Arch- (ātʃ, exc in archangel), prefix, repr Gr ἀρχι-, ἀρχ-, comb form of ἄρχος chief (cogn w ἄρχειν to begin, take the lead), as in ἀρχι διάκονος chief-minister, ἀρχι-επισκοπος chief-bishop, ἀρχ-άγγελος chief-angel. Hence in later L archidiaconus archiepiscopus archangelus, in OF arce archediacne, arce-archevesque, arce-archangele (In L the ch was treated as c, hence, in Romanic, it remained = k in archangelus, in other words, it became in It arce-, arci-, Pr, Sp, Pg arce, OF arce-, later arche whence G erz, Du aarts.)

In OE at first translated by hēah- high (hēah-diacon, hēah biscop, hēah engel etc), but also at length adopted from L as arce-, arce-, erce- (long arce-), in erce-diacon erce-biscop, erce-stōl arch see, erce-hād archiepiscopal dignity. The OF erce-, arce-, became in ME erche-, arch-, the latter coinciding with OF arche- whence also archangel was added. From these, in later times, arch- became a living formative, prefixable to any name of office. The same happened in mod L and most mod langs, hence many of the Eng examples, e g archduke, are adaptations of foreign titles. Since the 16th c, arch- has been freely prefixed to names of agents and appellatives (like arce in Ital, and archi- in French, as archifou, archipédant) in a few instances also to appellations of things, and occasionally even to adjectives. Finally, from its faculty of being prefixed to any appellative, arch has gradually come to be a separate adjective, see prec word. (In modern literary words from Gr, the prefix is, in Eng, as in all the Romance langs, Archi- q v.) In pronunciation the compounds of arch- have two accents, either of which may be the stronger, according to emphasis, as in right hand. But established compounds, as archangel, bishop, deacon, duke, tend to have the main stress on arch, especially when they are prefixed to a name, as, the Archduke Charles, Archbishop Cranmer. As a prefix the usual sense is 'chief principal, high, leading, prime,' occasionally 'first in time, original, initial,' but in modern use it is chiefly prefixed intensively to words of bad or odious sense, as in arch-traitor, arch-enemy, arch-rogue.

Aroint, aroynt (ăroi·nt) [Origin unknown Used by Shakspere, whence by some modern writers]

1 In Aroint thee! (?verb in the imperative, or interjection) meaning apparently Avaunt! Begone!

1605 Shaks Mach I iii 6 Aroynt thee, Witch, the rumpe fed Ronyon cryes. 1609 — Lear III iv 129 He met the Night Mare But her a light, and her troth plight, And, aroynt thee, Witch, aroynt thee. 1816 Scott Antiq xi, Aroint thee, witch! wouldst thou poison my guests with thy infernal decoctions. [Also in Quentin D (1823) II xix 364]

2. Used by Mr and Mrs Browning as a vb To drive away with an execration

[The origin of Shakspere's aroynt has been the subject of numerous conjectures, none of which can be said to have even a prima facie probability (Cf also Arunt) The following passages are usually cited as pointing to the same word

Ray North Words (1691) has Rynt-ye, by your leave, stand handsomely As 'Rynt you, watch, quoth Bessie Locket to her mother' Proverb Cheshire Holmes-ley Lett to Ray 1703 (Worksh Notes) 'Ryndta, used to cows to make them give way, and stand in their stalls or booyses

[In parts of Cheshire (and ? Lancashire) ow (au) is pronounced i, ŷ (ăi, i e ău) has been unilated to ău, and dialabialized to ăi, elsewhere it is reduced to ăə, ă, or ai, so that round becomes rynd Rynd ta! is thus merely a local pronunciation of round thee – move round move about! The local nature, the meaning and form of the phrase, seem all opposed to its identity with Shakspere's Aroynt]

-ary[1], suffix of adjs and sbs, ad. L. -ārius, -ārium The regular phonetic repr of these in OF was -ier, but most of the words that actually lived on into OE had -ter (app by confusion with words in -tarium or -ertum, of which -ter was the regular repr), in AFr -er, instances of which still remain in Eng primer, danger, antiphoner, and names of trades and offices, like carpenter, usher (Fr huissier, L ostiarius), while others, as bursar, calendar, mortar, vicar, have recently been refashioned with ar after Latin But in words of later learned adaptation in Fr, -arius, um were represented by -aire, in AFr and ME. -arie, later -arye, now -ary, as L contrārius, Fr contraire, Eng contrarie, contrarye, now contrary, and this is the regular form in which L words in -arius, -arium, or their Fr representatives in -aire are now adapted in Eng, and on which new analogical formations are modelled More than 300 such exist in the language, comprising —

A adjs repr (or on analogy of) L -arius 'connected with, pertaining to', as arbitrary, contrary, elementary, honorary, mercenary, necessary, primary, secondary, tertiary, voluntary

B sbs 1 repr (or on analogy of) L -arius 'a man (or male) belonging to or engaged in', as actuary, adversary, antiquary, apothecary, commentary (liber), February, January (mensis), lapidary, secretary

2 repr (or on analogy of) L -arium 'a thing connected with or employed in, a place for', as aviary, breviary, diary, dictionary, formulary, glossary, granary, ovary, piscary, reliquary, salary, sanctuary, vocabulary See also -ARIUM

3 repr L (often mediæval) -aria (f -aire, -arie), forming fem sbs with same sense, as Calvary, fritillary

-ary[2], suffix of adjs, occasional ad L -ārius (stem -āri) 'of the kind of, belonging to' Of this the regular repr in mod Eng is -AR[1], q v But even in Latin several of these words had forms both in -āris and -arius, and in later Fr words of literary introduction, both these L endings are levelled under -aire, e g. L contrārius, militāris, Fr contraire, militaire. Hence, as Fr -aire from -arius gives -ary in Eng, Fr aire from -āris has occasionally also been adapted as ary instead of the more regular -ar, e g capillary, exemplary, maxillary, military, salutary

A adj Applied by some to the great division or family of languages, which includes Sanskrit, Zend, Persian, Greek, Latin, Celtic, Teutonic, and Slavonic, with their modern representatives, also called Indo-European, Indo Germanic, and sometimes Japhetic, by others restricted to the Asiatic portion of these absol The original Aryan or Arian language

The restricted use rests on the ground that only the ancient Indian and Iranian members of the family are known on historical evidence to have called themselves Aria, Arya or Ariya the wider application rests partly on the inference that the name probably belonged in pre historic times to the whole family, while this still constituted an ethnic and linguistic unity, and partly on the ground that even if it did not it is now the most convenient and least misleading name for the primitive type of speech from which all the languages above mentioned have sprung, inasmuch as Indo Germanic is too narrow, and Indo European too wide, for the facts, while Japhetic introduces speculations of which science has no cognizance A frequent use of the word, in which all agree, is to distinguish the Aryan from the non Aryan languages of India, the former being Aryan whether the term is used in the restricted or the wider sense

The prefixed all, though originally emphatic (= altogether, quite, even), soon lost its force, and al-swa, al-so came to imply no more than the simple swá, só Hence, by 1200 (in the north) alswa had begun to appear in the subordinate clause likewise, 'alsua brihht alswa gold,' a construction soon generally adopted though almost always with the relative in a phonetically weaker form than the antecedent, e g 'alswa brihht alse gold, also brihht alse gold, alse brist ase gold, als bricht as gold,' but finally with both correlatives worn down, 'as bright as gold' Alse, ase, as was even substituted as the relative, when the original swá, so remained as the antecedent, whence the mod 'not so bright as gold, OE ná swá beorht swá gold, 13th c southern Eng 'nowht so briht só (se) gold,' and nowht so brihte alse (ase) gold

1 A consonantal sound in which the action of the breath is prominently marked, one which is followed by or blended with the sound of H

(Modern phonologists generally apply the term to a consonantal diphthong consisting of a mute or stop followed by the slipping-out of an audible bit of flatus or aspiration, between the breach of mute-closure and the following sound (Whitney), which is believed to be the character of the Sanskrit 'aspirates, and to have been the original value of the Gr χ, θ, φ) But the term is also applied in Gr gram mar to the current fricative value of these letters, and in the Roman alphabet generally to any modification of sound indicated by the addition of h, e g to the Celtic bh, mh (= v and nasalized v), in Hebrew it has been given to the gutturals, and in other languages it has been used with similar generality
