AT THE FLEETWAY HOUSE

EDITOR'S NOTE

NOT for many years has an effort been made to provide a Gazetteer of the World; none exists that is not largely out of date. Yet in no department of information is a new work of reference more needed than in that of Geography—"human," economic, and descriptive—because of the numerous changes in place-names and territorial readjustments since the war, not to say the astonishing alterations in population statistics necessitated by post-war census-taking. It is hoped to meet this need with this new work, which can certainly claim to be the only up-to-date compilation of its kind.

THE editor's aim has been to compress a maximum of information, both textual and pictorial, into the space at his disposal, and to supply really useful information about some twenty thousand different places throughout the world. He could have printed mere lists of places extending to two or three times twenty thousand, but has preferred to offer ampler information about a lesser number. He also feels that his readers will value the considerable body of interesting and authoritative matter which is given about the chief living races of mankind. And he is sure of approval for the alphabetical arrangement of the contents, so essential to ready reference.

IN compiling the Gazetteer the latest statistics from all countries have been consulted, and particular care has been taken to secure accurate information about all the ports and trade centres of the world, and indeed all details of economic geography, so that our work should be valuable not only to the student and the general reader but also to the man of business, who will find it a desirable addition to his office books of reference. The latest available information about air routes and wireless stations has also been included. All our maps and town plans have been subjected to thorough revision and embody the most recent cartographic data from official sources.

ADRIAN. City of Michigan, U.S.A. On the river Raisin, 211 m. by rly. E. of Chicago, it is served by the New York Central and other rlys. It has churches, colleges, and schools and some manufactories. Pop. 12,000.

ADRIANOPLE. Vilayet of the republic of Turkey. It is called also Edirne. Pop. 150,840.

ADRIANOPLE. City of Turkey. It stands on the Maritza at its junction with the Tunja 137 m. by rly. W.N.W. of Istanbul (Constantinople). In addition to the 16th century mosque of Selim II, a ruined palace, and a Byzantine Bridge, it has an immense bazaar, barracks, hospitals, schools, and municipal and military buildings, and is the seat of a Greek archbishop.

Named after the emperor Hadrian, who rebuilt it, the city was the capital of the Ottoman Empire from 1361 to 1453. Here, on Aug. 9, 378, a great battle was fought, resulting in the defeat of the Romans by the Goths. In 1913, then a modern fortress, it was captured from the Turks by the Bulgarians and Serbians. It was given back to the Turks at the peace. In 1829 peace between Russia and Turkey was signed here. Pop. 34,528.

ADRIATIC SEA. Arm of the Mediterranean, the ancient Mare Adriaticum. Extending N.W. between Italy and Yugoslavia, its length is 470 m., mean breadth 110 m., and area, including islands, about 52,000 sq. m. The W. shore is comparatively low, with few inlets; the E. is steep, rocky, barren, broken, and fringed with islands. The Dalmatian and Albanian coasts are picturesque, and near Cattaro high mountains dip down to the sea. Its fisheries give occupation to the seafaring population of the western coasts and islands. The chief ports are Venice, Ancona, Bari, and Brindisi on the W.; Trieste, Pola, Fiume, Zara, Ragusa, Cattaro, Durazzo, and Valona (Avlona) on the E. In addition to Italy and Yugoslavia, Albania has a coastline on this sea. During the Great War there was fighting for the control of the Adriatic. With the arrival of the German submarines, which did considerable damage to the Italian fleet, the British sent a squadron to protect the nets and mines. In 1918 it was found possible to close the Sea to the enemy by placing a barrage across the straits of Otranto. In 1919 serious difficulties arose about the possession of the eastern, or Austrian, side of the Adriatic, with its islands. In 1920, by the treaty of Rapallo, Italy and Yugoslavia came to terms, each obtaining additions of territory.

AFGHANISTAN. Country of Asia. It lies to the N.W. of India, and covers some 250,000 or 275,000 sq. m. Kabul is the capital; other large towns are Kandahar, Herat, and Mozar-i-Sharif. The people are Mahomedans. The country is mountainous, but has fertile valleys. There are no railways, and roads are few. The people speak Persian, Pushtu and Turkish. Pop. 11,000,000.

GOVERNMENT. The country is under a king, this title having replaced that of amir in 1926. He is assisted by a cabinet and a national council which consists of 106 members. A general council meets about every four years. There is an army and a small air force.

TRADE AND FINANCE. The chief products are cereals, fruit and vegetables. Carpets and silk fabrics are manufactured; there is a little mining. Trade is chiefly with India and Persia, goods being carried through the passes on the backs of animals. Silver and copper coins are used. The metric system is in force, but local measures are also employed.

HISTORY. The history of Afghanistan dates from the 5th century, B.C., but its modern history begins only about 1747 when the Durani dynasty seized the throne. During the 19th century the land was important politically owing to its position between India and Russian territory. In 1838 the British invaded the country and occupied Kabul for some time, but in 1841 the force there was massacred. The city was recaptured in 1842, and steps taken to make British influence paramount. The amir, however, intrigued with Russia, and in 1878 a second war began and Britain took control of Afghanistan's foreign policy. Massacres of British subjects led to the invasion of the country by a force under Lord Roberts who marched from Kabul to Kandahar and defeated the Afghans.

Afghanistan. Buffer state between Soviet Russia and India. It is mostly mountainous country broken by rocky ravines and fertile plains

In 1881 Abdur Rahman became amir, and in 1901 his son Habibullah succeeded him. The latter was murdered in 1919 when his third son Amanullah became ruler. He began a campaign against Britain, but was defeated at all points and forced to make peace. In 1929, owing to his introduction of western customs, there was a serious rising, during which he and his family and the British residents in Kabul were rescued by the British Air Force. He subsequently abdicated in favour of the rebel leader, Habibullah, but the latter was soon defeated and the soldier Nadir Khan, was chosen king. Relations with the Soviet government, during these years, were sometimes strained. A main cause of irritation was the extension by the Russians of the Orenburg–Tashkent Rly. to the Uzbegistan border.

AFRAGOLA. Town of Italy. It is 5 m. N. of Naples.

AFRICA. Continent forming a S.W. extension of Asia, to which it is attached by the isthmus of Suez. From N. to S. it stretches about 5,000 m., and about 4,600 m. from its W. to E. extremes. The total area is about 11,500,000 sq. m., and the estimated population some 150,000,000.

The coastline is almost unbroken. Orographically the continent may be divided into four regions: (1) the coastal plains; (2) the Atlas region of N. Africa; (3) the north and west African plains, including the Sahara; and (4) the great southern and eastern tablelands. In the southern plateau there are a number of ridges, and in equatorial regions many craters of extinct volcanoes, such as Kilima-Njaro (20,000 ft.) and Kenya (18,500 ft.). The principal rivers are the Nile, Congo, Niger and Zambezi, and about two-thirds of the continent drains towards the Atlantic. There is a vast interior lake system, including Lakes Victoria, Tanganyika, and Nyasa in the E., and Lake Chad in West Africa. The principal deserts are the Sahara, Libyan and Nubian in the N., and Kalahari in the S.

Typical flora includes the date-palm in the Sahara oases, rubber-yielding lianas, the oil-palm and other economic plants in W. and Central Africa, mahogany and ebonies in the vast forests of the coastal region and of the Congo basin, cedar and the Iben camphor in British East Africa, etc. The African fauna proper includes the giraffe, single-humped camel, buffalo, zebra, rhinoceros, lion, leopard, elephant, chimpanzee, gorilla and baboon. Gold is found over wide districts, especially in the S.; iron ore is worked in Algeria, copper in the Belgian Congo, and coal chiefly in S. Africa.

There are four main language groups: Bantu (S. Central Africa), Sudanic (W.), Hamitic (chiefly N.), and Semitic (N.E.). The two former are negro groups and together comprise about 1,170 languages, while there are 50 Hamitic languages. The Semitic languages are intrusive and belong to Asia. The majority of the inhabitants are negroes; others include Bushmen and Hottentots, Eastern Hamites, Libyans, occupying Algeria and Morocco, Semites or Arabs, and numerous tribes of mixed race.

The British Empire in Africa, including mandated areas, comprises some 4,000,000 sq. m., with an estimated population of 50,000,000. The French possessions cover 4,200,000 sq. m. and have a population of about 35,000,000. The chief of the British possessions are the Union of South Africa, with the S.W. Africa Protectorate, which it governs for the League of Nations, the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, Rhodesia (Northern and Southern), and the protectorates of Kenya, Nigeria, Uganda, Somaliland and Nyasaland. Other areas are Zanzibar, Sierra Leone, Mauritius, Gold Coast and Gambia. Tanganyika Territory and parts of Cameroons and Togoland are governed under mandate. The Congo Free State was annexed by Belgium in 1908.

French possessions comprise parts of Morocco, Madagascar, Algeria, Tunis, a vast tract in N. and W. Africa which includes most of the Sahara, and part of the Congo as well as parts of Togoland

AIR ROUTES. Since the end of the Great War of 1914–18, when the aeroplane was developed to a high state of efficiency, the carrying of mails, goods and passengers by air has made rapid strides By the end of 1932 the regular air transport routes of the world totalled approximately 200,000 miles and the number of miles flown by aeroplanes over these routes with mails, goods and passengers, over 100,000,000 These figures take no account of the very large amount of subsidiary flying and casual traffic in goods and passengers New air routes are being surveyed and developed and considerable extensions are certain in the near future

The main air routes of the world may conveniently be divided into (1) British and British Empire routes, (2) European air routes and their extensions, (3) air routes of the American continents, (4) miscellaneous air routes

British Routes From London (Croydon airport) run the great Empire routes to India and Cape Town The former is being extended across India to Australia The London to India route by Imperial Airways, Ltd, a government subsidised company, runs to Paris, by train to Brindisi and by air from Brindisi via Athens, Gaza, Baghdad to Karachi The aeroplanes leave London each Saturday and arrive at Karachi the following Friday They depart from Karachi on Wednesday and arrive in London the following Tuesday The length of the route is 4,847 miles The route when complete will have a branch from Karachi to Bombay and Madras, and another from Karachi to Delhi, Calcutta, Rangoon, Singapore, Batavia and Darwin (Australia), so linking up with the Australian airways These practically encircle the continent, running from Daly Waters to Cloncurry, Brisbane and Sydney and from Adelaide to Kalgoorlie and Perth and up to Wyndham. Experimental air mail services have already been run from London to Australia to obtain the necessary data for flying over this 10,000 miles route With the route organized for a regular service the time from London to Australia will be 11–12 days

The London–Cape Town route branches from the India route at Athens for Alexandria, Cairo, Luxor, Khartoum, Nairobi, Salisbury, Johannesburg, Kimberley and Cape Town, a total distance of 8,359 miles. There are subsidiary services to Mombasa, Durban, Bloemfontein, Port Elizabeth and Windhoek, services which are being steadily extended Imperial Airways machines leave Croydon for Cape Town each Wednesday and arrive at Cape Town the following Sunday week. The return air mail leaves on Wednesday and reaches London on Sunday week.

The London–Paris service (225 miles) is operated three times daily during the summer and twice daily in winter by Imperial Airways machines. During the summer the company operate a daily service, London–Paris–Basel–Zurich (535 miles) and London–Brussels–Cologne (320 miles) The latter service is operated on alternate days during the winter in conjunction with the Belgian company The possibilities of a regular Trans-Atlantic service are well within sight and a preliminary survey of the route and the type of aircraft required has already been made The service will run via the Azores and Bermuda.

European Routes All the European capitals are connected by air From Berlin regular services run to Oslo and Stockholm, to Amsterdam, Brussels and Paris, to Milan, Florence, Rome and Athens, to Danzig and Moscow, and to Vienna, Belgrade and Istanbul (Constantinople) The air traffic net on the continent is so complete that practically every important city is served by air mail and between most there is also a passenger service The continental air routes are such, in fact, that the quickest route between any two important towns is by air The European air routes are being steadily extended eastwards from Moscow and Istanbul From Amsterdam to the Netherlands East Indies a weekly service is run summer and winter, the winter route following Marseilles - Rome - Brindisi - Athens - Tobruk-Cairo-Baghdad and so to Batavia, and the summer route taking the more direct route over Central Europe

In Russia Moscow is connected by air with Leningrad, Kiev, Odessa and a number of towns in Siberia, Asia Minor, Persia, etc A line runs from Moscow via Nishni Novgorod to Irkutsk and is being extended to China

From Paris runs the great Aero-postale service via Lyons, Marseilles, Barcelona, Tangier, Casablanca, Agadir and St Louis to Natal in South America The south Atlantic sea route, at present covered by fast mail boats, is being flown shortly by flying boats

American Routes America, both north and south, has developed trans continental air lines on a greater scale than the rest of the world as there are fewer political handicaps in the way of development There are over 120 scheduled air services at present in operation in the United States of America and extending into Canada, the West Indies and Central and South America In Canada the air line runs in the winter months from Anticosti to Montreal for the carrying of mails From Winnipeg via Regina, Medicine Hat, Calgary and Resolution a service runs to Aklavik A regular service is being inaugurated from Montreal to Winnipeg and across the Canadian Rockies to Vancouver During the summer months there are various subsidiary companies operating

In the United States the chief cities are connected by air and there are regular air mail routes from New York to Washington, Charleston, Cuba, the Panama area and South America to the south, and to Chicago, Kansas City, Salt Lake City, San Francisco and Los Angeles to the west. Mexico, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua are all served by U S A air lines In 1931 nearly 50,000,000 m were flown on the U S A air lines and over 500,000 passengers carried

From Natal in South America the air services run south to Pernambuco Bahia-Rio Janeiro-Rio Grande-Monte Video and across to Valparaiso and north again to Lima-Guayaquil-Buenaventura-Barranquilla-Jamaica and Miami A number of inland towns are served, in addition to those flown over along the coast line An airship service operates between Friedrichshafen and Pernambuco at irregular scheduled intervals and airships are under construction to develop this and other oceanic services on a regular basis.

The following table gives the route mileage and miles flown throughout the world on regular air transport. There is a very large amount of casual air transport which considerably adds to the figures

Year	Route Mileage	Miles Flown
1920	9,700	2,969,000
1925	34,000	13,011,000
1929	125,800	53,379,000
1930	156,800	69,505,000
1931	185,100	83,500,000

Among the casual air transport is air taxi work for carrying passengers across country not adequately served by the railways or regular air transport lines In Great Britain in 1932 over 160,000 passengers were flown in air taxis A development of this type of service is short cross-country air lines during certain seasons of the year, or for special purposes An example of this service is the Hillman air lines between Romford and Clacton during the summer months and the development of services for the business man between Bristol and Cardiff

A regular air transport service requires a large ground organization This involves the laying out and maintenance at regular intervals of aerodromes, the supply of spare parts and fuel for the aircraft on the route, the dissemination of meteorological information and the arrangements for the handling of goods, mails and passengers On most of the great air routes there already exists an elaborate ground organization for regular daily air travel Ultimately the air mail and passenger-carrying aircraft must travel day and night, as do the railway train and the steamship

The provision of a ground organization for night flying services involves the use of lighted airways. Experimental night air mail services have been flown from London to the Continent and on various parts of the Continent With their arrival a letter posted in London by the ordinary country post will be delivered at breakfast time in most of the European capitals, and all these capitals will be in communication with one another in a similar time

In the United States some 40 per cent. of the air mail is flown at night, and in 1931 there were over 17,000 miles of airways lighted or under construction for night flying in that country alone The airways are lighted by beacons of some two million candle power placed at every 10 miles Different coloured lights are used for marking out the aerodromes and emergency landing grounds These latter grounds are placed at every 20 to 30 miles and are in telephonic communication with the main aerodromes The equipment of the chief aerodromes for night-flying includes boundary lights, flood lights, and illuminated wind direction indicators Night-flying aeroplanes must carry navigation lights similar to those on ships at sea and signalling lights and emergency lights below the wings to assist the pilots in making a landing By means of wireless direction-finding apparatus a pilot is able to keep on the air route under conditions of bad visibility

Under the International Air Convention, which was drawn up after the World War, a permanent international commission for air navigation was formed which meets at regular intervals to discuss questions relating to international air traffic over the long distance air routes Under the international air regulations aircraft must be marked and registered, carry papers similar to those on ocean-going vessels, and conform to certain air navigation rules. No aircraft of one country is allowed to fly over the territory of another without permission, a drawback to the long international air routes which has held back progress in many directions, notably in the development of these routes between Great Britain and various parts of the Empire

The following table gives statistics of regular air services for the years 1930 and 1931.

Country	Year	Passengers carried	Goods and Mails (tons)
Great Britain (including Empire services)	1931	23,480	769
	1930	23,440	832
Australia	1931	14,325	230
	1930	16,381	199
Canada	1931	3,720	277
	1930	14,199	283
France	1931	32,700	1,689
	1930	28,935	1,835
Germany	1931	98,467	2,574
	1930	93,677	2,614
Holland	1931	20,512	1,421
	1930	17,300	1,030
Italy	1931	33,650	696
	1930	38,361	669
U.S.A.	1931	522,345	4,819
	1930	417,505	4,009

The decrease of the 1931 figures over the 1930 has largely been due to the world financial slump, but the preliminary 1932 figures indicate a substantial increase in air transport all over the world In 1932 Imperial Airways carried 41,300 passengers as against the 23,480 of the previous year

AISNE. River of France. Rising in the Meuse department, it flows W and joins the Oise near Compiègne Connected with the Meuse and Marne by canals, it is navigable for rather more than half its length of 175 m

The first battle of the Aisne, fought Sept 13–20, 1914, was an effort of the Allies to cross the river and complete the defeat of the Germans recently driven back at the battle of the Marne It was fought on a vast front of 100 m from Compiègne to Tahure, E of Reims. Successful attempts to bridge the river under fire were made and local successes gained by both sides, but eventually the fighting degenerated into trench warfare, as the Germans had dug themselves in.

The second battle, fought April 16–May 20, 1917, was the supreme attempt to break through the German lines in the west front, previous to 1918 On the first day the French crossed the Aisne at Chavonne, but were beaten back, advanced W along the Chemin des Dames, carried Berméricourt and Courcy, captured 10,000 prisoners, and penetrated the German trenches to a depth of a mile. Day after day the attack was renewed with the utmost determination, but in the end the French Ministry ordered the abandonment of the offensive.

Alps. Great European group of mountains that extends from Switzerland into France, Bavaria, Austria and Italy. The highest peak, Mont Blanc, is in French territory plains of Hungary, and on the N. descending to the less elevated but still hilly country of N. Switzerland, Bavaria, and Upper Austria

They are usually treated as divided into three main sections, the W, Central, and E. Alps The W Alps include the Maritime, Cottian, Dauphiné, and Graian Alps, the Central Alps include the Bernese Oberland on the N. and the Pennine Alps on the S of the upper Rhône valley, the Lepontine, and Adula Alps, Todi range, N E Swiss and the Bernina Alps, and Rhaetian Alps, the E Alps extend through E Tirol and Styria and the N of Venetia and end in the Carinthian, Carnic and Julian Alps

The region of these Alps is from about 5,000 ft. to 7,000 ft or more above the sea level, the high mountain peaks rise above them to a height of from 10,000 ft to 15,000 ft. The few over 14,000 ft occur only in the group of Mont Blanc, of the central Pennines in the Zermatt region, and one, the Finsteraarhorn, in the Bernese Oberland The highest peaks of the Alps, further E, viz., the Ortler Spitze, the Gross Glockner, the Gross Venediger, and the Wildspitze, range between 11,000 ft and 13,000 ft While only two summits in the whole region are over 15,000 ft high, there are dozens over 12,000 ft, from Monte Viso in the far W, on the border of Dauphine and Piedmont, to the Gross Glockner in the E, and many scores over 10,000 ft

A marked feature of the Alpine region is its greater steepness on the S side, the plain of Lombardy is only a few feet above the sea, whereas the Lake of Constance, which is much farther from the great central ranges, is 1,300 ft above the sea level The rivers on the S side descend with fairly straight course to the Po, while on the N side the Rhine flows in its rapid upper course N E by E and then N, and, after passing through the great lake, nearly due W, until it turns again N. at Basel

On the south side of the Alps the great lakes which fill the deepest depressions in the folds of the mountains, Maggiore, Como and Garda, lie at right angles to the main chain, whereas the general direction of those on the north side, Lucerne, Zurich and Constance, is parallel to it No water from the Alps goes to the Baltic, the greater part is carried by the Danube

AMAZON. River of S. America. It is 3,550 m. long, and is the third in point of length of the world's rivers, coming next to the Mississippi and the Nile, but its valley and watershed cover 2,700,000 sq. m., or more than the Mississippi and Nile basins together.

There is some doubt about the exact source of the Amazon, but the best opinion is that it originates in the head-waters of the Marañon, which rises above Lake Lauricocha. Other large Peruvian tributaries are the Huallaga and the Ucayali. Ocean steamers ascend the Amazon to the Peruvian town of Iquitos, some 2,500 m. from the Atlantic, and thus navigation is afforded into the heart of S. America from Europe. Small steamers ascend to the foot of the Andes.

The Napo, the Putumayo, and other tributaries come from Ecuador and Colombia. The Negro also comes from the N., and on this tributary, near the confluence, stands Manaos. The Beni and Madre de Dios, from Bolivia and Peru, fall into the great Madeira, which, traversing the Brazilian plain from the S., empties into the Amazon below Manaos. Other Brazilian tributaries, coming also from the S., above Manaos, are the Purus and the Juruá, and below Manaos the Tapajos and the Xingú. The river falls into the Atlantic Ocean near Pará.

The Amazon, 2,000 m. from its mouth, on the Peruvian frontier at Tabatinga, is 9,000 ft.

Amazon. Map showing the territory watered by the river and its tributaries wide, with a normal depth at that point of 66 ft., and a current velocity of 1½ m. per hour. Lower down, where the great Brazilian affluents enter, and nearer the mouth, it resembles a sea rather than a river. Tides are felt 500 m. above the mouth, where the river is 200 ft. deep; near the main mouth it is 50 m. wide.

The first European to navigate the length of the Amazon was Orellana, a lieutenant of Gonzalo Pizarro; who, embarking upon its headwaters (the river Napo), to the E. of Quito, floated downstream to the Atlantic in 1541. The name of the river has been ascribed to a mistake of Orellana's followers, who imagined that the long-haired Indians in their cotton shirts were Amazons or women warriors.

formation which have given rise to many speculations about their origin. Each presents a triangular shape with the apex to the S., and each is traversed from N. to S. along the W. coast by lofty mountain ranges, and along the E. coast by comparatively low ranges, while their interiors consist of broad, unbroken plains.

In the 10th and 11th centuries it is almost certain that Norsemen from Iceland reached Greenland, which they called Vinland, and then, sailing south, visited Nova Scotia and New England. The chief of these rovers was a certain Leif, a son of Eric, the hero of the Saga of Eric the Red, in which the exploits of these early rovers are told. These expeditions ceased, as far as we know, for some 400 years and then, in 1492, came the memorable voyage of Columbus. The first part of the continent to be discovered was one of the Bahama Islands, where in October he dropped anchor. The object of his voyage was to discover a westward sea route from Europe to Cathay (China) and India. Columbus, when he found land after sailing across the Atlantic, imagined that it was part of India, and that belief accounts for the islands off the eastern coast of North America being called the West Indies, and for the natives of America being called by the Spaniards los Indios, the Indians. The name America came into existence after the Italian Amerigo Vespucci had in 1504 declared that he was the first to set foot on the mainland of the continent.

Very quickly other explorers added to the discoveries of Columbus, and one of them sailed from an English port. This was Sebastian Cabot, who discovered Newfoundland and Labrador. Whether these were the first men from other continents to land on American soil is a matter in dispute. There exists a tradition that Chinese sailors drifted in junks along the coasts of Asia and were carried to America. Upon better evidence rest the voyages of Scandinavian adventurers, who are supposed to have intended to settle on American soil, but provoked the hostility of the natives and found it prudent to return. The peoples found in America by the Spaniards and by those who colonised the northern part of the continent were, it is generally assumed, all of one stock, though in physique, language and habits they differed from one another in different regions. See Argentina; Brazil; Canada; Cuba; Mexico; North America; South America; United States; Venezuela, etc.

AMERICAN. River of California, U.S.A. Rising in three headstreams in the Sierra Nevada, it flows S.W. through deep and narrow ravines to the Sacramento, near Sacramento city.

AMERICAN INDIANS. Original inhabitants of the American continent, both N. and S. The name Indian was given to them about 1493 by Columbus, who wrongly imagined he had reached India, when he was in reality in America. It has persisted, although the Indians, especially those of N. America, are sometimes known from their colour as Redskins, or Red Indians, and the contraction Amerind has been suggested as a substitute.

At the time of the discovery the system of clans in which the woman and not the man was the dominating link was giving way in some tribal groups to the opposite system. The

Hurons lived in long houses of interrelated families with a matron in charge The separate family dwelling was rare Polygamy, where permissible, was in practice limited by ways and means, many tribes are essentially monogamous Prudential infanticide was practised and every clan had its totem name Taboos usually had an exogamous purpose

Tattooing, although less general than body paint, was widely spread This, as well as head-deformation and some other mutilations, probably came across the Pacific The commoner form of head-flattening was accomplished by pressing cradleboards upon the forehead, as among the Choctaws, a rarer form produced a conical occiput Initiation frequently involved torture.

Issues of peace and war were determined at tribal councils, whereat calumet and tomahawk were ceremonial accessories which have given rise to the phrases the pipe of peace and burying the hatchet. In the Iroquois and Muskogee region enemy scalps, as trophies of war, were sometimes mounted on poles for the women's scalp dances Wampum comprising strings of shell beads was used for ornament and currency, formed into belts they served as records of treaties concluded between various tribes.

To-day the Indians, like other aborigines, are probably decreasing in number in spite of measures of protection In the United States and Canada they live on reservations, and in each a department looks after their interests, teaching them trades and looking after their children. In 1930 the Indian population of the U S A was 355,500, about a third living in Oklahoma In Canada the total is about 110,000

America from N. to S., a distance of over 4,000 m., parallel with the Pacific coast, traversing Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia and Chile, with Argentina, and contains some of the highest peaks and most stupendous mountain scenery in the world.

In Colombia the Andes split into four ranges, the most important being the Eastern Cordillera, along the eastern flanks of which is situated the main population of Colombia. The Andes in Ecuador embody two great chains enclosing the basins or tablelands of Quito, Ambato, and Cuenca, and forming as it were an immense avenue of snow-clad peaks, some of which are active volcanoes. Among them are Chimborazo, and Cotopaxi.

In Peru the Andes consist of three main chains, the Western, the Central and the Eastern Cordillera. The highest peaks are the Huascaran, 22,180 ft., Huandoy, 21,088 ft., and Coropuna, 22,900 ft. In the S. of Peru the Central Cordillera disappears, and the Eastern and Western enclose the basin of the great lake, Titicaca, 130 m. long and 13,000 ft. above sea level. The Andes in Bolivia form one of the most impressive mountain masses on the globe. In Chile they consist of one main chain, with a lesser maritime Cordillera, and the system approaches much nearer the coast. The great peak of Aconcagua, 22,850 ft., is the highest mountain in the New World.

These mountains are rich in metalliferous and other minerals, notably gold, silver, copper, tin, lead, quicksilver, zinc, and, in places, coal. They are treeless except in the ravines, but the uplands are generally covered with coarse grass, the natural food of the llama and the vicuna. They are served by several lines of railway, including the Guayaquil-Quito line; the Oroya and the Southern, in Peru, reaching 15,650 ft. and 14,660 ft.; and the Transandine in Chile.

Among the principal ascents of the Andes peaks are those of Chimborazo in 1802 by Humboldt, in 1831 by Boussingault and Hall, and in 1880 by Whymper; of Cotopaxi in 1880 by Whymper; and of Aconcagua in 1897 by Zurbriggen and Vines, in 1898 and 1900 by Conway, and in 1902 by Rankin.

In certain parts, S Victoria Land, for instance, there are mountains rising to 8,000 ft or more Inland of the mountains, round the Pole itself, is a plateau where the overlying ice sheet is between 1,000 and 2,000 ft thick The greatest height is 15,500 ft and the average height about 3,000 and 4,000 There are many extinct volcanoes, but only one, Erebus on Ross Island, is active Coal has been found The continent is nearly devoid of life There are no land animals and only a few birds, notably the penguins on Ross Island and elsewhere Whales and seals are found The mosses and lichens seen on the coastal rocks are the only indications of plant life In addition to coal other payable deposits of minerals are believed to exist

At the Imperial Conference in 1926 it was declared that by right of discovery the British had a good title to part of Coats Land, Enderby Land, Kemp Land, Queen Mary Land, Wilkes Land, King George V Land and Oates Land

In 1933 an order in council handed over to the Commonwealth of Australia that part of the territory in the Antarctic Seas which comprises all the islands and territories other than Adelie Land situated south of the 60th degree of south latitude and lying between the 160th degree of east longitude and the 45th degree of east longitude

ANTARCTIC CIRCLE. Parallel of latitude It is drawn 23½ degrees (approximately) from the south pole See Arctic Circle

ANTARCTIC EXPLORATION. Exploration in the Antarctic may be said to date from Jan 17, 1773, when James Cook was the first man to cross the Antarctic Circle The next great step forward occurred in 1819, when William Smith discovered what are now the South Shetland Islands In 1821 Bellingshausen, a Russian, discovered Peter I Island and Alexander I Land James Weddell, a Scotsman, reached 74° 15′ S in 1823, in the great bay to which his name has been given. Enderby Land was seen in 1831 by Biscoe, a captain in the service of Enderby Brothers, the next year Biscoe discovered Adelaide Island, the Biscoe Islands, and Graham Land. John Balleny was sent southwards by the same merchants and discovered the islands which bear his name in 1839. D'Urville made

Antarctic Exploration. Map of the South Polar region showing the points reached by various explorers and the routes taken by Amundsen, Scott and Byrd in their successful attempts to reach the Pole

Adelie Land in 1840, and in the same year Wilkes, of the U S Navy, sailed along the coast of Wilkes Land

In 1839 the British Admiralty placed James Clark Ross in command of the Erebus and of a British Antarctic expedition He discovered the Admiralty Mts , Possession Island, Coulman Island, Mt Melbourne, Franklin Island, and finally the volcanic mts Erebus and Terror, and Cape Crozier In each of the following seasons attempts were made by Ross to reach the high latitudes, the best effort being 71° 30′ S in the Weddell Sea in March, 1843

On Dec 21, 1872, the Challenger expedition sailed for the S , and on Feb 16, 1874, the Challenger was the first steam vessel to cross the Antarctic Circle King Oscar II Land was discovered by Larsen in 1893. In 1897 the Belgica sailed from Antwerp, under Adrien de Gerlache, with a company which included Roald Amundsen, Dr Cook, and Henryk Arctowski , the ship was gripped by the ice in March, 1898, and at 71° 30′ S , and for the first time an exploration party spent the winter in the Antarctic

In 1901 R F Scott sailed in the Discovery and landed a party at the foot of Mt Terror on Ross Island on Jan 22, 1902 The ship followed the Great Ice Barrier eastward and discovered King Edward VII Land. Winter was passed by the party in McMurdo Sound, and then sledge journeys were made S. over the barrier ice.

Drygalski sailed in the Gauss in 1901 from Hamburg and discovered Kaiser Wilhelm II Land, while Nordenskiold, in the Antarctic, reached King Oscar II Land, where he wintered W S Bruce sailed in the Scotia in 1902 from the Clyde, wintered at Laurie Island, and in 1904, after refitting at Buenos Aires, the Scotia reached 74° 1′ S at Coats Land Mossman remained for meteorological work until 1905 on Laurie Island

On New Year's Day, 1908, Shackleton, who had been with Scott on his sledge journey over the barrier ice, left New Zealand on the Nimrod, and wintered near Cape Royds He set out polewards over the barrier ice in Oct , climbed the Beardmore Glacier in Dec , and reached 88° 21′ S. on King Edward VII Plateau on Jan 9, 1909, an advance on the previous farthest S of some 420 m A second sledge party pushed N , ascended the plateau near Mt Bellingshausen, and discovered the South Magnetic Pole in 72° 25′ S , 155° 16′ E , at an elevation of 7,260 ft , on Jan 16, 1909 Charcot made a second Antarctic voyage and explored Bellingshausen Sea in 1909–10

Roald Amundsen left Norway on the Fram in Aug , 1910, and reached the Bay of Whales on the edge of the Great Ice Barrier on Jan 14, 1911 , winter quarters were established, and the dash for the Pole began on Oct 20 The inner edge of the barrier ice was reached on Nov 17, at 85° S , and the Pole was reached on Dec 16, 1911 Captain Scott left London on the Terra Nova on June 1,

1910, winter quarters being prepared in Jan, 1911, on Ross Island Sledge parties set out S. in Oct, and on Jan 4 Scott and four companions, Wilson, Bowers, Oates, and Evans, went onwards from lat 87° 35′ S and reached the Pole on Jan 17, 1912 On Dec 2, 1911, Mawson sailed from Hobart in the Aurora to explore the area W of Wilkes Land Sledging parties explored the neighbouring area, and the Aurora in her voyages to and from Australia made oceanographical discoveries, and the expedition returned on Feb 26, 1914 Shackleton left England in 1914 on the Endurance to attempt a sledge journey from Weddell Sea across Antarctica to Ross Sea The Endurance was frozen in off the Caird Coast, Jan 18, 1915, and drifted from 76° 30′ S to 69° S, where she was crushed on Oct 27, the crew reaching safety after difficulty

In 1928 two expeditions set out for the south polar regions, one under Adm Richard Byrd and the other under Sir Hubert Wilkins Byrd's first ship left Hoboken in Aug, and he himself left California in Oct In Nov, 1929, he flew over the Pole In Sept, 1929, Sir Douglas Mawson set out from Cape Town in the Discovery to lead another expedition A Norwegian expedition also went out for scientific purposes

ANTARCTIC OCEAN. Name conveniently applied to the waters of the Atlantic, Pacific, and Indian Oceans which girdle the Antarctic continent The arbitrary northern limit of the ocean is lat 60° S, where it merges with the Southern Ocean The chief seas of the Antarctic Ocean are the Weddell Sea, between Graham Land and Coats Land, the Biscoe Sea, between Coats Land and Enderby Land, and the Ross Sea, between South Victoria Land and King Edward VII Land The name Bellingshausen Sea is used for the waters to the W of Graham Land and N of Charcot Land Except in the vicinity of Graham Land there are few islands in the ocean The Antarctic is the shallowest of all the oceans, the depth averaging 2,000 fathoms

ANTEQUERA. Town of Spain Called Antiquaria by the Romans, it is 28 m N N W of Malaga by rail It has a Moorish castle, remains of the wall, and an arch built partly of Roman masonry in 1595 Near the town, which was taken from the Moors in 1410, is one of the largest gravemounds in Spain Pop 32,000

ANTICYCLONE. Meteorological term for type of pressure distribution in which the isobars form closed curves, as a rule circular or oval in shape. Atmospheric pressure is highest at the centre and diminishes towards the margins, so that the movement of air is in a direction opposite to that in a cyclone Towards the centre of the system the air is usually very still, but nearer the margins the winds—which are rarely more than light, since the pressure differences are not great, and therefore do not give such steep gradients as in cyclones—blow outwards in a clockwise direction in conformity with Buys Ballot's law

Anticyclones, which are generally regarded as the bringers of fine or fair weather, are marked by an absence of rain, although in a land surrounded by the sea, e g, the British Isles, rain may occasionally fall in small amounts Two distinct types of anticyclones should be noted, the cloudless and the overcast In the first the diurnal range of temperature is considerable while in the second it is usually small In general the hot deserts are anticyclonic regions In the N hemisphere in summer an anticyclone centres on the Azores and occasionally spreads as far as S England, in winter the Siberian anticyclone is accompanied by intense cold and the fringe of it sometimes reaches E. England In the S hemisphere anticyclones move steadily from W. to E between the trade winds and the brave west winds

Arabia. Map showing the Kingdom of Nejd and Heias and other states

A good deal of the country is still unexplored desert. Before the Great War parts of it were traversed by C. M. Doughty, and in 1931-32 the adventurous journeys of H. St. John Philby and Bertram Thomas added much to our knowledge of this region.

In the 16th century Arabia passed under the rule of the Turks, but this was never very effectual. During the Great War Hussein, then ruler of Mecca, rose against the sultan, and aided by Great Britain, succeeded in ending his authority over a good part of the land. The result was that after the struggle Arabia became divided into several independent states, with other areas under British influence. The most important of the states is the kingdom of Hejaz and Nejd. Others are Yemen under an imam, Oman under a sultan, and Kuwait and Hadramaut which are under British influence. Aden and Bahrain are British protectorates. The estimated population of the country is 7,000,000. See Bahrain, Hejaz, Oman, Yemen, etc.

ARBURY. Village of Warwickshire. It is 2 m from the L.M.S. Rly station at Chilvers Coton and 10 m from Coventry George Eliot (Marian Evans) was born and passed her early days at Arbury Farm.

ARCACHON. Town of France. On the Bassin d'Arcachon, a shallow opening of the bay of Biscay it is 34 m by rail S W. of Bordeaux A pleasure resort in summer, it is also popular for invalids in winter The dunes are covered with pine woods and the sands and bathing are good Arcachon is a fishing centre and has extensive oyster beds Pop 10,260

ARCADIA. Territorial division of Greece. It is in the south of the country and takes its name from one of the districts of ancient Greece. This occupied the centre of Peloponnesus and, a very mountainous country, its physical characteristics enabled the inhabitants continuously to preserve a semblance of independence. The chief towns were Mantinea, Tegea, and Orchomenus. According to ancient tradition the inhabitants were racially the oldest in Greece They were devoted to pastoral pursuits and fond of music; hence the poetic identification of Arcadia with romantic simplicity.

ARCADIA, GULF OF. Opening on the W. coast of the Morea, Greece. It lies between Cape Katakolo and Cape Konello, 35 m. apart, but the indentation is slight.

ARCHANGEL, GULF OF Bay of N. Russia (U S.S R.) An inlet of the White Sea, it extends inland about 65 m., and receives the waters of the river Dvina.

ARCHANGEL. Former government of N Russia Bounded on the N. by the Arctic Ocean and White Sea, it extended before the Russian revolution from the Ural Mts. to Finland, included the Kola Peninsula and Novaya Zemlya, and covered an area of 326,063 sq. m, exclusive of inland waters. To-day a portion of it is included in the Karelian republic of the U S S R Mountainous in the N E and N W., the surface is elsewhere flat, and barren N of the Arctic Circle, while farther S it is forest-clad, trees covering more than half its total area. It is drained principally by the Onega, Dvina, Mesen and Pechora, all flowing to the White Sea, to the W. of which numerous lakes occur Severe in the interior, the climate is considerably milder on the N W. coast. Agriculture, cattle rearing, and salmon, herring and cod fishing are important industries, a valuable supply of timber is obtained, and gold and naphtha occur in fair quantities.

ARCHANGEL (Russ Arkhangelsk) Seaport of the northern area of the U S S R It stands on the Dvina, at the head of the gulf of Archangel, 696 m N. of Moscow by the Archangel-Moscow Rly. It has a good harbour, free from ice from May to October, and a wireless station Timber, wheat, flax, pitch, and tar are exported, and it is a whaling centre A fish fair is held every year

Archangel came into prominence in the last year of the Great War (1918), when it was occupied by the Allies In June, 1919, they advanced up the Dvina, and on Aug 10 won a victory, taking 2,000 prisoners However, the attempt to join forces with the anti-Bolshevist armies W. of the Urals was a failure and evacuation was ordered On Sept 27 the Bolshevists occupied the town. Pop. 69,578.

ARCHIDONA. Town of Ecuador It stands on the Napo, 121 m E S E of Quito. Established about 1556, it became a centre of the Jesuit fathers, who were expelled in 1767 but returned a century later Pop 2,000

Situated on a rocky bluff, and occupying the site of an Iberian settlement, it has a Gothic church, a ruined citadel, and remains of the palace of the dukes of Arcos The rock is pierced by numerous cave dwellings Pop 16,000

ARCOT Two districts in Madras Presidency, India North Arcot lies inland, W of Madras city, and South Arcot is a maritime district stretching S to Tanjore and Trichinopoly Famous as one of the great battlefields of India, the two districts were ceded to the British with the Carnatic, of which they form part

North Arcot has an area of 4,920 sq m and a population of 1,960,960 Its surface is mountainous in the W, but elsewhere generally flat Of its rivers, all of which dry up during the hot season, the largest is the Palar, on whose banks stand the towns of Arcot and Vellore Agriculture is the chief industry, and weaving is also largely carried on.

The district of South Arcot has an area of 4,208 sq m. and a population of 2,362,566. Mountainous in the W and low and sandy along the Coromandel coast, it is mainly a level plain drained by the Coleroon, Vellar, and other rivers, whose waters are drawn off by channels for irrigation purposes The occupation of the inhabitants is mainly pastoral and agricultural, indigo and rice, millet and other cereals being the chief crops The French settlement of Pondichéry lies within South Arcot

ARCOT. City of Madras, India The capital of N Arcot district, and a military cantonment, it stands on the Palar, 65 m W S W of Madras, on the railway to Beypur Formerly the capital of the Carnatic, it was taken by Clive in Aug, 1751, and was held by him against repeated French attacks In 1758 it was taken by the French, who lost it in 1760 Hyder Ali captured it in 1780, and it became British in 1801 Pop 11,000

ARCTIC CIRCLE. Parallel of latitude drawn 23½° (approx.) from the North Pole At midsummer, June 21, the axis of the earth is so tilted with reference to the sun that the rays of the latter pass 23½° beyond the North Pole and fall short of the South Pole by the same distance. In midwinter, Dec. 21, the conditions are reversed. Thus it will be seen that the positions of the Arctic and Antarctic circles are due to the inclination of the earth's axis, for if that were vertical, the half of the earth's surface illuminated by the sun at any given time would extend from the North to the South Pole, a condition that is only true on the days of the equinoxes, i e , March 21 and Sept 23

ARCTIC EXPLORATION The exploration of the North Polar region has been actuated by two motives, the need for new trade routes or new trade commodities and a spirit of geographical inquiry. After the early searches for the N W. passage and the discovery of Newfoundland by Cabot in 1498, John Davis achieved a farthest north at 72° 41′ N , and explored long stretches of the coasts of Greenland and Labrador Henry Hudson explored the east side of Hudson Bay and was left to his fate by mutineers after a winter in the ice of James Bay, 1610-11. Baffin attained on July 5, 1616, the lat 77° 45′ N , which was a record in that area for 236 years Parry in 1819 traversed Lancaster Sound and reached 114° W in 1820 among the Parry Islands, after spending the winter on Melville Island, and by so doing earned a reward of £5,000 offered by the British Government to the explorer who first went westward beyond 110° W

Other explorers penetrated among the islands north of Canada, and in 1831 James Clark Ross located the North Magnetic Pole in Boothia

Peninsula in 70° 5′ N. and 96° 44′ W. In 1845 Sir John Franklin sailed with the ships Erebus and Terror, but failed to return.

The search for Franklin marks an epoch in the story of the N W. passage On one of the voyages McClure in the Investigator in 1850–3 reached Banks Island, which had been discovered by Parry, and demonstrated that there was a continuous N W passage by sea north of Canada. The passage was discovered, but it was not until Roald Amundsen navigated the Gjoa from sea to sea in 1903–5 that a ship made the complete voyage.

The 19th century saw many attempts to reach the Pole, which were chiefly made from the Spitsbergen area on the east and by Smith Sound, north of Baffin Bay, on the west. Parry sailed in the Hecla in 1827 and reached 82° 45′ N. north of Spitsbergen, on a sledge journey which kept him 61 days away from the ship Kane left New York in 1853 in the Advance with the intention of using Eskimo help in a journey to explore N W Greenland, he spent two winters in the Arctic, passed through Kane Basin into Kennedy Channel, and reached 80° 10′ N, a record for that region. In 1871 the Polaris in the Hall expedition had the good luck to sail through Kane Basin, Kennedy Channel, Hall Basin, and Robeson Channel into the Polar Sea and to achieve the record for a ship of 82° 11′ North

This success led to the British Nares expedition of 1875; with great difficulty the ships were taken through the unfavourable ice conditions and the Discovery wintered in Discovery Harbour and the Alert wintered at Flooberg Beach, 82° 24′ N and established a new record, sledge journeys were undertaken and Aldrich beat Parry's farthest by attaining 82° 48′ N, and A H Markham the next year reached 83° 20′ N; coast lands were explored and scientific observations of considerable value were made

Meanwhile Swedish expeditions had been at work north of Spitsbergen; von Otter took the Sofia to 81° 42′ N in 1868, and Nordenskiold tried to reach the Pole by reindeer sledging in 1872 In this year Weyprecht and Payer started on an Austrian expedition with the Tegetthof, discovered Franz Josef Land, and reached in 1874 Cape Fligely, 81° 51′ N, the nearest known land to the Pole, Leigh Smith in the Eira explored much of this archipelago in 1880–1

Scientific work in the Arctic received a great impetus by the establishment in 1881–3 of international circumpolar stations The importance of the scheme lay in the attempt to make throughout a whole year systematic and simultaneous observations by trained scientists at as many places as possible The most notable of these expeditions was that of Greely Lockwood, his second in command, explored the Greenland coast and discovered Lockwood Island in 83° 24′ N, and set up a new record for nearest the Pole, and both made land journeys and explored some 6,000 sq m of newly discovered land.

In 1893–6 Nansen made one of the most famous of polar voyages He had a specially constructed ship, the Fram, and set out deliberately to have his ship beset by the ice in order to drift over the Arctic Ocean and, if lucky, to float over the Pole Frozen in about 79° N, the Fram drifted along the track shown on the map Nansen and Johansen attempted a dash for the Pole over the ice, they reached 86° 14. N and were ultimately rescued by Jackson in Franz Josef Land The Fram, under Sverdrup, drifted on, gained 85° 57. N., rounded the N E of Spitsbergen and safely reached Norway. In 1899 Sverdrup took the Fram west of Greenland and explored Jones Sound. In the same year the duke of the Abruzzi's expedition sailed for Franz Josef Land, and Cagni reached 86° 34. N. by sledge in 1900 In 1897 a risky attempt to gain the Pole by balloon was made by Andrée; in it he lost his life, and it was not until 1930 that his body was found.

Robert E Peary commenced operations in 1886 by a journey on the Greenland ice cap, in 1891–2 and 1893–6 he made journeys across N Greenland, in 1898–1902 he explored Ellesmere Land, rounded the N. end of Greenland, and reached 84° 17. N. He wintered his ship, the Roosevelt, in the Arctic Ocean in 1905, and gained 87° 86. N In 1908 he took the Roosevelt to the earlier winter quarters, organized a thorough series of relay expeditions, and gained the Pole on April 6, 1909. Some doubt has been cast upon this exploit, notably by J G Hayes in a book published in 1929, but the balance of opinion is that Peary actually reached the Pole.

After the Great War aircraft were much used for polar exploration In 1926 Amundsen led an expedition in the airship Norge, which flew over the Pole on May 11, and landed at Teller, Alaska Two days earlier Adm R E Byrd, in an aeroplane flying from Spitsbergen, had also reached the Pole In 1928 an Italian expedition under General Nobile went out in the Norge, renamed the Italia This flew over the Pole, but was forced down on the return journey and destroyed Several of the crew were lost In a seaplane Amundsen set out to search for his former colleague Nobile, but was never heard of again In April 1928 Sir G. H Wilkins flew over the Pole in an aeroplane, travelling from Port Barrow in Alaska to Spitsbergen, the reverse route from that taken by Nobile. Later expeditions were concerned chiefly with the exploration of Greenland (q v).

ARCTIC OCEAN. Term applied generally to the waters N. of Europe, Asia, and America. These include the Greenland or Norwegian Sea between Greenland and Norway, the Barents Sea N. of Europe, the White Sea, the Kara Sea between Novaya Zemlya and Yamal Peninsula, and the Beaufort Sea N. of Alaska It communicates with the Atlantic by Davis Strait, Denmark Strait, and the sea between Iceland and Norway. Its only connexion with the Pacific is by Bering Strait

The Greenland Sea and the Barents Sea are the only parts of the ocean which are not blocked by ice in winter In summer the pack-ice of the Arctic Ocean is more or less loose, but dense enough to prevent navigation except in the Greenland, Barents, and White Seas, along the N coasts of Europe, Asia, and Alaska, and in Davis Strait and Baffin Bay For this reason the north-west and the north-east passages, although both accomplished by exploring vessels, are useless for commerce.

ARDABIL. Town of Persia, also known as Ardebil (q v).

HISTORY Argentine history begins in 1535, when Pedro de Mendoza was sent out by the king of Spain and founded a settlement which he named Buenos Aires Famine and the attacks of savages compelled the settlers to migrate and, sailing up the river, they founded Asunción Soon some returned, and Buenos Aires became the centre of a province under a Spanish governor responsible to Peru It soon acquired a predominating position

In 1806 a British expedition from Cape Town captured Buenos Aires, but the troops were soon forced to surrender, and in the next year another British expedition, failing to regain the lost city, signed a treaty and departed These events prepared the way for independent movement The invasion of Spain and the seizure of the Spanish royal family by Napoleon precipitated such a movement In May, 1810, the deposition of the viceroy virtually effected the bloodless revolution which was completed six years later, when the congress of Tucumán, representing most of the provinces, solemnly proclaimed independence

After twenty years of civil wars, confused personal rivalries, and ephemeral attempts at constitution making, Buenos Aires sank into uneasy tranquility under the rule of the Gaucho tyrant Rosas The fall of Rosas in 1853 brought relief, but not immediate peace The other provinces resented the preponderance of Buenos Aires, and for seven years that province formed a republic apart from the confederation, which made Parana its capital Reunion followed, but the cause of trouble remained, until the question was settled by forming the capital of the republic into a federal district This arrangement of the federal system may be said in a large sense to have brought about internal tranquility, notwithstanding some disturbances in 1890 and occasional troubles in the provinces A steadying influence was found in the astonishing economic growth, a minor influence being the introduction of wire fencing, which impeded the movements of Gaucho cavalry

The disputes concerning the Chilean frontier, which menaced the peace of the country were amicably adjusted The last and most troublesome of these, the delimitation of the Andine boundary, was settled by the arbitration of King Edward VII in 1902 Simultaneously with the completion of the federal system in 1880 the republic practically acquired a great increase of rich territory through the conquest of the desert by General Roca in 1878 Previously the Indian frontier was in parts scarcely 200 m from the capital Roca in an organized campaign swept the country as far as the Rio Negro, and made the Pampa safe

The Great War upset the republic's economic equilibrium. But the shock imposed the need of thrift and self dependence, and the recovery which followed was remarkable The meat freezing industry received a great stimulus Argentina became in a limited degree a creditor nation by advancing credits to the Allies for the purchase of Argentine cereals The country, however, did not escape the world depression, and the serious fall in commodity prices had grave consequences for producers, and for the country generally To stimulate trade between Great Britain and the republic the Prince of Wales visited Argentina, and in 1933 a mission from Argentina returned the visit

City of France The capital of the department of Pas-de-Calais, it stands on the river Scarpe 38 m by rly N E of Amiens Its 16th century town hall and its cathedral were laid in ruins during the Great War, as were many other buildings, such as the abbey of St Vaast and the church of St Nicholas The chief squares are the grande place, the petite place, and the place du théatre Portions of the town's fortifications remain A good deal of restoration work has been done, and in 1932 a new town hall was opened There are some manufactures, and a corn market After the Great War it was adopted by Newcastle-on-Tyne Pop 24,800

During the 14th and 15th centuries the tapestries of Arras were so famous that the name arras was used in England as the general term for tapestry wall hangings The arras was often hung a considerable distance from the wall, thus providing a lurking place for eavesdroppers. Polonius, in Shakespeare's Hamlet, was stabbed while hiding behind the arras, which was a tapestry fabric woven with figures and scenes

Throughout the Great War there was intense fighting in front of Arras, an important strategic centre On Sept 18, 1914, French cavalry entered Arras and they held it during the rest of the struggle, although at times with great difficulty. The first battle of Arras, fought Sept –Oct , 1914, was an attempt by the Germans to take the city The second battle, fought in June, 1915, was an attempt by the French under Foch to carry the intricate German trench system 2 m N of Arras, known as the Labyrinth

The third battle was fought in April–May, 1917 In accordance with the general plan of campaign the task set the British was to capture the dominating position of Arras and reduce the salient between Arras and the Ancre They advanced some distance and the advance was continued into May Heavy fighting continued for many days about the Hindenburg line at Bullecourt, but the ground was held and the British position improved The main result of the battle was to make Arras secure from German capture.

The fourth battle coincided with the German offensive on the Somme in March, 1918 Two attacks were made on the British lines, on Mar 21 and Mar 28, but beyond slight gains the Germans were unable to break the British front, though the latter was withdrawn in places

The fifth and last battle was part of the great Allied offensive in the autumn of 1918 The Canadians stormed the formidable Drocourt-Queant line early in Sept , and carried important sections of the Hindenburg line.

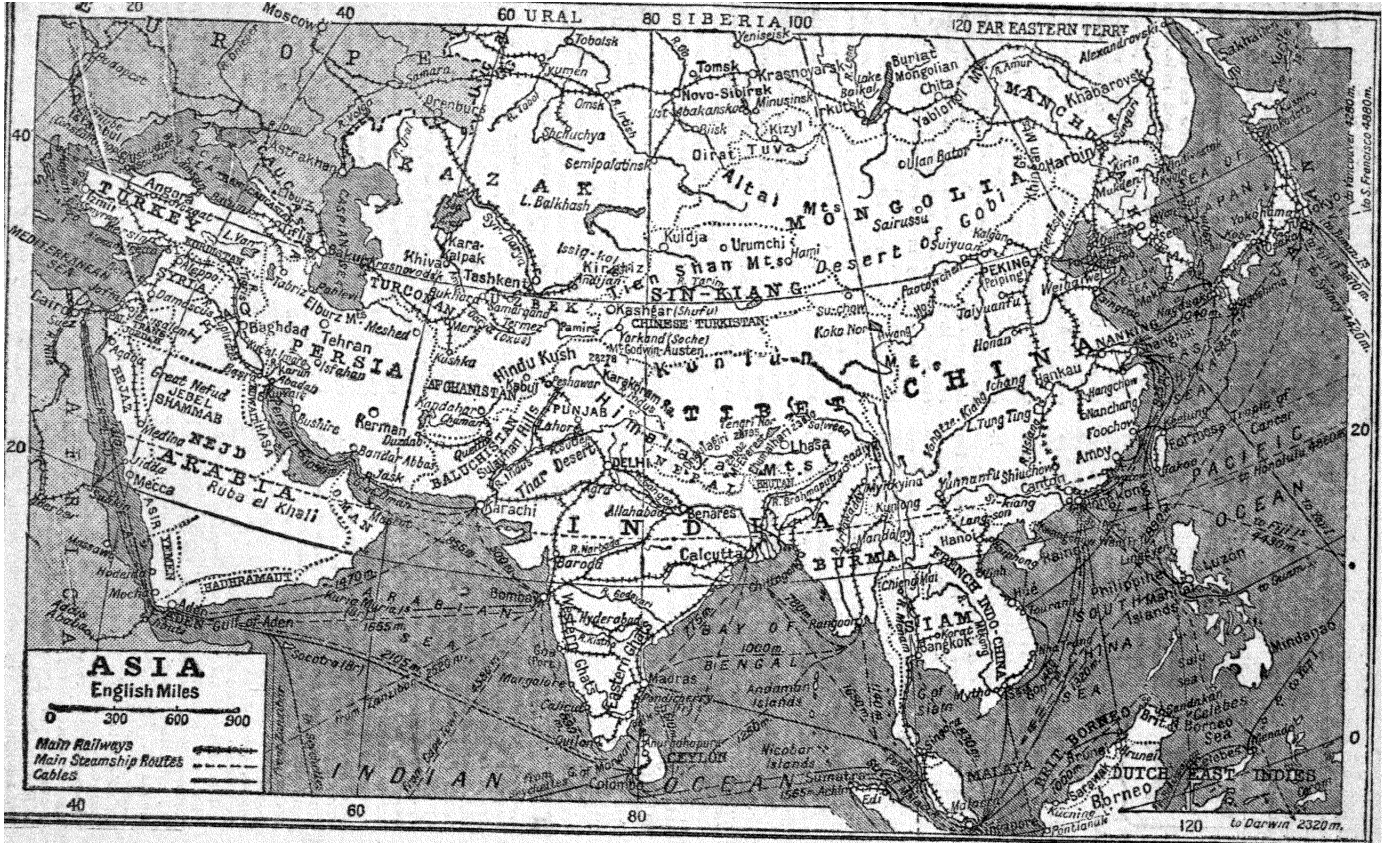
ASIA. Largest of the world's continents Its area is more than 17,000,000 sq m. and its pop about 1,013,000,000 It has an extreme breadth of 6,700 m and an extreme length of 5,350 m On three sides the continent is bounded by great oceans, one of which is icebound The Arctic to the N, the Pacific to the E, and the Indian, without a land barrier between it and the South Pole, wash its shores, while on the W a clearly marked frontier is provided in the Mediterranean, Black, and Caspian Seas, the Caucasus, and the Ural mountains and river

Asia includes some of the hottest and some of the coldest lands in the world, some of the most productive regions and some of the most barren, some of the grandest scenery, as in the Himalayas, and some of the dreariest, as in the Gobi desert It contains the highest mountain peaks in the world—Mounts Everest and Godwin-Austen, the most elevated plateaux where life is supportable, and depressed areas that have sunk to a lower level than that of the sea

The deserts, too, are on the grand scale That of Gobi or Shamo, the sea of sand, forms a great natural defence for China on the W It rivals the Sahara in size, and if its offshoots in Tibet are included, far exceeds it There are further the deserts of Arabia, the great salt desert of Persia, those of Seistan, Baluchistan, Rajputana, and Khiva, and that of Syria, which closes the land route from the Persian Gulf to the Levant. Many of these deserts are the sepulchres of departed civilizations.

For its size, Asia is not rich in rivers suitable for navigation In the north all are icebound for months. China is well served by its mighty central river, the Yang tse Kiang, but the Hwang-ho has been rendered useless for access to and from the sea by sandbanks In India inland steamer navigation is almost entirely confined to the Irawadi and to the Ganges-Brahmaputra-Meghna group of waterways The Indus is not navigable by steamers Asia has few lakes of consequence



The fauna and flora of Asia comprise nearly every known tree, plant and animal. Typically Eastern trees are the palm, cedar and teak, in the production of which India and Indo-China rank highest, while spice trees, tea and indigo are not found in commercial quantities outside Asia The oak, ash, walnut and other western trees are plentiful, and coffee, cotton, sugar cane, the poppy, camphor, fruit, wheat, rice and other cereals have been cultivated from time immemorial The animals of Asia include the lion, tiger and leopard, as well as several beasts of burden not found in Europe, such as the elephant, camel, buffalo and yak Among the fur-bearing animals of the north are the sable, ermine, marten, bear, seal and fox Asia is very rich in minerals, having long been famous for diamonds, rubies, emeralds, pearls, gold and silver

India includes in its economic range Afghanistan, Baluchistan, Siam, Malaya and Ceylon Its trade and commerce, though increasingly directed by natives, are fostered and controlled mainly by the British The country is covered with a network of railways, and its ports—Karachi, Bombay, Madras Calcutta, together with Colombo in Ceylon and Singapore in the Straits Settlements—are among the most important in the world In the Far East, comprising Indo-China, Manchuria, China and Japan the prevailing political influence is Japan, except in Indo China, which is under French control, and at Hong Kong, which is a British possession Considering its vast size and population and its wealth of natural resources the economic development of China is imperfect, although its commerce and trade are enormous In Siberia cattle raising and dairying are the main industries The forests produce timber and furs, and gold is found in some of the rivers The Caucasus is rich in oil The Netherlands East Indies, produce rubber, tobacco, rice, sweet potatoes, soya beans, and coffee and some yield oil

Large areas of Asia belong to the British Empire, and still larger ones to the Soviet union The former include British India and its dependencies, Ceylon, the Straits Settlements, the Malay States (both federated and unfederated), Aden, Hong-Kong, and other smaller possessions Under mandate Great Britain is responsible for Palestine and Transjordania The Soviet's possessions include Siberia, with which goes a vast tract in Central Asia and the republics of the Caucasus area, e g Georgia, and Armenia France has extensive colonies in Indo China, the principal ones being Cochin China, Annam, Cambodia, and Tonking That country also governs by mandate Syria and the adjacent areas The Netherlands have possessions covering nearly 750,000 sq m , these include part of Borneo, Java, Sumatra, the Celebes, and other islands

Of the independent states the largest is China, and perhaps the most powerful is Japan Manchuria was declared independent in 1932, but China still claims authority over it as she does over Tibet Turkey, Persia, Siam, Afghanistan and Iraq are independent realms, Iraq having only attained that status in 1927. Of the states in Arabia the largest and most influential is the kingdom of Nejd and the Hejaz

As Asia extends from the Arctic circle to the equator every variety of human existence may be found within it At one extremity men

ASSYRIA. Ancient empire of Mesopotamia. The Assyrian homeland was an arid, treeless, upland region. It stood high above the alluvial plain of Babylonia to the S., and was bounded on the N. by the Armenian highlands, on the E. by the Zagros ranges, and on the W. by the middle Tigris. Originally Assyria embraced no more than the city Asshur, which occupied a spur guarding the right bank of the Tigris. It was long a dependency of Babylonia, but under Tiglath-pileser I, who came to the throne about 1120 B.C., the positions were reversed. Vast accessions of territory were made by the usurping general Tiglath-pileser IV (745–727 B.C.), with Nineveh as the centre of government. The campaigns of another usurper, Sargon II (722–705 B.C.), were eminently successful, and his son Sennacherib (705–681 B.C.) kept the empire intact. Under Sennacherib's son Esarhaddon (681–668 B.C.) Egypt was added to the Assyrian empire, which then attained its greatest extent and power.

At Esarhaddon's death the empire was divided between his two sons. But dangers were threatening. The Medes and other enemies were gathering on the borders, Egypt was lost, and other parts of the empire were tottering to their fall. A Chaldaean prince became king of Babylon and added continually to his gains. Finally, in 612 B.C., the Medes and Babylonians made a united and successful attack on Assyria, and Nineveh was taken and destroyed. See Iraq : Mesopotamia.

ATHENS. Capital of the republic of Greece. The earliest town consisted, according to Thucydides, of the Acropolis and its immediate surroundings. The tyrant Peisistratus began the great temple of Zeus Olympius. Shortly before the Persian invasion in 480 B.C. the Athenians became the chief sea power of Greece. It was one of the great achievements of Themistocles that he made them realize the value of the Piraeus. The age of Pericles was the time of the highest artistic activity. The Parthenon was built between 447 and 433 B.C., and the great columned gate house, or Propylaea, was begun in 437 B.C. The Erechtheum was probably begun in an interval of the Peloponnesian war.

In the Hellenistic age Athens had become the literary and artistic metropolis of the world. In the Roman age the chief period of artistic activity was the reign of Hadrian (A.D. 117–138), during which the temple of Zeus Olympius was completed. The buildings of Athens remained practically unchanged until the 5th or 6th century A.D., when the old religion was officially abolished. After the capture of Athens by the Turks in 1456 the Parthenon became a mosque. In 1687 the Venetians exploded the powder magazine which had been placed in the Parthenon by the Turks, destroying all the central part of the temple. Athens was a small town until 1834, when it was made the capital of the new kingdom of Greece.

Modern Athens occupies for the most part the N. and E. sides of the ancient city. It is the seat of a Greek metropolitan, the railway and financial centre of the country, and a centre of international archaeological study. In 1930 the city was provided with a new water supply. A dam, built at Marathon, formed a lake which feeds a reservoir capable of passing out 9,000,000 gallons a day. In 1929 a scheme was set on foot to modernise its port, the Piraeus (q.v.) and to create a new one. Population, including the Piraeus, 750,000.

ATMOSPHERE (Gr atmos, vapour, sphaira, sphere). Name given to the gaseous envelope, chiefly a mixture of nitrogen and oxygen, which surrounds the earth It is probably a thin remnant of an atmosphere of much greater volume and density.

The mechanical mixing of the chief constituents of the atmosphere is extraordinarily uniform, the differences being almost negligible, except where special factors intervene, e g , in the immediate vicinity of an active volcano, where the proportion of carbon dioxide appreciably increases The uniformity is partly due to the extreme mobility of the atmosphere, partly to the property which gases possess of rapid diffusion or mixture Samples of air freed from water vapour have been found to contain approximately the following percentages by volume nitrogen, 78 03 , oxygen, 20 99 , argon, 0 94 , carbon dioxide, 0 03 ; and other gases in minute amounts.

Nitrogen, which constitutes the major portion of the atmosphere, appears to act as a diluent of the oxygen Its chief characteristic is its inertness, which probably accounts for the fact that, although so common in the air, it is a comparatively rare element in the earth, since it does not readily combine with other elements to form liquids or solid substances It is, however, of great importance to plants Most plants are incapable of assimilating nitrogen from the air directly, but derive their supplies from the soil Oxygen is of the utmost importance, being directly concerned with the phenomenon of combustion and respiration In all animals the breathing of oxygen produces slow combustion, which gives the heat necessary for life

Carbon dioxide or carbonic acid gas is present in very small amounts It is derived from the respiration of animals, from the combustion of organic matter, and from volcanoes or earth fissures Its presence is of the utmost importance to plants It is taken in by the green cells of the leaves, and under the influence of sunlight it is decomposed, the oxygen being freed and the carbon retained for food Thus, since oxygen is of vital importance to animals and carbon dioxide to plants, and animals inhale the former and exhale the latter, a process reversed in the case of plants, the two are intimately dependent upon each other Of the rarer inert gases present argon is the commonest, but helium, neon, krypton, and xenon are also present in minute quantities

Water vapour is invariably present in the atmosphere, but is constantly changing in both quantity and condition Water vapour is essential to the manifold forms of plant life, without water vapour the whole earth would be a Saharan waste The moving air may be regarded as a means of conveying water vapour from the ocean surface to the land, the water is absorbed from the sea surface until the atmosphere is full, and the wet air moves landwards to drop the refreshing rain from the dark, heavy clouds When the air is not completely soaked with water vapour the clouds are lighter, higher, and of different shapes

If the atmosphere were of the same density throughout, it would be easy to compute its height and it would be correct to assume that the air only extends to some 26,910 ft. But in reality pressure decreases with altitude, so that at a height of about 3½ m the pressure is half what it is at sea level. This means that one-half of the air, by weight, is below this level At a height of 7 m the pressure is less than one-quarter of the sea-level pressure There is clear evidence that the atmosphere extends to considerable heights Meteorites, or shooting stars, are invisible until they come into contact with the atmosphere, when they become incandescent, some have become luminous at a height of nearly 200 m At great altitudes the atmosphere is exceedingly rarefied, and is probably of a composition somewhat different from that at lower levels See Cloud.

ATOLL. Round coral reef which constitutes an island enclosing a lagoon in the middle. Atolls vary considerably in size, from tiny rings to others whose diameters reach several miles, but they are all very low, as the coral polyp cannot live above the water level Usually the reef is closely grown with coconut palms which take root in the sand formed by the decayed coral The shallow lagoon often contains numerous pearl oysters Frequently the coral ring is broken, and the atoll is shaped like a horse-shoe or a fret-saw.

AUSTRALASIA. Term comprising the commonwealth of Australia, the Dominion of New Zealand, and their dependencies, among them part of New Guinea See New Zealand, Fiji Islands, etc

AUSTRALIA. Island continent in the Pacific Ocean and a dominion of the British Empire Officially known as the Commonwealth of Australia, its total area, including the island of Tasmania, is 2,974,581 sq m , with a coastline of about 8,800 m Its extreme measurements are from Cape York in the N. to Wilson's Promontory in the S , about 2,000 m , and from Steep Point in the W to Cape Byron in the E , about 2,450 m A considerable portion of three divisions of Australia is north of the tropic of Capricorn— that is to say, within the states of Queensland and Western Australia and the Northern Territory no less than 1,149,320 sq m belong to the tropical zone, and 1,020,720 to the temperate zone The whole area of Australia within the temperate zone, however, is 1,825,261 sq m , thus the tropical part is about 0 386 or about five-thirteenths of the whole, or the temperate region is half as large again as the tropical

Australia Arms of the Commonwealth

By reason of its insular position, and the absence of striking physical features, Australia is, on the whole, less subject to extremes of weather than are regions of similar area in other parts of the globe, and latitude for latitude Australia is, on the whole, more temperate The altitudes of the surface of Australia range up to a little over 7,300 feet, hence its climate embraces a great many features, from the characteristically tropical to what is essentially alpine, a fact indicated in some measure by the name Australian Alps given to the southern portion of the Great Dividing Range On the coast, the rainfall is often abundant and the atmosphere moist, but in some portions of the interior it is very limited, and the atmosphere dry The distribution of forest, therefore, with its climatic influence, is very uneven In the interior, in places, there are fine belts of trees, but there are large areas also which are treeless, and where the air is hot and parching in summer Again, on the coast, even so far south as latitude 35°, the vegetation is tropical in its luxuriance

TOPOGRAPHY A series of highlands runs along the eastern and north-eastern shores of the continent, coastal plains are the feature of the south-eastern littoral, which broaden out in the eastern half of the interior into a great plain through which flow the main rivers of New South Wales, Victoria, and S Australia—the Darling, Murrumbidgee, and Murray This plain covers nearly the whole of New South Wales and adjacent parts of Queensland and Victoria It is separated by a slight ridge from a second plain farther west which forms the basin of internal drainage of Lake Eyre, and this basin is divided from the extensive coastal plains which fringe the Gulf of Carpentaria by an east-west ridge S E of Camooweal These three plains combined form the middle plain which extends across the continent from the mouth of the Murray to the Gulf of Carpentaria Another large plain stretches inland along the Great

Bight in the S, but both middle and southern plains give way to the western plateau, which reaches from the Indian Ocean to the Eyre Peninsula and comprises over half the continent.

The Australian Alps, the principal mountain range, stretch from the S E. corner northward through New South Wales, and are continued thence by the Blue Mts, the Liverpool and the New England ranges The mountains are continued northward near the Queensland coast as far as Cooktown, they reach lower altitudes, but still form an effective barrier to communication inland from the narrow coastal lowland The Australian Alps are prolonged to the S W by the Great Dividing Range, which reaches an altitude of 7,328 ft in Kosciusko, the culminating summit of the continent Australia is not rich in rivers and large areas have only been rendered fertile by the construction of irrigation works, especially in the valleys of the Murray and Murrumbidgee in Victoria and New South Wales These with the Darling are the three great rivers of the continent, smaller streams are the Fitzroy, Burdekin, and Diamantina

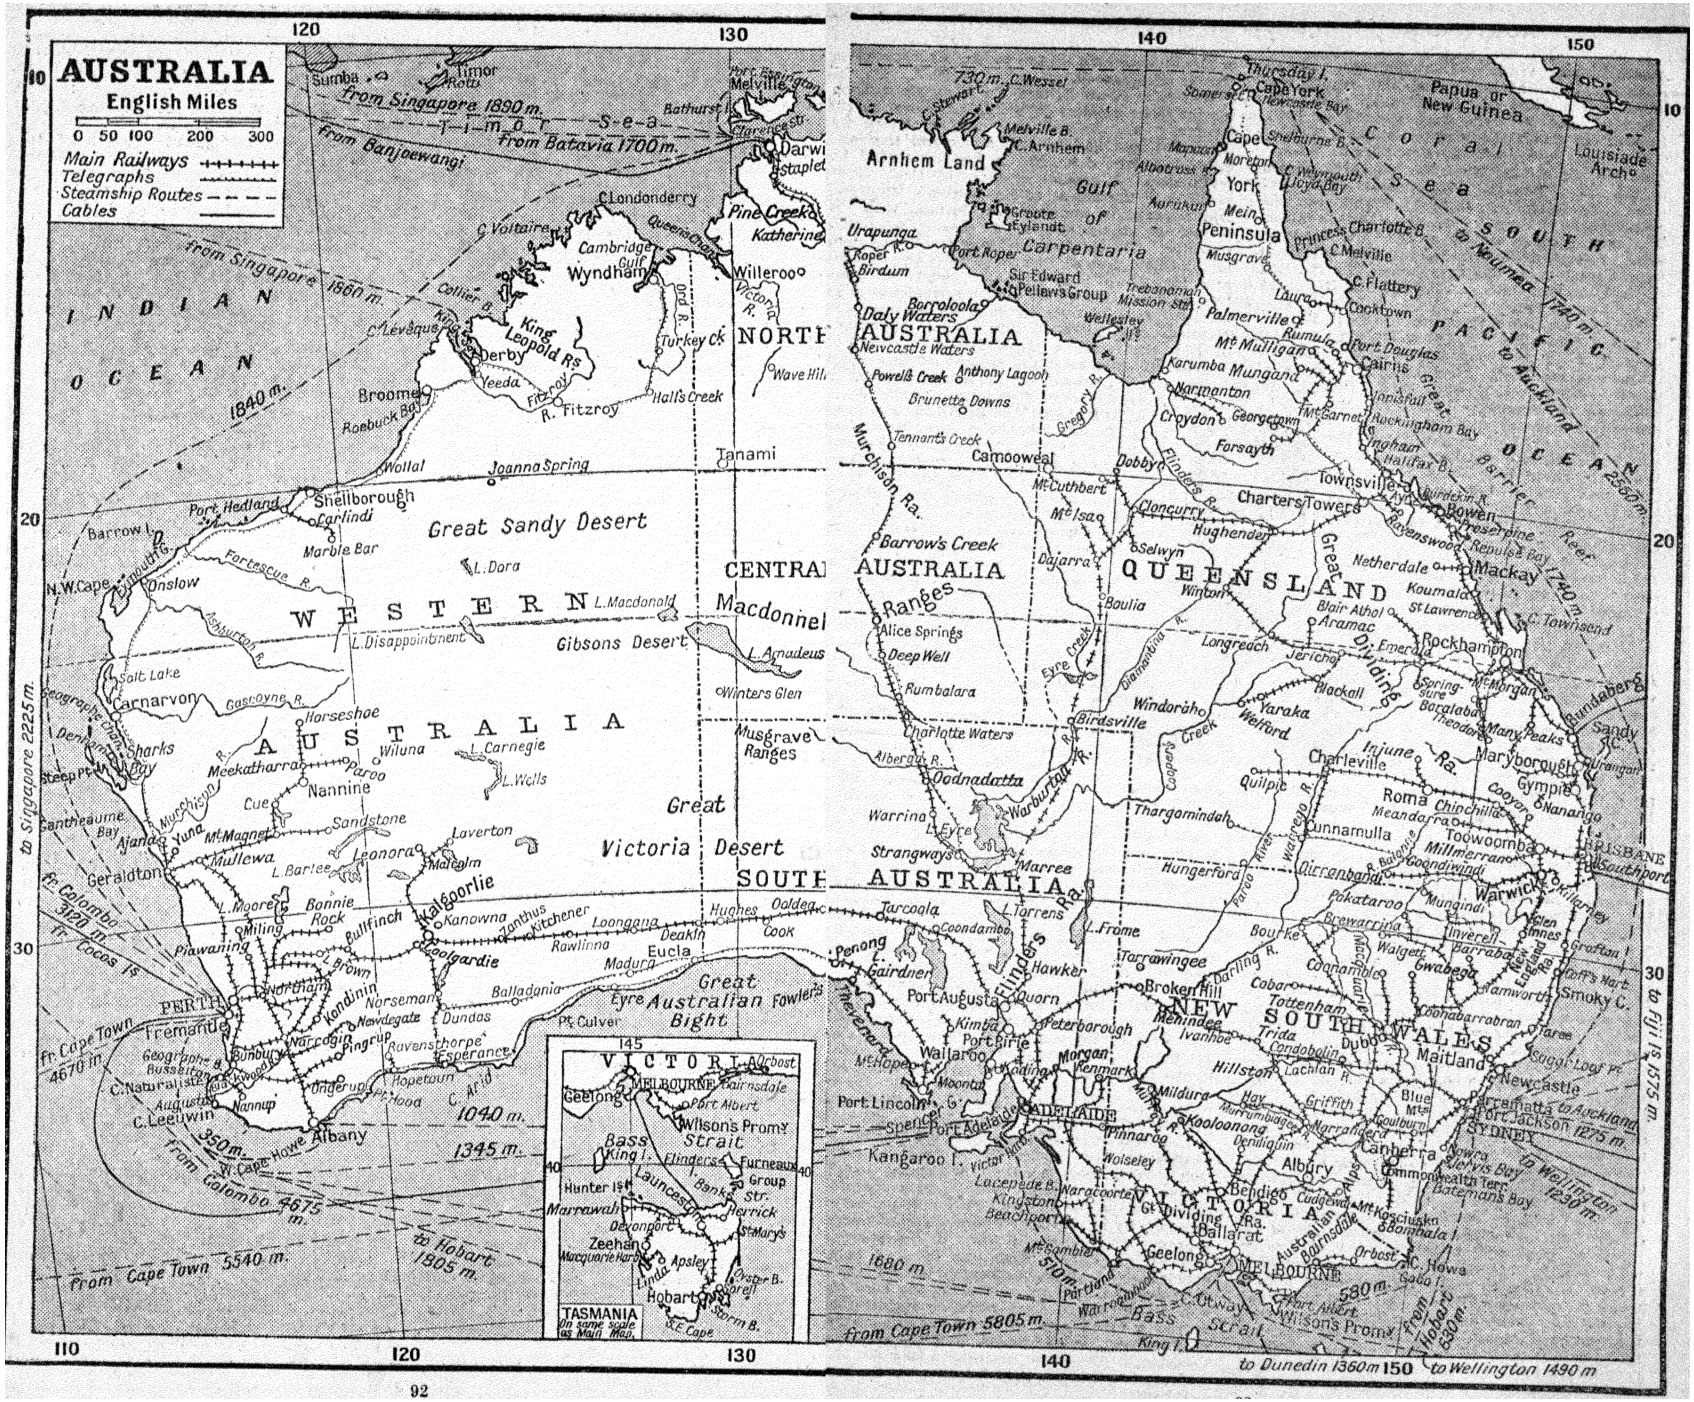
The unbroken isolation of Australia from a period long before historic times is the key to its whole development, and forms of vegetable and animal life, which have become extinct elsewhere, survive in Australia With few exceptions, the indigenous animals are monotremes and marsupials Of the monotremes, the most primitive form of existing mammals, the ornithorhynchus, or duck-billed platypus, and the echidna, or spiny anteater, are the chief, of the marsupials, the characteristic Australian animals, the wombat, opossum, and kangaroo are the most important Of the rich and varied bird life, the lyre-bird, laughing jackass, and emu are typical The typical vegetation of the forest is the eucalyptus, the gum, and the jarrah wood

Political Divisions Australia is divided politically into six states, including Tasmania, and two territories, which together constitute the Commonwealth The seat of government is now Canberra, but Sydney and Melbourne are much the largest cities Other large places are Adelaide, Brisbane, and Newcastle The area and population, excluding about 60,000 aborigines, of the separate divisions are as follows

Division	Area sq m	Population 1931
New South Wales .	309,432	2,507,055
Victoria ..	87,884	1,797,459
Queensland .	670,500	959,572
South Australia .	380,070	583,588
Western Australia .	975,920	420,616
Tasmania	26,215	219,133
Northern Territory	523,620 ..	4,654
Federal Capital Territory . ..	940 .	8,459
Totals .. .	2,974,581 ..	6,500,536

Papua belongs to the Commonwealth, which governs part of New Guinea, New Britain, New Ireland, some of the Samoan Islands, the Solomon Islands, the Admiralty Islands, and Nauru Island under mandate from the League of Nations In 1933 that part of the territory in the Antarctic Seas which comprises all the islands and territories other than Adélie Land situated south of the 60th degree of south latitude and lying between the 160th degree of east longitude and the 45th degree of east longitude, territory over which King George V has sovereign rights, was placed under the authority of the Commonwealth of Australia

Constitution. Australia is a self-governing Dominion and its constitution is "an indissoluble federal commonwealth under the crown of the United Kingdom." It is governed by a governor-general appointed by and responsible to the crown, assisted by an executive council of thirteen members, in practice a cabinet In 1932 it was arranged that one of the ministers should reside permanently in London.



The Australian Parliament consists of two Houses, the Senate and the House of Representatives. The Senate consists of 36 members, six returned by each of the original federating states Members of this chamber are elected for a term of six years, but by a provision in the constitution half the members retire at the end of every third year, although they are eligible for re-election In accordance with the constitution, the total number of members of the House of Representatives must be as nearly as possible double that of the Senate In the House of Representatives the states are represented on a population basis, and the numbers stand at present as follows New South Wales, 28, Victoria, 20, Queensland, 10, South Australia, 7; Western Australia, 5, Tasmania, 5, Northern Territory, 1—total, 76 The member for the Northern Territory may speak, but is not allowed to vote The constitution provides for a minimum of five members for each original state Members of the House of Representatives are elected for the duration of the Parliament, which is limited to three years In elections for Senators, the whole state constitutes the electorate For the purposes of elections for the House of Representatives, the state is divided into single electorates corresponding in number with the number of members to which the state is entitled Members of both Houses are paid at the rate of £1,000 per annum. The right to vote is given to all adults.

Trade and Finance The main industry of Australia is the production of wool Cattle breeding forms a great though less important industry, and large quantities of meat and butter are produced for export, as is a considerable quantity of wheat The production of wine has become an important subsidiary industry and a considerable amount is exported Australia is one of the great metal producing countries, enormous quantities of gold having been found in Western Australia and of silver and lead at Broken Hill in New South Wales, and the output of these metals, and also of copper, is still considerable A good deal of coal is mined Western Australia produces great quantities of timber

The rlys are nearly all state or government property, and upwards of 26,000 m of government line are open to traffic Two beam stations have been erected for direct wireless communication with London and with Canada, the United States, and Mexico, and direct beam wireless service has been established with London

Australia has a state bank, called the Commonwealth Bank Its coinage is based on that of Great Britain Coins are minted at Melbourne and Perth, but the money in circulation is chiefly paper The country has a system of tariffs to protect its industries, but preferences are given to goods imported from Great Britain and other parts of the British Empire Excise duties and income tax are the next largest contributions to the Commonwealth revenue There is a large public debt, partly owing by the Commonwealth and partly by the several states

Each of the six states has its own legislature and court of justice There is a system of justice on the English model, from its supreme court there is an appeal to the judicial committee of the privy council in London Australia has a militia recruited since 1929 by voluntary service, with a small permanent military force, a navy, and an air force The Commonwealth is a member of the League of Nations

HISTORY. The first English seaman to reach Australia was William Dampier, who visited Roebuck Bay in 1688, but his report was unfavourable, and Australia was practically deserted until Captain Cook arrived in 1770 In 1788 the first settlement was made at Sydney Cove, now Port Jackson New South Wales The passage of the Blue Mts in 1813 ushered in the era of pastoral development The gold mining era began in 1851, followed by the development of copper, coal, silver and tin mines The mining era gradually merged into a period when pastoral, agricultural and mining industries were almost equal in importance The creation of the Commonwealth in 1900 was the beginning of the present era.

The first premier of the union was Sir E. Barton, who was succeeded by Alfred Deakin A tariff policy was adopted and this was continued by the Labour ministries which enjoyed a share of power between 1904 and 1914 Indeed the insistence of organized labour on the protection of home industries, with its concomitant of high wages, was the outstanding feature of Australian politics When the Great War began Sir Joseph Cook was premier, but in a few weeks he was replaced by Andrew Fisher, the labour leader Australia's response to the call for men was instant She contributed men, ships, and material 416,000 men and women volunteered, and of these 330,000 journeyed overseas Australian troops distinguished themselves in Gallipoli, Egypt, Palestine and on the Western front The Australian navy did good service in the Pacific during the early days of the struggle The casualties were over 200,000 and the total war bill was about £464,000,000.

In 1917 a national government was formed with W M Hughes as premier, and during the War two referenda were held on the subject of compulsory military service Mr Hughes represented Australia at the peace conference in Paris in 1919–20, and Australia received a mandate from the League of Nations to take over the government of some of the German possessions in the South Seas In 1923 Mr Hughes was succeeded by Mr S M Bruce, whose ministry, although also a coalition, was somewhat different in composition from that of his predecessor He and his colleagues dealt with the serious troubles caused by the railway and dock strikes, and saw the removal of the federal capital from Melbourne to Canberra During these years, as later, adventurous airmen made several remarkable flights between the mother country and Australia

Mr Bruce's ministry was defeated in an attempt to abolish compulsory arbitration, and in October, 1929 a general election took place. This resulted in a majority for the Labour party, and under Mr J H Scullin a ministry was formed from members of that group In less than a year this was faced with an economic and financial crisis of the first magnitude The heavy fall in the prices of wool and wheat, coupled with other unfavourable factors, rendered it impossible for the country to make its payments abroad under prevailing conditions. To avoid something like national insolvency it was decided to restrict the volume of imports and to take other measures that made it possible for the Commonwealth to provide the funds for its London, New York, and other obligations Additional taxation was imposed, the interest on loans was reduced, and the premiers decided that at all costs the budgets of the Commonwealth and of the separate states should be balanced

But, as in Great Britain, the situation was too serious to be handled by a single political party, especially as the ministry was weakened by dissension and had to face a demand that the interest on the debt due in London should be repudiated A general election in Dec., 1931 resulted in the defeat of Mr Scullin's followers, and a coalition ministry was formed with his former colleague, Mr. J. A Lyons, as prime minister The chief associates of Mr Lyons were Mr Latham, formerly leader of the Opposition, and Mr. Bruce, once premier, who was sent presently to London as minister resident The ministry pressed forward with its schemes for retrenchment and dealt firmly with the refusal of New South Wales under Mr J T. Lang to provide funds to meet the interest on its oversea loans, a policy which, by 1933, had restored to Australia some of its former prosperity

Australian Aborigine Tribesman of the Gilbert river district

AUSTRALIAN ABORIGINES Primitive race found inhabiting the Australian continent by its European discoverers. The present number of these blackfellows probably doe not exceed 60,000 Their arrival in a remote past is deduced from their physical characteristics, primitive culture, diverse and undeveloped speech, and the absence of words for numbers beyond four There are no stratified remains as in palaeolithic Europe, but extensive kitchen middens are not unknown

In Australia a primal occupation by an eolithic race, entering from the N before the frizzy-haired Papuan was specialised, seems to have been followed by a Palaeolithic race, perhaps Mousterian, who crossed pre-Dravidian India and left the Veddas behind them They brought with them no pottery, bow and arrow, domesticated plant, nor animal—except, perhaps, the warrigal or dingo—and no specialised tool except the wommera, or spearthrower, and another weapon afterwards developed into the boomerang They drove the older people into the S E, with some intermingling, but no serfdom, until these crossed Bass strait and survived as the Tasmanians In later ages the northern tribes were influenced culturally from Malaysia

The uniformity of the physical type supports this view. Prominent brow-ridges, receding fore head, broad based nose with notched root, thick lips, long-headed skull, small brain, tall stature, are paralleled in prehistoric Europe, chocolate-brown skin, wavy or nearly straight black hair, and other Caucasian attributes may also be palaeolithic The flat-headed skull and other primitive characters are most marked in the south.

The food quest of these nomadic hunters was conditioned from the first by the lack of domestication Wild roots need no implement but the women's digging stick Moths and grubs are of importance in the dietary. Fish and emu may be poisoned by piturl, from a narcotic plant allied to tobacco, whose place it takes in the aboriginal life. While human flesh was never a regular article of food, all the motives for cannibalism are represented Ignorant of metals, the local technologist developed some neolithic features, such as the polished axes of the Arunta, bone awls, shell cutters, wood shields, and fanged spears. Clothing, if used, may comprise a hair net and a fur tassel or a shell, held in place by a grass or hair cord.

In the S. a winter cloak of bark or skin may be used. Ornament includes a film of fish oil or a pattern of ochre, a kangaroo-tooth necklet, or a bushy tail in the hair. Savage ornament easily passes into mutilation, such as the nose-pin and the removal of teeth, both affecting language by eliminating such consonants as f and s. Dwellings are usually little more than wind-screens, barked or leaved, with the occasional use of caves. The seamless bark canoe is characteristic.

Initiation into adult life occurs at the "bora" ceremonies. To the mutilations already mentioned should be added scar-tattooing, circumcision, and for the central area a more severe rite unknown elsewhere. The bora ground is specially prepared with earth reliefs of tribal animals and other devices, whose secret meaning is disclosed to the novices, the women being warned to avoid the mysteries by the divine voice of the bull-roarer.

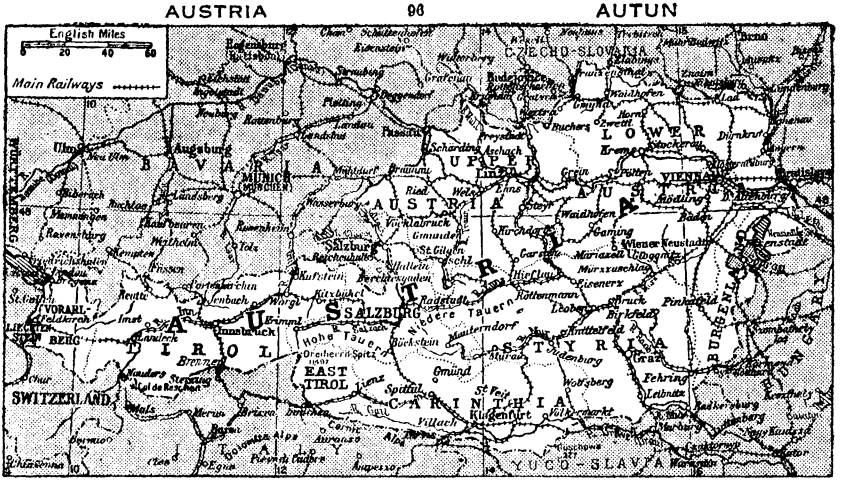
Each member of a tribe has a totem usually chosen from the animal world, but in the N. tending to include plants, and the rule forbidding the indiscriminate use of one's totem as food reflects its animistic side. For invitations to bora or corroboree message-sticks are used whose memory-aiding signs suggest the threshold of writing. The ground drawings prepared at initiations have a magical intention, like the designs that adorn the churinga. But in several places mural paintings of animal and human forms, with scenic compositions—some recent, some of unknown age—together with stencilled hands, recall the art of prehistoric Europe.

Austria. Peasant from the district of Tirol in native dress

The practice of infanticide, under the impulse of hunger or tribal usage, is not inconsistent with kindliness and affection. Woman is a chattel, and owes little to ancestral matriarchy. The customs attached to the disposal of the dead—in tree, earth, or cave —with smoke preservation and cremation here nd there, attest an inherent belief in an ter-life. The religion is a low animism th some magical adjuncts, which find ir expression, as among the Warramunga, in ch ceremonial pantomime. There is no hism, prayer, or sacrifice; but a copious iology has been claimed, especially in the to betoken a more or less inarticulate ition of an All-Father.

RALIAN ALPS. Mountain range in S.E. It extends for roughly 300 m. from ie to Canberra. The S. portion, in , to which the name is more strictly , is a wide plateau with heights, Bogong .t., Feathertop 6,300 ft., Hotham 6,100 ft., 5,930 ft. N. of the border within New Wales the plateau narrows, and the names wy Mts. and Kosciusko Massif are applied to more elevated S. portion. Here Kosciusko, 28 ft., and Townsend, 7,260 ft., near the head- ers of the Murray river, are the main heights. ie whole area is snow-capped in winter, and now lies in the sheltered hollows near the tarns ost of the year. Overlooking Canberra, mberi rises to 6,264 ft. The S.W. portion is own as the Great Dividing Range, and still rther W. as the Pyrenees.

The whole system is due to erosion, the moun- ns being technically known as residuals or untains of circumdenudation. The uppermost rocks of the present peaks are the remnants of a plain that was formerly continuous between them. This plain gradually rose and, as it rose, the original river system carved out valleys, which were cut down steadily as the plain was elevated. The Australian Alps are thus a dissected peneplain, and in this regard resemble the Grampians of Scotland. They form part of the Main Divide, which forms the watershed between the short rivers, such as the Snowy river, which flow to the E. and S.E. coasts, and the great fluvial system of the Murray-Darling. Both the Murray and the Murrumbidgee have their source in the Kosciusko Massif. The range has many forested areas, chiefly yielding giant eucalypts, and provides Australians with opportunities for winter sports, while the scenic beauties, limestone caverns, and other natural attractions make the Australian Alps a resort of tourists.



AUSTRALIAN BIGHT, GREAT. Opening of the ocean S. of Australia. From Cape Arid in W. Australia to Eyre Peninsula in S. Australia the bight is 1,600 m. long. E. of Fowler's Bay are headlands, bays, islands, and inlets with submerged reefs. Here is Streaky Bay, the only safe anchorage. In the bight the continental shelf extends roughly 200 m. from the coast; beyond it the ocean floor drops in the next 200 m. from 100 to over 3,000 fathoms in Jeffrey's Deep.

AUSTRIA. Republic of Europe. German-Austria, as it is sometimes called on account of its dominant German population, is one of the states formed out of the fragments of the Austro-Hungarian empire. It is bounded on the N. by Germany and Czechoslovakia, on the E. by Hungary, on the S. by Yugoslavia and Italy, and on the W. by Switzerland. Its area is 32,369 sq. m. It is entirely cut off from the sea. Its frontiers were provisionally defined in the treaty of St. Germain, that was signed Sept. 10, 1919.

The republic consists of nine provinces. These are the city of Vienna, the Burgenland, Lower Austria, Upper Austria, Salzburg, Styria, Carinthia, Tirol, and Vorarlberg. It is watered by tributaries of the Danube, the Inn, Enns, Murz, Mur, and Drava. The chief towns are Vienna, the capital, Graz, Linz, Innsbruck, Salzburg, and Wiener Neustadt. Agriculture is the main occupation, but the foodstuffs produced are not sufficient for the population. The forests are extensive and produce large quantities of timber. The chief minerals are coal, iron, lead, and zinc. The railways are mainly owned by the state, which subsidises an aviation service. The population is estimated at 6,722,395.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT. Austria is ruled by a president, elected by the people for four years, and a ministry, the members of which are appointed by him. The legislature consists of two houses. One is elected by all adults for four years; the other consists of persons sent by the legislatures of the several provinces, which have a certain amount of local government. The country has an army, but this is limited by treaty to 30,000 men. There is neither navy nor air force. Austria is a member of the League of Nations.

TRADE AND FINANCE. The main industry is agriculture. Cereals and potatoes are extensively grown and the output of sugar beet is large. The country has a national bank founded in 1925. The unit of currency is the gold schilling which is worth 10,000 krone. The metric system of weights and measures is used. After 1922 the finances of the country were reorganized by the aid of an international loan, but further assistance was found necessary in 1933.

HISTORY. Austria owes its existence and its name to the fact that it began as a border or mark district along the Danube. It was the east, or ost, mark set up by Charlemagne about 800 to protect his eastern frontier. In 1156 the mark was made into a duchy and Vienna became its capital. In 1282 the duchy was given to a member of the Hapsburg family, and from then until 1918 it was the core of their possessions. At the close of the Middle Ages Austria covered 50,000 sq. m.

From the time of the emperor Charles V to that of Napoleon, Austria and the Holy Roman Empire were almost identical. The duke of the one was also emperor of the other and was also, during most of that time, king of Hungary and king of Bohemia. In 1804 the ruler took the title of emperor of Austria; in 1806 his other empire (the Holy Roman) was dissolved. In 1867 the empire of Austria became the empire of Austria-Hungary. As such it entered the Great War which resulted in its complete collapse.

The republic was proclaimed in Nov., 1918, but its early years were marked by economic and financial difficulties and boundary disputes with Hungary and Yugoslavia. The latter were settled, more or less satisfactorily, and in 1922 the League of Nations put in hand a great scheme for the reconstruction of Austria. In 1928 and 1929 there were serious disturbances owing to disagreements between the Heimwehr a Fascist organization, and the socialist Schutzbund, the former demanding a drastic revision of the constitution. In Sept., 1929, Dr. Johann Schober became chancellor and, in order to avert civil war, secured the assent of the assembly to constitutional changes. By these the president of the republic obtained larger powers and a longer term of office.

AUSTRIA, LOWER. Province of the republic of Austria, sometimes described as Austria below the Enns. Until November, 1918, it formed a crownland of the Austro-Hungarian empire, and with the crownland of Upper Austria constituted the archduchy of Austria. It has an area of 7,452 sq. m., and is divided into two almost equal parts by the Danube which crosses from W. to E. The N.W. is an extension of the Bohemian plateau; the S. is mountainous, containing minor ranges of the Alpine region; the centre is the great basin of Vienna. It is watered by the Danube and its tributaries, the chief of which are the Enns, March, and Leitha, and by the Lainsitz, an affluent of the Moldau. The forests yield valuable timber, but the soil is rather infertile, the chief crops being wheat, rye, oats, and potatoes. The chief farm animals are horses and pigs. The vine is cultivated, and coal and iron mining are carried on, but the principal industries are saw-milling, brewing, distilling, and the manufacture of textiles, chemicals, tobacco, leather, sugar, etc. Vienna, the capital, is the chief industrial centre. It was the most thickly peopled province in the Austro-Hungarian monarchy. Lower Austria has a pop. of 1,480,450, nearly all Germans and Roman Catholics.

AUSTRIA, UPPER. Province of the republic of Austria, described sometimes as Austria above the Enns. AZTEC (crane people). American Indian tribe. They lived on the Mexican tableland at the time of the Spanish conquest. They spoke a Nahua dialect and the name included all the ancient tribes of Nahuan stock. The early home of these people was in British Columbia, whence they moved to the Mexican tableland. There they found a people called Toltecs, whose empire was broken up by the advance of the more virile Nahuans. The invaders were in several tribes, but in a comparatively short time the Aztecs had become predominant.

The warlike skill of the Aztecs soon gained for them, about 1325, the opportunity of fortifying the Tenochtitlan island, where Mexico city now stands. Electing a king in 1376, they secured the hegemony of the valley and formed into various confederacies, and waged war with organized armies upon the outlying peoples, exacting tribute of cotton, gold, and other products. These confederacies had extended to both oceans when their ruler Montezuma II was overthrown by Cortes in 1519.

The Aztec civilization, taken over from subjugated peoples, embraced several elements, material, intellectual, and social, clearly due to cultural drift from the Old World. The elective chiefs were held in check by a priestly aristocracy, which exploited the servile peasantry. At present they number about 500,000.

BAROMETER (Gr baros, weight, metron, measure) Instrument which measures the pressure of the atmosphere A mercurial barometer consists essentially of a glass tube closed at one end This tube is filled with mercury, inverted, and the open end placed in a cup of mercury The mercury column then falls a little and some of the mercury runs back into the cup, leaving in the tube a column about 30 ins high When the air pressure upon the surface of the mercury is decreased, some mercury flows from the tube to the cup when it is increased some is forced into the tube, so that the column stands higher At sea level, if pressure is normal, the column stands about 29 9 ins , or 760 millimetres, high When it stands higher the pressure is called high , when it stands lower the pressure is called low

Aneroid barometers are in very common use, owing to the ease with which they can be carried They have a metal diaphragm inside a metal case Differences of pressure cause the diaphragm to move, because the air inside has been exhausted, and this movement is communicated by delicate levers to an index finger which is moved on a dial The dial is usually graduated in feet as well as in inches or millimetres Thus an aneroid barometer is very convenient for obtaining elevations, as pressure decreases with altitude Since April, 1914, the British Meteorological Office has adopted the millibar as the unit of pressure One thousand millibars are equivalent to 29 53 ins of mercury

BEACH. Coastal formation due to wave action The sea is constantly attacking a cliff coast, boulders are broken away and these are broken into fragments The set of the currents moves these fragments, which gradually become smaller, along the shore. Wherever an indentation in the shore line tends to reduce the speed of the moving water, part of the rock-load borne onward by the current is dropped, and accumulates to make a deposit, which becomes a beach The process is modified near the mouths of rivers by additional deposits of river silt

The character of a beach depends entirely upon the rock material of the neighbouring cliffs. In some cases the beach is mainly mud of riverine origin with occasional cliff fragments, at other places there are wide stretches of fine sand made from cliff boulders ground to tiny particles; in yet other places the beach is shingle, where the cliff material is only partially broken up. The shore line does not remain fixed; in past geological time the coastal area may have been depressed and beaches are left only at the head of the drowned valleys On the contrary, the land may have been uplifted, with the result that at varying heights above the present sea level are relics of former beaches.

Such elevated beaches, with and without beach-deposits, occur all round the W. coast of Britain and N W coast of France, being especially well-marked in the W of Scotland, S of Ireland, S. Wales, Normandy, and Brittany They occur usually at heights of 50 ft and 100 ft above the present sea level, and these narrow but continuous platforms, as in the island of Mull, often form an easy route across country that would otherwise be almost impassable.

Lake beaches may be left at a high level by the more or less sudden lowering of the level of a lake by drainage, and by evaporation during an extended period of drought They thus differ somewhat from raised beaches proper in owing their existence to the lowering of the water level rather than to the elevation of the land Horizontal notches on the hillsides marking old lake-beaches are not uncommon One notable example is the Parallel Roads of Glen Roy in Scotland, where a series of beaches, one below the other, marks the gradual lowering of the old glacial lake that at one time filled this and adjacent valleys Other good examples are the Great Lake region of N America and the Salt Lake district of Utah

(including the Isle of Ely), Northampton, Huntingdon, Lincoln, Norfolk, and Suffolk. Formerly a morass, it was drained about 1640 by Cornelius Vermuyden at the expense of Francis, 4th earl of Bedford, and thirteen co-adventurers, who obtained a concession on condition that it was properly drained. It is now fertile and productive of grain, flax, etc. It consists of the north, middle, and south levels, and is intersected by the Nene, Cam, Ouse, and Welland rivers, and some artificial channels. Two cuts, the Old and New Bedford rivers, cross the Isle of Ely from the Huntingdon border to the Ouse and pursue a parallel course (1 m. apart) for 21 miles.

Its land frontier of some 6,000 m. faces French Equatorial Africa and the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan to the N.W. and N., Uganda and Tanganyika Territory to the E., and Northern Rhodesia and Angola to the S. It is a Belgian colony and includes Ruanda and Urundi, formerly part of German East Africa now ceded to Belgium under a mandate of the League of Nations. Area about 918,000 sq. m.; pop. about 8,830,000, of whom some 25,000 are Europeans.

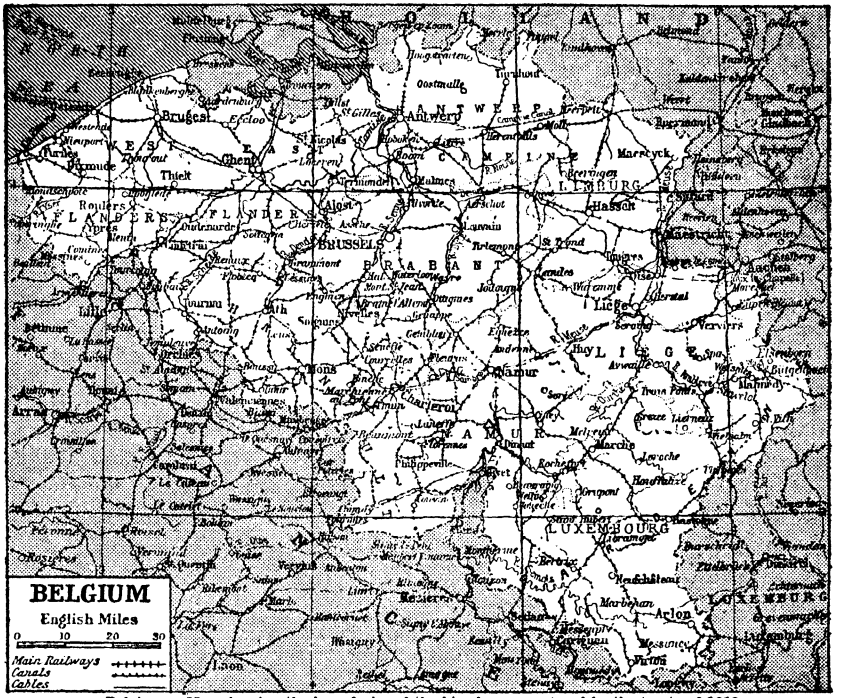
The country is a vast basin drained by the river Congo and its tributaries. Lying on both sides of the Equator, it has a tropical climate. Products include palm nuts, palm oil, white copal, rubber, cocoa, coffee, ivory, rice, and cotton. The forests yield mahogany and other valuable timber. Cattle are raised in the highlands, but in the lowlands the tsetse fly makes cattle farming impossible. The Katanga province is one of the world's chief producers of copper. Other minerals include gold, diamonds, tin, and radium. The capital is Leopoldville. The chief seaports are Banana, Boma, and Matadi. The river ports include the capital, Coquilhatville, Stanleyville and Ponthierville.

The country is divided into twenty-two districts. The capital, formerly Boma, was changed to Leopoldville by royal decree in 1923. The Congo is navigable for 95 miles from its mouth and for a further 1,000 above Stanley Pool, as far as Stanley Falls. Above the falls the river is known as Lualaba and becomes navigable again for over 500 m. Railways link up the navigable sections of the river, and a new, important line has been built from Katango to Lobito Bay in Angola by arrangement with the Portuguese. This line was opened in 1931. There are regular air services between Boma and Elisabethville and other points, and there are several wireless stations.

The Congo Free State, as the country was originally called, was founded by Leopold II, king of the Belgians, in 1885, and was ruled by him as his personal property. It was transferred to the control of the Belgian Parliament, through the colonial minister, in 1908, and thenceforth was known as the Belgian Congo.

BELGIUM. Kingdom of Europe. It is bounded N. by the Netherlands, E. by Germany and the grand duchy of Luxemburg, and S. by France. Its short, low-lying W. coastline is washed by the North Sea. The area is 11,755 sq. m. By the treaty of Versailles Germany ceded to Belgium neutral Moresnet and part of Prussian Moresnet, and Belgium also received provisionally the cantons of Malmédy and Eupen, a cession later confirmed by the League of Nations, of which Belgium is a member.

Much of the country is flat. In the S.E. the Ardennes, which are well-wooded and intersected by river valleys, have an average elevation of 500 ft. The chief rivers are the Scheldt, Meuse, Sambre, and Yser. The principal towns include Brussels (the capital), Antwerp, Liége, Ghent, Bruges, Malines, Louvain, and Borgerhout.



Of the two branches of the Belgian people, the Walloons speak French and the Flemish the language known by their name, which is almost identical with Dutch. Most of the people are Roman Catholics. Pop. 8,092,004.

HISTORY. Having been part of the Netherlands since 1815, Belgium became an independent state in 1830. The first king of the Belgians, Leopold of Saxe-Coburg, was elected by the national congress in 1831, and was succeeded in 1865 by his son Leopold II, who reigned until 1909 and was succeeded by his nephew Albert. The treaty of April 19, 1839, established the status of Belgium as an independent and neutral kingdom, and this was in force when the Great War began. After being occupied by the Germans during the Great War, reconstruction proceeded in every direction from the early summer of 1919 and onwards. Railways, canals, and roads were almost restored to pre-war usefulness by the end of 1919. The coal mines had suffered less than other branches of industry; the textile industry had been crippled by the loss of machinery, but here, as also in the case of the metal workers, relief was afforded by the return of plant from Germany.

The years after the Great War were filled with political interest. The coalition government, which was in power in 1919, favoured a military alliance with France and an aggressive policy towards the Netherlands. In 1921 the Socialists withdrew, and for the next few years a union of Roman Catholics and Liberals carried on the government. In 1925, after securing many successes at the general election, the Socialists again joined to form a ministry, and under Henri Jaspar a coalition was formed. This was replaced in 1931 by another coalition. In 1921 the constitution was revised in the direction of an extension of the franchise, and an economic treaty for 50 years was made with Luxemburg. In 1932 the language difficulty was to some extent alleviated by French and Flemish being put on an equality.

This system is connected with the Thames by two routes One is by way of the Oxford canal, which joins the Thames near that city, and the other is by means of the Grand Junction canal, which links up with the Thames at Brentford and Limehouse. Two routes also link it with the Severn. The Worcester and Birmingham canal joins the Netherton canal, part of the Birmingham system, with the Severn at Worcester. The Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal links the system with the Severn at Stourport. The same canal serves to connect the Birmingham system with the Trent and Mersey canal, and so with the estuary of the Mersey For this there are two routes, one leading to the Manchester Ship Canal at Ellesmere Port and the other leading to the same canal at Weston Point locks or to the Bridgwater canal at Preston Brook.

The system has 216 locks and there are three considerable stretches without locks These are the Wolverhampton level, 54 miles long; the Birmingham level, 33 miles long; and the Walsall level, 20 miles long The waterway varies in width from 25 to 45 ft, and there are several tunnels In consequence of its height above the sea and the deficiency of natural supplies, it is a matter of some difficulty to keep the canals supplied with water This is done by using four reservoirs and by pumping water up from the mines See Canal

HISTORY. Little is known about the early history of Bohemia. It was at one time part of the Frankish kingdom and at another subject to Moravia. Christianity secured a footing about 900 and soon the land had its own rulers, these being the descendants, real or supposed, of a ploughman named Premysl. One of the earliest of these was Wenceslas, the hero of the carol, who was murdered in 938 and became Bohemia's patron saint. These rulers were called kings, but it was not until 1088 that this title was formally given to them by the head of the Holy Roman Empire, of which Bohemia formed part.

Ottokar, who became king in 1253, made it a European power, and the throne remained with his descendants until the family died out in 1306. In 1310 the crown, which was in theory elective, was given to John, who was killed at Crécy. He belonged to the Luxembourg family and his son Charles and his grandsons, Wenceslas and Sigismund, were emperors as well as kings of Bohemia for nearly a century. Charles, who reigned from 1346 to 1378, did much for his country's prosperity. In the next reign John Hus appeared in Bohemia and the wars that followed his execution disturbed the country during the reign of Sigismund.

On Sigismund's death in 1437 the close connexion between Bohemia and the Empire was broken. A national hero, George of Podebrady, was elected king in 1457 and his successors were Polish princes. When the last of these, Louis, was killed in battle in 1526 an arrangement made in 1364 came into operation. This provided for the succession of a Hapsburg if the ruling family died out. Consequently, Ferdinand, a brother of Charles V, who had married a sister of Louis, became king. Henceforward, until 1918, Bohemia was united with Austria and Hungary, and members of the Hapsburg family, rulers of the Empire in which Austria was the leading partner, were also its kings. In theory each one was elected, but it became a formal proceeding only and was finally abandoned in favour of the hereditary principle. In 1919 Bohemia was the centre round which the new state of Czechoslovakia was formed. See Czechoslovakia.

BOROUGH (O E. burh, a fortified town). In England, Wales, Ireland and other English speaking countries, a place to which privileges have been given and which is distinct from the surrounding country. The Scottish equivalent is burgh. The earliest boroughs were fortified towns called burgs, and at the time of Domesday there were 80 of them in England. After the Norman Conquest certain places obtained charters from the king or an overlord. These gave the inhabitants certain privileges, such as the right to hold markets, to collect their own taxes, to elect their own officials, etc. They were called chartered towns or boroughs, but there was no uniformity in their privileges or their methods of government.

In 1835 an important Act reformed the government of the boroughs, and since then they have all been ruled in much the same way Each has a mayor and a council consisting of aldermen and councillors, the latter elected by the ratepayers In 1888 boroughs with over 50,000 inhabitants were constituted a special class, called county boroughs, and were given the same privileges as counties In 1926 it was decided that no place should, in future, be made a county borough unless it had 75,000 inhabitants Any populous place can apply to the privy council for a charter making it a borough Places that have done this recently include Barking, Barnes, Brentford, Heston, Worksop and Rugby See Burgh; County Borough, England

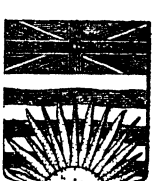
BRITAIN. Name given to England and Scotland before the coming of the Teutonic invaders. Briton is the name of those tribes who formed the second and third (Brythonic and Belgic) waves of Celtic invaders which, before Roman civilization came into contact with them, subjugated the whole of what is now England, Wales, and the Lowlands of Scotland. The Belgic wave can hardly have been earlier than 150 B C, and the Brythonic hardly later than 400 B C.



Early references point to commercial intercourse between the Phoenicians and Britain, whence they procured tin But Britain is first brought definitely into the orbit of the civilized world by Julius Caesar His first visit, in 55 B C, was merely a military reconnaissance, but he returned the following year with a much larger force, but again retired without effecting a conquest or leaving a garrison His picture of the natives, fair-haired warriors with their blue war paint, wicker coracles, primitive huts, loose tribal organization, human sacrifices, and priesthood of Druids is familiar

The Roman army of conquest, led by Aulus Plautius, landed in Britain A D 43 Agricola (A D 78-84) established the Roman rule as far as the Tyne, and carried his arms as far as the Forth, tracing a fortified wall across the neck of Scotland to hold back the Gaels (Caledonians and Picts) of the north The Romans remained in Britain until 407 Then the tribes of the north, Picts and Scots, surged in, and in the middle of the century the English tide began to flood the shores of Britain and to submerge the British population See England; Scotland, Wales.

BRITISH EMPIRE. Union of lands ruled by the king of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. It consists of (1) Great Britain and Northern Ireland; (2) six Dominions or self-governing units, Australia, Canada, Newfoundland, New Zealand, South Africa, and the Irish Free State; (3) the empire of India; (4) crown colonies such as Nigeria, Ceylon, and Jamaica; (5) protectorates such as Kenya and Nyasaland, and (6) lands such as Tanganyika, that are governed under mandato from the League of Nations. Southern Rhodesia occupies a position midway between a Dominion and a crown colony. The Empire belongs to the League of Nations, each of its Dominions being a distinct member.

The area of the Empire is 13,355,426 sq. m. and its pop. about 450,000,000. Almost every race and religion are found within it and it ranks as the greatest Mahomedan power in the world. Only about 65,000,000 of its inhabitants are white and more than one-half of the total live in India.

The Dominions govern themselves without any interference or control on the part of the mother country, which is represented in each by a governor-general. Their method of government with electors, parliaments and cabinets is modelled on that of Great Britain. India occupies a special position, and its relations with the rest of the Empire were the subject of exhaustive inquiries in 1928-32. The crown colonies are governed, wholly or partly, by officials sent out from Great Britain.

In theory the parliament at Westminster can legislate for the whole Empire, but it abandoned its right to legislate for the Dominions by the statute of Westminster of 1931. Their legislation, however, needs the assent of the king to make it valid, but this is never refused. Throughout the Empire the position of the judicial committee of the privy council as the final court of appeal from all the law courts is recognized, though S. Africa and the Irish Free State have raised certain objections to it.

The affairs of the Empire are looked after by the Dominions, Colonial and India Offices in London, each under a secretary of state. Until 1925 there was a secretary for the colonies only, but in that year a secretaryship for the Dominions was established. India has had its own secretary since 1858. The only recognized body that deals with the affairs of the Empire as a whole is the Imperial Conference, which meets periodically in London.

The Empire may be said to date from 1583, when Newfoundland was settled. After that additions in almost every quarter of the globe were made, some by discovery, others by conquest, but in 1783 the most valuable of these, the American colonies, were lost. Expansion, however, continued, the most notable acquisition being India, and the end of the Napoleonic wars saw Great Britain's second colonial empire in being. In the second half of the 19th century a halt was called. Then Egypt and the S. African republics were added, and the end of the Great War brought further extensions, chiefly of territories governed under mandate. Tracts of Antarctica of unknown extent were added by discovery. In 1922 Egypt was given its independence and is no longer included in the Empire's area. Iraq was recognized as an independent state in 1927. More important perhaps was the division of Ireland and the creation of the Irish Free State in 1922. See Australia; Canada; India, etc.

Brussels. Collegiate church of S. Gudule

Brussels possesses but few memorials of its early days The principal of these is the collegiate church of S Gudule, which is one of the most imposing buildings in Europe. Of the original church of the 11th century nothing remains, and the oldest parts are attributed to the 13th century The bulk of the building, which is a specimen of pure Gothic, dates from the 15th century, and the massive towers and Gothic chapel of the sacrament were added early in the 16th century. A feature of the church is its magnificent old glass windows, some dating from the 15th century The building also contains a fine pulpit by Verbruggen, representing the fall of man. Scarcely inferior in interest is the hôtel de ville on the famous Grand Place. This building is almost entirely of the 15th century. Its most unusual feature is the lofty spire, 370 ft above the pavement, and surmounted by a gilded figure of S Michael, the original patron saint of Brussels. It contains fine tapestries, an inter-eating collection of archives, and some good modern pictures. The Grand Place itself has many historical associations. On the side of the square opposite the town hall is the building known as the Maison du Roi, although it was never intended as a royal residence. It is really a municipal office, and as the department of weights and measures was located there it was popularly known as the Bread House (Broodhuis). The original building was erected in 1514–25, but it was restored in the 18th century after being badly damaged in 1695.

The guild houses, which are in the style of the 15th century, and richly ornamented, complete the effect of a survival from the Middle Ages. Other old buildings include the church of the Sablon—strictly Notre Dame des Victoires—built in the 13th century by the guild of crossbowmen to celebrate the Crusades; and the Palais d'Arenberg, which contains part of Egmont's home. The palais de justice, which dominates the city, was the architectural masterpiece of the 19th century in Belgium, and ensured the fame of its architect, Poelaert. The picture gallery, the enlarged royal palace, the exchange, the museum of the Cinquantenaire, and the Congo Museum are among the principal modern constructions. There is a broadcasting station. The city has a university, various colleges, and a national library. The botanical gardens are noteworthy, and there are some fine parks. Boulevards, on the site of the fortifications, encircle the city.

Brussels, as a centre of art, is little inferior to Antwerp. The collection of the great Flemish masters in the new gallery is rich and varied. There are fine examples of Van Eyck, Memling, and Quentin Matsys, as well as of Jordaens, Crayer, and Van Dyck, and nowhere else can the varied art of Rubens be more profitably studied. Among the numerous theatres must be named the Monnaie, which, besides being one of the leading opera houses in Europe, is associated in the Belgian mind with the opening scenes of their revolution in 1830. So also is the park—with the Houses of Parliament at one end and the royal palace at the other—for here was fought the four days' battle in Sept., 1830, which led to the withdrawal of the Dutch garrison.

Brussels, although hardly a centre of commerce, has many industries which give it a prominent position in the industrial world. It is famous everywhere for its lace manufactures; carpets, curtains, tapestry, and furniture employ a large section of the population. Glove making is carried on on a large scale, and as the seat of government, as well as the favourite place of residence among wealthy Belgians, it flourishes on the luxury of the times. Ships of considerable tonnage are enabled to reach it by the deepened canal from Vilvorde and Antwerp, and it has been equipped with docks and quays on the scale of a seaport.

Throughout the greater part of the Great War it was occupied by the Germans, who entered it on Aug. 20, 1914, and remained in possession until Nov. 1918. On Nov. 22 King Albert made his formal re-entry into his capital. The city was fined £8,000,000 by the Germans, and its gallant burgomaster, M. Max, was imprisoned in Germany because the money was not forthcoming. Brussels has been the scene of several international conferences and a number of important exhibitions have been held here. Pop. (1931) 839,581.

BURGH. Scottish equivalent of the English word borough They were originally of three kinds Royal burghs received their charters from a king , burghs of regality and burghs of barony were dependent on some lord, bishop, or baron, although the king had certain rights of jurisdiction, or regalities The royal burghs had greater independence, but to day the three classes are usually grouped together, as the difference disappeared with the abolition of hereditary jurisdictions in 1747.

Two newer classes of burghs arose after 1832 · parliamentary burghs, those that then obtained the right of sending a member to parliament, or of uniting with others to do so , and police burghs, places that have grown in importance since the passing of the Police Act of 1850 They obtained the right to elect a council to look after the drainage, lighting, etc , of the town, including all that is meant in Scotland by the word police. Since the 12th century commissioners from the older burghs have held a yearly convention in Edinburgh, and since 1879 parliamentary burghs have been represented in this assembly

The burghs of Scotland were reformed in 1833, their present method of government being then introduced This method includes the election of a corporation to manage the burgh's affairs, consisting of councillors who are elected by the ratepayers and of bailies elected by the councillors. The system is thus largely modelled on the English one, but one difference is that the Scottish bailies, unlike the English aldermen, are magistrates by virtue of their office See Borough

CAGNICOURT. Village of France. It is 11 m. S.E. of Arras, E. of the Canal du Nord. It was the scene of fierce fighting during the Great War, especially when, in 1918, it was captured by the Canadians.

CAGOT. French name for scattered groups of people inhabiting parts of the western Pyrenees and Brittany. In the Middle Ages they were confined to separate cagoteries, like the Jewish ghettos, and in church they were segregated from the general community. Popular tradition regarded them as heretic descendants of Gothic marauders (5th century). Still ostracised by neighbouring opinion, they betray no distinctive racial characters, and have long outlived any tendency to the leprosy or cretinism that may once have occasioned their social isolation.

CAHA. Mountain range of the I.F.S. It extends along the borders of cos. Cork and Kerry, and between the estuary of the river Kenmare and Bantry Bay for about 11 m. in a N.E. to S.W. direction. It encloses a large number of small lakes; Hungry Hill, 2,251 ft., is the culminating height.

CAHER (stone fort). Market town of co. Tipperary, I.F.S. It stands on the Suir, 11 m. W. of Clonmel, on the G. S. Rlys. Caher Castle, on a rock in the river Suir, was founded in 1142. Near by are the remains of Caher priory. Market day, Fri. Pop. 1,709.

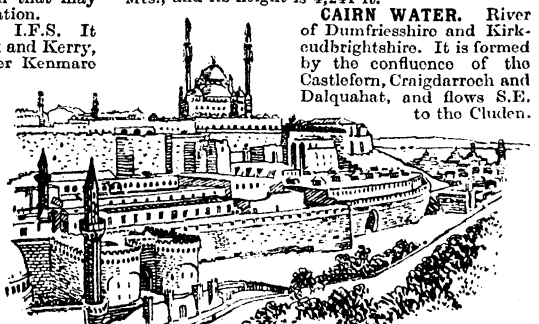
CAHIRCIVEEN. Market town of co. Kerry, I.F.S. It is at the mouth of the Caher, 2½ m. N. of Valentia Harbour, on the G.S. Rlys. Market day, Wed. Pop. 1,773.

CAHORS. City of France. The capital of the department of Lot, it stands on a peninsula formed by the river Lot, 70 m. N. of Toulouse, on the rly. to Limoges. The Romanesque-Byzantine cathedral was begun in the 11th century. Other buildings are the church of S. Urcisse, remains of the palace of Pope John XXII, a native, and the Barbacane of the 15th century. There are an old town and a new town, divided by a boulevard, and the city is connected with the other side of the river by three bridges, of which the Pont Valentré is the finest fortified medieval bridge in the country. The château, or logis, du roi is now used as a prison. The university was amalgamated with that of Toulouse in 1751. Pop. 12,000.

CAIBARIEN. Seaport of Cuba. It exports sugar and sponges. Pop. 11,000.

CAICOS. Small group of the Bahamas. Situated about 100 m. N. of Haiti. With the Turks group they form a dependency of Jamaica, and cover an area of 165 sq. m. They include North, East, and Grand Caicos and 30 smaller islands. The seat of government is at Grand Turk, and here there is a cable station. The chief exports are sponges, salt, and dried fish. Pop. (1930) 4,886.

CAILLETTE WOOD. Wood of France. On the E. side of the river Meuse, it is between Douaumont and Vaux. During the Great War it figured in the battle of Verdun.



CAIRNGORM. Mountain range of Scotland. This section of the Grampians, lying partly in Inverness-shire, partly in Banffshire, and partly in Aberdeenshire, is the loftiest mountain mass in Britain, for though no one peak attains the alt. of Ben Nevis (4,406 ft.), it has six peaks of over 4,000 ft. alt., among them Cairngorm (4,084 ft.), Cairntoul (4,241 ft.), Braeriach (4,248 ft.), and Ben Muich dhui (4,296 ft.). A proposal has been put forward for making the district into a national park.

CAIRNGORM. Mountain of Scotland. On the borders of Inverness-shire and Banffshire, it is 12 m. N.W. of Braemar, alt. 4,084 ft. A summit of the Cairngorm group of the Grampians, it is usually snow-capped. It produces topazes and Cairngorm stones, a variety of quartz, yellow-brown to dark brown, and nearly opaque, much used in Highland jewels. Similar stones are found in Switzerland and Colorado.

CAIRNS. Seaport of Queensland, Australia. On Trinity Bay, 890 m. N.W. of Brisbane, it is the terminus of a railway to the gold, copper, tin, and silver mines of Chillagoe. It has a good harbour (Trinity Inlet), and its exports include minerals, timber, and coffee. Pop. (1930) 9,750.

CAIRNTOUL. Mountain of Aberdeenshire. It is a peak of the Cairngorm group of the Grampian Mts., and its height is 4,241 ft.

CAIRN WATER. River of Dumfriesshire and Kirkcudbrightshire. It is formed by the confluence of the Castlefern, Craigdarroch and Dalquahat, and flows S.E. to the Cluden.

Cairo. Citadel built by the Saracen conqueror Saladin in the 12th century

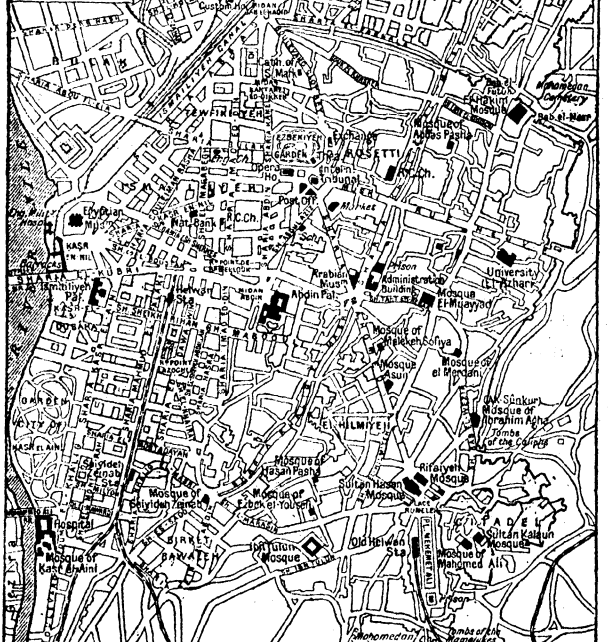
CAIRO. Capital of Egypt. It lies on the right bank of the Nile, between that river and the Ismailia Canal. In the Middle Ages Cairo was the residence of the caliphs and the chief centre of Saracenic art. More than 250 mosques attest the splendour of the medieval city. The mosque of El-Azhar, originally built by Gohar, now a university and largely rebuilt, contains many examples of Arabic art. The most ancient Mahomedan building is the mosque of Amru, in Old Cairo (Masr-el-Atika). Notably beautiful mosques are that of El-Hâkim, begun about 990, the mosque and tomb of Kalaun (1288), the mosque of Ak-Sûnkur (1347), covered with blue and green porcelain tiles, the mosque of Sultan Hasan (1358), and that of El-Muayyad (1412). Other interesting old buildings are the citadel, built by Saladin in 1166 with stones brought from the small pyramids at Gizeh; the Bâb-el-Nasr and Bâb-el-Futuh gates; the Coptic churches, including the cathedral of S. Mark; the Arabian Museum; the Sultania Library, and the Tombs of the Caliphs which, however, are outside the city.

The medieval city was divided into the Christian or Coptic, the Jews', and the "Frank" quarters, shut off from each other by gates. Modern Cairo is now virtually one city, but with special European districts. The modern portion, Ismailia (Ismailiyeh), lies W. of the Oriental part, near the banks of the Nile, and is built on European lines, in striking contrast to the native quarter, with its tortuous and narrow streets and overhanging houses. Grouped around the Esbekia Gardens (20 acres), the centre of the foreign community, are fine hotels and villas. Notable modern buildings include the government buildings, the museum of Egyptian antiquities, the British Consulate, the exchange, and the Abdin Palace. The Gezira (island) contains the palace built by Ismail, now an hotel, and the grounds of the Sporting Club. To the west there is a racecourse. Besides being a railway centre, Cairo is the distributing centre for Egypt and a trading centre of goods from the Near and Far East, the Sudan, and Upper Egypt. Passenger and air mail services connect it with India, the Near East, the Sudan, and Central Africa. Pop. (1927) 1,064,567.

CAIRO. City and river port of Illinois, U.S.A. It stands at the confluence of the Mississippi and the Ohio, 125 m. S. by E. of St. Louis, and is served by the Illinois Central and other rlys. It has a federal building, a custom house, and a public library, and ships grain and oil. It is the scene of Charles Dickens's New Eden in Martin Chuzzlewit. Cairo became a city in 1857. Pop. (1930) 13,532.

CAISTER. Village of Norfolk. In is on the coast, 2½ m. N. of Yarmouth and has a station on the Mid. & G.N. joint railway. Near the village are the ruins of a castle built by Sir John Fastolf, and later a seat of the Paston family. The parish church is worthy of mention. Caister was probably a Roman camp.

CAISTOR. Town of Lincolnshire. Situated 8 m. S.E. of Brigg, and served by the L.N.E. Rly., it stands on the site of a Roman camp. Its church is interesting architecturally.



CAISTOR ST. EDMUND. Village of Norfolk. It is 3 m. S. of Norwich. It has remains of a Roman camp, sometimes identified as Venta Icenorum, which is 30 acres in extent, and is one of the most remarkable of its kind in Britain. The church, of Early English and Perpendicular periods, is built of Roman materials.

CAITHNESS. Maritime county of Scotland. Bounded N. by Pentland Firth and E. by the North Sea, it has about 75 m. of generally rugged coast, and an area of 685.7 sq. m. Duncansby Head, to the W. of which is the site of John o' Groat's House, and Dunnet Head are the most prominent land-projections. The Thurso is the chief river, and there are many shorter streams. Its fisheries are among the most important in Scotland. Wick is the county town, other towns being Thurso, Castletown, and Lybster. Caithness unites with Sutherland to return one member to parliament. Pop. (1931) 25,656.

Caithness. Most northerly county of Great Britain, noted for its fisheries name of a river and port about 100 m. to the E. There is a good harbour. Calabar was the name given by the Portuguese in the 15th century to the tribes of this part. Pop., including Creektown, 15,000.

CALABAR, NEW. Harbour of Nigeria. It is situated at the mouth of the New Calabar river, the most easterly mouth of the Niger, about 100 m. E. of Calabar.

CALABOZO. Town of Venezuela. It stands on the Guárico river, 125 m. S. by W. of Caracas. The seat of a bishopric, it has several churches and educational institutions, and carries on a large trade chiefly in cattle and cheese. Low lying, it is subject to floods, and suffers excessive heat in the summer. Pop. 7,000.

CALABRIA. Territorial division of S. Italy. It consists of a peninsula stretching from Basilicata to Sicily and has an area of 5,819 sq. m. Traversed by the Apennines, its rivers, all short, have fertile valleys, and its coasts are low and malarious. It is divided into the provinces of Catanzaro, Cosenza, and Reggio di Calabria; their respective capitals, similarly named, are the only large towns. Cereals, chiefly grain and rice, cotton, sugar, saffron, liquorice, tobacco, oil, wine, figs, mulberries, and other fruits are produced, and iron, lead, graphite, and marble are worked. Communications, except along the coast, are poor. The inhabitants, who, especially in the interior, are backward, retain many of their old costumes. There are several colonies of Albanians founded in the 15th century; these preserve their old speech, costume, and religion. Here earthquakes have often caused great havoc, among the most disastrous being those of 1783, 1905, 1907, and 1908. Pop. (1931) 1,670,539.

CALAH. Ancient city of Assyria. It stood on the left bank of the Tigris, 19 m. S. of Nineveh (the modern Kuyunjik), Iraq. Shalmaneser I (c. 1300 B.C.) transferred the capital thither from Asshur (Gen. 10). Abandoned for Nineveh by Ashurbelkala, c. 1100, if not before, Ashurnatsirpal III's restorations made it a royal city again down to the time of Sargon (722–705). Layard's excavations (1845–51), followed by those of Rassam, Smith, and Andrae, revealed palaces of Ashurnatsirpal III, Shalmaneser III, and Esarhaddon.

CALAHORRA (anc. Calagurris). City of Spain. It is 75 m. by rly. N.W. of Saragossa, on the river Cidacos, near its entry into the Ebro. One of the oldest Spanish cities, the birthplace of Quintilian, it became a Roman city, distinguished by the additional name of Nassica. Its cathedral, founded in the 5th and restored in the 15th century, has since been completely altered. There are remains of a Roman theatre and aqueduct. Calahorra trades in wine and agricultural produce. Pop. 10,000.

CALAIS. Seaport of France. On the strait of Dover, it is 18 m. E. by S. of Dover and 185 m. by railway N. of Paris. It consists of an old town on an island, formed by the harbour and canals, and of the surrounding suburbs. The town is one of the chief ports for the traffic between England and France. Calais was in the hands of the English from its siege by Edward III in 1347 until its loss under Mary. Its modern prosperity began with the introduction of the lace manufacture early in the 19th century and the increasing intercourse with England. In the Great War it was an Allied base, and underwent many bombardments by enemy aircraft. Pop. (1931) 70,213. (See map p. 228.)

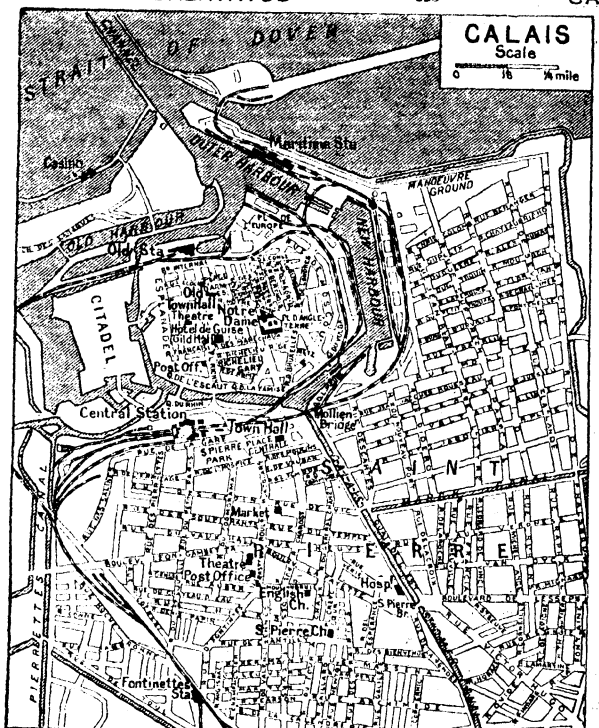
CALAMA. Town of Chile. It is situated in the Andes at an altitude of about 6,800 ft. It is on the river Loa and the railway from Antofagasta to La Paz, in Bolivia. There are valuable copper mines near by. Pop. 1,000.



CALAMAR. Town of Colombia. The capital of the Vaupés commissary, it is on the Lower Magdalena river, and is connected by canal and rly. with Cartagena, 66 m. distant. Pop. 10,000.

CALAMATA. Variant spelling of the name of the Grecian seaport of Kalamata (q.v.).

CALAMIANES. Group of the Philippine Islands. They lie between Mindoro and Paragua, and cover an area of 680 sq. m. The principal islands are Busuanga, Culion, and Coron. Hilly, hot, and unhealthy, and mostly infertile, they produce timber, wax, honey, and edible birds-nests. Pop. 20,000.

CALARASI. River port of Rumania. It is on an arm of the Danube, opposite Silistria, 55 m. by rly. S.E. of Bucharest, and exports grain, timber, hemp, and fish. Pop. 13,000.

CALATAFIMI. Town of Sicily. It is 30 m. direct and 52 m. by railway S.W. of Palermo, Calais. Plan of the seaport showing the harbour and the old town (see page 227) and takes its name from Kalat-al-Fimi, a Saracenic castle dominating it. Near by are ruins of Segesta, and 2 m. to the S.W. the Neapolitans were defeated by Garibaldi May 15, 1860. A street in the town is named after Samuel Butler, the author of Erewhon, who lived here at one time. Pop. 11,000.

CALATAYUD. City of Spain. It is 52 m. S.W. of Saragossa, on the railway to Madrid. The Moorish town has many dwellings cut in the rock on which Kalat Ayub (castle of Ayub) was built out of the ruined Bilbilis, 1½ m. to the E., the birthplace of Martial. The former mosque is now the church of S. Maria. Santo Sepulcro, founded in the 12th and restored in the 17th century, was the church of the Knights Templars. Calatayud is an agricultural centre. Pop. 12,000.

CALATRAVA. Ruined city of Spain. It is on the Guadiana, 12 m. N.E. of Ciudad Real. It gives its name to the order of Calatrava, which originated amongst the knights who, in 1147, recovered the city from the Moors and defended it against them in 1158. The order received its first statutes in 1164.

CALAURIA (mod. Poro.). Island in the gulf of Aegina. It lies off the E. coast of the Morea, Greece. Here, in 1828, the ambassadors of England, France, and Russia settled the government of the new kingdom of Greece. In Calauria was the temple of Poseidon, famous as a sanctuary, where Demosthenes killed himself, and within the precincts of which he was buried (322 B.C.). Excavations in 1894 revealed remains of this temple and of other sacred buildings.

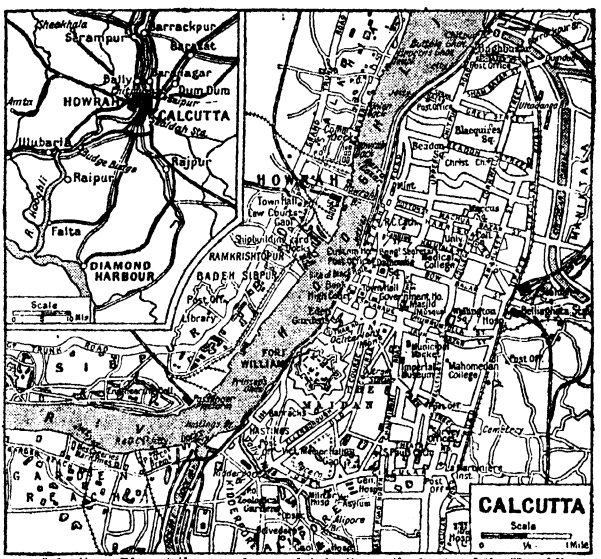
CALAVERAS. River of California, U.S.A. It rises among the foothills of the Sierra Nevada, and flows in a S.W. direction for 120 m., when it joins the San Joaquim river. A human cranium found in 1866 in Calaveras county was alleged to have come from undisturbed gravels, 130 ft. deep. The Calaveras Skull was accepted by Josiah Dwight Whitney and others as evidence of American man in Pliocene times, but this and similar skulls and their associated implements were shown to be typical of modern aboriginal tribes.

CALBAYOG. Town of the Philippine Islands. It is on the W. coast of Samar island, at the mouth of the Calbayog river, 30 m. N.W. of Catbalogan. Its chief industries are connected with the production of abaca and other fibres, and the export of hemp, timber, and copra. There are hot springs and important fisheries. Pop. 15,895.

CALBE. Town of Prussia. In the province of Saxony, it is on the Saale, a few m. from its junction with the Elbe. It manufactures cloth and paper, and has sugar mills. It is in Germany's chief beet sugar district. Pop. 11,500.

CALBOURNE. Village of the isle of Wight. It is 5½ m. S.W. of Newport, on the S. Rly. The church has a Norman font, and old brasses. Pop. 670.

CALCHAQUI. South American Indian tribe. They lived in N.W. Argentina. The most important tribe of Diaguite stock, their name usually embraces the whole Diaguite culture in this upland region at the time of the Spanish conquest. An early immigrant wave of megalithic builders is attested by their drystone dwellings (pirca), stone terraces for maize cultivation, and sculptured monoliths. They wove llama wool and apparently tamed the rhea and peccary. Their metal work betrays Inca influence. In the Lerma valley there are 1,500 earthen mounds, mostly surrounded by stone circles. Infants were interred in painted pottery urns. The mestizo population still exhibits Calchaqui elements.



CALCHI. Italian name for the island in the Aegean more commonly known as Karchi (q.v.).

CALCUTTA. City of India, capital of the province of Bengal. Formerly the capital of the Indian Empire and the official residence of the viceroy, it extends for 6 m. along the left bank of the Hooghli. On a navigable river, 86 m. from the sea, it is the gateway and emporium of the rich valleys of the Ganges and Brahmaputra, with which it is linked up by railways, and waterways. The aggregate area of Calcutta and its three suburbs, Cossipur Chitpur, Maniktala, and Garden Reach, is 42 sq. m. Greater Calcutta includes Howrah, an important

CAMPO FORMIO. Village of Italy. It is a few miles from Undine. Here was signed a treaty between the French Republic, represented by Bonaparte, and the Austrians, Oct. 17, 1797.

CAMPOS. Name given to the tropical grasslands which form the natural vegetation of large areas of the comparatively dry southern Brazilian highlands. The undulating relief and the broad expanses of tall grasses, interrupted by clumps of trees, which reach the dimensions of woods in hollows or other places where water collects, give the campos a park-like appearance. They may be compared with the savannahs of Florida with similar regions in Africa, or the llanos of the Orinoco basin.

CAMPOS. City of Brazil. On the Parahyba river, 30 m. from its mouth, and 37 m. by rly. from São João de Barra, it is connected by railway with Rio de Janeiro, the capital. It has a trade in sugar, coffee, brandy, timber, and fruit. Pop. 30,000.

CAMPSIE. District of Stirlingshire. It is 12¼ m. N.E. of Glasgow on the L.N.E. Rly., and contains Lennoxtown. Coal and limestone are worked, and there are chemical works and bleaching grounds In the district are the Campsie Falls, and Campsie Glen, a beauty spot

CAMPSIE. Village of Stirlingshire It stands at the entrance to Campsie Falls, and has a ruined church There is a station on the L N E Rly CAMPSIE. Town of New South Wales, Australia. It is 7 m. from Sydney and is practically a suburb of that city.

CAMPU LUNG. Variant spelling of the name of the Rumanian town known as Kimpolung (q.v.).

CAMPVEERE. Town of the Netherlands On the island of Walcheren, it was a privileged port for Scottish merchants from 1444–1795. The cathedral and the town hall are relics of its former greatness Pop. 1,000.

Canada arms

CANADA. Self-governing dominion of the British Empire It includes the whole of the N American continent N of the United States, except Alaska and Newfoundland, with which goes a strip of Labrador 120,000 sq m in extent Canada owns the whole of the Arctic lands north of the Dominion proper, her title to the Sverdrup group of islands having been formally recognized by Norway in 1931.

The Dominion consists of nine provinces and two territories Of the provinces Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward I are called the maritime provinces and Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta the prairie provinces Their areas and populations are as follows

	Area (sq m)	Pop (1931)
Prince Edward I. ..	2,184	88,038
Nova Scotia	21,428	512,846
New Brunswick ..	27,985	408,219
Quebec	594,434	2,874,255
Ontario	412,582	3,431,683
Manitoba	251,832	700,139
British Columbia ..	355,855	694,263
Alberta	255,285	731,605
Saskatchewan	251,700	921,785
Yukon	207,076	4,230
North West Territories	1,309,682	7,133

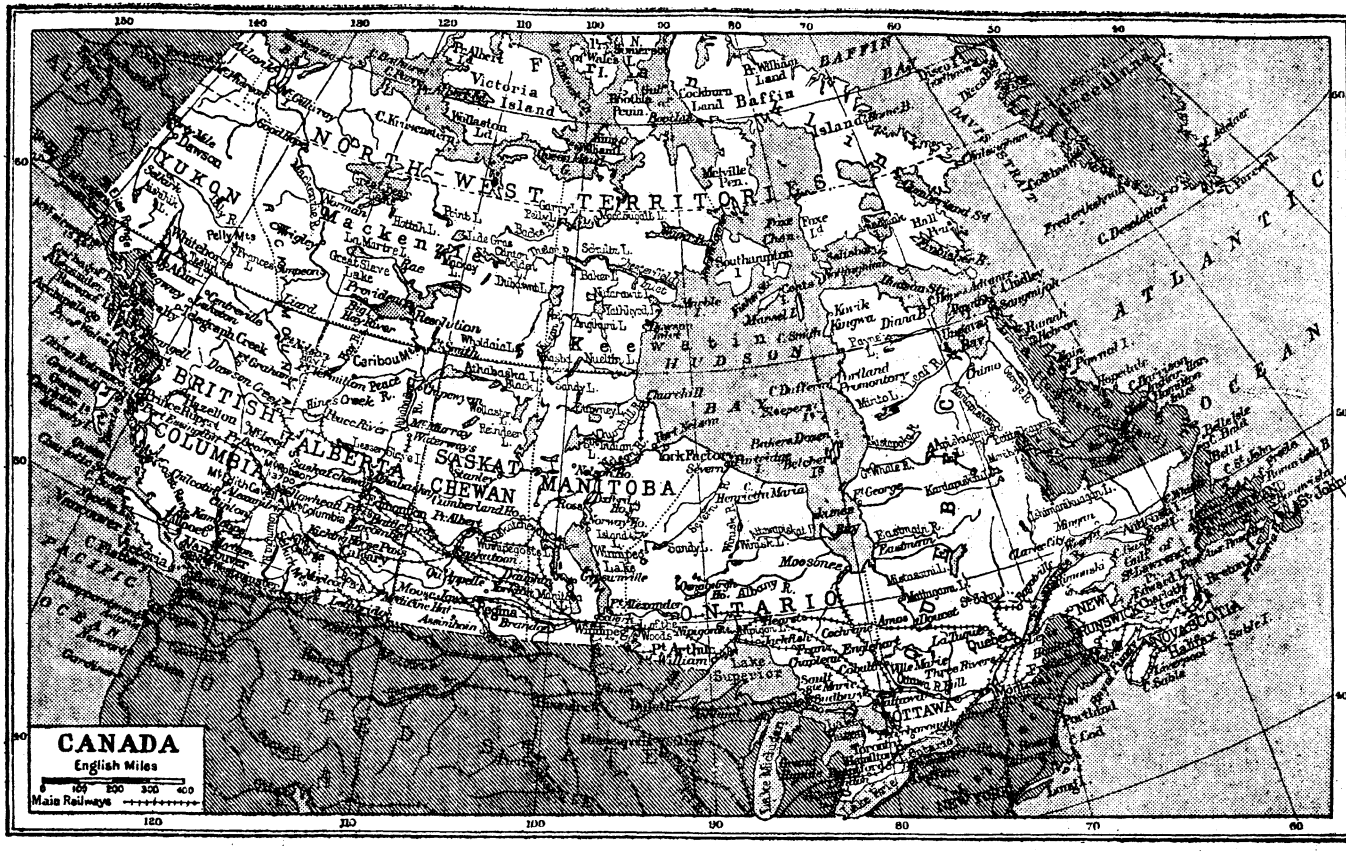
The total area is thus 3,690,043 sq m, of which 180,035 sq. m are covered with water, this being chiefly in the provinces of Ontario and Manitoba and the North-West Territories The water area of Ontario includes the Canadian portions of the Great Lakes. The population (1931) is 10,374,196. Of these about 110,000 are Indians who live chiefly in reservations Ottawa is the capital, but the largest cities are Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver, Winnipeg, Hamilton, and Quebec Other places of some size are Calgary, Edmonton, London, Windsor, Halifax, Regina, St John, Saskatoon, and Victoria Montreal is the greatest seaport, but is only open for eight months of the year Nearly half the people are Roman Catholics, and in Quebec the majority are French by descent and retain their own laws and customs. Canada is a member of the League of Nations and has its own diplomatic representative in Washington, Paris, and Tokyo

Topography. The mountain ranges of the west, the Cordilleras on the Pacific coast, are in parts more than 400 m. wide, and include the Rockies, the Selkirks, and the Cariboos The highest peak in Canada, Mt. Logan, 19,539 ft high, is in the St Elias range in the Yukon Territory. Farther S, Mt Robson, in the Yellowhead Pass, is 13,700 ft There are numerous mountains over 11,000 ft in height. The most important series of waterways is the St Lawrence river system, starting at the river St Lawrence It connects up with Lake Ontario, and thence, by the aid of a series of artificial canals through the great lakes—Superior, Michigan, Huron, St Clair, Erie, and Ontario—establishes connexion between the Atlantic and Fort William and Port Arthur, cities in easy railway communication with Winnipeg and the west An international commission controls the wate way, which suffers, however, from the disadvantage of being closed by ice for four winter months Other large lakes are the Great Bear, Great Slave, Winnipeg, and Athabaska Smaller lakes, over 20 sq m, and some well over 2,000 sq m in area, are numbered by the hundred There are eight rivers over 1,000 m in length, the Mackenzie, the St Lawrence, the Nelson, the Saskatchewan, the Churchill, the Columbia, the Yukon, and the Peace

The islands of Canada include the numerous unsurveyed and little known areas of the Arctic regions, the fringe of both large and small islands off the Pacific coast, those of the maritime provinces and Quebec in the Atlantic Ocean and the gulf of St. Lawrence, together with the islands of the Great Lakes and other inland waters The international boundary between Canada and the U S A passes through the centre of Lakes Superior, Huron, Erie, St. Clair, and Ontario, while Lake Michigan is entirely within U S A. territory.

The habitable portion of Canada can be divided into five main regions

(1) The Laurentian plateau extends from the Labrador coast through the Hudson's Bay region to a western line stretching from Great Bear Lake to Lake Winnipeg and thence to Lake Huron taking in nearly the whole of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec It is a gently sloping plateau with few hills



(2) The Appalachian region—limestone, sandstone, and shale—covers the eastern parts of S E Quebec, and the maritime provinces While much of this country is rocky and poor, it is forested and contains areas of great fertility

(3) The St Lawrence lowlands, the belt of arable land S of the Laurentian plateau, embrace the great fruit-growing and farming districts of Eastern Canada, usually known as the Lakes Peninsula.

(4) The plain region, the prairie lands of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta, is composed of shales and sandstones that have weathered down into magnificent loamy land, rich in mineral constituents and stored with nitrogenous organic matter, thus, the wheat belt of Canada, is the main source of its prosperity

(5) The Cordillera region, the region of the Rocky Mts and the Pacific coast, is underlaid by igneous folded sediments and rocks The silt carried down by mt streams makes fertile valleys

The Arctic zone of Canada, including the bleak islands of the North Atlantic coast, is tundra In this region are found the Arctic fox, the polar bear, the musk ox, the lemming, and the barren ground caribou Here, too, are the chief breeding grounds of nearly all the waders and the larger birds Farther S is the sub-Arctic zone, with forests of spruce, poplar, birch, and jack pine, the hunting ground and the home of the Canadian big game and fur-bearing animals, deer, elk, moose, and woodland caribou The black bear, fox, beaver, otter, marten, mink, and ermine are all found here The transition zone contains the forests of hardwoods, beech, maple, ash, oak, hickory, elm, and yellow-birch. Farther S a still more generous flora is found In the S of British Columbia there are great trees of the type found also in Oregon, and abundant vegetation.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT. The government of Canada is based upon the British North American Act of 1867, framed to give the people a constitution "similar in purpose to that of the United Kingdom." By this the provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, were united in a dominion with a federal government possessing supreme authority under the Imperial Government, not only for the provinces but for the whole of Canadian territory Later Prince Edward Island, British Columbia, and Manitoba joined the federation, and in 1905 the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were created The authority of the Dominion Government is limited by the right of appeal to the judicial committee of the privy council for final decisions upon points of law. Otherwise the Dominion enjoys self-government in all internal legislation, including even the right to tax goods, and to exclude undesirables from other parts of the Empire This virtual independence is fully recognized in the statute of Westminster passed in 1931.

Canada. Chief of the Indian tribe called Sioux or Dakotas

The executive government consists theoretically of the governor general and a council styled the privy council, called upon to aid and advise in the administration. In practice, the executive is the government chosen by the predominant political party, members of which form a cabinet on the English model This is responsible for the affairs of the Dominion, and must be supported by a majority in the House of Commons. The legislative power is vested in a Senate of 96 members, and a House of Commons The senators are nominated to represent the various provinces They hold their seats for life. Members of the House of Commons are elected by the votes of all adults. They number 245, the principle being that Quebec shall send 65 members and the other provinces a number that shall bear the same relation to their population as 65 does to that of Quebec Women, equally with men, have the right to vote. The provinces have each a separate government under a lieutenant governor Each consists of a legislature, usually of one house, and a ministry under a premier, responsible to it

The Dominion Parliament controls all services which affect Canada as a whole, such as posts, the army and navy, navigation, coinage, banks and banking, weights and measures, bankruptcy, patents and copyrights, naturalisation, marriage and divorce, and the criminal laws It has the right to raise money by taxation for federal purposes While each province has the power of control over purely local railways, the Parliament of Canada can take over the control of interprovincial communications, or even communications within provinces which it declares are for the general advantage of Canada This gives the central government the supreme authority over railways, telegraphs, and canals It has also the control of Indians and Indian lands

The provincial legislatures have the right to borrow money on the credit of their provinces, to impose taxes, to direct local works and undertakings other than shipping, to control the management and sale of their public lands, to establish and control provincial reformatories, hospitals, asylums, and charitable institutions, to regulate their marriage laws, to administer justice, and to maintain property and civil rights

Local government is under the control of the provincial authorities Every township or village has its reeve and councillors who administer its affairs Towns and cities are usually divided into districts, which each elect councillors and aldermen to form a council. These are presided over by a mayor. In some cities the actual administrative work of government is handed over to a small board, usually composed of the mayor and four aldermen, who control the expenditure of all civic moneys, and whose decisions can only be upset by a two-thirds vote of the city council The towns, townships, and villages in a county unite in a county council presided over by a warden City, town, township, and village councils are chosen by popular vote

French civil law persists in the province of Quebec, otherwise English law prevails throughout Canada At the head of the judiciary is the supreme court of appeal, established in Ottawa in 1875 All judges of superior district and county courts, with unimportant exceptions, are appointed and paid by the Dominion Government, and the independence of the judiciary is strongly protected In most towns or cities a police magistrate, appointed by the provincial government, administers summary justice. The chief councillor of each municipality is also by virtue of his office, a justice of the peace The police in many cities are governed by police commissioners

Canada has an army, called a militia, which consists of a small permanent force and a reserve. There is a navy and an air service, the whole controlled by the ministry of national defence For service in the territories, Arctic regions, national parks, Indian reservations, etc., there is a mounted police force

FINANCE AND INDUSTRY. The system of public finance includes a consolidated fund to which are credited, and out of which are paid, the public revenues and expenditures. The revenue is mainly raised from customs and excise duties Income tax and death duties are levied by the various provinces.

The decimal coinage is in use, the unit of value being the cent, one hundred cents going to the dollar. Silver coins are minted in the denominations of 5, 10, 25, and 50 cents, and there is a copper coin, the one cent piece. Most of the money in circulation is paper. The English sovereign and half-sovereign and U.S.A gold pieces are legal currency. The British system of weights and measures is used, but the hundredweight is equal to 100 lb. and the ton 2,000 lb.

Banking is only permitted in Canada under charter from the Dominion Government, and is subject to the provisions of the Bank Acts There are 11 chartered banks, most of them with branches, in the Dominion They are allowed to issue their own notes against reserves of gold and Dominion notes, and their gold coins and Dominion notes are inspected and audited at least once a year by officers of the department of finance. The three leading banks are the Bank of Montreal, the Canadian Bank of Commerce, and the Royal Bank of Canada

Agriculture is the staple industry of the country, the crops including wheat, the most important, oats, barley, rye, flax (for seed), maize, and hay, while an immense amount of fruit is grown. Stock raising, dairy farming, and fishing are important. The forest resources of Canada are enormous, the more important timber areas being in British Columbia, Ontario, and Quebec. Pulp and paper making are growing allied industries. Mining is another large industry. The minerals and metals include gold, copper, lead, nickel, silver, asbestos, coal, and petroleum. Most of the world's asbestos comes from Canadian mines, and her output of gold is increasing fast. Canada is the greatest fur preserve of the world. Water power has been enormously developed.

The principal railway system is the Canadian Pacific Rly. (C P R.), which operates in all over 20,000 m. of line. This vast corporation played a large part in the opening-up of the New West. In 1928 it bought the rly. system of the province of Alberta. The other system consists of all the lines built or acquired by the government, and is known as the Canadian National Railways.

HISTORY. Canada was discovered in 1497 by John Cabot, but the first attempts at settlement were made by Frenchmen, Cartier and Champlain. French folk settled in Nova Scotia and around Quebec, and there prosperous French colonies arose. In 1713 Nova Scotia was ceded to England, and in 1763 Canada proper shared the same fate. The French remained in Lower Canada, but Upper Canada, or Ontario, was colonised by British, many being loyalists who left the United States when it became independent. Both were governed from Quebec until 1791, when they were separated and each given its own constitution

In 1840, after some trouble, including a rising led by Papineau, Upper and Lower Canada were united. This paved the way for the larger union of 1867 by which the Dominion was created. Four provinces then joined it, two came in later and three were carved out of the western areas. The capital was fixed at Ottawa and Sir J A. Macdonald was the first prime minister. Matters of importance were the rebellion of Louis Riel, the acquisition of the lands owned by the Hudson Bay Co, and the construction of a railway across the continent. Macdonald, who was in power until his death in 1891, except for the years 1874–78, introduced protection, which has since been the national policy. His Conservative successors held office until 1896, when the Liberals, under Sir W. Laurier, came into power. He and his party remained in office until 1911, when their proposals to make a reciprocity treaty with the United States led to their defeat The Conservatives, now led by R L. Borden, took their place and were responsible for Canada's decision to enter the Great War.

On the outbreak of the Great War the Canadian government raised a first contingent of 32,000 men Further contingents were organized, and by the autumn of 1916 the number enlisted had exceeded 370,000 The war casualties totalled 215,545, of whom over 50,000 were killed in action or died of wounds

In 1917, as in Britain, a coalition, with Borden at its head, was formed to carry on the struggle, and this lasted until July, 1920, when Borden retired. He was succeeded by Arthur Meighen, who was premier until 1921 In that year the Liberals won the general election and came into power under W. L Mackenzie King. The next election in 1925 gave the Conservatives a majority, but they enjoyed only a few months of office, because in Sept, 1926, another election reversed the verdict of 1925, and King became premier for the second time. He continued in office until 1930, when a general election ended adversely for his party. His successor was R. B Bennett, leader of the Conservatives, who called the Imperial Conference at Ottawa in 1932, when trading agreements were made between Great Britain and the daughter countries.

CANADIAN. River of the U S A Rising in New Mexico, it flows S. and E. through Texas and Oklahoma to the Arkansas at Tamaha Though about 900 m long, it is of little importance for navigation.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS. Railway system of Canada Owned by the government, the railways serve the nine provinces of Canada and possess 23,958 miles of track. The system is a consolidation of many railways the principal of which were formerly known as the Grand Trunk Rly., Grand Trunk Pacific, Canadian Northern, and the Intercolonial Rly It is operated by a board of directors under the chairmanship of the president of the company, and was consolidated into its present form by an order in council, dated January 30, 1923, and another order in council on February 5, 1923, established the headquarters at Montreal

Although the first Canadian railway was built in 1836 between St John's and Laprairie, Quebec, the rly. era in Canada really began with the completion of the Grand Trunk Railway between Montreal and Toronto in 1856 Leases of other lines, the completion of the Victoria Bridge across the St. Lawrence in 1859, the construction of the Chicago and Grand Trunk Railway in 1880 and the building of the St Clair tunnel in 1891, which secured direct connexion with lines in the United States, finally gave the Grand Trunk Rly. termini at Chicago, Ill, and Portland, Maine, U S A About 1900 the Grand Trunk Rly wished to participate in the development of Western Canada and came to an arrangement with the Canadian government whereby the latter was to build a line from Moncton, New Brunswick, to Winnipeg, afterwards leasing it for 50 years to the company for operation, and guarantee the interest on bonds to 75 per cent of the cost of the construction by the company of a line from Winnipeg to Prince Rupert, B C.

The Canadian Northern Rly, begun in 1896, and which acquired charters of various Manitoba and Ontario lines, became the third transcontinental rly. of Canada and extended from Montreal to Port Arthur, Winnipeg, and through the Yellowhead Pass to Port Mann near Vancouver B C. In this achievement it was greatly helped by the boom in emigration to the Canadian West.

The Intercolonial Rly joins the Maritime with Eastern Provinces Proposed as early as the 1830's, the project fell through until, in 1853, Nova Scotia undertook to construct a line from Halifax to the New Brunswick boundary After 220 miles had been built in New Brunswick and 145 miles in Nova Scotia, the Dominion Government undertook the completion of this rly In 1876 the line was opened, and in 1898 running rights from Ste Rosalie Junction over the Grand Trunk lines gave direct connexion with Montreal

From 1900 the Canadian government, the people, and the railway companies confidently expected that, in accordance with former experience, the influx of capital and the immigration of people from Europe would rapidly settle the lands in Central and Western Canada opened up by the new lines, and result in abundant and lucrative traffic But the Great War came, immigration ceased, and owing to the scarcity of labour and materials and the rising values of both, the cost of maintenance and operation increased The government found itself obliged to make loans to the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Northern Rlys The former was unable to undertake the operation of its new line, and finally the government was obliged to appoint the minister of railways as receiver on March 9, 1919. The stock of the Canadian Northern had been acquired two years earlier In the second session of 1919 the Grand Trunk Rly was acquired under conditions which provided for arbitration as to the consideration to be given to its shareholders. After the award steps were taken to consolidate the various railways under government operation and control, leading to the present Canadian National Rlys system in which the Intercolonial Rly. is included for purposes of operation.

Since 1922 the Canadian National Rlys. has made great progress in unifying the various services and especially in the technical field. Its International Limited, running between Montreal and Chicago, holds the world's speed record over 334 miles, which distance, including five stops, it covers in six hours. The company also led in the development of Diesel oil-electric locomotives, and as early as 1925 constructed an oil-electric car which made a record non-stop run of 2,937 miles between Montreal and Vancouver, completing the journey in 67 hours and crossing the Rockies through the Yellowhead Pass at 40 miles an hour The company also operates hotels, a telegraph system having 180,000 miles of wire, and is responsible for the operation of vessels of Canadian National Steamships between Canada and the British West Indies; Vancouver and Alaska, and freight services between Canada, Australia, and New Zealand The headquarters of the C N Rlys are at Montreal, and the London offices are at 17, Cockspur St, S.W 1.

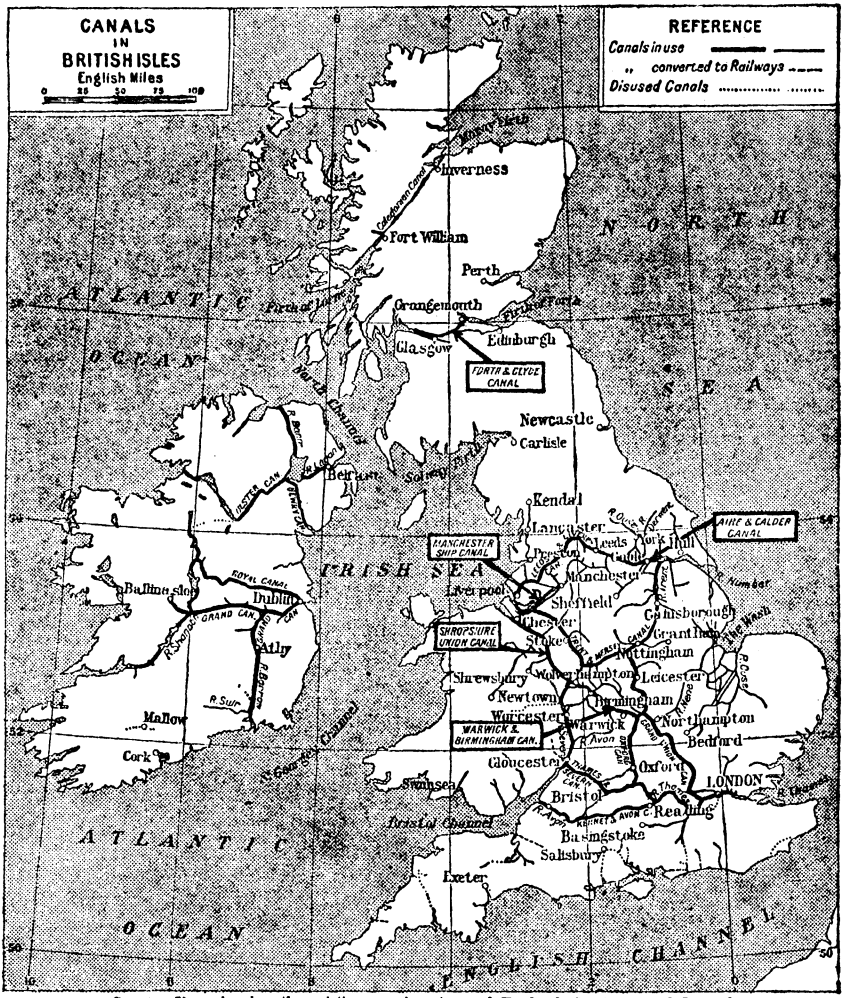
CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY. Canadian railway company. One of the great transcontinental lines, it was formed in 1881 to carry out the delayed undertaking given to British Columbia when that province entered the Dominion. Earlier attempts to complete the promised line had failed when Donald A Smith and George Stephen, afterwards Lords Strathcona and Mount Stephen, took up the scheme They and their associates received from the Dominion 713 m of line already laid, a sum of £5,000,000 and 25,000,000 acres of land In 1886 6,800,000 acres of this land were returned for a cash payment of £2,000,000 The work of extension was pressed forward with vigour, and in 1886 the line from east to west was opened for traffic. Other grants of land amounting to about 10,000,000 acres were afterwards made

The main line runs from Montreal by Port Arthur, Winnipeg, and Calgary to Vancouver, its Pacific terminus Branch lines go to Toronto, Quebec, and St John, N B, as well as into N Ontario and to the cities of the west From Medicine Hat a second line goes through the Rockies, running south of the main one By controlling two American lines, the Minneapolis, St Paul and Sault Ste Marie, and Duluth, South Shore, and Atlantic, the C P R is connected with Chicago and other places in the U S A

Before the Great War the company was engaged on a policy of extensions, double tracking many hundreds of miles of line and constructing new branches. In 1931 it owned and operated 15,752 miles in Canada with 425 miles under construction, and operated in all 22,472 m Its steamship interests are in the hands of an associated company, The Canadian Pacific Steamships, Ltd, which operates a fleet of 24 large modern ocean-going liners on the Atlantic and the Pacific with a total tonnage of 399,310, of which the famous Empress of Britain, 42,500 tons, is the latest unit. The headquarters are in Montreal, and the London offices are at 62–65, Charing Cross, S.W.1

CANAL (Lat. canalis) Artificial open water channel. They are used to carry water for irrigation, for supplying towns and villages, or for purposes of navigation Canals of the first class are more properly called aqueducts Navigation canals fall naturally into two classes · (1) Those which have the same level throughout, a comparatively small class, which includes the Suez, Kiel, and Corinth. (2) Those which cross ground higher than the water level at their extremities, and are divided into steps or reaches at different levels. Transference of vessels from one level to another is made by locks or some other mechanical device. Of this type the largest is the Panama Canal.

The longitudinal section of a canal is decided partly by physical conditions and partly by considerations of expense The making of deep cuttings and long tunnels through high ground is very costly in the first instance, while, on the other hand, cheaper construction, involving long detours and breaking of level, constitutes a permanent handicap on traffic.



Locks are the common means of raising and lowering boats A lock is a chamber lined at the sides and bottom with masonry, concrete, or wood. The bottom is at the same level as the bed of the lower reach, the top rather higher than the water level of the upper reach At each end are two gates opening towards the higher level, and having a united width rather greater than that of the lock, so that when they are closed water pressure tends to force their edges more tightly together The two pairs of gates are never open simultaneously Sluices are provided in the sides of the chamber or in the gates for admitting water from the upper reach, and emptying it into the lower.

In order to pass a boat through the lock, the water level in the lock must first be reduced or raised to that of the reach in which the boat is. This is done either by letting water out or in The near gates are then opened and the boat enters The gates are closed and water is admitted or released until the level of the other reach is attained The boat then passes out through the other pair of gates Where the vertical lift at one place is high, it is distributed among a flight of two or more locks, opening one into the other The bottom level of the one lock is half-way between the top and bottom levels of the lock below it The three Panama Canal locks at Gatun have a lift of 25 ft each In ordinary practice the range of a single lock does not exceed 12 ft

Mechanical boat lifts move vertically, and usually include two boat tanks, balancing one another when full In the hydraulic lift the tanks are carried on hydraulic rams, the cylinders of which are connected by a pipe The stroke of the rams is equal to the difference in level of the two reaches A tank is raised by emptying a little water out of it and destroying the balance The pneumatic lift works on the same principle, but here the hydraulic cylinders are replaced by large inverted, open-bottomed caissons, working in wells of water. A large tube with a control valve in it connects the caissons If the upper tank be slightly over-weighted, air is driven from its caisson into that under the other tank, which rises while its fellow falls

A large lift of this kind has been built at Cohoes on the Erie Canal to raise vessels of over 1,000 tons. A lift on the Ems-Dortmund canal, has only one tank, supported on five large cylindrical floats which move in deep wells Under normal conditions the buoyancy of the floats is just equal to the weight of the tank Vertical motion is imparted to the tank by four huge upright screw-spindles, geared together and driven by a 150 horse power electric motor, which transfers the tank a distance of 50 ft. in three minutes

The traffic capacity of a canal is limited by its depth, and to a smaller extent by its bottom width. The depth decides the maximum size of boats that can use it, the width and depth combined, ease of navigation. Where possible the bottom width should be at least twice the beam of the largest boat that, when loaded, can pass through it with not less than 18 ins. of water under its keel, and the cross area should be six times the greatest submerged section of the boat to give plenty of room for displaced water to move easily between the boat and the sides of the canal. The slope of the sides will depend on the nature of the material passed through.

BRITISH CANALS. Most of the waterways of England form part of a connected system; that is to say, a cargo boat of the narrower kind can pass, though often by devious routes, from any point to any point upon that system. This connected system lies chiefly in the midlands and in the southern part of the northern counties. It is entirely unconnected by inland water routes with the Scottish canals and rivers. It lies within an imaginary quadrilateral bounded on the south by a straight line drawn from the north coast of Somerset to the north coast of Kent, on the east by a line drawn from London to Scarborough, on the north by a line drawn from Scarborough to Barrow-in-Furness, and on the west by a line drawn from Barrow to Bristol.

The chief systems are the Aire and Calder Navigation in Yorkshire and Lancashire uniting the east and the west coasts, and the Grand Union, a group of canals in the south and midlands centring on London and Birmingham. In Scotland there are the Caledonian, Monkland, Crinan, and Forth and Clyde Canals. In Ireland the chief canals are the Ulster, Grand, and Royal, the last two being in the Irish Free State. The total length of the canals in England is 3,641 miles, and in Scotland 184 miles.

OTHER CANALS. Of countries outside Great Britain, Canada has a remarkable canal system. By its aid vessels are able to pass round the obstacles that lie between the Great Lakes and in the channel of the St. Lawrence and steam during the summer months from the head of Lake Superior to Europe. The United States, especially in the east, has a number of canals, one of the most important being the New York State Barge Canal. In Europe, France, Germany, and Belgium make good use of this method of transport. In Russia the Soviet authorities have given some attention to the construction of canals between the principal rivers.

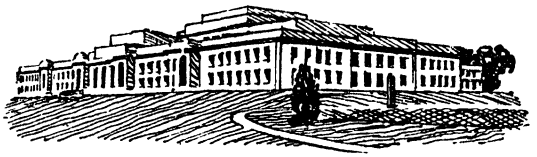
SHIP CANALS. The most important ship canals are the Panama, Suez, Kiel or North Sea, Sault Ste. Marie and Welland. Another cuts the isthmus of Corinth in Greece and another unites Amsterdam with the sea. In Germany one unites the Elbe and the Trave and in 1932 one was completed in Russia uniting the White and the Baltic Seas. The great Swedish ship canal is the Gota. In England the longest ship canal is the Manchester and there is a short one uniting Exeter with the sea.

CANAR. Province of Ecuador. Lying between the provinces of Chimborazo and Azuay, it has an area of 1,521 sq. m. The chief industries are agriculture and straw hat making. It contains numerous Inca remains. The capital is Uzogues. Pop. (1931) 95,000.

Canberra. Plan of the capital of the Australian Commonwealth

CANARY ISLANDS (Span. Las Canarias). Archipelago in the Atlantic Ocean. Some 60 m. off the N.W. coast of Africa, they belong to Spain, of which for administrative purposes they are considered a province, and have an area of 2,810 sq. m. The islands are mountainous, and of volcanic origin, rising to 12,100 ft. in Pico de Teyde or Teneriffe. The volcanoes are intermittent. The climate, though subject to occasional hurricanes with waterspouts, is mild and equable, and has made the islands a favourite winter resort both for pleasure seekers and invalids.



Canary Islands. Map of the beautiful Atlantic group

The people of the Canaries are mainly of Spanish descent, with traces of the original inhabitants, the Guanchos, now extinct. The islands have no railways, but possess many good roads. There are three wireless stations. The chief islands are Grand Canary, Teneriffe, Fuerteventura, Lanzarote, Palma, Gomera, and Hierro or Ferro; the chief towns are Santa Cruz de Teneriffe, the capital and an important coaling station, Las Palmas, the chief commercial town, Santa Cruz de la Palma, and Orotava. The ports are free ports. Amongst its products are Canary wine (Teneriffe), and Canary wood, a coarse kind of mahogany. Vast quantities of bananas are grown and tobacco is another export. The fisheries are important.

The Canaries were known probably to the Phoenicians and certainly to the Romans. They were rediscovered accidentally by a French ship in 1334, and taken possession of, in 1402, by Jean de Bethencourt, who relinquished his rights to Spain and they have since been a dependency of that country. Pop. 503,151.

CANBERRA. City and capital of the Commonwealth of Australia. It is in the Federal territory, which has an area of 940 sq. m. and is directly under the Commonwealth Government, and is surrounded by Murray co., New South Wales. The Murrumbidgee flows through it. The site of the capital is on the Molonglo affluent of the Murrumbidgee, with the Australian Alps as a background on the E. It is an irregular amphitheatre dotted with Mt. Ainslie, Black Mt., Mt. CAÑON OR CANYON (Span., tube). Deep, steep-sided, gorge-like river valley. Best developed in high, arid plateaux, the typical example of such formations is found in the W. states of the U.S.A. where there is an almost rainless plateau, in parts over 8,000 ft. high, crossed by the Colorado river, which receives its water supply from the Rocky Mts. The river and its tributaries have cut their way vertically downwards through the plateau, which is composed of horizontal layers of hard and soft rocks; but owing to the lack of rainfall there has been a minimum weathering of the valley sides such as takes place in an area where the rainfall is not deficient. The hard rocks form steep cliffs and the soft rocks gentle slopes, thus causing the valley to assume the shape of a very narrow letter V. The deepest of the Colorado river cañons is the grand cañon of Arizona, in which the river flows for over 200 m. at the bottom of a chasm more than 6,000 ft. deep and varying in breadth from 10 m. to 12 m. One of its most wonderful features is the colouring of the rocks, the grey of the limestone, the red of the sandstone, and the darker colours of the old layers below the sedimentary rocks through which the river has cut.

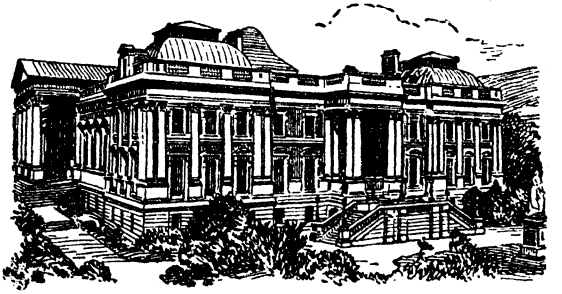
CAPE OF GOOD HOPE. Province of the Union of South Africa, in short, the Cape Province. Its coastline extends over 1,300 m. from the mouth of the Orange river on the W. to that of the Umtamvuna on the E. The Orange separates it from the S.W. Africa Protectorate and the Molopo from the Bechuanaland Protectorate. The province consists of Cape Colony proper, together with Pondoland, Bechuanaland, East Griqualand, Tembuland, and Transkei. Its area is 276,536 sq. m. Cape Town is the capital, Port Elizabeth being the next town in size. The chief rivers are the Orange and its tributary, the Vaal, which receives the waters of the Harts, Riet, and Modder. The Orange system drains the great interior tableland. There are forest regions in Pondoland and Knysna. The plateaux of the interior are covered with shrub, but in the coastal regions plant life is rich and varied. Sheep feed on the veld, from which the elephant, rhinoceros, and other large animals have almost disappeared.



The province sends 58 members to the House of Assembly of the Union of South Africa, and eight to the Senate. Local affairs are managed by an elected council, with an executive of four members, presided over by an administrator, appointed by the Union Government.

The history of the province begins with the discovery of the headland by the Portuguese in 1488. They named it the Cape of Storms or the Cape of Good Hope, and the term the Cape has stuck to the district. In 1651 the Dutch made their first settlement. In 1795 Cape Town was taken by Great Britain, but in 1802 it was returned to the Dutch. In 1806 it was again seized, and in 1814 was ceded to Britain. In 1865 Kaffraria was added to Cape Colony, as was Transkei, the land across the river Kei, in 1877. In 1850 the colony was given a constitution, which consisted of a legislature of two houses. In 1910 it entered the Union of S. Africa. The total population is nearly 3,000,000, of whom 748,455 (1931) are whites.

CAPE PALMAS. Town of Liberia. It is near the S.E. extremity of the republic, a few m. W. of Kavalli. Considerable quantities of ivory are exported.

CAPERNAUM. Village of Palestine. It stands on the N.W. coast of the Sea of Galilee, and was intimately associated with Christ's ministry (Matt. 4, 8, and 17; Mark 1; Luke 4; John 2 and 6). It is identified by some critics with Tel Hum, by others with Khan Minyeh.

CAPE TO CAIRO RAILWAY. Projected line to connect Cape Town and Cairo. Originally the dream of Cecil Rhodes, it was to be about 6,000 m. long and was planned to run through Egypt, the Sudan, Uganda, Belgian Congo, Rhodesia, Transvaal, and Cape Colony, with long branches at several points to the E. and W. coasts of Africa. The project in its original form has been abandoned in favour of a combined rail, road, and steamer system which has in fact been completed. From the N. the rly. runs from Cairo to Sennar in the Sudan, S. of Khartoum, with branch lines to the Red Sea coast at Suakin, from Atbara and the S. terminus. From Khartoum an all-British route is open via Nile steamer to Juba and thence by motor road through Nairobi and Livingstone, to Broken Hill in N. Rhodesia, whence the rly. to the Cape runs through Johannesburg. Alternatively, a shorter route from Juba is open via motor road through the Belgian Congo to Bukama, whence the Cape rly. via Broken Hill can be picked up. A third route consisting of steamer and motor transport is available from Juba via Lakes Victoria and Tanganyika to connect with the Cape rly. at Elizabethville in the Congo. The time taken on the journey varies according to the route taken, etc., from 32 to 45 days, the quickest being the route through the Congo. S. of the Belgian Congo the rly. serves most of S.W., S. and S.E. Africa, including Portuguese W. and E. Africa and the Union of S. Africa. See map p. 248.

Cape Town. Houses of Parliament of the Union of S. Africa

CAPE TOWN. City of S. Africa, and the capital of Cape Province. It is the oldest settlement in S. Africa, and the seat of the legislature of the Union of S. Africa. Between Table Mountain and Table Bay, it was laid out by the Dutch in 1652. It is beautifully situated and presents a striking appearance from the sea. Its geographical situation and harbour facilities have made it one of the great world ports of call. There are extensive commercial docks and a breakwater. Exports include wool, wines, ivory, gold, diamonds, and ostrich feathers.

Capo Town is laid out regularly in blocks, and many of the old Dutch houses still stand. Notable buildings are the Houses of Parliament, the cathedral, the city hall, the castle, and the Old Town House. It has a wireless station. At Rondebosch, the chief residential suburb, is Groot Schuur, the residence of the late Cecil Rhodes, and now the official residence of the prime minister of the Union, near which is the Rhodes Memorial. The university of Cape Town, established in 1918 as one of the three universities of South Africa, consists of the college erected at Groot Schuur. Pop. (1931) 149,236.

CARTHAGE (Phœnician Karthadisha, new city). Ancient city of Africa. It was situated on the coast near the modern Tunis. According to tradition it was founded by Phœnician settlers from Tyre under Dido. The oldest part of the town was called Byrsa (citadel), perhaps from the story that Dido purchased as much land as could be covered by the hide (Gr., byrsa) of an ox, which she cut into strips so that it surrounded a large tract of ground. There were two harbours, the inner, called Cothon, for warships. On the land side the town was protected by a triple wall. The Carthaginian empire was at the height of its power before the first Punic war (264 B.C.). In the 4th century B.C. it extended from the altars of the Philaeni, near the great Syrtis (gulf of Sidra) on the E., to the Pillars of Hercules (Gibraltar) on the W. Sardinia, Corsica, and

Carthage. Plan of the principal sites of the ancient city

Malta were in its hands, Hanno the navigator founded colonies on the W. coast of Africa.

Although defeated (480) by Gelon, the tyrant of Syracuse, the Carthaginians would probably have succeeded in subjugating Sicily but for the intervention of the Romans. The three Punic wars (264–241, 218–201, 149–146) ended in the triumph of the Roman arms. Cato's demand, delenda est Carthago (Carthage must be destroyed), was carried out to the letter; after a three years' siege the city was taken by storm by the younger Scipio and razed to the ground. The territory became the Roman province of Africa.

In the time of Augustus, Carthage again began to prosper. During the 1st and 2nd centuries of the Christian era next to Rome and Alexandria it was the most important city in the Roman empire. It was also a stronghold of Christianity and numerous church councils or synods were held there. From the end of the 2nd century Carthage had a bishop, and such fathers of the church as Augustine, Cyprian and Tertullian were natives of North Africa.

In 439 the Vandals under Geiseric (Genseric) made themselves masters of the Roman dominions, and Carthage the capital of their kingdom. Carthage was reconquered by Belisarius (533) and re-united to the eastern empire under the name of Justinianopolis. Finally it was burned in 698 by the Arabs. Since the French occupation of Tunis, researches and excavations have led to important Punic and Roman discoveries.

CHART (Lat charta, paper) Map used by navigators One of the earliest charts is that of Mercator, whose chart of the world is so arranged that a seaman can steer in the direction shown by a straight line The British Admiralty has issued charts for use in every sea, and in many cases these Admiralty charts are the only existing accurate maps of certain islands or comparatively unfrequented shores. The voyages of Captain Cook and many expeditions to the Arctic and Antarctic Oceans were in part due to the desire of the Admiralty to have charts for the waterways of the world. Other governments, notably that of the U S A, publish similar charts.

Admiralty charts are of four main kinds: charts of the oceans, such as the North Atlantic, of the larger sea ways with several harbours, such as the Bristol Channel; of the entrances to harbours, such as the Mersey estuary, and of the harbour works in detail The scale becomes gradually larger as the area depicted becomes smaller Specimens of the ocean charts are the monthly pilot charts of the North Atlantic Ocean Here the coastlines are the sole land feature indicated In addition symbols are used to denote the average strength and direction of the prevailing winds for the month, etc These charts are kept up to date by using the information continuously provided by the reports of ships' captains, so that, for instance, it is possible to indicate the location from time to time of derelict ships The charts further show the best tracks to be followed by sailing and steam vessels in their voyages between the chief ports Space on the charts is also utilised to furnish information about the great tornadoes, waterspouts, ice-drifts, etc, observed in these waters at different times Another type of ocean chart is the chart on the gnomonic projection The shortest distance from A to B is along a great circle, and is shown on a straight line on the gnomonic chart.

The navigator requires to know the depth of the in shore waters, the location of sunken rocks, the situation of buoys, lights, lighthouses, navigable channels, etc Consequently these features are surveyed by naval officers by the ordinary methods of triangulation and the location is marked most carefully upon the chart The sea depths are entered, in fathoms, as spot depths on the charts, and serve to indicate the shape and extent of shoals and sunken rocks The harbour plans are on a large scale, i e, about the magnitude of 5 ins to the mile, the approaches to harbours such as Plymouth Sound are on a smaller scale, about 1 in or ½ in to the mile, while the charts of the larger areas are on a scale of 10 or more m to the inch

China. Map of the great country of the Far East, once an empire and now a disjointed republic

Foochow. The population cannot be stated with any certainty. In 1931 officials gave the figure of 474,500,000, but this includes Mongolia, Manchuria, Tibet and other districts that are only nominally part of the republic. China proper may have 420,000,000 people.

TOPOGRAPHY. The greater part of China is mountainous, the tableland of Tibet forming a centre from which various chains of mts. branch off to the E. The great Kwenlun range throws out several offshoots into Kansu and splits up into three principal systems as follows:

China. Arms of the republic

(1) The Alashan range runs N.E. through the Ordos plateau, and forms a natural boundary between Mongolia and China. It continues through the high Shansi plateau (6,500–11,500 ft.) and across the N. part of Chihli, as the Yinshan and the Khingan mts. The Nanshan, another branch of the Kwenlun, attains a height of 16,500 ft.

(2) The eastern Kwenlun range forms a massive barrier between the basins of the Yellow river and the Yangtse, and takes successively, as it runs from W. to E., the names of Siching, Chinling, Funiu, and Hwaiyangshan. The Chinling mts. rise in certain parts to 11,500 ft. The N. slope descends abruptly upon the Wei river in Shensi. The Funiushan is a somewhat lower range, while the Hwaiyangshan extends far into Anhwei at an average height of 2,500 ft.

(3) The Minshan and Kiulung ranges run parallel to the above and are comparable to them in height, though they do not penetrate so far to the E. The former runs along the N border of Szechwan, the latter separates the upper Han river from the Yangtse. Between the two there is a depression which is crossed by the high way from Peking to Ch'eng-tu.

The great E. plain of China is roughly in the shape of a triangle, having its apex near Peking and its base along the Yangtse from the region of Shanghai to somewhere in the neighbourhood of Ichang. This plain is broken by the Shantung massif, and in its south-west part the Hwaiyang shan runs obliquely across it.

The uplands to the N.W. of the great plain consist, geologically, of nearly horizontal beds of rock of the carboniferous and pre-carboniferous ages. But large areas are covered, often to a depth of over 1,000 ft., by the peculiar calcareous loam, friable and fine in texture called loess. This brownish-yellow earth consists of the fine dust brought by winds from the arid plateaux of Central Asia, and mixed with decaying plants by the agency of rain. Shansi, Shensi, and Kansu are largely covered by loess.

China has three great rivers: the Hwangho or Yellow river, the Yangtse-Kiang, and the Sikiang or West river, all of which traverse the country in a general easterly direction. The Yellow river has changed its course several times within the historical period. Previous to 1851 it entered the Yellow Sea S. of the Shantung promontory; now it is utilising the bed of the Chiho, a small stream flowing into the gulf of Chihli. The Yangtse, 3,200 m. long, is a magnificent river dividing China into two almost equal portions. Among its tributaries the Min river, on the left, is navigable as soon as it enters the Chengtu plain, and is more useful, as waterway and for irrigation, than the upper course of the main stream.

China. Fisherman, a native of the island of Chusan

The Kialing-Kiang also traverses Szechwan and enters the Yangtse at Chung-King. At the junction of the Han river, which is navigable in summer for the greater part of its length, stands the great emporium of Hankow. The Siang, in Hunan, and the Kan, in Kiangsi, both form part of important routes between the Yangtse valley and Canton, and flow northwards into the large lakes Tungting and Poyang respectively, which are connected with the Yangtse by short channels.

The lakes act as reservoirs—absorbing the surplus waters in summer, and feeding the river in winter. Nanking and several other important cities line the banks of the Yangtse in Kiangsu. The Grand Canal, which serves as a link between the basins of the Paiho, the Yellow river, the Hwai, Yangtse, and Tsientang, is still used throughout, except for a section in Shantung.

The Sikiang is the great artery of communication in S. China. Wuchow, on the border of Kwangtung, is the head of navigation for large junks; below this point it is often nearly a mile wide, though the North and East rivers do not join it until the Canton delta is reached. This is a densely populated plain, intersected by innumerable waterways on which a vast number of boats are constantly plying.

Smaller rivers of economic importance include the Paiho, which flows across the Peking plain through Tientsin, and provides the only outlet for an immense traffic; the Hwaiho, which flows into the large but shallow Hungtse lake; and the Min river, which is ascended by sea-going steamers to within 11 m. of Foochow. The Tsientang river, which enters the shallow bay of Hangchow and is famous for its tidal bore, is not visited by large craft. In general the northern section of the Chinese coast has few good natural harbours, whereas the part S. of Ningpo has more than any other seaboard of equal length in the world.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT. The affairs of China are controlled by a nationalist government at Shanghai, but the authority of this is not accepted everywhere. At the head of the state is the president and a number of state councillors. There are also five yuan or councils, executive, legislative, judicial, examination, and control, which are responsible for the various forms of national activity. The country has a large army, raised by compulsory service, but it is not in a high state of efficiency. There is a small navy.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY. China is essentially an agricultural country. Rice is the staple crop throughout the S. and central provinces. In the N. the chief crops are wheat, barley, maize, millet, and beans. The central provinces produce ramie, mulberry, sesamum, and vegetable oils. Cotton is grown as far N. as the N. part of Chihli, but the lower Yangtse valley is the great cotton region. The tea gardens are in the W. and S. One of the most successful industries is silk culture. China produces about one-fourth of the world's supply of raw silk. Despite repeated efforts to suppress the opium traffic, the poppy is still grown. Other products include hemp, jute, ramie, flax, and indigo. Pigs are reared everywhere.

Coal is the most important mineral. Iron ores are abundant. Copper is found in most parts, and especially in Yunnan. Tin is the chief mineral export. China produces more antimony than any other country. Other minerals include gold, silver, lead, and tungsten. Petroleum is also found, especially in Shensi province and the upper Yangtse region.

The manufacture of silk is one of the most important industries. Modern industrial methods are being increasingly adopted. There are silk filatures and cotton mills at Shanghai, Canton, and other centres, sugar refineries at Canton, iron and steel works at Hanyang, and shipbuilding and engineering works at Shanghai, Hankow, and Foochow. Flour milling is an increasing industry. The exports include silk, beans, bean-cake, vegetable oils, cotton, and tea. There are 12,335 m. of railway, and the roads have been greatly improved and lengthened since 1920. The principal towns and centres are connected by numerous air lines. The rivers and canals carry most of the internal trade.

FINANCE. The revenue of the republic is obtained chiefly from a tax on salt and duties on imports. The dues known as Likin, charged on goods entering the provinces, were abolished in 1931. The duties on the foreign trade are collected by an international authority called the Chinese Maritime Customs and the proceeds are earmarked for the payment of interest on the foreign debt. The currency is a silver one, the chief coins in circulation being the tael and the dollar, but there are no generally accepted standards of value. Native systems of weights and measures are in use.

China. Lady in European dress

HISTORY. The Chinese empire, one of the oldest monarchies in the world, came to an end in 1912 when, after a revolution, the last Manchu emperor was deposed. Under the leadership of Sun Yat Sen a republic was established and this had a fairly tranquil career until the death of the first president, Yuan-Shih-Kai, in 1916. About this time the country was seriously disturbed by the rivalry between N. and S., and somewhat later the latter area was permeated by Bolshevist influence. In 1927 one of the war lords, Chang Tso Lin, set up his government at Peking while the nationalist party, called Kuomintang, made

Canton its headquarters This gave a new impetus to the civil war and in 1928 the nationalists captured Peking and made Nanking the country's capital, Chiang Kai Shek becoming president. The new government consolidated the southern areas, and was recognized by the powers of the world, but early in 1930 there was again friction between it and the northern party.

This incipient war was soon overshadowed by trouble with the Russian Soviet over the control of the Chinese Eastern Rly and still more by hostilities with Japan. After the Sino Japanese war of 1895 that country obtained a foothold on the mainland and to protect her interests advanced into Manchuria, where there was a good deal of unrest China protested and in 1931 the League of Nations sent out an international commission under the presidency of the earl of Lytton to report upon the situation. Before this enquiry was completed, however, Manchuria was declared an independent state with Henry Pu, formerly emperor of China, as its head Japan supported the new state, and refused to accept the proposals made by the international commission for settling the dispute In 1933 her armies advanced into the province of Jehol and in a few weeks had driven its Chinese defenders within the Great Wall and were only a short distance from Peking

It has a number of manufactures, being largely an industrial district, and a 17th century church. Clichy was in existence in the 7th century, when the Frankish kings had a residence here. Pop (1931) 55,692.

CLIFDEN. Seaport and market town of co. Galway, I F S It stands at the mouth of the river Owenghin, and is 49 m. N W of Galway, on the G S Rlys. Pop. (1926) 964.

CLIFFE. Village of Kent It is 5½ m E N E of Gravesend, and is served by the S. Rly , the village being 1 m. N. of the station.

CLIFFORD. Village of Herefordshire On the river Wye, it is 2¼ m. N E. of Hay, on the G W Rly The ruined castle, once the seat of the powerful Clifford family, lies 2 m. N E of the village. Pop. 729

CLIFFORD CHAMBERS. Village of Gloucestershire. It is 3 m S. of Stratford-on Avon, and has an old church with 15th cent remains, and a half-timbered vicarage.

CLIFFSIDE PARK. Borough of New Jersey, U S A. Opposite New York City, with which it is connected by tramway and ferry, it is a residential district. Pop. (1930) 15,267.

CLIFTON. Watering place of Gloucestershire and a suburb of Bristol. It lies on the river Avon, which here passes through a gorge Brunel's suspension bridge (constructed partly of material from old Hungerford Bridge, Charing Cross, London), which spans the Avon, has a length of 702 ft and is 275 ft above low water It was opened in 1864 For upwards of 400 years Clifton has been celebrated for its hot springs, which are still frequented Clifton has been the seat of a Roman Catholic bishopric since 1850 A notable feature is the Rocks Railway Clifton Down and Durdham Down are public property The public school for boys, Clifton College, was founded in 1862 It has a fine range of buildings and extensive playing fields

CLIFTON. Village of Derbyshire It is 1½ m. S W of Ashbourne, on the L M S. Rly Pop 580

CLIFTON. Village of Nottinghamshire. On the Trent, it is 2 m to the S of the city The village church has features of interest and the houses around the green retain their former charm Clifton Hall has been for centuries the home of the Clifton family The village is known for its grove, a beautiful avenue of trees overlooking the Trent

CLIFTON. Village of Westmorland It is on the river Lowther, 2½ m S E of Penrith, and is served by the L M S (Clifton and Lowther station) and the L N E (Clifton Moor station) Rlys Lowther Castle lies 2 m S W of the L M S Rly station , Clifton Moor was the scene of an encounter between the Young Pretender and the duke of Cumberland in 1745

CLIFTON-ON-DUNSMORE. Village of Warwickshire On the river Avon and the Oxford Canal, it is 2 m N E of Rugby, and has a station (Clifton Mill) on the L M S Rly Pop 638.

CLIFTONVILLE. Watering place of Kent It lies to the E of Margate (q v), of which borough it forms part.

CLIMATE (Gr klima, slope, clime) Average weather, or the total of the average meteorological phenomena characteristic of a given area Climate is concerned with the mean conditions which prevail, and its data are based upon continuous daily observations of temperature, pressure, etc , over a long series of years The meteorological elements which are observed with more or less completeness at observatories and meteorological stations are the temperature, pressure of the atmosphere, the quantity of rainfall, the direction and force of the winds, the duration of sunlight, and the proportion of the sky which is covered with cloud In recent years such observations have been extended to the upper atmosphere. The values obtained by the observers at stated times are averaged and form the meteorological means which are the basic material with which the climatologist deals By correlating the numerical averages with the geographical position of the place, he attempts to generalise the information in order to determine the main features of the several climatic regions of the world.

The simple climatic elements refer to winds, rain, and sunlight The world contains four fairly well defined wind belts · those of the N E and S E trades, the Brave West Winds of the S. and the Westerlies of the N hemisphere. Similarly there are definite areas with characteristic rainfall : the equatorial areas of heavy rains throughout the year ; the neighbouring belts of rains in the hotter and dryness in the cooler season , the belts of no rain lying still farther from the equator , the areas where the rains fall in the cool season and the hot season is dry, adjacent to the polar sides of the arid areas and the belts of rains throughout the year nearer to the poles These areas merge gradually into each other, and while they tend to lie uniformly E and W. across the world, they are modified in shape by mountain ranges Sunlight depends on the tilt of the earth, and is theoretically determined by the length of the day

Few places receive all the possible sunshine, and consequently the average numbers of actual hours of sunshine should be related to the possible total In Europe this proportion varies from a third in the N to two-thirds in the S , and from a quarter in the British Isles on the W. to a half in Russia on the E. May is usually the sunniest month In N America the arid areas of Texas, etc , receive more than two-thirds of the possible sunshine This consideration of the simpler climatic elements brings out the effect of variation in latitude , from the equator polewards a traveller journeys through a succession of climates which may be briefly summarised thus : (1) trade winds . heavy tropical constant rains, small quantities of sunshine , on the polar side of this belt the rains become summer rains only and the sunshine increases , (2) the belt of calms : light summer rains or no rains at all, the sunniest areas in the world , (3) westerly winds at first winter rains, then rain at all seasons, with decreasing hours of sunshine ; (4) circumpolar winds without definite character, snow and little sunshine

At this stage of the investigation the climatologist deals with averages of actual quantities ; when he penetrates more deeply into atmospheric conditions he deals with variations in temperature, pressure, and humidity, in order to determine the results of the distribution of land and water, of mountain and plain, upon the broad scheme of world climates In the study of temperature the climatologist determines first the gradual reduction in mean annual temperature from about 77° F near the equator to about 3° F at lat 80° N ; the accompanying changes in the mean annual range of temperature from 9° F near the equator to a maximum of 58° F. in lat 70° N , these results show the relation between temperature and latitude, and, combined with the observed result that temperature falls 1° F for every 300 ft rise in elevation, lead to a general notion of the temperatures which are to be correlated with the wind, rain, and sunshine belts already described

The next step is the study of the variations from these latitude temperatures which are regarded as normal It is found that in the southern hemisphere temperatures differ very slightly (not much more than 5° F) from the normal. In the northern hemisphere the differences are much more pronounced , in July (summer) European temperatures are normal, in N Africa, Asia, and N America they exceed the normal by about 5° F . and over the oceans they are below the normal by about 5° F ; in January (winter), over the N E Atlantic and N E Pacific, the temperatures exceed the normal by more than 25° F , and near Hudson Bay and in Mongolia they are the same amount below the normal It follows, therefore, that Ireland is 50° F hotter in January than Mongolia ; that Newfoundland and Japan are about normal , and that Vancouver and the British Isles are abnormally warm in winter

These observed results demonstrate the effect of the oceans upon climate The great southern oceans keep the temperatures uniformly under the influence of the sun, and prevent great variations , but the northern oceans have different climates on their eastern and western margins The eastern margins, towards which the prevailing westerlies and the consequent ocean surface drifts force quantities of warm air and warm surface water, are abnormally warm in winter The westerly wind belt contains therefore the following subdivisions · (a) western margins of the oceans (normal winters) ; (b) eastern ocean margins (abnormally warm winters) ; (c) western inland parts of America and Eurasia (normal winters and summers) , (d) eastern inland parts of America and Eurasia (abnormally cold winters with summers slightly warmer than the normal)

The variations in the height of the barometer, e g pressure differences, next require attention It is found that the two hemispheres are quite different , in the S between lat 20° and 40° S , from which the S E trades and Brave West Winds blow in different directions, there is always a belt of high pressure Within this belt the highest pressures always occur on the east side of the oceans, so that there are three crests of high and three troughs of low pressure , within it also a continuous procession of anticyclones moves from W. to E Northwards pressures decline towards the equator and southwards they drop to a greater extent towards the pole

In the N. hemisphere during the winter a belt of high pressure extends across the world , over the oceans this belt is very narrow and lies over the tropic of Cancer , it widens out in N America and Asia, until it reaches from the tropic to the Arctic circle, and attains a maximum height over Mongolia , at the same time well marked depressions develop in the N of both the oceans with the result that the westerly winds are due to cyclone storms of great intensity which whirl from W to E across the seas During the summer extensive high pressure areas develop over the eastern parts of the oceans between 23½° and 40° N , a slight depression arises in western U S A , and a deep depression is developed in Afghanistan and N W India, with its edges as far away as Peking and Khartoum This marked depression is accompanied by the failure of the N E trades in the neighbourhood of S E Asia, for the S E trades cross the equator and continue as S W winds across the Arabian Sea, the Bay of Bengal, and the South China Sea These S W winds, accompanied by dense clouds and heavy rains, are the monsoons of India Cloudiness is largely determined by pressure , where the pressure is high the sky is clear and there is little rain

The climatologist has, up to the present, been limited in his studies by the fact that his observations have been confined to the lower layers of the atmosphere Recent work in meteorology, largely stimulated by the needs of the flying men during the Great War, has added considerably to his information concerning the rest of the atmosphere, and has brought to light new facts, the chief of which are that above an elevation of about 30,000 ft the temperature is constant at approximately 53° C., that clouds do not occur above this elevation , and that the main causes of weather changes, and, therefore, of climatic differences, are to be found in the layers of the atmosphere at about this level. While it is clear that many climatic phenomena are directly traceable to the influence of the sun, it has not been definitely ascertained how the highest mountains which almost pierce this causative layer, and the distribution of land and sea in the N hemisphere modify the solar influences. See Atmosphere

CLINCH. River of the United States Rising in the W part of Virginia, it flows 250 m S W into Tennessee, and unites with the Holston river at Kingston to form the Tennessee river

CLINTON. City of Iowa, U S A On the Mississippi river, it is 138 m by rail W. of Chicago It is an important railway centre served by the Chicago and North-Western and several other railways The city contains several parks, two academies and Wartburg Lutheran College, founded in 1894 It is a manufacturing centre, produces boilers, bricks, cloth, paper, etc , and has large stockyards and machine shops Pop. (1930) 25,726

CLINTON. Town of Massachusetts, U S A. It is on the river Nashua, 13 m N N E of Worcester, on the Boston and Maine Rly Here is Wachusett dam and reservoir, part of the water supply of Boston The town has a fine municipal building, a library, a hospital, an extensive park, and manufactures cloth, machinery and carpets Pop (1930) 25,726

CLIPSTON. Village of Northamptonshire It is 4 m S of Market Harborough, and is served by the L M S Rly

CLIPSTONE District of Nottinghamshire. It is in Sherwood Forest, on the river Maun, 3 m N E of Mansfield Clipstone palace, now in ruins, lies 5 m N E of Mansfield During the Great War there was a training camp at Clipstone

CLITHEROE Borough and market town of Lancashire It is on the river Ribble, at the base of Pendle Hill, 10¼ m N E of Blackburn on the L M S Rly , and has cotton industries and lime and cement works The grammar school was founded in 1554, the ancient church of S Mary Magdalene has been reconstructed There are remains of an 11th century castle Market days, Tues and Sat Pop. (1931) 12,008

CLIVEDEN Hamlet of Buckinghamshire The residence here is charmingly situated among rocks and hanging woods on the river Thames, 3 m N E of Maidenhead and close to Dropmore It was a seat of the duke of Westminster before it was sold to Viscount Astor

CLOGHER. Village of Tyrone, Ireland On the Blackwater river, 2 m S W of Augher and 80 m N W of Dublin, it is served by the Clogher Valley light railway. Formerly an important ecclesiastical city, it has an 18th century cathedral and a bishop's palace Near the former is a stone, presumed to be the clogher, or golden stone, after which the village is named

CLONAKILTY. Urban district, market town, and seaport, co Cork, I F S It stands on Clonakilty Bay, 13 m S W of Bandon, on the G S Rlys Here are corn and flax mills, and close by are Druidical remains similar to those at Stonehenge Market day, Fri Pop (1926), 2,770

CLONCURRY. Town of Queensland, Australia It is a railway junction and road centre, 408 m by rail W of Townsville on the coast, and 210 m S of Burketown on the Gulf of Carpentaria Here the railway branches N. to Coolulla and S to Dajarra Copper has been mined here since 1884 It is connected by air mail service with Brisbane, Normanton, and other towns. Pop 1,100.

CLONES. Urban district and market town of co Monaghan, I F S. It is 39¼ m N.W. of Dundalk, on the G N I. Rly. There are abbey ruins and a round tower. Market day, Thurs. Pop (1926) 2,365

CLONFERT City of co Galway, I F S It stands on the river Shannon and the Grand Canal, and is the seat of a Roman Catholic bishop. S. Brendan founded a diocese and monastery here in 558 Pop 1,633

CLONMACNOISE. District of Offaly, I F S. On the river Shannon, it is 8 m S.W of Athlone, and includes the Shannon Bridge A chief seat of religion among the ancient Irish, it now has the ruins of seven churches, two round towers, three crosses, and a palace or castle St Kieran founded an abbey here in 548, and Roderic O'Conor, last of the native kings of Ireland, was buried here (1198) The ruins are perhaps the most extensive in Ireland

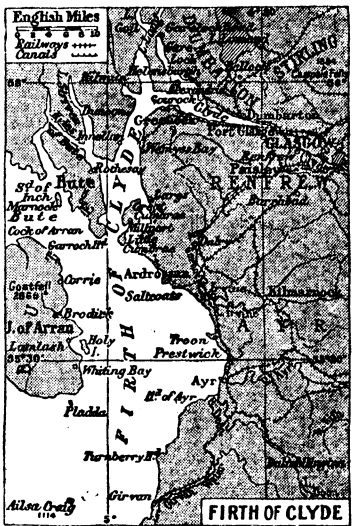
CLONMEL. Borough and county town of co Tipperary, I F S It stands at the head of navigation on the river Suir, 28 m N W of Waterford, on the G S Rlys, and is a railway centre. Market days, Wed and Sat Pop (1926) 9,056.

CLONTARF. Suburb of Dublin On the coast to the N E. of the city proper, it is a popular pleasure resort Here in 1014 Brian Boru defeated the Danes.

CLOSEBURN. Village of Dumfriesshire. It is 11¼ m N W of Dumfries, on the L M S Rly. Here slate and stone are quarried, and near the village are mineral springs. Pop 1,074

CLOUD. Fogs or mists formed at some distance above the ground. They are composed of tiny water particles floating in the air Like fogs or mists, clouds can be produced only by the cooling of masses of air containing water vapour In most cases the condensation occurs on minute solid-dust particles, owing to the fact that solid particles radiate heat very quickly, and thus become cooler than the air which surrounds them; but it has been proved that water vapour may be condensed upon ions of the air itself, although in this case the temperature would have to be lowered to a point considerably below that at which condensation normally occurs The cooling of the air may be accomplished in several ways, the particular form the cloud takes being determined by the manner of cooling Clouds may be classified into (1) stratiform or sheet clouds, (2) heap or cumulus clouds

Stratiform or sheet clouds occur in more or less extended sheets, sometimes covering the greater part of the sky. The air is to a certain degree stratified, and layers at different altitudes differ not only in temperature, but also in their degree of dampness If the air in a damp layer is cooled by expansion caused by a diminution in pressure, dew point may be reached Such a layer would then become cloudy Frequently, particularly in cyclones, sheet clouds may be formed in several layers at the same time Sheet clouds would also be produced when air currents of different altitudes flow in various directions. In this case the clouds would be formed at the surface of contact Typical cloud sheets are cirrus clouds, the highest of all clouds, which on account of their great height must be composed of minute ice crystals, and stratus clouds, which are formed in horizontal layers at no great distance from the ground, and are really floating sheets of fog or mist



Heap or cumulus clouds are produced by the rising of currents of air, which accounts for their considerable vertical structure As air currents ascend pressure is reduced and expansion takes place. When dew point is reached condensation begins, but this checks further rapid cooling owing to the liberation of heat during the process of condensation This acquired heat enables the current to rise higher than it would otherwise have done. Condensation continues with ascent, and may cause the cloud to attain a height of many thousand feet. The horizontal base of a heap cloud marks the altitude at which condensation commences. Cirrus, stratus, and cumulus clouds may be described as the three primary types of clouds. To these may be added the shapeless black mass known as the nimbus or rain cloud.

CLOVELLY. Village and holiday resort of Devon. It stands in a well-wooded combe on Barnstaple Bay, 11 m. S.W. of Bideford. Its principal street known as "up along" is formed by a series of cobbled steps. Herring and mackerel fishing is the main occupation. Pop. 634.

CLOVENFORDS. Hamlet of Selkirkshire. On Caddon Water, it is 3 m. W. of Galashiels, on the L.N.E. Rly. Here are the Tweed Vineries, a huge series of glasshouses heated by some 5 m. of steam pipes.

CLOWNE. Village of Derbyshire. It is 10 m. N.E. of Chesterfield, on the L.M.S. Rly. Coal mining is the chief industry and a cattle market is held.

Clyde, Firth of. Estuary of the Scottish river

CLOYNE. Market town of co. Cork, I.F.S. It is 15 m. E.S.E. of Cork, and has an Anglican and a Roman Catholic bishop. Opposite the 14th century cathedral is a round tower over 90 ft. high and 9 ft. in diameter. The Roman Catholic cathedral is at Cobh. Market day, Thurs. Pop. (1926) 712.

CLUJ. Town of Rumania. In Transylvania, it is 48 m. N. of Alba Julia, and has railway connexion with Bucharest. S. Michael's Church, the Reformed Church, and the university (1919) are the chief buildings. The industries include paper-making and textiles. Formerly the town was known as Klausenburg. Pop. (1930) 96,866.

CLUMBER. Hamlet of Nottinghamshire. It is in the Dukeries 3 m. S.E. of Worksop. Clumber House, a seat of the duke of Newcastle, stands in a park, 12 m. in circumference. The church is a fine modern building. The Clumber spaniel takes its name from here.

CLUN. Market town of Shropshire. It is on the river Clun, 5½ m. N.N.E. of Knighton. Here are the ruins of a Norman castle, dating from the reign of Stephen, and an ancient bridge over the river. Market day, Tuesday.

CLUNES. Town of Victoria, Australia. It is 92 m. by rly. N.W. of Melbourne and 20 m. from Ballarat, and is a mining centre. Pop. 2,000.

CLUNY. Town of France. It stands on the river Grône, 12 m. N.W. of Mâcon. The town grew up around the abbey, founded in 910, which existed until the Revolution, and of which there are remains. There is a technical school. Leather, pottery, and paper are manufactured, and quarrying is carried on. Pop. 4,000.

CLUTHA. River of Otago, New Zealand. It drains the Southern Lakes, but is only navigable for 40 m. out of its 210 m. Gold is dredged here.

CLUTTON. Village of Somerset. It is 10 m. S. of Bristol, on the G.W. Rly. In the vicinity are a colliery and stone quarries. Pop. 1,234.

CLWYD. River of Denbighshire. Rising on Craig Bronbanog, it flows for 30 m. to the Irish Sea, which it enters at Rhyl. The Vale of Clwyd is a fertile tract 24 m. in length, and from 2 m. to 7 m. in breadth.

CLYDACH. Hamlet of Brecknockshire. Situated 2½ m. E.N.E. of Bryn Mawr, it is on the L.M.S. Rly., and lies on the edge of a coalfield.

CLYDACH. Village of Glamorganshire. It is situated 9½ m. N.W. of Llantrissant. There are some coal mines and quarries in the neighbourhood.

CLYDE. River of Scotland. It rises in Lanarkshire, flows past Bothwell, Lanark, Hamilton, Glasgow, and Renfrew, and opens out to form the Firth of Clyde. Its chief tributaries are the Medwin, Mouse, N. Calder, S. Calder, Kelvin, and Leven on the right; and on the left the Duncaton, Douglas, Nethan, Avon, and Cart. Near Lanark are the falls—Bonnington Linn, Corra Linn, Dundaff Linn, and Stonebyres Linn. Its length is 106 m. From Glasgow the Clyde is one of the most important highways in the world, and on its banks are some of the great shipbuilding yards. The largest vessels can ascend its channel as far as Glasgow.

CLYDE, FIRTH OF. Estuary of the river Clyde. Generally regarded as beginning at Dumbarton, this important commercial highway extends for 56 m. to Ailsa Craig. It varies in width from 1 m. at Dumbarton to 37 m. at the entrance, and has a greatest depth of 600 ft. It receives the waters of the Garnock, Irvine, Ayr, Doon, Girvan, and other rivers, throws off several sea-lochs, notably Gare Loch, Loch Long, Loch Goil, and Loch Striven, and contains Arran, Bute, the Cumbraes, and other islands. Among its principal ports, in addition to Dumbarton, are Port Glasgow, Greenock, Ardrossan, Irvine, and Ayr.

CLYDEBANK. Burgh of Dumbartonshire and Renfrewshire. It stands on the right or N. bank of the Clyde, 6 m. from Glasgow. Shipbuilding and engineering are the most important industries. It is served by the L.N.E. & L.M.S. Rlys. Pop. (1931) 46,963.

CLYDESDALE. Valley of Lanarkshire. It is watered by the Clyde, and is famous for its orchards and its coal and iron mines, and for a breed of heavy horses known as Clydesdales. They are rather smaller than the shire horses.

CLYDESDALE. Village of Lanarkshire. It lies adjacent to Mossend, and has a large iron works.

CLYDE SHIPPING CO. British steamship line. Its steamers are chiefly occupied in the coasting trade, but they also carry passengers. They go from Glasgow and Greenock to London, Newhaven, Southampton, Plymouth, and Liverpool, and also make journeys to Belfast, Cork, Dublin, Limerick, and Waterford. The head offices are at 78, Carlton Place, Glasgow.

Clyde Shipping Co. flag

CLYNNOGFAWR. Village of Caernarvonshire. Situated on Caernarvon Bay, it is 9 m. S.W. of Caernarvon. The church, originally founded in 616, dates from the 16th century.

CLYTH. Hamlet of Caithness. It is 2 m E. of Lybster, and has an old castle. There are also a bay and a headland of the same name.

CNOSSUS. Ruined city of Crete. It was famed as the residence of Minos and has attracted great notice as the centre of a pre-Hellenic civilization, attested by excavations, especially those conducted by Sir Arthur Evans

COACOACHOO BAY (great owl) Inlet indenting the N shore of the river St Lawrence, Canada Opposite Anticosti Island, and 150 m. E of the mouth of the Mingan river, it affords safe anchorage.

COAHUILA. Frontier state of N Mexico. Separated from the U S A by the Rio Grande del Norte, it is bounded by the states of San Luis Potosí, Zacatecas, Durango, Chihuahua, and Nuevo Leon Mountainous in the N E, it is mainly a plateau gradually falling away to the Rio Grande. The Bolson de Mapami, a flat, low-lying, and arid region, occupies the W. part of the state, which is traversed N. to S. by the International Rly Agriculture is engaged in, cotton in large quantities, maize, and wheat being produced, and there are rich deposits of silver, lead, copper, and other minerals, mining being the chief industry It is the only Mexican state in which coal is produced. The area is 63,786 sq m , and Saltillo is the capital. Pop. (1930) 434,313

COALBROOKDALE. District of Shropshire. It lies along the bank of the Severn, from Newport to Broseley, and is 8 m long by 2 m broad. It yields iron and limestone, used in the great ironworks founded at the village of Coalbrookdale in 1709 by Abraham Darby, but the coal seams which formerly supplied the needs of the industry are nearly exhausted

COALBROOKDALE. Village of Shropshire. It lies on the Severn, 4½ m S of Wellington on the G W Rly Here are ironworks COALBURN. Village of Lanarkshire It is 15 m S W of Lanark, on the L M S Rly.

COALEY. Village of Gloucestershire About 2½ m N E. of Dursley, it is served by the L.M S Rly. Pop 636

COALPIT HEATH. Hamlet of Gloucestershire It is 4 m S W. of Chipping Sodbury, on the G W Rly.

COALPORT. Village of Shropshire It is 2 m S E of Ironbridge, on the G W. Rly , and is famous for its china In 1751 a factory was established at Caughley, also in Shropshire, where an excellent type of porcelain was produced. Coming into the possession of John Rose, the works were removed to Coalport in 1814, and have continued there since Coalport vases are noted for their fine shapes, delicate scenery and figure paintings, and rich colours

COALVILLE. Urban district and market town of Leicestershire It is 5 m S E of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, on the L M S Rly. It lies in a coal bearing district, and manufactures tiles and silk. Market day, Fri Pop (1931) 21,886

COANZA. Variant spelling of the name of the African river Kwanza (q v).

COARY. River of Brazil. A S. tributary of the Amazon, it falls into that river above Carytown, 230 m W S W of Manaos

COAST. Margin of land next the sea, also known as the shore The shape and character of coastlines are determined by the action of the sea and of other agents of denudation and transportation, by the uplift and depression of the land, and by differences in the character of the rocks Frequently all three influences are active at the same time

Ocean waves and currents are ceaselessly at work wearing back the coastlines If the coast consists of loose or soft materials the waves themselves will readily eat into it and wash away fragments. Where hard rock exists, the cutting backwards is accomplished by means of stones and pebbles which are hurled against cliff faces. In the latter case, the cutting back is assisted by the formation of caves. Extensive masses of rock are thus undercut and eventually fall, forming in time the tools for further attacks. Most rocks contain fissures along which the waves can erode with comparative ease. When waves enter these fissures the air is compressed, but the falling back of the water reduces the pressure This alternate compression and expansion of the air in fissures is of great assistance in enlarging the fissures and in breaking off large pieces of rock. The cutting back of cliffs eventually produces a wave-cut platform which, along coasts where there is considerable rise and fall of the tides, is covered at high tide and exposed at low tide. These marine platforms slope gently to the sea Since the action of the waves is largely confined to the part of the coast lying between high and low water marks, there comes a time when the waves no longer reach the base of the cliffs and erosion ceases

But erosion along coasts is not confined to the action of waves. Above the high-water mark the ordinary agents of weathering are at work Therefore the outline or form of cliffs is dependent upon whether wave erosion or ordinary weathering is the more rapid In most cases the cliff will be overhanging where sea erosion is acting more rapidly, but will slope towards the land where weathering is the greater force The form of cliffs is also affected by the character of the jointing of the rocks as well as by the way they dip Thus in highly jointed rocks dipping seawards, large blocks will readily fall on the beach, and produce overhanging cliffs, while where the rocks dip landwards, the loosened blocks cannot fall until they are undercut, so that a different outline is produced

Where a coastline consists of rocks of different degrees of hardness, the harder strata, being less readily eroded, tend to form headlands or promontories, while the softer measures are more easily cut back and form gulfs or bays Bantry Bay, Kenmare River, and Dingle Bay, in S W Ireland, occupy the seaward ends of valleys composed of carboniferous limestone, which is more readily eroded than the old red sandstone ridges which separate the inlets from each other

Coast Protection For protection the coast is armoured, as it were, with a wall of masonry, concrete, or timber , and with banks of shingle collected by barriers, called groynes, built out more or less at right angles to the coast Massive sea walls, owing to their high cost, are used only where the land to be protected has great value—the frontages of seaside resorts, for example To ensure permanency, they should be carried down below low-water level, and be faced with granite, basalt, or other hard stone. Stepped walls are preferable to vertical, as they break up the waves better and reduce the scour of the back-wash, but they are more expensive Curved-faced and battered walls with a top cornice or bull-nose to project the wave seawards as it rises keep the ground beyond freer of water, and are suitable for esplanades , but as a rule they require an apron at the foot to prevent scour

Walls alone are seldom relied upon, as in the absence of groynes it is very difficult, if not impossible, to protect their foundations from scour. The purpose of groynes is to raise the surface of the foreshore, by trapping the shingle, sand, and other matter which the currents roll along the beach As compared with sea walls, groynes are cheap to make, being usually only wooden palisades a few feet high, though sometimes permanent masonry structures. The distance to which a groyne is carried out varies with the slope and character of the beach, but where possible the groyne is extended to the low-water mark Very successful results have been obtained with the Case system of low groynes, which consist of stout horizontal planks on edge attached to a row of vertical piles, spaced a few feet apart. Tiers of planks are added as required to keep the top of the groyne slightly above the rising surface of the foreshore This method allows material to collect on both sides of the groyne, whereas with high groynes the level is generally much higher on the side facing the current than on the lee side With low groynes the shore may be built up to the desired contour.

COAST RANGE. System of mountains in N America They extend along the Pacific seaboard and traverse, with interruptions, British Columbia, Washington, Oregon, and California The range in British Columbia, sometimes called the Cascade Mts, has a mean breadth of 100 m and a general elevation of 6,500 ft, with peaks attaining more than 9,000 ft The range is forested on the W, where it makes numerous submerged valleys or fiords

The Californian section is a continuation of the Sierra Nevada range, and consists of a complex series of chains, gradually increasing in altitude from less than 2,000 ft to upwards of 8,000 ft Farther N., in Oregon, the alt is less marked, few peaks exceeding 5,000 ft, but in Washington, where the system is represented by the Olympic range, the peaks again attain considerable alt, Mt Olympus, the highest, being 8,150 ft Here the range is forest-clad and snow-capped In the S of California a system trending to the S E is sometimes regarded as a part of the Coast Range Its peaks develop the greatest altitude of the entire system, San Bernardino, 10,630 ft, and San Jacinto, 10,805 ft high

COATBRIDGE. Burgh of Lanarkshire It is 9 m E of Glasgow, on the L M S Rly, and is also served by the L N E Rly It is the centre of the Scottish iron smelting industry Its development is due to the establishment of the Gartsherrie Ironworks in 1830 Pop (1931) 43,056

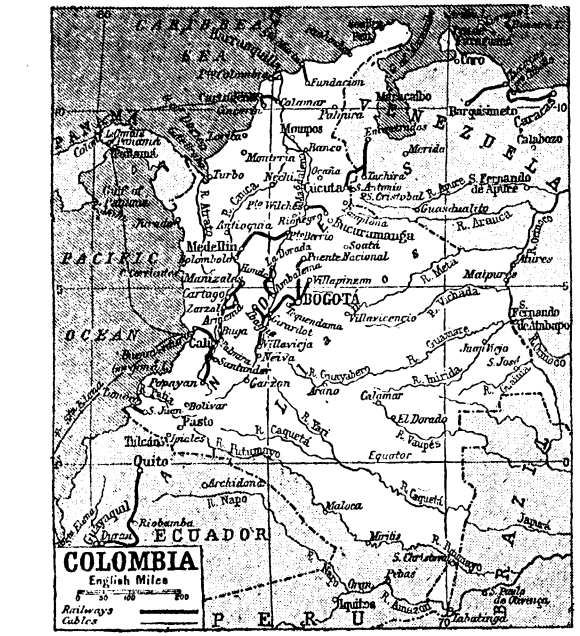
Cologne arms

Cologne owes its name to the Romans, who founded a colony here. During the Great War its position and railway facilities made it one of Germany's chief military centres; after the armistice (1918), it was occupied by the Allies until they evacuated it in 1926.



In the Middle Ages and later Cologne was the centre of a little state ruled by the archbishop, who was also one of the electors; it was therefore called an electorate. Its extent varied very much from time to time, but in the later Middle Ages it was a stretch of land lying for about 100 m. along the Rhine, mainly on the left bank. It included Bonn, where the archbishops often resided, as Cologne itself, a free imperial city, refused to accept their authority. The last elector died in 1801, and in 1815 the lands of the electorate were given to Prussia, being now included in the Rhine province. For a few years previously much of it had been French. Pop. 700,222.

COLOMB BECHAR. Village of Algeria. Situated at the extreme south-west corner of the department of Oran, in the heart of the desert, it is 460 m. from the coast. It is the terminus of the railway from Oran, and 14 m. from the Moroccoan border.

COLOMBES. Suburb of Paris. To the N.W. of the city, it is 5 m. from its centre, with which it is connected by tram and railway. It has a 16th century church, but the castle, in which Queen Henrietta Maria died, has disappeared. There is a stadium for international football matches and other athletic events, and a racecourse. Vinegar and measuring instruments are made here, and there are petroleum refineries. Pop. 42,300.

COLOMBIA. Republic of S. America. It is bounded N.W. by the republic of Panama, W. by the Pacific Ocean, N. by the Caribbean Sea, E. by Venezuela and Brazil, and S. by Peru and Ecuador. The area is estimated at about 447,500 sq. m. Pop. 7,851,000.

TOPOGRAPHY. The W. part of Colombia is traversed by three great ranges of the Andes—the Western, Central and Eastern Cordilleras. To the east are immense plains. The N. section of these is covered with rank grass, flooded in the wet season, parched in the dry. The S. part is watered by the Amazon and Orinoco and their tributaries, and is dense tropical forest. The Eastern Cordilleras consist of vast plateaux; this is the most densely populated part of the republic and the climate is temperate. The coastal plains are hot and humid. The chief rivers are the Magdalena, Cauca, and Patia. Bogotá is the capital, other important towns including Medellin, Barranquilla, Cartagena, and Manizales.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT. The president of the republic is elected by direct popular vote for four years. The legislature consists of a Congress of two houses, a Senate of 58 members and a house of representatives, the 131 members of which are elected for two years. The departments of state are presided over by ministers, who are appointed by the president.

There is an army recruited by compulsory service. The religion of the country is Roman Catholicism, and the language is Spanish. Colombia is a member of the League of Nations.

TRADE. The chief agricultural products are coffee, cotton, bananas, tobacco, and wheat and other cereals. The forests yield cedar, dyewoods, and medicinal plants. The mineral wealth is enormous. The products include emeralds, platinum, gold, silver, copper, iron, coal, and petroleum. There are valuable pearl fisheries. The chief exports are coffee, bananas, and platinum. The railways consist of small lines linking up the towns with the rivers or the sea. Aerial ropeways are widely used. Aeroplane services are very highly developed. There is wireless communication with Europe and U.S.A. The monetary unit is the gold peso, but the currency in circulation is silver, nickel, and paper. The metric system of weights and measures is used.

HISTORY. Originally under Spanish rule, Colombia gained its independence in 1819, when Simon Bolivar established the republic, consisting of what are now Colombia, Panama, Venezuela, and Ecuador. Venezuela and Ecuador withdrew from it in 1830, becoming separate republics, and in 1863 the remaining portion became the united states of Colombia. Panama was separated from it in 1903. Other events of the 20th century have been boundary disputes with Peru and Brazil.

COLOMBO. Capital and chief port of Ceylon. The administrative and trade centre of the island, it is on the W. coast. It has one of the largest artificial harbours in the world, covering over 600 acres, and is an important coaling station. The leading export is tea. The business quarter lies at the S. end of the harbour, where are the governor's residence, government buildings, and principal hotels. Farther on is the lake, and beyond it Victoria Park, the chief residential quarter, while between the lake and the sea is a narrow isthmus, Gallo Face, where are promenades and recreation grounds. The two cathedrals, Christ Church and the Roman Catholic cathedral, are near the harbour. The hall of the legislative council, opened in 1930, is one of the finest modern buildings in the East. The new university of Ceylon is situated in Colombo which has an observatory. Pop. (1931) 284,155.

COUNTY. Division of the United Kingdom and other parts of the British Empire and a unit for purposes of local government The word comes from the French comté, and its equivalent was given in France to districts ruled by counts. From there it passed over to England about 1066. Gradually all England was divided into counties or shires, until there were 40 of them. Each, irrespective of size, sent two members to parliament, there being only one or two exceptions to this rule before the Reform Act of 1832. From Tudor times each had its own lord lieutenant and its own body of magistrates Each had its county town, some of these being miniature capitals, where county folks met; its county court, where knights of the shire were chosen and other business transacted, and its own militia Some were counties palatine—i e. their rulers had exceptional powers because they occupied positions of exceptional danger Such were the border counties of Durham, Lancashire, and Cheshire Wales was organized into counties on the English model soon after its conquest by Edward I, as was Ireland The word also spread to Scotland. Wales now has 12 counties, Monmouthshire being part of England, although usually treated in legislation as part of Wales. Scotland has 33, and Ireland 32, six being in Northern Ireland and the rest in the Irish Free State In these three countries the counties are generally named after their chief towns

In 1888 legislation created a new class of county called administrative, i e, counties with a county council, and in England and Wales there are now 62 of these, compared with 52 geographical counties, as the older areas are called. Yorkshire is divided into three administrative counties, Lincolnshire similarly has three, London was made into a separate county, as were the Isle of Wight, the soke of Peterborough, and the Isle of Ely The others are East and West Sussex and East and West Suffolk. In Ireland, Cork was made into three administrative counties and Tipperary into two Each administrative county has its own county council, and in practice these areas are far more important than the older geographical ones.

The latter retain much of their old organization. They have each a lord lieutenant and a sheriff known as the high sheriff, and chosen each year by the crown. They retain also their benches of magistrates, who hold courts of quarter sessions and petty sessions, and for this judicial work they have a clerk of the peace. Further, the older counties, called for this purpose parliamentary counties, still remain units for sending members to parliament. Until 1832 all save two or three of the largest were undivided. After then the more populous ones were divided into two or more divisions, each returning two members, and this lasted until 1885. In that year they were cut up into smaller divisions, each returning one member. For instance, Surrey had six divisions and Nottinghamshire four. This principle was maintained in the Act of 1918, though the number and size of the divisions were altered. The word county has been carried into Canada, Australia, the U.S.A. and other English-speaking lands, where it is used in a similar sense. It refers always to a rural area, or at least to one which is the opposite of a town or borough.

COUNTY BOROUGH. In Great Britain a borough or burgh which has the privileges of a county. In the Middle Ages certain English towns were made counties of themselves, i.e., they were given the right to have a sheriff of their own and to be therefore free from the attentions, often unpleasant, of the sheriff of the county. Such were Bristol, Norwich, and Nottingham, and in 1835 there were 18 of these. This principle was extended in 1888, when certain large places were made into county boroughs, and at the present day any place with over 75,000 inhabitants can be made into a county borough. These county boroughs are quite free from any control on the part of a county council.

The civilization of Crete is of great antiquity and remarkable interest, as the ruins of Cnossus, Phaestus, and other cities show. It was the first European land to attain any high achievement in art, this taking place between about 2200 and 1000 B.C , the Middle Minoan period. This was ended perhaps by an invasion from Greece, which was followed by other invasions, the result was that another civilization, in which Asiatic influences played a part, developed in the island, its date being about 1000 B C. The laws also at this time show a degree of social organization superior to that of any part of the mainland The rise of the maritime cities of Greece deprived Crete of its dominant position, and it was of minor importance until modern history began.

Crete One of the most ancient sites of European culture

It was included in the Roman and the Byzantine empires until 1204, when, for trading reasons, it was seized by Venice Attempts made by the Turks to capture it failed until 1669, when success came to their arms, and the island was a Turkish possession nominally until 1913

The 19th century was marked by repeated risings against Turkish rule and by constant feuds between Christians and Moslems From 1824 to 1852, by decree of the Powers, the island was governed from Egypt In 1868, after a further period of grave disorder, the Powers, while giving the islanders a certain independence, themselves, by means of consuls, took a hand in its government In 1897, with the aid of many Greeks, the islanders started upon a war of liberation. The Turks were driven out and the Powers decided to administer the island themselves After further troubles the island was, in 1913, handed over to Greece Pop. 386,427

Cyclonic winds are usually strong, because the pressure differences between margin and centre produce what is called a steep barometric gradient. In the N. hemisphere the whole system rotates in a counter-clockwise direction, while cyclones in the S. hemisphere rotate in a clockwise direction.

Cyclones are of two types: (1) those of small diameter but great intensity; (2) those of great diameter but comparatively small intensity. To the first class belong cyclones originating in tropical regions where their movement is first westwards, and later, on reaching sub-tropical regions, polewards. These vary from 100 m. to 300 m. or more in diameter, and have gradients so steep that the winds blow with devastating violence. In these cyclones there is usually a central calm, known as the eye of the storm, whose diameter may be from $\frac{1}{10}$ to $\frac{1}{12}$ of the whole system. Before the physical laws of storm were understood, many ships perished owing to sailors thinking that the storm was over, when in reality they had reached the eye of the storm. When that passed, strong winds from the back half of the cyclone, coming from an opposite direction to those experienced before the temporary calm, caused destruction to ships not prepared for their reception. Hurricanes, tornadoes, and typhoons are cyclonic storms of this group. The advance of meteorological research has done much to help the safety of navigation in this important respect. To the second class belong the easterly-moving low pressure systems of temperate latitudes. Those reaching W. Europe often extend from Iceland to S. Europe, and are far less dangerous than those of the first group, while their cyclonic peculiarities are sometimes so little developed that it is almost misleading to give them the name of cyclone.

Czechoslovakia. Typical farmer of an enterprising young republic

HISTORY. The republic owes its existence to the recognition that Czechs, Moravians, and Slovaks are branches of the same Slav people, and to the national aspirations which followed that recognition and led to a long struggle for autonomy throughout the 19th century In 1918 a national council took over the control of the district, and in 1919 the peace treaty of Paris recognized the new republic Under the direction of T G. Masaryk and Eduard Benes, Czechoslovakia has made tremendous progress Peace has been maintained and full advantage taken of the opportunity for industrial development Until 1926 the dominant political party was a coalition of Czechs, but in 1926 this broke up A coalition in which Slovaks and Germans were also represented then came into power, and this ministry, in which Benes had charge of foreign affairs, was in office in 1933 In that year the alliance called the Little Entente, of which Czechoslovakia is a member, was renewed

DAM. Structure of earth or masonry built across valleys to impound rivers and create storage reservoirs of large capacity Sometimes called barrages, they are used for irrigation purposes, for supplying cities and towns with water and for providing a supply for the generation of electric light and power Another use is for holding up water in order to prevent flooding

Earth dams are limited in height to 100 ft The whole of the area covered by such a dam is first cleared of soft material or material which would soften if mingled with water The largest earthen dam is that constructed to impound Gatun Lake, which forms an important part of the Panama Canal More than 1 m long, with a base width of nearly ½ m, it contains more than 20,000,000 cubic yds of material As the body of water ponded up by it has an area of 171 sq m, and a failure would spell disaster, an abnormally high factor of safety was allowed.

Masonry dams are used for all heights, and are universal for heights exceeding 100 ft. They must be founded on rock and be carried down to sound material at every point of the base. In section a masonry dam has roughly the form of a right-angled triangle, the right angle being at the "heel," i.e., at the base on the water side. In some dams the water face is slightly battered, and the other face made more or less concave vertically; in others the first is vertical and the second rectilinear; but no two important dams have a quite similar section, as the conditions to be met vary on different sites.

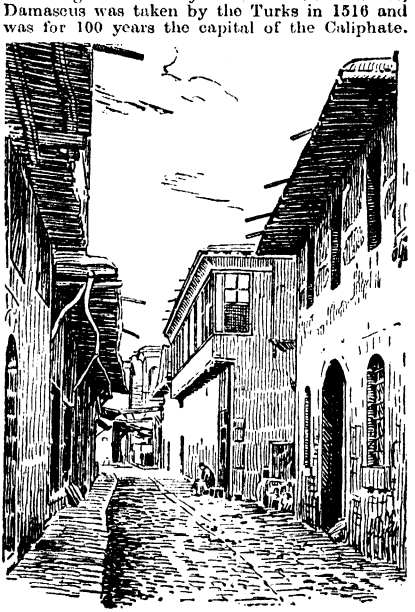
Dam foundation sites are prepared with the greatest care. All unsound rock is cut away, even if this means going down to a great depth, and the surface is shaped to give a good key to the masonry. All water springs in the rock are plugged or drained by pipes carried through the masonry. For the interior of the dam uncoursed rubblework is more generally used, and uncoursed squared ashlar work for the faces; but coursed work of large blocks is found in some dams. The interstices between stones are solidly filled with mortar to prevent leakages.

Some of the greatest dams in the world are in the United States, but there are also large ones in Egypt, India, Australia, and elsewhere where the land needs irrigation. The greatest storage capacity in the world is provided by the great Gatun dam on the Panama Canal and the Aswan dam on the Nile. Another large dam in Egypt is the Sennar. In India the largest is the Lloyd barrage on the Indus and in Australia the one at Hume in New South Wales. In the United States the largest dams are the Wilson at Muscle Shoals in Tennessee, Elephant Butte on the Rio Grande river, the Coolidge and the Roosevelt in Arizona and the Martin in Alabama. The Ashokan and the Kensico are among those built to provide New York with water. The Soviet government has built an immense dam on the Dnieper. The Esla is a notable dam in Spain, the Barberine in Switzerland, and the Don Martin in Mexico. In Great Britain the largest is probably the one on Lake Vyrnwy.



DAMANHUR. Town of Egypt. Occupying the site of an ancient Egyptian and Roman city, it is 38 m. by rly. S.E. of Alexandria, and is controlled by a mixed commission of Europeans and Egyptians in equal numbers. In 1798 it withstood an attack by Napoleon. Pop. 51,709.
