

UNIVERSAL LIBRARY

OU_220141

UNIVERSAL
LIBRARY

OUP--49--30-1-71--5,000

OSMANIA UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

Call No.

822.33

S52M

Accession No.

P. 61.25864

Author

Title

This book should be returned on or before the date last marked below.

THE OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE EDITION.

"— in the spiced Indian air, by night,
Full often hath she gossip'd by my side,
And sat with me on Neptune's yellow sands."
II. i. 12-7

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM

EDITED BY

STANLEY WOOD, M.A.

(Editor of the Dinglewood Shakespeare Manuals)

London:

GEORGE GILL & SONS, LD.,

MINERVA HOUSE, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.4.

First Edition, 1900.
Nineteenth Editions and Impressions to 1931.

The Oxford and Cambridge Edition.

EDITORIAL,

THIS Edition of A Midsummer Night's Dream is designed to satisfy the requirements of Candidates for all Public Examinations, and is distinguished from the majority of School Editions by certain special features, the purpose of which may be briefly indicated.

The Life of Shakespeare has been included not only because it is likely to be of interest to the general reader, but also because a knowledge of the principal events in the poet's life is frequently required by Examining bodies in connection with the study of any particular play.

The Literary Introduction contains separate sections upon all subjects in connection with the play, upon which Examiners are in the habit of framing questions. The study of this portion of the book may be deferred until a general knowledge of the Play has been acquired by the Student, whilst the paragraphs printed in small type may be omitted altogether by the Candidate for Elementary Examinations.

The Marginal and Foot Notes are intended to suffice for the needs of Junior Students, and are printed in conjunction with the text. The Editor has found by experience, that such an arrangement conduces to a thorough knowledge and understanding of the text much more readily, than when the young Student is expected to turn to the end of the book, in the case of every difficulty that presents itself.

The Supplementary Notes are intended mainly for Senior Students, and may be studied apart from the text. Junior Students, who desire to attain distinction in any Examination, or such as possess a natural taste for literary subjects, may also refer profitably to this Section.

Shakespearian Grammar has been treated at some length in as simple a manner as is consistent with the subject. Illustrated passages from the Play have been quoted in full in order that the Student may be saved the tedious labour of continually referring back to the text.

Classical Names and Glossary will be referred to as necessity arises during the study of the Play. In the case of these, as in that of the Grammar, illustrative passages are quoted in full. Thus, for purposes of revision, these Sections may be studied apart from the text.

Examination Papers are given at the end of the book. As these are based upon the model of the papers set at Oxford and Cambridge Local Examinations, they will prove specially serviceable where Candidates for such Examinations have to be considered. Complete sets of Cambridge Local and College of Preceptors' Papers are included in this Section.

The Illustrations will prove attractive to those who are approaching the subject of Shakespeare for the first time, and will add considerably to the interest of the Play as a dramatic study.

The obligation of the Author to the authorities consulted in the preparation of this Edition has almost always been recorded in the pages of the work. The few which have been omitted in the body of the book will be found in the list of useful Works of Reference printed at the end under the heading, "Aide to the Study of the Play,"

STANLEY WOCXD,

The Oxford and Cambridge Edition.

CONTENTS.

PART I. Literary Introduction—	PAGE
NARRATIVE OF SHAKESPEARE'S LIFE	V.
PUBLICATION OF THE PLAY	ix.
DATE OF COMPOSITION	ix.
AUTHORITIES CONSULTED BY SHAKESPEARE ..	xii.
TYPES OF ENGLISH COMEDY.. ..	xiii.
ON MASQUES AND ANTI-MASQUES	xiv.
DISTINCTIVE FEATURES OF THE PLAY	XV.
ON THE TITLE OF THE PLAY	xvii.
ON SHAKESPEARE'S TREATMENT OF CLASSICAL SUBJECTS	xix.
THE FAIRY WORLD	~~xx.~~
THE HUMOUR OF THE PLAY.. ..	xxi.
ELIZABETHAN ENGLISH	xxiv.
ON THE POETRY OF HISTORICAL ALLUSIONS ..	XXV.
THE PLAY COMPARED WITH " THE TEMPEST " ..	xxvii.
THE CHARACTERS OF THE PLAY	xxviii.
 PART II. The Play—
ABSTRACT OF THE PLAY	XXXVii.
TEXT OF THE PLAY, 'with Explanatory "Elementary Notes	1
SUPPLEMENTARY NOTES FOR SENIOR STUDENTS	73
PLAYS ON WORDS	86
ANACHRONISMS	87
 PART III. Appendix—
SHAKESPEARIAN GRAMMAR, ILLUSTRATED FROM THE PLAY	88
METRICAL CONSTRUCTION	104
VARIANTS AND PROPOSED EMENDATIONS	107
ON PARAPHRASING	100
CLASSICAL NAMES WITH THEIR CONTEXT	110
GLOSSARY	121
EXAMINATION PAPERS	183
AIDS TO THE STUDY OF THE PLAY	144

SHAKESPEARE'S HOUSE, STRATFORD-ON-AVON.

NARRATIVE OF SHAKESPEARE'S LIFE.

Birth and Parentage.

In this short account of the Life of William Shakespeare, we shall endeavour to confine ourselves to well-authenticated facts, and shall therefore say nothing about supposed ancestry, especially as the name of Shakespeare seems to have been very common in the Middle Ages in many parts of England. There is, however, good reason for supposing that William Shakespeare's ancestors were farmers. The poet's father, John Shakespeare, appears to have been in early life not only a prosperous man of business in many branches, but a person of importance in the municipal affairs of Stratford. He held for one year "the highest office in the Corporation gift, that of bailiff"; he afterwards became chief alderman. He married Mary Arden, who brought him land and houses, but "was apparently without education"; several extant documents bear her mark, and there is no proof that she could sign her name. William, their third and eldest surviving child, was born at Stratford-upon-Avon, in April, 1564. His father was then in prosperous circumstances, and when, in July of that year, the plague raged violently at Stratford, he subscribed liberally to the relief of the victims among the poor. In a few years, however, he fell into debt and difficulties, was obliged to mortgage his wife's property, and gradually lost his interest in municipal affairs.

vi. NARRATIVE OF SHAKESPEARE'S LIFE.

childhood and Youth.

In the meantime five children—three boys and two girls younger than William—began to require education. The boys "were entitled to free tuition at the Grammar School of Stratford," where they were taught the rudiments of Latin, grammar, and literature, and to write in Old English characters, as was then the custom in provincial schools. In later life William Shakespeare acquired some knowledge of the French language (of which he made use in the Play of Henry V.). His time at school was short, as his father's fortunes steadily declined, and at the age of thirteen he was obliged to apply himself to the trade of a butcher, which was then the only means by which his father earned his living.

His Marriage.

At a short distance from Stratford stands a thatched cottage, still known by the name of Anne Hathaway's Cottage, and inhabited by descendants of the Hathaways until 1838. It is said to be only a part of the homestead where Anne's father, Richard Hathaway, died in fairly prosperous circumstances, leaving a farm which had belonged to his family for generations to be carried on by his widow and eldest son. Each daughter was to receive for her marriage portion the modest sum of £6 13s. 4d., which in those days was equal to £53 6s. 8d. at the present time, just an eighth of the present value.

Anne Hathaway became the wife of William Shakespeare when he was little more than eighteen and a half years old, she having attained the more mature age of twenty-six. History says little of their early married life, and that little does not point to happiness. Three children were born to them, two daughters and a son.

Early Life at Stratford.

Although we are told:

"Anne Hathaway, she hath a way,
To charm all hearts, Anne Hathaway," she was not able to keep her young husband out of mischief. In the absence of sufficient means of livelihood, he seems to have amused himself among his farmer kinsfolk, and not content with the orthodox sports common to those born and bred in the country, appears to have taken up with bad companions, and to have been led into poaching transactions, which caused him in the end to leave his home and family for several years. More than once he was known to join with others in stealing deer and rabbits from the park of Sir Thomas Lucy, of Charlecote. For which the "punishment in those days was three months' imprisonment, and the payment of three times the amount of damage done. Shakespeare bitterly resented the treatment meted out to him, and in revenge composed a ballad on the subject, which he posted up on the gates of Charlecote Park. This, not unnaturally, had the effect of inciting Sir Thomas to further prosecution, and led to Shakespeare's forsaking his home and finding a more congenial occupation in London (1585).

Life in London.

There are various reports of the manner in which Shakespeare first tried to make a living on his arrival in London, but he soon drifted into the profession of an actor, in which he made his earliest reputation. He is said to have begun his career as a writer by adapting and re-writing plays by other authors, which, after being bought by an acting company, passed entirely out of the hands of the original playwright. It was not unusual for the manager to invite thorough revision before producing a new or revived play upon the stage. Love's Labour's Lost, which is commonly supposed to be the first of his dramatic productions, and which may have been composed in 1591, was revised in 1597, and published the following year, when the name of Shakespeare first appeared in print as its author. Its plot, unlike those of most of his plays, does not seem to have been borrowed from any earlier story or romance. Romeo and Juliet (1591-3), his first tragedy, on the contrary, had gone through many adaptations since the Greek romance of "Anthis and Abrocomas" was written in the second century. The story had been told both in prose and verse, and was popular throughout Europe. For the plot of The Merchant of Venice (5094 ?) he was indebted to a variety of sources, including a collection of Italian novels written in the fourteenth century. Most of Shakespeare's dramatic work was probably done in twenty years, between his twenty-seventh and forty-seventh year, at the rate of an average of two plays a year.

His Patrons.

One patron he had among the nobility, the Earl of Southampton, to whom many of his sonnets are unmistakably addressed, though not by name. Queen Elizabeth showed him some marks of her favour as early as 1594, and after the accession of James I. he was called upon to act before the king. The Tempest, which was probably the latest effort of his genius, was performed to celebrate the marriage of Princess Elizabeth with the Elector Frederick, in 1613.

His Return to Stratford.

In middle life he developed much good sense and ability in practical affairs. With the object of re-establishing the fortunes of his family in the town of Stratford, he returned thither after an absence of nearly eleven years, and although he spent the greater part of his time in London, he never failed to visit his native place at least once a year. In 1597 he purchased, for £60, the largest house in the town, along with two barns and two gardens, repaired the house, which was much dilapidated, and interested himself much in the gardens and orchard. The purchase of this house, "New Place" by name, for a sum now equaling £480, brought to Shakespeare a reputation among his fellow townsmen for wealth and influence, which was further increased when he applied for, through his father, and duly received, the distinction of a coat of arms. Both as actor and dramatist he was now receiving a good income, and in 1599, when the Globe Theatre was built he acquired a share in its profits also. His average annual income before that date is computed at more than £130, equal to £1,040 at the present time. After that time his income, from various sources, became much larger, and he became the owner of a large landed estate. He appears to have been fond of litigation, in which, however, he was generally successful.

viii. NARRATIVE OF SHAKESPEARE'S LIFE.

His Last Years.

In this time of prosperity he brought out several of his best plays. The comedies, Much Ado About Nothing (1600), As You Like It (1600), and Twelfth Night (1601), were followed by Julius Cæsar, Hamlet, and Othello. Macbeth was completed in 1606, and succeeded by King Lear, which was played before the Court at Whitehall, on the night of December 26th, 1606. After 1611 he seems to have abandoned dramatic composition, and spent the greater part of his time at Stratford. His health began to fail at the commencement of 1616,

TRINITY CHURCH, STRATFORD-ON-AVON.

but the actual cause of death is unknown. His only son, Hamnet, had died many years before, but his wife and two daughters, Susannah Hall and Judith Quiney, survived him. He died at the age of fifty-two, and was buried inside the chancel of Stratford Church, with this epitaph inscribed over his grave:—

"Good Friend, for Jesue's sake forbear
To dig the dust enclosed here,
Blest be ye man yt spares thes stones,
And evrst be he yt moves my bones."

[for the facts contained in the above account of Shakespeare's life I have relied principally upon the authority of Sidney Lee, to whose "Life OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE" (Macmillan) I would refer all students who desire to acquaint themselves with "the net results of trustworthy research respecting Shakespeare's life and writing."—Kn.]

DATE OF COMPOSITION.

I*.

LITERARY INTRODUCTION.

Publication of the Play.

The play was first printed in quarto in 1600, and was entered on the Register of the Stationers' Company on the 8th of October of that year. This edition is known as the first quarto, or the Fisher Edition, and the title-page is as follows:—

"A Midfommer nights T dreame. | As it hath beene fundry times
pub | likely acted, by the Right Honoura- | ble, the Lord Chamberlaine his I fervants. Written by William Shakefpeare I Imprinted at London, for Thomas Fifer, and are to | be fould at his fhoppe, at the Signe of the White Hart, | in Fleete freete, 1600." In the same year another edition, likewise in quarto, was "Printed by Iames Roberts.* This is known as the second quarto, or Roberts Edition, and is generally allowed to be a pirated copy of the former. The play was next published in the Folio of 1633, a collection of "MR. WILLIAM
SHAKESPEARE'S | COMEDIES, | HISTORIES,* I TRAGEDIES. |
Publified according to the 'True Originate Copies,' and 'Printed by Ifaac Iaggard, and Ed. Blount, 1623.'" The Roberts edition was followed when the play was reprinted in the folio of 1623, and contains more stage directions than the Fisher edition.

Note on the terms "Quarto" and "Folio."

These terms denote in reality nothing more than the particular size and shape of a book, a folio being a large book, the pages of which are formed by a sheet of paper once doubled, a quarto being a smaller book, of which the pages are formed by a sheet of paper folded in four parts. Thus, a page of the first folio measures about 13in. by 9in.; of the quarto edition about 9in. by 6½in. To the student of Shakespeare, however, a more special significance attaches to these terms. All the plays, fifteen in number, which were printed during the poet's lifetime, were printed in quarto. These plays were entered in the registers of the Stationers' Company, and are usually of ascertained date. The remaining twenty-one plays of the poet are not known to have been printed at all until they appeared in folio in 1623. About 7½ years after Shakespeare's death (1616) and three months after the death of his widow, this First Folio was published by a kind of syndicate "at the charges of W. Iaggard, Ed. Blount, I. Smithweeke, and W. Aspley." The volume extended to nearly a thousand double-column pages, and was sold at a pound a copy. In 1899 a copy was sold by auction for £1,700. A Second Folio was reprinted from the First in 1832, and a Third Folio was published in 1663.

DATE OF COMPOSITION.

The evidence whereby the date of the composition of any play of Shakespeare's is determined is of two kinds: External and Internal.

External Evidence, usually the more definite, includes—

- (1) The form in which the play first appeared, i.e. Quarto or Folio.
- (2) Records in the Registers of the Stationers' Company.
- (3) Allusions in contemporary publications of known date.

The only external evidence which we need consider in connection with A Midsummer Night's Dream is the fact that it is mentioned

In a list of Shakespeare's plays published in 1598 by the learned Francis Meres in his Palladis Tamia, Wit's Treasury, a Comparative Discourse of our English Poets, with the Greeke, Latine and Italian Poets. This is really the only positive evidence that we possess of the date of the composition of the play. We know that it must have been written earlier than 1598. But if there is no positive proof of the exact date at which the play was written, there are many conjectures. These depend entirely upon

Internal Evidence, which is to be sought for in a variety of ways, and includes

- (1) Treatment of subject, train of thought, general character of the play.
- (2) Considerations of style—e.g. proportion of end-stopt to run-on-lines, number of rhyming lines, profusion or otherwise of imagery, number of classical allusions, puns, conceits, etc.

An examination of A Midsummer Night's Dream by the aid of these tests leads to the conclusion that the play was composed between the years of 1593 and 1596.

For this somewhat indefinite and unsatisfactory result we will now give the following reasons, all based upon internal evidence:—

The Treatment of the Subject is such that we should not feel justified in assigning to the play a date earlier than 1593. As Knight has well observed, "Of all the dramas of Shakespeare, there is none more entirely harmonious than A Midsummer Night's Dream. All the incidents, all the characters, are in perfect subordination to the will of the poet. . . . the exquisite beauty of Shakespeare's conception is, that under the supernatural influence, "the human mortals" move precisely according to their respective natures and habits," and he goes on to point out that "in all the higher attributes of poetry" it "far exceeds" the comedies of The Two Gentlemen of Verona, Love's Labour Lost, and the Comedy of Errors, all of which plays are generally acknowledged to have been composed before 1593. And yet, looking at the play from this same point of view of treatment of the subject, we cannot admit that it was composed later than 1596, for the bracing freshness, the unclouded cheerfulness, the lack of strict characterisation, and the constant preponderance of the lyrical over the dramatic, together with the absence of deep reflection or moral lesson, all point to a youthful period.

Considerations of Style* To these we are unable to attach the same importance in the case of A Midsummer Night's Dream as we may in the case of Shakespeare's more regular dramas. This play is is more or less of the nature of a Masque, and is treated as such; consequently the number of rhyming lines and the number of classical allusions afford no evidence as to the date, because these peculiarities were at all times characteristic of masques. Still, the number of lines ending with a pause (end-stopt), the harmonious balance and regular swing of the verses, the "language picturesque, descriptive, and florid with conceits (fanciful thoughts and affected expressions), the too apparent alliterations, the doggerel passages which extend over the "passionate scenes," are all characteristic of the poet's earlier methods.

References to contemporary events. Here we begin to tread upon the most dangerous ground. The play contains two passages which are supposed by many editors to afford a clue to the date of its composition. First comes the passage in Act II. Scene 1, ll. 89-118 descriptive of the tempestuous and unnatural weather supposed to have been caused by the dissensions of Titania and Oberon. This passage has been thought to have been suggested to the poet by the disastrous season of 1593 and 1094, during which there were "thunders and lightnings neither seasonable for the time, and withall most terrible, with such effects brought forth, that the childe unborne shall speake of it." This weather may, indeed, have inspired the poet in the composition of the passage referred to, in which case we might definitely fix the date as 1594; but, on the other hand, there is no reason why the description should not have proceeded from the poet's imagination, and should refer to no particular year.

The second passage by which the minds of editors have been considerably exercised, and from which many very different conclusions have been drawn, is that in Act V. Scene i. 52-3, where we read of "The thrice three Muses mourning for the death

Of Learning, late deceased in beggary."

This has been taken to refer to (1) the death of Robert Greene, in extreme poverty, in 1592; (2) the publication of Spenser's The Tears of the Muses in 1591, and (3) the death of Spenser in 1599. If the passage refers to the death of Spenser it must have been added by the poet, subsequent to the first production of the play. The arguments in favour of the supposition that it refers to the death of Robert Greene are given in the note on the passage. Taking all things into consideration we are disposed to agree with Mr. Wright, the editor of the Clarendon Press Series, who says: "On the whole, I am inclined to think that Spenser's poem may have suggested to Shakespeare a title for the piece submitted to Theseus and that we need not press for any closer parallel between them."

We will conclude our consideration of this question by stating that although commentators have assigned to the play every date between 1590 and 1596, and although the majority of editors (amongst others Malone, Scottowe, Knight, Gervinus) are in favour of the year 1594, yet we do not feel that the arguments justify our coming to any more definite conclusion than that the play was written at some time during the period 1593-1596, probably nearer the earlier than the later date.

Other Plays of about the same date are Romeo and Juliet 1591-3, Richard II. 1593-4, Richard III. 1594, King John 1695. Of these plays the two first mentioned are those which in character and style most resemble A Midsummer Night's Dream. Romeo and Juliet treats of the same subject, the subject of love, whilst both this play and Rielmrd II. are remarkable for an Interfusion of the lyrical with the dramatic. The three plays resemble one another in style and are all place of emotion rather than of character.

xii. AUTHORITIES CONSULTED BY SHAKESPEARE.

AUTHORITIES CONSULTED BY SHAKESPEARE.

A Midsummer Night's Dream is one of the most original of Shakespeare's plays; for although numerous authorities are quoted as having provided the poet with suggestions for various parts of the drama, yet the actual assistance which he can be shewn to have derived from any or all of these sources hardly amounts to more than the names of some of the characters.

The following list contains the names of the works which are usually supposed to have been known to Shakespeare at the time of the composition of A Midsummer Night's Dream;—

Chaucer's 'The Knijrht's Tale' probably furnished the poet with the names of Theseus, Hippolyta and Philostrate. From this tale Shakespeare may have copied the anachronism of calling Theseus, Duke of Athens, for the opening lines tell that

" Whilom, as olde stories tellen us
Ther was a duk that highte Theseus.
Of Afchenea he was lord and governour."

A few slight verbal resemblances (indicated in the Supplementary Notes) point to Shakespeare's knowledge of the earlier work, but we cannot discover any evidence that he made much use of his knowledge in the invention of his plot or in the composition of the play.

Chaucer's 'Legend of Thisbe of Babylon' tells the story of Pyramus and Thisbe, and may have been read by Shakespeare. The poem refers to the grave of King Ninus, but contains none of the classical names with which Bottom and his colleagues take such liberties.

North's 'Plutarch's Lives,' from which Shakespeare borrowed so much for other plays, probably supplied him with the names Egeus, Ægle, Perigenia, Ariadne and Antiopa, all of which, in one form or other, occur in Plutarch's "Life of Theseus."

Holding's 'Translation of Ovid's Metamorphoses' appeared in 1567, and was frequently reprinted. In this, as well as in Chaucer's Legend, Shakespeare may have read the story of Pyramus and Thisbe. If, as seems probable, Shakespeare read Ovid in the original, he may have borrowed from the Latin poet the name Titania.

A new sonnet of Pyramus and Thisbe appears in Clement Robinson's A Handbook of Pleasant Delites, 1584, and tells the same tragic tale. Here, as in Shakespeare's version, Pyramus is styled a "knight," and both the Muses and the Fates are alluded to.

Huon de Bordeaux was translated into English by Lord Berners in 1534, and may have furnished him with the name Oberon. Oberon or Auberon is the French form of the German Alberich. The same name occurs in Spenser's Faerie Queene and in

" The Scottish Historie of James IV., Enter mixed with a pleasant oonodie presented by Oboram, King of Fayeriei," by Robert Green©

This play was not printed until 1598, but must have been written some years earlier, inasmuch as its author died in 1592,

John Lyly's plays treated of mythological or pastoral subjects, and were somewhat of the nature of masques. His influence, as Sidney Leo has pointed out, is perceptible in A Midsummer Night's Dream, in the raillery in which both mortal and immortals indulge.

Reginald Scot's Discovery of Witchcraft, 1584, describes many of the characteristics of Puck, or as he is there called. Robin Goodfellow.

The origin and history of the fairies are more fully discussed on another page. It is enough to state here that they were not borrowed from any classical sources, but are for the most part beings of Shakespeare's creation, developed from popular traditions with which the English people were familiar.

In the case of the Athenian Swains, Bottom and his fellow actors, there is no doubt but that Shakespeare drew upon his own observation for these inimitable characters. They are no real Athenians, but purely English tradesmen, such as Shakespeare may have met in Stratford or London, or such as may have exhibited their crude performance at the "Ludos Coventriæ" at Coventry.

TYPES OF ENGLISH COMEDY.

A Midsummer Night's Dream is one of the earliest English comedies worthy of the name. It is interesting, therefore, to refer briefly to the origin of English comedy and its development by Shakespeare and his contemporaries. We shall see how vast a change was effected in this branch of the drama in a comparatively short time.

The earliest English play, miracle plays or miracles, were connected with the church and were acted by the clergy as early as the 12th century. They were afterwards performed by trading companies of various towns, as Chester, Wakefield, Coventry, and York. Popular characters in these plays were Herod, and later, Her/cules, types of the tyrant, as well as angels, demons, and souls. From about the reign of Henry VI. the miracle plays partly gave place to Moralities, which differed but little from the former class, but are of importance because it is in them that we first regularly see the Devil as a character with his attendant the Vice. The ordinary function of the Vice appears to have been to torment his master the Devil and this same Vice gradually developed into the Pool, who survived in the regular drama. The next step in advance towards Elizabethan comedy was made by John Hey wood, who died in 1565, and whose Interludes were short farces, dealing with real men and women. The next influence that asserted itself was the "new learning" of Edward VI.'s reign. The earliest extant English comedy Ralph Roister Doister, written by Nicholas Udall in or about 1551, is an adaptation of Plautus, Gammer Gurton's Needle, a farce of a somewhat low order, was printed in 1575, and was the first English play acted at either university. After this the Italian drama began to exercise a strong influence upon English comedy and led to the introduction of characters and stories from classical mythology. Queen Elizabeth's liking for dramatic entertainments now led to the rapid progress of the drama. Of Shakespeare's immediate predecessors the following are the names of the more important. John Lyly (b. 1554) wrote his plays in prose and set the example of brisk and vigorous dialogue. Shakespeare was indebted to him, in respect both to subject and style in many of his plays. Next follow the "University Wits" Marlowe (1564-1593), Greene (1561-1592), Peelo (1558-1593), Lodge (d. 1625), Nash (d. 1602), and Kyd. In the works of these dramatists we constantly see flashes which, as Mr. Saintsbury says, show Hamlet and A Midsummer Night's Dream in embryo. One of the peculiar features of the comedy of Shakespeare and some of his contemporaries is that, unlike the comedy of the Italian and Spanish Examples, it retained much of the mixed character of the Moralities and the Interludes. In the same play comedy and tragedy alternate as they do in real life. It was in consequence of this tradition that Shakespeare was able, without shocking the sense of propriety of his audience to introduce comic characters into such plays as Hamlet, Othello, and King Lear.

tiT. ON MASQUES AND ANTI-MASQUES.

ON MASQUES AND ANTI-MASQUES.

It is often said of A Midsummer Night's Dream that it is more of a masque than of a regular drama. In order that this statement may be properly understood we will give a general account of masques before proceeding to point out the resemblance between our play and this species of entertainment.

Masques were first introduced from Italy into England in the year 1512-3. In that year "the king with eleven others were disguised after the manner of Italy, called a Mask, a thing not seen afore in England." They were costly disguisings or pageants devised for some special occasion and performed by distinguished amateurs, usually princes or members of the court. The Italian masque grew out of the carnival, and the performance of masques in England was at first associated with such festivals as Christmas Day, Twelfth Day, and May Day. The masque admitted of dialogue, singing and dancing, and its essence was pomp and glory. Movable scenery of the most costly and splendid kind was lavished on it, and the most celebrated artists and musicians of the day were employed to embellish it. Masques were presented at the Court of Elizabeth, but it was in the reign of James the First that they attained their highest degree of excellence in the hands of Ben Jonson, whose principal entertainments were produced between 1605 and 1630. In order to diversify the performance Ben Jonson frequently introduced amusements of another kind called Anti-masques. These were usually parodies, or in some sense illustrations of the main masque, and were performed partly by servants, partly by actors hired for the purpose, whilst the masque itself was performed only by princely amateurs. Of this kind of entertainment Lord Bacon says: Let anti-masques not be long; they have been commonly of fools, satyrs, baboons, wild men, antics, beasts, spirits, witches, Æthiopes, pigmies, turquets (Turks), nymphs, rustics, oupida, statues moving, and the like." These A utimasques, to which the Interlude In A Midsummer Night's Dream in some measure corresponds, were probably borrowed from the old interludes with which the people had been long familiar, and although fantastic and extravagant were often made the medium of useful satire.  Double masques," says Lord Bacon, "one of men, another of ladies, addeth state and variety."

DISTINCTIVE FEATURES OF THE PLAY.

The play of A Midsummer Night's Dream is a sort of ideal dream and stands in a class by itself. Its very essence is irregularity and it follows no law but that of caprice. It most resembles a masque, but as we shall see it differs in important respects from a masque. Yet, in spite of its irregularities we may, by attentive study discover certain leading characteristics.

Harmonious blending: of different elements* The play comprises four different histories:—that of Theseus and Hippolyta:—of the four Athenian lovers:—of the 'home-spun' actors:—and of the fairies. Here, indeed, are 'most dissimilar ingredients' which could not be blended without the aid of that magic which could not be copied. Shakespeare has invented the fairy machinery by means of which he has been able to blend together the apparently incongruous elements, the courtiers and the clowns. The complication of the plot, or plots, all or nearly all the actions of the characters, and the unravelling of the entanglements do not in A Midsummer Night's Dream, as they do in Shakespeare's other plays, proceed from the inner impulse of the actors, but all come from without. The fairies serve as motive forces for nearly all the other actors. Usurping the place of the classical god Cupid, they form the link of connection.

"Upon the most superficial reading, we perceive that the actions in A Midsummer Night's Dream, still more than the characters themselves, are treated quite differently to those in other plays of Shakespeare. The great art of an underlying motive, his true magic wand, the poet has here quite laid aside. Instead of reasonable inducements, instead of natural impulses flowing from character and circumstance, caprice is master here. We meet with a double pair, who are entangled in strange mistakes, the motives to which we, however, seek for in vain in the nature of the actors themselves . . . At first Hele the warm season, the first night in May, the ghost-hour of the mystic powers, which heats the brain . . . then it is the power of Cupid who appears in the back-ground of the piece as a real character, who misleads the judgment and blinds the eyes, delighting in frivolous breach of faith. And last of all we see the lovers completely in the hand of the fairies, who ensnare their fancies and bring them into that tumult of confusion, the unravelling of which, like the entanglement itself, is to come from without" (GEUVINUS).

Another distinguishing feature of this play is the Interfusion of the lyrical element. Lyric poetry, as the name implies (A lyra, lyre) is poetry originally intended to be accompanied by the lyre or by some other musical instrument. The term has come to signify any outburst in song which is composed under a strong impulse of emotion or inspiration. Shakespeare has not only given to A Midsummer Night's Dream a lyrical character, by interspersing songs here and then in the play, but, as Coleridge has said "the whole of A Mid-

xvi. DISTINCTIVE FEATURES OF THE PLAY.

summer Night's Dream is one continual specimen of the dram at lied lyrical." To quote Verplanck—

"Its transitions are as rapid, and the Images and scenes It presents to the Imagination as unexpected and as remote from each other, as those of the boldest lyrio; while it has also that highest perfection of the lyric art, the pervading unity of the poetic spirit—that continued glow of exoited thought—which blends the whole rich and strange variety in one common effect ox gay and dazzling brilliancy."

Not unconnected with this characteristic of the play is Its Dream-like character. We shall remark more fully upon this feature when we come to speak of the title of the play. For the present it is sufficient to point out that the play resembles a dream in its wonderful complications, its lawlessness, its ideality, and its disregard of the laws of time and place.

"Besides, the whole thing swarms with enchantment: all the sweet witchery of Shakespeare's sweet genius is concentrated in it, yet disposed with so subtle and cunning a hand, that we can as little grasp it as get away from it: its charms, like those of a summer evening, are such as we may see and feel, but cannot locate or define; cannot say they are here, or they are there: the moment we yield ourselves up to them, they seem to be everywhere: the moment we go to master them, they seem to be nowhere" (HUDSON).

Another distinctive and important feature of the play is its Resemblance to a Masque. In A Midsummer Night's Dream the masque "imperceptibly glides into comedy," but it still retains many of the distinctive features of the more showy form of entertainment. It resembles a masque in the following points:

1. In its general lyrical character, and in the special introduction of musio and dances.
2. In the fact that in this play the delineation of character Is a secondary object, and that there are no apparent motives for the action which is carried on by external causes.
3. In its adaptability for out-of-door representation.
4. In the predominance of classical and mythical names.
5. In the Inclusion of the farcical interlude or anti-masque. The love-stories of Theseus and the Athenian youths form a kind of frame* work into which the anti-masque is inserted, the fairies corresponding to some extent with the choruses of dances of the regular Masque.
6. In the fact that the play has all the appearance of having been originally intended, like the masques, for a private entertainment, possibly to celebrate the marriage of some noble. On this point see the Notes on V. i. 93 and 420.

It differs from a Masque in the following respects:

1. It exhibits none of the profound classical learning which we associate with the regular masque as produced by Ben Jonson. Shakespeare has popularised the subject, and has borrowed from classical fable little more than a few names. The fairies themselves are creatures of mediasval fable.
2. The anti-masque is genuinely English. Its clowns are no "spirits, witches, iEthiopes, pigmies, turquets, nymphs," and the like, but common English tradesmen remarkable principally for their lack of Imagination and their earnestness of purpose,

THE TITLE OF THE PLAY.

In considering the fitness of the title which Shakespeare has chosen for his fairy comedy, we naturally ask ourselves two questions, viz. "Why is it called a Dream?" and "Why is the dream associated with Midsummer Night?" According to our ability or otherwise to answer satisfactorily these two questions, we form our opinion of the fitness of the title.

The Play regarded as a Dream. Shakespeare has made it very evident by numerous passages in the play that he did not intend this comedy to be regarded from the same point of view as other plays or to be judged by the laws that govern the drama of character and life; (E1 the end of the play, in the lines which stand in the place and bear the character of an Epilogue, Puck asks his audience to think:

"That you have but slumber'd here
While these visions did appear.
And this weak and idle theme,
No more yielding but a dream,
Gentles do not reprehend" (V. i. 428).

The actions of the principal characters during the greater part of the play are performed whilst under the influence, of illusion and enchantment so that the actors themselves are no more masters and mistresses of their own thoughts, words, and conduct than if they were actually

"Begot of nothing but vain fantasy
Which is as thin of substance as the air
And more inconstant than the wind"

(Bom. and Jul., IV. i.).

Titania, on being released from the spell that had been laid upon her, exclaims: "What visions have I seen" (IV. i. 77). Lysander, Hermia, Helena and Demetrius relate their dreams to the Duke and Duchess, and Theseus regards them as "antique fables and fairy toys." The delicate and airy verse, the beautiful and tender imagery, the shadowy characterisation and the atmosphere of fairy-land all fit in admirably with the idea of a dream.

Bottom himself is solid and substantial enough, but even he has "had a most rare vision," a "dream past the wit of man to say what dream it was." As we have already remarked (p. xvi.), one of the characteristic features of the comedy is that in it Shakespeare has given free play to his fancy and has not intended to convey any moral lesson, and though commentators often exert themselves to find the moral that points the tale, we ourselves are inclined to agree with Bottom when, on his awakening, he affirms that "man is but an ass, if he go about to expound this dream" (IV. i. 207).

"They (the fairies) are laden with a sort of personified dreams; and so the poet places them in a kindly or at least harmless relation to mortals as the bringers of dreams. Their very kingdom is located in the aromatic, flower-scented Indies, a land where mortals are supposed to live in a half-dreamy state. From thence they come, following darkness, just as dreams naturally do; or, as Oberon words it, 'tripping after the night's shade, swifter than the wandering moon' . . . They love the dusk and the twilight, because this is the best dreaming time, whether the dreamer be asleep or awake. . . . It is a very noteworthy point that all their power or influence over the hearts and actions of mortals works through the medium of dreams, or of such fancies as aft most allied to dreams. Bo that their whole inner ebaraoater Is fashioned In harmony with their external function " (HUDSON).

"I am convinced that Shakespeare availed himself of the title of this play In his own mind, and worked upon it as a dream throughout, but especially, and, perhaps, unpleasingly, in this broad determination of ungrateful treachery in Helena, so undisguisedly avowed to herself, and this too, after the witty cool philosophizing that precedes " (COLERIDGE on Helena's Speech, "I will go tell him of fair Hermia's night," etc., I i. 246).

Midsummer Night Associations.

We have seen that the play is appropriately called a Dream and now enquire, "Why, when the action of the play belongs to the end of April and the first of May, should it be associated in the title with Midsummer Night" (June 24th or St. John the Baptist's Day), Two reasons suggest themselves in answer to our query.

1. It may have been specially written for performance on that day.
2. There may be in the play something specially connected with or recalling the traditional observances of that day.

In view of our ignorance of the actual occasion (if any) for which the play was composed, and in the absence of definite information as to the élate of the composition of the play we are unable to offer any argument in support of the first view except this; that judging from its masque-like character it appears to have been written for some particular occasion and that (as is doubtless the fact in the case of Twelfth Night and A Winter's Tale, a tale "to beguile the dreary leisure of a long winter evening "it may have derived its title from that occasion.

With respect to the second view we must take particular notice of two things (1) that many superstitious notions of a highly fanciful character were formally connected with St. John's Eve, and (2) that Shakespeare himself seems to allude to such superstitions in Twelfth Night when Olivia describes the strange behaviour of Malvolio as "very midsummer madness." (Consequently, whatever may have been the circumstance that led Shakospeare to adopt his title for the play, we are justified in saying that the title chosen is an exceedingly appropriate one.

The "Midsummer-Night's Dream" appears to have been so called because its exhibition was to take place on that night, for the time of action of the piece itself is the vigil of May-Day, as is that of the Winter's Tale the period of sheep-shearing. It is probable also, as Mr. Stevens has observed, that Shakespeare might, have been influenced in his choice of the fanciful machinery of this play, by the recollection of the proverb attached to the season (the proverbial "midsummer madness") . . . an adage founded on the common opinion, that the brain, being heated by the intensity of the sun's rays, was more susceptible of those flights of imagination which border on insanity than at any other period of the year " (DUAKH).

Some of the superstitious notions connected with St. John's Eve are of a highly fanciful nature. The Irish believe that the souls of all people on this night leave their bodies, and wander to the place, by land or sea, where death shall finally separate them from the tenement of clay. . . In England, and perhaps in other countries also, it was believed that, if any one sat up fasting all night in the church porch, he would see the spirits of those who were to die in the parish during the ensuing twelvemonths come and knock at the church door, in the order and succession in which they were to die. . . . Young women likewise sought for what they called pieces of coal, but in reality, certain hard, black, dead roots, often found under the living mugwort, designing to place these under their pillows, that they might dream of their lovers. . . . The observance of at. John's Day seems to have been, by a practical bull, confined mainly to the previous evening " (CHAMBEBS' "Book of Days").

SHAKESPEARE'S TREATMENT OF CLASSICAL SUBJECTS.

To the most superficial student of the play it must be evident, even upon a first perusal, that Shakespeare in A Midsummer Night's Dream has not attempted to treat his subject in a scholarly or learned fashion. He herein presents a strong contrast to his contemporaries the "University Wits"—Marlowe, Greene, Peele, Lodge, Nash, and Kid—who were all of academic education, and had even a decided contempt for "the only Shakescene," and the "upstart crow beautified with our feathers" whose university was the world and whose model was human nature. He presents also a very strong contrast to Ben Jonson, who in his Masques (produced at a later period than our play) also treats of mythological subjects and, in one case at least, introduced an Oberon and a fairy world (Oberon, The Fairy Prince, A Masque of Prince Henry's). But whereas Jonson has sought above all things for correctness and connitency, and has found it necessary even to accompany his masques with copious notes, Shakespeare, on the contrary, has treated the subject from the point of view of the practical playwright and has devised a play for a popular audience. His scene is placed in Athena but his characters are English to the backbone. He combines the loves of Theseus and Hippolyta with the Gothic mythology of fairies and attributes to Grecian characters of a pre-historic period customs and superstitions of his own time. He introduces classical names and alludes to classical stories because his audience were familiar with these names and legends; but he did not aim at classical accuracy or consistency. He wrote to be understood, and to give pleasure, and it mattered not to him when he made Hernia swear "by that fire which burn'd the Carthage queen," that Dido was born many hundreds of years after the period at which Hermia is supposed to have lived; nor did he hesitate for a moment to mingle with his pagan and classical mythology terms and customs relating to the Christianity of the middle ages.

"Those legends from old priesthood were received,
And he then writ, as people then believed."

He knew that, as Coleridge says, "Greek manners in English should be a still grosser improbability than a Greek name transferred to English manners."

"This sort of anachronism, common to all modern writers before and during the age of Shakespeare, seems to have arisen in part from a comparative dearth of classical learning, which left men to contemplate the heroes of antiquity under the forms into which their own mind and manners had been cast. Thus their delineations became informed with the genius of romance; the condensed grace of ancient character giving way to the enlargement of chivalrous magnanimity and honour, with its high-erected thoughts seated in the heart of courtesy." Such in Shakespeare's case appears to have been the no less beautiful than natural result of the small learning, so often smiled and sometimes barked at, by those more skilled in the ancient languages than in the mother-tongue of nature" (HUDSON).

SHAKESPEARE'S FAIRY WORLD.

In speaking of Shakespeare's Fairy Kingdom we shall consider first the origins of fairy lore, and after touching upon some of the characteristics of the fairies and elves of the different earlier systems, shall then endeavour to show how Shakespeare's influence has had the effect of almost entirely changing the popular conception of this delightful order of mythological personages.

The Origin of Fairies. Andrew Lang writes: "Fairies are doubtless much older than their name, as old as the belief in spirits of woods, hills, lonely places, and the nether world. The familiar names, fees, fades, are apparently connected with Fatum, the thing spoken, and with Fata, the Fates who speak it, and the god Fatuus or Faunus, and his sister or wife Fatua," These fairies, or fays, seem to have been originally regarded as spiritual maidens of the forests and elements, and when Christianity reached Gaul these minor goddesses survived the official heathen religion. They lived on in the hearts of peasants, and "the secret shame-faced worship lasted deep into the middle ages," and they appear, principally as enchantresses, in the early romances of Spain, Italy and France. These fays are not often represented as diminutive in stature, and have little to distinguish them from human beings, except their supernatural power. They preside at the birth of man and influence his destiny, taking individuals under their special protection. They take lovers from among men, and are often described as of delicate and surpassing beauty. To this class belong the fairies of Spenser.

The Origin of Elves. Whilst tradition was developing a fairy kingdom in the southern countries of Europe, and in Gaul, popular superstition was independently at work in the northern Scandinavian kingdoms, and it is to the elves (Icel. alfr, Dan. alf, Gk. alp), and dwarfs or duergars (Icel. dvergr), of the northern mythology that we must go for the origin of those little creatures that dance in the woods and meadows. These elves were divided into two classes, the Bright or Beneficent, and the Swart or Malignant. They are said to have animated the clay below the earth like maggots, and one of the leading features of their character with relation to man is a desire for fair human children, to obtain which they used to practise many tricks. They are often represented as animated by a spirit of malicious mockery towards men, which is not, however, altogether malignant. Gervase of Tilbury, Ghauoer and Lydgate, all refer in their works to fairies of the northern or Gothic system.

Blending of two Systems. The traditions which connected the inhabitants of faerie with the mythologies of Greece and Rome, and the superstitions which owe their origin to northern mythology were, owing to various agencies, gradually blended together. And although the northern system was the first to take root in England, and occupied much the larger place in popular tradition, yet it seems to have been considerably modified, even before Shakespeare's time, by the addition of some of the features of the more classical system of the romances. The original character of the swart elves of Scandinavia continued for a long time in the popular Scottish traditions.

Huon of Bordeaux and the History of Oberon. Euon de Bordeaux is the name given to one of those famous French romances of which the mythical history of Charlemagne forms the central design, and, which spread throughout Europe during the middle ages. It was compiled in prose in 1454, from a poem which dates back to the 12th century, and was translated into English about 1540. It is of importance to us because in it Oberon, "the dwarf of the fayry," plays the best part of the narrative. Huon is one of the paladins or knights of Charlemagne, who goes through many wonderful and perilous adventures, assisted by the pretty dwarf, King Oberon, who always makes his appearance when the hero's needs are greatest.

But even before Huon de Bordeaux, Oberon had already made his appearance in epic literature of Teutonic origin. He had appeared in the Heldenbuch ("Book of Heroes"), as Elberich (=elf-king), a dwarf king, who played very much the same part as Oberon in the Prenoh romance, and in the Niebelungen Lied ("Song of the Race of Niebelungen"), where he is the guardian of the treasure that was won by Siegfried.

Shakespeare's Influence on our Conceptions of Fairies. When JL Midsummer Night's Dream was written, nearly the whole of Fairy Mythology seems to have been modified and added to by Shakespeare. As Drake says; "The Fairies of Shakespeare have been truly denominated the favourite children of his romantic fancy, and; perhaps, in no part of his works has he exhibited a more creative and visionary penoill, or a finer tone of enthusiasm, than in bodying forth "these airy nothings," and in giving them in brighter and ever-durable tints, once more

"A local habitation and a name."*

Of his unlimited sway over this delightful world of ideal forms, no stronger proof can be given than that he imparted an entirely new cast of character to the beings whom he has evoked from its bosom, purposely omitting the darker shades of their character, and, whilst throwing round them a flood of light, playful, yet exquisitely soft and tender, endowing them with the moral attributes of purity and benevolence. In fact, he not only dismisses altogether the fairies of a malignant nature, but clothes the milder yet mixed tribe of his predecessors with a more fascinating sportiveness, and with a much larger share of unalloyed goodness."

Characteristics of Shakespeare's Fairies.

1. They have a Court, a King and a Queen. Their court is situated somewhere in the farthest steppe of India (IL i. 70). "The King and Queen of Faيري, who in Chaucer are identified with the Pluto and Proserpine of hell, are under the appellations of Oberon and Titania, drawn by Shakespeare in a very amiable and pleasing light." Although they quarrel with one another yet they are represented as being usually employed in alleviating the distresses of the worth) and unfortunate. The queen has her pensioners (body-guard) (II. i. 10), the king his clown or jester ('tnou lob of spirits') (II. i. 18 and 45), and his train of knights (II. i. 25).

2. They have influence over the physical powers of nature. They can "overcast the night" (III. ii. 357) and cover "the starry welkin" with black fog (III. ii. 359). When they quarrel all nature is disturbed, the seasons alter and the moon

*"Pale in her anger, washes all the air
That rheumatic diseases do abound"* (II. i. 105).

3. They delight in conferring blessings. Oberon desired and ultimately was able to make smooth the course of love for Helena. With Titania he blesses the house of Theseus "to all prosperity" (IV. i. 91) and makes the issue of the Duke and Duchess "ever fortunate" (V. i. 409). Oberon averts a duel between Lysander and Demetrius (III. ii. 300) and uses his power in such a manner that in the end "all things shall be peace" (III. ii. 879). Even when Titania steals a baby she does it, not in accordance with tradition, from malignant motives, but from an impulse of humanity and compassion (II. i. 137).

- i. They are diminutive in size. Shakespeare has made them diminutive as the Scandinavian elves, but in his descriptions of them he has painted them with many picturesque and fanciful touches that are all his own. They can "creep into acorn cups" (II. i. 81), wear robes of the snake's 'enamelled skin' (II. i. 256) and coats of the 'wings of reere-mice' (II. ii. 4); the pensioners of the queen are 'the cowslips tall' (II. i. 10), her lacquies Peasblossom, Cobweb, Moth and Mustardseed (III. i. 162); her lamps the green lustre of the glow-worm (III. i. 170) and her servants 'fan the moonbeams' with wings of 'painted butterflies' (III. i. 172).

5. They move with extreme rapidity. They *wander everywhere, swifter than the moon's sphere' (II. i. 7). Puck can 'put a girdle round about the earth in forty minutes' (II. i. 176), or go 'swifter than the wind' (III. ii. 94), or 'than arrow from the Tartar's bow' (III. ii. 101). Titania sends her servants away 'for the third part of a minute' (II. ii. 2) with numerous duties to perform, and she herself and her lord can compass the globe 'swifter than the wandering moon' (IV. i. 99).

6. They occupy and amuse themselves in many various ways. They dance in circles on the green (II. i. 9, 141; II. ii. 1), they 'seek dew-drops' and 'hang a pearl in every Cowslip's ear' (II. i. 15); they can 'fetch jewels from the deep' (III. i. 158) and shake the earth (III. ii. 25) or 'rock the ground' (IV. i. 87). They fall in love with mortals (II. i. 69, 72; III. i. 156) and Oberon 'with the morning's love has oft made sport' (III. ii. 891). They 'kill cankers' in flowers, war with reere-mice or keep back the clamorous owl (II. ii. 8-6).

7. They are in visible by mortals (I. i. 187) and can see what is denied to the eight of inferior beings (II. i. 156), and they are immortal (II. i. 136), and purged of all 'mortal grossness' (III. i. 160). Such are the characteristics of the fairy world over which Oberon and Titania were king and queen. Puck, however, being a spirit of another sort, with special attributes of his own, will be further considered when we come to deal with the characters of the play.

"That which Shakespeare received in the rough form of fragmentary popular belief, he developed in his playful creation into a beautiful and regulated work! He here in a measure deserves the merit which Herodotus ascribes to Homer; as the Greek poet has created the great abode of the gods and its Olympic inhabitants, so Shakespeare has given form and place to the fairy kingdom, and with the natural creative power of genius, he has breathed soul into his merry little citizens, which imparts a living centre to their nature and their office, their behaviour and their doings. He has given embodied form to the invisible and life to the dead, and has thus striven for the poet's greatest glory.... If it were Shakespeare's object, expressly to remove from the fairies that dark ghost-like character (Act III. 8c 2), in which they appeared in Scandinavian and Scottish fable, if it were his desire to portray them as kindly beings in a merry, harmless relation to mortals, if he wished in their essential office as bringers of dreams, to fashion them in their nature as personified dreams, he carried out this object in wonderful harmony both as regards their actions and their condition. The kingdom of the fairy beings is placed in the aromatic flower-scented Indies, in the land where mortals live in a half-dreamy state. From hence they come, "following darkness," as Puck says, "like a dream.".... They are represented, these little gods, as natural souls, without the higher human capacities of mind, lords of a Kingdom not of reason and morality, but of imagination and ideas conveyed by the senses; and thus they are uniformly the vehicle of the fancy, which produces the delusions of love and dream.... The sense of the beautiful is the one thing which elevates the fairies not only above the beasts, but also above the low mortal, when he is devoid of all fancy and uninfluenced by beauty.... The only passion which agitates these beings, is jealousy, the desire of possessing the beautiful sooner than others; they shun the distorting quarrel; their steadfast aim and longing is for undisturbed enjoyment" (GKBVINUS).

"The Midsummer Night's Dream is, I believe, altogether original in one of the most beautiful conceptions that ever visited the mind of a poet, the fairy machinery. A few before him had dealt in a vulgar and clumsy manner with popular superstitions; but the sportive, beneficent, invisible population of the air and earth, long since established in the creed of childhood and of those simple as children, had never for a moment been blended with 'human mortals' among the personages of the drama.... It is unnecessary to observe that the fairies of Spenser, as he has dealt with them, are wholly of a different nature" (HAXLJLM).

"In further explication of this peculiar people, it is to be noted that there is nothing of reflection or conscience or even of a spiritualized intelligence in their proper life; they have all the attributes of the merely natural and sensitive soul, but no attributes of the properly rational and moral soul. They worship the clean, the neat, the pretty and the pleasant, whatever goes to make up the idea of purely sensuous beauty: this is a sort of religion with them; whatever of conscience they have adheres to this: so that herein they not unfitly represent the wholesome old notion which places cleanliness next to godliness. Everything that is trim, dainty, elegant, graceful, agreeable, and sweet to the senses, they delight in: flowers, fragrances, dewdrops, and moonbeams, honey-bees, butterflies, and nightingales, dancing, play, and song—these are their joy; out of these they weave their highest delectation; amid these they 'fleet the time carelessly/ without memory or forecast, and with no thought or aim beyond the passing pleasure of the moment' (HUDSON).

THE HUMOUR OF THE PLAY.

The comic element of the Play is, of course, to be found principally in those scenes in which Bottom and his fellow craftsmen display their happy imbecility, and these scenes are in themselves so irresistibly comic, that we can hardly feel surprise when we read that "The merry conceited humours of Bottom the Weaver," were, at the period of the Restoration converted into a farce, and aoted apart from the rest of the play. The incongruity between what the actors really are, and what they ought to be, or pretend to be, is the very essence of what is laughable; and Bottom's absolute unconsciousness of what others think of him, very much heightens the absurdity of the situation. But they very greatly erred who thought that in separating these comic scenes from their proper framework, they were extracting the best part of the humour of the play. Shakespeare hardly ever contents himself with what is merely comical; most often he carries his comedy to the verge of the serious, and mingles his mirth with beauty or pathos as in A Midsummer Night's Dream, and sometimes even with tragedy. This is the way of real life. Dr. Dowden reminds us that: "The traditions of the English drama had favoured the juxtaposition of the serious and comic; but it was reserved for Shakespeare to make each a part of the other; to interpenetrate tragedy with comedy, and comedy with tragic earnestness." It is when the comic characters, Bottom and his confreres pass into the serious parts of the drama that they really infect it with the element of humour. Nothing, for instance, could be more powerfully humorous than the scene in which Titania bids her fairies minister to the desires of Bottom. "Shakespeare's humour has enriched itself by coalescing with the fancy. The comic is here no longer purely comic; it is a mingled web, shot through with the beautiful."

"The clowns In the Midtummtr Night's Dream are raised In the self-satisfaction and assurance of their actions above all disappointment in success, and are therefore insensible to the mischievous joy of others; with them nothing fails, neither their aims nor their ha mo ar' . . . the comic power of these characters survive* all changes of taste; these types of folly and absurdity are completely dyed with the comic colours of nature, indelible fox all ages (GERVINUS).

ELIZABETHAN ENGLISH.

On reading the works of Elizabethan authors we are apt at first sight to wonder at the many points of difference in grammar, syntax, and meaning which we observe when we compare them, with the English of to-day. But, if we look into the matter closely, we shall not be surprised at what we find. The great "renascence" had just taken place. The literature of the ancient classics was being studied as it had never before been studied in England, and the zeal of the convert made itself manifest in our language. But old prejudices die hard, and must be combated, and as the struggle continues the result appears to be—chaos. Neither party will give way, so both reign and neither is supreme. But language ā given to express thought, and out of the apparent chaos there arises a -uaguags clear in thought, but doubtful in expression. Such must the language be of all transitional periods, and the Elizabethan language was nothing if not transitional. Here English-Latin, there Latin-English, but always intelligible. The Englishman in a foreign country, possessing but a smattering of the foreign tongue, will express himself in a hybrid language, but he will make his meaning clear, though his grammar may be faulty, and his syntax inexact. So, too, the child,—and the new English was in its infancy. Hence we shall find that the Elizabethan English differs in many respects from the English of to-day, that it is trying to reconcile two conflicting systems, and that "syntax," or the orderly arrangement of words into sentences is hardly to be looked for. And we need not wonder at inflectional changes; for language is a living organism, and we must expect a living thing to show some signs of change after a period of three hundred years.

SUPPOSED HISTORICAL ALLUSIONS. xxv

We shall in this find the raison d'être of most of the so-called "grammatical difficulties" in Shakespeare. It may be added that in those days printed books were less common than now, and that, even to-day, the spoken language is frequently less "grammatical" than the written book. And we must not forget that Shakespeare was a dramatist even before he was a poet, and that he makes his men and women speak in their own character. Bottom will not use the same expressions as fall from the mouth of Titania, nor will any character under the influence of strong emotion use the same terms, or express himself with the same grammatical accuracy as he might use when not so moved.

SUPPOSED CONTEMPORARY OR HISTORICAL ALLUSIONS.

1. To Queen Elizabeth. The 'fair vestal throned by the west' of II. i. 159 and the 'imperial votaress' of line 164 of the same scene no doubt refer to Queen Elizabeth whom 'Cupid's fiery shaft' was powerless to wound. These allusions and the compliment which appears to be paid the virgin queen in the lines:

" *Thrice blessed they that master so their blood,
To undergo such maiden pilgrimage*" (L i. 74), lend an air of probability to the conjecture that the play was written to celebrate some wedding which was graced by the presence of the Queen.

2. To Mary Queen of Scots. The allegory contained in II. i. 149-169 has received various ingenious explanations. In one of them the mermaid is said to refer to Mary, Queen of Scots, the dolphin to the Dauphin of France, the 'rude sea' is Scotland which was in a state of disorder until the arrival of its queen in 1561, and the 'certain stars' which 'shot madly from their spheres' are the English nobles who fell in her cause.

8. To the Earl of Leicester. Another explanation of Oberon's vision supposes the allegory to refer to the festivities which took place when the Earl of Leicester entertained Elisabeth at Kenilworth in 1575 xxii. THE PLAT CONTRASTED WITH THE TEMPEST.

According to this explanation Cupid stands for the Earl of Leicester, whose love shafts were 'quench'd in the chaste beams of the watery moon' which represents Queen Elisabeth; the earth stands for Lady Douglas, Countess of Sheffield, to whom the Earl was supposed to be privately married; and 'the little western flower' is Lettice Knollys, Countess of Essex, the mother of the Earl of Essex, who afterwards also married the Earl of Leicester; the dolphin uttering 'dulcet and harmonious breath' refers to the image of a dolphin which figured in the pageant at Kenilworth and within which "a consort of musicke was secretly placed," and the stars are the fireworks with which the entertainment was enlivened.

4. To Spenser. As we have already stated (on p. xi.) there appears to be an allusion to Spenser's The Tears of the Muses in the lines:

" *The thrive three Muses mourning for the death
Of Learning, late deceased in beggary* " (V. i. 52-3).

5. To Robert Greene. The same lines have sometimes been thought to refer to the death of the poet and dramatist Robert Greene, which took place in 1592.
6. To the Winter of 1593-4' TitamVs speech in II. i. 82-118 is often supposed to describe the severity of the weather of this period of which there are contemporary accounts in Stowe's Annals, in Dr. King's Lectures upon Jonas, delivered in 1594, in Thomas Churchyard's Charity, and in the journal of Dr. Simon Forman, the Astrologer,
- 7' To the Earl of Essex. One theory (which places the date earlier than we can think possible) supposes the play to have been composed in honour of the marriage of the Earl of Essex (Theseus, in the play) with the widow of Sir Philip Sidney (Hippolyta). "Like Theseus, Essex courted many an Ægle and Perigenia' and then left them," and Sidney's wife is said to have "delighted in the chase and in the barking of 'hounds, like the Amazon queen." Other references to this theory will be found in the notes on V. i. 93 and 426.

THE PLAY CONTRASTED WITH THE TEMPEST, xxvii

"A MIDSUMMER NIGHTS DREAM" AND "THE TEMPEST."-A CONTRAST.

The contrast between A Midsummer Night's Dream and The Tempest is of particular interest to the student of Shakespeare, because it enables him to perceive some of the striking differences between the poet's earlier and later methods. Both plays are irregular in form, and have in them something of the nature of a masque. In both the influence of Ovid is seen, and in both fairies play a very prominent part. But here the resemblance ends.

The Tempest displays quite a different mood in the poet. In the earlier play all is bright and fresh, full of fascinating poetry without any very deep thought running through it. In the later play we can see Shakespeare, as Dr. Dowden expresses it, "tenderly bending over the joys and sorrows of youth." In the earlier play the poet writes from the point of view of one who enters zealously into the feelings of youth, taking life not too seriously, smiling at the perplexities and entanglements caused by the mischievous sprite Puck, and enjoying the absurdities of the unimaginative Athenian swains; but in The Tempest he has a more serious purpose in view than merely to amuse or delight. He has a lesson to enforce. He teaches mankind the lessons of duty. In A Midsummer Night's Dream Oberon's madcap minister Puck plays his pranks simply for the fun of the thing, and laughs at the pain or embarrassment he causes. Ariel, on the other hand, in The Tempest is⁴⁴ a minister of retribution, who is touched with the sense of pity at the woes he inflicts.¹ Puck is the familiar Robin Goodfellow of tradition, with an extra strain of poetry infused into his composition; Ariel is the pure creation of the poet. In A Midsummer Night's Dream the fairies are half irresponsible actors in whose hands 'human mortals' are mere puppets, but in The Tempest the fairies themselves are the ministers of the powerful human will of their superior, Prospero.

"The characteristic attributes of the fairy people are, perhaps, most availably represented in Puck; who is apt to remind one of Ariel, though the two have little in common, save that both are preternatural, and therefore live no longer in the faith of reason. Puck is no such sweet-mannered, tender-hearted, music-breathing spirit, as Prospero's delicate prime minister; there are no such fine in ten' darings of a sensitive moral soul in his nature, he has no such soft touches of compassion and pious awe of goodness, as link the dainty Ariel in so smoothly with our best sympathies" (HUDSON).

xxviii. THE CHARACTERS OF THE PLAY

THE CHARACTERS OF THE PLAY.

THESEUS.

Compared with King Henry the Fifth. Shakespeare's Theseus is really a romantio rather than a classical personage. As Duke of Athens he reminds us somewhat of Henry V., King of England. He appears to be Shakespeare's earlier conception of his ideal king. Like King Henry he is a great warrior and a ruler possessed of much dignity and majesty. He bears some resemblance to the English king also in the fact that his youth had been rather wild and dissolute (II. i. 76-81). But that was when he was still under the influence of the fairies, an influence which passed away before the period of his life presented in the play. Here we see him as A Soldier and a Man of Action, who wooed his wife with his sword, and "won her love doing her injuries" (I. i. 16), and who in times of peace loved to hear the music of his hounds. His career has been one of conquest (V. i. 51, 93-100), his triumphs have been celebrated in set orations prepared by great scholars who have "shivered and looked pale" in the presence of so famous a soldier. But he, being a man of action rather than of words, who could appreciate any service done him "when simpleness and duty tender it," has a preference for "the modesty of fearful duty" rather than for "The rattling tongue

Of sssucy and audacious eloquence" (V. i. 102).

A practical man of a high order of intelligence. His love for Hippolyta is no romantic passion like the loves of his young Athenian friends. Indeed, although he makes love at the beginning of the play in a dignified and stately fashion, yet we find him later comparing together "the lunatic, the lover and the poet," apparently without any idea of including himself in his description (V. i. 7-20). He is certainly not unimaginative, but he keeps his imagination well under control and therein differs from those who "are of imagination all compact." He cannot believe in the visions and dreams of the lovers in the forest, in "these antique fables, nor these fairy toys." His life has been too full of action and hard work to allow him to let his imagination run riot, but he has a very true idea of "the pleasures of the imagination." Unlike Hippolyta, to whom the Interlude is simply "tjie silliest stuff that ever I heard," he can find enjoyment in the honest attempts of imperfect actors. He can "piece out their imperfections with his thoughts." To him "the best in this kind are but shadows and the worst are no worse if imagination amend them."

He possesses a kindly and generous disposition, and shows a strong inclination to make everyone happy in his kingdom. He proclaims a fortnight's holiday on the occasion of his marriage. He endeavours to persuade Hermia to submit to her father's will, and though, being himself a ruler, he naturally upholds the Athenian law, yet we feel all the time that his sympathies are with the daughter rather than with the stern parent. When Demetrius expresses his determination to be true to hil first love, the Duke unhesitatingly overrides the will of Egeus. During the Interlude he apologises for the imperfections of the actors, takes in very good part the amusing corrections of Bottom (V. i. 184-7 and 354-5), and sends away the players delighted with the assurance that it is "a fine tragedy, and very notably discharged."

THE CHARCTERS OF THE PALY. xxix.

It has often been said that in depicting the character of Theseus, Shakespeare has been at no pains to describe an Athenian monarch of a pagan age, but has really painted the picture of

A contemporary English hunting Squire. His great pleasure is to go

*"Up to the mountain's top,
And mark the musical confusion
Of hounds and echo in conjunction"* (IV. 1.110).

and he has chosen a wife who shares his own tastes. His pride is in his "flew'd and sanded" hounds, "bred out of the Spartan kind," And when he cannot be hunting he requires some other "sport" (V' i. 42, 90) with which "to ease the anguish of a torturing hour."

As a mythological personage Theseus is the national hero of the Ionian', as Hercules is of the Æolians. He has not unjustly been called the second Hercules with whom he has many features in common. He was the son of the Athenian king Ægeus (- wave-man), who himself is Poseidon (or Neptune) in another form. He is the mythical hero of a great number of adventures of which we need only allude here to such as seem to have some connection with the play.

In Crete he slew the Minotaur, and carried away Ariadne the Slaughter of Minos, king of Crete (see p. 111 and cf. IL i. 81, and IV. i. 113).

With Hercules as his comrade he fought against the Amazons on the occasion of an inroad made by them into Attica, and won the love of their queen Antiope, or Hippolyte, whom he wedded (cf. IV. i. 113).

At Thebes he helped Adrastus, king of the Argives, to recover the bodies of those that were slain in battle before the city (cf. V. L 51).

With the Lapith that he is said to have chastised the Centaurs, fighting in aid of the Thessalian Pirithous, the king of the Lapithss (cf. V. 1. 44). According to the later traditions he was accompanied on this expedition by his friend Hercules.

Kit death is reported to have happened as follows. During his absence from Athens the sovereignty was usurped by Menestheus, who was aided by the Dioscuri. Theseus withdrew to the island of Scyros, where he was at first hospitably received, but afterwards treacherously murdered by Lycomedes, the ruler of the island.

In Art A representation of the conflict of Theseus with the invading army of the Amazons still exists on a large piece of frieze-work, which is now the property of the British Museum. Theseus may be recognized by his lion's skin and the club, which he is in the act of swinging against a mounted Amazon. He is usually represented as a beardless youth in his prime, and a perfect ideal of manly beauty.

"The central figure of the play is that of Theseus. There is no figure in the early drama of Shakespeare so magnificent. His are the large hands that have helped to shape the world. His utterance is the rich-toned speech of one who is master of events—who has never known a shrill or eager feeling. . . . Theseus, a grand ideal figure, is to be studied as Shakespeare's conception of the heroic man of action in his hour of enjoyment and leisure with a splendid capacity for enjoyment, gracious to all, ennobled by the glory, implied rather than explicit, of great foregone achievement, he stands at centre of the poem, giving their true proportions to the fairy tribe upon the one hand, and spon the other to the 'human mortal'" (DOWDEN).

HIPPOLYTA is for the most part a silent actor in the play. She takes her place with dignity as a soldier queen by the side of her soldier husband that is to be. She betrays no youthful longing for the rapid flight of time (I. i. 7-11), nor does she often address her future lord in endearing terms. We can hardly imagine her ever to have had a very close connection with the fairy world, although Titania speaks of her to Oberon as "your buskin'd mistress, and your warrior love." The remarks she makes during the performance of the Interlude—"This is the silliest stuff that ever I heard," "I am aweary of this moon; would he would change," "such a Pyramus," and "I hope she will be brief"—are hardly such as might tend to the encouragement of the actors—supposing them to be so commonplace as to require encouragement;—but this we may perhaps excuse in her, remembering that she has been until now a stranger to the civilisation of Athens.

EGEUS is the stern, unyielding parent who comes "full of vexation," with complaint against his child Hermia. On meeting with Lysander and Demetrius after the flight into the forest, the vehemence with which he urges his claims reminds us somewhat of Shy lock by its intensity. "Enough, enough, my lord," he cries,

•' you have enough :

I beg the law, the law upon his head " (IV. i. 155).

He appears almost altogether devoid of human sympathies, and when the Duke overbears his will he silently and ungraciously submits to the wishes of his lord.

HERMIA—her personal appearance. She is described as "beauteous" (I. i. 104), "fair" (I. i. 117, 187, etc.), with "sphery eyne" (II. ii. 99), which are "blessed and attractive" (II. ii. 91), and a voice

" More tuneable than lark to shepherd's ear

When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear " (I. i. 184).

Compared with Helena. There appears to have been little to choose between them in respect of beauty. They are "two lovely berries moulded on one stem" (III. ii. 211), and Helena is "through Athens" thought as fair as Hermia (I. i. 227). Hermia was dark (III. ii. 258, 265), Helena fair (III. ii. 298); Hermia was short (III. ii. 290, etc.), Helena tall (III. ii. 294, 298, etc.). See, however, p. xxxl. under Helena.

Her disposition in early life is hinted at more than once. Helena says:

" She was a when, when she went to school;

And though she be but little she is fierce." (III. ii. 826).

But although hasty of temper, 'shrewish' as she is called, she was a true and maidenly lover, and had been a dear friend to Helena all her life.

" We, Uermia, like two artificial gods,

Have with our needles created both one flower,

Both on one sampler, sitting on one cushion,

Both warbling of one song, both in one key,

As if our hands, our sides, voices, and minds,

Had been incorporate " (III. ii. 203).

She cannot fairly be judged by the language of which she makes use

THE CHARACTERS OF THE PLAY. xxxi.

when all her friends are under the influence of "Cupid's flower" and she herself is in distress, smarting under the pain of the apparently unnatural faithlessness of the two persons who had hitherto been all the world to her. Her violent language at this crisis must be regarded only as the exaggeration of

Her natural strong will. This is evident in the earlier part of the play when she expresses her determination to enter a nunnery, or even to die, rather than submit to the "unwished yoke" of one whom she felt she could not love. * So will I grow," she says;

" So live, so die, my lord,
*Ere I will yield my virgin patent up Unto his lordship to whose unwished yoke
My soul consents not to give sovereignty*" (I. i. 79).

We may be sure that not a little pressure had been brought to bear upon her by her father in order that he might turn her from what he pleases to call her "stubborn harshness." It was she, be it remembered, who, notwithstanding the warmth of her nature, suggested to Lysander,

" Then let us teach our trial patience,
Because it is a customary cross "

 (I. i. 152).

HELENA. The character of Helena is no more distinctly drawn by the poet than that of Hermia, and bears so many points of resemblance to that of the friend of her youth that many commentators have even gone so far as to say that no distinction can be made between them, except in so far as their outward appearance is concerned. But a closer study of the play will, we think, reveal in Helena

A more timid and gentler disposition. She compares herself with a spaniel (II. i. 204), and spaniel-like she "devoutly dotes, dotes in idolatry" upon the "spotted and inconstant" Demetrius. She seems to lack faith in herself; although reputed throughout Athens to be as beautiful as Hermia, yet she would give the world, she says, "Demetrius being bated," to possess the charms of Hermia. She longs for her voice, her eye, her "favour." She fears to be left alone in the dark (II. i. i. 86), bemoans her own "insufficiency" (II. ii. 128), deplores Lysander's lack of "true gentleness" (II. ii. 182), casts herself for protection upon the mercy of others, and appeals to Demetrius' and Lysander's sense, of courtesy and manliness (II. ii. 151-2, etc.). She reproaches Hermia with having "no modesty, no maiden shame, no touch of bashfulness" (III. ii. 287), and bitterly laments that she should "tear impatient answers from her gentle tongue" (II. ii. 288). Finally, she fears the physical violence threatened by Hermia, and begs the rivals for her love to "let her not hurt me." "I was liever curst" (shrewish), she says;

" I have no gift at all in shrewishness;
*I am a right maid for my cowardice;
Let her not strike me "* (III. ii. 802), and she runs away from the contest to which she feels she is not equal.

The betrayal of her friend. Her faithlessness toward Hermia does not seem to have been a plot thought out with any intention of doing an xxxil. THE CHARACTERS OF THE PLAY.

Injury to her former playfellow, but rather a sudden, impulsive action, intended only to bring herself once more in contact with Demetrius

"To have his sight thither and back again " „ (I. i. 251).

"The characters of Hermia and Helena are beautifully drawn and finely contrasted, and in much of the dialogue which occurs between them, the chord of love and pity are touched with the poet's wonted skill. In their interview by the wood the contrariety of their dispositions is completely developed; Hermia is represented as

—keen and ehretod ;
—a vixen when she went to school,
And, though but little, fierce,

and in her difference with her friend, threatens to scratch her eyes out with her nails, while Helena, meek, humble and retired, sues for protection, and endeavours in the most gentle manner to deprecate her wrath. . . . And in an earlier part of this scene, where Helena first suspects that her friend had conspired with Demetrius and Lysander to mock and deride her, nothing can more exquisitely paint her affectionate temper, and the heartfelt pangs of severing friendship, than the following lines, most touching in their appeal, an echo from the very bosom of nature itself :—

'Injurious Hermit! thou ungrateful maid I—

Though I alone do feel the injury,' (III. i. 195-199) (DRAKE).

LYSANDER, the lover of Hermia, is spoken of as "a worthy gentleman," of high rank and good fortune. Before the play opens he has impressed his image firmly upon Hermia's fancy and being secure in the possession of her love, he treats his future father-in-law with some scorn (I. i. 93-5).

He must not be thought faithless because, owing to Puck's blunder he came under the influence of "Cupid's flower" and suddenly transferred his affections to Helena.

DEMETRIUS differs from Lysander in character only in one important respect. He was inconstant and sinned through faithlessness to his betrothed Helena. The supernatural power of the fairies was needed in order to restore him to his "natural taste," and then, having returned to his first love he remembers his breach of faith only as youthful playfulness (IV. i. 165-177).

The two pairs of lovers.

"In the two pairs of lovers there are hardly any lines deep and firm enough to be rightly called characteristic. Their doings, even more than those of the other humane persons, are marked by the dream-like freakishness and whimsicality which distinguish the piece. Perhaps the two ladies are slightly discriminated as individuals, in that Hermia, besides her brevity of person, is the more tart in temper, and the more pert and shrewish of speech, while Helena is of a rather milder and softer disposition, with less of confidence in herself. But too in the case of Demetrius and Lysander the lines of individuality are exceedingly faint; the former being perhaps a shade the more caustic and spiteful, and the latter somewhat the more open and candid" (HUDSON).

TITANIA and OBERON are described with sufficient fullness on pp. xxi.-xxiii., where we have pointed out the characteristics which are common to all the fairies, of whom the king and queen may be taken as representative types.

THE CHARACTERS OF THE PALY xxxiii

PUCK.

The Origin and Use of the Name.

Puck, pug and pouke, are all appellations for a fiend. Puki, demon, if Icelandic and Gothic. M. B. puca, W. pwca. The name appears as Pug in Ben Johnson's play The Devil is an Ass, and as Puck-hairy in the Sad Shepherd of the same author. It is Puckle in Reginald Scot's Discovery of Witchcraft, and the name re-appears in the modern pixy, or in Cornwall pisky, a fairy. In Piers Plowman, Golding's translation of Ovid's Metamorphoses and in Spenser's Emthalamum we read about "the pouke." It is worthy of note that although "Puck" is generally used in our play as a proper name, it occurs also as a generic name for a sprite in V. i. 434, where Robin calls himself "an honest Puck," and in 438 of the same scene where he says:—

"We will make amends ere long;
Else the Puck a liar call."

The Robin Goodfellow of tradition. Shakespeare has, in his delineation of Puck, departed but little from the familiar conception of the character and attributes of the spirit of Scandinavian origin. He has divested the character of most of the malignant characteristics which were popularly associated with this mischievous elf, and he has infused into it a poetic and picturesque element which is the product of his own imagination. Many of his attributes are referred to by Reginald Scot in his Discoverie of Witchcraft (1584) from which we quote the following:—

"The virunculi terrei are such as was Robin good fel/owe, that would snpplie the office of servants, speciale of maids: as to make a fier in the morning, sweepe the house, grind mustard and malt, drawe water, etc." (p. 521, quoted from DRAKW).

Speaking of the Incubus, he adds:—"In deede your grandaras maides were wont to set a boll of milke before him and his cousine Robin good fellow, for grinding of malt or mustard, and sweeping the house at midnight: and you have also heard that he would chafe exceedingly, if the maid or goodwife of the house, having compassion on his nakednesse, laid anie clothes for him, beesides his messe of white bread and milke, which was his standing fee. For in that case he saith: What have we here? Hemten, hamten, here will I never more tread nor stampen" (p. 85 do.).

It may be also remarked, that the idea of fixing "an ass's nowl" on Bottom's head is most probably taken from Scot, who gives us a very curious receipt for this singular metamorphosis,

IN THE PLAY.

His duties and power.

To the fairy whom he first meets in the forest he appears as a "lob (clown) of spirits" (II. i. 16), Oberon's jester (II. i. 44). He acts throughout the play as the prime minister of Oberon, whom he addresses as "my lord" (II. i. 269), "captata of our fairy band" (III. ii. 110), "my fairy lord" (III. ii. 880), and "fairy king" (IV. i. 94). He possesses the power of changing his shape at will, transforming himself at different times into a "tilly foal" (II. i. 47), "a roasted crab" (II. i. 49), a "three-foot stool" (II. i. 53), and he can counterfeit noises and people's voices (III. i. 110, 862).

"Sometime a horse I'll be, sometime a hound,

A hog, a headless bear, sometimes a pre;

And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar, and burn.

Like horse, hounds hog, bear, fire, at every turn" (III. ii' 108).

xxxiv. THE CHARACTERS OF THE PLAY.

He can move with extraordinary swiftness (II. i. 176, etc.), but he did not possess the same powers of vision as were possessed by the superior spirit, his master (II. i. 156).

His love of Mischief is the most prominent feature of his character. He is a "shrewd and knavish sprite," that frights, maidens, misleads night-wanderers, beguiles fat and bean-fed horses, and plays pranks on old women (II. i. 83-53) often making the whole company

*" hold their hips and laugh
And waxen in their mirth and neeze and swear,"*

Seeing the "hard-handed men of Athens" move so far away from their natural sphere of action as to take upon themselves the rôle of actors, his mischievous instinct very soon declares itself. He fixes the ass's head on the thickest skull of that "barren sort," and then frightening his companions almost out of their senses, he leaves them scattered in a state of "distracted fear."

*"And left sweet Pyramus translated there:
When in that moment, so it came to pass.
Titania waked, and straightway loved an ass "* (III. ii. 32)

Far from repenting of the blunders he commits in his master's service he even glories in them and takes a keen delight in the embarrassing and perplexing situations brought about by his own clumsiness.

*" Then will two at once woo one:
That must needs be spurt alone;
And those things do best please me
That befall preposterously"* (III ii' 118),

and again

*" And so far am I glad it so did sort
And this their jangling I esteem a sport" (III. ii. 354).*

Not even is love sacred to him, and a lover in distress is a "fond pageant/" He moralises upon such a spectacle,

"Lord, what fools these mortals be I " (III. ii. 115).

He takes pleasure in leading Lysander and Demetrius astray, mocking them, scoffing and taunting first one, then the other with lack of courage (III. ii. 360, etc.).

His more pleasing qualities are only occasionally exhibited. He is evidently a favourite with his master who calls him "my gentle Puck" (II. i. 149, IV. i. 64) and "good Robin" (IV. i. 47), and who frequently welcomes him back from his aerial wanderings (II. i. 248, IV. i. 47); whilst for "those that Hobgoblin call him and sweet Puck" (II. i. 40), he does their work and "they shall have good luck." He has a feeling of pity for beauty in distress, addressing Helena asleep as "pretty soul" (II. ii. 76). His concluding speech is couched in a modest strain which does not altogether fit his character. He claims to be "an honest Puck" (V. i. 434) and asks for the indulgence of the audience in case he has offended any.

BOTTOM.

Bottom takes his name from one of the implements of his trade, a "bottom" in weaving being either a ball of thread or the block on which it was wound. He is one of the most distinctly drawn characters of the play. For self-assurance, audacity and conceit he has no equal. From the very commencement, although Quince was nominally the stage-manager, Bottom takes upon himself the whole management of the play. His self-confidence is such that he would have liked to act all the parts himself from the greatest to the least. His abilities are frankly recognised by his fellow-actors, who defer to his opinion on all points. They acknowledge that there is "not a man in all Athens able to discharge Pyramus, but he" and that "he hath simply the best wit of any handicraft man in Athens." Nothing daunts him. He is not in the least awed by the imposing audience of courtiers in the Duke's palace. Twice he boldly contradicts the Duke when he thought he showed an imperfect understanding of the progress of the piece. Whatever failings he may have had, we may feel sure his blunders did not proceed from, any nervousness on his part. Furthermore he is—

A practical man, full of resource. He organises the rehearsal. He suggests difficulties and objections apparently that he may show how easily he can sweep them away by his devices. He accommodates himself readily to his novel position amongst the fairies and he is not slow to find suitable occupation for the spirits that are told off to minister to his wants. Even his dream he proposes to turn to practical account: "I will get Peter Quince to write a ballad of this dream. . . . I will sing it in the latter end of the play before the Duke" (IV. i. 215). Between his awaking from his vision and his entrance in Quince's house (i.e. between IV. i. and IV. ii.) he has made good use of his time. He has learnt that "the Duke hath dined" and that the play has been presented for approval.

As seen by other characters. Bottom looked upon himself as a man of genius with a special gift for acting of the highest order, and this view of himself he imposed upon his fellow tradesmen. But he was not universally regarded in this light. Puck speaks of him as one of a crew of swaggering "hempen home-spuns," and even calls him "the shallowest thick-skin of that barren sort" (III. ii. 18). To the King of the fairies he is nothing less than a "hateful fool" (IV. i. 50). Puck, on taking off the ass's head bids him, "Now, when thou wakest, with thine own fool's eyes peep" (IV. i. 85). In the opinions of the courtiers he cuts a sorry figure. Hippolyta even pities the man. Theseus regards him as "an ass" and his wonderful performance as a "palpable-gross play" (V. i. 370).

^M And then Bottom! Who but the most skilful artist could have given us such a character? Of him Malone says, 'Shakespeare won't naturally copy those manners first with which he was first acquainted. The ambition of a theatrical candidate for applause he has happily ridiculed in Bottom the weaver.' A theatrical candidate for applause! why, Bottom the weaver is the representative of the whole human race. His confidence in his own power is equally profound, whether he exclaims, 'Let me play the lion too'; or whether he sings alone, 'that they shall hear I am not afraid'; or whether, conscious that he is surrounded with spirits, he cries out, with his voice of authority, 'Where's Peaiblouam?' In every situation Bottom is the same—the same

xxxvi. THE CHARACTERS OF THE PALY

personification of that self-love which the simple cannot conceal, and the wise can with difficulty suppress" (KNIGHT),

"Bottom is incomparably a finer efflorescence of the absurd than any preceding character of Shakespeare's invention. How lean and impoverished his fellows, the Athenian craftsmen, confess themselves in presence of the many-sided genius of Nick Bottom! Rarely is a great artist appreciated in the degree that Bottom is—'He hath simply the best wit of any handicraft man in Athens; yea, and the best person too; and he is a very paramour for a sweat voice.' With what a magnificent multiplicity of gifts he is endowed! How vast has the bounty of nature been to him! The self-doubtful Snug hesitates to undertake the moderate duties assigned to the lion. Bottom, though his chief humour is for a tyrant, knows not how to suppress his almost equal gift for slaying a lady. How, without a pang can he deprive the world, through devotion to 'the Ercles vein' of the monstrous little voice in which he can utter 'Thisne, Thisne—Ah Pyramus, ray lover dear; thy Thisby dear and lady dear!' And as to the part assigned to the too bashful Snug—that Bottom can undertake in either of two styles, or in both, so that the Duke must say, 'Let him roar again, let him roar again,' or the ladies may be soothed by the 'aggravated voice' in which he will 'roar you as gently as any sucking dove.' But from these dreams of universal ambition he is recalled by Quince to his most appropriate impersonation:—'You can play ao part but Pyramus, for Pyramus is a sweet-faced man; a proper man as one shall see in a summer's day; a most lovely, gentleman-like man; therefore you most needs play Pyramus'" (DOWDEN).

QUINCE, SNUG, FLUTE and STARVELING are not specially characterised in the play. They are subordinate characters, amusing from their ignorance and for the respect—almost reverence—they pay to Bottom. Quince may perhaps lay claim to a larger share of education than the rest, whilst Flute is the boldest of them and Snug the most diffident. Starveling, the tailor, keeps the peace, and objects to the lion and the drawn sword. With a few words about their respective names we may dismiss them without further comment. Quince, the carpenter, is so called from the tree of that name, M.F. coignasse, "the greatest kind of quince." F. coing, a quince. Gk. κυδωνιον μηλον, a quince, lit. a Cydonian apple (Cydonia, one of the chief cities of Crete). The musical name Flute naturally belongs to the bellows-mender (bellows = the pipes of an organ). Starveling carries a reference to the traditional leanness and pinched appearance formerly associated with the members of his craft. Snug is in prov. E. mug, tidy, Icel. sntiggr, and may bear reference to the trimming and planing of planks which would naturally fall to the part of Snug the Joiner.

ABSTRACT OF THE PLAY. xxxvii

ABSTRACT OF THE PLAY.

- L i. The curtain rises to disclose the palace of Theseus, Duke of Athens, who is about to marry Hippolyta, Queen of the Amazons. To them enter Egeus with his daughter Hermia, and two suitors for her hand, Lysander and Demetrius. Egeus complains that his daughter refuses to marry Demetrius whom he has chosen to be her husband, and claims the ancient privilege of Athens to dispose of her as he pleases. Theseus tries gentle persuasion with the lady, who inquires what must be her fate if she declines to wed Demetrius. The answer is that she must die or go into a convent. She is given a few days, until "the next new moon," in which to consider. The Duke departs with his train, and Lysander being left alone with Hermia appoints a trysting-place for the morrow night. Helena enters and is told about the intended flight of the lovers.
- I. ii. A company of Athenian artisans are assembled in the house of Quince, a carpenter, to discuss a play on the subject of Pyramus and Thisbe, which they hope to act before the Duke and Duchess on the occasion of their wedding. They arrange the parts, Bottom, a self-satisfied weaver with a very exalted opinion of his own abilities, taking the rôle of the hero and assuming the direction of affairs generally.
- II. i. Puck (or Robin Goodfellow) and a fairy meet in a wood near Athens. Here also Oberon, the king of the fairies, meets Titania his queen, from whom he has been separated for some time owing to a difference they have had about a little changeling boy, who has been brought up by Titania and whom Oberon wants to join his train of knights. Titania refuses to give up the boy and goes away to avoid further quarrelling. Oberon determines to punish her and sends Puck, his chief minister, to find a flower called love-in-idleness, the juice of which when dropped upon sleeping eyelids, will make either man or woman dote upon the next living object seen. As Puck vanishes on his errand Demetrius enters followed by Helena, who seeks in vain to win again his love or even his endurance of her company, for they had formerly been betrothed and Demetrius has proved unfaithful. Oberon, who is invisible to mortals, sees how cruelly Demetrius treats his former lover, and determines to make him kinder to Helena. After their departure and on Puck's returning with the flower, Oberon Bends him after Demetrius and bids him anoint his eyes at such a time that the next person he sees may be Helena.
- II. II Titania enters another pari of the wood and bids her fairies sing her to sleep. Oberon comes in and squeezes the flower on her eyelids and leaves her there asleep. Lysander and Hermia who have lost their way in the wood, now come to the same spot and being weary lie down and sleep. Puck, coming upon the scene, and seeing an Athenian lying asleep near a lady, mistaking Lysander for Demetrius, anoints his eyes with the juice of the flower. Then into the same part of the wood come Demetrius with Helena closely following him. Helena perceives Lysander asleep and awakens him. He being affected by the magic juice, at once falls passionately in love with Helena and follows her. Hermia awakens to find herself alone and goes in search of Lysander.

- III. i. The rustic actors meet in this same eventful part of the wood to rehearse their play. Puck comes in, bent on mischief, and when, in the course of the rehearsal, Bottom retires from sight for a moment, he fixes on him an ass's head. When Bottom returns, thus disguised, the rest of the actors run away terrified. Bottom, 'I unconscious of the cause of their sudden flight remains and sings. The noise of his voice awakens Titania, who was still lying asleep and under the influence of Cupid's flower. The pretty, dainty, fairy queen falls in love with the ugly, rough and coarse Bottom with the ass's head fixed on his shoulders.
- III. II. Puck tells Oberon how Titania "with a monger in love," and that he has anointed the eyes of the Athenian, as ordered. Demetrius and Hermia then approach and she, thinking that Demetrius must have murdered her lover Lysander reproaches him bitterly. When she goes away Demetrius lies down and sleeps. Oberon, seeing the mistake that Puck has made sends him away to bring Helena in order that she may be the first person seen by Demetrius when he awakens after having his eyes anointed. Lysander and Helena enter, he declaring, and she protesting against, his love. Demetrius wakes and loves Helena. She, unable of course, to understand such changes, thinks the two men are mocking her. Hermia comes in and the game of cross purposes continues. Demetrius and Lysander quarrel about Helena, with whom Hermia is furious. The two men go out to fight. Oberon, to end the trouble for all, dispatches Puck to the rescue, charging him to render the night dark with fog and lead the rivals astray from one another. This he does, and when the two pairs of lovers again lie down to sleep in one part of the wood and not very far from each other, he again anoints Lysander's eyes, but this time not with Cupid's flower, as before, but with "Dian's bud," which has the property of removing all error from the mind of the person anointed. So when they awake they will love each other in pairs as they ought to do.
- IV. i. Titania is sitting with Nick Bottom on a flowery bank, surrounded by her pretty little fairies who wait on Bottom and obey his absurd directions. When they two sleep, Oberon orders Puck to release the fairy queen from her enchantment, and remove the ass's head.

Theseus, Hippolyta, and Egeus enter to the sound of horns, and are surprised to find the two pairs of lovers lying asleep in the same part of the wood. When all are awake, and Demetrius has declared his love for Helena, the Duke tells Egeus that the two couples shall be joined together in the temple at the same time as himself and Hippolyta. All go away together to Athens. Bottom awakes and rinds himself alone, He thinks he has been dreaming a wonderful dream.

- IV. il. The actors are at a loss to know what to do without Bottom, whom they cannot find. No other man, in all Athens, they say, could play the part of Pyramus. Fortunately he enters, and bids them make haste and go to the Duke's Palace.
- V. i. In the Palace of Theseus, Philostrate, the master of the revels, offers the duke his choice of several forms of entertainment. Theseus chooses to see the play of Pyramus and Thisbe, which is to be both " merry and tragical." The play begins, and Quince enters as Prologue with a flourish of trumpets. The other actors perform their parts indifferently in this most ridiculous of plays. The noble audience criticise good-naturedly, being amused at the blunders and absurd pantomime of the actors. The tragedy ends with the death of the principal players, and is followed by a Bergomask or rustic dance. The audience retires to rest, and Puck and all the fairies come in to bleef the house and the wedded couples "to all prosperity."

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

Dramatis persona.

THESEUS, Duke of Athens.
 EGEUS,, Father to Hermia,
 LYSANDEB, } in love with Hermia.
 DEMETRIUS,, }
 PHILOSTBATB, Master of the Revels to Theseus.
 QUINCE, a Carpenter,
 SNUG, a Joiner.
 BOTTOM, a Weaver.
 FLUTE, a Bellows-mender'
 SHOUT, a Tinker.
 STABVELING, a Tailor,
 HIPPOLYTJL, Quern of the Amatoms, betrothed to Theseus.

HERMIA, daughter to Egeus, in love with Lysander.
 HELENA, in love with Demetrius,
 OBEBON, King of the Fairies,
 TITANIA, Queen of the Fairies,
 PUCK, or Robin Goodfellow.
 PEASEBLOSSOM,
 COBWEB, } Fairies.
 MOTH, MUSTARD-SEED,)

Other Fairies attending their King and Queen.
Attendants on Theseus and Eiypolyta'

80BBE: Athens and a Wood near it.

ACT I

SCENE I.—Athens. A Boom in the Palace of THESEUS.

Enter THESEUS, HIPPOLYTA, PHILOSTRATE, and Attendants.

The. Now, fair Hippolyta, our nuptial hour Draws on apace?; four happy days bring in Another moon: but, O, methinks, how slow
This old moon wanes I she lingers' my desires,
Like to a step-dame, or a 'dowager,
Long withering' out a young man's revenue.

Hip. Four days will quickly steep themselves in night;

Four nights will quickly dream away the time;
And then the moon, like to a silver bow
New-bent in heaven, shall behold the night
Of our solemnities.^d 10

The. Go, Philostrate,
Stir up the Athenian youth to merriments;
Awake the pert? and nimble spirit of mirth:
Turn melancholy forth to funerals,
The pale companion is not for our pomp.

[Exit PHILOSTRATE.]

Hippolyta, I 'woo'd thee with my sword,
And won thy love doing thee injuries;
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pomp, with triumph, and with revelling.

Enter EGEUS, HERMIA, LYSANDER, and DEMETRIUS.

Ege. Happy be Theseus, our renowned duse I 20
The, Thanks, good *Egeus*¹: what's the news with thee?

Ege. Full of vexation come I, with complaint Against my child, my daughter Hermia.
Stand forth, Demetrius. My noble lord,
This man hath my consent to marry her.

a rapidly

b delays the fulfillment of c causing to wither away or dwindle

d wedding celebration

e lively

f trisyllable

¹A dowager is a widow with a Jointure, i.e. one to whom the young man has to pay a yearly revenue during his life-time.

²Theaetia, according to tradition, defeated the Amazons and carried off their queen Hippolyta.

Stand fortⁿ, Lysander: and, my gracious duke,
 This man hath bewitcid' the bosom' of my child:
 Thou, thou, Lysander, thou hast given her rhymes,
 And interchanged love-tokens with my child.
 Thou hast by moonlight at her window sung, 30
 With feigning voice, verses of feigning love;
 And *stolen the impression of her fantasy*⁶
 With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gawds,^d conceits,^d
Knacks? trifles, nosegays, sweetmeats, messengers
'Of strong prevailment in unfiarderid youth;
 With cunning hast thou filctid' my daughter's heart,
 Turn'd her obedience, which is due to me,
 To stubborn harshness: and, my gracious duke,
Be it so^b she will not here before your grace
 Consent to marry with Demetrius, 40
 I beg² the ancient privilege of Athens,
 As she is mine, I may dispose of her:
 Which shall be either to this gentleman
 Or to her death, according to our law
*Immediately provided*¹ in that case.

The What say you, Hermia? be advised? fair maid :

To you your father should be as a god;
 One that composed your beauties; yea, and one
 To whom you are but as a form in wax,
 By him imprinted, and within his power 50
*To leave the figure or disfigure it*⁵
 Demetrius is a worthy gentleman.

Her. So is Lysander.

The, In himself he is;
 But in this kind,¹ wanting[^] your father's voice?
 The other must be held the worthier.

Her. I would my father look'd but with my eyes!

The. Bather your eyes must with his judgment look.

a pronounce as two syllables
 b heart

c stealthily imprinted thy image upon her Jieart
 d ornaments e presents fancifully devised
 t knick-knacks
 g stolen
 li if it so be thai

1 specially provided to meet k cautious

1 respect
 m lacking
 n approval

¹ I.e. by means of which, impressionable youth is strongly Influenced,

² A law of Solon's gave to parents absolute power of life and death over their children.

⁹ I.e. to leave you with your life or deprive you of it

Her. I do entreat your grace to pardon me,
I know not by what power I am made bold,
Nor how it may concern" my modesty,
In such a presence here, to plead my thought';
But I beseech your grace that I may know
The worst that may befall me in this case,
If I refuse to wed Demetrius.

60 a become

The. Either to die the deatn,' or to abjure
For ever the society of men.

0 death toy judicial sentence

Therefore, fair Hermia, question your desires,
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether, if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun^c;
For aye to be in shady cloister mew'df
To live a barren sister all your life,
Chanting faint hymns to the cold fruitless moon.
Thrice blessed they that master so their blood,
²To undergo such maiden pilgrimage;
But earthlier happy is the rose ³*disill'd*
Than that which, withering on the virgin thorn,
Grows, lives, and dies in single blessedness.

70 ^c to take the veil
' shut up

Her. 80 will I grow, so live, so die, my lord,
Ere 1 will yield my virgin patent up
Unto his lordship^e whose unwished yoke
My soul consents not to give sovereignty.^f

80

e give myself up to the power of him

The. Take time to pause; and by the next new moon,—

t sovereign power

The sealing-dtiy' betwixt my love and me,
For everlasting bond of fellowship,—
Upon that day, either prepare to die
For disobedience to your father's will,
Or else to wed Demetrius, as he would',
Or on Ehana's' altar to protest
For aye, austerity and single life.

g i.e. day on which our contract is to be completed
h the maiden goddess, identified with the moon
ef. I. 83

90

¹The mention of 'nan,' sister,' cloister,' Is an anachronism.

²Le. That they can endure to pass through life without the blessing of marriage. Shakespeare frequently uses the word 'pilgrimage' for time spent irksomely.

³The idea is that the rose which is plucked in order to be distilled into scent (i.e. the woman who marries) leads a happier life in this world than the roses that is left to fade away on the stalk (the unmarried woman).

Dem, Relent, sweet Hermia: and, Lysander, yield

Thy crazEd title to my certain right.

Lys. You have her father's love, Demetrius;
Let me have Hennia's: do you marry him.

Ege. Scornful Lysander I true, he hath my love,
And what is mine my love shall render him;
And she is mine, and all my right of her
1 do estate unto Demetrius.

Lys. 1 am, my lord, as well derived'as he,
As well possess a^c; my love is more than his; 100
My fortunes every way as fair ly rank'd,
If tutt with vantage, as^A Demetrius;
And, which is more than all these boasts can be,
I am beloved of beauteous Hermia.

Why should not 1 then prosecute my right?
Demetrius, I'll avouch' it to his head,
Made love to Nedar's daughter, Helena,
And won her soul'; and she, sweet lady, dotes,
Oevoutly dotes, dotes in idolatry,
Dpon' this spotted' and inconstant man. no

The. 1 must confess, that 1 have heard so much,
And with Demetrius thought to have spoke thereof;
But, being over-full of self-affairs,
My mind did lose it.—But, Demetrius, come;
And come, Egeus: you shall go with me,
I have some private schooling' for you both.
For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself
To fit your fancies to your father's will,
Or else the law of Athens yields you up,
Which by no means we may extenuate) 120
To death, or to a vow of single life.

Come, my Hinpolyta: what cheer, my love?
Demetrius and Egeus, go along:

I must employ you in some business
Against our nuptial, and confer with you
Of something nearly that^m concerns yourselves,

Ege. With duty and desire' we follow you.

[Exeunt all but LYBANDHR and IISRMIA.]

Lyi, How now, my love ? Why is your cheek so pale?

' weak claim

bborn
o richly endowed

4 rank as high if not higher than

e maintain

t heart

^h idolises
' polluted

i matters relating to myself

^announcements

1 lessen the severity of

m that nearly n dutifully and eagerly

6 ACT A MIDSUMMER-NIGHTS DREAM. sc.i

How chance the roses there do fade so fast?

Her. Belike' for want of rain, which I could well
Beteem' them from the tempest of mine eyes. 131

Lys. Ay me I for aught that I could ever read,
 Could ever hear by tale or history,
 The course of true love never did run smooth;
 But, either it was different in blood,—

Her. 0 cross I^c too high to be enthral'd' to low 1

Lys. Or else misgraff&i' in respect of years,—

Her. 0 spite 1 too old to be engaged to young!

Lys. Or else it stood upon' the choice of friends,—

Her. 0 hell! to choose love by another's eyes 1 140

Lys. Or, if there were a sympathy' in choice,
 War, death, or sickness did lay siege to it,
 Making it momentary' as a sound,
 Swift as a shadow, short as any dream,
 Brief as the lightning in the collied) night,
 That, in a spleen ^kunfolds both heaven and earth,
 And ere a man hath power to say,—" Behold I"
 The jaws of darkness do devour it up:
 So quick bright things come to confusion.¹

Her. If then true lovers have been etw^crossed, 150
 It stands as an edict in^a destiny:

Then let us teach our trial patience'

Because it is a customary cross

As due' to love as thoughts, and dreams, and sighs,

Wishes, and tears, poor *fancy's*¹ followers.

Lys. A good persuasion'; therefore, hear me, Hermia.

I have a widow aunt, a dowager'
 Of great revenue, and she hath no child:
 From Athens is her house remote seven leagues,
 And she *respects*¹ me as her only son.
 There, gentle Hermia, may' I marry thee;
 And to that place the sharp Athenian law
 Cannot pursue us. If thou lovest me, then,
 Steal forth thy father's house to-morrow night,
 And in the wood, a *leagu*⁷without the town,
 Where I did meet thee once with Helence.

a probably
 b bestow upon

^c perversity of ^d fortune bound ill-matched rested on

g happy fitness

h as short-lived

1 black
 k sudden out- burst or flash

I four syllables
 m invariably n irrevocable law
 of o learn patiently to endure our trial p natural q love's
 r brief

^s see l.5

¹ regards
^u can

^v cf. l.ii.102

ACT A MIDSUMMER-NIGHTS DERAM.. SC L. 7

To 'do observance to a morn of May,
There will I stay for thee.

Her. My good Lysander I
I swear to thee, by Cupid's strongest bow;
By his best arrow' with the golden head; 170
By the simplicity^c of Venus' doves,
By that which knitteth souls and prospers loves;
And by that fire which burn'd the ²*Carthage queen*^f
When the ²*false Troy* ar? under sail was seen;
By all the vows that ever men have broke,
In number more than ever women spoke;
In that same place thou hast appointed me,
To-morrow truly will I meet with thee.

Ly'. Keep promise, love.—Look, here comes Helena,

Enter HELENA,

Her, God speed, fair Helena I Whither away? 180

Hel. Call you me fair? that *fair*¹ again unsay.

Demetrius loves your *fair*¹: 0 happy fair!

Tour eyes are *lode-stars*¹ and your tongue's sweet air

More *tuneable*¹ than lark to shepherd's ear

When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear.

Sickness is catching: 0, were *favour*¹ so,

Yours would I catch, fair Hermia, ere I go;

My ear should catch your voice, my eye your eye,

My tongue should catch your tongue's sweet melody.

Were the world mine, Demetrius being *bated*¹, 190

The rest I'd give to be to you *translated*¹,

0, teach me how you look, and with what art

You *sway the motion of*¹ Demetrius' heart.

Her. I frown upon him, yet he loves me still.

Hel 0, that your frowns would teach my smiles such skill I

Her. I give him cursea, yet he gives me love.

Hel 0, that my prayers could such affection move Ij

^a the god of loys
^b i.e. wttf which he would ~~inspire the~~ Strongest love
^e guilelessnest
Dido ~~Æneas~~

f se. word
g beauty
h guiding-start
1 tuneful

k features

1 excepted mfron'formed

' control at your will

¹ Celebrate the customary rites of May day. (See Supplementary Notes.)

² Vergil (Æneid lv. 684. etc.) tells how Æneas In his voyage from Troy to Latium landed at Carthage, where the queen Dido (ell in love with him. When he sailed away to seek the new home the gods had promised him, Dido in despair destroyed herself on a funeral pile. (See also Æneid v. 1-7.)

Her. The more I hate, the more he follows me.

Het The more I love, the more he hateth me.

Her. His folly, Helena, is no fault of mine. 200

Hel. None, but your beauty : would that fault were mine I

Her. Take comfort: he no more shall see my face;
Lysander and myself will fly this place.

¹*Before the time I did Lysander see,*

Seemed Athens as a paradise to me:

O, then, what graces in my love do dwell,

That he hath turn'd a heaven unto a hell I

Lys. Helen, to you our minds we will unfold:

To-morrow night,' when Phcebe' doth behold

Her silver visage in the watery glass,

210

Decking with liquid pearl' the bladed grass,

A time that lovers' flights doth still' conceal,

Through Athens' gates have we devised to steal.

Her. And in the wood, where often you and I

Upon faint? primrose-beds were wont to lie,

Emptying our bosoms of their counsel' sweet,

There my Lysander and myself shall meet;

And thence, from Athens turn away our eyes,

To seek new friends and *stranger companies.*⁹

Farewell, sweet playfellow : pray thou for us,

220

And good luck grant thee thy Demetrius I

Keep word, Lysander: we must starve our sight

From lovers' food,' till morrow deep midnight.

Lys. I will, my Hermia. [Exit HERM.] Helena,

. adieu:

As you on him, Demetrius dote on you I [Exit.]

Het How happy some *o'er other some*¹ can be I

Through Athens I am thought as fair as she;

But what of that? Demetrius thinks not so;

He will not know what all but he do know;

And as he errs, doting on Hermia's eyes,

230

Bo I, admiring of' his qualities.

Things base and vile, *holding no quantity,*¹

^a cf. line 9

^b the mown

^c dew-drop'

^d constantly

egale

f inmost thoughts

g less familial associates

h i.e. we must not see each other

I as compared with others

k admiring

¹ bearing no pro' portion (to what they are rated at)

¹ Athens, which was a Paradise to me before I saw Lysander, has become a hell to me now that, baring seen and loved him, I am prohibited from meeting him, Such are the excellencies (which you so envy) that reside in my love !

ACT I. A MIDSUMMER-NIGHTS DERAM. A

Love can transpose to form and dignity:
 Love looks not with the eyes,^c but with the mind,
 And therefore is wing'd Cupid painted blind:
 Nor hath Love's mind of any judgment taste;
 Wings and no eyes, figure' unheedy' haste:
 And therefore is Love said to be a child,
 Because in choice he is so oft beguiled,^c
 As waggish boys in game themselves forswear, 240
 So the boy Love is perjured everywhere ;
 Por ere Demetrius look'd on Hermia's eyne,^d
 He hailed down oaths that he was only mine '^c;
 And when this hail some heat from Ilermia felt,
 So he dissolved, and showers of oaths did melt.
 I will go tell him of fair Hermia's flight:
 Then to the wood will he to-morrow night
 Pursue her; and for this intelligence
 If I have thanks,¹ it is a dear expense :
 But herein mean I to enrich my pain,^c
 To have his sight thither and back again.

^c denote brash
c cheated

^d eyes
« mine alone

250 ¹ the pain it causes me is bring them together
[Exit.

SCENE II.—Athens. A Room in QUINCE'S House.

Enter QUINCE, SNUG, BOTTOM, FLUTE, SNOUT, and STARVELING.

Quia. Is all our company here ?

Bot You were best to^c call them generally,^h man by man, according to the scrip.¹

Quia, Here is the scroll of every man's name, which is thought fit, through all Athens, to play in our interlude before the duke and the duohess on kis wedding-day at night.

Bot First, good Peter Quince, say what the play treats on; then read the names of the actors; and so grow to a point. 10

^g had better
^h Bottom's mistake for severally, i.o.
one by om
ⁱ seroitior roll (list of actors) play. See Gl
I come to the

¹ It will be a high charge to make him, i.e. non than I expect to git from him.

Quin Marry, our play is, The most lamentable comedy and most cruel death of Pyramus and Thisby.

Bot. A very good piece of work, I assure you, and a merry. Now, good Peter Quince, call forth your actors by the soroll. Masters, spread yourselves.

Quia. Answer, as I call you. Nick Bottom, the weaver.

Bot Ready. Name what part I am for, and proceed. 20

Quin. You, Nick Bottom, are set down for Pyramus.

Bot What is Pyramus? a lover, or a ¹tyrant t

Quin. A lover, that kills himself most gallant' for love.

Bot. That will ask' some tears in the true performing of it: if I do it, let the audience look to their eyes; I will move storms, I will condole^e in some measure. To the rest^d: yet my chief humour is for a tyrant: I could play Ercles' rarely, or a part to tear a cat in, to make all split. 31

The *raging rocks*¹
And *shivering shocks*¹
Shall break the locks

Of prison gates;
And Phibbus^k "car"
Shall shine from far,
And make and mar

The foolish Fates,

This was lofty t Now name the rest of the players.
—This is Ercles' vein, a tyrant's vein; a lover is more condoling. 42

Quin. Francis Flute, the bellows-mender.

Flu. Here, Peter Quince.

^a gallantly

^c demand

^e lament

^d se. Proceed

^e Hercules

^t Note the alliteration

^I Phoebus' car,
the sun

¹The tyrant was a common character in the earlier Mystery-plays. In Hamlet I I I. ii., Shakespeare refers to such a character as Bottom would like to represent: "O, it offends me to the soul to bear a robustious periwig-pated fellow' tear a passion to tatters, to very rags. . . I would have such a fellow whipped for o'erdoing Termagant; it out-berods Herod." Herod and Hercules were typical tyrants in these early plays.

Quia You must take Thisby on you.
Flu. What is Thisbe? a wandering knight t	a knight-trrant
Quin. It is the lady that Pyramus must love.
Flu. Nay, faith, let me not 'play a woman ; I have a beard coming.
Quin. That's all one . You shall play it in a mask, and you may speak as small as you will. 51	b does not matter c shrill
Bot An I may hide my face, let me play Thisby too. I'll speak in a monstrous little voice: " Thisne, Thisne; " " Ah, Pyramus, my lover dear I thy Thisby dear, and lady dear!"
Quin. No, no; you must play Pyramus; and, Flute, you Thisby.
Bot Well, proceed.
Quin. Robin Starveling, the tailor.
Star. Here, Peter Quince. 60
Quin. Robin Starveling, you must play Thisby's mother. Tom Snout, the tinker.
Snout. Here, Peter Quince.
Quin. You, Pyramus' father; myself, Thisby's father. Snug, the joiner, you the lion's part: and, I hope, here is a play fitted	d with action to fit the parts
Snug. Have you the lion's part written? pray you, if it be, give it me, for I am slow of study.
Quin. You may do it extempore, for it is nothing but roaring. 70
Bot. Let me play the lion too: I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me; I will roar, that I will make the duke say, " Let him roar again, let him roar again."
Quin. An ^e you should do it too terribly, you would fright ^d the duchess and the ladies, that they would shriek; and that were enough to hang us all.	^e If ^f ffrighten
AIL That would hang us, every mother's son.

¹ In Shakespeare's time ladies' parts were played by boys or young men. Cf. Hamlet I I, ii, : " What, my young lady and mistress) By'r lady, your ladyship is nearer to heaven than when I saw you last, by the altitude of a chopine' (high shoe), Pray God, your vole' , , , be not cracked

18 ACT. I A MIDSUMMER-NIGHTS DERAM. SC. II.

Bot I grant you, friends, if that you should fright the ladies out of their wits, they would have no more discretion but to hang us: but I will aggravate^a my voice so, that I will roar you^b as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you^c an^d 'twere any nightingale. 84

Quia, You can play no part but Pyramus; for Pyramus is a sweet-faced man; a proper^a man, as one shall see in a summer's day; a most lovely, gentleman-like man: therefore, you must needs play Pyramus.

Bot Well, I will undertake it. What beard were I best to play it in? 91

Quin. Why, what you will.

Bot. I will discharge it^t in either your straw-colour beard, your orange-tawny^g beard, your jmrple-in' grain^d beard, or your French-crown-colour^d beard, your perfect yellow.

Quin. Some of your French crowns^k have no hair at all, and then you will play bare-faced. But, masters, here are your parts: and I am to entreat you, request you, and desire you, to con^l them by to-morrow night, and meet me in the palace wood, a *mile*ⁿ without the town, by moonlight: there will we rehearse, for if we meet in the city, we shall be *dogged with*ⁿ company, and our device^o known. In the meantime I will draw a bill^p of properties, such as our play wants. I pray you, fail me not. 106

Bot We will meet; and there we may rehearse more obscenely^q and courageously. Take pains; be perfect; adieu.

Quia. At the duke's oak we meet. no

Bot Enough; hold, or cut bowstrings^r

[Excut.

a perhaps he mans 'atten-uate? make thin

b see p. 97

c see p..97

d as if a handsome

t play the part g dark orange (like tanned leather)

b scarlet-dyed

i yellow

k a pun on er own

l learn

m it is a league in I i. 165.

n following too closely by

o plans

p list

q obscurely secrefly

r keep your appointment or throw tip the game'
See Notes

ACT II.

SCENB I.—A Wood near Athens.

Enter\ from opposite sides, a Fairy and PUCK.

Puck. How now, spirit, whither wander you ?

Fai. Over hill, over dale,

Thorough' bush, thorough' brier,
Over park, over palé'

Thorough' flood, thorough' fire,

I do wander everywhere,
Swifter than the moon's⁰ sphere;

And I serve the fairy queen,

To dew' her orbs^e upon the green :
The cowslips tall her pensioners¹ be;

In their² gold coats Bpots you see,

Those be rubies, fairy favours,⁹

In those freckles live their savours';

I must go seek some dew-drops here.

^athrough ha if ace enclosed by rails

^c dissyllable

^d be-dew,moisten
^e fairy-rings
^f body-guard
^g tokim of love from the fairies
ft perfumes

10

¹ The ' sphere' it the orbit in which a star moves, and which in Shakespear's time was generally thought to move also.

² The ' gold coats' and the ' rabies' oontain an allusion to the iplendour of th# uniform of the Elizabethan body-guard-

And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear.

Farewell, thou lob of Bpirits; I'll be gone:

Our queen and all her elves come here anon.^h

Puck. The king doth keep his revels here to-night:

Take heed the queen come not within his sight;

For Oberon is passing fell and wrath,' 20

Because that she' as her attendant hath

A lovely boy, stolen from an 'Indian king,

She never had so sweet a changeling,'

And jealous Oberon would have the child

Knight of his train, to *trace*⁹ the forests wild;

But she perforce withholds the love'd boy,

Crowns him with flowers, and makes him all her joy:

And now they never meet in grove or green,

By fountain clear or spangled starlight sheen'

But they do square,' that' all their elves, for fear, 30

Creep into acorn cups and hide them there.

Fai. Either I mistake your shape and *making*¹ quite,

Or else you are that shrewd^m and knavish sprite

CalTd ²*Robin Goodfellow*. Are not you he

That frights the maidens of the *villagery*ⁿ ;

Skim milk, and sometimes labour in the quern,"

And bootless make the breathless housewife churn ;

And sometime make the drink to bear no barm :^p

Mislead' night-wanderers, laughing at their harm^r?

Those that Hobgoblin call you, and sweet Puck, 40

You do their work, and they shall have good luck :

Are not you he ?

Puck. Thou speak'st aright;

I am that merry wanderer of the night.

I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,

a clown among
b shortly

c exceedingly fierce d wrath
0 subject of "hath stolen"
t stolen child
g range over

h brightness
i quarrel
i so that

1 external appearance

m mischievous

n villages 0 hand-mill for grinding corn p yeast

q lead astray
r misfortune

¹ Notice that the fairies are associated with India, which in Shakespeare's time included all the islands of the Archipelago. (See p. 117.)

¹ Robin Good-fellow, Puck and Hob-goblin were only different for the same mischievous sprite. Burton, in his "Anatomy of Melancholy," refers to some of his peculiar functions; "A bigger kind there is of them (fairies), called with us MobifotUm, and Robin Good-fellows, that would in these superstitions times, (rind corn for a mess of milk, out wood, or do any manner of drudgery work."

ACT II. A MIDSUMMER-NIGHTS DERAM.. SC. I 15

When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile' Neighing in likeness of a, filly foal'; And sometime lurk I in a gossip's bowl,^c In very likeness of a roasted crab, And when she drinks, against her lips I bob,	a deceive b young man O christening- cup. See Note, p. 77.
And on her wither'd dewlap pour the ale. The wisest aunt,^d telling the saddest tale, Sometime for three-foot stool mistaketh me, Then slip I from her bum, down topples she, And "tailor" cries, and falls into a cough, And then the whole quire? hold their hips and laugh	old woman eallin chorus
And waxen^f in their mirth and n-teze' and swear A merrier hour was never wasted' there. But, room, fairy 1 here comes Oberon.	i grow boisterous ssneete h spent
Fal And here my mistress. Would that he were gone 1
Enter, from one side, OBBBON with his Train, and from the other TITANIA with hers.
Obe. Ill met by moonlight, proud Titania. Tita. What, jealous Oberon I Fairies, skip hence:
I have forsworn his bed and company. Obe. Tarry, rash wanton. Am not I thy lord? Tita. Then I must be thy lady: but I know When thou hast stolen away from fairy land And in the shape of Coriri sat all day, Playing on spipes of corn and versing love' To amorous Phillida.¹ Why art thou here, Come from the farthest steppeTM of India, But that, forsooth, the bouncing"¹ Amazon, Your buskirid' mistress and your warrior love,	1 a typical name forashepherd k making love songe l a shepherdess msteep. Seel,2) n mannish 'booted

¹ The 'dowlap' is the loose flesh hanging from the throat; properly applied only to cattle. In IV. i., Theseus' hounds are spoken of as being 'dew-laon'd like Thessallan bulls."

'Referring to the custom of crying tailor at a sudden fall backwards, Johnson remarks that "He that slips beside his ohair, falls as a tailor squats upon Ws board." (See also the Notes.)

²¹Pipes of oom'are oaten straws which shepherds converted into musical wind instruments.

16 ACT. II. A MIDSUMMER-NIGHTS DERAM. SCI.

To Theseus must be wedded ? and you come
To give their bed joy and prosperity.

Obe. How canst thou thus, for shame, Titania,
Glance ai' my credit with Hippolyta,
Knowing I know thy love to Theseus ?
Didst thou not lead him through the glimmering
night

From ¹*Perigenia*, whom he ravished ?
And make him with fair ^x*Mgle* break his faith, 80
With ¹*Ariadne*, and ¹*Antiopa* f

Tita. These are the forgeries of jealousy :
And never, since the middle summer's spring,^d
Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
By pavid fountain,['] or by rushy brook,
Or *in the beachid margent*¹ of the sea,
To dance our ringlets^g to the whistling wind,
But with thy brawls thou hast disturbed our sport,
Therefore the winds, pipin' to us in vain,
As in revenge, have suck'd up from the sea 90

Contagious['] fogs, which, falling in the land,
Hath every pelting['] river made so proud,
That they have overborne their continents ;¹
The ox hath therefore stretch'd hiB yoke in vain,
The ploughman lost his sweat,TM and the green corn
Hath rotted ere his youth attain'd a beard :
The fold stands empty in the drowned field,
And crows are fatted with the *murrion*⁰ flock;
The Hine men's morris is filled up with mud;
And the quaint *mazes*¹ in the wanton *green*ⁿ 100
For lack of tread are undistinguishable :
³*The human mortals want their winter here,*

a call vn question
b influence

c false tales in ' vented by ^d beginning of mid-summer © 'pebbly stream t on the margin formed by the beach
g small fairy rings
h whistling
i noxious, pesti'
lential
k paltry
¹ oanks

m wasted his efforts n i.e. before it ripened, his its 0 murrain
P tracks. See
Notes
q luxuriant grass

¹perigenia, iBgle, Ariadne, Antiopa are names taken from North's
" Plutarch's Life of Theseus."

'The 'nine men's morris' was a kind of out-door draughts, for which a series of squares were cut out on the green turf. The confusion of seasons described in this speech is generally supposed to refer to the extraordinarily bad weather that prevailed in 1593 and 1594, and consequently affords an indication as to the date of the play,

• The meaning seems to be: ' Not only have our quarrels resulted In spoiling the summer season for human beings all around us, but they have not even the toftsolutions that wl&toc brings with it '

ACT II.. A MIDSUMMER-NIGHTS DERAM. SC.. I 17

No night is now with hymn or carol blest,
 Therefore' the moon, the governess of floods,*^b
 Pale in her anger, washes all the air,
 That rheumatic diseases do abound :
 And thorough* this distemperature^d we see
 The seasons alter : hoary-headed frosts
 Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose;
 And on old Hiems' thin and icy^e crown 110
 An odorous chaplet of sweet summer buds
 Is, a3 in mockery, set. The spring, the summer,
 The *childing*¹ autumn, angry winter, change
 Their wonted liveries^g; and the mazed world,^b
 By their increase, now knows not which is which.
 And this same progeny of evils comes
 From our debate,^k from our dissension;
 We are their parents and original}

Obe. Do you amend it, then ; it lies in you.
 Why should Titania *cross*ⁿ her Oberon? 120
 I do but beg a little changeling boy,
 To be my henchman.^o

Tita. Set your heart at rest,
 The fairy land buys not the child of me.
 His mother was a votaress of my order:
 And, in the *spiced*¹ Indian air, by night,
 Full often hath she gossip'd by my side,
 And sat with me on Neptune's yellow sands,
 Marking the embarked traders' on the *flood;
 When we have laugh'd to see the sails conceive
 And grow big-bellied with the wanton wind; 130
 Which she, with pretty and with swimming gait Following,—her womb then rich with my young squire—

Would imitate, and sail upon the land
 To fetch me trifles, and return again,
 As from a voyage, rich with merchandise.
 But she, being mortal, of that boy did die;
 And for her sake do I rear up her boy,
 And for her sake I will not part with him.

Obe. How long within this wood intend you stay?"

Tita. Perchance, till after Theseus' wedding-day.

A i.e. because of our quarrels b that rules the tides t through d strife, between us e),e. thinly covered with white hair

1 fertile g appearance
 b confused humanity
 i products k quairol
 l originators
 m rests with you n thwart

p page

p had taken Vie vow
 q fragrant

r trading ships embarked s sea t action

u sc.to

* See p. 109 on which this passage is paraphrased.

18 ACT II . A MIDSUMMER-NIGHTS DREAM. SC.I

If you will patiently dance in our round,
And see our moonlight revels, go with us; •
If not, shun me, and I will spare' your haunts.

Obe. Give me that boy, and I will go with thee.

Tita. Not for thy fairy kingdom. Fairies, away I
We shall *chide downright*¹ if I longer stay.

[Exit TITANIA, with her Train.

Obe. Well, go thy way: thou shalt not from this grove

Till I torment thee for this injury.

My gentle Puck, come hither: thou rememberest
*Since*² once I sat upon a promontory, 150

And heard a mermaid on a dolphin's back
Uttering such *dulcet*³ and harmonious breath'

That the rude sea grew *civil*⁴ at her song,
And certain stars shot madly from their spheres'⁵
To hear the sea-maid's music,

Puck. I remember.

Obe. That very time I saw, but thou couldst not,

Flying between the cold moon and the earth,
Cupid *all annid*⁶; a certain' aim he took

At a fair *vestal*⁷ throned by the west,
And loosed his love-shaft smartly from his bow 160

As it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts:
but I *might*⁸ see young Cupid's fiery shaft

*Quench'd*⁹ in the chaste beams of the watery moon,
And the imperial votaress passed on,

[in maiden meditation, fancy-free.¹⁰
Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell:

It fell upon a little 'western flower,
Before milk-white, now purple with love's wound,
ini maidens call it love-in-idleness.

Fetch me that flower; the herb I show'd thee once: 170

a avoid

b quarrel violently

c sc, go d when

e sweet ' sounds

f calm, smooth
h orbits. See 1.7

1 fully equipped k deliberate

1 i.e. Q. Elieabeth, vowed to maidenhood

m was able to " lose its fire

0 unaffected by lavs's shafts

¹ Possibly the 'mermaid' symbolises Mary Queen of Scots, and the 'dolphin' the Dauphin of France, and Shakespeare may have had in his mind the festivities which were held at Kenilworth, in 1575, when the Earl of Leicester entertained Queen Elizabeth. The 'fair vestal throned by the west' of line 159, and the 'imperial votaress,' of line 164, certainly refer to the virgin queen.
² The 'western flower' is the pansy, that flourishes in the West,

ACT II A MIDSUMMER-NIGHTS DREAM. SC. I 19

The juice of it, on sleeping eyelids laid,
Will make or man or woman madly dote
Upon the next live creature that it sees.
Fetch me this herb; and be thou here again
Ere the *leviathan*¹ can swim a league.

Puck. I'll put a girdle round about' the earth
In forty minutes. [Exit,

Obc. Having once this juice,
I'll watch Titania when she is asleep,
And drop the liquor of it in her eyes.
The next thing then she waking looks upon, 180
Be it on lion, bear, or wolf, or bull,
On meddling monkey, or on busy ape,
She shall pursue it with the soul of love:
And ere I take this charm from off her sight,
As I can take it with another herb,
I'll make her render up her page to me.
But who comes here? I am invisible;
And I will overhear their conference.'

Enter DEMETRIUS, HELENA following him.

Dem. I love thee not, therefore pursue me not.
Where is Lysander and fair Hermia? 190
The one I'll slay, the other slayeth me.
Thou told'st me, they were stolen unto this wood;
And here am I, and wood' within this wood
Because I cannot meet my Hermia.
Hence, get thee gone, and follow me no more.

Het. You draw me, you hard-hearted adamant';
¹*But yet you draw not iron' though my heart*
Is true as steel: leave you your power to draw,
And I shall have no power to follow you.

Dem. Do I entice' you? do I speak you fair? 200
Or, rather, do I not in plainest truth
Tell you, I do not, nor' I cannot love you?

Hel. And even for that do I love you the more.
I am your spaniel; and, Demetrius,

a whale
b encircle, travel round

e most intense,
cf. our 'soul
of honour'

d conversation

e mad

I lodestone

g You draw not ons whose heart is iron

h exert myself to attract

i double negative used for em' phasis

¹A pun on the two meanings of iron; (1) a metal, (2) hard-hearted. 'Though' is Lettsom's emendation for the 'for' of the quartos and folios. If the reading 'for' is retained we must suppose that Shakespeare imagined that the lodestone which attracted iron did not also attract steel.

20 ACT II. A MIDSUMMER-NIGHTS DREAM. SC. I.

The more you beat me, I will fawn on you ; Use me but as your spaniel, spurn me, strike me, Neglect me, lose me; only give me leave, Unworthy as I am, to follow you. What worser¹ place can I beg in your love,— And yet a place of high, respect with¹ me,— 210 Than to be used as you use your dog ?	a more, humble b valued highly
Dem. Tempt not too much the hatred of my spirit, For I am sick when I do look on thee.
Hel. And I am sick when I look not on you.
Dem. You do impeach¹ your modesty too much To leave¹ the city, and commit¹ yourself Into the hands of one that loves you not; To trust the opportunity of night And the ill counsel¹ of a desert place With the rich worth of your virginity, 220	c expos' to re' proach d in leaving e committing i suggestions
Hel. Your virtue ¹is my privilege : for that It is not night when I do see your face, Therefore I think I am not in the night; Nor doth this wood lack worlds of company, For you, in my respect¹, are all the world, Then how can it be said I am alone, When all the world is here to look on me ?	g affords me pro- tectum h to me, in my eyes
Dem. I'll run from thee and hide me in the brakes, And leave thee to the mercy of wild beasts.	i thickets
Hel. The wildest hath not such a heart as you. 230 Run when you will, the story shall be changed, ²Apollo flies, and Daphne holds the chase ; The dove pursues the griffin ; the mild hind Makes speed to catch the tiger. Bootless speed, When cowardice pursues, and valour flies I	k purposeless
Dem. I will not stay thy questions¹; let me go; Or, if thou follow me, do not believe	arguments

¹ Or, taking 'virtue' in the sense of 'excellence,' the meaning of this and the following lines may be: 'Your surpassing merits, in my eyes, enable me to do with safety that which others might not do; since when you are in my tight I am in the light of day.'

² Daphne was a beautiful nymph of whom Apollo became enamoured. She fled from him, and, as she was on the point of being overtaken, prayed to the gods for aid and was changed into a laurel-tree, which became in consequence the favourite tree of Apollo.

But I shall' do thee mischief in the wood.

a that I shall not

Hel. Ay, in the temple, in the town, the field,
You do me mischief. Fie, Demetrius ! 240

Your wrongs do set' a scandal on my sex.

*b the injuries
you do me are*

We cannot fight for love, as men may do;

We should be woo'd, and were not made to woo.

I'll follow thee, and make a heaven of hell,

[Exit DEMETRIUS.

To die upon⁶ the hand I love so well' [Exit.

o by

Obe. Fare thee well, nymph: ere he do leave this grove,

Thou shalt fly him, and he shall seek thy love.

Re-enter Puck.

Hast thou the flower there ? Welcome, wanderer.

Puck. Ay, there it is.

Obe. I pray thee, give it me.

d flowers, Hoorn

I know a bank where the wild thyme blows' 250

Where oxlips and the nodding violet grows;

*e overspread
f fragrant honeysuckle
g sweet-brier*

Quite over-canopied' with luscious woodbine'

With sweet musk-roses, and with *eglantine'*⁹:

There sleeps Titania, sometime of the night,

*h casts i glossy and j variegated
k garment
l overspread
m fancies*

Lull'd in these flowers with dances and delight;

And there the snake throws' her enamell'd skin,

Weed' wide enough to wrap a fairy in:

And with the juice of this I'll streak her eyes,

And make her full of hateful fantasies,^m

Take thou some of it, and seek through this grove.

A sweet Athenian lady' is in love 261

n i.e. Helena

With a disdainful youth'^o: anoint his eyes;

o i.e. Demetrius

But do it, when the next thing he espies

May be the lady. Thou shalt know the man

By the Athenian garments he hath on.

Effect it with some care, that he may prove

*More fond on'*⁹ her than she upon her love.

P to dote more upon

And look thou meet me ere the first cock crow

Puck. Fear not, your lord, your servant shall do so.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another part of the Wood.Enter TITANIA, with her Train.

Tita. Gome, now a roundel^a and a fairy song;
 Then, for the third part of a minute, hence;
 Some, to kill cankers^b in the musk-rose buds;
 Some, war with rere-mice^c for their leathern wings
 To make my small elves coats; and some, keep back
 The clamorous owl that nightly hoots and wonders
 At our quaint spirits. Sing me now asleep;
 Then to your offices^d and let me rest.

The Fairies sing :—

You spotted snakes with double^e tongue,
 Thorny hedge-hogs, be not seen ; 10
¹ Newts and blind-worms, do no wrong,
 Come not near our fairy queen.
Philomel,^f with melody
 Sing in our sweet lullaby;
 Lulla, lulla, lullaby ; lulla, lulla, lullaby :
 Never harm,
 Nor spell nor charm,
 Come our lovely lady nigh;
 So, good night, with lullaby.
 Weaving 'spviers, come not here; 20
 Hence, you iong-legg'd spinners, hence 1
 Beetles black, approach not near;
 Worm nor snail, do no offence.
Philomel, with melody, &c.
 A Fairy. Hence, away ! now all is well.
 One, aloof, stand sentinel.

[Exeunt Fairies. TITANIA sleeps.

Enter OBERON, and squeezes the flower on TITANIA's eyelids.

Obe. What thou seest, when thou dost wake,
 Do it for thy true-love take;

a a round dona (in a fairy ring)

b worms or flies that prey on blossoms

c bats

d duties

e forked

f the nightin' gale. See Clas. Names
 g a simg to send to sleep

h take it to be etc.

¹ It was popularly believed in Shakespeare's time that newts, blind-worms (or slow-worms), and spiders were venomous.

Love, and languish ' for his sake: Be it ounce ^c or cat, or bear, Pard , ^c or boar with bristled hair, In thy eye that shall appear When thou wakest, it is thy dear: Wake when some vile thing is near. [Exit.	30	a pine away (for love) b an animal between a panther and a cat c panther
Enter LYSANDER and HERMIA.
Lys. Fair love, you faint with wandering in the wood; And, to speak troth ' I have forgot our way: We'll rest us, Hermia, if you think it good, And tarry for the comfort of the day. Her. Be it so, Lysander : find you out a bed; For 1 upon this bank will rest my head.	40	d the truth
Lys. One turf shall serve as pillow for us both; One heart, one bed, two bosoms, and one troth . Her. Nay, good Lysander; for my sake, my dear, Lie further off yet, do not lie so near.		e fidelity, faith
Lys. O, take the sense, sweet, of my innocence ' I 'Love takes the meaning in love's conference. I mean, that my heart unto yours is knit, So that but one heart we can make of it : Two bosoms interchained with an oath ; So then, two bosoms and a single troth ' Then by your side no bed-room me deny, For, lying ¹ so, Hermia, I do not lie . ¹	50	t understand my innocent meaning rightly g pledge of fidelity h fidelity
Her. Lysander riddles very prettily : Now much beshretv ' my manners and my pride, If Hermia meant to say Lysander lied. But, gentle friend, for love and courtesy Lie further off; in human ¹ modesty, Such separation as may well be said Becomes a virtuous bachelor and a maid, So far be distant; and good night, sweet friend: 60 Thy love ne'er alter till thy sweet life end I		i pun on 'lie' k a plague upon I humane, worthy of a
Lys. Amen, amen, to that fair prayer, say I; And ² then end life when I end loyalty !

¹ True lovers understand each other without words; or, Love supplies the true meaning when lovers converse.

² May I die if I cease to be loyal.

Here is my bed : sleep give thee all his rest!

Her. With half that wish the wisher's eyes be pressed' ! [They sleep.]

Enter PUCK.

Puck, Through the forest have I gone,
But Athenian found I none,
On whose eyes I might approve'
This flower's force in stirring love.
Night and silence I Who is here? 70
Weeds^c of Athens he doth wear :
This is he, my master said,
Despised the Athenian maid;
And here the maiden, sleeping sound
On the dank^d and dirty ground.
Pretty soul I she durst not lie
Near this lack-love, this kill-courtesy.
Churl^e, upon thy eyes I throw
All the power this charm doth owe^f.
When thou wakest, let love forbid 80
Sleep his seat^g on thy eyelid:
So awake when I am gone ;
For I must now to Oberon. [Exit.]

a i.e. May sleep give the half his rest

b prove

c garments

damp

e Unyielding boor
f own, possess

g to settle; hit
- its

Enter DEMETRIUS and HELENA, running.

Hel. Stay, though thou kill me, sweet Demetrius.

Dem. I charge thee, hence, and do not haunt me thus.

Hel. O, wilt thou darkling^b leave me ? do not so.

Dem. Stay, on thy peril: I alone will go. [Exit.]

Hd. O, I am out of breath in this fond chase^h

The more my prayer, the lesser is my grace.ⁱ
Happy is Hermia, wheresoever she lies; 90

For she hath blessed and attractive eyes.

How came her eyes so bright ? Not with salt tears :

If so, my eyes are oftener wash'd than hers.

No, no, I am as ugly as a bear;

For beasts, that meet me, run away for fear:

Therefore no marvel though Demetrius

Do, as a monster, fly my presence^j thus.

What wicked and dissembling glass of mine

Made me compare with Hernia's spheny eyne?

b in the dark

h mad pursuit
i the favour I find

j flies from me as from a monster
my eyes bright as start

But who is here? Lysander! on the ground! 100
Dead? or asleep? I see no blood, no wound.

Lysander, if you live, good sir, awake.

Lys. [Awaking.] And run through fire I will for thy sweet sake.

Transparent Helena! Nature shows art,
That through thy bosom makes me see thy heart.
Where is Demetrius? O, how fit a word
Is that vile name to perish on my sword!

Hel. Do not say so, Lysander; say not so.
What though he love your Hermia? Lord, what though?

Yet Hermia still loves you: then be content. 110

Lys. Content with Hermia! No; I do repent
The tedious minutes I with her have spent.

Not Hermia, but Helena I love:

Who will not change a raven for a dove?

The will of man is by his reason sway'd,

And reason says you are the worthier maid.

Things growing are not ripe until their season,

So I, being young, till now ripe not to reason;

And touching now the point of human skill,

Reason becomes the marshal to my will, 120

And leads me to your eyes; where I do look^a

Love's stories written in love's richest book.

Hel. Wherefore was I to this keen mockery born?

When at your hands did I deserve this scorn?

Is't not enough, is't not enough, young man,

That I did never, no, nor never can,

Deserve a sweet look from Demetrius' eyes,

But you must flout^c my insufficiency?

Good troth,^d you do me wrong, good sooth,^e you do,--

In such disdainful manner me to woo. 130

But fare you well: perforce I must confess

I thought you lord of more true gentleness.

O, that a lady of one man refused

Should of another therefore be abused!

[Exit.]

a guides

b wherein I see

c double negative

d jeer at e truth

f by ¹Now that I have reached the highest point of wisdom (skill) attainable by mortals (human).

Lys. She sees not Herinia. Hermia, sleep thou there :

And never mayst thou come Lysander near!
For, as *a surfeit*² of the sweetest things
The deepest loathing to the stomach brings;
Or, as the *heresies*¹ that men *do leave*¹
Are hated most of^d those they did deceive; 140
So thou, my surfeit and my heresy,
Of^a all be hated, but the most of^d me.

And, all my powers, address your love and might
To honour Helen, and to be her knight. [Exit

Her. [Awaking.] Help me, Lysander, help me ! do thy best,

To pluck this crawling serpent¹ from my breast I
Ay me, for pity ! what a dream was here I
Lysander, look how I do quake with fear.
Methought a serpent ate my heart away,
And you sat smiling at his cruel prey.¹

Lysander ! what, removed? Lysander ! lord! 150
What, out of hearing ? gone ? no sound, now
Alack I where are you ? speak, *an if*¹ you word¹ Speak, *of all loves*¹ I I swoon almost with,
No? then I well perceive you are not n¹ . . .
Either death, or you, I'll find immedi¹ . . .
tely. [Exit.

a excess

b wrong beliefs

c abandon

d by n'

Hermia is still under the influence of her dream

cruelly preying upon me

lif

h by all the powers of love

¹ Of whom I have had more than enc ough, and in whom I erringly believed.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Wood. TITANIA lying asleep.

Enter QUINCE, SNUG, BOTTOM, FLUTE, SNOUT, and STARVELING.

Bot. Are we all met?

Quin. Pat, pat^a; and here's ^a marvellous convenient place for our rehearsal. ^bTake^c our tiring-house^d; and we will do it in action, ^ebefore the duke.

Bot. Peter Quince,—

Quin. What sayest thou, ^fbully^g Bottom?

Bot. There are things in this comedy of Pyramus and Thisby, that will never please. First, Pyramus must draw a sword to kill himself, which the ladies cannot abide. How answer you that? 12

Snout. By'r lakin,^h a ⁱparlous^j fear.

^a to a nicety, exactly
^b thicket
^c dressing-room
^d comrade
^e tiring-hin =
^f my lady =
^g little ^hman
the Virg
Mary ⁱ perilous

¹ 'Bully' is a term of admiring familiarity addressed by his comrades to a dashing, swaggering fellow. The oldest sense in English is 'dear one,' 'lover,' (Q. Ger. bulle, a lover.)

Star. I believe, we must leave the killing out, when all is done.

Bot Not a whit: I have a device to make all well. Write me a prologue; and let the prologue seem to say, we will do no harm with our swords, and that Pyramus is not killed indeed; and, for the more better assurance, tell them that I, Pyramus, am not Pyramus, but Bottom, the weaver. This will put them out of fear. 22

Quia. Well, we will have such a prologue, and it shall be written in eight and six.^b

Bot. No, make it two more: let it be written in eight and eight.

Snout Will not the ladies be afeard of the lion?

Star. I fear it, / promise you.^c

Bot. Masters, you ought to consider with yourselves: to bring in,—God shield us I—a lion among ladies, is a most dreadful thing; for there is not a more fearful wild-fowl^d than your^e lion living; and we ought to look to it. 33

Snout. Therefore another prologue must tell he is not a lion.

Bot. Nay, you must name his name, and half his face must be seen through the lion's neck; and he himself must speak through, saying thus, or to the same effect,^f—'Ladies,' or, 'Fair ladies;—I would wish you,'—or, 'I would request you,'—or, 'I would entreat you,—not to fear, not to tremble: my life^g for yours. If you think I come hither as a lion, it were pity of my life^h: no, I am no such thing; I am a man as other men are:'—and there, indeed, let him name his name, and tell them plainly he is Snug, the joiner. 46 things. Well, it shall be so. But there is two hard *things*ⁱ:—that is, to bring the moonlight into a number: for, you know, Pyramus and Thisby meet by moonlight. 50

Snug. Doth the moon shine that night we play our play?

Bot. A calendar, a calendar! look in the *almanac; find out moonshine, find out moonshine,

after all

altern ate lines of eight and six syllables

let me tell you

d this is Bottom's wit
e see p. 97

effect

g I stake, etc.

h as much as my life is worth are

kan anachronism

Quin. Yes, it doth shine that night. ¹	'the new moon would not afford any light
• Bot. Why, then you may leave a casement of the great chamber-de-window, where we play, open; and the moon may shine in at the casement.
Quin. Ay ; or else one must come in with a bush of thorns and a lanthorn, and say, he comes to disfigure , ² or to present , ³ the person of Moonshine. Then, there is another thing : we must have a wall in the great chamber; for Pyramus and Thisby, says the story , ⁴ did talk through the chink of a wall. 64	b figure represent
Snug. You can never bring in a wall. What say you, Bottom ?	d, 'seep.Si
Bot. Some man or other must present Wall; and let him have some plaster, or some loam, or some rough-cast ⁵ about him, to signify wall; and let him hold his fingers thus, and through that cranny Bhall Pyramus and Thisby whisper. 71	e fluid mortar mixed with gravel
Quin. If that may be, then all is well. Come, sit down, every mother's son, and rehearse your parts. Pyramus, you begin. When you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake ⁶ : and so every one according to his cue.	' thicket
Enter PUCK behind.
Puck. What ¹ hemp en homespuns ⁹ have we swag-gering here,	g coarse-man- nered fellows
So near the cradle of the fairy queen ?
What, a play toward ² t I'll be an auditor;	h in preparation
An actor too, perhaps, if I see cause. 80
Quin. Speak, Pyramus. Thisby, stand forth.
Bot Thisby, the flowers of odious savours sweet,	i for 'odorous'
Quin, Odours, odours. ¹
Bot Odours ¹ savours sweet:
'So hath thy breath , my dearest Thisby, dear.	k sc. odorous savours

¹ Puck naturally contrasts the rude Athenian swains with the "fairy grace of Titania. They are to her as coarse hemp is to the flowers and gossamer threads that form the cradle of the fairy queen.

² Perhaps a line is omitted between Bottom's first and second lines, or perhaps 'of in the first line is a mistake for 'have.' But we must not look to find much sense in any of Bottom's utterances. His verses are purposely incorrect and absurd

But, hark, a voice ! stay thou but here awhile,
And by and by I will to thee appear.

[Exit.

Puck. A stranger Pyrainus than e'er played here t

[Exit.

Flu. Must I speak now ?

Quia. Ay, marry, must you; for you must understand, he goes but to see a noise that he heard, and is to come again. 92

Flo. Most radiant Pyramus, most lily-white of hue,

Of colour like the red rose on triumphant brier,
Most brisky juvenalf and eke^b most lovely ¹*Jew*,

As true as truest horse, that yet would never tire,
I'll meet thee, Pyramus, at Ninny's tomb.

a brisk juvenile or lively youth
likewise

Quin. 'Ninus' tomb,' man. Why, you must not speak that yet; that you answer to Pyramus. You speak all your part at once, cues and all. Pyramus, enter: your cue is past; it is 'never tire.' 101

Flu. O,—AS true as truest horse, that yet would never tire.

Re-enter PUCK, and BOTTOM, with an ass's head.

Bot /f / were fair, Thisby,^c I were only thine.

^efor 'If I were fair Thisbe

Quin. O monstrous ! O strange ! we are haunted.
Pray, masters ifly, masters i help!

[Exeunt QUINCE, SNUG, FLUTE, SNOUT, and STARVELING.

Puck. I'll follow you, I'll lead you about a round,
Through bog, through bush, through brake,
through brier:

Sometime a horse I'll be, sometime a hound,

A hog, a headless bear, sometime a fire;
And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar, and burn,
Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn.

d i.e. the Will-of-th+wi$P

[Exit.

¹ That 'Jew' rhymes with 'hue' is sufficient justification for its use here, in the play in which "There it not one word apt, one player fitted," If further explanation seem to seem to be necessary, it may be taken as Bottom's mistake for 'juel M.E. form of jewel,'

ACT III.. A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM. sc.I.

Bot ¹ Why do they run away t this is a knavery of them to make me afeard. 113

Re-enter SNOUT.

Snout 0 Bottom I thou art changed I what do I see on thee ?

Bot What do yon see ? 'you see an ass-head of your own, do you t [Exit SNOUT.

Re-enter QUINCE.

Quin. Bless thee, Bottom I bless thee I thou art translated^a [Exit.

a for ' transformed'

Bot I see their knavery. This is to make an ass of me ; to fright me, if they could. But I will not stir from this place, do what they can. I will walk up and down here, and I will sing, that they shall hear I am not afraid. [Sings.

The ousel^b-cock, go black of hue, 125

With orange-tawny^c bill;

The throstle^d with his note so true,

The wren with little quill^e ;—

b blackbird
c cf. l. ii 94
d song-thrush
e shrill note

Tita. [Awaking.] What angel wakes me from my flowery bed ?

Bot [Sings.] The finch, the sparrow, and the lark ;
The plain-song cuckoo^f gray, 131

f cuckoo with its simple note

Whose note full many a man doth mark,
And dares not answer, nay;—

for, indeed, who would set^g his wit to so foolish a bird ? who would give a bird the lie, though he ²cry
' cuckoo' never so ?

g quæ

Tita. I pray thee, gentle mortal, sing again :

Mine ear is much enamour^h d of thy note;

So is mine eye enthralled to thy shape;

And thy fair virtue's force,ⁱ perforce, doth move me,
On the first view, to say, to swear, I love thee. 141

h the force of thy fair virtue
(beauty)

Bot Methinks, mistress, you should have little reason for that: and yet, to say the truth, reason

¹ Bottom is of course unconscious of the change in hit appearance.

² There is a pun intended here. To cry 'ouckoo' or 'cuckold' to a married man was an intui, suggesting as it did, that his wife was unfaithful to him, .

ACT III.. A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM. sc.1.

and love keep little company together now-a-days: the more the pity, that some honest neighbours will not make them friends. Nay, I can 'gleek' upon occasion.

a ~~soff~~ jest

Tita. Thou art as wise as thou art beautiful,

Bot Not so, neither; but if I had wit enough to get out of this wood, I have enough to serve mine own turn. 151

Tita. Out of this wood do not desire to go: Thou shalt remain here, whether thou wilt or no. I am a spirit of no common rate:

The summer still' doth tend' upon my state' ;

And I do love thee: therefore, go with me ;

I'll give thee fairies to attend on thee;

And they shall fetch thee jewels from the deep,

And sing while thou on pressed flowers dost sleep :

And I will purge thy mortal grossness so, 160

b constantly
c wait
d court

That thou shalt like an airy spirit go.—

Peaseblossom ! Cobweb! Moth 1 and Mustardseed !

* purify

Enter PBABBBLOSSOM, COBWEB, MOTH, and MUSTARDSEED.

Peas. Ready.

Cob. And I.

Moth. And I.

All Where shall we go?

Tita. Be kind and courteous to this gentleman;

Hop in his walks, and gambol in his eyes;

Feed him with apricocks,⁹ and dewberries,⁹

With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries

The honey-bags steal from the humble-bees,

And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs,

And light them at the fiery 'glow-worm's eyes, 170

To have' my love to bed, and to arise ;

And pluck the wings from painted butterflies,

To fan the moonbeams from his sleeping eyes.

Nod to him, elves, and do him courtesies.¹

apricots
g fruit resembling dwarf blackberries

h see

1 acts of kind-nest

Bottom can hardly believe yet that Titania is really in love with him, but With his usual self-conceit he very soon accustoms himself to his new role.

'The phosphorescent light of the glow-worm is situated in its tail. But, here and elsewhere (cf I I. ii. 11) Shakespeare writes as a poet, not as a scientist.

ACT III.. A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM. sc.l. 33

Peas. Hail, mortal!

Cob. Hail I

Moth. Hail!

Mus. Hail !

Bot I cry' your worship's mercy,^c heartily: I beseech your worship's name. 180

Cob. Cobweb.

Bot I shall desire you of more acquaintance, good Master Cobweb. If I cut my finger, I shall make bold' with you. Your name, honest gentleman ?

Peas. Peaseblossom.

Bot I pray you, commend me to Mistress Squash,^d your mother, and to Master Peascod' your father. Good Master Peaseblossom, I shall desire you of more acquaintance too. Your name, I beseech you, sir ? 190

Mus. Mustardseed.

Bot. Good Master Mustardseed, I know your patience well: that same cowardly, giant-like ox-beef hath devoured many a gentleman of your house. I promise you, your kindred hath made my eyes water ere now. I desire your more acquaintance, good Master Mustardseed.

Titsu Come, wait upon him; lead him to my bower. The moon, methinks, looks with a watery eye ; And when she weeps, weeps every little flower, 200 Lamenting some enforced' chastity. Tie up my love's tongue, bring him silently. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. Another part of the Wood.

Enter OBERON.

Obe. I wonder, if Titania be awaked; Then, what it was that next came in her eye, Which she must dote on in? extremity.

Enter PUCK.

Here comes my messenger. How now, mad spirit ? What night-rule' now about this haunted grove ?

Puck. My mistress with a monster is in love. Near to her close and consecrated bower,

^c beg pardon

^b free

^c an unripe pod of pease
^d the pod, or husk, containing the peat

• violated

f to

g order of the night; nightly diversion
h sacred

While she was in her dull and sleeping hour,
A crew of *patches*¹ rude mechanicals,
That work for bread upon Athenian stalls, 10
Were met together to rehearse a play,
Intended for great Theseus' nuptial day.

The shallowest thick-skin of that barren sort,^c
Who Pyramus presented^h in their sport,
Forsook his scene, and entered in a brake,
When I did him at this advantage take;
An ass's *note*ⁱ I fixed on his head:

Anon, his Thisbe must be answered,
And forth my mimic^t comes. When they him spy,
As wild geese that the creeping fowler^g eye, 20
Or russet-pated choughs^h many in sort^k
Rising and cawing at the gun's report,
*Sever themselves*ⁱ and madly sweep the sky,
So, at his sight, away his fellows fly,
And, at our stamp, here o'er and o'er one falls;
*He*¹ murder cries, and help from Athens calls.

Their sense thus weak, lost with their fears thus strong,

Made Benseless things begin to do them wrong^m;
For briers and thorns at their apparel snatch;
Some, sleeves, some, hats, 'from yieldera all things
catch. 30

I led them on in this distracted fear,
And left sweet Pyramus translated there :
When in that moment, so it came to pass,
Titania waked, and straightway loved an ass.

Obe. This falls out better than 1 could devise.
But hast thou yet *latch'd*ⁿ the Athenian's eyes
With the love-juice, as I did bid thee do ?

Puck. I took him sleeping,—that is finished too—
And the Athenian woman by his side,
That, when he waked, of force she must be eyed. 40

Enter DEMETRIUS and HERMIA.

Obe. Stand close ; this is the same Athenian.

Puck. This is the woman; but not this the man.

*aclo*wnish fel. lows
a artisans

c empty-handed crew
d cf. III i. 61

• head

t actor
g sportsman h gray-headed jackdaws
i company k separate

1 another

m injure them

n caught or en
trapped, but ses Glossary

¹ Le the brieria and thorns catch everthing that will yield,

ACT III.. A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM. sc.l. 35

Dem. 0, why rebuke you him that loves you so ?
Lay *breath*¹ so bitter on your bitter foe.

Her. Now I but chide; but I should^c use thee worse,
For thou, I fear, hast given me cause to curse.
If thou hast slain Lysander in his sleep,
Being o'er shoes in blood, plunge in the deep^c
And kill me too.

The sun was not so true unto the day 50
As he to me. Would he have stolen away
From sleeping Hermia ? I'll believe as soon
This whole earth may be bored, and that the moon
May through the centre creep, and so displease
'Her brother's noontide with the Antipodes.

It cannot be but thou hast murder'd him ;
So should a murderer look, so dead^d so grim.

Dem. So should the murder'd look, and so should I,
Pierced through the heart with your stern cruelty ;
Yet you, the murderer, look as bright, as clear, 60
As yonder Venus^e in her glimmering sphere.

Her, What's this to^f my Lysander? where is he?
Ah, good Demetrius, wilt thou give him me ?

Dem. I had rather give his carcass to my hounds.

Her. Out, dog I out, curl thou drivest me past the bounds

Of maiden's patience. Hast thou slain him then?
Henceforth be never number'd among men!
O, once tell true, tell true, even for my sake!
Durst thou have look'd upon him, being awake,
And hast thou kill'd him sleeping ? 0 brave touch^g !
Could not a worm^h an adder, do so much? 71
An adder did it; for with doubter tongue^k
Than thine, thou serpent, never adder stung.

Dem. You spend^l your passion on a misprised mood^l :

I am not guilty of Lysander's blood;
Nor is he dead, for aught that I can tell.

Her. I pray thee, tell me then, that he is well.

Dem. An if^m I could, what should I get therefore?

a language bought to c immerse' thy' self altogether (in blood)

d death-like, pallid, or perhaps deadly

e 'i.e. the planet Venus
f sc. do with

g test of bravery (Schmidt) or brave stroke
h serpent
' more treachery k waste

l in anger in anger to a mistake

m If

¹ Selene (Luna), the Moon, was, in elastic¹ mythology, the twin-sister of Hellos (Sol), the Sun. (See also p. 80.)

36 ACT III.. A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM. sc.I.

Her. A privilege never to see me more. And from thy hated presence part I so; 80 See me no more, whether he be dead or no. [Exit. Dem. There is no following her in this fierce vein': Here, therefore, for a while I will remain. 80 harrow's heaviness doth heavier grow For debt that bankrupt sleep doth sorrow owe ; Which now in some slight measure it will pay, If for his tender^b here I make some stay. [Lies down and sleeps.	a temper, dis- position
Obe. What hast thou done ? thou hast mistaken quite, And laid the love-juice on some true-love's sight: Of thy misprision' must perforce ensue 90 Some true-love turn'd' , and not a false turn'd true. Puck. ² Then fate o'er-rules,' that, one man holding troth, A million fail, confounding oath on oath. Obe. About the wood go swifter than the wind, And Helena of Athens look thou find : All fancy¹-sick she is, and pale of cheer⁸ With sighs of love, that costs the fresh blood dear. By some illusion' see thou bring her here : I'll charm his eyes against she do appear.	b its(sleep's) offer
Puck. I go, I go; look how I go, 100 Swifter than arrow from the ³ Tar tar's bow. [Exit. Obe. Flower of this purple die, Hit with Cupid's archery,' Sink in apple of his eye I When his love he doth espy, Let her shine as gloriously As the Venus^k of the sky. When thou wakest, if she be by, Beg of her for remedy.	c mittake d so. false e prevails love countenance h trick played upon her vision i cf. II i. 158- 169 k cf. line 61

¹ (The oppression of) sorrow becomes more oppressive by reason of its debt (which it cannot pay) to sleep.

² Puck means, 'Then they are only acting In accordance with the decree of fate, which ordains that for every man that is true in love a million are false, breaking one oath after another/'

³ The natives of Tartary were famous for their skill in archery,

ACT III.. A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM. sc.II.37

Reenter PUCK.

Puck. Captain of our fairy band, 110

Helena is here at hand ;

And the youth, mistook by me,

Pleading for a lover's fee.^a

Shall we their fond pageant' see ?

Lord, what fools these mortals be !

Obe. Stand aside: the noise they make

Will cause Demetrius to awake.

Puck. Then will two at once woo one ;

That must needs be sport alone;

And those things do best please me 120

That befall posterously.^c

Enter LYSANDER and HELENA.

Lys. Why should you think that I should woo in scorn ?

Scorn and derision never come in tears:

Look, when I vow, I weep; and vows so born,

In their nativity all truth appears.

How can these things in me seem scorn to you,

Bearing the badge of faith to prove them true?

Hel. You do advance your cunning more and more.

¹ When truth kills truth, O devilish-holy fray /

These vows are Hernia's : will you give her? 130

Weigh oath with oath, and you will nothing weigh':

Your vows, to her and me, put in two scales,

Will even weigh, and both as light as tales.

Lys. I bad no judgment, when to her I swore.

H'i Nor none, in my mind, now you give her o'er.

Lys. Demetrius loves her, and he loves not you.

Oem. [Awaking.] O Helen, goddess, nymph, perfect, divine I

*a payment in kisses
b exhibition of folly*

c contrarily

d neither will turn the scales

¹ When one truth (your present vow to me) kills another truth (your format TOW to Hermia) then must there be a conflict at the same time wicked and holy (wicked because truth has been slain, holy because truth has prevailed). A specimen of Shakespeare's earlier manner; so also the extravagant Language of 137-144.

To what, my love, shall I compare thine eyne' t
 Crystal is muddy. O, how ripe in show
 Thy lips, those kissing cherries, tempting grow ! 140
¹That pure congeal'd white, high Taurus' snow,
 Fann'd with the eastern wind, turns to a crow,
 When thou hold'st up thy hand. O, let me kiss
 This princess of pure white, this seal of bliss'!

Hel O spite t O hell I I see, you all are bent

To set against me for your merriment:

If you were civil and knew courtesy'

You would not do me thus much injury.

Can you not hate me, as I know you do,

But you must join in souls' to mock me too ? 150

If you were men, as men you are in show,

You would not use a gentle lady so;

To vow, and swear, and superpraise^e my parts.¹

When I am sure you hate me with your hearts.

You both are rivals, and love Hermia;

And now both rivals, to mock Helena:

A trim^g exploit, a manly enterprise,

To conjure tears up in a poor maid's eyes

With your derision I none of noble sort

Would so offend a virgin, and extort 160

A poor soul's' patience, all to make you sport.

Lys. You are unkind, Demetrius, be not so;

For you love Hermia; this you know I know :

And here, with all good will, with all my heart,

In Hermia's love I yield you up my part;

And yours of Helena to me bequeath,

Whom I do love, and will do till my death.

Hel Never did mockers waste more idle breath.

Don. Lysander, keep thy Hermia ; I will none' :

If e'er I loved her, all that love is gone. 170

My heart 'to her but as guest-wise sojourn'd,

And now to Helen is it home return'd,

There to remain.

Lys.

Helen, it is not so.

^a>eye$

b i.e. the hand whose clasp seals a con' tract
^o good breeding

d cf. our 'put your heads together'

e praise to excess
 t qualities

g pretty, elevs'r, used ironically

h creature' t

i to. of her

¹ le. The purest, whitest snow is black in comparison with thy hand'

² In respect to her was but a temporary visitor,

Dem. Disparage no? the faith thou dost not know,
Lest to thy peril thou aby^b it dear.
Look, where thy love comes; yonder is thy dear.

a speak not slightinglly of b pay for

Enter HKBMIA.

Her. Dark night, that from the eye his' function takes,

e its

The ear more quick of apprehension' makes;
Wherein' it doth impair the seeing sense,
It pays the hearing double recompense. 180
Thou art not by mine eye, Lysander, found;
Mine ear, I thank it, brought me to thy sound.
But why unkindly didst thou leave me so?

d perception
• insomuch as

Lys. Why should he stay, whom love doth press to go?

Her. What love could press Lysander from my side?

Lys. Lysander's love, that would not let him
bide,

Fair Helena, who more engilds the night
Than all yon fiery oes' and eyes of light.
Why seek'st thou me? could not this make thee know,

t circles, 'fiery oes and eyes' =
the start

The hate I bear thee made me leave thee so? 190

Her. You speak not as you think: it cannot be.

Hel. Lo, she is one of this confederacy 1

Now I perceive they have conjoin'd all three,
To fashion this false sport in spite of me.

g to spite
h unjust

Injurious' Hermia! most ungrateful maid!
Have you conspired, have you with these contrived
To bait' me with this foul derision?

1 set upon, harass (like dogs)

Is all the counsel that we two have shared,
The sisters' vows, the hours that we have spent,
When we have chid the hasty-footed time aoo

For parting us,—0, is all forgot?
All sohoUdays' friendship, childhood innooenoe?

We, Hermia, like two artificial gotttf
Have with our needles' created both one flower,
Both on one sampler, sitting on one cushion,
Both warbling of one song, both in one key,
As if our hands, our sides, voices, and minds,

'kcreators of works of art 1 pronounce as one syllable.

Had been incorporate' So we grew together, Like to a double cherry, seeming parted, ^b But yet an union in partition ⁰ ;	210	a belonged to one body b divided 0 united though divided
Two lovely berrieB moulded on one stem; 80, with two seeming bodies, but one heart; ¹ Two of the first, like coats in heraldry, Due but to one, and crown6d with one crest. And will you rent' our ancient love asunder, To join' with men in scorning your poor friend ? It is not friendly, 'tis not maidenly: Our sex, as well as I, may chide you for it, Though I alone do feel the injury.		d rend e by joining
Her. I am amazed at your passionate words. 220 I scorn you not: it seems that you scorn me.	220
Het Have you not set Lysander, as in scorn, To follow me, and praise my eyes and face ? And made your other love, Demetrius, Who even but now ^f did spurn me with his foot, To call me goddess, nymph, divine, and rare, Precious, celestial ? Wherefore speaks he this To her he hates? and wherefore doth Lysander Deny your love, so rich within his soul, And tender me, forsooth, affection,	230	f see II .i.189-238
But by your setting on, by your consent ? What though I be not so in grace ^g as you, So hung upon ^h with love, so fortunate; But miserable most to love ⁱ unloved ? This you should pity rather than despise.		g favoured h clung to i in that I love
Her. I understand not what you mean by this. He! Ay, do, persé ver, counterfeit sad looks, Make mouths upon me when I turn my back; Wink at each other; hold} the sweet jest up' ; This sport, well carried, shall be chronicled. 240	240	k i.e. ' keep it up'
If you have any pity, grace, or manners, You would no' make me such an argument. ¹ But, fare ye well: 'tis partly my own fault;		1 subject for ridioul,

¹ I.e. the game quartering appearing twice ('two of the first') upon one shield, but belonging only to one person ('due but to one'), and crowned with only 'one crest, the crest of the bearer. Thus Hermit, and Helena possessed two bodies, but t only one heart

Which death or absence soon shall remedy.

Lys. Stay, gentle Helena ; hear my excuse :
My love, my life, my soul, fair Helena I

Het O excellent I

Her. Sweet, do not scorn her so.

Dem. If she cannot entreat, I can compel.

Lys. Thou canst compel no more than she entreat:
Thy threats have no more strength than her weak prayers. 250

Helen, I love thee ; by my life, I do :

I swear by that' which I will lose for thee,
To prove him false that says I love thee not.

Dem. I say, I love thee more than he can do.

Lys. If thou say so, withdraw, and prove it too.

Dem. Quick, come I

Her. Lysander, whereto tends all this?

Lys. Away, you ¹*Ethiope* !

Dem. 'No, no ; he'll . . .

Seero to break loose, take on,^e as you would follow, 260
But yet come not: You are a tame' man, go I

Lys, Hang oil, thou cat, thou burr' I vile thing, let loose,

Or I will shake thee from me like a serpent I

Her. Why are you grown so rude? what change is this?

Sweet love,—

Lys. Thy love! Out, tawny Tartar, out I
Out, loathed medicine! hated potion, hence!

Her. Do you not jest ?

Hel. Yes, sooth; and so do you.

Lys. Demetrius, I will keep my word with thee.

Dem. I would I had your bona ; for I perceive

A weak bond^f holds you; I'll not trust your word. 270

Lys, What, should I hurt her, strike her, kill her dead?

Although I hate her, I'll not harm her so.

a ie. my life

b Ethiopian

c be furious

d spiritless

e Herm. cling'
fast to Lys.

f Le. Hermia
Note the pun on 'bond'

¹ Hermia was dark-complected, and to be dark was in the Elizabethan age regarded as a taint or defect. (Cf. line 266 below and V. 1.11.)

This passage is thus explained by Mr. Wright: 'Demetrius first addresses Herinia, and then breaks off abruptly to taunt Lysander with not showing himself eager to meet him'

Her. What can you do me greater harm than hate ?
 Hate me! wherefore ? O me ! *what news my love I Am not I Hermia ? Are not you Lysander ?
 I am as fair now as I was *erewhile
Sines night? you loved me; yet, since night you left me:

^a what is the matter
^b a short time ago
⁰ i.e. so lately as this night

Why, then you left me,—O, the gods forbid I—
 In earnest, shall I say ?

Lys. Ay, by my life;
 Ana never did desire to see thee more. 280
 Therefore, be out of hope, of question, of doubt;
 Be certain nothing truer; 'tis no jest
 That I do hate thee, and love Helena.

Her. O me I you juggler^d I you Hanker-blossom I
 You thief of love! what have you come by night,
 And stolen my love's heart from him ?

^d impostor

Hd. Fine,!'faith!
 Have you no modesty, no maiden shame,
 No touch⁹ of lashfulness? What, will you tear
Impatient answers^f from my gentle tongue ?
 Fie, fie ! you *counterfeit, you *puppet you 1 290

^e sense
^t cf. 1.160
^g false friend
^h doll

Her. Puppet! why so? ay, that way goes the game.

Now I perceive that she hath made compare¹
 Between our statures ; she hath urged her height;
 And with her *personage her tall personage,^k
 Her height, forsooth, she hath prevail'd with him.
 And are you grown so high in his esteem,
 Because I am so dwarfish, and so low ?
 How low am I, thou 2painted maypole t speak:
 How low am I ? I am not yet so low
 But that my nails can reach unto thine eyes. 300

ⁱ comparison

^k stature

Hei I pray you, though you mock me, gentlemen,
 Let her not hurt me: I was never curst^t:
 I have no gift at all in shrewiehnes^{es} ;
 I am a rightⁿ maid for my cowardice:

shrewish, cf.
II 825 and MS
m quarrelsomeness
nthorough

¹ Le bloeom-eating oanker; you worm praying upon the heart (lote) of lender. (C 11. ii. 3.)

¹ In 'painted ouy pole' there is an allusion both to Helena's height and her pink-and-white complexion. Maypoles were often painted with stripes of red and whits,

Let her not strike me. Ton perhaps may think,
Because she is something lower than myself,
That I can match her.

Her. Lower I hark, again.

HeL Good Hermia, do not be so bitter with me.
I evermore? did love you, Hermia,
Did ever keep your counsels, never wrong'd you ^310
Save that, in love unto Demetrius,
I told him of your stealth' unto this wood.
He followed you; *for*⁶ love, I foLow'd him,
But he hath chid me hence, and threaten'd me
To strike me, spurn me, nay, to kill me too:
And now, so you will let me quiet go,
To Athens will I bear my folly back,
And follow you no further : let me go:
You see how simple' and how fond' I am.

a always

b stealing c out of d silly

e foolish

Her. Why, get you gone: who is't that hinders
you ? 320

Hel. A foolish heart, that I leavp here behind.

Her. What, with Lysander ?

HeL With Demetrius.

Lys. Be not afraid; she shall not harm thee,
Helena.

Dem No, sir, she shall not, though you take her part.

Hel O, when she's angry, she is keen and shrewd^f !

t shrewish

She was a vixen, when she went to school;
And, though she be but little, she is fierce.

Her. 'Little' again I nothing but 'low' and 'little'!

Why will you suffer her to flout^s me thus ?
fM me come to her.

g scoff at

Lys. Get you gone, yon dwarf; 330
You *minimus*⁷ of Viundering knot-grass made;
You bead, you acorn.

b smallest of creatwrss

Dem, You are too officious'

i forward

¹. 'Knot-glass' it a well-known grass, having numerous knots in its stem, anciently supposed, if taken in medicinal infusion, to have the power of stopping the growth of any animal.

In her behalf that scorns your services.

Let her alone ; speak not of Helena ;

Take not her part; for if thou dost intend

Never' BO little Bhow of love to her,

Thou shalt aby' it.

Lys. Now she holds me not;

Now follow, if thou darest, to try whose right,

Of thine or mine, is most" in Helena.

Dem. Follow 1 nay, I'll go with thee, cheek by jole! 340

[Exeunt LYSANDER and DEMBTRIUS.]

Her. You, mistress, all this coil^f is 'long of you.

Nay, go not back.

Het

I will not trust you, I,

Nor longer stay in your curst' company.

Your hands than mine are quicker for a fray;

My legs are longer though, to run away. [Exit.]

Her. I am amazed,^g and know not what to say.

[Exit.]

Obe. This is thy negligence : still^h thou mistakest,
Or else committ'st thy knayeries wilfully.

Puck. Believe me, king of shadows,ⁱ I mistook.

Did not you tell me, I should know the man 350

By the Athenian garments he had on ?

And so far blameless proves my enterprise,

That I have 'nointed an Athenian's eyes;

And so far am I glad it so did sort'

As this their jangling^j I esteem a sport.

Obe. Thou see'st, these lovers seek a place to fight:

Hie therefore, Robin, overcast the night;

The starry welkin" cover thou anon^k

With drooping fog, as black as Acheron^l;

And lead these testy^m rivals so astray,

As' one come not within another's way.

Like to Lysander sometime frame thy tongue,

Then stir Demetrius up with bitter *wrong*ⁿ;

And sometime rail thou like Demetrius;

And from each other look thou lead them thus,

Till O V their brows faith-counterfeiting' sleep

^e ever
^b pay for

^e strongest

Aside by side

O trouble, eon-fusion

tcf.mandm

t dumb-founded

h constantly

1 spirits

k happen

l noisy quar'
veiling

msky
n forthwith
o see Clas.Name$ p hot-headed q that

r insult

³ resembling

ACT III. A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM. SC. II 45

With leaden legs and batty wings² doth creep:
 Then crush this herb into Lysander's eye;
Whose liquor^b hath this virtuous^c property,
 To take from thence ail error *with his might 370
 And make his eyeballs roll with wonted^d sight.
 When they next wake, all this derision
 Shall seem a dream and fruitless vision;
 And back to Athens shall the lovers wend,
¹ With league whose date till death shall never end.
 Whiles I in this affair do thee employ,
 I'll to my queen, and beg her Indian boy;
 And then I will her charmed eye release
 From monster's view, and all things shall be peace.

Puck. My fairy lord, this must be done with haste, 380

For night's swift dragons¹ cut the clouds full fast,
 And yonder shines *Aurora's harbinger
 At whose approach, ghosts, wandering here and there,

Troop home to churchyards; damm'd^d spirits all,
That in crossways and floods have burial)
 Already to their wormy beds are gone;
 For fear lest day should look their shames^k upon,
 They wilfully themselves exile from light
 And must for aye consort with black-brow'd night.

Obe. But we are spirits of another sort.¹ 390
 I with the morning's love^m have oft made sport;
 And, like a forester, the groves may tread,
 Even till the eastern gate, all fiery-red,
 Opening on *Neptune with fair blessed beams,
 Turns into yellow gold his salt green streams.
 But, notwithstanding, haste; make no delay:
 We may effect this business yet ere day. [Exit.]

Puck. Op and down, up and down,
 I will lead them up and down:
 I am fear'd in field and town; 400
 Goblin, lead them up and down.
 Here comes one.

^a i.e. bringing heaviness and darkness
^b the juice of which ^c 0 beneficial
^d by its power
^e 9 customary

*I Night's chariot drawn by dragons
 g the morning star
 b i.e. condemned to wander
 1 Le. suicides see p. 81
 t the evidence of their crimes*

¹ cf. III. i. 154
^m Cenhals, see Notes

ⁿ the sea
 cf. II i, 127

¹ I.e. Thhttr mutual lovt shall continue till death.

Re-enter LYSANDER.

Lys. Where art thou, proud Demetrius? speak thou now.

Puck, Here, villain I drawn' and ready. Where art thou?

Lys. I will be with thee straight.

Puck, Follow me then
To plainer' ground.

[Exit LYSANDEB, as following the voice,

Be-enter DEMETBIUS.

Dem. Lysander! speak again.
Thou runaway, thou coward, art thou fled?
Speak 1 In some bush? Where dost thou hide thy head?

Puck, Thou coward, art thou bragging to the stars,
Telling the bushes that thou look'st for wars, 410
And wilt not come? Come, recreant?; come, thou child;

FU whip thee with a rod. He is defiled,
That draws a sword on thee.

Dent Yea; art thou there?

Puck. Follow my voice: we'll try no manhood' here. [Exeunt.

Re-enter LYSANDEB.

Lys, He goes before me, and still dares me on;
When I come where he calls, then he is gone.
The villain is much lighter-heel'd than I:
I follow'd fast, but faster he did fly;
*That*⁹ fallen am I in dark uneven way,
And here will rest me. [Lies down,] Gome, thou gentle day I 420
For if but once thou show me thy (jrey light,
I'll find Demetrius, and revenge this spite. [Sleeps,

Re-enter PUCK and DEMETRIUS.

Puck. Ho, ho, hot Coward, why oonest thou not?

ft with my twofd drawn

b more even

c coward

d not fight, or not test each other's courage

e So that

Dem. Abide' me, if thou darest; for well I wot,
Thou runn'st before me, shifting every place,
And darest not stand, nor look me in the face.
Where art thou now?

Puck. Come hither: I am here.

Dem. Nay, then, thou mock'st me Thou shalt *buy*⁴ this dear,

If ever I thy face by daylight see:
Now, go thy way. Faintness constraineth me 430
To measure out my length' on this cold bed.
By day's approach look to be visited.

[Lies down and sleeps.

Be-enter HELENA.

Hel. O weary night, O long and tedious night,
Abate^f thy hours 1 hine comforts from the east.

That I may back to Athens, by daylight,

From these that my poor company detest.

And sleep' that sometimes shuts up sorrow's eye,
Steal me awhile from mine own company. [Sleeps.

Puck, Yet but three'^f Come one more;

Two of both kinds makes up four. 440

Here she comes'^f *curst*¹ and sad.

Cupid is a knavish lad,

Thus to make poor females mad.

Be-enter HEBMIA.

Her. Never so weary, never so in woe,
Bedabbled? with the dew, and torn with briers:
I can no further crawl, no further go:

My legs can keep no pace with my desires.

Here will I rest me till the break of day.

Heaven shield Lysander if they mean a fray !

[Lies down and sleeps.

Puck. On the ground 450
Sleep sound:

I'll apply

To your eye,

Gentle lover, remedy,

[Squeezing the juice on LYSANDER'S eye.

a wait for b know
c changing from one place to smother.

d pay for e lie down

i shorten

g i. e. may sleep,
etc.

h dissyllable

1'sec l 343

k wet

¹ May sunrise bring Its chesting influence,

48 ACT III. A A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.. SC. II.

When thou wakest, Thou takest True delight In the eight Of thy former lady's eye : And the country proverb known, That every man should take his own, In your waking shall be shown : Jack shall have Jill; Nought shall go ill; The man shall have his mare again, And all shall be well.	460
--	-----

[Exit PUCK.]

1 Jack and Jill were familiar representatives of the two sexes in low life. Cf. "A good Jack makes a good Jill"^M (Ray's Proverbs). 'The man shall have his mars again' was another familiar country proverb, denoting that everything would end up well.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same, DEMETRIUS', HELENA,
LYSANDER, and HERMIA, lying asleep.

Enter TITANIA and BOTTOM, PEASEBLOSSOM, COB-WEB, MOTH, MUSTARDSEED, and other Fairies attending ; OBERON behind unseen,

Tita. Come, sit thee down upon this flowery bed,

While I thy amiable' cheeks do coy'
And stick musk-roses in thy sleek smooth head,
And kiss thy fair large ears, my gentle joy.

Bot. Where's Pease blossom ?

Peas. Bedy.

Bot Scratch my head, Peaseblossom. Where's Mounsieur' Cobweb ?

Cob. Ready.

Bot Mounsieur Cobweb, good mounsieur, get your weapons in your hand, and kill me a red-hipped humble-bee, on the top of a thistle; and, good mounJieur, brim; me the honey-bag. Do not tret

a lovable
b caress

c Bottom's pro'
nuntatton af
Monsieur

50 ACT IV. A A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM. SC.i.

yourself too much in the action, mounsieur; and, food mounsieur, have a care the honey-bag break not; I would be loath to have you over flown^a with a honey-bag, signior. Where's Mounsieur Mustardseed? 17 Must Ready.

a drowned

Bot Give me your neaf^b Mounsieur Mustardseed. Pray you, leave your courtesy^c, good mounsieur. 20 Mast What's;our will?

b fist
0 use no unnecessary ceremony

Bot Nothing, good mounsieur, but to help Caval-er^d Gobweb to scratch. I must to the barber's, mounsieur; lor, methinks, I am marvellous hairy about the face, and I am such a tender ass, if my hair do but tickle me, I must scratch.

d Cavalero

Tita. What, wilt thou hear some music, my sweet love?

Bot I have a reasonable good ear in music. Let's have the tongs^e and the bones.

e an instrument played with a key

. Tita. Or, say, sweet love, what thou desirest to eat. 30

Bot Truly a peck of provender; I could munch your good dry oats. Methinks, I have a great desire to a bottle^f of hay; good hay, sweet hay hath no fellow.⁶

f a small bundle
g equal

Tita, I have a venturous fairy that shall seek The squirrel's hoard, and fetch thee new nuts.

Bot I had rather have a handful or two of dried peas. But, I pray you, let none of your people stir me: I have an exposition^h of sleep come upon me. 49

h for 'disposition'

Tita. Sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms.

Fairies, be gone, and be *all ways*ⁱ away.

i in all directions

[Exeunt Fairies,

'So doth the woodbine the sweet honeysuckle

¹ This should be Peaseblossom, as Cobweb's duties have already been assigned him. See line 10.

⁶ Commentators are generally in doubt as to the meaning of this passage. Shakespeare elsewhere uses 'woodbine' and 'honeysuckle' as different names for the same plant, and the simplest explanation appears to be that Titania entwines Bottom, as the tendrils of the honeysuckle twine around the stronger branch. Some editors take 'woodbine' to refer to the convolvulus,

ACT IV A A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM. .SC I. 51

Gently entwist; the ¹female ivy to Enrings' the barky fingers of the elm.
O, how I love thee I how I dote on thee I

[They sleep.]

Enter PUCK.

Obe. [Advancing,] Welcome, good Robin. See'st thou this sweet sight?

Her *dotage*² now I do begin to pity:

For, meeting her of late behind the wood,

Seeking sweet favours⁰ for this hateful fool, 50

I did upbraid her, and fall out with her;

For she his hairy temples then had rounded

With coronet of fresh and fragrant flowers;

And that same dew, which sometime on the buds

Was wont to swell' like round and orient' pearls,

Stood now within the pretty flowerets' eyes,
Like tears that did their own disgrace bewail.

When I had at my pleasure taunted her,

And she in mild terms begg'd my patience,

I then did ask of her her changeling child; 60

Which *straight*¹ she gave me, and her fairy sent

To bear him to my bower in fairy land.

And now I have the boy, I will undo

This hateful imperfection of her eyes:

And, gentle Puck, take this transforméd sealp

From off the head of this Athenian swain;

That, he awaking when the other do,

May⁹ all to Athens back again repair,

And think no more of this night's accidents,

But as the fierce vexation of a dream. 70

But first I will release the fairy queen.

[Touching her eyes with a herb.

Be, as thou wast wont to be;

See, as thou wast wont to see:

'Diaris bud o'er Cupid's flower'

Hath such force and blessed power.

a encircles

b love Jolly

G gifts, such as flowers' Cf.
IL i. 12

d used Jo gathef
and grow
e shining

f at ones

g sc.they

h the heart's-ease or pansy. See
II. 2 189

¹ The ivy il oalled 'female' because it requires support, and (like the Tine) is sometimes said to be married to the tree that sustains It.

² Usually thought to be the Agnus castus, which was supposed to postals she property of keeping men and women chaste.

52 ACT IV. A A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM. SC I.

Now, my Titania, wake you, my sweet queen I

Tita. My Oberon I what visions have I seen I

Methought, I was enamour'd of an ass.

Obe. There lies your love.

Vita. How came these things to pass?
0, how mine eyes do loathe his visage now! 80

Obe. Silence awhile. Robin, take oft this head.

Titania, music call, and strike more dead

Than common sleep of all these five' the sense.

Tita. Music, ho, music, such as charmeth sleep!
[Musk, stills

Puck. Now, when thou wakest, with thine own fool's eyes peep.

Obe. Sound, music I Come, my queen, take hands with me,

And rock? the ground whereon these sleepers be.

Now thou and I are new' in amity,

And will to-morrow midnight solemnly'

Dance in Duke Theseus' house triumphantly, 90

And bless it to all fair prosperity.

There shall the pairs of faithful lovers be

Wedded, with Theseus, all in jollity.

Puck. Fairy king, attend, and mark:

I do hear the morning lark.

Obe. Then, my queen, in silence sad,

Trip we after the *night's*¹ shade;

*We the globe can compass soon,*⁹

Swifter than the wandering moon.

Tita. Come, my lord, and in our flight zoo

Tell me how it came this night,

That I sleeping here was found.

With these mortals on the ground.

[Exeunt. Horns winded' within.

Enter THBBBBUS, HIPPOLYTA, EGBUS, and Train.

The. 60, one of you, find out the forester';

For now 'our observation is perform'd;

And since we have the vaward' of the day,

a I.e. the four lovers and Bottom
b softly

c i.e. as one roots a cradle d again
e with pomp and ceremony

i dissyllable
g cf. II. i. 176

h sounded

i master of the hounds
k are in the fore
part

¹ We have done our observance to a morn of May,—celebrated the customary lit'. (Cf. I. i., 167, and 113' of tail Scene, and see Now on p. 74.)

My love shall hear the music of my hounds.
Uncouple? in the western valley ; let them go:
 Despatch, I say. and had the forester.
 We vill, fair queen, up to the mountain's top, lio
 And mark the musical confusion
 Of hounds and echo in conjunction.

a unleash the hounds

Hip. I was with Hercules and Cadmus once,
 When, in a wood of Crete, they bay'd' the bear
 W^tith hounds of Sparta : never did I hear
 Such gallant *chiding*⁶; for, besides the groves,
 The skies, the fountains,⁷ every region near Seem'd all one mutual cry. I never heard
 So musical a discord, such sweet thunder.

b drove to bay

0 noise (of barking). Cf. II i, 146
 d streams, cf. II t. 85

The. My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,
 'So Jiew'd, so sanded; and their heads are hung 121
 With ears that sweep away the morning dew;
 Crook-knee'd, and dew-lapp'd? like Thessalian bulls;
 Slow in pursuit, but ²*match'd in mouth like bells*,
*Each under each. A cry more tuneable*¹
 Was never holla'd to, nor cheer'd with horn,
 In Crete, in Sparta, nor in Thessaly:
 Judge, when you hear. But, soft I what nymphs are these?

e with loose flesh hanging from their throats, cf. II i. 51
 f more musical pack of hounds

Ege. My lord, this is my daughter here asleep;
 And this, Lysander; this Demetrius is; 130
 This Helena, old Nedar's Helena:
 I wonder of their being here together.

g at

The. No doubt, they rose up early, to observe
 The rite of May, and, hearing our intent,^h Came here in grace of our solemnity}
 But speak, Egeus, is not this the day
 That Hermia should give answer of her choice ?

h mention of our solemnity
 i wedding festivities

Ege. It is, my lord.

The. Gg, bid the huntsmen wake them with their horns.

¹ They have the same large hanging ohapi (or flews), and are of the same landy colour.

¹ Barking in unison likes a ohime of belli, some higher, some lower (each under each).

64 ACT IV. A A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM. SC. I

[Horns, and shout within. LTSANDBR, HEBMU, DEMETRIUS, and HELENA, wake and start up.
The Good morrow, friends. St. Valentine is past;
¹Begin these wood-birds but to couple now t 141
Lys, Pardon, my lord.
The. I pray you all, stand up.
I know you two are rival enemies:
How comes this gentle concord in the world,
That hatred is so far from jealousy,
To sleep by hate, and fear no enmity ?
Lys. My lord, I shall reply amazedly	'e confused t j
Haif sleep,¹ half waking: but as yet, I swear,	b sleeping
I cannot truly say how I came here;
But, as I think—for truly would I speak, 150
And now I do bethink me, so it is,—
I came with Hermia hither : our intent
Was to be gone from Athens, where we might,	e whithersoever
Without' the peril of the Athenian law.	we could
Ege. Enough, enough, my lord; you have⁹ enough:	d away from
I beg the law, the law, upon his head.	e have heard
They would have stolen away, they would, Demetrius,
Thereby to have defeated¹ you and me;	t cheated
You, of your wife, and me, of my oonsent,
Of my consent, that she should be your wife. 160
Dem. My lord, fair Helen told me of their stealth,⁹	i stealing away
Of thia their purpose hither to this wood;
And I in fury hither followed them,
Fair Helena infancy' following me.	bas we say'out
But, my good lord, I wot¹ not by what power—	of love
But by some power it i'—my love to Hermia,	1 know
Melted as doth the snow, seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gawd'	k toy 1 ef. l. i. 8's
Which in my childhood I did dote upon;
And all the faith, the wrtud of my heart, 170	1 true love, the
The object and the pleasure of mine eye,	very substance
Is only Helena. To her, my lord,
Wai I betroth'd ere I saw Hermia:

¹ Birds were popularly supposed to choose their mates on St Valentine's day, February Um'. The mention of this Saint's day by Theseus is, of course, an anachronism.

But, like in sickness, did I loathe this food;
But, as in health come' to my natural taste,
Now do I wish it, love it, long for it,
And will for evermore be true to it.

a being teetored

The. Fair lovers, you are fortunately met:
Of this discourse we more will hear anon.

Egeus, I will overbear' your will, 180
For in the temple, by and by, with us,
These couples shall eternally be knit.
And, for the morning now is something worn,
Our purposed hunting shall be set aside.
Away, with us, to Athens! Three and three,
We'll hold a feast in great solemnity!
Come, Hippolyta.

b overrule

[Exeunt THESEUS, HIPPOLYTA, EGEUS, and Train,

Dem. These things seem small and undistinguishable,

Like far-off mountains turned into clouds.

Her. Methinks, I see these things with parted? eye,
When every thing seems double.

c being three couples
d with great festivities

Hd.

Bo methinks: 191

And I have found Demetrius, 'like a jewel,
Mine own, and not mine own.

Deo.

It seems to me

That yet we Bleep, we dream. Do not you think
The duke was here, and bid us follow him?

• divided

Her. Yea; and my father.

HeL

And Hippolyta.

Lys. And he did bid us follow to the temple.

Dem. Why, then, we are awake: let's follow him;
And by the way let us recount our dreams. [Exeunt.

Bot [Waking.] When my cue comes, call me, and I will answer: my 'next is, 'Most fair Pyramus/Heigh-ho I Peter Quince 1 Flute, the bellowsmender I Snout, the tinker! Starveling I God's

¹ Perhaps a reminiscence of the parable of the lost treasure. (Cf. Matt, xlii. 44.)

² Bottom means 'my next cue'; but either he has not yet returned to the full possession of his faculties and his memory, or else the play was changed (as appears to have been the case) the rehearsal and the performance. (See V. i., l. 192.)

56 ACTIV. A A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM. SC.II.

my life, stolen hence, and left me asleep I I have had a most rare vision. I have had a drium, past the wit of man to say what dream it was: man is but an ass, if he go about to expound this dream. 'Methought I was—there is no man can tell what. 'Methought I was, and 'methought I had,—but man is but a patched fool,¹ if he will offer to say what methought I had. The eye' of man hath not heard, the ear' of man hath not seen, man's hand' is not able to taste, his tongue' to conceive, nor his heart' to report,, what my dream was. I will get Peter Quince to write a ballad of this dream: it shall be called Bottom's Dream, because it hath no bottom; and I will sing it in the latter end of a play, before the duke: peradventure, to make it the more gracious,⁶ I snail sing it at *her*⁴ death.

[Exit. 221]

a fool in parti-coloured at tin

b Bottom's humorous blunders

0 beautiful
d.i.e. Tkube't

SCENE II.—Athens. QUINCE'S Bouse.

Enter QUINCE, FLUTE, SNOT, and STARVELING.

Quin. Have you sent to Bottom's house? is he come home yet?

Star. He cannot be heard of. Out of doubt, he is transported.⁹

Flu. If he come not, then the play is marred. It goes not forward, doth it?

Quin. It is not possible: you have not a man in all Athens able to discharge' Pyramus, but he.

Flu No; he hath simply the best wit of any handicraft man in Athens.

Gain. Yea, and the best person too; and he is a very paramour for a sweet voice.

Flu. You must say 'paragon'⁹ a paramour is, God bless us 1 a thing of naught.'

Enter SNUG.

Snug. Masters, the duke is coming from the e he means to say 'trans- lated, i.e.

earned off (as by thefaires)
f play the part of. Cf. I ii 93

g model of ex-ceUence
h a naughty, wicked thing

¹ Bottom is ashamed to tell it even to the winds, that he dreamt he was an ass and had an ass's head on, temple, and there is^a two or three lords and ladies more married. If our sport had gone forward, we had all been made men.

^aare

Flu. O sweet bully^b Bottom I Thus hath he lost sixpence a day during his life; he could not have 'scaped sixpence a day : an^c the duke had not given him sixpence a day for playing Pyramus, I'll be hanged ; he would have deserved it: sixpence a day in Pyramus, or nothing. 24

^b cf. Ill i.8'

^c if

Enter BOTTOM.

Bot Where are these lads? where are these hearts^d !

^d brave fellows

Quin. Bottom I O most courageous^e day I O most happy hour I

^e perhaps he mean'

glomus'

^f have

Bot. Masters, I am^g to discourse wonders; but ask me not what; for, if I tell you, I am no true Athenian. I will tell you every thing, right^h as it fell out. 32

^g exactly

Quin. Let us hear, sweet Bottom.

Bot Not a word *of*ⁱ me. All that I will tell you is, that the duke hath dined. Get your apparel together, good strings to your beards, new ribbons to your pumps^j; meet presently at the palace; every man look o'er his part; for the short and the long is, our play is preferred^k. In any case, let Thisby have clean linen, and let not him that plays the lion pare his nails, for, they shall hang out for the lion's claws. And, most lear actors, eat no onions, nor garlic, for we are to utter sweet breath^l, and I do not doubt, but to hear them say, it is a sweet comedy. No more words: away I go, away I

^h from

ⁱ shoes

^j offered for acceptance

^k language' with a pun on the two meaning'

[Exeunt. 46

SCENE I. Athens. The Palace of THESEUS.

Enter THESEUS, HIPPOLYTA, PHILOSTRATE,
Lords, and Attendants.

Hip. 'Tis strange, my Theseus, that these lovers
'speak of .¹

The. More strange than true: I never may^b believe

These antique^c fables nor these fairy toys':
Lovers and madmen have such seething^d brains,
Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend^e
More than cool reason ever comprehends,^g
The lunatic, the lover and the poet,
Are of imagination all compact':
One sees more devils than vast hell can hold;
That is the madman: the lover, all as frantic,
Sees Helen's beauty' in 'a brow of Egypt:

^a that of which,
etc.

^b can

^c quaint, old
^d chiidihi fairy tales

^e = bubbling over (with imagination)

^f conceive

^g grasps

^h altogether composed f i.e. an ideal beauty

10

* See page 109. on which this speech is paraphrased,
¹ A giply't swarthy feature!. (See III. fi., I.)

The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling,
Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven;

And, as, imagination bodies forth
The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen
Turns them to shapes, and gives to *airy nothing*⁶
A local habitation and a name.

Such tricks' hath strong imagination,
²*That, if it would but apprehend*' some joy,
It comprehends^f some bringer of that joy: 20
Or in the night, imagining some fear,
How easy is a bush supposed a bear?

Hip. But all the story of the night told over,
And all their minds transfigured so together,⁹
More witnesseth' than fancy's images,
And grows to something of great constancy¹;
But, howsoever, strange, and admirable'

The. Here come the lovers, full of joy and mirth.

Enter LITSAKDEB, HERMIA, DEMETBIUS, and
HELENA.

Joy, gentle friends 1 joy, and fresh days of love,
Accompany your hearts!

Lys. More than to us 30
*Wait in*¹ your royal walks, your board, your bed!

The. Come now; what masques,^m what dances shall we have,

To wear away this long age of three hours
Between our ²*after-supper* and bed-time?

Where is our usual manager of mirth'?

What revels are in hand? Is there no play,

To ease the anguish of a torturing hour?

Call Philostrate.

a the splendid exaltation of inspiration b invests with bodily form
c that which exists only in the imagination
d peculiar arts
e imagine t imagines also

g such a change
come over all of them at once h testifies to
- something more i consistency
k marvellous

1 attend on m dramatic performances
n master of the revels

¹ For example the fairies of this play, to which Shakespeare has given bodily form and an existence almost real.

² Le. That it has the power of making an imaginary joy as real as though it had an actual existence. 'Apprehend' and 'comprehend' have much the same meaning here, viz. imagine.

³ This Mr. Wright (O1. Pr. ed.) explains as a rear-supper; not the time after supper, as it is usually explained, out a banquet so called which was taken after the meal.

Phil	Here, mighty Theseus.
The.	Say, what abridgment ⁹ have you for this evening?	a "something to shorten the time, hence, pastime
What masque?	what music? How shall we beguile The lazy time, if not with some delight?	41
Phil.	There is a brief ¹⁰ how many sports are ripe; Make choice of which your highness will see first.	b summary
	[Giving a paper.
The.	[Reads.] "The battle with the Centaurs ," to be sung	c see Clas. Names
By an Athenian eunuch	to the harp."
We'll none of that:	that have I told my love, In glory of my 'kinsman Hercules .
[Beads.]	"The riot of the tipsy Bacchanals ' Tearing the Thracian singer ⁶ in their rage."	d Bacchantes, Thracian women
That is an old device;	and it was play 'a	50 a i.e. Orpheus
When I from Thebes came last	a conqueror.
[Beads.]	"The thrice three Muses mourning for the death
Of Learning, late deceased	in beggary"
That is some satire, keen and critical'		t severe
Not sorting with ⁹	a nuptial ceremony.	g suiting
[Beads.]	"A tedious brief scene of young Pyramus
And his love Thisbe;	very tragical mirth."
Merry and tragical!	Tedious and brief!
That is, hot ice, and wondrous strange snow.
How shall we find the concord of this discord?	^{h2}	60 h reconcile these contradictionr
Phil.	A play there is, my lord, some ten words long,
Which is as brief as I have known	a play;
But by ten words, my lord,	it is too long,
Which makes it tedious;	for in all the play
There is not one word apt, one player	fitted . ¹	i suited to Mi part
And tragical, my noble lord,	it is,

¹ Theseus and Hercules were, according to tradition, associated in several heroic exploits. Plutarch, in his life of Theseus, relates that they were cousins.

² These lines may allude to the death of the learned Robert Greene, who died in great want in 1592. In this case they afford an indication of the date of the play. (See Introduction, p. xi.)

For Pyramus therein doth kill himself
Which when I saw rehearsed, I must confess,
Made mine eyes water; but more merry tears
The passion of loud laughter never shed. 70

The. What are they that do play it?

Foil. Hard-handed men, that work in Athens here,

Which never labour'd in their minds till now,
And now have toil'd their unbreathed' memories
With this same play against your nuptial.

The. And we will hear it.

Phil No, my noble lord;

It is not for you': I have heard it over,
And it is nothing, nothing in the world,
Unless you can find sport in their intents,
Extremely stiretcVd' and cmrid' with cruel pain, 80
To do you service.

The. I will hear that play:
For never anything can be amiss
When simpleness and duty tender it.

60, bring them in : and take your places, ladies.

[Exit PHILOSTBATB.]

Hip. I love not to see 'wretchedness oer-charged,
And duty in his service perishing.

The. Why, gentle sweet, you shall see no such thing.

Hip. He says, they can do nothing in this kind.¹

The. The kinder we, to give them thanks for nothing.

Our sport shall be to take what they mistake: 90
And what poor duty cannot do, 'noble respect
Takes it in might, not merit.

Where I have come, great clerks' have purposed
To greet me with premeditated welcome;
Where I have seen them shiver and look pale,
Make periods' in the midst of sentences,

» unpractised

^b At for such as you

^c attempts
'strained to the utmost
'learned

^t way

^g find the true nteaning of their blunder
ing repress
'tation

^h scholars

^l prepared speeches,
^k full stops

¹ Le. poor performers attempt what it beyond their power, and fail miserably whilst dutifully endeavouring to earn others

¹ Le. the courtesy of true nobility wards the intention (takes it in might i.e. what it might be) and does not judge it on its (intrinsic) merits.

Throttle their practised accent in their fears,
 And; in conclusion, dumbly have broke off,
 Not paying me a welcome. Trust me, sweet,
 Out of this silence yet I pick'd a welcome;
 And in the modesty of fearful duty
 I read as much as from the rattling tongue
 Of saucy and audacious eloquence.
 Love, therefore, and tongue-tied simplicity,
 In least' Bpeak most, to my capacity^d

^a studied speech

100 b timid

c I.e. when they say least d judgment

' ready

Be-mter PHILOSTBATB,

Phil So please your grace, the ¹*Prologue* is address'd.

The. Let him appraoh. [Flourish of Trumpets.]

Enter QUINCE for the Prologue.

Prol. If we offend, it is with our good will.
 That you should think, we come not to offend,
 But with good will. To show our simple skill, no
 That is the true beginning of our end.

Consider then, wo come but in despite}
 We do not come as *mindin*⁹ to content you,
 Our true intent is. All for your delight,
 We are not here. That you should here repent you,
 The actors are at hand; and, by their show,
 You shall know all that you are like' to know.

t *in defiance of opposition, i.e.
to force ourselves upon you*

i meaning

h likely

i is not parti' cular about stops

The. This fellpw doth not stand upon points,¹

Lys. He hath rid his prologue like a rough colt;
 he knows not the stop. A good moral, my lord: it is not enough to speak, but to speak true. 121

Hip. Indeed, he hath played on his prologue like a child on a recorder¹; a sound, but not in govern-menu¹

k a flageolet

1 under any control

m i.e. possessing all the links

The. His speech was like a tangled chain;
*Nothing impaired*TM but all disordered. Who is next?

¹ The Prologue explains the action of the play, and apologises 'for imperfections in the performance. His entrance was usually heralded by a flourish of trumpets. The humour of the prologue as spoken by Quince depends, not merely on the fact that the punctuation is all incorrect, but that the mis-punctuation gives precisely the opposite meaning to that intended. For the true punctuation see the Note on p. 84.

Enter PYRAMUS and THISBE, WALL, MOONSHINE, and LION.

Prol. Gentles, perchance, you wonder at this show;

But wonder on, till truth make all things plain.
This man is Pyramus, if you would know;

This beauteous lady Thisby is, certain.

This man, with lime and rough-cast, doth present * represent Wall, that vile Wall which did these lovers
sunder; 132

And through Wall's chink, poor souls, they are content

To whisper, at the which let no man wonder.
This man, with lanthorn, dog, and bush of thorn,
Presenteth Moonshine; for, if you will know,
By moonshine did these lovers think no scorn' b not disdain

To meet at Ninus' tomb, there, there to woo.
This grisly' beast, which Lion hight' by name, c güm
The trusty Thisby, coming first by night, d called 140
Did scare away, or rather did affright;
And, as she fled, her mantle she did fall,⁹ e drop

Which Lion vile with bloody mouth did stain.

Anon comes Pyramus, sweet youth and tall,
And finds his trusty Thisby's mantle slain:

Whereat with Made,' with bloody bameful blade, t Notice the ex-
He bravely broacKd' his boiling Moody breast; cessive use of

And Thisby tarrying in mulberry shade,
His dagger drew, and died. For all the rest,
Let Lion, Moonshine, Wall, and lovers twain, 150
At large discourse, while here they do remain.

[Exeunt PROL., THISBB, LION, and MOONSHINB.

The. I wonder, if the lion be' to speak.

Dem. No wonder, my lord: one lion may, when many asses do. h has

Wall. In this same interlude it doth befall,
That I' one Snout by name, present a wall;
And such a wall, as I would nave you think,
That had in it a crannied hole, or chink,
Through which the loyers, Pyramus and Thisby,
Did whisper often very secretly.' 160

This lime, this rough-cast, and this stone, doth
show

That I am that same wall; the truth is so;
And this the cranny is, right and sinister;
Through which the fearful lovers are to whisper.

The. Would you desire lime and hair^b to speak better?

Dem. It is the wittiest partition that evsr I heard discourse, my lord.

The. Pyramus draws near the wall: silence I

Enter PYRAMUS.

Pyr. 0 grim-look'd night! 0 night with hue so
black! 170

0 night, which ever art, when day is not 1

0 night! 0 night! alack, alack, alack I

1 fear my Thisby's promise is forgot I

And thou, 0 wall I 0 sweet, 0 lovely wall,

That stand'st between her father's ground and mine t

Thou wall, 0 wall I 0 sweet and lovely wall,

Show me thy chink, to blink? through with mine
eyne.⁹ [WALL holds up his fingers.

Thanks, courteous wall; Jove shield thee well for this!

But what see I? No Thisby do I see.

0 wicked wall, through whom I see no bliss; 180

Cursed by thy stones for thus deceiving me!

The. The wall, methinks, being sensible,ⁱ should curse again.

Pyr. No, in truth, sir, he should not. ' Deceiving me,' is Thisby's cue: she is to enter now, and I am to spy her through the wall. You shall see, it will fall *pat*¹ as I told you. Yonder she comes.

Enter THISBY.

This. O wall, full often hast thou heard my moans,

For parting my fair Pyramus and me I

My cherry lips have often kiss'd thy stones, 190

Thy stones with lime and hair knit up in thee, a left. He holds out his two hands

b used in the composition of plaster

0 gloomy-looking

d steal a look through • eyes

i possessing sense or feeling

1 exactly

Pyr. I see^A a voice : now will I to the chink,
To spy an I can hear' my Thisby's face.
Thisby!

a cf. IV. i. 211

This. My love thou art, my love, I think.

Pyr. Think what thou wilt, I am thy lover's grace;

And like Ltmander' am I trusty still.

This. And I like Helen,^ctill the Fates me kill.

Pyr. Not Shafalus to Proems' was so true.

This. As Shafalus to Proems' I to you. 200

Pyr. O! kiss me through the hole of this vile wail!

This. I kiss the wall's hole, not your lips at all.

Pyr. Wilt thou at Ninny's tomb meet me straightway?

this. 'Tule life, 'tide death,' I come without delay.

Wall. Thus have I, Wall, my part discharged' so:
And, being done, thus Wall away doth go.

[Exeunt WALL, PYRAMUS and THIBBH.

The. Now is the *mural'*⁹ down between the two neighbours.

Dem. No remedy'^h my lord, when walls are so wiljul' to hear without warning. 210

Hip. This is the silliest stuff that ever I heard.

The. The best in this kind are but shadows'; and the worst are no worse, if imagination *amend them.*ⁱ

Hip. It must be your imagination then, and not theirs.

The. If we imagine no worse of them than they of themselves, they may pass for excellent men. Here come two noble beasu, in a man and a lion.

Enter LIOK and MOONBHINB.

Lion. You, ladies, you, whose gentle hearts do fear

The smallest *monstrous*TM mouse that creeps on floor,^m a quibble on May now perohance both quake and tremble here, 221 the two mean'

When lion rough in wildest rage doth roar.
Then know, that I, one Snug the joiner am,

b for Leander

c for Hero

d for Cephalui to Procris

e i.e. whatever betide, or befall t performed

g wall

h no help for it
' ready

k imperfect re- presentation'

l i.e. 'pieces out- their imperfectione'

i 'g'i M horrible, (2)

~~Ampt~~

66 ACT V.. A A MIDSUMMER-NIGHTS DREAM SC. I

A turn fell nor else no lion's dam :
For, if I should as lion come in strife
Into this place, 't were pity on my life.'

The. A very gentle beast, and of a good conscience.

Dent. The very best at a beast, my lord, that e'er I saw. 230

Lys. This lion is a very fox for his halour.

The. True ; and a goose for his discretion.

Dem Not so, my lord; for his valour cannot carry his discretion and the fox *carries*⁶ the goose.

The. His discretion, I am sure, cannot carry his valour, for the goose carries not the fox. It is well: leave it to his discretion, and let us listen to the moon.

Moon. This lanthorn doth the *hornid*⁴ moon present.

Dem. He should have worn the horns on his head. 241

The. He is no crescent,⁹ and his horns are invisible within the circumference.

Moon. This lanthorn doth the horned moon present ;

Myself the man i' the moon do seem to be.

The. This is the greatest error of all the rest.¹
The man should be put into the lanthorn: how is it else the man i' the moon?

Dem. He dares not come there *for*⁹ the candle ; for, you see, it is already Hn snuff 250

Hip. I am awearry of this moon: would he would change!

The. It appears by his small light of discretion? that he is in the wane; but yet, in courtesy, in all reason, we must stay the time.

Lys. Proceed, Moon.

Moon. All that I have to say is, to tell you, that the lanthorn is the moon; I, the man in the a so. 'Neither before' a lion'

'cf.M.i. 48

c carries off

d a pun on 'horn'

• not a waxing
moon

f confusion of constructions (seep, 103)

g on account of h offended, a pun on the two meanings

i wisdom

¹ The cunning of the fox il only equalled by its natural timidity.

² Cf. Ben Johnson's Poetaster II 1.: " For I tell you true, I take it highly in snuff, to learn how to entertain gentle-folki of you, at these years, V faith."

ACT V. A A MIDSUMMER-NIGHTS DREAM SC.I. 57

moon; this thorn-bush, my thorn-bush; and this dog, my dog. 260

Dera. Why, all these should be in the lanthorn; for all these are in the moon. But, silence ! here comes Thisbe.

Enter THISBE.

This. This is old Ninny's tomb. Where is my love ?

Lion, [Roaring.] Oh——! [THISBB run off.]

Dem, Well roared, Lion.

The. Well run, Thisbe.

Hip. Weil shone, Moon. Truly, the moon shines with a good grace.

[The Lion tears THISBE'S mantle, and exit.]

The. Well moused,^a Lion. 270

Dem And then came Pyramus.

Lys. And so the lion vanished.

Enter PYRAMUS.

Pyr. Sweet moon, I thank thee for thy sunny beams;

I thank thee, moon, for shining now so bright;
For, by thy gracious, golden, glittering gleams,

I trust to take of truest Thisby sight.

But stay, O spite !

But mark, poor knight,

What dreadful dole is here !

Eyes, do you see ? 280

How can it be ?

O dainty duck ! O dear !

Thy mantle good,

What, stain'd with blood:

Approach, ye Furies^b fell !

O ¹Fates, come, come:

²Cut thread and thrum;

Quail,* crush, conclude, and quell !

a shaken (as a eat shakes a mouse)

b see Clas.Names

e kill

¹ Of the three Fates (Meer© or Parcee) Clotho (spinster) spun, Lachesis (allotter) held, and Atropoe (inevitable) out, the thread of life.

² "An expression borrowed from weaving, the thread being the substance of the warp; the thrum, the small tuft beyond, where it is tied. Hence, metaphorically, the good and bad together." (Hare's "Glossy"). Cf "All mose hath hare and there little {talks, besides the low thrum" (Baon's Natural History.)

The, This passion , ^A and the death of a dear friend, would go near to make a man look sad. 290	A violent emotion
Hip. Beshrew' my heart, but I pity the man.	b cf. IL ii. 54
Pyr. O, wherefore, Nature, dUst thou lions frame,
Since lion vile hath here deflour'd my dear ?
Which is—no, no—which was the fairest dame,
That lived, that loved, that liked, that look'd with cheer. ^C	c cheerily
Come, tears, confound';	d destroy
Out, sword, and wound
The Pap' of Pyramus:	• breast
Ay, that left pap,
Where heart doth hop ¹ : [Stabs himself,	t beat
Thua die I, thus, thus, thus 1 301
Now am I dead;
Now am I fled ;
My soul is in the sky:
Tongue, lose thy light!
Moon, take thy flight ! [Exit Moonshine,
Now die, die, die, die, die. [Dies.
Dem. ¹ No die, but an ace, for him; for he is but one.
Lys. Less than an ace, man, for he is dead; he is nothing. 311
The. With the help of a surgeon, he might yet recover, and prove an ass.
Hip. How chance Moonshine is gone before This be comes back and finds her lover?
The. She will And him by starlight. Here she comes, and her passion ⁹ ends the play.	g See l.289 above
Re-enter THIBBB.
Hip. Methinks, she should not use a long one for such a Pyramus; I hope she will be brief.
Dem. A mote ' will turn the balance, which Pyramus, which Thisbe, is the better ; he for a man, God warrant us; she for a woman, God bless us. 323	h the smallest particle {of difference)

¹ A pun on 'dle.¹ The lowest point on 'die (sing. of dice), i.e. the • ons,' if called an sot. 'He if but one/ i.e. one ace (pronounoid ass), another pun,'

Lys. She hath spied him already with those sweet 8yes.

Dem. And thus she *means, videlicet*¹ ;—

This. Asleep, my love

What, dead, my dove?

O Pyramus, arise!

Speak, speak I Quite dumb ? 330

Dead, dead ? A tomb

Must cover thy sweet eyes,

These lily lips,

This cherry nose,

These yellow cowslip cheeks,

Are gone, are gone !

Lovers, make moan!

His eyes were green as leeks.

O Sisters Three¹

Come, come to me, 340

With hands as pale as milk ;

Lay them in gore,

Since you have *shore*¹

With shears his thread of silk.

Tongue, not a word:

Come, trusty sword;

Come, blade, my breast *imbrue*¹:

[Stabs herself.

And farewell, friends;

Thus Thisby ends:

Adieu, adieu, adieu. [Dies. 350

The. Moonshine and Lion are left to bury the dead.

Dem. Ay, and Wall too.

Bot. No, I assure you: the wall is down, that parted their fathers. Will it please you to see the epilogue, or to hear a *Bergomask*¹ dance between two of our oompany.

The. No epilogue, I pray you; for your play needs no excuse. Never exouse ; for when the players are all dead, there need none to be blamed.

*'exprestes hertelf. Videlicet
ieuud in the Classical sense = 'one may behold'*

*b The Fates, cf.
J. 286*

'shorn

d drench (with blood)

e a rustic dance

¹ Puck's speech at the end of this play is of the nature of an epilogue—different though it be from what Bottom's spilogue would have bftg,

Marry, if he that writ' it had played Pyramus, and hanged himself in Thisby's garter, it would have been a fine tragedy: and so it is, truly; and very notably' discharged. But come, your Bergomask: let your epilogue alone. [A dance.

The iron tongue of midnight hath told' twelve: 366
Lovers, to bed 'tis almost fairy time.

I fear we shall outsleep the coming morn,
As much as we this night have overwatch'd.

This palpable-gross' play hath well beguiled 370

The heavy gait of night. Sweet friends, to bed.

A fortnight hold we this solemnity'

In nightly revels and new jollity. [Exeunt.

Enter PUCK.

Puck. Now the hungry lion roars,

And the wolf behows' the moon;

Whilst the heavy ploughman snores,

All with weary task fordone.⁹

Now the wasted' brands do glow,

Whilst the screech-owl, screeching loud,

Puts the wretch, that lies in woe, 380

In remembrance of a shroud.

Now it is the time of night,

That the graves, ¹*all gaping wide*,

Every one lets forth his sprite,¹

In the church-way paths' to glide:

And we fairies, that do run

By the ²*triple* Hecate's team,

From the presence of the sun,

Following darkness like a dream,

Now are *frolic*¹; not a mouse

Shall disturb this hallow'd house: 390

I am sent with broom before,

To sweep the dust behind' the door.

a wrote

b excellently

c struck

d i.e. the gross-nest of which is obvious to all

e festivity

t howls at g overcome h spent

i spirit, ghost
k paths leading to the church

l an adjective

m sc. that lies

¹Cf. Hamlet III.ii:—

" 'Tis now the vary witching time of night
When churchyards yawn,

'Threefold, in allusion to her three-fold character—Lana Un heaven,
Pita' on north, and Hecats to the aether world.

Enter OBERON and TITANIA, with their Train.

Obe. Through the house give glimmering light,
By the dead and drowsy fire;
Every elf and fairy sprite
Hop as light as bird from brier:
And this ditty, after me,
Sing, and dance it trippingly.

Tita. First, retiearse' your song by rote, 400 a recite or repeat
To each word a warbling note:
Hand in hand, with fairy grace,
Will we sing, and bless this place.

[Song and dance.]

Obe. Now, until the break of day,
Through this house each fairy stray.
To the best bride-bed will we,
Which by us shall blessed be;
And the issue there create
Ever shall be fortunate.

80 shall all the couples three 410

Ever true in loving be;
And the blots' of Nature's hand
Shall not in their issue stand;
Never mole, hare-lip, nor scar,
Nor mark prodigious' such as are Despised in nativity, Shall upon their children be.

b such as are enumerated in lines 414-5.

c Portentotu

With this field-dew consecrate,^d

d sacred, blessed e way

Every fairy take his gait,^e

And each several chamber bless, 420

Through this palace, with sweet peace,

And the owner of it blest

Ever shall in safety rest

Trip away; make no stay;

Meet me all by break of day.

[Exeunt OBERON, TITANIA, and Train,

Puck. If we shadows' have offended,
Think but this, and all is mended,
That you have but slumbered here,
While these visions did appear.
And this weak and idle theme,

t'pku'et,m u. 349

430

No more yielding but a¹ dream,
 Gentles, do not reprehend:
 If you pardon, we will mend.
 And, as I'm an honest² Puck,
 If we have unearned luck^b
 Now to 'scape the serpent's tongue^c,
 We will make amends ere long;
 Else the Puck a liar call:
 So, good-night unto you all.
*Give me your hands^d if we be friends,
 And Robin shall restore^e amends.

440

[Exit

A yielding nothing more than

*b the undeservei good Luck
c being hissed*

d applaud me e make

¹ See Intro., p. xvii., on the title of the Play.

² Puck, pug and pouke are all general names for a fairy or goblin. (Cf. The Puck' in 1.438 below.)

SUPPLEMENTARY NOTES.

INTENDED PRINCIPALLY FOR SENIOR STUDENTS.

The play, as is apparent from the first few lines, is to be a story of love and marriage festivities. The poet, as usual, seems to plunge us at once in medias res. Really the first half of the first scene is of an Introductory character and enables us to understand the opening of the movement of the Action in the second half.

The scene is laid in Athens, but there is nothing in the play itself which suggests Athens, whilst innumerable allusions (to birds, flowers, customs, etc.), all point to the fact that Shakespeare had always in his mind English scenery and local customs with which he was familiar by association and experience.

2. Four happy days. The play contains several discrepancies, and this is one of them. We learn here that the marriage is to take place in four days. We shall see that it actually took place on the third day after the opening scene. The course of events is as follows. At line 164 of this scene the lovers arrange to meet "to-morrow night." They and the actors (cf. I. ii. 101), meet in the same wood on the same night. The action of Act II., and the greater part of Act III. takes place during the night of the second day (II. i. 18. 61, etc., III. i. 199, ii. 177, etc.), and the events of Act IV. Sc. i., happen in the early part of the third day, which we find (IV. i. 183-197), is also to be the wedding day of Theseus and Hippolyta. Act V, beholds the night of their solemnities, and the play ends almost immediately after "the iron tongue of midnight hath told twelve."

2. The moon, like to a silver bow. Here again there appears to be some inconsistency. The wedding is to take place at New Moon; but when the moon is new, that is when she is between the earth and the sun (or, in conjunction with the sun), she turns an unilluminated side to the earth (i.e. is invisible). In fact, "New Moon" is said to be nothing more nor less than a corruption of "no moon" (Elisha Noyce in The Marvels of Nature). And yet not only in this passage does the use of the expression "Silver bow" indicate a visible moon, but we read also in III. i. 55, that the moon "doth shine the night we play our play," i.e. on the night of the wedding. This, of course, might be set down to the ignorance of Quince and his fellow comedians, but we read also that on the same day "the wolf behowls the moon" (V. i. 875) at midnight, and that on the preceding day the moon "looks with a watery eye" (III. i. 199). These are difficulties which cannot be explained away.

It is interesting to note that the author of The Burial of Sir John Moore has fallen into precisely the same error. The poem tells us how the burial took place.

By the struggling; moonbeam's misty light.

The Nautical Almanac informs us that the moon was new on the 16th January, 1809, and was therefore hardly a day old when the hero was consigned to his grave. "But the moon in such a case," as Sir Robert Ball states, "is practically invisible, and yields no appreciable moonbeams at all, misty or otherwise. Indeed, if the funeral took place in the 'dead of night,' as the poet tells us it did, the moon must have been far below the horizon at the time."

16. I woo'd thee with my sword. Compare Chaucer's knight's Tale.

"What with his wisdom and his chevalrie,
he conquered all the regne of Feminie,
That whilom was yeleped Scythia;
And wedded the fresh queene Ipolita,
And brought hire home with him to his contres
With moche glorie and grete solempnitee."

20. Duke M.E. duk, O.F. duc, is of course an anachronism when applied to Theseus. In this Shakespeare has copied Chaucer, who frequently speaks of "duk Theseus."
41. The ancient privilege of Athens. It is generally stated that Shakespeare here anticipates the code of the great Athenian law-giver, Solon, who enacted a law that parents should have absolute power of life and death over their children. But as a matter of fact, all members of a family were at the absolute disposal of the father of the family, even before the legendary Theseus made Athens the seat of a central government. The state of Athens grew from the house or family upwards, and in the primitive Aryan states the master of each household was its priest and king.
70. Livery of a nun. The terms 'nun,' 'cloister,' 'sister,' 'pilgrimage/' belong properly to the age of Christianity, and are anachronisms when applied to persons or things belonging to a pagan era. But even in the pagan age the different gods and goddesses often had their votaries. Diana, as a virgin goddess was especially venerated by young maidens, whose patroness she remained till their marriage. The Roman Diana possessed a very ancient shrine on Mount Algidus, Tusculum (cf. line 89 of this scene).
74. Thrice-blessed they. This line and the next are often supposed to convey a compliment to Elizabeth, the virgin queen.
136. O cross! On these lines Coleridge remarks: "I can never help feeling how great an improvement it would be if the two former of Hermia's exclamations were omitted; the third and only appropriate one would then become a beauty, and most natural!"¹
167. To do observance to a morn of May. The following description, alluding to the mediaeval custom of commemorating the First of May, is quoted by Drake: "On the Calends, or the 1st day of May, commonly called May-day, the juvenile part of both sexes were wont to rise a little after midnight, and walk to some neighbouring wood, accompany'd with music, and the blowing of horns, where they break down branches from the trees, and adorn them with nosegays and crown' of flowers. When this is done, they return with their booty homewards, about the rising of the sun, and make their doors and windows to triumph in the flowery spoil. The after part of the day is chiefly spent in dancing round a tall pole, which is called a May Pole " (" Shakespeare and His Times," vol. I. 153). The expression "to do observance" occurs twice in Chaucer's Knight's Tale.

169. Cupid, Venus, etc. For the explanation of these and other classical allusions, see under Classical Names.
215. Faint primrose beds. The epithet 'faint' probably refers to the colour as we have explained it in the Marginal Notes. On the other hand it may refer to the odour of the flower, or it may be used proleptically, as Mr. Wright takes it; primrose-beds" on which those rest who are faint and weary."
232. Things base and vile. A notable instance of the truth of this statement is that of Titania's becoming "enamour'd of an ass."
- 235.- Cupid painted blind. Cupid (Greek, Eros), appears with wings in the art monuments of antiquity, but the notion of his blindness appears to be no more ancient than Chaucer. He was represented as a child by the later artists of the classical age because the mischievous pranks attributed to him by the poets were only adapted to the age of childhood.

ACT I. SCENE I I .

We now make the acquaintance of the comic characters of the play. They have themselves of course no idea that they are comic. On the contrary, they are exceedingly serious in all they undertake. This unconsciousness of their absurdity in the "hard-handed men of Atheiu" adds very much to the humour of the situation. We see the same thing very finely exemplified in Don Quixote. The scene is in prose, as are most of the comic scenes in Shakespeare. The use of this medium here brings out the contrast between these homely characters and the more dignified and poetical characters of the other scenes,

It Lamentable comedy. " The story of Pyramus and Thisbe was very familiar to an Elizabethan audience, not merely in translations of Ovid, but as having been told in prose and verse by numerous English writers of the sixteenth .century" (Halliwell-Phillipps). We have already mentioned some of the forms in which it appeared (p. xii.). It is also related in the Bok' of the Cyte of Ladies (1521), in the Gorgeous Gallery of Gallant inventions (1578), and in Silkwormes and their Flies (1599).

17. Nick Bottom. Nick is a diminutive form of (St.) Nicholas. It was also a very old name for the devil, who, after the Reformation, was scoffingly converted into a saint In profane ridicule of the popish saint, the patron of scholars,

30. Play Ercles. The Clarendon Press edition refers to a passage in Sidney's Arcadia: "With the voyoe of one that playeth Hercules in a play," and to Greene's Groatworth of Wit: "The twelve labors of Hercules have I terribly thundred on the stage," and suggests that the verses recited by Bottom may be a quotation from such a play.
81. To tear a cat. To rant, and behave with violence. A bullying rogue in Middleton's Roaring Girl, takes the name of Tear-cat. In Day's Isle of Gulls, Induction, we read, "I had rather hears two good jests than a whole play of such tear-cat thunder-claps." To make all split, a phrase expressing violence of action. Name quotes from Widow's Tears: "To prepare my next encounter, but in such a way as shall make all split"
43. The bellows-mender' Steevens says ha was one who had the care of organs, regals, etc. Ben Jonson's Masque of Pan's Anniversary has the following passage: "Only one splay foot in the company, and he is a bellows-mender, allowed, who hath the looking to all of their lungs by patent."
54. Thisne, Thisne. This probably conveys Bottom's idea of uttering the word Thisbe in a "monstrous little voice." In the next line he appears to have already partially forgotten that he is personating a woman and reverts to his own pronunciation of Thisby.
97. French crown. This might mean three things:—(1) The crown of a Frenchman's head; (2) A piece of French money; (3) The baldness produced by a disease supposed to be French. Shakespeare puns on the word again in Measure for Measure and in Henry V.
99. Entreat, request, desire. Notice that the words are used in a descending not (as Bottom no doubt intended them) in an ascending scale of emphasis.
111. Hold or cut bow-strings. A metaphor from archery. To out the bow-strings would of course render the bow useless and put the archer out of the game or contest

ACT II. SCENE I.

In this scene further complications arise, and, as we shall see, these complications proceed not so much from the actions or characters of the persons themselves, as is usually the case in Shakespeare's plays, but from external causes from the fairies. So far we have Lysander and Demetrius both in love with Hermia, who favours the former in opposition to the will of her father. Helena loves Demetrius, to whom she was once, betrothed, but who now looks upon her with scorn. Oberon, the powerful fairy king, determines to smoothe "the course of true love" for Helena, and sends his fac-totum Puck on a mission to effect this purpose. We shall see later how Puck makes a mistake and further complicates the situation. From this scene also we learn something of the nature and attributes of the fairies (for a full account of which see Introduction xxi.), and we find, that like the "human mortals," they too have their Jealousies and their quarrels.

7. Sphere. Johnson gives as one of the meanings of sphere, orb, circuit of motion, and quotes from Milton—

Half unsung, bat narrower bound
Within the visible diurnal sphere,

9. Orbs. The fairies after their moon-light dances were supposed to leave behind either a scorched, or a deep green ringlet, the scorched or barren rings being left by bad fairies, the fresh-looking green ones by good fairies. These "fairy rings" are now generally explained as being caused by a certain kind of fungus that grows in a circle, and when decayed causes a rich and greener growth of grass to appear on the same spot.

16. Lob, a lubber, or clown. Dr. Johnson says, in his note on this passage lob, lubber, looby, lobcock, all denote both inactivity of body and dulness of mind. Neither of these qualities, however, can be said to characterise Puck.

23. Ohangeling, Is here used for the human child stolen from the Indian king, not as it usually is, for the child substituted by the fairies. It used to be customary in the Highlands of Scotland to watch children until the christening was over, under the idea that the power of the fairies, owing to the original corruption of human nature, was chiefly to be dreaded in the interval between birth and baptism. "The cause assigned for this evil propensity on the part of the fairies, was the dreadful obligation they were under, of sacrificing the tenth individual every, or every seventh year" (DRAKE). Shakespeare, however, has altogether eliminated the terrific aspect from his system of fairies.

18. Gossip's bowl. Gossib, now corrupted to gossip, formerly meant a sponsor in baptism. Lit. "related in god"; M.E. god, god; sib, related. From the intimacy often subsisting between such persons, it came also to mean a familiar acquaintance, a crony. The ingredients of the "gossip's bowl" or "gossip's cup" were ale, nutmeg, sugar, toast and roasted crabs or apples.

55. "Tailor" cries. Halliwell thinks the expression is "one of contempt," equivalent to thie and quotes from Pasquill's Night Cap (1612):

Thieving is now an occupation made,
Though men the name tailor doe it give.

The quartos and folios have coffe and loff in this line and the next, thus showing the pronunciation which might be given to these words.

100. Steppe of India. It is sometimes thought that the steppe of the first Quarto was an error for steeps (the reading of the Second Quarto and the Folio), as it is doubtful whether the word steppe in the sense of a vast plain was known in Shakespeare's time.

89. Nine men's morris. This game of open air draughts was played by two men with twenty-four "counters" or stones which were arranged upon a diagram of three squares, one within the other, the figure being out on the turf. The players moved their pieces alternately, according to certain rules until the game was ended by one player having all his piece' oaken or impounded. Der. F. merelles or mereaux, counters.
100. Quaint mazes were complicated labyrinths which differed from the mazes (formed by a series of hedges) with which we are familiar in that the track to be followed was marked out upon the green turf. The green grass would form the border of the track and was never to be overstepped by those who ran the figure.
104. The moon. The influence of the moon over diseases bodily and intellectual, its virtue in all magical rites, and its power over the weather and over many of the minor concerns of life, were almost universally accredited in the sixteenth century.
151. Mermaid. For the various explanations given of the "Oberou's vision," see the Introduction pp. xxv-xxvi.
206. Spurn me. Cf. Julius Cæsar, I I I . i. 45:
If thou dost bend and pray and fawn for him,
I spurn thee like a ear oat of my way
218. Opportunity. Of. the familiar adage "Opportunity makes the thief."
233. The Griffin or Gryphon was a fabled animal which was supposed to combine the qualities of the king of beasts and the king of birds. Its head, fore-legs, and wings were those of an eagle, while the rest of its body resembled that of a lion. In England a large kind of eagle was sometimes called a gripe or griffin, and it may be in this sense that Shakespeare here uses the word, as he evidently does in 2 Henry IV. I I I . i. where he speaks of "a clip-winged griffin and a moulten-raven."
253. Musk-roses. The name of musk-rose was given in Shakespeare's time to a wild rose of a white colour and does not here refer to the pink-coloured species which is cultivated in gardens.

ACT I I . SCENE I I .

The scene is changed to that part of the wood to which Oberon referred in lines 250-6 of the foregoing scene. This beautiful spot in fairy-land is to be the scene of most of the important incidents of the play. Here Titania, Hermia and Lysander fall asleep; here Lysander awakes and falls in love with Helena; and in the same neighbourhood the Athenian tradesmen will perform their play (Act I I I . Scene I.), and Titania will awake to fall in love with Bottom.

80. Ounce, Felis uncia, a native of some parts of Asia. "Early explorers," says Phipson, "seem to have been somewhat puzzled by the different varieties of the leopard tribe, and this much-dreaded animal may have been the jaguar or puma."

104. Nature shows art. The Folios read "Nature here shews art, which Malone altered to " Nature shews her art."
114. Change a raven for a dove, i.e. change Hermia, who was of a dark complexion, for Helena, who was fair and of a gentler disposition.

ACT III. SCENE I.

This scone, occurring in the middle of the play, shares with the preceding the crisis of the plot. There Lysander was made to fall in love with Helena, thus giving rise to the first complication. Here Titania falls in love with Bottom and thus the fairy part of the play becomes interwoven with the rustic part. The "green plot" of lino 3 is in the same part of the wood as the "cradle of the fairy queen," which is "the bank whereon the wild thyme blows" of H. i. 250.

- 24, Eight and six. It will be seen that the prologue was eventually written in verses of 10 syllables (V. i. 108).
44. Let him name his name. Malone has suggested that Bottom may here allude to an incident which may have occurred in Shakespeare's time, and which is recorded in a collection entitled Merry Passages and Jests: "There was a spectacle presented to Queen Elizabeth upon the water, and among others Harry Goldingham was to represent Arion upon the Dolphin's back; but finding his voice to be very hoarse and unpleasant when he came to perform it, he tears off his disguise, and swears he was none of Arion, not ho, but even honest Goldenham; which blunt discovery pleased the queen better than if he had gone through even in the right way:—yet he could order his voice to an instrument exceedingly well."
63. Says the story. Of. Chaucer's Legende of Thisbe and Babylon.
This wal, which that betwixt hem both ystode,
Was cloven atwo, right fro the top adown.
Of olde time, of his foundation,
Bat yet this cleft was so narrow and lite.
It was nat seene, dere ynoagh a mite,
Bat what is that, that love cannot esple?
108. Sometime a horse I'll be. The Protean versatility of Robin Goodfellow was traditional. Cf. Robin Goodfellow, his Mad Pranks and Merry Jests;
"Thou hast the power to change thy shape
To horse, to hog, to dog, to ape."
162. Peaseblossom. The names of the fairy queen's attendants are expressive of their delicacy and beauty.
170. Glow-worm's eyes, Monck Mason writes:—"Surely a poet is justified in calling the luminous part of the glow-worm the eye: it is a liberty we take in plain prose; for the point of greatest brightness in a furnace is commonly called the eye of ft."

ACT III. SCENE XI.

The first forty lines of this scene make plain to us by repetition incidents which we have already witnessed; 40 to 93 serve to connect the story of the lovers with that of the fairies; 94 to 121 prepare for the further complications which have arisen owing to Puck's mistaking Lysander for Demetrius; the double complication arising from this error is fully set forth between 122 and 346; from this point to the end of the scene the story of the lovers again mingles with that of the fairies and the unravelling of the plot begins.

36. Latched. We have explained this in the margin to mean 'caught or entrapped,' thus connecting it with A.S. laccan, to seize, catch hold of, and with the modern 'latch,' a catch or fastening. Mr. Skeat, however, derives the word from A.S. leccan, to moisten, and connects it with the modern 'leak.' Others connect it with 'liok' and the F. lecher; G. lecken. Puck's reply to Oberon's question, 'I took him sleeping' seems to point to the first explanation as being the correct one.
54. So displease. The meaning seems to be, cause a displeasing sensation among the inhabitants of the other side of the globe at noontide (when the appearance of the moon would be most unwelcome).
71. Worm, adder, serpent, snake are used by Shakespeare as different names for the same thing, the harmless English snake.
97. That Costs. The idea was prevalent in Shakespeare's time that each sigh consumed a part of the blood of the signer. In II. Henry VI. the poet speaks of "blood-consuming sighs" and of "blood-drinking sighs." For the singular form see p. 101.
127. Badge of faith. This is said to be in allusion to the metal badges worn by the servants of the nobility, to denote the house or family to which they belonged.
213. Two of the first. Another explanation of this passage has been furnished by Mr. Monck Mason, who writes:—"Every branch of a family is called a house; and none but the first house can bear the arms of the family without some distinction; two of the first, therefore, means two coats of the first house, which are properly due but to one."
274. What news. This expression of somewhat uncertain meaning is explained by Schmidt as equivalent to 'What is the matter?' Amongst other passages given to illustrate this use of the expression are Othello I. ii.

The goodness of the night upon yon, friends!
 What is the news?
 and Merchant of Venice, I. ii. 128, 'How now! what news?' He also refers to I. 1. 21 of this play, 'What's the news with thee?' We must confess that we are not ourselves altogether satisfied with the explanation.

298. Painted maypole. R. Chambers' Book of Days contains several illustrations of the maypoles of ancient days. From the same source we take the following: "The fifth volume of Halliwell's folio edition of Shakespeare has a curious coloured frontispiece of a Maypole, painted in continuous vertical stripes of white, red, and blue, which stands in the centre of the village of Welford, in Gloucestershire, about five miles from Stratford-on-Avon. It may be an exact copy and legitimate successor of one standing there in the days when the bard himself visited the village. It is of great height, and is planted in the centre of a raised mound, to which there is an ascent by three stone steps: on this mound probably the dancers performed their gyrations."

381. Night's swift dragons. The chariot of the goddess Night is here represented as being drawn by a team of dragons or winged serpents, who were thought to be always awake, because they slept with their eyes open. Compare Cymbeline II. ii.

Swift, swift, you dragons of the night.

In classical writers Night's chariot was drawn by horses.

385. Crossways and floods. The practice of burying suicides on a public highway, with a stake through the body was legal until the fourth year of the reign of George IV. Those who 'in floods have burial' are those who commit suicide by drowning. The idea that the ghosts of those who did not receive proper burial were condemned to wander for a hundred years is classical (See Vergil Æneid VI. 829). Compare also Hamlet I. iv.

I am thy lather's spirit
Doom'd for a certain term to walk the night,
And for the day confined to fast In fire a,
Till the foul crimes done in my days of nature
Are burnt and purged away.

391. The morning's love. The reference here is to the handsome hunter Cephalus, who was said to be a son of Hermes. Cephalus was carried off by Aurora, who was unable to shake the fidelity of his wife Procris. Procris had hidden herself among the bushes, in order to watch her husband, when Cephalus, taking her for a wild animal, unwittingly killed her. This story is indirectly referred to in V. 1.199.

ACT IV. SCENE I.

This act performs the function usually assigned to the Fifth Act in Shakespeare's comedies. Here the general unrayelling of the various complications, which was begun in the last scene is completed. Titania and Bottom return to their own spheres of life; Demetrius reverts to his first love, Lysander and Hermia are as they were wont to be; Theseus and Hippolyta take their way to the temple of Hymen, and everything ends happily. The next Act, although lightly woven into the plot and though it brings together all the characters of the play, is nevertheless rather of the nature of an episode than an integral part of the play.

11. Red-hipped humble-bee. One species of 'humble bees' (the Bombus lapidarius) has the lower half of the abdomen bright red. It is perhaps of this that Shakespeare is thinking in this passage.
13. Honey-bag. The honey-bag of a bee is its first stomach which "from being very small, is swelled when full to a considerable size."
27. Good ear in music. Weavers were generally supposed to be musical and given to singing, more especially to psalm-singing.
74. Diana's bud. This is referred to by Chaucer in The Flower and the Leaf,
 That is Diane, goddesse of chastite,
 And for because that she a maiden is,
 In her hond the braunch she beareth this,
 That agnus castus men call properly.
107. My hounds. The Theseus of Chaucer was a great hunter. Compare:—
 This mene I now by mighty Theseus,
 That for to hunten is so desirous,
 And namely at the grete hart in May,
 That in his bed ther daweth (dawneih) him no day,
 That he n'is clad, and ready (or to ride)
 With hun te and borne, and ho un des him beside.
 And the poet proceeds to describe a day's hunting in company
 With his Ipolita, the fay re queue.
 Shakespeare appears to have had the poem in his memory when he composed this portion of the play.
118. Hercules and Cadmus. The name of Hercules is associated with that of Hippolyta in classical legend. For his ninth adventure the hero was commissioned by Eurystheus to demand the girdle of the queen of the Amazons. Plutarch relates that "some other hold opinion" that he accompanied Theseus in his expedition against the Amazons. Shakespeare's only apparent reason for mentioning Cadmus in this connection is that Cadmus was the mythical founder of Thebes, whilst Oreon, a later king of the same city is an important personage (slain by Theseus) in Chaucer's Knight's Tale.
114. A Wood of Crete. It was in Crete that Theseus slew the Minotaur, an exploit which, says Chaucer, was stamped in gold upon the duke's penon.
115. Hounds of Sparta. Spartan and Cretan hounds are both celebrated in Ovid's Metamorphoses.
124. Matched in mouth. Drake remarks in connection with this passage: "One great object at this period, in the construction of the kennel, was the modulation and harmony of the vocal powers of the dog. This was carried to a nicety and perfection little practised in the present day."
134. The rite of May. See the note on I. 1. 167.

141. To couple now. "There was," says Chambers, "a prevalent notion amongst the common people, that this was the day on which the birds selected their mates," and, "It was supposed that the first unmarried person of the other sex whom one met on St. Valentine's morning in walking abroad was a destined wife, or a destined husband."

ACT IV. SCENE II.

This scene serves to connect the final scene of the play with what has preceded.

20. Sixpence a day. Shakespeare is here supposed to make an allusion, which would probably be understood at the time, to some actor who had been pensioned by Queen Elizabeth. Steevens tells us that Preston, the author of Cambyses, received from the Queen a pension of rather more than a shilling a day, as an acknowledgment of the pleasure she had derived from the performance of the play of Dido, at King's College, Cambridge, in 1564.
35. The Duke hath dined. Notice that Bottom, the practical man, has been busy during the interval that has elapsed since he awoke from his virion.

ACT V. SCENE I.

As already noticed, the incidents of this Act are of the nature of an episode, or, they bear pretty much the same relation to the rest of the play as an anti-masque did to the main masque. The Interlude, like the anti-masques of Ben Jonson, is in some sense a parody of the principal theme of the play. As Gorvinus says: "The play of the respectable citizens of Pyramus and Thisbe forms to the tragic-comic point of the plot a oomio-tragic counterpart of two lovers, who, behind their parents' back 'think no scorn to woo by moonlight,' and through a more accident come to a tragic end."

14. The battle with the Centaurs. This probably refers to the battle of the Lapitheæ with the Centaurs in which Theseus fought on the side of the Lapitheæ. Pirithous, the The3salian king of the Lapithæ, invited the Centaurs to be present at his wedding with Hippodamia. In their drunkenness the Centaurs endeavoured to carry off the bride, and the contest that ensued ended in their complete defeat. Hercules, in some representations, figures as the opponent of the Centaurs, and Theseus in his modesty appears here (in lines 46'7) to attribute all the glory of the exploit to his kinsman.
49. The Thracian singer. Orpheus, not long after his unhappy visit to the lower world, whilst wandering over the Thracian mountains in despair at having for ever lost his beloved Eurydice, was torn in pieces by some women in the mad excitement of their nightly Bacchanalian orgies. Ovid tells the story in his Metamorphoses.

Cf. Milton's Lycidas.

When by the rout that made the hideous roar
His gory visage down the stream was sent,
Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian shore.

93. Great clerks. Karl Klze is of opinion that the play of A Midsummer Night's Dream was composed to celebrate the marriage of the Earl of Essex with the widow of Sir Philip Sidney, and considers "Theseus and Hippolyta as the representatives of the bridal couple itself." He holds that these lines literally apply to Essex, and that in the expression "great clerks," there is a special reference to George Peel who dedicated his 'Eclogue Gratulatory' to Essex upon his return from the Spanish campaign in 1589 (shortly before his marriage). It is more probable, however, that these lines contain an allusion to the addresses that were made to welcome Queen Elizabeth whenever she paid a visit to either Oxford or Cambridge.

108. Prologue. The correct punctuation of these lines would be as follows:

If we offend, It le with our good will
That you should think we come not to offend;
But with goodwill to show our simple skill;
That is the true beginning of our end.
Consider then. We come, but in despite
We do not come. As minding to content you,
Our true intent is all for your delight.
We are not here that you should here repent you.
The actors are at hand; and by their show
You shall know all that you are like to know.

128. This man is Pyramus. Golding's translation has—
The name of him was Pyramus, and Thisbe call'd was she.
In Chaucer's poem on the same subject we read—
This yonge man was cleped Piramas, Thisbe night the maido (Naao saith thus).

No doubt Shakespeare had read the story both in Golding's Translation of Ovid's Metamorphoses, and in Chaucer's Legende of Tisbe of Babylon. The resemblances between Shakespeare's play and the Translation are, however, closer than those between the play and the Legend. In the Translation mention is made of "a fair high mulberry"; in the poem it is only "under a tree" that the lovers meet. In the Translation Thisbe "let her mantle fall"; in the poem the cloak is always called a "wimple." On the other hand, in Chaucer, the wall is the "cold wall," and "thou wicketed wail," and there is a reference to "thy lime and eke thy Stone"; in the Translation the "spiteful wall" is made "of brick." In both Golding and Chaucer the 'lion' is a 'lioness.'

185. Lanthorn, dog, and bush of thorn. It is a very old popular notion that the Man in the Moon if the man referred to in the book of Numbers (xv. 32 et seq.) as having been detected by the children of Israel in the wilderness, in the act of gathering sticks on the Sabbath day, and whom the Lord directed to be stoned to death without the camp. So he appears in the moon with his burden of sticks upon his back, continually climbing up that shining height with his little dog before him, but never getting a step higher Chaucer refers to him—

Bearing a bush of thorns on his backe,

Which for his theft might clime so no'r the hoaren;

and Dante makes a reference to him in his Inferno, but with & variation upon the popular English idea, in as far as he calls him Cain.

But now come on, for hastens to his home

Cain with his thorns (Inferno xx. 124), upon which Plumptre remarks, "The dark spots on the moon . . . were in the Middle Age legends of Italy, the image of Cain holding a burning bush, and condemned, as in Gen. iv. 12, to perpetual wandering."

150. Lion, Moonshine, Wall, and lovers twain. In Act I. Scene I I. we learnt that Starveling was to "play Thisby's mother," Snout, "Pyramus' father," Quince "Thisby's father." Quince has evidently revised and re-cast the play since the first rehearsal.
197. Limander. For the story of Hero and Leander, see Classical Names, and for that of Cephalus and Procris, see the note on 111. ii. 391.
224. A lion fell. The text here seems to be corrupt. Snug wishes to tell the audience that he is not really a lion, but the required negative is missing in the quartos and folios. Some editors print "No lion fell," others place a hyphen between lion and fell in which case "I . . . am a lion-fell" would mean "I am (only) a lion's skin." Snug is here carrying out Bottom's suggestion of I I I. i. 36-46.
293. Deflour'd properly means ravished. The word is here misapplied by Bottom, who may have intended to say 'devoured.'
366. Bergomask. A rustic dance framed in Imitation of the people of Bergamo (a province in the state of Venice), who are ridiculed as being more clownish in their manners and dialect than any other people in Italy. All the Italian buffoons imitate them.
- 358' Epilogue. Shakespeare uses an Epilogue in The Tempest, As You Like It, All's Well That Ends Well, II. Henry IV., Henry V., Henry VIII., and (in effect though not in name) in A Midsummer Night's Dream,
374. Now the hungry lions roar. Of these verses Coleridge says: "Very Anacreon in perfectness, proportion, grace, and spontaneity. So far it is Greek; but then add, O! what wealth, what wild ranging, and yet what compression and condensation of English fancy. In truth there is nothing in Anacreon more perfect than these thirty lines, or half so rich and imaginative. They form a spookiest diamond."
892. Sent with broom before. Not only in this passage does Shakespeare dwell particularly on the attention of the fairies to cleanliness; • In the Merry Wives of Windsor (V. v.) and in Romeo and Juliet (I. iv.) he refers to their love of cleanliness and hatred of "sluts and sluttish."
406. To the best bride-bed. It was still customary in Shakespeare's time to bless the bridal bed at night, in order to dissipate the supposed

SHAKESPEARIAN GRAMMAR ILLUSTRATED FROM THE PLAY.

It is almost superfluous to express my obligation to Dr. Abbott whose Shakespearian Grammar has proved so great a boon to modern editors.

ADJECTIVES, USE OF.

Adjectives used as Adverbs

Adverbs are by origin forms of declension, cases of substantives, adjectives, or pronouns. In Early English an adverb was commonly distinguished from the adjective from which it was derived by the addition of a suffix e (the dative ending). This suffix, in common with others, was gradually dropped, and the simple form of the adjective came thus to do duty for the adverb. We still use many adjectives adverbially, even when we have a corresponding adverb, e.g. quick, slow, nice, etc.

- I. i. 3. How slow this old moon wanes! = slowly.
- I. i. 76. Earthlier happy is the rose distill'd = in an earthly sense.
- I. i. 134. The course of true love never did run smooth = smoothly.
- I. i. 149. So quick bright things come to confusion = quickly.
- I. ii. 24. A lover that kills himself most gallant for love = gallantly.
- I. il. 51. You may speak as small as you will = in as small a tone.
- II. i. 200. Do I speak you fair ? = kindly, gently.
- II. ii. 74. And here the maiden, sleeping sound = soundly; so also in III. ii. 451.
- III. 1. 2. A marvellous convenient place = marvellously; so in IV. i. 451.
- III. ii. 175. Lest, to thy peril, thou aby it dear = pay dearly for it.
- III. ii. 316. And now, so you will let me quiet go = quietly.
- III. ii. 405. I will be with thee straight ' straightway; so in IV. i. 61.
- V. i. 10. The lover, all as frantic, Sees Helen's beauty . . . = altogether, quite,
- V. i. 22. How easy is a bush supposed a bear = easily.
- V. i. 58. The death Of Learning, late deceased in beggary — lately.
- V. i. 59. Hot ice and wondrous strange snow = wonderfully.
- V. i. 117. You shall know all that you are like to know = likely,
- V. i. 129. This beauteous lady Thisbe is certain = certainly or for certain.
- V. i. 370. This palpable gross play - palpably.
- V. i. 397. Hop as liht as bird from brier = lightly.

Adjectives used as Nouns,

- I. i. 181. Call you me fair? that fair again unsay.

Demetrius loves your fair: O happy fair.

Shakespeare has here allowed himself to be carried away from grammatical correctness by an opportunity of indulging in a verbal quibble. It is worthy of notice that he frequently makes his characters perpetrate puns when under the influence of strong emotion. The first fair = 'word fair,' the second = 'fairness' or 'beauty,' the third = 'fair one.'

- II. i. 20. Por Oberon is passing fell and wrath = 'wroth, but written 'wrath' in order to rhyme with 'hath.'

- II. i. 118. We are their parents and original = originators.

- II. i. 141. If you will patiently dance in cur round = round dance.
Cf. III. i. 106.

- II. ii. 88. When thou wakest, it is thy dear = dear one, lover. Of. 1. 43, and III. ii. 158.

- III. ii. 9. A crew of patches, rude mechanicals.

- III. ii. 48. Plunge in the deep = depth (as it often does at the present time).

- III. ii. 68. O, once tell true, tell true, even for my sake t = true things, the truth.

- V. i. 87. Why, gentle sweet, you shall see no such thing = sweet one.

- V. i. 126. Gentles, perchance you wonder at this show = gentle folk; and in

- V. i. 207. Now is the mural down = wall. Pope's emendation of 'morall.'

Usual Forms or Significations.

Adjectives ending in -ble have in Elizabethan English both an active and a passive meaning. Thus:—

- IV. i. 2. I thy amiable cheeks do coy = lovable. The word is now used only of persons.

- IV. i. 125. A cry more tuneable was never holla'd to = tuneful.

Artificial has an active meaning in—

- III. ii. 203. We, Hermia, like two artificial gods = exercising our power in the realms of art.

Afeard is used for 'afraid' (a- is a corruption of the A.S. intensive of) in

- II. i. 112. This is a knavery of them to make me afeard.

Only is used where we should now use 'alone,' in

- IV. i. 171. The object and the pleasure of mine eye. Is only Helena.
Or, we should transpose the word and say 'The only object,' etc.

Double Comparatives.

The comparative ending sometimes received the addition of more in order to give greater emphasis. We still use the double Comparatives nearer, and (more rarely) lesser.

- II. i. 209. What worser place can I beg in your love.

- II. ii. 89. The more my prayer, the lesser is my grace

- III. i. 20. For the more better assurance.

ADVERBS.

Formed from Nouns.

Adverbs are, in the earliest stage of a language as well as in the latest, forms of declension, cases of substantives, adjectives or pronouns.

- I. ii. 88. You must needs play Pyramus. Needs = of necessity the -s being a Genitive Case ending. (Of. of force in III. ii. 40). So it is in alway-s, sideway-s, on-ce, etc., and in:
- III. ii. 376. Whiles I in this affair do thee employ.
- V. i. 59. Wondrous strange snow. Wondrous is a corruption of wonder-a, retaining the genitive suffix s. In this way we must probably explain:
- IV. i. 42. Fairies be gone, and be all ways away. Here there appears to be a confusion of constructions. Cf. the expression in the Prayer-book, "Anyways afflicted or distressed."
- III. ii. 425. Thou runn'st before me, shifting every place. An adverb formed from an accusative case, now called the adverbial objective. Cf. no way, yesterday and .
- IV. i. 89. Will to-morrow midnight solemnly dance

Formed from Pronouns.

The adverbs where, whither, whence, when, how, why are all formed from the relative pronoun (stem who), the adverbs there, thither, thence, then, thus, the are formed from the demonstrative the, the adverbs here, hither, hence from the demonstrative he. These adverbs are all still in common use. Illustrations will be found everywhere in the play. The use of what is peculiar in:

- III. ii. 273. What can you do me greater harm than hate, where it may be an adverb = how, or it may be merely a case of transposition = what greater harm, etc.

Double Negative.

This irregularity, like those of double comparatives and double superlatives, may be explained by the desire of emphasis which suggests repetition. In French the double negative ne . . . pas. ne . . . point has become the rule, not the exception, owing to a similar desire to strengthen the expression.

- I. i. 202. I do not, nor I cannot, love you. We should say "and I cannot."
- II. ii. 28. Worm nor snail, do no offence. We should use "any offence."
- II. ii. 126. I did never, no, nor never can. For "nor ever can."
- III. i. x49. Not so, neither. For "not so either."⁹
- III. ii. 135. Nor none, in my mind. For "nor any."
- IV. i. 126. Was never holla'd to, nor cheer'd with horn In Crete, in Sparta, nor in Thessaly. For "or in."
- V. I 224. (Neither) A Hon fell, nor else no lion's dam, For "any Hos's."

Transposition of Adverbs.

The modern rule with respect to the position of adverbs is, that in general, they should be placed as near as possible to the word qualified. Elizabethan authors allowed themselves considerable licence in this respect.

- I. i. 36. With cunning hast thou fished my daughter's heart.
Here the adverbial phrase is placed first for the sake of emphasis. In such cases the pronoun (or subject) usually follows the verb as here. The order of the other words, however, is not influenced in—
- I. i. 57. Bather your eyes must with his judgment look. Or in
- I. i. 126. Of something nearly that concerns yourselves.
- III. i. 37. Bootless make the breathless housewife churn. For "bootless churn."
- III. ii. 354. So far am I glad it so did sort. For "I am so far glad."

Sometime for sometimes.

According to modern usage sometime = formerly, sometimes = occasionally. Shakespeare seems to use either word indifferently.

- II. i. 38. Sometime make the drink to bear no barm.
- II. i. 53. Sometime for three-foot stool mistaketh me.
- II. i. 254. There sleeps Titania sometime of the night = sometimes during.
- III. ii. 362. Like to Lysander sometime frame thy tongue.
- III. ii. 364. And sometime rail thou like Demetrius.

ARTICLES.

Omission of the Article.

In modern English there are many stock phrases (principally adverbial) in which no article is used, e.g. leave school, shake hands, at sea, at home, by day, in court, for love, over head and ears, etc. In Elizabethan English a (since it was then hardly distinguishable from the numeral "one") was more emphatic than with us, and was consequently more often omitted when no emphasis was required.

- I. i. 184. More tuneable than lark to shepherd's ear.
- II. i. 53. Sometime for three-foot stool mistaketh me

The definite article is omitted in:

- II. i. 47. Neighing in likeness of a filly foal.
- II. i. 49. In very likeness of a roasted crab.
- II. i. 201. Do I not in plainest truth tell you.
- III. ii. 84. For debt that bankrupt sleep doth sorrow owe.
- III. ii. 104. Sink in apple of his eye.

Omitted in Archaic poetry.

A, an and the did not come into general use in our language as Articles until the Middle period of English. Hence poets who affected an ancient style, as for instance Spenser, frequently omitted them.

Shakespeare ridicule' this practice in his parody of Pyramus and Thisbe.

- V. i. 143. Which lion vile with bloody mouth did slain.
- V. i. 146. Whereat with blade, with bloody blameful blade.
- V. i. 148. And Thisby tarrying in midberry shade.
- V. i. 222. When lion rough in wildest rage doth roar.
- V. i. 225. For if I should at lion come in strife.

CONJUNCTIONS.

Omission of '«that.'

That is frequently omitted by Shakespeare before a subjunctive mood. This construction we should in Latin call a Quasi-dependent subjunctive or Oblique Jussive. Cf. Omnia fecerit oportet = He must have done everything (Cic). Cavepotes " Don't fancy.

- II. i. 19. Take heed the queen come not within his sight.
- II. i. 268. And look thou meet me ore the first cock crow.
- III. ii. 95. Helena of Athens look thou find. Notice also the inversion here.
- III. ii. 98. By some illusion see thou bring her here.
- III. ii. 865. And from each other look thou lead them thus. Here again note the inversion in the order of the words.

Against is used as a conjunction expressing time in—

- III. ii. 99. I'll charm his eyes against he do appear, ie. against the time that he do appear. This use of against is not now allowed even colloquially.

An is a contraaction of and, which in the Northern dialect of English meant "if."

- I. ii. 52. An I may hide my face, let me play Thisby too.
- I. ii. 75. An you should do it too terribly you would fright the duchess.
- IV. ii. 21. An the duke had not given him sixpence a day . . . I'll he hanged.
- V. i. 193. To spy an I can hear my Thisby's face.

An if is a reduplication — if if. This doubling of the conjunction is due to the same tendency which introduced the double comparative and the double negative. Cf. But and if that evil servant shall say (Matt. xxiv. 48).

- II. ii. 158. Alack I where are you? speak, an if you hear.
- III. ii. 78. An if I could, what should I get therefore?

An 'twere.

- I. ii. 88. I will roar you an 'twere any nightingale.

On this line Abbott says: "Some ellipsis is probably to be understood. 'I will roar you, and if it were a nightingale (I would still roar better),' and compares the use of "ac," "atque" in Latin after "similis," "paritar," etc,

" As " with the Subjunctive is equivalent in Shakespeare to " as if."

I I. i. 90' The winds . . . as in revenge = as if they were acting in revenge.

I I. i. 111. An odorous chaplet. . . is, as in mockery, set = as if it were done in mockery.

I L i. 135. Return again, As from a voyage = as if she were returning.

I I. i. 160. Loosed his love-shaft. . . As it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts = As if it should pierce.

I I I. ii. 260. Take on. as you would follow = Be furious, as you would be if you wished to follow.

" As "for " that" is used after " so " in:

I I I. ii. 854-5. And so far am I glad it so did sort.

As this their jangling I esteem a sport,

I I I. ii. 360-1. And load these testy rivals so astray
As one come not within another's way.

Because, that and because that are used indifferently, and in the same sense.

I L i. 21. Because that she as her attendant hath

A lovely boy, stolen from an Indian king.

In the same way " if that " is used for " if " in I, ii. 79

But is used for " that not" in

I L i. 238. Do not believe But I shall do thee mischief in the wood.

This use of " but" as a subordinative conjunction has arisen from the omission of the conjunction " that." If " that" were expressed, "but" would retain its original character as a preposition signifying "except," and the Noun-clause following it would be its object.

" Since" for " when" is used by Shakespeare after verbs denoting recollection.

I L i. 149. Thou rememberest Since once I sat upon a promontory.

" That" for "so that" So before that is very frequently omitted, file sense of the passage being always sufficiently clear without the adverb.

I. ii: 78. I will roar, that I will make the duke say, etc.

I. ii. 76. You would fright the duchess and the ladies that they would shriek.

I I. 1. 30. They do square, that all their elves. . . Creep into acorn cups.

I I. 1.105. The moon . . . washes all the air, That rheumatic diseases do abound.

I I I. 1.128. I will sing, that they shall hear I am not afraid.

I I I. ii. 40. That when he waked, of force she must be eyed.

I I I. ii. 417. I follow'd fast, but faster he did fly;
That fallen am I in rough uneven way.

NOUNS.

Abstract Nouns used in the Plural.

We do not often use abstract nouns in the plural; but Shakespeare often does to express (1) the persons possessing the quality, or (2) the things to which the action, state, or quality belongs,

- I. i. 48. One that composed your beauties.
 I I. i. 18. In those freckles live their savours.
 I I I. ii. 292. She hath made compare between our statures,
 I I I. ii. 388. For fear lest day should look their shames upon.
 V. i. 97. Throttle their practised accent in their fears.

" The conversion of Abstract nouns to concrete is due to the fact that it is much easier to think of some person or thing, than to think of an abstract quality apart from any person or thing. Hence we are naturally disposed to transfer the name of the quality to the name of the person or thing possessing the quality " (NESFIELD). In the following examples Shakespeare uses the Abstract term whilst thinking of the persons possessing the quality referred to.

Abstract for Concrete.

- I I. i. 235. When cowardice pursues and valour flies.
 I I I. ii. 123. Scorn and derision never come in tears.
 I V. i. 4. And kiss thy fair large ears, my gentle joy.
 V. i. 83. When simpleness and duty tender it.
 V. i. 103. The rattling tongue of saucy and audacious eloquence.

Irregular forms of Nouns.

- I. i. 125. I must employ you in some business.
 Against our nuptial.
 I. i. 242. For ere Demetrius look'd on Hermia's eyne.
 I I. ii. 99. Made me compare with Hermia's sphery eyne.
 I I I. ii. 188. To what, my love, shall I compare thine eyne.

This old mode of forming the plural has survived in four words—oxen, children, brethren, kine. NOTE.—The n in swine is not a plural ending Nominative Absolute.

Most languages have an absolute use of a case. In Latin it is the ablative, in Greek the genitive, and in Anglo-Saxon it was the dative. When the dative inflection was dropped, this looked like the nominative, and is now regarded as the nominative. AB in Latin, the participle is often omitted in this construction.

- I. i. 190. Were the world mine Demetrius being bated
 I I. ii. 119. I . . . touching now the point of human skill.
 I I I. ii. 92. Then fate o'er-rules, that, one man holding troth, a million fail.
 I I I. ii. 124. Vows so born, in their nativity all truth appears.
 I V. i. 67. That, he awaking when the other do.
 (They) may all to Athens back again repair.
 V. i. 21. Or in the night, imagining some fear,
 How easy is a bush supposed a bear?

When no noun or pronoun is expressed; as in the last example, the Participle is called an Impersonal Absolute.

Noun as Adjective.

Proper nouns are easily regarded as adjectives, and Shakespeare extends the use to common nouns. We still do this with the names of towns, and in many stock phrases such as a cottage garden, a villa residence, the park gates, where the two words form a kind of compound noun. Of "a Birmingham sword," " Dresden China." And in French any noun can be made into an adjective by prefixing de, e.g. vins de France = French wines.

- I. i. 77. Withering on the virgin thorn. Cf. also I. i. 80.
- I, i. 173. By that fire which burn'd the Carthage queen.
- I. ii. 101. Meet me in the palace wood.
- II. i. 165. In maiden meditation, fancy-free.
- III. ii. 202. All school-days' friendship, childhood innocence.
- IV. i. 148. I shall reply amazedly, half sleep, half waking.
- V. i. 333. These lily lips.
- This chert y nose,
These yellow cowslip cheeks.

Notm as Verb.

We usually make short nouns and adjectives into verbs by the addition of en. But in Elizabethan English the tendency was to drop such suffixes. And at the present day also we often form verbs, without any suffix, from nouns and adjectives. Cf. to train to a place, to bicycle, to black boots.

- I. i. 98. All my right of her I do estate unto Demetrius.
- I' i. 211. Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass.
- II. 1, 9. To dew her orbs upon the green.
- II. i. 68. Playing on pipes of corn and versing love.
- III. ii. 215. Will you rent our ancient love asunder.
- IV. i. 121. So flew'd, so sanded » Having mohfleios or chaps,
- V. i. 270. Well moused, Lion.

So also figure, I. i. 237; buskin'd, II. i. 72; throned, II. i. 159; eye. III. ii. 20 and 40; rounded, IV. i. 52; bodies, V. i. 14.

PREPOSITIONS.

Prepositions frequently interchanged.

Perhaps what we are most struck with in Elizabethan English is the apparently loose use of prepositions. The reason of these apparent irregularities is that, owing chiefly to the influence of printing and a desire for uniformity, the functions of Prepositions have become narrowed. They are now used idiomatically, rather than with reference either to their origin or real meaning. Thus we say he died of fever, but always sick with fever, where of and with are both used in the sense of cause.

- ' I. i. 22C. How happy some o'er other some = as compared with others.
- I, ii. 9. Say what the play treats on = of.
- IX i. 255. Lull'd in these flower' with dances and delight = hy.
- II. ii, 87. Stay, on thy peril = at

- I I . ii. 133. 0 that a lady of one man refused — by. So in 134 and 142.
 III. i. 139. So is -mine eye enthralled to thy shape = by.
 III. ii. 27. Lost with their fears thus strong = through, or owing to.
 III. ii. 83. In that moment = at.
 III. ii. 59. Pierced through the heart with your stern cruelty ' by.
 III. ii. 142. FamVd with the eastern wind = ' by.
 IV. i. 132. I wonder of their being here together = at.
 V. i. 31. More than to us wait in your royal walks = attend on.

Prepositions omitted. Prepositions are frequently omitted after verbs of motion and occasionally after other words. We still generally omit " to " after " give," but we could not write

- I. i. 81. Unto his lordship, (to) whose unwished yoke
 My soul consents not to give sovereignty.
 I I I . ii. 160. Extort, a poor soul's patience, all to make you sport » for yourselves.

Prepositions transposed.

- I I . ii. 18. Corae our lovely lady nigh.
 I I I . ii. 387. For fear lest day should look their shames upon,

PRONOUNS.

Personal.

His for its. Its is a modern word, occurring rarely in Shakespeare, at the beginning of the 17th century, and frequently in Dryden at the end of it. It appears once in the Authorised Version of the Bible (Levit. xxv. 5) as it is now printed, but not at all in the original edition of 1611. His was formerly the genitive case of both he and it. Cf. If the salt have lost his savour.

- I I . i. 94. The ox hath therefore stretch'd his yoke in vain.
 I I . i. 96. The green corn hath rotted ere his youth attain'd a beard.
 I I . ii. 81. Let love forbid sleep his seat on thy eyelid.
 I I I . ii. 87. If for his (sleep's) tender here I make some stay.
 I I I . ii. 177. Dark night that from the eye his function takes.
 I I I . ii. 370. To take from thence all error with hū might, i.e. by its (the liquor's) power.
 V. 1. 86. I love not to see . . . duty in his service perishing.

Personal Pronoun used Reflectively. Me, thee, him, etc., are often used in Elizabethan, and still more often in Early English, for myself, thyself, etc. Self was originally an adjective, as it still is in " self-same hour" and was declined with the preceding pronoun; thus we could say, I self, mine self (= of me self), etc. In later English " self " came to be used also as a noun and was qualified by the Possessive pronouns of the 1st and 2nd person. With the third person, however, it retains its function as an adjective: he hurt himself,

- XX. 1. 81. Creep into acorn cups and hide them there.
 U. i. 228. I'll run from thee and hide me in the brakeen.

- II. ii. 37. We'll rest us, Hermia, if you think it good. Of. also
 , III. ii. 420, 448.
 * III. i. 146. Will not make them friends.
 III. ii. 161. All to make you sport = for yourselves.
 IV. i. 1. Come, ait thee down, for "sit down," or set thyself down. This expression is still in use as a vulgarity.
 IV. i. 151. And now I do bethink me, so it is.
 V. i. 115. That you should here repent you.

In the last two examples we may notice the Elizabethan preference for transitive verbs, which caused many verbs which are now used intransitively to be used by Shakespeare reflexively.

Dative of Interest, Ethic Dative.

The Ethic Dative calls attention to a person, not the subject, interested in an action.

- I. ii. 82-8. I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 'twere any nightingale. You = for you, or for your edification.

Closely corresponding with this use of the dative of the personal pronoun, the possessive case is also, used colloquially to appropriate an object to a person addressed.

- I. ii. 93. I will discharge it in either your straw-colour beard, your orange-tawny beard, your purple-in-grain beard, etc.
 I. ii. 97. Some of your French crowns have no hair at all «' those French crowns that you talk of.
 III. i. 32. There is not a more fearful wild-fowl than your Hon living, i.e., the lion that you are going to represent, III. ii. 18. And forth my mimic comes, Le. the mimic on whom I played my trick.
 IV. i. 32. I could munch your good dry oats. The your here shows the vulgarity of Bottom's speech as contrasted with that of Titania.

Relative Pronouns.

The Omission of the Relative is common in Shakespeare, especially where the antecedent clause is emphatic and evidently incomplete. Modern usage confines the omission mostly to the objective, but in Shakespeare either case is omitted. The Nominative Case is omitted in

- II. iii. 73. This is he Despised the Athenian maid.

The Objective Case is frequently omitted. A few examples are:—

- I. i. 177. In that same place thou hast appointed me.
 II. ii. 79. All the power this charm doth owe.
 II. ii. 140. Are hated most of those they did deceive.
 III ii. 227. Wherefore speaks he this to her he hates?
 V. i. 1. 'Tis strange, my Theseus, that these lovers speak of.

"Who" with inanimate Antecedent is now rarely used except in prose.

- HI. ii, 308. This herb. . . Whose liquor hath this virtuous property.
 XIX. ii. 376. With league whose date till death shall never end.

" Which " for " who." In Shakespearian English which was commonly used relating to persons: Cf. Our Father which art in heaven.

I. il. 6. Here is the scroll of every man's name which is thought fit.

V. i. 78. Hard-handed men . . . Which never labour'd in their minds.

The Which. The use of " the " before which may be compared with the French le quel.

V. i. 131. At the which let no man wonder.

Other Irregularities.

I. i. 103. And, which is more than all those boasts can be,
I am beloved of beauteous Hermia.

Here the antecedent of which is " I am beloved," etc., which follows it. We should now say " what is more," etc.

V. i. 68. Which when T saw rehearsed . . . Made mine eyes water.

Here which is really the subject of " made," but owing to the omission of the pronoun it apparently does duty also as the object of " rehearsed."

V. i. 321. A mote will turn the balance, which Pyramus, which Thisbe, is the better.

Here which . . . which has been confused with whether . . . or, the confusion being due probably to the fact that "whether" was once a pronoun. Cf. Whether of them twain did the will of his father?

VERBS.

Archaic Participial Forme.

Originally strong past participles ended in -en, but in Elizabethan English there was a great tendency to drop the suffix, both in the infinitive and in the participle, and so we get many shortened forms of the participle. When the shortened form was in danger of being confused with the infinitive, as in " mistaken," the past tense was often used for the participle.

I. i. 112. With Demetrius thought to have spoke thereof. Also in I. i. 176.

I. i. 175. By all the vows that ever men have broke. Cf. also V. i. 98.

IL ii. 86. I have forgot our way. And in I I I. ii. 201; V. i. 173.

III. ii. 112. And the youth mistook by me.

III. ii. 208. As if our hands, our sides . . . had been incorporate.

IV. i. 16. To have you over-flown with a honey-bag.

V. i. 119. He hath rid his prologue like a rough colt.

V. i. 139. This grisly beast, which Lion hight by name. This verb) now almost obsolete, is the only passive verb found in English; he hight = he was named.

V. i. 84% Since you have shore with shears his thread of silk,

V. i. 408. And the issue there create.

V. i. 418. With this field-dew consecrate,

" Be " is used for " are " in

- I I . i. 10. The cowslips tall her pensioners be.
- I I . i. 12. Those be rubies, fairy favours.
- I I I . ii. 115. Lord, what fools these mortals be.
- I V . i. 87. Boek the ground whereon these sleepers be.

In most cases be occurs at the end of a line and may have been used for the sake of rhyme or euphony. Dr. Abbott says " Be " is also used to refer to a number of persons, considered not individually, but as a kind or class. This be was in Tudor English bin, in A.S. beo-th, and is a form of the Present Indicative, not Subjunctive.

" Be " is used for " have " as an auxiliary of intransitive verbs. This is due to the fact that intransitive verbs express a state rather than an action. This use of " to be " is most common in the case of verba of motion. The distinction is much the same as between " the flower has faded " and " the flower is faded."

- I I I . i. 1. Are we all met. And see I I I . ii. 11; I V . i. 178.
- I I I . ii. 407. Thou runaway, thou coward, art thou fled t
- I I I . ii. 419. Fallen am I in dark uneven way.
- I V . ii. 1. Is he come homo yet?
- V . i. 303. Now am I fled.
- V . i. 314. How chance Moonshine is gone.

Gerundial Infinitive.

The Dative or Gerundial Infinitive is often used by Shakespuare for the Gerund. In Old-English the prep. " to " was prefixed to the gerund before it was prefixed to the infinitive, and hence arose the frequent use of the present infinitive form for the gerund.

- I I . i. 155. Certain stars shot madly from their spheres,
To hear the sea-maid's' music.
' at, or, ou hearing.
- I I . i. 216. You do Impeach your modesty too much.
To leave the city and commit To trust, etc.
= by leaving, and committing and entrusting.
- I I . i. 245. Make a heaven of hell, To die upon the hand I love.
- I I . ii. 180. You do me wrong . . . : In such disdainful manner me to woo= in wooing me. Notice also the inversion of the order of the words.
- I I I . ii. 234. But miserable most to love unloved.

Intransitive Verbs used Transitivity.

Verbs which are now intransitive are sometimes used transitively, perhaps because in Latin the impersonal verb was used with a personal object. e.g. they said, we pudet = it shames me, when we say " I am ashamed." We can still use a few intransitive verbs in a causal sense, e.g. He ran a thorn into his hand.

- I . i. 4. She lingers my desires.
- I . i. 172. That which knitteth souls and prosper' loves = cause' to prosper.

- I. 1. 208. Lysander and myself will fly this place. Of. II. i. 247;
 II. ii. 97.
 II. i. 236. I will not stay thy questions Of. also V. i. 255.
 III. ii. 424. Abide me if thou darest.
 III. ii. 434. Abate thy hours: shine comforts from the east = cause to shine.
 V. i. 74. Now have toil'd their unbreathed memories.
 V. i. 142. As she fled, her mantle she did fall ' cause to fall.
 ' May ' for ' Can, ' ' Might ' for ' Could. '

The original sense oimay (A.S. mæg = I am able) and might is seen in

- I. i. 63. The worst that may befall me in that case.
 I. 1. 120. Which by no means we may extenuate.
 I. i. 161. There, gentle Hermia, may I marry thee.
 I. ii. 107. There we may rehearse more obscenely.
 II. i. 162. But I might see young Cupid's fiery shaft.
 III. i. 72. If that may be, then all is well.
 IV. i. 153. Our intent was to be gone from Athens where we might.

Omission of Verb.

With adverbs expressing motion the verba which they should qualify are often omitted. The adverb thus becomes almost an interjection, and in familiar speech to-day we often make the same omission, especially when the mood would be imperative,

- II. 1. 58. But room fairy! = Mala room.
 II. i. 145. Fairies, away! Sc. go.
 II. i. 147. Thou shalt not from this grove. So. go.
 XL. ii. 2. For the third part of a minute hence. Sc. go. Cf. II. i. 7, 21, 25, 83, 85.
 II. ii. 96. Therefore (it is) no marvel though Demetrius, etc.
 Cf. III. ii. 282.
 III. ii. 377. I'll to my queen, and beg her Indian boy.
 HI. ii. 435. That I may back to Athens by daylight. So. go.

Other examples will be found in IV. i. 23, 110, 187; V. i. 192, 345, 371, 401, 406. It is to be observed that the verb omitted is generally a verb of motion and most frequently the omission takes place after will, shall, or other auxiliary

Plural Endings.

There were three forms of the plural in Early English—the Northern in es, the Midland in en, the Southern in eth.

- II. 1. 57. And then the whole quire hold their lips and laugh.
 And waxen in their mirth.
 " Shall ' and ' Will, " = " Should " and ' Would. '¹

Shall and should are frequently used by Shakespeare where we should now use will and would.

- II. i. 264. Thou shalt know the maw. For wilt expressing futurity,

II. i. 269. Your servant shall do so.

IV. i. 220. I shall sing it at her death. Perhaps containing a notion of compulsory necessity.

I. i. 186. Were favour so (i.e. catching).
Yours would I catch, fair Hermia, ere I go
My oar should catch your voice, my eye your eye,
My tongue should catch your tongue's sweet melody.

Where should denotes contingent futurity.

III. ii, 122. Why should you think that I should woo in scorn?

Where should (says Dr. Abbott) denotes a statement not made by the speaker.

Singular Verb with Plural Subject.

This may be accounted for in several ways.

(1) The apparently singular form may be the Northern plural in es or s.

(2) The subject noun may be considered as singular in thought.

(3) When the verb precedes the subject, the writer has perhaps not quite settled what the subject is to be. Cf. the use of il y a in French.

(4) By the presence near the verb of a singular noun or pronoun (not necessarily the subject or even part of a composite subject).

II. i. 92. Contagious fogs, which . . . hath every pelting river made, etc.

Where the verb is in the singular apparently because the relative has no inflection to denote number. The same reason (or No. 1 above) may account for:

III. ii. 97. With sighs of blood that costs the flesh blood dear.

II. i. 190. Where is Lysander and fair Hermia? See (3) above.

II. i. 261. Where cypripis and the nodding violet grows.- See (4) above.

III. i. 47. There is two hard things. Cf. IV. ii. 16 and see (3) above.

III. ii. 440. Two of both kinds makes up four.

The subject of makes is here, in thought, some such words as "a collection of." See (2) above.

Y. i. 24. All the story . . . And all their minds . . . More witnesseth.

Which may be an example of the Southern plural in eth, or, more probably the verb here agrees with the fact of all their minds being, etc.

V. i. 161. This lime, this rough-cast, and this stone, doth show
(2) or (4).

Subjunctive Mood.

The simple form of the Subjunctive (i.e. without any auxiliary) was much more commonly used in Shakespeare's time than it now is.

I. i. 225. As you on him, Demetrius dote on you. Optative use,

I, ii, 77. That were enough to hang us all: when we should say would be,

I. ii. 91. What beard were I best to play it in ?

Which is probably an ungrammatical remnant of the older idiom (to) me (it) were best.

III. i. 42. It were pity of my life, and V. t. 226.

The simple Subjunctive is also used, where we should now probably use either the Indicative or Subjunctive auxiliary forms in I I. ii. pl, 63, 64 and 65, 109; I I I. ii. 81, 108, 327, 412; IV. i. 207; ii. 5. 18; V. 440

MISCELLANEOUS IRREGULAR CONSTRUCTIONS.

I. i, 129. How chance the roses there do fade so fast ?

Here chance appears to be used as a verb, and the full expression would be "How may it chance that," etc. Chance may also be explained as an adverb = by chance,

I. i. 229. He will not know what all but he do know.

The nominative after but appears to have arisen from a confusion between, but as an adversative conjunction of the Co-ordinative class and but as a preposition. The passage quoted is therefore a confusion between "He will not know what all know, but (= except) him," and "He will not know what all know, but he does not know."

I I. i. 85,

A re you not ho

That frights the maidens of the villagery
Skim milk, and sometime labour in the quern.

There is in this passage a confusion of constructions. Frights agrees with the relative that which takes the person of its antecedent he, and we should naturally expect skims and labours. But Shakespeare, forgetting perhaps that he has already written "he that frights," makes the two following verbs agree with you. The sentence would also be grammatically correct if frights were changed to fright. Frights is used for "affrights" or "frightens." Villagery is a Collective Noun.

H. i. 139. How long within this wood intend you stay ?

In early English there was no to before the simple infinitive. In the Elizabethan period, there was some difference of opinion as to which verbs did, and which did not, require the to. Consequently we often find it omitted where we should now insert it, Cf. also I I I. ii. 224-6 "made Demetrius . . . to call me goddess."

III. i. 92. He is to come again.

IV. ii. 27. I am to discourse wonders.

We should now say "He has to come" and "I have to discourse." In the above passages there appears to be an ellipsis, some word such as "bound" in the first, "ready" in the second, being left out.

HI. 1.182. I shall desire you of more acquaintance.

Dr. Abbott explains that in this passage of means "concerning," "about," or "with respect to" and compares with "Twere pity of my life," III. i. 41.

III. il. 8. While the was in her dull and sleeping hour.

· Almost any relation between two nouns can be expressed in Elizabethan English by making one of them an adjective. In the above "dull and sleeping hour" = hour of dullness and sleeping. Sleeping is a gerund. Cf. "the lazy time," V. i. 40.

III, ii. 90. Of thy misprison must perforce ensue
Some true-love turn'd, and not a false turn'd true.

An example of ellipsis due to the Elizabethan desire of brevity. The full expression would be "it must perforce ensue that some true-love has turned false, and not a false love turned true." Turn is here a verb of incomplete predication.

III. ii. 206. Both warbling of one song, both in one key. >

The of here is redundant. This redundancy is probably due to a confusion of constructions. Shakespeare might have written "a (= 'in) warbling of " gerund, or "simply "warbling," present participle. He has given us a combination of the two forms. So in I. i. 231, "So I, admiring of his qualities."

IV. ii. 6. It goes not forward, doth it?

Here the present indefinite tense is used to express a future action, as "I go to town next week."

IV. ii. 9. He hath simply the best wit of any handicraft man in Athens.

Another confusion of constructions, containing a combination of "He hath the best wit of all men" and "Ho hath a better wit than any man," The same confusion is apparent in V. i. 247, "This is the greatest error of all the rest."

V. i. 398. And this ditty after me.
Sing and dance it trippingly.

It does not here refer to "ditty," but is used indefinitely as the object of dance. See Abbott, § 226.

METRICAL CONSTRUCTION.

lam indebted to Dr. Abbott (Shakespearian Grammar) for the arrangement and much of the subject-matter of this section on Prosody,

The ordinary line in blank verse consists of five feet of two syllables each, the second syllable in each foot being accented.

V. i. 18. Such tric'ks | hath s'cron'g | ima'g | ina' | tion
That. Yt I it wou'ld i but app | rehen'd | some jo'y:
It com' | prehen'da | some brin'g | er of I that joy.

But as this line is too monotonous and formal for frequent use, the metre is varied, sometimes (1) by changing the position of the accent, sometimes (2) by introducing trisyllabic and monosyllabic feet.

The accent after a pause is frequently on the first syllable.

IL i. 163. Qu'en'ch'din | thechas'ta | beams of | the wa't | (e)ry mo'on,

This "pause accent" usually occurs at the beginning of a line. Sometimes it follows a full stop in the middle.

IL ii. 92. How cam'e | her eye's | so brig'bt? | No't with | salt tear's.

An extra syllable (rarely a monosyllable) is frequently added before a pause, especially at the end of a line.

V. t. 12. The po' | et'g ey'e, | i'n a | fine fre'n | zy ro'll(ing)
Doth glau'ce | from hea'v(en) I to ear'th I from ear'th | to hea'v(en).

Such extra syllables are called double (or feminine) endings, and afford a useful indication of the approximate date of the play. Speaking generally, if double endings are rare (e.g., 4 per cent, in Love's Labour's Lost, 1588) we may infer that the play is of early date; if they occur frequently, that the play belongs to Shakespeare's later period (e.g., 33 per cent, in The Tempest, 1610). Feminine endings are comparatively rare in this play.

Unaccented monosyllables. Provided there be only one accented syllable, there may be more than two syllables in any foot. Although this departure from the normal line occurs with frequency in some of Shakespeare's later plays, this play affords no instance of a trisyllabic foot, that cannot be accounted for by the elision of one syllable in pronunciation.

Accented Monosyllables. Sometimes an unemphatic monosyllable (such as and, at, for, from, if, in, of, or) is allowed to stand in an emphatic place, and to receive an accent. When they occur at the end of a line, they are called "weak endings." These appear for the first time in considerable quantities in Macbeth (1605); and hardly appear at all in Shakespeare's earlier plays.

IV. i. 43. So' d'oth | the woo'd | bine, th'e | sweet hon' | ey suc'k(le).
IL i. 85. By pa' | ved fou'n | tain o'r | by rua'b | y bro'ok.

Other examples will be found in the lines quoted below.

Syllables omitted. Many syllables which we now pronounce might formerly be omitted in pronunciation.

- L. i. 97. This man' | hath bewite'h'd | the bo's | om of | my ch'ild.
 III. ii. 204. Hav'e with | our needles [needs] | crea | ted bo'th | one flo'w(er).

Frequently two syllables coalesce, or are rapidly pronounced together.

- I. i. 69. Whe'ther [whe'r] if | yon yiel'd | n'ot to | your fa'th | er's cho'ice.
 II. ii. 166. Either [ei'r] dea'th I or yo'u ! I' ll fin'd | imme' | diatel'y.

Lengthening of words. Many words are given an additional syllable in pronunciation.

- II. i. 23. Shene'vl erha'dl so swe'et | a ehan'g !e lin'g.
 V. I. 59. Tha't is | hot i'oe | and won'd | (e)ro'us | strange sno'w.

Thus the termination ion is frequently pronounced as two syllables at the end of a line (rarely in the middle).

- I. i. 149. So quic'k | bright thing's I com'e to ! confu's | lo'n,
 III. ii. 197. To ba'it J me wi'th | this fou'l I derrs | lo'n,
 III. ii. 373. When the'y) next Wake | all tbi's | deri's ! lo'n.
 Shall see'm | a drea'm | and frul't ! less vi'a | lo'n.
 IV. i. III. And mar'k I the mu's I ca'l (confu's | lo'n.
 Of houn'ds) and eo'h (o i'n | conjun'ct | lo'n.

Monosyllables are drawn out in pronunciation so as to serve as a foot or are pronounced as dissyllables.

- II. i. 59. But ro' | om fa'i | ry, her'e | comes O'b | ero'n.
 II. J. 250. I kno'w I a ban'k I whe're I the wi'l'd | thyme blo'ws.
 III. ii. 201. For par't | Ing u's, I — O' | Is a'll | forgo't.
 III. ii. 439. Ye't but | thre'e. | Com'e one | more.
 Two of | bo'th kinds I ma'kes up I four.
 He're she | comes, | eur'st and | sad.

The ed of past participles is frequently pronounced as a separate syllable, even where the e is usually mute. As such words are accented in the text, the student will readily find many examples in this play.

alexandrines containing six pronounced accents are very rare in Shakespeare. Two occur in this play.

- III. ii. 281. Therefore | be ou't | of hop'e, | of one's | tio'n ! of dou'bt.
 IV. i. 108. Uncou'p i le in' | the we'st | ern va'I | ley; l'et | them go'.

Apparent Alexandrines are more frequent. These can usually be reduced to five-foot lines by the omission of unemphatic syllables.

- L. 1. 32. And stol'(e)n | th(e) Impres's) ion o'f J her fan' | tas'y.
 IV. i. 166. But b'y | some pow' (er)) it is' | my love I to Her'mtta).

Here we pass almost imperceptibly from the Herm- of this line to the Meltd with which the next line begins.

Sometimes Apparent Alexandrines are really trimeter computers as in

- III. 1. 93. Most ra' I diant Py'r ! amu's, I most ii'l ! y-whi'te (of hu e.
 III. i. 96. As tru'e as tru' | ei i how'e, | that y' | t | wou'ld n' | t | l'f ttr'a,

Short lines. Single lines are sometimes found with only four, three, or even two, accents.

III. ii. 49. And ki'l lmet'oo.

V. i. 92 Take's it l'in mi'ght | not me'r (it).

[Dr. Abbott thinks this line is not as Shakespeare wrote it].

III. ii. 100. I go !go'!look ho'w !Ig'o.

Proper names. The same name is not always pronounced in the same way in Shakespeare: thus Demetrius is sometimes a quadrisyllable, sometimes a trisyllable; Helena and Hermia sometimes have the accent on the first syllable, sometimes on the second; Theseus is sometimes dissyllabic, sometimes a trisyllable; Egeus is always a trisyllable.

I. i. 123. Deme' | tri'ns and I Ege' | us go' I alo'ng.

II. i. 77. Kno'wing | Ikno'w | thy lov'e | to The'sen's.

II. ii. 52. For, I'y ling s'o ! Hermi' | (a), I d'ol not li'e.

II. ii. 113. Not He'r I mia', ! but He'l I ena' !I lo've.

Notice that the accents have not all the same force. In He'rmia and He'lena in the above line the first syllable only is strongly accented.

Accent. Many words are accented otherwise than at present.

I. i. 151 It stan'ds | as an' ! edic't | in de's | tiny'.

II. i. 106. That rhe'u ! mati'e | disea's I es d'o | aboun'd.

III. ii. 137. O He'l | en go'd | desa nym' ph | perfec't I divi'ne.

III. ii. 937. Ay, d'o I perse'v | er, cou'nt lorfeit | sad lo'oks,

III. ii. 388. They w'll !full'y I themselves | exi'le | from light.

V. 1 8. These a'n | tique fa'b (les no'r | these fai'r | y toy's

Rhyme. Unlike most of Shakespeare's plays A Midsummer Night's Dream abounds in rhymed verse. About a third of the play is written in rhyming lines. This peculiarity is due to the masque-like character of this fairy comedy. The rhymes are of different kinds, that which occurs most frequently being the heroic couplet,

II. ii 113. Not Hermia, but Helena I love:

Who will not change a raven for a dove?

The will of man is by his reason sway'd,

And reason says you are the worthier maid.

Occasionally we have alternate rhyme.

EEL it 122. Why should you think that I should woo in scorn?

Scorn sad derision never come In tears.

Look, when I vow, I weep; and vows so born,

In their nativity all truth appears.

The rhyme is also varied by (1) triplets, (2) feminine rhymes.

EL il 97. What thou seest, when thou dost wake

Do it for thy true-love take.

Lore, and languish for his sake.

II. ii 117. Things growing are not ripe until their state's

So I being young, till now ripe not to reason.

Rhyme occurs rarely in the more serious speeches.

VARIANTS AND PROPOSED EMENDATIONS. 107

The Fairy Speeches.

Most of the speech of the fairies consists of short rhyming lines in which the trochaic metre (i.e. an accented syllable followed by an unaccented syllable) preponderates,

- IL i. 2. O'v'er !hil, !o'ver!da'le.
 Tho'rough ! bu'sh | tho'rough | brie'r.
 ov'er J pa'rk, | o'ver I p'ate.
 Tho'rough ! floo'd, ! tho'rough | fir's.
 I' do | wan der | ev'ery | wher'e.
- V. i. 374. No'w the ! hun'gry | ii'on | roars.
 And tho' | wo'l'f be ! ho'w's the ! moon ;
 Whis't the ! heavy (ploughman) snores
 All with | we'ary | ta'sk for | done.

Prose is used in the comic scenes, and where it is desired to lower the dramatic pitch. Thus the ordinary conversation of Bottom and his colleagues is in prose, except when they recite their crude verse. During the progress of the Interlude, Theseus and the courtiers speak in prose in order to set off the stilted verse of the tragic-comedy.

VARIANTS AND PROPOSED EMENDATIONS.

A. few only of the more important are given. Other readings will be found in the Clarendon Press edition, to which I have occasionally referred.

- I. i. 10. The quartos and folios have Now-bent; Rowe corrected to New-bent.
- I. i. 27. The second folio omits man. Theobald suggests witch'd.
- I. i. 187. This is Hammer's correction for Your words I catch.
- II. i. 7. Several editors have suggested moony-sphere.
- II. i. 68. Dyce, to mend the metre, reads But room now fairy !
- II. i. 62. The old copies have "Fairy ship hence!" Corrected by Theobald.
- II. i. 110. The old copies have chin which Tyrwhitt corrected to thin.
- II. i. 197. Lettson suggested that we ought to read though for for.
- II. i. 250. Pope altered where to whereon in order to improve the metre.
- II. "1.262. Theobald and Collier conjectured lush (= luxuriant) instead of luscious,
- II. 1. 254. The order of this line and the next is reversed in the old copies.
 Lettson proposed this bower, and Collier these bowers, instead of these flowers.
- II. ii. 77. Walker suggests Near instead of Nearer for the sake of the Metre; Theobald read Near to.
- II. ii. 104. The folios have "Nature her shewes art"; Malone read "Nature shews for art."
- III. i. 85. Pope suggested "So doth thy breath" for forhath.
- III. ii. 48. Coleridge proposed lence-deep.

- III. ii. 144. For princess Hanmer reads purerruss, Collier impress, Lettsom purest.
- III. ii. 213. The quartos and folios read life for Ulu which Theobald substituted.
- IV. i. 86. To mend the metre Hanmer suggested "fetch thee thence"; Walker "fetch thee the new nuts."
- IV. i. 167. Pope read "Is melted as the snow." The reading of the text is Capell's substitution for Melted as the snow of the folios.
- V. i. 59. Staunton suggested "swarthy snow"; Collier "seething snow"; Else "«sable snow."
- V. i. 168. Parmer read "heard in discourse."
- V. i. 207. The reading of the folios is "Now is the moral down," and that of the quartos, "Now ia the Moon used." We have adopted Pope's emendation.
- V. 1. 218. Theobald changed man of the folios to moon.
- V. i. 224. Rowe read "No lion fell." Other suggestions that have been made are "A lion fell" (= a lion's skin), and "n'am no lion fell" = am not (Gollancz).

HINTS ON PARAPHRASING.

1. Do not mistake the meaning of "to paraphrase." It is not to put into other words the words of a passage, but to put into your own words the meaning of that passage.
2. Read over the passage to be paraphrased several times, and be quite sure that you have seized the general sense before writing anything down.
8. Put nothing down that you do not know the meaning of yourself. If you do not understand what you write, be sure no one else will.
4. If you use a dictionary (to be avoided as far as possible), make sure that you understand the meaning selected for any given word, and that it "fits in" with the rest of your rendering.
5. It is better to write nothing than to put down unintelligible rubbish.
6. In paraphrasing poetry or condensed prose (such as Bacon's) it is almost always necessary to amplify in order to bring out the full meaning of any given passage, i.e., your version ought generally to be longer than the original.
7. Do not turn into the third person what is expressed in the text in the first person, and especially do not change from the one to the other without good reason.
8. Change the order of words or even sentences as much as you please so long as you preserve the meaning of the passage.
9. Maintain the spirit and general character of the composition as far as possible. If you know the context of the extract, that knowledge should help you to express yourself appropriately. If you do not know the context, imagine a setting for the extract; this will help you to make your meaning clear.
40. Do not use a greater number of words than is necessary to convey your meaning, and use the simplest words you can to express your thought.

EXAMPLES.

We would impress upon the junior student the fact that many paraphrases differing widely the one from the other may be equally good and equally acceptable to the Examiner. We have therefore, in the following examples given three versions of one passage shewing three different methods of treatment.

1. Paraphrase fifteen lines commencing "Therefore the moon, the governess of floods" I. i. 104.

(a) Hence the moon, upon whose influence the tides depend, pale with anger at our dissensions has so charged with humidity the whole atmosphere that all diseases induced by cold and moisture are rife in the land; and this same strife between us hath so disturbed the regular succession of the seasons that the white mantle of winter's frost now falls upon the blushing rose of summer, whilst the sprouting buds of summer flowers unseasonably come forth as if to mock the scattered hairs that silver the reverend head of father winter. Spring and summer, prolific autumn and fierce winter, assume each an appearance not its own, and humanity, lost in wonderment, seeks in vain to know the season by its fruits. Such are the ills our quarrel has brought about, such the calamities begotten by our discord. We are responsible for them, we their originators.

(6) So, the pale moon, the ruler of the sea, grieved, fills the dripping air, and the poor mortal sighs with teasing rheums and aching limbs. The very seasons change, that even the lingering summer rose is whitened with unwonted hoar frost, and, as if for very mockery, winter is crowned with a wreath of tender buds checked ere they bloom: their accustomed dress spring, summer, fruitful autumn, fierce winter all alike do change, and nature, astonished at such strange confusion, knows not one season from another. We need not to look beyond ourselves if we would account for this strange evil brood, bred from our own jealous wranglings and disputes.

(c) For that reason the angry influence of the moon fills the air with moisture causing rheumatic diseases: the seasons are disorganised: in the time of roses are cold frosts and the sweet scent of summer buds mocks the ice of winter. All the seasons change their accustomed signs, and the bewildered world can no more distinguish them one from another. We, you and I, Titania, are the origin of all these evil changes.

2. Paraphrase the first twenty lines of Act V.

Hip. These youths and maidens, bound with Love's sweet chain tell us marvellous things indeed.

The. Marvellous but deceptive. Such old-world stories and fantastic tales commend themselves not to me. The minds of lovers and lunatics alike teem with wild and highly-coloured fancies; they imagine more than can be grasped by beings of ordinary understanding. Insanity, love and poetic genius are akin to one another inasmuch as all proceed from the imagination. The madman peoples his solitude with vast crowds of devils and demons of the pit. The lover, no less wild in his fancies, beholds in a swarthy Egyptian maid, beauty such as that which brought about the Trojan war. The poet gazing with ecstatic vision on all things in earth and heaven, imagines what the eye of mortal man has never seen, and with magic pen invests it with form and shape, names it and appoints its place of abode. The poetic imagination hath such peculiar power that he who is possessed of it needs but to imagine a delight in order that for him it may, have a real existence.

CLASSICAL NAMES WITH THEIR CONTEXT.

The references to the play are to the first line of each quotation.

Acheron ('Stream of Anguish'), in classical mythology one of the rivers of the tower world. In late classical writers the name is used in a general sense to designate the whole of the lower world, and may have been so used by Shakespeare in the following lines, though, in other plays he seems to regard it as a pit or lake.

Oberon bids Puck to 'overcast' the night.

The starry welkin cover thou anon
With drooping fog as black as Acheron. III. ii. 800.

Ægle ('Brightness'). A maiden whom Theseus loved, and for whom he forsook Ariadne. Shakespeare obtained the name from North's Plutarch's Lives, where we read in the life of Theseus—

*Ægles the Nymph was lou'd of Theseus,
Which was the daughter of Panopeus?*

Oberon, in the play thus reproaches Titania

Dids't thou not lead him through the glimmering night
From Ferigania, whom he ravished?
And make him with fair Ægle break his faith,
With Ariadne and Antiopa.

IL i 79.

Amazons (Ammas 'Mother'), originally nymphs, attendant as huntresses on Artemis, dwelling on the southern shore of the Black Sea. They were also reputed to be the daughters of the Theban deities Ares and Harmonia. They fought, as bold horsewomen, with Bellerophon, Hercules, Theseus, and Achilles. On the occasion of an inroad made by them into Attica, Theseus won the love of their queen Hippolyte, whom he had conquered. The occasion of their wedding forms the framework of this play.

Titania accuses Oberon of excessive devotion to the bouncing Amazon.

Your bnskin'd mistress and your warrior JOTS, II. i .71

Antiopa. Plutarch, in his life of Theseus, relates that "to honour his valiantness, Hercules gave him Antiopa the Amazon, But the more part of the other Historiographers, . . . do write, that Theseus went thither alone, after Hercules' voyage, and that he took this Amazon prisoner, which is likeliest to be true." For the context see under Ægle.

'Antipodes. Gk. anti, opposite; and podes, feet. Those who live on the opposite side of the globe, and whose feet are directly opposite to those of the speaker.

Hermia rebuking Demetrius, who protests that he loves her, -saya—

I'll believe as soon
This whole earth may be bored and that the moon
May through the centre creep and so displease
Her brother's noontide with the Antipodes. III. ii. 55.

Apollo. A Grecian god, Son of Zens and Leto (L. Latona) and twin-brother of Artemis. He was born at Delos, the second great God of his worship. In art he is represented as the ideal figure of a fully grown slender youth, beardless, with long curling hair.

For the story (related by Ovid, Mett. i.) alluded to by Helena during her pursuit of Demetrius, see the footnote on the passage

Bun when you will, the story shall be changed:
Apollo flies, and Daphne holds the chase. II. i. 931.

Ariadne, the daughter of Minos, king of Crete, who, after having marched against Athens, exacted from the vanquished Athenians a tribute of seven youths and seven maidens, to be devoured every nine years by the minotaur. Theseus undertook to do battle with the monster, and Ariadne, falling passionately in love with the hero, rendered him every possible assistance in his undertaking. Theseus, after escaping every danger by her means, took her away from Crete in order to marry her. He deserted her, however, whilst asleep on the island of Nascos, and Plutarch relates that "some say that Ariadne hung herself for sorrow, when she saw that Theseus had oast her off." For the context see under Ægle.

Athens, The capital of Attica, and the supposed scene of the events of the play. The city is said to have owed its origin to Theseus, who united the twelve independent states or townships of Attica into one state, and made Attica their capital. It has been pointed out in the notes (p. 73), that in his allusions to Athens and the Athenians, Shakespeare has paid little attention to classical topography or customs. See also p. 74 on "the ancient privilege of Athens" (I. i.).

Aurora, Eos or Dawn, the sister of Helios and Selene, and goddess of light. She represents the brightness of the break of day.

Puck warns Oberon that his work must be done with haste, for—

Yonder shines Aurora's harbinger,
At whose approach, ghosts, wandering here and there,
Troop home to churchyards. I. i. 382.

The "morning's love," in I. i. 382, refers to Cephalus, who was carried off by Aurora.

Bacchanals, or Bacchantes ('shouters'), worshippers of Bacchus, the god of wine. Bacchus, or Dionysus in Thrace, was worshipped at night time by these women, who, under the influence of wine, wandered about the mountain woodlands in 'passionate excitement with torches in their hands. See also under Orpheus.

The title of one of the entertainments offered to Theseus was—

The riot of the tipsy Bacchanals,
Tearing the Thracian singer in their rage. V. i. 48.

Bergomask. The name of a dance of clowns, so called from the Italian district of Bergamo in Northern Italy. The inhabitants were regarded as being particularly rustic.

Bottom asks the duke if it pleases him—to see the epilogue, or to hear a Bergomask dance between two of our company (V. i. 856).

Cadmus was a son of the Phoenician king Agenor, and brother of Europa. He does not appear in mythology to have been connected in any way with Hercules. He was on his way to Crete to seek his sister Europa, who had been carried thither by Zeus, when, on arriving at Bœotia, he founded Thebes.

Hippolyta relates to Theseus—

I was with Hercules and Cadmus once,
When in a wood of Crete, they bay'd the bear
With hounds of Sparta. IV. i. 113.

Carthage. A city of Northern Africa, near the site of the modern Tunis. For allusion see under Dido.

Centaurs. In Homer's account the Centaurs are an old Thessalian mountain tribe of giant strength and savage ferocity. Their battle with the Lapithæ took place on the occasion of the marriage of Pirithous and Hippodamia. They attempted to carry off the bride, but were completely defeated by the bridegroom aided by Theseus. On another occasion Hercules, while in pursuit of the Erymanthian boar, was attacked by the Centaurs of Arcadia. He drove them back with arrows and firebrands, and completely vanquished them after a terrible fight.

Probably the battle with the Lapithæ is alluded to in the title which Theseus reads—

The battle with the Centaurs, to be sang Bj an Athenian eunuch to the harp. V.i.44, for this is told by Ovid in his Metamorphoses.

Cephalus, a handsome hunter, said to be a son of Hermes. He was carried off by Aurora, who was unable to shake his fidelity for his wife Procris. Procris, in her jealousy of Aurora, hid herself among some bushes in order to watch her husband, when he, taking her for a wild animal, unwittingly killed her. He is referred to as "the morning's love" in I I I . ii. 391.

Pyramus and Thisbe avow their fidelity to one another:

pyr. Not Shafalus to Procrus was so true.
This. As Shafalus to Procrus' I to you. V. i. 199.

Corin. A traditional name for a lover in pastoral poetry. The Corin of As You Like It is a shepherd, who in his youth was "as true a lover as ever sighed upon a midnight pillow."

Titania accuses Oberon of sitting all day "in the shape of Corin,"

"Playing on pipes of corn and versing love
To amorous Phillida. II. i. 68.

Crete, one of the largest islands in the Mediterranean Sea, nearly equi-distant from Europe, Asia, and Africa. Minos, the reputed son of Europa, was the first king of Crete, and it was in Crete that Herouks performed his seventh labour, the capture of the Cretan bull or Minotaur.

for context, see under CADMUS.

Cupid, the Greek Eros, the son of Venus and Mars, was represented in art as a winged boy, or a tender youth, bearing a bow and arrows as his attribute, the pain of love excited by him being regarded as a wound. With golden arrows he inspired happy love, with blunt leaden shafts an unlucky passion.

Hermes swears to be true to Lysander—

By Cupid's strongest bow;
By his best arrow with the golden head. L i. 160.

Oberon relates to Puck his vision of "Cupid all arm'd," whose "fiery shaft," failing to pierce the "imperial votaress"— fell upon a little western flower,

Before milk-white, now purple with love's wound. If i. 158, etc.

The pansy, or heart's-ease, is referred to as Cupid's flower, (III. ii. 102), (IV. i. 74); Cupid, or Love (I. i. 236, 238), or "the boy Love" (I. i. 241), is said by Helena to be "painted blind" (I. i. 235), and to be "perjured everywhere;" and Puck, pitying the condition of Helena, says:

Cupid is a knavish lad
Thus to make poor females mad. III, ii 442.

Diana, identified with the Greek Artemis, was originally a goddess of the moon. She was a daughter of Zeus and Latona, and twin-sister of Apollo. As a virgin goddess she was especially venerated by young maidens, whose patroness she remained till their marriage, and to whom she afforded an example of chastity.

Theseus tells Herxnia that the penalty for refusing to wed Demetrius will be either to die—

Or on Diana's altar to protest
For aye, austerity and single life. L. i. 89.

The plant which had the power to counteract the effect of Cupid's flower is called "Dian's bud" in IV. i. 74.

Dido, the reputed founder of Carthage. Vergil makes her a contemporary of Æneas, with whom she falls in love on his arrival in Africa. When Æneas left her to seek the home in Italy which the gods had promised him, Dido in despair destroyed herself on a funeral pile.

Hermia swears to Lysander—

By that fire which burn'd the Carthage queen,
When the false Tro'an under sail was seen. I, i. 173.

Daphne, daughter of Tellus (the Earth), and a river god. She was extremely beautiful, and was loved by Apollo.

When he pursued her she prayed for aid to her father, who changed her into a laurel tree.

Helena, in love with Demetrius, who flies from her, says:

Bun when you will, the story shall be changed:

Apollo flies, and Daphne holds the chase. II. i. 831

Egypt, a country in the N.E. of Africa. The word Gipsy is corrupted from Egyptian, for when gipsies appeared in Europe they declared that they were driven from Egypt by the Turks. Their original home was India.

Theseus declares that the lover is "as frantic" as the madman,
In that he—

Sees Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt. V. i. 11.

Ércles. See under HERCULES.

Ethiope, Ethiopian, a native of Ethiopia (a country of Africa, which included the modern Abyssinia), and as such, supposed to be black.

Lysander, when under the influence of Cupid's flower, addresses Hermia—

Away, yon Ethiope. III. ii. 258.

Fates. The goddesses of Fate—Parca or Moirae—decided the destiny of man. They were three in number—Klotho, the spinner of life's thread; Lachsis, the giver of life's portion; and Atropos, the unswerving, inexorable one, who sends death.

Bottom recites tragic verses, in which he speaks of—

The foolish Fates. I. ii. 99.

and in the Interlude, on seeing the body of Thisbe, invokes them thus:

Approach, ye Paries fell!

O Fates, come, come;

Cut thread and thrum;

Quail, crash, conclude and quell. V. L. 986.

Thisbe promises to remain true to Pyramus—till the Fates me kill. V. i. 198.

and appeals to them after the death of Pyramus—

O Sisters Three,

Come, come to me,

V. i. 339.

Furies, the daughters of the Night, were avenging goddesses, who punished crime. Like the Fates, they were three in number, and their names were Tisiphone, Alecto and Megsera. For context see above under FATES.

Heoate (far-striking) was originally a moon goddess. The daughter of the Titan Perseus and Asteria. She presided over all nocturnal horrors, haunted tombs and cross-roads, and sent nightly phantoms from the lower world.

Puck, after the dance that concluded the Interlude, sang:

And we fairies, that do run
By the triple Hecate's team,
From the presence of the sun.

V. i. 386

Helen, daughter of Tyndareus, king of Sparta, married Menelaus, who became king of Sparta after the death of Tyndareus. While Menelaus was absent in Crete, she was carried off by Paris to Troy. This led to the Trojan war related in the Iliad of Homer. Her beauty was proverbial.

Theseus asserts that the imaginative lover "sees Helen's beauty" in the features of a gipsy (V. i. 11). Thisbe compares herself to Helen, meaning Hero, q.v.

Hercules, the personification of strength and conquest, was a legendary hero, especially honoured among the Boeotians, Dorians, and Thessalians. Zeus was his father, and Thebes his home. Amongst the famous "twelve labours" imposed upon him by Eurystheus were the slaying of the Erymanthian boar, the conquest of the Centaurs, the taming of the Cretan bull, and the fight with the Amazons. In the Mysteries of the Middle Ages he is represented on the stage as a typical tyrant.

Bottom, whose "chief humour is for 'a tyrant"¹ declares that he "could play Erdes rarely" (I. ii. 80), and to prove his assertion, quotes verses in "Erdes' vein" (I. ii. il). Theseus says that he has told Hippolyta of the battle with the Centaurs—

In glory of my kinsman Hercules.

V. i. 47.

Hero, ' Greek priestess of Sestos, for love of whom Leander, a youth of Abydos, swam every night across the Hellespont, guided by a torch from her tower. When he was at length, drowned in the attempt, Hero threw herself from the tower on the corpse of her lover and perished.

Pyramus, in the Interlude, says to Thisby, " I am thy lover's grace "—

And like Limander am I trusty still.

to which Thisbe replies:

And I like Helen, till the Fates me kill. V.i. 196.

Here Limander and Helen are the actors' blunders for Leander and Hero.

Hiems, the Roman personification of winter.

India formerly stood for the whole of the S.E. part of Asia and the islands of the Indian Archipelago. The fairies of the play seem to have been all natives of India.

Titania, with her train of fairies, meets Oberon in the wood, and asks—

Why art thou here,
Come from the farthest steppe of India. II. i. 69.

The changeling, the cause of the quarrel between the king and queen, was—

A lovely boy, stolen from an Indian king. II. i. 22.

Titania has often gossiped "in the spiced Indian air" (II. i. 125). Oberon, before releasing Titania from the spell, begs from her "her Indian boy" (III. ii. 877).

Limander, Bottom's mistake for Leander. See under HERO.

Muses, The, daughters of Zeus and Mnemosyne. They were nine in number, and were created to perpetuate in song the mighty deeds of the gods. Their names indicate their several functions: Clio (Glorifier), Melpomene (Songster), Terpsichore (Dance-gladdened), Polyhymnia (She of many hymns), Thalia (Joy), Urania (Heavenly), Euterpe (Delighter), Erato (Charming), Calliope (Sweet-voiced). Spenser in his Tears of Muses (1591) laments "the neglect and contempt of learning."

The title of one of the entertainments offered for Theseus' acceptance is—

The thrice three Mates mourning for the death
Of Learning, late, deceased in . . . beggary.

V.i.89

Neptune, the son of Cronos and Rhea, and the representative of water in general.

Titania has often sat " on Neptune's yellow sands " (XI. i. 127).
Oberon describes the sun rising over the sea—

Bren till the eastern gate, all fiery-red,
Opening on Neptune with fair blessed beams,
Turns Into yellow gold his salt green streams, III. ii. 303.

Ninas, the reputed founder of Nineveh, about B.O. 2182.
His wife Semiramis built the city of Babylon, and erected a magnificent tomb for her husband.

" Ninua' tomb " is the appointed meeting-place of Pyramua and Thisbe (III. i. 97, 98, V. I. 188, 203).

Orpheus, a mythic bard of Thrace, whose songs of lamentation were so piteous as to move the very rocks and trees from their places. He released his wife Eurydioe from the Lower World, but afterwards lost her. Whilst wandering in his despair over Thracian mountains, he was torn in pieces by some women in the mad excitement of their nightly Bacchanalian orgies.

For the allusion in the play, see under BACCHANALS,

Perigenia, in North's Plutarch Perigouna, was the daughter of one Sinnis, whom Theseus slew in the Straits of Peloponnesus.

She is referred to in II. i. 79 as one of the early lovers of Theseus.

Phoebe, identified with Selene and Luna, and often confounded with Artemis or Diana. As a deity Phoebe embodies the moon, and is a sister of Sol (Helios) the sun.

Lysander persuades Hermia to fly with him from Athens—

To-morrow night, when Phoebe doth behold
Her silver visage in the watery glass; I. ii. 209.

Phoebus or Apollo, the purest and highest representative of light, was identified with the Sun among late classical writers. The chariot of the Sun, in which he passes daily from Oceanus in the east to the west, where he sets, was drawn by four fiery horses. See also under Apollo.

Bottom's specimen of tragic verse contains the lines—

And Phoebus ear
Shall thine from far. I. ii. 96

Phillida. A traditional name for a shepherdess in pastoral poetry.

For allusion, see tinder CORIN.

Philomel, the Greek name for a nightingale. Philomela, in Ovid, was with her sister Procne, pursued by Tereus with an axe, and on being overtaken, prayed to the gods to be changed into a bird.

The refrain in the Fairies' song commences—

Philomel with melody

Sing in our sweet lullaby. III. ii. 13.

Procris. See under CEPHALUS.

Shafalus. See under CBPHALUS.

Sparta, also called Lacedaemon, the chief city of Peloponnesus, in Greece. For the allusion, see under CADMUS.

Tartar, a vague term usually applied to certain roving tribes which inhabited the steppes of Central Asia.

Puck, describing to Oberon the rapidity of his movements, says:

I go, I go; look how I go,

Swifter than arrow from the Tartar's bow. III. ii. 100.

Lysander, under the influence of the spell, addresses Hermia as "tawny Tartar" (III. ii. 266).

Taurus, a mountain chain in Asiatic Turkey, stretching from the Euphrates to the Ægean Sea.

Demetrius draws a comparison between the whiteness of Helen's hand and—

That pore congealed white, high Taurus' snow. III. ii. 141

Thebes, a city of ancient Greece, the principal city of Boeotia, said to have been founded by Cadmus in 1500 B.C. Chaucer's Knight's Tale tells how Theseus slew Creon, king of Thebes, and destroyed the city.

Theseus speaks of the play that was acted—

When I from Thebes came last a conqueror. V, i. 51,

Thessaly, the north-eastern division of Greece. The early kings of Thessaly are said to have been descendants of Hercules. The country is mountainous, and its earliest inhabitants were Æolians.

Theseus speaks of his hounds "crook-knee'd, and dew-lapp'd like Thessalian bulls," whose note was as musical as any ever heard—

In Crete, in Sparta, or in Theasaly IV. i. 127.

Thrace, a name applied to an early period among the Greeks to a region lying north of Macedonia.

For the allusion to the "Thracian Singer," see under ORPHEUS.

Troy, an ancient city in the Troad, a territory in the N.W. of Asia Minor, rendered famous by Homer's epic of the Iliad and Vergil's Æneid.

For the allusion to Æneas, "the false Trojan," see under DIDO.

Valentine, a saint of the Eoman calendar, said to have been martyred in 306 A.D. The custom of choosing valentines on his day (February 14th) has been accidentally associated with his name. A similar custom prevailed in the Roman Lupercalia, to which the modern practice has been traced. See also the notes on pp. 54 and 83.

Theseus, finding the lovers asleep in the wood, addressed them thus—

Good morrow, friends. St. Valentine is past;
Begin these wood-birds but to couple now. IV. i. 140.

Venus, identified with the Greek Aphrodite, was the daughter of Jupiter, and goddess of beauty and love. She is painted by the poets as the most beautiful of all the goddesses, and is endowed with a celebrated love-begetting magic girdle. Amongst her attributes are the dove, the sparrow, the myrtle, the rose, and the apple.

Hermia swears to Lysander—

By the simplicity of Venus' dores,
By that which knitteth souls and prospers lores, i. i. 171.

GLOSSARY.

the Editor's indebtedness to Professor Sheat's Etymological Dictionary and to Schmidt's Shakespeare Lexicon is such as to call for special acknowledgment

Abbreviations.—A.S. = Anglo-Saxon; M.E. = Middle English; O.F. = Old French; M.F. = Middle French; F. = French; G. = German; Gk. = Greek; L. = Latin; Icel. = Icelandic; Port. = Portuguese; Arab. = Arabic.

Adv. = adverb; der. = derived; dimin. = diminutive; lit. = literally; orig. = originally; p.p. = past participle.

Abridgement, used in the sense of pastime, something to shorten the time. Subst. formed from "abridge." O.F. abreger, L. abbreviate, to shorten. "Abbreviate" is a doublet of abridgo.

Say, what abridgement have you for this evening? V. i. 39.

Aby, to stand the consequences of, pay for. M.B. abyen, to pay for; A.S. abycgen; connected with buy. Sometimes written and confused with "abide," to await, with which it has no etymological connection.

Best to thy peril, thou aby it dear, III. ii. 175.
Thou shalt aby it. III. ii. 837.

Adamant. (1) Any hard stone; (2) a magnet, lode stone. From 6k. d&dfms = 'Unconquerable, through O.F. adamant. The words "diamond" and "tame" are both allied to it.

You draw me, you hard-hearted adamant. II. i. 196.

Admirable, to be wondered at. This is the original meaning of the word. L. admirabilis from admirari, to wonder at.

•But, howsoever, strange and admirable. V. i. 27.

An, if. Formerly also and, with the same meaning. A.S. and. For illustrations see p. 92.

Aprioocks, a form of "apricot," derived from Port. albricoque. Arab, al barquq, where al is the def. art. The modern form "apricot" is from F. abricot.

Feed him with aprioocks, and dewberries. III. i. 166

Aunt, old woman. M.E. aunte. O.F. ante (Mod. P. t-ante).
L. amita, a father's sister.

The wisest aunt, telling the saddest tale. IL 1. 52.

Used also in its ordinary sense in I. i, 157.

Bay, to chase, to drive to bay. Short for abay. F. aboyer, to yelp, bay.

They bay'd the bear with hounds of Sparta. IV. i. 114.

Barm, yeast. A.S. beorma, cognate with Low G. barm.

And sometime make the drink to bear no barm. II. i. 38.

Bergomask, a dance of clowns. Ital. bergomasco, from the name of the town Bergamo.

Bat come, your Bergomask: let your epilogue alone. V, i. 865.

Beshrew, a mild form of imprecation; be, intensive prefix; and M.E. shrewe, wicked, bad. A.S. scrtawa, a shrewmouse, fabled to have a very venomous bite.

Now much beshrew my manners and my pride. II. i. 54.
Beshrew my heart, but I pity the man. V. i. 291.

Beteem, supply, afford; be, intensive prefix; and teem, an old word, probably connected with G. ziemen, to be fit;
and Dutch tamen, to be seemly.

Belike for want of rain, which I could well
Beteem them from the tempest of mine eyes. 1.1.181.

Bootless, unavailingly, uselessly. A.S. bot, profit (better and best are from the same base), and the E. suffix, less;
A.S. leas, loose, or free from.

And bootless make the breathless housewife churn. II. i. 87.
Bootless speed, when cowardice pursues, and valour files t
II. i. 234.

Bottle, a bundle of hay. O.F. hotel, a small bundle, dimin.
of botte, a bundle, as of hay.

Methinka, I have a great desire to a bottle of hay. IV. i. 82.

Broach, to stab, pierce. M.E. setten on brocket to set a-broaoh, tap liquor. F. mettre en brocfe, to tap, by piercing, a barrel. F. brother, to pierce.

He bravely broach'd his boiling bloody breast. V. i. 147.

Bully, comrade. The oldest sense is "dear one, lover."
M. Dutch boel, of a lover (of either sex).

What sayest thou bully Bottom? . III. i. 8.

Buskin, a high-heeled boot, worn by hunters and huntresses.
Origin doubtful; either from Dutch broosken, buskin;
or from M.F. brousequin, now brodequin.

Your buskin'd mistress and your warrior love' II. i. 72.

Canker, a worm that eats into blossoms. Der. through F.
from L. cancrum, acc. of cancer, a crab.

Some to kill cankers in the musk-rose buds. II. ii. 3.
O me! you juggler t you canker-blossom. III. ii. 284.

Cavalery, cavalier, used by Bottom for Sp. cavallero, or cavaliero, L. caballarium, from caballus, a horse.

Nothing, good mounsieur, but to help Cavalery Cobweb to scratch. IV. i. 22.

Changeling, usually=a child substituted by the fairies for the one stolen by them; in this play the stolen child. F. change, Late L. cambium, L. cambire, to exchange, and -ling, an E. double dimin. suffix, -ei,
-ing.

She never had so sweet a changeling. II. i. 23.
I do but beg a little changeling boy. II. i. 121.
I did then ask of her her changeling child. IV. i. 60.

Cheer. M.E. chere, the face. O.F. chere. L. cara, face, used in two senses in the play—

(1) spirits, cheerfulness,

Come, my Hippolyta: what cheer, my love? 1.1.122,
That lived, that loved, that liked, that look'd with cheer.
V. i. 295,

(2) countenance, face.

All fancy-sick she is and pale of cheer III. ii. 96.

Childing, productive, fruitful, fertile; Der. of child. A.S.
cild, and suffix -ing'

The childing autumn, angry winter, II. i. 113.

Coil, confusion, disturbance, trouble. Orig. a colloquial or slang expression, probably Connected wiith "coil," to twist. O.F. coillir, L. colligere, to collect.

You mistress, all this coil is long of you. I I I. ii. 341.

Collied, coal-black, dark. An adjective from "coal." A.S. col, coal.

Brief as the lightning in the collied night. I, i. 145,

Con, learn by heart. A.S. cunnan, to know. Cf. the Scotch "ken."

I desire you to con them by to-morrow night. I. ii. 100.
Extremely stretched and conn'd with cruel pain. V. i. 80.

Conceit, used in the plu. = presents fancifully devised. Formed as if from the p.p. of O.F. concevoir, by analogy with "deceit."

With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gawds, conceits. I. i. 33.

Continents, banks. L. contineniam p.p. of continere, to hold together. L. con- (cum), together; and tenere, to hold.

They have overborne their continents. I I. i. 93.

Coy, caress, fondle. O.F. coï, older form quel. L. quiescunt, still; hence "to coy" is really to make still or quiet.

While I thy amiable cheeks do coy. IV. i. 2,

Cry, pack of hounds, so called from their "cry" or "note." F. crier; L. quiritare, to shriek; lit. "to implore the aid of the Quirites or Roman citizens."

A cry more tuneable was never holla'd to, IV. i. 125.

Dewlap, the loose flesh that hangs from the throat of a cow or (in this play) of a woman. So called because it laps or licks up the dew. A.S. deaw, dew; and lapan, to lap; allied to L. lambere, to lap with the tongue.

And on her wither'd dewlap pour the ale. I I. i. 51

Crook-knee'd and, dew-lapp'd like Thessalian bulls.

IV. i. 128.

Distemperature, strife (either of the fairies or of the elements). L. dis, with & sinister or bad sense;

temperare, to mingle in due proportion; and L. suffix Ura.

And thorough this distemperature we see
The seasons alter, I I. i. 107'

Dole, sorrow, grief. O.F. dol; L. dolium, dolere, to grieve.

But mark, poor knight, what dreadful dole is hero. V. i. 278.

Dowager, a widow with a jointure. O.F. douagere; L. dotare, to endow. Allied to donum, a gift; dare, to give.

Like to a step-dame, or a dowager. I. i. 5.

I have a widow aunt, a dowager. I. i. 157.

Elf, a diminutive supernatural being. Icel. alfr; Dan. alf; also G. alp, a nightmare.

Our queen and all her elves come here anon. I I. i. 17.

To make my small elves coats. I I. ii. 5.

Nod to him elves and do him courtesies. I I I. i. 174.

Every elf and fairy sprite. V. i. 896.

Extenuate, diminish the force of, lessen. From p.p. of L. extenuare, to thin, reduce, palliate. L. ex, out, very; tenuis, thin.

Which by no means we may extenuate. I. i. 120.

Fell, angry, fierce. O.F. fel, cruel. Late L. fello, felo a malefactor, felon.

For Oberon is passing fell and wrath. I I. i. 20.

A lion fell. V. i. 224.

Pileh, to steal (usually applied to things of small value), Etym. unknown; possibly related to M.E. felen, to conceal.

With cunning hast thou filch'd my daughter's heart. Ii. 86,

Flew'd, a verb, coined from "flews," the overhanging chaps of a dog.

My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,
So flew'd, so sanded. IV. i. 131.

Flout, to mock, jeer at. Prob, from M.E. fiouten, to play the flute. Similarly, M. Dutch fluyten, to play the flute, once meant "to mock."

But you must flout my insufficiency. II. ii. 128.

Why will you suffer her to flout me thus? III. ii. 829.

Fond, foolish, foolishly doting on. M.E. fond or fonn-ed, p.p. of fonnen, to act as a fool. Allied to A.S. fæmne, a virgin.

Effect it with some care that he may prove
More fond on her than she upon her love. I I . i. 266
O, I am out of breath in this fond chase. I I . ii. 88.
Shall we their fond pageant see. I I I . ii. 114.
You see how simple and how fond I am. I I I . ii. 818

Fordone, tired out, done up. A.S. for- intensive prefix and dōn to do, orig. to put or place.

All with weary task fordone. V. i. 876,

Gawd or gaud, an ornament, toy, trinket. L. gaudium, gladness, joy; hence, an ornament.

And stolen the impression of her fantasy,
With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gawds, conceits. 1.1, 82.

Gleek, to jest, scoff; probably connected with "gleek/" a game at cards. O.F. glic, a game at cards.

Nay, I can gleek upon occasion. I I I . i. 146.

Gossip, a crony; formerly a sponsor in baptism. M.E. gossib, also godsib, lit., "related in god." O.Northumb. sibbo, pl. relatives. See page 77.

And sometime lurk I in a gossip's bowl. I I . 1. 48.

Henchman, a page, servant. Formerly hengestman, henseman, henshman, for hengest-man, i.e. a groom. From A.S. hengest, a horse.

I do but beg a little changeling boy
To be my henchman. Et. i. 122.

Imbrue, to moisten, drench. M.F. embruer, to imbrue. F. em (L. m, in), and bruere. O.F. bevrer. L. biberare, from bibere, to drink.

Come, blade, my breast imbrue. V. 1. 847.

Interlude, originally an entertainment in the intervals of a banquet or festival. L. inter between, and Indus, a game; ludere, to play.

To play in our interlude before the duke and the duchess on his wedding-day at night. I. ii. 6.
In this same interlude. V. I. 164.

Juvenal, youth. L. juvenalis, from juvenis, a youth.

Most briskly juvenal, and eke moat lovely Jew. III. i. 95.

Knack, trifle, toy. Of imitative origin, like knap. Orig. meant "snap"; next, "snap with the finger"; then, ¹¹ "a jester's trick"; hence joke, trifle. The word "knock" is allied to it.

Knacks, trifles, nose-gays, sweetmeats. I. i. 34.

Lakin, a contracted form of "ladykin." Lady was specially used to mean the Virgin Mary; hence lady-bird, lady's slipper, etc. A.S. hlafdige = loaf-kneeder, and dimin. Suffix-kin.

By'r lakin a parlous fear. KL i. 18.

Lanthorn, lantern. F. lanterne; through L. from Gk. Xapirrija a light, torch. The spelling lanthorn is due to the fact that horn was used for the sides of lanterns.

One must come in with a bush of thorns and a lanthorn.

This lanthorn doth the horned moon present. III. i. 60.
V. i. 239.

Latch = (1) to catch, from A.S. læcean, to seize, catch hold of; (2) to moisten, A.S. leccan, to moisten (giving prov. EI. leteh, a vessel for making lye). Professor Skeat holds that latch, in this play means "to moisten," being a causal form of leak, but I think Puck's reply, "I took him sleeping," points to the former meaning and derivation.

But hast thou yet latch'd the Athenian's eyes. III. ii. 36.

Leviathan, a whale. Late L. leviathan; Heb. livyathan, an aquatic animal, dragon, serpent; named from its twisting itself in curves.

Ere the leviathan can swim a league. II. i. 175.

Lode-star or Load-star, the polar star. Lit. the "way-star," star that leads or guides, A.S. lad, a way, a course. Similarly "lode-stone" or magnet is a stone that leads or draws.

Tour eyes are lode-stars, II. i. 183.

Mermaid, a sea-maiden; an animal with a woman's head and a fish's tail. A.S. mere, a lake; allied to L. mare, a sea; and A.S. mægden, maiden.

Heard a mermaid on a dolphin's back. I I . i. 150.

Mew, to pen up or cage. M.E. mewe, mue, a cage where hawks were kept when moulting. O.F. mue, a moulting; F. muer, to change, moult; L. mutare, to change. N.B.—The pl. mews now means a range of stabling, because the royal stables were rebuilt (1534) in a place where the royal falcons had been kept.

For aye to be in shady cloister mew'd. I . i. 71.

Mimic, actor player. L. mimicus, farcical. Gk. mũ'os, an imitator, actor, mime.

Anon his Thisbe must be answered.
And forth my mimic comes. I I I . ii. 18.

Minimus, most diminutive creature. L. minimus, superlative adjective — smallest, least.

Get you gone, you dwarf,
You minimus of hindering knot-grass made. I I I . ii. 880.

Misgraffed, misgrafted. Prefix mis, bad. L. minus and graff. O.F. graffe, a sort of pencil, also a slip for grafting, because it resembled a pointed pencil in shape. L. graphium, a style to write with.

Or else misgraffed in respect of years. 1.1.187.

Misprise, to mistake. O.F. mesprendre. See next word.

You spend your passion on a misprised mood. I I I . ii. 74

Misprision, a mistake, neglect. M.F. mesprison, error. O.F. mes-, badly. Late L. prensionem, a seizing; from L. prehendere, to take.

Of thy misprision must perforce ensue
Some true-love turn'd, and not a false turn'd true. I I I . ii. 90.

Murrion, cattle-disease. O.F. marine, a carcase of a beast; from morir, to die. L. mori. Used as an adjective in

And crows are fatted with the murrion flock. III . i. 98.

Neaf or Neif, the fist. M.E. neue (u= v). Icel. knefi, fist.

Give me your neaf Mounsieur Mustardseed. IV. i. 19.

Neeze or Neese, to sneeze. M.E. nasen; not in A.S.
Connected with G. niesen.

And waxen in their mirth and neese and swear
A merrier hour was never wasted there. II. 1. 57.

Nole, head. Also spelt "Noll," "Noule," "Nowl." A.S. knoll, the crown of the head.

An ass's nole I fixed on his head. III. ii. 17.

Ounce, a kind of lynx. P. once; M.F. lonce. Ital. lonza, which was treated as if = l'onza. Late L. type lyncea, from L. lynx, a lynx.

Be it ounce, or cat, or bear. I I 'ii. 29.

Ousel, a kind of thrash. M.E. osel. A.S. 6sl$.

The ousel-cook, so black of hue. III, i. 125.

Parlous, short for "perilous." M.P. peril. L. periculum, danger; lit. = a trial. L. perirt, to try; and suffix.
•OUS = full Of.

By'r lakin, a parlous fear. III. i. 13.

Pelting, paltry, petty. Probably connected with "paltry."
Swed. paltor, rags; Lowland Sc. paltrie = trash; and Norfolk paltry = rubbish, refuse.

Contagious fogs, which, falling in the land,
Hath every pelting river made so proud. II. 1. 91.

Prefer, to offer or present (for approval). O.P. preferer; L. præferre, to set in front. L. pra, before ferre, to bear, sefe

Our play is preferred. IV. ii. 88.

Preposterously, contrary, perversely. L. praposter-us, inverted, hind side before; with adj. suffix. -ous, and advl. suffix, ly. L. pra, before; posterns, later, coming after; from post, after.

And those things do best please me,
That Matt Preposteroualy, III. ii. 131,

Prodigious, portentous, unnatural. L. prodigimm, a token portent.

Nor mark prodigious, such as are Despised 's nativity.

V. i. 415.

Puppet, a small figure, marionette, doll. M.E. popet; M.E. poupette, a little baby, puppet; dimin. of L. pupa, a girl; allied to puer, a boy.

You counterfeit, you puppet, you.

III. ii. 290.

Purple-in-grain, red with the dye of cochineal insect. F. pourpre. L. purpura, the purple-fish; and O.F. graine. L. granum, seed. Cf. Sp. grana, the cochineal dye; and It. grana, the redness upon the surface of some work. The L. purpureus included very different shades of colour, as red, reddish, violet, brownish, etc., and in Shakespeare, purple often = red.

I will discharge it in either your straw-colour heard, your orange-tawny heard, your purple-in-grain beard. I. ii. 93.

Quail, to crush, overpower. A.S. cwelan, to die.

Quail, crush, conclude, and quell.

V. 1. 287.

Quell, to kill. A.S. cwellan, to kill; causal of cwelan, above.

Quail, crush, conclude, and quell.

V. i. 287.

Quern, a handmill for grinding grain; also spelt "kern." A.S. cweorn.

Skim milk, and sometimes labour In the quern. II. i. 86.

Recorder, a kind of small flute. "The figures of recorders, and flutes and pipes are straight; but the recorder hath a less bore, and a greater above and below. . . . In a recorder, the three uppermost holes yield one tone, which is a note lower than the tone of the first three" (BACON). From the M.E. verb record, to sing. L. recordare, to recall to mind.

He hath played on his prologue like a child on a recorder.

V. i. 122.

Reremouse, a bat. A.S. hrer emits, a bat; from the flapping of its wings. A.S. hreran, to agitate.

Some, war with rere-mice for their leathern wings II. ii. 4.

Roundel, a round dance. O.F. rondel, a poem containing a line which recurs or comes round again. (The E. roundel is commonly used in this sense.)

Come, now a roundel and a fairy song. I I. ii. 1.

Scrip, a piece of writing. M.F. escrpt, a writing. L. scriptum, pp. of scribere, to write. Not in any way connected with scrip = a small bag.

You were best to call them generally, man by man, according to the scrip. I. ii. 2.

Sheen, brightness, splendour. A.S. scene, fair, showy; allied to sceawian, to show, see.

By fountain clear or spangled starlight sheen. I I. i. 29.

Shrewd, malicious, peevish. From the M.E. shrewe, malicious; A.S. screawa, a shrew-mouse, fabled to have a very venomous bite.

Or else you are that shrewd and knavish sprite Call'd Robin Goodfellow. II 1. 83.

Sinister, on the left, evil. L. sinister, on the left hand, inauspicious.

And this the cranny is, right and sinister. Y. i. 163.

Spleen, sudden impulse; commonly of anger. L. splen. Gk. the spleen, formerly supposed to be the seat of melancholy, anger, or vexation.

That, in a spleen, unfolds both heaven and earth. I. 1. 146.

Streak, to anoint in lines or stripes. M.E. streke, more commonly strike. A.S. strica; from striecm, to stroke, rub. Allied to "strike" and "stroke."

And with the juioe of this I'll streak her eyes. I I. i. 258, Thrum', the tufted end of a weaver's thread. Connected with Icel. thrömr, the edge (as of a web). Of. G. trwnm, ends of thread, thrum.

O Fates, come, come:
Out thread and thrum. V. 1. 226,

Toy, a trifle. Du. tuig, tools, stuff, trash; whence speel-Puig, playthings, toys; lit, "stuff to play with."

These antique fables nor these fairy toys. V. 1. 18,

Translate, to transform. F. *translato*r. L. translates, transferred used as pp. of transfere.

The rest I'll give to be to you translated. I. i. 191.

Bless thee, Bottom! bless thee I thou art translated. III. i. 118.

Vaward, another spelling of vanward or vanguard, the front part (generally of an army). O.F. avant-warde ; later, avant-garde.

We have the vaward of the day IV. i. 106.

Votaress, a female, devoted, as by a vow, to any particular service or state of life. Der. from L. votum, p.p. of vovere, to vow.

Her mother was a votaress of my order. II. I. 125.

And the imperial votaress passed on,
In maiden meditation fancy-free. II. i. 104.

Weed, a garment. A.S. wād, a garment; lit. something woven.

Weed wide enough to wrap a fairy in, II. i. 257.

Weeds of Athens he doth wear. II. ii. 71

Wood, mad, furious. A.S. wdd, mad, raging. Perhaps allied to L. vates, a prophet; and to the name Woden, seen in "Wednesday."

Thou told'st me they were stolen into this wood:
And here au). and wood within this wood' II. i. 192.

EXAMINATION PAPERS.

ACT I. SCENE I.

1. Describe the relation in which the following characters stand towards one another at the opening of the action of the play: Herinia, Helena, Lysander, Demetrius.
2. Explain the following with reference to the context:
 - (i) Earthlier happy is the rose distilled,
 - (ii) The coarse of true love never did run smooth,
 - (iii) Sickness is catching; O. were favour so.
3. Who were the Amazons? In what way are they connected with this play?
4. In what sense does Shakespeare use the following words: solemnities, spleen, translated, companies, beguiled?
6. Explain the allusions in the following: the Carthage queen; the sharp Athenian law; Phoebe doth behold her silver visage; therefore is love said to be a child,

ACT I. SCENE II.

1. What is the meaning of the word interlude? Name the characters of the interlude in Midsummer Night's Dream,
2. Explain fully: Phobus' car; this is Ercole's vein; a wandering knight; purple-in-grain beard.
3. Give the meaning of the following expressions, and show the connection in which they severally occur in the play; to the rest; there is a play fitted; I will draw a bill of properties; hold, or cut bowstrings.
4. Comment upon the grammar of the following: you were best; an you should do it too terribly; I will roar you an't were any nightingale; we shall be dogged with company.
5. Give briefly your opinion of Bottom's character as shewn in this scene. Quote examples of his verbal errors.

ACT I. AND INTRODUCTION I.—XXX.

1. Give with dates the principal events of Shakespeare's life.
2. At what period of Shakespeare's career was A Midsummer Night's Dream composed? What other plays belong to the same period?
5. Give the context of the following passages and explain them;

I beg the ancient privilege of Athens,
 But earthlier happy is the rose distilled,
 Wings and no eye figure murther-haste,
 A very good piece of work I assure you.

4. Explain the allusions in: do observance to a morn of May; 1 woo'd thee with my sword; when the false Trojan under sail was seen; my chief humour is for a tyrant; on Diana's altar to protest; the foolish fates.
5. Oozment on the metre, and, where necessary, on the grammar of the following:
 Thanks, good Egeus; what's the news with thee?
 Whether, if you yield not to your father's choice.
 So quick bright things come to confusion.
6. Give examples from this Act of (1) Anachronisms, (2) the use of rhyme

ACT II. SCENE I.

1. Give the substance of this scene from the commencement to the entrance of Oberon and Titania.
2. What was the cause and what were the results of the quarrel between the fairy king and queen?
3. Who uses the following expressions and to whom do they severally apply: thou lob of spirits; the bouncing Amazon; you hard-hearted adamant; a sweet Athenian lady t
4. Explain the following, quoting where you can in illustration of your meaning: fairy favours; withered dewlap; middle summer's spring; childing autumn; western flower; luscious woodbine,
5. Quote from the play in illustration of the rapidity of Puck's movements.
6. Scan (i.e. mark the feet and accented syllables in) the following lines:

That rheumatic diseases do abound,
 But, room, fairy I here comes Oberon
 Over hill, over dale,
 Thorough bush, thorough brier.

ACT II. SCENE II.

- L. Give some account of the occupations of the fairies.
4. What consequences result from Puck's anointing the eyes of Ly gander instead of those of Demetrius?
- i. By whom, to whom, and under what circumstances were the following lines spoken?
 (i) With half that wish the wisher's eyes be press'd,
 (ii) And run through ore I will for thy sweet sake,
 (iii) Methought a serpent eat my heart away,
 And you sat smiling at his cruel prey.
4. Give the meaning, and where you can, the derivation of the following words: roundel, rare-mice, weeds, ounce, btshrew, flout.

5. Explain anything unusual in the grammar of the following: worm nor snail, do no offence; I ham forgot our way; The more my prayer, the lesser is my grace; never mayst thou come Lysander near I speak an if you hear.

ACT II. AND INTRODUCTION XXX.—XVXX.

1. Name some of the sources to which Shakespeare may have gone for suggestions for A Midsummer Night's Dream, and state what amount of assistance he may have derived from each.
2. What characteristics distinguish this play from any other of Shakespeare's with which you may be familiar?
3. Give an account of what is known as "Oberon's Vision." What explanations have been offered of the allegory contained in it?
4. Explain the following with reference to their context:
 - (i) The king doth keep his revels here to-night,
 - (ii) And the imperial votaress passed on,
In maiden meditation fancy-free,
 - (iii) Wake when some vile thing is near,
 - (iv) No, no, I am as ugly as a bear.
5. Explain the following words and phrases: changeling, nine men t morris, henchman, vestal, wood within this wood, adamant, pard, dartyng.
6. Explain the allusions in: amorous Phillida, Neptune's yellow sands; Cupid's fiery shaft; Apollo flies and Daphne holds the chase.

ACT III. SCENE I.

1. Show that Bottom performs all the duties which should properly have fallen to the share of Quince.
2. Describe the effect of Bottom's transformation upon his fellows.
8. With what unusual or obsolete meaning does Shakespeare employ the following words: bully, toward, eke, quill, still, courtesies.
4. Describe the circumstances under which the following passages were spoken, and explain them where explanation is needed.
 - (i) There is not a more fearful wild-fowl than your lion living.
 - (ii) What hempen home-spans have we swaggering here?
 - (iii) Mine ear is much enamoor'd of thy note.
 - (iv) I pray you, commend me to Mistress Squash, your mother, and to Master Feaseod, your father.
5. Notice any peculiarities of expression in the following extracts: for the more Utter assurances there is two hard things; Not so neither; I thall desire you of more acquaintance; he is to com' again'

ACT III. SCENE I I .

1. Give some account of the simultaneous wooing of Helena by Lysander and Demetrius.
2. How is the close intimacy formerly existing between Helena and Hermia described in this scene, and by whom?
3. Contrast the personal appearances of Hermia and Helena.
- t. Explain the following extracts and give the context in each oase:
 - (i) AU fancy-sick she is and pale of cheer.
 - (11) Dark night, that from the eye hLB function takes.
The ear more quick of apprehension makes,
 - (til) How low am I, thou painted maypole T speak.
5. Give the meaning and if possible the derivation of: latch'd, misprised, preposterously, aby, shrewishness, minus.

ACT III. AND INTRODUCTION XVII.—XX.

1. Show how the title chosen for the play is appropriate to the subject and to the treatment of it.
2. Give an account of the rehearsal of the Interlude and of its abrupt termination.
3. Quote a few lines from different speeches of the fairies and explain their metre.
4. Give in your own words the meaning of the following passages :
 - (i) Then fate o'er-roles, that, one man holding troth,
A million fail, confounding oath on oath.
 - (U) That pure congealed white, high Taurus' snow,
Fann'd with the eastern wind, turns to a crow,
When thou hold'st up thy hand,
 - (til) Two of the first, like coats in heraldry,
Doe but to one, and crowned with one crest.
5. In what connection, and with what meaning are the following phrases found: plain-song, cuckoo, briskly, juvenal, night-rule, barren sort, when truth kills truth ?
6. Write a note upon Shakespeare's treatment of Classical Subjects in the play.

ACT III. AND INTRODUCTION XX.-XXIII

1. To what extent can Shakespeare's fairy kingdom be said to have been due to his own imagination?
2. What are the principal characteristics of Shakespeare's fairies? Give quotations.

8. Explain fully the allusions contained in the following:
 - (i) I'll meet thee, Pyramus, at Ninny's tomb,
 - (ii) SO displease
Her brother's noontide with the Antipodes,
 - (iii) Hit with Cupid's archery,
 - (iv) With drooping fog as black as Acheron.
4. By whom, to whom, and under what circumstances were the following spoken:
 - (i) I am a spirit of no common sort.
All fancy-sick she is and pale of cheer,
 - (ii) With sighs of love, that costs the fresh blood dear.
 - (iii) I have no gift at all in shrewishness,
6. Explain: written in eight and six, odious savours sweet' a crew of patches, rude mechanicals, two artificial gods, an union in partition,
6. Quote and explain any examples you can remember in this scene of unusual or peculiar grammatical forms.

ACT IV. SCENE I.

1. Where, and under what circumstances did Oberon first begin to pity Titania?
2. Describe Bottom's demeanour amongst the fairies.
3. Give an account of the awakening to their senses of the two pairs of Athenian lovers.
4. Explain the following phrases showing the connection in which each occurs: the vaward of the day, a cry more tuneable, match'd in mouth like bells, each under each, three and three, a patched foci.
5. Comment upon the metre of the following lines:
 - (i) The squirrel's hoard, and fetch thee new nuts,
 - (ii) Uncouple in the western valley; let them go.
 - (iii) Melted as the snow seems to me now.

ACT IV. SCENES I. AND II.

1. Give in your own words the substance of the second scene, and shew how it serves to connect the preceding scene with what follows.
2. How do you suppose Bottom to have been occupied in the interval between these two scenes?
8. What reason can you suggest to account for the fact that part of this scene is in prose, part in verse?

4. Explain with reference to the context the following:
 - (i) So doth the woodbine, the sweet honeysuckle.
Gently entwist.
 - (ii) Of this discourse we more will hear anon.
 - (iii) I will tell you everything right, as it fell out.
5. Explain: he is transported, our play is preferred, so flew'd, so sanded, give me your neaf, an exposition of steep.

ACT IV. AND INTRODUCTION XXIV.-XXVII.

1. Shew that the Elizabethan was a transitional period with respect to the written language.
1. What contemporary or historical allusions are contained in this play? Which of them may be supposed to throw light on the question of the date?
8. What part is played in this act by Theseus and Hippolyta?
 - i Comment upon the grammar of the following expressions: I could munch your good dry bats; the best wit of any handicraft man in Athens; 1 wonder of their being there together; so flew'd, so sanded,
5. By whom, to whom, and under what circumstances were the following passages spoken:
 - (i) I have a reasonable good ear in music
 - (ii) I was with Hercules and Cadmus once,
 - (iii) I beg the law, the law upon his head.
 - (IV) We are to utter sweet breath.

ACT V. SCENE X.

1. Enumerate the various forms of entertainment offered by Philostrate for the Duke's acceptance, with his comments on each.
2. Give, and enlarge upon, Shakespeare's views (as expressed by Theseus' on dramatists and dramatic performances.
8. Explain the following with reference to their context;
 - O) Out of this silence yet I pluck'd a welcome,
 - CM) This is the silliest stuff that ever I heard.
 - (Ul) I am sent with broom before,
To sweep the dust behind the door.
4. In what senses are the following words used? Give the derivation of as many as you can, abridgment, conn'd, recorder, high, fell, Bergomask.

6. Explain the allusions contained in the following:

- (i) Bees Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt,
- (ii) The riot of the tipsy Bacchanals.
- (iii) As Shafalus to Procris I to you.
- (iv) O Sisters Three.

ACT V. AND INTRODUCTION XXXV. ~ XXXV.

1. What are the points of resemblance and of contrast between this play and The Tempest?
2. Sketch with quotations from the play the character of Theseus.
5. Give an account of the Interlude as performed by Bottom and his fellow-Athenians.
4. Explain the following: our after-supper, unbreathed memories, this fellow ioth not stand upon points, 'tide life, Hide death, no die but an ace,
6. Quote the concluding speech of the play and point out its resemblance to an epilogue.
6. What reference is made in this act to the Fates, Hero and Leander, the Muses?

ACT V. AND INTRODUCTION XXXV.—XXXIX.

1. Sketch, with quotations, the character of Bottom.
2. Give an account of the incidents of the last act of the play.
8. Give examples from this play of puns or verbal quibbles.
4. Explain the following and give the context of each:
 - (i) Out thread and thrum.
AD No epilogue, I pray you; for your play needs no exouse.
 - (ii) Through this house each fairy stray.
- ft. Explain the names: Bottom, Flute, Quince, the Puck.
6. Discuss the grammar of the following:
 - (i) A lion fell, nor else no lion's dam.
 - (ii) Hard-handed men... which never labour'd.
- Oil) But all the story . . . And all their minds transfigured to together More witeaseth.

CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATION.

JUNIOR STUDENTS.

A.

1. What are the special characteristics of (a) the versification, (b) the action of this play? Account for its title.
2. Express in English prose the exact meaning of the following passage:
The. Such tricks hath strong imagination,
 That, if it would but apprehend some joy,
 It comprehends some bringer of that joy:
 Or in the night, imagining some fear,
 How easy is a bush supposed a bear!
Hip. But all the story of the night told over,
 And all their minds transfigured so together,
 More witnesseth than fancy's images
 And grows to something of great constancy;
 But, nowsoever, strange and admirable.
8. Explain the following passages. By whom, to whom, and in reference to what, were they said?
 (a) And what poor duty cannot do, noble respect
 Takes it in might, not merit.
 (b) Skim milk, and sometimes labour in the quern
 And bootless make the breathless housewife churn.
 (c) And, at our stamp, here o'er and o'er one falls,
 (d) All fancy-sick she is and pale of cheer,
 With sighs of love, that costs the fresh blood dear,
 (e) My lord, I shall reply amazedly
 Half sleep, half waking.
 (f) The riot of the tipsy Bacchanals,
 Tearing the Thracian singer in their rage.
4. That which is perhaps most remarkable about this play is the harmonious blending in it of widely different elements. Illustrate this criticism with regard to the characters and the scenery.
5. What historical events have been supposed to be alluded to in the course of the play?

B.

1. Write out (observing carefully the proper division of the line) the passage beginning Welcome, good Robin . . . and ending Athenian swain: or that beginning These are forgeries . . . and ending undistinguishable.
2. In the following passage
 (a) Write notes on the words in italics.
 (b) Describe the metre of the first and third lines.
*I know a bank where the wild thyme blows,
 Where oxlip' and the nodding violet grow;
 Quite over-canopied with lush woodbine.
 With sweet musk-roses and with eglantine'*

3. Explain the following words and phrases, and give the derivation where you can. Latch'd, recorded, parlous, properties, plain-song, mural, rere-mice, cue, coil, sanded.
4. With what unusual or obsolete meaning does Shakespeare employ the following words? Artificial, argument, translated, pensioners, square, glance at,
5. Notice any peculiarities of expression in the following extracts:
 - (a) I am to discourse wonders
 - (b) Which, when I saw rehearsed, I must confess Made mine eyes water.
 - (c) This is the greatest error of all the rest

CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATION.

SENIOR STUDENTS.

A.

1. State shortly the external evidence as to the date of this play, and the exact amount of information given by that evidence. Discuss the inferences as to the date which have been drawn from the following passages:—
 - (a) And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear.
 - (b) One sees more devils than vast hell can hold.
 - (c) The thrice three Muses mourning for the death
Of Learning, late deceased in beggary.
2. Justify from the incidents of the play the title, A Midsummer Night's Dream.
3. Point out and explain any linguistic or grammatical peculiarities in the following:
 - (a) How chance the roses that do fade so fast.
 - (b) I shall deBire you of more acquaintance.
 - (c) Both warbling of one song.
 - (d) With sighs of love, that costs the fresh blood dear.
 - (e) What thought I be not so in grace as you.
Bo hung upon with love, so fortunate,
But miserable most, to love unloved?
 - if) A crew of patches, ruck mechanicals.
4. Explain the meaning and derivation of the following words or phrases:
aby, dkeek byjole, gleeh, lots, nole, quern, thread and thrum.

B.

1. Explain:—

- (a) And certain stars shot madly from their spheres,
To hear the sea-maid's music.
- (b) I could play Ercles rarely, or a part to tear a cat in, to make all split
- (c) Will it please you . . . to hear a Bergomask dance,
- (d) The triple Hecate's team.
- (e) For night's swift dragon's cut the clouds full fast'.
And yonder stones Aurora's harbinger.

3. Comment upon and explain the following names :—

- (a) Theseus, Duke of Athena.
- (b) Oberon, king of the fairies.
- (c) Titania, queen of the fairies.
- (d) The Pack.

8. Illustrate from the play:

- (a) The fairies' dislike to daylight;
- (b) Their stealing mortal children;
- (c) Their dancing in the "fairy rings";
- (d) Their occasional services to mankind.

4. What varieties of rhymed verse are used in this play? Explain their construction, and give an instance of each variety. Mention and account for the occasions on which and the characters by whom (a) blank verse, (b) rhyme, (c) prose is used in the play?

5. Quote either eight lines beginning:

But we are spirits of another sort,

or eleven lines beginning:

The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling.

COLLEGE OF PRECEPTORS' CERTIFICATE EXAMINATION, MIDSUMMER.

FIRST CLASS.

1. Write a brief outline of the Play. (Not more than twenty lines).
2. Say what you know of any five of the following:—Neptune, Cadmus, Philomel, the Thracian singer, the false Trojan, Oupid, Ninus, Limander.
3. Explain any four of the following expressions as found in this play; name the Speakers, and state the circumstances :—
 - (i) This spotted and Inconstant man.
 - (ii) The murrian flock,
 - (iii) The nine men's morris,
 - (iv) A misprised mood,
 - (v) All this coil is 'long of yon.
 - (vi) Drawn and ready.
- i. Give the meaning and (if you can) the derivation of:—patent, waxen (the) waxen in their mirth), gleek, henchman, disparage, methinka, abridgment, darkling, neaf, gait.
6. Either (a) Quote the twelve consecutive lines, either of one of the Fairies' songs, or beginning with one of these lines ;—
 - (i) That very time I saw——
 - (ii) We, Hermia, like two——
 - (iii) Lovers and madman have.

(Verse written like prose will obtain no marks),

Or (b) Paraphrase:—

Then let us teach our trial patience.

Because it is a customary cross.

As da© to love as thoughts, and dreams and sighs,

Wishes and tears, poor fancy's followers."

COLLEGE OF PRECEPTORS.

FIRST CLASS.

1. Describe the characters and attributes of Puok. What part does he act in this play ?

2. By whom were the following words spoken ? to whom ? and on what occasions ? (Answer concerning four only).

(i) The cold fruitless noon.

(ii) The course of true love never did run smooth,

(iii) The nine men's morris is filled up with mud.

(iv) You speak all your part at once, cues and all.

(v) Come, sit thee down upon this flow'ry bed.

(vi) A local habitation and a name.

8. Write out one of the following:—

(i) Seven lines following. And I serve the fairy queen.

(ii) Seven lines following. I know a bank where the wild thyme blows,

(iii) Seven lines following. My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind.

(Verse written like prose will obtain no mark).

Answer only one of the remaining questions.

4. What are the Shakespearian forms of the following words and phrases?
graft, momentary, eyes, I will go and tell, through, margin lantern, apricot, the others, vanguard, (Answer concerning four only, remarking in detail on the four you select).

5. It is the wittiest partition that ever I heard in discourse.

What is the meaning of this sentence, both with and without the preposition ?

6 Either (a) Paraphrase:—

Hoary-headed frosts

Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose,

And on old Helms' thin and icy crown

An odorous chaplet of sweet sumirer birds,

Is, as lu mockery, set.

Or

(a) Scan the following lines, suggesting correction if necessary:—

Whether, if sou yield not to your father's choice.

Swifter than the moon's sphere.

But room, fairy I here come Oberon.

I know a bank where the wild thyme blows

Melted as the snow, seems to me now.

AIDS TO THE STUDY OF SHAKESPEARE.

WORKS OF REFERENCE:

It has been thought desirable in the interest of teachers as well as of those students of Shakespeare who possess both time and inclination to continue their studies beyond the limits of this edition, to present here a list of the various works which have been consulted in the preparation of this volume.

Dowden's Shakespeare, His Mind and Art.

Gervinus' Shakespeare Commentaries.

Coleridge's Lectures on Shakespeare.

Karl Elze's Essays on Shakespeare.

Hazlitt's Character of Shakespeare.

Sidney Lee's Shakespeare's Life and Work.

Hudson's Shakespeare's Life, Art and Character.

Drake's Shakespeare and his Times.

Scottowe's Life of Shakespeare.

Moulton's Shakespeare as a Dramatic Artist.

Phipson's Animal Lore of Shakespeare's Time.

Hazlitt's English Poets and Comic Writers.

Lang's Secret Commonwealth of Elves, Fauns and Fairies.

Lang's Perrault, Popular Tales.

Hazlitt's Fairy Mythology of Shakespeare.

Schmidt's Shakespeare Lexicon.

Kare's Glossary.

Mrs. Gowden Clarke's Concordance.

Dr. Johnson's Dictionary.

Skeat's Etymological Dictionary,

Smith's Classical Dictionary,

The Encyclopaedia Britannica.

The Essays of Bacon, Carlisle, Emerson and Lamb.

Ben Jonson's Masque and Entertainments. Ed. Hy. Morley.

Chaucer's and, Spenser's Works.

Chambers' Book of Days.

Saintsbury's Elizabethan Literature.

Hazlitt's Shakespeare's Plays and Poems.

Knight's Pictorial Edition of Shakespeare.

The Henry Irving Shakespeare.

The Clarendon Press Edition of Shakespeare.

The Temple Edition of Shakespeare.

The Globe Edition of Shakespeare's Works.

The Windsor, Warwick, Pitt Press Editions of the play.

Bianchi's Mythology of Greece and Rome.

Standing's Greek and Roman Mythology.

Abbott's Shakespearian Grammar,

Mayor's Chapters English Metre.

Skeat's Principles of English Etymology;

Nesfield's "English Grammar, Past and Present.

Dowden's Shakespeare

