistan Public Service Commission in March 1950, they have been provisionally appointed to the P A S and posted to the various Provinces

On the results of the Central Superior Services competitive examination held in January 1949, 20 candidates were selected for appointment as probationers in the P A S They have almost completed their training at the P A S Academy, Lahore, and they will proceed to East Bengal in the near future for the final phase of their training.

During the year under review there was a considerable influx of displaced Muslim officials from Hyderabad Deccan, and from the Indian Provinces. Some of them possessed experience of secretarial, administrative and executive work and their services have been utilised in making up the shortages in various services.

In spite of the various measures adopted in 1950 to reinforce the depleted services, the shortage of officers, especially of those who can be appointed to the post of Under Secretary and Deputy Secretary, still continues It was therefore considered necessary to resort again to ad hoc recruitment of suitable persons for appointment to the G A R The Pakistan Public Service Commission invited applications and after interviewing suitable persons, have made their recommendations which are now being considered by the Cabinet Secretariat

RECRUITMENT POLICY

In undivided India, direct recruitment to the All-India and Central Services had to be made in such a way as to secure certain fixed proportions of vacancies for Muslims and other minority communities The question of the reservation on a communal or territorial basis of the vacancies to be filled in Pakistan engaged the attention of Government early in 1948 It was decided that, in view of their educational advancement, the minorities in Pakistan do not require any reservation in their favour There is, however, a 6 per cent reservation for the Scheduled Castes In general, 15 per cent of vacancies are to be reserved for candidates who may not have acquired Pakistan domicile The remaining 85 per cent of vacancies will, in the case of the All-Pakistan Services, be divided among the candidates belonging to the various provinces of Pakistan in the ratio of the Provincial cadre strengths, while, in the case of the Central Services, the vacancies will be divided on 50 50 basis between candidates belonging to East and West Pakistan The Scheduled Castes reservation will be reckoned against the quota of the Province of origin of the Scheduled Castes candidates concerned.

A concession in age-limit for recruitment to the Central Services by open competition or selection has been made to candidates belonging to the Tribal Areas, in order to enable them to compete on equal terms with other candidates It was decided to relax the upper age-limit in their case as follows Tribal areas of N -W F P and Baluchistan, Frontier States and Baluch States and the Tribal areas adjoining the Dera Ghazikhan Dist by 3 years, Excluded areas of the East Pakistan by 2 years

SURPLUS STAFF

The existence of staff, surplus to requirements, was a very serious problem for Government to deal with and it took some time to settle the difficulties arising out of this problem However, a considerable portion of the surplus staff was absorbed by the middle of 1948 and final orders on the subject were issued in July that year Such of the staff as were not capable of absorption were served with notices of termination of their services but orders were issued to the effect that, ceteris paribus, they should receive priority over direct recruits in the filling of future vacancies.

A number of persons belonging to Indian Provinces were employed before the Partition by the Government of India. Although no options were allowed to employees of Provincial Governments in India, this class of Government servants exercised an option under a misapprehension and such of them as opted in favour of Pakistan came to Pakistan after Partition, and brought with them a difficult problem It was, however, decided to accept them as regular optees

A number of persons who were not given the right of option left their posts and came to Pakistan The question of transfer of their service records was taken up with the Government of India and arrangements were made with that Government to transfer and obtain their records on a reciprocal basis

It was brought to the notice of the Cabinet Secretariat that persons who originally opted for Pakistan provisionally but changed their option finally in favour of India within the time limit allowed for the purpose were not being entertained by the Government of India That Government was asked to take steps to ensure that the undertaking given to these optees that their provisional option would not in any way adversely affect their terms and conditions of service was honoured

In 1949 orders were issued for confirmation of staff against post upto and including those of Assistant Secretary in the Secretariat, and posts of corresponding rank in Attached Departments During the period under review it was decided that 60 per cent of posts of the following categories should also be placed on a permanent basis and confirmations of individuals made against them —(a) Posts higher in status than the post of Assistant Secretary in the Secretariat, and posts of corresponding rank in the Attached and Subordinate Offices (b) Posts outside the time-scale of the regularly constituted services (c) Posts borne on the cadres of regularly constituted services

The Cabinet Secretariat are considering the question of future recruitment to the ministerial staff in the Central Secretariat

To meet the future requirement of the Central Secretariat and its attached Departments, examinations for the grades of Assistants and Clerks were held by the P P S C in June 1949

The Establishment Branch of the Cabinet Secretariat is being consulted daily by other Ministries on various matters relating to the administration of Government This Branch, is in fact, the custodian of the rights and privileges of Government servants and it may be said that one of its most important duties is to exercise constant vigilance in seeing that the rights of Government servants are not overlooked or flouted.

PAY COMMISSION REPORT

The report of the Pakistan Pay Commission covers about 300 printed pages Government dealt first with the recommendations affecting the scales of pay and allowances of non-gazetted officials They decided to accept the pay scales recommended by the Commission for the non-gazetted staff and in the case of many of the categories, in order to afford as much relief as possible, to some extent improved on the Commission's proposals specially in the matter of the starting salaries The following are the pay scales accepted by Government —

Serial No		Existing scales.	Scales sanctioned by Government.

15	Peons ..	14, 15, 16	28–1/2–32
16	Jamadars	22–25	28–1/2–32 with special pay of Rs 5

It should be noted that the above are standard scales into which the numerous existing categories of non-gazetted Government servants have to be fitted The Commission have dealt with this in Part III of their Report

DEARNESS ALLOWANCE

Government also accepted the rates of Dearness Allowance recommended by the Commission for the non-gazetted staff which were as follows —

Employees drawing pay below Rs 50 . ..	Rs 26 if residential accommodation is not provided otherwise Rs 24, plus a washing allowance of Re 1 In the case of Class IV employees
Employees drawing pay from Rs 50 to 100	Rs 30
,, ,, ,, ,, ,, 101 to 175	27½% subject to a minimum of Rs 30.
,, ,, ,, ,, ,, 176 to 400 .	17½% subject to a minimum of Rs 48
,, ,, ,, ,, ,, 401 to 500 .	Rs 70 p.m.
,, ,, ,, ,, ,, 501 to 750	Rs 85 p m

In Eastern Pakistan an extra dearness allowance of Rs 6 p m will be drawn in addition to the above as the cost of living is higher there

HOUSE ALLOWANCE

(a) In stations where accommodation is difficult, i e, Karachi, Lahore, Rawalpindi, Dacca, Chittagong, and Saidpur, Government also accepted the Commission's recommendation to grant the following House-rent allowance for other than Class IV Government servants, subject to the usual conditions —

Govt servants drawing below Rs. 55 p m	Rs. 6
,, ,, ,, from ,, 55 to 100 ,, .	Rs. 8
,, ,, ,, ,, ,, 101 to 250 ,, ..	Rs. 10.
,, ,, ,, ,, ,, 251 to 400 ,,	4% limited to a maximum of Rs 15

(b) In the case of Class IV Government servants the Commission recommended and the Government agreed to provide them with free residential accommodation or the payment of the following rates of house-rent allowance in lieu thereof.—

Karachi, Lahore, Rawalpindi, Chittagong, Dacca and Saidpur. .	Rs 5 p m (inclusive of Rs 2 included in the rate of Rs. 26 for dearness allowance mentioned in para. 2 above)

Again, in the stations mentioned in para. (a) above where the accommodation problem was difficult and a Government servant whose pay did not exceed Rs 175 was forced to live at a distance of 3 miles or more from his place of duty, the Commission recommended the payment of a Conveyance Allowance of Rs 5 p m This recommendation was also accepted by Government.

HOUSE BUILDING ALLOWANCE

In order further to ease the difficulties caused by a shortage of accommodation Government also agreed to grant house-building advances to Government servants posted in Karachi, Rawalpindi, Lahore, Dacca, Chittagong and Saidpur on the following terms

(i) the amount of advance will be limited to 18 months' pay,

(ii) the advance will be recovered over a maximum period of 6 years.

OTHER RECOMMENDATIONS

Government decided to give retrospective effect to these recommendations from the 1st January, 1949 with the following modification in the case of railway employees The latter are, at present, in addition to certain cash dearness allowances, receiving benefits from the railway grain shops The Pay Commission recommended the abolition of the grain shops concession and to give railway employees the same rates of cost of living allowance as have been agreed to for other Government servants The winding up of the railway grain shops was also recommended by the committee which was specially appointed by Government to enquire into the working of these shops The Government, therefore, decided to abolish the grain shop concession from 1st April, 1949 and to give the railway employees from that date the Dearness Allowance at the rates recommended by the Commission The improved pay scales for railway employees was, however, given as in the case of other Government servants from 1st January 1949 and the arrears payable in this respect to the railway employees upto 31st March 1949 was the difference between their new pay in accordance with the improved pay scales and their existing pay plus the Interim Relief In order not to inconvenience the railway employees who were availing of grain shops concession and who will now have to make their purchases of cereals, etc from the civil shops, Government decided to continue the existing railway grain shops upto 30th June 1949, but the sales of various commodities to the railway employees was at controlled rates and where no controlled rates existed at local market rates The present cash emoluments of railway employees show a marked improvement on the old rates of pay and allowances including the benefit of grain shops concession.

The minimum emolument which the lowest paid employee now gets is Rs. 55 p m in Western Pakistan as against Rs. 40-12 drawn by him before If he is also entitled to house-rent and conveyance allowances in big cities, like Karachi, Lahore, etc his emoluments will be Rs 63 p m. In Eastern Pakistan he will be entitled to an additional Rs 6 p m. making a total of Rs 69

COST OF RECOMMENDATIONS

The net extra cost resulting from these decisions was approximately Rs. 4 crores Government have accepted this burden on their resources at a time when the strictest economy is called for in every direction and the demands for the defence of the country are also heavy in the conviction that this relief to the lower paid employees is quite essential.

ARMED FORCES

THE three-year-old Pakistan Army is today in fine shape Beginning its career under a series of handicaps, and faced with grave difficulties and problems, it has been moulded and consolidated into a compact and efficient military force.

Soon after the formation of Pakistan it was decided to form a Corps of National Guards who should be in a position to look after themselves and help the country in stress In 1948 at a Lahore gathering of women leaders, presided over by Begum Liaquat Ali Khan, wife of the Prime Minister of Pakistan, means of creating a Women's Wing of the Guards were discussed.

The Pakistan Women's National Guard is now in full swing Initially two battalions were raised. Now training is being given at a number of places in East and West Pakistan, including Karachi, Lahore, Rawalpindi, Peshawar and Dacca.

Emphasis in the training of the P W.N.G is laid on Nursing, First Aid and A R P work

Begum Liaquat Ali Khan, with a rank equivalent to that of a Brigadier, is the Comptroller of the P W N G

Members of the P.W.N.G. are also trained in drill and in the use of arms for this inculcates in them a spirit of discipline and self-defence

In March 1950, a mass assembly of smartly dressed young women, gave a display in physical training, drill, first aid, and A R P in Karachi in the presence of H.I.M. the Shahinshah of Iran

THE NAVY

Pakistan desires to build up an effective and balanced fleet It needs more ships Hence, under the expansion scheme, two "O" class Destroyers H M P S. "Tipu Sultan" and H M.P.S. "Tariq" have been added Another "O" class Destroyer H.M.P S "Onslaught" has been purchased and will join the fleet as soon as the ship has completed her refit.

On partition, Pakistan received more ratings than it could immediately absorb, but there was an acute shortage of officers.

A partial solution to this problem was found by giving commissions to a number of suitable Warrant Officers, arranging selected ratings to undergo courses to qualify for Commission, and recruiting civilians with requisite qualifications in the commissioned cadre of technical branches. Selected officers were sent for advanced and conversion courses to the United Kingdom.

The aim has been to attain the highest naval standards in the Training Establishments H M P S. "Dilawar," a shore Establishment situated on the mainland, has been turned into R P.N. Barracks The Draughting Office, the Recruiting Organisation and the R.P N. Band function from "Dilawar" Recently "Dilawar" has added a Physical Training School to its list H M P S. "Bahadur"—Boys Training Establishment—is situated at Manora Island which overlooks Karachi harbour. It is equipped with the latest training appliances and staffed with well-qualified instructors, many of whom have done specialised courses in the United Kingdom The Establishment has been enlarged, too, to cater for a greater intake The first batch of boys who had joined the Navy at the age of 14 or 15, after the birth of Pakistan and had received their full two years' training entirely in "Bahadur" passed in May.

The Combined Training Establishment—H.M.P S. "Himalaya"—which includes Gunnery and Radar Schools has started several new courses "Himalaya" is another key Training Establishment of the R.P.N. and trains the new entry ratings and those who require advanced or conversion courses. The Reserve Officers are also trained here, and the boys who join the R P.N. as Cadets receive their initial training here before they are sent to the United Kingdom.

The lack of satisfactory arrangements for mechanical training, which hampered progress in the Royal Pakistan Navy has been overcome Now the R P N. Artificer Apprentices can receive satisfactory training at the recently commissioned Mechanical Training Establishment—H M P.S. "Karsaz" The Establishment trains all branches of Artificers, Engine Room, Electrical, Ordinance and Shipwright. It has a modern and well-equipped laboratory. Short courses on Damage Control and Fire-fighting are also arranged by this Establishment.

To complete the training programme, a frigate, H M P S "Shamshare," is being turned into a Training Ship

To maintain an efficient operational fleet it is necessary to build up repair and maintenance facilities in its own ports As Pakistan has no dry-docking facilities, her naval units have to proceed to Singapore, Malta, and sometimes, the U K, if they require any repairs But work has now started on the site of the proposed dockyard in Karachi

THE AIR FORCE

The Royal Pakistan Air Force came into being with the birth of the Dominion on August 14, 1947. Though newly created, it was actually as old in training and experience as the Air Force of the Indian Dominion of which it formed part since its inception in 1931.

The partition of the Indian sub-continent was followed up by the division of its armed forces, their equipment, stores; and other ancillary services were likewise divided In August, 1947, the Royal Pakistan Air Force consisted of (a) Nos 5 and 9 Fighter Squadrons, (b) No 6 Transport Squadron, (c) Air Observation Post Flight, (d) A Communications Flight.

There were no training institution in the country and the training for the Royal Pakistan Air Force was done in India till September, 1947 The R P A.F had to tackle the Herculean task of organizing training centres from scratch Today the Royal Pakistan Air Force possesses the bulk of its own training institutions in Pakistan run on modern scientific lines where stress is laid on quality rather than quantity.

The R P A F College, Risalpur, trains cadets in all the branches of pilot training to be the future permanent officer nucleus of the R.P A.F.

Arrangements for training of officers abroad were finalised in 1949 to fill six vacancies at the R A F. College, Cranwell.

A certain number of vacancies were also obtained in the R A F Staff College, Andover, for training Senior Pakistani Officers in all aspects of staff and higher administrative duties

Pilots, navigators and signallers were also sent abroad for specialist and advanced courses A number of pilots were sent to the Central Flying School and Central Gunnery School in the United Kingdom for All-Purposes Instructors Course and the Pilot Attack Instructors Course

As a special measure, to relieve the strain on the College, 22 cadets were sent last year to America for flying training in both initial and advanced training

TRAINING INSTITUTIONS

The third year of Pakistan has been marked by a steady increase in the number of training institutions in the country An Apprentices and Trade Conversion Training School has been established at Korangi Creek (Karachi) and a Radar School for the three Services at Malir Two more schools—the Wireless Observer Wing School to train ground observers and the Multi-engine Conversion School, to train the regular R P.A.F. Volunteer Reserve and civil air line pilots, navigators and Radio operators upto the International Civil Aviation standards, have also been opened. The instructional and servicing staff for the Multi-Engine Conversion School have been provided, for a period of two years, by the Air Services Training, Hamble, United Kingdom.

The Apprentices and Conversion Training School is to train boys, between 15 and 17 years of age, for the advanced ground technical duties necessary for the maintenance of aircraft, aero-engines, and their equipment. At present the school also provides for conversion training of the R P A F. technicians who have completed their initial training at the Technical School, and are working at the various R P A F units and establishments. The instructional staff of this School, too, has been provided by the Air Services Training, Hamble

Considerable progress has, also, been made by the training institutions established shortly after the birth of Pakistan The R P A F. College, the Recruits Training Centre, the Technical Training School, and the School of Administration have registered progress and improvement. In keeping with up-to-date requirements the initial training at the R P A F College now starts straight on Harvards So far the Technical Training School, Drigh Road, has passed 1,000 trained airmen.

The mission of Air Vice-Marshal R L. R Atcherley with two Senior Staff Officers, to Australia, to explore possibilities for the air and ground training of the R P A F personnel was fruitful, and as a result, the first batch of trainees left for Australia in April this year

Similar facilities are now available, as a regular feature of R P A F training abroad, in the U.S A. and the United Kingdom.

In the United Kingdom particularly, where the majority of the R P A F personnel are receiving advanced training, four hundred seats have been allowed at Halton and Cranwell for the training of R P A F. Apprentices. Three batches of Pakistan boys have already reached England for training as Apprentices. A number of R P A F officers and Airmen are being trained in Aeronautical Engineering and Radio at the Air Services Training, Hamble A certain number of graduates from Hamble have been selected for advanced training at the College of Aeronautics at Dranfield At the R A F College, Cranwell, eight vacancies have been allotted to R P.A F. Cadet Officers.

EQUIPMENT

Side by side with the training of its personnel, the R P A F. is steadily equipping itself with the most up-to-date aircrait Jet-propelled aircraft—the future machine of all modern air forces—have been procured The R P.A.F. Fighter Squadrons have been re-equipped with Furies. One of the Furies, in its delivery flight, established London-Rome and London-Karachi records, breaking the existing record for the latter by 3 hours and 56 minutes Only recently, a flight of the R P A F Fury Squadron completed the journey from West to East Pakistan in a single hop in less than 3½ hours.

In the Transport Command of the R.P A F., the process of replacing Dakotas with Bristol Freighters was completed during the year under review Bristol Freighters which can carry twice the load of a Dakota for the same speed and power are specially designed for Military operations with a view to easy loading and unloading, transport troops, freight and vehicles and dropping paratroops and supplies.

In order to stimulate interest in flying and to make the younger generation more air-minded Air Scout Clubs have been set up in Karachi, Lahore, Rawalpindi, Peshawar, Kohat and Dacca Here young boys are encouraged to learn the theory and practice of flying. Training is given in flying, gliding, model-making, physical training, aeronautical science and allied subjects.

A further step towards the building up of a sound foundation for Pakistan's Air power has been taken by the R.P A F through the introduction of gliding in the country A Central Gliding School has been formed at Drigh Road In the first instance the School gave gliding training to the R P A F pilots selected as future instructors for Air Scouts. The Central Glider School also supervises the gliding instruction given to Air Scouts at the various Scouts Clubs.

Another institution aiming to produce highly qualified specialists for the R P.A F is the University Air Squadron. Such Squadrons have been established in Dacca, Lahore, Peshawar and Karachi Students enrolled in the University Air Squadrons are taught to fly and also receive instruction in navigation, meteorology, aeronautical engineering, radio, radar, service administration, etc Successful students, after a short probationary period, are gazetted in the R P A F Reserves as Pilot Officers, and are, entitled to the rank, uniform and privileges of regular air force officers

Plans have been laid for 50 young men, who may volunteer and be selected, to receive free flying training at the Civil Flying Clubs at Karachi, Lahore, and Dacca After about a year's flying as such the candidates will be embodied in the Service for advanced training for a further period of about 18 months. When this training is completed the trainee will be at liberty to take up a profession of his own choice but will be required to join the R P.A F Volunteer Reserve, and do the annual training with the R P A F

No country in the world can keep a regular air force as large as may be necessary for fighting a war To overcome this, the R P.A F. has evolved a plan of forming Auxiliary Squadrons which will come into operation in an emergency It is only designed to act as a deterrent to aggression

Fully alive to its responsibility for the defence of East Pakistan the R P.A F have established air bases in East Pakistan and on November 25, 1949, H E the Governor of East Bengal formally inaugurated the R P A F Headquarters in Dacca

The R P A F is doing over 2,500 hours of flying every month Throughout the year it has maintained an average of 80 per cent with regard to the serviceability of the aircraft This compares with 60 per cent of serviceability maintained by the R A F

FOREIGN RELATIONS

DIPLOMATIC relations are established by what is known as the exchange of diplomatic Missions This process started soon after the establishment of Pakistan and today Pakistan is in diplomatic relations with all her neighbours, the great Powers and with many other European, Asian and American countries

The opening of Pakistan's Missions abroad has proceeded apace There are at present 28 Missions in 20 countries, consisting of 8 Embassies, 4 High Commissions, 5 Legations, 2 Deputy High Commissions, 1 Consulate-General, the rest being Consulates and Vice-Consulates Before the end of 1950, Embassies were expected to be established at Paris and the Hague and a Legation at Rome. Two more Vice-Consulates were expected to be opened at Akyab (Burma) and Meshed (Iran) Thirty-one countries have so far opened 38 diplomatic Missions in Pakistan

Pakistan was admitted to the U N on the 30th of September 1947 Soon after the Pakistan delegation took its seat in the General Assembly, it was involved in the Palestinian issue It took up the cause of the Palestinian Arabs and voted against the partition of Palestine On the future of the Italian colonies too Pakistan took up a definite position in safeguarding the interests of the Muslim inhabitants of the territories The final solution which had Pakistan's support was satisfactory enough—full independence for a United Libya, a ten years' Italian trusteeship for Somaliland under the U N , for Eritrea an enquiry commission The part played by Pakistan and the value of her advice was recognised by her election to the Advisory Council for Libya and the Enquiry Commission for Eritrea Pakistan has also made its voice heard and its influence felt in the various subsidiary bodies of U N O

During the last three years Pakistan has been a member of the Economic and Social Council and of two of its functional commissions—the Fiscal Commission and the Transport and Communications Commission Pakistan was also elected a member of the United Nations Special Committee on the Balkans and the Far Eastern Commission At the 1949 Session of the U.N. Sir Mohammad Zafrulla Khan was elected one of the Vice-Presidents of the General Assembly

The terrible events of the early days of independence opened a breach between India and Pakistan which did not close up till the minorities agreement was signed by Pandit Nehru and Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan in April 1950. Pakistan had to provide for no less than 7 million homeless and destitute refugees Then came the dispute over the States of Junagadh and Manavadar, whose rulers had acceded to Pakistan on September 15, 1947. Finally and worst of all fighting broke out in Kashmir, which created a whole new problem

1948 saw further points of difference arise between the two countries, such as the deadlock over the canal waters, Pakistan's share of military stores and finally, Indian action in Hyderabad also produced an unfavourable impression in Pakistan There was some improvement during 1949 with the cease fire in Kashmir, but acute differences continued especially over the question of evacuee property and the truce in Kashmir In the latter half of the year relations deteriorated again when India devalued her rupee and Pakistan did not. This brought about a complete cessation of all trade between the two countries The Kashmir dispute also dragged on and on Early in 1950 communal disturbances suddenly broke out all over again in the Bengal area The minorities on both sides of the Indo-Pakistan frontier became panic-stricken and mass migrations on the pattern of 1947 took place this time in the east Feeling became so embittered that there was even talk of war As Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru subsequently described the situation, both countries were on the brink of disaster

In January 1950 the Prime Minister of India proposed that both Governments should make a joint declaration that they would not resort to war as a method of settling their disputes The Prime Minister of Pakistan agreed in principle and sent certain concrete proposals regarding the methods to be followed for the settlement of major issues A dramatic meeting was held between the two Prime Ministers in New Delhi during the first week of April when the situation was very critical indeed and a frank exchange of views took place The outcome was the Minorities Pact signed on April 8, 1950, generally called the Liaquat-Nehru Agreement.

The Agreement guarantees complete safety of life and property, culture, way of life and fundamental rights of the minorities in either country and prescribes measures to be adopted by the two Governments to safeguard these fundamental rights To help restore confidence the two Governments deputed a Cabinet Minister each who would remain in the affected areas. The Prime Ministers also agreed to include minority representatives in the Ministries of East Bengal, West Bengal and Assam The Agreement also provides measures for the prevention of communal violence, stoppage of propaganda inciting communal hatred and propaganda directed against the territorial integrity of either country The Agreement recognises the right of ownership, sale, transfer and exchange of the evacuee over the property left by him.

This Agreement was welcomed by the entire public as well as the press of Pakistan and no stone has been left unturned to implement it in the spirit in which it was concluded As a result the relations between India and Pakistan have shown considerable improvement. Taking advantage of the changed atmosphere a short term Trade Agreement followed by an Inter-Dominion Rail Traffic Agreement have also been concluded and dried up channels of trade have come to life again There has been an Agreement on movable evacuee property Several non-official goodwill missions of journalists and public men from one country have already visited the other and have been warmly received Many difficult problems still confront the two countries, the most important being the question of Kashmir, followed by that of Evacuee Property and Canal Waters

AFGHANISTAN, IRAN

It came as a rude shock when Afghanistan opposed Pakistan's admission to the United Nations Pakistan did not take this to heart After protracted negotiations it was agreed in February 1948 to exchange diplomatic representatives on an Ambassadorial level H E Mr I I Chundrigar was sent as Pakistan's first Ambassador to Kabul and H R H Sardar Shah Wali Khan came to Karachi as Afghanistan's envoy Hopes were high that the two countries had entered on relations of friendship and good neighbourliness Important personalities of one country visited the other H E Sardar Abdur Rab Nishtar, the then Minister of Communications, led a delegation which participated in the Jushn celebrations at Kabul, and Hazrat Nurul Mashaikh of Sherbazar received a warm and spontaneous welcome from the people of Pakistan

In March 1949 relations began to deteriorate The Afghan Government protested against a statement of H E the Governor-General affirming that the tribal areas of the North-West Frontier Province formed an integral part of Pakistan. This protest was rejected by Pakistan as an unnecessary interference in her internal affairs The Afghan Government then started through the press and over the Radio a campaign the purpose of which was to support the so-called 'Pashtoonistan' demand This campaign still continues. According to previous agreement the Durand Line constitutes the international boundary between Afghanistan and Pakistan and agitation in favour of its revision is considered by Pakistan as legally and morally indefensible It is explained on behalf of Pakistan that the exact nature of Afghanistan's demands have not been conveyed to the Government of Pakistan in writing. They may be concerned with the renaming of the N.-W F P or the setting up of an independent State of "Pashtoonistan" Pakistan for her part has no demands on Afghanistan except that agitation in favour of "Pashtoonistan" should be withdrawn. Afghan-Pakistan relations thus continue to be unsatisfactory.

Pakistan's relations with Iran remained most cordial throughout the period under review. A treaty of friendship was signed in Teheran on the 1st of February, 1950, and a Civil Air Agreement was concluded on June 20, 1950. Karachi and Teheran are now linked by Radio Telegraphy as well as Radio Telephone Their

Royal Highnesses Princess Ashraf and Princess Fatima Pehlevi visited Pakistan in December, 1948, and were guests of the Government of Pakistan. In 1949 the Prime Minister of Pakistan paid a brief visit to Iran The close relations that existed between the two countries were further cemented by a highly successful visit to Pakistan of His Imperial Majesty Mohammad Reza Shah Pehlevi, Shahinshah of Iran, in March, 1950. The visit lasted a fortnight, during which His Imperial Majesty accompanied by high officers and dignitaries of Iran visited all the Provinces of Pakistan.

Pakistan's relations with Burma are cordial and Pakistan has throughout supported Premier Thakin Nu's Government Pakistan along with other Commonwealth countries agreed to give a loan to Burma to help stabilise her financial position The amount which Pakistan agreed to lend was £500,000

SOUTH AFRICA

The Government continued economic sanctions against South Africa which had been imposed by the undivided Government of India as a retaliatory measure against the Union Government's discriminatory policy towards persons of Indian and Pakistani origin The matter had been previously raised in the United Nations and the General Assembly in its resolution of 8th of December, 1946, held that India's complaint was justified On May 14, 1949, the General Assembly by another resolution invited the Governments of India, Pakistan and South Africa to enter into discussion to resolve the question in a friendly manner at a Round Table Conference The preliminary talks were fixed for the 6th February, 1950, at Cape Town To create a favourable atmosphere the Government of Pakistan announced its decision to lift the ban on trade with South Africa This decision was very favourably received in that country.

Preliminary talks between the three countries took place as planned and resulted in an agreement to hold a Round Table Conference on an agreed agenda In the meantime the Malan Government with unseemly haste passed the Group Areas Bill in May, 1950, which set the seal on its policy of Apartheid, the avowed object of which is the liquidation of the 'Indian Problem' The Act would be put into operation on the 1st of December 1950 Realising the futility of entering into discussions when one party has already announced its final decision, the Government of India declined to attend the proposed Round Table Conference. Pakistan urged the Union Government to postpone the implementation of the Group Areas Act until after the Round Table Conference and in return offered to use its good offices with the Government of India to persuade them to participate in the Conference This was not agreed to and a counter suggestion was made to hold the Conference before December 1, 1950, the date fixed for the execution of the Act. Negotiations were still going on at the time of writing.

THE MIDDLE EAST

Diplomatic relations have been established with Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Turkey, Iraq, Syria, Lebanon and Jordan. Treaties of Friendship have either been concluded (for instance, with Iran on 18th February, 1950, and with Iraq on 26th February, 1950), or are being negotiated between the Government of Pakistan and various other Muslim Governments Commercial agreements are also being discussed. A Civil Air Agreement between Pakistan and Iraq was signed at Baghdad on 20th June, 1950.

From the very beginning, it was the endeavour of the Government of Pakistan to develop and strengthen the cultural bonds linking the country with the rest of the Muslim world. To this end exchange of scholars has been arranged with some of the Muslim countries and similar proposals with regard to others are under consideration. These contacts have been made closer by the grant of scholarships to students of Muslim countries on a reciprocal basis. Students from Iran are already studying at Pakistani Universities. Several visits of cultural import have taken place from the Middle East countries to Pakistan. For instance there were visits from prominent Iranian newspaper editors in April, 1948, and of Turkish students and professors in November, 1949 At the invitation of the Pakistan Olympic Association, Turkish athletes participated in the Olympic games at Lahore in 1950.

Visits of members of the Pakistan Cabinet to Muslim countries have greatly contributed to the cementing of closer relations between Pakistan and the Middle East The Prime Minister, Mr Liaquat Ali Khan, visited Egypt, Iran and Iraq The Finance Minister, Mr. Ghulam Mohammad, visited Turkey, Syria and Egypt A goodwill mission led by Khwaja Shahabuddin, the Minister of the Interior, went to the Hejaz during the Hajj season in 1949 and was received by His Majesty King Ibn-i-Saud

In the economic sphere, Pakistan was host to no less than 21 Muslim countries which participated in the International Islamic Economic Conference held in Karachi in November, 1949 Far reaching decisions were taken at that conference to promote economic co-operation and industrial development in the Muslim countries, and a permanent Secretariat has been established to give effect to these decisions

EUROPE

Pakistan's relations with the U S S R have been cordial from the very beginning An invitation was extended to the Prime Minister of Pakistan in the beginning of 1949 to visit Moscow This invitation was accepted and still stands. Pakistan opened an Embassy in Moscow in November, 1949, and His Excellency Mr Shuaib Qurashi was sent as Ambassador The U S S R opened their Embassy in Karachi in March 1950, and His Excellency M Alexander Georgievich Stetsenko was appointed Ambassador Prior to that date a Trade Delegation from the U S S R visited Pakistan in July, 1949 No agreement was however finalised

A Trade Delegation from France visited Pakistan in October, 1949 A Trade Agreement for one year was concluded and it will be considered as renewed if it is not denounced by either party on two months' notice The French Government offered some scholarships to Pakistani students and the selected scholars are now taking advantage of it by getting training in that country.

Some misunderstanding with Italy arose because of the support which Pakistan gave in the United Nations to the claims to self-Government of the inhabitants of the former Italian Colonies Later, however, Italy welcomed Pakistan's attitude on the question of Eritrea Commercial relations between the two countries are rapidly developing, a trade agreement having been signed in June, 1950 The Minister for Commerce paid a visit to Italy in 1949 Pakistan was to open a Legation in Italy and Mr Habibur Rahman of East Bengal had been appointed Minister Designate

UNITED STATES

U S A. was one of the first countries with which Pakistan established diplomatic relations Embassies were opened both in Karachi and Washington in 1947 soon after the establishment of Pakistan. Visitors to and from the U.S A., both officials and non-officials, and members of various technical and advisory missions have created a close understanding between the two countries. A Treaty of Commerce, Friendship and Navigation with the U.S A is under consideration and an agreement under the Fullbright Act to exchange teachers and students was expected to be concluded any time Pakistan has agreed to contribute $25,000 annually for the next ten years for the Pakistan Section of the Near and Middle East Institute of Columbia University. The U S A. have offered scholarships to Pakistani students. Officers of the Pakistani armed forces, students of technology and scientific subjects have been going to the Universities and Institutes in the United States in increasing numbers. Much valuable help has come from American charitable associations for the relief of refugees, in particular medical supplies and medical workers

There has been a reciprocal liberalisation of visa rules as between the two countries and this has facilitated travel of tourists, businessmen and students The high-light of three years of cordial relations has been the Prime Minister and Begum Liaquat Ali Khan's recent visit to the United States

They stayed in the U S.A. for about two months and during a country-wide tour, the Prime Minister addressed several important gatherings, including the two Houses of the Congress, gave innumerable press conferences and interviews, and met important industrialists and businessmen, besides visiting many technical, scientific and educational institutions.

ASIAN COUNTRIES

In the Far East are some of the greatest concentrations of peoples professing the Islamic faith For instance, in Indonesia out of a total population of 70 millions, 85 per cent are Muslims Pakistan was, therefore, deeply interested in Indonesia's struggle for independence and gave to the Indonesian people all the support it could A goodwill Mission under the leadership of Chaudhry Nazir Ahmed Khan, Minister of Industries, participated in Indonesian Independence celebrations in December, 1949 Pakistan had an occasion to welcome at different times both President and Madame Sœkarno and Dr Hatta Formal diplomatic relations have now been established between Pakistan and Indonesia.

Pakistan has a common frontier with a part of Sinkiang, and the emergence of the Central Peoples' Government in this area is a fact of considerable significance. In January, 1950, Pakistan extended de jure recognition to the new Government and at the same time withdrew recognition from the Kuomintang regime Negotiations for the establishment of diplomatic relations at ambassadorial level were due to be initiated with the Central Peoples' Republic Pakistan has an Officer in Peking where arrangements were being made for the visit of a Pakistan Representative to conduct negotiations Pakistan has also a Consulate-General at Kashgar, whose functions are in abeyance pending the establishment of formal diplomatic relations with the new regime in China

There is a Philippines Consulate in Karachi and a Treaty of Friendship with that country was under negotiation In May, 1950, the President of the Phillippines convened a Conference of South and South-East Asian countries at Baguio in which Pakistan fully participated along with other countries such as Australia, Ceylon, India, Indonesia and Siam The Conference was convened to discuss ways and means to bring about closer economic, social and cultural co-operation among the participating countries

A definite line in Pakistan's relations with Japan is developing Several Japanese Trade Delegations, sponsored by the present occupation authorities in Japan, visited Pakistan Pakistan for its part has allowed Japan to set up a permanent Trade Agency at Karachi The Government was also contemplating the establishment of a Trade Mission at Tokyo Japan is rapidly developing as one of Pakistan's best customers and a source of supply of manufactured goods. Towards the end of 1949 Pakistan became a member of the Far Eastern Commission which is to consider the terms of a peace settlement with Japan.

The chief centre of interest, however, is for the time being, Korea. On 30th June, 1950, Pakistan clarified its attitude to the hostilities now in progress in Korea by recognising that North Korea has committed an act of aggression by invading the territory of South Korea. Pakistan supported the resolutions of the Security Council for restoring peace in that area.

In July 1949, visa procedure was simplified, transit visas abolished and reciprocal agreement was concluded with Norway resulting in total abolition of visas between the two countries. Visas were also abolished in the case of holders of the United Nations' laossez-passers travelling on United Nations' business. Agreement was concluded on reciprocal basis with the United States of America which simplified visa procedure, reduced visa fees and provided for the grant of multi-journey visas within a period of one year Reciprocal agreements were made with Turkey and Iraq liberalising visa procedure Similar agreements with Iran, France, Portugal and Switzerland were under consideration.

PASSPORTS

Passport and visa work which to begin with was performed in foreign countries by the United Kingdom representatives is being gradually transferred to Pakistan Missions except in places where Pakistan has no representatives.

After Partition the Ministry of Foreign Affairs became administratively responsible for the conduct of Hajj affairs The first and foremost difficulty was the provision of shipping space which was under the direct control of the Government of India The Partition placed Pakistan in an unfavourable position because the two companies owning pilgrim ships were registered in India. India, however, agreed to give Pakistan 50 per cent of the available Hajj tonnage. This was not enough and passages had to be controlled and allotted on the basis of priority of receipt of application to prevent profiteering in tickets. Efforts are being made to encourage indigenous shipping to participate in the pilgrim traffic and 1951 may see pilgrim ships registered in Pakistan making their first journey to the Hejaz.

For the first time in 1949, air services were introduced for pilgrim traffic and 2,000 persons travelled to Jedda and back. The entire operation was undertaken by Pakistan Air Companies and was completed without any mishap.

THE FRONTIERS

THE frontier regions of Pakistan are Persia, Afghanistan, India, Burma and, of course, the wild and mountainous country lying between the Arabian Sea and the confines of Kashmir, which used to be called the North-West Frontier in the pre-Partition days So far as Pakistan is concerned (and for that matter India too) this is the real frontier, one which should give most trouble India is also vitally interested in this region since after the trouble in Kashmir the north-west frontier of Western Pakistan is also India's frontier in the far north where the frontier country borders on Kashmir

The west and north-west frontier of Western Pakistan is, for reasons of security, the most important of the frontier regions.

NORTH-WEST FRONTIER

It would be useful to see the problem in its historical perspective, to begin with. The Frontier problem has had a two-fold character—the local issue and the international issue For almost a century the international issue was the greater of the two, and the most serious question which the undivided Indian Government, both directly and as the executors of British Imperial policy, had to face But the tendency of later times before the Partition was for the international aspect to recede and for the local aspect to grow in importance, until it might be said with as much truth as characterises all generalisations, that the local issue dominated, if it did not absorb the situation

The local problem, in its broadest outline, may be briefly indicated before proceeding to discuss it in detail From the Arabian Sea on the West to the confines of Kashmir is a wild and troublous sea of some of the highest mountains in the world. The thin valleys in these immense ranges are populated by hardy, brave, militant mountaineers But sparse as the population is, it is in excess of the supporting power of the country Like mountaineers in all parts of the world, these brave and fearless men have sought to supplement their exiguous agriculture by raiding the rich plains down below. We may find a fairly close parallel to the situation in the position of the Highlands of Scotland until after the rebellion of 1745 the English Government of the day sought a permanent remedy by opening for the warlike Highlanders a military career in the famous Highland regiments, and in rendering military operations easier by the construction of Wade's road The Highland problem has disappeared so long from English politics that its pregnant lessons are little realised, but if the curious student will read again that brilliant novel by Neil Munro, "The New Road," he will appreciate what Wade's work meant for the Highlands of Scotland, and what lessons it teaches those who are called upon to face, in its local aspect, the frontier problem of India and more especially of Pakistan

So far as the area with which we are dealing was concerned, two policies were tried. In Baluchistan, the genius of Sir Robert Sandeman devised the method of entering into military occupation of the principal points, and thence controlling the country. At the same time close engagements were entered into with the principal chiefs, through whom the tribesmen were kept in order.

That policy was so successful that whilst the administration was expensive the Baluchistan frontier did not seriously embarrass the Government of India from the time when Sandeman set his mark on the land Thus so far as this section of the frontier is concerned it may be said that no frontier problem exists, save the need for an economic and constructive policy

AFGHAN FRONTIER

Far otherwise has it until lately been with the section of the frontier which stretches from Baluchistan to the confines of Kashmir. That was, for three-quarters of a century, the scene of almost ceaseless military operations, which constituted a devastating drain on the Indian exchequer. For years one sought for a definite policy guiding the actions of the Government of India One explanation of their inconsistencies was found in the existence of two schools of thought Once the frontier with Afghanistan had been delimited, the soldiers naturally pressed for the armed occupation of the whole country right up to the confines of Afghanistan, or at any rate, for military posts, linked with good communications, which would dominate the country But those who looked at policy not only from the military standpoint, were fearful of two considerations. They felt that occupation up to the Afghan frontier would only shift the frontier problem farther north. Instead of the differing tribes, we should, they argued, have to meet the Afghan on our border line. If Afghanistan were a strong, homogeneous State, that would be a matter of little account. But even under the iron rule of Abdurrahaman Khan, the Amir's writ ran but lightly in the southern confines of his kingdom. Under his successor, Habibullah Khan, whose policy was generally wise and successful, it ran still less firmly. There was the further consideration that financiers were of the fixed belief that even if the Forward Policy was wise from the military standpoint, it would involve charges over an indefinite period greater than the Indian finances would bear Moreover, on this section of the frontier, the position was complicated by the expansion of Russia in Central Asia. The easiest passes, and the passes down which for centuries from the time of Alexander the Great invaders have swept from Persia and Central Asia to loot the fat plains of Hindustan, traverse this region. Therefore it was deemed essential to control, if not to occupy them, in the interests of the Imperial situation In this zone therefore policy ebbed and flowed between the Forward School, which would have occupied, or dominated, the whole frontier up to the Durand Line, that is to say up to the Afghan frontier, and the Close Border School, which would have remained out of the difficult mountainous zone and met the tribesmen on the plains if they sallied forth

THE TWO POLICIES

The result of this conflict of opinion was a series of wavering compromises, which like all compromises were profoundly unsatisfactory. The Government pushed forward posts here and there, which irritated the tribesmen, and made them fearful for their prized independence, without controlling them These advanced posts were in many cases inadequately held and rarely were they linked with their supporting posts by adequate means of communication. The Government preserved between their administrative frontier and the Durand Line which demarcated the Indian frontier with Afghanistan an irregular belt of land called the Tribal Territory, in which neither the British nor the Afghan Government exercised jurisdiction This was left entirely under the control of the tribes who peopled it

Now it was often asked why the Government did not follow the precedent of Baluchistan and "Sandemanise" the Independent Territory. The answer was there were essential differences between this zone and Baluchistan. Sir Robert Sandeman found a strong tribal system existing in Baluchistan, and he was able to enter into direct engagements with the tribal chiefs. There is no such tribal organisation in the Independent Territory. The tribal chiefs, or maliks, exercise a very precarious authority, and the instrument for the collective expression of the tribal will is not the chief, but the jirgah, or tribal council, of the most democratic character, where the voice of the young men of the tribe often has the same influence, in time of excitement perhaps more influence, as the voice of the wiser greybeard.

The bitter fruit of this policy of compromise was reaped in 1897, when following a minor outbreak in the Tochi Valley the general uneasiness flamed into a rising which involved the whole of the North-West Frontier, from the Gomal to the borders of Kashmir. A force over thirty thousand strong had to be mobilised to deal with it Even this large force owing to the immense difficulties of transportation, was unable effectively to deal with the situation, though peace was made

The emergency thus created synchronised with the advent of Lord Curzon as Viceroy. He dealt with it in masterful fashion. In the first place, he separated the frontier zone from the Government of the Punjab, which had hitherto been responsible for its administration, and had organised for the purpose a special force of Frontier soldiers, known as the Punjab Irregular Frontier Force The area so separated was constituted into a separate administrative zone under the direct authority of the Government of India, exercised through a Chief Commissioner Then Lord Curzon withdrew the advanced military posts and concentrated the regular troops in bases better linked with the main military centres of India by roads and railways. The advanced posts, and especially important Passes like the Tochi, the Kurram and the Khyber, were entrusted to the defence of local militia, recruited from the tribesmen themselves, and officered by British officers drawn from the ranks of the Indian Army.

Later it was supplemented by a fine development policy. The construction of the Upper Swat Canal, led to such an increase in cultivation that the tribesmen were given a means of livelihood and were invested with the magic charm of valuable property The irrigated part of the Frontier has since been one of the most peaceful in the whole border line.

THE AFGHAN WAR

Judged by every reasonable standard the Curzon policy was successful. It endured throughout the Great War, though the Wazirs built up a heavy bill of offences, which awaited settlement when Government were free from the immense preoccupations of the war It broke down under the strain of the invasion of India by the Afghans in the hot weather of 1919 On February 20th the Amir Habibullah Khan was assassinated in his sleep near Jelalabad. Although he does not figure so prominently in frontier history as his iron father Abdurrahaman Khan, he nevertheless has high claims on the favourable verdict of history In truth, the position of the Amir when Turkey entered the war, and called Moslems everywhere to arms on the side of Germany, was extraordinarily difficult. He received Turkish, German and Austrian missions in Kabul, from which British representatives were still excluded But he kept Afghanistan out of the war, and with the complete defeat of the Central Powers and their satellites, his policy was justified up to the hilt. Indeed his success was the cause of his assassination When he was done to death, his brother, Nasrullah Khan, was proclaimed Amir by the assassins. But the conscience of Afghanistan revolted against the idea of Nasrullah, the arch-fanatic of the ruling House of Kabul, ascending the throne over the blood-stained corpse of his brother. A military movement in Kabul itself brushed him aside and installed the son of Habibullah, Amanullah Khan, on the throne.

But Amanullah Khan soon found it was a thorny bed on which he lay, and encouraged by the disorders in the Indian sub-continent, set his troops in motion on April 25, 1919, and preaching a jehad promised his soldiers the traditional loot of Hindustan The Indian Army was at once set in motion, and as has always been the case the regular Afghan Army was easily beaten Dakka, beyond the Khyber, was seized, Jelalabad and Kabul were bombed from the air, and there was nothing to prevent the British occupation of Kabul, save the knowledge gleaned from the bitter heritage of the wars of 1838 and 1878, that it is one thing to overset a government in Afghanistan, but it is quite another to set up a stable government in its stead. The Government of India wisely held their hand, and the Afghans having sued for peace, a treaty was signed on the 8th August, 1919.

But an untoward effect of this wanton war was to set the Frontier from the Gomal to the Khyber ablaze With one or two exceptions, the Tribal Militia, left without the support of the regular troops, who in the emergency ought to have been hastened to their succour, could not stand the strain of an appeal from their fellow tribesmen, and either melted away or joined the rising.

RUSSIA AND THE FRONTIER

The Curzon policy was up to this inevitable collapse greatly assisted by extraneous events The greatest external force in moulding Indian frontier policy was the long struggle with Russia. For nearly three-quarters of a century a veiled warfare for predominance in Asia was waged between Great Britain and Russia. This external force involved the Government of India in the humiliations of the Afghan War of 1838, with the tragic destruction of the retiring Indian force between Kabul and Jelalabad, slightly relieved by the heroic defence of Jelalabad and the firmness of General Pollock in refusing to withdraw the punitive army until he had set his mark on Kabul by the razing of the famous Bala Hissar fortress. But in the early eighties the two States were on the verge of war over a squabble for the possession of Penjdeh, and then men began to think a little more clearly. There began a series of boundary delimitations and agreements which clarified the situation, without however finally settling it.

The old controversy broke out in another form when intrigues with a Buriat monk, Dorjieff, during Lord Curzon's viceroyalty, gave rise to the grave suspicion that the scene had only shifted to Tibet. An expedition to Lhasa rent the veil which had so long concealed the mysterious city and dispersed the miasma of this intrigue But it was not until the conclusion of the Anglo-Russian agreement of 1907 that the two countries arrived at a stage long sought by those who looked beyond their noses The Agreement embraced the whole frontier zone and placed Afghanistan beyond the sphere of Russian influence There were many unsatisfactory features in the Agreement especially in regard to Persia, for which the British had to pay a considerable price in the attitude of Persians in the War But again taking long views, the Agreement fully justified itself in a broad definition of the interest of the two countries, which put an end to the period of excursions and alarms up to the outbreak of the War.

Russia then ceased to be a material factor in the Indian Frontier Problem With the establishment of the Soviet Government in Moscow uneasiness returned, for the geographical and allied circumstances which influenced the policy of the Tsarist regime exert precisely the same pressure upon its successor.

GERMAN INFLUENCE

As nature abhors a vacuum, so in the case of States bordered by higher civilisations, no sooner does one strong influence recede than some other takes its place. Long before the signing of the Anglo-Russian Agreement the shadow of the German menace had begun to appear on the horizon. The seeds of the German effort were sown when the Kaiser, extending the hand of Christian fellowship to the Sultan of Turkey, Abdul-Hamed, at a time when that sovereign was ostracised by Europe for his direct complicity in the massacre of Armenians, made German influence supreme at Constantinople Later it fructified more effectively in the Baghdad Railway concession, under which German interests secured the right of extending the Anatolian lines from the port of Haidar Pasha, opposite Constantinople, to a port in the Persian Gulf Now successive British statesmen of both parties had declared that the acquisition of a territorial foothold in the Persian Gulf by any power—Russia and the port of Bunder Abbas being then in view—would be regarded as an unfriendly act. There followed a replica of the period of alarms and excursions which had disfigured British relations with Russia. Undaunted, even when their endeavour to secure British co-operation in the enterprise failed, and when the Revolution in Turkey which set the Committee of Union and Progress in power entailed a temporary interruption of their influence at Constantinople, the Germans pressed forward with their enterprise.

Throughout the progress of these schemes, which did not stop short of Baghdad, but were directed through a port in the Persian Gulf, at India, the Germans were anxious to secure the co-operation of Great Britain, if they could do so on their own terms, that is to say without affecting the enterprise as a dominant German adventure. Shortly before the commencement of the War of 1914-18 the protracted negotiations with London which had this end in view ended in a definite agreement between the two Powers. Under this agreement the Gulf section of the line was to have been British, and the other portion German. But this agreement which had not been signed became waste paper with the outbreak of the war, and the German plans vanished into thin air with the complete defeat of Turkey and Germany. Nevertheless the railway did not stand still during the war. Germany made immense efforts to complete the difficult tunnel sections and the work was substantially flashed when the Armistice was signed.

FRANCE AND THE FRONTIER

It is difficult to find any sound policy behind the efforts of France to obtain a coaling station at Muscat in the Persian Gulf, and her long opposition to the steps necessary to extirpate the slave trade, and hold in check the immense traffic in arms which was equipping all the tribesmen on our North-West Frontier with rifles of precision and a large supply of ammunition These embarrassments were slowly removed one by one after the conclusion of the Anglo-French Entente Far otherwise was it in the East. The consolidation of French authority in French Indo-China was the prelude to designs for the expansion of this authority at the expense of Siam and to find compensation there for the veiled British protectorate of Egypt There had earlier been mutterings in Burma. The British were established in Lower Burma in the thirties and in the eighties the foolish and tyrannical King Theebaw, in Upper Burma, became an impossible neighbour, and ambitious Frenchmen were not averse to fanning his opposition to the British. However, if any hopes were entertained of extending the Asiatic possessions of France in this direction, they were dissipated by the Second Burmese War and the firm establishment of British rule.

Far otherwise was it on the confines of Siam. It was the fixed purpose of British policy to preserve Siam as a buffer state between Burma, then a regular Province of the Indian Empire and French Indo-China. This policy was definitely challenged by French encroachments on Siam Matters approached a crisis in 1894, and Britain and France were within measurable distance of a situation which might have ended in open war between them But as in the case of Penjdeh and later when Major Marchand marched across Africa to Fashoda, the imminence of hostilities made statesmen on both sides ask themselves what they might be going to fight about They found there was nothing of vital interest involved and an agreement was negotiated between the two Powers, which secured the independence and integrity of Siam.

THE NEW FRONTIER PROBLEM

The whole purpose of this brief sketch has been to show that for three generations—most assuredly since the events leading to the Afghan War of 1838—the Indian and Pakistan frontier problem has never been a local problem. It has been dominated by external influences—in the main the long struggle between Great Britain and Russia, for a brief period the German ambition to build up a dominant position in the East through the revival of the land route, and to a much lesser extent by the ambitions of France and Turkey.

The circumstances affecting the Frontier from centres beyond it have greatly changed Old dangers have disappeared Consequently, a great deal of new attention is necessarily being directed to local aspects of the general problem. The tribesman in the north-west borderland was always an opponent to be respected Brave, hardy, fanatical, he has always been a first-class fighting man Now these tribesmen are everywhere armed with magazine rifles, either imported through the Persian Gulf when gun-running was a thriving occupation, stolen from British magazines, or secured from Russian and Afghan sources. They have an abundant supply of ammunition. Considerable numbers of the fighting men have been trained in the ranks of the Indian Army, either as Regulars in the Pathan regiments, or else in the tribal militias.

It may be said that the crux of the situation was in Waziristan. This sector of the Frontier has always been the most difficult of the whole, because of the intractable character of the people, and of their inveterate raiding activities Besides, possessing a bolt hole into Afghanistan they had in the past evaded effective punishment In view of the complete disappearance of the external menace, there were many who urged the desirability of complete withdrawal, even to the line of the Indus. This extreme school gained little support. The position in Quetta on the one side and Peshawar on the other is fully consolidated, and no good case could be made out for withdrawing from it. On the other hand, here was a strong case made out for leaving the tribesmen severely alone from the Gomal to the Kurram, and dealing with them if they emerged from their fastnesses. The military standpoint was that the Waziristan tribes are intractable, that it was unfair to impose on troops the frequent necessity of punitive operations in most arduous conditions, and that the only solution of the question was the occupation of dominant points in Waziristan, as far north as Ladha, and linking these posts with the military bases, and particularly with the termini of the Frontier railways, by good motor roads.

This controversy lasted long It resulted in a compromise which specially arose from the changed conditions in which the British found themselves in 1922, when the troops were in occupation of Waziristan. The ensuing policy has been aptly described as the " halt-forward " policy. It is in truth a repetition of the Sandeman policy, adapted to local conditions There has been no withdrawal in the ordinary sense of the term, but the limit of the North Waziristan occupation was temporarily fixed at Razmak, not at Ladha. A network of consequential roads was pushed forward. In South Waziristan, Wana had been re-occupied, partly in response to a pressing invitation from the Wana Wazirs, because they wanted to share the benefits which they saw British occupation to be bringing to their cousins northward of them.

In February, 1933, control over tribal territory was pushed forward beyond Razmak towards the Afghan Border because of a rebellion on the Afghan side and of the need to assist the King of Kabul by preventing excursions by bodies of Wazirs into Indian territory.

The work of control and of civilization rapidly progressed in the whole territory. Of this particulars are given elsewhere in this chapter. One of its recent fruits was a request by the Afridis for roads in their country of Tirah. A beginning with construction was made, but dissensions within the tribe in regard to it caused the work to be suspended The desirability of better controlling the Afridis was demonstrated in 1930 when, the young Afridis invaded the Peshawar Plain and the need for the adoption of a more active policy in Waziristan was shown by a rising of the Tori Khel Wazirs in 1936-37 A serious military campaign in Waziristan in 1936-37, necessitated by the disturbing religious agitation, showed that conditions there were far from settled. The extent of the trouble there resulted in serious official review of the whole problem once again

The main railhead, which for many years terminated at Jamrud, at the easterly entrance to the Khyber Pass, was in the autumn of 1925 extended to Landi Khana, at the opposite end of the Pass and within a mile of the frontier between India and Afghanistan.

THE WITHDRAWAL

With the establishment of the two Dominions of India and Pakistan what is called the North-West Frontier has passed into the hands of the Dominion of Pakistan. At the beginning some anxiety was felt about the attitude of the tribes towards the new State, but a number of tribal jirgas hastened to offer their allegiance to the new Government For example, the Mohmands, the tribes of the Khyber Agency, the Shiranis and the Bhittanis are reported to have expressed their loyalty to Pakistan and given assurance of help to the State in time of need.

Three months after the new State came into being it carried through what it called a new policy in regard to the frontier ; a policy based on trust and friendship unlike the old policy which, it was claimed, was based on fear and hostility. In pursuance of the new policy troops were withdrawn from south and north Waziristan The withdrawal operations started on December 6 and were completed on December 27 The famous frontier outposts of Wana and Razmak were given up and the Pakistan troops fell back to military stations in the settled districts of Bannu, Dera Ismail Khan and Kohat Pakistan troops have also been withdrawn from the Khyber Pass where sufficient strong forces used to be kept, particularly at the outposts of Torkhan and Kamind Fort.

Necessary administrative arrangements would obviously be made till such time as the Pakistan Constituent Assembly in consultation with tribal leaders decides the future of their Government A committee has already been appointed for the purpose during the preliminary session

One of the objects of the withdrawal is to save the Pakistan exchequer several crores

The effects of this 'close border' policy are likely to be far-reaching For instance, the frontier between Pakistan and Afghanistan the so-called Durand Line has never been clearly defined or demarcated In the old days the tribes have profited by the existence of these military outposts a number of economic advantages have accrued to them, a very important point in a barren and rugged country. The question may be asked Does the Pakistan Government intend to substitute other economic aids to keep the tribesmen contented ? If not is there not a danger of a recrudescence of tribal raids across the border in search of food and loot ? What effect will all this have on north-western Pakistan or Kashmir in which India is interested ? Again, what is the position to be in respect of that natural but strongly defensible gateway to the Indian sub-continent, the Khyber Pass which itself lies in the Afridi country ?

AFGHAN INTEREST

It is presumed that the withdrawal of troops would help maintain happy and peaceful relations between Pakistan and Afghanistan A point which must be mentioned here is the strong interest which the Government of Afghanistan evinced in the future of the N W F P during the referendum A note presented by the Government of Afghanistan in London in the middle of June appeared to revive its claims on the N W F P, the land between the Indus and the Durand Line But closer scrutiny showed that what the note actually demanded was that the Pathans should be given the choice to be completely independent of the rest of the sub-continent, a demand which appeared to be in harmony with that of the Red Shirts who were agitating for an independent Pathanistan

The Afghan press and radio for sometime emphasized the close kinship between the Pathans and the Afghans and suggested that that was the opportune moment for the Pathans to come back to their 'mother country'. A further suggestion was that Afghanistan should be allowed to send its own mission to conduct the referendum.

The Afghan note was rejected both by Britain and India. The British reply said that the question of the future of N.W.F.P. would be decided by the Pathans themselves while the Indian reply took the line that the boundary between Afghanistan and India was settled once and for all by the Durand Line.

The status of the border area is once again causing trouble between Pakistan and Afghanistan.

The withdrawal of British rule reopened the whole question of the future of the native States in Baluchistan. Persia and Afghanistan were greatly interested and the Khan of Kalat sat on the fence for a long time. Eventually the question was decided by the accession of Kalat, Kharan and Las Bela to the Dominion of Pakistan.

Beyond Afghanistan and Persia was Russia who was credited with the desire of uniting the inhabitants of north Afghanistan with allied groups in the U S S R and offering Afghanistan compensation in N W F P. There also appeared to be an impression that Russian eyes were directed on a warm water port in the Indian Ocean as an outlet for Central Asian produce and that this warm water port might be Karachi.

Altogether, the whole frontier question may be described as being once again alive.

WAZIRISTAN

After a general discussion of the north-west frontier problem we may next pass on to a detailed discussion of the past history and present conditions of Waziristan which is the most unruly and turbulent part of the whole region.

Geographically, Waziristan is a rough parallelogram averaging 60 miles from East to West and 160 from North to South. The western half consists of the Sulaiman Range gradually rising up to the ridge from five to ten thousand feet high, which forms the water-shed between the Indus and the Helmund Rivers and corresponds with the Durand Line separating Pakistan from Afghanistan. This is the western boundary. On the east is the Indus. North is the water-shed of the Kurram River running East and West about 30 miles north of Bannu separating Waziristan from the Kohat District South is a zigzag political boundary from the Durand Line running between Wana and Fort Sandeman in Baluchistan with a turn southwards to the Indus.

The western half is a rugged and inhospitable medley of ridges and ravines straggled and confused in hopeless disarray. The more inhabited portions lie well up the slope at heights of four to six thousand feet. Here are the outposts of Wana and Razmak some 15 and 20 miles respectively from the Durand Line, in the centre of the grazing district, the latter within five miles of important villages of Kaniguram and Makin.

The submontane tracts from the hills to the Indus vary from the highly cultivated and irrigated land round Bannu to the sand desert in the Marwat above Pezu.

Where irrigation or river water is obtainable cultivation is attempted under conditions which can hardly be encouraging. Other tracts like that between Pezu and Tank, usually pastoral, can only hope for an occasional crop after a lucky rainfall

Inhabitants—The inhabitants, unable to support existence on their meagre soil, make up the margin by armed robbery of their richer and more peaceful neighbours. The name originates according to tradition from one Wazir, two of whose grandsons were the actual founders of the race. Of the four main tribes Darweshkhel, Mahsuds, Dawars and Batanni, only the first two are true Wazirs. Their villages are separate though dotted about more or less indiscriminately, and inter-marriage is the exception—in fact all traditionally are in open strife, a circumstance which, until some bright political comet like the Afghan War of 1919 joined them together, materially aided British dealings with them.

Unlike other parts of the frontier however these wild people acknowledge little allegiance to maliks or headmen. No one except perhaps the Mulla Powindah till his death in 1913 could speak of any portion of them as his following.

The policy of the British was at first one of non-interference with the tribes. Gradually it was found that more and more supervision became necessary to control raiding and this was attempted by expeditions to portions of the country with Regulars, followed by building posts and brick towers to be held by Militia These posts were at first placed at the points where raiders usually debouched

The Political Officers, at first supported by Regulars, built up from 1904 onwards a force of some 3,000 Militia with British Officers at their disposal, who were backed up by the garrisons at Bannu and Dera Ismail Khan. In addition certain allowances were made to the tribes for good behaviour, prevention of raids and surrender of offenders when required, also for tribal escorts as necessary. Gradually, as occasion required, posts were constructed and occupied Wana was occupied in 1895 at the request of the Wana Wazirs Similarly the Tochi in 1816 In the comprehensive expedition of 1895-96 when this policy was put into effect, the British arms were shown in every remote valley in the vain hope of taming the Mahsuds It was hoped the various posts would prove a pacifying influence and a rallying ground for Government supporters From 1904 to 1919 they were held by Militia Roads and communications were improved and tribal allowances augmented by sales of produce to the troops on a liberal scale.

A COMPROMISE

A full statement of the policy finally adopted by Government in view of the situation left upon their hands after the Mahsud rebellion was made by the Foreign Secretary, Sir Denys Bray, in the course of a Budget discussion in the Legislative Assembly on 5th March 1923. He outlined neither a Forward policy nor a Close Border policy. Both these terms had, in fact, ceased to be appropriate. Circumstances had so changed that neither the one plan nor the other remained within the bounds of reasonable argument

Sir Denys referred to the triumph of the Sandeman policy in Baluchistan He pointed out that some people long ago believed that the same policy would prove effective in Waziristan. "But what was a practical proposition 20 or 30 years ago is not necessarily so now The task is infinitely more difficult today, chiefly because the tribesmen are infinitely better armed; their arms having increased at least tenfold during the last 20 years"

Dealing with the Close Border prescription Sir Denys Bray showed that if one erected a Chinese wall of barbed-wire fence along the plain some distance below the hills, "all the time the problem in front of us would be going from bad to worse, with the inevitable increase of arms in the trans-border and with that inevitable increase in the economic stringency in this mountainous tract, which would make the tribesmen more and more desperate, more and more thrown back on barbarism.

The settled policy of Government in Waziristan, Sir Denys stated, was the control of that country through a road system, of which about 140 miles would lie in Waziristan itself and one hundred miles along the border of Derajat, and the maintenance of some 4,600 Khassadars and of some 5,000 irregulars, while at Razmak, 6,500 feet high and overlooking northern Waziristan, there would be an advanced base occupied by a strong garrison of regular troops This was a forward policy in a very real sense, for it was a policy of constructive progress and was a big step forward on the long and laborious road towards the pacification, through civilization, of the most backward and inaccessible, and therefore the most turculent and aggressive tribes on the border.

The policy thus initiated for a period proceeded with results according to the highest reasonable expectations and exceeding the most sanguine hopes of most people concerned in its formulation.

PACIFICATION

The roads were policed by the Khassadars, who in the main, until the Tori Khel rebellion of 1936-37 upset some of them, proved faithful to their trust. The open hostility of the Wazir tribesmen to the presence of troops and other agents of Government in their midst, which at the outset they showed by shooting up individuals and small bodies of troops at every opportunity, faded away, and the people showed an understanding of the rule of law, and, under the control exercised, a readiness to conform to it. In various small but significant ways, methods of civilization caught the imagination of the people and won their approval. Thus, the safety of the roads was encouraged, and became buttressed by a considerable development of motor-bus traffic The roads, as the king's Highway, are officially held to be sacrosanct, that is no shooting up or other pursuit of personal or tribal feuds is permitted upon them This permits villagers to proceed to and from the plains and towns in safety. Under the influence of their women, the tribesmen applied that the ban against shooting upon the highway would be extended to all the country for three miles on either side of the highway.

Tentative efforts to introduce primary education proved possible and achieved as much success as could be expected The hospitals and dispensaries maintained for irregular troops, called Scouts, employed about the country, attend to the wants of the tribespeople who come to them So much has this arrangement been appreciated that the Mahsuds formally applied for the establishment of a hospital of their own. With grim humour, they offered to provide such an institution with the necessary surgical instruments, saying that they had saved this from the time when the British formerly left the country. In other words, they offered what they had captured or looted during the 1919 emeute

Wana was occupied, following an encouraging petition from the local Wazirs, in 1929. A motor road had already been run out from Jandola through Chagmalai and the Shahur Tangi to Sarwekai. A brigade of troops, hitherto stationed at Manzai, whereabout the Takki Zam, after flowing down its deep valley from central Waziristan, debouches on to the Derajat, was accordingly ordered up to Wana in the autumn of 1929 It proceeded throughout the journey thither without opposition and was warmly welcomed by the tribes people at Wana, where it established itself in a favourably sited camp not far from the fort which was the earlier centre of British occupation

The area cultivated by the villagers of Wana plain doubled by the end of 1931 and the people declared their readiness to surrender their firearms if their neighbours also gave up theirs or were deprived of them A road was built connecting Fort Sandeman via Gulkach, on the Gomal river, with Tanai, on the Sarwekai-Wana road A motor road was also constructed from Razmak through Kaniguram, in the heart of the Mahsud country, to Wana It was completed in 1933 and the only disputes connected with its construction arose from the rivalry of the tribesmen whose villages lie along the route and who sometimes fought one another to secure road-making contracts.

Congress Movement.—A startling new development upon the North-West Frontier during 1930 was the spread thereto of the agitation which was then in full swing in the interior of India In the N-W F P the agitation was carried on by Congress organised in what are known as Khilafat Committees It started as an attack on the Sarda Act which makes illegal and provides penalties for the marriage of boys and girls below stated minimum ages Gradually the tribal areas were affected. The first point of violent combustion was Peshawar city. Within a short time Afridi bands descended the ravines and nullahs to join in the fray. The Mohmand tribes became greatly excited and sent down bands to sit near the border and watch for an opportunity to join in. The Upper Tochi Wazirs simultaneously took to arms and shortly afterwards the Mahsud Wazirs about Ladha, did the same. At this stage, the Air arm of the Government came into play Aeroplanes patrolled the whole country and were frequently employed by the political authorities to take preventive and punitive action by bombing The road system meanwhile, enabled troops to be moved at will to positions of advantage for dealing with whatever serious tribal aggression appeared likely.

In the result the Mohmands, after being bombed several times, made no descent in force The Afridis twice endeavoured to raid Peshawar in force but by combined air and land action were both times driven back to their hills The Orakzais of southern Tirah threatened to descend by the Ublan Pass upon Kohat and their western clans attacked a post in the Upper Kurram and endeavoured to attack Parachinar Even two or three clans of Afghan tribesmen across the border were drawn into the fray Combined air and ground action threw them back The Tochi Wazirs heavily attacked Datta Khel, but were speedily repulsed. The Mahsuds were similarly repulsed and punished when they assaulted Sororogha, in the valley of the Takki Zam

The entire uprising was suppressed and the establishment of new fortified posts on the Peshawar plain, immediately opposite the main valleys leading out of Tirah, and the construction of roads for their service, indicated the application of the new frontier policy in that region. The Afridis long refused to assent to these, but being thereby deprived of access to their normal winter grazing grounds on the Khajuri and Aka Khel plain, and prevented from visiting Peshawar, their marketing centre, they came in and accepted peace under the new conditions before the opening of the winter of 1931-32. The Afridis later asked for roads into Tirah but were not yet sufficiently agreed among themselves or construction successfully to proceed.

MOHMAND OUTBREAK

Disturbances in the Mohmand country during the summer of 1933 both illustrated the operation of the new Frontier policy and the need to keep it a live policy if it was to be of any use at all The Mohmands may for the purposes of present description be divided into two categories namely, the Upper Mohmands, who live in the highlands of the Mohmand country, and the Lower Mohmands, whose country stretches from the lower altitudes of the same hills down to the Peshawar Plain. Through the country of the Upper Mohmands passes the Durand line but the Afghan Government never agreed to its delimitation in part of this region and consequently its place had long been taken over a considerable portion of the length of the frontier by what was described as the Presumptive Frontier The exact position of this latter had never been settled between the two governments and it was consequently sometimes difficult to say whether people from particular villages belonged to one side or to the other of it

In 1932 during the Red Shirt campaign in the Peshawar plain, the Upper Mohmands decided to join in and raids in the administered territory immediately northward of Peshawar occurred

The Lower Mohmands were described as the Assured Tribes The meaning of the description was that the British authorities assured them protection against the attacks of the Upper Mohmands and they, on the other hand were bound by promises of good behaviour The Assured Tribes in 1932 interfered with the programme of the Upper Mohmands in raiding the plain, and the Upper Mohmands in 1933, when spring and early summer once more facilitated their methods of campaigning, commenced retributory raids upon the Halimzai and other Assured clans The attacked clans appealed to the political authorities for help which the latter were obliged to give

About the same time as this movement was germinating, there appeared in Bajaur, a country immediately to the north of that in which the events just described developed, a Pretender to the Afghan throne. He was accompanied by two companions and started a campaign in Bajaur for a revolution or such other trouble as might be possible in Afghanistan This compelled the British authorities to take measures in fulfilment of their obligations of good neighbourliness to Afghanistan.

Peace —Road construction from the Peshawar Shabkadr road northwards through Ghalanai into the Halimzai country and towards the passes which lead from that country into the upper extremities of the Bajaur Valley was undertaken and two brigades of troops, with other details, were sent forward up it to assist in dealing with the Upper Mohmands At the same time, aeroplanes bombarded the village of Kotkai in Upper Bajaur, which had given shelter to the Pretender, further aerial demonstrations were made and the Bajauris were given an ultimatum demanding the surrender of the Pretender by a given date

The Upper Mohmands continuing aggressive and the Bajauris obdurate, there was good prospect of a campaign over the same country as that covered by the campaign of 1897. It seemed likely that the Ghalanai Road would be continued into the upper extremity of Bajaur and that another road for troops would also have to be constructed from Malakand up the Bajaur valley itself so that by the meeting of the two roads in Upper Bajaur, there would become established a circular road through this part of the tribal territory, resembling that running through North Waziristan.

In the end, the Upper Mohmands, partly doubtless because of punishment which they received in certain encounters with British troops and partly probably because of influence brought to bear upon them from Kabul, retired to their hills and after negotiations entered into bonds to keep the peace; and the Bajauris, while maintaining on grounds of tribal custom their refusal to surrender the Pretender, nevertheless expelled that person from their territory, probably into Afghanistan Thus, the trouble ceased The final result of it all was the construction of the road through Ghalanai and the rapid development of bus services and other activities of civilization which speedily took place along with it.

The Upper Mohmands made another descent in the summer of 1935 The Lower Mohmands quarrelled among themselves over the distribution of road maintenance contracts and the Upper Mohmands decided to fish in the troubled waters Successful military operations ended in the Upper Mohmands suing for peace—and in the Ghalanai road being carried forward over the Nahakki Pass and down beyond it on to the plain which extends to the natural road junction where the Upper Bajaur Valley meets the Upper Mohmand country.

TORI KHEL REBELLION

The Wazirs and Mahsuds in 1930 showed signs of rebelling against Government in parallel with the Afridis All went peacefully until the autumn of 1936 in North Waziristan when a Muslim lad was accused of kidnapping a Hindu girl of Bannu. Apparently she eloped with him. She was restored to her parents by order of the Civil Court, on the ground that she was a minor. There was a good deal of communal excitement about the matter and the faqir of Ipi was alleged to have started an agitation about it in the Tribal country There was also in 1936, a dispute between Muslims and Sikhs in Lahore over the possession of an old building said to have been a mosque This was settled in the Lahore High Court in favour of the Sikhs and the Punjab Muslims accepted the decision The faqir of Ipi is said to have lumped together the Bannu Girl Case and the Lahore (Shahidganj) Mosque Case and to have raised among the Waziristan Tribes the slogan, "Islam in Danger." Whether the accusation against the faqir was true or not a sub-section of the Tori Khel section of the Wazirs of Northern Waziristan rose. Their elders begged Government to order a flag march of troops through their country so as to increase the credit of the loyalist element. This Government did The troops were heavily fired upon and had to fight their own way out. Efforts to round off the engagement before it developed into a major rebellion failed and there followed a war in which the Tori Khel were the only tribal section avowedly at war with Government but all the other tribesmen of the country were hardly more than nominally friendly, some joined in gangs to fight the authorities and others connived at such acts Not until the fall of winter towards the end of 1937 were the Tori Khel and the bands of irreconcilables under daring leaders beaten by extensive military operations into asking for peace. The summer campaign in 1937 involved the employment of 50,000 troops Before they were withdrawn in the following winter 100 miles of new roads opening up some of the hitherto inaccessible country in and about the upper reaches of the Shaktu river were made But north Waziristan remained, in a disturbed condition throughout 1938 and on into 1939 It was therefore, found necessary to keep an extra brigade in the territory and spasmodic operations against recalcitrant gangs proceeded by land and air but normal conditions were not restored

Unrest during War.—In the summer of 1938 a temporary complication was provided by the appearance amongst the Mahsuds of a Syrian called the Shami Pir who was only just prevented from leading a tribal incursion to support a rebellion against the Government of Kabul The persistence and expense of the trouble in Waziristan, constituting as it did a heart-breaking set-back to the "policy" which had seemed for fifteen years to be achieving material results, provoked renewed discussion of Frontier policy especially in regard to military commitments which were examined by a Defence Committee under the chairmanship of Lord Chatfield who visited India on behalf of the British Government towards the end of 1938

Although hostile sections still persisted with mischief there was thought by April 1939 to be sufficient justification for the hope that the period of major military operations was over and Waziristan was in consequence returned to the charge of the Governor of the N-W F P, in his capacity as A G G for the tribal areas Sporadic disturbances continued into the period of the second world war and the Faqir remained an elusive figure

During 1939, Waziristan was in a state of continual unrest The number of offences said to have been committed by the Ahmedzai tribesmen by the end of the year amounted to over fifty cases of major outrage They included blasting of bridges and destruction of communications, holding up and looting lorries, sniping, kidnapping and several cases of murder The situation became difficult necessitating military operations Two columns of troops were sent to the Ahmedzai salient and it took three months to subdue the hostile elements.

A detailed investigation into the economic conditions in the tribal areas, as a preliminary step to the adoption of measures aimed at radical improvement of the tribesmen, was thereupon believed to be opportune and would probably have been attempted but for the preoccupations of the war.

IRAN

From causes which only need to be very briefly set out, the Iran question as affecting Pakistan frontier policy has receded until it is of no account Reference is made in the introduction to this section to the fact that the conclusion of the Anglo-Russian Agreement (1904) left the British a bitter legacy in Persia. That Agreement divided Iran into two zones of influence, and the Iranians bitterly resented this apparent division of their kingdom between the two Powers, though no such end was in view. German agents, working cleverly on this feeling, established an influence which was not suspected, and when World War I broke out they were able to raise the tribes in opposition to Great Britain, in the south, and after the fall of Kutal-Amara, when a Turkish Division penetrated Western Iran, they exercised a strong influence in Teheran.

With the defeat of Turkey and the Central Powers this influence disappeared, but at that time there was no authority in Iran besides that of the British Government, which had strong forces in the North-West and controlled the southern provinces through a force organised under British officers and called The South Persian Rifles.

It was one of the first tasks of the British Government to regularise this position, and for this purpose an agreement was reached with the then Persian Government, the main features of which were —

To respect Persian integrity;
To supply experts for Persian administration;
To supply officers and equipment for a Persian force for the maintenance of order;
To provide a loan for these purposes;
To co-operate with the Persian Government in railway construction and other forms of transport

Both Governments agreed to the appointment of a joint committee to examine and revise the Customs tariff.

The second agreement defined the terms and conditions on which the loan was to be made to Persia The loan was for £2,000,000 at 7 per cent. redeemable in 20 years. It was secured on the revenues and Customs' receipts assigned for the repayment of the 1911 loan and should these be insufficient the Persian Government was to make good the necessary sums from other sources

When however the British troops in the north-west retired before the Bolsheviks, the Iranians had no use for the Agreement and it soon became a dead instrument. It was finally rejected and the advisers who were to have assisted Persia under it withdrew.

The general situation in Iran was gravely disturbed in 1932 by the sudden termination by the Iran Government of the Anglo-Iran Oil Co's concession, a matter affecting one of the biggest industrial undertakings in the world and millions sterling of capital. The intervention of the British Government led to the reference of the trouble to the League of Nations and this paved the way for negotiations between the Company and the Iran Government While these were being settled some progress was also made with general negotiations between the British and Iran Governments for an agreement covering all outstanding points of difficulty between them.

In July, 1941, Britain drew the attention of the Iranian Government to the danger of allowing German tourists in their country A large number of German technicians and camouflaged agents had been infiltrating into Iran The Iran Government's reply being unsatisfactory, the British and Soviet representatives made a new demarche to Iran in August, 1941, without any result On one point, however, the Government of Iran made some concession to British feelings, that of restraining the activities of Rashid Ali and his supporters from Iraq who had been actively consorting with Axis representatives. The British and Russian demarche requested the expulsion of Germans from Iran.

On the Iran Government's failure to do so in August, 1941, the British and Soviet Governments decided to take action. The Soviet Government in their note to Iran pointed out that they found themselves confronted with the necessity of taking immediate steps and exercising their right by virtue of paragraph 6 of the 1921 treaty in the form of sending troops to Iranian territory for temporary occupation in order to safeguard the security of the Soviet. It assured the Iran Government that those measures were not in any way directed towards Iran. The Soviet had no territorial desire nor any intention of infringing the independence of Iran. The note also assured the Iran Government that as soon as the danger threatening them was past the Soviet Government, in obedience to the obligations undertaken in the 1921 treaty, would withdraw their forces from Iranian territory The British Ambassador in Teheran presented a similar note simultaneously.

Following on the Allied plan of action British and Indian forces entered Iran at three points The Soviet troops entered from the Caucasus The Allied forces met with a slight resistance at first but on August 28th, 1941, the Iran Government issued to their forces an order to cease fire, a new Cabinet being formed under the Prime Ministership of Mr Ali Furughi. It entered into negotiations with the Allies and concluded peace. One of the clauses of the peace terms was that the Iranians should facilitate the transit of supplies and war materials to Russia. Iran agreed to the closing of German, Italian, Rumanian and Hungarian Legations Further, German nationals were handed over to the Allies. The terms also included the withdrawal of the Iranian troops from certain zones In September, 1941, the Shah of Iran, Reza Shah Pehlvi abdicated in favour of the Crown Prince, Shahpur. Reza Shah Pehlvi died in July 1944

All through the War Persia was a life-line in the communication of the Western Allies with Russia After the War differences between America and England on the one hand and Russia on the other broke out chiefly on the question of oil America and England appear to be pursuing a common policy in this regard Briefly the Russian demand on Persia is that Persia should fulfil the provisions of the treaty which she has signed with Russia in regard to oil rights. In effect Russia is demanding the same rights in north Persia as those which she claims the Anglo-Americans are enjoying in the south Two incidents in this triangular struggle were the starting of an autonomous movement in the border region of Azerbaijan in the north and the resignation of a Prime Minister Ghavam-es-Sultaneh The whole question is still hanging fire Of late however there have been signs that Persia is striking out an independent line in international politics.

Pakistan has an embassy in Iran.

AFGHANISTAN

The relations of Afghanistan with the Indian Empire were for long dominated by one main consideration—the relation of Afghanistan to a Russian invasion of India. All other considerations were of secondary importance. For nearly three-quarters of a century the attitude of Great Britain towards successive Amirs has been dictated by this one factor. It was in order to prevent Afghanistan from coming under the influence of Russia that the first Afghan War of 1838 was fought—the most melancholy episode in Indian frontier history. It was because a Russian envoy was received at Kabul whilst the British representative was turned back at Ali Masjid that the Afghan War of 1878 was waged. After that the whole end of British policy toward Afghanistan was to build up a strong independent State, friendly to Britain, which would act as a buffer against Russia, and so to order our frontier policy that we should be in a position to move large forces up, if necessary, to support the Afghans in resisting aggression.

GATE-WAYS TO PAKISTAN

A knowledge of the trans-frontier geography of the sub-continent brought home to the administrators the conviction that there were only two main gate-ways to Pakistan—through Afghanistan, the historic route to India, along which successive invasions have poured, and by way of Seistan. It was the purpose of British policy to close them, and of Russia to endeavour to keep them at any rate half open.

To this end, having pushed her trans-Persian railway to Samarkand, Russia thrust a military line from Merv to the Kushkinsky Post, where railway material is collected for its immediate prolongation to Herat Later, she connected the trans-Siberian railway with the trans-Caucasian system, by the Orenburg-Tashkent line, thus bringing Central Asia into direct touch with her European magazines.

Nor was Great Britain idle A great military station was created at Quetta This was connected with the Indian railway system by lines of railway which climb to the Quetta plateau by the Bolan Pass and through the Chapper Rift From Quetta the line has been carried by the Khojak tunnel through the Khwaja Amran Range, until it leads out to the Afghan Border at New Chaman, where it opens on the route to Kandahar. The whole of Baluchistan was also brought under British control Quetta is thus one of the great strategical positions of the world, and nothing has been left undone which modern military science can achieve to add to its natural strength In the opinion of many military authorities it should firmly close the western gate to Pakistan, either by way of Kandahar, or by the direct route through Seistan

Further east, the first railway system was carried to Jamrud and by 1925 up the Khyber Pass to Landi Kotal and down the other side of the Pass to Landi Khana on the Afghan Frontier A first-class military road, sometimes double, sometimes treble, also threads the Pass to an advanced post at Landi Kotal, and then descends until it meets the Afghan Frontier at Landi Khana. In this wise, to continue the story, the two Powers prepared for the great conflict which was to be fought on the Kandahar-Ghazni-Kabul line

RELATIONS WITH SUB-CONTINENT

Between the advanced posts on either side stands the Kingdom of Afghanistan The end of British policy was to make it strong and friendly. In the first particular it largely succeeded The second aim may also be said to have been attained When Abdurrahaman was invited to ascend the throne, none realised his great qualities. Previously the Amir of Afghanistan had been the chief of a confederacy of clans Abdurrahaman made himself master in his own kingdom. Aided by a British subsidy of twelve lakhs of rupees a year, increased to eighteen by the Durand Agreement of 1893, and subsequently to over 20 lakhs, he established a strong standing army and set up arsenals under foreign supervision to furnish it with arms and ammunition Step by step his position was regularised The Anglo-Russian Boundary Commission,—which nearly precipitated war over the Penjdeh episode in 1885,—determined the northern boundaries The Pamirs Agreement delimited the borders amid those snowy heights. The Durand Agreement settled the border on the British side, except for a small section to the west of the Khyber, which remained a fruitful source of trouble between Afghanistan and Britain until 1919, when the Afghan claims and action upon the undemarcated section led to war That section was finally surveyed and the frontier determined shortly after the conclusion of peace with Afghanistan. Finally the McMahon award closed the old feud with Persia over the distribution of the waters of the Helmund in Seistan. This frontier was later reaffirmed by a Turkish boundary commission appointed by Iran and Afghanistan conjointly.

It was estimated by competent authorities that about the time of Abdurrahaman's death, Afghanistan was in a position to place in the field, in the event of war, one hundred thousand well-armed regular and irregular troops, together with two hundred thousand tribal levies, and to leave fifty thousand regulars and irregulars and a hundred thousand levies to maintain order in Kabul and the provinces But if Afghanistan was made strong, it was not made friendly. Abdurrahaman Khan distrusted British policy up to the day of his death. He closed his country absolutely against all foreigners, except those who were necessary for the supervision of his arsenals and factories. He refused to accept a British Resident, on the ground that he could not protect him, and British affairs were entrusted to an Indian agent, who was in a most equivocal position. At the same time he repeatedly pressed for the right to pass by the Government of India and to establish his own representative at the Court of St. James.

FIRST WORLD WAR

These relations were markedly improved during the reign of the Amir Habibullah Khan. He visited India soon after his accession He strengthened and consolidated his authority in Afghanistan itself At the outset of the war he made a declaration of his complete neutrality It is believed that he warned the Government of India that he might be forced into many equivocal acts, but that they must trust him; his reception of Turkish, Austrian and German "missions" at Kabul, at a time when British representatives were severely excluded, was open to grave misconstruction But a fuller knowledge induced the belief that the Amir was in a position of no little difficulty. He had to compromise with the fanatical and anti-British elements amongst his own people, inflamed by the Turkish preaching of a jehad, or holy Islamic war. But he committed no act of hostility; as soon as it was safe to do so he turned the members of these missions out of the kingdom. At the end of the war his policy was completely justified; he had kept Afghanistan out of the war, he had adhered to the winning side; his authority in the kingdom and in Central Asia was at its zenith.

MURDER OF THE AMIR

It is believed that if he had lived Habibullah Khan would have used this authority for a progressive policy in Afghanistan, by opening up communications and extending his engagements with India. He was courted by the representatives of Persia and the Central Asian States as the possible rallying centre of a Central Asian Islamic confederation At this moment he was assassinated on the 20th February 1919.

The circumstances surrounding his murder have never been fully explained, but there is strong ground for the belief that it was promoted by the reactionaries who had harassed him all his reign. These realised that with his vindication by the war their time of reckoning had come; they anticipated it by suborning one of his aides to murder him in his sleep His brother, Nasrullah Khan, the nominee of the fanatical element, was proclaimed Amir at Jelalabad in his stead, but public opinion in Afghanistan revolted at the idea of the brother seizing power over the corpse of the murdered man

His sons, Hayat and Amanullah, were not disposed to waive their heritage. Amanullah was at Kabul, controlling the treasury and the arsenal and supported by the Army Nasrullah found it impossible to make headway against him and withdrew.

The new Amir, Amanullah, at once communicated his accession to the Government of India and proclaimed his desire to adhere to the traditional policy of friendship. But his difficulties multiplied, he had to deal with the war party in Afghanistan; he was confronted with the dissatisfaction arising from the manner in which the murderers of Habibullah had been dealt with; the fanatical element was exasperated by the imprisonment of Nasrullah; and the Army was so incensed that it had to be removed from Kabul and given occupation to divert its thoughts.

A further element of complexity was introduced by the political situation in India. The agitation against the Rowlatt Act was at its height. Disturbances in the Punjab and Gujarat had taken place. The result of all this was to convince the Amir that the real solution of his difficulties was to unite all the disturbing elements in a war with the British His troops were set in motion and simultaneously a stream of anti-British propaganda commenced to flow from Kabul and open intrigue was started with the Frontier tribes, on whom the Afghans placed their chief reliance.

Speedy Defeat—The war caught the Army in India in the throes of demobilisation and with a large proportion of the seasoned troops on service abroad. Nevertheless the regular Afghan Army was rapidly dealt with. Strong British forces moved up the Khyber and seized Dakka. Jelalabad was repeatedly bombed from the air and also Kabul Nothing but a shortage of mechanical transport prevented the British forces from seizing Jelalabad. In ten days the Afghans were severely defeated and asked for an Armistice

The Afghans tried to water down the conditions of the armistice, but as they were met with an uncompromising attitude they despatched representatives to a conference at Rawalpindi. On 8th August a Treaty of Peace was signed which is set out in the Indian Year Book, 1923, pp 196-197.

It will be seen that under this Treaty the way was paved for a fresh engagement six months afterwards. During the hot weather of 1920 there were prolonged discussions at Mussoorie between Afghan Representatives and British officials under Sir Henry Dobbs. These were private, but it is believed that a complete agreement was reached Certainly after an interchange of Notes which revealed no major point of difference it was agreed that a British Mission should proceed to Kabul to arrange a definite treaty of peace This Mission crossed the border in January 1921 and entered Kabul where a peace treaty was signed.

AFTER GREAT WAR I

Since World War I the relations between Afghanistan and Great Britain have been good. The main object of the Afghan government was to strengthen the resources of the country and to bring it into closer relation with modern methods of administration. But Afghanistan is an intensely conservative country and no changes are popular; especially violent was the opposition to a secular form of administration and education.

The direct result was a formidable rebellion of Mangals and Zadrans in the Southern Provinces, and serious reverses to the regular troops sent against the rebels At one time the position was serious, but the rebels were not sufficiently united to develop their successes, and with the aid of aeroplanes and other assistance afforded by the Government of India the insurrection was broken Whilst this assistance was appreciated, the whole business gave a serious set-back to the reforms initiated by the Amir, he had to withdraw almost the whole of his administrative code and to revert to the Mahomedan Law which was previously in force.

Soviet Penetration—Taking a long view a much more notable development of the policies of Afghanistan, at the period to which the foregoing notes apply, was the penetration of the Russians, who had converted the former Trans-Caspian States of Tsarist Russia into Soviet Republics. The object of this policy was gradually to sweep into the Soviet system the outlying provinces of Persia, of China and of Afghanistan In Persia this policy was foiled by the vigour of the Sipar Salah, Reza Khan. In Chinese Turkestan it was pursued with qualified success In Afghanistan it also made certain progress

The first step of the Russians was to extend the Soviet Republics of Tajikistan, Uzbekia and Turkmanistan so as to absorb all Northern Afghanistan. This was later, apparently, abandoned for a more gentle penetration. Large subsidies, mostly delivered in kind, were given to Afghanistan. Telegraph lines were erected all over the country; roads were constructed, large quantities of arms and ammunition were supplied, whilst an air force with Russian pilots and mechanics was created and was largely developed In return the Russians received important trading facilities

RUSSO-AFGHAN TREATY

Outwardly the relations between the two States were friendly In December 1926 the Afghan papers published the text of a new treaty concluded with Soviet Russia, which was signed on August 31st, but it provided that it should in no way interfere with the secret treaty signed in Moscow on February 28th, 1921. The principal clauses of this treaty, as disclosed in the Afghan papers, were as follows —

Clause 1—In the event of war or hostile action between one of the contracting parties and a third power or powers, the other contracting party will observe neutrality in respect of the first contracting party

Clause 2—Both the contracting parties agree to abstain from mutual aggression, the one against the other. Within their own dominions also they will do nothing which may cause political or military harm to the other party. The contracting parties particularly agree not to make alliances or political and military agreements with any one or more other powers against each other Each will also abstain from joining any boycott or financial or economic blockade organised against the other party Besides this in case the attitude of a third power or powers is hostile towards one of the contracting parties, the other contracting party will not help such hostile policy, and, further, will prohibit the execution of such policy and hostile actions and measures within its dominions

Clause 3.—The high contracting parties acknowledge one another's Government as rightful and independent. They agree to abstain from all sorts of armed or unarmed interference in one another's internal affairs. They will decidedly neither join nor help any one or more other powers which interfere in or against one of the contracting Governments. None of the contracting parties will permit in its dominions the formation or existence of societies and the activities of individuals whose object is to gather armed force with a view to injuring the other's independence, or otherwise such activities will be checked Similarly, neither of the contracting parties will allow armed forces, arms, ammunition, or other war material, meant to be used against the other contracting party to pass through its dominions

THE KING'S TOUR

In the closing months of 1927 King Amanulla, accompanied by the Queen and a staff of officials, commenced a long tour of India and Europe King Amanulla, when he set out, was warmly welcomed in India and received a great popular greeting in Bombay both from his co-religionists and from members of other communities He then took ship for Europe He was the guest of His Majesty King George V in London, and visited the principal European capitals He made a State visit to Turkey, and returned to Afghanistan by way of Soviet Russia and Persia. A series of treaties with the governments of the countries visited was announced and the King returned to Kabul in the late summer of 1928, the tour having been unclouded by any untoward incident Afghanistan was peaceful during his long absence.

Reforming Zeal.—King Amanulla returned to his realm full of reforming zeal. He was much impressed by the political and social institutions of the western lands he visited, and in particular by the dramatic forcefulness with which Mustapha Kemal Pasha had driven Turkey along the path of "reform". In this he was encouraged by the Queen, who was desirous of seeing the women of Afghanistan enjoy some of the freedom and opportunity won by and for the women of the West.

Edict after edict was issued, changing the whole structure of Afghan society. New codes and taxes were imposed; it was proposed that women should emerge from their seclusion and doff the veil, the co-education of boys and girls was prescribed, in September Government officials were forbidden to practise polygamy; in October European dress was ordered for the people of Kabul At the same time, the pay of the regular troops fell into arrears

With every appreciation of the spirit and direction of these changes, friends of the King advised him to moderate the pace They reminded him that in 1924 far less drastic changes had brought serious trouble in their train

In May of that year the "Lame Mullah" raised the standard of rebellion amongst the Ghilzai and Mangal clansmen of Khost. The Mullahs were openly active against the King and he was equally frank in his hostility to them Possibly also well-wishers suggested that what was possible in Turkey, after centuries of close contact with the West, and where the ground had been prepared by missionary effort and a long struggle for the emancipation of women, might be less easy in Afghanistan, where there had been no contact with the western world.

A CHANGE OF KINGS

Events moved rapidly in 1929 A notorious north Afghan budmash, Bacha-i-Saqqao, raised the standard of revolt and inflicted severe losses on the Afghan Regular troops, discontented as they were by arrears of pay Day by day the Afghan representatives in various parts of the world issued messages asserting that the rebels had been destroyed, and a rapid series of pronouncements declared the withdrawal of all the reforms and the establishment of a Council of Provincial Representatives. Communications with the outer world were broken.

King Amanulla and his family fled from Kabul to Kandahar and then from Kandahar via Quetta to Bombay where they took ship for Europe King Amanulla on his arrival at Rome entered into possession of the Afghan Legation, where he remained

Bacha-i-Saqqao declared himself King of Afghanistan, and for a few months held his position in Kabul Without money, administrative experience or a disciplined following his throne was a thorny one and he was harassed by constant attacks. The Royal Air Force in India meanwhile went to the rescue of the British Nationals beleaguered in and around Kabul and in a series of brilliant flights evacuated all

The most formidable of the new king's adversaries were led by General Nadir Khan, a scion of the old ruling house, with a wide knowledge of the world. Heavy fighting took place. Fortunes varied. Nadir Khan almost gave up his chances as finally lost. But a band of Waziris from the British side of the border attracted by prospects of loot, joined Nadir and finally seized Kabul in his name and interest. Nadir Khan thus became victor and shortly afterwards, at the wish of the Afghans, Bacha-i-Saqqao was executed with other rebels, and when the year closed Nadir Khan was to all seeming in firm possession of the Kingdom.

He despatched members of his family to the principal Afghan Legations in Europe. A Shinwari rising near the exit from the Khyber Pass took place in February 1930, and was repressed with unexpected success and vigour. There followed a serious rebellion in Kohidaman, Bacha-i-Saqqao's country. This also was promptly quelled. And thereafter Nadir Shah ruled without challenge. He devoted himself to the reorganisation of his Army. England was strictly neutral during the successive stages of the revolution, but promised support to Afghanistan to help her maintain internal peace when she had restored it and this promise was fulfilled by the provision of an interest free loan of £200,000 to King Nadir and by the supply of rifles and ammunition to him He gave ample evidence of his friendliness towards Britain and India The trade routes were reopened and the new King again took up Amanullah's mantle of reform but in a statesman-like manner which carried the Mullahs along with him.

MURDER OF NADIR SHAH

This ordered march of progress was tragically interrupted by the murder of Nadir Shah on 8 November 1933 The king was attending a football tournament prize giving when a young man among the gathering stepped forward and fired several revolver shots at him at close range, killing him instantly. It later appeared that the assassin committed the crime in revenge for the execution of a prominent Afghan who had been caught deeply involved in treasonable activities after he had been mercifully treated for earlier behaviour of the same kind. The assassin's father was stated to have been this man's servant.

The murder was not followed by general or widespread disorder. The members of Nadir Shah's family and his prominent officers of State stood loyally by his heir, his son, Muhammed Zahir The latter was duly placed on his father's throne and his accession was in due course acknowledged and confirmed throughout the kingdom in the traditional manner.

The new King started his reign with a high reputation for courage and steadiness He early issued assurances to his people that he would continue the policy of his father in affairs of State No untoward events have occurred in the years that have since past during which the young king has by his sagacity and good government gradually strengthened his position on the throne and, by the development of communications and trade, done much to encourage the establishment of settled conditions among his people

A mutual desire for close relations and particularly economic understanding led in 1938 to exploratory negotiations between India and Afghanistan with a view to seeking some form of trade agreement.

All the great European Powers maintain Embassies or Legations in Kabul, and it must be recorded of the present Afghan Government that in tune with the ideas of their predecessors and in the interest of their continued independence as they see it, they have pursued a policy of balance in their relations with the Powers, but with careful adjustments

The Governments of Pakistan and Afghanistan have exchanged ambassadors

RAILWAYS FROM WEST

The prospect of linking Europe and Asia by a railway running eastwards through Asia Minor has fascinated men's minds for generations. The plans suggested have, owing to the British connection with the Indian subcontinent, always lain in the direction of lines approaching Pakistan. More than 50 years ago a Select Committee of the British House of Commons sat for two years to consider the question of a Euphrates Valley railway The Shah of Persia applied to the British Foreign Office for the investment of British capital in Persian railway construction many years before the end of the nineteenth century. A proposal was put forward in 1895 for a line of 1,000 miles from Cairo and Port Said to Koweit, at the head of the Persian Gulf While these projects were in the air, German enterprise stepped in and made a small beginning by constructing the Anatolian railway system. Its lines start from Scutari, on the southern shore of the Bosphorus, opposite Constantinople, and serve the extreme western end of Asia Minor. And upon this foundation was based the Turkish concession to Germany to build the Baghdad Railway.

Meanwhile, Russia was pushing her railway from various directions into the Central Asian territory running along the northern frontiers of Persia and Afghanistan to the borders of Chinese Turkestan The construction of a Trans-Persian railway, connecting the Indian sub-continent, across Persia, with the Russian lines between the Black Sea and the Caspian Sea came to the forefront after the conclusion of the historic Anglo-Russian agreement regarding Persia in the first decade of the present century

The Germans pushed forward their Baghdad railway project with a calculating shrewdness arising from their estimate of the value it would possess in their aim to overthrow the British Empire The outbreak of the First World War and the success of the Germans in inveigling Turkey into it saw the final stages of the construction of the railway pressed forward with passionate energy Thus, before the overthrow of the Turks and Germans in Asia Minor and of the Germans in France the railway was completed and was in use from Scutari across Anatolia, over the Taurus Mountains to Aleppo and thence eastward across the Euphrates to a point between Nisbin and Mosul The Germans had also by that time constructed a line to Baghdad at the eastern end of the route, northwards from Baghdad to a point a considerable distance beyond Samara

The war compelled the British to undertake considerable railway development northward from Basra, the port at the mouth of the Shat-el-Arab, the broad stream in which the Tigris and Euphrates, after their junction, flow into the head of the Persian Gulf The system consists of a metre-gauge line from Basra via Nasirieh, on the Euphrates, thence northwards to Baghdad, the line passing a considerable distance westward to Kut-l-Amara, of historic fame From Baghdad the line runs eastward approximately to the foot of the pass through which the Persian road crosses the frontier of that country. A line branches off in the neighbourhood of Kifri in the direction of Mosul It has for some time been open as far as Kirkuk, 200 miles northward of Baghdad and 112 miles southward of Mosul.

LINKS THROUGH PERSIA

Similarly, the Taurus railway has long been open eastward of Aleppo as far as Tel Kochek, on the Syrian frontier, a few hours' motor run, north-west from Mosul Through passenger services between Iraq and Istanbul are run, a road motor service is linking the railway termini at Kirkuk and Tel Kochek The gap in the railway has now been closed, and through communication was established at the end of 1940 A line also runs westward from Baghdad to Feluja, on the Euphrates.

The Trans-Persian line to join the Russian Caucasian system and the Pakistan railways first assumed proportions of practical importance in the winter of 1911 Both the Russian and the Pakistan railway systems were by then well developed up to the points likely to be the termini of a Trans-Persian line. The Russian system reached Julfa, on the Russo-Persian frontier in the Caucasus During the First World War this line was carried thence southward into the region east and south-east of Lake Urumia. The Pakistan railway system, on the borderland of Pakistan and Persia, was similarly much extended and improved during the war. A new agreement which was negotiated between England and Persia specially provided for British assistance in the development of Persian natural resources and particularly for the extension and improvement of Persian roads suitable for motor traffic, but the agreement came to naught.

A railway connection between the Pakistan and the Russian systems again assumed considerable importance after the German attack on Russia and the alignment of Britain, India and Russia along with other democracies like China and U S A against Germany and Japan With the whole of the European west coast under German control or domination and the eastern shores of Siberia rendered unapproachable by the Japanese, the only route which British and Indian supplies to Soviet Russia could take was via Iran The Quetta-Nushki line which had been extended during the First Great War upto Duzdap (or Zahidan) in Persia had been put out of use afterwards beyond Nok-kundi This was again set in order

There also remains the possibility of linking the Russian and Pakistan railway systems by way of Afghanistan. The suggestion has often been made that the Russian line from Merv to Herat, on the northern frontier of Afghanistan should be linked to the Pakistan line which, proceeds from Quetta to the Afghan border at Chaman The completion of a broad-gauge line extending the Pakistan railway system through the Khyber Pass to Landi Khana, at its western extremity opens a prospect of further possible rail connections with Afghanistan.

SCOUTING

(GENERAL HEADQUARTERS 119, Intelligence School, New Queen's Road, Karachi 2)

THE Pakistan Boy Scouts Association was registered with the International Scout Bureau on the 7th April, 1948

The Official Organ of the Pakistan Boy Scouts Association is the 'Pak Scout' monthly, the first issue of which appeared in September, 1948

The Association has also published an illustrated pamphlet entitled "Our National Flag" with a foreword from the present Chief Scout of Pakistan The Pakistan Boy Scouts Association has also published a Scout Diary for 1949-50

During this short period the General Headquarters of the Pakistan Boy Scouts Association has in addition been able to set up a Scout Shop dealing with uniforms and Scout gear in general

On partition the Dominion of Pakistan was faced with many problems which demanded attention Representative Scouts from undivided India had gone to attend the World Jamboree at Moisson near Paris and on the 15th August, 1947, fluttered in the sky the national flags of the different countries of the world While the flag of the undivided India was up in the air, the Muslim Scouts did not know how to represent the new Dominion of Pakistan Fortunately someone had read in the local papers about the Pakistan National Flag which had been devised and they proceeded to improvise the new Pakistan Flag as the Scouts often do, with a piece of their green turban and an arm of their white shirt This flag was accepted and rose up amidst the applause of the crowd This was the official beginning of the Pakistan Boy Scout Association at the first World Jamboree in France.

On their return to Pakistan the Scouts were received by Quaid-e-Azam Mohammad Ali Jinnah, the first Governor-General of Pakistan who entertained them to tea and joined them in their group photograph. The Quaid-e-Azam had always included character building in the immediate programme of national reconstruction Addressing the Scouts on the occasion he said.

"If we are to build a safer cleaner and happier world, let us start with the individual, catch him young and inculcate in him the Scout Motto of Service before Self, and purity in thought, word and deed."

In December, 1947, the first conference of officials and non-officials interested in the Movement was held at Karachi The Quaid-e-Azam was requested to become the first Chief Scout of Pakistan, the Hon'ble Mr Fazlur Rahman the Chief Commissioner while Mr J D Shuja was appointed as Honorary General Secretary

The Scout badge of Pakistan has a superimposed Crescent and Star, with two side-stars, representing East and West Pakistan The Scout Motto "Be Prepared" has been translated as "Al-Mustaid", for adoption in Pakistan Three special Scout awards have been instituted -

(i) The Silver Camel which corresponds to Silver Wolf in Britain, Silver Elephant in India and Silver Buffalo in U S A It is the highest award granted for Service of the most exceptional character.

(ii) The Silver Palm It has deep religious significance and is an award for long and special distinguished service. This award corresponds with the Silver Acorn in Britain.

(iii) In memory of the first Chief Scout and the Founder of the Boy Scout Movement in Pakistan the Jinnah Scout Badge has been instituted. This badge will be awarded for striking high character, devotion to duty, together with great courage, endurance or gallantry It will be composed of the word Jinnah in Arabic script, with the Pakistan fleur-d-lys superimposed on it

The Pakistan Boy Scouts Association was represented at the International Commissioner Conference at Kinderstag and International Youth Conference in London, by Mr. Qureshi Iqbal in July, 1948.

A Pakistan contingent of 20 Boy Scouts went to the Pan-Pacific Jamboree, held in Australia from the 30th December, 1948 to the 9th January, 1949, under the leadership of Mr. J. D Shuja, Honorary General Secretary As no sea passage was available, the boys reached Australia in a specially chartered aeroplane. The expenditure was mostly borne by public contribution The contingent created a very good impression in Australia and proved to be a veritable ambassador of peace and goodwill The Scouts had a splendid opportunity for fraternisation with the Scouts of other nations en route and at the Jamboree and besides sight-seeing each member also underwent a course of vocational training for 6 weeks in animal husbandry, agriculture and allied trades, banking, commerce, etc.

ASSOCIATIONS

PAKISTAN MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION

The Association was established in 1902 and registered in 1925 It had 157 members on the roll on 31st December 1949

The aims and objects of the Association are to protect and promote Pakistan trade and industry in and around Karachi, settle members' disputes and secure equitable dealings in trade, negotiate and promote or oppose legislative and other measures affecting trade interests, maintain departments devoted to particular trades or industries, regulate trade exchanges, examine agenda of the International Labour Organisation, and recommend for nomination of Employers' delegates to the International Labour Conferences

The Association is represented on various public bodies, e g, the Sind Legislative Assembly, the Karachi Port Trust, the Karachi Municipal Corporation, the N W R Local Advisory Committee, the Sind Cotton Committee, the Provincial Marketing Board, the Traffic Committee for the City of Karachi, the Advisory Communications Board, the Railway Rates Advisory Committee, the Income-Tax Appeal Panel the Lloyd Barrage Advisory Committee, the Sind Provincial Board of Agriculture, the Advisory Board for Labour, the State Bank of Pakistan, the Pakistan Council of Accountants, etc

It has a Clearing House to settle differences periodically between members inter se It is affiliated to the Federation of Pakistan Chambers of Commerce and Industry, and International Chamber of Commerce

ISMAILIA ASSOCIATION (W. PAKISTAN)

This institution was started in October 1948. Its chief object is to conduct systematic research in Islamic History and Philosophy, with special reference to movements in Islamic history from the 10th century A D to 13th century A D.

It has a large and rare collections of Arabic manuscripts, dating back to 1000 years and dealing with Islamic sociology, theology, philosophy, history and literature. The manuscripts are of unique importance to students who want to specialise in Islamic history of the Fatimid period

Two well-known scholars, Prof Jawad Muscati (Ustad-fi-Uloom-Arabiya) and Prof. Khan Bahadur A M Moulvi are engaged in research work at this institution.

Board of Executive President: Vazir Dr. Peermahomed Hoodbhoy, M.B B S , J P , Hon. Chief Secretary K. Sherali, M A , LL B. ; Hon. Treasurer · Vazir Kassim Jinnah.

A TOURIST'S GUIDE

KHYBER Pass : one of the gateways into Pakistan from Afghanistan is situated 10½ miles west of Peshawar in the North-West Frontier Province The Pass is rich in historical association as it was the route by which all of the sub-continent's invaders swooped down on the inhabitants for conquest or plunder It still remains a great highway for continental trade between India and Pakistan on the one hand and the countries of Central Asia on the other On Tuesdays and Fridays one could see long caravans of men and camels laden with merchandise of every description passing into and from Afghanistan

Lahore · one of the most ancient and famous cities of the sub-continent is the capital of the Punjab Province The city has been notable since the 11th century when Babar the first of the Moghul dynasty made it a place of royal residence, the remains of which are found in the tombs, mosques, pavilions, and pleasure gardens of the city But, the man who laid the foundations of the city's greatness was the Emperor Akbar Today the city is almost wholly Muslim with a population of 671,659 Places worth a visit 1 Ranjit Singh's mausoleum, 2 Jehangir's and Nurjehan's tombs, 3 tomb of Asaf Khan, 4 tomb of Anarkali, 5 Guru Arjun's Shrine, 6 Badshahi Masjid, 7 Sunheri Masjid, 8 Wazir Khan's mosque, 9 Moti Masjid, 10 Minto Park, 11 Shalimar Gardens, 12 Lawrence Gardens, 13 Gulabi Bagh, 14 Museum, 15 Zoo, 16 Chauburji, 17 the fort The chief means of conveyance are cars, taxis and hackney carriages Clubs 1 Cosmopolitan Club, 2 Gymkhana Club, 3 Punjab Association Club, 4 Y M C A

Lahore is on the North Western Railway and is connected with Karachi

Mohenjo-Daro : the ruins of Mohenjo-Daro (the Domain of the Departed) are situated eight miles by car off Dorki station on the Kotri-Larkana branch of the N W Railway Indian archæological history dates from the 3rd century B C The excavated remains in Mohenjo-Daro belong to the last city, which had been built on ancient cities which are suspected generally to be lower than the water-level Excavations of the lower strata may be expected to yield the remains of a still older period

It is a very remarkably well-planned city All the streets were laid south to north as nothing is more welcome to an Indian city than the south wind Homes were two-storeyed and the staircases lead not to the lower storey but to outside This feature is not unknown in the houses in the hills Covered balconies or open porticoes are conspicuous by their absence The courtyards are somewhat small

Proximity of the dwellings points to a very crowded city Mohenjo-Daro is a city of bricks, fire-burnt and sun burnt It had probably stressed more on drainage than any other ancient city Evidence of underground drains are to be found everywhere They are large and high and provided with manholes The vastness of the drainage surely reflects the greatness of the upper structure, now very much lost to view It is not known, however, whether the drains led to any common dumping place away from the city, although soak pits have been noticed, but from their size one cannot be sure that they were used as the main dumping grounds Bathrooms are another feature significant of the cleanliness of the city

The objects found in the remains mainly consist of seals, jewelleries, potteries, figures (human and animal) and toys The seals have on them inscribed characters of a conventionalised form of pictograph writing, which have not yet been deciphered Most of them are of steatite and are square The more common animal is difficult to identify It has features both equine and bovine, with one horn only

Murree : hill station in the Punjab, is about 40 miles from Rawalpindi and is 7,500 feet above sea-level It lies on the main road leading into Kashmir from Pakistan In pre Partition days it was the summer headquarters of the Northern Command, and was a great social and sports centre Places worth a visit · 1 Kashmir Point, 2 Panch Pandu Park, and 3 Pindi Point The Himalayan views are an additional attraction The chief means of conveyance are rickshaws, dandis, horses and buses Clubs 1 Mountain View Club, 2 Rawalpindi Club

From Rawalpindi the journey is usually made by car

Taxila · seat of a famous Buddhist University in the 7th century, is situated about 20 miles north-west of Rawalpindi The Indian name literally means stone-cut city of the Takka clan The remains are actually of three cities within three and a half miles of each other The epics record that Rama's brother Bharata conquered this territory and the capital took its name from his son Taksha It is believed that the great snake sacrifice recorded in the Mahabharata was held at Taxila

Taxila presents historical records extending over a period of about 1,000 years, from the 4th or 5th century B C to the 5th century A D Seven different peoples ruled at Taxila Achæmenian and Alexandrian suzerainty have left almost no records The Mauryan records consist mainly of almost primitive punch coins (they may be of an earlier date), jewelleries and lapidaries, which surely indicate that Indians were in that age the greatest masters in the treatment of the most refractory stones, and gold and silverworks of refined workmanship

The most imposing pile at Taxila is the Dharmarajika or the Great Tope (Stupa) It is also known as Chir (split) tope, because of the cleft driven through its centre by former explorers Around it there are a number of Stupas, Chaityas, Viharas, etc The construction of the group extended over four centuries (2nd-5th) The original stupa was built in the Scytho-Parthian period and enlargements were made in the Kusha period The most important architectural features are trefoil arches and Erothian pillars
