HUBBARD, Miss Louisa M.; b. Russia, 1836; d. of late William Egerton Hubbard, Leonardslee, Horsham, Sussex. Between 1864 and 1874 she took an active part in putting the Deaconess movement on a firmer footing in London, holding a series of fifty "assistance meetings," which anticipated the "drawing-room" meetings of to-day. About 1870 was much struck by the position of impoverished self-dependent ladies, and set herself to overcome their old-fashioned prejudices, and alike to impress them with the dignity of labour, and to show them the various ways in which they could obtain remunerative employment. In first instance began active efforts to induce gentlewomen to accept positions of teachers in elementary schools, and brought about opening of Otter College, Chichester, as a training school for ladies as elmentary teachers. In 1874 wrote a series of articles in Labour News on employment for all classes of women. These were reprinted in 1875 as a Handbook for Women's Work, which developed, in 1880, into The Englishwoman's Year Book, edited by L.M.H., and in this form was issued annually by Miss Hubbard till 1898. In 1875 brought out the Woman's Gazette, which was continued as work and leisure to the end of 1893; many women's movements or societies of to-day either originated in or were more or less promoted by these publications, among them being the United British Women's Emigration Association, the Midwives' Institute, and the National Union of Women Workers. After breakdown of health in 1894 she resided principally on the Continent. Address: Hôtel Austria, Gries bei Bozen, Süd Tirol, Austria.

MURRAY, Rev. William Hill; Inventor of the numeral-type by means of which blind and illiterate sighted Chinese can learn to read and write well in three months, using only 30 symbols, whereas the average Chinaman takes six years to master the 4000 ideographs essential to simple reading, and only 5 per cent ever learn; b. 3 June 1843; s. of a blacksmith. Early lost his left arm by an accident; rural postman; in 1863 became a colporteur for National Bible Society of Scotland, by whom (1871) he was sent to North China; in 1879 he adapted Braille's symbols for the blind to represent numbers, and numbered the 408 sounds in use at Peking (which are the standard for all Mandarin dialects); seeing the facility with which the blind acquired the power of reading and writing, illiterate Christians craved his help, and by substituting black lines for the raised white dots, he produced the simplest possible set of geometric forms; these are the printing-type with which the blind now print books for sighted persons; in the Boxer troubles his blind women were all martyred, and most of the men and boys. He himself suffered so severely that he became totally blind of one eye and half blind of the other; but with his wife and children, he reorganised his schools and printing works; had an average of fifty blind men and girls in the school, and former students are doing valuable mission work as blind evengelists. Address: School for the Blind, Peking, China.
