

UNIVERSAL LIBRARY

OU_214132

UNIVERSAL LIBRARY

2/11/32

OSMANIA UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

Call No. 891.5/0882 Accession No. 17424

Author Browne, Edward

Title Literary History of Persia

This book should be returned on or before the date last marked below

1930

Cambridge University Press
Fetter Lane, London
New York
Bombay, Calcutta, Madras
Toronto
Macmillan
Tokyo
Maruzen Company, Ltd

All rights reserved

SHAH 'ABBAS THE GREAT

1920 . 9 .. 17 044 (Brit . Mus.)

Frontispiece

A LITERARY HISTORY OF PERSIA

VOLUME IV

Modern Times

(1500-1924)

BY

EDWARD G. BROWNE

M.A., M.B., F.B.A., F.R.C.P.

SIR THOMAS ADAMS'S PROFESSOR OF ARABIC AND FELLOW OF PEMBROKE COLLEGE IN THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE

CAMBRIDGE
AT THE UNIVERSITY PRESS
1930

First published under the title of A History of Persian Literature, 1500-1924	1924
Re-issued	1928
Reprinted	1930

PRINTED IN GREAT BRITAIN

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
PREFACE	vii
PART I AN OUTLINE OF PERSIAN HISTORY DURING THE LAST FOUR CENTURIES CHAP
I. Some general considerations on the Safawi Dynasty	3
II. The Creation of the Safawi Power to 930/1524. Shah Isma'fi and his Ancestors	32
III. Culmination and Decline of the Safawi Power, from Shah Tahmasp (A.D. 1524-1576) to Shah Husayn (A.D. 1694-1722)	84
IV. An Outline of the history of Persia during the last two centuries (A D . 1722-1922)	121
PART II PERSIAN VERSE DURING THE LAST FOUR CENTURIES
V. Some general considerations on the later and especially the Religious Poetry of the Persians	161
VI. Poets of the Classical Tradition Pre-Qajar period (A.D. 1500-1800).	224
VII. Poets of the Qajar period	298
PART III PERSIAN PROSE DURING THE LAST FOUR CENTURIES
VIII. The orthodox Shi'a Faith and its exponents, the Mujtahids and Mullas	353
IX. Prose writers until A D 1850	412
X. The most modern developments (A.D. 1850 onwards)	458
INDEX	491

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

I.	Shah 'Abbas I ("the Great")	Frontispiece
II.	Shaykh Abdal Pir-zdda presenting the Uzbek leader's horse to Shah 'Abbas .	To face page 42
III	Shah'Abbas II.	" 112
IV.	Karfm Khan-i-Zand's Court	" 140
V.	Karfm Khan-i-Zand alone .	" " 142
VI.	Aqa Muhammad Khan and Hajji Ibrahim .	" 144
VII,	Shifa'f, poet and physician .	" 256
VIII	Autograph of the poet Sa'ib	" " 266
IX.	Autograph of the poet Wisal	" 300
X.	tfajji Mfrza Aqasl	" 328
XI.	Autograph of the poet Yaghmf	" 338
XII	Muzaffaru'd-Dfn MfrzA with his tutor Rida-quli Khan "Hidayat"	" " 344
XIII	Autograph of Mulld Muhammad Baqir-i-Majlisf.	" 404
XIV	Autograph o f Mulld sadra	" " 408
XV.	Autograph of Shaykh Baha'u'd-Din-i-'Amilf	" " 428
XVI.	Autograph of Mulla Muhsin-i-Fayd .	" " 432

PREFACE

THIS volume concludes the task which I undertook more than twenty-two years ago, and which represents the labour of a life-time, for ever since I began the study of Persian in the summer of 1880, being then only eighteen years of age, the desire to write a complete Literary History of Persia has increasingly possessed me. The first instalment, "from the earliest times until Firdawsf," carried the history down to the early days of the eleventh century of the Christian era, and was published in 1902 ; and the continuation, down to the Mongol Invasion in the middle of the thirteenth century, in 1906, both these volumes being published by Mr Fisher Unwin. Fourteen years elapsed ere the third volume, entitled A History of Persian Literature under Tartar Dominion (A.D. 1265-1502), saw the light. The reasons which led me to issue it in a form and under a title differing somewhat from its predecessors are explained on p. viii of the Preface, but essentially it constitutes the third volume of the Literary History of Persia, just as this, which deals with the last four centuries (A.D. 1500-1924), and is entitled, as foreshadowed in the same Preface (p. ix), A History of Persian Literature in Modern Times is to be regarded as the fourth and last volume of the work.

Although I cannot regard this present volume as superior to its three predecessors in form or interest, and am fully aware of its defects, I think that it contains more new matter and represents more original research than the others. Owing to the opinion prevalent not only in Europe, but to a considerable extent in Turkey and India also, that poetry is the only department of Persian literature which merits much attention, and that little poetry worth reading has been produced since the time of Jami, the literature of the last four centuries has been very much neglected, and the sources of which I have made use are almost exclusively Persian, and, until the nineteenth century is reached, when printing and lithography were gradually introduced into Persia, chiefly manuscript. In the formation of my Persian library I have always had regard to the requirements of my work rather than to mere beauty of illumination, illustration, or hand-writing, and I have been singularly fortunate in acquiring the very interesting collection of the late Sir Albert Houtum Schindler and a number of the rare and precious manuscripts collected by the late tla'jji 'Abdu'l-Majfd Belshah. To Mr A. G. Ellis I am indebted for the generous loan, often for a period of several years, of many rare books to which I could not otherwise have obtained access; while for constant and ungrudging help I am under the deepest obligations to his successor in the Oriental Book Department of the British Museum, Mr E. Edwards, as well as to Dr L. Barnett, the Head of that Department.

I wish that I could have profited more by the counsel of my Persian friends, especially Mfrza Muhammad Khan of Qazwfn and Hajji Mfrza Yahya of Dawlatabad, during the progress of this work, but to my old acquaintance Husayn Danish Bey of the Ottoman Public Debt, a notable man of letters both in Persian and Turkish, I am indebted for many valuable and illuminating observations. Another old friend, Sayyid Hasan Taqf-zada, fortunately chanced to visit this country after an absence of some fourteen years while the last sheets of this book were passing through the Press, and he most kindly read through the proofs and favoured me with numerous observations and corrections which will be noticed under the Errata and Addenda. From well-read and intelligent Persians the European student of their language can learn many things not to be found in books, at any rate in books to which he has access, while their taste and judgement, even if at times he cannot wholly agree with them, are almost always suggestive and deserving of consideration. Only a few days ago I received a visit from the learned Shaykh Kazim ad-DujayU, an Arabic-speaking Shf'a of 'Irdq who has recently joined the teaching staff of the London School of Oriental Studies, and I enquired of him what, in his opinion, were the best Arabic books on Shf'a doctrine. He at once named the five following works, none of which I had previously heard of, much less seen, though all have been printed or lithographed in Persia:

- (i) Kashfu'l-Ghitdfi Akhbari Ati'l-Mustafa, by Shaykh Ja'far al-Kabir.
- (2) Kitabu'l Qawdnin, by al-Qummf.
- (3) Kitabu Rasa'ili'sh-Shaykh Murtadd al-Ansdri.
- (4) Jawdhiru'l-Kalam, by Shaykh Muhammad Hasan.
- (5) Kitabu'l- Wasa'il, by Hajji Mi'rza Husayn an-Nurf.

I will not attempt to thank individually all those who by their sympathy and interest have encouraged me in my book, or who by their skilful craftsmanship have given it form and substance. The writing of it has been a pleasure, and the completing of it is a source of thankfulness and satisfaction. Even its errors and imperfections will, I trust, by provoking criticism and stimulating research, serve to advance and extend our knowledge of the subject, and if, as I hope, I have been single-minded in this aim, I shall prefer the reasoned criticism of competent scholars to the indiscriminating praise of over-zealous friends, even as Sa'df says:—

"Thou who recountest my virtues, thou dost me harm in sooth:
Such is my outward seeming, but thou hast not known the truth."

EDWARD G. BROWNE.

June 12, 1924.

I DEDICATE THIS VOLUME TO MY MOTHER
IN TOKEN OF A GREAT DEBT OF GRATITUDE AND LOVE

همانم که از چشم نگذاشتی ' مدامم در آغوش بر داشتی ' گرامیتر بودم از جان خویش ' نمودت ز من هیچ کس بیش بیش '
مرا هوش و جان و روان با تو است ' دلم آشکار و نهان با تو است ' Firdawsī, Yūsuf u Zulaykhā (ed. Ethé, p. 240, ll. 2421-2 and 2426).

گویند مرا چو زاد مادر پستان بدهان گرفتن آموخت '
شب بر سر کاهواره من بیدار نشست و ختن آموخت '
لب خند نهاد بر لب من بر غنچه گل شکفتن آموخت '
دستم بگرفت و پا بها برد تا شیوه راه رفتن آموخت ' پلک حرف و دو حرف بردهام الناظ نهاد و گفتن آموخت '

پس هستی من زهستی اوست '

تا هستم و هست دارمش دوست '

Īraj Mīrzā Jalāl al-Mamālīk.

ERRATA AND ADDENDA

(The letters T s. in brackets at the end of a note indicate that the correction was suggested by Taqf-zida.)

- p. 170, l. 14. "Read معابر ('ways,' 'passages') for مقابر ('Tombs'), which gives no good sense." [T.s.] The washing of the feet before praying is a Sunnī practice; the Shī'a confine themselves to mere stroking of the foot (masḥ) with the damp hand. The clasping of the hands mentioned in the succeeding miṣrā' is also characteristic of the Sunnīs; the Shī'a let them hang down by their sides.
- p. 187, l. 14. "For مرد read خلق. No Shī'a could have written this verse without exposing himself to the charge of blasphemy." [T.s.]
- p. 188, last three lines. "The Asrdr-i-Shahddat^x is commonly ascribed to Mulli Aqd-yi-Darbandf, entitled 'the Promoter of mourning for the Holy Family' (Murawwīj-i-Jāz-d-dri-yi-Ahl-i-Bayt) [T.s.]
- p. 220, last paragraph. "Mention should be made of the poems of Safi-ʿAlf Shah, and of his versified Persian commentary on the Quran." [T.&.] (I can find no mention of him in the Majma' u'l-Fusaha, the Riyadu'l-'Arifin, the Bustanu's-Siyahaty or any of the Catalogues at my disposal.)
- p. 221, "Rtidagf," and p. 299, "Rtidaki" should be identical in spelling, and I believe that the latter form is the more correct
- p. 222. "Mention should be made of V. Zhukovski's collection of Persian Tasnifs, with Russian translations, published at St Petersburg in 1902. Berezme also published nine Tapnifs with English

¹ It is, however, ascribed, as I have ascribed it, to Isma'fī Khan Sarbaz by Edwards in his Catalogue of Persian Books in the British Museum, col. 302-3. The life of Mulla Aqa-yi-Darbandf, who died at an advanced age sometime before A.D. 1873, is given in the Qisasu'l-'Ulama (Tihran lith. ed. of 1304/1886, pp. 75-9). Amongst his works mention is there made of one entitled lksiru'l-'Cl-Ibddd ft AsrarVsh-Shahadat

- translations set to music and adapted to the piano." [T.s] (I find that I possess the former work, which is entitled OBPismi IIEP-CHACATO HAPOAHA TO TBOPHECTBA, but I cannot identify the latter.)
- p. 338. "Two half-verses (misra') have been accidentally omitted after 1. 7. The two verses should run thus " [T.s.] :-

عکسِ تو فتاده است در آئینه عالم
[ز آنروی همه ز نقبه کشته است پدیدار
نقبه مُحالست ز تو دست بدارم]
تا آنکه بزنجبگی خود کنی اقرار

- p. 355, 1.1. There is some difference of opinion as to the proper vocalization of the place-name which I have written "Tanukabun." Taqfzada thinks it should be "Tunukabun," while Rida-qulf Khan in his Anjutnan-dra-yi-Nastn gives it as "Tanak£bun."
- pp. 369-370. "The titles 'Muhaqqiq-i-Araabil' and 'Muqaddas-i-Ardabili' both belong to Mulla Ahmad, so that the first line on p. 370 should read "The same mujtahid of Araabil, also entitled Mufiaqqiq? etc.
- p. 370, last line. "Hajji Mirza Hasan-i-Shfra"zf and r1ajji Mfrza* Hasan-i-Ashtiyani are not to be mentioned in the same breath. The former was to the latter as a king is to a petty local governor." [T.z.]
- p. 373- "Aqa' Jarnal-i-Khwansari was the author of the well-known book on the superstitions of Persian women entitled Kitab-i-Kulthum Nana. His father, Aqa Husayn-i-Khwansari, was called Ustadu'l-Kull fi'l-Kull ('the Master of All in All'), and, besides many facetts, wrote glosses on the Shahid-i-thdnts commentary on the Lurn'a." [T.z.]
- p. 378, 11. 19 et seqq. "Many similar catechisms (with such titles as Risdla-i-'amaliyya, MasHla, Nukhba, and the like) have been composed in the last century, and as many as a hundred may have been printed. One of the best known is the/dmt'u'sa-Snatttdt of Mfrza" Abu'l-Qasim ibnu'l-rjusayn ar-Ridawi al-Qummi, author of the Kitab-i-Qawanin? [T.z.] Concerning the last-named writer, see Edwaras's Catalogue of Persian printed books, cols. 60 and 61.
- p. 393t N- 8-9. " " Awsat succeeded his father Husayn as Imim, not 'All Akbar, who, together with the infant 'AH Asghar, perished at Karbala." [T.z.]

- p. 407, 1. 14. " The Jami-i-Abbasi was completed in 20 chapters, and has been printed repeatedly, but the first five chapters are often published separately for the instruction of children in elementary religious duties." [71*.] According to Edwaras (op. cit., cols. 407-8) chapters vi-xx were subsequently added to Shaykh-i Baha's unfinished work by Nizām b. Husayn-i-Sawajf.
- p. 407, fourth line from the end, and p. 435, 1. 5. "The Abwabul-Jandn was not by Mulla" Muhsin-i-Fayd, but, so far as I remember, by Mulla Husayn Wa'is-i-Kishiff, the author of the well-known Anwar-i-Suhayli." [T.z.] The real author appears to have been Muhammad b. Fathu'llah Rafi'u'd-Din, called 'Wa'izi-i-Qazwin' ('the Preacher of Qazwin'). See Edwaras, op. at., cols. 405-6.
- p. 410. "Sayyid Muhammad Baqir of Rasht was only a third- or fourth-rate theologian, and Mulla" Ahmad-i-Niraqi (p. 411) only of the second class. Much more important, though omitted here, are:—
- (i) Aqd-yi-Bihbihanf, the founder of the Usuli and Mujtahidi School, who flourished at the end of twelfth century of the hijra.
 - (ii) Shaykh Ja'far-i-'Arab (also called al-Kabir, 'the Great'), who was contemporary with Fath-'Ali Shah.
 - (iii) Shaykh Muhammad Hasan, author of the Jawahiru'l-Kalam, a large work in six volumes on Shi'a Jurisprudence (see p. ix supra),
 - (iv) Shaykh Murtada al-Ansari, the founder of present-day Shi'a Law, and the Master of all the mujtahids of the last seventy years with the exception of—
 - (v) Shaykh Hadi of Tinran, who was also of the first class.*
- p. 430. "Shaykh Ahmad al-Ahsai was not an admirer and follower but a great enemy of Mulla Sadra. Of modern Persian philosophers mention should have been made of Mirza Abu'l-Hasan-i-Jilwa, who died only some twenty years ago." [71*.] I met him in Tihiran in the winter of 1887-8. See my Year amongst the Persians, p. 149.
- p. 435. "One of the best of Mulla" Muhsin's works is the Kalimdt-i-MaknUna ('Hidaen Words'), of which mention should have been made here." [T.&.]
- p. 441. "Dr Muhammad of Kirmandshah, called Kufwi, who died in 1326/1908, specialized in cariac diseases, and first called attention to a peculiar murmur (called in French ' empiolement ') characteristic of embolism, on which he published a monograph in French¹. He also wrote several medical treatises on the Diseases of Women and Children in Persian." [T.z.]

- p. 454,1.1. "For I'timadu'd-Dawla read I'tirnadu's-Saltana" [T.z.]
- p. 468. "Newspapers existed in Persia before A.D. 1851, in the reign of Muhammad Shāh (A.D. 1835-1848) and even in the later days of his predecessor Fath-'Alf Shāh. See the Kawa newspaper passim, especially No. 6 of the New Series (Dawra-i-fadid)."
[T.z.] The article in question appeared in the issue of June 8, 1921, pp. 14-16. It mentions a rather vague report of a Persian newspaper published at Dihli in A.D. 1798, and a much more definite report of one published in Jihran in 1253/1837-8.
- p. 486, end. "The articles to which reference is here made were not by Mfrza Muhammad Khan but by myself, writing under the pen-name of Muhassil ('Student')." [T.z.]²
- p. 488. "To say 'Mirza Kazim-zida,' 'Sayyid Jamal-zada,' 'Taqi-zada Khan' and the like is as contrary to Persian usage as to say in English 'Sir Grey' for 'Sir Edward Grey' and the like. Such titles as 'Mirza,' 'Sayyid' and Ilajji can only be prefixed, as 'Khan, 'Beg' and the like can only be suffixed, to personal names, such as Hasan, 'Alf and Muhammad, not to patronymics."
[T.z.]'

¹ I have been unable to find any trace of this alleged discovery or of the French term connoting it (which I think should be empilement) though I have consulted two eminent physicians on the subject.

² Taqf-zida's letter was received in time to correct the two passages to which the two concluding notes refer, but I have allowed them to stand because the first specifies the true authorship of the articles in question, while the second lays down a rule of which I had hitherto been unaware.

PART I.

AN OUTLINE OF PERSIAN HISTORY
DURING THE LAST FOUR CENTURIES

CHAPTER I.

SOME GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS ON THE SAFAWI DYNASTY.

The rise of the Safawi dynasty in Persia at the beginning of the sixteenth century of the Christian era was an event of the greatest historical importance,, not only to Persia herself and her immediate neighbours, but to Europe generally. It marks not only the restoration of the Persian Empire and the re-creation of the Persian nationality after an eclipse of more than eight centuries and a half, but the entrance of Persia into the comity of nations and the genesis of political relations which still to a considerable extent hold good. Mr R. G. Watson in the brief retrospect with which he opens his excellent History of Persia from the beginning of the Nineteenth Century to the year 18581 shows a true appreciation of the facts when he takes this period as his starting-point, for in truth it marks the transition from mediaeval to comparatively modern times. The Arab conquest in the middle of the seventh century after Christ overthrew the Zoroastnan religion and the Sasanian Empire, and reduced Persia to the position of a mere province of the Caliphate, until the Caliphate itself was destroyed by the Mongols or Tartars in the middle of the thirteenth century. Both before and after this momentousevent there were, it is true, independent or quasi-independent dynasties ruling in Persia, but these were generally of Turkish or Tartar origin, like the Ghaznawfs, Saljuqs, Khwdrazmshahs, and Houses of Chingfz and Tfmur; or, if Persian like the Buwayhids, exercised control over a portion only of the old Persian Empire. To the* Historical importance of the safawi dynasty.

¹ London. Smith and Elder, 1866.

4 CONSIDERATIONS ON THE SAFAWI DYNASTY [PT I

Safawi dynasty belongs the credit of making Persia "a nation's place," self-contained, centripetal, powerful and respected, within borders practically identical in the time of Shah 'Abbas the Great (A.D. 1587-1628) with those of the Sasanian Empire. It was then that Isfahan, whither he transferred the seat of government from Qazwin, became, as the Persian saying runs, "Half the world" (Nisf-i-Jahan), or "Medio mundo" as Don Juan of Persia has it, abounding in splendid buildings and skilful craftsmen, frequented by merchants from distant lands, and visited by diplomatic missions, not only from India, Transoxiana and Turkey, but from almost every European state from Russia to Spain and Portugal.

Yet, in spite of its importance and the abundant materials available, no good complete history¹ of the Safawi dynasty has yet been written. The outlines given by Sir John Malcolm and Sir Clements Markham in their histories of Persia are inadequate in scope and inaccurate in detail, and are based on very limited materials, and those not by any means the most authentic. The abundance and variety of the materials, the inaccessibility of many important sources of information, and the polyglot character of the documents concerned constitute serious obstacles to one who aspires to treat adequately of this period. The four most important contemporary Persian records of its earlier portion, down to the death of Shah 'Abbas the Great, are the Safwanah's-Safwanah, containing the biography of Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Din, that celebrated saint of the thirteenth century from whom the dynasty derives its name; the Nasab-nama-i-Silsila-i-Safawiyya on the genealogy of the family, with valuable biographical details of its earlier representatives not to be found elsewhere; the ¹ Of Krusinski's and Hanway's admirable accounts of the later safawi period I shall speak in chap. in.

Lack of a satisfactory complete history of the dynasty.

Four important unpublished Persian sources.

Ahsanu't-Tawdrikh, completed in A.D. 1577, only about a year after the death of Shah Tahmdsp, whose reign together with that of his father and predecessor Shah Isma'fl, the founder of the dynasty, it records; and the Ta'rikh-i-Alam-ara-yi-Abbast, an immense monograph on the reign of Shah 'Abbas the Great. Not one of these has been published¹, much less translated, and all except the last are very rare even in manuscript. Of the Nasab-ndma and the 'Alatn-drd I am fortunate enough to possess copies which formerly belonged to the late Sir Albert Houtum-Schindler, while the incomparable generosity of Mr A. G. Ellis placed at my disposal manuscripts of the two other histories mentioned above. And though the authors of later general histories in Persian, such as Rida-qulf Khan in his supplement to Mirkhwand's Rawdatu's-Safd, have made use of some of these works, they too often not merely abridge but grievously distort the passages they cite.

Untrustworthiness of later Persian compilations

Of such wanton distortion the following is a good instance. In July, A.D. 1599, Shah 'Abbas the Great sent to Europe a mission accredited to the Courts of Russia Poland, Germany, France, Spain, England and Scotland, and to the Pope of Rome and the Seniory of Venice. This mission included Husayn 'AH Beg^a as Persian Envoy, with four Persian gentlemen or "knights" (caballeros, as they are called in Don Juan of Persia's narrative), fifteen Persian servants, the celebrated Sir Anthony Sherley with fifteen English attendants, two Portuguese friars, and five interpreters.

A flagrant example of perverted history.

¹ Since this was written I have received through a Persian correspondent a copy of the excellent lithographed edition of the §afwatu's-Safd published at Bombay in 1329/1911.

² Don Juan calls him (f. 120^b) "Uzen Aly Bech," but Antonio di Govea has "Ussein Alibeg," which shows clearly that the first part of the name is Husayn^ not Uzun, as I had at first supposed.

6 CONSIDERATIONS ON THE SAFAWID DYNASTY [PTI

Travelling by way of the Caspian Sea and the Volga, they first visited Moscow, where they remained for five or six months; thence through Germany to Italy, where they were not permitted to go to Venice for fear of offending an Ottoman envoy who happened to be there at the time, but were well received at Rome, where they arrived in April, 1601, and remained for two months. Thence they proceeded by ship from Genoa to the south of France and so to Spain, where three of the four "Persian knights" adopted the Catholic faith and took the names of Don Philippe, Don Diego and Don Juan of Persia.

Sir Anthony Sherley, whose relations with his Persian colleague had from the first been very strained, separated himself from the mission at Rome, but up to that point the independent accounts written by himself and some of his companions¹ enable us to check Don Juan's narrative. Don Juan, however, having apostasized from Islam, dared not return to Persia to meet the fate of a renegade, so that for the tragic sequel we must turn to the Persian historians. In the 'Alam-drd-yi-Abbdsi under the year 1022/1613-4² we find an account of the arrival at Isfahan of ambassadors from the King of Spain, accompanied by several Christian priests and a Persian envoy returning from Europe³. The latter, who had incurred the Shah's displeasure, was incontinently put to death in the most cruel manner, without being permitted any opportunity for explanation or apology; and the Shah then explained to the Spaniards that he had dealt thus with him because of sundry treasonable and disrespectful acts of which he had been guilty during his mission, such as opening letters sealed with the royal seal and making known their contents; wearing mourning on the occasion of the Queen of Spain's death; and selling the credentials to the Pope with which he had been provided to a merchant who should impersonate him and derive what profit he could from the transaction. " But,' the Shdh concluded, " the chief of his faults and the chief reason for his punishment was that he behaved so ill towards the attendants who accompanied him, and vexed them so much, that several of them adopted the Christian faith and remained in Europe in order to escape from his tyranny, so that zeal for Islam required his punishment, and thus he received his deserts."

¹ See especially The Sherley Brothers...by one of the same House (Chiswick, 1828), pp. 22-35.

² F. 230 of my MS. marked H. 14.

³ Although the envoy is here named Dengiz Beg Shamlu with the title of YHz-bdshi (Captain), not Husayn 'Alf Beg, as in Don Juan's narrative (f. 120^b), there can, I think, be little doubt as to their identity.

Turning now to Ridi-qulf Khan's supplement to the Rawdatu's-Safd, a general history of Persia compiled about A.D. 1858, we find an account of the same event obviously copied, with very slight modifications, from the ^Alam-drd-yi-Abbdsi, but with one important and most wanton alteration, for Shah 'Abbas is there represented as saying that the chief of his ambassador's faults was that several persons were disposed to embrace Islam and come to Persia, but the Persian envoy treated them so ill that they repented of their intention, returned to the Christian faith, and remained in that country. For this deliberate falsification of history I can only account by supposing that Rida-qulf Khan did not wish to encourage the idea that a Persian Muslim could possibly become a Christian ; but the moral I wish to draw is that the later Persian historians must be used with great caution, and that every statement should, where possible, be traced to contemporary records.

Before leaving this subject, I must refer to an erroneous conjecture of Sir John Malcolm's arising from an inadequate use of the Persian sources. In the year 1002/
 1593-4, being the seventh year of Shah 'Abbas's reign, Jalal, the Chief Astrologer, foretold dis-

An error of Sir
 John Malcolm's.

8 CONSIDERATIONS ON THE SAFAWID DYNASTY [PTI

aster to the occupant of the Throne, and advised that the Shih should abdicate for a few days and substitute for himself some person worthy of death on whom the prediction of the stars might be fulfilled. This was accordingly done, and a man named Yusuff was made king for three days, at the conclusion of which he was put to death, and Shdh 'Ablds resumed the Throne. Sir John Malcolm¹ says that this Yusuff, "whom Persian authors take care to tell us was an unbeliever," was "probably a Christian/" but this is an error; he belonged to a heterodox Muslim sect called Nuqtawiyya ("People of the Point") who believed in metempsychosis and other heretical doctrines, and of whose appearance and destruction a full account is given by the ' *Alatn-drd-yi-'Abdst and reproduced in the Rawdatu's-Safd. It is therefore essential, if a true history of the Safawis is to be written, that we should go back to the original sources, and, as a preliminary, that these sources, at present existing only in manuscript, should be published.

The Persian histories, however, are only part of the material available for such a work: the numerous and in some cases excellent Turkish chronicles, published and unpublished, dealing with this period, and especially with the Turco-Persian wars which continued almost without intermission during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, constitute an indispensable supplement and corrective. Almost more important is Firfdun Bey's great collection of Turkish State Papers entitled Munshc?dt-i-Salddtin, compiled some time before 991/1583 and published at Constantinople in two volumes⁸ in 1274/1858,

Turkish sources of information.

Firfdun Bey.

¹ History of Persia (London, 1815), vol. i, p. 527.

^a Ff. 46^b-47^b of my MS. H. 14.

⁸ When this was written, I possessed only the first volume, which contains 626 pp. and comes down to the year 966/1558. By the kindness of my friend IJusayn Ddnish Bey I have since acquired the second volume also.

The diplomatic correspondence contained in this valuable and insufficiently-appreciated book is arranged chronologically and is partly in Turkish, partly in Arabic, and partly in Persian. From the time of Timur onwards much of it is concerned with contemporary Persian affairs, and of the last half of the first volume a large portion consists of letters interchanged between the Sultans Bayazfd II (A.D. 1482-1512), Salim I (A.D. 1512-1520), and Sulayman I (A.D. 1520-1566) on the one hand, and Shdh Ismail (A.D. 1500-1524) and his son and successor Shah Tahmasp (A.D. 1524-1576) on the other. There are also valuable journals of certain campaigns, such as that which culminated in the Battle of Ch£ldirdn, so disastrous to the Persians, on August 23, 1514, wherein the movements of the Ottoman army and the incidents of their outward and homeward marches are chronicled day by day. Other State Papers, both Persian and Turkish, which exist only in manuscript, have hitherto remained practically unexplored¹.

A third class of materials of which it is impossible to overestimate the importance consists of the writings of Europeans who visited Persia during this period on diplomatic, missionary or commercial business. Thanks to the liberal attitude of Sha'h 'Abbas the Great towards Christians, the number of these in his and the succeeding reigns was very large. The best general account of them and their works with which I have met is that given by the late M. Charles Schefer, in the Introduction (pp. i-cxv) to his edition of *VEtat de la Perse en 1660*² by le Pere Raphael du Mans, Superior of the Capuchin Mission at Isfahan, a man singularly qualified by narratives.

Contemporary European

¹ Some other very interesting State Papers from the Itastiiru'l-Inshd of §arf 'Abdu'llali Efendi (d. 1079/1668) have also been published and annotated by the late M. Ch. Schefer in his Chrestomathie Persane (Pans, 1885), vol ii, pp. 218-259 and m-c. .

² Leroux, Paris, 1890, pp. cxv+465.

his high character and intellectual attainments, as well as by his prolonged sojourn of fifty years (A.D. 1644-1696) in Isfahan, to speak with authority. The works enumerated by M. Schefer¹ are variously written in Dutch, English, French, German, Italian, Latin, Portuguese and Spanish, but many of the more important have appeared in two or three different languages. Of their authors (excluding the earlier Venetian envoys to the Court of Uzun Hasan, such as Caterino Zeno, Josepho Barbaro and Ambrosio Contarini, most of whom visited Persia during the latter half of the fifteenth century, and consequently before the rise of the Safawi dynasty) the best known are Anthony Jenkinson, the Sherley brothers, Cartwright, Parry and Sir Thomas Herbert of the English, and of the others Antonio di Govea, Don Garcias de Silva Figuerosa, Olearius, Teixeira, Pietro della Valle, Tavernier, Thevenot, and last but not least Charain and Pdtis de la Croix. M. Schefer does not carry his survey beyond the seventeenth century, but the final downfall of the Şafawfs before the Afghan onslaught in A.D. 1722 found an able historian in the Jesuit Pere Krusinski, while letters from some of the Dutch merchants in Isfahan, a few of which have been published by H. Dunlop in his Perzie (Haarlem, 1912; pp. 242-7), serve to illuminate the tragic details of that disaster. From this time until the rise of the present Qajar dynasty towards the end of the eighteenth century comparatively few Europeans visited or resided in Persia, a fact due partly to the unsettled state of the country, and the consequent difficulties in the way of missionary or commercial enterprises, and partly to the changed political conditions. The object of the numerous diplomatic missions from various European countries which visited Persia during and immediately before the Safawi period was, in nearly all cases, to seek her cooperation in combating the formidable power of the Ottoman Turks, which was at its height during the period which began with their conquest of Constantinople in A.D. 1453 and culminated in the reigns of Sultans Salm "the Grim" and Sulayman "the Magnificent" (A.D. 1512-1566), of whom the former conquered Egypt and the Holy Cities and assumed the title of Caliph, while the latter only failed by the narrowest margin to capture Vienna. So formidable did the Turkish menace appear to European statesmen that Busbecq, Ferdinand's ambassador at the Court of Sulayman, expressed himself in the following remarkable words: "'Tis only the Persian stands between us and ruin. The Turk would fain be upon us, but he keeps him back. This war with him affords us only a respite, not a deliverance¹." In A.D. 1722 when the Safawi dynasty, long degenerate, finally collapsed, Persia was left for the moment a negligible quantity, the Turks had ceased to be a menace to Europe, and the bitter sectarian quarrel which lay at the root of two centuries of Turco-Persian warfare gradually lost much of its virulence, especially after the development of the more conciliatory policy of the great Nadir Shah. Under these changed conditions the earlier European policy became at once unnecessary and impossible.

¹ To these we must not omit to add the MiratuH-Mamdlık ("Mirror of Kingdoms") of the gallant Turkish admiral Şıfı 'AH Ra'is, who travelled overland from India to Turkey in A.D. 1554-6, and was received by Şıdh Jahmasp at Qazwın. Vambe'ry's English translation of this book (Luzac, London, 1899) leaves a good deal to be desired*

From this brief survey of the sources whence our knowledge of the Safawi dynasty is derived, we must now pass to the consideration of its chief characteristics. These, though clear enough in general outline, present a series of very interesting problems which even yet cannot be regarded in all cases as definitely solved. These problems group themselves under the headings of Nationality, Religion, Art and Literature, and in this order we shall now proceed to consider them.

Chief characteristics of the Safawi dynasty.

¹ Creasy's History of the Ottoman Turks (London, 1877), pp. 171-2 ad calc. Cf. Forster and Daniell's Life and Letters of Busbecq (London, 1881), vol. i, pp. 221-2.

12 CONSIDERATIONS ON THE SAFAWI DYNASTY [PTI

NATIONALITY.

It has been said above that to the Safawis belongs the credit of making Persia, after the lapse of eight centuries and a half, "a nation once again/' This is true, in what tense the Safawi movement maybe described as "Nationalist."

but the nationalism which thus found expression was very different in several respects from the various forms of nationalism with which we are familiar at the present day. Language and race, which are the key-notes of the latter, played a very small part in it compared with religion. At no time was the mutual hatred of Turk and Persian more violent and bitter than during the eight years (A.D. 1512-1520) when Sultan Salim "the Grim," and Shah Isma'fl, the founder of the Safawi power, were the respective protagonists of the two nations. The despatches of this period, recorded by Firfdun Bey, pass from the realm of diplomacy to that of vulgar abuse, and "rascally Red-heads" (Aubash-i-Qizil-bash) is the politest expression wherewith the Turkish Sultan refers to his Persian foes. The cause of this intense hatred, equally adequate and obvious, will be discussed under the heading of "Religion," but it did not extend to race or language. When America entered the late War it was stated in the newspapers that in certain towns the people, to give vent to their hatred of everything German, collected all the German books they could find and burned them. No Turk or Persian of the sixteenth century would have given expression to his feelings of hostility in so puerile a fashion. On the contrary, it is a remarkable fact that while Sultan Salim and Shah Isma'fl both possessed considerable poetic talent, the former wrote almost exclusively in Persian, and the latter, under the pen-name of Khatd'f, almost exclusively in Turkish^{1*} Ottoman hatred was directed against the heretical Qizil-bdsh as mis-believers, not as Persians {lrdni\ while the Persian language (Fdrsf) continued to hold its position as the polite idiom of literature and diplomacy. And though the ancient conflict between Iran and Tur in was familiar to all educated Turks and Persians in the classical Shdh-ndma% or "Book of Kings," of Firdawsf, Salim, in the following curious exordium to a despatch written in April, 1514 (Safar, 920)*, compares himself to the legendary Persian kings Firfdun, Kay-Khusraw and Dard, while likening his Persian opponent Shah Isma'il to the Turkish protagonist Afrdsiyib:

.. اما بعد، این خطاب مستطاب از جناب خلافت مآب ما که
قاتل الکفرة و المشركين قاصع اعداء الدين مرغمر انوف الفراعين
معفر تيجان الخواقين سلطان الغزاة و المجاهدين فریدون فر
سکندر در کینسرو عدل و داد دارای عالی نژاد سلطان سلیمشاه
بن سلطان بایزید بن سلطان محمد خانیر بسوی تو که فرمان
ده عجم سپهسالار اعظم سردار معظم ضحاک روزگار داراب کهر و دار
افراسیاب عهد امیر اسمعیل نامداری سمت صدور یافت ...

[After the doxology] "But to proceed. This excellent address hath been issued on our part, we who are the Refuge of the Caliphate⁸, the slayer of the infidels and polytheists, ¹ See E. J. W. Gibb's History of Ottoman Poetry, vol. ii, p. 261, for a brief account of Salm's Persian Diw&n, of which a most sumptuous edition, based on numerous MSS., by the late Dr Paul Horn, was printed in Berlin as a gift to the late Sultan 'Abdu'l-FIarnfd from the ex-Emperor of Germany in 1904. A number of Shah Ismail's Turkish poems are given in my MS. of the Silsilatu'n-Nasab'i-Safawiyya. See J.R.A.S. for July, 1921, p. 412, where other references are given.

⁸ See Firdun Bey, vol. i, p. 381.

⁸ An interesting proof that, contrary to the views of Professor Nal-lino, the position of Caliph was already claimed by Sultan Salim, as it certainly was by his son and successor Sulayman.

14 CONSIDERATIONS ON THE SAFAWID DYNASTY [PTI

the extirpator of the foes of the Faith, the humbler of the Pharaohs' pride¹, the tarnisher of the Khaqan's crowns, the King of those who fight and strive for Religion, whose pomp is as that of Firfardin, whose Court is as that of Alexander, whose justice and equity is as that of Kay-Khusraw, that Dara of noble descent, Sultan Salim Shah, son of Sultan Bdiyazid, son of Sultan Muhammad Khan, to thee, who art the ruler of the Persians, the most mighty general and puissant leader, the Dahhak⁸ of the time, the Ddrab of the combat, the Afrasiyab of the age, the famous Amfr Isma'il."

On the other hand I have only found one verse wherein Shah Isma'il is definitely identified with the Persian as contrasted with the Shf'a cause. This verse occurs in the Ahsanu 't-Tawarikh and runs :

‘فروزنده’ تاج و تخت گیان ‘فرازنده’ اختر کاویان

"The illuminator of the crown and throne of the Kaydnians⁵,
The upholder of the star of the Kawayan⁶."

For the rest, the seven tribes who formed the back-bone of the Qizil-bdsh army were, as their names Rumlti, Shdmlii, Mawsillu, etc., sufficiently indicate, almost exclusively Turkish, as were the principal officers of the Safawi army, whose war-cry, as we learn

Extensive use of Turkish under the Safawis.

¹ Literally, "he who rubs in the dust the noses of the Pharaohs," alluding to Sultan Salim's conquest of Egypt and overthrow of the Mameluke dynasty.

² The Khaqdn is the title given to the king of Turin and the Turks. The word is, I believe, Mongol, and is identical with the alternative forms Qd'an and Khdn.

⁸ Dahhak is the Azhi-dahdka or Dragon-king of the Avesta, represented in the Shdh-ndma as an Arab usurper.

⁴ Under the year 908/1502-3, f. 47^b of Mr A. G. Ellis's MS.

⁶ The second dynasty of the ancient legendary kings of Persia.

⁶ Kawa was the patriotic blacksmith who led the revolt against the foreign usurper Dahhdh, and whose leather apron became the national standard under the name of Dirafsh-i-Kawayan.

from the rare history of Shah Isma'fl¹, was not " Long live Persia!" or the like, but, in the Turkish language, " O my spiritual guide and master whose sacrifice I am!"

صدای قربان اولدیغمر و صدقه اولدیغمر پیروم موشدم که شهید و
شعار فرقه ناجیه قزلباشی است در میهنه و میسره گارزار انداختند

More than a century after Isma'fl's death, when the capital had been transferred from the north of Persia to Isfahan, Turkish seems still to have been the language generally spoken at Court⁸. These instances, to which might be added many more, will suffice to show how different was the spirit which animated the Safawi revival (though it undoubtedly produced that homogeneity which is the basis of national sentiment) from the Nationalism of the modern Pan-Turanians and "Young Persians/* who put the extension and purification from foreign elements of the national language in the foremost place in their programme. At the present time the Turkish nationalists of Angora proclaim their new Caliph in Turkish instead of in the time-honoured Arabic, while Rida Khan, the Persian military dictator, strives to introduce in his army a purely Persian military terminology.

RELIGION.

Although the Muhammadans, according to their own statements, are divided into seventy-two or seventy-three different sects³, in later times at any rate, when certain controversies, such as those connected with Free Will and Predestination and the Essential nature of the Shi'a doctrine.

¹ Add. 200, f. 41² of the Cambridge University Library. See Sir E. Denison Ross's description of this book in the J.7?.A.S. for 1896, vol. xxviii, pp. 264-283.

² See the second English edition of Olearius (London, 1669), p. 212.

⁸ See Shahrstanis Kitabu'l-Milal, ed. Cureton, pp. 2-3.

Creation of the Qur'an, have sunk into a subordinate position, it may fairly be said that the capital and cardinal division is into the People of the Sunnat and the People of the Skfa. Scattered communities of the latter are found in Asia Minor, Syria (where they are called Mutawalli, pi. Matd-wila) India and other Muhammadan lands, but in Persia only is the Shi'a doctrine not only that held by the great majority of the people, but also the State Religion. Before considering how it was raised to this position by the Safawis about the year A.D. 1500, we must briefly consider its essential nature, and here we cannot do better than quote Shahrastani, the learned author of the Kitabu'l-Milal, or "Book of Sects," who died in the middle of the twelfth century, and who writes of them¹ as follows:

"THE SHI'A.—They are those who took the side of (Shdya'u) 'Alf in particular, declaring him to be Imdm and Khalifa by explicit written deed, public or secret, and believing that the Imamate cannot quit his posterity; and that, should it do so, it is only by reason of wrong wrought by another, or prudential renunciation on his own part². They assert that the Imamate is not a question of expediency but of principle: it does not depend on popular choice, so that an Imam can be set up by their appointment, but is an essential of Religion which it is not permissible for even the Apostle of God to ignore or neglect, and which cannot be transferred or committed to the common people. They are united in their assertion as to the necessity of such explicit designation [of the Imam on the part of his predecessor] and the established innocence of the Imams of all sins, small or great, and also cited.

Shahrastani

¹ Op. cit. pp. 108-9.

² E.g. the second Imam, al-Hasan, elder son of 'AH, ostensibly surrendered his rights "for prudential reasons" (taqiyyd) to the Umayyad Mu'awiya, but he could not really divest himself of the sacred quality of Imam.

io their principles of recognition and repudiation, alike in word, deed and faith, save in cases of 'prudential concealment' (taqiyya) in which point, however, some of the Zaydfs oppose them. As to the actual transmission of the Imamate, however, there is much discussion and difference of opinion, and at each such transmission and stage there is an argument, a doctrine and a schism. There are five [principal] divisions, the Kaysdnis, the Zaydfs, the Imdmfs, the Extremists [Ghuldf] and the Isma'flfs, of whom some incline in their principles to the Mu'tazila, some to the Suttna and some to Anthropomorphism (tashbik)."

Put in a briefer, clearer and more concrete form, this means that all the Shf'a reject and repudiate the first three of the "Four Orthodox Caliphs" (al-Kkulafa?-u'r-Rashidun) Abu Bakr, 'Umar and 'Uthman, who were elected, and hold that 'AH, the cousin of the Prophet Muhammad and the husband of his daughter Fatima, should have succeeded him, and had in fact been nominated by him as his successor; and that after 'AH the succession continued in his family by Divine Right. But even within this family there was no place for election, each Imam specifically choosing and nominating his successor, as the Prophet had chosen and nominated 'AH. Amongst those who agreed in these general principles, however, there was plenty of room for disagreement as to details. Some of the Shf'a were content that the Imam should be descended from 'AH, and were therefore ready to recognise Muhammad ibnu'l-Hanafiyya, "the son of the Hanafite woman"; others, including the "Sect of the Seven" or Isma'flfs and the "Sect of the Twelve" or Imamfs, with which last we are chiefly concerned, limited the succession to the children born to 'AH by his wife Fatima, the Prophet's daughter. With the third Imam IJusayn, 'Alf's younger son by Fatima, a new factor came into operation, for, according to quite early and respectable historians, such as al-Ya'qubi¹ a daughter of the last Sasanian king of Persia, Yazdigird III, was given to him in marriage and bore him a son named 'AH and entitled Zaynu'l-Abidin, who was the Fourth Imam, and who combined in himself direct descent from the Prophet through his daughter Fatima and from the ancient Royal House of Persia. Small wonder that to him and his descendants the loyal devotion of the Persians was so freely rendered!

Why the SM'a doctrine especially appeals to the Persians.

Thus we see that the quarrel between Sunnī and Shi'a is by no means one of names and personalities only, but of the essentially antagonistic doctrines of Democracy and the Divine Right of Kings. The Arabs are, and always have been, in large measure democratic in their ideas, while the Persians have ever been disposed to see in their Kings divine or semi-divine beings. And if the idea of a humanly-elected head of the State be repugnant, how much more that of an Imam, or Vice-gerent of the Prophet, chosen by popular suffrage? Hence the Imami and Isma'īlī sects of the Shi'a have always had their stronghold in Persia, though under the Sunnī Turkish dynasties of the Ghaznawis and Saljuqs they were kept in a state of subordination². They were more favoured under the Buwayhids and some of the Mongols, notably Ghazan and Khuda-banda (Uljaytu), but they first obtained unquestioned supremacy throughout the whole of Persia under the Safawis.

Who, then, were these Safawis, when did they so vehemently adopt the Shi'a doctrine, and how did they succeed in establishing their supremacy?

¹ He wrote about the end of the ninth Christian century, and his excellent history, edited by Houtsma, was published at Leyden in two vols, in 1883. See also vol. i of my Lit. Hist. Of Persia, p. 229 and n. 2 ad cole.

² Abundant illustrations of this are furnished by such works of the Saljiq period as the Siyasat-nama and the Rahatu's-Sudur.

Safawi is the adjective formed from Safi, a notable Stiff saint, named in full Safiyyu'd-Din ,who died in Gilan in A.D. 1334 at the age of 85 in the odour of sanctity, and who claimed to be descended in the twentieth degree from Imam Kazim the seventh Imam¹. That he was really a man of note in his own time is proved beyond doubt by the way in which his contemporary, the great statesman and historian Rashidu'd-Din Fadlu'llah, speaks of him in his letters², and also by the fact that an immense biography of him, the Safwatu's-Safa, was composed shortly after his death, largely from data supplied by his son Sadru'd-Din, which has been used directly or indirectly by all the historians of the great dynasty whereof he was the ancestor. Shah Isma'fī, the actual founder of the dynasty, was sixth in descent from him, but I have found no evidence to prove that he himself adopted the violent Shi'a views characteristic of his descendants. The little evidence available points rather the other way, for in a letter written to Isma'fī's son Shah Tahmasp in A.D. 1529-30 by the Uzbek leaders, they say that, according to what they have heard, Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Din was a good Sunni, and express their astonishment that Tahmasp "neither follows the example of His Holiness Murtada 'Alf, nor that of his forefather"³. Khwaja 'Alf, grandson of Safiyyu'd-Din and great-great-grandfather of Shah Ismail, is the first member of the House who shows a strong Shi'a bias⁴ and holds converse and his grandson Junayd and his great-grandson Haydar are the first to assert their claims with the sword and to die on the field of battle.

At the beginning of the fifteenth century, then, the Safawis were simply the hereditary pirs, murshids, or spiritual ¹ For the full pedigree, see the J.R.A.S. for July, 1921, p. 397 and n. 1 ad calc. ² Ibid., pp. 417-18.

³ For the text of this passage, see p. 43 infra.

⁴ See Xht J.R.A.S. for July, 1921, pp. 407-8.

directors of an increasingly large and important order of darwishes or Suffs which drew its adherents not only from Persia but from the Turkish provinces of Asia Minor, where they appear to have carried on an active propaganda¹. How successful this originally a religious order.

The Safawis

promised to become in later days is shown by the dreadful massacre of some forty thousand of the Shf'a perpetrated in his dominions by Sulatdn Salfm "the Grim" as a preliminary to his great campaign against Shdh Isma'fl in A.D. 1514². To these devoted darwishes or murids, as their war-cry cited above (p. 15) sufficiently shows, the head of the Safawi House, even after he had ceased to be a Shaykh and had become a Shah, continued to be regarded as the pir or murshid. Chardin, Raphael du Mans³, and other reputable authorities have scoffed at the title "Great Sophi," by which the Safawi Shahs are commonly designated by contemporary European diplomatists and writers, on the ground that the Suffs were generally poor and humble people and of doubtful orthodoxy, despised and rejected of men, and unlikely to lend their name to the Great King of Persia. But in the Persian histories of the Safawis, even in the Silsilatu'n-Nasab compiled about the time when Raphael du Mans wrote, and still more in the Ahsanu't-Tawdrikh and other earlier chronicles, the Suffs, especially the Suffs of Rum (i.e. Turkey in Asia), are represented as the cream of the Safawi army; we read of "self-sacrifice, courage, and whatever else is inseparable from Suff-hood⁴" and of unworthy and disloyal acts described as "un-Suff-like" (nd-Silfi). What, then, more natural than that he who was regarded not only as the Shdh of Persia

The term
"Great Sophi."

¹ See Gibb's History of Ottoman Poetry, vol. ii, pp. 227-8 ad calc.

² Ibid., p. 259, and pp. 71-3 infra.

³ VEstat de la Perse en 1660, ed. Schefer, pp. 16-17.

⁴ See J.R.A.S. for July, 1921, the Persian words on the illustration facing p. 415.

but as the Shaykh of these devoted darwishes or Stiffs, whose courage amazed contemporary Venetian travellers, should be called in Europe "the Great Stiff" or "Sophi"? At any rate no more probable origin has been suggested for this term, which can scarcely be regarded as a corrupt pronunciation of Safawi.

It would appear that an idea prevailed in Europe (based, perhaps, on vague recollections of the Magi or Wise Men from the East) that Sophi was derived from an opinion which Don Juan of Persia¹ is at pains to refute; for, having described how Shah Isma'fi immediately after he had conquered Tabriz adopted the title of "gran Sophi de Persia" he adds: "no Sophi por sabio, como algunos maten-tendieron, pensando que venia de Spos vocablo Griego, sino de Sophi, que es vocablo Persiano, y quiere dezir, lana, o algodón" ("Not Sophi in the sense of wise, as some have erroneously supposed, thinking it to come from the Greek word , but from Sophi, which is a Persian word meaning wool or cotton").

The rapid rise to power of Isma'fi is one of the most remarkable events in Persian history, especially in view of his forlorn and threatened childhood. His father, Shaykh Haydar, was killed in A.D. 1490 when he was only about three years of age*, and he and his two brothers, of whom the elder, Sultan 'Alf, also fell in battle about A.D. 1495, were in constant danger from the Turkman rulers of the "White Sheep" dynasty, and had many hair-breadth escapes in which they owed their lives to the devoted loyalty of their faithful Stiffs. Only seven of these accompanied Isma'il when, at the age of thirteen, he set out from Lahijan for Araabfi to win a kingdom or perish in the attempt, but at every

¹ Ed. Valladolid, 1604, f. 50*.

² Krusinski agrees with this view. See p. 68 of the English version (London, 1728).

³ He was born on Rajab 5, 892 (June 27, 1487).

22 CONSIDERATIONS ON THE SAFAWI DYNASTY [PTI

stage he received reinforcements, so that at Tarum his army numbered fifteen hundred men, and by the time he reached Arzinjan on his way to attack Farrukh-Yasdr, king of Shfr-wdn, it had increased to seven thousand. Within a year he had taken Tabrfz, been crowned king of Persia, and, despite the attempts of his counsellors to dissuade him, imposed the Shf'a doctrine on his subjects. He was warned that two-thirds of the people of Tabrfz were Sunnfs, and that the introduction into the prayers and professions of Faith of the distinctively Shf'a clauses, and more especially the cursing of the first three Caliphs, Abu Bakr, 'Umar and 'Uthm^{dn}, might lead to trouble. "God and the Immaculate Imams are with me," he replied, "and I fear no one. By God's help, if the people utter one word of protest, I will draw the sword and leave not one of them alive¹." He was as good as his word, and when the above-mentioned anathema was uttered all men were commanded, on pain of death, to exclaim, "May it (i'e. the curse) be more, not less !" (Bisk bad, kam ma-bad!).

Shah Isma'il enforces the Shi's doctrine at Tabriz.

Ruthless and bloodthirsty as he showed himself, Shall Isma'fl, as depicted by contemporary Venetian travellers, had many attractive characteristics. At the age of thirteen he was, according to Caterino Zeno, "of noble presence and a truly royal bearing,... nor did the virtues of his mind disaccord with the beauty of his person, as he had an elevated genius, and such a lofty idea of things as seemed incredible at such a tender age." Angiolello describes him as "very much beloved...for his beauty and pleasing manners"; and, when grown to man's estate, as "fair, handsome, and very pleasing; not very tall, but of a light and well-framed figure; rather stout than slight, with broad shoulders. His hair is reddish; he only wears moustachios, and uses his left hand instead of his right. He is as brave as a game-cock, and stronger than any of his lords; in the archery contests, out of the ten apples that are knocked down, he knocks down seven." The anonymous merchant, after describing Ismail's doings in Tabrfz, adds "from the time of Nero to the present, I doubt whether so bloodthirsty a tyrant has ever existed," yet adds a little further on that at Caesarea "he caused proclamation to be made that everyone who brought provisions for sale should be liberally paid, and forbade his men, under pain of death, to take even as much as a handful of straw without paying for it, as it was a friendly city." He further describes him as "amiable as a girl, left-handed by nature, as lively as a fawn, and stronger than any of his lords," and says that "this Sophi is loved and revered by his people as a god, and especially by his soldiers, many of whom enter into battle without armour, expecting their master Ismael to watch over them in the fight."

Character of
Shah Isma'il.

¹ The original text is quoted on p. 53 infra, ad catc.

The closest historical parallel to the Safawi movement is, I think, afforded by the propaganda in favour of the Parallel between Safawi and 'Abbasid propaganda

*Abb£sids carried on by Abu Muslim in Persia with so great a success in the first half of the eighth century of our era. Both were consciously religious and only unconsciously, though none the less truly, racial; the chief difference was that the later movement had to confront in the person of the Ottoman Sultan Salfm a far more energetic and formidable antagonist than the earlier in the Umayyad Caliph Marwan, and hence its more limited success; for while the 'Abbdsid cause triumphed throughout almost the whole of the Eastern lands of I stem, the Safawi triumph was limited to Persia, though without doubt at one time it threatened

Why the Turco-Persian quarrel became so embittered at this time.

Turkey as well. Fear is the great incentive to cruelty, and it was chiefly fear which caused Sultan Salfm to massacre in cold blood some forty thousand of his Shf'a subjects. Fear, however, was not the only motive of this ferocity; with it were mingled anger and disappointment. For Sultan Salm was what is now called a Pan-Islamist, and his ambition was to be not merely the Sovereign of the greatest and most powerful Muhammadan State, but the supreme head of the whole Muslim world. His conquest of Egypt and the Holy Cities of Mecca and Madfna in A.D. 1517, and his assumption of the title of Caliph, which, whether by threats or promises, or a combination of the two, he induced the last titular 'Abbasid Caliph to surrender to him, might well have given him this position but for Shah Ismail and the barrier of heterodoxy which he had erected between the Turks, Egyptians and other Sunnfs to the West and their fellow-believers to the East in Transoxiana, Afghanistan, Baluchistan and India. The Persians not only refused to recognise Sultan Salm as Caliph, but repudiated the whole theory of the Caliphate. The Turkish victory over the Persians at Chaldiran in August, 1514, failed of its results owing to the refusal of the Ottoman troops to push home their advantage, and thus robbed the succeeding Egyptian campaign of its full measure of success, and left a lasting soreness which served greatly to weaken the political power of Islam and to impose a check on Turkish ambitions whereby, as we have seen, Europe greatly profited. Between A.D. 1508, when it was taken by the Persians, and A.D. 1638, when it was finally recovered by the Turks, Baghdad, once the metropolis of Islam, changed hands many times as the tide of these bitter and interminable wars ebbed and flowed, until the increasing weakness and effeminacy of the later Safawi kings left Turkey in undisputed possession of Mesopotamia.

ART AND LITERATURE.

One of the most curious and, at first sight, inexplicable Remarkable lack phenomena of the Safawi period is the extra-ordinary dearth of notable poets in Persia during the two centuries of its duration. Architecture, safawis.

miniature-painting and other arts flourished exceedingly; the public buildings with which Shah 'Abbas adorned his realms, and especially his capital Isfahan, have not ceased to command the admiration of all who beheld them from his time until the present day; and Bihzad and the other artists who flourished at the Timurid court of Herat found worthy successors in Ride'Uyi-'Abbas and his colleagues. Yet, though poets innumerable are mentioned in the Tuhfa-i-Sami and other contemporary biographies and histories, there is hardly one (if we exclude Jami, Hatifi, Hildli and other poets of Khurasan, who were really the survivors of the school of Herat) worthy to be placed in the first class. During the seventy stormy years of Timur's life there were at least eight or ten poets besides the great Hafiz, who outshone them all, whose names no writer on Persian literature could ignore; while during the two hundred and twenty years of Safawi rule there was in Persia, so far as I have been able to ascertain, hardly one of conspicuous merit or originality. I say "in Persia" advisedly, for a brilliant group of poets from Persia, of whom 'Urfi of Shfraz (d. A.D. 1590) and Sa'ib of Isfahan (d. A.D. 1670) are perhaps the most notable, adorned the court of the "Great Moghuls" in India, and these were in many cases not settlers or the sons of emigrants, but men who went from Persia to India to make their fortunes and returned home when their fortunes were made. This shows that it was not so much lack of talent as lack of patronage which makes the list of distinctively Safawi poets so meagre. The phenomenon is noticed by Rida-qul Khan in the preface to his great anthology of Persian poets entitled *Majma'u-l-Fusahd*² composed in the middle of the last century, as well as by European scholars like the late Dr Ethe\ who have written on Persian poetry; with this difference, that the European writers commonly speak of Jami as the last great Persian poet, and consider that during the four centuries which "have elapsed since his death Persia has produced no poet of eminence, while Rida-qulf Khan, rightly as I think, places certain modern poets of the Qajar period, notably such men as Qa'ctnf, Furughf and Yaghma, in the first rank.

¹ This biography of contemporary poets by Prince Sam Mirza, the son of Shah Isma'il, is another work which urgently needs publication.

² Lithographed at Tihnan in two large volumes in 1295/1878.

That no great poet should have arisen in Persia in days otherwise so spacious and so splendid as those of the Safawis

Reasons for this dearth of poets.

seemed to me so remarkable that I wrote to my learned and scholarly friend Mfrza Muhammad Khan of Qazwfn, to whose industry and acumen students of Persian owe so much, to ask him, first, whether he accepted this statement as a fact, and secondly, if he did, how he explained it. In reply, in a letter dated May 24, 1911, he wrote as follows:

" There is at any rate no doubt that during the Safawi period literature and poetry in Persia had sunk to a very

Mirza Muhammad Khan's views on this subject.

low ebb, and that not one single poet of the first rank can be reckoned as representing this epoch. The chief reason for this, as you yourself have observed, seems to have been that these kings, by reason of their political aims and strong antagonism to the Ottoman Empire, devoted the greater part of their energies to the propagation of the Shf'a doctrine and the encouragement of divines learned in its principles and laws. Now although these divines strove greatly to effect the religious unification of Persia (which resulted in its political unification), and laid the foundations of this present-day Persia, whose inhabitants are, speaking generally, of one faith, one tongue, and one race, yet, on the other hand, from the point of view of literature, poetry, Suffism and mysticism, and, to use their own expression, everything connected with the 'Accomplishments' (as opposed to the 'Legalities')¹, they not merely fell far short in the promotion thereof, but sought by every means to injure and annoy the representatives of these^x^Accomplishments/ who were generally not too firmly established in the Religious Law and its derivatives. In regara to the Stiffs particularly they employed every kind of severity and vexation, whether by exile, expulsion, slaughter or reprimand, slaying or burning many of them with their own hands or by their sentence. Now the close connection between poetry and Belles Lettres on the one hand, and Suffism and Mysticism on the other, at any rate in Persia, is obvious, so that the extinction of one necessarily involves the extinction and destruction of the other. Hence it was that under this dynasty learning, culture, poetry and mysticism completely deserted Persia, and the cloisters, monasteries, retreats and rest-houses [of the darwishes] were so utterly destroyed that there is now throughout the whole of Persia no name or sign of such charitable foundations, though formerly, as, for instance, in the time of Ibn Batuta, such institutions were to be found in every town, hamlet and village, as abundantly appears from the perusal of his Travels, wherein he describes how in every place, small or great, where he halted, he alighted in such buildings, of which at the present day no name or sign exists. Anyone ignorant of the circumstances of the Safawi period might well wonder whether this Persia and that are the same country, and the creed of its inhabitants the same Islm ; and, if so, why practically, with rare exceptions, there exists now not a single monastery throughout the whole of Persia, while in those parts of Turkey, such as Mesopotamia, Kuraistan and Sulaymaniyya, which did not remain under the Safawi dominion, there are many such buildings just as there were in Ibn Batuta's days.

" At all events during the Safawi period in place of great poets and philosophers there arose theologians, great indeed, but harsh, dry, fanatical and formal, like the Majlisf, the Muhaqqiq-i-thani, Shaykh Hurr-i-Amulf and Shaykh-i-Bahii'f, etc."

28 CONSIDERATIONS ON THE SAFAWI DYNASTY [PTI

Most professional poets in the East are primarily panegyrists, and if Ridd-qulf Khan is correct in his assertion fithat the Safawi kings, especially Tahmdsp and Abbds the Great, expressed a wish thatjauda^ tory poems should be addressed to the Imdms r^therjhan to themselves, another and a more creditable cause for the diminution of poets in their realms is indicated. More material benefits were to be looked for from the Great Moghuls¹ than from the Imdms, and hence |:he eyes and feet of the more mercenary poets turned rather to Dihli than to Karbal&H But to religious poetry commemorating the virtues and sufferings of the Imdms a great impetus was given in Persia, and of *these*jpoets Muhtagham of Kashan(d. A.D. 1588) was the most eminent^ But, besides these more formal and classical elegies, it is probable that much of the simpler and often very touching verse, wherein the religious feelings of the Persians find expression during the Muharram mourning, dates from this period, when every means was employed to stimulate and develop these sentiments of devotion to the House of ^AH and detestation of its oppressors. On the other hand the dramatisation of these moving scenes, which now form so remarkable a feature of the Muharram mourning {Tctziya), and are often described by European writers as "Miracle Plays," seems to have taken place at a much later period. That careful writer Olearius spent the month of Muharram, A.H. 1047 (May-June, 1637) at Ardabfl, the sanctuary of the Safawi family, and gives a very full description of all that he saw, the mournings, wailings, lamentations and cuttings culminating on the 'Ashicrd, the tenth day of the month or Riiz-i-Qatl, but he makes no mention of any dramatic representations, so that it is pretty certain that none existed at that time. To elucidate this point I addressed enquiries to two well-informed and intelligent Persian friends, Sayyid Taqf-zada and Mfrza. Husayn Danish. The former expressed the opinion that while the solemn recitations known as Rawda-khwadni {i.e. the reading from the pulpit of the Rawdatu'sh-Shuhadd, or "Garden of the Martyrs," and other similar books) dates from Safawi times, the Ta'ziya-garddnj, shabih, or "Passion Play" was of much later date, and perhaps owes something to European influences. The latter also placed the origin of these "Passion Plays" (of which Sir Lewis Pelly's translations give a good idea to the English reader) about the end of the eighteenth or beginning of the nineteenth century, ue. at the beginning of the QajaV period, and incidentally cited the following interesting verses by Shaykh Rida-yi-Kurd in illustration of the view that the Persian dislike of 'Umar is due not less to the fact that he conquered Persia and overthrew the Sdsdnian dynasty than to his usurpation of the rights of 'Ali and Fatima:

¹ The liberality of Humaytin towards poets and men of letters is especially noticed under the year of his death (962/1555) in the Ahsanu't Tawdrllkk. This and the succeeding topics will be more fully discussed in a subsequent chapter.

Panegyrics on themselves little esteemed by the Safawi kings.

بشکست عُمَر پُشتِ هُوَبران اجمرا،
 هر باد فنا داد رک و ریشه جمرا،
 این عریده بر غصبِ خلافت ز علی نیست، با آلِ عمر کینه قدیر است عجمرا،

" 'Umar broke the back of the lions of the thicket:

He cast to the winds the thews and sinews of Jamshfd.

This quarrel is not about the usurpation of the Caliphate from *Alf:
 Persia has an ancient grudge against the House of 'Uinar."

In conclusion we must not omit to notice another step taken by the Safawi kings which added greatly to the consolidation of Persia and the prevention of a continued outflow of men and money from the country, namely the exaltation and popularisation of Mashhad, Qum and other holy cities of Persia, whereby the tide of pilgrims was to a considerable extent confined within the limits of their Empire, in which, as we have seen, the most sacred shrines of Karbala, Najaf and Mashhad 'AH were long included before they finally fell under Turkish dominion¹.

POSTSCRIPT.

I am indebted to my friend Mr H. L. Rabino, of H.B.M.'s Consular Service, for the following valuable notes on the celebration of the Muharram mourning at Baghddd as early as the fourth Muhammadan (tenth Christian) century. I have only the text of the two passages (one in German and the other in Persian): the reference was probably given in the accompanying letter (December 23, 1922), which has unfortunately been mislaid. I have an impression that they are taken from one of Dorn's articles, probably published in the Melanges Asiatiques. The whole quotation runs as follows:

"Die 'ta'sieh' wurden in Baghddad i. J. 963 von der Buwaihiden Mu'iss-ed-daula eingeführt, wie uns Ahmed b. Abu'l-Feth in seinem Werke أحسن القصص (Inscr. Mus. As. No. 567*) berichtet."

بنای تعزیه سید الشهداء در بغداد در سنه ۳۰۲ هجری
در تاریخ ابن کثیر شامی آورده که معز الدولة احمد بن بویه
در بغداد در دهه اول محرم امر کرد تمامی بازارهای بغداد را
بسته مردم سیاه عزا پوشیدند و بتعزیه سید الشهداء پرداختند
چون این قاعده در بغداد رسم نبود لهذا علمای اهل سنت آنرا
بدعتی بزرگ دانستند و چون هر معز الدولة دستی نداشتند چاره

¹ See Krusinski, op. cit., pp. 159-161.

جز تسلیم نتوانستند، بعد از آن هر ساله تا انقراض دولتِ دیانمه شیعیان در ده روزِ اوّلِ محرم در جمیع بلاد رسمِ تعزیه بها می آوردند و در بغداد تا اوایل سلطنت طغرل سلجوقی بر قرار بود،

"Institution of the mourning for the Chief of Martyrs in Baghdad in A.H. 352 [A.D. 963]."

"It is related in the History of Ibn Kathir the Syrian that Mu'izzu'd-Dawla Ahmad ibn Buwayh issued orders in Baghdad that during the first ten days of Muharram all the bazaars of Baghdad should be closed, and that the people should wear black for mourning and betake themselves to mourning for the Chief of Martyrs [the Imam Husayn]. Since this procedure was not customary in Baghdad, the Sunnf doctors regarded it as a great innovation; but since they had no control over Mu'izzu'd-Dawla, they could do nothing but submit. Thereafter every year until the collapse of the Daylamite [or Buwayhid] dynasty, this custom of mourning was observed by the Shf'ites in all countries during the first ten days of Muharram. In Baghdad it continued until the early days of the reign of Jughril the Saljuq."

CHAPTER II.

THE CREATION OF THE SAFAWI POWER TO 930/1524. SHAH ISMA'IL AND HIS ANCESTORS.

That Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Din, the saintly recluse of Ardabfl from whom the Safawi kings of Persia derived their descent and their name, was really an important and influential person in his own day, is a fact susceptible of historical proof. He who wins a throne and founds a great dynasty destined to endure for more than two centuries is apt, if he be of lowly origin, to create, or allow to be created, some legend connecting his ancestors with famous kings, statesmen or warriors of old, or otherwise reflecting glory on a House which, till he made it powerful and illustrious, held but a humble place in men's esteem. But Shih Isma'fl, sixth in descent from Shaykh Safi (as we shall henceforth call him for brevity), who founded the Safawi dynasty about the beginning of the sixteenth century of the Christian era, and raised Persia to a position of splendour which she had scarcely held since the overthrow of the ancient and noble House of S&sdn by the Arabs in the seventh century, had no occasion to resort to these devices; for whether or no Shaykh Saff was directly descended from the seventh Imdm of the Shfa, Musi Kdzim, and through him from 'AH ibn Abi Tdlib¹ and Fatima the Prophet's daughter (and his claim is probably at least as good as that of any contemporary Sayyid), two facts prove that in his own time (the thirteenth century) he was highly accounted as a saint and spiritual guide.

Proofs of the fame, influence and greatness of Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Din.

¹ The full pedigree is given (with only slight variants) in the Safwatu's-Safd, Ahsanu't-Tawdrikh, Silsilatu'n-Nasab-i-Safawiyya and most other histories of this dynasty, and runs as follows ; (1) Safiyyu'd-Din Abu'I-Fath Ishaq b. (2) Amfnu'd-Dm Jibra'fl b. (3) $ali^b. (4) Qufbu'd-Dm Ahmad b. (5) Salafcu'd-Dm Rashi'd b. (6) Muhammad Hafiz b. (7) 'Awa4 al-Khawass b. (8) Ffruzshah-/Za/rfo-kulah b. (9) Muhammad b. (10) Sharafshah b. (11) Mufcammad b.

The first and more important of these two facts is the concern shown by that great Minister Rashidu'd-Din Fadlu'llah for his welfare, and the desire to win his favour and intercession. In the very rare collection of the Minister's letters known as the *Munshd dt-i-Rashidi*¹ there occur two documents affording proof of this. The first is a letter (No. 45 of the collection, ff. 145^b-149^a of the MS.) addressed to Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Din himself, offering to his monastery (Khdnqdh) a yearly gift of corn, wine, oil, cattle, sugar, honey and other food-stuffs for the proper entertainment of the notables of Ardabfi on the anniversary of the Prophet's birthday, on condition that prayers should be offered up at the conclusion of the feast for the writer and benefactor. The second (No. 49, ff. 161a-169^b) is addressed by Rashid to his son Mfr Ahmad, governor of Ardabfi, enjoining on him consideration for all its inhabitants, and especially "to act in such wise that His Holiness the Pole of the Heaven of Truth, the Swimmer in the Oceans of the Law, the Pacer of the Hippodrome of the Path, the Shaykh of Islam and of the Muslims, the Proof of such as attain the Goal, the Exemplar of the Bench of Purity, the Rose-tree of the Garden of Fidelity, Shaykh Sqfiyyu'l-Millat wdd-Din (may (12) Hasan b. (13) Muhammad b. (14) Ibrahim b. (15) Ja'far b. (16) Muhammad b. (17) Ismail b. (18) Muhammad b. (19) Sayyid Afcmad al-A'rab{ b. (20) Abu Muhammad Qasim b. (21) Abu'l-Qasim IJamza b. (22) AL-IMAM MUSA AL-KA?IM, the seventh Im?m and fifth in direct descent from 'AH and Fatima.

¹ See my article on the Persian MSS. of the late Sir Albert Houtum-Schindler, K.C.I.E. in the J.R.A.S. for Oct. 1917, pp. 693-4, and my Persian Literature under Tartar Dominion (hereinafter sometimes denoted as "Pers. Litt. tit"), pp. 80-87.

God Most High perpetuate the blessings of His Holy Exhalations!) may be well pleased with and grateful to thee¹." These letters, and especially the second, which is filled with the most exaggerated praises of Shaykh Sail, sufficiently prove the high repute which he enjoyed amongst his contemporaries².

The second fact germane to our thesis is that comparatively soon after his death a most extensive monograph on his life, character, teachings, doctrines, virtues and miracles was compiled by one of his followers, the darwish Tawakkul³ ibn Isma'fī, commonly called Ibnu'l-Bazzaz, apparently under the inspiration and direction of Shaykh Sadru'd-Din, who succeeded his father Shaykh Saff as head of the Order and held this position for fifty-eight years (A.D. 1334-1392). This rare and important book has never been printed⁴, but is the chief source of all later accounts of the head of the family and dynasty, in most of which it is frequently and explicitly cited. A much later recension of it was made in the reign of Shah Tahmasp (A.D. 1524-1576) by a certain Abu'l-

و نوعی سازی که جناب قطب فلك حقیقت، و سبّاح بهار¹
 شریعت، مسّاح مضمار طریقت، شیخ الاسلام و المسلمین، برهان
 الواصلین، قدوه، صفّه، صفا، کلین دوحه، وفا، شیخ صفی المله
 والدین ادام الله تعالی بركات انفاسه الشریفة از تو راضی و شاکر
 باشد²

² Shaykh Saffi died in 735/1334 at the age of 85. Rashīdu'd-Dīn was put to death in A.D. 1318 at the age of 70 or somewhat over.

³ Or Tūklī (توکلی) as it is written and pointed in a note in Mr Ellis's manuscript.

* Since this was written I have obtained through the kindness of one of my Persian correspondents a copy of an excellent lithographed edition published at Bombay in 1329/1911, of the very existence of which I was ignorant when this chapter was written.

Fath al-Husaynf. I have personal knowledge of only three manuscripts, Ada. 11745 of the British Museum¹; No. 87 of the Pote Collection in the library of King's College, Cambridge²; and a fine copy made at Araabfl in 1030/1621,³ now belonging to Mr A. G. Ellis, who, with his customary generosity, placed it at my disposal for as long as I required it. This exhaustive work comprises an Introduction, twelve chapters, and a Conclusion, each of which is divided into numerous sections⁴, and its contents are summarized by Rieu with his usual precision. It contains interesting matter, diluted by much that is wearisome save to a devoted disciple, and represents on a more extensive scale the type of hagiography familiar to all Persian students in such books as the Mandqibu'l-'Arifin of Afldkf, available in the English version of Redhouse⁴ and the French of Huart⁶. The extracts from it included in most later histories of the family, notably the *Silsilatu'n-Nasab-i-Safawiyya, will suffice to satisfy the curiosity of most readers, though a careful perusal and analysis of the original work would undoubtedly yield results of value, most of the anecdotes and sayings being vouched for by Shaykh Sadru'd-Din. But before further discussing Shaykh Saff and his descendants something more must be said about his ancestors.

¹ See Rieu's Pers. Cat, pp. 345-6.

² See my Suppi. Hand-Its^ p. 137, No. 837.

³ Ch. viii comprises no less than 27 sections.

⁴ Prefixed to his metrical translation of the First Book of the Mesnevi {MathnawC) of Jalalu'd-Dm Rumi, published in Trubner's Oriental Series in 1881. The Mandqib, or "Acts of the Adepts," occupies pp. 3-135.

⁶ Les Saints des Derviches Tourneurs {Etudes d' Hagiographie Musulmane} vol. i (Pans, Leroux), 1918; vol. ii, 1922.

⁶ See my account of this rare and interesting work in the J.R.A.S. for July, 1921, pp. 395-418. Both Dr Babinger and M. Mmorsky have called my attention to the fact that another MS. of this work at St Petersburg was described by Khanikoff in the Melanges Asiatiques, i, pp. 580-583.

THE ANCESTORS OF SHAYKH SAFIYYU'D-DIN.

That the seventh Imdm Musa* Kdzim had, besides the son 'AH Rida who succeeded him in the Imamate, another son named Hamza, from whom Shaykh Saff

The seventh Imam Musa Kazim. claimed descent, is a fact vouched for by the historian al-Ya'qubf¹, but the next dozen links in the chain (including five Muhammads without further designation) are too vague to admit of identification. The earliest ancestor of the Safawis who is invested with any definite attributes is Firuzshah-i-Zarrfn-kulah (" Golden-cap "), who is stated by the Silsilatu'n-Nasab to have been made governor of Ardabfl, henceforth the home and rallying-point of the family, by a son of Ibrdhfm-i-Adham, here represented as king of Persia. Ibrdhfm-i-Adham, however, though reputed of kingly race, renounced the world, became a notable saint, and died about A.D. 780 in Syria, and history knows nothing of any son of his who succeeded to a throne in Persia or elsewhere. Ffruzshah died after a prosperous life at Rangfn in Gildn, and was succeeded by his son 'Awad, of whom

'Awad al-Khawdss. nothing is recorded save that he lived and died at Isfaranjan near Ardabfl. His son Muhammad earned the title of Hafiz because he knew the QuSdn by heart, an accomplishment for which he is said to have been indebted to the *Jinn*², who kidnapped him at the age of seven and educated him amongst themselves for a like number of years. The two succeeding heads of the family, Saldhu'd-Din Rashfd and Qutbu'd-Dm Ahmad, seem to have lived quietly at Kalkhordn⁸, devoting themselves to agriculture, until a fierce incursion of

Muhammad Hafiz

Salahu'd-Din Rashid.

Qutbu'd-Din Ahmad.

¹ Ed. Houtsma, vol. ii, p. 500.

² For some account of the believing Jinn, see Qur'an, lxxii.

⁸ This, as M. V. Mmorsky has pointed out to me, and not " Gilkhwardn," is the proper pronunciation of this name.

the Georgians compelled the latter to flee to Ardabfl with his family, including his little son Amfnu'd-Din Jibra'fl, then only a month old. Even here they were not left unmolested: the Georgians pursued them and they had to take refuge in a cellar, where their lives were only saved by a devoted youth, who, ere he fell beneath the swords of his assailants, succeeded in concealing the entrance to the cellar by throwing down a large earthen jar over it. Qutbu'd-Din himself was severely wounded in the neck and hardly escaped with his life, and his grandson Shaykh Saff, who was born during his life, used to relate that when his grandfather took him on his shoulder he used to put four baby fingers into the scar left by the wound. In due course Qutbu'd-Din was succeeded by his son Aminu'd-Din Jibra'fl, Amfnu'd-Din Jibra'fl, farmer and saint, who adopted Khwaja Kamalu'd-Din 'Arabshah as his spiritual director, and married a lady named Dawlatf; she in due course, in the year 650/1252-3, bore him the son who afterwards became famous as Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Din, Safiyyu'd-Din, yu'd-Dm, with whom the family suddenly emerges from comparative obscurity into great fame. The author of the Silsilatu'n-Nasab) not content with giving the year of his birth, further fixes the date as follows. At the time of his birth Shams-i-Tabriz had been dead five years, Shaykh Muhyi'd-Din ibnu'l-'Arabf twelve years, and Najmu'd-Din Kubra thirty-two years. He was five years old when Hulagu Khan the Mongol conquered Persia, twenty-two on the death of Jalalu'd-Din Rumf, and forty-one on the death of Sa'df. The eminent saints contemporary with him included Amfr 'Abdu'llah-i-Shfrazf, Shaykh Najibu'd-Dm Buzghush, 'Ala'-u'd-Dawla-i-Samnanf and Shaykh Mahmud-i-Shabistari (author of the Gulshan-i-Raz or "Rose-bed of Mystery"). He had three elder¹ and two younger brothers² and one elder sister, being thus the fifth in a family of seven; and his father died when he was six years of age.

¹ Muhammad, Salahu'd-Dm Rashid and Isma'fl.

² Ya'qub and Fakhru'd-Din Yusuf.

SHAYKH SAFIYYU'D-DfN (A.D. 1252-1334).

Hitherto we have suffered from the exiguity of biographical details, but now we are rather embarrassed by their abundance. The Safwatu's-Safd, it is true, probably contains all that can now be known about Shaykh Saff, but it is a voluminous work, containing some 216,000 words, and written in a fairly simple and direct style without much "stuffing" {hashw) or rhetorical adornment, so that anything approaching a full analysis of its contents would in itself constitute a volume of considerable size. It is lamentably deficient in dates, and in general deals rather with the spiritual than the material aspects of the life of Shaykh Saff and his director Shaykh Zahid-i-Gflanf. Stated as briefly as possible, its contents are as follows:

Scope, size and contents of the Safwatu'f-Sa/d.

Introduction (in 2 sections). Shaykh Saff's advent foretold by the Prophet and by former saints, such as Jalalu'd-Din Rumf.

Chapter I (in 11 sections, two of which are further subdivided). Early life of Shaykh Saff. His genealogy. Portents preceding his birth. His birth and childhood. His search for a spiritual director. He finally meets Shaykh Zahid of Gfldn. His life as a disciple of this holy man. His succession to the supremacy of the Order. His spiritual affiliation up to the Prophet. Characteristics and miracles of Shaykh Zahid.

Chapter II (in 3 sections). Some of the miracles of Shaykh Saff, whereby he delivered men from the perils of the sea and of deep waters, of mountains, mist and snow, and from foes, bondage and sickness.

Chapter III (in 3 sections). Some of the miracles wrought by the favourable or unfavourable regards of Shaykh Saff.

Chapter IV (in 6 sections, two of which are further subdivided). Some of Shaykh Saff's sayings, and his explanations of verses of the Qur'dn, traditions of the Prophet, utterances of the Saints, and allegorical verses of the poets.

Chapter V (in 3 sections). Some of Shaykh Saff's miracles connected with the /inn, with animals, and with inanimate objects.

Chapter FZ (undivided). Ecstasies and devotional dancing of Shaykh Saff.

Chapter VII (in 5 sections). Various miracles of Shaykh Saff, such as thought-reading, foretelling future events, converse with the dead, etc.

Chapter VIII (in 27 sections). Further examples of the virtues, powers, pious actions, effective prayers, intuitions and views of Shaykh Saff, vouched for by his son Shaykh Sadru'd-Din.

Chapter IX (in 2 sections). Last illness and death of Shaykh Saff.

Chapter X (in 3 sections). Posthumous miracles of Shaykh Saff.

Chapter XI (in 3 sections). The fame and greatness of Shaykh Saff and his vicars (Khula/d) throughout the world.

Chapter XII (in 2 sections). Miracles wrought by Shaykh Saff's disciples.

Conclusion.

That so comparatively small a portion of this voluminous work should be biographical is disappointing but not surprising, for how can those who regard themselves as belonging to the Timeless and Placeless (La Makdri) be expected to trouble themselves about dates or similar details? All these hagiographies, indeed, have a similar character, and deal chiefly with the pious sayings, devout practices and supernatural achievements (kardmdt) of those whose lives they record.

Characteristics of Muslim hagiographies.

That these *karamat*¹ have an interest of their own in connection with Psychical Research has been recognised by D. B. Macdonald in his excellent book on *The Religious Attitude and Life in Islam and by CI. Huart in his *Saints des Derviches Tourneurs*³. The latter classifies the psychical phenomena recorded in his original, the Mand-qibul-Art/in (composed about 718/1318, only some thirty years earlier than the Safwatu's-Sa'd, which was very probably modelled on it), as follows: dreams; knowledge of future events; second sight and divination of hidden objects; thought-transference; luminosity of bodies, human and inanimate; automatic opening of closed doors; ubiquity; anaesthesia and immunity against poisons; action on material objects at a distance; production of the precious metals; abnormal muscular, digestive and sexual powers and physical enlargements of the body ; shifting features and instability of countenance ; apparitions; psychotherapy; replies to difficult questions; conversions to Islam; sermons to animals; vengeance of the Saints; mental alienation; protracted seclusion and fasting; talismans ; sudden disappearances. Examples of all, or nearly all, of these phenomena are to be found in the Safwatu's-Safdy while a smaller but fairly representative selection is contained in the Silsilatu'n-Nasab, but a detailed examination of them, though not without interest and value, would be out of place in this volume. It must be noted, however, that certain aspects of these Muslim saints, as recorded by their disciples and admirers, are to Western minds somewhat repellent; their curses are no less effective than their blessings, and their indulgences no less remarkable than their abstentions, while grim jests on the fate of such as have incurred their displeasure are not uncommon. Thus a certain prince named Siydmak, son of Shfrwanshah, when setting out for the Mongol camp (urdti), spoke in a disparaging manner of Shaykh Zahid's disciples, and threatened on his return to pull down or burn their monasteries. When this was reported to the Shaykh he merely remarked, playing on the prince's name, that Siydmak would become Siydh-marg (meaning "the Black Death"); which saying was duly fulfilled, for, having in some way incurred the wrath of the Mongol sovereign, he was, after the barbarous fashion of these people, wrapped up in black felt and kicked or trampled to death¹. To Shaykh Zahid, on the other hand, Ghazan Khan⁸ the Mongol Ilkhan showed the greatest respect, especially after the saint had exhibited his powers of mind-reading, which so impressed Ghazan that he insisted on kissing his feet.

¹ The supernatural achievements of thaumaturgists are divided by Jdmf {Nafahdu'l-Uns, ed. Nassau Lees, pp. 22-31) into three classes : (I) the evidential miracles of the Prophets, called mu'pzd; (II) the "gifts" (kardmdt) vouchsafed by God to his saints for their greater honour ; and (III) the "wonders" (khawariqu'l-adat) wrought by ordinary men by means of Black or White Magic.

² University of Chicago Press, 1909.

³ Paris, Leroux, 1918-1922.

Externally the life of Shaykh Saff, especially after he became the disciple of Shaykh Zahid and settled at Ardabfl, was not very eventful. As a child he was serious, unsociable and disinclined for play. At a comparatively early age he appears to have got a "concern" about religion, and to have seen visions and held converse with the Unseen World. Finding no adequate direction in Ardabfl, and hearing the fame of Shaykh childhood.

Shaykh Saff's

¹ The last 'Abdusid Caliph, al-Musta'sim, is said to have been put to death by Hulagu Khan in this way, the Mongols having a dislike to shedding kingly blood. So Clavijo informs us that at the court of T(mur "the custom is that when a great man is put to death he is hanged; but the meaner sort are beheaded." See Sir Clements Markham's translation of his Narrative, published by the Hakluyt Society in 1859, p. 150.

^a He reigned A.D. 1295-1304. See my Pers. Lit. iri, pp. 40-46.

Najfbu'd-Di'n Buzghush of Shfraz, he desired to go thither, but, having finally overcome his mother's opposition to the journey, arrived there only to find the saint dead¹. While at Shfraz he made the acquaintance of many notable saints and darwishes, and of the celebrated poet Sa'df, He meets Sa'df. of whom, however, he seems to have formed but a poor opinion. Indeed he appears to have treated the poet with scant civility, even refusing to accept an autograph copy of his poems. Finally Zahfru'd-Din, the son and successor of Shaykh Buzghush, told Shaykh Saff that no one could satisfy his spiritual needs except Shaykh Zahid of Gfl£n, whose personal appearance and dwelling-place on the shore of the Caspian Sea he described to him in detail. He becomes the disciple of Shaykh Zahid of Gfl£n. Four years elapsed, however, ere he was successful in tracking down the elusive saint, then sixty years of age, by whom he was cordially welcomed, and with whom he spent the next twenty-five years of his life.

Shaykh Zahid's full name, as given in the Safwatu's-Safd, is Taju'd-Din Ibrahim ibn Rawshan Amir ibn Babil ibn Shaykh Pindar (or Bundar) al-Kurdf as-Sanjanf, Account of Shaykh Zahid and the mother of his grandfather Babil is said to have been a Jinniyya. The title of Zdhid ("the Ascetic" or "Abstemious") was given to him by his Director Sayyid Jamalu'd-Din for reasons which are variously stated. He gave his daughter Bfbf Fatima in marriage to Shaykh Saff, to whom she bore three sons, of whom the second, Sadru'd-Din, ultimately succeeded his father as head of the Order. The author of the Silsilatu'n-Nasab was one of his descendants, who were collectively known as Pir-zdda and apparently continued to enjoy high consideration during the whole Safawi period.

From the data given by the Silsilatu'n-Nasab, viz. that ¹ According to Jami (Nafahat, p. 548) he died in Sha'ban 678 (Dec, 1279).

Sheikh Abdul Fawaz presenting the captured horse of the Dutch leader, Ben Muhammad Khan, to Sultan Abdul Aziz.

From a MS. of the Siyaat-n-Nasab-i-Safawiya (A. D. 1260-1270) in the Library of Professor E. G. Browne.

Shaykh Zihid was 35 years older than Shaykh Safi, that both died at the age of 85, and that the latter died in 735/1334, we may conclude that the former died about 700/1300; and this is corroborated by the further statement that his grandson Sadru'd-Din was born in 704/1305, four years after his death. Shaykh Safif now became head of the Order, and held this position for 35 years, when he died¹, and was in turn succeeded by his son Sadru'd-Din. He produced some poetry both in the dialect of Gflan (in which also several of his conversations with Shaykh Zahid were conducted) and likewise in ordinary Persian. Though one of his quatrains* testifies to his love of 'Alf (how much soever he in whose heart is a grain of love for 'AH may sin, God will forgive him" are his words), I find no evidence that he held those strong Shf'a views which subsequently characterised his descendants. There is, indeed, a piece of evidence to the contrary in the Ahsanu't-Tawdrikh, an important unpublished history of the first two Safawi kings composed in the reign of Shah Tahmasp and including the years A.H. 901-985 (A.D. 1495-1577)³. In a letter of remonstrance addressed to this ruler by the Uzbek 'Ubayd Khan in 936/1529-1530 the following sentence occurs⁴:

و پدر کلان شما جناب مرحوم شیخ صفی را همچنین شنیده ابر
که مردی عزیز اهل سُنّت و جماعت بوده مارا حیرت عظیم دست میدهد که شما نه روش حضرت مرتضی علی را تابعید و نه روش پدر کلان را'

¹ On Monday, Muharram 12, 735 (Sept. 12, 1334).

² See/.R.A.S. for July, 1921, p. 403.

³ Mr A. G. Ellis most kindly placed at my disposal his MS. of this rare book, to which all subsequent references are made.

⁴ F. 166^a.

"We have thus heard concerning your ancestor, His sainted Holiness Shaykh Saff, that he was a good man and an orthodox Sunnf, and we are greatly astonished that you neither follow the conduct of Murtadd. *Alf nor that of your ancestor."

He did much, however, to extend and develop the Order of which he was the Superior, and his influence is illustrated by a statement of Mawlind Shamsu'd-Din Barnfqf of Ardabfl, quoted in the Silsilatit n-Nasa&l that the number of those who came to visit him along one road only—that from Maragha and Tabriz—in the course of three months amounted to some thirteen thousand. Many if not most of these must have come from Asia Minor, so that even at this early date the Order was establishing and consolidating itself in regions where it was afterwards destined to cause the greatest anxiety to the Ottoman Sultans²

Shaykh Sadru'd-Din succeeded his father at the age of 31 in 735/1334 and controlled the affairs of the Order for 59 years until his death in 794/1392. He also composed verses in Persian, and is besides credited with many miracles, the most celebrated of which was his recovery and restoration to Ardabfl of the door of the principal mosque which had been carried off by the Georgians when they raided that city about 600/1203--4⁸. Amongst the most celebrated of his disciples was the poet Qdsimu'l-Anwar, whose orthodoxy was somewhat suspect, and who was expelled from Herat by Shah-rukh under circumstances which I have discussed elsewhere⁴. That Shaykh Sadru'd-Dm's influence and ac-

Influence of Shaykh Saff
in Asia Mmoi

Sadru'd-Din succeeds his father in 735/1334

¹ See JR A S. for July, 1921, pp. 403-4.

² Compare Dr Franz Babinger's remarks in his admirable study Schejch Bedr ed-Din der Sohn des Richters von Simaw (Berlin and Leipzig, 1921), especially p. 15 of the Sonderabdruck.

³ See pp. 36-7 supra, and J R A.S. for July, 1921, pp. 406-7.

⁴ Persian Literature under Tartar Dominion, pp. 473-486 and pp. 365-6. I must here note an error into which I fell concerning the tivities also aroused the suspicions of neighbouring potentates is shown by the action of Malik-i-Ashraf¹, who lured him to Tabriz and kept him in confinement there for three months, when, warned by a dream, he released him, but subsequently attempted to recapture him and compelled him to flee into Gilan. Other holy and learned men suffered at the hands of this tyrant, and one of them, the Qadi Muhyi'd-Din of Barda'a, depicted in such vivid colours the odious oppression of Malik-i-Ashraf to Jam Beg Khan son of Uzbek, the ruler of the Dasht-i-Oipchaq, that the latter invaded Adhar-bayjan, defeated Malik-i-Ashraf, and put him to death. According to the *Silsilat-i n-Nasab he also had an interview with Shaykh Sadru'd-Din, treated him with great respect, and confirmed to him the possession of certain estates whereof the revenues had formerly been allocated to the shrine at Ardabil.

Shaykh Sadru'd-Din, like his father Shaykh Saff, performed the pilgrimage to Mecca at the end of his life, and is said to have brought back with him to Ardabil the Prophet's standard. Shortly after his return he died, in 794/1392, and was succeeded by his son Khwaja 'All, who controlled the affairs of the Order for thirty-six years until his death on Rajab 18, 830 (May 15, 1427). This happened in Palestine, where he is buried, his tomb being known as that of "Sayyid 'All 'Ajami⁸." Like his father and grandfather he verses of Qasim quoted on p. 474. These obviously refer not to Shaykh Safi but to his son Sadru'd-Din, who actually lived exactly ninety years (A.H. 704-794). The word in 1. 1 probably needs emendation to some word (like meaning "son"; in any case this is its meaning here. The translation should run. "The Sadr of Saintship, who is the son [or survivor or representative] of Shaykh Safi," etc.

Sadru'd-Din is succeeded in 794/1392 by his son Khwaja 'Ah

¹ See d'Ohsson's Histoire des Mongols, vol. iv, pp. 740-2

² J.R.A.S. for July, 1921, pp. 405-6.

³ See J.R.A.S. for July, 1921, p. 407. Dr Franz Babinger wrote to was a worker of miracles and a poet, and over two hundred of his Persian verses are quoted in the Silsilatun-Nasab. In him strong Shi'a tendencies reveal themselves : instigated by the Ninth Imam Muhammad Taqi in a dream he converts the people of Dizful, by a miraculous stoppage of their river, to a belief in and recognition of the supreme holiness of 'AH ibn Abf Talib; and he exhorts Timur, whose regard he had succeeded in winning by a display of his psychical powers, to " chastise, as they deserve, the Yazfdi Kurds, the friends of Mu'awiya, because of whom we wear the black garb of mourning for the Immaculate Imams¹." More celebrated is his intercession with Timur on behalf of a number of Turkish prisoners (asirdn~i-Riirn) whose release he secured, and whose grateful descendants, known as "the Turkish Sufis" (Stifiydn-i-Rtimhi), became the most devoted adherents and supporters of the Safawi family².

me in a private letter " Quds-i-Khalil ist vielmehr al-Ouds wa'l-Khalil, d h Jerusalem und Hebron, eine haufige Bezeichnung fur Sud-palastina." This is confirmed by the Rev. Canon J E Hanauer, to whom Dr Babinger wrote about this matter, and who kindly endeavoured to identify this tomb. His very interesting letter is too long to quote in full "The Arab historian Mejd ed-Din," he says, "who wrote about AD. 1495, i e. seventy years later [than Khwaja 'Alfs death], gives a list of the most lenowned Shaykhs buried at Hebron, but does not mention 'Alf 'Ajamf We must therefore look for the shrine elsewhere Four different places of note suggest themselves." These are (1) the Haram of 'AH ibn 'Alawf i\ hours north of Jaffa; (2) the Wall of al-'Ajamf, just south of Jaffa ; (3) a sacred oak-grove with the shrine of "the Imam 'Alp near the Bab-el-Wad; and (4) another very holy shrine of al-'Ajami, on the hill above the village of Bayt Mahsir, amidst woods and thickets. Canon Hanauer is inclined to think that the last is most probably the tomb in question.

¹ J.R.A.S. for July, 1921, p. 408

² See Sir John Malcolm's History of Persia (ed 1815), vol i, pp. 496-7 and footnotes. The ascription of this act of intercession to Shaykh Sadru'd-Din and still more to his father Safiyyu'd-Din is an anachronism.

Shaykh Ibrahim, better known as Shaykh Shah, succeeded his father in 830/1427 and died in 851/1447-8.

Shaykh Shih,
A.H. 830-851
(A.D. 1427-1447;

Little is recorded of him save the names of his six sons, and he is even omitted entirely in the succession by the Ta'wikh-i-Alam-drd-yi-'Abdsi. He was succeeded by his youngest son Shaykh

Shaykh Junayd
(A.D. 1447-1456]

Junayd, with whom the militant character of the family first asserted itself. He visited Diyar Bakr and won the favour of Uzun Hasan, the celebrated ruler of the "White Sheep" Dynasty, who bestowed on him the hand of his sister Khadija in marriage. This alliance, combined with the assembly round his standard of ten thousand Sufi warriors (ghuzat-i-Sufiyya), "who deemed the risking of their lives in the path of their perfect Director the least of the degrees of devotion¹," aroused the alarm of Jahanshah, the Turkman ruler of Adharbadyjan and the two 'Iraqs, and other neighbouring princes, and Shaykh Junayd fell in battle against Shfrwan-shah². His body, according to one account, was brought to Ardabil and there buried, but according to others it was buried near the battle-field at a village variously called Quryal, Qaruyal or Ouriydn.

Shaykh Haydar (the "Sechaidar" of Angiolello), like his father Junayd, whom he succeeded, found favour in the eyes of the now aged Uzun Hasan, his maternal uncle, who gave him in marriage his daughter Marta, Halfma, Baki Aqi or 'Alam-shah Begum, whose mother, the celebrated Despina Khatun ("Despinacaton"), was the daughter of Kalo Ioannes, the last Christian Emperor of Trebizond, of the noble Greek family of the Comneni³. The anonymous Venetian merchant whose narrative is included in the Italian travels in Persia t'i the

Shaykh Haydar
(A.D. 1456-1488).

¹ These particulars are from the Tchrikh-t-'Alam-drd-yi-'AbdsL

² In 860/1456 according to Babinger, op. at., p. 83.

³ See Pers. Lit. ni, p. 407.

*fifteenth and sixteenth centuries*¹ describes him as "a lord about the rank of a count, named Secaidar, of a religion or sect named Sophi, revered by his co-religionists as a saint and obeyed as a chief. There are," he continues, "numbers of them in different parts of Persia, as in Natolia (Anatolia) and Caramania (Qaraman), all of whom bore great respect to this Secaidar, who was a native of this city of Ardouil (Ardabfl or Ardawfl), where he had converted many to the Suffavean (Safawi) doctrine. Indeed he was like the abbot of a nation of monks; he had six children, three boys² and three girls, by a daughter of Assambei (Hasan Bey, te. Uzun Hasan); he also bore an intense hatred to the Christians/" He it was who, divinely instructed in a dream, bade his followers adopt in place of the Turkman cap (taqiya-i-Turkman) the scarlet cap of twelve gores {Tdj-i-diiwdzda tark)* from which they became universally known as "Red Heads" (Qizil-bdsh in Turkish; Surkh-sar in Persian). "They are accustomed," says the anonymous Venetian merchant cited above (p. 206 of the Italian Travels), "to wear a red caftan, and above that a high conical turban made with a dozen folds, representing the twelve sacraments of their sect, or the twelve descendants of 'AH⁴."

Origin of the term Qizil-bdsh,

Shaykh Haydar, like his father, fell in battle against the hosts of Shirwanshah and his Turkman allies at Tabarsaran near Darband. Twenty-two years later his death was ¹ Translated and edited by Charles Grey and published by the Hakluyt Society in 1873, pp. 139-207.

² These were Sultan 'Ali Mirza (or Padishah), Isma'il, and Ibrahim, according to the Ta'rikh-t-'Alam-dr-d-yi-'Abdsi but they are differently given in the Ahsanu't-Tawdrikh.

³ See the late Sir A. Houtum-Schindler's note on this in the J.ft.A.S. for 1897, pp. 114-115. For a long note on Qizil-bdsh see Babinger's Scheich Bedr ed-Din, pp. 84-5 of the Sonderabdruck.

⁴ This, of course, is an error, for the Twelve Imims include 'Ali, who was the first of them and was succeeded by eleven of his descendants.

avenged and his body recovered and brought to Ardabil by his redoutable son Shah Isma'fl, who was at this time (Rajab 20, 893 : June 30, 1488)¹ only a year old.

Shaykh Haydai killed in battle in 893/1488.

SHAH ISMAIL.

(Born 892/1487; crowned 905/1499-1500; died 930/1523-4.)

Nothing could appear more unpromising than the position of the three little sons of Shaykh Haydar, who were for the moment entirely at the mercy of their father's enemies. Sultan Ya'qub, the son of Uzun Hasan, however, shrank from killing them for the sake of their mother, who was his sister, and contented himself, with exiling them to Istakhr in Firs, where they were placed in the custody of the governor Mansur Beg Parnak. According to Angiolello², however, the three boys were confined on an island in the "Lake of Astumar" (identified by the translator with Lake Van) inhabited by Armenian Christians, where they remained for three years and became "very much beloved, especially Ismael, the second, for his beauty and pleasing manners," so that when Rustam, the grandson of Uzun Hasan, after the death of his uncle Ya'qub, sent a message to demand their surrender, intending to put them to death, the Armenians not only made excuses for not giving them up but enabled them to escape by boat to the "country of Carabas" (Qara-bagh). In the Persian accounts, however, Rustam is credited with their release from Istakhr, because, being at war with his cousin Bay-sunqur, he thought to strengthen himself by an alliance with them and their numerous devoted followers. He accordingly invited the eldest brother Sultdn 'AH to Tabriz, ¹ According to the rare history of Shah Isma'il represented by Add. 200 of the Cambridge University Library, however, Shaykh Haydar was killed in 895/1490.

² Pp. 101-2 of the Hakluyt Society's translation by Charles Grey.

CREATION OF THE SAFAWĪ POWER [PT I received him with much honour, conferred on him all the paraphernalia of sovereignty and the title of Padiskdh, and despatched him to attack Baysunqur, whom he defeated and slew in a battle near Ahar. Having thus got rid of his rival, Rustam sought to rid himself of his ally, who, warned by one of his Turkman disciples, fled to Ardabfl, but was Isma'il's brother Sultan 'AH is killed overtaken by his enemies at the neighbouring village of Shamasf and killed in the ensuing skirmish in the year 900/1494-5\ His two brothers, however, reached Ardabil in safety, and were concealed by their faithful followers during the house-to-house search instituted by the Turkmans, until an opportunity presented itself of conveying them secretly into Gflan, first to Rasht, where they remained for a short period, estimated

Isma'fl in hiding in Lahijdn.

at anything from seven to thirty days, and then to Lahijan, the ruler of which place, Kar-kiya

Mirza 'AH, accorded them hospitality and protection for several years. It is related that on one occasion when their Turkman foes came to look for them he caused them to be suspended in a cage in the woods so as to enable him to swear that they had no foothold on his territory.

To the valour and devotion of Isma'iTs disciples, the "Sufis of Lahijan," contemporary European writers testify Devotion of Isma'fl's followers

as forcibly as the Persian historians. "This Sophi," says the anonymous Italian merchant², "is loved and revered by his people as a god, and especially by his soldiers, many of whom enter into battle without armour, expecting their master Ismael to watch over them in the fight—The name of God is forgotten throughout Persia and only that of Ismael remembered." "The Suffaveans fought like lions" is a phrase which repeatedly occurs in the pages of the Venetian travellers. Yet for all this, and the numbers and wide ramifications of the Order ("from the remotest West to the limits of Balkh and Bukhara," says the rare history of Shah Isma'il, speaking of the days of his grandfather Junayd), it is doubtful if their astounding successes would have been possible in the first instance but for the bitter internecine feuds of the ruling "White Sheep" dynasty after the death of the great and wise tizun Hasan in AD. 1478, from which time onwards their history is a mere welter of fratricidal warfare.

¹ The following portion of this account, taken from the rare history of Shah Isma'il mentioned in n. 1 on p. 15 above, has been published with translation by Sir E. Denison Ross in theyR.A.S. for 1896 (vol. xxviii), pp. 264-283.

² P. 206 of the Hakluyt Society's Travels of Venetians in Persia (London, 1873). See also p. 223 of the same volume, where Vincentio d'Alessandr speaks in similar terms of the devotion of his subjects to Tahmisp, the son and successor of Isma'iJL Most of this passage has been already quoted on p. 23 supra.

Isma'il was only thirteen years of age when he set out from the seclusion of Lahijan on his career of conquest.

Isma'il at the age of thirteen sets out on his career of conquest

He was accompanied at first by only seven devoted "Sufis," but, as he advanced by way of Tarum and Khalkhal to Ardabfl, he was reinforced at every stage by brave and ardent disciples, many from Syria and Asia Minor¹ Ordered to leave Ardabfl by the Turkman Sultan 'AH Beg Chakarlu, he retired for a while to Arjawan near Astara on the Caspian Sea, where he amused himself with fishing, of which he was very fond; but in the spring of A.D. 1500 he was back at Ardabfl, having rallied round him a goodly army of the seven Turkish tribes who constituted the backbone of the ¹ Cf Pers Lit. III p. 417. So the rare history of Shdh Isma'il (Add. 200 of the Cambridge University Library, f 27^a).

در عرض راه ارباب جلادت و صوفیان پاک طینت از روی عقیدت
در هر منزلی از منازل از طوائف روم و شام بهوگب عالی می پیوستند

Safawi military power¹. He now felt himself strong enough to embark on a holy war against the Georgian "infidels" and a war of revenge against Farrukh-Yasar, king of Shirwan, whom he defeated and killed near Gulistan. He decapitated and burned the corpse, built a tower of his enemies' heads, destroyed the tombs of the Shirwanshahs, and exhumed and burned the remains of the last king, Khalfl, who had killed his grandfather Shaykh Junayd. The noble dynasty thus extinguished claimed descent from the great Sasanian king Anusharwdn (Nushfrwan), and numbered amongst them the patron of the famous panegyrist Khaqdnf.

Isma'fl defeats and kills Farrukh-Yasar, king of Shirwan, 906/1500.

Having captured Baku (Bddktiya, Bddkicbd) Isma'fl, advised in a dream by the Imams, decided to raise the ^sjege of Gulistan and march on Adharjb^yjcia_ Alwand and liis "White Sheep" Turkmans endeavoured to arrest his advance, but were utterly defeated at the decisive battle of Shurur with great slaughter. Alwand fled to Arzinjan, while Isma'il entered Tabriz in triumph and was there crowned King of Persia, Henceforth, therefore, we shall speak of him as Shah Isma'fl, but by the Persian historians he is often entitled Khdqdn-i-Iskandar-shdn ("the Prince like unto Alexander in state"), as his son and successor Shah Tahmdsp is called Shdh-i-Din-pandit ("the King who is the Refuge of Religion").

Battle of Sburtir Isma'il is crowned at Tabriz
907/1501-2

Already Shah Isma'fl and his partisans had given ample proof of their strong Shf'a convictions. Their battle-cry on the day they slew Shirwdnshah was Allah! Allah! wa 'AH waliyyuHldh (God! God! and 'AH is the Friend of God!)"², while Alwand was offered peace if he would ¹ These were the Shamlu, Rumlu, Ustajlu, Takallu, Dhu'l-Qadar, Afshdr and Qajar. From the two last respectively there arose in later days Nadir Shah and the present Royal House of Persia.

² Add. 200 of the Cambridge University Library, f. 35^b.

embrace this doctrine and pronounce this formula¹. But now Shih Isma'fl resolved that, with his assumption of the kingly rank the Shi'a faith should become not merely the State religion but the only tolerated creed. This decision caused anxiety even to some of the Shi'a divines of Tabriz, who, on the night preceding Ismail's coronation, represented to him that of the two or three hundred thousand inhabitants of that city at least two-thirds were Sunnfs; that the Shi'a formula had not been publicly uttered from the pulpit since the time of the Imams themselves; and that if the majority of the people refused to accept a Shi'a ruler, it would be difficult to deal with the situation which would then arise. To this Shah Isma'fl replied, "I am committed to this action; God and the Immaculate Imams are with me, and I fear no one; by God's help, if the people utter one word of protest, I will draw the sword and leave not one of them alive"². Nor did he content himself with glorifying 'Alf and his descendants, but ordained the public cursing of the first three Caliphs of the Sunnfs, Abu Bakr, 'Umar and 'Uthmdn, and that all who heard the cursing should respond Energetic measures adopted by Shah Isma'fl to propagate the Shi'a doctrine.

The cursing of the first three Caliphs instituted.

¹ Add. 200 of the Cambridge University Library, f. 40.

² /dt'd.y f. 44^b. The text of this important passage, to which reference has been already made (p 22 supra) runs as follows :

قربانت شویر دوست سیصد هزار خلق که در تبریزست چهار
 دانگ آن همه سنی اند و از زمان حضرات تا حال این خطبه را
 کسی بر ملا نخوانده و میترسیم که مردم بگویند که پادشاه
 شیعه نمیخواهیم و نعوذ بالله اگر رعیت بر کردند چه تدارک درین
 باب توان کرد؛ پادشاه فرمودند که مرا باین کار باز داشته
 اند و خدای عالم با حضرات ائمه معصومین همراه منند و من
 از هیچ کس باک ندارم بتوفیق الله تعالی اند رعیت حرفی بگویند شمشیر میکشم و یک کس را زنده نمیگذارم؛

" May it be more, not less!" (Bish bad, kam rna-bdd /) or suffer death in case of refusal.

Immediately after his coronation, according to the Ahsaniit-Tawdrikh}, he ordered all preachers (Khutaba) throughout his realms to introduce the distinctively Shi'a formulae " I bear witness that 'Ali is the Friend of God " and " hasten to the best of deeds " (hayya ila khayr?I-amal) into the profession of Faith and the call to Prayer respectively; which formulae had been in abeyance since Tughnl Beg the Saljuq had put to flight and slain al-Basasirf five hundred and twenty-eight years previously². He also instituted the public cursing of Abu Bakr, 'Umar and 'Uthman in the streets and markets, as above mentioned, threatening recalcitrants with decapitation. Owing to the dearth of Shi'a theological works the religious instruction of the people necessitated by the change of doctrine presented great difficulties, but finally the Qadf Nasru'llah Zaytuni produced from his library the first volume of the QawdHdti l-Isldm ("Rules of Islam") of Shaykh Jamalud-Din... ibn 'Alf ibnu'l-Mutahhir al-Hilli³, which served as a basis of instruction " until day by day the Sun of Truth of the Doctrine of the Twelve [Imamb]

Rigorous enforcement of ShPa doctrine.

¹ F. 44 of Mr A. G. Ellis's manuscript.

² See Weil's Geschichte der Chahfen, vol. in, pp. 92-102 Al-Basasirf was the Commander-in-chief of the troops of the Bu way hid ai-Mahku'r-Rahim. He espoused the cause of the Fatimid Caliph al-Mustansir and attempted to depose the 'Abbasid Caliph al-Qa'im. He was killed on Dhu'l-Qa'da 6, 451 (Dec. 14, 1059). Since Isma'fi was crowned in 907/1501-2, we must understand "previously" as referring not to this event, but to the composition of the Ahsani? t-Tawdrikh, or rather this portion of it, for it extends to the year 985/1577, while the date we require is 979/1571-2 (451 + 5 28 = 979).

³ The name is defective in the MS., but most closely resembles this. Such a writer is mentioned towards the end of the fifth Majhs of the Majalisu'l-Mu'minin, but he has no work bearing precisely this name. It is possible that the popular ShardyfuH-Isldin of another al-Hilli is intended. See Rieu's Arabic Supplement, p. 212.

increased its altitude, and all parts and regions of the world became illuminated by the dawning effulgences of the Path of Verification."

Of the anger and alarm aroused by these proceedings in the neighbouring kingdoms, and especially in the Ottoman Empire, we shall have to speak presently, but first we may with advantage give from the *Ahsanu't-Tawdrih*¹ the list of potentates in Persia itself who at this time claimed sovereign

Rival rulers in Persia at this time,
907/1501-2.

power: (1) Shah Isma'il in Adharbayjan; (2) Sultan Murad in most of 'Iraq, (3) Murad Beg Bayandari in Yazd; (4) Ra'fs Muhammad Karra () in Abarquh; (5) Husayn Kiya-yi-Chalawf in Samndn, Khwar and Firuzkuh, (6) Bank Parnfk in 'Irdq-i-'Arab, (7) Qasim Beg ibn Jahangfr Beg ibn 'Alf Beg in Diyar Bakr; (8) Qadi Muhammad in conjunction with Mawland Mas'ud in Kdshan, (9) Sultan Husayn Mirza" (the Timurid) in Khurasan, (10) Amir Dhu'n-Niin in Qandahar; (11) Badi'u'z-Zaman Mirza (the Tfmurid) in Balkh; and (12) Abu'I-Fath Beg Bayandarf in Kirman.

Many of these petty rulers (Mitlukiit-Tawd'if) were quite insignificant, and several of them I cannot even identify.

None of them long stood in Shah Isma'iTs victorious path. His old enemy Alwand of the "White Sheep" dynasty suffered a decisive defeat at his hands in the summer of A.D. 1503, and died a year or so later at Diyar Bakr or Baghdad². His brother Murad was defeated and Shirdz occupied about the same time, and

Isma'il disposes of his minor rivals.

stern punishment overtook the Sunnf doctors of Kazarun, many of whom were put to death, wTnleTtKe tombs and foundations of their predecessors were destroyed³. The words Rahmat^{un} lil-Ala-

Sunn! doctors put to death at Kazarun

¹ F. 45 of Mr Ellis's MS.

² According to contemporary European accounts he was put to death in cold blood by Isma'il. See p. 62 infra, ³ Add. 200 of the Cambridge University Library, f. 55.

min ("a Mercy to the Worlds") were found, not very appropriately from an impartial point of view, to give the date 909 (A.D. 1503-4) of this event; while the equivalent chronogram Shaltdq-i-Sipdhi ("Military Coercion") was observed by the poets and wits of Fars to commemorate in like manner the appointment by Shah Isma'fl of his captain Ilyas Beg Dhu'l-Qadar as governor of Shfrdz. K£shdn, always a stronghold of the Shf'a¹, received Isma'fl with enthusiasm, and he held a great reception at the beautiful suburb of Fin. Thence he passed to the holy city of Qum, intending, apparently, to winter there, but hearing that Ilyas Beg, one of his most trusted officers, "a Sufi of pure disposition and right belief²," had been murdered by Husayn Kiyd-yi-Chaldwi, he marched out on February 25, 1504, to avenge him. Three weeks later he was at Astarabad, where he was met by Muhammad Muhsin Mfrzd, the son of the Tfmurid Sultan Husayn Mfrza, and, having attacked and destroyed the fortresses of Gulkhanddn and Ffruzkuh, he reduced the stronghold of Usta by cutting off the water-supply, massacred the garrison (ten thousand souls, according to the Ahsanu't-Tawdrikh), and took captive the wretched of captives.

Cruel treatment

Husayn Kiyd, whom he confined in an iron cage, but who succeeded in inflicting on himself a wound which in a few days proved mortal⁸. Still more unfortunate was Ra'fs Muhammad Karra of Abarquh, who rebelled and took possession of the ancient city of Yazd. Him also Shah Isma'il confined in a cage, and smeared his body with honey so that the wasps tormented him until he was finally burned alive in the mayddn of Isfahan.

¹ See the Rdhatufs-Sudiir, ed. Muhammad Iqbdl ("E. J. W. Gibb Memorial," New Series, vol. ii, 1921), p. 3a

⁸ According to Add. 200 of the Cambridge University Library (f. 61) the body was conveyed to ISfah£n and there blown to pieces in the mayddn with gunpowder.

About the same time an embassy came from the Ottoman Sultan Bdyazid II (A.D. 1481-1512) to offer "suitable gifts and presents" and congratulations on Shah Isma'fl's conquest of Ir£q and Fars. They were dismissed with robes of honour and assurances of Isma'fl's friendly sentiments, but were compelled to witness several executions, including, perhaps, that of the philosopher and judge Mir Husayn-i-Maybudi¹, whose chief offence seems to have been that he was a "fanatical Sunnf." Persian kings were disposed to take this means of impressing foreign envoys with their "justice"; Clavijo relates a similar procedure on the part of Timur^a, and Shah Isma'il's son and successor Tahmdsp sought to impress and intimidate Humay tin's ambassador Bayrdm Beg by putting to death in his presence a number of heretics^b. To the Turkish envoys it would naturally be particularly disagreeable to witness the execution of a learned Sunnf doctor by those whom they regarded as detestable schismatics.

Of the increasingly strained relations between Turkey and Persia, culminating in the Battle of Chaldirdn (August, 1514), we shall have to speak very shortly, but we must first conclude our brief survey of Shah Isma'fl's career of conquest. To describe in detail his incessant military activities would be impossible in a work of the scope and character of this book, and only the barest summary is possible.

During the years A.H. 911-915 (A.D. 1506-1510) Shah

Isma'fl was for the most part busy in the West. He first entered Hamadan and visited the tomb of the Imam-zada Sahl 'Alf. A serious revolt

Isma'U's conquest in the West,
A.D. 1506-1510.

¹ His commentary on the Hiddya is still the favourite text-book for beginners in philosophy. See also Brockelmann's Gesch. d. Arab. Lit., vol. ii, p. 210, and Rieu, B.M.P.C., p. 1077.

* Embassy to the Court of Timour, A.D. 1403-6) published by the Hakluyt Society, 1859, pp. 149-150.

^b W. Erskine's History of India, etc. (London, 1854), vol. ii, p. 281.

of the "Yazidi" Kurds¹ next demanded his attention. Their leader, Shir Sarim, was defeated and captured in a bloody battle wherein several important officers of Shah Isma'fl lost their lives. To their relatives the Kurdish prisoners were surrendered to be put to death "with torments worse than which there may not be." War was next waged against the conjoined forces of Sultan Murad, the thirteenth³ and last of the "White Sheep" dynasty, and 'Ala'u'd-Dawla Dhu'l-Qadar (the "Aliduli" of the Italian travellers of this period), who, refusing Isma'iTs proposal that he should "set his tongue in motion with the goodly word 'Ali is the Friend of God, and curse the enemies of the Faith" (to wit, the first three Caliphs), appealed for help to the Ottoman Turks. Shah Isma'fl, however, was not to be denied, and successively captured Diyar Bakr, Akhlata, Bitlis, Arjsh, and finally in 914/1508 Baghdad itself, whereby he obtained possession of the Holy Shrines of Karbala and Najaf, so dear to Shf'a hearts, where he hastened to offer prayers and thanksgivings. At Huwayza he showed that, ardent

Baghdad taken in A D. 1508

Shi'siGhuldt punished at Huwayza.

Shf'a as he was, he would not tolerate the exaggerated veneration of 'Alf characteristic of the Ghnldt, represented there by certain Arabs called Mushctsh?) who venerated 'Alf as God, and, invoking his name, would cast themselves on sharp swords without

¹ "All the Curds," says the anonymous Italian merchant (p. 157), "are truer Mahometans than the other inhabitants of Persia, since the Persians have embraced the Suffavean doctrine, while the Curds would not be converted to it: and though they wear the red caftans, yet in their hearts they bear a deadly hatred to them."

² They are thus enumerated in the AhsanuH-Taw&rikh (f. 109^b of Mr Ellis's MS.): (1) Qara 'Uthman; (2) 'Ah Beg; (3) Sultan Hamza; (4) Jahangfr Mfrzi (these four ruled over Diyar Bakr only); (5) Xlvhxi Hasan; (6) KhaHl; (7) Ya'qub; (8) Bdysunghur; (9) Rustam; (10) Ahmad Beg; (u) Muhammad! Mfrzd; (12) Alwand Mirza; (13) Sul-san Murad.

sustaining injury, after the fashion of the modern 'tsdwiyya of North Africa. Their leader, Mfr Sultan Muhsin, died about this time, and was succeeded by his son Sultan Fayyad, who claimed for himself divine honours¹. Shah Isma'fl ruthlessly suppressed these heretics, and proceeded to Dizful and Shushtar, receiving the submission of the Lur chieftain Shall Rustam, who won his favour by "the utterance of prayer and praise in the Lurf tongue with extreme sweetness." Thence Shah Isma'il made his way eastwards to Fars, encamped for a while at Darabjird, and organised a great hunting expedition, of which the special object was a kind of mountain goat which yields the "animal antidote" (pddzahr-i-haywdnty). He also put to death the Qidi Muhammad-i-Kashf, who held the high ecclesiastical office of Sadr, and replaced him by the Sayyid-i-Sharff of Astarbad, who was descended on his mother's side from the celebrated Jurjanf. He further erected at Qasr-i-Zar a mausoleum in memory of his brother Sultan Ahmad Mirzci, who had died there, and, under the title of Najm-i-Thdni ("the Second Star"), appointed Amir Ydr Ahmad-i-Khuzdnf of Isfahan to succeed "the First Star," Amir Najmu'd-Din Mas'ud of Rasht, who had recently died and been buried at Najaf. The poet Ummfdf celebrated this appointment in a very ingenious and sonorous qasida beginning:

Submission of LuristAn.

Doings in Fdrs.

زهی جوهرت کوهرِ آسمانی توئی عقلِ اولِ توئی نجمِ ثانی
رواقِ حرور را تو رکنِ عراقی عراقِ عجم را سَهِلِ یمانی

¹ Add. 200, Camb. Univ. Lib., f. 83^a :

و آن کافر مردود دعوی الوهیت کرده قوم مشعشع حالا بالوهیت قیاض... قایل اند

⁸ In this hunting expedition 56,700 head of game are said to have been killed.

From Firs Shah Ismail marched into Shfrwin (where Shaykh Shah, the son of Farrukh-Yasar, had re-established himself), recovered the body of his father Shaykh flaydar and conveyed it to Ardabfl for burial, as already related, and took Darband.

So far Shah Isma'il had been chiefly occupied in putting down minor princes and pretenders and in consolidating his power in Persia, of which he had to the West and North-West greatly enlarged the territories, and had almost restored the ancient frontiers of Scisanian times. Hitherto he had hardly come into conflict with the two powerful enemies who were destined to give so much trouble to himself and his successors, to wit the Uzbeks of Central Asia and the Ottoman Turks. Of his relations with these formidable rivals we must now speak, but, before doing so, a few more words may be said of Shah Ismail's character and appearance. As usual, a much more vivid picture of these is given by contemporary Shah Isma'il's appearance and character as depicted by contemporary European travellers.

Two powerful external enemies, the Uzbeks and Ottomans.

travellers than by his own countrymen, though his courage, energy, cruelty and restless activity are sufficiently apparent in the Persian chronicles of his reign. At the age of thirteen, when he began his career of conquest, he was, according to Caterino Zeno¹, "of noble presence and a truly royal bearing, as in his eyes there was something, I know not what, so great and commanding, which plainly showed that he would yet some day become a great ruler. Nor did the virtues of his mind disaccord with the beauty of his person, as he had an elevated genius, and such a lofty idea of things as seemed incredible at such a tender age....He had vigour of mind, quickness of perception, and a personal valour... never yet...equalled by any of his contemporaries." Anglo-lello¹ speaks of "his beauty and pleasing manners" when he was a child, and relates⁸ how, in his campaign against 'AlaVd-Dawla ("Alidoli"), "he supplied himself with provisions, paying for everything, and proclaiming abroad that everyone might bring supplies to the camp for sale, and that anyone taking anything without paying for it would be put to death." "This Sophi," he says a little further on⁸, "is fair, handsome, and very pleasing; not very tall, but of a light and well-framed figure; rather stout than slight, with broad shoulders. His hair is reddish; he only wears moustachios, and uses his left hand instead of his right. He is as brave as a game-cock, and stronger than any of his lords; in the archery contests, out of the ten apples that are knocked down, he knocks down seven; while he is at his sport they play on various instruments and sing his praises/" "He is almost worshipped," he remarks in another place⁴, "more especially by his soldiers, many of whom fight without armour, being willing to die for their master. While I was in Tauris [Tabriz] I heard that the king is displeased with this adoration, and being called God." The anonymous merchant describes him⁵ at the age of thirty-one as "Very handsome, of a magnanimous countenance, and about middle height; he is fair, stout, and with broad shoulders, his beard is shaved and he only wears a moustache, not appearing to be a very heavy man. He is as amiable as a girl, left-handed by nature, is as lively as a fawn, and stronger than any of his lords. In the archery trials at the apple he is so expert that of every ten he hits six" The same writer, on the other hand, after describing his massacre of Alwand's soldiers, of the male and female kinsmen of Sultan Ya'qub, of three

¹ Narrative of Italian Travels in Persia (Hakluyt Society, London, 1873), pp. 46-8. See p. 22 supra, where part of this passage has been already cited.

¹ Narrative of Italian Travels in Persia, p. 102 and p. 22 supra.

² Ibid., pp. 109 and 196, and p. 23 supra.

⁸ Ibid., p. i n. See pp. 22-3 supra.

* Ibid., p. 115.

⁶ Ibid., p. 202. Part of this passage has been already quoted on p. 23 supra.

hundred courtezans of Tabriz, of "eight hundred avaricious Blasi"¹ who had been brought up under Alumut [z.e. Alwand], of "all the dogs in Tauris," and of his own mother [or step-mother], concludes, "From the time of Nero to the present, I doubt whether so bloodthirsty a tyrant has ever existed." He presented, in short, the strangest blend of antithetical qualities; and we are alternately attracted by his personal charm, his unquestionable valour, generosity and—within certain limits—justice, and repelled by actions, such as those recorded above, revealing a savagery remarkable even in that cruel and bloodthirsty age. His courage was shown not only on the field of battle but in the chase. Hearing after his conquest and occupation of Baghdad of a singularly fierce man-eating lion which had its lair in a thicket and terrified the inhabitants of the neighbourhood, he insisted, in spite of all remonstrances, in destroying it single-handed with the bow he knew so well how to use². At the age of thirteen he had already slain a fierce bear in like manner in a cave near Arzinjan³. When "immense treasures" fell into his hands on the capture of one of the Caspian ports, "he divided them amongst his men, keeping nothing for himself"⁴. Yet the same traveller who reports this instance of generosity and political foresight (for in consequence of it "he was joined by numbers, even those who were not Sufaveans flocking to his standard in hopes of receiving gifts of this nature from the valiant Ismael") describes how the Shah with his own hand cut off the head of the unfortunate young prince "Alumut"⁵, captured by treachery, whom he himself had seen bound in chains in a tent; and tells of even darker deeds wrought at Tabriz on the occasion of the Shah's

¹ I am at a loss to explain this word.

² Ahsanu't-Tawarikh (Ellis MS.), f. 74^b.

³ Ibid., f. 26. 4 Travels of a Merchant, p. 188.

⁵ Ibid., pp. 197-8. The Hablu? s-Siyar and other Persian histories, however, represent Alwand as dying a natural death. Cf. p. 55 supra.

second entry into that city in A.D. 1520¹. Towards the Sunnfs he showed himself ruthless, sparing neither Ruthless repression of Sunnis.
 eminent divines like the learned Farfdu'd-Din Ahmad, a grandson of the celebrated scholar Sa'du'd-Din-i-Taftazanf, who for thirty years had held the office of Shaykhu'l-Islam in Herat², nor witty poets like Banna'f, who perished in the massacre of Qarshf in 918/1512. But perhaps the most conspicuous instance of a ferocity which pursued his foes even after their death was his treatment of the body of his old enemy Muhammad Khan Shaybanf, or Shaybak, the Uzbek, of which we shall have to speak very shortly.

It has already been stated that the foreign relations of Shah Isma'fl, after he had cleared Persia of the "White Foreign relations of Persia at this period
 Sheep " and other rivals for the sceptre of that ancient kingdom, were chiefly with three Powers, the Timurids, who still kept a precarious hold on Herat and portions of Khura^ein and Central Asia; the formidable Uzbeks of Transoxiana; and the Ottoman Turks. With the last two, rigid Sunnfs in both cases, the relations of Persia were, and continued to be, uniformly hostile; with the Timurids, themselves menaced by the Uzbeks, comparatively friendly and at times even cordial. The aged Sultan Husayn ibn Bayqara, whose brilliant and luxurious court at Herat was so famous a centre of literature and art³, is reckoned amongst the rulers who, with less success than Shah Isma'fl, endeavoured to replace the Sunnf by the Shf'a doctrine in their dominions⁴; and Babur, whether

¹ Travels of a Merchant, p. 207.

² He was put to death in Ramadan, 916/December, 1510.

³ See Dr F. R. Martin's Miniature Paintings and Painters of Persia etc., pp. 35-6.

⁴ See Lit. Hist. Pers. in, p. 456, and Add. 200 of the Cambridge University Library, f. 45^b, which places this attempt in the year 873/H68-9.

from conviction or policy, showed enough partiality towards the Shfa faction to cause grave disaffection amongst his Central Asian Sunnf subjects¹. There existed, then, in this case no such essential cause of enmity as in the two others, while a common hatred of Shaybani Khdn and his redoubtable Uzbeks naturally tended to unite Bdbur to Isma'fl.

It is beyond the scope of this work to enter into a detailed account of the decline of the Tfmurid and the rise of the Uzbek power, of which ample particulars may be found in Erskine's and other works². Suffice it to say that Shaybdnf or Shaybak Khan, a direct descendant of Chingfz Khan³, first became prominent about A.D. 1500, when he captured Samarqand and Bukh&ra, and later Tashkand and Farghdna. He invaded Khurasan in 911/1505-6, in the year of Sultdn Husayn's death, and in the course of the next year or two practically exterminated the Tfmurids, with the exception of Babur and Badf'u'z-Zaman, of whom the latter sought refuge with Shah Isma'il. It was not until 916/1510-n, however, that he came into direct conflict with Shah Isma'il, whom he had provoked by a raid on Kirman in the previous year and a most insulting letter in reply to Ismail's politely-worded remonstrance⁴. Shah Isma'fl was not slow to respond to his taunts, and,

¹ See W. Erskme's History of India, vol. 1 (London, 1854), pp. 319-320.

² For example, the History of the Moghuls of Central Asia etc., by N. Ehas and Sir E. Denison Ross (London, 1898), and, of course, the incomparable Memoirs of Bddur, in the tasteful new edition of Erskine and Ley den's translation annotated and revised by Sir Lucas King (Oxford, 1921).

³ The Ahsanu't-Tawarikh (f 88^b) gives his pedigree thus: Shaybak Khan b. Budiq Sultan b. Abu'l-Khayr Khan b. Dawlat Shaykh b. tlft-Oghian b. Fiilad-Oghlan b. Aybu Khwaja b. ... b. Bulghay b. Shaybdn b. Jujf b. Chingiz Khdn.

⁴ See Erskine's History of India, vol. i, pp. 297 et seqq. The text of this long letter is given in the Ahsanu't-Tawarikh (Ellis MS., ff. 80^b et seqq.).

the rest of his realms being for the moment tranquil, at once marched into Khurasan to meet him, visiting on his way

Death of Shay, ban! in battle,
Dec. 1510*

the Shrine of the Imam 'AH Rida at Mashhad, so sacred in Shi'a eyes. The decisive battle was fought on Dec. 1 or 2, 1510, at Tdhir-dbid near Merv, where, after a stubborn and protracted conflict, the Uzbeks were utterly defeated and Shaybanf killed. When his body was found under a heap of slain, Shah Isma'fl ordered the limbs to be cut off and distributed to different parts of his kingdom, and the head to be stuffed with straw and sent as a grim gift to the Ottoman Sultan Bayazfd II at Constantinople¹. The bones of the skull he caused to be Barbarous treatment of his remains.

mounted in gold and made into a drinking-cup for his own use, and one hand he sent to Aqa Rustam Ruz-afzun, the ruler of Mazandaran, by a special messenger, Darwfsh Muhammad Yasa'til, who cast the hand on to Rustam's skirt as he sat amidst his courtiers at Sarf, crying "Thou didst say, 'My hand on Shaybak Khan's skirt' dast-i-man-ast u ddman-i-Shaybak Khan)*: lo, his hand is now on thy skirt!" So astounded were those present by this audacity that none lifted a hand to stay the messenger's departure, and Rustam received so great a shock that he soon afterwards sickened and died. Of the drinking-cup the following grim anecdote is told. One of Shaybanfs trusted advisers, Khwaja Kamalu'd-Din Sigharchf, saved his life by professing the Shf'a faith, and was admitted into the service of Shah Isma'fl. One day at a banquet the latter, pointing to the drinking-cup, asked him if he recognized the skull of his late master. "Yes, glory be to God," replied Kamalu'd-Din, "and how favoured by fortune was ¹ According to the history of Shf'h Isma'fl contained in Add. 200 of the Cambridge University Library (f. 141), Prince (afterwards Sul^n) Salfm was greatly offended at this, and had a violent quarrel with his father Bdyazfd on the subject.

² I.e. "I seek protection from him."^w he! Nay, fortune still abides with him, so that even now he rests in the hands of so auspicious a being as thyself, who continually drinks the Wine of Delight!"

سبحان الله چه صاحب دولتی بوده که هنوز دولت درو باقیست
که با این حال بر روی دست چون تو صاحب اقبالیت که
در بدر پاده نشاط می نوشد¹

Shaybndf Khdn was sixty-one years of age at the time of his death and had reigned eleven years. He was, as already stated, a fanatical Sunni and had grievously persecuted the Shf'a in his dominions : now it was the Sunnfs who suffered in their turn at the hands of Shah Isma'fl. The Uzbek power, in spite of this disaster, was far from being broken, and, though a formal peace was concluded between them and the Persians a few months afterwards, they had an ample revenge at the battle of Ghujduwdn, where Bdbur and his Persian allies suffered a disastrous defeat and many of their leaders, including Najtn-i-Thdni, were slain in November, 1512. During the whole of the sixteenth century they were a constant menace to Persia, and accounts of their raids into Khurdsan occur with monotonous iteration in the pages of the Persian historians of this period.

We must now turn to the far more important relations of Persia with the Ottoman Turks at this period, on which more light is thrown by the State Papers so industriously compiled and edited by Firidian Bey in 982/1574 under the title of Munshc?dt-i-Said-tin ("Correspondence of the Kings")¹ than by collection of Turkish State Papers.

Firidn Bey's

¹ Printed at Constantinople m 1274/1858. Until lately I only possessed vol. 1, which comprises 626 pp. and comes down to about 966/1558-9. For some account of this most important work, see von Hammer's Gesch. d. Osmanisch. Reich., IV, p. 15; Flugel's Vienna Catalogue, i, pp. 282-3; Z.D.M.G., vn, p. 460; Notices et extraits, v, pp. 668-688; Rieu's Turkish Cat., pp. 80-83; and Hajji Khalffa (ed. Flugel), v, p. 488.

most of the Persian or Turkish historians. These letters, which passed between successive Ottoman Sultans and neighbouring rulers, as well as between them and their sons, ministers and governors, are sometimes in Turkish and sometimes in Persian or Arabic. Unfortunately many of them are undated. They have hitherto been so little used that no apology is needed for summarizing the contents or indicating the purport of such of them as concern the Safawis down to the death of Shah Isma'fī in 930/1523-4, that is, during the reigns of the Ottoman Sultans Bayazid II (886-918/1481-1512), Salim I (918-926/1512-1520), and the first four years of Sulaymān "the Magnificent" (926-930/1520-1524).

(1) From Yctq̄tib Pddishdh of the " White Sheep" dynasty to Sultān Bdyazid, announcing the defeat and death of Shaykh Haydar {Shah Isma'fī's father}, (p. 309). This letter, in Persian, is undated, but must have been written soon after Shaykh Haydar, who is called the " President of the people of error" {Sar-i-halqa-i-arbdb-i-daldl} was killed on June 30, 1488. The writer assumes that the news of the destruction of "these misguided rebels, enemies of the Prophetic Dispensation and foes of Church and State" will be welcome to all good Muslims.

(2) Sultan Bayazid's answer to the above, also in Persian and undated (p. 311). Congratulations are offered to Ya'qub on the victory of "the Bdyandari¹ hosts of salvation" over the "misguided Haydari faction" (gurih-i-ddlla-i-Haydariyyd).

(3) From Shdh Isma'fī to Sultān Bdyazid II requesting that his disciples in Asia Minor may not be prevented from visiting him at Ardabil (p. 345). This letter, undated and in Persian, is important as proving how numerous were the partisans of the Safawis in the Ottoman dominions.

¹ Bdyandari is an alternative name for the Aq-Qoyiunlu, or "White Sheep" dynasty.

(4) Sulṭdn Bayazid's answer to the above, also in Persian and undated (pp. 345-6). The Ottoman Sultan says that, having investigated the matter, he finds that the motive of many of these pilgrims is not the desire to fulfil a pious duty, but to escape from the obligation of military service.

(5) From Shah Isma'ill to Sulṭdn Bayazid on the same subject', also in Persian and undated (pp. 346-7). He explains that he has been compelled to enter Ottoman territory to chastise his foes, but intends thereby no unfriendly or disrespectful act towards Bayazid, and has strictly enjoined his soldiers to respect the persons and property of the inhabitants.

(6) Sulṭdn Bayazid's answer to the above, also in Persian and undated (p. 347). Bdyazfd accepts Isma'tt's assurances, and has ordered his officials to co-operate with him in a friendly spirit.

(7) From Alwand, the Aq-QoytīnlH ruler of Persia, to Sulṭdn Bayazid, in Persian, except the Arabic prologue, and undated (pp. 351-2). Alwand announces the arrival of B&yazfd's envoy Mahmud Aqa Chdwtlsh-bdshi with his master's letter, urging the Bayandarf or Aq-Qoyunlu family to unite against their common enemy, the "rascally Red-heads" (Awbdsh-i-Qizil-bdsh). Alwand promises to do his best, whether his relations help him or not, provided he can count on material and moral support from Bayazfd.

(8) Bayazid'j answer to the above, also in Persian and undated (pp. 352-3). He commends Alwand's resolve, and promises help against the "rebellious horde of the Qizil-bdshes " (taifa-i-baghiya-i-Qizil-bdshiyya).

(9) From Bayazid to Hājī Rustam Beg the Kurd, in Persian, dated Rabi¹ i, 908/September 1502 (p. 353). He asks for correct information as to the doings of the Qizil-bashes and the result of their struggle with the Aq-Qoyunlu or Bayandarf princes, to be communicated to his envoy Kaywdn Chawush.

(10) Hajji Rustatris reply to the above, in Persian and undated (pp. 353-4). The writer states that the "religion-rending Qizil-bashes" {Qizil-bdsh-i-Madhab-khar&sh}, having defeated Alwand and Murdd of the Aq-Qoyunlu family, are now seeking an alliance with Egypt against the Ottoman Turks, and are advancing on Mar*ash and Diyar Bakr.

(11) From Sultdn Bayazid to Sultdn Ghiiri of Egypt, in Arabic, dated 910/1504-5 (pp. 354-5). This letter contains an allusion to "the man who has appeared in the Eastern countries and defeated their ruler and overcome their peoples," which, as appears from the answer, refers to Shdh Isma'il, or possibly Shah-qulf.

(12) Answer to the above, in Arabic, undated (pp. 355-6). This letter contains a reference to "the victory of the misguided Qizil-bashi faction in the Eastern countries," described as a "public calamity which has appeared in those regions."

These are the only letters in Sultan Bdyazfd's correspondence directly connected with the Safawis, though there are others of interest to students of Persian history addressed to Sultan Abu'l-Ghazi Husayn (911/1506), the poet Jamf¹, the philosopher Jalalu'd-Din Dawanf, and the Shaykhu'l-Islam of Herat Farfdu'd-Din Ahmad-i-Taftdzanf (913/1507), who was put to death by Shah Isma'fi three years later for refusing to subscribe to the Shf'a doctrine. Before we consider the State Papers of Sultan Salim's reign, something more must be said of the beginnings of that bitter strife between Turkey and Persia which is one of the most prominent features of the whole Safawi period, and has done so much to undermine the unity and weaken the power of I si dm. And here we cannot do better than quote the opening paragraph of old Richard Knolles^V account of the formidable Shf'a revolt in Anatolia promoted by the celebrated Shdh-quH ("King's servant"), called by the Turks Shaytdn-qulf ("DeviPs servant"), the son of Hasan Khalffa a disciple of Isma'fl's father Shaykh Flaydar.

Growth of the bitter hostility between Persia and Turkey.

¹ See Lit Hist Pers., iii, pp. 422-3.

"After so many troubles," says Knolles, "Bajazet gave himself unto a quiet course of life, spending most part of his time in study of Philosophy and conference with learned men; unto which peaceable kind of life he was of his own natural disposition more enclined than to Wars; albeit that the regard of his State and the earnest desire of his Men of War drew him oftentimes even against his Will into the Field. As for the Civil Government of his Kingdom he referred it wholly to his three principal Bassaes, Alis, Achmetes and *Jackia, who at their pleasure disposed of all things. After that he had in this quiet and pleasing kind of life to his great contentment passed over five years, of a little neglected Spark suddainly arose such a Fire in Asia as was hardly after with much blood of his People and danger of that part of his Empire quenched; the reliques whereof yet trouble those superstitious People at this day. Which thing was brought to pass by the crafty device of Chasan Chelifé and Schach Culi his Boy (whom some call Teckel Scachoculu and others Techellis)², two Hypocritical Persians; who flying into those countries and with the counterfeit shew of feigned Holiness having procured to themselves a great name amongst those rude People, with a number of windy headed Followers (filled with the novelty of their new

¹ I quote the sixth edition of his Turkish History, with Sir Paul Rycaufs continuation, published in London in 1687. The passage in question occurs on p. 315 of vol. i.

² I.e. 'Ali, Ahmad and Yahya Pashas.

⁸ These names stand for Hasan Khalifa, Shdh-qutt, and TakallH or TekellHi i.e. of the Tekkd-ilu Doctrine) raised first such a diversity of opinions about the true successors of their untrue Prophet, and afterwards such a Rebellion amongst the People, as that the one yet remaineth, and the other was not in a good while after without great bloodshed appeased."

The Shi'a rising in Asia Minor.

There follows a lengthy account of this dangerous rebellion, in which the Turks suffered several severe reverses and lost many notable officers, including the Grand Vezfr Khddim 'Ali Pasha, ere the rebels were dispersed, killed, or driven into Persia. Instead of rewarding or comforting the fugitives, however, Shall Isma'fl put many of them to death at Tabriz, because, as Knolles says¹, they had plundered a caravan of rich merchants; but, according to the most modern Turkish historian², in order to clear himself of complicity in the eyes of Bdyazfd. Knolles adds that "Techellis himself (i.e. Shdh-qulf), to the terror of others, was burnt alive"; but, according to the Turkish historian, he fell at the same time as 'Alf Pasha in the battle of Gyuk Chay, between Siwas and Qaysariyya, in which statement the *Ahsantit-awdrikh agrees. "Techellis thus put to flight," continues Knolles, "*J onuses*⁴, caused strait inquisition to be made through all the Cities of the lesser Asia for all such as had professed the Persian Religion; and them whom he found to have borne Arms in the late Rebellion he caused to be put to death with most exquisite torments and the rest to be burnt in their Foreheads with an hot Iron, thereby forever to be known; whom together with the Kinsfolks and Friends of them that were executed or

Massacre of Shl'a throughout the Turkish Empire.

¹ Op. at, p. 324.

² 'Abdu'r-Rahman Sherefs History of the Ottoman Empire (Constantinople, 2nd edition, 1315/1897-8), vol. 1, pp. 196-7. Cf. von Hammer's *Gesch. d. Osmamsch. Reich, vol. ii, pp. 359-360 and 393-4.

⁸ Ff. 90-91 of Mr A. G. Ellis's MS.

4Yunus Pasha, Grand Vezfr to Sultan Selfm, executed in 923/1517.

fled with Techellis he caused to be transported into Europe and to be dispersed through Macedonia, Epirus and Peloponnesus, for fear lest if Techellis, now fled into the Persian Kingdom, should from thence return with new Forces, they should also again repair unto him and raise a new Rebellion. This was the beginning, course, and ending of one of the most dangerous Rebellions that ever troubled the Turkish Empire; wherein all, or at leastwise the greatest part, of their Dominions in Asia might have been easily surprised by the Persian King, if he would thoroughly have prosecuted the occasion and opportunity then offered." These events are placed by Knolles in A.D. 1508, but by the Ahsanvtt-Tatydrikh in 917/1511-12, the year before Bayazid's death.

It is curious that little or nothing is said by the Persian historians about this massacre of the Shi'a in Turkey, which von Hammer describes as one of the most dreadful deeds ever perpetrated in the name of Religion, not excepting the cruelties of the Inquisition or the Massacre of St Bartholomew. That most of the Turkish historians ignore it is less astonishing, since it can hardly be a matter of pride for them. Knolles appears to be mistaken in placing it in the reign of Bayazid I I, for there can hardly have been two such massacres, and one certainly took place in 1514 after the accession of Salim, as witnessed by Nicolo Giustiniani in an account dated October 7 of that year¹. The number of victims is placed by Sa'du'd-Din, Solaq-zada and 'Alf Abu'l-Fadl, the son of Idris of Bitlis, at 40,000. The particulars given by the last-named writer, quoted by von Hammer in the original Persian verse transliterated into the Roman character, are as follows⁸:

¹ See von Hammer, op. at, vol. ii, p. 403 ad calc. The passage runs. " Che ii Signor havea mancU a far amazzar tutti della secta di Soft."

² Ibid., p. 638.

فرستاد سلطان دانا رسوم'	دبیران دانا بهر مرز و بوم'
که اتباع این قوم را قسر قسم'	در آرد بنسوک قلمر اسر اسر'
ز هفت و ز هفتاد ساله بنام'	بیاورد بدیوان عالی مقام'
چو دفتر سپردند اهل حساب'	عدد چل هزار آمد از شیخ و شاب'
پس آنگه بهنگام هر کشوری'	رساندند فرمانبران دفتری'
بهر جا که رفته قدم از قلم'	نهد تیغ بران قدم بر قدم'
شد اعداد این کشته های دیار'	فزون از حساب قلمر چل هزار'

Von Hammer's translation, which can hardly be bettered, runs as follows:

" Der Sultan wohlbewandert, voll Verstand, Schickt kund'ge Schreiber aus m jedes Land ;
Aufzeichnen sollen sie nach Stamm und Stammen Die Junger dieses Volks mit Nahn und Nahmen.
Von sieben Jahren bis auf siebzig Jahr
Bring* im Diwan die List' ein jeder dar.
Es waren Vierzigtausend grad enthalten
In den Verzeichnissen von Jung und Alten,
Die Bnnger dieser Listen wurden dann
Gesandt an die Statthalter mit Ferman
Wo immer hin die Feder war gekommen,
Ward Fuss fur Fuss das Schwert zur Hand genommen.
Es wurden hingenchtet in dem Land
Mehr als die Zahl, die in den Listen stand."

Turning now once more to the Munshddt of Firidun Bey, we find the following letters belonging to the reign of Sultan Salim which bear on his relations with Persia.

Sul[^]An Salim's Persian correspondence.

(13) From Sultdn Salim to "Ubayd Khan the Uzbeks in Persian, dated the end of Muharram, A.H. 920 [March 27, 1514), only five months before the Battle of Chldirdn (pp. 374-7). In this long letter, sent by the hand of a certain Muhammad Bey, Salfm denounces "that vile, impure, sinful, slanderous, reprehensible and blood-thirsty Stiff-cub" (to wit Shah Isma'fl), "at whose hands the people of the Eastern lands are rendered desperate " and calls upon 'Ubayd Khan to do his part in avenging the death of his father Shaybak Khan.

که اهالی بلاد شرق از دست صوفی بچه' تیر ناپاک التیر اقاله ذمیر سفاک بجان آمده‌اند

(14) Answer to the above, also in Persian, dated the end of Jumdda ii, 920 {August 21, 1514}, pp. 377-9. In this letter 'Ubayd Khan describes how he has already avenged his father and slain "the lesser dog, agent and lieutenant of the greater dog (i.e. Shah Isma'fl), who in his quintessential folly had conferred on him the title of *Najm-i-Thdnl*¹? and promises to aid the Turkish Sultan in extirpating the "inconsiderable remnant" (شردمه' قلیله) of the "rascally infidels and heretical 'Red-heads'" (زنداقه' اوباش و ملاحده) (قزلباش).

(15) From Sultan Salim to Shdh Isma'il, in Persian, dated Safar, 920 {April, 1514}, pp. 379-381. This letter, written in the most arrogant and offensive tone, calls on Isma'fl to repent of his heresies and evil practices, especially the cursing of "the two Shaykhs" (Abu Bakr and 'Umar), and threatens, should he continue obdurate, to invade and wrest from him "the lands which he has usurped by violence."

(16) From Sultdn Salim to Muhammad Beg Aq-Qoyunlii, in Persian, dated the end of Safar, 920 {April 25., 1514}, pp. 381-2, congratulating him on the sound Sunnf principles of himself and his family and subjects, and inviting his co-operation against the "heretical 'Red-heads'."

¹ This victory of the Uzbeks over the allied forces of Shdh Isma'il and Babur took place on Ramadan 17, 918 (Nov. 26, 1512). Amfr Najmu'd-Din Mas'iid ("the First Najm" or "Star") died m915 (iso9-1510) and was succeeded in his office and title by Amfr Yar Aiimad-i-Isfahanf, called Najrn-i-Thani, "the Second Najm" or "Star."

(17) Reply to the above, in Persian, dated the end of Rabi¹ it, 920 {June 23, 1514}, p. 382. From this it appears that Salfm's letter was brought by an envoy named Ahmad Jan, who took back the answer, and that the writer was in great fear that the correspondence might be discovered.

(18) Sultdn Salim's second letter to Shdh IsmaHl, in Persian and undated, pp. 382-3. In this letter Salim lays claim to the Caliphate, accuses Shah Isma'il and his family of heresy and immorality, and calls on him to repent and suffer Persia to be annexed to the Ottoman dominions.

(19) Sultdn Salim's third letter to IsmaHl, in Turkish, dated the end of Jumdda i, 920 (July 23, 1514) and written from Arzinjdn, taunting him with his apparent unwillingness to try the fortune of battle.

(20) Shdh IsmaHl's reply to Sultdn Salim's three letters, in Persian and undated (pp. 384-5). This is apparently the letter to which Creasy refers in his History of the Ottoman Turks (ed. 1877, pp. 136-7), for the writer hints that Salfm's secretary must have written under the influence of bang or opium, and sends a gold casket filled with a special preparation of one or both of these narcotics, sealed with the Royal Seal, by the hand of his messenger Shah-quli Agha.

(21) Sultdn Salim's? fourth letter to IsmaHl, in Turkish, dated the end of Jumdda ii, 920 {August 21, 1514}, again challenging him to battle.

Shortly after this last letter was written, namely early in the month of Rajab¹, 920 (August—September, 1514), a great battle was fought between the Turks and Persians at Chaldiran, situated some 20 parasangs from Tabrfz, where 3000 of the former and 2000 of the latter were slain, but the Turkish artillery decided the day, and Shdh Isma'il, notwithstanding the valour shown by him and his devoted followers, was forced

The Battle of Chalduran,
August, 1514.

¹ On the first of the month (Aug. 22, 1514) according to Firidun Bey (p. 402).

to give way and to fall back beyond Tabriz, which was occupied by the Turks on Rajab 16, 920 (Sept. 6, 1514). Many men of note on both sides were slain; of the Turks Hasan Pasha, Begler-begi of Rumelia, who commanded the left wing of the Ottoman army, Hasan Bey, Governor of Morea, Uways Bey of Caesarea, Ayas Bey of Latakia, and many other high civil and military officials; of the Persians Amir Sayyid-i-Sharff of Shiraz, a protagonist of the Shafi'i doctrine, Amir 'Abdu'l-Baqi, a descendant of the noted saint Shihab al-Din Ni'matu'l-Din of Kirman, Sayyid Muhammad Kamuna of Najaf, Khudn Muhammad Khan, and many others.

Sultan Sali, greatly elated by his success, immediately despatched the usual bombastic proclamations of victory (fath-nama) to his son Sulayman, to the Khans of the Crimea, to the Kurdish chieftains, to Sultan Murad, the last of the Aq-Qoyunlu or "White Sheep" dynasty, to Shihab al-Din Rustam of Luristan, to the Governor of Adrianople, and others. The texts of these documents are given by Firidun Bey (pp. 386-96), but they are followed (pp. 396-407) by a document of much greater historical value, namely a detailed journal of the movements of the Turkish army from the time they marched out of Adrianople on Muharram 3, 920 (March 20, 1514) until they returned to winter at Amdsiya at the end of the same year (Nov.-Dec, 1514). They marched in 105 stages from Adrianople to Tabriz by way of Constantinople, Caesarea, Siwas, Arzinjan, Chaldirdan, Khiriy and Marand; thence back to Amdsiya in 58 stages, by way of Nakhjuvan, Jisr-i-Juban, and Bayburt. They erected a pyramid of the skulls of their enemies on the field of battle, handed over to Ja'far Bey one of Shihab al-Din Isma'il's wives who fell into their hands, and massacred Khudn Bey and 150 of his Qizil-bash companions at the village of Sakhirdan the day before they entered Tabriz, in which city, however, they seem to have behaved with

Sultan Sali's proceedings after the victory of Chaldirdan.

moderation, as even the Persian historian of Shah Isma'il testifies¹. Sultan Salim remained there only about a week (Sept. 6-14, 1514X when he departed, taking with him the Tfmurid Prince Badi'u'z-Zaman, the fugitive son of the late Sultan Abu'l-Ghazf Husayn ibn Bayqara², and a number of skilled artisans whom he proposed to settle in his dominions*. Within two or three weeks of his departure Shah Isma'il was back in Tabriz. According to Sir John Malcolm³, "the effect of so great a reverse upon the sanguine mind of Isma'fl was deep and lasting, and though before of a cheerful disposition he was never afterwards seen to smile." But as a matter of fact the defeat, decisive as it was, had little permanent effect, since the discontent and nostalgia of the Janissaries compelled the Ottoman Sultan to withdraw from Persian territory, and, save for the extirpation of the little Dhu'l-Qadar dynasty⁴ at Kamakh near Arzinjan in the spring of A.D. 1515, his martial ardour was fully occupied, until his death in A.D. 1520, with the subjection of Egypt, Syria and Arabia.

Shah Isma'il, on his return to Tabriz after the battle of Chaldiran, sent a very polite and apologetic letter⁸ by the hand of Nuru'd-Din 'Abdu'l-Wahhab to Sultan Salim, who, apparently, vouchsafed no reply, but some months later (end of Rajab, 921 = Sept. 9, 1515) wrote in Turkish a long letter to 'Ubayd Khan the Uzbek inciting him to persecute the Shi'a⁶.

¹ Add. 200 of the Cambridge University Library, f. 151.

² He died at Constantinople four months later of the plague.

³ History of Persia, vol. 1, p. 504. I can find no confirmation of this in the Persian histories which I have consulted.

* According to the Ahsanu't-Tawarikh it comprised only four rulers, Malik ASlan, Sulaymdn, Nasjru'd-Din and 'Ald'u'd-Dawla, of whom the last, together with four of his sons and thirty of his followers, was decapitated by Sultan Salim's soldiers on June 13, 1515.

⁶ Firidun Bey, vol. 1, pp. 413-414.

• Ibid., pp. 415-416.

The documents connected with Sulṭān Ṣālm's reign fill another 84 pages of Fir/dīn Bey's compilation¹, but, with one notable exception, contain only incidental abusive references to Shah Isma'īl. The exception is formed by two poems, one in Persian and the other in Turkish, addressed to Sultan Salīm by an unpatriotic Persian named Khwāja Isfahānī, probably identical with Khwāja Mawldnd-yi-Isfahānī, a fanatical Sunnī who attached himself to the Uzbek Shaybak Khan, and whose death is recorded in the Ahsanū't-Tawdrikh under the year 927/1521².

The following verses from the Persian poem will suffice to give an idea of its character.

ای قاصدِ فرخنده منظر^۱
نیازم بر سوی شاهِ مظفر^۲
بگو ای پادشاهِ جمله عالم^۳
توئی امروز در مردی مسلم^۴
اساسِ دین تو در دنیا نهادی^۵
تو شرحِ مصطفی بر جا نهادی^۶
مجددِ گشت دین از همتِ تو^۷
جهان در زیر بارِ منتِ تو^۸
اگر ملکِ شریعت مستقیم است^۹
همه از دولتِ سلطانِ سلیم است^{۱۰}
ز بهمت در تزلزلِ فارس و ترک^{۱۱}
چو افکندی ز سر تاجِ قزل بَرک^{۱۲}
فکندی تاجش از سرِ ای مظفر^{۱۳}
فکن اکنون بمردی از تنش سر^{۱۴}

A Persian congratulatory poem addressed to Sulṭān Ṣālm

¹ The last ends on p. 500.

² From a line in his Turkish poem it appears that his home was in Khurasan and Khwarazm (Khiva), which he had been compelled to leave since  Infidelity had completely destroyed the Home of Faith, and established itself in the Seat of Religion."

قزل بُرکت همچون مار افعی'
 سرش را تا نکوبی نیست نفعی
 نوئی امروز ز اوصافِ شریفه'
 خدا را و محمّدا غلبه
 ۱۰ روا داری که کبر و ملحدِ دد'
 دهد دشنامِ اصحابِ محمّد' تو او را نشکنی از زور مردی'
 سرش را تا بُریده باز گردی'
 اگر گیرد امانی در سلامت'
 بگیرم دامنش را در قیامت'
 چنین دیدم ز اخبارِ پیغمبر'
 که ذو القرنین بُد در رومِ قیصر'
 بدو القرنین از آن خود را علم کرد'
 که ملکِ فارس را با رومِ ضمیر کرد'
 ۱۰ دو قرنِ او شهی اندر جهان شد'
 بشرق و غرب حکمِ او روان شد'
 بیا از نصرِ دین کسرِ ضمیر کن'
 بتختِ رومِ ملکِ فارس ضمیر کن'

" O messenger of auspicious aspect, carry my prayer to the victorious King.

Say, ' O King of all the World, thou art today accredited in valour Thou didst lay the foundations of Religion in the World ; thou didst restore the Holy Law of Mustafa [Muhammad].

Religion hath been renovated by thy zeal, the World lies under the burden of thy favour.

If the realm of the Holy Law is firmly established, it is all through the fortune of Sultan Salim.

Persia and Turkey quake through fear of thee, since thou hast cast from his head the crown of the Red-cap¹.

0 victorious one, thou hast cast his crown from his head: now manfully cast his head from his body!

The Red-head is like the viper; until thou crushest his head it availeth nothing.

Thou art today, through thy noble qualities, the Vicar {Khalifa) of God and of Muhammad.

Dost thou hold it right that the guebre² and brute-heretic should revile the Companions of the Prophet?³

If thou dost not break him by the strength of thy manhood, and if thou turnest back without having cut off his head,

If he obtains amnesty in safety, I will seize thy skirt in the day of Resurrection.

Thus have I seen in the accounts of the Prophet, that DhuH-Qarnayn ("the Two-horned")⁴ was Emperor in Rome.

For this cause did he style himself Dhu'l-Qarnayn, because he added the dominion of Persia to that of Rome⁵.

His two horns were sovereignty throughout the World; his orders ran through East and West.

Come, break the Idol by the aid of the Faith, and add the Kingdom of Persia to the Throne of Rome^{5''''}

Sultan Salm died in 926/1520, having reigned, according to the Ahsanu't-Tawdrikh, 8 years, 8 months and 8 days. He was succeeded by his son Sulayman, called by his

¹ Burk is a Turkish word denoting a kind of tall fur cap, and Qiztl-burk ("Red-cap") is, of course, equivalent to Qiztl-bdsk (Persian Surkh-sar) "Red-head."

² The word gabr (anglicized by Thomas Moore as "guebre") properly denotes a Zoroastrian, but is constantly applied by writers of this period to any non-Muslim, infidel or heretic, like the corresponding gyawur ("giaour") of the Turks. See p. 95 infra.

³ This, of course, refers to the cursing of Abu Bakr, 'Umar and 'Uthman instituted by Shah Ismail. See pp. 53-4 supra.

⁴ This mysterious person is commonly (as here) identified with Alexander the Great. See Qur'dn xviii, 82, 85, 93 and commentary thereon.

⁵ The term Rum was applied successively to the Roman, the Byzantine and the Ottoman Empires, and by the Persian historians of this period the Ottoman Sultan is constantly called Qaysar-i-Rum.

countrymen "the Law-giver" (Qdntini) and by Europeans "the Magnificent." The Persian poet Amfni composed a poem on his accession, of which each half-verse (misrd') yields the date 926. The following verse is cited as a specimen by the Ahsanu't-Tawdrikh:

SuljAn Salim dies in 936/1520 and is succeeded by his son
Sulaym&n.

بداده زمانِ ملکِ کامرانی ' بگاوسِ عهد و سلیمانِ ثانی '

"Fortune hath given the Kingdom of Desire to the Kd'us of the Age, the Second Solomon."

Three years later (in 929/1523), when Sultan Sulayman conquered Rhodes, another Persian Poet, Niyazf, commemorated this victory in an equally ingenious qasida beginning:

در اولِ جلوسی بوی سُرُرازی ' دوم فتحِ اردوسِ الا ای نیازی ' where the first half-verse gives the date of Sulayman's accession (926/1520), and the second the date of the conquest of Rhodes¹.

Shah Isma'il died on Monday, Rajab 19, A.H. 930 (May 23, 1524) at the age of 38 after a reign of 24 years, and was buried with his fathers at ArdabfL He left four sons, Tahmasp, born on Dhu'l-Hijja 26, A.H. 919 (Feb. 22, 1514), who succeeded him; Alqas, born in 922/1516, and Sam and Bahrdm, both born in the following year; besides five daughters². In his reign the sword was more active than the pen. Pie not only eliminated all of his numerous rivals in Persia, but greatly enlarged her frontiers. "His kingdom." says the Ahsanitt-Tawdrikh.*

¹ Ahsanu't-Tawdrikh (Mr Ellis's MS, f. 128). The first misrd' gives the correct date (926), but the second, as written in the MS. (with دوم), gives 940. I have emended this to دوم, which gives 930, though this is still one too much.

² Khánish Khánúm, Parl-Khán Khánúm, Mihínbánú Sultánúm, Firangís Khánúm and Zaynab Khánúm.

³ F. 131.

تاریخ وفات آن شه شیر گمین
از خسرو دین طلب که شد خسرو دین

As regards literature, there was, as elsewhere explained, an extraordinary dearth of remarkable poets in Persia during the whole Safawf period¹, while the great theologians belong to a later time when the Shi'a faith, raised by Shah Isma'fI to the position of the established national religion of Persia, had taken firm root. Most of the celebrated writers whose deaths are recorded in the Ahsanu't-Tawdrikh and other chronicles of Ismail's reign really belong to the brilliant circle who gathered round the Tfmurid Sultan Abu'l-Ghazi Husayn] and his talented Minister Mir 'AIf Shir Nawa'f. Such were the poets Hatiff, nephew of the great Jamf, who died in 927/1521, Amir Husayn Mu'amma'f (d. 904/1498-9); Banna'f, who perished in the massacre wrought by Ismail's general *Najm-i-Thdni*² at Qarshf in 918/1512; Hilalf, who was killed by the Uzbeks at Herat in 935/1528-9 for his alleged Shf'a proclivities; the philosopher Jalalu'd-Din Dawanf (d. 908/1502-3); the historian Mfrkhwand (d. 903/1497-8 at the age of 66); and the versatile Husayn Wa'iz-i-Kashiff, commentator, ethicist and narrator, best known as the author of the *Anwar-i-Suhayli*³. The poet Qasimf celebrated the achievements of Shall Ismail in a Shdh-ndma, hitherto unpublished and but rarely met with even in manuscript⁴, completed ten years after the death of that monarch, who appears to have been less susceptible than most Persian potentates to the flattery of courtiers and venal verse-makers⁵.

¹ See pp 24-29 supra.

² See p. 74 ad calc.

³ Accounts of the more notable of these writers will be found in the preceding volume of this history, Persian Literature under Tartar Dominion

⁴ See Rieu's Persian Catalogue^ pp. 660-661.

⁵ See p. 28 supra,

CHAPTER III.

CULMINATION AND DECLINE OF THE SAFAWI POWER, FROM SHAH TAHMASP (A.D. 1524-1576) TO SHAH HUSAYN (A.D. 1694-1722).

Tahmdsp, the eldest of Isma'f'l's sons, was only ten years of age when he succeeded his father. He reigned over Persia for fifty-two years and a half, and died on May 14, 1576. In the contemporary chronicles he is usually denoted as Shdh-i-Din-pandk ("the King who is the Refuge of Religion"). The date of his accession is commemorated in the following verse:

Accession of ShAh Tahmasp
(May 23, 1524).

طہماسپ شاہ عالم کز نصرتِ الہی
جا بعدِ شاہ غازی بر تختِ زر گرفتی
جای پدر گرفتی کردی جهان مستقر
تأریخ سلطنت شد جای پدر گرفتی¹

"O Tahmâsp, King of the World, who, by the Divine Assistance, didst take thy place on the throne of gold after the Victorious King!

Thou didst take the place of thy father; thou didst subdue the world:
'Thou didst take the place of thy father' (jd-yi-pidar girifti)¹ was the date of thine accession."

Of the numerous records of his long reign two, on which in what follows I shall chiefly draw, are worthy of special note; his own autobiography* from his accession on Monday, Rajab 19, 930 (May 23, 1524), to his shameful surrender of the Turkish Prince

Two chief Persian authorities on this reign.

¹ $3 + 1 + 10 + 2 + 4 + 200 + 20 + 200 + 80 + 400 + 10 = 930$ A.H. = 1523-4 A.D.

² Printed by the late Dr Paul Horn in vol. xlv of the Z.D.M.G. (for 1890), pp. 563-649; and lithographed in vol. ii of the Mafla'u'sh-Shams of Muhammad Hasan Khân I'timâdu's-Sulţana, pp. 165-213.

Bayazfd, who had sought refuge at his court, in 969/1561-2; and the excellent Aksanu't- Tawdrih of Hasan Beg Rumlu, concluded in 985/1577-8 only a year after Tahmasp's death. The autobiography, possibly suggested by Babur's incomparable Memoirs, is far inferior to that most instructive and amusing work, and is not greatly superior to the over-estimated Diaries of the late Nasiru'd-Din Shah; but it throws some valuable light on the mentality of Tahmasp, and on those inner conditions which it is so difficult to deduce from the arid pages of the official chronicles, containing for the most part a mere record of interminable wars and massacres, and leaving us quite in the dark as to the social and intellectual state of the people. That

Character of Tahmasp.

Tahmasp was a bigot is indicated both by Sir John Malcolm¹ and Erskine⁸, though the former historian takes the more favourable view of his character, describing him as "of a kind and generous disposition/" and adding that he "appears to have possessed prudence and spirit, and, if he was not distinguished by great qualities, he was free from any remarkable vices."

Anthony Jenkinson, who carried a letter of recommendation from Queen Elizabeth³, had a not very gratifying audience with him at Qazwfn in November, 1562⁴. The Venetian Ambassador Vincentio d'Alessandri, who was accredited to his Court in 1571, describes him⁸, "in the sixty-

His personal appearance.

fourth year of his age, and the fifty-first of his reign," as "of middling stature, well formed in ¹ History of Persia, vol. i, pp. 511-513.

⁸ A History of India under... Baber and Humdyun (London, 1854), vol. ii, pp. 285 etc.

³ For the text of this curious letter, see the Hakluyt Society's Early Voyages and Travels to Russta and Persia (No. lxxu, London, 1886), pp. 112-114.

* Ibid., pp. 144-147-

* Travels of Venetians in Persia (Hakluyt Society, 1873), pp. 215 et seqq.

person and features, although dark, of thick lips and a grizzly beard," and says that he was "more of a melancholy disposition than anything else, which is also known by many signs, but principally by his not having come out of his palace for the space of eleven years, nor having once gone to the chase nor any other kind of amusement, to the great dissatisfaction of his people." He further describes him as boastful, but unwarlike and "a man of very little courage"; as caring little for law and justice, but much for women and money; as mean and avaricious, "buying and selling with the cunning of a small merchant" "Notwithstanding the things mentioned above," he concludes, "which make one think he ought to be hated, the reverence and love of the people for the King are incredible, as they worship him not as a king but as a god, on account of his descent from the line of 'All, the great object of their veneration," and he cites the most extraordinary instances of this devotion and even deification, which is not confined to the common people but extends to members of the Royal Family and courtiers, and to the inhabitants of the remotest parts of his realms. One magnanimous act of the king's reign, which led to a great alleviation of the burden of taxation imposed on his people, the Venetian Ambassador ascribes to the influence of a dream, "in which the Angels took him by the throat and asked him whether it was becoming to a king, surnamed the Just and descended from 'Alf, to get such immense profits by the ruin of so many poor people; and then ordered him to free the people from them." This story is likely enough, for Tahm'asp in his Mgmoirs records numerous dreams to which he evidently attached great importance. Thus in a dream 'AH promises him victory over the Uzbeks about A.D. 1528¹, and a year or two later at Herat advises

Tahmasp much influenced by dreams.

¹ P. 584 of Horn's Denkwürdigkeiten cited above p. 84, n. 2.

him as to another campaign¹, whereon he remarks, "the belief of this weak servant Tahmasp as-Safawi al-Musawf al-Husayni² is that whoever sees His Holiness the Commander of the Faithful (i.e. ^fAlf), on whom be the blessings of God, in a dream, that which he says will come to pass." Again in his twentieth year two consecutive dreams, in the second of which he sought and obtained from the Imam 'AH Rida confirmation of the first, led him to repent of wine-drinking and other excesses, and to close all the taverns and houses of ill-repute in his domains, on which occasion he composed the following quatrain⁸:

یکچند پی زمرد سوده شدیم یکچند بیاقوت تر آلوده شدیم
آلودگئی بود بهر رنگ که بود شستیم بآب توبه آسوده شدیم

His conversion or repentance.

¹¹ For a while we pursued the crushed emerald⁴;
For a while we were defiled by the liquid ruby⁶;
Defilement it was, under whatever colour*
We washed in the Water of Repentance, and were at peace "

This "repentance" or conversion of Shah Tahmasp is recorded in the AJisanitt-Tawdrikh under the year 939/1532-3.

About the same time the army of the Ottoman Sultdn Sulaymdn, profiting as usual by Persia's preoccupation with one of the constantly recurring Uzbek invasions of her north-eastern province, marched into Adharbayjcin, where it was overtaken by a premature but violent snow-storm (it was in the month of Premature snow causes disaster to Turkish army

¹ Horn, loc. at., p. 592.

² These three epithets refer to his ancestors Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Din, the Imam Musa al-Kazim and the Imam Husayn.

⁸ Horn, loc. at., p. 600, also cited in the Atashkada (Bombay hth., 1277/1860-1, p. 17).

⁴ I.e. Bang or Hashish (Cannabis Indica), as explicitly stated in the Atashkada.

⁶ I.e. wine.

October), in which numbers of the Turkish troops perished. This disaster to the arms of his hereditary foe Shah Tahmasp¹ ascribes to "the help of God and the aid of the Immaculate Imams." It has been commemorated in the following forcible quatrain, given in the Ahsantft-Tawdrih and the Ta"rikh-i-' Alam-drd-yi-Abbds'l:

رفتہ سوی سلطانیہ آن طرفہ چمن
دیدم دو ہزار مردہ ہی گور و کفن
گفتہ کہ ہگشت این ہمہ عثمانی را بادِ سحر از میانہ برخواست کہ من

"I went to Sul$dniyya, that rare pasture-ground:

I saw two thousand dead without grave or shroud.

'Who/ said I, 'killed all these Ottomans?'

The morning breeze arose from the midst saying 'I ! ' "

Other dreams are meticulously recorded by Shah Tahmasp in his Memoirs: at Ardabi'l he sees and converses with the vision of his ancestor Shaykh Safiyyu

Other visions.

d-Din², on another occasion he receives encouragement from the spirit of Shaykh Shihabu'd-Din⁸; other allegorical dreams are recorded under the years 957/1550 and 961/1554⁴.

In his domestic relations Shah Tahmasp was unhappy, though not perhaps more so than most contemporary Asiatic sovereigns, notably the Ottoman Sultns. He had three younger brothers, Sam (notable as a poet and biographer of poets)⁵, Bahram and Unhappy domestic relations.

¹ Horn, loc. at., p. 602 See also the Turkish journal of this campaign given by Firfdun Bey (vol. 1, pp. 588-9), where mention of this severe cold is made. Sultdniyya was reached by the Turkish army on 5 Rabf n, 941 (October 14, 1534).

² Ibid., p. 607.

³ Ibid., p. 623.

⁴ Ibid., pp. 635-6.

⁶ He was the author of a valuable but unpublished Biography of contemporary poets entitled Tuhfa-i-Sdmu

Alqas, of whom the first and third rebelled against him. Sim Mirza* was cast into prison in 969/1561-2 and was ultimately put to death there in 984/1576-7 by Tahmasp's successor. The case of Alqas was much worse, for he was a traitor as well as a rebel, and not only took refuge with Sultan Sulayman at Constantinople, but incited him to attack Persia and took an active part in the ensuing war against his own country. At Hamaddn, in 955/1548, he plundered the house of his sister-in-law, the wife of Bahram Mfrza, and later advanced as far as Yazdikhvast, where he made a massacre of the inhabitants, but in the following year he was defeated and fell into the hands of his brother Bahr£m, who handed him over to Tahmdsp. The King imprisoned him in the Castle of Alamiit, according to his own Memoirs¹, or, according to the Ahsanitt-Tawarikh, in the Castle of Qahqaha, where he perished a week later. "In short," says Tahmasp in recording the event, "after some days I saw that he did not feel safe from me, but was constantly preoccupied, so I despatched him to a fortress with Ibrdhfm Khdn and Hasan Beg the centurion, who took him to the Castle of Alamiit and there imprisoned him. After six days, those who had custody of him being off their guard, two or three persons there, in order to avenge their father whom Alqds had killed, cast him down from the castle. After his death the land had peace." It can scarcely be doubted that Tahmdsp approved, if he did not actually arrange, this deed of violence. Bahram Mfrza died the same year at the age of 33.

Much worse was the case of the unfortunate Prince Bdyazfd, son of the Ottoman Sultan Sulaymdn, who, deprived of his government of Kutahiya and driven from his native land by the intrigues of his father's Russian wife Khurram⁸ (whose

Betrayal of the Ottoman
Prince B4j azfd
(A D. 1560-62).

¹ Horn, loc. cit., p. 631.

⁸ See Gibb's History of Ottoman Poetry, vol. hi, pp. 10-11.

one object was to secure the succession of her son Salfm, afterwards known as "the Sot") took refuge at Tahmasp's court in 967/1559-60. An Ottoman mission headed by 'AH Pasha was sent to Qazwfn to demand the surrender of Bayazfd and his children. They arrived there, as we learn from Anthony Jenkinson's narrative¹, four days earlier than himself, to wit on October 30, 1562, and Tahmasp, moved partly by fear of the Turkish power, partly by bribes, disregarded his solemn promises to the contrary and caused or suffered the unfortunate Prince and his four little sons to be put to death, and, as Anthony Jenkinson says, "sent his head for a present, not a little desired, and acceptable to the unnatural father." Tahmcisp seems to have overcome any scruples he may have felt in breaking his solemn promises to the guest he thus betrayed by handing him over not directly to his father, but to the emissaries of his brother Salim. The case is bad enough even as stated by the Shah himself in his Memoirs, which conclude with a pretty full account of this episode², ending thus :

" At this date 'All Aqa came from his Majesty the Sultdn⁸, and of [my] Nobles and Court everyone who had sent a present received its equivalent, save in the case of my own gift and offering, which on this occasion also had not proved acceptable; and there was a letter full of hints and complaints. I said, ' Here have I arrested and detained Prince Bayazfd with his four sons for the sake of His Majesty the Sultdn and Prince Salim; but since I have given my word not to

Tahmasp's own account of this betrayal.

¹ Early Voyages, etc (Hakluyt Society, 1886, vol. i), p. 141 and footnote, in which the substance of Knolles's contemporary account is given. See also Creasy's History of the Ottoman Turks (London, 1877), pp. 186-7.

² Horn's text, loc. at., pp. 642-9.

⁸ Here, as elsewhere, called Khwandgar, apparently a corruption of Khuddwandgr ("the Lord"), itself in turn corrupted by the Turks into Khunkar ('the Shedder of Blood').

surrender Bayazfd to the Sultan, I have determined that when the Sultan's commands arrive and likewise the emissaries of Prince Salfm, I will surrender [Bdyazfd] to the latter, so that I may not break my promise.' So when the Sultan's messengers arrived, I said, 'Your Excellency and Hasan Aqd are welcome, and I will act according to the commands of His Majesty and in no wise transgress his orders, but faithfully accomplish whatever service he may indicate. But in return for so material a service I desire from His Majesty the Sultan and Prince Salim such reward and recompense as may be worthy of them ; and, moreover, I hope of the Sultan in a friendly way that no hurt may befall Prince Bayazfd and his sons'."

Needless to say this pious wish in no wise influenced the tragic course of events, but the Shah's compliance with the Sultan's imperious demands led to a temporary amelioration of the relations between Persia and Turkey which is reflected both in Anthony Jenkinson's narrative and in the concluding State Papers contained in the first volume of Firidun Bey's Munska'dt, in which for the first time Tahmasp is addressed by Sulayman with decent civility, though there is no explicit reference to this event.

More creditable and better known is the reception of Humayun, the son of Babur and Emperor of Dihlf, at the Court of Tahmasp in A.D. 1544 when he was driven out of his own dominions. Of the hospitality which he received Sir John Malcolm¹ speaks with enthusiasm ; but Erskine², giving less weight to the official accounts than to the "plain unvarnished tale" of Humayun's servant Jawhar³, takes the view (which he

The Emperor
Humdyun
in Persia

¹ History of Persia (London, 1815), vol. i, pp. 508-9.

² History of India under... Baber and Humayun (London, 1854), vol. u, pp. 280 et seqq.

³ Translated by Major Charles Stewart and printed in London in 1832 for the Oriental Translation Fund.

supports by numerous illustrations) that in reality "Humayun had much to suffer and many humiliations to endure"; and that in particular great pressure was brought to bear on him to compel him to adopt the Shf'a faith, which might have gone even further but for the moderating influence of the Shdh's sister Sultanum Khdnum, the Minister Qddf-i-Jahan and the physician Nuru'd-Din. One of the pictures in the celebrated palace of *Chahil SutUn*¹ at Isfahdn represents an entertainment given by Tahmasp to Humdyun.

The foreign relations of Persia during the reign of Tahmasp were chiefly, as in the reign of his father Isma'fl, with three states—Turkey, the Uzbeks of Transoxiana, and the so-called "Great Moghuls" of Dihlf. During the greater part of his reign (until 974/1566-7) the great Sultan Sulayman occupied the Ottoman throne; afterwards Salim II ("the Sot"), and, for the last two years of his life (982-4/1574-6) Murad I I I. Of the Uzbek rulers 'Ubayd Khan, until his death in 946/1539-40, and afterwards Din Muhammad Sultdn were his most formidable foes, who ceased not to trouble his eastern, as did the Ottoman Turks his western borders. Of the "Great Moghuls" Babur (died 937/1530-1), Humdyun (died 962/1555) and Akbar were his contemporaries. Anthony Jenkinson, as we have seen, came to him with credentials from Queen Elizabeth in A.D. 1561, and some thirteen years later, towards the end of his reign, the arrival of a Portuguese mission from Don Sebastian is recorded in the Ahsanu'U Tawdrikh under the year 982/1574-5, but it met with a bad reception.

Between the Ottoman Turks on the one hand and the Uzbeks on the other, Persia enjoyed little peace at this period, and these campaigns on the N.E. and N.W. frontiers succeeded one another with varying fortune but with monotonous reiteration. Sulaymān's chief campaigns were in 940-942/1534-6, when Baghdad was taken from the Persians and Adharbādyān invaded¹; 950/1543-4; 953-955/1546-8, when the Shāh's brother Alqas allied himself with the Turks; 959/1552, when the Persians recovered Arjsh; and 961/1554, when Sulaymān burned Nakhjuwan and attacked Adharbādyān for the fourth time. The Turkish military power was at this time at its zenith, and was formidable not only to the Persians but to the great European Powers, who, indeed, were thankful for such diversion of its activities as the Persians from time to time effected, so that Busbecq, Ferdinand's ambassador at the Court of Sulaymān, declares that "only the Persian stands between us and ruin⁸." Creasy⁸ speaks of the "pre-eminence of the Turks of that age in the numerical force and efficiency of their artillery"; and adds that "the same remark applies to their skill in fortification, and in all the branches of military engineering." Inferior as were the Persian to the Ottoman troops alike in discipline and equipment, it was much to their credit that they were able to offer as stout a resistance as they did, especially as the continual object of Turkish diplomacy at this time was to incite the Uzbeks, Turkmans, and other Sunnī peoples, to combine with them in attacking "the rascally Red-heads" (Qzzil-bdsh-i-Awbdsh). Of this policy the State Papers of Sulaymān's, as of his father Sālm's, reign afford ample evidence; for instance the letter addressed to a Turkman chief about the end of 960/1553 (given on pp. 612-613 of Firfardun Rzy's Munsha'dt) and transmitted to him, apparently, by four of his representatives, Muhammad, Mfr Abu Turab, Mir Tiitf and Sunduk, who, after performing the Pilgrimage, had visited the Sultan's Court at Constantinople on their homeward journey, and had delighted him with accounts of their achievements against the Persians.

¹ See Lord Curzon's Persia, vol. ii, p. 35. A copy of the picture in question by Texier is reproduced in Sir Percy Sykes's History of Persia (2nd ed., London, 1921), vol. 11, p. 164.

Foreign relations of Persia in Tahmasp's reign.

¹ A complete diary of this campaign against the "arch-heretic Qizilbash King Tahmasp" will be found in vol. 1 of Firidun Bey's Munsha'at, pp. 584-598. The Ottoman army left Constantinople on June 1534, occupied Baghdad in December of the same year, and returned to Constantinople on Jan. 7, 1536.

² See p. 11 supra.

⁸ History of the Ottoman Turks (London, 1877), P- 202.

The wars with the Uzbeks were equally continuous, especially until the death of the redoubtable 'Ubayd Khan, the son of Shaybak Khan, a direct descendant of Chingfz, in 946/1539-40, at the age of fifty-three, after a reign of thirty years. He is said by the Ahsanu't-Tawdrikh to have suffered defeat in only one of the seven campaigns he fought against the Persians. Tus, Mashhad, and especially Herat suffered terribly during these wars, which were nearly always accompanied by severe religious persecutions. The poet Hilalf fell a victim to the Sunni fanaticism persecutions.

Wars with the Uzbeks

Religious

of the Uzbeks at Herat in 935/1528-9, as the poet Banna'f had fallen a victim to Shf'a intolerance at Qarshi in 918/1512-13; and under the year 942/1535-6 the Ahsanut-Tawdrikh gives the following graphic account of the persecution of the Shf'a which took place on the capture of Herat by 'Ubayd Khan on Rajab 20, 942 (January 14, 1536):

هر روز بحکمِ آن خان بی ایمان پنج شش کس بواسطهٔ تشیع
باقوالِ جہال در چهار سوقِ هراة کشته می شدند و روستائیان بی
دیانت و شہریان با خیانت با هر کس که عداوتی داشتند اورا
گرفته نزد قاضی می بردند کہ این مرد در زمانِ قزلباش لعن
ابو بکر و عثمان کرده است، بسخن آن دو کواه جاہل قاضی
بقتل آن مظلوم حکم می کرد و اورا کشان کشان بہ چهار سوق
هراة می بردند و بقتلش می آوردند و از شومی ایشان امواجِ محن

و الواج قتن بدرجه' اعلی رسید و سلب و نهب در اطراف خراسان واقع گردید،

"Every day by order of that unbelieving Khin ('Ubayd) five or six individuals were slain for Shf'a proclivities on the information of ignorant persons in the market-place¹ of Herdt. Godless villagers and treacherous townsmen would seize anyone against whom they cherished a grudge and drag him before the judge, asserting that in the time of the 'Red-heads' (i.e. the Shi'a Persians) he used to curse Abu Bakr and 'Uthman²; and on the word of these two ignorant witnesses the judge would pronounce sentence of death on the victim, whom they would then drag to the market-place of Herat and put to death. Through their sinister acts the waves of sorrow and the hosts of mischief attained their culmination, while plunder and looting took place throughout the confines of KhurdsEn "

With the Georgians also the Persians were constantly at war during this period, to wit in 947/1540-1, 950/1543-4, 958/1551, 961/1554, 963/1556, 968/1560-1, and 976/1568-9. These wars were also waged with great ferocity, and it is worth noting that contemporary Persian historians constantly speak of the Christian inhabitants of Georgia as "guebres" (gabrán, a term properly applicable only to the Zoroastrians), as in the following verse describing the first of these campaigns:

دران سنگلاخ آن ددان کرده جای' وطنگاه کبرانِ مردم ربای'

"In that stony wilderness those beasts had established themselves, the native land of man-stealing guebres "

In this campaign, as the Ahsanu t-Taivdrikh informs us, such of the Georgians as consented to embrace Islam were spared, but those who refused were put to the sword; and similarly, in speaking of the campaign of 958/1551 the same history says :

¹ Ckahar-suq (from which is derived the modern Turkish charshi) is the point of intersection of two main bdsdrs; a sort of Oriental Oxford Circus, affording the greatest publicity.

² The omission of 'Umar, unless due to a scribe's error, is remarkable.

غازیان ظفر شعار هست و بلند دیارِ کفار لاجار را احاطه فرمودند
و هر کوه و کمر که گریزگاه آن همراه بود از لنگدگوب دلاوران
با هامون یکسان شد و یک متنفس از آن مشرکین از دائره قهر
و عین و الله محیط با کافرین جان سلامت بیرون نبرد و اهل
و عیال و اموال بآرث شرعی از مقتولان بقاتلان انتقال
نمود^۱

"The victorious champions encompassed the lands of the sinful unbelievers, lowlands and highlands, and every mountain and ridge whither that misguided one [their ruler] had fled was levelled with the plain by the trampling of the [Persian] warriors. Not one who drew breath of those polytheists saved his soul alive from the circle of wrath and vengeance of ^k and God encompasseth the unbelievers¹] and, by lawful heritage, the wives, families and property of the slain passed to their slayers."

Besides these greater wars, there were minor operations against the more or less independent rulers of Gfian, and the last representatives of the ancient but expiring dynasty of the Shfrwanshahs, who boasted descent from the great Nushfrwan. Although the last of this line, Shahrukh ibn Sultdn Farrukh ibn Shaykh-shdh ibn Farrukh-Yasir, was put to death by Tahmdsp in 946/1539-40, nine years later we read of a scion of the house named Burhan in conflict with Isma'il Mfrza. In Gfln, Khdn Ahmad, the eleventh ruler of a petty dynasty which had ruled for two hundred and five years, was defeated and interned in the Castle of Qahqaha in 97$/1567-8. In 981/1573-4 Tabriz was terrorized by a gang of roughs who were not reduced to order and obedience until a hundred and fifty of them had been put to death. Barbarous punishments were frequent.

Minor wars and disturbances.

Barbarous punishments.

Muzafifar Sultdn, governor of Rasht, was for an act of treason paraded through the streets of Tabriz, decorated for the occasion, amidst the mockery of the rabble, and burned to death in an iron cage, suspended under which in a particularly cruel and humiliating fashion Amu* Sa'du'd-Din 'Inayatu'llah Khuzanf simultaneously suffered the same fate. Khwaja Kaldn Ghuriyanf, a fanatical Sunnf who had gone out to welcome 'Ubayd Khan the Uzbek and was accused of speaking slightly of the Shall, was skinned in the market-place of Herdt and the stuffed skin exhibited on a pole. Ruknu'd-Din Mas'ud of Kazarun, a most learned man and skilful physician, incurred the Shah's displeasure and was burned to death. Muhammad Salih, a liberal patron of poets, in whose honour liayratf composed a panegyric, had his mouth sewn up because he was alleged to have spoken disrespectfully of the King, and was then placed in a large jar which was afterwards thrown to the ground from the top of a minaret

¹ Qur'an, ii, 18.

According to the Ahsanift-Tawdrikh, Shah Tahmasp was in his youth much interested in calligraphy and painting; he also liked riding on Egyptian asses, Tahmasp's foibles satirized. which consequently became fashionable, and were adorned with golden trappings and gold-embroidered saddle-cloths. Alluding to these idiosyncrasies a ribald poet with the extraordinary nam de guerre of Btiqu'l-'tshq ("the Trumpet of Love") lampooned him in this verse:

بی تکلف خوش ترقی کرده اند کاتب و نقاش و قزوینی و خر

"The scribe, the painter, the Qazwīnf and the ass Obtained easy promotion without trouble."

He made a great ostentation of piety, "regarding most things as unclean, and often spitting out his half-eaten food into the water or the fire," in view of which it is satisfactory to know that "he would not eat in company." He was also punctilious about such matters as cutting his nails, and would spend the day after this operation in the bath,

98 CULMINATION OF THE SAFAWI POWER [

Talwaisp died on Tuesday, Safar 15,984 (May 14,1576) at the age of sixty-four after a reign of fifty-three years and a half, the longest reign, according to the Ahsanu't-Tawarikh of any Muhammadan sovereign except the Eftimid Caliph al-Mustansir bi'llih¹. Eleven of his sons are enumerated³ in the history just cited, of whom nine at least survived him. The eldest, Muhammad Khudd-banda, who was about forty-five years of age, though he succeeded to the throne a year later, renounced it on his father's death on account of his partial blindness, this infirmity, whether natural or deliberately inflicted, being regarded in the East, and especially in Persia, as an absolute disqualification for the exercise of regal functions⁸. His younger brother Haydar, taking advantage of the absence from the capital of his brothers, of whom Isma'il was imprisoned in the Castle of Qahqaha, while the others were for the most part resident in distant provinces, endeavoured to seize the throne, but was murdered in the women's apartments, where he had taken refuge, by the partisans of his brother Isma'il, who was proclaimed king in the principal mosque of Qazwfn nine days after his father's death.

Isma'il's reign was short but sanguinary, and in his drastic methods of dealing with possible competitors for the Crown he rivalled the most ruthless of the Ottoman Sultans. He first put to death his two brothers Sulaymdn and Mustafa; then, after providing an elaborate funeral for his father at Mashhad and a gorgeous coronation for himself at Qazwfn, in which his remaining brothers occupied their due positions, he resumed his fratricidal activities. On Sunday the sixth of Dhu'l-Hijja, A.H. 984 (Feb. 24,1577), he put to death the six following princes : Sultan Ibrahim Mirza, poet, artist, musician and calligrapher;

Troubles exceeding the death of Tahmasp,

Short and sanguinary reign of Isma'il II

¹ He reigned sixty lunar years, A.H. 427-487 (A.D. 1035-1094).

² See Chardm's Voyages (Pans, 1811), vol. v, pp. 241-244, his nephew Muhammad Husayn Mirza, a lad of eighteen, who had already been deprived of his eyesight; Sultan Mahmud Mirza; his son Muhammad Baqir Mirza, a child of two; Imam-qulf Mirza, and Sultan Ahmad Mfrzl He next turned his attention to those princes who were resident in outlying provinces, such as Badi'u'z-Zaman Mirza and his little son Bahram Mirza in Khurasan, Sultan 'All Mirza in Ganja, and Sultan Hasan Mirza in Tihran, all of whom he destroyed. Only by a most wonderful chance, accounted by his biographer Iskandar Munshf¹ as a miraculous intervention of Providence, did the little Prince 'Abbas Mirza, destined to become the greatest of Persia's modern rulers, escape his uncle's malevolence. The blood-thirsty Isma'fl had actually sent 'Alf-qulf Khan Shamlti to Herat, of which 'Abbas Mirza*, though only six years of age*, was the nominal governor, to put the young prince to death, but the emissary, whether actuated by pity or superstition, delayed the accomplishment of his cruel task till the sacred month of Ramadan should be over, and ere this respite had come to an end a courier arrived bringing the joyful news of Isma'iTs death, the manner of which was as discreditable as his life. On the night of Sunday, Ramadan 13, A.H. 985 (Nov. 24, 1577), being at the time the worse for drink, he had gone out in

Narrow escape of Prince 'Abbas.

Discreditable end of Isma'il II.

search of adventures into the streets and bazars of the city accompanied by one of his favourites, a confectioner's son named Hasan Beg, and other disreputable companions, and towards dawn had gone to rest in Hasan Beg's house, where he was found dead later in the day. Some suggested that he had been poisoned, or first drugged and afterwards strangled, while others maintained that he had merely taken an overdose of the opium wherewith he was wont to assuage the pain of a colic to which he was subject. But his death was so welcome to all that no great trouble seems to have been taken to arrive at the manner of it, and it does not even appear that any punishment was inflicted on Hasan Beg, who, indeed, is said to have been also half paralysed when found¹.

¹ Author of the well-known monograph on Shah 'Abbas the Great entitled Ta'rikh-i-'Alam-ara-yi-Abbasi.

⁸ He was born at Herat on Ramadan 1, 978 (Jan. 27, 1571).

Muhammad Khuda-banda, in spite of his blindness, was now placed on the throne which he had refused on the death of his father Shah Tahmasp. He was at this time about forty-six years of age³ and was resident at Shfraz, having been replaced in his former government of Herat by his little son Prince 'Abbas Mirza, whose narrow escape from death has just been described. The new king at once set out for Qazwfn, and amongst those who welcomed him at Qum was Hasan Beg Rumlu, the author of the Ahsanu't-Tawarikk, which important but unpublished history was concluded in this very year and contains the most authoritative account of the events above narrated. That this account is in places confused and must be supplemented by later histories like the Kkuld-i-Barin and Ta' rikh-i-Alam~drd-yi-Abbdsi arises from the fact that the author, for his own personal safety, had to walk with great caution amidst the rapidly-changing circumstances of these perilous times.

At Qazwfn, Muhammad Khuda-banda received the homage of Sulayman Pasha, a great-grandson of Abu Sa'fd the Tfmurid, who greeted him with the following verses:

شاه در تو قبله شاهان عالم است
 گردون ترا مستقر و گیتی مستقر است
 یکتا شد دست رشته شاهى به عهد تو
 الحمد لله آنچه گه بکتاست محکم است

¹ Cf. Sir John Malcolm's History of Persia (London, 1815), vol. i, pp. 516-517.

² According to the Ahsanu't-Tawarikh he was born in 938/1531-2.

Reign of Muhammad Khuda-banda (A.D. 1577-87).

" O King, thy gate is the qitrta of the Kings d the world,
 Heaven is subjugated and earth surrendered to thee:
 In thy reign the thread of royalty hath become single¹, f
 But, Praise be to God, though single it is strong."

The able, ambitious and beautiful Princess Parf-Khan Khanum, Tahmasp Shah's favourite daughter* by a Circassian wife, who had played a prominent part in the troubles succeeding his death, and aspired to rule in fact if not in name, was put to death at Muhammad Khudd-banda's command by Khalil Khan Afshar, together with her mother's brother Sharnkhal Khan, and Shah Shuja', the infant son of the late King Isma'fl. In consequence of these pitiless slaughters the representatives of the Safawi Royal Family were now reduced to Shah Muhammad Khuda-banda himself and his four sons, Hamza, 'Abbas, Abu Talib and Tahmasp. The first, who is sometimes reckoned amongst the Safawi kings (since he seems for a while to have exercised regal functions during his half-blind father's life-time), was murdered by a young barber named Khuda-verdf⁸ on the 22nd of Dhu'l-Hijja, 994 (Dec. 4, 1586). Abu Talib was thereupon nominated WaU-ahd, or Crown Prince, instead of his elder brother 'Abbas, who was still in Khurasan, but who speedily appeared on the scene with his guardian and tutor Murshid-qulf Khan Ustajlu, ¹ I suppose this alludes to the practical extermination of the rest of the Royal Family by Isma'fl I I.

⁸ Sir John Malcolm (op. cit. vol. 1, pp. 514 and 517) appears to confuse her with her mother, since he calls her " the favounte Sultana of the deceased monarch" (Tahmasp), and "the sister of Shamkhil." In the 'Alam-ara-yi-Abb&sis' she is enumerated as the second of Tahmdsp's eight daughters, but according to other Persian historians she was one of the five daughters of Shah Isma'fl and the sister of Tahmasp. See p. 81 supra, n. 2 ad calc. By "Don Juan of Persia" she is called the Infanta.

³ Called by "Don Juan of Persia" (f. 104*) "Cudy de Lac" (i.e. Dallak) " que es como si dixeramos en Espafiol, Cudi el barbero del Rey."

inflicted condign punishment on those who had prompted the murder of his elder brother Ilamza, and rendered his two younger brothers harmless by depriving them of their eyesight and imprisoning them in the Castle of Alamtit¹. His father abdicated in his favour after a reign of ten years in Dhu'l-Qa'da, 995 (October, 1587), and Shih 'Abbas ascended the throne to which he was destined to add so great a glory. He and his three brothers were all the sons of one mother, a lady of the Mar'ashf Sayyids of Mazandaran, who seems to have resembled her sister-in-law Parf-Khan Khinum in her masterful character as well as in her tragic fate, for she, together with her aged mother and many of her kinsfolk and countrymen, was murdered by some of the Qizil-bash nobles who objected to her autocratic methods and dominating influence over her irresolute and peace-loving husband, being of opinion that—

Accession of Shah 'Abbas the Great (A.D.
1587-1629)

فروغی نماند در آن خاندان ' که بانگِ خروس آید از ماکیان

"No luck remains in that household where the hen crows like a cock²."

Muhammad Khuda-banda was born in 938/1531-2, was forty-six years of age when his father Shah Tahmasp died in 984/1576-7, reigned ten years after the death of his brother Isma'il, survived his abdication eight or nine years, and died in 1004/1595-6, His character is thus described by Rida-qulf Khan in his Supplement to the Rawdatu's-Safd: "He had some knowledge of all the current sciences, and was incomparable in understanding and judgement, virtue and discernment, bounty and generosity, and expression and eloquence. Being a 'servant of God' (Khuda-banda) he showed an excessive

Character of Muhammad
Khuda-banda.

¹ "Don Juan of Persia," f. 107^b.

² Supplement to the Rawdatu's-Safa.

clemency in matters of administration, war, anger and punishment, and, so far as possible, would not consent to the death of any one. Though he struck the first blow at Khudd-verdf the barber¹, this was only according to the enactment of the Holy Law. In consequence of his weak eyesight he seldom gave public audience, and, while he tarried in the women's apartments, the Sayyida [his wife] gave effect to his commands, and, in order more effectively to control affairs, herself sealed the documents...In short, he was a king with the qualities of a religious mendicant, or a religious mendicant endowed with regal pomp (Pddishdhi darwish-kkisdli, yd darwishipddishdh-jatdl)."

His reign, though short, was troubled not only by the domestic tragedies indicated above, but by the Turks, Uzbeks, Crimean Tartars, Georgians and other external foes, who, encouraged by the spectacle of those internecine struggles which succeeded the death of Tahmasp, sought to profit by the distractions of Persia.

Shah 'Abbas I, commonly and justly called "the Great," was only sixteen or seventeen years of age when he ascended the throne in 996/1588^s, and died in Jumida 1, 1038/Jan. 1629 at the age of 60 after a reign of 43 lunar years, in which, by general agreement, Persia reached the highest degree of power, prosperity and splendour ever attained by her in modern times. His position lit first was, however, fraught with dangers and difficulties. Not only was his kingdom threatened, as usual, by the Ottoman Turks on the west and the Uzbeks on the east, but many of the provinces were in revolt and the country was distracted by the rivalries and ambitions of the great Qizil-bash Shah 'Abbas the Great (A. D. 1588 to 1629).

Dangers threatening Persia on his accession.

¹ The murderer of his son Hamza. See p. 101 supra and n. 3 ad calc
⁸ He was born, according to the "Alam-ara-yt'Abdsiy on Rama-4an 1, 978 (Jan. 27, 1571X or 979 (Jan. 17, 1572). The words form the chronogram of his coronation.

nobles of different tribes, in the hands of two of whom, Murshid-quU Khan and 'Ali-quli Khan, the young King seemed at first to be a mere puppet. When the former accompanied him to Qazwin to place him on the throne, the latter was left in Khurasan to bear the brunt of the Uzbek attack, to which, after a defence of nine months, he fell a victim. 'Abbas, suspecting Murshid-quU Khan of deliberately withholding help from his rival, caused him to be murdered one night in camp at Shalirdd, thus freeing himself from an irksome tutelage, and becoming a sovereign ruler in fact as well as in name. Realizing that he could not possibly wage successful war simultaneously with the Turks and the Uzbeks, he determined, with far-sighted prudence, to make peace, even on unfavourable terms, with the former in order to check the encroachments of the latter and to devise some mechanism to control the disorderly rivalries of the Qizil-bash nobles, whereby his authority and the efficiency of his military force were paralysed. The terms of the treaty with Turkey included the surrender of the towns and districts in Adharbayjan and Georgia conquered by the Ottoman troops during a war which had lasted more than twelve years (985-998/1577-1590), such as Tabriz, Ganja, Qars, Nakhjuwan, Shakh, Shamdkh and Tiflis, as well as part of Luristan ; the abandonment of the cursing of the first three Caliphs, Abu Bakr, 'Umar and 'Uthman ; and the sending as a hostage to Constantinople of Shah 'Abbas's nephew Haydar Mirza, who departed with the Turkish general Farhad Pasha for the Ottoman capital, where he died two years later.

Conclusion of Peace with Turkey.

Shah 'Abbas next proceeded to subdue Shfraz, Kirman, Gilan and Khurram-dbdd in Luristdn, and to inflict condign punishment on Ya'qub Khan Dhu'l-Qadar and other rebels. Meanwhile 'Abdu'l-Mu'min Khan and his Uzbeks were again ravaging Khurasan, and the Uzbek invasion.

Shih, advancing to attack them, was stricken down by fever at Tihran. While he lay sick and unable to move, the holy city of Mashhad was taken and sacked by the savage Uzbeks and many of its inhabitants slain. Sabzawir¹ suffered a similar fate in 1002/1593-4; but three or four years later* 'Abdu'lldh Khan, the Uzbek sovereign, died, and his son, the above-mentioned 'Abdu'l-Mti'min Khdn, was killed by his own people. It was at this juncture (April, 1598) that Shih 'Abbas was at length able to attack the Uzbeks in force and drive them out of Khurisdn, which now at length enjoyed a period of peace and tranquillity. On his return from this victorious campaign to Qazwfn in the autumn of the same year, he found awaiting him there those celebrated English soldiers of fortune brothers.

The Sherley

Sir Anthony and Sir Robert Sherley, whose romantic adventures are fully described in several excellent monographs⁸. These, who were accompanied by some dozen English attendants, including at least one cannon-founder, aided him greatly in the reconstruction of his army and especially in providing it with artillery, the lack of which had hitherto so severely handicapped the Persians in their wars with the Turks, so that, as it is quaintly phrased

Improvement of Persian artillery.

in Purchases Pilgrims, "the mighty Ottoman, terror of the Christian world, quaketh of a Sherley fever, and gives hopes of approaching fates. The prevailing Persian hath learned Sherleian arts of war; and he which before knew not the use of ordnance, hath now five hundred pieces of brass and sixty thousand musqueteers; so that they, which at hand with the sword were before dreadful to the Turks, now also, in remoter blows and sulphurean arts, are grown terrible." The discipline of the Persian army had also been improved by the elimination of the more ambitious and disobedient Oizil-bdsh nobles; the creation of a composite tribal force known as Shdh-seven ("King-lovers"), united not by tribal allegiance but by personal devotion to the King; and the formation of a regular infantry comparable in some degree to the Turkish Janissaries.

¹ The author of the 'Alam~drd~yt~i~Abbdsi says that he himself saw amongst those slain at Sabzawir women with children at the breast

² In 1006/1597-8, according to the 'Alam~drd~yi~AbbdH.

⁸ eg. "The Sherley Brothers, an historical Memoir of the Lives of Sir Thomas Sherley, Sir Anthony Sherley, and Sir Robert Sherley, Knights, by one of the same House* (Evelyn Philip Shirley; Roxburgh Club: Chiswick, 1848); "The Three Brothers, or the Travels and Adventures of Sir A., Sir R. and Sir T. Sherley in Persia, Russia, Turkey, Spain, etc., with Portraits " (Anon., London, 1825).

Formation of the Skdk- seven tribe

A year or two later circumstances were favourable for the long-projected attempt to recover the provinces wrested from Persia by the Turks during the inter-regnum which succeeded the death of Tahmasp. The reign of the feeble Muhammad III was approaching its end, and Turkey was weakened by a prolonged war with Austria and by the so-called JalaU¹ revolt in Asia Minor when Shah 'Abbas opened his campaign in 1010/1601-2. Tabriz was retaken "with cannon, an engine of long-time by the Persians scorned as not beseeming valiant men," in 1012/1603-4, and two years later the celebrated Turkish general Chighala-zada Sinan Pasha ("Cicala") was defeated near Salmas and compelled to retreat to Van and Diyar Bakr, where he died of chagrin. Baghdad and Shfrwan were recaptured by the Persians about the same time, but the former changed hands more than once during the reign of Shah 'Abbas, and the occasion of its recapture from the Turks in A.D. 1625 gave rise to an Successful war against the Ottoman Turks.

¹ An account of the heretic Jalal is given by Munajjim-bdsbf {Sahd Hftfl-Akhbdr, Turkish version, ed. Constantinople, A.H. 1285, vol. lii, p. 471). He and many of his followers were killed near Sfwas in 925/1519, but evidently the sect which he founded retained its vitality for the better part of a century afterwards.

interchange of verses between Hafiz Pashd and Sultan Murdd IV which has attained a certain celebrity in Turkish literary history¹.

No coherent and critical account of these wars between the Persians on the one hand and the Turks, Uzbeks and Georgians on the other has yet, so far as I know, been written, but the materials are ample, should any historian acquainted with Persian and Turkish desire to undertake the task. The enormous preponderance of the military element in such contemporary chronicles as the Td rikh-i-Alatn-drd-yi-'Abdsi makes them very dull and arduous reading to anyone not specially interested in military matters; even from the point of view of military history they are vitiated by overwhelming masses of trivial details and the absence of any breadth of view or clearness of outline. Many matters on which we should most desire information are completely ignored, and it is only here and there incidentally that we find passages throwing light on the religious and social conditions of the time. Of the recapture of the Island of Hurmuz in the Persian Gulf from the Portuguese in March, 1622, by a combined Anglo-Persian force we have naturally very detailed contemporary English accounts

Allusion has already been made in the introductory chapter⁸ to the splendour and prosperity of Isfahan under

Shah 'Abbas, and to the number of foreigners, diplomatists, merchants and missionaries, which his tolerant attitude towards non-Muslims brought thither. These and other similar matters are very fully discussed in the first volume of the great monograph on his reign entitled Tcirikh-i-Alam-drd-yi-'Abdsi, half of which consists of an Introduction (Muqaddama) comprising

¹ See E. J. W. Gibb's History of Ottoman Poetry, vol. in, pp. 248-251, and, for the originals, vol. vi, pp. 190-191.

⁸ Pp. 24-5 supra.

twelve Discourses (Magd/a). The first of these, dealing with his ancestors and predecessors, is much the longest, and in my manuscript occupies about two hundred pages ; the others, though much shorter, often occupying only a page or two, are more original, and deal with such matters as the religious devotion of Shdh 'Abbis; his wise judgement and wide knowledge; his worthiness to be regarded as a Sdhib-Qirdn, or " Lord of a fortunate Conjunction "; his miraculous preservation on several occasions from imminent peril; his wise administration and care for public security; his inflexible severity; his pious foundations and charitable bequests; his wars and victories; his birth and childhood; and an account of the most eminent nobles, divines, ministers, physicians, calligraphers, painters, illuminators, poets and minstrels of his reign. Speaking of his

His inflexible
severity

severity (Maqdlā vi) the author, Iskandar Munshi, says that no one dared to delay one moment in the execution of any order given him by the King: " for instance, should he command a father to kill his son, the sentence would be carried out immediately, even as the decree of destiny ; or should the father, moved by parental tenderness, make any delay, the command would be reversed; and should the son then temporize, another would slay both. By such awful severity the execution of his commands attained the supreme degree of efficiency, and none dared hesitate for an instant in the fulfilment of the sentence inevitable as fate/' He also

Attendance at executions made compulsory.

compelled his officers, on pain of death, to be present at all executions ; held each provincial governor and local magistrate responsible for the security of the roads in his district; and punished falsehood with such severity that it was generally believed that if anyone ventured to lie to him, he was informed of it from the Spirit World. Yet at other times he would be very friendly and unassuming in his intercourse with his courtiers and attendants, careful of their rights and just claims, and ready to overlook accidental and involuntary shortcomings. Though not averse from the banquet and the wine-bout, he was greatly concerned to be correctly informed as to the circumstances of the neighbouring kings and countries, and devoted much attention to the development of his Intelligence Department. He was also something of a linguist, and not only appreciated but occasionally composed poetry.

Shih 'Abbas mingles affa-bility with severity.

Amongst the towns and districts which benefited most from his munificence were, besides his capital Isfahan, Mashhad and its holy shrine of the eighth Imam 'Ali Rida, which, as we have seen, he rescued from the savage and fanatical Uzbeks and raised to a position of the greatest glory and honour; Ardabil, the original home of his family; Qazwin, the earlier capital of the Safawis; Kashan, near which he constructed the celebrated dam known as the Band-i-Quhrud¹; Astarabad, Tabriz; Hamadan; and the province of Mazandaran, one of his favourite resorts, which he adorned with several splendid palaces and the great causeway extending from AsTabid to Ashraf, of which full particulars are given in Lord Curzon's great work on Persia². As regards his conquests, his armies reached Merv, Nisa, Abward, Andakhud and even Balkh in the north-east, and Nakhjuwan, Erivan, Ganja, Tins, Darband and Baku in the north-west

Towns specially favoured by him

His conquests.

No useful purpose would be served by enumerating here all the notable persons in each class mentioned by Iskandar Munshi, who wrote, as he repeatedly mentions in the course of his work, in 1025/1616, but the most important are, amongst the divines and

Notable personages of his reign.

¹ See my Year amongst the Persians, pp. 185-6.

² Vol. i, pp. 376-8, etc.

men of learning, Mfr Muhammad Ddmd and Shaykh

Calligraphists. BahaVd-Din 'AmiH; amongst the calligraphists,

Mawlana Ishaq Siyawushdnf, Muhammad Husayn-i-Tabrfzf, Mir Muizz-i-Kashf, Mir Sadru'd-Din Muhammad, and others; amongst the artists and

Artists miniature painters, MuzafTar 'Alf, Zaynu'l-'Abidfn, Scidiq Beg, A.bdu'l-Jabbcir, and others; amongst the Poets. poets, Damirf, Muhtasham, Waif, Wahshf, Khwaja Husayn, Mfr Haydar Mu'amma'f, the brothers Tayfur and Da'f, Walih and Malik of Qum, Hatim of Kashan, Sabri Ruzbihanf, Hisabf, the Qadf Nur-i-Isfahan*, Halatf, Halakf, Mazharf of Cashmere, and the Qazwfnfs Furughf, Tabkhf, Sultanu'l-Fuqard, Ka'ka and Sharmf; and amongst the singers and minstrels¹, Hafiz

Musicians, etc. Ahmad-i-Qazwfni, Hafiz Jalajil-i-Bakharzf, HF-fiz Muzaffar-i-Qumf, Hafiz Hashim-i-Qazwinf, Mfrzd Muhammad Kamancha'f, Ustad Muhammad Mu'min, Ustdd Shahsuwar-i-Chahar-tari, Ustad Shams-i-Shaypurghu'f-i-Waramfnf, Ustad Ma'sum Kamdncha'f, Ustdd Sultdn Muhammad Tanbura'f, Mirza Husayn Tanbura'f, Ustad Sultan Muhammad-i-Changf, and the Qissa-khivdns (story-tellers) and Shdhndma-khwdns (reciters of the 'Epic of Kings'), Haydar, Muhammad Khursand and Fathf, of whom the two last were brothers and natives of Isfahan. It is because the fame of the singers, minstrels and musicians who constitute this last class is in its nature so ephemeral that I have enumerated them in full, as indicating what forms of musical talent were popular at the court of Shdh 'Abds.

That Shah 'Abbas deserved the title of " the Great " there can be no question, and many of his severities have been palliated, if not excused, even by European historians like

¹ Of these titles, Hafiiz denotes a Qur dn-reciter or rhapsodist; Kamancha'i a violinist; Chahar-tari a player on the four-stringed lute ; ShaypiirghuH a trumpeter ; fanburaH a drummer; and Ckangi a harper.

Sir John Malcolm¹; but his cruel murder of his eldest son Safi Mirza and his blinding of another, Khuda-banda Mirza, and the tragical circumstances connected therewith², form a dark page in the records of his otherwise glorious reign, which ended with his death in the early part of A.D. 1629. He was succeeded by his grandson Sam Mirza, who, on his accession, took the name of his unfortunate* father, and mounted the throne of Persia under the title of Shah Saff I.

There is a well-known tradition of the Muhammadans* that Solomon died standing, supported by the staff on which he leaned, and that his death remained unknown to the Jinn who laboured at his command in the construction of the Temple, for a year, until the wood-worm ate through the staff and the body fell to the ground. This legend may well serve as a parable of the century of Safawi rule which followed the death of Shah 'Abbas the Great, who, by his strength and wisdom, gave to Persia a period of peace and outward prosperity which for nearly a hundred years protected his successors from the results of their incompetence.

Four of his house succeeded him ere the catastrophe of the Afghan invasion in A.D. 1722 effected its downfall, to wit, his grandson Shah Saff above mentioned (A.D. 1629-1642); his great-grandson Shah 'Abbas II (A.D. 1642-1666), his great-great-grandson Saff, subsequently recrowned under the name of Sulayman (A.D. 1666-1694); and his great-great-great-grandson Shah Husayn (A.D. 1694-1722). Of Shah Saff, Kru-sinski⁴ says that " 'tis certain there has not been in Persia a more cruel and bloody reign than his" and describes it as "one continued series on his reign.

The chief blot

The successors of Shah 'Abba* the Great.

Shah Saff (A.D.
1629-1642), a blood-thirsty tyrant

¹ History of Persia (ed. 1815), vol. i, pp. 555-6

² Ibid. pp. 560-5.

³ See the commentaries on Qur'an xxxiv, 13.

* P. 44 of the English translation (London, 1728).

of cruelties"; while Hanvvay¹ observes that "he interfered so little in the affairs of the government that the Persians would have scarcely perceived they had a king, had it not been for the frequent instances of barbarity which stained his reign with blood"; and that "by his own folly he lost Kandahar and Babylon [Baghdad], two of the most important places on his frontiers." Than Shah 'Abbas II, on

'Abbas II (A D 1642-1666), a good king, save m his cups

the other hand, according to Krusinski², "next to Ismael I and Schah-Abas the Great, Persia never had a better king of the family of the Sophies." Although, like his father and predecessor, he was "too much subject to wine, and committed some acts of cruelty, yet, abateing a few excursions, of which he might justly be reproached, he shewed himself, during the whole course of his reign, truly worthy of the crown he wore." "The farther he advanced into his reign," continues the Jesuit, "the more he was beloved by his subjects and the more feared by his neighbours. He loved justice, and had no mercy of the governors and other public officers who, abusing their authority, oppressed the people, of which several instances may be seen in Tavernier. He had a great and noble soul, was very kind to strangers, and openly protected the Christians, whom he would not have in the least molested for their religion, saying, ¹ That none but God was master of their consciences, that, for his own part, he was only governor of externals, and that all his subjects being equally members of the State, of what religion soever they were, he owed justice to them all alike." This reign, however, was the last flicker of greatness in the Safawi dynasty,

Sulayman (A D 1666-1694), a cruel and debauched king

for Sulayman (to quote Krusinski⁴ once more), "degenerated very much from the virtues of his father Schah-Abas II, and made his reign remarkable only by a thousand instances of cruelty,

¹ Revolutions of Persia (London, 1753), vol 1, p 20.

² Op. at., p 49. ³ Op at., pp 57-G.

THE SECOND PART OF THE

THE SECOND PART OF THE

the bare mention of which is shocking. When he was in wine or in wrath nobody about him was sure of life or estate. He caused hands, feet, nose and ears to be cut off, eyes to be plucked out, and lives to be sacrificed upon the least whim that took him; and the man that was most in his favour at the beginning of a debauch was generally made a sacrifice at the end of it. This is the character given us of him by Sir John Chardm, who was in part a witness of what he relates as to this matter. Persons thought their lives in such danger whenever they approached him that a great lord of his Court said, when he came from* his presence, that he always felt if his head was left standing upon his shoulders. It was under this prince that Persia began to decay. He thought so little like a king that when it was represented to him what danger he was in from the Turks, who, when they had made peace with the Christians, would come and attack his finest provinces if he did not put himself in a position to repel them, he answered very indifferently that he did not care, provided they left him Isfahan."

Shah Husayn, the last Safawi king (for his nominal successors Tahmasp II and 'Abbas III were mere puppets in the hands of Nadir Shah), was very unlike his predecessors, for his clemency was so excessive as "rendered him incapable of any severity, though never so moderate and necessary¹" while having one day accidentally wounded a duck with his pistol "he himself was as much terrified as if he had really committed murder, and made the same exclamation as is customary in Persia upon the shedding of human blood, by saying *Kanlu oldum*² i.e. 'I am polluted with blood'; and that very instant he caused two hundred tomons to be given to the poor as an atonement for what he thought a

Shah Husayn
(A D 1694, deposed 172a, killed 1729), a
"meek zealot"

¹ Krusmski, op. cit., pp. 105-108.

² Turkish.

great sin." He was something of a scholar and theologian, much under the influence of the Mullds, and so careful of his religious duties and so much attached to the reading of the Qur^dn as to earn for himself the nick-name of Mulld or "Parson Husayn¹." Though at first a vehement prohibitionist, he was later induced by his grandmother, instigated by wine-loving courtiers and power-seeking eunuchs, to taste the forbidden liquor, which gradually obtained such a hold on him that "he would not by any means hear the mention of business, but left it all to the discretions of his ministers and eunuchs, who governed the kingdom just as they pleased, and took the greater license because they were very sensible they had nothing to fear from a prince who was so weak as to refer the very petitions he received to them without so much as reading them²."

In such a work as this, which is concerned primarily with Persian literature and only secondarily with Persian history, and that only in broad outlines, save in the case of periods which witnessed some definite change in the national outlook, it is unnecessary to enter into a more detailed account of the later Safawi period ; the more so because several excellent accounts of the decline and fall of this remarkable dynasty, and of the state of Persia at that time, are readily accessible to the English reader. Of these the following may be especially commended.

Adam Olearius, Secretary to the Embassy sent by Frederick Duke of Holstein to Russia and Persia, was in the latter country from November, 1636 until February, 1638. His Voyages and Travels, originally written in Latin, were translated into French and thence, by John Davies, into English. I have used the English version published in 1669.

Best contemporary accounts of this period.

(z) Olearius
(A.D. 1636-1638).

Olearius, or Oelschlager, to give him his original name, was a careful observer, and seems to have had a very fair knowledge both of Persian and Turkish, and his work is one of the best accounts of Persia in the seventeenth century.

¹ Krusinski, op. cit. p. 71.

² Ibid. p. 76.

Le Pere Raphael du Mans, Superior of the Capuchin Mission at Isfahan, was born in A.D. 1613, went to Persia in 1644, and died there in 1696. His Estat de la Perse en 1660 in the learned edition of M. Schefer (Paris, 1890) gives a valuable if not very lively account of Persian institutions at a somewhat later date than Olearius.

<a) Raphael du Mans (A.D.
1644-1696).

The Chevalier Chardin was born in A.D. 1643, ^{was} twice in Persia for about six years each time (A.D. 1664-70 and 1671-77), and settled in London in 1681, where he died in 1713. Of the numerous editions of his Voyages en Perse I have used that of the learned Langles (Paris, 1811) in ten volumes, of which the last contains (pp. 151-244) an admirable Notice chronologique de la Perse, depuis les temps les plus reculés jusqu'à ce jour by the editor, carried down to the time of Fath-'Alf Shih

(3) Chardin
(A.D. X664-1677)

Shaykh 'AH Hazm, who traced his descent from the celebrated Shaykh Zahid-i-Gflanf, the spiritual director of Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Din, the ancestor of the Sa-fawf kings, was born in A.D. 1692 at Isfahan, where he spent the greater part of his time until j he left Persia for India, never to return, in A.D. 1734. He wrote his Memoirs (published in the original Persian with an English translation by F. C. Belfour in 1830-1) in 1741, and died at Benares at a ripe old age in 1779. Though he was himself involved in the disaster which overtook Isfahdn in 1722, he gives a much less vivid and moving picture of the sufferings of its inhabitants during the siege by the Afghans than that drawn by Krusinski and other European observers. His portraits of contemporary statesmen, theo-

(4) Shaykh 'Ali
liazln (A.D.
1692-1779).

logians and poets, on the other hand, lend a special value to his book

Father Krusinski, Procurator of the Jesuits at Isfahan for some eighteen or twenty years previous to A.D. 1722, compiled an admirable History of the Revolution of Persia from the beginning of the Safawi dynasty down to A.D. 1727 in which the circumstances of the Afghan invasion and its consequences are narrated in the utmost detail.

(5) Krusinski
(A.D. 1700-1727).

Jonas Han way, who was in Persia in A.D. 1743-4, wrote and published in 1753 in two volumes An historical account of the British Trade over the Caspian Sea, with a journal of Travels, which he supplemented by two further volumes on the Revolution of Persia, the first containing The Reign of Shah Sultan Hussein, with the Invasion of the Afghans, and the reigns of Sultan Mir Maghmud and his successor Ashreff, and the second The History of the celebrated usurper Nadir Kouli, from his birth in 1687 to his death in 1747, to which are added some particulars of the unfortunate reign of his successor Adil Shah. For the earlier part of his history Han way is much indebted to Krusinski, but for the later period (A.D. 1727-1750), including the whole account of Nddir Shah, he is an independent and most valuable authority, while his narrative is throughout lively and agreeable to read.

(6) Hanway
(A.D. 1743-

These are only a few of the many writers and travellers whose works throw light on this period. I have mentioned them because they are the ones I have chiefly used, but a long and serviceable account of a much larger number will be found in Schefer's Introduction to his edition of le Pere Raphael du Mans mentioned above. The European writers are here, for reasons well set forth by Sir John Malcolm¹, more instructive and illuminating than the Persian historians, for

The later Safawi period not calcu*
Lared to inspire Persian historian*.

¹ History of Persia (London, 1815), vol. i, pp. 568-570.

whom, as he says, <*we can hardly imagine an era more unfavourable. A period of nearly a century elapsed without the occurrence of any one political event of magnitude; and yet the extraordinary calm was productive of no advantage to Persia. The princes, nobles, and high officers of that kingdom were, it is true, exempt from the dangers of foreign or internal war; but their property and their lives were the sport of a succession of weak, cruel and debauched monarchs. The lower orders were exposed to fewer evils than the higher, but they became every day more unwarlike; and what they gained by that tranquillity which the State enjoyed lost almost all its value when they ceased to be able to defend it. This period was distinguished by no glorious achievements. No characters arose on which the historian could dwell with delight. The nation may be said to have existed on the reputation which it had before acquired till all it possessed was gone, and till it became, from the slow but certain progress of a gradual and vicious decay, incapable of one effort to avert that dreadful misery and ruin in which it was involved by the invasion of a few Afghan tribes, whose conquest of Persia affixed so indelible a disgrace upon that country that we cannot be surprised that its historians have shrunk from the painful and degrading narration."

Shaykh 'Ali Hazin¹ takes precisely the same view. "Many ages having now elapsed," says he, "since civilization, tranquillity, and the accomplishment of all worldly blessings had attained a state of perfection in the beautiful provinces of Iran, these were become a fit object for the affliction of the malignant eye². The indolent King and princes, and the army that sought nothing but repose and for near a hundred years had not drawn the sword from the scabbard, would not even think of quelling this disturbance¹, until Mahmud⁹ with a large army marched into the provinces of Kirman and Yazd, and, having committed much plunder and devastation, proceeded on his route to Isfahan. This happened in the early part of the year 1134/1721."

¹ P. 106 of Belfour's text <p. 116 of his translation.

² The Evil Eye is called by the Arabs 'Aynu'l-Kamal, "the Eye of Perfection"¹ because anything perfect of its kind is especially exposed to its attacks.

Jonas Hanway⁸ speaks in a similar strain. " Persia never enjoyed," says he, ^M " a more perfect tranquillity than in the beginning of the present [i.e. the eighteenth] century. The treaties she had concluded with her neighbours were perfectly observed and secured her against any foreign invasions; whilst the effeminacy and luxury of her inhabitants, the ordinary consequences of a long peace, left no room to apprehend any danger from the ambition of her own subjects. This monarchy, which had suffered so many revolutions in past ages, seemed to be settled on a solid foundation when the news of its subversion surprised the whole world. The authors of this amazing catastrophe were a people hardly known even to their own sovereigns, and have now acquired a reputation only by the fame of those nations which they brought under their subjection. These people...are comprised under the general denomination of Afghans⁴."

The policy of Shah 'Abbas the Great has been described above as wise and far-sighted, but this statement needs some qualification ; for, while it greatly strengthened the power of the Crown, it undoubtedly con-
 Defects of the policy of Sbbas. 'Abbis. duced in the end to the weakening of the nation

¹ The seizure of Qandahir by the revolted Afghans led by Mfr Ways.

^a The son and successor of Mir Ways.

⁸ Revolutions of Persia, vol. i, p. 22.

⁴ The Afghans are, however, mentioned by the Arabian historian Ibnu'l-Athir in several places, the earliest mention being under the year 366/976-7. They were very troublesome in S.E. Persia in the middle of the fourteenth century. See my Abridged Translation of the Tdrikh 'i-Guzida (E. J. W. Gibb Series, xiv, 2), pp. 161 et seqq.

and the degeneration of its rulers. Previous kings had been embarrassed chiefly by ambitious relatives, powerful tribal chiefs, and turbulent townsmen; and for all these things Shah 'Abbas set himself to provide remedies. Instead of allowing his sons to hold high administrative posts and take a prominent part in wars, he either blinded them or put them to death, or immured them in the haram, where, as Krusinski well explains¹, they lead a life of harshness and privation rather than of luxury and pleasure, while receiving a very imperfect education, and falling under the influence of the palace eunuchs, who ended by becoming the dominant power in the State. To his destruction of the great nobles and tribal chiefs, and his creation of the Shdk-sevens as a counterpoise to the seven tribes to whom his predecessors owed their power, allusion has already been made⁸. A more extraordinary example of his application of the maxim Divide et impera was his deliberate creation in all the large towns of two artificially antagonized parties, named, according to Krusinski³, Pelenk and Felenk, who indulged at intervals in the most sanguinary faction-fights, they being, as Krusinski puts it, "so opposite, and so much enemies one to the other, that people in different States, in arms against one another, do not push their aversion and enmity farther." He adds (p. 92) that "though they fought without arms, because they were not supposed to make use of anything else but stones and sticks, it was with so much fury and bloodshed that the King was obliged to employ his guards to separate them with drawn swords; and hence it was to accomplish it, even with a method so effectual, inasmuch that at Ispahan in 1714 they were under a necessity, before they could separate the combatants, to put about three hundred to the sword on the spot."

¹ Op. cit. pp. 65-70.

* See p. 106 supra.

⁸ Op. cit. p. 91. Hanway (vol. iii, p. 32 ad calc. and p. 33) calls them Piltuk and Feleuk. At a later period they were known as Haydari and Ni'mati

Besides the eunuchs, there grew up and attained its full development under " Mulld Husayn," the last unhappy though well-meaning occupant of the Safawf throne at Isfahan, another dominant class whose influence hardly made for either spiritual unity or national efficiency, namely the great ecclesiastics who culminated in the redoutable Mulla Muhammad Baqir-i-Majlisf, the persecutor of Sufis and heretics, of whom we shall have to speak at some length in a future chapter. His admirers¹ call attention to the fact that his death, which took place in 1111/1699-1700², was followed in a short time by the troubles which culminated in the supreme disaster of 1722, and suggest that the disappearance of so saintly a personage left Persia exposed to perils which more critical minds may be inclined to ascribe in part to the narrow intolerance so largely fostered by him and his congeners.

¹ e.g. the Qisasu'ISUlamdi p. 216 of the lithographed edition of 1306/1888-9.

² The chronogram is Domination of the Mu/Ids, typified by Mulla

Muhammad
Biqir-i-Majlis.

CHAPTER IV.

AN OUTLINE OF THE HISTORY OF PERSIA DURING THE LAST TWO CENTURIES (A.D. 1722-1922).

Only after much hesitation and several tentative experiments have I decided to endeavour to compress into one chapter two centuries of Persian history. Were this book primarily intended as a political history of Persia, such an attempt would be out of the question; for this long period witnessed the Afghan invasion and its devastations; the rise, meteoric career, and sudden eclipse of that amazing conqueror Nadir Shdh; the emergence of a world of chaos and misery of Karfm Khdn-j-Zand, generally accounted the best ruler whom Persia ever possessed, and of his gallant but unfortunate successor Lutf-'Alf Khan; the establishment of the still reigning Qajdr dynasty, and within that period the occurrence, amidst many other important events, of two remarkable phenomena (the rise and growth of the Babi religious movement since 1844, and the political Revolution of 1906) which profoundly affected the intellectual life and literary development of Persia, each one of which might well form the subject of a lengthy monograph rather than a chapter. This book, however, is written not from the political but from the literary point of view, and the historical part of it is only ancillary, and might have been omitted entirely if a knowledge of even the general outlines of Oriental history formed part of the mental equipment of most educated Europeans. From this point of view much fuller treatment is required for periods of transition, or of great intellectual activity, than for periods of unproductive strife not so much of rival ideas and beliefs as of conflicting ambitions. To the latter category belongs the greater part of the two centuries which must now engage our attention. During this period the literary language (which, indeed, had become fixed at any rate in the fourteenth century, so that the odes of Hafiz, save for their incomparable beauty, might have been written but yesterday) underwent no noticeable change; few fresh forms of literary expression were developed until the middle of the nineteenth century; and few fresh ideas arose to modify the Shf'a frenzy of Safawf times until the rise of the BAbi doctrine in A.D. 1844, of which, however, the literary effects were less considerable than those of the Revolution of 1906. Moreover excellent and detailed accounts of the Afghan invasion, of Nddir Shdh, and of the earlier Qajar period already exist in English, several of which have been mentioned at the end of the preceding chapter¹; these could hardly be bettered, and would only be marred by such abridgment as would be necessary to fit them into the framework of this book. Hence I have deemed it best to limit myself in this chapter to a brief outline of the more salient events of these last two centuries.

THE AFGHAN INVASION (A.D. 1722-1730).

Unlike the Arabs, Mongols, Tartars and Turks, who were instrumental in effecting previous subjections of Persia by foreign arms, the Afghdns are, apparently, an Iranian and therefore a kindred race, though differing materially in character from the Persians. The Persian language is widely spoken in their wild and mountainous country, white in their own peculiar idiom, the Pushtd, James Darmesteter saw the principal survivor of the language of the Avesta, the scripture of the Zoroastrians. They are a much fiercer, hardier, and more warlike people than the Persians, less refined and ingenious, and fanatical Sunnfs, a fact sufficient in itself to explain the intense antagonism which existed between the two nations, and enabled the Afghans to give to their invasion of Persia the colour of a religious war.

Character of
the Afghans.

¹ See pp. 114-118 supra.

In A.D. 1707 Qandahdr, a constant bone of contention between the safawi kings of Persia and the "Great Moghuls" of India, was in the possession of the former, and was governed in a very autocratic manner by a Georgian noble named Gurgfn Khan. Mfr Ways, an Afghan chief whose influence with his fellow-countrymen made him an object of suspicion, was by his orders banished to Isfahan as a state prisoner. There, however, he seems to have enjoyed a considerable amount of liberty and to have been freely admitted to the court of Shah Husayn. Endowed with considerable perspicacity and a great talent for intrigue, he soon formed a pretty clear idea of the factions whose rivalries were preparing the ruin of the country, and with equal caution and cunning set himself to fan the suspicions to which every great Persian general or provincial governor was exposed. This was the easier in the case of one who, being by birth a Christian and a Georgian of noble family, might, without gross improbability, be suspected of thinking more of the restoration of his own and his country's fortunes than of the maintenance of the Persian Empire, though there seems in fact no reason to suspect him of any disloyalty.

Having sown this seed of suspicion and completely ingratiated himself with the Persian Court, Mfr Ways sought and obtained permission to perform the pilgrimage to Mecca. While there he took another important step for the furtherance of his designs. He sought from the leading ecclesiastical authorities a fatwd, or legal opinion, as to whether the orthodox Sunni subjects of a heretical (i.e. Shf'a) Muslim ruler were bound to obey him, or were justified, if occasion

Beginning of the trouble at Qandahar.

Mir Ways at Mecca.

arose, in resisting him, if necessary by force of arms. The decision, which supported the latter alternative and so accorded with his designs, he carried back with him to Isfahdn and subsequently to Qandahar, whither he was permitted to return, with strong recommendations to Gurgfn KMn, in 1709. There he soon organized a conspiracy against the latter, and, taking advantage of the temporary absence of a large part of the Persian garrison on some expedition in the neighbourhood, he and his followers fell on the remainder when they were off their guard, killed the greater number of them, including Gurgfn Khdn, and took possession of the city. It was at this juncture that the fatwd obtained at Mecca proved so useful to Mfr Ways, for by it he was able to overcome the scruples of the more faint-hearted of his followers, who were at first inclined to shrink from a definite repudiation of Persian suzerainty, but who now united with the more hot-headed of their countrymen in electing Mir Ways "Prince of Qandahar and General of the national troops"¹

Several half-hearted attempts to subdue the rebellious city having failed, the Persian Government despatched Khusraw Khdn, nephew of the late Gurgin Kh&n, with an army of 30,000 men to effect its subjugation, but in spite of an initial success, which led the Afghdns to offer to surrender on terms, his uncompromising attitude impelled them to make a fresh desperate effort, resulting in the complete defeat of the Persian army (of whom only some 700 escaped) and the death of their general. Two years later, in A.D. 1713, another Persian army commanded by Rustam KMn was also defeated by the rebels, who thus secured possession of the whole province of Qandahdr.

Mfr Ways, having thus in five or six years laid the foundations of the Afghan power, died in A.D. 1715, and was succeeded by his brother Mir 'Abdullah, whose disposition to accept, under certain conditions, Persian suzerainty led to his murder by his nephew Mir Ways, who was forthwith proclaimed king. The weakness of the Persian government thus becoming apparent, others were led to follow the example of the Afghans of Qandahar. Amongst these were the Abdalf Afghans of Herat, the Uzbeks of Transoxiana, the Kurds, the Lazgfs and the Arabs of Bahrayn, and though the Persian General Saff-qulf Khan with 30,000 troops succeeded in defeating an Uzbek army of 12,000, he was immediately afterwards defeated by the Abdalf Afghans.

¹ Krusinski, p. 187.

Success of the rebels.

Mir Ways succeeded by his son
Mir Mahmud.

Other revolts against Persia.

In A.D. 1720 Mir Mahmud assumed the aggressive, crossed the deserts of Sistan, and attacked and occupied Kirman, whence, however, he was expelled four months later by the Persian General Lutf-'Ali Khan, who, after this victory, proceeded to Shfraz and began to organize " the best-appointed army that had been seen in Persia for many years " with a view to crushing the Afghans and retaking Qandahar. Unfortunately before he had accomplished this his position was undermined by one of those Court intrigues which were so rapidly destroying the Persian Empire, and he was deprived of his command and brought as a prisoner to Isfahan, while the army which he had collected and disciplined with such care rapidly melted away, and the spirits of the Afghans were proportionately revived. The capture and sack of Shamakhf by the Lazgis and the appearance of strange portents in the sky combined still further to discourage the Persians, while the ordering of public mourning and repentance by Shah Husayn tended only to accentuate the general depression.

Kirman taken by Afghans

The fatal year 1722 began with the second siege and capture of Kirmin by Mir Mahmud. The most remarkable incident connected with this was that he was joined by a number of "guebres" (gabr)\ the small remnant of the Persians who still profess the ancient religion of Zoroaster, and who exist in any number only in the cities of Kirmin and Yazd and the intervening region of Rafsinjdn with its chief town Bahram-ibid. Why these people should have attached themselves to foreign Muslims to make war on their Muslim compatriots it is hard to understand, unless the fanaticism of the Shi'a divines was responsible for driving them into this extraordinary course. Still more remarkable, if true, is Hanway's statement that they provided Mir Mahmud with one of his best generals, who, though he bore the Muhammadan name of Nasru'lldh, was, according to the same authority*, "a worshipper of fire, since there were two priests hired by the Sultan who kept the sacred flame near his tomb."

Zoroastrians
join Afghans.

From Kirman Mir Mahmud marched by way of Yazd, which he attempted but failed to take by storm, to Isfahan, having scornfully refused an offer of 15,000 Afghans advance on Isfahan. *tiitndns to induce him to turn back, and finally pitched his camp at Gulndbad, distant some three leagues from the Safawi capital. After much dispute and diversity of opinions, the Persian army marched out of Isfahan to engage the Afghans on March 7th and on the following day, largely through the treachery of the Will of 'Arabistan, suffered a disastrous defeat.

The battle of Gulndbad, fought between the Persians and the Afghdms on Sunday, March 8, 1722, decided the fate of the Safawf dynasty as surely as did the battle of Qadisiyya in A.D. 635 that of the Sasanians, or the conflict between the Caliph's troops and

Battle of Gulnabad,
March 8, 1733.

¹ Hanway's Revolution of Persia, vol. 1, p. 99. ² I6td., p. 186.

⁸ At that time, according to Han way (he. cit., p. 100), equivalent to £37,500.

the Mongols outside Baghdad in A.D. 1258 that of the 'Abbasids. Between these three battles, moreover, there was a remarkable point of similarity in the splendour and apparent strength of the defenders and the squalor and seeming weakness of their assailants. The similarity in this respect between the battles of Qadisiyya and Baghdad has been noticed in a well-known passage of the *Kitabu'l-Fakhri*¹, to which the following account of the battle of Gulnabad by Hanway² forms a remarkable parallel:

A curious parallel

"The sun had just appeared on the horizon when the armies began to observe each other with that curiosity so natural on these dreadful occasions. The Persian army just come out of the capital, being composed of whatever was most brilliant at court, seemed as if it had been formed rather to make a show than to fight. The riches and variety of their arms and vestments, the beauty of their horses, the gold and precious stones with which some of their harnesses were covered, and the richness of their tents contributed to render the Persian camp very pompous and magnificent.

"On the other side there was a much smaller body of soldiers, disfigured with fatigue and the scorching heat of the sun. Their clothes were so ragged and torn in so long a march that they were scarce sufficient to cover them from the weather, and, their horses being adorned with only leather and brass, there was nothing glittering about them but their spears and sabres."

These three great and decisive battles resembled one another in several respects, in each case a great historic dynasty, the extent of whose inward decay was masked by its external splendour, and apparent, because hitherto unchallenged, strength and supremacy, collapsed before the fierce onslaught of a hardy and warlike folk, hitherto hardly known, or accounted as little better than barbarians; and in each case the more or less prolonged process of degene-

The Arab,
Mongol and Afghan invasion of Persia compared and contrasted.

¹ See vol. ii of my Lit. Hist., p. 462, for the translation, and pp. 97-8 of Ahlwardt's edition for the text of this passage.

² Revolutions of Persia (London, 1753), vol. i, pp. 104-5.

ration which rendered the final catastrophe not only possible but inevitable is fairly obvious to subsequent historians, even if its extent and significance were not realized until the fatal touchstone was applied. The results, however, differed widely according to the character and abilities of the assailants. The Arab invaders of the seventh century established an Empire which endured for six centuries and effected a profound and permanent change in the lands and peoples whom they brought under their sway. The Mongol conquests were even more extensive, reaching as they did from China and Thibet to Germany and Russia, but the cohesion and duration of the vast Empire which they created were far inferior. The Afghan conquest, with which we are now concerned, was little more than an extensive and destructive raid, resulting in some seventy-five years of anarchy (A.D. 1722-1795), illuminated by the meteoric career of that Napoleon of Persia, Nadir Shah, and ending in the establishment of the actually reigning dynasty of the Qajars. The actual domination of the Afghans over Persia only endured for eight or nine years¹.

Seven months elapsed after the battle of Gulnabad before the final pitiful surrender, with every circumstance of humiliation, of the unhappy Shah Husayn.

Prince Tahmasp escapes from Isfahan to Qazwin

In that battle the Persians are said to have lost all their artillery, baggage and treasure, as well as some 15,000 out of a total of 50,000 men.

On March 19 Mir Mahmud occupied the Shah's beloved palace and pleasure-grounds of Farahabad, situated only three miles from Isfahan, which henceforth served as his headquarters. Two days later the Afghans, having occupied the Armenian suburb of Julfa, where they levied a tribute of money and young girls, attempted to take Isfahan by storm, but, having twice failed (on March 19 and 21), sat down to blockade the city. Three months later Prince Tahmdsp Mirza\ who had been nominated to succeed his father, effected his escape from the beleaguered city to Qazwi'n, where he attempted, with but small success, to raise an army for the relief of the capital.

¹ Mahmud the Afghan laid siege to Kirman in January, 1722, and captured Isfahan in October of the same year. His cousin Ashraf, who succeeded him, was killed by Baluchis in 1730.

Soon after this, famine began to press heavily on the people, who clamoured to be led against the besiegers, but their desperate sortie failed owing to the renewed treachery of Waif of 'Arabistdn, who was throughout these dark days the evil genius of the unhappy king. The Persian court, indeed, seemed to have been stricken with a kind of folly which was equally ready to repose confidence in traitors and to mistrust and degrade or dismiss brave and patriotic officers like Lutf-'Alf Khdn. For three or four months before the end the sufferings of the people from famine were terrible: they were finally reduced to eating dogs, cats, and even the corpses of their dead, and perished in great numbers. The pitiful details may be found in the pages of Krusinski, Hanway, and the contemporary accounts written by certain agents of the Dutch East India Company then resident at Isfahan, of which the original texts have been included by H. Dunlop in his fine work on Persia {Perzie, Haarlem, 1912, pp. 242-257).

At the end of September, 1722, Shah Husayn offered to surrender himself and his capital to the Afghdn invader, but Mir Mahmud, in order still further to reduce by famine the numbers and spirit of the besieged, dragged out the negotiations for another three or four weeks, so that it was not until October 21 that Shah Husayn repaired on foot to Farahibid, once his favourite residence, now the headquarters of his ruthless foe, to surrender the crown which Mir Mahmud assumed six days later. When news of his father's abdication reached

Surrender of Isfahan to Afghans,
Oct ax, 1739.

Tahmasp Mirzi at Qazwfn he caused himself to be proclaimed king, but was driven out of that city on December 20 by the Afghan general Amdnu'lldh Khan, who on his way thither received the submission of Qum and Kashan.

Tahmasp was now reduced to the miserable expedient of invoking the help of Russia and Turkey, who had already fixed covetous eyes on the apparently moribund Persian kingdom and had occupied Gflcin and Tiflfs respectively. On September 23, 1723, a treaty was signed whereby, in return for the expulsion of the Afghans and the restoration of his authority, Tahmdsp undertook to cede to Russia the Caspian provinces of Gilan, Meizandaran and Gurgcin, and the towns of B&ku, Darband and their dependencies. Soon afterwards the Turks took Erivan, Nakhjuwdn, Khuy and Hamaddn, but were repulsed from Tabriz. On July 8, 1724, an agreement for the partition of Persia was signed between Russia and Turkey at Constantinople¹.

Meanwhile Mir Mahmud was continuing his cruelties at Isfahdn. In A.D. 1723 he put to death in cold blood some three hundred of the nobles and chief citizens, and followed up this bloody deed with the murder of about two hundred children of their families. He also killed some three thousand of the deposed Shin's body-guard, together with many other persons whose sentiments he mistrusted or whose influence he feared. In the following year (A. D. 1724) the Afghdn general Zabardast Khan succeeded, where his predecessor Nasru'llah* had failed and fallen, in taking Shfraz; and towards the end of the year Mir Mahmud prepared to attack Yazd, which had hitherto remained unsubdued. The Muslim inhabitants of that town, fearing that the numerous Zoroastrians dwelling in it might follow the example of their co-religionists of Kirman and join the Afghans, killed a great number of them.

¹ For the contents of the six articles, see Hanway's Revolutions of Persia[^] i, pp. 200-1.

⁸ See p. 126 supra.

About this time Mir Mahmud, alarmed at the increasing insubordination of his cousin Ashraf, and, we may hope, tormented by an uneasy conscience on account of his cruelties, betook himself to a severe course of self-discipline and mortification, which did but increase his melancholy and distemper, so that on February 7, 1725, he murdered all the surviving members of the royal family with the exception of the deposed Shcih Husayn and two of his younger children. Thereafter his disorder rapidly increased, until he himself was murdered on April 22 by his cousin Ashraf, who was thereupon proclaimed king. Mir Mahmud was at the time of his death only twenty-seven years of age, and is described as "middle-sized and clumsy; his neck was so short that his head seemed to grow to his shoulders, he had a broad face and flat nose, and his beard was thin and of a red colour, his looks were wild and his countenance austere and disagreeable; his eyes, which were blue and a little squinting, were generally downcast, like a man absorbed in deep thought."

Mir Mahmud
murders the Safawi princes (Feb. 7, 1725), and is himself slain by his cousin Ashraf
(April 22, 1735X)

The death of Peter the Great about this period made Russia slightly less dangerous as a neighbour, but the Turks continued to press forwards and on August 3, 1725, succeeded at last in capturing Tabriz. They even advanced to within three days' march of Isfahan, but turned back before reaching it. They subsequently (A.D. 1726) took Qazwfn and Maragha, but were defeated by Ashraf near Kirmdnshah. Negotiations for peace were meanwhile in progress at Constantinople, whither Ashraf had sent an ambassador named 'AbduVAziz Khan, whose arrogant proposal that his master should be Caliph of the East and the Ottoman

Death of Peter the Great, and Turkish invasion of Persia

Sul$ri Caliph of the West caused great umbrage to the Porte. The war, however, was very unpopular with the Turkish soldiers and people, who failed to see why they should fight fellow-Sunnfs in order to restore a heretical Shf'a dynasty, though the 'u/amd were induced to give a fatwd in favour of this course, on the ground that a divided Caliphate was incompatible with the dignity or safety of Isl^{dm}. Finally, however, a treaty of peace was concluded and signed at Hamad&n in September, 1727¹

This danger had hardly been averted when a far greater one, destined in a short time to prove fatal to the Afgh&ns, presented itself in the person of Ncidir-quli, subsequently known to fame as Nddir Sh£h, one of the most remarkable and ruthless military geniuses ever produced by Persia. Hitherto, though he was now about forty years of age, little had been heard of him, but this year, issuing forth from his stronghold, that wonderful natural fastness named after him Kaldt-i-Nddirf *, he defeated an Afghan force and took possession of Nfshipur in the name of Shdh Tahmdsp I I , at that time precariously established at Farahdbid in Mizandardn, and supported with a certain condescending arrogance by the Q&j£r chief Fath-'Alf Khdn. After this success Nddir paid a visit to the fugitive Shdh, and, after insinuating himself into his favour, contrived the assassination of the Q£j£r, against whom he had succeeded in arousing the Shdh's suspicions. On May 15 of the following year (1728) the Shdh, accompanied by Nadir (or Tahmdsp-gulf, " the slave of Tahmdsp," to give him the name which

¹ For its provisions, contained in nine articles, see Hanway, op. cit., i, pp. 254-5-

² This fortress, which is jealously guarded, Lord Curzon attempted but failed to penetrate. See his Persia, vol. i, pp. 125-140, especially the bird's-eye view on p. 134.

Negotiations between Turks and Afghans.

Rise of Nadir

Assassination of Fath.'Ali
Khan Qajar

he temporarily assumed about this time), made a solemn entry into Nfshdpur, amidst the rejpicings of the inhabitants, and shortly afterwards occupied Mashhad and Herdt. He also despatched an ambassador to Constantinople, whence in return a certain Sulaymdn Efendi was sent as envoy to Persia.

Meanwhile Ashraf, having taken Yazd and Kirmdn, marched into Khurasdn with an army of thirty thousand men to give battle to Tahmdsp, but he was completely defeated by Nidir on October 2 at Ddmghdn. Another decisive battle was fought in the following year at Murchakhur near Isfahan. The Afghans were again defeated and evacuated Isfahan to the number of twelve thousand men, but, before quitting the city he had ruined, Ashraf murdered the unfortunate ex-Shah Husayn, and carried off most of the ladies of the royal family and the King's treasure. When Tahmdsp II entered Isfahan on December 9 he found only his old mother, who had escaped deportation by disguising herself as a servant, and was moved to tears at the desolation and desecration which met his eyes at every turn. Nadir, having finally induced Tahm&sp to empower him to levy taxes on his own authority, marched southwards in pursuit of the retiring Afghans, whom he overtook and again defeated near Persepolis. Ashraf fled from Shfrdz towards his own country, but cold, hunger and the unrelenting hostility of the inhabitants of the regions which he had to traverse dissipated his forces and compelled him to abandon his captives and his treasure, and he was finally killed by a party of Baluch tribesmen. Thus ended the disastrous period of Afgh&n dominion in Persia in A.D. 1730, having lasted eight years.

Defeat of Afghans near Persepolis and death of Ashraf (A.D. 1730)

Nishdptir recovered by Persians

Defeat of Ashraf at Damghan.

Isfahan evacuated and Shah Husayn murdered by Afghans

THE CAREER OF NADIR
UNTIL HIS ASSASSINATION IN A.D. 1747.

Although it was not until A.D. 1736 that Nadir deemed it expedient to take the title of King, he became from A.D. 1730 onwards the de facto ruler of Persia. Of his humble origin and early struggles it is unnecessary to speak here; they will be found narrated as fully as the circumstances permit in the pages of Hanway, Malcolm and other historians of Persia. Shah Tahmasp was from the first but a rot faineant, and his only serious attempt to achieve anything by himself, when he took the field against the Turks in A.D. 1731, resulted in a disastrous failure, for he lost both Taork and Hamadan, and in January, 1732, concluded a most unfavourable peace, whereby he ceded Georgia and Armenia to Turkey on condition that she should aid him to expel the Russians from Gflan, Shirwan and Darband. Nadir, greatly incensed, came to Isfahan in August, 1732, and, having by a stratagem seized and imprisoned Tahmasp, proclaimed his infant son (then only six months old) as king under the title of Shah^f Abbas III, and at once sent a threatening letter to Ahmad Pdshei of Baghdad, which he followed up by a declaration of war in October.

In April of the following year (1733) Nadir appeared before Baghdad, having already retaken Kirmanshah, with an army of 80,000 men, but suffered a defeat on July 18, and retired to Hamadan to recruit and recuperate his troops. Returning to the attack in the autumn he defeated the Turks on October 26 in a great battle wherein the gallant and noble-minded Topdl 'Osman ('Uthmdn) was slain. Having crushed a revolt in favour of the deposed Shah Tahmasp in Fars, he invaded Georgia in 1734, took Tiflfs, Ganja and Shamakhf, Incapacity of Tahmasp.

'Abbas III proclaimed King.

Further successes of Nadir and obtained from Russia the retrocession of Gilan, Shirwan, Darband, Bdku and Rasht. In the following year (1735) he again defeated the Turks near Erivan, and captured that city and Erzeroum.

On the following Nawruz or Persian New Year's day (March 21, 1736), Nidir announced to the assembled army and deputies of the nation the death of the infant Shdh 'Abbds III and invited them to decide within three days whether they would restore his father, the deposed Shah Tahmdsp, or elect a new king. His own desire, which coincided with that of most of his officers and soldiers, was evident, and, the unwilling minority being overawed, the crown of Persia was unanimously offered to him. He agreed to accept it on three conditions, namely: (1) that it should be made hereditary in his family; (2) that there should be no talk of a restoration of the Safawfs, and that no one should aid, comfort, or harbour any member of that family who might aspire to the throne; and (3) that the cursing of the first three Caliphs, the mourning for the death of the Imdm Husayn, and other distinctive practices of the Shf'a should be abandoned. This last condition was the most distasteful to the Persians, and the chief ecclesiastical authority, being asked his opinion, had the courage to denounce it as "derogatory to the welfare of the true believers"—a courage which cost him his life, for he was immediately strangled by Nddir's orders. Not content with this, Nadir, on his arrival at Qazwfn, confiscated the religious endowments (awqdf) for the expenses of his army, to whom, he said, Persia owed more than to her hierarchy. Towards the end of the year he concluded a favourable treaty with Turkey, by which Persia recovered all her lost provinces; and in December he set out at the head of 100,000 men against Afghanistan and India, leaving his son Rida-qulf as regent.

The next two years (A.D. 1737-9) witnessed Nadir Shfh's greatest military achievement, the invasion of India, capture of Lahore and Delhi, and return home with the enormous spoils in money and kind which he exacted from the unfortunate Indians, and which Hanway¹ estimates at £87,500,000. Having taken Qandahir, Kdbul and Peshawur in 1738, he crossed the Indus early in the following year, captured Lahore, and in February, 1739, utterly defeated the Indian army of Muhammad Shah, two hundred thousand strong, on the plains of Karnal. Delhi was peaceably occupied, but a few days later a riot occurred in which some of Nddir's soldiers were killed, and he avenged their blood by a general massacre of the inhabitants which lasted from 8 a.m. until 3 p.m., and in which 110,000 persons perished. He never dreamed of holding India, and, having extorted the enormous indemnity mentioned above and left the unhappy Muhammad Shdh in possession of his throne, with a threat that he would return again if necessary, he began his homeward march in May, turning aside to chastise the predatory Uzbeks of Khiva and Bukhdro, which latter town he captured on November 28, 1739.

During the absence of Nddir Shdh his son Ridd-qulf had put to death the unfortunate Tahmasp and most of his family at Sabzawar, and began to show signs of desiring to retain the powers with which he had been temporarily invested by his father. Being suspected of instigating an unsuccessful attempt on Nadir's life, he was deprived of his eyesight, but with this cruel act the wonderful good fortune which had hitherto accompanied Nddir began to desert him. His increasing cruelty, tyranny, avarice and extortion, but most of all, perhaps, his attempt to impose on

Nadir's Indian campaign
(A.D. 1737-1739)'

Nadir's son
Rida-qulf rebels and is blinded.

Nadir's views on religion.

¹ Revolutions of Persia, li, p. 188. The loss to India he puts at one hundred and twenty million pounds and the number of those slain at 200,000 (Ibid., p. 197).

his Persian subjects the Sunnf doctrine, made him daily more detested. His innovations included the production of Persian translations of the Qur'dn and the Gospels. The latter, on which several Christians were employed, he caused to be read aloud to him at Tihran, while he commented on it with derision, and hinted that when he found leisure he might (perhaps after the model of Akbar) produce a new religion of his own which should supplant alike Judaism, Christianity and Islam¹. His military projects, moreover, began to miscarry; his campaign against the Lazgfs in A.D. 1741-2 did not prosper, and in the war with Turkey in which he became involved in 1743 he was unsuccessful in his attempt to take Mosul (Mawsil). Revolts which broke out in Fars and Shirwan were only suppressed with difficulty after much bloodshed. However he put down a rebellion of the Qajars at Astarabad in A.D. 1744, defeated the Turks in a great battle near Erivan in August, 1745, and concluded a satisfactory peace with them in 1746. In the following year Nadir Shah visited Kirman, which suffered much from his cruelties and exactions, and thence proceeded to Mashhad, where he arrived at the end of May, 1747. Here he conceived the abominable plan of killing all his Persian officers and soldiers (the bulk of his army being Turkmans and Uzbeks and consequently Sunnfs), but this project was made known by a Georgian slave to some of the Persian officers, who thereupon decided, in the picturesque Persian phrase, "to breakfast off him ere he should sup off them." A certain Salih Beg, aided by four trusty men, undertook the task², and, entering his tent by night, rid their country of one who, though he first appeared as its deliverer from the Afghan yoke, now bade fair to crush it beneath a yoke yet more intolerable. At the time of his death Nddir Shall was sixty-one years of age and had reigned eleven years and three months (A.D. 1736-47). He was succeeded by his nephew 'AH-qulf Khdn, who assumed the crown under the title of 'Adil Shah, but was defeated and slain by his brother Ibrdhfm in the following year. He in turn was killed a year later (A.D. 1749) by the partisans of Nddir's grandson Shahrukh, the son of the unfortunate Rida-quli and a Safawf princess, the daughter of Shall Husayn, who now succeeded to the throne. Youth, beauty and a character at once amiable and humane¹ did not, however, secure him against misfortune, and he was shortly after his accession deposed and blinded by a certain Sayyid Muhammad, a grandson on the mother's side of the Safawf Shah Sulaymĕn II. He in turn soon fell a victim to the universal violence and lawlessness which now prevailed in Persia, and Shahrukh was restored to the throne, but again deposed and again restored to exercise a nominal rule at Mashhad over the province of Khurasan, which Ahmad Khan Abdalf (afterwards famous as Ahmad Shdh Durrani, the founder of the modern kingdom of Afghanistan) desired, before leaving Persia, to erect into a buffer state between that country and his own. The remainder of the blind Shahrukh's long reign was uneventful, and he survived until A.D. 1796, having reigned nearly fifty years.

¹ See Sir John Malcolm's History of Persia (ed. 1815), vol. ii, p. 104.

² According to the Tarikh-t-ba'd Nadiriyya (ed. Oskar Mann, Leyden, 1891, pp. 15 etseq.) which gives a very full account of the matter, the four chief conspirators, Muhammad Kh£n Qajdr, Musa" Beg Afshdr, Qoja Beg Gunduzlu and Muhammad salih Khan, were accompanied by seventy young volunteers, but only four had the courage to enter

Assassination of Nadir
(June 20, 1747).

Chaos succeeding Nddir's death.

Nddir's tent. The assassination took place on Sunday, 11 Jumada 11, 1160 (June 20, 1747)

¹ Malcolm's History, vol. 11, p III.

THE ZAND DYNASTY (A.D. 1750-1794).

"The history of Persia," says Sir John Malcolm¹, "from the death of Nadir Shah till the elevation of Aqa Muhammad

Khan, the founder of the reigning family, presents to our attention no one striking feature except the life of Karim Khan-i-Zand. The happy reign of this excellent prince, as contrasted with those who preceded and followed him, affords to the historian of Persia that description of mixed pleasure and repose which a traveller enjoys who arrives at a beautiful and fertile valley in the midst of an arduous journey over barren and rugged wastes. It is pleasing to recount the actions of a chief who, though born in an inferior rank, obtained power without crime, and who exercised it with a moderation that was, in the times in which he lived, as singular as his humanity and justice/'

Karim Khan, however, who fixed his capital at Shfraz, which he did so much to beautify and where he is still gratefully remembered, never ruled over the whole of Persia and never assumed the title of Shah, but remained content with that of Wakily or Regent. Originally he and a Bakhtiyar chief named 'Ali Mardan Khan were the joint regents of "a real or pretended grandson of Shah Husayn²" in whose name they seized Isfahan, where they placed him on the throne. Before long they fell out; 'AH Mardan Khan was killed; and Karim Khan became the de facto ruler of Southern Persia. His rivals were the Afghan chief Azad in Adharbadyjin and the North-west, and in the Caspian provinces Muhammad Hasan the Qajar, son of that Fath-'Ali Khan who was murdered by Nadir at the outset of his career, and father

Karim Khan's
two rivals

¹ Op. tit., vol. ii, p. 115.

² R. G. Watson's History of Persia, p 44.

of Aqa Muhammad Khan, the actual founder of the Qajar dynasty.

Azad was the first to be eliminated from this triangular contest. He defeated Karfm Khan and compelled him to evacuate not only Isfahan but Shfraz, but, rashly pursuing him through the narrow defile of Kamarij, fell into an ambush, lost most of his followers, and finally, having sought refuge first with the Pasha of Baghdad and then with Heraclius, Prince of Georgia, "threw himself upon the generosity of Karfm Khan, who received him with kindness, promoted him to the first rank among his nobles, and treated him with so generous a confidence that he soon converted this dangerous rival into an attached friend¹."

Elimination of Azad the Afghin.

In A.D. 1757, about four years after the battle of Kamarij, Karfm Khan had to face a fierce onslaught by his other rival, Muhammad Hasan Khan the Qajar, who, after a striking initial success, was finally driven back into Mazandaran, where he was eventually defeated and killed in A.D. 1760 by Karfm Khan's general Shaykh 'Alf Khdn. From this time until his death in the spring of 1779 Karim Khan practically ruled over the whole of Persia except Khurdsdn, where the blind and harmless Shdhrukhn exercised a nominal sovereignty. The chief military exploit of his reign was the capture of Basra from the Turks in 1776, effected by his brother Sddiq, who continued to administer it until Karfm's death, when he relinquished it to the Turks in order to take part in the fratricidal struggle for the Persian crown².

Karim Khln defeats his Qajar rival

Basra taken by Persians.

¹ Sir John Malcolm's History of Persia, vol. n, p. 125. The two preceding pages contain a graphic account of the battle of Kamarij, as narrated to the author on the spot by persons who had themselves taken part in it.

² See 'Ali Ridd's Ta'rlkh-i-Zandiyya (ed. Ernst Beer, Leyden, 1888), p. 8.

" The most important, if we consider its ultimate consequences, of all the events which occurred at the death of Karfm Khan, was the flight of Aqa Muhammad Khan Qajar, who had been for many years a prisoner at large in the city of Shfraz¹." As a child he had suffered castration by the cruel command of Nadir's nephew 'Adil Shah², on account of which the title of Aghd or Aqa, generally given to eunuchs, was added to his name. After the defeat and death of his father Muhammad Hasan Khdn the Qajar in A.D. 1757, he fell into the hands of Karfm Khan, who interned him in Shfretz, but otherwise treated him kindly and even generously, so far as was compatible with his safe custody. He was even allowed to gratify his passion for the chase in the country round Shfraz on condition of re-entering the city before the gates were closed at night-fall. Returning to the city on the evening of Safar 12, 1193 (March 1, 1779), and learning through his sister, who was an inmate of the Palace, that Karfm Khdn lay at the point of death, he suffered a favourite hawk to escape, and made its pursuit an excuse for spending the night in the plain. [ext morning, two hours -after. dawn⁸, having learned that Karfm Khan had t>reathed^his last, he took advantage of the prevailing confusion to make his escape northwards, "and travelled so swiftly that he reached Isfahan on the third day⁴, and thence made his way into Mdzandardn, which thenceforth became the ba7e~ofthose operations by which, fifteen years later, he accomplished the final overthrow of the Zand dynasty and won for his own house that supremacy over Persia which they hold to this day.

It is unnecessary to describe here the fratricidal wars

¹ Sir John Malcolm, op- cit, li, p. 157.

¹ Ibid., p. 263.

⁸ Ta'rikh-i-Zandiyya, p. 6,1. 1.

⁴ Sir John Malcolm's History, 11, p. 158 ad calc.

which during the next ten years (A.D. 1779-89) sapped the power of the Zand dynasty while Aqd Muhammad Khan, with incredible self-control and political sagacity, was uniting and consolidating the Qajar power. Within the year which witnessed Karfm Khdn's death four of his house had successively mounted his throne, to wit, his son Abu'l-Fath, his nephew 'AH Murad, his son Muhammad 'AH, and his brother Sadiq. The last-named, together with all his sons except Ja'far, was put to death in March, 1782, by 'Alf Murad, who thus regained the throne, but died at Murchakhur near Isfahan in January, 1785, and was succeeded by Ja'far, the date of whose accession is commemorated in the following ingenious chronogram by Hajji Sulaymdn of Kashdn called Sabdhf¹ :

بضبط سالِ جلوسِ مباركِ ميمون
 كه هست مبداءِ تاريخِ عشرتِ دوران
 نوشت كلكِ صباحي ز قصرِ سلطاني علي مراد برون شد نشست جعفر خان

" To record the year of the blessed and auspicious accession
 Which is the initial date of the mirth of the age,
 The pen of Sabahi wrote: ' From the Royal Palace
 Ali Murdd went forth, and Ja'far Khan sat' [in his place]."

The letters composing the words Qasr-i-Sultdni yield the number 550; from this we subtract (355) equivalent to 'All Murad, which gives us 195 ; to this we add the number equivalent to J a'far Khan (1004), which finally gives us the correct date A.H. 1199 (A.D. 1785).

Ja'far Khan was murdered on 25 Rabf ii, 1203 (January 23, 1789), and was succeeded by his son, the gallant and unfortunate Lutf-'Ali Khan, of whose personality Sir Harford Jones Brydges has given so attractive an account. "The reader, I hope," he

Lujf-Ali Khan,
 the last of the Zand dynasty.

¹ Tcfrikh-i-Zandiyya.) pp. 24-25.

says¹, "will pardon me if I treat the reign and misfortunes of the noble Lutf-'Alf more in detail than usual. I received great kindness and attention from him when he filled the throne; and under a miserable tent I had the honour of sitting on the same horse-cloth with him when a fugitive! His virtues endeared him to his subjects; and the bravery, constancy, courage and ability which he manifested under his misfortunes are the theme of poems and ballads which it is not improbable will last as long as the Persian language itself. He was manly, amiable, affable under prosperity and, under calamities as great and as severe as human nature can suffer, he was dignified and cool and determined. That so noble a being, that a prince the hope and pride of his country, should have been betrayed by a wretch² in whom he placed, or rather misplaced, his confidence—that his end should have been marked by indignities exercised on his person at which human nature shudders—that his little son should have suffered loss of virility—that his daughters should have been forced into marriage with the scum of the earth—that the princess his wife should have been dishonoured—are dispensations of Providence, which, though we must not arraign, we may permit ourselves to wonder at."

It is fortunate that we possess such disinterested appreciations of poor Lutf-'Ali Khan, the last chivalrous figure amongst the kings of Persia, for such of his compatriots as described his career necessarily wrote after the triumph of his implacable rival and deadly foe Aqa Muhammad Khan, and therefore, whatever their true sentiments may have been,

Courage, chivalry and misfortunes of Lutf-'Alf
Khan

¹ The Dynasty of the Kajars, etc. (London, 1833), pp. cxx-cxxi. Sir H. J. Brydges "visited Shīrdz for the first time in 1786."

² To wit, the notorious Hajji Ibrahim—"the scoundrel," as Sir H. J. Brydges calls him (Account of H.M.'s Mission, etc. vol. 1, pp. 95-96), "whose mad ambition and black heart brought ruin on his confiding King, and misery the most severe on his fellow-citizens."

dared not venture to praise the fallen prince, lest they should incur the displeasure of the cruel Qajar. Short-lived as the Zand dynasty was, it began and ended nobly, for its first representative was one of the best and its last one of the bravest of all the long line of Persian monarchs.

THE REIGNING QAJAR DYNASTY (A.D. 1796 ONWARDS).

The full and detailed accounts of the reigning Qajar dynasty already available to the English reader render any

Aqa Muhammad Khan (assassinated June 17, 1797).

attempt to summarize their history in this place quite unnecessary¹. Aqa Muhammad Khan was not actually crowned until A.D. 1796, and was assassinated in the following year, so that he wore the crown of Persia for not more than fifteen months³, but his reign practically began on the death of Karim Khān in A.D. 1779, though "he used to observe that he had no title even to the name of king till he was obeyed through the whole of the ancient limits of the Empire of Persia"⁸ so it was only after he had finally subdued Georgia that he consented to assume the title of Shah. His appearance and character are admirably summarized by Sir John Malcolm in the following words⁴:

¹ Sir Harford Jones Brydges' Dynasty of the Kajars translated from the Original Persian Manuscript (London, 1833) opens with a valuable Introduction {Preliminary matter} filling pp. xiii—cxci. The text of the original, entitled Ma'athir-i-Sultāniyya, was printed at Tabriz in Rajab, 1241 (March, 1826) and comes down to that year, but Brydges' translation ends with the year 1226/1811-12, and, in the latter part especially, differs very greatly from the printed text. Sir John Malcolm's History ends with the year 1230/1814; R. G. Watson's excellent monograph with A.D. 1857-8. The latest History of Persia, by Sir Percy Molesworth Sykes (2nd edition, London, 1921), is continued down to the actual year of publication.

² Like Nādir, he was crowned by acclamation in the Plain of Muqan in the spring of 1796, and met his death on June 17, 1797.

⁸ Malcolm's History, u, p. 287.

⁴ Ibid., pp. 300-302.

AQA MUHAMMAD KHAN QAJAR seated, with his grandson
HAJJI ISRAHIM standing before him.
Add. 4403 (Brit. Mus.)

"Aqa Muhammad Khan was murdered in the sixty-third year of his age. He had been ruler of a great part of Persia for upwards of twenty years, but had only for a short period enjoyed the undisputed sovereignty of that country. The person of that monarch was so slender that at a distance he appeared like a youth of fourteen or fifteen. His beardless and shrivelled face resembled that of an aged and wrinkled woman; and the expression of his countenance, at no times pleasant, was horrible when clouded, as it very often was, with indignation. He was sensible of this, and could not bear that anyone should look at him. This prince had suffered, in the early part of his life, the most cruel adversity; and his future conduct seems to have taken its strongest bias from the keen recollection of his misery and his wrongs. The first passion of his mind was the love of power; the second, avarice; and the third, revenge. In all these he indulged to excess, and they administered to each other: but the two latter, strong as they were, gave way to the first whenever they came in collision. His knowledge of the character and feelings of others was wonderful; and it is to this knowledge, and his talent of concealing from all the secret purposes of his soul, that we must refer his extraordinary success in subduing his enemies. Against these he never employed force till art had failed; and, even in war, his policy effected more than his sword. His ablest and most confidential minister¹, when asked if Aqa Muhammad Khan was personally brave, replied, * No doubt; but still I can hardly recollect an occasion when he had an opportunity of displaying courage. The monarch's head,' he emphatically added, 'never left work for his hand.'"

Aqa Muhammad Khan was succeeded by his nephew the uxorious and philoprogenitive² Fath-'Ali Shah. He was

¹ The infamous traitor Hajji Ibrahim, who personally communicated to Sir John Malcolm the opinion here recorded.

² According to the Nasikh-u't-Tawarikh, the issue of Fath-'Ali Shah during the 47 years of his mature lifetime amounted to two thousand children and grandchildren, and would, adds the historian, during the twenty-one years intervening between his death and the date of writing, probably amount to about ten thousand souls. He enumerates 57 sons and 46 daughters who survived him, 296 grandsons and 292 granddaughters, and 158 wives who had borne children to him. R. G. Watson (History of Persia p. 269) puts the number of his children at 159. In any case the number was so large as to justify the well-known Persian avaricious and vain, being inordinately proud of his handsome face and long beard, but not by nature cruel (at any rate compared to his late uncle), and it is related that, though obliged by custom to witness the execution of malefactors, he would always avert his face so as not to behold the unhappy wretch's death-agony. He was something of a poet, and composed numerous odes under the pen-name of Khciqan. Politically the chief features of his reign were the Anglo-French rivalry typified by the missions of Malcolm and Harford Jones Brydges on the one hand, and Jaubert and General Gardanne on the other (A.D. 1800-1808); the growing menace of Russia, resulting in the successive disastrous treaties of Gulistln (A.D. 1813) and Turkman-chay (A.D. 1826); and the war with Turkey in A.D. 1821, concluded in 1823 by the Treaty of Erzeroum. Other notable events of this reign were the disgrace and death of the traitor Hajji Ibrahim and the almost complete extirpation of his family about A.D. 1800¹; the massacre of Grebaiodoff and the Russian Mission at Tihrdn on February 11, 1829², and the premature death, at the age of forty-six, of the Shah's favourite son 'Abbcis Mirzd, the Crown Prince, "the noblest of the Kajar race," as Watson calls him³, in A.D. 1833. His heart-broken father only survived him about a year, and died at the age of sixty-eight on October 23, 1834, leaving fifty-seven sons and forty-six daughters to mourn his loss.

Reign of Fath-'Ali Shah (A.D.
 1797-1834).

Fath-'Alf Shah was succeeded by his grandson Muhammad, the son of 'Abbiis Mirza, who, ere he was crowned on January 31, 1835, was confronted with two rival claimants to the throne, his uncle the Zillu's-Sultctn and his brother the Farmdn-farma. These,

Muhammad
 Shah (A.D.
 1835-1848)

saying Shutur u shupush u shahzdda hatna ja paydast ("Camels, lice and princes are to be found everywhere").

¹ See R. G. Watson's History of Persia, pp 128-129.

² Ibid., pp. 247-256.

³ Ibid., p. 269.

however, were overcome without much difficulty by Persian troops commanded by Sir Henry Lindsay Bethune, and though the new Shah had every reason to be grateful to England and Russia for assuring his succession, the fact that these two powerful neighbours had for the first time intervened in this fashion was an ominous portent and a dangerous precedent in the history of Persia. The same year witnessed the fall and execution (on June 26, 1835) of the celebrated Qa'im-maqdr Mirza Abu'l-Qasim¹, hitherto the all-powerful minister of the King, still regarded by his countrymen as one of the finest prose stylists of modern times. He was succeeded as Prime Minister by the notorious Hajji Mirza Aghasf, concerning whom many ridiculous anecdotes are still current in Persia². Of the protracted but fruitless siege of Herat by the Persians in 1838 and the manifestations of Anglo-Russian rivalry for which it afforded occasion it is unnecessary to speak, nor of the withdrawal of Sir J. McNeill, the British Minister (A.D. 1838-1841), from the Persian Court, nor of the Turco-Persian boundary disputes of 1842 and the Turkish massacre of Persians at Karbald in the early part of 1843. From our point of view none of these events, fully discussed by R. G. Watson and other historians of Persia, are equal in interest to the Isma'i'li revolt of 1840 or thereabouts, and the rise of the Babf religion in 1844.

Of the origin and doctrines of the Isma'i'li heresy or "Sect of the Seven" (Sab'iyya), some account will be found in the first volume¹ of this work, while their destruction by Hulagu

¹ His father, Mirzd. 'Isa of Farahan, bore the same title. Notices of both occur in vol. 11 of the Majma'fuU-Fusahd, pp. 87 and 425. Some account of his literary achievements will be given when we come to consider the prose-writers of the Qajdr period in the penultimate chapter of Part III of this volume.

² See Gobmeau's Les Religions et les Philosophies dans l'Asie Centrale (2nd ed., Paris, 1866), pp. 160-166; and my Year amongst the Persians, pp. 116-117. A sketch of his character is also given by R. G. Watson, History of Persia, pp. 288-289.

K M n the Mongol in the middle of the thirteenth century of our era is briefly described in the second³. But, though their power in Persia was shattered, they still continued to exist, and, from time to time, to reappear on the pages of Persian history. In the volume of the Ndsikhut- Tawdrikh dealing with the reigning Qajar dynasty several references to them occur. The first, under the year 1232/1817, refers to the death of the then head of the sect Shah Khalilu'llah, the son of Sayyid Abu'l-Hasan Khan, at Yazd.

Shah Khalilu'llah killed at Yazd in 1232/1817.

Under the Zand dynasty Abu'l-Hasan had been governor of Kirman, whence on his dismissal he retired to the Mahallat of Qum. There he received tribute from his numerous followers in India and Central Asia, who, it is recorded, if unable to bring their offerings in person, used to throw them into the sea, believing that they would thus be conveyed into the hands of their Imam; but, when possible, used to visit him in his abode and deem it an honour to render him personal service, even of the most menial kind. His son, Shah Khalilu'llah, transferred his abode to Yazd, but after residing there two years he was killed in the course of a quarrel which had arisen between some of his followers and the Muslim citizens of Yazd, instigated by a certain Mulla Husayn. The Shah punished the perpetrators of this outrage, gave one of his daughters in marriage to Aqa Khan, the son and successor of the late Imam of the Isma'fifs, and made him governor of Qum and the surrounding districts {Mahallat).

We next hear of this Aqa Khan in 1255/1839 or 1256/1840⁸, when, apparently in consequence of the arrogant behaviour of Hajji 'Abdu'l-Muhammad-i-Mahallitf, instigated by the minister Hajji Mirzd Aqasf, he rebelled against Muhammad Shall and occupied the citadel of Bam, but was obliged to surrender to Ffruz Mirza, then governor of Kirmdn, who pardoned him and sent him to Tihran. Here he was well received by Hdjji Mirza Aqdsf and was presently allowed to return to his former government in the district of Qum. Having sent his family and possessions to Karbala by way of Baghdad, so as to leave himself free and unencumbered, he began to buy swift and strong horses and to recruit brave and devoted soldiers, and when his preparations were completed he set out across the deserts and open country towards Kirmdn, pretending that he was proceeding to Mecca by way of Bandar-i-'Abbas, and that the government of Kirman had been conferred upon him. Prince Bahman Mirzd Bahau'd-Dawla, being apprised of his intentions, pursued and overtook him as he was making for Shahr-i-Babak and Sfrjan, and a skirmish took place between the two parties in which eight of the Prince's soldiers and sixteen of the Aqd Khan's men were killed. After a second and fiercer battle the Aqd Khdn was defeated and fled to Ldr, whence he ultimately escaped to India, where his descendant, the present Aqa* Khan¹, lives a wealthy and spacious life at Bombay when not engaged in his frequent and extensive travels.

¹ Lit. Hist. of Persia, 1, pp. 391-415, etc.

² Ibid., ii, pp. 190-211; 453-460.

³ R. G. Watson in his History of Persia gives a fairly full account of the insurrection (pp. 331-334).

Revolt of the Aqa Khan in
A.D. 1839 or 1840

He is defeated by Bahman Mirza, and flees by way of Lar to India

The rise of the Babi sect or religion, which began in the later years of Muhammad Shah's reign, was an event of the most far-reaching significance and importance, and forms

¹ Sultan Muhammad Shall, G.C.I.E., etc., born in 1875. See Who's Who, s.v. "Aga Khan," and the conclusion of Stanislas Guyard's entertaining article Un Grand Maître des Assassins au temps de Saladin in the Journal Asiatique for 1877.

the subject of an extensive literature¹, not only in Persian and Arabic, but in English, French, German, Russian and other European languages. Since it would be impossible to give an adequate account of its eventful history and extensive developments in this volume, and since ample materials for its study are already available even in English (indeed, thanks to the success attained by its missionaries in America, especially in English), no attempt at recapitulation will be made here. Sayyid 'All Muhammad the Bab has himself (in the Persian Baydri) fixed the date of his "Manifestation" (Zuhi'ir) as May 23, 1844 (5 Jumada i, 1260), just a thousand years after the disappearance or "Occultation" (Ghay bat) of the Twelfth Imdm, or Imam Mahdi, to whom he claimed to be the "Gate" (Bab). Neither the idea nor the expression was new: the Imam Mahdi had four successive "Gates" (Abwad) by means of whom, during the "Lesser Occultation" (Ghaybat-i-Sughra) he maintained communication with his followers; and the "Perfect Shf'a" (Shl'a-i-Kamil) of the Shaykhf School, in which the Bab pursued his theological studies, connoted much the same idea of an Intermediary (Wdsita), or Channel of Grace, between the Concealed Imam and his faithful people. Later the Bab "went higher" (bdlldtar raft), to use the expression of his followers, and claimed to be first the "Supreme Point" (Nuqta-i-A'ld), or "Point of Explanation" (Nuqta-i-Baydn)> then the Qd'im ("He who is to arise" of the House of the Prophet), then the Inaugurator of a new Dispensation, and lastly an actual Divine Manifestation or Incarnation. Some of his followers went even further, calling themselves Gods and him a

¹ For a bibliography of the literature to 1889 see my Traveller's Narrative written to illustrate the Episode of the Bab (Cambridge, 1891)' vol. li, pp. 173-211; and for the subsequent literature, my Materials for the Study of the Babi Religion (Cambridge, 1918), pp. 175-243-

CH. iv] NASIRU'D-DiN SHAH'S ACCESSION

" Creator of Gods " (Khudd-dfarfri) while one of them went so far as to write of Baha'u'llah¹ :

خلق گویند خدائی و من اندر غضب آیم پرده بر داشته میسند بنمود ننگ خدائی

"Men say Thou art God, and I am moved to anger:

Raise the veil, and submit no longer to the shame of Godhead!"

Although the Babi movement led to much bloodshed, this took place almost entirely after the death of Muhammad Shah, which happened on September 5, 1848, though already the Bab was a prisoner in the fortress of Mdku in the extreme N.W. of Persia, while in Khurasan, Mazandaran and elsewhere armed bands of his followers roamed the country proclaiming the Advent of the expected Mahd and the inauguration of the Reign of the Saints, and threatening those sanguinary encounters between themselves and their opponents which were at once precipitated by the King's death and the ensuing dislocation and confusion.

Dark indeed were the horizons at the beginning of the new reign. The Watt'-ahdy or Crown Prince, Ndsiru'd-Di'n, was absent at Tabriz, the seat of his government, at the time of his father's death, and until he could reach Tihran his mother, the Mahd-i-'Ulyd, assumed control of affairs. Hajji Mirza Aqasf, whose unpopularity was extreme, not only ceased to act as Prime Minister, but had to flee for his life, and took refuge in the Shrine of Shah 'AbduVAzim². Disturbances broke out in the capital itself, and more serious revolts in Burujird, Kirmanshah, Kurdistdn, Shiraz, Kirman, Yazd and Khuras&n. The young Shah, then only seventeen years of age³, finally reached the capital on October 20, 1848, was crowned the same night, and immediately appointed as his Prime Minister Mirza" Taqf Khan, better known as the Amir-i-MirzaTaqiKhan Nizam, who, notwithstanding his lowly origin Amir-i-Nizam.

¹ Cited in the Hasht Bihisht, f. 244a of my MS. The verse is ascribed to Nabfl of Zarand, who killed himself at 'Akka" on BahdVlldh's death on May 28, 1892.

² See R. G. Watson's History of Persia , pp. 357-8.

³ He was born on July 17, 1831.

(his father was originally cook to the Qd'im-maqdm)¹, was one of the greatest men and most honest, capable and intelligent ministers produced by Persia in modern times. "The race of modern Persians," exclaims Watson⁸ enthusiastically, "cannot be said to be altogether effete, since so recently it has been able to produce a man such as was the Amtr-i-Nizdm"; and the Hon. Robert Curzon, in his Armenia and Erzeroum, has described him as "beyond all comparison the most interesting personage amongst the commissioners of Turkey, Persia, Russia and Great Britain who were then assembled at Erzeroum." In the brief period of three years during which he held the high office of Prime Minister he did much for Persia, but the bright promise of his career was too soon darkened by the envy and malice of his rivals. The tragic circumstances

Tragic death of Mirza Taqi
Khan, Jan. 9, 185a.

of his violent and cruel death in his exile at the beautiful palace of Ffn near Kashan are too well known to need repetition⁸, but the admirable fidelity of his wife, the Shah's only sister, cannot be passed over in silence. "No princess educated in a Christian court," says Watson⁴, "and accustomed to the contemplation of the brightest example of conjugal virtues that the history of the world has recorded could have shown more tenderness and devotion than did the sister of the Shah of Persia towards her unfortunate husband." Her untiring vigilance was, however, finally tricked and out-

¹ Some account of the two celebrated men, father and son, who bore this title will be found in the account of modern prose-writers of note in Part iii of this volume. See p. 147 supra, ad calc.

² See Watson's History, p. 264.

⁸ Ibid., pp. 398-406.

* Ibid., p. 403.

CH. iv] THE BABI INSURRECTION

witted by the infamous Hajji 'All Khan Hajibu d-Dazvla, who owed so much to the minister whose life he succeeded in bringing to an end on January 9, 1852.

The Babis, however, had no cause to love Mirza Taqf Khan, whose death they had already striven to compass, and whose ultimate fate was regarded by them of 1849-1850.

Babi risings

as a signal instance of Divine retribution, since, apart from other measures which he had taken against them, he was responsible for the execution of the Bab himself at Tabriz on July 9, 1850. The Bdb indeed, helpless prisoner that he was, had kindled a flame which proved inextinguishable, and which especially illumines with a lurid glow the first four years of Nasiru'd-Din Shah's reign. The story of the almost incredible martial achievements of the Babis at Shaykh Tabarsf in Mazandaran, at Zanzan, Yazd, Nayriz and elsewhere during the years 1849-

1850 will never be more graphically told than Gobineau.

by the Comte de Gobineau, who in his incomparable book Les Religions et les Philosophies dans VAsie Centrale combines wit, sympathy and insight in an extra-opiinjary degree. I personally owe more to this book than to any other book about Persia, since to it, not less than to an equally fortunate and fortuitous meeting in Isfahan, I am indebted for that unravelling of Babf doctrine and history which first won for me a reputation in Oriental scholarship. Gobineau was for some time a " prophet without honour in his own country," but, while France long neglected him, Germany produced a " Gobineau- Vereinigung"¹ and several important works² on his life and writings. The militant phase of Bdbfism culminated in the attempted assassination of Nasiru'd-Dfn Shah by three members of the sect on August 15, 1852, and the frightful persecution which followed, wherein twenty-eight more or less prominent Babis, including the beautiful and talented poetess QurratuV Ayn, suJOSrecUdeath with horrible tortures¹ Most of the leading~B&bfs who survived emigrated or were exiled to Baghdad, and thenceforth, though the sect continued to increase in Persia, the centre of its activity, whether at Baghdad, Adrianople, Cyprus or Acre, lay beyond the frontiers of Persia.

¹ Founded in 1894.

² I possess two by Ludwig Schemann, Eine Biographie and Quellen und Untersuchungen (Strassburg, 1913 and 1914). The monthly review Europe for October, 1923 (No. 7), has published a very important Numdro consacrd au Comte de Gobineau, which contains (pp. 116-126) an excellent article by M. Vladimir Minorsky entitled Gobineau et la Perse, followed (pp. 127-141) by a list of his published and unpublished

Attempt on the Shah's life by three Babis,
Aug 15, 1852.

It is unnecessary here to discuss the causes and course of the short Anglo-Persian War of 1856-7, brought about by the seizure of Herdt by the Persians. It began with the occupation by the British of the island of Kharak in the Persian Gulf on December 4, 1856, and was officially terminated by the Treaty of Peace signed at Paris on March 4, 1857, by Lord Cowley and Farrukh Khan, though, owing to the slowness of communications at that time, hostilities actually continued for another month. They did not end a moment too soon for Great Britain, for almost before the ratifications were exchanged the Indian Mutiny broke out. The need then experienced for better communications between

The Anglo-Persian War of 1856-7.

England and India led in 1864 to the introduction into Persia of the telegraph, to which further extension was given in 1870 and 1872, and this, as pointed out by Sir Percy Molesworth Sykes (whose *History of Persia*¹¹ is almost the only book which gives a continuous works, a biography, and an account of Le mouvement Gobimste en Allemagne et en France.

Introduction of the telegraph.

¹ See my Traveller's Narrative, vol. ii, pp. 326-334, and Materials for the Study of the Babi Religion, pp 265-271.

² I refer to the second and enlarged edition, published in 1921, in which (on p. 526 of vol. 11) March of that year is mentioned as the current date at the time of writing.

and coherent narrative of events from 1857 to 1921), had far-reaching reactions¹, and was one of the factors in the modernization of Persia* Others were the extension of the Press (first introduced into Tabrfz by 'Abbas Mirza about A.D. 1816) and consequent wider diffusion of literature ; the slow growth of journalism since 1851³ down to its enormous expansion during the Revolution of 1906-1911 and again after the Russian collapse ; the foundation of the Ddriil-Fimtin, or Polytechnic College, at Tihrdn in 1851, and the introduction of European science and instruction ; and, in a lesser degree, the Shdh's three journeys to Europe in 1873, 1878 and 1889, though it is doubtful whether he or his attendants derived more advantage from what they saw in the course of their peregrinations than Persian literature did from his accounts of his experiences.

Nasiru'd-Dfn Shah was only a little over seventeen years of age when he was crowned on the 24th of Dhu'l-Qa'da, 1264 (20 October, 1848), and would have entered upon the fiftieth year of his reign on the same date of the Muhammadan year A.H. 1313, corresponding to May 5, 1896. Four days earlier, however, when all the preparations for the celebration of his Jubilee were completed, he was shot dead by Mirza" Rida of Kirman, a disciple of that turbulent spirit Sayyid Jamalu

Assassination of Nasiru'd-Din
Shah on the eve of his Jubilee,
May 1, 1896.

-Afghan, in the Shrine of Shah 'AbduVAzim a few miles south of Tihrdn. Of the events which led up to this catastrophe and their significance I have treated fully in my History of the Persian Revolution of ipoj-ipop, and will not attempt to epitomize here matters which are fully discussed there, and which it would be a waste of space to recapitulate. The seeds of the Revolution were sown, and even began to germinate, about the time of the Shah's third and last visit to Europe, fruitful in ill-advised concessions, which (especially the Tobacco concession of 1890) were a potent factor in stimulating the political discontents which found their first open expression in the Tobacco-riots of 1891 and culminated in the Revolution of 1905. If we ignore the external relations of Persia with foreign Powers, especially England and Russia, which form the principal topic of such political histories as that of Sir Percy Molesworth Sykes, we may say, broadly speaking, that of the long reign of Nctsiu'd-Din Shah the first four years (A.D. 1848-52) were notable for the religious fermentation caused by the Bibfs, and the last six years (A.D. 1890-6) for the political fermentation which brought about the Revolution in the following reign; while the intervening period was, outwardly at any rate, one of comparative peace and tranquillity. It was my good fortune to visit Persia in 1887-8 towards the end of this period, and, while enjoying the remarkable security which then prevailed in the country, to see almost the last of what may fairly be called mediaeval Persia. To this security I hardly did justice in the narrative of my travels¹ which I wrote soon after my return, for I hardly realized then how few and short were the periods, either before or after my visit, when a young foreigner, without any official position or protection, could traverse the country from North-West to South-East and from North to South, attended only by his Persian servant and his muleteers, not only without danger, but practically without the occurrence of a single disagreeable incident. And if this

¹ Op. at, n, p. 369.

² See p. 10 of my Press and Poetry in Modern Persia, where the whole subject is fully discussed.

Germ of the Revolution

Momentous years at the beginning and end of Nasiru'd-Din
Shah's reign.

Persia in 1887-8.

¹ A Year amongst the Persians (London: A. & C. Black, 1893). This book has long been out of print and is now very scarce.

remarkable security, which compared favourably with that of many European countries, had originally been brought about by frightful exemplary punishments of robbers and ill-doers, these were no longer in evidence, and during the whole of my time in Persia I not only never witnessed an execution or a bastinado, but never heard of a specific case of either in any place where I stayed, though the ghastly pillars of mortar with protruding human bones outside the gates of Shiraz still bore witness to the stern rule of the Shah's uncle Farhad Mirza, Mu'tamadid-Dawla, whom I met only in the capacity of a courtly and learned bibliophile. Yet withal the atmosphere was, as I have said, mediaeval: politics and progress were hardly mentioned, and the talk turned mostly on mysticism, metaphysics and religion; the most burning political questions were those connected with the successors of the Prophet Muhammad in the seventh century of our era; only a languid interest in external affairs was aroused by the occasional appearance of the official journals Iran and Ittild or the more exciting Akhtar published in Constantinople; while at Kirman one post a week maintained communication with the outer world. How remote does all this seem from the turmoil of 1891, the raging storms of 1905-11, the deadly paralysis of the Russian terror which began on Christmas Day in the year last mentioned, and then the Great War, when Persia became the cockpit of three foreign armies and the field of endless intrigues. The downfall of Russian Imperialism freed her from the nightmare of a century, and seemed to her to avenge the desecration of the holy shrine of Mashhad in April, 1912, while the collapse of the Anglo-Persian Agreement and consequent withdrawal of British troops and advisers has left her for the time being to her own devices, to make or mar her future as she can and will.

Stormy later years(1891 onwards).

158 HISTORY OF PERSIA (A.D. 1722-1922) [PT I, CH. IV

Since Nasiru'd-Dm fell a victim to the assassin's pistol the throne of Persia has been occupied by his son Muzaffaru'd-Dfn (1896-1907), who granted the Constitution; his grandson

Nasiru'd-Din Shah's successors. Muhammad 'AH, who endeavoured to destroy it, who was deposed by the victorious Nationalists on July 16, 1909, and who is still living in retirement in the neighbourhood of Constantinople; and his great-grandson Sultdn Ahmad Shah the reigning monarch. It would be premature to discuss the reign and character of the last, while the very dissimilar characters of his father and grandfather I have endeavoured to depict in my History of the Persian Revolution, But since the death of Nasiru'd-Dfn Shah twenty-seven years ago it may truly be said that the centre of interest has shifted from the king to the people of Persia, nor, so far as we can foresee the future, is it likely that we shall see another Isma'il, another Nadir, or (which God forbid!) another Aqa Muhammad Khan.

PART II.

PERSIAN VERSE
DURING THE LAST FOUR CENTURIES

CHAPTER V.

SOME GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS ON THE LATER AND ESPECIALLY THE RELIGIOUS POETRY OF THE PERSIANS.

Four hundred years ago the Persian language (or at any rate the written language, for no doubt fresh colloquialisms and slang may have arisen during this period) was to all intents and purposes the same as it is to-day, while such new literary forms as exist go no further back, as a rule, than the middle of the nineteenth century, that is to say than the accession of Nasiru'd-Din Shdh, whose reign (A. D. 1848-1896) might not inappropriately be called the Persian Victorian¹ Era. In the three previous volumes of this book each historical chapter has been immediately followed by a chapter dealing with the literature of that period; but in this volume, for the reason just given, it appeared unnecessary to break the sequence of events in this way, and to be preferable to devote the first part of the volume to a brief historical sketch of the whole period, and the second and third parts to a consideration of the literature in verse and prose, arranged according to categories.

How to arrange these categories is a problem which has cost me a good deal of thought. Nearly all those who have written on Persian literature have paid an excessive amount of attention which I regard as excessive and disproportionate to poetry and belles-lettres, and have almost entirely ignored the plainer but more positive fields of history, biography, theology, philosophy and the ancient sciences. If we understand literature in the narrower sense as denoting those writings only, whether poetry or prose, which have artistic form, there is, no doubt, some justification for this view; but not if we take it in the wider sense of the manifestation in writing of a nation's mind and intellectual activities. Still, in deference to the prevalent view, we may begin this general survey of the recent literature of Persia with some consideration of its poetry.

¹ Nasiru'd-Din, indeed, approximately means "Victor" or "Defender of the Faith."

Here we have to distinguish some half-dozen categories of verse, namely (i) the classical poetry; (2) occasional or topical verse, (3) religious and devotional verse, from the formal marthiyas, or threnodies, of great poets like Muhtasham of Kashan to the simple popular poems on the sufferings of the Imams recited at the Ta'zias, or mournings, of the month of Muharram; (4) the scanty but sometimes very spirited verses composed by the Babis since about 1850, which should be regarded as a special subdivision of the class last mentioned¹; (5) the ballads or tasnifs sung by professional minstrels, of which it is hard to trace the origin or antiquity; (6) the quite modern political verse which has arisen since the Revolution of 1906[^] and which I have already discussed in some detail in another work¹. In this chapter I shall deal chiefly with the religious verse, leaving the consideration of the secular poetry to the two succeeding chapters.

Categories of Persian verse

(1) The Classical Poetry.

Alike in form and matter the classical poetry of Persia has been stereotyped for at least five or six centuries, so that, except for such references to events or persons as may indicate the date of composition, it is hardly possible, after reading a qasida (elegy), gkazal (ode), or rubdH (quatrain), to guess whether it was composed by a contemporary of Jamf (d. A.H. 1492)

Later poetry of the classical type

¹ The Press and Poetry of Modern Persia (Cambridge, 1914).

or by some quite recent poet, such as Qa'ani. Of the extremely conventional character of this poetry I have spoken in a previous volume¹, and of Ibn Khaldun's doctrine "that the Art of composing in verse or prose is concerned only with words, not with ideas." Hence, even in the most recent poetry of this type, we very seldom find any allusion to such modern inventions as tea-drinking, tobacco-smoking, railways, telegraphs or newspapers², indeed several of the greatest modern poets, such as Qa'anf, Dawari and the like, have chiefly shown their originality by reviving certain forms of verse like the *musammat which had fallen into disuse since the eleventh or twelfth century.

Perhaps the statement with which the above paragraph opens is too sweeping and requires some qualification, for Literary criticism neglected by the Persians

in some of the later Persian poets Indian and Turkish critics do profess to discover a certain originality {tdza-giii) marking an epoch in the development of the art, and the rise of a new school. The Persians themselves are not addicted to literary criticism; perhaps because, just as people only discuss their health when they are beginning to lose it, so those only indulge in meticulous literary criticism who are no longer able, or have never been able, to produce good literature. According to Gibb⁴, Jami and Mir 'All Shfr Nawa'i, 'Urfi of Shfraz (d. 999/1590-1) and the Indian Faydf (Feyzi, d. 1004/1595-6), and lastly Sa'ib of Isfahan (d. 1080/1669-70) were successively the chief foreign influences on the development of Ottoman Turkish poetry, and a great deal has been written about them by the Turkish critics. The best and fullest

¹ Lit Hist of Persia, it, pp 83-9

² Cf. Gibb's History of Ottoman Poetry, vol. IV, p. 4 Such allusions will, however, be found in the poem by Na'im quoted in the latter part of this chapter, though in general it follows the orthodox qasida form.

³ Lit. Hist. of Persia, u, pp. 41-2.

⁴ History of Ottoman Poetry, vol. 111, pp. 247-48.

critical estimate of the leading Persian poets from the earliest times down to the latter part of the seventeenth century is, however, so far as I can judge, a work written (most unfortunately) in the Urdu or Hindustani language, the Ski'rul-Ajam ("Poetry of the Persians") of that eminent scholar Shibli Nu'mani. The third volume of this work, composed in 1324-5/1906-7, deals with seven Persian poets of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries of our era, namely Fighanf (d. 925/1519), Faydf (d. 1004/1595-6), 'Urfi (d. 999/1590-1), Nazfrf (d. 1021/1612-3), Talib-i-Amuli (d. 1036/1626-7), Sa'ib (d. 1080/1669-1670), and Abu Talib Kalim (d. 1061/1651). All these were Persians, attracted to India by the liberal patronage of the Moghul Court, except Faydf, whom Shibli regards as the only Indian poet except Amir Khusraw who could produce Persian verse which might pass for that of a born Persian. 'Urfi and Sa'ib were the most notable of these seven but even they enjoy a greater repute in India and Turkey than in their own country¹. The explanation of this fact offered by some Persians of my acquaintance is that they are easily understood and therefore popular with foreigners, who often find the more subtle poetry admired in Persia beyond their powers of comprehension. I must confess with shame that in this case my taste agrees with the foreigners, and that I find Sa'ib especially attractive, both on account of his simplicity of style and his skill in the figures entitled husn-i-ta'il or "poetical aetiology," and irsdlu l-mathal or "proverbial commission"². Nearly forty years ago (in 1885) I read through the Persian portion of that volume of the great trilingual anthology entitled *Kharabat*³ which deals with the lyrical verse of the Arabs, Turks and Persians, both odes and isolated verses, and copied into a note-book which now lies before me those which pleased me most, irrespective of authorship; and, though many of the 443 fragments and isolated verses which I selected are anonymous, more than one-tenth of the total (45) are by Sa'ib.

¹ Ridd-quli Khan explicitly says of both of them that their style is not approved by modern Persians.

² See Gibb's History of Ottoman Poetry, vol. 1, pp. 113-14.

³ Compiled by Ziyi. (Diya) Pasha, and published in three volumes at Constantinople in 1291-2/1874-5.

India, at all events, thanks to the generous patronage of Humayun, Akbar, and their successors down to that gloomy zealot Awrangzib, and of their great nobles, such as Bayram Khan-Khanan and his son 'Abdu'r-Rahfm, who succeeded to the title after his father's assassination about AD. 1561, continued during the greater part of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries to attract a great number of the most talented Persian poets, who found there an appreciation which was withheld from them in their own country. Bada'uni¹ enumerates about one hundred and seventy, most of whom were of Persian descent though some of them were born in India. Shibli² gives a list of fifty-one who came to India from Persia in Akbar's time and were received at court, and a long list is also given by Sprenger³. Shibli quotes numerous verses showing how widely diffused amongst Persian poets was the desire to try their fortune in India⁴.

Thus Sa'ib says :

همچو عزمِ سفرِ هند که در هر دل هست
رقصِ سودای تو در هیچ سری نیست که نیست

" There is no head wherein desire for thee danceth not, Even as the determination to visit India is in every heart"

¹ Muntakhabu't-Tawdrikh (Calcutta, 1869), vol. 111, pp. 170-390.

² Shi'ru'l-'Ajam, vol. 111, p. 5.

³ Catalogue of the Library of the King of Ouch vol. 1, pp. 55-65.

⁴ Shi'ru'l-'Ajam, vol. 111, p. 10.

And Abú Ṭalīb Kalīm says :

اسمیر هندم و زین رفتن بیجا پشیمانم
 کجا خواهد رساندن پُرفشانی مرغِ بسل را
 بایوان میروند نالان کلیم از شوقِ همراهان
 بپای دیگران همچون جرس طی کرده منزل را
 ز شوقِ هند زن سان چشمِ حسرت بر قفا دارم

که رو هم کمر براه آور نمی بینم مقابل را

"I am the captive of India, and I regret this misplaced journey :
 Whither can the feather-flutterings of the dying bird¹ convey it ?
 Kalīm goes lamenting to Persia [dragged thither] by the eagerness of his fellow-travellers,

Like the camel-bell which traverses the stage on the feet of others Through longing for India I turn my regretful eyes backwards in such fashion

That, even if I set my face to the road, I do not see what confronts me."

So also 'Alī-qulī Salm says :

نیست در ایران زمین سامانِ تحصیلِ کمال تا نیامد سوی هندستان حنا رنگین نشد
 "There exist not in Persia the means of acquiring perfection .
 Henna does not develop its colour until it comes to India."

The Persian dervish-poet Rasmī, commemorating the Khán-Khánán's liberal patronage of poets, says²:

ز یمن مدح تو آن نکته سنج شیرازی
 رسید صیت کمالش بهر روزِ خاور
 بطرز تازه ز مدح تو آشنا کردید
 چو روی خوب که باید ز ماشطه زیور

¹ When a Muslim kills a bird for food by cutting its throat, he must pronounce the formula Bismi'llah ("In the Name of God") over it. Such a bird, in its dying struggles on the ground, is called Murgh-i-Bismil, or Nim-bismil.

² Shi'ru'l-'Ajam, vol. III, p. 13.

ز فیضِ نامِ تو فیضی گرفت چون خسرو'
 بتشیخِ هندی اقلیمِ سبعه را یکسر'
 ز ریزه چینیِ خوانت نظیری شاعر'
 رسیده است بجائی که شاعران دگر'
 کنند بهر مدیحتش قصیده' انشا'
 که خونِ رشک چکد از دلِ سخن پرور'
 سوادِ شعرِ شکیبی چو گُلِ صفاهان'
 بتسفه سوی خراسان برند اهلِ نظر'
 ز مدحتِ تو حیاتیِ دیگر یافت'
 بلی مقوی طبعِ عرض بود جوهر'
 حدیثِ نوعی و کفوی بیان چه سازم من'
 چو زنده اند بدمیج تو تا دمِ محشر'
 ز نعمتِ تو به نوعی رسید آن مایه'
 که یافت میرِ معزی ز نعمتِ سنجر'

"Through auspicious praise of thee the fame of the perfection of that subtle singer of Shfraz reached from the East to Rum²

In praising thee he became conversant with a new style, like the fair face which gains adornment from the tire-woman.

By the grace (fayd) of thy name Fayclf, like [his predecessor] Khusraw³, annexed the Seven Climes from end to end with the Indian sword.

By gathering crumbs from thy table Nazrī the poet hath attained a rank such that other poets

Compose such elegies in his praise that blood drips in envy from the heart of the singer.

Men of discernment carry as a gift to Khurasan, like the collynum of Isfahan, copies of Shakibi's verses.

By praising thee Hayat found fresh life (hayat): yea, the substance must needs strengthen the nature of the accident.

¹ I.e. ⁴Urff, as Shiblī notes. ^a I.e. Turkey. See above, p. 80, n. 5.

⁸ Cf. p. 164 supra.

How can I tell the tale of Naw'i and Kufwi, since by their praise of thee they will live until the Resurrection Dawn?

Such measure of thy favour accrued to Naw'f as Amfr Mu'izzi received from the favour of Sanjar "

These poets of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries produced what the late Professor Ethe* has happily termed the "Indian summer" of Persian poetry, and they had of course a host of Indian imitators and successors so long as Persian continued to be the polite language of India. These last, who were at best skilful manipulators of a foreign idiom, I do not propose to notice; and even of the genuine Persian poets, whether sojourners in India or residents in their own country, only a limited number of the most eminent can be discussed in these pages. The eighteenth century of our era, especially the troubled period intervening between the fall of the Safawf and the rise of the Qajar dynasties (A.D. 1722-1795), was the poorest in literary achievement; after that there is a notable revival, and several poets of the nineteenth century, Qa'anf, Yaghma, Furughf and Wisal and his family, can challenge comparison with any save the very greatest of their predecessors.

The eighteenth century a barren period

(2) Occasional or Topical Verse,

Some of the most interesting pieces of poetry are those composed, not necessarily by professional poets, for some special purpose or some particular occasion.

Examples of occasional or topical verse

These are not so often to be found in the regular diwdns of verse as in the pages of contemporary histories. The following from the unpublished Ahsanu t-Tawarikh may serve as specimens.

In the year 961/1553-4 died three Indian kings, Mahmud III of Gujerat, Islam Shah son of Shir Shah the Afghan of Dihlf, and Nizamu'l-Mulk of the Deccan. This coincidence, with the date, is commemorated in the following verses:

سه خسرو را قران آمد بیک سال
 که هند از عدلشان دار آلمان بود
 یکی محمود شاهنشاه کجرات
 که همچون دولت خود نو جوان بود
 دوم اسلام شه سلطان دهلی
 که در هندوستان صاحب قران بود
 سیم آمد نظام الملک دهری
 که در ملک دکن خسرو نشان بود
 ز من تاریخ فوت آن سه خسرو چه میپرسی زوال خسروان بود

"In one year the [fatal] conjunction came to three princes by whose justice India was the Abode of Security

One was Mahmūd¹, the monarch of Gujerāt, who was youthful as his own fortune.

The second was Islām Shāh², King of Dihlī, who was in India the lord of a fortunate conjunction.

The third was the Nizām-ul-Mulk³, Bahrf, who ruled in royal state in the kingdom of the Deccan.

Why dost thou ask of me the date of the death of these three Kings?

It was 'the decline of the kings' (زوال خسروان = 961)."

The following verses by Mawlānā Qāsim commemorate the death of Humáyūn in the succeeding year (962/1554-5).

همایون پادشاه ملک معنی
 ندارد کس چو او شاهنشهی یاد
 ز بام قصر خود افتاد ناکاه
 وزو عمر کرامی رفت هر باد
 پی تاریخ او قاسم رقم زد همایون پادشاه از بام افتاد

"Humáyūn, king of the realm of the Ideal, none can recall a monarch like him.

¹ See S. Lane-Poole's Mohammadan Dynasties, p. 313.

² Ibid., pp. 300 and 303.

³ Ibid., p. 320 I doubt if Bahrf is a correct reading: it should perhaps be Burhān, the proper name of the second of the Nizām Shāhs of Aḥmadnagar, who reigned from 914 to 961 A.H. (1508-1553 A.D.).

Suddenly he fell from the roof of his palace; precious life departed from him on the winds.

Qasim¹ thus ciphered the date of his death: 'King Huma>un fell from the roof.'

The next piece, denouncing the people of Qazwfn, is by the poet Hayratf, who died from a fall at Kashan in 961/1553-4:

وَقْتِ آن آمد که آساید سپهرِ بی مدار
چون زمین در سایهات ای سایه پروردگار
پادشاهانِ مدتِ نه ماه شد کین نا توان
مانده در قزوین خراب و خسته و مجروح و زار
یافتم رسمِ تسنن در وضع و در شریف
دیدم آثارِ تخرّج در صغار و در کبار
در مقابر پای شسته از فقیر و از غنی
در مساجد دست بسته از یمین و از یسار
در زمانِ چون تو شاهی دست بتن در نماز
هست کاری دست بسته ای شه عالی تبار
قاضی این ملک نسلِ خالد بن الولید
مفتی این شهر فرزندِ سعیدِ نابکار
کشته گردیده ز تیغ شاه غازی هر دورا
هم برادر هم پدر هم یار هم خویش و تبار
خود بفرما ای شه دانا که اکنون این گروه
داعی خصمند یا مولای شاه کامکار
قتل عامی گر نباشد قتل خاصی میتوان
خاصه از بهر رضای حضرت پروردگار

¹ My text has ghāhī, which I have ventured to emend to Qāsim. For the particulars of Humáyūn's death, see Erskine's History of India under the first two sovereigns of the House of Tasmūr, Baber and Humáyūn (London, 1854), vol. ii, pp. 527-8. The chronogram is unusually natural, simple and appropriate.

نیستند اینها رعایائی که باشد قتلشان
 موجب تخفیف مال و مانع خرج دیار
 بلکه هر يك مبلغی از مال دیوان میخورند سر بسر صاحب سیورغانند هم اذرار دار

"The time has come when the pivotless sphere, like the earth, should rest under thy shadow, O Shadow of God!

O King' It is a period of nine months that this helpless one hath remained in Qazwfn ruined, weary, wounded and wretched.

I found the practices of the Sunnis in humble and noble alike. I saw the signs of schism in small and great

Poor and rich with washed feet at the Tombs hands clasped in the mosques to right and to left

In the time of a King like thee to clasp the hands in prayer is an underhand action, O King of lofty lineage!

The Judge of this Kingdom is of the race of Khdhhd ibnu'1-Walid; the Mufti of this city is the son of the worthless Sa'fd

By the sword of the victorious King the brother, father, friend, kinsman and family of both have been slain together.

Say thyself, O wise King, whethei now this group are the propagandists of the enemy, or the clients of the victorious King

If there cannot be a public massacre one might [at least contrive] a private massacre for the special satisfaction of the Divine Majesty

These are not subjects whose slaughter would cause a reduction of the revenue or would check the spending power of the country;

Nay, rather each one of them consumes a quantity of the wealth of the exchequer, for they are all fief-holders and pensioners."

The worst of these "occasional verses" is that we seldom know enough of the circumstances under which they were composed to enable us fully to understand all the allusions contained in them. What, for example, had the people of Qazwfn done to the author of the above verses to arouse in him such bitter anger? Who were the Qadf and the Mufti whom he particularly denounces? How did their relatives come to be slain by the King, and of what enemy were they the propagandists? The fact that we do not know at what date the verses were composed, and whether in the reign of Shah Tahmasp or of his father and predecessor Shah Isma'fī, makes it harder to discover the answers to these questions, but it is interesting to learn how prevalent were the Sunnī doctrines in Qazwīn at the time when they were written. Of course in the case of the modern topical verses which abounded in the newspapers of the Revolutionary Period (A.D. 1906-1911 especially) the allusions can be much more easily understood.

(3) Religious and Devotional Verse.

Of the numerous poets of the Safawī period who devoted their talents to the celebration of the virtues and sufferings of the Imams, Muhtasham of Kāshī¹ (died 996/1588) is the most eminent. In his youth he wrote

Religious poetry of Muhtasham and his imitators.

erotic verse, but in later life he seems to have consecrated his genius almost entirely to the service of religion. Rida-qulī Khan in his Majma' al-Fusah (vol. ii, pp. 36-8) gives specimens of both styles, of which we are here concerned only with the second. The author of the *Tdrikh-i Alam-ara-yi Abbasī*¹ in his account of the chief poets of Shah Tahmasp's reign states that though in earlier

Indifference of the Safawī kings to panegyric.

life that king enjoyed and cultivated the society of poets, in his later years his increasing austerity and deference to the views of the theologians led him to regard them with disfavour as latitudinarians (wasī'u'l-ntashrab), so that when Muhtasham, hoping for a suitable reward, sent him two eloquent panegyrics, one in his praise and the other in praise of the Princess Parf-Khan Khanum, he received nothing, the Shah remarking that poetry written in praise of kings and princes was sure to consist largely of lies and exaggerations, according to the well-known Arabic saying, "The best poetry is that which contains most falsehoods," but that, since it was impossible to exaggerate the virtues of the Prophet and the Im&ms, the poet could safely exert his talents to the full, and in addition would have the satisfaction of looking for a heavenly instead of an earthly reward. Thereupon Muhtasham composed his celebrated *haft-band*_x or poem" of seven-verse strophes, in praise of "the Imams, and this time was duly and amply rewarded, whereupon many other poets followed his example, so that in a comparatively short time some fifty or sixty such haft-bands were produced. This poem is cited in most of the anthologies which include Muhtasham, but most fully in the *Khardbdt*¹ of Diya (Ziyf) Pasha (vol. ii, pp. 197-200). In this fullest form it comprises twelve strophes each consisting of seven verses, and each concluding with an additional verse in a different rhyme, thus comprising in all ninety-six verses. The language is extraordinarily simple and direct, devoid of those rhetorical artifices and verbal conceits which many Europeans find so irritating, and shows true pathos and religious feeling. I wish that space were available to quote the whole poem, the prototype of so many others of a similar character, but I must content myself with citing three of the twelve strophes (the fourth, fifth and sixth).

¹ Ff. 138^a-139^b of my MS. marked H. 13. Unfortunately this very important history has never been published.

بر خوانِ غمِ چو عالمیان را صلا زدند،
 اول صلا بسلسله انبیا زدند،
 نوبت باولیا چو رسید آسمان طپید،
 ز آن ضربتی که بر سرِ شیرِ خدا زدند،
 پس آتشی ز اخگرِ الماس ریزها،
 افروختند و بر حسنِ مجتبی زدند،

Muhtasham's celebrated Haft-band

¹ This excellent anthology of Arabic, Persian and Turkish poetry was printed in three volumes in Constantinople in A.H. 1291-2 (A.D. 1874-5). See p. 164, n. 3 supra.

و آنکه سرادقیکه مَلَكِ محرومِش نبود،
 گنبدند از مدینه و در کربلا زدند،
 و ز تیشه ستیزه در آن دشت کوفیان،
 بس نخلها ز گلشنِ آلِ عبا زدند،
 بس ضربتی گزان جگرِ مصطفی درید،
 بر حلقِ تشنه خلف مرتضی زدند،
 اهلِ حرم دریده گریبان کشاده موی،
 فریاد بر درِ حرمِ کبریا زدند،
 روح الامین نهاده بزانو سرِ حجاب،
 تاریک شد ز دیدن او چشم آفتاب،
 چون خونِ حلقِ تشنه او بر زمین رسید،
 جوش از زمین بذرود عرشِ برین رسید،
 نزدیک شد که خانه ایهان شود خراب،
 از بس شکستها که بارگانِ دین رسید،
 نخلِ بلند او چو خان بر زمین زدند،
 طوفان بر آسمان ز غبارِ زمین رسید،
 باد آن غبار را به‌مزارِ نبی رساند،
 کرد از مدینه هر فلکِ هفتمین رسید،
 یکباره جامه در خُمِ گردون بنهیل زد،
 چون این خبر بعیسی گردون نشین رسید،
 پر شد فلک ز علغله چون نوبتِ خروش،
 از انبیا به‌حضرتِ روح الامین رسید،
 کرد این خیال وهمِ غلط کار کین غبار،
 تا دامنِ جلالِ جهان آفرین رسید،
 هست از ملالِ گرچه بری ذاتِ ذو الجلال،
 او در دلست و هیچ دلی نیست بی‌ملال.

ترسم جزای قاتلِ او چون رقم زنند،
 یکباره بر جریده^۱ رحمت قلم زنند،
 ترسم گزینِ گناه شفیعیانِ روزِ حشر،
 دارند شرم گز گنه خلقِ دم زنند،
 دستِ عتابِ حق بدر آید ز آستین،
 چون اهلِ بیت دست بر اهلِ ستم زنند،
 آه از دمیکه با کفنِ خونچکان ز خاک،
 آلِ علی چو شعله^۲ آتشِ علم زنند،
 فریاد از آن زمانکه جوانانِ اهلِ بیت،
 کُنگون کفنِ بعصره^۳ محشر بهر زنند،
 جمعی که زد بهر صغشان شورِ کربلا،
 در حشر صفِ زنان صفِ محشر بهر زنند،
 از صاحبِ حرم چه توقع کنند باز،
 آن نا کسان که تیغِ بصیدِ حرم زنند،
 پس بر سان کنند سریرا که جبرئیل^۴
 شوید غبارِ کیسویش از آبِ سلسبیل^۵

"When they summoned mankind to the table of sorrow, they first issued the summons to the hierarchy of the Prophets.

When it came to the turn of the Saints, Heaven trembled at the blow which they smote on the head of the Lion of God¹.

Then they kindled a fire from sparks of diamond-dust and cast it on Hasan² the Chosen one

Then they tore up from Madína and pitched at Karbalá those pavilions to which even the angels were denied entrance

¹ I.e. 'Alí ibn Abí Tálíb, the Prophet's cousin and son-in-law and the first of the Twelve Imáms.

² 'Alí's eldest son, the second Imám, said to have been poisoned at the instigation of Mu'áwiya.

Many tall palm-trees from the grove of the * Family of the Cloak * did the people of Kufa fell in that plain with the axe of malice.
 Many a blow whereby the heart of Mustafa" [Muhammad] was rent did they inflict on the thirsty throat of Murtadd 'All's successor², While his women, with collars torn and hair unloosed, raised their laments to the Sanctuary of the Divme Majesty,
 And the Trusted Spirit [Gabriel] laid his head in shame on his knees, and the eye of the sun was darkened at the sight.

When the blood of his thirsty throat fell on the ground, turmoil arose from the earth to the summit of God's high Throne.

The Temple of Faith came nigh to rum through the many fractures inflicted on the Pillars of Religion.

They cast to the ground his tall palm-tree³ even as the thorn-bush ;
 a deluge arose from the dust of the earth to heaven.

The breeze carried that dust to the Prophet's Tomb: dust arose from Madina to the seventh heaven.

When tidings of this reached Jesus dwelling in the heavenly sphere, he forthwith plunged his garments in indigo⁴ in the vat of heaven.

Heaven was filled with murmunng when the turn to cry out passed from the Prophets to the presence of the Trusted Spirit

Mistaken imagination fancied that this dust⁶ had [even] reached the skirts of the Creator's glory,

For although the Essence of the All-glorious is exempt from vexation,
 He dwells in the heart, and no heart remains unvexed.

I am afraid that when they record the punishment of his murderer, they may forthwith strike the pen through the Book of Mercy.

I am afraid that the Intercessors on the Resurrection Day may be ashamed, by reason of this sin, to speak of the sins of mankind

When the People of the House shall lay hands on the People of Tyranny, the hand of God's reproach shall come forth from its sleeve.

Alas for the moment when the House of 'Alf, with blood dripping from their winding-sheets, shall raise their standards from the dust like a flame of fire!

¹ The Prophet, his daughter Fdtima and her husband 'AH and their sons Hasan and Husayn once sheltered under one cloak, whence these five most holy beings are often collectively called by this title

² I.e. his younger son Husayn, the third Imam and " Martyr of Kar-bala⁷;

³ I.e. stature, as in the fifth verse.

4 The colour of mourning in Persia.

⁶ I.e. sorrow and vexation.

CH. v] THE HAFT-BAND OF MUHTASHAM

Alas for that time when the youths of that Holy House shall dash together their crimson shrouds on the Resurrection Plain!

That company, whose ranks were broken by the strife of Karbala, at the Resurrection in serried ranks will break the ranks of the uprisen.

What hopes from the Lord of the Sanctuary¹ can those worthless ones entertain who wounded with their swords the quarry² of the Sanctuary?

Then [finally] they raise on a spear-point that Head³ from whose locks Gabnel washes the dust with the water of SalsabflV

Whether or no this be accounted good poetry (and of course it loses much of its beauty in a bald prose translation encumbered with notes on expressions familiar to every Persian though strange to a foreigner and a non-Muslim) it at least reveals something of that deep emotion which the memory of the unforgettable tragedy of Karbala never fails to arouse in the breast of even the least devout and serious-minded Persian. It has, like the poetry of Nasir-i-Khusraw, who lived nearly five centuries before Muhtasham, the great merit of sincerity, and consequently has a claim to be regarded as genuine poetry which we seek in vain in the elaborately artificial and rhetorical compositions of many Persian poets who enjoy in their own country a far higher reputation.

Genuine feeling manifested in this class of poetry.

One other marthiya, or elegy on the death of the Imam Husayn, I cannot refrain from quoting, both on account of the originality of its form and the generally irreligious character of its author, the poet Qa'anf (died A.D. 1853), one of the greatest and the least moral of the modern poets of Persia.

Qa'Ani's elegy on the death of the Imam Husayn.

¹ God or His Prophet.

² No game or wild animal or bird may be slain within a certain radius of Mecca.

³ I.e. the head of the Imam Husayn.

* One of the rivers of Paradise.

The text is taken from a lithographed collection of such poems published, without title or indication of place or date, in Persia, containing 220 unnumbered pages, and comprising the work of six poets, namely Wişál, Wiqár, Muhtasham, Qá'ání, Sabáhi and Bídil.

بارد چه؟ خون! كه؟ دیده، چسان؟ روز و شب، چرا؟
 از غم؟ کدام غم؟ غیر سلطانِ کربلا،
 نامش چه بود؟ حسین، ز نژادِ كه؟ از علی،
 مامش كه بود؟ فاطمه، جدش كه؟ مصطفی،
 چون شد؟ شهید شد، بكجا؟ دشتِ ماریه،
 كي؟ عاشقِ محترم، پنهان؟ نه بر ملا،
 شب كشته شد؟ نه روز، چه هنگام؟ وقتِ ظهر،
 شد از گلو بُریده سرش؟ نی نی از قفا،
 سیراب كُشته شد؟ نه، كس آتش نداد؟ داد،
 كه؟ شیر، از چه چشمه؟ ز سرچشمه، فنا،
 مظلوم شد شهید؟ بلی، جُرم داشت؟ نه،
 كارش چه بُد؟ هدایه، و یارش كه بُد؟ خدا،
 این ظلم را كه كرد؟ یزید، این یزید كهست؟
 ز اولادِ هندی از چه كس؟ از نطفه، زنا،
 خود كرد این عمل؟ نه فرستاد نامه،
 نزد كه؟ نزد زاده، مرجانه، دغا،
 این زیاد زاده، مرجانه بُد؟ نعر،
 از گفته، یزید تخلف نكرد؟ لا،
 این نابكار كُشت حسین را بدستِ خویش؟
 نه او روانه كرد سپه سوی کربلا،
 مهر سپه كه بُد؟ عَمیر سعد، او بُرید،
 خلقِ عزیزِ فاطمه؟ نه شهر بی حیا،

حنجر بُرید حنجر او را نکرد شرم؟
 کرد، از چه پس برید؟ نهذیرفت ازو قضا،
 بهر چه؟ بهر آنکه شود خلق را شفیع،
 شرط شفاعتش چه بود؟ نوحه و بکا،
 کس گشته شد هر از پسرانش؟ بلی دو تن،
 دیگر که؟ به نرادر، و دیگر که؟ اقربا،
 دیگر پسر نداشت؟ چرا داشت، آن که بود؟
 سجاد، چون بُد او؟ بغم و رنج مبتلا،
 ماند او بکربلای پدر؟ بی بشام رفت،
 با عز و احتشام؟ نه با ذلت و عنا،
 تنها؟ نه با زنانِ حرّم نامشان چه بود،
 زینب سکنه فاطمه کلثوم بی نوا،
 بر تن لباس داشت؟ بلی کرد رهگذار،
 بر سر عمامه داشت؟ بلی چوب اشقیا،
 بیمار بُد؟ بلی! چه دوا داشت؟ اشک چشم،
 بعد از دوا غذایش چه بُد؟ خون دل غذا،
 کس بود هم‌رهش؟ بلی اطفالِ بی پدر،
 دیگر که بود؟ تب که نمی کشت ازو جدا،
 از زینتِ زنان چه بجا مانده بود؟ دو چیز،
 طوقِ ستم‌بگردن و خلخالِ غم‌بها،
 کبر این ستم‌کند؟ نه، مجوس و یهود؟ نه،
 هندو؟ نه، بُت پرست؟ نه، فریاد ازین جفا،
 قآنی است قاهلِ این شعورها؟ بلی، خواهد چه؟ رحمت، از که؟ ز حق، کی؟ صِف جزا،

"What rains down? Blood! Who? The Eye! How? Day and Night!
Why?

From grief! What grief? The grief of the Monarch of Karbala !
What was his name? Husayn! Of whose race? 'AH's !
Who was his mother? Fātima! Who was his grandsire? Mustafa!
How was it with him? He fell a martyr! Where? In the Plain of Mdnya!

When? On the tenth of Muharram ! Secretly? No, in public !
Was he slain by night? No, by day! At what time? At noontide ' Was his head severed from the throat? No, from the nape of the neck'

Was he slain unthirsting? No! Did none give him to drink? They did'

Who? Shimr ! From what source? From the source of Death t
Was he an innocent martyr? Yes! Had he committed any fault?
No!

What was his work? Guidance ! Who was his friend? God!
Who wrought this wrong? Yazfd! Who is this Yazfd?¹
One of the children of Hind ! By whom? By bastard origin J¹
Did he himself do this deed? No, he sent a letter !

To whom? To the false son of Marjana '

Was Ibn Ziyid the son of Marjāna? Yes'

Did he not withstand the words of Yazfd? No '

Did this wretch slay Husayn with his own hand ?

No, he despatched an army to Karbald !

Who was the chief of the army? 'Umar ibn Sa'd '

Did he cut down Fa[^]ima's dear folk? No, shameless Shimr '

Was not the dagger ashamed to cut his throat?

It was ! Why then did it do so? Destiny would not excuse it!

Wherefore? In order that he might become an intercessor for mankind !

What is the condition of his intercession? Lamentation and weeping I Were any of his sons also slain? Yes, two !

Who else? Nine brothers ! Who else? Kinsmen !

Had he no other son? Yes, he had ! Who was that?

¹ Yazfd was the son of Mu'awiya, the rival of 'Ali and the founder of the Umayyad dynasty, who was the son of Abu Sufyan and Hind "the liver-eater" (Akilatu'l'-akbad). The term "bastard origin" should refer to Ibn Ziyad, not to Yazfd. See the KitabuH'lFakhri ed. Ahiwardt, pp. 133-5.

'The Worshipper' (Sajfdd)¹! How fared he? Overwhelmed with grief and sorrow!

Did he remain at his father's Karbate? No, he went to Syna 1

In glory and honour? No, in abasement and distress!

Alone? No, with the women of the household! What were their names?

Zaynab, Sakma, Fatima, and poor portionless Kulthiim!

Had he garments on his body? Yea, the dust of the road!

Had he a turban on his head? Yea, the staves of the wicked ones!

Was he sick? Yes! What medicine had he? The tears of his eyes!

What was his food after medicine? His food was heart's blood 1

Did any bear him company? Yes, the fatherless children!

Who else was there? The fever which never left him!

What was left of the women's ornaments? Two things,

The collar of tyranny on their necks, and the anklet of grief on their feet!

Would a pagan (gabr) practise such cruelty? No! A Magian or a Jew? No!

A Hindoo? No! An idolater? No! Alas for this harshness!

Is Q'dnif capable of such verses? Yes!

What seeks he? Mercy! From whom? From God! When? In the ranks of recompense!"

Besides these mardthi (singular marthiyd), or threnodies of the classical type, the contemplation of the sufferings and misfortunes of the Imams has inspired a copious literature, both in verse and prose, of a more popular kind. The mourning proper to religious poetry.

More popular

the month of Muharram finds expression not only in the actual dramatic representations of this cycle of tragedies, of which there are at least forty (a few of which, however, are connected with prophets and holy men antecedent to Isldm), but in recitations of these melancholy events known as Rawda [Rawza]-Khwani. These latter are said to derive this name from one of the earliest and best-known books of this kind, the Rawdatu [Rawzatu]-Sh-Shuhadd ("Garden

¹ 'All ibn 9 usayn, commonly called Zaynttl-'Abidin ("the Ornament of the Worshippers"), who, on the death of his father at Karbala, succeeded him as the Fourth Ima^n.

Of the Martyrs") of Husayn Wa'iz-i-Kashiff, so that these functions are called "ifoze/ftf-readings," whether the readings be taken from this or from some similar work, such as the TifdnuH-Bukd ("Deluge of Weeping") or the Asrdru'sh-Shahddat ("Mysteries of Martyrdom"). Such entertainments are commonly given in the month of Muharram by rich notables, nobles, statesmen or merchants, who provide an adequate number of professional rhapsodists or reciters of this class, called Rawza-Khwdns, and a more or less sumptuous supper to follow. I possess a copy of a curious

A satire on the Muharram
mournings.

little poem entitled Kitabu's-Sufra fi dhammu 'r-Riyd ("the Book of the Table, censuring hypocrisy")² in which the ostentation of the host and the greed of the guests is satirized with some pungency. The following lines describe how the word is passed round as to whose entertainment is likely to prove most satisfactory to the guests:

گنوں بشنو از من یکی داستان که رنگین ترست از لیل بوستان کسانیکه گیرند عزای حسین
بمجلس نشینند با شور و شین
برای جگرگوشه فاطمه
سیه پوش گردند یکسر همه
نمایند بر پا عزای خانه ها
بگیرند عزای شه کربلا
بهر گوشه بزمی مهیا کنند
یکی مجلس نغز بر پا کنند

¹ He died in 910/1504-5. See my Persian Literature under Tartar Dominion, pp. 441 and 503-4.

² The author's name is given as Turkī of Shīrāz, and the little book (48 pp.) was lithographed at Bombay in 1309/1891-2.

مدرّش نمایند صحن و اطاق،
 منقّش نمایند طاق و رواق،
 همه گسترانند فرش لطیف،
 بچینند اسبابهای ظریف،
 گروهی ز مردان اشکم پرست،
 ز جام طمع جمله بهخویش و مست،
 بایشان طمع کرده ز آنسان اثر،
 که مانده سگه بر روی زر،
 بهیشانی خویش بنهاده داغ،
 نمایند ازین گونه مجلس سراغ،
 یکی زآن میان گوید ای همهرهان،
 پسندیده یاران کار آگهان،
 من و حاجی عباس رفتیم دوش،
 سوی بزم آن شخص سبزی فروش،
 نبود اندر آن مجلس مختصر،
 بجز چاهی و قهوه چیمیزی دگر،
 ندیدیم آنجا کس از مردمان،
 بجز بانی و یک دو تن روضه خوان،
 نشستن در آن بزم نبود روا،
 که بی قند و چاهی ندارد صفا،
 جداوند از آن بنده خورسند نیست،
 که در مجلس شربت قند نیست،
 و لیکن بروزی ده انس و جان،
 فلان جاست بزمی چو بزمِ شهان،
 عجب مجلس خوب و راحت فراست،
 یقین دامن آن مجلس بهریاست،

در آن بزم چاهی بود آق پر،
 همش قنبد بزدی بجای شکو،
 ز نی هیچ قلبانهای بلور،
 که یابد دل از قلقل وی سرور،
 رود عطر تنباکوبش چند میل،
 درخشد بسر آتش چو سبیل،
 نخواهد در آنجا شود آب صرف،
 بجز شربت قند و لیمو و برف،
 نموده است بانی عالی جناب،
 ز هر کشوری ذاکری انتخاب،
 یک از ذاکران میرزا کاشی است،
 که گویند او روضه خوان باشی است،
 دگر ز آن کسان ذاکر رشتی است،
 که دریای آواز را گشتی است،
 ز کرمان و از یزد و کرمانشاهان،
 ز شیراز و از شوشتر و اصفهان،
 همه موسیقی دان و خوش صوت و نغز،
 بود دیگران قشر و ایشان چو مغز،
 حقیقت عجب مجلس پیراست،
 بجان شما رفتن آنجا بجاست،
 چو یاران کنند این سخن استماع، بدان بزم بکسر کنند اجتماع،

"Now hear from me a story which is more brightly coloured than a garden flower,

Of those who make mourning for Husayn and sit in assemblies in frenzied excitement.

All wear black for Fatima's darling¹, Establish houses of mourning and make lament for the King of Karbala'.

In every corner they prepare a feast and arrange a pleasant assembly;
 They carpet court-yard and chamber, they bedeck with inscriptions arch and alcove;

They spread fair carpets, they set out graceful furnishings;
 A host of gluttonous men, all beside themselves and intoxicated with the cup of greed,

On whom greed has produced such an effect that, like the stamp on the gold⁸,

It has set its mark on their foreheads, make enquiry about such assemblies.

One of them says, ' O comrades, well-approved friends, versed in affairs,

⁴ I and Hajji 'Abbas went yesterday to the entertainment of that green-grocer fellow.

' In that modest entertainment there was nothing but tea and coffee,
 ' And we saw no one there except the host and one or two rawza- *khwans*⁴.

' To sit in such an assembly is not meet, for without sugar and tea it has no charm.

' God is not pleased with that servant in whose entertainment is neither sherbet nor sugar.

'But, by Him who gives men and jinn their daily bread, in such-and-such a place is an entertainment worthy of kings,

' A wonderfully pleasant and comfortable entertainment, which, I am sure, is devoid of hypocrisy.

' There is white tea and sugar-loaf of Yazd in place of sugar,

⁴ And crystal qaly&ns with flexible tubes, at the gargle of which the heart rejoices.

¹ The fragrance of their tobacco spreads for miles, and the fire gleams on their heads like [the star] Canopus.

⁴ No water will be drunk there, but draughts of lemon, sugar and snow.

¹ Le. her son the Im'Em Husayn. Jigar-gusha (lit. "corner of the liver") is an expression very similar to the Irish cuipte mo Cporoe.

⁸ Again tfusayn, "the martyr of Karbald."

³ /.'. its trace is meffaceably stamped upon them.

⁴ The professional reciters or rhapsodists employed on these occasions.

' One of the reciters is Mirza" K£shf, who, they say, is the chief of rawSa-khwdns.

' Another of them is the rhapsodist of Rasht, who is like a boat in the ocean of song.

⁴ From Kirman, Yazd and Kirmdnshali, from Shfraz, Shushtar and Isfahan,

' All are skilled musicians of melodious and charming voices : they are like the kernel and others like the shell.

' In truth it is a wonderful entertainment, devoid of hypocrisy, by your life it is right to attend it I'

When the friends hear this speech with one accord they assemble at that banquet."

On the whole, however, the emotion evoked by these Muharram mournings, whether dramatic representations or recitations, is deep and genuine, and even Europeans testify to the true pathos of the Muharram mournings foreigners and non-Muslims confess themselves affected by them. " If the success of a drama," says Sir Lewis Peily in the Preface to his translation of thirty-seven scenes from the *Tctziyas*¹, " is to be measured by the effects which it produces upon the people for whom it is composed, or upon the audiences before whom it is represented, no play has ever surpassed the tragedy known in the Mussulman world as that of Hasan and Husain. Mr Matthew Arnold, in his ' Essays on Criticism/ elegantly sketches the story and effects of this ' Persian Passion Play/ while Macaulay's Essay on Lord Clive has encircled the 'Mystery' with a halo of immortality." Even the critical and sceptical Gibbon says²: " In a distant age and climate the tragic scene of the death of Hosem will awaken the sympathy of the coldest reader." Sayyidu'sh-Skuhadd ("the Chief of the Martyrs") the Persians call their favourite hero, who is, indeed, in their eyes more even than this, since his intercession will be accepted by God for his sinful followers even when the intercession of the

¹ The Miracle Play of Hasan and Husain (2 vols., London, 1879).

² Professor J. B. Bury's edition of the Decline and Fall in seven volumes (London, 1898), vol. v, p 391.

Prophet has failed. "Go thou," says the latter to him on the Resurrection Day, "and deliver from the flames every one who has in his life-time shed but a single tear for thee, every one who has in any way helped thee, every one who has performed a pilgrimage to thy shrine, or mourned for thee, and every one who has written tragic verse for thee Bear each and all with thee to Paradise¹." To the Persian Shf'a, therefore, Husayn occupies the same position that Jesus Christ does to the devout Christian, notwithstanding the fact that the doctrine of the Atonement is utterly foreign to the original spirit of Islam. To us no Persian verse could well appear more exaggerated in its deification of a human being than this':

Persian doctrine of the Atonement

مرد گویند خدائی و من اندر غضب آیم'

پرده بر داشته مهسند بخود ننگِ خدائی'

"Men say Thou art God, and I am moved to anger : raise the veil, and submit no longer to the shame of Godhead 1"

But I am not sure whether the following verse, ascribed to the Babi poet Nabil³, would not more greatly shock the Persian Shi'a:

شهادی طلعتِ نَارِ من بدوید سوی دیارِ من'
سر و جان کنید نثارِ من که منمِ شهنشہِ کربلا'

"O witnesses of my aspect of fire, haste ye towards my home ;
Make head and life my offering, for I am the Monarch of Karbald!"

¹ Sir Lewis Pelly's Miracle Play, vol. 11, p. 347.

² By an Azalf controversialist it is said to have been written of Baha'u'llah by one of his followers, but I have been told that it, or a very similar verse, was really composed in honour of IJusayn.

³ Nabil is a Babi substitute for Muhammad, the numerical values of both names being equivalent to 92. The poet Nabfi at one time after the Bib's death advanced a claim on his own behalf, and the verse here cited appears to have been composed at this period. Later he became one of the most devoted adherents of Bahd'u'llih, on whose death in 1892 he drowned himself at 'Akka.

It would be an interesting study, but beyond the capacity of this volume, to trace the growth of the Husayn-Legend from its comparatively meagre historical basis, as given by Tabarī and the earlier Arab historians, to the elaborate romance into which it has finally developed in the tctziyas and rawza-khwdns. But the romantic element appears early, even in the narrative of Abu Mikhnaf Lut ibn Yahya, who flourished in the first half of the second century of the hijra [circa A.D. 750]¹, and it has even been suggested that Husayn has been indued with the attributes of some far more ancient prototype like Adonis. At any rate no one at the present day can see anything more like the performances of the priests of Baal than the ghastly ceremonies of the 'Ashūrd or Rtīz-i-Qatl which take place on the tenth of Muharram (the anniversary of Husayn's death at Karbala) wherever there is a considerable Persian colony, but especially, of course, in Persia itself.

Growth of the Husayn-Legend.

Sanguinary celebration of the 'Ashūrd or Rtīz-i-Qatl

Certain episodes in the Husayn-Legend would almost seem to indicate an unconscious sense of solidarity with the Christians on the part of the Shī'ā Persians arising from their participation in the doctrine of the Atonement. The best-known example of this is the conversion and martyrdom of the "Firangf ambassador" at the Court of Yazid², a very favourite scene in the ta'ziyas, and considered especially appropriate when European visitors are included in the audience. Another instance occurs in the Asrdrū'sh-Shakddat, or "Mysteries of Martyrdom," of Isma'īl Khan "Sarbaz"³, when Ibn Sa'd invites certain Christians to aid him in killing the Imám Husayn, but when the eyes of their leader fell upon him—

¹ See Wustenfeld's Die Geschichtskreiber der Araber, No. 19 (pp. 5-6), and his translation of this work under the title of Der Tod des Jifusein bei 'AM und die Rache: ein historischer Roman aus dem Arabischen (Göttingen, 1883).

² See Felly's Miracle Play, vol. li, pp. 222-240.

³ Lithographed with crude illustrations at Tīhrdn in 1274/1857-58.

كربلا را دید عرشِ كبریا
 عرش را تر دید از خونِ خدا
 نقش بست اندر دل از كلكِ خيال
 كین خدا باشد بدین فر و جلال
 گر خدا نبود یقین عیسی بود آفتابِ عرشِ دینِ ما بود

"He saw Karbalá as the Throne of Divine Majesty, he saw that Throne wet with God's blood¹;

By the pen of imagination an impression grew in his heart, 'Surely this is God in such glory and splendour'

'If he be not God, then surely he is Jesus, the Sun of the Throne of our Faith'

Thereupon, being convinced of the truth of Islám and the sanctity of Husayn—

خواست اذنِ جنگ با صد شور و شین رفت و جان بنمود قربانِ حسین

"With a hundred frenzied enthusiasms he sought permission to engage in the battle, and departed to offer his life as a sacrifice for Husayn."

Since, however, we also find stones of the conversion of an Indian king (presumably a pagan) and even of a lion, the object may be to emphasize the cruelty and hard-heartedness of the professing Muslims who compassed the death of Husayn and his fellow-martyrs by depicting the sympathy evoked by their sufferings even in the hearts of unbelievers and savage animals.

The librettos giving the words actually spoken by the actors in the ta'ziyas are not often met with, though lithographed copies exist, of which, by the kindness of my friend the late George Grahame, formerly Consul in different parts of Persia, I possess halt a dozen. As an example of their style I shall here cite a passage from the "Martyrdom of Hurr ibn Yazid ar-Riydhf¹," wherein an Arab from Kufa brings to the Imdm Husayn the news of the execution of his cousin Muslim ibn 'Aqfl.

¹ This expression in the mouth of a professing Muslim is extraordinary.

LATER POETRY OF THE PERSIANS [P T II

آمدن مرد عرب از کوفه و خبر آوردن از شهادت مسلم بن عقیل
 (عرب) منکه بینی که بصد شور و نوا میآیم
 دهدهم نزد سلیمان ز سبا میآیم
 آیم از کوفه و دارم خبر از مسلم زار
 چون نسیم سحری روح فزا میآیم
 بر سرم شوق لقای پسر فاطمه است
 که بدرد دل مجروح دوا میآیم
 (عباس) این دربرا که بود خاک سرایش کافور
 نرّمه چشم ملک باشد و خدامش حور
 هست این در بخدا قبله ارباب وفا
 دردمندان بلارا بود این دار شفا
 (عرب) سلام من بتو ای مقتدای عالمیان
 ز کوفه میرسم ای پیشوای اهلِ جنان
 خدایرا گجا میروی تو ای سَرور
 بیان نما تو بحق خدای جنّ و بشر
 (امام) علیک من بتو ای قاصدِ نکو منظر
 روم بکوفه من ایندم بحالتِ مضطر

¹ This constitutes a separate scene in Sir L. Pelly's Miracle Plays, vol. i, pp. 171-189.

نوشته‌اند بمن نامه‌های اشتیاق
 فلک کشیده عنانم بوی مُلک عراق
 بمن بگو تو ز مسلم اگر خبر داری
 کسی بکوفه باو کرد از وفا یاری
 (عرب) مه‌رس از حالتِ مسلم فدایت
 بمآ آقا بموسم دست و پایت
 مَرُو در کوفه ای سلطان ابرار
 که میترسم شوی محزون و بی یار
 مَرُو در کوفه ای سَرُوَر امان است
 بکن رحمی علی اکبر جوان است
 مَرُو در کوفه زینب خوار گردد
 اسیرِ کوچه و بازار گردد
 (آمام) عرب از حالتِ مسلم همان کن
 (عرب) برای مسلم محزون فغان کن
 (آمام) بگو در کوفه چون شد حالِ مسلم
 (عرب) بدان برگشته شد اقبالِ مسلم
 (آمام) مگر کوفی تش در خون کشیدند
 (عرب) سرِ پاکش ز ملک تن بُریدند
 (آمام) مگر کردند جسمش پاره پاره
 (عرب) زدند جسم شریفش بر قناره
 (آمام) دگر بر کو چه کردند قوم اشرار
 (عرب) کشیدندش میان شهر و بازار
 (آمام) بگو از حالتِ طفلانِ مسلم
 (عرب) شدند اندر جنان مہمانِ مسلم
 (آمام) که بر آن کودکان ظلم و جفا کرد
 (عرب) سرِ ایشان ز تن حارث جدا کرد

(امام) فغان از دیده گریبان مسلم
 (عرب) بود این جامه طفلان مسلم
 ایوای که مسلم وفا دار
 کشته شده از جفای اشرار

"How the Arab comes from Kufa bringing news of the martyrdom of Muslim ibn 'Aqil.

(Arab) 'I whom thou seest coming with an hundred passionate strains

Am the hoopoe coming from Sheba into the presence of Solomon.

I come from Kufa, having tidings of poor Muslim,
 I come enlarging the spirit like the morning breeze.
 In my head is a longing to meet the son of Fdjima¹,
 I come as the remedy for the pain of a wounded heart'

(^Ablds) ' To this gate, of whose pavilion the dust is camphor
 And collynum for the angels' eyes, and its servants the Huris².

By God, this gate is the *qibla*³ of all faithful folk,
 And a house of healing to those stricken with sorrow !'

(Arab) ' My salutation to thee, O exemplar of mankind ;
 I come from Kufa, O leader of the people of Paradise !
 For God's sake whither goest thou, O my lord?
 Explain to me [I conjure thee] by the God oijinn and men''

(The Imdm) 'And on thee [be my salutation], O messenger of comely face !

Even now I am going to Kufa in an agitated condition.
 They have written to me letters of longing
 Heaven draws my reins towards the land of 'Iraq.
 Tell me, therefore, if thou hast news of Muslim.
 Has any one in Kufa loyally aided him ?'

¹ I.e. the Imain Plusayn, son of 'Alf and Fatima the Prophet's daughter.

* The Huru'l'-Ayn, or black-eyed damsels of Paradise.

• The point to which the worshipper turns in prayer in order to face Mecca-wards.

{Arab} ' May I be thy sacrifice! Ask not of Muslim's case 1
 Come, master, let me kiss thy hands and feet 1
 Go not to Kufa, O King of the righteous !
 For I fear that thou may'st become sorrowful and friendless Go not to Kufa, O Lord! It were a pity \
 Be merciful i ' Alf Akbar¹ is so young I Go not to Kufa! Zaynab' will be humiliated,
 And will be led captive through the streets and markets i'

{Together}

{Imam} ' O Arab, make known Muslim's condition ! '

{Arab} ' Lament for grief-stricken Muslim 1'

{Imam} ' Tell me, how fared it with Muslim in Kufa?'

{Arab} ' Know that Muslim's fortune failed.'

{Imam} ' Did the Kiifans drag his body through blood V

{Arab} ' They severed his innocent head from the kingdom of his body.'

{Imam} ' Did they cut his body in pieces ?'

{Arab} ' They stuck his noble body on the headsman's hook.'

{Imam} ' Tell me, what further did these wicked people do ?'

{Arab} ' They dragged him through the city and market.'

{Imam} ' Tell me, how fares it with Muslim's children?'

{Arab} ' They have become the guests of Muslim in Paradise.'

{Imam} ' Who wrought cruelty and wrong on those children ?'

{Arab} ' Harith severed their heads from their bodies.'

{Imam} ' Alas for Muslim's weeping eyes !'

{Arab} ' These are the garments of Muslim's children.'

{Both}³ ' Alas that faithful Muslim has been slain by the cruelty of wicked men !''

It has only been possible here to touch the fringe of this vast literature of what is commonly and not inappropriately termed the Persian Passion Play, and I have had to content myself with a few specimens of the main types in which it is manifested, namely the classical threnody or elegy (marthiyd) of Muhtasham and his imitators; the more popular presentations of these legends in verse, prose, or mixed verse and prose, contained in innumerable and obscure lithographed books, of which I have chosen the Asrdrrī sh-Shahddat as a type, not because it enjoys any supreme excellence, but simply because it is one of those of which I happen to possess a copy; and lastly the actual librettos of the dramatized ta'ziyas, to be seen at their best at the Royal Takya of Tihrdn during the first ten days of the month of Muharram. Manuscript note-books for the use of rawza-khwdns on such occasions are commonly met with in collections of Persian books, and the full description of one such (Add. 423) will be found in my *Catalogue of the Persian MSS. in the Cambridge University Library*¹. Most of these pieces are anonymous, but amongst the poets named are Muqbil, Mukhlis, Mawzun, Nasim, Shafff and Lawhi, of none of whom can I find any biographical notice.

¹ The eldest son of the Imam rhusayn. His death forms the subject of Scene xvii of Pelly's Miracle Play (vol. i, pp. 287-303).

² The daughter of 'Ali and sister of Hasan and Husayn.

³ It is not clear from the text whether this verse is uttered by one or both of the speakers.

(4) Bdbi Poetry.

One of my young Persian friends who, like so many of the rising generation, deplores the influence of the tnullds and rawza-khwdns and the religious atmosphere created by them, especially in connection with the Muharram celebrations, admitted to me that at least the work has been done so thoroughly that even the most ignorant women and illiterate peasants are perfectly familiar with all the details of these legends of martyrdom, however little they may know of the authentic history of the events portrayed or the persons represented. Even the greatest mujtahids, like Mulla Muhammad Bdqir-i-Majlisi, however little they might approve the exaggerations and even blasphemies which characterized the Passion Plays in their final popular developments, were at great pains to supply their compatriots with popular and easily

Immense influence of the ^Jusayn-Legend on Persian mentality.

¹ No. LXVI, pp. 122-142. On this last page are given references to descriptions of other similar collections.

intelligible religious treatises in Persian, so that a knowledge of these matters might not be confined to Arabic scholars or professed theologians.

One effect of the ta'zias has been to create amongst the Persians a widely diffused enthusiasm for martyrdom,

The Persian passion for martyrdom

of which sufficient account is not taken by those who, misled by the one-sided portrait, or rather caricature, presented by Morier in his famous

Hajji Baba, deem them an essentially timid and even cowardly folk. The English missionaries in Persia, who in sympathy for and understanding of the people amongst whom they work seem to me greatly superior to those whose labours lie in other fields, know better, and no one has done fuller justice to the courage and steadfastness of

The prestige of the Babis and Baha'fs is chiefly due to the courage of their numerous martyrs

the Bdbi and Baha'i martyrs than the Reverend Napier Malcolm in his valuable book Five Years in a Persian Town (Yazd). Another told me an interesting story from his own experience in Isfahan. One of the chief mujtahids of that city had condemned some Babfs to death as apostates, and my informant, who was on friendly terms with this ecclesiastic, ventured to intercede for them. The mujtahid was at first inclined to take his intervention very ill, but finally the missionary said to him, "Do you suppose that the extraordinary progress made by this sect is due to the superiority of their doctrines? Is it not simply due to the indomitable courage of those whom you and your colleagues condemn to die for their faith? . But for the cruel persecutions to which the Babfs have from the first been subjected, and which they have endured with such unflinching courage, would they now be more numerous or important than a hundred obscure heresies in Persia of which no one takes any notice and which are devoid of all significance? It is you and such as you who have made the Babfs so numerous and so formidable, for in place of each one whom you kill a hundred converts arise." The mujtahid reflected for a while and then replied, "You are right, and I will spare the lives of these people¹."

Many of these martyrs died with verses of poetry on their lips. Sulayman Khan, with wicks flaming in his mangled body, sang:

يك دست جامِ باده و يك دست زلف يار، رقصی چنین میانه میدانم آرزوست،

"In one hand the wine-cup, in the other the tresses of the Friend, Such a dance in the midst of the market-place is my desire."

One of the "Seven Martyrs" exclaimed, when the headman's sword, missing its stroke, dashed his turban to the ground:

ای خوش آن عاشقِ سرمست که در پای حبیب، سر و دستار نداند که کدام اندازد،

"Happy that intoxicated lover who at the feet of the Friend Knows not whether it be head or turban which he casts."

Of the ancient Arabs Wilfrid Blunt well says²: "Their courage was of a different quality, perhaps, from that admired among ourselves. It was the valour of a nervous, excitable people who required encouragement from onlookers and from their own voices to do their best..." and the same holds good to some extent of the Persians. Poetry is called "Lawful Magic" (Sikr-i-Halal) because, in the words of the author of the Chahar Maqala, it is "that art whereby the poet... can make a little thing appear great and a great thing small, or cause good to appear in the garb of evil and evil in the form of good... in such a way that by his suggestion

Characteristics of Arabian and Persian courage

¹ A good instance of that sense of justice (insaf) which my talented friend and former pupil Mr W. A. Smart of the Consular Service regards as one of the most admirable attributes of the Persians.

² The Seven Golden Odes of Pagan Arabia (London, 1903), p. xii.

⁸ E. J. W. Gibb Memorial Series, vol. xi, 1 (Text), p. 26; vol xi, 2 (Translation), p. 27.

men's temperaments become affected with depression or exaltation; whereby he conduces to the accomplishment of great things in the order of the world."

The Karbald legend is a potent factor in producing in these martyrs the psychological state which makes them not only endure with fortitude but glory in their sufferings. In one of the two celebrated poems ascribed to the Babf heroine Qurratu 'l' - Ayn \ who was one of the victims of the great persecution of August, 1852, occurs the verse²:

من و عشقِ آن مهِ خوبرو که چو شد صلاى بلا برو بنشاط و قهقهه شد فرو که انا الشَّهيد بکربلا

"For me the love of that fair-faced Moon who, when the call of affliction came to him, Went down with exultation and laughter, crying, 'I am the Martyr atKarbald!'"

In its original and primitive form Bablism was Shf'ism of the most exaggerated type, and the Bab himself the 'Gate' to the unseen Imam or Mahdi- Gradually he came to regard himself as actuallyth.e., Imam then he became the 'Point' (Nuqta), an actual Manifestation of the Supreme Being, and his chief disciples became re-incarnations, or rather " returns " or "recurrences" of the Imams, and the whole tragedy of Karbala was re-enacted " in a new horizon " aJtJShaykh Tabarsf in Mazandararh The nineteen chapters constituting the first "unity " (Wahid) of the Persian Bayan (the most intelligible and systematic of the Bab's writings) are entirely devoted to the thesis that all the protagonists of the Islamic Cycle have returned⁸ in this cycle to the life of the world, ¹ Both are given in full, with versified translations, in my Materials for the Study of the Babl Religion, pp. 347-51.

² Compare the initial verse of the poem cited on p. 173 supra.

⁸ Concerning this typical doctrine of "Return" (Rafat) see my Materials etc., pp. 330, 335 and 338, and my translation of the New History, pp. 334 et seqq, and Hajji Mirza Janf, the earliest Babf historian and himself a victim of the persecution of 1852, gives a long comparison between Karbala and Shaykh Tabarsf, greatly in favour of the latter¹.

In the eleventh and last section of my Materials for the Study of the Bdbi Religion (pp. 341-58) I published a selection of Babf and Baha'f poems, and here I will only add to these a qasida comprising 133 verses composed in the spring of 1885 by

Mirza Na'im, the Baha'f poet of Si-dih.

Mirza Na'im² of Si-dih near Isfahan, an ardent Baha'f, whose son, as I lately heard from a friend in the British Legation at Tihran, is still resident there. Mirzcl Na'fm sent me an autograph copy of this poem in the summer of 1902 through my late friend George Grahame, and in the concluding colophon he states that he was born at Si-dih in 1272/1855-6 and came to Tihran in 1304/1886-7. The poem is so long that I originally intended only to give extracts from it, but, finding that this could not be done without injury to the sequence of ideas, I have decided to print it in full as a typical Baha'f utterance having the authority of an autograph.

هو الله تعالى شانه'

مرا بود دل و چشمی ز گردش کردون'

یکی چو دجله' آب و یکی چو لجه' خون'

چرا ننالم سخت و چرا نگزیم زار'

که از مضیق جهان ره نمیرم بیرون'

درون دایره مقصود خود نمی یابم'

مرا نه پای برون باشد و نه جای درون'

¹ Nuqtat-ul-Kāf (Gibb Series, vol. xv), pp. 204-5.

² He is referred to in my Year amongst the Persians (p. 519), where he is wrongly described as a native of Abāda.

مرا چه فایده از جاه اگر شور قارن'
 مرا چه عایده از مال اگر شور قارون'
 چو می نهر چه نهر میدهد ضیاع و عقار'
 چو بگذرم چه اثر میکند بنات و بنون'
 مرا چه فخر که نوشم عقار یا جلّاب'
 مرا چه فضل که پوشم حریر یا اکسون'
 چو ملك و مال نماند چه مستشمر چه فقیر'
 چو روزگار نباید چه شاد و چه محزون'
 بعقل نازم و هر جانور از آن مملو'
 بروح بالمر و هر جایگه از آن مشحون'
 مرا از این چه که گویم چه کرد اسکندر'
 مرا بدین چه که داور که بود ناپلیون'
 مرا چه کار که مه شد هلال و بدر از آنک'
 بقدر تابش خورشید بر وی هست چهره نمون'
 چه فایده است کسوف و خسوف را داور'
 که خورشید ماه و مه از ظلّ ارض نیلی گون'
 چه لازم است که گویم ثوابت و سیّار'
 همه شمس و کُراتند در غیر گردون'
 مرا از این چه که داور کُرات کرد شمس'
 معلقند و روان وز دو جذبه اند زبون'
 مرا چه کار که باد آن هوا که موج زند'
 خفیف خشک بفق و ثقیل تر سوی دون'
 چه گویم آنکه قمر بر زمین زمین بر شمس'
 هر او بشمس دگر میچمد به پیرامون'
 چه گویم این رملی سالر است یا محدوف'
 چه گویم این رجز مطوی است یا مغبون'

ز صرف و نحو و حروف و قرائت و تجوید
 ز وقف و کوفتیمین و ز وصلِ بصریون
 ز اشتقاق و بدیع و معانی و انشاء
 بیان و خط و عروض و قریض شعر و فنون
 رجال و فقه و اصول و جدال و استنباط
 حدیث و حجّت و تفسیر و سنت و قانون
 ۲۰ ز رسم و هیأت و جبر و مناظر و تاریخ
 حساب و هندسه جغرافی از جمیع شؤون
 سیاستِ مدن و شرع و زرع و کان و لغات
 حقوقِ ملّت و خرج و خراج و قرض و قشون
 طب و علائم و تشریح و نبض و قاروره
 خواصّ جمله ادریه مفرد و معجون
 طلسم و دعوت و تعبیر و کیمیا و جِهل
 نجوم و طالع و اعداد و رمل و جفر و فسون
 علومِ فلسفه و منطق از قدیم و جدید
 تحاشیاتِ حواشی تفسّیّاتِ متون
 ۲۱ بدین علوم هلا نقدِ عمر خویش مده
 گزین معامله گشتند عالمی مغبون از این علوم سوی علیر دین حق بگرای
 که غیر معرفتِ حق همه فریب و فسون
 فسونِ فلسفه مشنوه که سرِ سرِ سفه است
 فنونِ دهری و کلبی تمامِ جَهل و جنون
 چرا ظنونِ طبیعی شمرده تو علوم
 چرا علومِ الهی گرفته تو ظنون
 مقالِ این حکما چیست جملگی مشکوک
 کلامِ این جهلا چیست سرِ سرِ مظلنون

۳. علومشان پی دفع حیا و صدق و صفا
 فنونشان پی فسق و فساد و مکرو و مجون
 همه اباحه ارض است و اشتراك حفظ
 همه اشاعه فسق است و امتلاء بطون
 خیالشان همه کوتاه و چشمشان همه تنگ
 فنونشان همه وهم و شئونشان همه دون
 نبود سبّ شریعت اگر بر این یاجوج
 نبود هیچ کس از عرض و مال و جان مأیون
 بحق حق سخن این گروه ظاهرین
 بجزیر ملت و ملک است بدترین طاعون
 ۴. شوی ز علم الهی سلاله کونین
 شوی ز حکمت کلبی نبیره میمون
 هر آنچه گفت نبی این زمان ببین مشهود
 هر آنچه گفت حکیم این زمان ببین مطعون
 علومشان همه از انبیا ولی ناقص
 فنونشان همه از اولیا ولی ملحون
 و لیکن از در انصاف در جهان انسان
 بعلم و دانش ممتاز باشد از ما دون
 بعلم و حکمت ره میبرد بدات قدیم
 بعقل و فکر برد ره بحضرت بیچون
 ۵. تعلم است که فرموده افضل الاعمال
 تفکر است کز او ساعتی به از سبعون
 مقیر ذات قدیمش حکیمهای بزرگ
 چو سقراط چو بقراط ارسطو و زینون
 چو بو علی و چو اقلیدس و چو بطلمیوس
 چو طالس و چو فلاطون چو هرمس و شیلون

یَقْدُسُون لَه بِالْعَشَى وَ الْاَشْرَاقِ
 یَسْبَحُون اِذَا یُضْهِحُونَ اِذَا یُمْسُونَ
 جهان سری که حکیم اندرو بجای خرد
 زمان تنی که علوم اندر او بجای عیون
 ۱۱ ولی تو نُست عنان تو سن فنون سرکش
 ولی تو غام ضعیف اُتُرش علوم حرون
 نخوانده سطری ریب آوری بر ب قدیم
 زهی مزاج که قبض آورد ز انتهمون
 ز مهد تا بلعد علم جو وَ لَوْ بِالْقِیَمِ
 ز علم حق که بر آنست اعتماد و رکون
 حقایق حکمش را حکیمها مبهوت
 جوامع کلمش را ادیبها مرهون
 طبایع اند چو اجسام در ظهور و بروز
 حقایق اند چو ارواح در خفا و کمون
 ۱۲ ز تنگ ظرفی درین فضای نا محدود
 بود عوالم بیحد بیکدگر مدفون
 امور عادیه را عام دید و خاصه خاص
 بقدر خود وَ هُوَ اَعْلَمُ بِمَا یَصِفُونَ
 بگنّه پست‌ترین صنع حادثش نرسد
 چه جای ذات قدیمش هزار افلاطون
 بحکم حق متحرک بود سهر و نجوم
 بلی ز جان متأثر بود عیون و جفون
 ز امر نیست پس از کهنست جنبش اجرام
 ز آب نیست پس از چیست گردش طاهون
 ۱۳ یکی بهشیر تأمل ز روی عقل بهین
 درین سراچه که ربّی از آن بود مسکون

بهریکی ز چسباد و نبات و از حیوان
 هزار عالم نا دیده ظاهر و مکنون
 و زای عقل تو عقل دیگر بود غالب
 درون جان تو جان دیگر بود مکنون
 بین بدانه که آن دانه با ازل همدوش
 بین به بیضه که آن بیضه با ابد مقرون
 نهان و ظاهر از این صد جهان طیور و فروغ
 قدیم و حادث از آن صد چمن ثمار و فصول
 گجا بکوی حقیقت گذر توانی کرد
 تو کز سرای طبیعت نیروی بیرون
 چنانکه بینی فیض حیات از این عالم
 بطفل از مدد مام میرسد بیطون
 ز ما و زای طبیعت اگر مدد نرسد
 بدین جهان بخدا این جهان شود وارون
 ز ما و زای طبیعت در این مضیق جهان
 عوالمی است خدایا ز حد و عد افزون
 گروهی از عیال بر خلاف عادت کل
 بطوع و طبع بین شوطه میزنند بخون
 ۱۰ خلاف طبع گروهی بدرد و غم خوشنود
 خلاف طبع فریقی ز جور کین مینون
 بمیل طبع بین جمعی از جهان بیزار
 بطیب نفس نگر قومی از وطن سُگون
 بین بشوق و شغف فرقه همه مقتول
 بین بدوق و طرب زمره همه مسجون
 بطوع سلسله در عذاب رنگارنگ
 بطبع طائفه در بلای گوناگون

- جميع مست و غزلخوان ولی نه از باده،
 تمار محو و پريشان ولی نه از الیون،
 ۷. چگونه داد خبر دانیال از امروز،
 چگونه کرد اثر قول اشعیا اکنون،
 چگونه گشت وفا وعده، جميع گنبد،
 بطبق مصحف و تورات و صحف و انکلیون،
 گهی بدار سلام و گهی باورشلم،
 گهی بکرمل و گاهی ادوم و که صیون،
 معین آمده ارض مقدس معبود،
 مؤرخ آمده یوم مبارک میمون،
 وَ كَيْفَ جَاءَ لَنَا الْحَقُّ كَمَا أَشَارَ لَنَا،
 نَبِئْنَا الْعَرَبِيَّ وَ الْأَلِيْمَةَ الْهَادُونَ،
 ۷۰ چسان بوعده جمال قدر نمود جمال،
 از آن جمال مبارک زمانه یافت شگون،
 چگونه گشت عمان حق بوادی و آتین،
 چگونه گشت پدید او بکوه و آلتیون،
 چگونه بی سپه او قاهر است و کلل مقهور،
 چگونه بکنه او غالب است و خلق زبون،
 سروده بی سبب علم خوشترین آیات،
 نهاده بی مدد غیر بهترین قانون،
 چرا ندیده باو صد هزار جان قربان،
 چرا ندیده باو صد هزار دل مفتون،
 ۸. ز جنبش قلمش جنبش قلوب و صدور،
 ز رامش نظرش رامش ظهور و بطون،
 عائم علما مشعلش نکرد خموش،
 هکثائب امرا رایتش نکرد نگون،

بهین رود سخنش در جهان چو در تن جان
 بهین جهد اثرش در روان چو در رگ خون
 خصومتِ خصما آب سوده در هاون
 رقابتِ رقبا باد بوده بر هامون
 ثبوتِ حکمش در قلب با روان همد
 دوامِ امرش در دهر با قرون مقرون
 ۸۰ چلدونه آتشی افروخته است در دلها
 که هیچ آب نیارد نشانیدن این کانون
 گرفته حکمش روی زمین و زیر زمین گذشته صیتش از چین و هند و از ژاپون
 بیهک نظر بکشوده دو صد بلاد و بلوک
 بیهک قلمر بستانده صد قلاع و حصون
 چگونه کرد بها محفلی بدعوتِ دین
 که تا بحشر نگردند منبی از ناهون
 پی بنای شریعت ز کس نخواست مدد
 بلی نداشت بها آسمان خدا بستون
 ۹۰ بفضل و رحمتش اقرار کی نمائی کی
 بعلم و قدرتش انکار چون نمائی چون
 تو خود که نظم بیهک خانواده تتوانی
 مکن معارضه با ناظم جمیع قرون
 تو خود که مصلحتِ کارِ خود نمیدانی
 مکن لجاج بسلطانِ ملکِ کُنْ فیکون
 تو با پدر بستیزی بیهک پشیمز ضرر
 دهند در ره او مال و جان و زو منون
 هزار حیف که دارم درین قوائی تنگ
 هزار نکته که تتوان نمودنش موزون

۹۰ سخن ز دست شد و درد دل تمام نشد
 روم دو باره گنون بر سر همان مضمون
 مرا دلیست در این روزگار بو قلمون
 فریب خورده بازبچه‌های گوناگون
 زمانه جلوه کند رنگ رنگ چون طایوس
 سهر عشوه دهد گونه کون چو بو قلمون
 بس است تابشت ای مهر شد دلیر بریان
 بس است کردشت ای چرخ شد تنرمطهون
 مرا سریست چه سازد باین همه سودا
 مرا دلیست چه سازد باینهمه افسون
 بجز بجانان جان را کجاست تاب و شکمب
 بجز بدلیز دل را کجاست صبر و سکون
 سی بخویش بگویم که الکمال و بال
 گهی بخویش بخندم که الجنون فنون
 دود خیالم گاهی بدشت چون ماشین
 پرد هوایم گاهی بچرخ چون بالون
 ز تن گسته‌ام و جان نمرود از تن
 ز جان گذشته‌ام و دل نمیشود مأمون
 دلیر گرفت ز ویران سرای فضل و هنر
 خوشا ممالک عشق و خوشا دیار جنون
 ز پای بُختی بختم عقاب عقل گسیخت
 کجاست لیلی من ای خدا شدم مجنون
 بجز اراده رحمانی از در قدرت
 که میتواند از این ورطه‌ام برد بیرون
 هلا اراده حق مَنْ ارَادَهُ اَللّٰهُ است
 که شد اراده حق با اراده‌اش مقرون

یگانه عید بها آنکه از اراده حق
 إِذَا أَرَادَ بِشَيْءٍ يَقُولُ كُنْ فَيَكُونُ
 شهی که ما را حق سوی اوست راه نما
 مهبی که ما را سوی حق اوست راه نمون
 ۱۱۰ عجسته گوهرِ بحرِ وصال سرّ الله
 که اوست در صدقِ علمِ حق در مکنون
 بنزدِ فضل است فاقد الفضال
 بنزدِ جودش معن است مانع الماعون
 عدوی اوست بخود خصم و یار ازو بهزار
 مطیع اوست ز خود امن و خلق ازو مأمون
 بوصفِ طلعتِ مَنْ طَافَ حَوْلَهُ الْأَشْيَاءُ
 سرودمی سخن ا، بودمی از او مأذون
 بدمجِ ذاتش مهگفتم آنچه گفته خدای
 نه شعرِ الشعراءِ یثبعمهم الغاؤون
 ۱۱۰ تو ای خلیفه رحمان و ای سفینه نوح
 غمین مشو که حقیقت ز نقض شد موهون
 بعهدِ حضرتِ آدمِ بجور و کین قاهل
 بدونِ جرّم و کینه ریخت از برادر خون
 بعهدِ نوح چو کنعان شکست عهدِ پدر
 بذلِ نفی نسب شد غریقِ بحرِ الهون
 بعهدِ حضرتِ یعقوبِ یوسفِ صدیق
 ز کیدِ اخوان در قید بندگی مسجون
 بعهدِ حضرتِ موسی ز سبط اسرائیل
 یکی چو حضرت هارون و دیگری قارون
 ۱۲۰ بعهدِ حضرتِ روحِ الله از حواریین
 يك از جفا چو یهودا يك از صفا شمعون

بعد حضرت ختمی مآب از اُمت،
 یکی بصدق ابو ذر یکی ابو شعبون،
 بعد حضرت اعلی دو تن وحید شدند،
 یکی شجاع امین و یکی جهانِ خُون،
 بعد طلعتِ ایهی هم اینچنین باید،
 یکست ثابتِ عهد و یکست ناقضِ دُون،
 بلعن لب نکشایم ولی خدا گوید،
 هر آنکه می‌شکند عهد من بود ملعون،
 ۱۲۰ ز حق بعد مر این فرقه چشم می‌پوشند،
 که حق ز باطل پیداست در جمیع شؤون، قسم بروی تو ای مقتدای کِلِ اُمَر، قسم بروی تو ای پیشوای کِلِ قرون،
 قسم باصلِ تو یعنی بحضرتِ مطلق،
 قسم بحقِ تو یعنی حقیقتِ بی‌چون،
 قسم بوجهِ تو یعنی بوجهِ المشرق،
 قسم بسرِ تو یعنی بسره‌ المغمزون،
 بخاکِ پای تو یعنی بکیمیای مراد،
 بگردِ راهِ تو یعنی بتوتیای عیون،
 ۱۲۰ بموطأ قدیم تو بموطنِ وَالْتَمَن،
 بسجده گاه خلایق بزیبِ وَالْزیتون،
 که بی ثنای توام مطمئن نگردد دل،
 سر فراغِ بیالین نمی نهد مدیون،
 ولی نعیم کجا مدح تو تواند کرد،
 نه‌آزموده نهاده است پای در چرخون،
 مطیعِ امرِ تو از گیدِ نفس باد ایمن، ۱۲۲ اسیرِ بندِ تو از شیدِ دهر باد مصون،

" HE IS GOD, EXALTED IS HIS STATE 1

"Through the revolution of the Sphere I have a heart and an eye, the one like the Tigris in flood, the other like a gulf of blood.

Why should I not mourn heavily, and why should I not weep bitterly[^] since I cannot make my way out of the narrows of the world?

Within the circle I find not my object; I have neither foot to fare forth nor place within.

What profiteth me if I be as Qaren¹ in rank? What gain to me if I be as Qdrun² in wealth?

What fruit do farms and estates yield, since I must lay them aside?

What effect have daughters and sons, since I must pass away? 5

What pride have I in drinking wine or rose-water? What virtue have I in wearing silk or black brocade³?

Since dominion and wealth remain not, what difference between wealthy and poor? Since time endureth not, what difference between the glad and the sorrowful?

I take pride in my understanding while every animal is full of it;
I glory in spirit when every place overflows with it.

What is it to me that I should say what Alexander did? What is it to me that I should know who Napoleon was?

What affair is it of mine that the moon becomes crescent or full because it shows its face in proportion to the shining of the sun upon it? 10

What advantage is it that I should know about the eclipses of the sun and moon, or that the sun is darkened⁴ through the moon, and the moon through the shadow of the earth?

What need is there for me to say that the fixed stars and planets are all suns and spheres in the vault of heaven?

¹ One of the seven great noble houses of ancient Persia. See Noldeke's Sasaniden, especially pp 437 et seqq. These seven families constituted the Bar-bitdn of the Pahlawf inscriptions, the AhluH-Buyutdt of the Arab historians.

² See Qur'an, xxviii, 76 and commentary thereon in Sale's translation and elsewhere. He is identified with Korah of the Old Testament, and amongst the Muslims is proverbial for wealth as is Croesus with us.

³ A short note on aksiin, "a black brocade worn by the rich for ostentation," will be found on p. 108 of my translation of the Chahdr Maqdla (Gibb Series, xi, 2).

⁴ Literally, made the colour of indigo.

What do I gain by knowing that these spheres are poised and revolving round suns, and are subject to two attractions ?

What affair is it of mine that the wind, that undulating air, is light and dry above, and dense and moist below ?

What have I to say to this, that the moon marches round the earth, the earth round the sun, and the sun in turn round another sun ? 15

What should I say as to this ramat-mttre being 'sound' or 'apocopated,' or this rajaz-metre matwi or *tnakhbiin*¹

Or of accident, syntax, the letters, the correct and solemn intonation [of the Qur'an], or of the pauses of the Kufans or the junctions of the Basra school²?

Or of etymology, rhetoric, eloquence, style, expression, calligraphy, prosody or the varieties of poetical criticism ?

Or of biography³, jurisprudence, principles [of Law], controversy, deduction, tradition, proof, exegesis, the Code and the Law ?

Or of drawing, geometry, algebra, observations, chronology, arithmetic, mathematics and geography in all their aspects ? 20

Or of Politics, the Religious Law, agriculture, mining, philology, National Rights, expenditure, taxation, loans and armies ?

Or of medicine, symptoms, anatomy, the pulse and the stools, the properties of all the drugs, whether simple or compound ?

Or of talismans, incantations, interpretation of dreams, alchemy, mechanics, astrology, ascendants, [magic] numbers, geomancy, cyphers and spells ?

Or of the philosophical sciences, and logic, ancient and modern, or of cautionary glosses and the sophistries of texts ?

0 waste not the com of your life on such sciences, for a whole world of men have suffered disappointment through such transactions ! 25

Turn from these sciences to knowledge of the Religion of the Truth⁴, for, save knowledge of the Truth⁴, all is deceit and vanity.

¹ The full explanation of these terms will be found in Blochmann's Persian Prosody, or in any book treating of the metrical systems of the Arabs and Persians.

² The two great rival philological schools of early Islam.

³ 'ftmu'r-Rijali' (the science of notable men") means particularly the biography and authority of the transmitters of religious traditions.

⁴ Or God, which is the usual meaning of (faqq amongst the Persians. Gibb (Ottoman Poetry, vol. i, p. 60, ad calc.) gives "the Fact" as a translation suggested by one of his Muslim friends.

Hearken not to the spells of Philosophy, which from end to end is folly¹; the themes of the materialist and the cynic are all ignorance and madness.

Why dost thou consider the fancies of the naturalist as sciences ?
Why dost thou assume the Divine sciences to be mere fancies?

What is the talk of these philosophers ? All doubtful² What is the speech of these ignorant men ? All conjecture !

Their sciences are [designed] to dispose of modesty, sincerity and purity ; their arts are for [the promotion of] sin, mischief, guile and wantonness ' 30

Their whole [idea] is the socialization of the earth and the communizing² of property ; their whole [aim] is the diffusion of sin and the filling of their bellies !

Their ideas are all short-sighted and their outlook narrow; their arts are all phantasy, and their conditions vile '

Had it not been for the barrier of the Holy Law against this Gog³, no one would have been secure of honour, property, or life.

By God's Truth, the talk of this gang of materialists is the worst pestilence in the body of the Nation and the Kingdom !

By the Divine Knowledge thou wilt become the choicest product of the two worlds; by the cynic's philosophy thou wilt become the grandchild of an ape⁴ ! 35

Behold manifest today whatever the Prophet hath said, but whatever the philosopher hath said behold at this time discredited !

All their sciences are [derived] from the Prophets, but imperfectly ; all their arts are from the Saints, but garbled.

But, regarded fairly, man in this world is distinguished by science and knowledge from all beside.

¹ There is a word-play here, of the kind called tajnis-i-z<Eid, between falsa/ah (philosophy) and safah (folly).

² The early BÉbfs were often accused of holding communistic views like the ancient Persian heresiarch Mazdak. Such views are here explicitly repudiated.

³ Alexander the Great is supposed to have built the Great Wall of China (hence called Sadd-i-Sikandar, "the Barrier of Alexander") to prevent the tribes of Gog and Magog (Yajaj wa Majiij) from over-running the world.

⁴ An evident allusion to the Darwinian theory.

By knowledge and learning he finds his way to the Eternal Essence; by understanding and thought he attains to the Presence of the Why-less¹.

It is Study of which He says 'It is the most excellent of actions';
it is Thought whereof an hour 'is better than seventy [years].'

The great sages, such as Socrates, Hippocrates, Aristotle and Zeno, confess His Eternal Essence, 41

And so also Abti 'Ali [Avicenna], Euclid, Ptolemy, Thales, Plato, Hermes and Solon².

These sanctify Him at dusk and at dawn ; these glorify Him in the morning and in the evening.

The world is a head wherein the sage is the intelligence ; time is a body wherein the sciences are in place of the eyes.

But thou ndest with a slack rein, and the steed of the arts is restive; thou art weak and inexperienced, and the dappled charger of the sciences is vicious. 45

Not having read a line thou hast doubts as to the Eternal Lord: wonderful the constitution in which antimony produces constipation !

'Seek learning from the cradle to the grave, even in China⁸,' from the knowledge of God, whereon trust and reliance may be placed.

Sages are dumbfounded at His wise aphorisms ; men of letters are indebted to His pregnant sayings.

Natural laws are like bodies in manifestation and emergence;
Divine Truths are like spirits in occultation and latency.

In this illimitable expanse for lack of space illimitable worlds are buried in one another. 50

Common people see ordinary things, and distinguished people special things, according to their own measure: and He 'knows best what they describe⁴.'

A thousand Platos cannot fathom the essence of His humblest temporal work ; how much less His own Eternal Essence ?

The sphere and the stars move by the command of God : yea, the eyes and eyelids are affected by the soul.

¹ God is so called (Bi-cMn) because none may question Him as to the reason of His actions.

² Doubtful. The original has Shiln, an evident error.

³ A well-known tradition of the Prophet.

⁴ Cf Qur'an, xxiii, 98.

Through whom, if not by His command, is the movement of bodies ?
By what, if not by the water, does the mill revolve ?

For once in the way of wisdom look with the eye of reflection on this abode whereof but one quarter is habitable¹. 55

In each one of the mineral, vegetable and animal kingdoms are a thousand unseen worlds, manifest and hidden.

Beyond thy intelligence is another over-ruling Intelligence ; within thy soul is another soul concealed.

"Behold the grain, which stands shoulder to shoulder with past Eternity: behold the egg, which is conjoined with Eternity to come!

Hidden yet manifest in this latter are a hundred worlds of fowls and chickens ; eternal yet temporal in that former are a hundred groves of fruit and branches.

How canst thou pass through the street of Truth, thou, who comest not forth from the mansion of Nature ? 60

Even as thou seest how the flow of life from this world reaches the child's inward parts through its mother's aid,

So, if aid come not from the Supernatural to this world, by God, this world will be ruined!

For within the narrow straits of this world God hath worlds from the Supernatural beyond limit or computation.

Contrary to universal custom, behold a group of intelligent men voluntarily and naturally plunging into blood² ;

Contrary to nature, a company content with pain and grief; contrary to nature, a party gladly enduring the cruelty of spite. 65

Behold a community renouncing the world by natural inclination;
see a people contentedly suffering exile from their native land!

Behold a party all slam eagerly and joyfully; behold a throng all imprisoned with alacrity and delight,

A whole series [of victims] voluntarily enduring various torments; a whole class by natural inclination [involved] in afflictions of every kind;

All intoxicated and singing songs³, but not from wine; all selfeffaced and dissipated, but not from opium !

¹ I.e. the world, whereof but one quarter is supposed to be capable of sustaining human life.

² This and the following verses refer to the readiness with which the Babis suffer martyrdom.

³ Like Sulayman Khan, for instance. See p. 196 supra, and my Year amongst the Persians, p. 102.

How hath Daniel given news of today 1 How hath the word of Isaiah taken effect now¹! 70

How hath the promise of all the Scriptures been fulfilled, precisely in conformity with the Qur'dn, the Pentateuch, the Books of the Prophets and the Gospels!

Now in the Abode of Peace [Baghdad], now in Jerusalem, now in Mount Carmel, now in Edom, and now in Sion,

The Holy and Fortunate Land hath been determined, the Blessed and Auspicious Day hath been fixed.

'How came the Truth [God] to us? Even as our Arabian Prophet and our guides the Imams indicated to us².

How according to promise did the Eternal Beauty³ reveal His beauty, from whose Blessed Beauty the whole world augured well? 75

How did God become apparent in the Valley of 'the Fig¹? How did He become visible in the Mount of 'the Olive⁴?

How does He conquer without an army while all [others] are conquered? How does He triumph unaided while mankind are helpless [before Him]?

Without the aid of learning He intones the sweetest verses⁶; without the help of others He lays down the Best Law

Why should we not see a hundred thousand souls His sacrifice?
Why should we not see a hundred thousand hearts bewitched by Him?

By the movement of His Pen [men's] hearts and breasts are moved;
by the calmness of His Glance cometh Peace without and within 80

¹ The fulfilment of these prophecies is especially discussed in a Babf work entitled htidldiyya addressed to the Jews, and in English by Ibrdhim Khayru'lUdh m Bahd'u'lldh, the Splendour of God. To give only one instance, "a time and times and half a time" is explained as three years and a half of 360 days each=1260. Now A.H. 1260 (A.D. 1844) was the year of the Bib's "Manifestation."

² This verse is entirely in Arabic.

³ I.e. BahaVldh, who was most commonly entitled by his followers Jamal-i-Mubarak "the Blessed Beauty," or "Perfection."

⁴ The reference is to Sura xcv of the Qur'dn entitled "the Fig."

⁶ Not, of course, verses of poetry (abyat) but the revealed "signs" (ayat) which constitute His credentials.

The turbans of the doctors¹ did not extinguish His Torch ; the hosts of the captains did not overthrow His Standard.

Behold how His Word permeates the world as the soul the body; behold how His Influence throbs in the spirit like the blood in the veins!

The hostility of His foes does but [attempt to] crush water in a mortar ; the enmity of His rivals is but as wind in the desert.

The duration of His command in the heart keeps company with the Spirit²; the continuance of His authority in the world is coeval with the ages.

What a fire hath He kindled in [men's] hearts, such that no water can quench this furnace ' 85

His authority comprehendeth the terrestrial and the subterranean regions; His fame hath passed beyond China, India and Japan.

With one glance He hath conquered two hundred countries and districts; with one [stroke of His] Pen He hath taken a hundred castles and fortresses.

How by His summons to the Faith hath He established a Church against whom until the Resurrection no opponent shall prevail!

He sought help from none to found His Law; yea, God did not raise up the heavens on pillars³.

When, when wilt thou admit His Grace and Mercy? How, how canst thou deny His Knowledge and Power? 90

Thou, who canst not order the affairs of a single household, do not contend with Him who orders all the ages !

Thou, who knowest not what is expedient in thine own affairs, do not obstinately strive with the Lord of the Kingdom of ' Be and it is⁴

Thou dost dispute with thy father about a farthing's damage; these⁵ surrender life and wealth for His sake, and deem themselves favoured.

Alas a thousandfold that I have a thousand thoughts which I cannot harmonize with these restricted rhymes !

Words have escaped my control, yet [the tale of] my heart's pain is incomplete; now I return again to the same refrain. 95

¹ Le. of Law and Religion. It is, I think, misleading to translate 'Ulamd as "clergy."

² Le. lasts as long as life endures.

³ See Qur'an xii, 2 and xxxi, 9.

⁴ Ibid., 11, iii; 111, 42, etc.

⁶ Le. the followers of Baha'u'llah.

In this chameleon-like¹ age I have a heart led astray by all kinds of trifles.

The time preens itself like a peacock in varied hues ; the sphere displays its blandishments like a chameleon in divers colours.

Sufficient is thy burning, O Sun, for my heart is roasted! sufficient is thy turning, O Heaven, for my body is ground to powder!

I have a head, but what can it do with all this passion ? I have a heart, but what can it do with all this trickery?

Where can the soul find endurance and steadfastness except in the Beloved ? Where can the heart find patience and rest save in the Heart's Desire? ioo

At one time I say to myself, ' Perfection is a disaster'²: at another I laugh to myself, ' Madness is of many kinds.'

At one time my fancy rushes through the plain like an engine ; at another my desire soars in the air like a balloon.

I have broken away from the body, but life will not leave the body; I have abandoned life, yet the heart is not tranquil

My heart is wearied of this ruined mansion of merit and talent: welcome the kingdoms of Love ' welcome the realms of Madness³!

The hobble of understanding hath snapped on the leg of the dromedary of my luck⁴: O God, where is my Layte, for I have become Majnun (mad)? 105

Save the Divine Will [exercised] through the channel of Omnipotence, who can drag me forth from this whirlpool ?

Behold, the Will of God is 'He whom God willeth⁵', with whose will the Will of God is conjoined ;

¹ I.e. ever changing, inconstant.

² Perfection exposes the owner to special risks, and the Evil Eye is called by the Arabs 'Aynu'l-Kamd because it especially menaces whatever is perfect of its kind. Cf. p. 117, n. 2 supra.

³ So IJdfiz: " If the understanding knew how happy the heart is under the locks of the Beloved, the intelligent would go mad for the sake of our chains." (Ed. Rosenzweig-Schwannau, vol. 1, p. 28, 11.7-8.)

⁴ It is impossible to render the word-plays between 'agl (understanding) and Hqdl (hobble, tether, shackle fastened round a camel's knee to keep it from straying), and bakhti (dromedary) and bakht (fortune). Even when treating of the most solemn themes few Persian poets can resist such echolaha.

⁵ This is one of the titles given by the followers of Baha 'u'l'ah to his

The unique Servant of Baha" ('Abdu'l-Bahd), made such by the Will of God, Who 'When He willeth aught, saith "Be!" and it is¹;
A King to whom God shows us the way; a Moon who guides us towards God;

'God's Secret/ the fortunate Pearl of the Ocean of Union, who is the Pearl concealed in the shell of God's Knowledge ; no
 Beside his excellence, excellence lacks its excellency; beside his bounty Ma'n² is a withholder of benefits.

His enemy is a foe unto himself whom even his friends renounce; he who obeys him is secure of himself and trusted by mankind

In praise of the countenance of Him round whom the [Divine] Names revolve I would sing psalms, were I granted permission by Him.

I continued to utter in praise of His Essence what God [Himself] hath said, not the verse of the poets whom the erring follow³.

0 Vice-gerent [Khalifa] of the All-merciful, O Ark of Noah, be not grieved because the Truth hath been weakened by violation [of the Covenant]. 115

In the Dispensation of Adam, Qdbil [Cam] cruelly and despitefully shed his brother's blood without fault or sin [on his part].

In the Dispensation of Noah, when Canaan⁴ broke his father's Covenant, by the disgrace of a repudiated affiliation he was drowned in the Sea of Shame.

In the Dispensation of Jacob, Joseph the faithful was imprisoned in the bonds of servitude by the wiles of his brethren.

In the Dispensation of Moses from amongst the children of Israel one was such as Aaron and another such as Qarun⁵.

In the Dispensation of the Spirit of God [Jesus Christ] from amongst son 'Abbas Efendi, also called StrruHldh ("God's Secret"), and after his father's death 'Abdu'l-Baha\

¹ See the note on verse 92 above (p. 215, n. 4).

² Ma'n Ibn Z'dida is proverbial for his courage, virtue and generosity. For an account of him, see Zotenberg's Chronique de Tabart (1874), vol. iv, pp. 373et seqq. This verse affords another instance of echolalia (Ma'n, mani, ma'tin).

³ Qur'an, xxvi, 224, on account of which the whole Sura is entitled the "Chapter of the Poets."

⁴ According to Muhammadan tradition, he was a son or grandson of Noah, who, on account of his unbelief, was not saved in the Ark, but perished in the Flood. See Qur'dn[^] xi, 42, and commentary thereon.

⁵ See the note on verse 4 of this poem (p. 209, n. 2 supra).

the Disciples one in cruelty became like Judas [Iscariot] and one in sincerity like Simon [Peter]. 12a

In the Dispensation of His Holiness the Seal of the Prophets [Muhammad] one of his people was in faithfulness Abu Dharr and another Abu Sha'yun K

In the Dispensation of His Holiness the Supreme [the Bib] two persons were [entitled] Wahid²; one was faithful and brave, the other a cowardly traitor.

In the Dispensation of the Most Splendid Countenance [Bahd'u'llah] it must likewise needs be so, one faithful to the Covenant, the other a vile violator thereof³.

I will not open my lips to curse, but God says, ' Whosoever breaketh my Covenant is accursed.'

This people wilfully shut their eyes to the Truth, for the Truth is apparent from the False in all circumstances. 125

I swear by Thy Face, O Exemplar of all peoples! I swear by Thy Hair, O Leader of all the ages!

I swear by Thy Substance, to wit the Majesty of the Absolute! I swear by Thy Truth, to wit the Reality of the Why-less⁴!

I swear by Thy Countenance, to wit His [God's] dawning Countenance! I swear by thy Secret, to wit His Treasured Secret!

By the earth at Thy Feet, to wit the Alchemy of Desire! By the dust on Thy Road, to wit the tutty of [our] eyes!

² I can find no mention of such a person, and suspect that the reading is corrupt.

² The title Wahid ("Unique") appears to have been taken by the early Bábís as numerically equivalent to Yahyá, but this equivalency can only be obtained by writing the letter yá (ی) in the latter name only twice instead of three times (یحییٰ for یحیی). Thus misspelt, it, like وحید, would yield the number 28. At any rate, as we learn from Mírzá Jání's Nuqṭatu'l-Káfi (Gibb Series, vol. xv, pp. 243, 250, 257, 259) the title was first given to Sayyid Yahyá of Dáráb, the leader of the Nayríz rebellion, and on his death was transferred to Mírzá Yahyá Ṣubḥ-i-Azal, the half-brother and rival of Bahá'u'lláh, who is therefore called "the Second Wahid" (وحید ثانی). It is, of course, to him that Na'ím applies the term "cowardly traitor."

³ The allusion here is to Bahá'u'lláh's sons (half-brothers) 'Abbás Efendí 'Abdu'l-Bahá and Muḥammad 'Alí, between whom arose the same dispute about succession as arose in the previous generation between their father and his half-brother Ṣubḥ-i-Azal.

⁴ See p. 212, n. 1 supra.

By the spot pressed by Thy foot in the Land of ' the Fig ' ! By the place of adoration of mankind adorned by ' the Olive¹⁾ \ 130 [By all these I swear] that my heart cannot remain tranquil without praising Thee, for the debtor cannot lay his head tranquilly on the pillow.

Yet how can Na'im utter Thy praises ? [He is as one] unproved who steps into the Oxus.

May he who obeys Thy command be secure from the deceits of the Flesh ! May he who is the captive of Thy thralls be protected from the delusions of the time !" 133

Some apology is needed for quoting and translating in full so long a poem by an author so modern, so little known outside the circle of his own coreligionists, and, as he himself admits (verse 94), so comparatively unskilful in the manipulation of rhyme and metre. On the other hand the Babf and the subsequent and consequent Baha'f movement constitutes one of the most important and typical manifestations of the Persian spirit in our own time; and this poem, wherein an ardent enthusiasm struggles with a somewhat uncouth terminology, does on the whole faithfully represent the Baha'f Weltanschauung. The following brief analysis may help the reader better to understand the line of thought which it pursues.

Analysis of the above poem of Na'im, and reasons for including it in this book

Analysis of Na'im's poem.

Dissatisfaction of the author with the ordinary pursuits of life, and recognition of the vanity of worldly wealth, pomp and learning (verses 1-25).

True religion celebrated as the only thing which can satisfy the human soul; and materialism, socialism and communism condemned (verses 26-37).

True wisdom and its seekers and expounders, including the ancient Greek philosophers, praised (verses 38-48).

The wonder of the Universe, which is permeated throughout by God's Spirit (verses 49-60).

Man's need of Divine Revelation, which is as the need of a little child for its mother's milk (verses 61-63).

Eagerness of the followers of the Bib and Bahd'u'llih for suffering and martyrdom (verses 64-69).

Fulfilment of former prophecies in this Dispensation (verses 70-74).

Proofs of the truth of Bahd'u'lldh's claim (verses 75-94).

The poet resumes his theme with a new matla or initial verse (95), and first speaks of himself and his own condition (verses 95-105). He next passes to the praise of Bahd-'u'llah's son 'Abbcis Efendf, better known after his father's death (on May 28, 1892) as 'Abdu'l-Bahd (verses 106-114), and offers consolation for the antagonism of his half-brother and the Ndqizin, or "Covenant-breakers," who supported him, by numerous analogies drawn from previous Dispensations (verses 115-125). The last eight verses (126-133) constitute the peroration. The understanding of the poem, of course, presupposes a fairly complete knowledge of the history, doctrines and spiritual outlook of the Bibis and Bahd'is, and to render it intelligible I have had to annotate the translation to an extent which I regret. It is, so far as my knowledge goes, the most ambitious attempt to expound this doctrine and point of view in verse.

It might be expected that I should include in this section some account of the later mystical poetry of the Suffis, but, though such poetry continues to be produced down to the present day, I have met with none which attains the level of San&'f, 'Attar, Jalalu'd-Dfn Riimf, Mahmud Shabistarf, Jdmi, and the other great mystics discussed in the previous volumes of this work. There was, perhaps, little new to be said, and little that could be better expressed than it had been already, while

Little novelty or advance in later
Sufi poetry

under the Safawis at any rate circumstances were particularly unfavourable to the expression of this class of ideas. The beautiful TarjT-band of Hdtif of Isfahan, which will be given at the end of the next chapter, is the only masterpiece of Stiff poetry produced in the eighteenth century with which I am acquainted.

(5) The Tasntf or Ballad.

This class of verse, ephemeral as our own topical and comic songs, leaves far fewer and slighter traces in literature than its actual importance would lead us to expect. A tasnif about the Sdhib-Diwdn beginning:

The Tasnif or popular topical ballad.

دلگشارا ساخت زیر سُرُسُرک
دلگشارا ساخت با چوب و فلک
حیف دلگشا حیف دلگشا

("He made [the garden of] Dil-gusha under 'the Slide' ;
He made Dil-gushd with the sticks and the stocks :
Alas for Dil-gushd ! Alas for Dil-gush^!") was the most popular ballad when I was in Shfrdz in the spring of 1888¹, but it is probably now as little remembered as an almost contemporary ribald English satire on a certain well-known Member of Parliament who "upset the milk in bringing it home from Chelsea." I have no doubt that the tasnif or ballad sung by the troubadour and wandering minstrel existed in Persia from very early—perhaps even from pre-Islamic—times.

Probable antiquity of the Bdrbad and Sakisd may have sung such topical songs to Khusraw Parwiz the Sasanian thirteen hundred years ago, as Rudagi almost certainly did four centuries later to the Sdmdnid prince who was his patron⁹; and a fragment of a typical tasnif (called by the curious name of kardra) sung in Isfahan on the occasion of the capture and execution of the heretic and assassin Ahmad ibn 'Attash¹, is recorded in the history of the Saljuqs composed by Abu Bakr Najmu'd-Dfn Muhammad ar-Rawandf early in the thirteenth century of our era, under the title of Rdhatu's-Sudiir wa Ayatu's-Surtir.

See my Year amongst the Persians,, p. 283, Cf. vol. i of my Lit. Hist of Persia, pp. 14-18.

The authorship of these tasnifs is seldom known, and they are hardly ever committed to writing, though my friend the late George Grahame, when Consul at Shfraz in 1905, very kindly caused a small selection of two score of those most popular at the time in that city and in Tihiran, Isfahan, Rasht, Tabriz, and elsewhere, to be written down for me, and a selection, adapted as far as possible to the piano, was published in or about 1904 under the title of Twelve Persian Folk-Songs collected and arranged for voice and pianoforte by Blair Fairckild: English version of the words by Alma Strettell (Novello & Co., London and New York). In this excellent little book the songs are well set, well rendered into English, and intelligibly if not ideally transliterated, and the following sentence from the short prefatory note shows how sensible the compiler was to the indescribable charm of Persian minstrelsy:

"But one needs the setting of the Orient to realize what these songs are the warm, clear Persian night; the lamps and lanterns shining on the glowing colours of native dresses; the surrounding darkness where dusky shadows hover; the strange sounds of music; voices, sometimes so beautiful, rising and falling in persistent monotony—all this is untranslatable, but the impression left on one is so vivid and so full of enchantment that one longs to preserve it in some form."

Most of these tasnifs are very simple love-songs, in which lines from Hafiz and other popular poets are sometimes incorporated; the topical, polemical and satirical class is much smaller, though in some ways more interesting as well as more ephemeral. A parody or parallel of such a tasnif may be produced to accord with fresh circumstances, as happens nearer home with the Irish AX\ c-fe>An tian ttoc-o and the Welsh mochyn du. An instance of such an adaptation is afforded by the second poem cited in my Press and Poetry of Modern Persia (pp. 174-9). Of course in the tasnif the air is at least as important as the words, and a proper study of them would require a knowledge of Persian music, which, unhappily, I do not possess. Indeed I should think that few Europeans had mastered it both in practice and theory, or could even enumerate the twelve maqams and their twenty-four derivatives (sku'bd)¹.

¹ Lit Hist, of Persia, vol. ii, pp. 313-16; and Rdhatu's-SudUr (E. J. W. Gibb Memorial, New Series, vol. 11), pp. 161 and 497-8 (note on hardra).

(6) Modern political verse.

Of this I have treated so fully in my Press and Poetry of Modern Persia (Cambridge, 1914) that it is unnecessary to enlarge further on it in this place. It is a product of the Revolution of 1905 and the succeeding years, and in my opinion shows real originality, merit and humour. Should space permit, I may perhaps add a few further specimens when I come to speak of the modern journalism with which it is so closely associated, and which, indeed, alone rendered it possible. The most notable authors of this class of verse, include 'Arif and Dakhaw of Qazwin, Ashraf of Gilan and Bahar of Mashhad' all of whom, so far as I know, are still living, while the two first named are comparatively young men. Portraits of all of them, and some particulars of their lives, will be found in my book above mentioned.

¹ One of the clearest and most concise treatises on this subject which I have seen is contained in a manuscript from the library of the late Sir A. Houtum-Schindler (now in my possession) entitled Bahjat-fer-Raw&j.

CHAPTER VI.

POETS OF THE CLASSICAL TRADITION. PRE-QAJAR PERIOD (A.D. 1500-1800).

Almost any educated Persian can compose tolerable verses, and the great majority do so, while the number of those who habitually indulge in this pastime on a considerable scale and have produced diwdns of poetry has been at all times fairly large. Moreover this poetry is as a rule so conventional, and the language in which it is written so unchanged during the period under discussion, that if a hundred ghazals, or odes, by a hundred different poets who flourished during the last four centuries were selected, avoiding those which contained any reference to current events, and omitting the concluding verse of each, wherein the poet generally inserts his takhalluSy or nom de guerre, it is extremely doubtful whether any critic could, from their style, arrange them even approximately in chronological order, or distinguish the work of a poet contemporary with Shah Isma'fi the Safawf from one who flourished in the reign of Nasiru'd-Dfn Shah Qajar. Nor do the tadkkiras, or Memoirs of Poets, give us much help in making a selection, for when discussing contemporaries the author is very apt to make mention of his personal friends, and to ignore those whom he dislikes or of whom he disapproves. Thus influential or amiable rhymsters of mediocre ability are often included, while heretics, satirists and persons distasteful or indifferent to the author, though of greater talent, are often omitted. When Rida-qulf Khan "Hidayat," author of that great modern anthology entitled

Widespread poetical talent in Persia.

Difficulty of discrimination between noteworthy and mediocre poets.

Majma'u'l-Fusaha ("the Concourse of the Eloquent")¹, comes to speak of his contemporaries, we constantly come across such expressions as با منش ارتباطی خاص بود و مرا بهجنابش اخلاص

"He had a special connection with me, and I a sincere regard for him"²; "I saw him in Shfraz"³; "I repeatedly called on him and he used to open the gates of conversation before my face"⁴; "I sometimes get a talk with him"⁵; "for a while he established himself in Fars, where at that time the writer also was living; I used constantly to have the honour of conversing with him, for he used to open the gates of gladness before the faces of his friends"⁶; and so forth' How many of the 359 "contemporary poets" mentioned in this work⁷ were included on such personal grounds rather than on account of any conspicuous merit? I once went through the list with my excellent old friend Hajji Mirza Yahya Dawlatabadfi, a man of wide culture and possessing a most extensive knowledge of Persian poetry, of which he must know by heart many thousands of verses, and asked him which of them he considered really notable. Out of the whole 359 he indicated five (Sabʿ of Kashan, Furughf of Bistam, Qa'anf of Shiraz, Mijmar of Isfahan, and Nashdt of Isfahan) as of the first class; two (Wisal of Shfraz, and the author himself, Hiddyat) as of the second; and two (Surush of Isfahan and Wiqar of Shfraz) as of the third;

¹ Composed in 1284/1867-8 and lithographed in 2 vols. atTihiran in 1295/1878.

² Vol. 11, p. 64, s.v. Agah-i-Shfrdzf.

³ Ibid.) p. 67, s.v. Azad.

⁴ Ibid., p. 68, s.v. Mirza. Abu'I-Qasim-i-Shfrazfi.

⁵ Ibid., s.v. Ummfd of Kirmdnshali.

⁶ Ibid., p. 72, s.v. Ulfat of Kashan.

⁷ They occupy pp. 58-679 of vol. li, but were not all strictly contemporary, a few being as early as the first half of the eighteenth century.

that is, he regarded about one out of every forty mentioned as having a claim to real distinction.

In any case, therefore, a very rigorous selection must be made, the more so when it is a question of poets whose beauty does not depend solely on form, and can,

Criterion of selection.

therefore, be preserved in some degree in translation. In making this selection I have included such poets as enjoy any considerable fame in their own country, and any others whom I happen to have come across in the course of my reading (a mere fraction of the total number) who make any special appeal to myself. It is doubtful how far a foreigner is competent to criticize; he may say that he personally admires or dislikes a particular poet, but I doubt if he should go so far as to class him definitely on

Divergence of foreign from native taste.

this ground as good or bad. The taste of even the Turks and Indians, who are more familiar with Persian poetry than we can easily become, differs very considerably from that of the Persians themselves, who must be reckoned the most competent judges of their own literature. In this connection I should like to direct the reader's attention to a very apposite passage in P. G. Hamerton's Intellectual Life. Speaking of a Frenchman who had learned English entirely from books, without being able either to speak it, or to understand it when spoken, and "had attained what would certainly in the case of a dead language be considered a very high degree of scholarship indeed," he says: "His appreciation of our authors, especially of our poets, differed so widely from English criticism and English feeling that it was evident he did not understand them as we understand them. Two things especially proved this: he frequently mistook declamatory versification of the most mediocre quality for poetry of an elevated order; whilst, on the other hand, his ear failed to perceive the music of the musical poets, as

¹ New ed., London, Macmillan & Co., 1890, pp. 86-94,

Byron and Tennyson. How could he hear their music, he to whom our English sounds were all unknown?" Transform this Frenchman into an Indian or a Turk, and substitute "Persian" for "English" and "Qa'anf" for "Byron and Tennyson," and the above remarks admirably apply to most Turkish and Indian appreciations of Persian poetry.

Of the poets who died between A.D. 1500 and 1600 some ten or a dozen deserve at least a brief mention; of those between A.D. 1600 and 1700 about the same number; between A.D. 1700 and 1800 only one or two; between A.D. 1800 and 1885 about a score. Those who outlived the date last-mentioned may be conveniently grouped with the moderns, who will be discussed separately. The following are the poets of whom I propose to speak briefly, arranged in chronological order of their deaths (the dates of birth are seldom recorded) in the four periods indicated above.

I. Between A.D. 1500 and 1600 (A.H. 906-1009).

Several of the poets who really belong to this period have been already mentioned in my Persian Literature under Tartar Dominion, namely, Mir 'AH Shfr Nawa'i, d. 906/1500-1 (pp. 505-6); Husayn Wa'iz-i-Kashiff, d. 910/1504-5 (pp. 503-4); Banna'i, killed in the massacre at Qarshi in 918/1512-3 (p. 457); and Hilalf, killed by 'Ubaydu'llah Khan the Uzbek as a Shf'a in 936/1529-30 (p. 459). Of the last-named only need anything further be said here.

I. Hatiff (d. 927/Dec. 1520 or Jan. 1521).

Mawlana 'Abdu'llah Hatiff of Kharjird in Khurasan derives his chief fame from the fact that he was the nephew of the great Jamf, who, according to the well-known story¹, tested his poetical talent before allowing him to write by bidding him compose

Hatifi
(d. 927/1520).

¹ See, besides the Persian tadhkiras, Sir Gore Ouseley's Biographical Notices of Persian Poets (London, 1846), pp. 143-5.

a "parallel" to the following verses in Firdaws's celebrated satire¹ on Sultdn Mahmud of Ghazna:

درختی که تلخ است وی را سرشت'
 کروش در نشانی بهیچ بهشت'
 و در از جوی خلدش بهنگام آب'
 به بهیچ انگین ربزی و شهید ناب'
 سر انعام گوهر بکار آورد'
 همان میوه تلخ بار آورد'

"A tree whereof the nature is bitter, even if thou plantest it in the Garden of Paradise,
 And if at the time of watering, thou pourest on its roots nectar and fine honey from the River of Paradise²,
 It will in the end give effect to its nature, and bring forth that same bitter fruit."

Hitiff produced the following "parallel," which his uncle Jdmf approved, except that he jocularly observed that the neophyte had "laid a great many eggs on the way"⁸:

اگر بیضه زاغ ظلمت سرشت' نهی زیر طاوس باغ بهشت'
 بهنگام آن بیضه پروردنش' ز الجیر جنت دهی ارزنش'
 دهی آبش از چشمه سلسبیل' بدان بیضه دمر در دمد جبرئیل' شود عاقبت بیضه زاغ زاغ' برد رنج بهبوده طاوس باغ'

"If thou should'st place an egg of the crow compounded of darkness under the Peacock of the Garden of Paradise,
 And if at the time of nourishing that egg thou should'st give it grain from the Fig-tree of the Celestial Gardens,

¹ The satire is given at the end (pp. 63-6) of the Persian Introduction to Turner Macan's edition of the Sh&h-n&ma (Calcutta, 1829). These verses occur on p. 66, 11. 5-7.

^a Probably the celestial river of Salsabfl is intended.

⁸ Majmaa'u'l-Fusaha) vol. ii, p. 54. HAtiff's verses are given on the last page) of vol. iii of Ziya Bey's Kkarabat.

And should'st water it from the Fountain of Salsabfl, and Gabriel should breathe his breath into that egg,

In the end the crow's egg will become a crow, and vain will be the trouble of the Peacock of Paradise."

Hatiff was one of the innumerable poets who strove to compose a " Quintet " (Khatnsa) rivalling that of Nizaraf of Ganja. Two of his five subjects were the same, the romances of *Lay Id and Majntin*¹ and of Shirin and Kkusraw the Haft Manzar formed the parallel to the Haft Paykar while the Timtir-ndma formed the counterpart to the Sikandar-ndtna, except that, as Hatiff boasts⁸, his poem was based on historical truth instead of on fables and legends.
He also began, but did not complete, a similar historical poem on the achievements of Shah Isma'fl the Safawf, who paid him a surprise visit as he was returning from a campaign in Khurasin in 917/1511-12. This poem is in the style and metre of the Shdh-ndma of Firdawsf, and is entitled Shdh-ndma~i-Hazrat-i- Shah Isma 'il4

Hatiff belongs essentially, like so many other representatives of Art and Letters in the early Safawf period, to the circle of Herat formed under the liberal patronage of the later Tfmurids.

2. Baba Fighanf of Shfraz (d. 925/1519).

Fighani appears to be one of those poets who are much more highly esteemed in India than in their own country, for while Shibli in his Sht'ru'l-Ajatn (vol. iii, pp. 27-30), like Walih in his Riyddu'sk-Shu'ard, deems him the creator of a new style of poetry,

^{Figihini}
(d. 985/15x9).

¹ Published at Calcutta by Sir W. Jones in 1788.

² Lithographed at Lucknow in Oct. 1869. It comprises about 4500 verses.

⁸ Rieu's British Museum Persian Catalogue, p. 654.

¹ There is another similar and homonymous poem by Qdsimf. See B.M.P.C., pp. 660-1. The Library of King's College, Cambridge, possesses a MS. of this latter {Pote Collection, No. 238}.

⁶ See Rieu's Pers. Cat., p. 651.

Rida-quH Khan only accords him a brief mention in his *Riyddttl'Arifin*¹ and entirely omits him in his larger Majma'u'l-Fusahd, while the notices of him in the Atash-kada and the Tuhfa-i-Sdmi are very brief. He was of humble brigin, the son of a cutler² or a vintner according to different accounts, and seems to have lived the life of a somewhat antinomian dervish. In Khurasan, whither he went from Shiraz, he was unappreciated, even by the great Jamf, with whom he forgathered; but at Tabrfz he subsequently found a more appreciative patron in Sultan Ya'qub the Prince of the " White Sheep " Turkmans. He repented in later life and retired to the Holy City of Mashhad, so that perhaps this verse of his ceased to be applicable:

آلوده شراب فغانی بخاک رفت ، آه ار ملا تش کفن تازه بو کنند

" Stained with wine Fighanf sank into the earth. alas if the Angels should sniff at his fresh shroud³!"

The longest extracts from his poems are given in the Majalisu'l-Mtfminin, but these are all qasidas in praise of 'AM, presumably composed towards the end of his life, and, though they may suffice to prove him a good Shf'a, they are hardly of a quality to establish his reputation as a great poet.

3. Ummfdf (or Umfdf) of Tihiran (d. 925/1519 or 930/1523-4).

Little is known of Umfdf except that his proper name was Arjasp⁴, that he was a pupil of the celebrated philosopher

¹ Lithographed at Tihiran, 1305/1887-8, p. 122.

² On this account he originally wrote verse under the " pen-name" of Sakkakf.

³ Lest they should by the smell of the wine know him for the toper he was.

⁴ One is tempted to conjecture from this name that he may have been a Zoroastrian, but I have found no further evidence to support this supposition.

Jalalu'd-Din Dawani, that his skill was in the qasida rather than the ghazal, that he was on bad terms with his fellow-townsmen, on whom he wrote many satires, and that he was finally killed in Tihiran in a quarrel about a piece of land, at the instigation of Qiwamu'd-Din Nur-bakhshi. Nami, one of his pupils, composed the following verses and chronogram on his death :

Umidi
(d. 925/1519).

نادرِ عصرِ اُمیدی مظلوم، گو بنا حق شهید شد ناگاه،
شبِ بخوابِ من آمد و فرمود، گای ز حالِ درونِ من آگاه،
بهرِ تاریخِ قتلِ من بنویس، آه از خونِ نا حقِ من آه،

"The much-wronged Umidi, wonder of the Age, who suddenly and contrary to right became a martyr, Appeared to me at night in a dream and said, 'O thou who art aware of my inward state, Write for the date of my murder¹. "Alas for my blood unjustly shed, alas!""

Reference has already been made (p. 59 supra) to a qasida composed by him in praise of Najm-i-Thdni, and probably his poetry consisted chiefly of panegyrics, though he also wrote a Sdqi-ndma (" Book of the Cup-bearer ") of the stereotyped form. Manuscripts of his poems are very rare, but there is one in the British Museum⁸, comprising, however, only 17 leaves, and even these few poems were collected long after his death by command of Shah Saff. Mention is, however, made of him in most of the tadhkiras, and the Atash-kada cites 24 verses from his Sdqi-ndma, ¹ This chronogram gives A.H. 925 (A.D. 1519), but 930/1523-4 is the date given by Sam Mirzi, and 929/1522-3 in the Ahsanttt-Tawdr(kh), and, by implication, in the Haft Iqlitn.

⁸ Or. 3642, ff. 180-197. See Rieu's Persian Supplement, p. 269. The author of the Haft Iqlim, writing more than seventy years after the death of Umfdi, his fellow-townsmen and apparently kinsman, says that in his day the well-known verses of the poet consisted of 17 qasidas, 3 ghazals, a few fragments and quatrains, and the Saqi -nama.

and 70 verses from his other poems. Amongst these are the following, also given in the Majma'u'l-Fusahd (vol. ii pp. 7-8):

رواقِ مدرسه گر سرنگون شود سهل است
 قصورِ مهکده^۱ عشق را مباد قصور^۲
 بنای مدرسه از جنسِ عالی و سافل^۳

خراب گشت و خرابات همچنان معمور^۴
 "If the College hall should be turned upside down it matters little;
 but may no injury befall the halls of the Wine-houses of Love!
 The College buildings, high and low, were destroyed, while the taverns continued to flourish just the same."

تو ترکِ نیمه مستی من مرغِ نیمه بمل^۵
 کارِ تو از من آسان کارِ من از تو مشکل^۶
 توها نهی بمیدان من دستِ شوهر از جان^۷
 تو خوی چکانی از رخ من خون فشان از دل^۸
 دنبال آن مسافر از ضعف و نا توانی^۹

بر عیزم و نشینم چون کرد تا بمنزل^{۱۰}
 گهو بختِ آنکه گیرم مستش ز خانه^{۱۱} زین^{۱۲}
 و آن ساعدِ بلورین در گردنم همایل^{۱۳}
 خنجر کشی و ساغر اهلِ وفا سراسر^{۱۴}
 خون خورده در برابر جان داده در مقابل^{۱۵}

مداخیر چو شد طی بشنو حکایتِ وی^{۱۶}
 ویرانه ایست در وی دیوانه ایست عامل^{۱۷}
 دیوانه^{۱۸} که تدبیر در وی نکرده تأثیر^{۱۹}
 دیوانه^{۲۰} که زنجیر او را نکرده عاقل^{۲۱}
 دیوانه ایست پُر فنِ دیرینه دشمن من^{۲۲}

از وی مباش ایمن وز من مباش عاقل^{۲۳}

بر داورِ بختدان این نکته ایست پنهان،
 گاندیشه پریشان نبود بنظر مایل،
 طبعم ز هر که بودی گوی سخن ربودی، اما اگر نبودی در خانه ام محصل،

" Thou art a half-drunk Turk, I am a half-slam bird¹; thy affair with me is easy, my desire of thee is difficult

Thou settest thy foot in the field, I wash my hands of life; thou causest sweat to drip from thy cheek, I pour blood from my heart.

Behind that traveller in weakness and helplessness I rise up and subside like the dust until the halting-place [is reached].

When shall the luck be mine to lift him drunken from the saddle, while that crystal-clear arm embraces my neck like a sword-belt?

Thou bearest a dagger and a goblet: the faithful with one accord drink blood beside thee and give their lives before thee.

Now that my scroll of praise is rolled up, hearken to the tale of Ray: it is a rum wherein a madman is governor:

A madman on whom counsel produced no effect; a madman whom chains did not render sensible.

He is a madman full of craft, my old enemy; be not secure of him, and be not heedless of me.

From the arbiter of eloquence this point is hidden, that a distracted mind is not disposed to verse.

My genius would snatch the ball² of verse from all and sundry, if only the bailiff were not in my house !"

4 and 5, The two Ahlfs.

These two homonymous poets, the one of Turshfz in Khurasan (d. 934/1527-8) and the other of Shfriz (d. 942/1535-6), of both of whom the names are more familiar than the works, must, as Rieu has pointed out⁸, be carefully distinguished. Both are ignored by Rida-qulf Khan, and both belong,

Ahli of Turshfz
 (d. 934/1527), and Ahli of Shiraz
 <d. 942/X535X

¹ See p. 166, n. I supra.

² This common simile is derived from the game of polo.

⁸ Persian Catalogue, pp. 657-8. See also Ethe's India Office Persian Catalogue, col. 785, No. 1432, where a very valuable autograph MS., made in 920/1514, is described.]

the former actually, the latter spiritually, to the Herit school which gathered round Sultdn Husayn and Mir 'AH Shir. This school, to which also belonged Zuhurf (d. 1024/1615), likewise of Turshfz, seems never to have been popular in Persia, except, perhaps, in their own day in Khurdsdn, but enjoys a much more considerable reputation in India, where Zuhurf, whose very name is almost unknown in Persia, enjoys an extraordinary, and, as I think, quite undeserved fame, especially as a writer of extremely florid and bombastic prose. Ahli of Shfrdz excelled especially in elaborately ingenious word-plays (tajnisat) and other rhetorical devices.

d. Hilali (killed in 935/1528-9).

Hildlf, though born in Astaribdd, the chief town of the Persian Province of Gurgdn, was by race a Chaghatdy Turk, and was in his youth patronized by Mir
Hitali
(d 935/1538). 'AH Shir Nawa'f. His most famous poem, entitled Shah u Darwishy or Shdh u Gadd ("the King and the Beggar"), has been harshly criticized by Bibur himself¹ and in later times by Sprenger², but warmly defended by Ethe, who translated it into German verse⁸. He composed another mathnawi poem entitled Sifdu'l-'Ashiqin ("the Attributes of Lovers") and a number of odes collected into a Diwan. Ridd-qulf Kh&n says⁴ that in Khurdsdn he was regarded as a Shf'a, but in 'Irdq as a Sunnf. Unhappily for him 'Ubaydu'lteh Khdn, the fanatical Uzbek, took the former view, and caused him to be put to death as a "Rafiai" It is curious, in view of this, that he is not mentioned in the Majdlisu'l-Mtiminin amongst the Shf'a poets; and perhaps, as-asserted in the Haft Iqlim, the

¹ See my Persian Literature under Tartar Dominion^ p. 459.

² Oude Catalogue, p. 427.

⁸ Morgenlandische Studien, Leipzig, 1870, pp. 197-282.

⁴ Majma'u'l-Fusafid, vol. ii, p. 55.

envy of two of his rivals at the Uzbek Court, Baqa'I and Shamsu'd-Din Ktihiṣṭanf, rather than his religious views, may have caused his execution, which 'Ubaydu'llah Khan is said to have subsequently regretted. The following verses, however, seem to indicate Shi'a propensities:

محمدِ عربی آبروی هر دو سرای
 کسی که خاک درش نیست خاک هر سر او
 شنیده ام که تکلم نمود همچو مسیح
 بدین حدیث لب لعل روح پرور او
 که من مدینه علم علی دوست مرا عجب خجسته حدیثیست من سگ در او

"Muhammad the Arabian, the honour of both worlds: dust be upon the head of him who is not as dust at his Door'

I have heard that his life-sustaining ruby lip uttered, like the Messiah, this tradition.

'I am the City of Knowledge and 'All is my Door'. a marvellously blessed tradition! I am the dog of his Door¹!"

7. Lisanf (d. 940/1533-4).

Lisanf of Shiraz is the last of the twenty-two Persian Shf'a poets mentioned in the Majdhsu l-Mtfminin and deserves mention rather on account of his devotion to that faith than by reason of his poetic talent; for, although he is said to have produced more than 100,000 verses, they are little known and seldom met with², and, though mentioned in the Atash-kada and the Haft Iqlim, he is ignored by Rida-qul Khan. Most of his life was spent at Baghdad and Tabriz, in which latter

Lisani
(d 940/1533).

¹ I.e. the dog of 'All. Kalb'Ali is not uncommon as a name amongst the Shf'a, and, as we have seen, the Safawf kings gloried in the title "Dogs of the Threshold of 'Ali Ibn Abi Talib." These verses are taken from the MajmcfuH-Fusahd.

² There is a copy of his Diwan (Or. 307) in the British Museum. See Rieu's Persian Catalogue^ pp. 656-7.

town he died just before it was taken by the Ottoman Sultdn Sulaym£n. "On account of his devotion to the Twelve Imams," says the author of the Majdlis, "Lisdnf would never remove from his head the twelve-gored kingly crown¹ until, when Sultdn Sulaym£n the Turk was advancing to occupy Tabrfz, it happened that news of his near approach reached Lisdnf when he was engaged in prayer in the great Mosque of Tabriz. On hearing this news, he raised his hands in prayer, saying, 'O God, this usurper is coming to Tabrfz: I cannot remove this crown from my head, nor reconcile myself to witnessing his triumph, therefore suffer me to die, and bring me to the Court of Thy Mercy !' He then bowed his head in prayer, and in that attitude surrendered his soul to the Beloved." The following quatrain is characteristic :

گر بندِ لسانی گسلد از بندش ' در خاک شود وجود حاجتمندش ' بالاله گه ز مشرق دیش سر نژند ' جز مهر علی و یازده فرزندش '

" If the joints of Lisani break apart, and his needy body passes into the dust,

By God, from the horizon of his heart naught will appear save the love [or sun] of 'Ali and his eleven descendants!"

His poems, in the preservation of which he seems to have been very careless, were collected after his death by his pupil Sharif of Tabriz, but so slovenly was the compilation that, according to the Atask-kada, it was known as Sahwu'l-Lisdn, or "Lapsus Linguae."

8. Futulf (Fuzulf) of Baghdad (d. 970/1562-3).

Fudulf is reckoned amongst the Turkish rather than the Persian poets, and is fully discussed by Gibb in vol. iii of his monumental History of Ottoman Poetry (ch. iv, pp. 70-107). That he became an Ottoman subject was due to the fact that Baghddd, where he was probably born, and where he spent nearly all his life, was taken from the Persians by the Turks in 940/1535; but, as Gibb says¹, "he composed with equal ease and elegance in Turkish, Persian, and Arabic." He is described by the same scholar² as "the earliest of those four great poets who stand pre-eminent in the older literature of Turkey, men who in any age and in any nation would have taken their place amongst the Immortals." That his status in the Persian Parnassus is so much lower is due rather to the greater competition and higher standard of excellence prevailing there than to any lack of skill on his part in the use of the Persian language³. That he was of the Shf'a faith is clear from several of his verses, and from his Hadiqatu's-Su'add', a Turkish martyrology modelled on the Persian Rawdatu'sh-Skuhadd of Husayn Wd'iz-i-Kdshiff.

Fuzuli
 (d. 970/1562).

¹ Concerning this distinctive head-dress, which gave to the Persian Shi'a their name of Qizil-bash ("Red-heads"), see p. 48 supra.

As I have referred to Gibb's great work on Ottoman Poetry, I may here express a doubt as to his claim⁴ that the kind of poem entitled Shahr-angiz (or "City-thriller," as he renders it) is a Turkish invention, and that "there is no similar poem in Persian literature." S&m Mirzad in his Tuhfa-i-Sami (compiled in 957/1550) mentions at least two poets, Wahidi of Qum and Harfi of Isfahan, who composed such poems, the former on Tabriz, the latter on Gilin, and though these were probably written later than Masfih's Turkish Shahr-angiz on Adrianople, there is nothing to suggest that they were regarded as a novelty or innovation in Persia. Harfi's poem, called Shahr-ashub ("City-disturber") seems to have been bitterly satirical, for the

¹ Loc. cit. p. 72.

² Ibid., p. 71.

³ He has a complete Persian Diwan, of which a MS. (Add. 7785) exists in the British Museum, and which has been printed at Tabriz. See Rieu's Persian Catalogue, p. 659.

⁴ See Rieu's Turkish Catalogue, pp. 39-40.

⁵ Vol. ii, p. 232.

unhappy poet was deprived of his tongue in consequence, as Seim Mirzi relates :

شهر آشوبی جهت آنجا (یعنی گیلان) و مردم آنجا گفته و اورا
با مریدی متهم ساخته زبانش را بُریدند اما این جائزه اورا از
برای اشعار دیگوش میبایست نه جهت هجو اهلِ گیلان^۱

^ . Wahshf of Bafq (d. 991/1583).

Though born at Bafq, a dependency of Kirman, Wahshf spent most of his life at Yazd. His poetry, especially his Farhdd u Shirin and his ghazals, are highly (T^tUs). praised in the Tdrikh^Alam-drđ-yi^Abbdsi, the Atash-kada, and the *Majtna'u'l-Fusakd*¹.

He also wrote panegyrics on Shcīh Tahmasp and his nobles, concerning which the author of the work last-named remarks that in this branch of the poetic art none of the poets of the middle period can compare with the ancients. He did not finish the Farhdd u Shirin, which was completed long afterwards (in 1265/1848-9) by Wisdl. He wrote two other mathnawi poems, the Khuld-i-Barin ("Supreme Abode of Bliss") and Nazir u Manztir, besides ghazals (odes) and qifas (fragments), a large selection of which are given in the Majma'u'l-Fusahd and the Atash-kada (pp. iu-120)². The following murabba or "foursome," given in both these anthologies, is rather pretty and unusual.

دوستان شرحِ پریشانی من گوش کنید
داستانِ غیرِ پنهانی من گوش کنید
قصهٔ بی سر و سامانی من گوش کنید
گفتگوی من و حیرانی من گوش کنید

شرح این قصهٔ جانسوز نهفتن تا کی

سوخته سوخته این راز نگفتن تا کی

¹ Vol. 11, pp. 51-4.

² See Rieu's Persian Catalogue, pp. 663-4.

روزگاری من و دل ساکنِ گوئی بودیم
 ساکنِ گوی بُتِ هریده جوئی بودیم
 دین و دل باخته و پیرانه روئی بودیم
 بسته سلسله سلسله موئی بودیم
 کس در آن سلسله غیر از من و دل بند نبود
 يك گرفتار از بن جمله که هستند نبود
 نرگس غمزه زَنش این همه بیمار نداشت
 سنبلِ پر شکنش هیچ گرفتار نداشت
 این همه مشتری و گرمی بازار نداشت
 یوسفی بود ولی هیچ خریدار نداشت
 اول آن کس که خریدار شدم من بودم
 باعثِ گرمی بازار شدم من بودم
 عشقِ من شد سببِ خوبی و رعنائی او
 داد رسوائی من شهرتِ زیبائی او
 بسکه کردم همه جا شرحِ دلآرائی او
 شهر پر کُشت ز غوغای تماثائی او
 این زمان عاشقِ سر گشته فراوان دارد
 کی سر و برکِ منِ بیسر و سامان دارد
 چون چنین است پی کارِ دگر باشیم به
 مرغِ خوش نغمه گلزارِ دگر باشیم به
 عندلیبِ گلِ رخسارِ دگر باشیم به
 چند روزی پی دلدادِ دگر باشیم به
 نو گلی کو که شوم بلبلِ دستان سازش
 سازم از تازه جوانانِ چمن ممتازش
 کز چه از خاطرِ وحشی هوسِ روی تو رفت
 وز دلش آرزوی قامتِ دلجوی تو رفت

شده دل آزرده آزرده از هجوی تو رفت'
 با دل پرگله از ناحوشی روی تو رفت'

حاشا لله که وفای تو فراموش گنم'
 "O friends, hearken to the account of my distraction! Hearken to the tale of my hidden sorrow! Hearken to the story of my disordered state! Hearken to my description of my bewilderment! How long shall I hide the account of this grievous story? I burn! I burn! How long shall I refrain from telling this secret?"

For a while I and my heart dwelt in a certain street: the street of a certain quarrelsome beauty. We had staked Faith and heart on one of dissolute countenance; we were fettered in the chains of one with chain-like tresses. In that chain was none bound save me and my heart: of all that exist, not one was captive then.

Her bewitching narcissus-eyes had not then all these love-sick victims; her curling hyacinthine locks held then no prisoner; she had not then so brisk a business and so many customers; she was a Joseph [in beauty] but found no purchaser. I was the first to become a purchaser; it was I who caused the briskness of her market.

My love was the cause of her beauty and comeliness; my shame gave fame to her beauty; so widely did I everywhere describe her charms that the whole city was filled with the tumult of the spectators. Now she has many distracted lovers, how should she think or care for poor distracted me?

Since it is so, it is better that we should pursue some other aim, that we should become the sweet-voiced songsters of some other rose-bower, that we should become the nightingales of some other rose-cheeked beauty, that for a few days we should follow some other charmer. Where is some fresh young rose whose eloquent nightingale I may become, and whom I may [thus] distinguish amongst the youthful beauties of the garden?

Although the fancy for thy face hath passed away from Wahshfs mind, and the desire for thy charming figure hath departed from his heart, and one vexed in heart hath departed in vexation from thy street, and with a heart full of complaints hath departed from the displeasure of thy countenance, God forbid that I should forget thy constancy, or should listen to man's counsels of expediency I"

10. Mahmud Qari of Yazd (d. 993/1585).
 11. Muhtasham of Kashan (d. 996/1587-8).

Mahmud Qari of Yazd, the poet of clothes, who died two years after Wahshf and three years before Muhtasham, was mentioned in the preceding volume of this work¹ in connection with the two earlier parodists 'Ubayd-i-Zakanf and Bushaq (Abu Ishdq) of Shfrdz ; while the far more notable Muhtasham has been already discussed at some length in the preceding chapter⁸ in connection with the religious poetry on which his fame chiefly rests. Of the erotic verse of his early youth and of his panegyrics on Shah Tahmasp copious specimens are given in the Atask-kada, but these are neither so distinguished nor so characteristic as his elegies (mardthi) on the martyrdom of Husayn and the other Imams, from which the extracts given in the Majmul-Fusahd' are chiefly taken.

Mahmud Qari of Yazd
(d. 993/1585), and Muhtasham of Kashan
(d. 996/1587-8).

12. 'Urfi of Shfraz (d. 999/1590-1) and his circle.

Though less highly appreciated in his own country than in Turkey and India, 'Urff is probably on the whole the most famous and popular poet of his century⁴.

Though born and brought up in Shfraz, his short life was chiefly spent in India, where he died in 999/1590-1 at the early age of thirty-six, some say of dysentery, others of poison. He is one of the three poets of this century (A.D. 1500-1600) discussed by Shibl Nu'manf in his Ski'ru'l-'Ajam', the other two being his

'Urfi of Shiraz
(d. 999/1590-1).

¹ Persian Literature under Tartar Dominion, pp. 257 and 351-3. Mahmud is not mentioned in the Atash-kada, the Haft Iqlim, or the Majma'u'l-Fusaha; no particulars of his life are known to me, and the date of his death must be regarded as uncertain.

² Pp. 172-7 supra,

⁸ Vol. ii, pp. 36-38.

⁴ See Rieu's Persian Catalogue, p. 667.

⁶ Vol. iii, pp. 82-133.

fellow-townsmen Bitā Fighinf, already mentioned¹, and Faydf (Fayzf), brother of Akbar's celebrated minister Abu'l-Fadl (Abu'l-Fazl), who, in Shibli's opinion, was one of the two Indian poets who wrote Persian verse which would pass as the work of a genuine Persian². 'Abdu'l-Qaddir Badd'unf says³ that 'Urff and Thand'f were the two most popular Persian poets in India in his time, and that manuscripts of their works were to be found in every bazaar and bookshop, while Faydf's poems, in spite of the large sums of money which he had expended in having them beautifully copied and illuminated, were little sought after. Gibb says⁴ that, after Jimi, 'Urff and Faydf were the chief Persian influences on Turkish poetry until they were superseded by Sa'ib, and that "the novelty in this style lay, apart from the introduction of a number of fresh terms into the conventional vocabulary of poetry, in the deposition of rhetoric from the chief seat, and the enthronement of loftiness of tone and stateliness of language in its stead⁵." Ziya (Diya) Pasha, in that portion of his metrical Introduction to the Kharabat which discusses the Persian poets, after praising Jami, proceeds to speak of 'Urfi and Faydi as follows:

فیضی ایله عرفی همناندر،	سر جمله آخر الزماندر،
فیضیده بلاغت و طراوت،	عرفیده غزویت و حلاوت،
فیضیده مواعظ آتشیندر،	عرفیده قصیده لر متیندر،
اما آرانورسه اولویت،	فیضیده قالورینه فضیلت،
فیضی معجزه ایکن سراپا،	تفسیرینه نقطه قونماز اصلا،
بولدی او یگانه فضیلت،	شاگردی یدی ایله شهادت،

¹ Pp. 229-230 supra.

² The other was Amīr Khusraw of Dihlī.

³ Muntakhabat-t-Tawārikh, vol. iii, p. 285 (Calcutta, 1869).

⁴ Hist. of Ottoman Poetry, vol. i, pp. 5, 127, 129.

⁵ Loc. cit. p. 129.

" Faydi and 'Urfi run neck-and-neck ; they are the leaders of the later time.

In Faydi is eloquence and freshness, in 'Urff sweetness and fluency.

In Faydi are fiery exhortations, while 'Urfi is strong in elegies.

But if pre-eminence he sought, excellence still remains with Faydi.

Faydi is clear throughout: no dots need be added to his commentary.

But that paragon of excellence suffered martyrdom at his pupil's hands."

I can find no evidence in support of the last statement, which, indeed, is at variance with Badd'unf's exultant description¹ of his painful and unpleasant death⁸, though perhaps the swollen face and blackened lips, which his bitter enemy describes with unconcealed Schadenfreude, may have aroused suspicions of poison. The same fanatical writer gives a series of most uncomplimentary chronograms composed by the orthodox to commemorate the death of an arch-heretic, such as:

Faydi's miserable death in 1004/1595

فیضی بیدین چو مرد سالِ وفاتش فصیح

گفت سگی از جهان رفته بحالِ قبیح

"When infidel Faydī died, Faṣīḥ said as the date of his death, 'A dog departed from the world in a foul fashion.'"

The simplest of them all are "Faydī was a heretic" (بهود فیضی ملحدی), "he died like a dog-worshipper"

(چه سگ پرستی مرد), and "the rule of heresy broke" (قاعده الحاد شکست), all of which yield the required date A.H. 1004 (A.D. 1595). Badá'unf also says that, with a view to restoring his shattered religious reputation, he composed a commentary on the Qur'ān consisting entirely of undotted letters, adding unkindly that he was drunk and in a state of legal uncleanness when he wrote it. The author of the Majma'u'l-

¹ Muntakhabu'l-Tawārīkh, vol. iii, pp. 299-310, especially p. 300.

⁸ This took place on 10 Šafar, 1004 (October 15, 1595). See Rieu's Persian Catalogue, p. 450, where the chief sources are fully enumerated.

*Fusakd*¹ in alluding to this book (which he only knew by repute) says that the author "troubled himself to no purpose"¹ (کلفتی بیحاصل کشیده), and has no word of praise for his poems, on which the author of the Atash-kada has the tepid encomium that "they are not bad." The fullest and most appreciative account of him which I have met with is that given by Shibli Nu'mani in his Shirul-Ajatr. He composed a Khamsa ("Quintet") in imitation of Nizami, the titles of these five poems being Markaz-i-Adwary Sulaymdn u Bilqis, Nal u Daman (the most celebrated), Haft Kishwar, and Akbar-ndtna, but some of them remained incomplete. He also wrote many qasidas and ghazals and produced several translations from the Sanskrit. None of his verses quoted by Shibli appear to me so affecting as the following on the death of his child:

ای روشنی دیده روشن چگونه
 من بی تو تیره روز تو بی من چگونه
 ماتم سواست خانه من در فراق تو
 تو زیر خاک ساخته مسکن چگونه
 برخار و خس که بستر و بالین خواب تست
 ای یاسمین عذار سمن تن چگونه

Faydis verses
 on the death of his child.

"O brightness of my bright eyes, how art thou? Without thee my days are dark; without me how art thou?"

My house is a house of mourning in thine absence;
 thou hast made thine abode beneath the dust: how art thou?

The couch and pillow, of thy sleep is on thorns and brambles: O thou whose cheeks and body were as jasmine, how art thou?"

¹ Vol. ii, p. 26. This commentary was entitled, according to Shibli Nu'mani (he. cit., p. 65), Sawa'ti'u'l-Ilhatn, ² Vol. iii, pp. 31-81.

Faydi was a man of varied learning and a great lover of books. His library contained four thousand six hundred choice manuscripts, mostly autographs or copied during the authors' lifetimes¹. He was generous and hospitable, and amongst those who enjoyed his hospitality was 'Urfi of Shirdz, to whom we now turn.

'Urfi, whose proper name was Jamdlu'd-Din Muhammad and whose father was named Badru'd-Dm, was born and educated at Shiraz, but at an early age migrated to India, and, as already mentioned, attached himself to Faydi, with whom, however, he presently quarrelled. Bada'unf says³ that one day he called on Faydi and found him caressing a puppy, whereupon he enquired what the name of "the young master" {makhdicm-zddd) might be. "'Urfi," replied Faydi, to which 'Urfi promptly replied, "Mubdrak bashad!" which means "May it be fortunate!" but may be taken as alluding to Faydi's father Shaykh Mubdrak and as meaning, "It should be Mubdrak!"

'Urfi next won the favour of the Hakim Abu'l-Fath of Gildn⁸, by whom he was introduced to that great nobleman and patron of letters 'Abdu'r-Rahi'm, who succeeded to the title of Khan-khandn borne by his father Bayram Khan on the assassination of the latter in 968/1560-1. In due course he was presented to the Emperor Akbar himself, whom he accompanied on his march to Cashmere in 997/1588-9.

In spite of his opportunities and undoubted talents, 'Urfi's intolerable conceit and arrogance prevented him from being popular, and made him many enemies. Ridd-qulf Khan accords him but a brief notice', and observes that "the style of his poems is not admired by the people of this age." Criticism

Unamiable
character of 'Urfi.

¹ Shi'ru'l-Ajam hi, p. 50, and Muntakhabu't-Tawarikhy hi, p. 305.

² Muntakhabu't-Tawarikh, 111, p. 285.

³ Muntakhabu't-Tawarikh, iii, p. 167. He died in 997/1588-9.

⁴ Majma 'u'l-Fusahay vol. li, pp. 24-5.

and disparagement are, indeed, courted by a poet who could write¹:

نازیش سعدی بهُشْتِ عَالَمِ شِیوازِ اَرِچِه بود، گر نهمی دانست باشد مولد و مأوای من،

"Wherefore did Sa'diglory in a handiul of the earth of ShirEz
 If he did not know that it would be my birthplace and abode?"

Nor is this an isolated example of his conceit, for in like fashion he vaunts his superiority to Anwarf, Abu'l-Faraj, Khdqdnf, and other great Persian poets, and this unamiable practice may have conduced to his unpopularity amongst his compatriots, who do not readily tolerate such disparagement of the national heroes. In Turkey, on the other hand, he had, as we have seen, a great influence and reputation, and likewise in India, so that Shiblġ devotes to him fifty-two pages (pp. 82-133) of his Shi'ru'l-Ajam, rather more than he devotes to Faydi, and much more than he gives to any other of the seven poets he mentions in the third volume of his work. But even Shiblġ admits that his arrogance made him generally unpopular, a fact of which he was fully aware, as appears from the following poem², wherein he complains of the hypocritical sympathy of the so-called "friends" who came to visit him when he was confined to bed by a severe illness:

تن افتاد درین حال و دوستان فصیح،
 بدورِ بالَش و بستر ستاده چون منبر،
 یکی بریش گشددست و گج گنجد کردن،
 که روزگار وفا با که کرد جانِ پدر،
 بجاه و مالِ فرومایه دل نباید بست،
 کجاست دولتِ جمشید و نامِ اسکندر،

¹ Shi'ru'l'Ajam, iii, p. 88.

² Shi'ru'l'Ajam, iii, pp. 92-3.

یکی بنرمی آواز و گفتگوی حزین،
 کند شروع و کشد آستین بدیده* تر،
 که جان من همه را این رهست و باید رفت،
 تمام راه روانیم و دهر را کب بر،
 یکی به چرب زبانی سخن طراز شود،
 که ای وفات تو تاریخ انقلاب خبر،
 فراهم آی و پریشان مدار دل ز بهار،
 که نظرم و نشر تو من جمع میکنم یکسر،
 پس از نوشتن و تصحیح میکنم انشا،
 بمذعای تو دیباچه* چو درج کبر،
 چنانچه هستی فهرست دانش و فرهنگ،
 چنانچه هستی مجموعه* صفات و هنر،
 بنظرم و نشر در آویزم و فرو ریزم،
 اگرچه حصر کمال تو نیست حد بشر،
 خدای عز و جل صحتم دهد بینی،
 که این منافقان را چه آورم بر سر،

'Urfl on Job's " My body hath fallen into this state, and my eloquent friends stand like pulpits round my bed and pillow.

One draws his hand through his beard and cocks his neck, saying,
 ' O life of thy father ' To whom is fortune constant ?

One should not set one's heart on ignoble rank and wealth : where is the Empire of Jamshid and the name of Alexander ?'

Another, with soft voice and sad speech, begins, drawing his sleeve across his moist eyes .

' O my life ! All have this road by which they must depart: we are all travellers on the road, and time bears forward the riders.'

Another, adorning his speech with smooth words, says, ' O thou whose death is the date of the revolution of news (inqildb-i-khabar)!'

¹ I think the words must be taken as a chronogram, giving the date 986/1578-9, in which case this cannot, as Shibli suggests (foe. tit., p. 92), have been 'Urfl's last illness, since he did not die until 999/1590-1.

Collect thyself, and beware, let not thy heart be troubled, for I will with single purpose collect thy verse and prose.
 After copying and correcting it, I will compose an introduction like a casket of pearls in support of thy claims;
 An index of learning and culture such as thou art, a compendium of good qualities and talents such as thou art,
 I will pour forth, applying myself both to verse and prose, although it is not within the power of man to enumerate thy perfections!¹
 'May God, mighty and glorious, give me health again, and thou shalt see what wrath I will pour on the heads of these miserable hypocrites!'^{1"}

Space does not allow us to follow in detail Shiblī's interesting and exhaustive study of this poet, to whose verse he assigns six salient merits, such as "forceful diction" (زورِ کلام), new and original combinations of words, fine metaphors and comparisons, and continuity or congruity of topics (مسلسل مضامین). Except for a little-known prose treatise on Sūfism entitled Nafsiyya all his work was in verse, and included, according to Shiblī, two mathnawī poems in imitation of Nizāmī's Makhsanu'l-Asrār and Khusraw wa Shīrīn, and a Diwān, compiled in 996/1588, only three years before his death, containing 26 qaṣīdas, 270 ghazals, and 700 fragments and quatrains. The following chronogram gives the date of its compilation²:

این طرفه نکاتِ بحرِی و اعجازِی
 چون گشت مکمل برقمِ پروازی
 مجموعه طرازِ قدسِ تاریخش یافت
 اول دیوانِ عرفیِ شمرازی

One of his most famous qaṣīdas, given in the Kharrābāt (vol. i, pp. 169-174), is in praise of 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, and contains 181 verses. It begins:

¹ This final verse is, of course, spoken by the poet himself.

² Shīrū'l-'Ajām, vol. ii, p. 95.

جهان بگشتم و دردا که هیچ شهر و دیار ندیده‌ام که فروشند بخت در بازار

" I have wandered through the world, but alas! no city or country have I seen where they sell good fortune in the market!"

'Urfi is not, however, included amongst the Persian Shi'a poets to whom notices are consecrated in the Majdhu's-l-Miftinin.

Concerning the numerous Persians—theologians, scholars, philosophers and poets—attracted to Akbar's brilliant court, the third volume of Bada'unfs *Muntakhabu*7-
 Mr Vincent Smith's harsh judgment. Tawdrikh is a mine of information, but space will not permit us as a rule to go beyond the frontiers of the Persian Empire. The late Mr Vincent Smith in his otherwise admirable monograph on Akbar¹ is perhaps unduly hard on these poets when he says (pp. 415-6):

" The versifiers, or so-called poets, were extremely numerous. Abu'l-Fazl tells us that although Akbar did not care for them, ' thousands of poets are continually at court, and many among them have completed a diwdn (collection of artificial odes), or have written a mathnawi (composition in rhymed couplets).' The author then proceeds to enumerate and criticize ' the best among them,' numbering 59, who had been presented at court. He further names 15 others who had not been presented but had sent encomiums to His Majesty from various places in Persia². Abu'l-Fazl gives many extracts from the writings of the select 59, which I have read in their English dress, without finding a single sentiment worth quoting; although the extracts include passages from the works of his brother Fayzf (Faydi), the ' king of poets,' which Abu'l-Fazl considered to enshrine ' gems of thought.'"

The third volume of Bada'ums Muntakhabu't-Tawdrfkhy, which is entirely devoted to the biographies of the poets and men of learning who adorned Akbar's court, contains notices of 38 Shaykhs (religious leaders), 69 scholars, 15 philosophers and phy-

Valuable data furnished by Badl'unf.

¹ Akbar the Great Moguls 1542-1605 (Oxford, 1917).

² "Alini-i-Akbari" translated by H. Blochmann and H. S. Jarrett, Calcutta, 1873-1894 in 3 volumes, vol i, pp. 548, 611."

siafts, and no fewer than 167 poets, most of whom, however, though they wrote in Persian and were in many cases Persians by birth, are unknown even by name in Persia.

Amongst the most eminent names belonging, in part at any rate, to the century which we here conclude, are those of Shaykh Baha'u'd-Din'Amil, Mulla Muhsin-i-Fayd (Fay?) of Kashan, Mir Damad, and Mir Abu'l-Qasim-i-Findariskf, who, however, will be more suitably considered amongst the theologians or philosophers.

I I . Between AD. 1600 and 1700 (Ali. 1008-1111).

Four of the seven poets discussed at length by Shiblf in the third volume of his Shi'ru'l-Ajatr fall within the period indicated above. These are Nazfrf (d. 1021 /1612-13), JaHW:Amuli (d. 1036/1626-7), Abu Talib Kalim (d. 1061/ and Said (d. 1088/1677-8)^'Rida-qulf Khan in the enumeration of eminent contemporaries of the Safawf kings with which he concludes the supplementary eighth volume written by him in continuation of Mirkhwand's Rawdatu's-Safd mentions not one of these, but, in the period now under consideration, names only Zuhurf (d. 1024/1615) and Shifa'f (d. 1037/1627). Another poet ignored by both these writers but highly esteemed in Turkey, where, according to Gibb², "he continued for more than half a century to be the guiding star for the majority of Ottoman poets," being "deservedly famous for his marvellous ingenuity and fertility in the invention of fresh and picturesque images and similes," is Shawkat (or Shevket, according to the Turkish pronunciation) of Bukhara (d. 1107/1695-6). To these seven we may add, besides four or five⁸ who, though ¹ Other dates, e.g. 1080/1669-70, are also given. See Rieu, op. cit., p. 693.

² History of Ottoman Poetry, vol. 1, p. 130. See also vol. iv, p. 95, of the same.

⁸ Namely, Mir Damad, Shaykh Baha'u'd-Din, Abu'l-Qasim Findariski, Muhsin-i-Fayd and 'Abdu'r-Razzaq-i-Lfhij, called Fayyad.

they wrote occasional verse, were primarily philosophers, and will be discussed in connection with that class, the following six, who were, perhaps, a trifle more distinguished than their innumerable competitors: Sahabi of Astarabad (d. 1010/1601-2), Zulali of Khwansar (d. about 1024/1615), Jalal Asfr (d. 1049/1639-40), Qudsf of Mashhad (d. 1056/1646-7), Salim of Tihran (d. 1057/1647-8), and Amani of Mcizandaran (d. 1061/1651). Although I think that Rieu¹ goes too far when he describes Sa'ib as "by common consent the creator of a new style of poetry, and the greatest of modern Persian poets," he is without doubt the greatest of those who flourished in the seventeenth century of our era, and, I think, the only one deserving a detailed notice in this volume, notwithstanding Rida-qul Khan's remark that "he had a strange style in the poetic art which is not now admired²."

Here follows a list of these seventeen poets, arranged chronologically according to the dates of their deaths, with brief references to the authorities who may be consulted for further particulars concerning them. These are, besides Rieu's incomparable Persian Catalogue, Shibli's Shi'ru'l-'Ajam, vol. iii (sh.), the Atash-kada (A. K.), the Haft Iqlim (H. L., available in manuscript only), the Rawdatu'l-fanndt (R. /.), the Rawdatu's-Safa (R. S.), the Majma'u'l-Fusahd (M. F.), and the Riyddu'l-'Arifin (R. <A.).

(1) Sahabi of Astardbad (d. 1010/1601-2). Rieu, p. 672; A.K., pp. 141-2, and H./., s.v. Astarabad in both; M,F., ii, p. 21; R. 'A., pp. 85-6. He spent forty years of his life in tending the holy shrine of Najaf, and composed, besides gkazals, many quatrains, of which 6000 are said to be extant.

Sah4bf of Astdrabad
(d. 1010/1601-2).

¹ Persian Catalogue, p. 693.

² Majma'u'l-Fusahd, vol. II, p. 24, باری در طریق شاعری طرزى غریب داشته که اکنون پسندیده نیست.

(2) Naziri of Nishapur (d. 1021/1612-3). Rieu, pp. 817-8; Sh. iii, pp. 134-64; A.K., pp. 131-3; H.I., s.v. Nf shapur (a long notice); M. F., ii, pp. 48-9; R. 'A., pp. 236-7. The last thirty years of his life were spent in India, chiefly at Ahmadabad in Gujerat, where he died. He was one of the many poets who benefited by the bounty of 'Abdu'r-Rahim Khan-khdndn, who provided him with money to perform the pilgrimage to Mecca in 1002/1593-4, in response to a qasida beginning:

ز هنر بنمود نگنجم چو بخرم می مغانی
 بدرد لباس بر تن چو بجوشدم معانی
 همه عیش این جهانی بعنایت تو دیدم
 چه عجب اگر بیایم ز تو زاد آنجهانی

" Through genius I cannot contain myself, like the Magian wine in the jar; the very garments are rent on my body when my ideas ferment.

Through thy beneficence I experienced all the pleasure of this world: what wonder if through thee [also] I should obtain provision for the other world ? "

In matters of religion he was something of a fanatic, and wrote verses attacking " the heretic " Abu'1-Fadl. He also wrote verses in praise of tobacco, some of which are quoted by Shibli (p. 134).

(3) Zulali of Khwansar (d. 1024/1615). Rieu, pp. 677-8; H. I., s.v. Khwinscir (a long notice). He was the panegyrist of Mir Damid, and composed seven mathnawis, of which that on Mahmud and Ayaz (begun in 1001/1592-3, and concluded in 1024/1615), shortly before his death, is the most popular. Two others mentioned by Rieu are " the Wine-Tavern " (May-khdnd), and " the Mote and the Sun " (Dharra u Khurshid).

Zuklali of Khwansar (d. circ. 1034/1615)

(4) zuhuri of Turshiz (d. 1024/1615, murdered in an afiray in the Deccan together with his fellow-poet and father-in-law Malik of Qum). Rieu, pp. 678-9; Zuhuri of Turshiz (d. 1024/1615). A. K., pp. 68-70; R. S., at end of vol. viii. He is, as Rieu observes, little known in Persia, though much admired in India, especially as a writer of extremely florid prose. The author of the A. K. says that in his opinion this poet's Sdqi-ndma ("Book of the Cup-bearer") has no great beauty, in spite of the fame which it enjoys.

(5) Baha'u'd-Din 'Amili, commonly called Shaykh-i-Baha'i (d. 1030/1620-1), was primarily a theologian, and to some extent a philosopher and mathematician Shaykh pahA'u-'d-Din 'Anulf (d. 1030/1620-1). but he wrote at least two short mathnawi poems, entitled respectively Nan u Halwd ("Bread and Sweetmeats") and Shir u Shakkar ("Milk and Sugar"). Extracts from both are given in the M. F. (vol. ii, pp. 8-10), besides a few ghazals and quatrains, and also in the R. ^{A_y}, pp. 45-9. Apart from his mathematical and astronomical treatises, his best-known prose work is the Kaskkul (or "Beggar's Bowl"), which has been printed at Buldq and lithographed in Persia. This work, though written in Arabic, contains many Persian poetical citations, which, however, are omitted in the Egyptian edition. The famous mujtahid Mulla Muhammad Taqi-i-Majlisi (d. 1070/1659-1660) was one of the most eminent of his disciples.

(6) Talib-i-Amuli (d. 1036/1626-7). Rieu, p. 679; Sh. iii, pp. 165-188; A.K., pp. 155-6, where it is said that "he had a peculiar style in verse which is not sought after by eloquent poets." In India, whither he emigrated in early life, he was so highly appreciated that Jahangir made him his poet-laureate (Malikush-Shu'ard) in 1028/1619. He was far from modest, for he boasts that before he reached his twentieth year he had mastered seven sciences¹:

Talib of Amul (d. 1036/1626-7).

پا بر دومین پایه^۱ اوج عشراتم^۲
 و اینک عددِ فخر از آلف زیادست^۳
 بر هندسه و منطقی و هیت و حکمت^۴
 دستی است مرا کش یدِ بیضا ز عبادست^۵
 وین جمله چو طی شد نمکین علمِ حقیقت^۶
 کاستارِ علومست برین جمله مزادست^۷
 در سلسله^۸ وصفِ خطِ این بس که ز کلام^۹
 هر نقطه سویدای دلِ اهلِ سوادست^{۱۰}
 پوشم نسبِ شعر چو دانه که تو دانی^{۱۱}
 کاین پایه مرا ثامنِ این سبع شادست^{۱۲}

Talib's " My foot is on the second step of the zenith of the deaccomplishsh. cadesj and behold the number of my accomplishments ments exceeds the thousands !

In mathematics, logic, astronomy and philosophy I enjoy a proficiency which is conspicuous² amongst mankind

When all these are traversed the savoury knowledge of the Truth³, which is the Master of the Sciences, is added to the sum total.

In the concatenated description of my writing this is enough, that every dot from my pen is the heart's core of men of letters⁴.

I put on the attribute of poetry, for I know that thou knowest that this step is to me the eighth of these 'seven severe ones.'⁵

In the following quatrain, also cited by Shibli (p. 168), he alludes to his proposed journey to India and bids himself

¹ The verses are given by Shibli, op. cit., p. 166.

² Literally " which has the White Hand," in allusion to one of the miracles of Moses.

³ That is, Suffism, as explained by Shibli.

⁴ The word-play between suwaydd and sawdd cannot be reproduced in translation.

⁵ This expression occurs in Qur'dn xii, 48, where it denotes the " seven lean years,"

"leave his black (i.e. bad) luck in Persia, because no one would take a Hindú as a present to India":

طالب گلِ این چمن بیستان بگذار
 بگذار که می شوی پریشان بگذار
 هندو نبرد تحفه کسی جانب هد
 بختِ سیه خویش به ایران بگذار

He had an elder sister to whom he was deeply attached and after a long separation she came from Persia to Ágra to see him. He thereupon sought leave of absence from the Emperor Jahángír in the following verses¹:

صاحبِ ذرّه پرورا عرضی، بزبانِ سخن ورست مرا
 پیر همشیره ایست غم خوارم، که باو مهرِ مادرست مرا
 چارده سال بلکه بیش گذشت، کز نظر دور منظرست مرا
 دور کشتم ز خدمتش بعراق، وین گنه جرمِ منکرست مرا
 او نیاورد تابِ دوری من، که بهادر برابرست مرا
 آمد اینک بآکره وز شوقش، دل طهان چون کبوترست مرا
 می کند دل بسوی او آهنگ، چه کنر شوق رهبرست مرا گر شود رخصتِ زیارتِ او، به جهانی برابرست مرا

"O Master, Patron of the humble²! I have a representation [to make] in eloquent language.

I have an old and sympathetic sister, who entertains for me a mother's love.

Fourteen years or more have passed since my eyes were parted from the sight of her face.

I was removed from her service in 'Irāq, and this sin is a grievous fault of mine.

¹ Shiblī, op. cit., pp. 179-180.

² Dharra means a mote, then metaphorically any very small thing or person, so that dharra-parwar is equivalent to the common Indian gharib-parwar, "protector of the poor."

She could not bear to remain far from me, for she is as a mother to me.
Lo, she hath come to Agra, and in longing for her my heart flutters like a pigeon.

My heart craves after her: what can I do? Yearning impels me on the road.

If leave should be granted me to visit her, it would be worth a world to me."

Of loSfe-poems there are only too many in Persian, but poems such as this, testifying to deep and sincere family affection, are rare enough to make them worthy of record'

(7) Shifa'l (d. 1037/1627). There exists in the British Museum (Or. 1372, f. 7^a) a portrait of this poet, as well as one of his satires, entitled *Sizdah-band*¹ (Add. 12,560, ff. 134-140): see Rieu, pp. 786 and 822. (d. 1037/1627).

I cannot find in my manuscript of the Tdrikh-i-Alam-drd-yi-Abbdsi, either amongst the poets or the physicians of the court of Shah 'Abbds, the notice of him to which Rieu refers, but there is a long account of him in M. F. (vol. ii, pp. 21-23) and in the R. 'A. of the same author (pp. 213-218), as well as in A.K. (pp. 168-9). His proper name was Hakfm (Doctor) Sharafu'd-Din Hasan, and he was court-physician and boon companion to Shdh 'Abbeis the Great. Rida-qulf Khdn says that "his medicine eclipsed his scholarship, as his poetry eclipsed his medicine" :

فضلِ حکیمِ را طبابت و شاعریِ محبوب داشته

Besides satires and odes he composed a mathnawi poem entitled Namakaan-i-Haqiqat in imitation of SanaTs Hadi-qatii l-Haqiqat.

(8) Mir Muhammad Bdqir-i-Dama'd of Astarabad (d. 1040/1630-1). The title Ddntdd ("Son-in-law") really applies to his father, who was the son-in-law of the celebrated mujtahid Shaykh 'Ali ibn 'AbduVAL al-'Amilf. Mir Damad, who wrote

Mir Baqir-i-Damad
(d. 1040/1630-1).

¹ So called, I suppose, because it contains 13 strophes.

SHIRĀ'Ī, POET AND PHYSICIAN

1930 . 9 . 17 - 0298[2] (Brit. Mus.)

Dr. Shirā'i

verse under the pen-name of Ishrdq, was more notable as a theologian and philosopher than as a poet. See Rieu, p. 835; M.F., ii, p. 7; R.'A., pp. 166-7; A.K., P. 159. There are long notices of him in the Rawddtu' l-Janndt (pp. 114-116), and in the Tdrikh-i-Alam-dr-d-yi-Abbdsi, written in 1025/1616, while he was still living. He is there described as skilled in most of the sciences, especially philosophy, philology, mathematics, medicine, jurisprudence, exegesis and tradition, and about a dozen of his prose works are mentioned. He was one of the teachers of the great philosopher Mulla Sadra of Shiraz.

(9) Mir Abu'l-Qasim-i-Findariski (d. about 1050/1640-1) was also more notable as a philosopher than as a poet, but is mentioned in M. F., vol. ii, pp. 6-7; R. 'A., pp. 165-6; A. K., pp. 143-4; and Rieu, pp 815-816. One poem of his, written in imitation of Nasir-i-Khusraw, is cited in all the tadhkiras, and is therefore, presumably, his best known if not his best production. It begins :

چرخ با این اخترانِ نغزو خوش زیباستی
 صورتی در زیر دارد هرچه بر بالاستی
 صورتِ زیرین اگر با نردبانِ معرفت
 بر رود بالا همان با اصلِ خود یکتاستی
 این سخن را در نیابد هیچ فهمِ ظاهری گر ابو نصرستی و گر بو علی سیناستی

"The heaven with these fair and pleasant stars should be beautiful;
 it hath an aspect beneath, whatever there may be above.

If this lower aspect should ascend by the ladder of knowledge, it would indeed be at one with its original.

No exoteric understanding can comprehend this speech, though it be Abu Nasr [al-Farab] or Abu 'Alf [Ibn] Sfna (Avicenna)"

Abul-Qasim was extraordinarily careless of appearances, dressing like a darwish, avoiding the society of the rich and the respectable, and associating with disreputable vagabonds. One day Shah 'Abbas, intending to rebuke him for keeping such low company, said to him, 'I hear that certain students cultivate the society of vagabonds and look on at their degrading diversions.' "I move constantly in those circles," replied Mir Abu'l-Qasim, "but I have never seen any of the students there." He made a journey to India, and there, according to the *Dabistdn*¹, came under the influence of certain disciples of Adhar Kay wan and imbibed Zoroastrian and Hindu or Buddhist ideas which led him to declare that he would never perform the pilgrimage to Mecca, since it would involve his taking the life of an innocent animal. Though his attainments are rated high by Rida-qul Khdn, very meagre details are given concerning his life; perhaps because, while more a philosopher than a poet, and more a darwish than a philosopher, he does not exactly fall into any one of these three classes, and is consequently apt to be omitted from the special biographies of each.

Among the better-known minor poets of this period are Jalal Asir (d. 1049/1639-40), Qudsf (d. 1056/1646-7), Salim of Tihiran (d. 1057/1647-8), Abu Talib.Kalfm and Amanf of Mdzandaran (both died in 1061/1651), Muhammad Tahir Wahid (dTTbout 1120/1708-9), and Shawkat of Bukhara (d. 1107/1695-6). Besides Sa'ib (d. 1088/1677-8), the greatest of them all, only the fourth, the sixth and the last of these demand any separate notice.

(10) Abu Tah'b Kalim (d. 1061/1651) was born at Hama-dan, but, until he went to India, lived chiefly at Kdshdn (whence he is often described as "Kdshanf") and Shiraz. Rida-qul Khan (M.F., ii, & 28) gives a very meagre notice of him, but Shiblfi (Shi'ru'l'-'Aiam, iii, pp. 205-230) discusses him at some length.

Abu Talib Kalim
(d. 1061/1651)

¹ Shea and Trover's translation, vol. 1, pp. 140-1.

About 1028/1619 he paid a visit to his native country, but after remaining there for about two years, he again returned to India, where he became poet-laureate to Shah Jahan. He accompanied that monarch to Cashmere and was so charmed with that country that he remained there until his death. He was a man of genial disposition, free from jealousy, and consequently popular with his fellow-poets, of whom Sa'ib and Mir Ma'sum were his special friends, so that Sa'ib says:

بغیر صائب و معصوم نکته سنج و کلیم
 دیگر که ز اهل سخن مهربان یکدگرند

"Except Sa'ib, the epigrammatic Ma'sim, and Kalim, who of all the poets are kind to one another?"

When the poet Malik of Qum died, Abu Talib composed the following verses giving the date of his death:

مَلِكِ آن پادشاه مُلْكِ معنی، که نامش سَکّه نقد سخن بود،
 چنان آفاق گیر از مُلْكِ معنی، که حد ملکش از قمر تا دکن بود،
 بجُستَرِ مالِ تاریخش ز ایام، بگفتا او سرِ اهل سخن بود،

"Malik, that king of the realm of ideas, whose name is stamped on the coin¹ of poetry,

So enlarged the horizons of this realm of ideas that the frontiers of his domains extended from Qum to the Deccan

I sought for the date of the year [of his death] from the days they said 'He was the chief of the Masters of Speech'" (6 Sar-i-ahli-t-sukhun bud= 1025/1616)².

Most of the Persian poets who went to India to seek a Dislike of most of the Persian poets for India.

fortune, or at least a livelihood, had, according to Shibli², nothing but evil to say of the country, but Kalim speaks of it with appreciation⁸:

¹ Malik is, of course, the Arabic equivalent of Pddishdh, "king," and one of the two distinctive symbols of kingship is the imposition of the royal name on the current coin of the realm.

² Ski'ru'l-'Ajam, 111, p. 209

⁸ He also learned more of the vernacular than most of his countrymen. See a poem full of Hindi words cited by Shibli (pp. at, p. 211).

توان بهشتِ دودِ گلشنِ باینِ معنی،

که هر که رفت ازین بوستان پشیمان شد!

"One can call it the second Paradise, in this sense, that whoever quits this garden departs with regret."

On one occasion the Sultan of Turkey wrote a letter to the Emperor Shah Jahan reproaching him with arrogance in calling himself by this title, which means "King of the World/" when he was in reality only king of India. Kalīm justified his patron in the following verse:

هند و جهان ز روی عددِ هر دو چون یکست،

شمارا خطابِ شاهِ جهانی مبرهن است!

"Since both Hind (India) and Jahān (world) are numerically identical¹, the right of the king to be called 'King of the World' [and not merely 'King of India'] is demonstrated."

Shiblī discusses Kalīm's merits very fully, and cites many of his verses to illustrate them. He includes amongst them especially novelty of topics (مضمونِ آفرینی), original conceits (خیالِ بندی), and aptness of illustration (مثالیّه). In this last respect, illustrated by the following amongst other verses, Kalīm resembles the more famous Ṣā'ib:

روزگار اندر کمینِ بختِ ماست، دزدِ دایمِ در پیِ خوابیده است!

"Fate sets an ambushade against our luck the thief always pursues the sleeper²."

دل گمان دارد که پوشیده است رازِ عشق را!

شمع را فانوسِ پندارد که پنهان کرده است!

"The heart imagines that it has hidden the secret of love: the lantern

از خاک بر گرفته^۱ دوران چو نی سوار^۲

دایم پیاده رفت اگرچه سوار شد^۳

"He who has been raised up from the dust by fortune, like the rider of the hobby-horse, always goes on foot, although he is mounted."

از هنر حالِ خرابم تشد اصلاح پذیر^۴

همچو ویرانه که از گنجِ خود آباد نشد^۵

"My desolate state is not mended by my virtues, just like the ruin, which does not prosper through its treasure¹."

سفله از قوربِ بزرگان نکند کسبِ شرف^۶

رشته پُر قیمت از آمیزشِ گوهر نشود^۷

"The mean man does not acquire nobility by proximity to the great. The thread does not become precious through its connection with the pearls."

دستِ هر کس را بسانِ سبزه بوسیدم چه سود^۸

هیچ کس نکشود آخر عقده^۹ کار مرا^{۱۰}

"What profits it that I, like the rosary, kissed the hands of all? After all, no one loosed the knots of my affair"

با من آمیزشِ او الفتِ موجست و کنار^{۱۱}

دمدم با من و پیوسته گریزان از من^{۱۲}

"Her converse with me is as the association of the wave and the shore, Ever with me, yet ever fleeing from me"

چو هست قدرت دست و دلِ توانگر نیست^{۱۳}

صدف کشاده کف است آن زمان که گوهر نیست^{۱۴}

"Where there is power, the hand and heart are not able [to use it]: The oyster-shell opens its palm when there is no pearl therein."

(This last verse is very similar to one by Sa'ib which runs شکوفه با ثمر هرگز نگرود جمع در یک جا^{۱۵}

مُحالست آنکه باهم نعمت و دندان شود پیدا^{۱۶}

"Flowers and fruit are never found together in one place: it is impossible that teeth and delicacies should exist simultaneously.")

¹ Treasures are popularly supposed to be found in ruins.

واصل ز حرفِ چون و چهل بسته است لب
چون ره تمام گشت جرس بی زبان شود¹

¹ He who has reached [the goal] shuts his lips on 'Why?' and 'Wherefore?'

When the journey is finished the [camel-]bell becomes tongueless."

گر بقسمت قانعی بیش و کمِ دنیا یکیست تشنه چون يك جرعه خواهد گوزه و دریا یکیست

"If thou art satisfied with thy portion, the more or less of the world is the same :

When the thirsty man requires but one draught, the pitcher and the ocean are alike."

ما ز آغاز و ز انجامِ جهان بیخبریم اول و آخرِ این کُنه کتاب افتاده است

"We are without knowledge of the beginning and end of the world :
the first and last [pages] of this ancient book have fallen out "

زود رفت آنکه ز اسرارِ جهان آگه شد از دبستانِ هرود هرکه سبقِ روشن کرد

"He who becomes acquainted with the mysteries of the world soon departs :

Whoever does his work brilliantly leaves the school."

The following ode, cited by Shibl¹, is typical of Kalīm, and with it we may conclude this brief notice :

پیری رسید و مستی طبعِ جوان گذشت
ضعفِ تن از تحملِ رطلِ گران گذشت

وضعِ زمانه قایلِ دیدنِ دو باره نیست
رو پس نکرد هرکه ازین خاکدان گذشت

از دست بُردِ حسنِ تو بر لشکرِ بهار
يك نمره خونِ گل ز سرِ ارغوان گذشت

¹ Shi'ru'l-'Ajam, vol. iii, p. 229.

طبعی بهر رسان که بسازی بهایی
 یا همتی که از سرِ عالم توان گذشت
 در کیشِ ما تجردِ عنقا تمام نیست
 در فکرِ نام ماند اگر از نشان گذشت
 بی دیده راه اگر نتوان رفت پس چرا
 چشم از جهان چو بستی ازو می توان گذشت
 بدنامی حیات دو روزی نبود بیش
 آن هر کلیم با تو بگویم چسان گذشت
 يك روز صرفِ بستن دل شد باین و آن روزی دگر بکندن دل زین و آن گذشت

" Old age hath come, and the exuberance of the youthful temperament hath departed;

The weakness of the body can no longer support the heavy [wine-] cup.

The way of the world is not worth seeing a second time:

Whoever passes from this dust-heap looks not back

Through the triumph of thy beauty over the army of Spring

The blood of the roses hath risen a fathom above the top of the Judas-tree.

Acquire such a disposition that thou canst get on with the whole world,

Or such magnanimity that thou canst dispense with the world.

According to our creed the detachment of the 'Anqd' is not complete,

For, though it retains no sign, it continues to think of name¹.

If one cannot travel the road without sight, then how Canst thou forsake the world when thou hast closed thine eyes to it?

The ill repute of Life endureth no more than two days:

O Kalim, I will tell thee how these too passed :

One day was spent in attaching the heart to this and that,

And another day in detaching it from this and that."

¹ The mythical bird called in Arabic 'angd' and in Persian 'simurgh' is often spoken of as "having name but not substance" (mawjudu'l-ism, mafquidu'l-jism).

(I I) Muhammad Tahir Wahid of Qazwin (d. 1120/1708-9)' was an industrious rather than a great poet: he is said by Ridd-qulf Khdn² to have left a Diwdn containing 90,000 verses, which, however, were for the most part "tasteless " {maldhati na-ddsht} and of which only six are quoted as " the best of his poetry," amongst them the following quatrain testifying to his Shi'a proclivities:

از مهر علی طینتِ هر کس که سرشت¹
 هر چند بود همیشه در دیر و کنشت¹
 در دوزخ اگر در آوندش بمثل¹
 جا گرم نکرده میسرندش بیشت¹

" Whosoever⁵ s nature is leavened with the love of 'All,
 Though he be the constant frequenter of church or synagogue,
 Even if, for example, they should bring him into Hell
 They would bear him thence to Paradise ere his place there had been heated "

The main facts of Wahid's life are given by Rieu⁸. He was secretary to two successive Prime Ministers of Persia, Mirza" Taqiyyu'd-Din Muhammad and Khalfia Sultcin. ^Tn 1055/1645-6 he was appointed court-historiographer Shall 'Abbds I I, became a Minister in 1101 '1689-90, re tired eighteen years later into private life, and died about 1120/1708-9. Five manuscripts of his historical monograph are described by Rieu, one of which (Or. 2940) comes down to the twenty-second year of the reign, 1073-4/1663. The remark of the Atash-kada, that these poems were only praised on account of the author's rank, is probably justified. He was, according to Ethel a friend of the poet Sa'ib.

¹ The date of his death is uncertain. See Rieu's Persian Supplement, pp. 40-41, and Ethe's India Office Catalogue of Persian MSS > cols. 900-1.

¹ M. F., ii, p. 50.

¹ Persian Catalogue, pp. 189-190, and the Supplement cited in the last note but one.

(12) Shawkat¹ of Bukhara (d. 1107/1695-6) is at the present day almost unknown in Persia. He is not even mentioned in the Majmctu'l-Fusahd and but briefly in the Riydditl-Arifin, where only two of his verses are cited, together with the description of his eccentric demeanour given by his contemporary Shaykh Muhammad 'Alf Lahiji, called Hazfn, who saw him wandering about in mid-winter, bare-headed and bare-footed, with a piece of felt (namad-pdrd) over his shoulders and his head covered with snow, which he did not trouble to shake off. Shawkat only deserves mention because of the reputation which he enjoys in Turkey and the influence which he exerted over Turkish poetry, an influence which Gibb emphasizes in several places in his *History of Ottoman Poetry*².

(13) Sa'ib of Tabriz³ (d. 1088/1677-8) is considered by Shih⁴ as the last great Persian poet, superior in originality to Qa'ani the greatest and most famous of the moderns, whom he regards as a mere imitator of Farrukhi and Minuchihrf. Rida-quK Khdn, fan the other hand⁵, says that Sa'ib has "a strange method in the poet's path, which is not now admired." He is, in short, like 'Urfi, one of those poets who, while greatly esteemed in Turkey and India, are without honour in their own country. I have already expressed⁶ my own personal opinion as to his high merits.

¹ See Rieu's Persian Cat., p. 698; Ethel's India Office Persian Cat., cols. 891-2.

² Vol. 1, p. 130; vol. iv, pp. 96-7, 185. Cf. p. 250 supra.

³ Though he was born in Tabriz he was educated and grew up in Isfahan, and is therefore often called "of Isfahan."

⁴ Shi'ru'-Ajam, vol. ni, p. 189.

⁵ M. F., vol. ii, p. 24. Cf. p. 251, n. 2 supra. ⁶ Pp. 164-5 supra.

According to the *Atash-kada*¹, Sa'ib, whose proper name was Mirza Muhammad 'Ali, was born in the village of 'Abbcis-dbad near Isfahan, whither his father's family had been transferred from Tabriz by Shah 'Abbas. Having completed his studies in Isfahan, he visited Dihlf and other cities of India at an early age, certainly before 1039/1629-30, and was patronized by Zafar Khan and other nobles. He had only spent two years there, however, when his father, though seventy years of age, followed him to India in order to induce him to return home, for which journey he sought permission from his patron Zafar Khan in the following verses³:

شش سال بیش رفت که از اصفهان بهند
 افتاده است توسنِ عزمِ مرا گذار
 آورده است جذبه² گستاخِ شوقِ من
 از اصفهان بآکره و لاهورش اشکبار
 افتاد ساله والدِ پیرست ننده را
 گز تربیت بود بمنش حقّی بی شمار
 ز آن پیشتر گز آکره بمعموره² دکن
 آید عنان گسسته تر از سیل بیقرار
 این راه دور را ز سرِ شوقِ طی کند
 با قامت خمیده و با پیکرِ نزار
 دارم امیدِ رخصتی از آستانِ تو
 ای آستانِ کعبه² امیدِ روزگار
 مقصودِ او ز آمدنش بُردنِ منست
 لبرِ بحرِ رخصتِ من کن گهرِ نثار
 با جبهه² کشاده تر از آفتابِ صبح
 دستِ دعا ببدرقه² راهِ من بر آر

¹ Bombay lith. 1277/1860-I, pp. 30-31.

² Shibli's Shi'ar-i-Ajam, vol. iii, p. 194.

Autograph of the poet Šā'ib

" More than six years' have passed since the passage of the steed of my resolve from Isfahan to India took place.

The bold attraction of my longing has brought him weeping from Isfahan to Agra and Lahore.

I your servant have an aged father seventy years old, who has countless claims upon me by reason of the education [he gave me].

Before he comes from Agra to the flourishing land of the Deccan with reins looser than the restless torrent,

And eagerly traverses this far road with bent body and feeble form, I hope for permission from thy threshold, O thou whose threshold is the Ka'ba of the age's hopes!

His object in coming is to take me hence, therefore cause thy lips to scatter pearls [of speech] by [uttering] the word of permission,

And, with a forehead more open than the morning sun, raise thy hand in prayer to speed me on my way "

On his return to Isfahán, Šá'ib became poet-laureate to Sháh 'Abbás II, but had the misfortune to offend his successor Sulaymán. He died in Isfahán after an apparently uneventful life in 1080/1669-70. The words "Šá'ib found death" (صائب وفات یافت) give the date of his decease².

Amongst the merits ascribed to Šá'ib by Shibli is an appreciation of Indian poets rare with the Persians. Shibli quotes thirteen verses in which Šá'ib cites with approval, by way of tadmín or "insertion," the words of Faydí, Malúk, Táhib-i-Ámulí, Naw'í, Awhadí, Shawqí, Fathí, Shápúr, Mutí', Awjí, Adham, Hádhiq and Ráqim. In the following verses he deprecates the jealousy which too often characterizes rival singers :

خوش آن گروه که مستِ بیانِ یكدگرند،
ز خوشِ فکرِ مِیِ ارغوانِ یكدگرند،
نمی زنند بسنگِ شکستِ گوهرِ هم،
پیِ رواجِ متاعِ دکانِ یكدگرند،

¹ If, as Shibli says, these verses were composed in or about 1041/1631-2, Šá'ib must have come to India about 1035/1625-6.

² These words, however, yield the number 1081, not 1080.

زنند هر سرِ هر گُل ز مصرع رنگین
 ز فکر تازه کُل بوستانِ یکدگرند
 سخن تراش چو کردند تیغِ الهاسند
 زند چو طبع بگندی فسانِ یکدگرند
 بغیر صائب و معصوم نکته سنج و کلیم
 دگر که ز اهل سخن مهربان یکدگرند

"Happy that company who are intoxicated with each other's speech; who, through the fermentation of thought, are each other's red wine.

They do not break on the stone [of criticism] one another's pearls [i.e. verses], but rather strive to give currency to the wares of one another's shops.

They pelt one another with tender-hued verses as with roses, with fresh ideas they become the flowers of one another's gardens.

When they shape their poetry it is with blades like diamonds, and when their genius tends to become blunted, they are each other's whetstones.

Except Sa'ib, the epigrammatic Ma'sum, and Kalim, who of all the poets are kind to one another¹?"

Sa'ib was a great admirer of Hdib, and is also complimentary to his masters Rukna and Shifa'f. Of the latter he says

"Who will care for poetry in Isfahan, O Sa'ib,

Now that Shifa'f, whose discerning hand was on the pulse of poetry, is no more?"

He puts Nazfrf not only above himself but above 'Urfi. "So far," says Shiblf², "no objection can be made, but it is a pity that, yielding to popular approbation and fame, he makes himself also the panegyrist of Zuhurf and Jalal-i-

Asfr.... This was the first step in bad taste, which finally established a high road, so that in time people came to bow down before the poetry of Nasir 'Ali, Bf-dil, and Shawkat of Bukhara. 'The edifice of wrong-doing was at first small in the world, but whoever came added thereunto¹.'

Though Sa'ib tried his hand at all kinds of poetry, it was in the ode (ghazal) that he excelled. He was a ready wit. One of his pupils once composed the following absurd hemistich:

از شیشه بی می می بی شیشه طلب کن

"Seek for the bottleless wine from the wmeless bottle."

Sa'ib immediately canned it with the following:

حقرا ز دل خالی از اندیشه طلب کن

"Seek for the truth from the heart which is empty of thought."

On another occasion one of his friends produced the following meaningless hemistich and apparently invited Sa'ib to complete the verse and give it a meaning:

دویدن رفتن استادن نشستن خفتن و مُردن

Sa'ib immediately prefixed the following hemistich:

بقدر هر سکون راحت بود بنگر تفاوت را so that the completed verse runs in translation:

"Peace is in proportion to every pause: observe the difference between
'to run, to walk, to stand, to sit, to he, to die."

Sa'ib was a very careful student of the works of his predecessors, both ancient and modern, and himself compiled a great anthology of their best verses, of which, according to Shibli^a, a manuscript exists at Haydar-abad in the Deccan, and which appears to have been utilized by Walih of Daghistan and other tadAkira-writers. Shibli compares Sa'ib to Abu Tammam, the compiler of the great anthology of Arabic poetry called the Haridsa, inasmuch as his taste is shown even more in his selective than in his creative powers. The following are the verses from Sa'ib by Sa'ib selected from the Kharrdbdt and copied into a note-book many years ago¹.

¹ This is a quotation from the Guhstdn of Sa'di (ed. Platts, p. 32).

² Op. tit. p. 201.

They pleased me when I was a beginner, they still please me, and I hope that some of them at any rate may please my readers.

چو شد زهر عادت مضرت نبخشد ' بهرگ آشنا کن بتدریج جان را'

"When poison becomes a habit it ceases to injure. make thy soul gradually acquainted with death."

ریشه نخل کهن سال از جوان افزونترست'

بیشتر دلبستگی باشد بدنيا پیرا'

"The roots of the aged palm-tree exceed those of the young one; the old have the greater attachment to the world "

هر سری دارد درین بازار سودائی دگر'

هر کسی بندد بآئین دگر دستار را'

"In this market every head has a different fancy - everyone winds his turban in a different fashion."

تهی دستان قسمت را چه سود از رهبر کامل'

که خضر از آب حیوان تشنه باز آرد سگند را'

"What profit accrues from a perfect guide to those whom Fate hath left empty-handed, for even Khidr brings back Alexander athirst from the Water of Life?"

سبحه بر کف توبه بر لب دل پر از شوق گناه'

معصیت را خنده می آید ز استغفار ما'

"The rosary in the hand, repentance on the lips, and the heart full of sinful longings—sin itself laughs at our repentance!"

¹ See pp. 164-5 supra. My copy of these selected verses was completed on Sept 4, 1885.

مقامِ کوهرِ شهوار در کنجینه می باید،

بیاض از سینه باید ساخت شعرِ انتخابی را،

"The place of a royal pearl should be in a treasury: one should make one's breast the common-place book for chosen verses."

گفتگوی کُفر و دین آخر یکجا می‌کشد،

خواب یک خوابست اما مختلف تعبیرها،

"All this talk of infidelity and religion finally leads to one place:
The dream is the same dream, only the interpretations differ."

از تیرِ آه مظلوم ظالمِ امان نیابد،

پیش از نشانه خیزد از دل فغان کمان را،

"The tyrant finds no security against the arrows of the victim's sighs Groans arise from the heart of the bow before [they arise from] the target."

چاره نا خوشی وضع جهان بیخبریست،

اوست بیدار که در خواب گرانست اینجا،

"The cure for the unpleasant constitution of the world is to ignore it:
Here he is awake who is plunged in heavy sleep."

شگوفه با ثمر هرگز نگرود جمع در یکجا،

مُحالست آنکه با هر نعمت و دندان شود پیدا،

"Flowers and fruit are never combined in one place; it is impossible that teeth and delicacies should exist simultaneously."

ده در شود کشاده اگر بسته شد دری،

انگشت ترجمانِ زبان است لال را،

"Ten doors are opened if one door be shut. the finger is the interpreter of the dumb man's tongue."

ساده لوحان زود می‌گیرند رنگِ هم‌نشین،

صحبتِ طوطی سخنور می‌کند آئینه را،

"The simple-minded quickly acquire the colour of their companions.
The conversation of the parrot makes the mirror [seem to] speak."

گردش اقبال دارد لغزش ادب‌ها،

يك دو خطوه باز رفتن پر دهد و قابرا،

"The march of good fortune has backward slips : to retreat one or two paces gives wings to the jumper."

موج از حقیقتِ کُهرِ بهم غافلست،

حادث چگونه درک نماید قدیمرا،

"The wave is ignorant of the true nature of the sea : how can the Temporal comprehend the Eternal?"

معیارِ دوستانِ دغل روز حاجتست،

قرضی بوسه تجربه از دوستان طلب،

"The touchstone of false friends is the day of need : by way of proof, ask a loan from your friends"

در میانِ اهل دنیا مردمِ دانا غریب،

همچو انگشتِ شهادت در کفِ لُرسا غریب،

"The learned man is a stranger amidst the people of the world, just as the 'witness-finger' [i.e. the index-finger] appears strange on the Christian's hand."

چه سود ازین که کتبخانه جهان از تست،

نه علم هرچه عمل میکنی همان از تست،

"What doth it profit thee that all the libraries of the world should be thine? Not knowledge but what thou dost put into practice is thine."

هستی دنیای فانی انتظارِ مُردنست،

تو که هستی ز انتظارِ نیستی وا رستن است،

"The life of this transitory world is the expectation of death : to renounce life is to escape from the expectation of annihilation."

تو ز جان غیر مال ای عزیز بهشتوست،

علاقه تو بدستار بیشتر ز سرست،

"O my dear friend ! thou hast more care for wealth than for life : Thy attachment to the turban is greater than to the head."

با کمالِ قُرب از جانانِ دلِ ما غافلست

زنده از دریاست ماهی و ز دریا غافلست

"Our heart is heedless of the Beloved, notwithstanding our complete proximity.

The fish lives through the sea, yet heeds not the sea"

گریه شمع از برای ماتمِ پروانه نیست

صُبحِ نزدیکست در فکرِ شبِ تارِ خودست

"The weeping of the candle is not in mourning for the moth the dawn is at hand, and it is thinking of its own dark night."

رفتن از عالمِ پُرشور به از آمدنست

غنچه دلتنگِ بیامِ آمد و خندان بر خاست

"To quit this troubled world is better than to enter it the rose-bud enters the garden with straitened heart and departs smiling."

اگر میانِ دو دل هست دوستی بقرار

نمی شوند بآمد شد خبر محتاج

"If friendship is firmly established between two hearts, they do not need the interchange of news"

آدمی پیر چو شد حرص جوان میگردد

خواب در وقتِ سحرگاه گران میگردد

"When a man becomes old, his greed becomes young sleep grows heavy at the time of morning."

خموشی حُجَّتِ ناطق بود جویای کوهرا

که از غَوّاص در دریا نفس بیرون نمی آید

"To the seeker after pearls silence is a speaking argument, for no breath comes forth from the diver in the sea."

یا سبو یا خُمِ می یا قدحِ باده کنند

یک کفِ خاک درین میکرده ضایع نشود

"Not one handful of earth is wasted in this tavern: they make it either into a pitcher, a wine-jar, or a wine-cup."

حریص را نکند نعمتِ دو عالم سیر^۱ همیشه آتشِ سوخته اشتها دارد^۲

"The enjoyments of both worlds will not satisfy the greedy man :
Burning fire has always an appetite."

پیرانه سر همای سعادت بمن رسید^۳

وقتِ زوال سایه^۴ دولت بمن رسید^۵

شد مهربان سهر بمن آخرِ حیات^۶

در وقتِ صبح خواب فراغت بمن رسید^۷

"The *humd*¹ of happiness came to me in old age; the shadow of fortune came to me at the time of [the sun's] decline :

Heaven became kind to me at the close of my life : peaceful slumber visited me at morning-time."

از پشیمانی سخن در عهدِ پیری میزنم^۸

لب بدندان میزنم اکنون که دندانم نماند^۹

"I talk of repentance in the days of old age; I bite my lip [in remorse] now that no teeth remain to me."

میشود غارتگرِ جان چون کمال افتد زیاد^{۱۰}

شاخِ نازک بشکند چون بیشتر بار آورد^{۱۱}

"When perfection² is unduly increased it becomes the destroyer of life :
The tender branch breaks when it bears too much fruit."

اگر مجنون منم پس کیست در روی زمین عاقل^{۱۲}

اگر عاقل تویی دیوانه در عالم نمی باشد^{۱۳}

"If I am mad, then who on the face of the earth is sane? If thou art sane, then there is no madman in the world."

مرا بروزِ قیامت غمی که هست نیست^{۱۴}

که روی مردمِ عالم دو باره باید دید^{۱۵}

¹ The humd is a mythical bird of whom it is supposed that if its shadow falls on anyone he will become a king.

² As already pointed out, perfection is regarded as a danger because it is specially obnoxious to the Evil Eye, which the Arabs call 'Aynul-Kamāl, "the Eye of Perfection." See supra, p. 117, n. 2, and p. 216, n. 2.

"The only thing which troubles me about the Resurrection Day is this,

That one will have to look once again on the faces of mankind."

لا مکانی شو که تبدیل مکان آب و گل،

نقل کردن باشد از زندانِ بزدانِ دگر،

"Become placeless, for to change this place of water and clay is but to move from one prison to another."

نگویست که دل از حاصلِ جهان بر دار،

بهرچه دست رست نیست دل از آن بر دار،

"I do not bid thee detach thy heart from the sum of the world: detach thy heart from whatever lies beyond thy reach."

انجام بت پرست بود به ز خود پرست،

در قیدِ خود مباش و بقیدِ فرنگ باش،

"In the end the idolator is better than the worshipper of self: better be in bondage to the Franks than in the bondage of self."

گر پُشتِ پا بعالمِ صورت نمی زنی،

تا حشر در شکنجه این کفش تنگ باش،

"If thou dost not trample under foot this world of form, then suffer until the Resurrection the torments of this tight boot."

درون خانه خود هر کدا شهنشاهیست،

قدم برون منه از حدِ خویش و سلطان باش،

"Within his own house every beggar is an emperor: do not overstep thine own limit and be a king."

گر سجودِ گل گنم بر سِتتِ بلبل خطاست،

من که در آتش پستی اُمّت پروانه‌ام،

"If I worship the rose according to the rites of the nightingale, it is a fault—I, who in the worship of fire am of the religion of the moth."

چون شمع هر که افراشت کردن بافسر زر'

در اشك خود نشیند بسیار تا بگردن'

"Everyone who like the candle exalts his head with a crown of gold will oft-times sit [immersed] in his tears up to the neck."

پیش ازین بر رفتگان افسوس می خوردند خلق'

می خوردند افسوس در ایام ما بر ماندگان'

"Formerly people used to grieve over the departed, but in our days they grieve over the survivors."

یا ز سیلاب حوادث رو نباید تافتن'

یا نباید خانه در صحرای امکان ساختن'

"Either one should not avert one's face from the torrent of vicissitudes,
Or one should not make one's home in the plain of the Phenomenal World."

هر لوح مزاری ز فراموشده خاک'

دستیت برون آمده بهر طلب تو'

"Every tombstone is a hand stretched forth from the house of oblivion of the earth to search for thee."

شد از فشار گردون موی سفید و سر زد'

شیری که خورده بودم در روزگار طفلی'

"The hair has become white through the squeezing of the sphere, and the milk which I had drunk in the time of childhood has reappeared [on my head]"

در وطن کز میشدی هر کس باسانی عزیز'

کی ز آغوش پدر یوسف بزدان آمدی'

"If everyone could easily become honoured in his own country,
How would Joseph have passed from his father's embrace to a prison?"

III. Between A.D. 1700 and 1800 (A.H. 1111-12x5).

From the literary point of view this century is perhaps the most barren in the whole history of Persia¹, so much so that the only notable poem produced by it is, so far as I know, the celebrated tarji'-band of Hatif-i-Isfahanf, of which I shall speak presently.

Barrenness of the eighteenth century.

On the other hand we have two full and authoritative accounts of the period by two men of letters who were personally involved in the disastrous events which befell Persia during and after the Afghan invasion, and who have left us a fairly clear and detailed picture of that sad and troubled epoch. These men were Shaykh 'Ali Hazin (b. 1103/1692, d. 1180/1766-7), and Lutf 'Ali Beg poetically surnamed Adhar (b. 1123/1711, d. 1195/1781). Both were poets, and the former even a prolific poet, since he composed three or four diwdns, but their prose writings are, from our point of view, of much greater interest and value than their verse.

Two important contemporary records

Shaykh 'Ali Hazfn, whose proper name was Muhammad ^bn Abi Talib of Gfldn, is best known by his "Memoirs" (Tadhkiratul-Ahwal), which he composed in India in 1154/1741-2, twenty years after he had become an exile from his native land, and which are easily accessible to students in the text and

Shaykh 'Ali
Hazin (b. 1103/
1692, d. 1180/
1766-7)

English translation published by F. C. Belfour in 1830-31. He was born, as he himself tells us, on Monday the 27th of Rabf ii, 1103 (Jan. 19, 1692) at Isfahan, and was directly descended in the eighteenth degree from the famous Shaykh Zahid of Gilan, of whom some account was given in a previous chapter². The family continued to reside in Gflan, first at Astara and then at Lahijan, until the author's father, Shaykh Abu Talib, at the age of twenty, went to Isfahan to pursue his studies, and there married and settled. He died there in 1127/1715 at the age of sixty-nine, leaving three sons, of whom our author was the eldest, to mourn his loss¹. Shaykh 'Alf Hazfn speaks in the highest terms of his father's character and ability, and quotes a few lines from an elegy which he composed on this mournful occasion. He also mentions that, amongst other final injunctions, his father addressed to him the following remarkable words⁹: "If you have the choice, make no longer stay in Isfahan. It were meet that some one of our race should survive." "At that time," the author continues, "I did not comprehend this part of his address, not till after some years, when the disturbance and ruin of Isfahan took place⁸."

¹ Cf p. 168 supra.

² See pp. 38-43 supra.

Since the "Memoirs" can be read in English by anyone interested in their contents, it is unnecessary to discuss or analyse them here, and it will be sufficient to emphasize their importance as a picture of the author's times, and to note a few points of literary interest. In 1135/1722-3 he began to compile a kind of literary scrap-book or magazine {majmtfd), probably somewhat similar in character to the Kashktiloi Shaykh BahaVd-Dm 'Amilf, and entitled Muddatu'l-'Umr ("Lifetime"), but it was lost with the rest of his library in the sack of Isfahan by the Afghans a few months later. About the same time or a little earlier he wrote, besides numerous philosophical commentaries, a book on the Horse (Faras-ndtna), and

Shaykh 'Ali
Hazin's Memoirs.

¹ A fourth son died in infancy. The mother survived the father by two years.

² Belfour's text, p. 16; translation, p. 14

⁸ Compare text, p. 107; translation, p. 117.

⁴ See pp. 93-4 of Belfour's translation, to which henceforth references will be given. There is a MS. of this work in the British Museum. See Rieu's Persian Catalogue, p. 483, where two other works by the same author, one on wine and measures and another on beasts of venery, are mentioned.

published his second Diwdn of poetry, and soon afterwards his third¹.

The Afghan invasion and the misery which it caused, especially in Isfahan, put a stop to Shaykh 'Ali riazfn's literary activities for some time. "During the latter days of the siege/" he says⁸, "I was attacked by severe illness; and my two brothers, my grandmother, and the whole of the dwellers in my house died, so that my mansion was emptied of all but two or three infirm old women-servants, who attended me till my disorder began to abate." Being somewhat recovered, he escaped from Isfahan early in Mutiarram, 1135 (October, 1722), only a few days before it surrendered to, and was entered by, the Afghans. During the next ten years he wandered about in different parts of Persia, successively visiting or residing at Khurramdbad in Luristan, Hamadan, Nihawand, Dizful, Shushtar (whence by way of Basra he made the pilgrimage to Mecca and on his return journey visited Yaman), Kirmanshah, Baghdad and its holy places, Mashhad, Kurdistan, Adharbayjan, Gflan and Tihiran. From the last-named city he returned once more to Isfahan, to find "that great city, notwithstanding the presence of the King⁸, in utter ruin and desertion. Of all that population and of my friends scarcely any one remained." It was the same at Shirdz, whither he made his way six months later. "Of all my great friends there," he says⁴, "the greatest I had in the world, not one remained on foot; and I met with a crowd of their children and relatives in the most melancholy condition and without resource." From Shiraz he made his way by Lar to Bandar-i-'Abbas, intending to go thence in ¹ See Belfour's translation, pp. 106 and 111, and for his fourth Diwdn, which was published somewhat later, p. 176.

¹ Ibid., p. 128.

⁸ Ibid., p. 205. This was after the expulsion of the Afghans by N'dir.

¹ Ibid., p. 207.

a European ship to the Hijaz, "because their ships and packets are very spacious and are fitted up with convenient apartments, and their navigators also are more expert on the sea and more skilful in their art than any other nation¹." He was, however, prevented by illness and poverty (caused partly by the loss of his patrimony in Gflan, partly by the exorbitant and oppressive taxation which now prevailed) from carrying out this plan. A subsequent attempt carried him in a Dutch vessel as far as Muscat, which he found little to his liking, so that after a stay of rather more than two months he returned again to Bandar-i-'Abbas. He next visited Kirman, but, finding "the affairs of that ruined country in utter confusion by reason of the insurrection of a body of the Baluch tribe and other accidents⁸" he returned thence after a few months' stay to Bandar-i-' Abbas in the hope of being able to go thence once again to Baghdad and the Holy Shrines. Finding this impracticable owing to Nadir's operations against the Turks, and unable to endure any longer the sight of the misery prevailing throughout Persia, he embarked on the ioth of Ramadan, 1146 (Feb. 14, 1734) for India, where, in spite of the deep dislike which he conceived for that country, he was destined to spend the remaining forty-five years of his long life. "To me," he says⁸, "who do not reckon the time of my residence in this country as a portion of my real life, the beginning of my arrival on the shores of this empire appears as it were the end of my age and vitality." A little further on he says, "Altogether my nature had no agreement with the fashions and manners of this country, nor any power of patiently enduring them," and adds a few lines lower "the sight of these dominions became more and more hateful to me, and being continually in hope of escape from them, I reconciled

Shaykh 'Ali
Hazin's deep dislike for India.

¹ See Belfour's translation, p. 215.

² Ibid., p. 240.

⁸ Ibid., p. 253.

my mind to the incidents in the affairs of Persia, and bent my thoughts on my return thither¹." Although unhappily disappointed in this hope, and compelled to spend the long remainder of his days in "a country traced... with foulness and trained to turpitude and brutality^a," where "all the situations and conditions...are condemned by fate to difficulty and bitterness of subsistence³," he declined to include in his "Memoirs" any account of his personal experiences in India, save in so far as they were connected with such important historical events as Nadir Shah's invasion and the terrible massacre he made in Dihli on March 20, 1739. So, though the "Memoirs" were penned at "the end of the year [A.H.] 1154⁴" (beginning of A.D. 1742), they deal chiefly with the author's personal history before he left Persia twenty years earlier. The accounts of contemporary scholars and men of letters (many of whom perished during the siege of Isfahan in A.D. 1722) with whom he was personally acquainted constitute one of the most valuable features of this interesting book.

Eleven years later (1165/1752) Shaykh 'AH Hazin composed an account of about a hundred contemporary poets entitled Tadhkiratu'l-Mu'dsirin, which is included in the lithographed edition of his complete works published at Lucknow in 1293/1876, and of which MSS. exist in the British Museum and elsewhere⁵.

Shaykh 'Ali
Hazin's biography of contemporary poets.

¹ See Belfour's translation, p. 255.

² Ibid., p. 256.

³ Ibid., p. 261.

⁴ Ibid., p. 257.

⁵ See Rieu's Pers. Cat., p. 372, and Sprenger's Catalogue, pp. 135-141, where the contents are fully stated. Through the kindness of my friend Professor Muhammad Shafi of the Oriental College, Lahore, I have recently (September, 1923) received a copy of the Kulliydt, or Complete Works, of Shaykh 'Ali Hazin, lithographed at Kanpur in 1893. It comprises 1032 pp., of which this Tadhkira occupies pp. 931-1025. I make the number of biographies contained in it 96, and of all these

Another and more accessible contemporary account of the poets of this period forms the last portion of the well-known Atash-kada ("Fire-temple") of Lutf Be' Adhar (b. X123/X71Z, d. 1x95/1781). 'Ali Beg Adhar. The greater part of this book deals with the Persian poets who flourished before the author's time, arranged in alphabetical order under the various towns and countries which gave birth to them, including Tiiran and Hindustan. This is followed by an account of sixty of the author's contemporaries, which begins with a brief historical survey of the misfortunes of Persia during the fifty years succeeding the Afghan invasion down to the re-establishment of security and order in the South by Karfm Khan-i-Zand¹. The author recognizes the dearth of poets and men of letters during this period and ascribes it to the prevalent chaos and misery, "which," he says, "have reached such a point that no one has the heart to read poetry, let alone to compose it":

تفریقِ بال و اختلالِ حال بعدیست که کسی را حالِ خواندنِ
شعر نیست تا بگفتنِ شعر چه رسد

To most of these poets the author devotes only a few lines. The longer notices include Mulla Muhammad Mu'min, poetically surnamed Dd% who died in n55/1742-3 at the age of ninety; Mulla" Husayn Rafiq of Isfahan; Sayyid Muhammad ShuHa of Isfahan; Sayyid Muhammad Sadiq of Tafrish; Mfrza Ja'far Sdii of Isfahan; a young friend of the author's named Sulayman, who wrote under the name Sabdhi, and to whose poems he devotes no less than thirteen pages; Mirza Muhammad 'Ali Subtih of Isfahan, poets there are only about four of whom I ever heard even the names, to wit, Tahir of Qazwin, Shawkat of Bukhara, Shafia" Athar of Shiraz, and Lutf'Ali Beg Shamf.

¹ "That peerless Prince of happy fortune Abu'n-Nasr Sul#n Karim."

Aq4 Taqi Sahbdoi Qum ; Sayyid 'Abdu'l-B4qf TaUb ("the physician"), whose father Mirzd Muhammad Rahim was court-physician to Shdh Sultdn Husayn, as he himself was to Nadir Shdh; Tufan of Hazar-jarib, whose death was commemorated by the author in a chronogram giving the date 1190/1776-7; Aqd Muhammad 'Ashiq of Isiahan (d. 1181/1767-8), to whom he devotes eight pages; and his own younger brother Ishdq Beg, who wrote under the pen-name of 'Udhri and died in 1185/1771-2, according to the chronogram :

‘بادا در بهشت جاودان اسحق بیگ‘

Other poets noticed are Muhammad 'Ali Beg the son of Abdal Beg, a Frankish painter who embraced Islām; Sayyid Muhammad Husayn Ghdlīb, who spent fourteen years of his earlier life in India and married the daughter of the Nawwdb Sar-afrdz Khan ; Mir Sayyid 'Ali Mushtdq of Isiahan; Sayyid Muhammad Sadiq, nephew of the above-mentioned court-physician Mirzi Muhammad Rahim, who, besides several mathnawī poems dealing with the somewhat threadbare romances of Layli and Majnun, Khusraw and Shirfn and Wdmiq and 'Adhrd, was engaged on a history of the Zand dynasty; Mirzd Nasir, son of the physician Mirzi 'Abdu'ldh (d. 1192/1778); and Sayyid Ahmad Hdtif, the most notable of all these poets, of whom we shall shortly have to speak.

Lutf 'Alf Beg concludes his Atash-kada with. an autobiography of himself, from which we learn that he was born on the 20th of Rabi' i, A. H. 1123 (June 7, 1711) at Isiahan, but spent fourteen years of his earlier life at Qum, whither his family migrated in consequence of the Afghan menace. At the beginning of Nadir Shdh's reign his father was made governor of Ldr and the coasts of Fdrs, and he resided in Shiriz. On the death of his father two years latejHhtfi. accompanied his uncle Hajji .Muhammad Beg on-the pilgrimage to Mecca, and, after visiting that and the other holy places, returned to Persia, and was at Mashhad when Nadir's victorious army returned from India. After accompanying them to Mazandaran he returned to Isfahan, and, after the assassination of Nader Shah, attached for a while to the service of 'Ali Shah, Ibrahim Shah, Shah Isma'il and Shah Sulayman. He then seems to have retired from public life and devoted himself to the cultivation of poetry under the guidance and tuition of Mir Sayyid 'Ali Mushtaq. With selections of this poetry, largely drawn from his YHsufu Zulaykha, he concludes the book¹.

Of Sayyid Ahmad Hatifi of Isfahan, though he was the contemporary and friend of Lutf 'All Beg, no biographical particulars are given in the Atash-kada but only praises which appear somewhat exaggerated, since he is described as "in Arabic and Persian verse and prose the third after A'sha and Jarir, and second only to Anvari and Zahir." Nearly ten pages are filled with citations from his poems, but of all these we need only concern ourselves with the beautiful and celebrated tarji'-band by which alone Hatifi's name has been immortalized.

(بند اول)

ای فدای تو هم دل و هم جان،
وی نثارِ رخت هم این و هم آن،
دل فدای تو چون توئی دلبر،
جان نثارِ تو چون توئی جانان،
دل رهندن ز دستِ تو مشکل،
جان فشاندن بجای تو آسان،

¹ I have used the Atash-kada in the Bombay lithographed edition of 1277/1860. It has three defects. the numeration of the pages stops at 189; the dates are often omitted; and the accuracy of the text leaves a good deal to be desired.

راه وصل تو راه پُر آسیب
 درد عشق تو درد بی درمان
 • بندگانیم جان و دل در گف
 چشم بر حکم و گوش بر فرمان
 گر سرِ صلح داری اینک دل
 و سرِ جنگ داری اینک جان
 دوش از شورِ عشق و جذبه شوق
 هر طرف می شتافتیم حیران
 آخر کار شوق دیدارم
 سوی دیرِ مغان کشید عنان
 چشمِ بد دور خلوتی دیدم
 روشن از نورِ حق نه از نیوان
 • هر طرف دیدم آتشی کآن شب
 دید در طورِ موسی عمران
 پیری آنجا آتش افروزی
 بادب کرد پیر مغچهگان
 همه سیمین عذار و گل رخسار
 همه شیرین زبان و تنگ دهان
 عود و چنگ و نی و دف و بریط
 شمع و نقل و گل و می و ریحان
 ساقی ماهروی و مشکین موی
 مطرب بذله گوی خوش الحان
 • مغ و مغ زاده موبد و دستور
 خدمتش را تمام بسته میان
 من شومنده از مسلمانان
 شدم آنجا بگوشه پنهان

پسر پرسید کیست این گفتند
 عاشقی بی قرار و سرگردان
 گفت جامی دهدش از می ناب
 کرچه ناخوانده باشد این مهمان
 ساقی آتش دست و آتش پرست
 ریخت در ساغر آتش سوزان
 ۲۰ چون کشیدم نه عقل ماند و نه هوش
 سوخت هر کفر از آن و هر ایمان
 مست افتادم و در آن مستی
 بزبانی که شرح آن نتوان
 این سخن می شنیدم از اعضا
 همه حتی الوری و الشریان
 که یکی هست و هیچ نیست جز او
 وحده لا اله الا هو
 (بند دوم)
 از تو ای دوست نگسلم پیوند
 ورتیغم بُرند بند از بند
 ۲۱ الحق اوزان بود از ما صد جان
 وز دهان تو نهر شکر خند
 ای پدر پند گم ده از عشقم
 که نخواهد شد اهل این فرزند
 پند آنان دهند خلق ای کاش
 که ز عشق تو می دهند پند
 من ره گوی عافیت داور چکنم کاو افتاده ام بگمند

- در گلپسا بدلبیری ترسا
 گفتم ای دل بدام تو در بند
 ۲۰ ای که دارد بهتار زتارت
 هر سر موی من جدا پیوند
 ره به وحدت نیافتن تا گهی
 ننگِ تثلیث بر یکی تا چند
 نام حقِ یگانه چون شاید
 که اب و ابن و روح قدس نهند
 لب شیرین کشود و با من گفت
 وز شکرخند ریخت از لب قند
 که گر از سر وحدت آگاهی
 بهمت کافری بها مهسند
 ۳۰ در سه آئینه شاهد ازلی
 پرتو از روی تابناک الگند
 سه نگردد برپشم از او را
 پر نیان خوانی و حریر و پزند
 ما درین گفتگو که از یکسو
 شد ز ناقوس این ترانه بلند
 که یکی هست و هیچ نیست جز او
 وحده لا اله الا هو
 (بند سوم)
 دوش رفتم بکوی باده فروش
 ز آتش عشق دل بجوش و غروش
 ۴۰ مجلسی نشخو دیدم و روشن
 میر آن بزم بهر باده فروش

چاکران ایستاده صف در صف،
 باده خواران نشسته دوش بدوش،
 پیر در صدر و میکشان گردش،
 پاره مست و پاره مدهوش،
 سینه بی کینه و درون صافی،
 دل پر از گفتگو و لب خاموش،
 همه را از عنایت ازلی،
 چشم حق بین و گوش راز نبوش،
 « سخن این بآن هنشاً لك،
 پاسخ آن باین كه بادت نوش،
 گوش بر چنگ و چشم بر ساغر،
 آرزوی دو کون در آغوش،
 بادب پیش رفته و گفتم،
 ای ترا دل قرارگاه سروش،
 عاشقم دردمند و حاجتمند،
 درد من بتگر و بدرمان گوش،
 پیر خندان بطنر با من گفت،
 ای ترا پیر عقل حلقه بگوش،
 « تو كجا ما كجا ای از شرم،
 دختر رز نشسته برقع پوش،
 گفتمش سوخت جانم آبی ده،
 و آتش من فرو نشان از جوش،
 دوش میسوختم ازین آتش،
 آه اگر امشبم بود چون دوش،

گفت خندان که هین پیاله بگهر
 مستدم گفت هان زیاده منوش
 جرعه در کشیدم و گشتم
 فارغ از رنج عقل و محنت هوش
 .. چون بهوش آمدم یکی دیدم
 ما بقی را همه خطوط و نقوش
 ناکهان در صوامع ملکوت
 این حدیث سرش گفت بگوش
 که یکی هست و هیچ نیست جز او
 وحده لا اله الا هو

(بند چهارم)

چشم دل باز کن که جان بینی
 آنچه نا دیدن هست آن بینی
 گر باقلیم عشق رو آری
 همه آفاق گلستان بینی
 ۱۰ هر همه اهل این زمین بمراد
 گردش دور آسمان بینی
 آنچه بینی دلت همان خواهد
 و آنچه خواهد دلت همان بینی
 بی سر و پا گدای آنهارا
 سر ز ملک جهان گران بینی
 هر در آن پا برهنه قومی را
 پای بر فرق فرقدان بینی
 هر در آن سر برهنه جمعی را
 هر سر از عرش سایبان بینی

۶۰ گاه وجد و سماع هر یکی را
 هر دو کون آستین نشان بینی
 دل هر ذره که بشگافی
 آفتابیش در میان بینی
 هرچه داری اگر بعشق دهی
 کافرم گر جوی زبان بینی
 جان کدازی اگر بآتش عشق
 عشق را کیمبای جان بینی
 از مضیقِ جهات در گذری
 وسعت ملک لا مکان بینی
 ۷۰ آنچه نشنیده گوش آن شنوی
 و آنچه نا دیده چشم آن بینی
 تا بجائی رساندت که یکی
 از جهان و جهانیان بینی
 با یکی عشق ورزی از دل و جان
 تا بعین الیقین عیان بینی
 که یکی هست و هیچ نیست جز او
 وحده لا اله الا هو
 (بند پنجم)

یار بی پرده از در و دیوار
 در تجلی است یا اولو الأبصار
 ۷۰ شمع جوئی و آفتاب بلند
 روز بس روشن و تو در شب تار
 گر ز ظلماتِ خود رهی بینی
 همه عالم مشارقِ انوار

کوروش قاید و عصا طلبی
 بهر این راه روشن و هموار
 چشم بکشا بگلستان و بهین
 جلوه آب صاف در گل و خار
 ز آب بهرنگ صد هزاران رنگ
 لاله و گل نگر درین گلزار
 ۸۰. یا براه طلب نه و از عشق
 بهر این راه توشه بر دار
 شود آسان ز عشق کاری چند
 که بود پیش عقل پس دشوار
 یار کو بالغدو و الاصال
 یار جو بالعشی و الایکار
 صد رخت کن ترانی ار گویند
 باز میدار دیده بر دیدار
 تا بجائی رسی که می نرسد
 پای اوهام و دیده افکار
 ۸۱. یار یابی بمحفل کآنجا
 جبرئیل امین ندارد بار
 این ره این توشه تو این منزل
 سر راهی اگر بهما و بیمار
 در نه مرد راه چون دگران
 یار میگوی و پشت سرمیخار
 هاتف از باب معرفت که کبی
 مست خوانندشان و که هشیار
 از می و جام و مطرب و ساقی
 از مخ و دیر و شاهد و زَنار

۹ قصد ایشان نهفته اسرار است که با یما کنند گاه اظهار
 پی بری گر بر از شان دانی
 که همین است سر آن اسرار
 که یکی هست و هیچ نیست جز او
 وحده لا اله الا هو

{Strophe 7}

" O Thou to whom both heart and life are a sacrifice, and O Thou in whose path both this and that are an offering !
 The heart is Thy sacrifice because Thou art a charmer of hearts; life is Thine offering because Thou art the Life of our lives¹.
 Hard it is to deliver the heart from Thy hand; easy it is to pour out our life at Thy feet.
 The road to union with Thee is a road full of hardships; the pain of Thy love is a pain without remedy.
 We are servants holding our lives and hearts in our hands, with eyes [fixed] on Thy orders and ears [waiting] on Thy command. 5
 If Thou seekest peace, behold our hearts; and if Thou seekest war, behold our lives!
 Last night, [impelled] by the madness of love and the impulse 01 desire, I was rushing in bewilderment in every direction.
 At last desire for the [Beatific] Vision turned my reins towards the temple of the Magians.
 Far from it be the Evil Eye ! I beheld a secret gathering bright with the Light of Truth, not with the Flames [of Hell].
 On every side I beheld that fire which Moses the son of 'Imrdn saw that night on Sinai. 10
 There was an elder [busied] with tending the fire, round about whom respectfully stood the young Magians,
 All silver-skinned and rose-cheeked, all sweet-tongued and narrowmouthed.
 [There were] lute, harp, flute, cymbals and barbiton; candles, desert, roses, wine and basil;
 The moon-faced and musky-haired cup-bearer; the witty and sweet-voiced minstrel.

¹ It is impossible adequately to preserve in English the play between dilaxidi dilbar, jan and janan.

Magian and Magian boy, Fire-priest and High Priest, all with loins girt up for His service. 15

I, ashamed of my Muhammadanism, stood there concealed in a corner.

The elder enquired, 'Who is this?' They answered, 'A restless and bewildered lover.'

He said, 'Give him a cup of pure wine, although he be an unbidden guest.'

The fire-handed and fire-worshipping cup-bearer poured into the goblet the burning fire.

When I drained it off, neither reason remained nor sense; thereby were consumed both Infidelity and Faith. 20

I fell down intoxicated, and in that intoxication, in a tongue which one cannot explain,

I heard this speech from [all] my limbs, even from the jugular vein and the carotid artery:

' He is One and there is naught but He:

There is no God save Him alone!'

{Strophe IT}

O Friend, I will not break my ties with Thee, even though with a sword they should hew me limb from limb !

Tiuly a hundred lives were cheap on our part [to win] from Thy mouth a sweet half-smile. 25

O Father, counsel me not against love, for this son [of thine] will not prove susceptible [to counsel] '

People counsel these [others]: O would that they would counsel me concerning Thy love !

I know the road to the street of safety, but what can I do ? for I am fallen into the snare.

In the church I said to a Christian charmer of hearts, 'O thou in whose net the heart is captive!

⁴ O thou to the warp of whose girdle each hair-tip of mine is separately attached! 30

' How long [wilt thou continue] not to find the way to the Divine Unity? How long wilt thou impose on the One the shame of the Trinity ?

⁴ How can it be right to name the One True God " Father," " Son," and " Holy Ghost" ?'

She parted her sweet lips and said to me, while with sweet laughter she poured sugar from her lips :

' If thou art aware of the Secret of the Divine Unity, do not cast on us the stigma of infidelity!

' In three mirrors the Eternal Beauty cast a ray from His efiulgent countenance. 35

'Silk does not become three things if thou callest it *Parniydn*¹
Harir and *Parand*¹.

Whilst we were thus speaking, this chant rose up beside us from the church-bell:

' He is One and there is naught but He'
There is no God save Him alone I'

{Strophe III}

Last night I went to the street of the wine-seller, my heart boiling and seething with the fire of love.

I beheld a bright and beautiful gathering presided over by the wine-selling elder. 40

The attendants stood row on row, the wine-drinkers sat shoulder to shoulder.

The elder sat in the chief seat and the wine-drinkers around him, some drunk and some dazed,

With breasts devoid of malice and hearts pure, the heart full of talk and the lips silent.

The eyes of all, by the Eternal Mercy, beholding the Truth, and their ears hearkening to secrets.

The greeting of this one to that one, 'Wassail V the response of that one to this one, 'Pnnk-hale'! 45

With ears for the harp and eyes on the goblet, and the desire of both worlds in their embrace.

Advancing respectfully, I said, 'O thou whose heart is the abode of the Angel Surlish,

' I am an afflicted and needy lover • behold my pain and strive to remedy it!'

The elder, smiling, said to me mockingly: 'O thou to whom the Guide of Reason is a devoted⁸ slave'

¹ All these words, of which the first and last are Persian and the other Arabic, mean silk.

² Sunish with the Zoroastrians, like Jibra'il (Gabriel) with the Muhammadans, is the Angel who brings revelation.

⁸ Literally "with a ring in the ear," a sign of servitude.

' Where art thou, and where are we¹, O thou for shame of whom the daughter of the grape² sits with veiled face?' 50

I said to him, ' My soul is consumed! Give me a draught of water, and abate my fire from its vehemence!

' Last night I was consumed by this fire: alas if my to-night be as my yestere'en !'

He said smiling, ' Ho! Take the cup!' I took it. He cried, ' Ha!
Drink no more I'

I drained a draught and became free from the pain of understanding and the trouble of sense.

When I came to my senses I saw for a moment One, and all else mere lines and figures. 55

Suddenly in the temples of the Angelic World the Surtish' whispered these words into my ear.

' He is One and there is naught but He:
There is no God save Him alone I'

{Strophe IV}

Open the eye of the heart that thou mayst behold the spirit, that thou mayst see that which is not to be seen.

If thou wilt turn thy face towards the Realm of Love thou wilt see all the horizons a garden of roses.

Thou wilt behold the revolution of the cycle of heaven favourable to all the people of this earth. 60

That which thou seest thy heart will desire, and that which thy heart desireth thou wilt see.

The headless and footless beggar of that place thou wilt see heavy-headed with the dominion of the world⁴.

There also thou wilt see a bare-footed company with their feet set on the summit of the Guard-stars⁶.

¹ That is, how far apart are we.

² Wine, who must veil her face before the stranger {nd-mahram}.

³ See p. 294 supra n. 2 ad calc.

⁴ I.e. even the veriest beggar in the Realm of Love exercises in this lower world such authority as do the kings and rulers of earth?
and is as much preoccupied by his responsibility as they are.

⁶ Farqadan, two bright stars in Ursa Minor, called " the Guards" or "Guardians" (from the Spanish word guardare, " to behold") because of their " singular use in navigation/' See vol. 11 of my Travellers Narrative' p. 125, ad calc.

There also thou wilt see a bare-headed assembly canopied overhead by the throne of God.

Each one at the time of ecstasy and song thou wilt see shaking his sleeves over the two worlds¹. 65

In the heart of each atom which thou cleavest thou wilt behold a sun in the midst.

If thou givest whatsoever thou hast to Love, may I be accounted an infidel if thou shouldst suffer a grain of loss I

If thou meltest thy soul in the fire of Love, thou wilt find Love the Alchemy of Life;

Thou wilt pass beyond the narrow straits of dimensions, and wilt behold the spacious realms of the Placeless;

Thou shalt hear what ear hath not heard, and shalt see what eye hath not seen; 70

Until they shall bring thee to a place where of the world and its people thou shalt behold One alone.

To that One shalt thou make love with heart and soul, until with the eye of certainty thou shalt clearly see

'That He is One and there is naught but He:
There is no God save Him alone V

(Strophe V)

From door and wall, unveiled, the Friend shines radiant, O ye who have eyes to see !

Thou seekest a candle whilst the sun is on high: the day is very bright whilst thou art in darkest night. 75

If thou wilt but escape from thy darkness thou shalt behold all the universe the dawning-place of lights.

Like a blind man thou seekest guide and staff for this clear and level road.

Open thine eyes on the Rose-garden, and behold the gleaming of the pure water alike in the rose and the thorn.

From the colourless water [are derived] a hundred thousand colours behold the tulip and the rose in this garden-ground

Set thy foot in the path of search, and with Love furnish thyself with provision for this journey. 80

By Love many things will be made easy which in the sight of Reason are very difficult.

¹ /e.. snapping his fingers at them, taking no account of them.

Speak of the Friend in the mornings and the evenings: seek for the Friend in the gloaming and at dawn.

Though they tell thee a hundred times ' *Thou shalt not see tne*¹, ' still keep thine eyes fixed on the Vision,

Until thou shalt reach a place to which the foot of Fancy and the eye of Thought cannot attain.

Thou shalt find the Friend in an assembly whereunto not even Gabriel the trusted hath access. 85

This is the Road, this thy Provision, this the Halting-place: if thou art a roadsman, come and bring!

And if thou art not equal to the Road, then, like the others, talk of the Friend and scratch the back of thy head⁸!

O Hatif, the meaning of the Gnostics, whom they sometimes call drunk and sometimes sober,

[When they speak] of the Wine, the Cup, the Minstrel, the Cupbearer, the Magian, the Temple, the Beauty and the Girdle,

Are those hidden secrets which they sometimes declare in cryptic utterance. 90

If thou shouldst find thy way to their secret thou wilt discover that even this is the secret of those mysteries,

' He is One and there is naught but He:
There is no God save Him alone !'

¹ Lan tarani, the answer given to Moses when he desired to see God face to face. See Qur'an, vii, 139.

² Like one bewildered or undecided.

CHAPTER VII.

POETS OF THE QAJAR PERIOD.

The Qajar rule was strong though severe, and, in spite of its harshness, was, perhaps, welcome on the whole to a country which had suffered seventy years of anarchy and civil war. The brief and bloody reign of the eunuch *Aqi Muhammad KMn*¹, who once more carried the Persian standards into Georgia and captured Tiflis, was followed by the milder administration of his nephew Fath-'Ali Shah (A.D. 1797-1834), to whose influence Rida-qul Khan, in the Introduction to his Majma'u'l-Fusahd, ascribes the revival of poetry and the restoration of a better literary taste. He himself wrote verses under the pen-name of Khaqdn, and gathered round him a host of poets to whose lives and work several monographs are devoted, such as the ZinattCl-Madd'ih, the Anjuman-i'Khdqdn the Gulshan-i-Mahmtid and Safinatul-Mahmtid, the Nigdrisdn~i-Ddrd, and the Tadhkira-i-Muhammad-Shdhi, all of which are described by Rieu in his Supplementary Catalogue of the Persian MSS. in the British Museum (pp. 84-91), and most of which were utilized by the above-mentioned Rida-qul Khan. One of them, the Gulshan-i-Mahmtid, contains notices of forty-eight of Fath-'Alf Shcih's sons who wrote poetry, and at a later date the Royal Family supplied Persia with another verse-making autocrat in Nasiru'd-Din Shah (A.D. 1848-1896), but these kingly outpourings need detain only those who accept the dictum Kalamu'l-Multik Muliikul-Kaladm ("the Words of Kings are the Kings of Words").

¹ Though practically supreme for eighteen years (A.D. 1779-1797), he was not crowned until 1796 and was assassinated in the following year.

These poets of the earlier Qajar period might very well have been included in the preceding chapter, but for the inordinate length which it has already attained.

Reversion to earlier models.

The only respect in which they differed from their immediate predecessors was in their reversion to earlier models and their repudiation of the school typified by 'Urfi, Sa'ib, Shawkat, and their congeners. This fact is established from two opposite quarters. On the one hand Shibli, as we have seen¹, takes the view that Persian poetry, which began with Rudakf, ended with Sa'ib, and that Qa'ani and the moderns did but imitate the older classical poets, especially Farrukhi and Minuchihrf. Rida-qul Khan

Divergent taste of Persian and Indian critics.

takes the same view of the facts, but puts on them a quite different interpretation. According to him², Persian poetry had long been on the decline and at the end of the pre-Qajar period had become thoroughly decadent, so that the early Qajar poets did well to break away from the ideals of their immediate predecessors and revert to earlier models, amongst which he especially mentions the poems of Khaqdnf, 'Abdu'l-Wasi'-i-Jabalf, Farrukhi, Minuchihrf, Rudakf, Qatran, 'Unsuf, Mas'ud-i-Sa'd-i-Salman, Sana'f, Jalalu'd-Din Rumf, Abu'l-Faraj-i-Runf, Anwarf, Asadi, Firdawsi, Nizamf, Sa'di, Azraqi, Mukhtari, Mu'izzi, Ldmi'f, Ndsir-i-Khusraw and Adib Sabir, all of whom flourished before the Fall of the Caliphate and the Mongol Invasion in the middle of the thirteenth century. Of the later goets Hafiz was perhaps the only one who retained an undiminished prestige in the eyes of his countrymen, and it is doubtful how far even he served as a model, though this was perhaps rather because h' wajs inimitable than because he was out of fashion, like Jami, 'Urfi and Sa'ib, who lost and never regained the position they had once held in their own country. Henceforth, therefore, the influence between Turkish and Indian taste on the one hand and Persian taste on the other increases, while the action of the British rulers of India¹ in substituting Urdu for Persian, as the polite language of that country in 1835 tended still further to cut off India from the intellectual and literary currents of modern Persia.

¹ Pp. 164 and 265 supra, and Sht''ru'l'Ajam, vol. iii, p. 189.

² Fifth (unnumbered) page of the Introduction to the MajniaWl-Fusahd.

It would be easy with the help of the Biographies of Poets mentioned above and others of a later period to compile a list of a hundred or two more or less eminent poets of the Qajar period, but it will be sufficient for our purpose to mention ten or a dozen of those who followed the classical tradition. Nor is it necessary to group them according to the reigns in which they flourished, though it will be convenient to arrange them in chronological order. Of one great family of poets, the sons and grandsons of Wisal (Mirza Shafi', commonly called Mirza Kuchuk) who died in 1262/1846, it was my privilege to meet several, including the brothers Farhang and Yazdanf, at Shiraz in the spring of 1888². The latter was accompanied by his own son and the son of his deceased brother who wrote under the pen-name of Himmat. Of the three elder brothers, sons of Wisal, the eldest, 'Abd al-Qadir, was about forty-two years of age when Rida-qul Khan³ met him in Tehran in 1274/1857-8, while the second, Mirza Mahmud the physician, who adopted the takhallus of Hakim, died in 1268/1851. Of the third, Dawarf, a specimen of whose work is quoted in translation in vol. ii of my Literary History, pp. 41-42, I do not know the date of decease. As his poems have not, I think, been published, I here give the Persian text on which the trans-

Wisal and his family.

¹ At or about the same time they ceased to subsidise the publication of Oriental texts, thus inflicting a great injury on Oriental studies.

³ See my Year amongst the Persians, pp. 267-8, and also p. 119.

³ Majma'u'l-Fusaha, vol. 11, p. 548.

201
 کاغذ
 بازین پاشایان خطا کشت
 ز غمی فادیه لار و بان
 عاقبت خواسی آزار ضعیفان
 مریت باید و دلهای غمزان
 ترک خود گیر و دم در غم
 سر زمره بودیش در غم
 مانی چشم که چه تویم در دوزخ
 ای برادر منی که در غم
 کس ازین دجسته روزی خود
 زینجا که در غم
 کرم و صدمت
 تا خویش آن لکانه کنی نام حال
 بایدت بر دینی حمت چکانه خویش
 ۵۶

Autograph of the poet Wişál lation above mentioned is based. It is taken from a small manuscript selection of his poems¹, given to me in Tihiran in the winter of 1887-8 by my late friend the Nawwab MIRzā Hasan 'Alī Khan, one of his admirers and patrons.

Two stanzas of a musammat by Dāwārī.

ای بچه عرب صَبَحَكَ الْكَلْبُ بِسَخِيرَا
صبح است صبحی بده آن ساغر می‌را
ز آن می که بقطب از بدهی جرعه ویرا
بر پات بساید سر اکیلل جُدی‌را
کردند بناتاش بغدادا چون تو بُنی‌را
چون چرخ زنی کرد خیر باده جُدی وار
گر نیست ترا باده یکی شیشه بپر گش
بر خیز و عبارا عربی وار بسر گش
همچون عربان دامنِ خود تا بکمر گش
بکدست عبا شیشه بدان دستِ دگر گش
با دامنِ تو ممت از آن دامن تر گش
وز خانه برو تا بدرِ خانه خمار

This mention of my kind friend the Nawwab reminds me of a quaint incident which occurred while I was his guest at Tihrdn in the early part of the year 1888, and which shows how relatively unprofitable is the profession of a Persian poet now compared to what it was in the "good old days" when a poet's mouth was sometimes filled with gold or pearls as the reward of a successful poem which hit the taste of his patron. A minor poet, whose name I forget, if ever I knew it, came one day to the Nawwāb's house and

The modest reward of a modern panegyrist.

¹ These selections are now bound up in my MS. bearing the class-mark Y. i. The whole musammat contains eight strophes, of which only the first two are here given.

asked and obtained permission to recite a poem which he had composed in his praise. On its conclusion he received the sum of one ttimdn (at that time worth about six shillings), with which he departed, apparently very well contented. But so far from the gift being deemed insignificant, the Nawwab was subsequently reproached by some of his friends for turning the poet's head and making him imagine that he could earn an honest livelihood by writing poetry!

This is no doubt one of the causes which are tending to put an end to the old style of poetry, especially the panegyric qasida. Another still more potent one is the position attained by the Press since the Revolution of 1905-6, for the poet now tends more and more to write for the people as a whole rather than for some special patron. The transition can be very well seen in the case of poets like the unfortunate Mirza Jahangir Khan of Shiraz, the proprietor and editor of that remarkable product of the Revolution the weekly Stir-i-Isrdiil, whose life, death, and literary activities in connection with that great national upheaval are fully discussed in my previous works, the Persian Revolution and the Press and Poetry of Modern Persia. As a poet and writer of the Revolution only did I know him until lately, when I received from my accomplished friend and former pupil Mr W. A. Smart, one of the most sympathetic Consular officers ever sent to Persia from this country, a large fragment (292 pages) of an untitled, anonymous, acephalous and incomplete Persian manuscript work¹ containing accounts of thirty-eight poets, mostly of Fars, who were either still living in A.D. 1910 or who had died in the course of the preceding forty years. Amongst these mention is made of Mirza Jahangir Khan (pp. 74-77), and specimens are given of his earlier pre-revolutionary poems, including one addressed to his friends at Shiraz from Another cause of the decline of panegyric

¹ It bears the class-mark J. 19 in my library.

Tihran, which are quite in the classical style, and bear no traces of the modern peculiarities. Two other not less eminent "transition poets" mentioned in this extraordinarily interesting volume are Abu'l-Hasan Mirza, a grandson of Fath-'Alf Shah, born in 1264/1848, and commonly entitled Hajji Shaykhu'r-Ra'fs, chiefly known as a philosophical and political writer and a strong advocate of Pan-Islamism, who also wrote poetry, mostly topical, but in the classical forms, under the pen-name of Hay rat (pp. 102-121 of my MS.); and the eminent journalist *Adzbu'l-Mamdlik*¹ (born in 1277/1860-1), a descendant in the third degree of Mirza 'fisa the

The transition poets of the Revolution.

Qd'itn-Maqdm, who composed verse under the pen-name of Amirf of Farahan (pp. 39-50 of my MS.). The new poets of the Revolution were therefore, except in the case of the younger ones who have appeared since that epoch-making event, to a large extent the poets of the old school who had sufficient enthusiasm and flexibility to adapt themselves to the new conditions. But the transition itself is marked by as hard and fast a line as can mark any such historical transition, that line lying in the years 1906-7. Of course an abundance of poetry of the old type is still being produced, and I myself was gratified and honoured on the occasion of my sixtieth birthday (February 7, 1922) by receiving an album of verses contributed by sixteen of the most notable contemporary poets, besides a separate qasida from 'Imadu'l-KuttaD, that Benvenuto Cellini of contemporary Persia.

The older forms of poetry in no danger of extinction.

Nor is there any reason to apprehend the early disappearance of the old verse-forms. The panegyric (as opposed to the philosophical and didactic) qasida will probably become rarer for the reasons given above, but the matknawi, ghazal, and rubdH will survive as long as mysticism, love and epigram continue to interest the Persians.

¹ See pp. 37-39 of my Press and Poetry in Modern Persia.

After these preliminary general remarks on the poetry of the latest epoch, we may pass to the consideration of some of its chief representatives. For information as to those who flourished before about A.D. 1870 my chief sources have been the three works of that industrious writer Rida-quli Khan, poetically surnamed Hidayat, to wit the large general biography of Persian poets entitled Majm'at-Fusahd ("the Concourse of the Eloquent") ; the smaller biography entitled RiyduH-'Arifin ("Gardens of the Gnostics"), which deals chiefly with the mystical poets; and the Supplement to Mirkhwand's Rawdatu's-Safd, which carries that well-known general history down to about 1857 and was already well advanced in 1272/1855-6, when the author returned from the embassy to Khwarazm described in his Safdrat-ndma, of which the Persian text was published by the late M. Ch. Schefer with a French translation in 1876-9¹. At the end of the ninth volume of the Raivdatu's-Safd (the second of the Supplement), which concludes the reign of Fath-'Ali Shah, several pages (unfortunately unnumbered, so that exact references are impossible) are devoted to the notable statesmen, poets, theologians and other eminent men of that period which sometimes contain biographical material lacking in the two earlier monographs. From these three sources, so far as they extend, the following particulars are chiefly drawn, but I have also made use of a rare manuscript work (possibly an autograph) entitled Tadhkira-i-Dilgushd, a biography of contemporary poets by MIRza 'Ali Akbar of Shiraz, who himself wrote poetry under the pen-name of

Biographies of modern poets.

Majma'at-Fusahd.

Riyadul-ArtfCn.

Rawdatu's-Safa (Supplement).

Tadhkira-t-Dilgwhd.

¹ Brief notices of these and other published works of the same author will be found in Mr E. Edwards's excellent Catalogue of the Persian printed books in the British Museum (London, 1922), columns 631-2.

Bt'smil, composed about 1237/1821 -2. This fine MS., written throughout in a large, clear naskh with rubrications, formerly belonged to the late Sir Albert Houtum-Schindler, and now bears in my library the class-mark J. 18. Mention is made of this author and his work by Rida-quli Khan (who in his youth used to see him at Shiraz) both in the Majmctu' i-Fusahd (ii, pp. 82-3) and the Riyddul-'Arifin (pp. 243-4).

(1) Sahab (d. 1222/1807-8).

Sayyid Muhammad of Isiahan, poetically surnamed Sahab, was the son of that Sayyid Ahmad Hdtif mentioned at the end of the preceding chapter as almost notable Persian poet of the eighteenth century. Rida-qulf Khan (M.F., ii, 207-11) says that he was held in high honour by Fath-'Ali Shah, for whom he composed, besides numerous panegyrics, a book of memoirs (presumably of poets) entitled Rashahdt-i-Sakdb, which I have never met with, and that his Diwdn comprises only some five thousand verses. The following, censuring the conceit and arrogance of certain poets, are of some interest¹:

کسرا کمالِ نفس بجز حُسنِ حال چیست
و آن را که حسنِ حال نباشد کمال چیست
شعرت هیچ و شاعری از هیچ هیچ تر
در حیرت که در سرِ هیچ این جدال چیست
یک تن نهرسد از پی ترتیبِ چند لفظ
ای اهلِ بانِ بی هنر این قیل و قال چیست
از بهرِ مصرعی دو که مضمونِ دیگر است
چندین خیالِ جاه و تمّای مال چیست

¹ M.F., ii, p. 211.

شعر اصلش از خیال بود حُسنش از مُحال
 تا از خیالِ این همه فکرِ مُحال چیست
 از چند لفظِ یاقوتِ نَزْدِ لَافِ برتری
 هر کس که یافت شرم چه و انفعال چیست
 صد نوع از این کمال بر اهلِ رای و هوش
 با حُسنِ ذاتِ عامی نیکو خصال چیست
 گیرم که نظمِ بحرِ دُر و کانِ کوهرست
 با نثرِ کلکِ داورِ دریا نوال چیست

"Wherein save in good nature lies anyone's 'perfection'¹, and what 'perfection' can there be to him who has not good nature?

Poetry is naught, and the poet's vocation less than naught • I wonder what is all this quarrel about nothing!

No one will ask about the arrangement of a few words O fools devoid of merit, what is all this talk?

On account of one or two hemistichs expressing some one else's ideas, what is all this thought of position and hope of wealth?

The root of poetry is phantasy, and its beauty lies in the impossible². what can result from the imagining of all these impossible ideas?

Whoever has discovered what shame and modesty are will not boast of superiority on account of a few silly words

What in the eyes of men of judgment and sense are a hundred sorts of such 'perfection' compared with the good nature of an ordinary well-disposed man?

I grant that the nazm (arrangement, or verse) of the ocean is pearls and mines of precious stones* but what is it compared with the nathr (scattering, or prose) of the pen of that Lord whose bounty is as that of the ocean?"

¹ Kamdl ("Perfection") means especially literary attainments. Cf. pp. 26-7 supra.

² The Arabs say "the best poetry is that which contains most lies," and the exaggeration characteristic of most Persian panegyrists is notorious. Cf. Lit. Hist. Persia, ii, pp. 69-70.

(2) Mijmar (d. 1225/1810-11).

Sayyid Husayn-i-Tabataba'f of Ardistan near Isiahan, who earned the title of Mujtahidu'sh-Sku'ard, is noticed by Ridd-qulf Khan in all three of his above-mentioned works. He owed his introduction to the Persian Court to his fellow-townsmen and fellow-poet Mirza 'Abdu'l-Wahhab Nashdt, who survived him by eighteen or nineteen years. He appears to have died young, for Rida-qulf Khin, after praising his verse, of which but a small collection was left, says that "had he lived longer, he would probably have attained the utmost distinction," but even as it is he is one of the five poets of this period whom my accomplished old friend Hajji Mirza Yahya of Dawlatabad placed in the first class¹. Copies of his poems are rare, but the British Museum possesses a manuscript of his Kulliyydt, or collected works². I can find nothing very noteworthy in Rida-qulf Khan's selections, but the two following riddles, the first on the Wind and the second on the Pen, taken from the Tadhkira-i-Dilgushd, may serve as specimens of his work

نَغز باد

چيست آن پيكِ مباركِ مقدمِ فرخِ جناب،
روز و شب اندر تحرّكِ سال و مه اندر شتاب،
نافه‌اش در دامن و اندر گريبان‌ش عجب،
عنبرش در جيب و اندر آستينش مشكِ ناب،
«هر روى بى پا و سر ديوانه بى عقل و هوش»
عاشقى بى جان و ماں آواره بيه‌خورد و خواب،

¹ See p 225 supra. The others are Furúghí, Sabá (not Safá), Nashdt, and Ql'ání in the first class; Wisál and Rida-qulf Khán Hidáyat in the second, and Wiqár and Surúsh in the third ² Or. 3543. See B.M.P.S., No. 354, pp. 222-3.

کس نمیداند که از عشقِ که باشد بقرار
 کس نمی یابد که از هجرِ که دارد اضطراب
 آب از او چون دلِ عشاق از زلفِ بُتان
 کاه باشد در سلاسل که بود در پیچ و تاب
 مُرده که از او زمین و زنده که از او جهان چون قوی از پیری و همچون طبیعت از شباب

"What is that messenger of auspicious advent and fortunate presence who is moving every day and night and hastening every year and month ?

Who carries musk-pods in his skirt and perfume in his collar, ambergris in his pocket, and pure musk in his sleeve ?

A traveller without foot or head, a madman without sense or reason, a lover without abode or habitation, a wanderer without food or sleep.

None knoweth for love of whom he is so restless ; none discovereth through separation from whom he is so troubled.

Through him water becomes, like the hearts of lovers through the tresses of their idols, now wreathed in chains, now twisted and tormented.

Now the earth dies through him, and again the world lives through him, like the faculties through old age and like the nature through youth."

لغز قلم

کاین باغِ نفسِ ناطقه را، من بکسی ابرِ گوهر افشانم
 هر شکر ریز و هر عبیر افشان، لبِ دلدار و زلفِ جانانم
 در دُر افشانی و کُتر ریزی، طبعِ دستور و دستِ سلطانم

"To the rose-bush of the garden of the reasoning faculty I am a cloud raining down pearls,

Both pouring forth sugar and diffusing perfume [like] the darling's lips and the sweetheart's tresses.

In scattering pearls and pouring forth jewels I am [like] the nature of the Minister and the hand of the King."

(3) saba (d. 1238/1822-3).

Fath-'Alf Khan of Kashan, with the pen-name of Saba, was poet-laureate (Mahku'sh-Shifara) to Fath-'Alf Shah.

Rida-quli Khan, who mentions him in all three of his works, says that no poet equal to him had appeared in Persia for nearly seven hundred years, and that some critics prefer his Skakinshdk-ndma to the Shdhndma of Firdawsi¹. He also composed a Khudawand-ndma, an 'Ibrat-ndmciy and a Gulshan-i-Sabd, while his Diwdn is said to comprise ten or fifteen thousand verses. He was for a time governor of Qum and Kashan, but latterly devoted himself entirely to the Shah's service. In his youth he was the pupil of his fellow-townsmen the poet Sabahi, who was a contemporary of Hatif and Adhar, and died, according to the Majtndil-Fus;ahd, in 1206/1791-2. His eldest son Mirza Husayn Khan, poetically surnamed 'Andalfb ("Nightingale"), succeeded him in the laureateship. His poetry, being mostly panegyric, has little attraction for us, but is extraordinarily melodious, as the following extract from a qastda quoted in the Tadhkira-i-Dilgushd (which I think it unnecessary to translate, since the beauty lies in the form only) will show:

عیدست و عشرت را بقا بر درگه شه ره نما
 در دم نوای مریحیا بر لب سرود آفرین
 عیدست و شاهان جهان گوینان بهر در آستان
 بر خاست بانگ بارهان بهشت شاه راد همین
 عیدست و از نوبت سرا آواز کوس و بانگ نای
 در کاخ هفت اختر صدا در کاس نه گردون طمن
 شهزادگان خورشید فر بر گله پروین سپر
 بر جانسان پا تا بسر در آفرین جان آفرین

¹ Risādu'l-'Arifin, p. 264. The Shahinshāh-nāma was lithographed in Bombay in 1890.

بر ز آسمان‌شان پایگه بل آسمان‌شان خاک ره،
 دیدار رشکِ مهر و مه گفتارِ رازِ داد و دین،
 شه‌را مهینِ هر آستان با شه سرایانِ داستان،
 گوهر فشانِ هر آستان چندانکه شه از آستین،
 فضل و هنر آب و گلش آسان از آن هر مشک‌ش،
 گنجِ جواهر در دلش کنجورِ قدرت‌را دقین،
 در پیشداهیِ گک‌آسمان بنهاده سر در آستان،
 عکسی از آن باغِ چنان فرشی بر آن عرشِ برین،
 شاهنشهِ فرخنده صو با صدرِ اعظمِ رازِ گو،
 کلبرگِ رو کافورِ مو آن پس نگر این پیش بین،
 برجیس سان خورشید سا آن در سخن این در سخا،
 چون پورِ پیر برخیا چون رودِ رادِ آبتین،¹
 کار آگهیِ فرخ لقا از آن صفاهان در صفا،
 هر رنجِ درویشی دوا بر گنجِ سلطانی امین،
 برتر ز گردون پایه‌اش افزون ز آنچهر مایه‌اش،
 زین دو بهمن پیرایه‌اش روی نکو رایِ رزین،
 زیبِ بساط شه نشاط آری نشاط و انبساط،
 اطفالِ معنی‌را قحاط از کلک و از حبر انگبین،
 هر طفلِ معنی گآورد گر بنمردش از جان خرد،
 نهدد بلی چون بگذرد ناقصِ ثمنِ مثنی ثمین،

¹ The "aged son of Barkhiyá" is Aṣaf, Solomon's Wazir; the "noble son of Ábtún" is the legendary King Fīrdún. I have made a slight but necessary emendation in the penultimate and antepenultimate words of this line.

CH. VII] NASHAT.—THE QA'IM-MAQAM

(4) Nashat (d. 1244/1828-9).

Passing over Mfrza Muhammad-qulf Afshar Ulfat (d. 1240/1824-5) and Aqa 'Ali Ashraf Agdh (d. 1244/1828-9), the younger brother of the poet Bismil, both of whom were personally known to Rida-qulf Khan, we come to Mfrza 'Abdu'l-Wahhab of Isfahan, celebrated as a calligraphist as well as a poet, and master of the three languages, Arabic, Persian and Turkish. After nearly ruining himself by his prodigal hospitality and liberality to poets, mystics and men of letters, he gained the favour of Fath-'Ali Shah, who conferred on him the title of Mu'tamadu d-Dawla. He excelled in the ghazal, and his best-known work is entitled Ganjina (the "Treasury"). The following chronogram gives the date of his death (A.H. 1244):

از قلب جهان نشاط رفته

"Nashdt (Joy) hath departed from the heart of the world"

(5) Mirza Abu'l-Qasim Qa'im-maqam (put to death in 1251/1835).

Two eminent men, father and son, bore this title (of which the literal meaning is exactly equivalent to "lieutenant," in the sense of vicar or deputy), Mirza 'Isa of Farahan, called Mirza Buzurg, who acted as Deputy Prime Minister to Prince 'Abbas Mfrza and died in 1247/1831-2, and his son Mfrza Abu'l-Qasim, who, on the death of Fath-'Ali Shah, fell into disgrace, and was put to death by his successor Muhammad Shah on June 26, 1835¹. The latter was, from the literary point of view, the more remarkable, but though he wrote poetry under the pen-name of Thand'i, he is more celebrated as a prose-writer, his numerous published letters being regarded by his countrymen as models of good style. I possess a collection of his writings, both prose and verse, compiled at the instance of the late Prince Farhad Mirza in 1281/1864-5, and lithographed at Tabriz in 1282/1865-6, of which the letters, addressed to various more or less eminent contemporaries but only occasionally bearing dates¹, occupy by far the larger portion. Many of them are diplomatic documents of some historical importance, e.g. the apology addressed to the Tsar of Russia for the murder of the Minister Grebaidof and his staff at Tihran on February 11, 1829², which is here given as a specimen of the Qa'im-maqam's much admired style.

MirzaS. Abu'l-Qasim Qa'im-maqam
(d. 1251-1835).

¹ See R. G. Watson's History of Persia, pp. 271-2 and 287-8. His estimate of this Minister's character differs very widely from that of Rida-qulf Khan.

نامه شاهنشاهی بامپراطور اعظم در باب گذشتن خون ایلچی

بآن طور که خواهش کرده بودند

اول دفتر بنام ایزد دانا صانع پروردگار حق و توانا

وجودی بی مثل و مانند مبرّا از چون و چند که عادل و عالم
است و قاهر هر ظالم پاداش هر نیک و بد را اندازه و حد نهاده
بحکمت بالغه خود بدکاران را زجر و عذاب کد و نیکوکاران را
اجر و ثواب بخشید و درود نامعدود بر روان پیغمبران راست
کار و پیشوایان فرخنده کردار باد و بعد بر رای حقایق
نمای پادشاه ذی جاه انصاف کیش عدالت اندیش تاجدار با
زیب و فرّ شهریار بحر و برّ برادر والا کهر خجسته اختر امپراطور
ممالک روسیه و مضافات که دولتش با جاه و خطر است و رایتش با فتح و ظفر مخفی و مستور نماند که ایلچی آن

¹ Shawwāl, 1238 (June-July, 1823), is the earliest date I have noticed.

² The circumstances are fully given by R. G. Watson, op. cit., pp. 247-57.

دولت را در پای تخت این دولت باقتضای حوادث دهر و غوغای کسان او با جَبَّالِ شهر آسمی رسید که تدبیر و تدارك آن بر ذمه کارگزاران این دوست واقعی واجب و لازم افتاد؛ لهذا اولاً برای تمهید مقدمات عذرخواهی و پاس شوکت و احترام آن برادر گرامی فرزندی ارجمند خود خسرو میرزا را به پای تخت دولت بهمه روسیه فرستاد؛ حقیقت ناگاهی این حادثه و نا آگاهی امنای این دولت را در تلو نامه صادقانه مرقوم و معلوم داشتیم و ثانیاً نظر بکمال یگانگی و اتفاق [که] ما بین این دو حضرت آسمان رفعت هست انتقام ایلچی مزبور را بر ذمت سلطنت خود ثابت دانسته هر کرا از اهالی و سگان دار الخلافه کمان میرفت که درین کار زشت و کردار ناسزا اندک مدحیلتی تواند داشت باندازه استحقاق مورد سیاست و حد و اخراج بلد نمودیم حتی داروغه شهر و کدخدای محله را نیز بهمین جرم که چرا دیر خبردار شده و قبل از وقوع این حادثه ضابطه شهر و محله را محکم نداشته اند عزل و تنبیه و ترجمان کردیم؛ بالاتر از اینها همه پاداش و سزائی بود که نسبت بعالیجناب میرزا مسیح وارد آمد با مرتبه اجتهاد در دین اسلام و افتا و اقتدائی که زمره خواص و عوام باو داشتند بواسطه اجتماعی که مردم شهر هنگام حدوث غایله ایلچی در دایره او کرده بودند گذشت و اغماض را نظر باتحاد دولتین شایسته ندیدیم و شفاعت هیچ شفیع و توسط هیچ واسطه در حق او مقبول نیفتاد؛ پس چون اعلام این گذارش بآن برادر نیکو سیر لازم بود بتحریر این نامه دوستی علامه پرداخته اعلام تفصیل اوضاع را بفرزند مؤید موقی نایب السلطنه عباس میرزا محول داشتیم؛ امید از درگاه پروردگار داریم که دم بدم مراتب وداد این دو دولت ابدیت بنهاد در

توئی و ازدیاد باشد و روابطِ دوستی و یگانگیِ حضرتین پیوسته
 بآمد و شدِ رسل و رسائل متأكد و متضاعف گردد و العاقبة بالعاقبة'

تحریراً فی شهر ربیع الاول ۱۲۴۰هـ

" The Royal Letter to the Most Great Emperor concerning the reparations for the murder of the Envoy in such wise as was desired,

" The beginning of the record is in the Name of the A11- Knowing God> The Living and All-Powerful Creator and Provider,— —that Peerless and Incomparable Being, exempt from every 'how' and 'how much',¹ Who is just and wise, and subdueth every wrong-doer, Who hath set a measure and limit to the recompense of every good and evil deed, and Who, by His far-reaching wisdom, reproveth and punisheth the doers of evil, and rewardeth and recompenseth the well-doers. And countless blessings be upon the spirits of the righteous Prophets and beneficent Leaders².

But to proceed. Be it not hidden and concealed from the truth-discerning judgment of that most eminent, equitable, and just King, that brilliant and glorious Sovereign, that Lord of land and sea, my noble-natured and fortunate-starred brother, the Emperor of the Russian domains and their dependencies, whose rule is mighty and glorious, and whose standards are triumphant and victorious, that a disaster hath overtaken the Envoy of that State in the capital of this, by impulse of the vicissitudes of the time and the quarrels of his people with certain ignorant townsiolk, for which it is incumbent and obligatory on the acting officials of this Government to make reparation and give satisfaction. Therefore, in order to express our preliminary apologies and to satisfy the self-respect and honour of that esteemed brother, I have sent my dearly beloved son Khusraw Mirza³ to the capital of the glorious Russian State. In the course of a friendly letter we have expressed and explained the truth as to the suddenness of

¹ f.e. transcending quality and quantity.

² As the letter is addressed to a Christian sovereign, the usual specific mention of Muhammad is replaced by this more general phrase.

³ See R. G. Watson, op. cit., pp. 254-6. He was the son of 'Abbās Mirza and therefore the grandson of Fath-'Alī Shāh.

this tragedy and the non-complicity of those responsible for the conduct of our Government; and secondly, having regard to the perfect accord and agreement existing between these two Heaven-high Courts, we have recognized it as incumbent on Our Royal Person to avenge the above-mentioned Envoy, and, according to his deserts, have chastised, punished or expelled from the country everyone of the inhabitants and dwellers in our Capital who was suspected of having participated in the slightest degree in this foul deed and improper action. We have even reprimanded and dismissed the chief constable of the city and the headman of the quarter, merely for the crime of being informed too late and of not having established a firmer control over the town before the occurrence of this catastrophe. Beyond all this was the retribution and punishment which befel His Reverence Mirza" Masih, notwithstanding the rank of mujtahid which he holds in the religion of Islām and the respect and influence which he enjoys alike with gentle and simple, by reason of the assembly made by the townsfolk in his circle. Having regard to the concord of our two Governments, we have regarded as improper any overlooking of, or connivance at, such matters, nor hath the intercession or intervention of anyone been admitted in regard to him. Wherefore, since it was necessary to make known this procedure to that brother of goodly disposition, we have applied ourselves to the writing of this friendly letter, committing the elucidation of the details of these events to our divinely aided and favoured son Prince 'Abbas Mirza, our Viceroy. The hope which we cherish from the Court of God is that every moment the extent of the mutual affection of these two States of ancient foundation may expand and increase, and that the bonds of friendship and unity of these two Courts may be continually confirmed and multiplied by the interchange of messengers and messages: and may the end be in welfare !

"Written in the month of the First Rabi', 1245 " (September, 1829).

This letter, although professedly from Fath-'Ali Shah, was, of course, really written by the Qa'im-maqam. It must have been gall and wormwood to him to be
"RUs-u manhus " compelled to write so civilly, indeed so humbly, to the Russians, of whom he says in a poem commemorating a Persian victory by 'Abbas Mirza over them and the Turks¹:

¹ Majma'u'l-Fusaha, li, p. 88.

رومِ شوم و روسِ منحوس از دو جانب،

قصدشان تسخیرِ آذربایجان شد،

"The unlucky Turks and the ill-starred Russians on either side attempted the subjugation of Adharbayjan," and in one of his letters to Mīrza Buzurg of Nur, written after the conclusion of peace with Russia (probably in 1243/1828), he laments that he no longer dares speak of the " Rtis-i-manMs " (the " sinister " or " ill-starred Russians "):

تالانِ سیر که در مقدمهٔ روسِ میترسِ بگوهرِ منحوس

A later, greater, and more virtuous, but equally unfortunate, Persian Prime Minister, Mīrza Taqī Khan *Amir-i-Kabir*¹, still further simplified the style of official correspondence; but the Qd'im-maqdm's letters, though they may not strike one unused to the flowery effusions of the preceding age as very simple, mark an immense advance on the detestable rhodomontades which had for too long passed as eloquent and admirable, and probably deserve the high esteem in which, as already mentioned, they are held by the best contemporary Persian taste and judgment. A critical annotated edition of these letters would be of considerable literary and historical value, and might with advantage engage the attention of some Persian scholar whose interests are not confined to a remote past.

(6) Wisal (d. 1262/1846) and his sons.

I have already mentioned Wisal, some of whose gifted sons and grandsons I was privileged to meet at Shiraz in the spring of 1888. He is generally regarded by his countrymen as one of the most eminent of the modern poets, and both Rida-qul Khan, who devotes lengthy notices to him in all three of his works, Wisal (d. 126a/1846) and his sons

¹ For a most favourable sketch of his character, see R. G. Watson, op. tit.) pp. 404-6.

and the poet Bismil, the author of the Tadhkira-i-Dilgushd> were personally acquainted with him, the latter intimately. His proper name was Mirza [Muhammad] Shafi, but he was commonly entitled "Mirza Kuchuk," and he was a native of Shiraz. Bismil speaks in the most glowing terms of his skill in calligraphy and music as well as in verse, wherein he holds him "incomparable" (^adimul-mithdr)> and praises his lofty character and fidelity in friendship, but describes him as "rather touchy" (andak zild-ranj), a description illustrated by Rida-qulf Khan's remark (in the Rawdatu's-Safd) that he was much vexed when the Shah, meaning to praise him, told him that he was "prodigal of talents¹." He is said to have written twelve thousand verses, which include, besides qasidas and ghazals, the Bazm-i-Wisdl and the continuation and completion of Wahshis Farhdd u Shirin, described as "far superior to the original²." He also translated into Persian the Atwd-qudh-Dhahab ("Collars of Gold") of Zamakhshari. Bismil, who professes to have read all his poems, only cites the relatively small number of 213 couplets, of which the following are fairly typical, and afiord a good instance of what Persian rhetoricians call the "attribution of praise in the form of blame," for the qasida begins :

" The sea, the land, heaven and the stars—
Each one of them declares the King a tyrant—an opening calculated to cause consternation to courtiers, until it is stated that the sea considers itself wronged by his liberality, the mountain because he has scattered its hoarded gold like dust, the stars because they are eclipsed in number and splendour by his hosts, and so forth. As

¹ باسراف در کمالات نسبت داد،

² فرهاد و شیرین وحشی را تمام فرموده و کمال فصاحت ظاهر نموده و بهراتب به از وحشی گفته،

such far-fetched conceits can hardly be made attractive in translation, I again confine myself to quoting a few lines of the original:

هرکس شها ز بحر و بر و چرخ و اخترست
 اقرار میکنند که خسرو ستمگوست
 ز آنها یکیست بحر که نالد ز دست شاه
 کآبرم ازو برفت و کنون خاک بر سرست
 اندخته‌ام تمام بهردخت و خود نگفت
 کاین سنگریزه نیست که مرجان و گوهرست
 دریا نشست و کوه بر آورد سر که داد
 زین شاه جود پیشه مرا دل پر آدرست
 بر من هر آنچه رفت بدریا ز شه نرفت
 مرجان کجا بپایه یاقوت احمرست
 لعلی که جز بر افسر شاهان حرام باد
 بی آب تر ز افسر شاهانش بر درست
 ز مرا ندیدی و آن عزتی که داشت
 با خاک ره ز جود وی اکنون برابرت
 گوه‌است و سنگ خویشت کنون از سخای شاه
 و آن نیز پیش حلم وی از گاه کمترست
 افراخت چرخ سر که مرا شکوه بیشتر
 برفش فزون‌ترست که بامش فزون‌ترست
 اختر مرا شمار نه و پیش لشکرش
 اختر مگو که مهره چندم بشش درست
 خورشید را که چشم و چراغ زمانه بود
 آتش بدل ز مجمر شاهش چو مجمرست

تا کرد شیر رایتش آهنگِ آسمان،
 شیر من از هراس چو روباه لاغوست،
 از پیش نسر گرسنه چشمم بهاز شاه،
 صد عجز نامه بیش ببال گبوترست،
 این شاه نیست دشمنِ بحرست و معدنست،
 این شاه نیست آفتِ چرخ است و اخترست،

Wisal's Farhdd u Shirin has been lithographed, and ample selections from his poems are given by Rida-qulf Khan in his Riyddu'l- Arifin (pp. 337-50) and Majrncu' l-Fusahd (ii, pp. 528-48), which latter work also contains (pp. 548-58) an ample notice of his eldest son Wiqar, who was presented to Nasiru'd-Din Shah in 1274/1857-8 at Tihr&n, where his biographer met him again "after twenty years' separation." The same work contains notices of Wiqar's younger brothers, MIRza Mahmud the physician, poetically named Hakfm (d. 1268/1851-2: pp. 102-5), and MIRza Abu'l-Qasim Farhang, of whom I have already spoken (p. 300 supra), but not of the three other brothers Dawarf, Yazdanf and Himmat. The following fine musammat by Dawarf, describing one of the Shah's hunting parties, I copied for myself in the house of the late Nawwab Mirza Hasan 'Ali Khan at Tihran early in the year 1888, and, as it has never been published, and I know of no other copy in Europe, I cannot resist the temptation of here assuring a survival hitherto so precarious, for it was copied on a loose half-sheet of note-paper which I only accidentally came across just now while searching for something else.

يك چند جدا از برور آن شوخ پسر بود،
 از وی نه نشان بود مرا و نه خبر بود،

با موکب منصور همانا بسفر بود
 از حسرت او آتش شوقم بجگر بود
 شبهای فراقم ز شب گور بتو بود
 روزم ز غم هجر سیه‌تر ز شب تار
 دوشینه همان ز اول شب ناشده پاسی
 زنگی شب افکنده برخ تیره پلاسی
 با قهر بیندوده و پوشیده لباسی
 مه بر سرگردون شده چون سیمین طاسی
 آمد ز در آن دلبر بی ترس و هراسی
 یکباره ببرد از دل من انده و تجماری
 بر بسته میان و زده خنجر بکمر بر
 مسکین دلم از خنجر تیزش بحدو بر
 سرداری سنجاب پوشیده بب بر
 چوخای خراسانی آنرا بزهر بر
 از بس هوس دیدن من داشت بسر بر
 از ره سوی من آمده با چکمه و شلوار
 بر خاک سرو زلف و رخ از گرد سپاهش
 خشکیده دو عتاب تر از صدمه راهش
 از بس نزده شانه بزلفین سپاهش
 درهم شده و ریخته بر گرد گلاش
 چون کاسه خون سرخ شده چشم سپاهش
 از صدمه بیخوابی و از زحمت بسیار
 یک دسته گلی سرخ ره آورد سفر داشت
 از سنبل تو نیز یکی دسته بسر داشت

از لعلِ بدخشانی يك حَقَّةٔ گهر داشت،
 از حَقَّةٔ عجبتَر كه يکی تنگ شکر داشت،
 چون از دلِ بیمارِ مَن خسته خبر داشت،
 در تنگ شکر داشت دَوای دل بیمار،
 گفتَر صفا گرچه بسی رنج کشیدی،
 صد شکر که شاد آمدی و نیک رسیدی،
 جانِ رهی از دستِ غمان باز خریدی،
 هر گُو که در این راه چه کردی و چه دیدی،
 در موکب منصور چه دیدی و شنیدی،
 چون بود سرانجام و چه شد عاقبتِ کار،
 گفتا که نبودى و ندیدی که چه سان بود،
 نخجیر که شاه یِکى (لله)ستان بود،
 هر گوشه ز خون دجلهٔ بغداد روان بود،
 تا چشمِ همی کار کند تیر و گمان بود،
 تا ابر همی جای دهد گرز و ستان بود،
 نه دشت پدیدار بُد از لاش و نه کُشار،
 دلها همه آسوده ز رنج و ز حزن بود،
 در دشت و بیابان همه گل بود و سمن بود،
 کبکِ درى از هر طرفی قهقهه زن بود،
 نخجیر که از آهو چون دشتِ خُتن بود،
 اینها همه از بختِ شِه شیر شکن بود،
 کاقبالِ وى افزوده بُود بختش بیدار،
 بخِ بخِ چه تماشائی و وه وه چه شکارى،
 آراسته صحرا و بیابان چو نگارى،

کیتی بزمستان شده چون تازه بهاری
 هر گوشه ز آهو و ز نخچیر قطاری
 هر آهوئی آویخته از ترك سواری
 چون لاش بقناره قصاب نگونسار

This poem is simple, sonorous and graphic; the court page, who has just returned from accompanying the Shah on a winter hunting-expedition, and is in so great a hurry to visit his friend the poet that he enters in his riding-breeches and boots (bd chakma wa shalwdr), with hair still disordered and full of dust, and eyes bloodshot from the glare of the sun, the hardships of exposure, and lack of sleep, bringing only as a present from the journey {rah-dward-i-safar) roses and hyacinths (his cheeks and hair), rubies of Badakhshan (his lips), and a casket of pearls (his teeth), is a vivid picture; and if a description of the Royal massacre of game reminds us of the immortal Mr Bunker's Bavarian battue¹, we must remember that the wholesale slaughters of game instituted by Chingfz Khan the Mongol in the thirteenth century, whereof the tradition still survives to some extent, were on a colossal scale, altogether transcending any European analogy².

In 1887, the year before I met Dawarfs brother Farhang at Shiraz, two of his unpublished poems were shown to and copied by me in London. One was a qasida in praise of Queen Victoria, composed on the occasion of her Jubilee, which I was asked to translate so that it might perhaps be brought to her notice, a hope not fulfilled. The other, composed in May of the same year (Sha'ban, 1304), contained a quaint description

Farhang's
description of Pans.

¹ See J. Storer Clouston's Lunatic at Large (shilling edition, 1912, p. 241).

² See Baron d'Ohsson's Histoire des Mongols (the Hague and Amsterdam, 1834), vol. 1, pp. 404-6; and p. 59, n. 2 supra.

of Paris, laudatory for the most part, but concluding with some rather severe reflections on the republican form of government. It differs widely from the poems of Farhang cited in the Majmcu'l-Fusahd (ii, pp. 384-8), is full of French words, and produces, as was probably intended, a somewhat comic and burlesque effect. It contains 78 verses and is too long to be cited in full, but I here give the opening and concluding portions :

چشم بکشا بیا بین انوار،	سوی پاریس از در و دیوار،
دیده راز بین خود بکشای،	تا ببینی ز هر طرف اسرار،
سر آزادگان و آزادی،	حق نموده برایشان اظهار،
همگی عواجه‌های آزادند،	نیست مملوک جمله شان احرار،
همه شهر پادشاه و شند،	هم زن و مرد و هر صغار و كبار،
همه دارای مکت و ثروت،	همه با مال و دولت بسمار،
همه دارای شغل و کار خودند،	نیست در ملک یک نفر بیکار،
همگی صاحبان منصب و شغل،	همه سر کرده و همه سالار،
شهر آراسته چو خلد برین،	باغی آراسته چو باغ بهار،
شب زبس مشعل است و شمع و چراغ،	نیست فرقی میان لیل و نهار،
ماه رویان و گل‌عذاران را،	بنگر از هر طرف قطار قطار،
کوچه‌هایی همه چو باغ ارم،	هر طرف بر نشسته سرو و چار،
در خیابان و کوچه‌ها بینی،	گُرسی و صدلی دویست هزار،
همه کالسکه‌های پُر دلبز،	همه آتورها پُر از دلدار،
و ده چه کالسکه‌ها چو حجله حور،	و ده چه آتورها های خوش رفتار،
از قَرم و آمَنبوس بسی،	هست چندان که ناید او بشمار،
ز اول شهر تا باخِر شهر،	در خیابان و کوچه و بَلوار،
گوئیا حجله ز قصر بهشت،	می برندش همی یچین و یسار،

¹ Vosture.² Tramway.³ Omnibus.⁴ Boulevard.

حجله ^۱ پُر ز حوریانِ بهشت ^۱	دورِ آن حجله بر نشسته قطار ^۱
هر طرف بگذری گل و نسرين ^۱	هر طرف بنگری گل و گلزار ^۱
* * *	* * *
از گل و عطر و بوی ریحانها ^۱	گشته پاریس طبله ^۱ عطار ^۱
* * *	* * *
تا نیائی و خود نه بجنی تو ^۱	نکنی بر کلامِ من اقرار ^۱
* * *	* * *
راست گویند و راست گردارند ^۱	راستیشان شده همیشه شعار ^۱
هرچه گیرند و هرچه بفروشد ^۱	راست گویند در همه بازار ^۱
کس نکوید کلام نا مربوط ^۱	نشود کس کلام نا هنجار ^۱
مهربانی و لطف و خوشخوئی ^۱	همه با یکدگر کنند ایثار ^۱
همه ^۱ خلق عیسوی مذهب ^۱	همه ^۱ ملک عیسوی آثار ^۱
همه روحانی و مسیحائی ^۱	همه در گیش و دینِ خود هشیار ^۱
در کلیسا برای خدمت دین ^۱	هر کشیشی نموده استظهار ^۱
آن یکی طیلسان کشیده بسر ^۱	آن یکی بسته بر کمر زُتار ^۱
در کلیسای اُنتر دام دیدم ^۱	معتکف مردی نماز گذار ^۱
صورتی نقش کرده بر لوحی ^۱	شکلِ عیسی کشیده بر سرِ دار ^۱
سجده گاه همه همان صورت ^۱	قبله گاه همه همان دیوار ^۱
از سرِ صدق و از سرِ اخلاص ^۱	همه در دینِ خویش بر خوردار ^۱
همه پاک و منزّه و خوشخوی ^۱	همه عیسی صفت همه احرار ^۱
همه در کارِ خویشتن محکم ^۱	همه در شغلِ خویشتن مختار ^۱
همه در مشورت بهر هر رای ^۱	همه در گفتگوی بهر همکار ^۱
همه با عقل و هوش و با تدبیر ^۱	همه با علم و دانش و افکار ^۱
لیک با این همه صنایع و علم ^۱	رمزگی گویمت بکن اقرار ^۱

^۱ Notre-Dame

حکمت و طبشان دروغ بود'	کس ندیده که به شود بیمار'
همه شان پادشاه و سلطانند'	زین سبب نیست سلطنت در کار'
شهرشان منضبط نه با سلطان'	فوجشان منتظر نه با سردار'
قومی از عاقلان و دانایان'	متفق میروند در دربار'
مجلسی منعقد برای همه'	می نشینند متحد گفتار'
گفتگوی میکنند در هر امر'	مشورت میزنند در هر کار'
مجلسی منعقد ز هفت صد تن'	همگان عاقلان و کار گذار'
متفق قول و متفق کارند'	متفق رای و متفق گفتار'
نام این جمع و نام این مجلس'	گشته جمهور در همه اقطار'
همه دولت فرانسه را'	قوم جمهور می دهند مدار'
بعد لوئی فلیپ و ناپلیان'	کس نکرده بسلطنت اقرار'
همه سلطان دولت خویشند'	همگی پادشاه ملک مدار'
از ره علم و از ره دانش'	نیست کاری برایشان دشوار'
هرچه این گوید آن ذکر شنود'	نبودشان به قبل هر انکار'
گفته این شعرها مه شعبان'	سال هجری هزار و سیصد و چار'

Lack of space compels me to pass over several poets of some note, such as Aqa Muhammad Hasan Zargar ("the Goldsmith") of Isiahan, who died in 1270/ Sslporunce. 1853-4' I Aqa Muhammad 'Askiq, a tailor, also of Isiahan, who died at the age of seventy in 1281/1864'; Mīrza Muhammad 'Ali Surtish of Sidih, entitled Shatnsu'sh-Shu'ard, who died in 1285/1868-9'; and Aqa Muhammad 'Ali Jayhun of Yazd, of whose life I can find no particulars save such as can be gleaned from his verses, but who composed, besides numerous poems of various types, a prose work entitled Namakddn ("the Salt-cellar") on the model of the Gulistdn, and whose complete works were lithographed at Bombay in 1316/1899, making a volume of 317 pp. Others who are reckoned amongst the poets were more distinguished in other fields of literature, such as the historians Ridd-qulf Kh&n *Hiddyat*¹, so often cited in this chapter (born 1215/1800, died 1288/1871-2), and Mīrzd Muhammad Taqī Sipihr of Kdshan², entitled Lisdnu'l-Mulk ("the Tongue of the Kingdom"), author of the Ndsikhu't-Tawdrikh ("Abrogator of Histories") and of another prose work entitled Bardhinu'l-'Ajam ("Proofs of the Persians"); the philosopher Hdjji Mulld Hddiof Sabzawdr, whq was born in 1212/1797-8, wrote a small amount of verse under the pen-name of Asrdr ("Secrets"), and died in 1295/1878³; and others. Of the remaining modern representatives of the "Classical School" Qa'dnf is by far the most important, and after him Yaghmd, Furughi and Shaybdf, of whom some account must now be given.

¹ See Majma'ul-Fusahd) 11, pp. 151-2.

² Ibid., pp. 346-9.

⁸ Ibid., pp. 184-95.

(7) Qa'anf (d. 1270/1853-4).

Qi'ini is by genegalconsent the most notable poet produced by Persia irrthe nineteenth century. He was born af StiirSz about 1222/1807-8, for, according to Qa'ani (d. 1270/1853-4). his own statement at the end of the Kitdb-i-Parishdn, he completed that work on Rajab 20, 1252 (October 31, 1836), being then two or three months short of thirty years of age:

¹ His autobiography concludes the Majma'u'l-Fusaha ii, pp. 581-678.

² Ibid. ii, pp. 156-81.

³ See my Year amongst the Persians pp. 131-4; and the Riyadu'l-'Ariftn, pp. 241-2, which, however, puts his birth in 1215/1800-1, and adds that he was sixty-three years of age at the time of writing (1278/1861-2).

شکر که از یازی یزدانِ من
 جمع شد اوراقِ پریشانِ من
 نیست درو عاریتِ هیچ کس
 خاصِ منست آنچه درو هست و بس
 جز دو سه بیتی ز عرب و ز عجم
 کآمدہ جاری بزبانِ قلم
 خاصه که در طی عبارتِ همی
 رفته بدانجمله اشارتِ همی
 تا ز حدودان نرسد ذق مرا
 سخره باطل نشود حق مرا
 رفته ز ماهِ رجب ایامِ بیست
 پنجه و دو سال و هزار و دو بیست
 کمر بود از سی دو سه ماهِ سالِ من
 لیک بسی خسته بود حالِ من
 بسکه ز غمِ کوژتر از هاله‌ام
 راست چو پیرانِ نود ساله‌ام
 لیک غمِ من غمِ عشقت و بس
 ز آنکه جز او نیست گسر داد رس
 شادی عالم همه در این غم‌است
 عاشق ازین غمِ بجان خرم است
 غم‌اگر اینست فزونیتر خوش است
 بر صفتِ قند مکرر خوش است
 هر که ازین غمِ بدش پرتوی است
 در نظرش مُلکِ دو عالم جوی است
 یا رب ازین غمِ دل من شاد کن
 وز غمِ دنیا دلم آزاد کن

E[is proper name was Habib' under which he originally wrote, and which he uses as his takkattus, or nom de gUerre, in many of his earlier poems. Later when he and MIRZD 'Abbas of Bistam, who originally wrote under the pen-name of Miskfn, had attached themselves to Hasan 'AM MIRza Skujd'u's-Saltana, for some time Governor of Khurdsan and Kirman, that prince changed their pen-names respectively to Qd'anf and Furughi, after his two sons Ogotay Qa'an and Furughu'd-Dawla¹.

Qa'anf was born at Shirdz. His father, MIRza" Muhammad 'Ali, was also a poet who wrote under the pen-name of Gulshan. Though Qa'anf was but a child when he died, his statement in the Kitdb-i-Parishdn' that "though thirty complete years have elapsed since the death of my father, I still imagine that it was but two weeks ago" cannot be reconciled with the other statement quoted above that he was not yet thirty when he completed the book in question. The Tadhkira-i-Dilgushd consecrates articles to both father and son, but unfortunately in my manuscript the last two figures of the date of Gulshan's death are left blank, while it is also omitted in the notice contained in the Majntctul-Fusahd') which is very meagre.

About Qi'ini's seemingly uneventful life there is not much to be said. He appears to have spent most of it at Shiraz, where in the spring of 1888 I had the honour of occupying the room in the house of the Nawwdb MIRza' Haydar 'All Khin which he used to inhabit; and, as we have seen, he resided for some time at Kirmdn. The latter part of his life, when he had established himself as a recognized Court poet, was spent at Tihran, where he died in

¹ Majma 'u'l-Fusahd, ii, p. 394.

² Tihran lithographed edition of Qa'ani's works of 1302/1884-5, p. 35.

³ Vol. ii, p. 426.

HAJJİ MİRZÄ AQASI

Or. 4938 (Brit. Mus.). 9

To face p. 238

1270/1853-4. Two of his latest poems must have been those which he wrote to celebrate the escape of Nasiru'd-Din Shah from the attempt on his life made by three Babfs on August 15, 1852, quoted in my *Traveller's Narrative*¹.

Qa'anf is one of the most melodious of all the Persian poets, and his command of the language is wonderful, but he lacks high aims and noble principles. Not only does he flatter great men while they are in power, and turn and rend them as soon as they fall into disgrace, but he is prone to indulge in the most objectionable innuendo and even the coarsest obscenity. In numerous qastdas he extols the virtues and justice of Hajji Mirza Aqasi², the Prime Minister of Muhammad Shah, but in a qasida in praise of his successor Mirza Taqf Khan Arnir-i-Kablr he alludes to the fallen minister thus:

بجای ظالمی شقی نشسته عادلِ تقی، که مؤمنانِ متقی کنند افتخارها،

"In the place of a vile tyrant is seated a just and God-fearing man,
In whom pious believers take pride."

Of his innuendo the following is a good specimen :

خندان خندان دويد و پيش من آمد،
دوخت دو لب بر لبم که بوسه بزن ها،
الحق شرم آمدم بدين لب منکر،
بوسه زدن بر لبی چو لاله حمرا،
کاین لب همچون زلوی من نه سزا بود،
بر لبکی سرخ تر ز خون مصفا،

¹ Vol. ii, pp. 325-6.

² Tihrań ed. of 1302/1884-5, pp. 19, 35, 40, 41, 43, 70, 82, 94, 95, 115, 123, 130 etc.

گفتش ای تَرْك داده كبر دو صد بوس،
 كز لب لعل تو قانعم بهشاشا،
 روی ترش كرد و گفت كُبر مرو هل،
 كز تو تولا نكو بود نه تبرا،
 شاعر و آنگاه ردّ بوسه شیرین،
 كودك و آنگاه تَرْك جورِ مُنقا،
 مادج شاهی تورا رسد كه برود،
 خاك رخت را بزلّف تافته حورا،
 بوسه بزن مر مرا ز لطف و كرنه،
 نزد بُتان سوشكسته كردم و رسوا،
 در همه عَضُومِ مخبّری پی بوسه،
 از سرم اينك بگير و بوسه بزن تا
 بوسه چه باشد كه مستحقّ كناری،
 شاكرم ايمك بوسه تو ولی با
 روی و لب هر دو نيك درخور بوسند،
 اين من و اينك تو يا ببوس لبم يا
 گفتش ای تَرْك تَرْك اين سخنان كوی،
 بس كن ازین غمز و رمز و عشوه و ایما،

The beauty of Qa'dnfs language can naturally only be appreciated by one who can read his poems in the original, which is fortunately easily accessible, as his works have been repeatedly published¹. I have chiefly used the Tihra lithographed edition of 1302/1884-5, and in a lesser degree the Tabriz lithographed edition of 1273/1857, and the "Selections... recommended for the Degree of Honour

¹ See E. Edwards's Catalogue of the Persian printed books in the British Museum, 1922, columns 237-9.

Examination in Persian" printed at Calcutta in A.D. 1907. Like most of the Qājār poets, he excels chiefly in the qasīda, the musammat and the tarkīb-band, but the following *ghazal*¹ is extraordinarily graceful and melodious.

یارگی مراست رنید و بذله‌گو،
 شوخ و دل‌ریا خوب و خوش سرشت
 طره‌اش عبیر پیکرش حریر،
 عارضش بهار طلعتش بهشت
 نقش‌بند روح کوئی از نخست،
 صورت و لبش تا کشد در،
 لعل‌پاره‌ها ز آب خضر شست،
 پس نمود حل با شکر سوش
 در قمار عشق از من آن پسر،
 برده عقل و دین جسم و جان و سر،
 هوش و صبر و تاب مال و سیر و زر،
 قول لوطیمان هرچه بود کُشت
 پیش از آنکه خط رویدش ز روی،
 بود آن پسر سخت و تند خوی
 وینک از رخس سر ز دست موی،
 تا از آن خطم چیست سر نوشت
 چون خطش دمید خاطرم فرود،
 کآن صفای حسن شد بدل بُرد
 نکستِ رخس باغ وُرد بُرد،
 غنچه از لبش داغ و درد هشت
 موی عارضه داشت رنگ قیر،
 در فراق او شد برونک شیر

¹ Tīhrān ed. of 1302, p. 355.

در جوانیم عمر گشت پیر
 دهر پنبه کرد چرخ هرچه رشت
 خواهم از خدا در همه جهان
 يك قفس زمين يك نفس زمان
 تا بنگارم دل مَی خورم در آن
 بی حریف بد بی نگارِ رشت
 خوش دهد بهار نشأ سرخ مَل
 که کنار رود که فراز پُل
 که بنیز سرو که بیای کُل
 که بصرین باغ که بطرفِ گشت
 مرد چون شناخت مغز را ز پوست
 هرچه بنگرد نیست غیر دوست
 هر کجا رود ملك ملكِ اوست
 خواه در حرم خواه در گنشت
 چون ملك مرا گفت گایِ حبیب
 يك غزل بگو نغز و دلغریب
 پس از آن غزل او برد نصیب
 زرع زان کس است کز نخست گشت
 زین عاهدین زیب مجد و جاه
 بنده امیر نمکخواه شاه
 ملك را شرف خلق را پناه
 هم ملك لقا هم ملك سرشت

Wonderful also is the swing and grace of the poem in praise of the Queen-mother (Mahd-i-'Ulyā) beginning¹:

بنفشه رسته از زمین بطرفِ جویبارها
 و یا کُسته حورِ عین ز زلفِ خویش تارها

¹ Tihṙān ed. of 1302, p. 309.

ز سنگ اگر ندیده، چه سان جهدِ شرارها،

ببرکهای لاله بین میانِ لاله زارها،

که چون شراره میجهد ز سنگِ کوهسارها،

"Are these violets growing from the ground on the brink of the streams,

Or have the hours [of Paradise] plucked strands from their tresses?"

If thou hast not seen how the sparks leap from the rock,

Look at the petals of the red anemones in their beds

Which leap forth like sparks from the crags of the mountains!"

Not inferior to this is another similar poem in praise of Mírzá Taqí Khán Amír-i-Kabír, beginning¹:

نسیمِ خُلد میوزد مکر ز جویبارها،

که بوی مشک میدهد هوای مرغزارها،

فرازِ خاک و خشتها دمیده سبزه کشتها،

چه کشتها بهشتها نه ده نه صد هزارها،

Instead of the far-fetched and often almost unintelligible conceits so dear to many Persian poets, Qá'ání prefers to draw his illustrations from familiar customs and common observances, as, for example, in the following verses², wherein allusion is made to various popular ceremonies connected with the Naw-rúz, or Persian New Year's Day:

عید شد ساقی بیآ در گردشِ آور جامرا،

پُشتِ پا زن دورِ چرخ و گردشِ ایامرا،

سینِ ساغر بس بود ای توكِ مارا روزِ عید،

گو نباشد هفت سین³ رندانِ دُرْد آشامرا،

¹ Tíhrán ed. of 1302, p. 16.

² Ibid., pp. 14-15.

³ Haft Sín. It is customary at the Naw-rúz to collect together seven objects whereof the names begin with the letter S, such as sunbul (hyacinth), stb (apple), súsan (lily), sín (silver), sr (garlic), sirka (vinegar), and sipand (rue).

خلق را بر لبِ حدیثِ جامه¹ نو¹ هست و من
 از شرابِ کهنه میجویر لبالب جام را
 هر کسی شکر نهد بر خوان و بر خواند دعا
 من ز لعلِ شکرینت طالبم دشنام را
 هر تنی را هست سیر و دانه² گندم بدست
 مایلم من دانه² خالی تو سیر اندام را
 سیر بر خوانست مردم را و من از عمر سیر
 بی دلآزایی که برده است از دلم آزار را
 پسته و بادام نقلِ روزِ نوروزست و من
 بال لب و چشمت نخواهر پسته و بادام را
 عود اندر عید میسوزند و من نالان چو عود
 بی بُتی کز خالِ هندو ره زند اسلام را
 یگدگورا خلق میبوسند و من زین عمر هلاک
 گزجه بوسد دیگری آن شوخ شیرین کام را
 سرکه بردستار خوان خلق و همچون سرکه دوست
 میکند بر ما تُرش رنگین رخ گلزار را
 خلق را در سالِ روزی عید و من از چهرِ شاه
 عید دارم سال و ماه و هفته صبح و شام را²
 لا جرم این عیدِ خاص من که بادا پادار
 کَر و فَرش بشکند بازارِ عیدِ عام را

¹ All the people put on new clothes at this great national festival, distribute sugar-plums amongst their friends, fill their hands with silver and corn, eat pistachio-nuts and almonds, burn aloë-wood and other fragrant substances, and greet one another with kisses

² The first verse of a poem by Imámí of Herát cited on p. 116 of my Persian Literature under Tartar dominion contains a very similar thought.

Qd'anf is also one of the very few Persian poets who has condescended to reproduce actual peculiarities of speech or enunciation, as in his well-known dialogue between an old man and a child both of whom are afflicted with a stammer. This poem, which may more conveniently be transcribed into the Roman character, is as follows¹:

Qa'anis stammering poem

" Pi'raki lal sahar-gali bi-tifli alkan
Mi-shunfdam ki badin naw' hamf-rdnd suktan .
' K'ay zi zulfat sa-sa-subham sha-sha-shdm-i-tarfk,
Way zi chihrat sha-sha-shdmam sa-sa-subh-i-rawshan!
Ta-ta-tiryakiyam, u az sha-sha-shahd-i-la-labat
Sa-sa-sabr u ta-ta-tdbam ra-ra-raft az ta-ta-tan'
Tifl gufta, ' Ma-ma-man-ra tu-tu taqlid ma-kun '
Ga-ga-gum shaw zi baram, ay ka-ka-kamtar az zan '
Mi-mi-khwdhi mu-mu-mushti bi-ka-kallat bi-zanam,
Ki biyuftad ma-ma-maghzat ma-maydn-i-da-dihan ?'
Pi'r gufta, 'Wa-wa-wa'llahi ki ma'lum-ast in Ki-ki zadam man-i-bichara zi mddar alkan'
Ha-ha-haftad u ha-hashtad u si sdl-ast fuziin
Ga-ga-gung u la-la-lalam ba-bi-Khallaq-i-Zaman "
Tifl gufta ' Kha-khuda-ra sa-sa-sad bar sha-shukr
Ki bi-rastam bi-jahan az ma-la-lal u ma-mihan '
Ma-ma-man ham ga-ga-gungam ma-ma-mithl-i-tu-tu-tu :
Tu-tu-tu ham ga-ga-gungi ma-ma-mithl-i-ma-ma-man '"

Besides his poems, Qd'ani wrote a collection of stories and maxims in the style of Sa'di's Gulistdn entitled Kitab-i-P art's kdn, comprising one hundred and thirteen anecdotes, and concluding with thirty-three truly Machiavellian counsels to Kings and Princes. This book, which contains a certain amount of autobiographical material, occupies pp. 1-40 of the Tihiran lithographed edition of Qa'anf's works, and numerous other editions exist, several of which are mentioned by Mr Edwards in his *Catalogue*².

¹ See my Year amongst the Persians, pp 118-19, and pp 345-6 of the edition of Qa'ani cited above.

² Columns 237-9.

(8) Furughi (d 1274/1858).

Mention has already been made of Mirzi 'Abbas, son of Aqa Musa of Bistam, who wrote verse first under the pen-name of Miskm and later of Furughi. He is said to have written some twenty thousand verses, of which a selection of some five thousand is placed at the end (pp. 4-75) of the Tihiran edition (1302/1884-5) of the works of Qa'anf, with whom he was so closely associated. Unlike him, however, he seems to have preferred lyric to elegiac forms of poetry; at any rate the selections in question consist entirely of ghazals. According to the brief biography prefixed to them he adopted the Stifi doctrine in the extremer forms which it had assumed in ancient times with Bayazfd of Bistam and Husayn ibn Mansur al-Hallaj, and so incurred the suspicion and censure of the orthodox. Nasiru'd-Dm Shah, in the beginning of whose reign he was still flourishing, once sent for him and said, "Men say that like Pharaoh thou dost advance the claim 'I am your Lord the Supreme'¹ and that thou dost openly pretend to Divinity." "This assertion/"replied Furughi, touching the ground with his forehead, "is sheer calumny...For seventy years I have run hither and thither, and only now have I reached the Shadow of God!"² The first three verses from the first ode cited seem to me as good and as typical as any others. They run as follows :

کی رفتہ ر دل کہ تمنا کنم ترا
 کی بودہ بہتہ کہ پیدا کنم ترا
 عیبت نکردہ کہ شور طالب حضور
 پنهان نکشتہ کہ هویدا کنم ترا
 با صد ہزار جلوہ ہرون آمدی کہ من
 با صد ہزار دیدہ تماشا کنم ترا

¹ Qur'an, lxxix, 24.² I.e. the King.

" When didst thou depart from the heart that I should crave for Thee?
 When wert thou hidden that I should find Thee ?
 Thou hast not disappeared that I should seek Thy presence:
 Thou hast not become hidden that I should make Thee apparent.
 Thou hast come forth with a hundred thousand efulgences
 That I may contemplate Thee with a hundred thousand eyes."

(9) Yaghma of Jandaq.

Mirza Abu'l-Hasan of Jandaq, chiefly celebrated for his abusive and obscene verses (Hazaliyydi), and commonly known, from his favourite term of coarse invective, as *Zan-qahba*¹ is the last poet mentioned by the author of the *Majmdu7-Fusa'id*¹ before the autobiography with which he concludes. He was for some time secretary to a very violent and foul-mouthed nobleman named Dhu'l-Fiqar Khan of Samnan, for whose amusement he is said to have written these offensive poems, collectively known as the Sarddnyya'. Though he wrote a quantity of serious verse and a number of elegant letters in prose, which are included in the large Tihra edition of his works lithographed in 1283/1866-7, it is on his Hazaliyydt, or "Facetiae," that his fame or infamy is based. The author of the Tadhkira-i-Dilgushd' devotes but three lines to him, and was not personally acquainted with him, but had heard him well spoken of as "an amiable and kindly man and a good-natured and eloquent youth, who did not believe in making a collection of his poems." Qa'ani attacked him in his own style in the following abusive verses⁴:

Qa'ani's attack on Yaghma.

هست اختر ز نقبهِ و نه کُنبدِ دَوّارِ
 پُر کشته ز زَنقِ بگيِ مرشدِ اشوارِ

¹ Vol. ii, p. 580.

² These poems, which occupy pp. 204-217 of the Tihra edition of 1283/1866-7, are, however, only a fraction of the Hazaliyydt

³ F. 53^b of my MS.

⁴ P. 372 of the lithographed Tihra edition of 1302/1884-5.

آن شاهر زنجبه هكه پغماش ستايند،
 شهرش همه زنجبه و زنجبه‌گيش كار،
 كوئي همه زنجبه و از خویش نكوئي،
 خوانی همه زنجبه و از خود نه خبردار،
 زنجبه تو زنجبه‌تری از همه مردم،
 عالم همه زنجبه، محبوب و تو مختار،
 عكس تو فتاده است در آينه عالم،
 تا آنكه بزنجبه‌گی خود گنی اقرار،

Yaghma's Kulliyydt, or Complete Works, as represented in the Tihran lithographed edition p,bO^ mentioned, comprise the following;

Contents of Yaghma's
Kulliyyat or Complete Works.

A. Prose writings (pp. 2-145), consisting of numerous letters written to friends and "acquaintances, unfortunately, so far as I have seen, undated. A careful examination of these letters would undoubtedly furnish abundant materials for the poet's biography. Many of them are addressed to unnamed friends, acquaintances or patrons, but some were written to his sons, Mirza Isma'fl who wrote poetry under the pen-name of Hunar, Mirza Ahmad Safd'i, Mirza Muhammad 'Ali Khatar, and Mirza Ibrahim Dastdn, while others were written to men of more or less note whose names are given. In many of these letters he elects to write in pure Persian (JPdrsi-niglkfi), avoiding all Arabic words, while others, called nama-i-basiy are written in a very simple style.

B. Verse,

1. Early odes (ghazaliyydt-i-qadimd), pp. 146-183.
2. Later odes (ghazaliyyat-i-jadida) pp. 184-203.
3. The SardAriyya mentioned above (pp. 204-217), written in the ghazal form with the pen-name Sardar'

[illegible]

Autograph of the poet Yaghmá

4. The Qassdbiyya (pp. 218-231), similar to the last-mentioned work in form and contents, but with the pen-name Qassdb ("Butcher").

5. The Kitdb-i-Ahmad (pp. 232-247), similar to the two last, but with the pen-name Ahmad.

6. The Khuldsatu l-Iftiddh ("Quintessence of Disgrace," pp. 248-265), an account in mathnawiverse of a scandalous incident fully described in a marginal note on p. 248.

7. The Kitdb-i-Sukuku'd-Dalil (pp. 266-280), another mathnawi in the metre of the Shdhndma outwardly praising but inwardly satirizing a certain Sayyid Qanbar-i-ifoze/afo-khwdn, entitled by Yaghma Rustamu's-Sdddt.

8. Maratht or Elegies on the deaths of the Imams (pp. 282-301).

9. Tarji'l-bands and Tarkib-bands (pp. 302-331), mostly of a ribald character.

10. Qita'dt or Fragments (pp. 332-355), mostly ribald and satirical.

11. Rubd'iyydt or Quatrains (pp. 356-389), also ribald.

The odes, old and new, and the elegies (Nos. 1, 2 and 8 in the above list) constitute the respectable part of Yaghmd's verse, in all about one-third of the whole. As Yaghma's abusive verse.

for the rest, with the possible exception of

No. 7, it is for the most part not fit to print, much less to translate. The poet's favourite term of abuse Zau-gahba, by which he himself is commonly known, is by no means a nice expression, but it is delicacy itself compared with much of the language he employs. On the other hand, his serious odes and elegies show that His religious elegies.

he can write fine poetry, while his command of language is almost greater than that of Qa'dnf, even though the melody of his verse be less. He also appears to have invented a type of marthiya or elegy which he calls Ntiha-i-Sina-zani, or Lamentation accompanied by beating of the breast. This I supposed till lately to have been one of the new models which sprang into existence after the Revolution of 1905-6, and I gave several specimens of it in my *Press and Poetry of Modern Persia*¹. The following are the initial lines of eight of Yaghmá's elegies of this type:

نوحه¹ سینه زنی²

میرسد خشک لب از شطِ فرات اکبر من³

نو جوان اکبر من⁴

سپلانی بکن ای چشمه⁵ چشمِ تیر من⁶

نو جوان اکبر من⁷

کسوتِ عمر تو تا این عمرِ فیروزه نمون⁸

لعلی آورد به خون⁹

گهتی از نیلِ عزا ساخت سیه معجز من¹⁰

نو جوان اکبر من¹¹

تا ابد داغ تو ای زاده¹² آزاده نهاد¹³

نتوان برد ز یاد¹⁴

از ازل کاشی نمیزاد موا مادر من¹⁵

نو جوان اکبر من¹⁶ آغ

وله ایضاً¹⁷

شکوه از چرخِ ستمگر چکنم¹⁸ گر نکنم¹⁹ چکنم²⁰ گر نکنم²¹

کله از گردشِ اختر چکنم²² گر نکنم²³ چکنم²⁴ گر نکنم²⁵

غیر عباسِ بلاکش چکنم²⁶ گر نکنم²⁷ چکنم²⁸ گر نکنم²⁹

ناله بر حسرتِ اکبر چکنم³⁰ گر نکنم³¹ چکنم³² گر نکنم³³ آغ

¹ See No. 19 (pp. 216-218) and No. 31 (pp. 246-248).

و له ایضاً

در شبست پوشیده بینم روز محشر آفتاب
 آفتاب، باز سرکش آفتاب
 وز صباحت آشکارا شام دیگر آفتاب
 آفتاب، باز سرکش آفتاب
 سُست ازین سخت ابتلا ذرات را بالا و پست
 هرچه هست، باز راه از گاردست
 شوم کن آخر نه از ذره کمتر آفتاب
 آفتاب، باز سرکش آفتاب، الخ

و له ایضاً

کوه و صحرا خصم و شاه کم سپه تنها دریغ
 وا دریغ، نصرتِ اعدا دریغ
 قلبِ ایمان را شکست و نصرتِ اعدا دریغ
 وا دریغ، نصرتِ اعدا دریغ
 آه گز بیدولتان دین بدنیا باخته
 تاخته، گشت کارش ساخته
 پادشاهِ کشورِ دین خسرو دنیا دریغ
 وا دریغ، نصرتِ اعدا دریغ، الخ

و له ایضاً

محشری بینم عیان در هفت کشور آسمان
 آسمان، شرمی آخر آسمان
 شایر عاشوراست این یا صُبْح محشر آسمان
 آسمان، شرمی آخر آسمان

آفتابی شد ز قُورَت تیره اختر آسمان،
 آسمان، شرمی آخر آسمان،
 با چنین دوران لکودی کاش دیگر آسمان،
 آسمان، شرمی آخر آسمان، الخ

و له ایضاً

زین مصیبت نه همین از خاکپان ماتر بهاست،
 کی رواست، سرنگون گردی فلک،
 چار ارکان شش جهت تا نه فلک ماتر رواست،
 کی رواست، سرنگون گردی فلک،
 نعره جن و ملک در ماتر فخر اُسم،
 از قِدم، تا دمِ شامِ عدم،
 از ثری هم تا ثریا از ثریا تا ثراست،
 کی رواست، سرنگون گردی فلک،

و له ایضاً

هفته کین مه شَر سالِ دغل قرون دغااست،
 خون هدر مال هباست،
 شب غم روزِ ستم شامِ الم صُبحِ عزااست،
 خون هدر مال هباست،
 فتنه بیدار و امان خفته و خصر از در کین،
 ترکتازان بکمین،
 رسته بی شهنه و خوان چیده فرمان یغمااست،
 خون هدر مال هباست، الخ

و له ايضاً،

زاده رهرا بکام زاده مروان نگر،
 آه آه، گردش دوران نگر،
 این بخواری آن بعزت این بین و آن نگر،
 آه آه، گردش دوران نگر،
 آل مروان تیغ بر کف آل یس نقد جان،
 زین و آن، گر نظرداری عیان،
 نفی حق اثبات باطل کفر بین ایمان نگر،
 آه آه، گردش دوران نگر، آخ

This last poem in form most closely approaches No. 19 in my Press and Poetry of Modern Persia.

The above poems are interesting as regards their form. The following, an ordinary Nāḩa, or "Lamentation," without refrain, partly in colloquial dialect, is simple and rather beautiful. I quote only the first six of the nineteen verses which it comprises :

دلیر از زندگانی سخت سیره	بمیرم هرچه زوتر باز دیره
زنان را دل سرای درد و ماتم	تن مردان نشان تیغ و تیره
پسر در خون تپان دختر عزادار	برادر گشته و خواهر اسیره
بکام مادران نخست جگر خون	بخلق کودکان خوناب شیر
اسیران را بهجای اشک و افغان	شر در چشم و آتش در ضمیره
خروش تشنه کامان زیر و بالا	ز خاک تیره تا چوین ائیره

"My heart is very weary of life ; however soon I die, it is still too late.
 The women's hearts are the abode of grief and mourning ; the men's bodies are the target of swords and arrows.

Their sons welter in their blood , their daughters mourn ; the brother is slain ; the sister is a captive.

The morsel in the mothers' mouths is their own heart's blood ; the milk in the children's throats is liquid gore.

The captives, in place of tears and lamentations, have sparks in their eyes and fire in their souls.

The outcry of the thirsty reaches down and up from the dark earth to the Sphere of the Ether."

It is curious to find in two such ribald poets as Yaghma and Qa'anf¹ so deep a religious sense and sympathy with the martyrs of their faith as are manifested in a few of their poems. Verlaine, perhaps, offers the nearest parallel in modern European literature.

Ribaldry and piety.

Of the remaining poets who flourished during the long reign of Nasiru'd-Din Shah, whose assassination on May 1, 1896, may be regarded as the first portent of the Revolution which bore its full fruit ten years later, two, Mirza Muhammad Taqf of Kashan with the pen-name of Sipihr, and Mirza Rida-quli Khan Htddyat, are better known as historians and will be mentioned as such in a later chapter, though notices of both are given by the latter in his often-quoted Majrna'u'l-Fusa'id. Another poet of some note is Abu'n-Nasr Fathu 'llali Khdn Shaybdni of Kdshdn, a copious selection of whose poems was printed by the Akhtar Press at Constantinople in 1308/1890-1⁸, and of whom a long notice (pp. 224-245) is also given in the Majma'u l-Fusakd. The list might be increased almost indefinitely, did space permit, but the most notable names have been mentioned, and even to them it has been impossible to do justice.

Sipihr, Hidayat and Shaybani.

¹ For his beautiful marthiya on the tragedy of Karbala, see pp. 177-181 supra,

² See vol. ii, pp. 156-181 for Sipihr, and pp. 581-678 for the autobiography of Hidayat. This great anthology was concluded in 1288/1871-2.

⁸ It was edited by Isma'fl Nasirf Qaraja-Daghi, published at the instigation of Mirza Rida Khdn, afterwards entitled Arfa'u'd-Dawla, and comprises 312 pp.

MUZAFFARU'D-DÍN MÍRZÁ (afterwards SHÁH) seated, with his tutor (Lalá-báshí) RIFÁ-QULÍ KHÁN, poet and historian, standing on his right (the reader's left)

Or. 4938 (Brit. Mus.), 14

To face p. 344

Of the new school of poets produced by the Revolution in, 1906 and the succeeding years I have treated in a separate work, the *Press and Poetry in Modern Persia*¹, more fully than would have been possible in this volume. The most eminent of these contemporary poets are, perhaps, Dakhaw (Dih-Khuda) of Qazwfn, 'Arif of Qazwfn, Sayyid Ashraf of Gfln, and Bahar of Mashhad. Dakhaw is probably the youngest and the most remarkable of them, though I do not think he has produced much verse lately. The versatility of his genius is illustrated by two of his poems (Nos. 3 and 14) cited in my above-mentioned work, on the one hand the riotous burlesque of "Kabldy" and on the other the delicate and beautiful In Memoriam addressed to his former colleague Mirzd Jahangfr Khan of Shiraz, editor of the Sur-i-Isrditl of which the former was published in that admirable paper on November 20, 1907, and the latter on March 8, 1909. Bahar, entitled Malikitsh-Shu'ard, "King of the Poets/" or Poet Laureate, was the editor of the Now Bahdr (which after its suppression reappeared under the title of Tdza Bahar), and was the author of several fine poems (Nos. 20, 34 and 36-47) published in my book, while 'Arif is represented by No. 33, and Ashraf by Nos. 4-7, 9-13, 16-19, and 27. I do not think that the works of these or any others of the post-Revolution poets have been published in a collected form. They appeared from time to time in various newspapers, notably the Stir-i-IsrdiU, Nasim-i-Shimdl and Naw Bahdr, and must be culled from their pages. Many of the now numerous Persian papers contain a literary corner entitled Adabiyydt in which these poems appear. The importance of the fact that their aim must now be to please the increasing public taste and reflect the growing public opinion, not to gratify individual princes, ministers and noblemen, has been already emphasized¹.

¹ Camb. Univ. Press, 1914, pp. xl+357, with a Persian foreword of 5 pp. The poems (originals and translations) occupy pp. 168-308, comprise 61 separate pieces, and can be obtained separately for 5s.

Of one other poet, lately deceased, who is very highly esteemed by his countrymen, but whose writings are not yet readily accessible, something more must be said. This is Mirza Sadiq Khan, a great-grandson of the celebrated Qa'im-maqam³, best known by his title Adibu'l-Mamdhuk, who died on the 28th of Rabi' ii, 1335 (Feb. 21, 1917). Three sources of information about him are at my disposal, viz. (1) a notice in my MS. marked J. 19⁸ on modern Persian poets (pp. 39-50) (2) an obituary notice in No. 20 of the old Kdwa of April 15, 1917; and (3) a pamphlet published at the "Kaviani Press" in 1341/1922 by Khan Malik-i-Husayn-i-Sasanf, a cousin of the poet, announcing his intention of collecting and publishing his poems, and asking help from those who possess copies of verses not in his possession. Some particulars concerning him are also given in my Press and Poetry of Modern Persia in connection with the various papers he edited or wrote for at different times, viz. the Adab of Tabriz (pp. 37~8), Mashhad (p. 38) and Tihiran (p. 39), which extended over the period 1316-1322/1898-1905; the Turco-Persian Irshdd (p. 39), which he edited in conjunction with Ahmad Bey Aghayefi of Qarabagh at Baku in 1323/1905-6; the Rtizndtna-i-Irddn-i-Sulddn (pp. 88-91), to which he contributed in 1321/1903-4; the Irdq-i-'Ajant (pp. 118-19), which he edited in 1325/1907; and the Majlis (pp. 132-3), for which he wrote in 13 24/1906. One of the most celebrated of his poems is also given on pp. 300-302 of the same workr

The late Adibu'l-Mamhuk.

His journalistic activities.

¹ See p. 302 supra.

² See pp. 311-316 supra.

³ See p. 302 supra. Since writing this, my attention has been called by my friend Mirza Salman-i-Asadito an interesting article on the Adibu'l-Mamdhuk in the periodical entitled Armaghdn (No. 1 of the third year, pp. 15-25).

The Adibul-Mamdlik was born in 1277/1860-1, and was a descendant in the third degree of Mirza Tsa Qa'im-maqam, and in the thirty-fifth degree of the Imam Zaynu'l-'Abidin. In 1307/1889-90 he was at Tabriz in the service of the Amfr Nizam (Hasan 'Ali Khan-i-Garrusi), in honour of whom he changed his pen-name from Parwdna ("Moth") to Amiri. In 1311/1893-4 he followed the Amfr Nizam to Kirmanshah and Kurdistan. During the two following years (1894-6) he was employed in the Government Translation Ofiice (Ddru't-Tarjuma-i-Dawlatl) in Tihran, but in Safar 1314/July-August, 1896, he returned with the Amfr Nizam to Adhar-bayjan, where, in 1316/1898-9, he adopted the turban in place of the kulak, became Vice-master of the Luqmaniyya College at Tabriz, and founded the Adab newspaper, which, as stated above, he afterwards continued at Mashhad and Tihran. During the years 1318-20/1900-02 he travelled in the Caucasus and Khwarazm (Khiva), whence he came to Mashhad, but at the end of A.H. 1320 (March, 1903) he returned to Tihran, and for the next two years, 1321-2/1903-5, was the chief contributor to the Riiz-ndma-i-jfrdn-i-Sultdni. In 1323/1905-6 he was joint editor of the Irshdd at Baku; in 1324/1906 he became chief writer for the Majlis' edited by Mirza Muhammad Sadiq-i-Tabataba'f; and in 1325/1907 he founded the 'Irdq-i-Ajam. In July, 1910, he took part in the capture of Tihran by the Nationalists, and subsequently held the position of President of the High Court of Justice (Rdis-i-Adliyyd) in 'Iraq and afterwards at Samnan. He lost his only daughter in 1330/1912. Two years later he was appointed editor of the semi-offiicial newspaper Aftab ("the Sun"). In 1335/1916-17 he was appointed President of the High Court of Justice at

Brief chronology of his life

Yazd, but soon afterwards, as we have seen, he died at fihran, aged fifty-eight¹.

The special value and interest of his poems, according to Khan Malik, his cousin and intimate friend, lie not only in their admirable and original style, but in their Estimate of his poetry.
 faithiul reflection of the varying moods of the Persian people during the fateful years 1906-1912. In satire it is said that no Persian poet has equalled him since the time of old Suzanf of Samarqand², who died in 569/1173-4. In his pamphlet Khdn Malik gives the opening verses of all the poems in his possession, with the number of verses in each, and invites those who possess poems lacking in his collection to communicate them to him before Jumada i, 1342 (December, 1923), when he proposes to publish as complete an edition as possible. The Kdwa quotes the following verses from one of his poems on the Russian aggressions in Persia, which it compares with the celebrated poems of Sa'dion the destruction of the Caliphate by the Mongols³, Anwarf on the invasion of the Ghuzz Turks⁴, and Hafiz on Timur's rapacity⁸:

چون برّه بیچاره بچوپانش نهیوست،
 از بیر بصحرا در نه خفت و نه بنشست،
 خرسی بشتگار آمد و بازوش فرو بست،
 شد برّه ما طعمه آن خرسی زبردست،

¹ These dates are taken from KM n Malik's pamphlet, pp. 4-6.

² See Lit. Hist. Persia, 11, pp. 342-3.

³ Ibid.) pp. 29-30.

⁴ Ibid., pp. 384-9.

⁶ The reference here is to the well-known verse—

فغان گین لولیان شوخ شیرین کارِ شهر آشوب،
 چنان بردند صبر از دل که ترکان خوانِ یغمار،

It is, however, but a vague and casual allusion.

افسوس بر آن بره' نوژاده' سرمست'
 فریاد از آن خرس کهن سالِ شکمِ خوار'

" Since the poor lamb did not forgather with its shepherd, through fear it neither slept nor rested in the plain.

A bear came forth to hunt, and bound its limbs: our lamb became the prey of that high-handed bear.

Alas for that new-born and bemused lamb! Alack for that aged and greedy bear!"

My manuscript J. 19¹ (p. 44) enumerates twelve of his works, which include an Arabic and a Persian Diwdn^ a collection of Maqdmtd, a rhymed vocabulary, a volumes travels, and several books on Astronomy, Geography, Prosody, and other sciences.

See p. 302 supra.

PART III.

PERSIAN PROSE DURING THE LAST FOUR CENTURIES

CHAPTER VIII.

THE ORTHODOX SHI'A FAITH AND ITS EXPONENTS, THE MUJTALIDS AND MULLAS.

One of the chief results of the Shi'a revival effected by the Safawf dynasty was the establishment of the powerful hierarchy of mujtahids and mullas, often, but not very accurately, described by European writers as "the clergy." This title is, however, more applicable to them than to the 'ulatnd, or "doctors," of the Sunnfs, who are simply men learned in the Scripture and the Law, but not otherwise possessed of any special Divine virtue or authority. The great practical difference between the 'ulamd of the Sunnfs and of the Shi'a lies in their conception of the doctrine of Ijtihdd, or the discovery and authoritative enunciation of fresh religious truths, based on a comprehensive knowledge of the Scripture and Traditions, and arrived at by supreme effort and endeavour, this last being the signification of the Arabic word. One who has attained to this is called a mujtahid, whose position may be roughly described as analogous to that of a Cardinal in the Church of Rome. No such dignity exists amongst the Sunnfs, who hold that the Bdbu'l-Ijtihdd, or "Gate of Endeavour" (in the sense explained above), was closed after the death of the founders of their four "orthodox" schools or sects, Abu Hanfia (d. 150/767), Malik ibn Anas (d. circa 179/795), ash-Shafi'f (d. 204/820), and Ahmad ibn Muhammad ibn Hanbal (d. 241/855). Thus the "Gate of Endeavour," which, according to the Shi'a view, is still open, has for the Sunnfs been closed for more than a thousand years; and in this respect the Shi'a doctrine must be credited with a greater flexibility and adaptability than that of the hierarchy.

The Shi'a

The doctrine of Ijtihdd.

Sunnfs, though in other respects narrower and more intolerant.

As will appear in the course of this chapter, the power and position attained by these prelates tended to divert the ambitions of young men who possessed, or believed themselves to possess, the necessary intellectual qualifications from poetry, belles lettres, and other forms of mental activity to theology, and from this tendency in part resulted the dearth of poets and abundance of divines under the Safawfs. Those were spacious times for the "turbaned classes" (ahliil-amditi), and every poor, half-starved student who frequented one or other of the numerous colleges (madrasa) founded, endowed and maintained by the piety of the Safawf Shahs, who delighted to call themselves by such titles as "Dog of the Threshold of the Immaculate Imams," or "Promoter of the Doctrine of the Church of the Twelve," dreamed, no doubt, of becoming at last a great mujtahid, wielding powers of life and death, and accorded honours almost regal.

No class in Persia is so aloof and inaccessible to foreigners and non-Muslims as that of the mullds. It is easy for one who has a good knowledge of Persian to mix not only with the governing classes and officials, who are most familiar with European habits and ideas, but with merchants, tradesmen, artisans, land-owners, peasants, darwshes, Babfs, Baha'is, Sufis and others; but few Europeans can have enjoyed intimacy with the "clergy," whose peculiar, exclusive, and generally narrow life is, so far as my reading has gone, best depicted in an otherwise mediocre and quite modern biographical work entitled Qisasu'l-'Ulatnd ("Tales of the Divines")¹ by Muhammad

Attractions of theology for the ambitious.

Aloofness of the clerical class.

The *Qisasu'l-
'Ulamd*, or
"Tales of the Divines."

¹ I possess two lithographed editions of this book, the (second) Tihiran edition, published in Safar, 1304 (Nov. 1886), and another published (apparently) in Lucknow in 1306/1888-9.

ibn Sulayman of Tanukabun, who was born in 1235/1819-20, wrote this book in three months and five days, and concluded it on the 17th of Rajab, 1290 (Sept. 10, 1873). It contains the lives of 153 Shi'a doctors, ranging from the fourth to the thirteenth centuries of the Muhammadan (tenth to nineteenth of the Christian) era, arranged in no intelligible order, either chronological or alphabetical. To his own biography, which he places fourth in order, the author devotes more than twenty pages, and enumerates 169 of his works, besides various glosses and other minor writings. From this book, which I read through during the Easter Vacation of 1923, having long ago made use of certain parts of it bearing on the Shaykhis and Babis, I have disentangled from much that is tedious, trivial or puerile, a certain amount of valuable information which is not to be found in many much better biographical works, whereof, before proceeding further, I shall here speak briefly.

What is known as Ilrnur-Rijdl ("Knowledge of the Men," that is of the leading authorities and transmitters of the Traditions) forms an important branch of theological study, since such knowledge is necessary for critical purposes. Of such Kutu bu'r-Rijal ("Books of the Men") there are a great many. Sprenger, in his edition¹ of one of the most important of these, the Fihrist, or "Index," of Muhammad ibn Hasan ibn 'Ali of Tus, entitled Shaykhut-Td'ifa who died in 460/1067, ranks with it in importance four other works, the Asma 'u'r-Rijal ("Names of the Men") of Shaykh Ahmad ibn 'Ali an-Najashi² (d. 455/1063); the Ma'dhmii-Ulamd of Muhammad ibn 'Ali ibn Shahr-ashub of Mazandaran, who died in 588/1192; the IddhuH-Ishtibdh ("Elucidation of Confusion") of Hasan ibn Yusuf ibn Mutahhar al-Hillf (b. 648/1250; d. 726/1326); and the LtiMatil-Bahrayn}, a work of a more special character, dealing especially with the 'ulatnd of Bahrayn, by Yusuf ibn Ahmad ibn Ibrahim al-Bahranf (d. 1187/1773-4). Another work, similar to the last in dealing with a special region, is the Amalu'l-Arnif ft 'UlamdH Jabal-'Amil, composed by Muhammad ibn Hasan ibn 'Ali...al-Hurr al-'Amilf (b. 1033/1623-4) in 1097/1686. All these works are written in Arabic, but of the older books of this class there is one in Persian (compiled in 990/1582) which must on no account be overlooked. This is the MajdlisiCl-Mtfminin ("Assemblies of Believers") of Sayyid Nuru'llah ibn Sharif al-Mar'ashi of Shushtar, who was put to death in India on account of his strong Shi'a opinions in 1019/1610-11. This book is both of a wider scope and a more popular character than those previously mentioned, since it contains, in twelve chapters, notices of eminent Shi'as of all classes, not merely theologians, and includes not only those who adhered to the "Sect of the Twelve" {Ithnd-'ashariyya) but all those who held that 'All should have immediately succeeded the Prophet.

¹ Printed in the Bibliotheca Indica.

² Lithographed at Bombay in 1317/1899-1900. In the KashiuH-IJub (see pp. 357-8 infra) the date of the author's death is given as 405/1014.

Of modern works of this class, composed within the last sixty years, three, besides the above-mentioned Qisasul-'Ulamd, deserve special mention. The most general in its scope, entitled Rawddtu'l-Janndt ft Ahwdlil-Ularnd wds-Sdddt ("Gardens of Paradise: on the circumstances of Divines and Sayyids²"), was composed in Arabic by Muhammad Baqir ibn Hajji Zaynu'l-'Abidin al-Musawf al-Khwinsari, whose autobiography is given on pp. 126-8 of vol. i, in 1286/1869-70. The biographies, which are arranged alphabetically, include learned Muslims of all periods, and are not confined to theologians or members of the Shi'a sect. Thus we find notices of great Mystics, like Bayazfd of Bistam, Ibrahim ibn Adham, Shibli and Husayn ibn Mansiir al-Hallaj ; of Arabic poets, like Dhu'r-Rumma, Farazdaq, Ibnu'l-Farid, Abu Nuwas and al-Mutanabbi; of Persian poets, like Sana'f, Farfdu'd-Din 'Attar, Nasir-i-Khusraw, and Jalalu'd-Din Rumf, and of men of learning like al-Bfrunf, Thabit ibn Qurra, Hunayn ibn Ishaq and Avicenna, etc., besides the accounts of Shi'a theologians down to comparatively modern times which give the book so great a value for our present purpose.

¹ Lithographed 111 Bombay, n. d.

² An excellent lithographed edition (four vols, in one, containing in all about 750 pp. and 713 biographies) was published at fihran in 1306/1888.

Another important work, composed in the same year as that last mentioned (1286/1869-70) but in Persian, is entitled Nujumu's-Samd (" Stars of Heaven ")¹. It deals with Shi'a theologians of the eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth centuries of the hijra (A.D. 1592-1882), and the biographies are arranged on the whole chronologically. The author was Muhammad ibn Sadiq ibn Mahdi. Like most of these books its utility is impaired by the lack of an Index or even a Table of Contents, but it contains a great deal of useful information.

The third work of which I desire to make special mention here is primarily a bibliography, though it also contains a good deal of biographical matter. It is entitled Kashitil-Hujub wdl-Astadr 'an Asmd'fl-Kutub wdl-Asidr (" the Removal of Veils and Curtains from the Names of Books and Treatises "), contains notices of 3414 Shi'a books arranged alphabetically, and was composed in Arabic by Sayyid Pjaz Husayn, who was born in 1240/1825, and died in 1286/1870. The editor, Muhammad Hidayat Husayn, discovered the manuscript in the excellent

¹ Lithographed at Lucknow in 1303/1885-6 (pp. 424).

Bankipore Library, and, encouraged by Sir E. Denison Ross, prepared the text for publication at the expense of the Asiatic Society of Bengal¹.

Mention must also be made of another Arabic work on Shi'a poets entitled Nasimatu s-Sahar fi-man tashayyda wa sha'ar ("the Morning Breeze, on those who held the Shi'a faith and composed poetry"), compiled by Yusuf ibn Yahya al-Yamanf as-San'anf, a rare book, hitherto, so far as I know, unpublished, of which I am fortunate enough to possess a manuscript of the second half, containing the letters . Only poets who wrote in Arabic are noticed.

An anthology of Shi'a poets.

Of these books the Rawddtttl-Janndt is the most scholarly and comprehensive, but those who read Persian only will derive much instruction and some amusement from the Majdlisu'l-Mil'minin, Nujicmtis-Samd, and Qisasul-Ulamd. The older "Books of the Men," such as the works of at-Tusi and an-Najashi, are generally very jejune, and suited for reference rather than reading. As it is with the theologians of the Safawf and subsequent periods that we are chiefly concerned here, a very few words about the older 'ulamd of the Shi'a will suffice, though with their names, titles and approximate dates the student should be familiar. The most important of these earlier divines are "the three Muhammads⁸," al-Kulaynf (Muhammad ibn Ya'qub, d. 329/941), Ibn Babawayhi (Muhammad ibn 'Ali ibn Musa, d. 381/991-2), and the already-mentioned Ttisi (Muhammad ibn Hasan, d. 460/

Comparison of these works.

The founders of Shi'a theology: the "three Muhammads" and the "four Books"

¹ It was printed at the Baptist Mission Press at Calcutta in 1330/1912, and comprises 607 pp.

² For description of another copy see Ahlwardt's Berlin Arabic Catalogue vol. vi, pp. 502-3, No. 7423.

⁸ See the Qisasu'l-'Ulamd' p. 221 of the Lucknow edition, s.v. Muhammad Baqir-i-MajlisL 1067). Of these the first composed the Kdit the second Man Id yakduru-hu'l-Faqik (a title which approximates in sense to our familiar "Every man his own Lawyer"), and the third the *Istibsd*r and the Tahdhibu'l-Ahkdm, which are known collectively amongst the Shi'a as "the Four Books" (al-Kutubu'l-arba'a)¹, and of which full particulars will be found in the above-mentioned Kashiu'f-fujub.

The "three Muhammads" of later days

More modern times also produced their "three Muhammads," namely Muhammad ibn Hasan ibn 'Ali.. al-Hurr al-'Amilf (author of the above-mentioned Atnalu'l-Amil); Muhammad ibnu'l-Murtada, commonly known as Mulla Muhsin-i-Fayz (Fayd), who died about 1090/1679; and Muhammad Baqir-i-Majlisi (d. nn/1699-1700)². Each of these also produced a great book, the first the Wasd'il, the second the Waft, and the third the BihdruH-Anwar ("Oceans of Light"), which constitute the "Three Books" of the later time. These seven great works on Shi'a theology, jurisprudence and tradition

Arabic the usual medium of theological works.

are, of course, like the great bulk of the works of the Muhammadan Doctors and Divines, written in Arabic, which language occupies no less a position in Islam than does Latin in the theological literature of the Church of Rome. Of them space will not permit me to speak further; it is the more

Persian theological works of the later period.

popular Persian manuals of doctrine, whereby the great theologians of the Safawf period sought so successiully to difiuse their religious teachings, which must chiefly concern us here, and even of these it will be impossible to give an adequate account. According to the Rawddtu'l-Jannat, Kamalu'd-Din Husayn of Ardabil, called "the Divine Doctor" (al-

¹ Or al-UsOluH-arba'a ("the Four Principles"). See Nujtimiis-Samdyp p. 75.

¹ See p. 120 supra'

⁸ Vol. i, p. 185.

Ilahi), a contemporary of Shah Ismail I, "was the first to compose books in Persian on matters connected with the Holy Law according to the doctrine of the Shi'a":

We have already seen¹ what difficulty Shah Isma'il experienced on his capture of Tabriz in finding teachers or books to inculcate the doctrines of the creed which he was determined to impose throughout his dominions, and it is not strange, though the fact is often overlooked, that it became necessary to introduce into Persia learned Arabs of the Shi'a persuasion, where such were obtainable. Two districts furnished the bulk of these: Bahrayn, across the Persian Gulf, and Jabal 'Amil in Syria². To the divines furnished by each of these two localities a special biographical work has, as we have seen, been devoted, namely the LtiMatih-Bahrayn and the *Amalu*¹-Amil. Some of them came to Persia totally ignorant of the Persian language, like Sayyid Ni-matu'llah al-Jaza'iri, who, on reaching Shiraz with his brother, had to obtain from a Persian acquaintance the sentence "Madrasa-i-Manstiriyya-ra mi-khwdhim" ("We want the Mansuriyya College"), and even then each learned only half of this simple phrase and spoke alternately³.

Scarcity of works of Shi'a theology in early Safawi days.

Importation to Persia of Shi'a doctors from Arabia.

¹ Pp. 54-5 supra.

² See G. le Strange's Palestine under the Moslems, pp. 75-6 and 470.

³ Qisasu'l-'Ulamd (ed. Lucknow, p. 229; ed. Tihiran, p. 333) •

... پس با پای برهنه آن راه را طی کردیم و من یازده ساله بودم و در وقت نماز صبح بشیراز رسیدیم، پس بخانه آن شیخ که با ما بود رفتیم و منزلش از مدرسه منصوریه دور بود و ما میخواستیم که در آن مدرسه منزل کنیم زیرا که بعضی از اقارب ما در آنجا بود، پس آن شیخ گفت که این راه را بگیر و بگوئید که

It is the autobiography of this same Sayyid Ni'matu'llah, as given in the QisasU'-'Ulamd, which furnishes us with so unusually vivid a picture of the privations and hardships experienced by a poor student of Divinity. He was born in 1050/1640-1 and wrote this narrative when he was thirty-nine years of age¹, "in which brief life," he adds, "what afilictions have befallen me !" These afilictions began when he was only five years old, when, while he was at play with his little companions, his father appeared, saying, "Come with me, my little son, that we may go to the school-master, so that thou mayst learn to read and write, in order that thou mayst attain to a high degree." In spite of tears, protests, and appeals to his mother he had to go to school, where, in order the sooner to escape and return to his games, he applied himself diligently to his lessons, so that by the time he was aged five years and a half he had finished the Qurdn besides learning many poems. This, however, brought him no relief and no return to his childish games, for he was now committed to the care of a blind grammarian to study the Arabic paradigms and the grammar of Zanzan. For this blind teacher he had to act as guide, while his next preceptor

Autobiography of a student of theology.

First steps in learning.

Tyranny of teachers

مدرسه منصوریه را میخواستیم و ما فارسی نمی دانستیم پس ما رفتیم و سخن را تقطیع کردیم پس يك كلمه را من ضبط کردم و كلمه دیگری آن دیگری ضبط کرد پس هرکدام که می دیدیم یکی میگفت مدرسه منصوریه آن دیگری میگفت که میخواستیم تا بآن مدرسه رسیدیم

¹ He died, according to the Kashful-Hujub, p. 70, No. 328, in 1130/1718. Since writing this, I have found the Arabic original of this autobiography in one of my MSS. (C. 15) entitled Kitāb ul-Anwār in-Nu'māniyya, composed by Sayyid Ni'matu'llāh in 1089/1678. It concludes the volume, and occupies ff. 329-34.

compelled him to cut and carry fodder for his beasts and mulberry-leaves for his silk-worms. He then sought another teacher with whom to study the Kdiyya of Ibnu'l-Hajib, and found an imposing personage dressed in white with an enormous turban "like a small cupola," who, however, was unable to answer his questions. "If you don't know enough grammar to answer these questions, why do you wear this great load, on your head?" enquired the boy; whereupon the audience laughed and the teacher rose up ashamed and departed. "This led me to exert myself to master the paradigms of grammar," says the writer, "but I now ask pardon of God for my question to that believing man, while thanking Him that this incident happened before I had attained maturity and become fully responsible for my actions."

An ignorant
Professor.

After pursuing his studies with various other masters, he obtained his father's permission to follow his elder brother to Huwayza. The journey thither by boat through narrow channels amongst the weeds, tormented by mosquitoes "as large as wasps" and with only the milk of bufialoes to assuage his hunger, gave him his first taste of the discomforts of travel to a poor student. In return for instruction in Jami's and Jarbardi's commentaries and the Shdiyya, his teacher exacted from him "much service," making him and his fellow-students collect stones for a house which he wished to build, and bring fish and other victuals for him from the neighbouring town. He would not allow them to copy his lecture-notes, but they used to purloin them when opportunity arose and transcribe them. "Such was his way with us," says the writer, "yet withal we were well satisfied to serve him, so that we might derive benefit from his holy breaths."

Hardships of travel "in search of knowledge."

He attended the college daily till noon for instruction and discussion, and on returning to his lodging was so hungry that, in default of any better food, he used to collect the melon-skins cast aside on the ground, wipe off the dust, and eat what fragments of edible matter remained. One day he came upon his companion similarly employed. Each had tried to conceal from the other the shifts to which he was reduced for food, but now they joined forces and collected and washed their melon-skins in company. Being unable to afford lamps or candles, they learned by heart the texts they were studying, such as the Aliyya of Ibn Malik and the Kdiyya, on moon-light nights, and on the dark nights repeated them by heart so as not to forget them. To avoid the distraction of conversation, one student would on these occasions often bow his head on his knees and cover his eyes, feigning headache.

After a brief visit to his home, he determined to go to Shiraz, and set out by boat for Basra by the Shattu'l-'Arab.

He was so afraid of being stopped and brought back by his father that, during the earlier part of the voyage, he stripped of his clothes and waded behind the boat, holding on to the rudder, until he had gone so far that recognition was no longer probable, when he re-entered the boat. Farther on he saw a number of people on the bank, and one of his fellow-passengers called out to them to enquire whether they were Sunnfs or Shi'a. On learning that they were Sunnfs, he began to abuse them and invoke curses on the first three Caliphs, to which they replied with volleys of stones.

The writer remained only a short while at Basra, then governed by Husayn Pasha, for his father followed him thither to bring him home, but he escaped privily with his brother, and, as already narrated¹, made his way to Shiraz and established himself in the Mansuriyya College, being then only eleven Study under difficulties.

From Basra to Shiraz.

At College in Shiraz.

¹ P. 360 supra.

years of age. He found one of the tutors lecturing on the Aliyya of Ibn Malik, who, on the conclusion of the lecture, questioned him as to his aims and adventures, and finally, seizing him by the ear and giving it a sharp twist, said, "O my son, do not make thyself an Arab Shaykh or seek for supremacy, and do not waste thy time! Do not thus, that so perchance thou mayst become a scholar/"

In this college also the life was hard and the daily allowance of food inadequate, and the writer's brother wished to return home, but he himself determined to remain, copying books for a pittance, and working almost all night through the hot weather in a room with closed doors while his fellow-students slept on the roof. Often he had neither oil for his lamp nor bread to eat, but must work by moonlight, faint with hunger, while in the winter mornings his fingers often bled with the cold as he wrote his notes. Thus passed two or three years more, and, though his eyesight was permanently affected by the strain to which it was subjected, he began to write books himself, a commentary on the Kdiyya, and another, entitled Miftdku' l-Labib, on the Tahdhib of Shaykh Baha'u'd-Din Muhammad¹. He now began to extend the range of his studies beyond Arabic grammar, and to frequent the lectures of more eminent teachers from Baghdad, al-Ahsa and Bahrayn, amongst them Shaykh Ja'far al-Bahrani. One day he did not attend Sufferings from cold and hunger

An exacting
Professor

this Shaykh's lecture because of the news which had reached him of the death of certain relatives. When he reappeared on the following day the Shaykh was very angry and refused to give him any further instruction, saying, "May God curse my father and mother if I teach you any more! Why were you not here yesterday?" And, when the writer explained the cause of his absence, he said, "You should have attended the lecture, and indulged in your mourning afterwards"; and only when the student had sworn never to play the truant again whatever might happen was he allowed after an interval to resume his attendance. Finally he so far won the approval of this somewhat exacting teacher that the latter offered him his daughter in marriage; an honour from which he excused himself by saying, "If God will, after I have finished my studies and become a Doctor (^dlim) I will marry." Soon afterwards the teacher obtained an appointment in India, at Haydarabad in the Deccan.

¹ See the Kashfu'l-Hujub, p. 146, No. 725. The author died in 1031/1621-2. He was one of the most notable theologians of the reign of Shdh 'Abbas the Great, and is commonly called in Persia "Shaykh-i-Bahd'f." See p. 407 infra.

Sayyid Ni'matu'llah remained in Shiraz for nine years, and for the most part in such poverty that often he swallowed nothing all day except water. The earlier part of the night he would often spend with a friend who lived some way outside the town so as to profit by his lamp for study, and thence he would grope his way through the dark and deserted bazaars, soothing the fierce dogs which guarded their masters' shops, to the distant mosque where he lectured before dawn. At his parents' wish he returned home for a while and took to himself a wife, but being reproached by a learned man whom he visited with abandoning his studies while still ill-grounded in the Science of Traditions, he left his parents and his wife (he had only been married for three weeks) and returned to the Mansuriyya College at Shiraz. Soon afterwards, however, it was destroyed by a fire, in which one student and a large part of the library perished; and about the same time he received tidings of his father's death. These two misfortunes, combined with other circumstances, led him to leave Shiraz and go to Isiahan.

During his early days at Isiahan he still suffered from the same poverty with which he had been only too familiar

Life of a poor student at Shiraz.

in the past, often eating salted meat to increase his thirst, so that the abundance of water he was thereby impelled to drink might destroy his appetite for solid food. The change in his fortune took place when he made the acquaintance and attracted the notice of that great but fanatical divine Mullā Muhammad Baiqir-i-Majlisi, perhaps the most notable and powerful doctor of the Shi'a who ever lived. He was admitted to the house of this famous man and lived with him for four years studying theology, and especially the Traditions¹. Yet in this case familiarity did not breed contempt, for, as the author mentions in his Anwdrū'n-Nu'fndniyya"> though specially favoured by this formidable "Prince of the Church," he often, when summoned to his library to converse with him, or to help in the compilation of the Bihdrtil-Anwdr, would stand trembling outside the door for some moments ere he could summon up courage to enter.

He wins the favour of Mullā
Muhammad
Baiqir -Majlisi.

Thanks to this powerful patronage, however, he was appointed lecturer (mudarris) in a college recently founded by a certain Mi'rzai Taqī near the Bath of Shaykh-i-Bah&'i in Isiahan, which post he held for eight years, when the increasing weakness of his eyes and the inability of the oculists of Isiahan to afford him any relief determined him to set out again on his travels. He visited Samarrd, Kcizimayn, and other holy places in 'Irdq, whence he returned by way of Shushtar to Isiahan. In 1079/1668-9 his brother died, and ten years later, when he penned this autobiography, he still keenly felt this loss. After visiting Mashhad he returned to Huwayza, where he was living a somewhat solitary and disillusioned life at the time of writing (1089/1678-9). Of his further adventures I have found no record, but his death did not take place until n30/1718, only four years before the disaster which put an end to the Safawf Dynasty.

¹ As has been already mentioned (p. 359 supra), this powerful prelate was one of the "three Muhammads" of the later time, and his great work on Shi'a tradition, the Bih&ruH-Anwdr, is still accounted in Persia the most authoritative work on this subject.

² See the Kashfu'l-Hujub, p. 70, No. 328. I have a MS. of this work obtained from the late Fīdji 'Abdu'i-Majfīd Belshah and now bearing the class-mark C. 15. As already noted (p. 361), it concludes (fi. 329-34) with the Arabic original of the narrative here given.

I have given in a somewhat compressed form the whole of this illuminating narrative, one of those "human documents" which are so rare in Persian books (though indeed, as already noted on p 361, it was originally written in Arabic), because it throws so much light on the life of the Persian student of theology, which, for the rest, mutatis mutandis, closely resembles that of the mediaeval European student. We see the child prematurely torn from the games and amusements suitable to his age to undergo a long, strenuous, and arid course of instruction in Arabic grammar and philology, reading one grammar after another in an ascending scale of difficulty, with commentaries, supercommentaries, glosses and notes on each; we see him as a boy, now fired with ambition, pursuing his studies in theology and law, half-starved, suffering alternately from the cold of winter and the heat of summer, ruining his eyesight by perusing crabbed texts by the fitful light of the moon, and his digestion by irregular and unwholesome meals, varied by intervals of starvation; cut off from home life and family ties; submerged in an ocean of formalism and fanaticism; himself in time adding to the piles of glosses and notes which serve rather to submerge and obscure than to elucidate the texts whereon they are based; and at last, ii fortunate, attracting the favourable notice of some great divine, and becoming himself a mudarris (lecturer), a mutawalli (custodian of a shrine), or even a mujtahid.

But if the poor student's path was arduous, the possible prizes were great, though, of course, attained only by a few.

Value of this " human document"

In the eyes of the Safawf kings the mujtahid was the representative of the Expected Imam, whose name they never mentioned without adding the prayer, "May God hasten his glad advent!" ('ajjala Hldhu faraja-hu /). He had power of life and death. Hajji Sayyid Muhammad Baqir ibn Muhammad Taqf of Rasht, entitled Hujjatu'l-Isldm ("the Proof of Islam"), is said to have put to death seventy persons for various sins or heresies. On the first occasion, being unable to find anyone to execute his sentence, he had to strike the first inefiective blow himself, after which someone came to his assistance and decapitated the victim, over whose body he then recited the funeral prayers, and while so doing fainted with emotion¹.

Another mujtahid, Aqa Muhammad Ali, a contemporary of Kanm Khan-i-Zand, acquired the title of SUfi-kush ("the Sufi-slayer") from the number of 'urafd and darwishes whom he condemned to death².

Another, Mulla 'Abdu'lldh-i-Tunf, induced Shah 'Abbas the Great to walk in front of him as he rode through the Mayddn-t-Shdh, or Royal Square, of Isiahan⁸, with the object of demonstrating to all men the honour in which learning was held.

Mulla Hasan of Yazd, who had invited his fellow-townsmen to expel, with every circumstance of disgrace, a tyrannical governor, was summoned to Tihiran by Fath-'AK Shah to answer for his actions, and threatened with the bastinado unless he disavowed responsibility for this procedure. As he refused to do this, and persisted that he was entirely responsible for what had happened, he was actually tied up to receive the bastinado, though it was not actually inflicted. That night the Shah was notified in a dream of the extreme displeasure with which the Prophet regarded

¹ Qisasu'l'Ulamd (Lucknow ed.), p. 138.

² Ibid., p. 210.

³

Ibid., part 11, p. 54.

the disrespect shown by him to the exponent of his doctrine and law, and hastened next morning to offer his apologies and a robe of honour, which last was refused by the indignant ecclesiastic¹.

Mullá Ahmad of Ardabil, called Muqaddas ("the Saint," died in 993/1585), being asked by one of the King's officers who had committed some fault to intercede for him, wrote to Sháh 'Abbás the Great in Persian as follows²:

بانی ملک عاریه عباس بداند که اگر این مرد اول ظالم بود
اکنون مظلوم مینماید چنانچه از تقصیر او بگذری شاید حق
سبحانه و تعالی از پاره تقصیرات تو بگذرد
کتبه بنده شاه ولایت احمد اردبیلی

"Let 'Abbás, the founder of a borrowed empire³, know that this man, if he was originally an oppressor, now appears to be oppressed; so that, if thou wilt pass over his fault, perhaps God (Glorious and Exalted is He) may pass over some of thy faults.

"Written by Ahmad al-Ardabílí, servant of the Lord of Saintship⁴."

To this the Sháh 'Abbás replied :

بعرض میرساند عباس که خدماتیکه فرموده بودند بجان منت
دانسته بتقدیر رسانید که این محب را از دعای غیر فراموش نکند

کتبه کلب آستان علی عباس

"'Abbás makes representation that he accepts as a spiritual favour and has fulfilled the services which you enjoined on him. Do not forget [me] your friend in your prayers."

"Written by 'Abbás, the dog of 'Alí's threshold."

¹ Qisasu'l-'Ulamá (Lucknow ed.), pp. 99-100

² This and the following anecdote are from the Qisasu'l-'Ulamá (Tíhrán ed., p. 260; Lucknow ed., p. 132).

³ Because it really belongs to the Expected Imám, and is only held by the Sháh as his trustee and vice-gerent.

⁴ I.e. 'Alí ibn Abí Tálíb, the First Imám.

Another mujtakid of Ardabfl entitled Mukaqqiq ("the Investigator" or "Verifier") wrote on behalf of certain Sayyids to Shah Tahmasp, who, on receiving the letter, rose to his feet, placed it on his eyes, and kissed it, and gave the fullest satisfaction to its demands. Then, because the letter addressed him as "O brother" (Ayyuhd l-Akh) the Shah caused it to be placed with his winding-sheet and ordered that it should be buried with him, "in order that," said he, "I may argue with the Angels of the Tomb, Munkir and Nakir, that I should not be subjected to their torment."

Still more extraordinary is another anecdote in the same work¹ of how Prince Muhammad 'Ali Mirza gave a thousand t&mdns to each of two mujtakids in return for a paper, duly signed and sealed, promising him a place in Paradise. One of them (Sayyid Rida ibn Sayyid Mahdi) hesitated to do this, but the Prince said, "Do you write the document and get the doctors of Karbala and Najaf to witness it, and I will get it (i.e. the mansion in Paradise) from God Most High."

Many similar anecdotes might be cited, besides numerous miracles (kardmdi) ascribed to most of the leading divines, but enough has been said to show the extraordinary power and honour which they enjoyed. They were, indeed, more powerful than the greatest Ministers of State, since they could, and often did, openly oppose the Shah and overcome him without incurring the fate which would almost inevitably have overtaken a recalcitrant Minister.

Modern instances of clerical power.

Nor is this a thing of the past, as is abundantly shown by the history of the overthrow of the Tobacco Concession in 1890-1, which was entirely effected, in the teeth of the Nasiru'd-Din Shah and his Court, and the British Legation, by the mujtakids, headed by Hajji Mirza $asan-i-Shirazf and Hajji Mirza Hasan-i-Ashtiyanf, inspired and prompted by that extraordinary man Sayyid Jamdlu'd-Din miscalled "the Afghan¹." Dr Feuvrier, the Shah's French physician, who was in Tihrdn at the time, gives a graphic account of this momentous struggle in his *Trots Ans d la Cour de Perse*⁷. I have described it fully in my *Persian Revolution of ipos-ipop*⁹, and also the still more important part played by Mulla Muhammad Kazim of Khurasdn and other patriotic *mujtahids*⁴, in the Persian struggle for freedom and independence in the first decade of this century of our era. Mulla Muhammad Kdzim, a noble example of the patriot-priest, deeply moved by the intolerable tyranny and aggression of the then government of Russia, formally proclaimed a jihdd, or religious war, against the Russians on December 11, 1911, and was setting out from Karbald for Persia in pursuance of this object when he died very suddenly on the following day, the victim, as was generally believed, of poison⁶. He was not the only ecclesiastical victim of patriotism, for the Tkiqatu'l-Isldm was publicly hanged by the Russians at Tabriz on the 'Askird, or 10th of Muharram, 1330 (January 1, 1912)⁸, a sacrilegious act only surpassed by the bombardment three months later of the shrine of the Imam Rida' at Mashhad, which many Persians believe to have been avenged by the fate which subsequently overtook the Tsar and his family at the hands of the Bolsheviks.

¹ Qtsasu'l-Ulamd, ed. Lucknow, p. 32.

The mujtahids and mullds, therefore, are a great, though probably a gradually decreasing force, in Persia, and concern themselves with every department of human activity, ¹ For a full account of him, see my Persian Revolution, ch. i, pp. 1-30 etc.

² Pans, n.d., ch. v, pp. 307-349-

³ Ch. 11, pp. 31-58.

⁴ Ibid., p. 262 etc. For facsimiles of atwa and letter, see pp. 421-4.

⁶ See my Press and Poetry of Modern Persia, p. 334.

⁸ Ibid., pp. 335-6, and also my pamphlet entitled The Reign of Terror at Tabriz (October, 1912).

from the minutest details of personal purification to the largest issues of politics. It is open to any Shi'a Muslim to submit any problem into the solution of which religious considerations enter (and they practically enter everywhere) to a mujtahid, and to ask for a formal decision, or fatwa, conformable to the principles of Shi'a doctrine. Such fatwa may extend to the denunciation of an impious or tyrannical king or minister as an infidel (takfir), or the declaration that anyone who fights for him is as one who fights against the Hidden Imam. The fact that the greatest mujtahids generally reside at Najaf or Karbala, outside Persian territory, greatly strengthens their position and conduces to their immunity. To break or curb their power has been the aim of many rulers in Persia before and after the Safawis, but such attempts have seldom met with more than a very transient success, for the *mulld*s form a truly national class, represent in great measure the national outlook and aspirations, and have not unfrequently shielded the people from the oppression of their governors. And although their scholarship is generally of a somewhat narrow kind, it is, so far as it goes, sound, accurate, and even in a sense critical. The finest Persian scholar I know, Mirza Muhammad ibn 'Abdu'l-Wahhab of Qazwin, is one who has superimposed on this foundation a knowledge of European critical methods acquired in England, France and Germany.

The better side of the "clergy."

The worse side: jealousy and vulgar abuse.

On the other hand, apart from corruption, fanaticism and other serious faults, many of the 'ulam are prone to petty jealousy and mutual disparagement. A well-known anecdote, given by Malcolm¹ and in the *Qisasu'l-'Ulam*², shows that great doctors like Mir Damad and Shaykh Baha'u'd-Din al-'Amilf could rise above such ignoble feelings; but, as the author of the latter work complains, their less magnanimous colleagues were but too prone to call one another fools and asses, to the injury of their own class and the delight of irreligious laymen. Nor was this abuse rendered less offensive by being wrapped up in punning and pedantic verses like this¹:

¹ History of Persia (ed. 1815), vol. 1, pp. 258-9.

² Lucknow ed., second part, pp. 26-7; Tihiran ed., p. 181.

لَسْتُ جَدِيرًا أَنْ تَكُونَ مُقَدَّمًا ، وَمَا أَنْتَ إِلَّا نَصْفُ ضِدِّهِ الْمَقْدَمِ

"Thou, art not worthy to be advanced; nay, thou art nothing more than half of the opposite of 'advanced'!"

The opposite of "advanced" (muqaddatri) is "postponed" (mi!akhhkar), and the second half of the latter word, khar, is the Persian for an ass. This is a refined specimen of mullds' wit: for a much coarser one the curious reader may refer to an interchange of badinage between Mulla Mirza Muhammad-i-Shirwdnf the Turk and Aqa Jamdl of Isiahdn recorded in the Qisasu'l-Ulamd'. That some mullds had the sense to recognize their own rather than their neighbours' limitations is, however, shown by a pleasant anecdote related in the same work⁸ of Jamalu'd-Dm Muhammad ibn Husayn-i-Khwansarf. As a judge he was in receipt of a salary of four thousand ticmdns a year. One day four persons successively put to him four questions, to each of which he replied, "I do not know." A certain high official who was present said to him, "You receive from the King four thousand ticmdns to know, yet here to everyone who asks you a question you reply 'I do not know/' "I receive these four thousand tumdns? replied the mulld, "for those things which I do know. If I required a salary for what I do not know, even the Royal Treasury would be unable to pay it."

¹ Qisasu'l-Ulama, Lucknow ed., second part, p. 165; Tihiran ed., p. 281.

² Ibid., Lucknow ed., second part, p. 52; Jihrin ed., pp. 200-1.

⁸ Ibid., Lucknow ed., second part, p. 50; Tihiran ed., p. 199.

Jurisprudence (fiqh) and theology (QaqqdHd), with the ancillary sciences, all of which are based on a thorough knowledge of the Arabic language, normally constitute the chief studies of the "clergy," though naturally there is a certain tendency to specialization, the qddi, or ecclesiastical judge, being more concerned with fiqh, and the theologian proper with doctrine. We must also distinguish between the prevalent Ustili and the once important but now negligible Akhbdri school, between whom bitter enmity subsisted. The former, as their name implies, follow the general "principles" (ustil) deducible from the Qur'dn and accredited traditions, and employ analogy (qiyas) in arriving at their conclusions. The latter follow the traditions (akhbdr) only, and repudiate analogical reasoning. Mulla Muhammad Amm ibn Muhammad Sharif of Astarabad, who died in 1033/1623-4, is generally accounted the founder of the Akhbdri school, and was, according to the *Lti'ti'atu'l-Bahrayn*¹, "the first to open the door of reproach against the Mujtahids, so that the 'Saved Sect' (al-Firqatitn-Ndjiya, i.e. the Shi'a of the Sect of the Twelve) became divided into Akhbdris and Mujtahids" and the contents of his book al-FawdHdii l-Madaniyya consist for the most part of vituperation of the Mujtahids, whom he often accused of "destroying the true Religion." A later doctor of this school, Mirza Muhammad Akhbdri of Bahrayn, entertained so great a hatred for the Mujtahids that he promised Fath-'Ali Shdh that he would in forty days cause to be brought to Tihiran the head of a certain Russian general who was at that time invading and-devastating the frontier provinces of Persia, on condition that Fath-'Ali Shah would, in case of his success," abrogate and abandon the Mujtahids,

"Envoitement" of a Russian general.

¹ Bombay lith., p. 122.

¹ See the Kashful'-Hujub, p. 406, No. 2242. The author wrote the book at Mecca two years before his death.

extirpate and eradicate them root and branch, and make the Akhbari doctrine current throughout all the lands of Persia." The Shah consented, and thereupon the AkhbdH doctor went into retirement for forty days, abstained from all animal food, and proceeded to practise the "envo&tement" of the Russian general, by making a wax figure of him and decapitating it with a sword. According to the story, the head was actually laid before the Shah just as the period of forty days was expiring, and he thereupon took council with his advisers as to what he should do. These replied, "the sect of the Mujtahids is one which hath existed from the time of the Imams until now, and they are in the right, while the Akhbdri sect is scanty in numbers and weak. Moreover it is the beginning of the Qajar dynasty. You might, perhaps, succeed in turning the people from the doctrine [to which they are accustomed], but this might be the cause of disastrous results to the King's rule, and they might rebel against him. Moreover it might easily happen that Mirza Muhammad should be annoyed with you, arrive at an understanding with your enemy, and deal with you as he dealt with the Russian' *Ishpukhtur*¹." The wisest course is that you should propitiate him, excuse yourself to him, and order him to retire to the Holy Thresholds (Karbalā or ¹ Qisas-i 'Ulamā, Tihān ed., p. 132; Lucknow ed., pp. 188-9. The Russian general is here called Ishpukhtur (اشپختر), which, as my friend M. V. Minorsky informs me, represents "Inspector" (pronounced Ispex̄tor), and is, perhaps, influenced in its form by the popular etymology ایشی بوق دور (in Ottoman Turkish = در-ایشی بوق دور) invented by the Turkish-speaking Ādharbāyjanīs, meaning "his work is dirt." M. Minorsky further informed me that this general's real name was Tsitsianoff, that he was a Georgian, and that the phrase "Have you brought the Inspector's head?" (مگر سر اشپخترا آوردی) is still used proverbially to one who presents himself in great hurry and excitement, as though in fulfilment of some very important commission.

Najaf) and stay there; for it is not expedient for the State that such a person should remain in the capital." This advice Fath-'Ali Shah decided to follow.

The very dry, narrow and formal divines are called by the Persians Qishri (literally "Huskers," i.e. externalists), and to these the Akhbdris in particular belong, but also many of the Ustilis, like Mirza Ibrdhim, the son of the celebrated Mulla" Sadr, one of the teachers of Sayyid Ni'matu'lldh Jaza'irf, who used to glory in the fact that his belief was that of the common people, and Mulla 'Ali Nurf, who used to pray that God would keep him in the current popular faith¹. On the other hand we have the more liberal-minded divines, whose theology was tinged with Philosophy or Latitudinarians, Sufiism, the Mutakallimicn, who strove to reconcile Philosophy with Religion and closely resemble the School-men of mediaeval Europe, and finally the pure philosophers, like the celebrated Mulla Sadra of Shiraz, who, however little their ultimate conclusions accorded with orthodox theology, had generally had the training of the 'ulam and were drawn from the same class.

The literature produced by this large and industrious body of men, both in Arabic and Persian, is naturally enormous, but the bulk of it is so dull or so technical that no one but a very leisured and very pious Shi'ah scholar would dream of reading it. The author of the Qisasu'l-'Ulam remarks² that the 'ulam often live to a very advanced age, and as their habits are, as a rule, sedentary and studious, and they devote a large portion of their time to writing, it is not unusual to find a single author credited with one or two hundred books and pamphlets. Thus the author of the Qisasu'l-Ulamd enumerates 169 of his own works, besides glosses, tracts and minor writings¹; of those of Mulla Muhsin-i-Fayd (Fayz), 69 by name, but he adds that the total number is nearly 200²; of those of Muhammad ibn 'Ali...ibn Baba-wayhi, entitled as-Sadtiq, 189⁸; and so on. Many of these writings are utterly valueless, consisting of notes or glosses on super-commentaries or commentaries on texts, grammatical, logical, juristic or otherwise, which texts are completely buried and obscured by all this misdirected ingenuity and toil. It was of this class of writings that the late Grand Mufti of Egypt and Chancellor of al-Azhar Shaykh Muhammad 'Abduh, one of the most able and enlightened Muhammadan divines of our time, was wont to say that they ought all to be burned as hindrances rather than aids to learning.

¹ Qisasu'l-'Ulam, Tihrah ed., p. 248; Lucknow ed., second part, p. 107.

² Lucknow ed., p. 65.

The works on Jurisprudence (Fiqh) also, even the best, are as a rule very unreadable to a non-Muslim. What is taught in English universities as "Muhammadan Law" is, of course, only a portion of the subject as understood in the Lands of Islam. The Shari'at, or Holy Law, includes not only Civil and Criminal Law, but such personal religious obligations as Prayer and the Purifications necessary for its due performance; Alms; Fasting; Pilgrimage; and the Holy War (Jihdd), which subjects, with their innumerable ramifications and the hair-splitting casuistry applied to all sorts of contingencies arising from them, constitute perhaps one half of the whole. It is curious that, in spite of the neglect of Shia theology by European Orientalists, one of the best European books on Muhammadan Jurisprudence treats of Shi'a Law. This is M. Amedee Querry's Droit Musulman: Recueil de Lois concernant les Musulmans Schyites^x and the European reader who wishes to form an idea of the subject, with all its intricate, and, to the non-Muslim mind, puerile and even disgusting details, cannot do better than consult this monumental work, which is based on the Shardy'i'ul-Isldtn ft masdHlVI-Haldl wa'l-Hardtn' of the celebrated Shi'a doctor Najmu'd-Din Abu'l-Qdsim Ja'far ibn al-Hasan... al-Hillf, commonly called al-Muhaqqiq al-Awwal ("the First Verifier" or "Investigator"), who died in 676/1277-8. Other works of authority, enumerated in the Preface (vol. i, p. vii) were also consulted, as well as leading contemporary Persian jurists, by M. Querry, whose twenty-five years' sojourn in Turkey and Persia, where he occupied important official positions, such as counsellor of the French Legation at Tihrdn, singularly fitted him for the arduous task which he so ably accomplished. An excellent Index of Arabic technical terms explained in the course of the book greatly enhances its value.

¹ Qisasu'l-'Ulamd, Lucknow ed., pp. 77-85.

² Ibid., second part, pp. 112-16.

⁸ Ibid., second part, pp. 183-6.

Mention should be made in this connection of a Persian catechism on problems of jurisprudence (fiqh) entitled Su'ál u Jawáb ("Question and Answer"), by the eminent mujtahid Hájjí Sayyid Muhammad Báqir, whose severity in enforcing the death-penalty in cases where it is enacted by the Ecclesiastical Law has been already mentioned¹. This work, composed subsequently to 1236/1820, was very beautifully printed in 1247/1832, apparently at Isfahán, under the supervision of Mirzá Zaynu'l-'Ábidín of Tabríz, "the introducer of this art into Persia." It comprises 162 ff. of 29.6 × 20.5 c. and 28 lines, and the letters س (su'ál, "question") and ج (jawáb, "answer") are throughout inserted by hand in red. I possess only one volume, which was to have been followed by a second, but whether this was ever completed I do not know¹. The topics are arranged in the usual order, beginning with the personal obligations of purification, prayer, alms, fasting and pilgrimage, and ending with the Kitdbu'l- WadPat, dealing with objects deposited in trust in the hands of another. An Introduction on "Principles" (Ustif) is prefixed to the whole, and in each book, or section, various problems connected with the topic in question are propounded, with the author's decisions, the whole in the form of dialogue. Thus the Introduction begins abruptly, without any doxology, with the following question :

¹ Two vols. of pp. viii+768 and 669 respectively (Paris, Maisonneuve, 1871-2).

² See p. 54, n. 3, supra.

³ See p. 368 supra. His life is given very fully in the Qisásu'l-Ulamá (Lucknow ed., pp. 129-78).

Q. " If a person follows the opinions of one of the mujtahids (may God increase the like of them !) during the life of that mujtahid is it lawful after his death for that person to continue to follow him and act according to his sayings, or not?"

The answer, which fills nearly a page, is to the effect that it is not lawful so to do, and that the person in question should transier his allegiance to some other mujtahid. Numerous authorities are cited in support of this view, amongst them Muhammad Biqir (presumably al-Majlisi), Sayyid Muhammad Mahdi, the "Second Martyr" (ash-Shahidu'th-Tkdnt), and the "Second Verifier" or "Investigator " (al-Muhaqqiqu'th-Thdni).

The "books," or sections, are of very unequal length, that on Prayer occupying nearly 70 ff., and other " books," including the last, on Trusts, only half a page. Of the latter, which contains only two questions and their answers, the full translation is as follows:

¹ The British Museum Library also possesses only this one volume See E. Edwards's Catalogue (1922), col. 458. The QisasuH-^Vlamd gives 1227/1812 as the date of composition, but on f. 28^b of the text, line 2, Muharram 1236/Oct. 1820 is mentioned as the current date.

Q.—"Zayd¹ sends an article in trust to a trustee, bidding him give it to So-and-so. After the arrival of the article, the trustee learns for certain that the article entrusted to him belongs to 'Amr¹, and that the hand of the sender, etc., is the hand of borrowing and usurpation. Moreover 'Amr lays claim to the trust, saying, 'This trust committed to thee is my property.' The trustee also admits the validity of his claim to the property, but says, 'He sent it to me to give it to So-and-so, I will not give it to thee.' Has 'Amr legally power to assume possession of the property and take it from the trustee, or not? And to whom should the trustee surrender the trust, so that he may be cleared of all further responsibility? "

A,—" If what has been penned actually corresponds with the facts of the case, that is to say, if the trustee knows that the property belongs to 'Amr, and that the hand of the sender of it is the hand of usurpation and violence, it is incumbent on the said trustee to surrender such property to its owner, whether the sender gives permission for such surrender or not. For such trustee to say to 'Amr, having knowledge of the fact that the said property really belongs to him, 'I will not give it to thee, in view of the fact that the sender of it bade me give it to So-and-so, not to thee,' is incompatible with the functions of a trustee, and is not conformable to the Holy Law."

Q.—" If Zayd shall have deposited an article in trust with 'Amr, and if nearly seventeen years shall have passed, and if, notwithstanding 'Amr's urgent insistence with Zayd that he should remove the said article, he neglects to do so, and the said article, without any excess or defect of action² [on 'Amr's part], perishes, is 'Amr liable to any penalty, or not?"

A.—"Provided the details as set forth in writing correspond with the facts, there will be no penalty."

This sample of Shi'a jurisprudence must suffice, but such as desire a further illustration of the matters which pre-occupy the minds of these jurisconsults and doctors may with profit read the narrative of the trial of the Bab at Tabriz for heresy about A.D. 1848, of which an account, based on the principal Persian narratives, will be found in vol ii of my Travellers Narrative, pp. 277-90.

¹ 'Amr and Zayd in Muslim jurisprudence correspond to "John Doe" and "Richard Roe" of English law-books; in grammar to Balbus and Cams; and in common speech to "Tom, Dick, and Harry."

² I.e. without any fault of commission or omission on his part.

We turn now to the more interesting subject of Shi'a theology, which has hitherto hardly attracted the attention it deserves from European Orientalists, and can only receive brief and inadequate treatment here. It must suffice to sketch in outline the current popular creed, without considering its evolution from early times, and to mention a few of the chief doctrinal works written in Persian during or since the Safawf period. For the purpose of this outline, however, I choose not one of the larger, more authoritative and more famous books like the Haqqul- Yaqin ("Certain Truth") of Mulla Muhammad Baqir-i-Majlisi, but a little manual entitled 'Aqaidu'sh-Shia. 'Aqd'idu'sh-Shi'a ("Beliefs of the Shi'a") composed during the reign of Muhammad Shah Qajcir (before the middle of the nineteenth century of our era) by a certain 'All Asghar ibn 'All Akbar, and lithographed in Persia without indication of place or date. This work, comprising 438 (unnumbered) pages, consists of an Introduction (Muqaddama), five sections called Mishkdt, and a Conclusion (Khatima). The contents are briefly as follows:

Introduction (Muqaddama).

Sets forth that God has not created mankind in vain, but that they should worship and serve Him, and reap the recompense of their actions in the next world. He has sent, to make known to them His Will and Law, numerous prophets, of whom Muhammad is the last and greatest. He left behind him the Scripture (the Qur'dn) and his holy descendants and representatives for the continued guidance of mankind. In these days of the Greater Occultation (Ghaybat-i-Kubrd)¹ wherein we live, the true faith is deduced

¹ This began in 260/873-4, when the Twelfth and last Im£m disappeared, to return in "the Last Time" from the Qur'dn and the sayings and traditions of the Holy Imims. According to these, three things are required of us: (i) heartfelt belief; (2) oral confession; (3) certain prescribed acts. These are ascertained either by personal investigation and "endeavour" (ijtihdd), or by adopting the opinions of such investigator (mujtahid) by conformity to his authority (taqlid). The author concludes by enumerating a number of heresies to be avoided, such as Various heresies denounced. Pantheism (wahdatu'I-wu'u'd); Apotheosis and Incarnation (ittiha wa hulul); Determinism or Fatalism (jabr); Antinomianism (suqit-i-Hbddd) consequent on self-mortification and discipline (riyddt)\ Communism (ibdhat)¹; Deification and adoration of the Imams; denial of the Resurrection of the body, or of any future life; sanction of the use of musical instruments, and of narcotic or intoxicating substances; Metempsychosis (tandsukh); Anthro-pomorphism (tashbih), and the like.

Mishk&t I (pp. 7-28), in four sections (Misbdh).

What is to be believed concerning the Essence and Attributes of God,

Belief in the Unity of God (tawhid) is fourfold, namely :

Section i. Unity of the Divine Essence (Tawhid-i-Dhdti).

God is One, without partner, peer or equal; Holy; Perfect;
 Free from defect; not composite, or capable of being so conceived, imagined, or apprehended; neither Body, nor Light, nor Substance, nor Accident; not located, nor born, nor producing offspring;
 Invisible both in this world and the next², even to the ¹ Communism was preached in Persia in Sdsanian times (sixth Christian century) by Mazdak. From his time until that of the Bdbfs this accusation has been brought against many heterodox sects.

² Hafiz has accordingly been blamed by one of his critics for the verse:

Prophets, Imams and Saints, but known to us only by His acts and the signs of His Power; neither eating, nor drinking, nor clothing Himself; exempt from anger, vexation, pain, joy, height, depth, change, progression, or retrogression; Eternal and absolutely independent of all else. His Attributes are identical with His Essence, not added to or superimposed on His Essence. These Attributes are for the most part negative, and are called Sifdt-i-Salbiyya or "Privative Attributes"

Here again the author digresses to denounce various heresies of the Sufis, especially the idea that beautiful persons are especially the Mirrors or Tabernacles of God, and the doctrine of Pantheism (Wakdatu'l- Wujtd), according to which the relation of Phenomena to Absolute Being is similar to that between the Waves and the Sea, or to sunlight passing through windows of variously coloured glass.

Section ii. Unity of the Divine Attributes (Tawhid-i-Sifdti). These Attributes are of several kinds, namely

(1) "Essential Attributes" (Sifat-i-Dhati)¹ to wit, Life, Power, with its derivative Speech, and Knowledge, with its derivatives Will and Comprehension. To these six some theologians add Eternity and Truth, but these, like Speech, Will and Comprehension, are Secondary Attributes, while Life, Power and Knowledge are primary, (2) The "Privative" or "Negative Attributes" (Sifdt-i-Salbiyya), also called the "Attributes of Glory" (Jalal) as opposed to "Perfection" (Kamal) and این جانِ عاریت که بحافظ سپرد دوست روزی رخس بیمنم و تسلیم وی کنم

"This borrowed spirit which the Friend hath entrusted to Hafiz, one day I shall see His Face and surrender it to Him."

¹ Or "Positive" (Thubutiyya), or Sifat-Kamal, "Attributes of Perfection."

"Beauty" (famd), are seven qualities from which God is exempt, namely, Compositeness, Corporeality, Visibility, Locality, Association or Partnership, Unreality, and Need. (3) "Effective Attributes" (Sifdt-i-Fi'ti), or "Attributes of Beauty" (Si/dt-i-Jamd), are acts which may be ascribed or not ascribed to God at different times and in different circumstances, like "the Provider" (Rdziq), "the Creator" (Khdlq), "the Merciful, the Compassionate" (Rahmdn, Rahim), "the Bounteous" (Jawdd), and so forth. In this section reference is made to other views entertained by the Ash'arfs, the Mu'tazila, the Kiramis, al-Balkhi, an-Najjar, Hasan of Basra, etc.

Section iii. Creative Unity of God (Tawhid-i-Khalqi). God alone can create, and it is heresy to believe with the Zoroastrians that God creates only what is good, and the Devil what is evil. But God can and does use means to this end, and can delegate His creative powers to Angels or other agents. "The good or evil manifested through God's plenipotentiary servants¹ is not God's act but their act, wherefore they are the recipients of reward or punishment, by reason of the option which they enjoy, so that they themselves, by their own

¹ This passage is so important in connection with the doctrine of Free Will and Predestination that I give it in the original volition, do those things which God hath commanded or forbidden. For although they act by virtue of a power and strength which they do not in themselves possess, but which God hath conferred upon them, yet, since He hath given them this option, He hath also assigned to them rewards and punishments. Yet God is the Creator of Good and Evil, while His servant is but the agent and doer thereof. Since, however, this treatise is designed for the common people, it would be out of place for us to discuss this matter [more fully] here."

وَأَمَّا خَيْرٌ وَ شَرٌّ از بندگان مختار ظاهر میشود کارِ خدا نیست بلکه کارِ بنده است لهذا موردِ ثواب و عقاب میشوند بااختیاریکه دارند و بخواهشِ خود بخود میکنند آنها را که خداوند امر و نهی نموده است اگرچه ایشان هم بقدرت و قوتی که ندارند بایشان عطا فرموده است میکنند لکن چون اختیار را هم بایشان داد پس ثواب و عقاب را هم قرار داد و اما خدا خالقِ خیر و شر است و بنده فاعل و کننده اوست، باری چون [این] رساله بجهة عوام است محلّ کلام با [ما؟] اینجا نیست

The author next proceeds to refute certain opinions entertained by the extreme Shi'a (Ghuldt) such as that 'AU can create, with or without God's permission; or that he is the "Assigner of Daily Bread" (Qdsimu'l-A rzaq); or that God obtained his permission to create the universe; or that he put his hand under his prayer-mat and brought forth in it the heavens and the earth. It may, however, be believed, as is implied in sundry traditions, that on the Day of Judgement God will leave "the Reckoning" with 'All or other of the Imams, and will accept their intercession, and the like. Hence 'Ali is entitled "the Face of God" (Wajhu'lldh), "the Hand of God" (Yadilldh), "the Gate of God" (Bdbiilldh) and the like.

It is also necessary to believe in al-Bidd or God's sovereign Will, that He does what He pleases; and that He can create what He pleases "without material or period" (bild mddda wa mudda), that is, from nothing in the twinkling of an eye.

Section iv. Unity of Worship {Tawhid-i-Ibdat} Worship is the exclusive prerogative of God, and of the Divine Essence, not of the Attributes. To worship an Attribute or Name (such as "the Word of God") apart from the Essence is unbelief, while to worship an Attribute in conjunction with the Essence is polytheism. This is of two sorts, patent and latent. The Refutation of the GhuldU

Tawhid-i-'Ibadati.

former includes the external worship of idols, trees, stars, the sun and moon, fire and human beings; or of symbols, such as crucifixes or pictures of holy persons; the latter includes excessive devotion to wife or child, or worldly wealth, or ambition, or hypocritical ostentation of piety. The visitation of the Ka'ba at Mecca and the Tombs of the Holy Imams is, however, permitted; as also bowing down before kings or holy and learned men, provided there be not actual prostration (sujtid and that no worship be intended.

Mishkat II (pp. 28-31).

What is to be believed concerning the Justice of God,

" It is necessary to believe that God is just, not a tyrant, and that at no time hath He acted, or doth He or will He act, unjustly towards any one. This is a fundamental article of our Faith, and whosoever holds the contrary is eternally damned/' Thus begins this section, of which the most interesting portion again deals with the question of Free Will and Predestination. " It is also necessary to believe that God neither compels His creatures to act in a given way (jabr, 'compulsion'), nor allows them unrestricted choice (tafwid but pursues a course intermediate between these two: that is to say that He has created them equally capable of both good and evil, so that they neither act under such compulsion that their deeds are in reality God's deeds, nor can they do what they do by their own strength and power without God's assistance. The former belief is Determinism or Fatalism (Jabr) and the latter Free Will (tafwid). The correct view is that, whatever they do, they do voluntarily, not by compulsion and constraint, although God furnishes them with the power, means, and instruments, and has indicated to them the paths of good and evil, so that whoever elects to do good becomes deserving of reward, while he who elects to do evil becomes deserving of punishment/'

Free Will and Predestination.

The author illustrates this by the example of a carpenter's apprentice, who, having been taught his craft and furnished with the necessary tools, is bidden by his master to make a window of a certain size and description. If instead of this he makes a door, he cannot excuse himself by pleading that his master taught him the craft and gave him the tools which enabled him to make the door. Such is the case of man if he misuses the powers and limbs which God hath given him. Here follows the well-known story¹ of the sceptic whose three questions were answered by a darwish who struck him on the head with a clod, but here Abu Hani'fa and Buhlul (the "wise fool") take the parts of the sceptic and the darwish respectively.

The author's theory that God created the hearts of believers, unbelievers, and waverers each from a different clay, "Knowing before He created them that the believer by reason of his belief would be good, and the unbeliever by reason of his unbelief bad, and so creating each of the appropriate substance, so that there might be no question of compulsion" (Jabr), is not very convincing.

Mishkat I I I (pp. 32-45).

On the Prophetic Function, general and special.

Section i. The general Prophetic Function (Nubuwwat-i-'dmma). The number of the true prophets antecedent to Muhammad, "the Seal of the Prophets and the last of them," is variously stated as from 140 to 124,000. It is necessary to believe that these whatever their actual number, were true and immaculate (tna'stim), that is, that during the whole of their lives they were guilty of no sin, major or minor; that they all enunciated the same essential truths; and that the revelations which they received were essentially identical, though in detail the later abrogate the earlier, to wit, the Qut'an the Gospel, and the Gospel the Pentateuch (Tawrdt). These three, together with the Psalms of David (Zubtir) and the Books of Abraham (Suhuf) are the principal Scriptures, but the total number of revealed books is estimated by some as 104 and by others as 124. Of the Prophets sent to all mankind (mursal) four (Adam, Seth, Enoch or Idrfs and Noah) were Syrians; five (Hud, Salih, Shu'ayb, Ishmael and Muhammad) were Arabs, and the remainder of the Children of Israel. The five great Prophets called Ulu'l-Aztn are Noah, Abraham, Moses, Jesus and Muhammad.

¹ It is included in the extracts at the end of Forbes's Persian Grammar, No. 67, pp.

Section ii. The Special Prophetic Function [of Muhammad] (Nubuwwat-i-Khdssa). It is necessary to believe The Prophet-hood of Muhammad.

that Muhammad was the last of all the Prophets, and that anyone after him who claims to be a prophet is an unbeliever and should be killed by the Muslims. Also that in every virtue and excellence he surpasses all other beings; that his "Light" (Ntir-i-Muhammad) was created thousands of years before all other creatures; that he was sent not only to all mankind but to the Jinn; and that his doctrine and law abrogate all preceding ones.

Section iii. What is to be believed touching the Qur'dn. It is the last and greatest of revealed Scriptures, abrogating all others, and is the miracle of Muhammad, though not the product of his mind; it is temporal (hadith), not eternal (qadim); was revealed in the pure Arabic language (as were all the Scriptures, though each prophet received his revelation in the language of his people), and was sent down on the Laylatiil-Qadr ("Night of Worth") in its entirety from the Preserved Tablet (Lawh-i-Mahitiz), but was revealed by Gabriel in instalments, as occasion arose, over a period of 23 years.

The QuSdn.

Neither men nor Jinn, though all should combine, can produce the like of the Qur'dn, or even one chapter or verse of it. It contains all truth and all knowledge, and the full interpretation of it is known only to God, the Prophet, and the Imams, and those "firmly established in Knowledge" to whom they have imparted it. The original Qur'dn is in the keeping of the Hidden Imam, and has undergone no change or corruption.

Section iv. The Prophets Attributes. He was "illiterate" {ummi\ having never studied or received instruction from men or Jinn; he cast no shadow; a cloud used to overshadow his head; he could see behind his back as well as before his face; he was luminous to such a degree that in his presence on the darkest night his wives could find a lost needle without the aid of lamp or candle. His birth was heralded and accompanied by miracles, enumerated in detail. He was immaculate (ma'silm), and the most excellent of all beings. Gabriel was really his servant, and 'Azra'il (the Angel of Death) could not approach him to receive his soul without his permission. He was neither a poet (shdHr), nor a magician (sdhir), nor a liar {kadhdhdb}, nor a madman {diwdna\ and to assert any of these things is blasphemy. He had five souls or spirits, of which the first three (called Rtih~i-mudraj, Rtih-quwwat, and Rtih-i-shahwat) are common to all men; the fourth, Ruh-i-imdn, "the Spirit of Faith," is peculiar to true believers; while the last, "the Holy Spirit" (Ruhu'l-Quds), belongs to the Prophet alone, and his successors, the Holy Imams.

Section v. The Prophet's Miracles. These included the Cleaving of the Moon (shaqqil-qatnar), knowledge of the Past, the Future, and the Unseen; raising the dead; knowledge of 72 out of the 73 Names of God, whereof not more than twenty were known to any previous Prophet, and the like. He saw Character of the Prophet.

Miracles of the Prophet.

Paradise and Hell with his own eyes, and ascended into Heaven in his material body, clad in his own clothes, and wearing his sandals, which he would have put off on approaching God's Throne, but was forbidden by God to do so.

Section vi. The Prophets Ascension (Mi'rdj). He ascended in his material body to the Station of "Two bow-shots or less¹," a point nearer to God than that attained by Enoch or Jesus or any angel or archangel. To assert that this Ascension was allegorical, or within himself, or spiritual and esoteric, is heresy.

Section vii. Sundry other beliefs concerning the Prophet. He was "a mortal man to whom revelations were made²" in various ways mediate and immediate. He combined in himself the functions of Apostle (Rasiil), Prophet (Nabi), Imam, and Muhaddith, by which is here meant one who sees and holds converse with the Angels. His intercession for sinners will be accepted in the Day of Resurrection; and God has bestowed on him, within certain limits, authority to command and prohibit, and to add to the obligations imposed by God in such matters as prayer and fasting. He explicitly appointed his cousin and son-in-law 'Ali ibn Abi Talib to succeed him; but to assert that Gabriel took the Revelation from a well in a plain, and, receiving permission from God to see who was the author, looked into the well and saw that it was 'Ali; or that Gabriel mistook Muhammad for 'Ali and brought the Revelation to him by mistake, are blasphemous heresies.

¹ Qur'an, liii, 9.

² Ibid. xviii, 110.

Mishkat IV (pp. 45-71).On the Imamate.

Section i. Enumeration of the Twelve Imams of the Ithnb-ashariyya or "Sect of the Twelve," and refutation of the Sunnfs, who recognize Abu Bakr, 'Umar and 'Uthman as the Khulafd, or successors and vice-gerents of the Prophet; of the Kaysaniyya, who accept Muhammad ibnu'l-Hanaflyya, a son of 'Ali by another wife than Fatima, as Imam; of the Zaydiyya, who accept Zayd ibn Hasan; of the Isma'fiiyya, who accept Isma'fl in place of his brother Musa al-Kazim; of the Aftahiyya, who accept 'Abdu'llah al-Aftah, another son of Ja'far as-Sddiq the sixth Imam, and so forth. The Kaysanfs, Zaydis, Isma'flfs, Ta'usis, Aftahis and Waqifis all belong to the Shi'a, but not to the "Sect of the Twelve," and they will all be tormented in Hell for their error, though they are Muslims, as are even the Sunnfs, who are therefore pure, wherefore, according to the prevailing view, it is not lawful to interfere with their lives, wives or property, though some Shi'a doctors hold the contrary view.

Section ii. Knowledge of the Prophet and Itndtns. This section is entirely historical or quasi-historical, giving the dates of the births, deaths, and chief events in the lives of Muhammad and the Twelve Imams.

The Prophet Muhammad was born on Friday 17th (or 12th) of Rabf i in the "Year of the Elephant," in the year 1021 of Alexander, and in the Seventh year of the reign of Anusharwdn "the Just." He lived 63 years, of which 53 were spent at Mecca and ten at al-Madina, and his "Mission" began when he was forty years old. He had nine (or 12, or 15) wives and two concubines; four sons, Qasim, Tahir and Tayyib by Khadija, and Ibrahim by Mary the Copt; and three daughters, Fatima (who married 'Ali), and Zaynab and Ruqayya, who were married to 'Uthman. He died (poisoned by a Jewess of Khaybar, as asserted) on Monday the 27th or 28th of Safar, and was buried at al-Madma.

'Ali ibn Abi Talib was the immediate legitimate successor of the Prophet and the First Imam, though not formally recognized as Khalifa until after the deaths of Abu Bakr, 'Umar and 'Uthman (whom the Shi'a regard as usurpers). He waged three great wars, with the Qdsitin ("wrong-doers"), i.e. Mu'awiya the Umayyad and his partisans; the Ndkithin ("troth-breakers"), i.e. 'A'isha, Talha and Zubayr; and the Mdriqin ("rebels"), i.e. the Kharijites. He was assassinated by Ibn Muljam on Ramadan 21 at the age of sixty-three. He married twelve wives after the death of Fatima and had seventeen sons and nineteen daughters. His father Abu Talib was inwardly a believer, though he made no outward profession of Islam. 'Ali is supposed to have been the twelfth of the Awsiyd (executors, trustees, or vice-gerents) of Jesus Christ.

Fatima was the daughter of the Prophet by Khadi'ja, and the wife of 'Ali, to whom she bore three sons (al-Hasan, al-Husayn and Muhassin), and two daughters (Zaynab the elder and Umm Kulthum). She died, aged about eighteen, on the 3rd of Jumada ii A.H. 11 (26 August, 632).

Hasan ibn 'Ali, the Second Imam, was born in Sha'ban or Ramadan, A.H. 3 (January or March, 625), resigned the position of Khalifa to Mu'awiya, to safeguard himself and his followers, after he had held it for ten years and a half, and died of poison administered to him by Ja'da the daughter of al-Ash'ath ibn Nafis, known as Asma, at the instigation of Mu'awiya, nine years and a half later. He is said to have had 60 wives, besides concubines, but others say 300 or even 600,

•Ali ibn Abi
Tahb, the First
Imam,

Hasan ibn 'Ali,
the Second
Imam

of whom he divorced so many that he earned the nick-name of al-Mitlaq ("the great divorcer"); and to have had fifteen sons and two daughters, though here again there is much difference of opinion. The best known of his numerous titles is al-Mujtaba.

Husayn ibn 'Ali, the Third Imam, was born only six months {sic} after his brother Hasan; had five wives besides concubines; six sons, 'Ali Akbar, who succeeded him as Imam, 'All Awsat, 'Ali Asghar, Muhammad, Ja'far and 'Abdu'llali; and three daughters, Fdtimatu'l-Kubra, Sakfna and Fdtimatu's-Sughra. Account of his death at Karbala" on Muharram 10, A.H. 61 (October 10, 680) with 72 of his kinsmen and partisans at the age of 56, 57 or 58. Of his titles the best known is "the Chief of Martyrs" {Sayyidish-Shuhadd}

'Ali ibn Husayn, the Fourth Imam, commonly known as Zaynu'l-Abidin and Sayyid-i-Sajjdd. His mother was the daughter of Yazdigird, the last Sasdnian King of Persia. Her name was Shahrbdnu, or, according to others, Ghazdla or Saldma. He was born in 36/656-7 or 38/658-9. He had one wife, his cousin Umm 'Abdi'llah, daughter of al-Hasan, besides concubines. He had sixteen children (seven or twelve sons, and nine or four daughters). One of his sons, Zayd, was killed by the Umayyad Caliph Hishdm ibn 'Abdu'l-Malik, who is also said to have poisoned him in 94/712 when he was fifty-seven years of age.

Muhammad Baqir, the Fifth Imam, was born in A.H. 57 or 58 (A.D. 676-8), and is said to have been poisoned by the Umayyads in 104/722 or 107/726-7. [From this point onwards there are so many discrepancies and conflicting statements that a more rigorous abridgment seems desirable. Thus the age of this Imam is given as 57 or 58, or even 78, all of which,

Husayn ibn 'Ali,
the Third
Imam.

'All Zaynu'l
'Abidin, the Fourth Imam.

Muhammad
Baqir, the Fifth Imam.

especially the last, are absolutely incompatible with the dates given for his birth and death.]

Ja'far as-sadiq, the Sixth Imam, born 80/699-700, poisoned by the 'Abbasid Caliph al-Mansur in 148/765-6.

Ja'faras-Sddiq,
the Sixth
Imam.

He took advantage of the internecine strife between the Umayyads and 'Abbeisids to carry on an active propaganda for the Shi'a doctrine, which is therefore often called after him "Ja'fari"

Miisa al-Kazim, the Seventh Imam, born 129/746-7, poisoned by Harunu'r-Rashid in 180/796-7.

Miisa al-Kazim,
the Seventh Imam, and his five successors

'Ali ar-Rida, the Eighth Imam, poisoned by al-Ma'mun in 203/818-9, and buried at Mashhad.

Muhammad Taqi, the Ninth Imam, born 195/810-11, poisoned by his wife at the instigation of the Caliph al-Mu'tasim in 220/835.

'All Naqi, the Tenth Imam, born in 212/827-8, poisoned in 245/868 at the instigation of the Caliph al-Mu'tazz.

Hasan al-'Askarf, the Eleventh Imam, born 232/846-7 poisoned in 260/873-4 at the instigation of the Caliph al-Mu'tamid.

The Imam Mahdi, also called Qa'imu Ali Muhammad, Hujjatu'llah and Baqiyyatu'llah, the Twelfth and last

The Imam Mahdi.

Imam, born in 255/869 by Narjis KMtun to Hasan al-'Askarf, disappeared in 260/873-4, is still living and will return "in the last Days" to establish the Shi'a faith and "fill the earth with justice after it has been filled with iniquity."

Section iii. Attributes of the Imdtns. It is necessary to believe that the Imams were created from one pre-existing Light; that all blessings and all knowledge of God come through them; that through them the universe lives and moves and has its being; and that they are in every respect the most excellent of beings after the Prophet Muhammad, and superior to all other Prophets and to the Angels, though subject to all human needs and functions. They are also immaculate (ma'sum), innocent of any sin, small or great, co-equal, endowed with every virtue, knowledge and power. Their birth was not as that of ordinary mortals, and, like the Prophet, they were born circumcised. After many further amplifications of the I means' perfections, the author proceeds to warn his readers against certain opinions of the Ghuldt, or most extreme Shi'a, who would put them above the Prophet and even deify them.

Character of the Imams.

Mishkat V¹ (pp. 71-85).

Beliefs connected with Death, Judgement and the Hereafter'

Section i. Death. The Angels, the Prophet and the Imams are present at every death-bed, whether of a believer or an unbeliever. When the spirit leaves the body, it " ' attaches itself to a subtle invisible body (qdlbi-i-?nithdli-i-latif) which is a simulacrum of the material body in the intermediate world or "World of the Barrier" (^Alam-i-BarzakJi). To believe, as do some of the common people, that these disembodied spirits enter the crops of green birds or lamps attached to the Throne of God (^Arsh) is an error. This disembodied spirit watches the body it has quitted and the preparations for its burial, urging haste if it be a believing spirit, and delay if unbelieving, but none hears or heeds its appeal. It also sees its place in Heaven or Hell, as the case may be. A believer's death is not always easy, nor an unbeliever's hard. The Prophet's description of the Angel of Death, whom he saw during his Night Ascent to Heaven.

¹ Like so many Persian books, the actual divisions of this book do not correspond with the Table of Contents, which indicates five main divisions, each called Mishkdt, while only four such headings actually occur in the text. This section is described as Section (Misbdh) IV of Mishkdt IV, but it introduces a quite new topic and should, I am con-----ced, be called, as I ha

Section ii. The Questioning of the Tomb. When the body has been buried and the mourners have dispersed, the spirit returns to the body to undergo the Questioning of the Tomb (Su'dl-i-qabr) at the hands of the Angels Munkir and Nakfr, whose terrible aspect is described. If the deceased is a believer and gives satisfactory answers to their questions on his beliefs, they leave him in peace, saying, "Sleep as the bride sleeps in her bridal chamber," and they enlarge his Tomb as far as the eye can see, and open from it a door into Paradise, so that the air of Paradise enters it and gladdens the occupant. But if he is an unbeliever, they revile him and beat him with their clubs, and fill the tomb with fire; and he cries out in agony, so that if men and Jinn could hear, they would die of terror. But the animals hear, and that is why a sheep grazing or a bird gathering grain will suddenly stop and shiver and listen intently. Those of the Shi'a who are buried at Karbali are said to be exempt from this Questioning, and some believe that the whole plain of Karbali, rid of all impurities, including the bodies of unbelievers and hypocrites, will be bodily transierred to Paradise. The good deeds and kindnesses of the dead may take the form of a beautiful companion who will bear them company in the tomb and dispel their loneliness¹.

Section iii. The Squeezing of the Tomb. It is not certain whether all are subject to this, or only the unbelievers. This squeezing is not confined to those who are buried in the ground, for those who are hanged, drowned or eaten by wild beasts are equally subject to it. After the Questioning and the Squeezing, the spirit again leaves the material body and reunites with the subtle invisible body. Opinions difier as to whether this last always existed within the material body, or apart from it in the "World of Similitudes," or is specially created for each spirit at the moment of dissolution.

¹ This afiords an interesting parallel to the Zoroastrian belief set forth in the Arda Virafnama.

Section iv¹. Concerning the Intermediate World QAlam-i-Barzakh), Barzakh means something intermediate between two other things, in this case a state or world between this life and the next, more subtle than the former and more gross than the latter.

The "World of the Barrier."

Some identify it with the World of Similitudes ('Alam-z-Mithdl) others believe it to exist in this world, but in an Eighth Clime outside the Seven Climes, called *Ard-i-Huwarqilya*² The Terrestrial Paradise is in the Wddis-Salbm in the western part of this region, and the Terrestrial Hell in the Wddi Barahiit', in the eastern part. In these places respectively the souls of the Blessed and the Lost congregate and experience pleasure or pain, and when a new spirit arrives they let it rest for a while to recover from the "Questioning" and the "Squeezing," and then interrogate it as to the friends who survived them on earth, whether they be still living or dead.

Section v⁴. The departed spirits visit their former homes on earth to watch their families and friends, some daily, some weekly, some monthly, some yearly, some only once in several years. Some say they come in the form of green birds and perch on the roof or walls of the house and talk, but the living do not notice or attend to them because of their preoccupation with the things of this world. The spirits of the Blessed see only the State of the departed before the Resurrection.

¹ This is headed Misbdh v (of Mishkdt IV), and the numbering of the sections begins again, but it appears to me really to constitute Section iv of Mishkat V.

² Cf. the Jism-i-Huwarqilya'l of the Shaykhis, mentioned in my Traveller's Narrative, vol. ii, p. 236.

⁸ See Qazwin's Athdru'l-Bilad, p. 25; also Halevy in the Journal Asiatique for Oct.-Dec. 1883, pp. 442-54; and Yaqut's Mu'jamu'l-Bulddn, vol. 1, p. 598.

⁴ Entitled Section ii of Misbah v (of Mishkat IV).

good things which befall, or are wrought by, their families and friends. Some say that they come on a particular day, on Monday at noon, or on Thursday, or on Friday. If their friends remember them, offering good works, prayers or fasting as a present to them, they are pleased ; the happiness of the Blessed is increased, and the torments of the Lost alleviated thereby. "Therefore, my dear friend," says the author, "you must not forget the departed in this world, but must strive, so far as in you lies, to send presents to them." The Earthly Paradise (Bihisht-i-Dunyā) is a place of rest and peace, there is no sorrow or weeping, nor any obligation to pray or fast.

Section vi¹. On the spirits of the wicked. These are also permitted from time to time to visit their homes, but they see only the evil done by their friends, and strive to warn them, but cannot, and return to the Earthly Hell more miserable than before. Discussion as to the state after death of the children of believers and unbelievers, the ignorant and feeble-minded, and the insane ; and concerning the Recording Angels. According to some, the male children of believers are, after their death, committed to the care of Abraham, and the female children to that of the Virgin Mary,

State of the wicked after death.

Conclusion (JCJiditnd)' (pp. 85-132).

Beliefs connected with the Return of the Twelfth Imam.

Section i. On his Occupation (Ghaybaf). Three Occupations are distinguished, entitled "Lesser," "Greater" and "Least." The "Lesser Occultation" (Ghaybat-i-Sughra) began on the 8th of Rabi' i, 260 (Jan, 1, 874), lasted 69 years, and ended with

The "Occultation" (Ghaybaf)
of the Imam.

¹ Entitled Section Hi etc., as in the preceding footnote.

² This, I believe, is how the title should stand, but it is actually described as Misbah, vi of Mishkat IV. See p. 395, n. 1, supra.

the death of the last of the four *wakils*¹ who maintained communication between the Hidden Imam and his followers in 329/940-1. Then began the "Greater Occupation" {Ghaybat-i-Kubra} wherein no one has direct access to the "Hidden Imam"², and wherein we are now living. The "Least Occultation" (Ghaybat-i-Asghar) will last only from noon on the Friday succeeding his "Return"

The Signs of the Last Time

(Rafat), when he will behead the preacher {Khatib} at Mecca and forthwith disappear again, until the morning of the next day (Saturday). The time of the Advent or "Return" of the Imam is known to God alone, but it will be heralded by numerous signs, of which forty-eight or more are enumerated by our author, and of which the most celebrated are the coming of the wicked and hideous Sufyani, whose army the earth will finally swallow up; the appearance of a figure in the sun; the multiplication of misleading divines and lawyers and of poets; the abounding of tyranny and oppression; the appearance of Antichrist (Dajjdl) riding on his Ass; the assembling of 313 chosen supporters of the Imam in Taliqan of Khurasan, etc. After a "reign of the Saints" lasting seventy years, the Imam will die, poisoned by a woman named Malfha, and the Imam Husayn will return to earth to read the Burial Service over him. This is the beginning of what is called the "Lesser Resurrection" (Qiyamat-i-Sughrd), when the ¹ I.e. Agents or Representatives, also called "Gates" (Bdb, pi. Abwdb). The avoidance of this last title by the author is probably intentional, for he wrote in 1263/1847, just when Mirza 'Ali Muhammad's claim to be the Bdb was creating 30 great a stir in Persia. See my Travellers Narrative, 11, pp 226-34 and 296-8.

The "Lesser Resurrection"

² Many particulars concerning the "Occupations," the "Gates," and the claims to communicate with the Hidden Imam advanced by the Shaykhis and Babis, denounced as heretics by our author, are given in the notes (especially D, E and O) at the end of vol. 11 of my Traveller's Narrative, to which the reader is referred.

Prophet and all the Imams, as well as their chief antagonists, shall return to earth for a while, and fight their battles over again, but with a different result, since the unbelievers shall be uniformly defeated. In this first temporary Resurrection only those who are purely believers or unbelievers (*Mti'tnin-i-Khdli*s or Kafir-i-Khalis) will come to life. Then they will again disappear from the face of the earth, and, after forty days' anarchy and confusion, the tribes of Gog and Magog (Yajtij u Majtij) will burst through the Wall (Sadd) which keeps them back, and will overrun the earth, and eat up all the grass and herbs, and drink up the rivers.

The " Greater Resurrection " (Qiydnat-i-Kubrd), when all the dead shall be raised to life in the same bodies they had while on earth, re-created by God's Power as a broken brick can be re-made from its original materials, will be inaugurated by the blast of Israfil's trumpet, which shall draw into itself all the spirits of the quick and the dead, so that no living thing shall remain on earth save the "Fourteen Immaculate Ones" (Chahdrdah Ma'stint)¹. Then, when their bodies have been re-created, Israfil will again blow his trumpet, and the spirits will emerge from it like a swarm of bees, and fly each one to its own body. All animals will also be raised to life to undergo the Reckoning and be judged for their acts of violence towards one another. Then the Balance (Mizdn) will be set up for the weighing of the good and bad acts of each soul, and the scroll of each man's deeds, written down by the Recording Angels Sa'iq and Shahid, will be placed in his hand.

The Seven Hells (fzkannam, SaHr, Saqar.Jahim, Laszd, Hutama and Hawiyd) are next enumerated, whereof the first is for Muslims who died in sin without repenting, and who will be released when adequately punished ; the second for the Jews;

The Seven Hells.

¹ I.e. the Prophet, his daughter Fatima, and the Twelve Imams.

the third for the Christians; the fourth for the Sabaeans; the fifth for the Magians; the sixth for the idolatrous Arabs; and the seventh for the hypocrites. Unbelievers will remain in Hell for ever, but some, on account of their virtues, will remain there without suffering torment, as, for example, Khusraw Anusharwan on account of his justice[^] and Hatim of Tayy on account of his generosity.

Next follows a description of the Bridge of Sirat, "finer than a hair, sharper than a sword, and hotter than fire,"

The Bridge of *Sirat

which spans Hell, and over which everyone must pass, even the Prophets and Imams and Saints, to reach Paradise. A detailed description of a very material Paradise succeeds, which in turn is followed by an account of the Purgatory or

Purgatory {A'rdi}

intermediate state called al-A'rdi. This is said to be a beautiful meadow or high ground situated on the Bridge of Sirdt, and peopled by the spirits of the feeble-minded, illegitimate children, and those who are neither good enough for Heaven nor bad enough for Paradise. Hell. By the intercession of the Prophet or the Imams some of these will be subsequently admitted to Heaven. Other heavenly delights described, such as the Water of Kawthar, the "Lote-tree of the Limit" (Sidratu'l-Muntahd), and the T?i£>d-tree. When every soul has been assigned its place in Heaven, Hell or al-A'rdi Death will be led forth in the form of a black sheep and slain, to show that henceforth there is neither fear nor hope of death.

Conclusion (Khatima)¹ (pp. 132-138).

[Section ii.] On the meaning of Unbelief {Kufr} and Belief {fmdn}. Five meanings of Kufr in the Qur'dn are distinguished, and three chief kinds in ordinary life, namely spiritual (qalbi), verbal (qawlf), and actual (>?/!). Three kinds of Iman are also distinguished, and Iman is distinguished from Is/dm. Sunnfs and Shi'a not of the "Sect of the Twelve" are believers (mtftnin), but not Muslims; they are not unclean, but will remain for ever in Hell-fire. The apostate (murtadd) from Islam is deserving of death, nor is his repentance accepted in this world, though, according to some theologians, it may be accepted in the next. But from the convert to Islam who reverts to his original faith repentance may be accepted; and a woman who apostasizes should not be killed, but imprisoned and beaten until she repents or dies in prison. The book ends with a description of five kinds of Faith and six kinds of Repentance.

¹ This is so headed, but see pp. 381 and 398 supra. This section might be called "Epilogue."

Such in outline is the Shi'a creed of contemporary Persia in its crudest and most popular form. It would be interesting to trace the evolution of that creed from the earliest times of Islam, to compare (so far as the available materials allow) the historical with the legendary Imams, and to contrast in detail the beliefs, both doctrinal and eschatological, of the Shi'a and the Sunnfs. This, however, transcends the scope of this book, even had the preliminary work indispensable to such a study been adequately done. Even amongst the orthodox and formal (gishrf) mujtahids and mullds these doctrines must often have been held in a form less crude and childish than that outlined above, though they may have deemed it wiser to leave the popular beliefs undisturbed, and to discourage speculations which might become dangerous amongst a people only too prone to scepticism and heresy. Taking only the broad divisions of theological and philosophical thought in Persia, we may distinguish in each field three main types; amongst the theologians the AkhbdriSy the Usiilis (or Mujtahidis), and the Sliaykkis, amongst the philosophers the Mutakallirntin or School-men,

Broad divisions of religious thought in Persia.

the Faldsifa or Hukamd (Philosophers pure and simple), and the philosophical Stlfis. Of all these Gobineau's¹ account is still the most clear, lively and concise which I have met with in any European language, though it cannot be certainly affirmed that its accuracy is equal to its clarity. Thus he credits the Akhbarfs, generally regarded as the straitest sect of the Shi'a, with a certain latitudinarianism to which they can hardly lay claim; and describes the Shaykhis as "not altogether rejecting the idea of the Resurrection of the Body," when it was precisely their doctrine of the "subtle body" (or Jistn-i-Huwarqilj/dy which especially laid them under suspicion of heresy. The doctrines of the Shaykhis, moreover, definitely prepared the way for the still more heretical doctrines of the Babfs, who were outside the pale of Islam while the Shaykhis were just within it and counted many influential followers in high places. Of the Philosophers and Sufis more will be said in another chapter, but as to the theologians we shall do well to bear in mind Gobineau's dictum⁸: "Il ne faut pas perdre de vue que si Ton peut, approximativement, classer les trois opinions ainsi que je le fais, il est necessaire pourtant d'ajouter qu'il est rare que, dans le cours de sa vie, un Persan n'ait point passe" de Tune a Tautre et ne les ait point toutes les trois professees." Mulla Muftammad Baqir-i-Majlisi, one of the greatest, most powerful and most fanatical mujtahids of the .g nfmir(prrjnd, found if^{nr}J2LLD to apologize for the tolerant and even symrpathetic"attitude assumed by his father Mulla Muhammad Taqf-i-Majlisi. not less distinguished than himself as a theologian, towards the Sufis. "Let none think so ill of my father," he says¹, "as to imagine that he was of the Sufis. Say, it was not so, for I was intimately associated with my father in private and in public, and was thoroughly conversant with his beliefs. My father thought ill of the Sufis, but at the beginning of his career, when they were extremely powerful and active, my father entered their ranks, so that by this means he might repel, remove, eradicate and extirpate the roots of this foul and hellish growth (in Shajara-i-Kkabitha-i-Zaqqicmiyyd). But when he had extinguished the flames of their infamy, then he made known his inner feelings, for he was a man of the utmost virtue and piety, ascetic and devout in his life," etc.

¹ Les Religions et les Philosophies dans VAsie Centrale (2nd ed., Pans, 1866), pp. 28-33 for the three theological parties, pp. 63-1 n (ch. iv) for the Sufis and the Philosophers.

² See my Travellers Narrative' vol. 11, p. 236.

³ Op. cit. pp. 32-3.

Yet Mulla Muhammad Baqir, in spite of his formalism and fanaticism, his incredible industry in writing books in simple and easily intelligible Persian in order to popularize the Shi'a doctrines, and his ruthless persecution of the Sufis, is credited with posthumous gleams of a higher humanity². One saw him in a dream after his death and asked of him, "How fares it with you in that world, and how have they dealt with you?" He answered, "None of my actions profited me at all, except that one day I gave an apple to a Jew, and that saved me."

The Qisasul-Ulama contains 153 biographies of eminent divines, of whom the following twenty-five appear to me the most interesting and important. They are here arranged, as far as possible, chronologically, the serial number of each biography in the book being indicated in brackets after the name³.

¹ Qisasul-Ulama, Lucknow ed., part ii, p. 19.

² Ibid., part 1, p. 216. The author discredited the tale, which is described as widely current. As regards this theologian's literary activity, he is said on the same page to have been accustomed to write 1000 "bayts," i.e. 50,000 words, daily.

³ They are numbered in both editions in the abjad notation, eg. Kulaynf as ' (96); Najjashi as (132), etc.

107200 p 404

I. Pre-safawi divines.

1. Mukammad ibn Ydq̃tib al-Kulaynf (No. 96), entitled Thiqatu'l-Isldm, author of the Kafi d. 329/941.
2. Muhammad ibn 'A U ibn Husayn ibn Miisd ibn Babawayhi of Qum, called Saddq (No. 95), d. 381/991-2. Of his works 189 are enumerated in the Qisasul-Ulamd, the most important being that entitled Man Id yahduruhu' l-Faqih, which, like the Kdii mentioned in the last paragraph, is one of the "Four Books."
3. Muhammad ibn Muhammad ibn Nu'man ibn 'Abdus-Salbm al-Hdnthiy commonly called Shaykh-i-Mufid (No. 97), d. 413/1022, The Qisas enumerates 171 of his works.
4. Sayyid Murtada, entitled 'Alamu'l-Huda (No. 98), d. 436/1044. He was the great-great-grandson of the Seventh Imam, Musa al-Kazim.
5. Ahmad ibn 'Ali an-Najjdshi (No. 132), d. 455/1063. He was a disciple of the Shaykh-i-Mufid, and the author of the well-known Kitabur-Rijal.
6. Muhammad ibn Hasan ibn 'Ali at-Ttisi, called Shaykh-u't-Ta'ifa (No. 100), d. 460/1067. He was the third of the older "three Muhammads" (the others being Nos. 1 and 2 supra), and the author of two of the "Four Books/" the Tahdhibu l-Ahkdm and the Istibsdry, and of the well-known Fi'irist, or Index of Shi'a books.
7. Nastriid-Din-i-Ttist, entitled Muhaqqiq ("the Investigator"), even more celebrated as a philosopher and man of science than as a theologian (No. 90), d. 672/1274. His most famous works are the Akhldq-i-Ndsiti on Ethics, the Astronomical Tables called Zij-i-Ilkhdni, compiled for Hulagii Khan the Mongol, and the Tajrid on Scholastic Philosophy, a favourite text for the countless host of commentators and writers of notes and glosses.
8. Najrnu'd-Din J a'far ibn Yahya, known as Muhaqqiq-i-Awwal ("the First Investigator"), author of the Shard-

Ten great divines of the pre-Safawi
period.

yi'u'l-Islam (No. 89), born 638/1240-1, died Muharram 726/Dec. 1325. As a youth he showed some poetic talent, which was, however, sternly repressed by his father, who told him that poets were accursed and poetry incompatible with a devout life.

9 Hasan ibn Ytisuf ibn 'Ali ibnu'l-Mutahhar al-Hilli, commonly called 'Allama-i-Hilli ("the Sage of Hilla") (No. 88), died in the same month and year as the above-mentioned Muhaqqiq-i-Awwal, who was ten years his senior. Of his works 75 are enumerated in the Qisas, 'Allama-i-Hilli came of a great family of theologians, which produced in a comparatively short period ten mujtahids. His father was one, and his son, entitled Fakhrit l-Muhaqqiqin (No. 86), another.

10. Shaykh Shamsifd-Din Muhammad ibn Makki alAmili, called Shahid-i-Awwal ("the First Martyr") (No. 82), was put to death at Damascus about midsummer 786/1384¹ by judgement of the two Qadis Burhanu'd-Din the Malikf and Ibn Jama'a the Shafi.

II. Safawi and post-safawi divines.

11. Nurud-Din 'Ali ibn 'Abdu'l-Ali, known as Muhaqqiq-i-Thanf ("the Second Investigator") (No. 84), came to Persia from Karak, his native place, and was highly honoured and esteemed by Shah Tahmasp I. He died in 940/1533-4.

Divines of the Safawf and post-
^afawf periods

12 Ahmad ibn Muhammad, called Muqaddas-i-Ardabfli "the Saint of Ardabil" (No. 83), was highly honoured by Shah 'Abbas the Great. He died in 993/1585.

13. Mir Muhammad Bdqir-i-Ddmdd (No. 77), the grandson of Muhaqqiq-i-Thani (No. 11 supra), also stood high in the favour of Shah 'Abbas, and died in 1041/1631-2.

¹ This is the date given in the Qisas, but the Lu'lu'atu'l-Bahrayn gives 780/1378-9.

Concerning his book the Sirdtii l-Mustaqim (" the Straight Path ") a Persian poet composed the following epigram :

صراط المستقیم میر داماد¹ مسلمان نشود کافر مبیناد¹

He himself wrote poetry under the takhallus, or pen-name, of Ishraq.

14. Shaykh Muhammad Bahaud-Dinal-'Amili, commonly called Shaykh-i-Baha'f (No. 37), was equal in fame, influence and honour with the above-mentioned Mir Damad, these two being amongst the men of learning who gave most lustre to the court of Shah 'Abbas the Great. The literary activities of Shaykh-i-Baha'i, who was born near Ba'labakk in 953/1546, and died in 1031/1622, were not confined to theology. In that subject his best-known work is the Jdrtu'-i-'Abbasi, a popular Persian manual of Shi'a Law, which he did not live to complete. He also compiled a great collection of anecdotes in Arabic named the KasJiktil (" Alms-bowl"), a sequel to his earlier and lebs-known Mikhldt. He also wrote several treatises on Arithmetic and Astronomy, and composed the Persian mathnawi poem entitled Ndn u Halwd ("Bread and Sweet-meats ").

15. Muhammad ibn Murtadà of Kàshàn, commonly known as Mullá Muhsin-i-Fayḍ (No. 76), though reckoned "a pure Akhbá'í" (اخباری صرف), and detested by Shaykh Ahmad al-Ahsá'í the founder of the Shaykhí sect, who used to call him Must' (" the Evil-doer ") instead of Muhsin (" the Well-doer "), was in fact more of a mystic and a philosopher than a theologian. His best-known theological work is probably the Abwábu'l-Janá'n (" Gates of Paradise "), composed in 1055/1645. Ten years later he went from Kàshàn to Shíráz to study philosophy with Mullá Ṣadrá, whose daughter he married. He was also a poet, and in the

¹ " May the Musulmán not hear nor the unbeliever see Mír Dámád's Sirdtu'l-Mustaqim."

*Majmatu'l-Fusahd*¹ the number of his verses is said to amount to six or seven thousand.

16. Mir Abu l-Qdsim-i-Findariski, though omitted from the Qisasu'l-Ulamd, was accounted "the most eminent philosopher and Stifi of his time, and stood high in the estimation of Shah 'Abbas I, whom he is said, however, to have scandalized by his habit of mixing with the lowest orders and attending cock-fights V He spent some time in India in the reign of Shah-Jahdn and died in Isiahan about 1050/1640-1.

17. Mulld Sadrud-Din Muhammad ibn Ibrdhim of Shiraz, commonly called Mulla Sadra, is unanimously accounted the greatest philosopher of modern times in Persia. That in the QisastM-Ulamd no separate article should be devoted to one whose life was a constant conflict with the "clergy," and whose clerical disguise was even more transparent than that of his teachers Mir Damaxi and Shaykh-i-Baha'f, is not surprising, but much incidental mention is made of him in this and other similar works, like the Lu'lu'atu'l-Bahrayn, and his teaching afiected theology, notably that of the Shaykhi school⁸, in no small degree. His death is placed by the Rawddtu l-Janndt about 1070/1660⁴, but by the Licluatul-Bahrayn twenty years earlier.

18. 'Abdur-Razzdq-i-Ldhiji, like MulLi Muhsin-i-Fayd, was a pupil of Mulla Sadra. His two best-known works, both in Persian, are the Sar-mdya-i-lmdn ("Substance of Belief") and the Gawhar-i-Murdd ("Pearl of Desire"). He

¹ Tihrin lith. ed. of 1295/1878, vol. n, pp 25-6.

² Rieu's Persian Catalogue, p. 815. See also p. 258 supra

³ Shaykh Ahmad al-Ahsd'f commentated his Mash&Hr and other works {Rawddtu'l-Janndt, p. 331), but, according to the QisasuH-Ulamd (Lucknow ed., p. 48), regarded him as an infidel.

⁴ This is given by the Qisasul-"UIa?nd as the date of his son Mirza Ibrahim's death. The earlier date 1050/1640-1 is therefore more probable for the father.

shared with Shaykh Tabarsf, the author of the Majma'u'l-Baydn, the curious belief in the "essential meaning" of words, by which he meant that there existed a real relation between the sound and meaning of every word, so that having heard the sound of a strange word it was possible by reflection to conjecture the sense¹.

The last six persons mentioned were all philosophers as well as, or even more than, theologians. The following, except the last, Hajji Mulla Hadf, are all Shf'a divines of the strictest type.

19. Mullá Muhammad Taqi-i-Majlisi (No. 36) is said to have been the first to compile and publish Shf'a traditions, which he received from the Muhaqqiq-i-thdni, in the Safawi period. Allusion has already been made to his alleged Sufi proclivities. He died in 1070/1659-60, a date expressed by the ingenious chronogram²:

اَفسِرْ شَرعِ اَوْتادِ بى سِر و پا كُشتِ فَضْلُ

"The crown of the Holy Law fell . scholarship become headless and footless."

By removing the "crown," i.e. the initial letter, of شرع, and the "head" and "foot," i.e. the initial and final letters of فضل, we get the three letters ع ر ض = 800 + 200 + 70 = 1070.

20. Mullá Muhammad Bāqir-i-Majlisi (No. 33), son of the above, who has been already mentioned repeatedly in this chapter, was even more famous than his father. His great work is the Bihāru'l-Anwār ("Oceans of Light"), an immense compilation of Shf'a traditions; but he composed many other works, of which the following are in Persian: 'Aynu'l-Hayāt ("the Fountain of Life"); 'Mishkātu'l-Anwār ("the Lamp of Lights"); 'Hilyatu'l-Muttaqīn ("the Ornament of the Pious"); 'Hayātu'l-Qulūb ("Life of Hearts"), not completed; Tuhiatu'z-ZdHrin ("the Pilgrims' Present") ; Jald'u'l-'Uyun ("the Clearing of the Eyes")\ etc. He died, as already stated, in 1111/I699-1700.

¹ Qisasu'l-'Ulamā, Lucknow ed., second part, p. 123.

² These data are from the Rawāḍu'l-Jannāt, pp. 129-31. The notice in the Qisas is very incomplete.

21. Sayyid Muhammad Mahdi of Burujird, entitled Bahru'l-'Ultim ("the Ocean of Learning") (No. 27), was born in n55/1742-3, and appears to have died about 1240/1824-5.

22. Sayyid Muhammad Bdqir ibn Sayyid Muhammad Taqi of Rasht, entitled Hujjatu'l-Islam (No. 26), has been already mentioned for his severity in inflicting punishments for infractions of the Shari'at. He was wealthy as well as influential, and, according to the Rawddtu' l-Janndt (p. 125), spent 100,000 "legal dinars"¹ in building a great mosque in the Biddbdd quarter of Isiahan. He was born about 1180/1766-7, went to 'Iraq to pursue his studies at the age of sixteen or seventeen, returned to Isiahan in 1216 or 1217 (1801-3), and died on Sunday the 2nd of Rabi" i, 1260 (March 23, 1844). According to his namesake, the author of the Rawddtul-Janndt, his death was mourned for a whole year by the people (presumably the devout and orthodox only!), because none after him dared or was able to enforce the rigours of the Ecclesiastical Law to the same extent. By a strange coincidence, the "Manifestation" of Mirzi 'AU the Bdb_t and the subsequent rise of that heresy which did so much to weaken the power of the orthodox Shi'a faith, took place just two months after his death.

23. Shaykh Ahmad ibn Zay nit d-Din tbn Ibrahim al-AhsdH, the founder of the Shaykhi school or sect, spent most of his life at Yazd, whence he went by way of Isiahdn to Kirmdnshcih. There he remained until the death of the governor of that city, Prince Muhammad 'Ali Mirzd, son of Fath-'AK Shah, who favoured him and invited him to make his abode there. He then retired to the Holy Shrines of 'Iraq, where he composed most of his numerous works, of which the most famous are the Sharhii z-Ziyrati 'l-Kabira and the Sharhti l-Fawa'id. He vehemently opposed Mullid Sadra, Mullid Muhsin-i-Fayd, and the Sufis, but was himself denounced as a heretic by Hajji Mulla Muhammad Taqi of Qazwin, whose death at the hands of a Babf assassin about A.D. 1847 earned for him the title of "the Third Martyr" {Shahid-i-Thdli Ji). Shaykh Ahmad died in 1243/1827-8, being then nearly ninety years of age¹.

¹ Rawdatu'l-Jannat, pp. 118-24.

² The dinar in modern Persia is of merely nominal value, and 100,000 (=10 Tumdns) are only worth £ 2 to &.4, but originally the dindr was a gold coin worth about 10 francs, and this latter is presumably what is here intended.

24. Mullid Ahmad-i-Nirdqi) who died of cholera in 1244/1828-9, was a poet as well as a theologian, and composed a Persian poem entitled Tdqdis in imitation of the Mathnawi of Jalalu'd-Din Rumf. His poetical name was Safari, and an article is consecrated to him in the Majmctill-Fusahd (vol ii, p 330)

^{25.} Hajji Mulla Haddi of Sabzawdr², the last great Persian philosopher also wrote poetry under the nom de guerre of Asrar. He was born in 1212/1797-8 and died in 1295/1878.

¹ Most of these particulars are taken from the Rawd&tuH-Janndt, pp. 25-7.

² For an account of his life furnished by one of his disciples, see my Year amongst the Persians, pp 131-43.

CHAPTER IX.

PROSE WRITERS UNTIL A.D. 1850.

Oriental writers on the art of rhetoric classify prose writings, according to their form, into three varieties, plain ('ari), rhymed {muqaffd}, and cadenced (musa/fa').

Varieties of Prose.

We may divide them more simply into natural and artificial. To us, though not always to our ancestors, as witness the Euphuists of Elizabethan days, artificial prose is, as a rule, distasteful; and if we can pardon it in a work like the Arabic Maqmdt of al-Hariri or the Persian Anwdr-i-Suhayli, written merely to please the ear and display the writer's command of the language, we resent it in a serious work containing information of which we have need. It is a question how far style can be described absolutely as good or bad, for tastes differ not only in different countries but in the same country at different periods, and a writer deemed admirable by one generation is often lightly esteemed by the next, since, as the Arab proverb says, "Men resemble their age more than they do their fathers¹."

Ornate prose in historical works condemned.

But when a serious historian takes a page to say what could be easily expressed in one or two lines, we have a right to resent the wilful waste of time inflicted upon us by his misdirected ingenuity. Before the Mongol Invasion in the thirteenth century Persian prose was generally simple and direct, and nothing

Early simplicity could be more concise and compact than such books as Bal'amfs Persian version of Tabarf's great history, the Siydsat-ndrna of the Nizamu'l-Mulk, the Safar-ndma of Nasir-i-Khusraw, the Qdbtis-ndma, or the Chahdr Maqdla, Mongol, Tartar and Turkish influences seem to have been uniformly bad, favouring as they did flattery and bombast. The historian Wassaf, whose chronicle was presented to Uljdytu in A.D. 1312¹, was the first great ofiender, and unhappily served as a model to many of his successors. In recent times there has been a great improvement, partly due to the tendency, already remarked in the case of verse, to take as models the older writers who possessed a sounder and simpler taste than those of the post-Mongol period, and partly to the recent development of journalism, which, if not necessarily conducive to good style, at least requires a certain concision and directness. In point of style, arrangement, and, above all, documentation the quite recent but little-known "History ot the Awakening of the Persians" (Tdrikh-i-Biddri-yi-Irdriiydn) 01 the Nazimu'l-Isldm of Kirmdn (1328/1910), unfortunately never completed, is incomparably superior to the more ambitious general histories of Rida-qulf Khan and the Lisanu'l-Mulk (the Supplement to Mirkhwand's Rawdatu-Safa and the Ndsikhu't-Tawdrikh) compiled some fifty years earlier.

Of prose works written simply to display the linguistic attainments and rhetorical ingenuities of the authors I do not propose to perpetuate the memory, or to say more than that, when they embody historical and other matter of sufiicient value to render them worth translating, they should, in my opinion, if they are to be made tolerable to European readers, be ruthlessly pruned of these flowers of eloquence. As an instance I will take one passage from that very useful and by no means very florid history of the early Safawf period the Ahsanu't-Tawdrikh (985/1577-8), of which I have made such extensive use in the first part of this volume. It describes the war Corruption under Mongol and other foreign dominion.

Recovery in recent times

An instance of misplaced floridity.

waged on the blind Sháhrukh Dhu'l-Qadar by Muḥammad Khán Ustájílú in the spring of 914/1508-9, and begins thus¹:

در بهار که سلطانِ گل با حشمت و تجمل روی بتاخت الوس
ریاحین آورد و بزخمِ پیکانِ خار چنودِ شتوی را از گلزار منہزم گردانید

بر آمد ز کوسِ سحابی غروش²

در آمد سپاہِ ریاحین بجوش³

ریخِ خویش را ابرِ درہم کشید⁴

بدعوی کمانہای رستم کشید⁵

بر آورد شاخِ شکوفہ عَلم⁶

ریاحین بیاراست خیل و حشم⁷

ز ڈالہ پیِ فرقِ افراسیاب⁸

بدامان کشانِ سنگِ ہر سو سحاب⁹

خانِ محمد استاجلو بہ بیلاقیِ ماردین نزول فرمود¹⁰

" In the spring, when the Rose-king with pomp and splendour turned his face to attack the tribes of the Basil, and, with thrusts of his thorn-spear, drove in rout from the Rose-garden the hibernal hosts—

A roar³ arose from the cloud-drums, the army of the basils was stirred;

The cloud contracted its brows, and drew Rustam-bows⁴ for the contest ;

The flowering branches raised their standards, the basils prepared their cavalry and their hosts;

The cloud in its skirts bore in every direction hail-stones for the head of Afrasiyab—

Khin Muhammad Ustajlii encamped na summer quarters at Mardin."

¹ F. 75' of Mr A. G. Ellis's MS.

² This reading is conjectural. The MS. has _____ which is obviously wrong, since it is neither sense nor verse.

³ I.e. the spring thunder.

⁴ The rainbow is called "Rustam's bow" {Kaman-i-Rustam} in Persian.

All this could much better be said in one line:

در بهار خان محمد استاجلو به ییلاقی ماردین نزول فرمود،

"In the spring Khẓn Muhammad Ustajlii encamped in summer quarters at Mdrdin."

Graceful poetic fancies are all very well in their proper place, but in a serious history they are inappropriate and irritating. The trouble is that, as has been remarked already, nearly all literary Persians, and consequently historians, are poets or poetasters, and they unhappily find it easier and more entertaining to mix poetry with their history than history with their poetry, even their professedly historical poetry. In discussing the later prose literature of Persia I shall therefore confine myself to what has substantial value apart from mere formal elegance, and shall treat of it, according to subject, under the five following headings:

- Classification of prose works.
- (1) Theology.
 - (2) Philosophy.
 - (3) The Sciences—mathematical, natural and occult.
 - (4) History—general, special and local.
 - (5) Biography and autobiography, including travels.

1. THEOLOGY.

Theology in Persia during the period with which we are dealing, that is from the establishment of the Safawf dynasty to the present day, means Shi'a theology, and by extension the semi-heterodox doctrines of the Shaykhis and the wholly heterodox doctrines of the Babfs and Baha'fs. A large portion of this theological literature—in older times almost all, and even now a considerable amount—is in Arabic, the sacred language of Islam and of the Qur'dn, and much of it in all Muslim countries is almost unreadable, save for a few professional

Theological literature.

theologians, and, it may be added, quite unprofitable. Some

A worthless class of books. learned man writes a theological, philological, or logical treatise which achieves renown in the Colleges where the 'ulanid' get their mediaeval training. Some one else writes a commentary on that treatise; a third produces a super-commentary on the commentary; a fourth a gloss on the super-commentary; a fifth a note on the gloss; so that at the end we are confronted with what the immortal Turkish wit Khoja Nasru'd-Din Efendicalled " soup of the soup of the soup of the hare-soup," a substance devoid of savour or nutriment, and serving rather to conceal than to reveal its original material. Shaykh Muhammad 'Abduh, late Grand Mufti of Egypt and Chancellor of the University of al-Azhar, than whom, perhaps, no more enlightened thinker and no more enthusiastic lover of the Arabic language and literature has been produced by Isl&m in modern times, used to say that all this stufi should be burned, since it merely cumbered bookshelves, bred maggots, and obscured sound knowledge. This was the view of a great and learned Muhammadan theologian, so we need not scruple to adopt it; indeed the more we admire and appreciate the abundant good literature of Istem, the more we must deplore, and even resent, the existence of this rubbish. In reading the lives of the 'Ulamd' in such books as the Rawddtitl-Janndt and the Qisasu'l-'Ulamd we constantly find a theologian credited with forty, fifty, or sixty works of this type, which nobody reads now, and which, probably, no one but his pupils ever did read, and they only under compulsion. Even to enumerate these treatises, were it possible, would be utterly unprofitable.

The great achievement of the Shi'a doctors of the later Safawf period, such as the Majlisis, was their popularization of the Shi'a doctrine and historical Anschaung in the vernacular. They realized that to reach the people they must employ the language of the people, and that in a simple form, and they reaped their reward in the intense and widespread enthusiasm for the Shi'a cause which they succeeded in creating. We have already seen¹ how few Shi'a books were available when Shah Isma'fl first established that doctrine as the national faith of Persia, and, according to the Rawddtu'l-Achievement of the Majhsi Janndt', Mulla Muhammad Taqi Majlisi was "the first to publish the Shi'a traditions after the appearance of the Safawf dynasty?"⁷ even more —eminent son Mullet Muhammad Baqir compiled Works of Mulla Muhammad Baqir-i-Majlisi. on this subject the immense Bihdrifl-Anwdr ("Oceans of Light") in Arabic, and in Persian the following works⁸: 'Aynu'l-Haydt ("the Fountain of Life"), containing exhortations to renunciation of the world; Mishkdtu'l-Anwdr ("the Lamp of Lights"); Hilyatu'l-Muttaqin ("the Ornament of the Pious"), on example and conduct; Haydtu'l-Qultib ("the Life of Hearts") in three parts, the first on the Prophets before Muhammad, the second on the Prophet Muhammad, and the third on the Twelve Imams, but only part of it was written and it was never completed; "Tuhiatuz-Zdirin ("the Pilgrims' Present"); Jald'til-'Uyiin ("the Clearing ot the Eyes"); Miqbdsril-Masdbih, on the daily prayers ; Rabi'ul-AsdbP ("the Spring of Weeks "); Z'ddu7-Ma'ad(" Provision for the Hereafter"), and numerous smaller treatises. Oddly enough one of the most notable of his Persian theological works, the Haqqitl-Yaqin (" Certain Truth "), which was compiled in 1109/1698, and beautifully printed at Tihran so early as 1241/1825, is omitted from this list. The late M. A. de Biberstein Kazimirski began to translate this book into French, but abandoned his idea, sent his manuscript translation to me, and urged me to continue and complete the work he had begun; a task which, unfortunately, I have never had leisure to accomplish, though it would be well worth the doing, since we still possess no comprehensive and authoritative statement of Shi'a doctrine in any European language.

¹ Pp. 54-5 supra.

² Tihrdn lithographed ed. of 1306/1888, p. 129.

³ Ibid., p. 119.

The basic works of the Shi'a faith, namely the QuSdn (the Word of God) and the Traditions (the sayings and deeds of the Prophet and the Imams), are naturally in Arabic. The numerous Persian religious treatises may be roughly classified in three groups—the doctrinal, the historical, and the legal. In practice doctrine and history are almost inevitably intermixed, especially in the sections dealing with the Imamate, where attempts are made to prove that the Prophet intended 'Ali to succeed him; that Abu Bakr, 'Umar and 'Uthman were usurpers of his rights; that the Imams were twelve in number, no more and no less, and that they were the twelve recognized by the "Sect of the Twelve" (Jthna-'Ashariyyd) and none other. Thus while the earlier sections of these doctrinal works dealing with God and His Attributes border on Metaphysics, the later sections are largely composed of historical or quasi-historical matter, while the concluding portions, dealing with Heaven, Hell, the Last Judgement, and the like, are eschatological.

The style of these books is generally very simple and direct, and totally devoid of rhetorical adornment, but commonly affects an imitation of the Arabic idiom and order of words, not only in passages translated from that language, but throughout, as though these theologians had so steeped their minds in the QuSdn and the Traditions that even when using the Persian language the thought must follow Arabic lines. The following example, taken from the beginning of the second volume of the *Haqqu'l- Yaqin*¹, will suffice to illustrate this peculiarity:

Classification of Persian theological works

Simple style of these works

¹ Tihrdn printed ed. of 1241/1825, f, 142^b.

مقصد نهر در اثبات رجعت است، بدانکه از جمله اجماعات شیعه بلکه ضروریات مذهب حق فرقه مَحَقّه حَقِیت رجعت است یعنی پیش از قیامت در زمان حضرت قایم جمعی از نیکان بسیار نیک و بدان بسیار بد دنیا بر میگردد نیکان برای آنکه بدیدن دولت ائمه خود دیدهای ایشان روشن گردد و بعضی از جزای نیکمهای ایشان در دنیا بایشان برسد و بدان از برای عقوبت و عذاب دنیا و مشاهده اضعاف آن دولتی که نمیخواستند باهل بیت رسالت برسد و انتقام کشیدن شیعیان از ایشان و سایر مردم در قبرها میمانند تا در قیامت مشهور شوند چنانچه در احادیث بسیار وارد شده است که رجوع نمیکند در رجعت مگر کسی که محض ایمان داشته باشد یا محض کفر اما سایر مردم پس ایشانرا بحال خود میگذارند

" Maqsad IX ' establishing the 'Return' (Raj'at).

" Know that of the number of those things whereon the Shi'a are agreed, nay, which are of the essentials of the true doctrine of that Truth-pursuing body, is the 'Return'.⁵ That is to say that in the time of His Holiness the QAlim before the Resurrection, a number of the good who are very good and of the bad who are very bad will return to the world, the good in order that their eyes may be brightened by seeing the triumph of their Imams, and that some portion of the recompense of their good deeds may accrue to them in this world; and the bad for the punishment and torment of the world, and to behold the double of that triumph which they did not wish to accrue to the Imams, and that the Shi'a may avenge themselves on them. But all other men will remain in their tombs until they shall be raised up in the general Upraising; even as it has come down in many traditions that none shall come back in the 'Return' save he who is possessed of pure belief or pure unbelief, but as for the remainder of mankind, these will [for the time being] be left to themselves."

It is true that here the sentence most Arabian in construction may be the literal translation of a tradition not given in the original Arabic, which must evidently run something like this:

¹ " He who shall arise," i.e. the Imam Mahdi or Messiah of the Shi'a.

لا يرجع في الرجعة إلا من له محض الإيمان أو محض الكفر¹

but the influence of Arabian syntax is constantly apparent.

Another class of Shi'a theological writings consists of polemical works directed against the Sunnfs, the Stifis, the Shaykhis, the Bdbfs and Bah&'fs, and the Christians. The Sunnfs are naturally attacked in Polemical works against—

(1) The Sunnis

all manuals of doctrine with varying degrees of violence, for from Nddir Shah downwards to Abu'l-Hasan Mİr£ ("Hajji Shaykhu'r-Rdis" an eager contemporary advocate of Islamic unity¹, no one has been able to efiect an appeasement between these two great divisions of Isladm, and a more tolerant attitude in the younger generation of Persians, so far as it exists, is due rather to a growing indifference to Isladm itself than to a religious reconciliation. Attacks on the Sufis, especially on their Pantheism (Wakdatu'l- Wujud), are also often met with in general manuals of Shi'a doctrine, but several independent denunciations of their doctrines exist, such as Aqi Muhammad 'Ali Bihbihdnfs Risdla-i-Khayrdtiyya?, which led to a violent persecution of the Stifis and the death of several of their leaders, such as Mİr Ma'sum, q

(a) The Stifis

'All and Ntir 'Ali Shdh⁸; and the Mata'inu's-

Muhammad Rafi ibn Muhammad Shafi of posed in 1221/1806⁴. The latter even has recourse of the Gospels to prove his case, quoting Christ's saying "Beware

¹ His pamphlet on the "Union of Islīm" (Ittiḥdu'l-Istḍm) was lithographed at Bombay in 1312/1894-5.

² Composed in 1211/1796-7. See the full and interesting account of the work in Rieu's Persian Catalogue, pp. 33-4.

⁸ For a full account of these events, see Malcolm's History of Persia, ed. 1815, vol. 11, pp. 417-22.

⁴ Of this I possess a good MS. dated 22 Jumdda' ii, 1222 (27 Aug. 1807).

of them which come to you in sheep's clothing (stif, wool), but within they are ravening wolves."

The Islamo-Christian controversy has also produced a considerable literature in Persian, which has been discussed by Professor Samuel Lee in his Controversial Tracts on Christianity and Mohammedanism (Cambridge, 1824). Several such works were written in the first quarter of the seventeenth century by Sayyid Ahmad ibn Zaynu'l-'Abidin al-'Alawf, one in refutation of Xavier's Aina-i-Haqq-numd ("Truth-revealing Mirror"), and another directed against the Jews. Later the proselytizing activities of Henry Martyn the missionary called forth replies from Mirza Ibrdhim and others¹.

The Shaykhi sect or school derived its origin and its name from Shaykh Ahmad ibn Zaynu'd-Din al-Ahsa'i, a native not of Persia but of Bahrayn, who died, according to the Rawddtu'l-Janndt', at the advanced age of ninety in 1243/1827-8, and was succeeded by Sayyid Kazim of Rasht, who numbered amongst his disciples both Sayyid 'Ali Muhammad the Bab, the originator of the Babf sect, and many of those who subsequently became his leading disciples, and Hajji Muhammad Karfm Khdn of Kirman, who continued and developed the Shaykhi doctrine. This doctrine, essentially a rather extreme form of the Shi'a faith, was accounted heterodox by several eminent mujtahids, such as Hajji Mulla Muhammad Taqf of Qazwfn, the uncle and father-in-law of the celebrated Babf heroine Qurratu'l-'Ayn, whose hostility to the Shaykhis and Babfs ultimately cost him his life, but earned for him from the orthodox Shi'a the title of the "Third Martyr" (Shahid-i-Thd/ithy. Some account of the

¹ See my Cat. of Pers. MSS. in the Camb. Univ. Library (1896), pp.

7-13.

² Pp. 25-6, of the Tihran lithographed edition of 1306/1888.

³ See vol. ii of my Traveller's Narrative, pp. 197-8 and 310-12.

Shaykhis and their doctrines, sufficient for the ordinary student of Persian thought, is given in Note E (pp. 234-44) at the end of the second volume of my *Traveller's Narrative*¹. Shaykh Ahmad was the author of numerous works, all, I think, in Arabic, of which the titles are given in the Rawddtu'l-Janndt (p. 25), which asserts amongst other things that he held the Sufis in great detestation, notwithstanding his own unorthodox views on the Resurrection. Naturally the pantheistic and latitudinarian opinions of these mystics are distasteful to dogmatic theologians of every kind, whether orthodox Shi'a or Sunnf, Shaykhi, Bdbf and Bahet'f, or Christian. Henry Martyn evidently felt that he had far more in common with the ordinary fanatical mulld of Shiraz than with the elusive and eclectic Sufi. The later Shaykhis and Bdbfs, though both derive from a common source, hold one another in the utmost detestation; and at least one of the doctors of theology who examined and condemned the Bib at Tabrfz towards the end of the year A.D. 1847, Mulld Muhammad Mdmaqdnf, belonged to the Shaykhi school².

The Bdbf-Bahd'f movement, of which the effects have now extended far beyond the Persian frontiers even to America, has naturally given rise to a far more extensive literature, which forms a study in itself, and which I have discussed elsewhere³. Of the Bdb's own writings the Persian Bayan and the Dala'il-i-saba ("Seven Proofs") are the most important of those composed in Persian⁴. Baha'u'lldh's Iqan ("Assurance and Baha'is.

(5) The Bibs

¹ See also A.-L.-M. Nicolas, Essai sur le Cheikhisme (Pans, 1910), pp. 72. A list of Shaykh Ahmad's writings is given.

² See Traveller's Narrative, vol. li, p. 278.

³ Traveller's Narrative, vol. 11, pp. 173-211; Materials for the Study of the Babi Religion, pp. 175-243.

⁴ French translations of both have been published by the learned and impartial A.-L.-M. Nicolas.

is the earliest reasoned apology, and was written before he advanced his claim to be "He whom God shall manifest." His later "Tablets" (Alwah), many of which are in Persian, are innumerable; amongst them the "Epistles to the Kings" (Alwdk-i-Saltdin) are the most interesting and important. There is also an abundant Azalf literature; and each dichotomous schism has given rise to a fresh crop of controversial pamphlets. Of systematic refutations of the Babf and Baha'f doctrines in Persian the most elaborate are the Ikqdaqil-Haqq ("Verification of the Truth") of Aqa Muhammad Taqi of Hamadan¹, composed about 1326/1908; and the Minkhajut-Talibin' of Hajji Husayn-qulf, an Armenian convert to Islam, lithographed at Bombay in 1320/1902. The Babis and Baha'is have developed a somewhat distinctive style of their own in Persian which possesses considerable merits. Some of Baha'u'llah's "Tablets" (Alwah) addressed to Zoroastrian enquirers are even written in pure Persian without admixture of Arabic. Their most important works, like the Kitab-i-Aqdas ("Most Holy Book"), are, however, written in Arabic. From the point of view of style, both in Persian and Arabic, an immense improvement was effected by Baha'u'llah, for the style of Mirza 'Ali Muhammad the Bab was, as Gobineau says, "terne, raide, et sans eclat," "dull, stifi, and devoid of brilliance."

2. PHILOSOPHY.

Philosophy (Hikmat, Filsafa) is defined by the Muslims as "a knowledge of the true essence of things, as they really are, so far as is possible to human capacity." It is divided into two branches, the theoretical (nazari) and the practical ('amali). The former comprises Mathematics (Riyddiyyat') Natural Science (Ilmu't-Tabi'at-Tabi'at), and Metaphysics [Ma wara'ba'd or fawq

Divisions of Philosophy.

¹ Materials, pp. 189-90.

2

Ibid.,

pp. 196-7.

af-Tabfat); the lattei Ethics (Tahdhibu'l-Akkldq), Economics (Tadbiru'l-Manzil), and Politics (Siyasatu'l-Mudun). The three best-known Persian treatises on Practical Philosophy, namely the Akhldq-i-Ndsiri, Akhldq-i-Jaldli, and *Akhldq-i-Muksini*¹, all belong to the period preceding that which we are now discussing, and I do not recollect any important Persian work on the subject which has appeared since. We may therefore confine our attention here to the first, or theoretical, branch of Philosophy, and in this section to Metaphysics, which on the one hand borders on Theology, and on the other on Science. It is generally admitted that a very close connection existed between the Shi'a and the Mu'tazila² in early 'Abbasid times, and it is well known that the latter were the most enlightened and philosophic of the theological schools of Islam, and that in particular they were the champions of Free Will against the rigid Determinism which subsequently triumphed, to the great detriment of the intellectual development of the Muhammadan world. Those sections of Shi'ite theological works which treat of the Nature and Attributes of God are, therefore, of a more philosophical character than is commonly the case in Sunni books of a similar type.

Shi'a and Mu'tazila.

Muslim Philosophy, like Muslim Science, admittedly and avowedly owes almost everything to the Greeks. Its development from the middle of the eighth century of the Christian era, when under the early 'Abbasid Caliphs the work of translating into Arabic the works of the most eminent and celebrated Greek thinkers began, down to the deadly blow inflicted on Islamic civilization by the Mongol Invasion and the destruction of Debt of Muslim philosophers to the Greeks.

¹ See my Persian Literature under Tartar Dominion, pp 442-4.

² See de Boer's Hist. of Philosophy in Islam, translated by E. R. Jones (London, 1903), pp. 33, 43, 72 and 84; and Goldziher's Vorlesungen über der Islam (Heidelberg, 1910), pp. 234 et seqq.

Baghdad and the 'Abbasid Caliphate in the middle of the thirteenth century, has been repeatedly traced by European scholars. For a broad general view, characterizing the chief exponents of the different schools of Islamic thought, Dr T J de Boer's History of Philosophy in Islam translated into English by E. R. Jones, may be recommended to the general reader. It will be observed that only one of the thinkers mentioned in that book, Ibn Khaldun (b. A.D. 1332 at Tunis, d. A.D. 1406 at Cairo), flourished after the fall of the 'Abbasid Caliphate, and he was a unique and isolated phenomenon, "without forerunners and without successors".¹

The question we have to answer here is, has Persia, which in earlier times produced so large a proportion of the so-called "Arabian Philosophers",² produced any metaphysician of note since the beginning of the sixteenth century? To answer this question one would need to combine with a competent knowledge of Arabic and Persian a grasp of the history and subject-matter not only of "Arabian" but of Greek Philosophy (and, indeed, of Philosophy in general) to which I cannot lay claim. This, indeed, constitutes the difficulty of judging the value of the scientific literature of Islam. How many of those who admire the Persian quatrains of 'Umar Khayydm can follow M. Woepcke in the appreciation of his Arabic algebraical treatises? A knowledge of Arabic does not suffice to enable us to decide whether ar-Razf or Ibn Sfni (Avicenna) was the greater physician. Much valuable work of this technical character has been done in Germany, by Dr E. Wiedemann of Erlangen (Optics, Physics, etc.), Dr Julius Hirschberg of Berlin (Ophthalmology), Dr Max Simon (Anatomy), and others, but very much remains to determining the value of later Persian philosophical systems.

Difficulty of

¹ De Boer, op laud., p. 208.

² So-called merely because they wrote in Arabic, at that time exclusively, and even now to a considerable extent, the learned language of Islam, as Latin was of Christendom.

be done, and few scholars are competent to undertake it. As regards Philosophy in Persia during the last three or four centuries, all one can say is that half a dozen thinkers have established a great reputation amongst their countrymen, but how far this reputation is deserved is a question which has not yet received a satisfactory answer. These thinkers are, in chronological order, as follows: (1) Shaykh Baha'u'd-Din al-'Amili (d. 1031/1622); (2) Mīr Damad (d. 1041/1631-2); (3) Mulla Sadra (d. 1050/1640-1); (4) Mulla Muhsin-i-Fayd (d. after 1091/1680); (5) Mulla 'Abdu'r-Razzaq al-Lahijf; and, in quite modern times, (6) Hajji Mulla Hadī of Sabzawar (d. 1295/1878).

Now Muslim philosophers are of two sorts, those whose philosophy is conditioned by and subordinated to revealed Religion, and those whose speculations are not so limited. The former are the Mutakallimīn or Ahl-i-Kalām, the Schoolmen or Dialecticians¹, the latter the Hukamā (pi. of Hakīm) or Falāsifa (pi. of Faylasuf) the Philosophers proper. Of the six persons mentioned above, Mulla Sadra certainly and Hajji Mulla Hadī possibly belong to the second class, but the four others to the first. These four, however, if less important from the point of view of Philosophy, were in other ways notable men of letters. Biographies of all of them except Mulla Hadī, who is too modern, are given in the Rawḍatu'l-Tanẓīl, or the Qisasu'l-'Ulama, from which, unless otherwise stated, the following particulars are taken.

The first five were more or less contemporary, and are, to a certain extent, interrelated. Shaykh Baha'u'd-Din and Mīr Damad both enjoyed considerable influence and stood in high favour at the court of Shah 'Abbas the Great, yet there was no jealousy between them, if we may believe the pleasing anecdote about them and the Shah related by Sir

¹ See de Boer, op. cit., pp. 42-3.

John Malcolm¹. Mulla Sadrd was the pupil of both of them⁸, while Mulla" Muhsin-i-Fayd and Mulla 'Abdu'r-Razzda al-Lahijf were both his pupils and his sons-in-law.

I. Shaykh Bahd'u'd-Din al-Amili.

Shaykh Baha'u'd-Din Muhammad ibn Husayn ibn 'Abdu's-Samad al-Harithi al-'Amili al-Hamdanf al-Jab'i was one of the numerous Shi'a doctors who came to Persia from Jabal 'Amil in Syria, whence he derived the nisba by which he is commonly Shaykh-i-Baha'i,

b. 953A546,
d 1031/1622

known, though by the Persians he is most often spoken of as "Shaykh-i-Bahd'i His father Shaykh Husayn, a disciple of Shaykh Zaynu'd-Din "the Second Martyr" {Shahid-i-Thdni), came to Persia after his master had been put to death by the Turks for his Shi'ite proclivities, bringing with him the young Baha'u'd-Din, who applied himself diligently to the study of Theology in all its branches, Mathematics and Medicine. His teachers included, besides his father, Mulla 'Abdu'lldh of Yazd, a pupil of Jalalu'd-Din-i-Dawanf, the author of the Akhldq-i-Jaldli, who was in turn a pupil of the celebrated Sayyid-i-Sharfi-i-Jurjanf. In Mathematics he studied with Mulla" 'Ali Mudhahhib ("the Gilder") and Mulla Afdal of Qa'in, while in Medicine he was the pupil of 'Ala'u'd-Din Mahmud³. In due course he attained great celebrity as a theologian and jurist, and became Sadr or S hay kku'l-Islam of Isiahan. After a while he was possessed with the desire to make the pilgrimage to Mecca, and on his homeward journey visited, in the guise of a darwish, Mesopotamia, Egypt, the Hijdz

¹ Hist. of Persia (ed. 1815), vol. 1, pp 558-9. The anecdote occurs in the Qisasu'l-'Ulama and in the Rawdatu'l-Jannat, p. 115.

² Rawdatu'l-Jannat, p. 331.

⁸ Some account of him is given in vol. 1 of the Ta'rikh-i'Alam-drd-yi'Abbdsi amongst the notices of eminent men of the reign of Shdh 'Abbas, whence some of the particulars here given concerning Shaykh-i-Bahd'f and Mir Damad are also derived and Palestine, and made the acquaintance of many learned men and eminent doctors and mystics.

Shaykh-i-Bahd'i was born at Ba'labakk in Syria on Muharram 17, 953 (March 20, 1546), and died on Shawwal 12, 1031 (August 20, 1622). His principal works are the jami-i-'Abbasi, containing legal decisions (Jafitwi); the Zubda; the Miftahu'l-Falah; the Tashrihtl-Afidk ("Anatomy of the Heavens"); the Kku' Idsattl-Hisd on Arithmetic; the KashMl ("Beggars' Bowl"), a large miscellany of stories and verses, the latter partly in Persian¹; a similar work called the MikUdt also a Persian tnathnawi poem entitled Nan u Halwa ("Bread and Sweetmeats") describing his adventures during the pilgrimage to Mecca, and another entitled Shir u Shakar ("Milk and Sugar"). Extracts from these poems, as well as from his ghazals, are given in the Majma'u'l-Fusahd (vol. ii, pp. 8-10).

His principal works.

2. Mir Ddmdd.

Mir Muhammad Baqir of Astardbad, with the pen-name of Ishrdq, commonly known as Damad ("son-in-law"), a title properly belonging to his father Sayyid Muhammad, whose wife was the daughter of the celebrated theologian Shaykh 'Ali ibn 'Abdu'l-'Ali, pursued his earlier studies at Mashhad, but spent the greater part of his life at Isiahan, where, as we have seen, he stood in high favour with Shah 'Abbas the Great, and where he was still living when the author of the Ta'rikh-i-Alam-drd-yi-Abdsi wrote in 1025/1616. He died in 1041/1631-2. Most of his writings were in Arabic, but he wrote poetry in Persian under the takhallus of Ishraq. He seems to have had a taste for Natural History as well as Philosophy, for, according to the Qisasu'l-'Ulama he made an observation hive of glass in

Mir Dimad
d. 1041/1631-2.

Observes the habits of bees.

¹ These Persian verses are omitted in the Cairo ed. of 1305/1887-8, but are contained in the Tihrdn lithographed ed. of 1321/1903-4.

سراط الرواه الكرمه عبداله المراه والمارس الطاه
 امدادى ناسح موعواه الميعن الشام للقاء العالمه
 اعلى معالى كاسحاه قال ذلك لسانه وعمره مائه
 الكرمه للى الله العلى بها الكرمه العلى كاد الله سماء
 2 رابع عشر موعواه اولم موعواه وسعده رابعه لسانه موعواه

لوان الزان واكمه لوان اوله اوله اوله

رسالة من الشيخ باقر الميرزا

Autograph of Shaykh Bahá'u'd-Dín-i-'Ámilí

Or. 4936 (Brit. Mus.), 15

face p 428

order to study the habits of bees. It is stated in the same work that after his death his pupil and son-in-law Mulla Sadra saw him in a dream and said, "My views do not differ from yours, yet I am denounced as an infidel and you are not. Why is this?" "Because," replied Mir Damad's spirit,

Mir Damad more cautious than Mulla
Sadra

"I have written on Philosophy in such wise that the theologians are unable to understand my meaning, but only the philosophers; while you write about philosophical questions in such a manner that every dominie and hedge-priest who sees your books understands what you mean and dubs you an unbeliever."

3. Mulla Sadra of Shiraz.

Sadru'd-Din Muhammad ibn Ibrahim of Shiraz, commonly known as Mulla Sadra, was the only son of an aged and otherwise childless father. On his father's death he left Shiraz and went to Isfahan, where, as we have seen, he studied with Shaykh-i-Bahd'f and Mir Damad, from both of whom he held ijazas, or authorizations to expound their works. He subsequently retired to a village near Qum, where he lived a secluded and austere life, engaged in profound meditations on Philosophy. He is said to have made the Pilgrimage to Mecca on foot seven times, and to have died at Basra on his return from his seventh journey in 1050/1640-1, leaving a son named Ibrahim who did not follow his father's doctrine but denounced and controverted it, boasting that "his belief was that of the common people." To these meagre particulars of Mulla Sadra's life, derived from the Rawddtu'l-Jannat (pp. 331-2) and the Qisasu'l-Ulamd, I can only add that it is clear from some expressions in the Preface to his Asfar that he suffered a good deal at the hands of the orthodox divines, and that Shaykh Ahmad Ahsa'i, the founder of the Shaykhi school, wrote commentaries on two of his works, the Hik-

His influence on Shaykhi and Babi theology

matu'I-Arshiyya and the Masha 'ir. Shaykh Muhammad Iqbcil is therefore probably right when he says¹ that "the Philosophy of Sadra is the source of the metaphysics of early Babiism," and that² "the origin of the philosophy of this wonderful sect must be sought in the Shi'a sect of the Shaykhis, the founder of which, Shaykh Ahmad, was an enthusiastic student of Mulla Sadra's philosophy, on which he had written several commentaries."

The two most celebrated of Mulla Sadra's works, all of which, so far as I know, are in Arabic, are the Asidr-i-Arbda, or "Four Books"⁸ and the ShawdhiduW-Rubulnyya, or "Evidences of Divinity." Both have been lithographed at Tihran, the first in two folio volumes in 1282/1865, the second, accompanied by the commentary of Hajji Mulla Hadiof Sabzawar, without indication of date or place of publication. Amongst his other works which I have not seen the Rawddtii l-Janndt (p. 331) enumerates a Commentary on the Usuhtl-Kdii, the Kitdbitl-Hiddya, notes on the metaphysical portion of Avicenna's Shifa, a Commentary on the Hikmatu'l-Islirdq (presumably that of the celebrated and unfortunate Shaykh Shihcibu'd-Din-Suhrawardi, known, on account of his execution for heresy, as al-Maqtul), the Kitdbiil-WdriddtVl-Qalbiyya, the Kasru Asndmi l-Jdhihyya, or "Breaking of the Idols of Ignorance," several commentaries on various portions of the Quran, etc.

Of Mulla Sadra's philosophical doctiines, in spite of their high reputation in Persia, I know of only two brief and necessarily superficial accounts in any European language. The Comte de Gobineau devotes several pages¹ to them, but his information was probably entirely derived orally from his Persian teachers, who were very likely but ill-informed on this matter, since he concludes his notice with the words "la vraie doctrine de Moulla-Sadra, c'est-a-dire d'Avicenne," while the Raw-ddtii l-Janndi' explicitly states that he was an Ishrdqi ("Illuminatus" or Platonist) and strongly condemned the Aristoteleans or Peripatetics (Mashsha'un), of whom Avicenna was the great representative.

¹ Development of Metaphysics in Persia (Luzac, London, 1908), p. 175.

² Ibid.? 187.

³ Gobmeau has misunderstood Asidr (which is the plural of Sifr, "a book," not of Safar, "a journey") when he writes (Rel. et Philos., 1866, p 81), "I l a e'crit de plus quatre livres de voyages " In the same way he mistranslates the title of one of the Bab's earlier works, the Ziydrat-ndtna ("Book of Visitation") as "unjournal de son peennage."

The other shorter but more serious account of Mulla Sadra's doctrine is given by Shaykh Muhammad Iqbdl, formerly a pupil of Dr McTaggart in this University of Cambridge, and now himself a notable and original thinker in India, in his excellent little book entitled Development of Metaphysics in Persia a contribution to the History of Muslim Philosophy', p. 175, but he devotes much more space (pp 175-95) to the modern Hajji Mulla Hadi of Sabzawar, whom he regards as Mulla Sadra's spiritual successor, and who, unlike his master, condescended, as we shall presently see, to expound his ideas in Persian instead of in Arabic. It may be added

Gobineau's account of Mulla Sadra'

Shavkh Muhammad Iqbals account

¹ Les Religions et les Philosophies, etc (1866), pp. 80-92.

² P. 331 The passage runs in the original.

كان... منقحاً اساسَ الاشراق بما لا مزيد عليه و مفتحاً ابواب
الفضيحة على طريقة المتاء و الرواق'

³ London, Luzac and Co, 1908 Muhammad Iqbil has set forth his own doctrines (which, as I understand them, are in the main an Oriental adaptation of Nietzsche's philosophy) in a short Persian math-nawi poem entitled Asrar-i-Khudi, lithographed at the University Press, Lahore, and translated into English with an Introduction and Notes by my friend and colleague Dr R. A. Nicholson (The Secrets of the Self London, Macmillan & Co, 1920).

that Mulla Sadra speaks with great respect of that eminent Maghribi Shaykh Muhyi'd-Din ibnu 'Arabi, whose influence, non-Persian though he was, was probably greater than that of any other thinker on the development of the extremer forms of Persian philosophical-mystical speculation.

Influence of Shaykh Muhyi'd-
Din 'ibnu'l-
'Arab!

4. Mulld Muhsin-i-Fayd of Kashan.

Muhammad ibn Murtada of Kashan, commonly called Muhsin with the poetical pen-name of Fayd, was a native of Kashan, and, as already said, the favourite pupil and son-in-law of Mulld Sadra. In the RawddtiH-Jannat (pp. 542-9) and the Qisasitl-'Ulamd much fuller notices of him are given than of his master, and, since he was not only a theologian and a philosopher but likewise a poet of some note, he is also mentioned in the Riyddu I-Arifin (pp. 225-6) and the Majma'u'l-Fusahd (ii, 25-6). His literary activity was enormous : according to the Qisasu'l- Ulamd he wrote nearly two hundred books and treatises, and was surpassed in productivity by hardly any of his contemporaries or predecessors except Mulla Muhammad Baqir-i-Majlisi. Sixty-nine of these works, of which the last, entitled *Sharku's-Sadr*¹, is autobiographical, are enumerated in the Qisas, but fuller details of them are given in the Rawddt (pp. 545-6), where the dates of composition (which range between 1029/1620 and 1090/1680) are in most cases recorded. His age at this latter date, which is also notified as the year of his death, is stated as eighty-four², so that tie must have been born about 1006/1597-8. Of one of his works, the Mafdtihii sh-Shardy, I possess

Mulld Muhsin-i-Fayd, d. about 1091/1680

His prodigious literary activity.

¹ It was written in 1065/1654-5. See Rawdatu'l-Jannat, p. 546. It is wrongly entitled Skarh-i-Suwar in the Indian lithograph of the Qisas.

² Rawdatu'l-Jannat) pp. 542 and 549.

الشرطية الواقع وتسمى المبادر الكمية فيه من ثبوت حليقة جملتها على ثبوتها وفصلها وحسب شرطية ذكرنا في الفصل
 لا يجوز بالمبادر الجبيل بين امر آخر اريد به انه صايد الحال بح لا لا يجوز بالمبادر بنسبة وبين امر اخر وان
 و صديقه بنسبة الترتيب لو وجد بين كين بين امر آخر غرض المبادر منها قطعنا على تقديم من ان الحكم بالمبادر
 يحصل الحكم مانه لو وجد كذا الوجه كذا او متيقير به وجود الحليقة ان تبدل بالواضح ان الحكم في الحكم
 منه الحكم مانه لا يحصل له الا على علم الواقع واطواره وانه اذا فرض ان احد الحليق لغو لا كمال الامر على
 حتى يغير حاله بين كين كذا الام لا اذ انما على نفس تاما على الغير اذ لو بين كين كما لا يجوز في بوطر في استعمال
 اخلف فحسب لانه لا تعرف بعد في الشرطية استحد فيها والحكم يستند في بعد ماسا لها بنسبة في
 المذكور ولا مجال للاختلاف ومنها لا مجال المذكور انما اذا هو لا يحسم الا احد المذكور ويكون على الاعراف بالمعصود
 وبعد الاعراف بعد في الشرطية فيضم اليها الى الحليق الواقع في عدم الصاكن في الواقع ونظير ان
 الا احد المذكور لا كمال في نفس الامر وانه على الغير وثيق ايضا ان كنت الشرطية لا يجوز لعقل ما كمال الواقع
 على القول المذكور اني لعقل لا يمكنه ان يحكم باستندام الحليق شر اخر من شره ممدد ومنفردة في شره ممدد
 اصلا وهو لا يخفى ولا ريب في ثبوت كين على الصواب

فكر

Autograph of Mullā Muḥsin-i-Fayd

what appears to be an autograph copy, made in 1042/1632-3, now bearing the class-mark C. 18.

When Mulla Muhsin wished to leave his home in Kashan and go to Shiraz to study under the celebrated theologian Sayyid Majid of Bahrayn, his father opposed this project, and it was finally agreed to take an augury (tafa'ul) from the Qur'dn, and from the poems ascribed to the first Imam 'Ali ibn Abf Talib. The former yielded the verse (ix, 123) " if a part of every band of them go not forth, it zs that they may diligently instruct themselves m Religion" \ the latter the following lines rendered particularly apposite by the words suhbatu Mdjidi, " the society of some noble one," which might in this case be taken as referring particularly to the above-mentioned Sayyid Majid :

تَغْرُبُ عَنِ الْأَوْطَانِ فِي طَلَبِ الْعُلَى ،
و سَائِرُ فُفَى الْأَسْفَارِ خَمْسُ فَوَائِدُ ،
تَفَرِّجُ هَمًّا وَ آخِثَسَابَ مَعْمَشَةٍ ،
و عِلْمٌ وَ آدَابٌ وَ صَحْبَةُ مَاجِدُ ،
لَأَنْ قِيلَ فِي الْأَسْفَارِ ذَلٌّ وَ مَحَنَةٌ ،
و قَطَعَ الْدِيَاثَى وَ ارْتَكَبَ الشَّدَائِدُ ،
فَمَوْتُ الْفَتَى خَيْرٌ لَهُ مِنْ قِيَامِهِ ، بِدَارِ هَوَانٍ بَيْنَ ذَلٍّ وَ حَاسِدُ ،

" Go abroad from the home-lands in search of eminence, and travel, for in travel are five advantages .

The dissipation of anxiety, the acquisition of a livelihood, knowledge, culture, and the society of some noble one (imdjtd)

And if it be said, ' In travels are humiliation and trouble, the traversing of deserts and the encountering of hardships,'

Yet the death of a brave man is better for him than his continuance in the mansion of abasement, between humiliation and an envious rival."

After these clear indications, Mulld Muhsin's father no longer opposed his desire to go to Shiraz, where he pursued his studies not only with the aforesaid Sayyid Majid, but also with Mulla Sadra. It is difficult to accept the statement of the Qzsas that this took place in 1065/1654-5, for this would make him nearly sixty years of age before he began his serious studies with Mulla Sadra or married his daughter.

Mulla Muhsin is described in the Qisas as a "pure Akhbari" (Akkbari-yi-Sirf), a Sufi, and an admirer of Shaykh Muhyi'd-Dfn ibnu'l-'Arabf. Shaykh Ahmad Ahsa'f, who, as we have seen¹, wrote commentaries on two of the books of his master Mulla Sadra, detested him, and used to call him Musi' ("the ill-doer") instead of Muhsin ("the well-doer"), and to speak of the great Shaykh as Mumitiid-Din ("the Slayer of Religion") instead of MuJiyi'd-Din ("the Quickener of Religion"). According to an absurd story in the Qzsas, Mulla Muhsin was chosen by Shah 'Abbas to confute a Christian missionary sent by the "King of the Franks" to convert the Persians. The sign offered by this missionary was that he would specify any article held in the closed hand of his opponent². Mulla Muhsin chose a rosary (tasbili) made of clay taken from the tomb of the Imam Husayn. The Christian hesitated to speak, but, when pressed, said, "It is not that I cannot say, but, according to the rule I observe, I see that in thy hand is a portion of the earth of Paradise, and I am wondering how this can have come into thy possession." "Thou speakest truly," replied Mulla Muhsin, and then informed him what he held, and bade him abandon his own faith and accept Islam, which,

Antagonism between Shaykh Ahmad Ahsa'i and Mulla Muhsin

Mulla Muhsin triumphs over a Christian missionary.

¹ Pp 429-30 supra.

² This is called khaby, and thought-reading damir. See my translation of the Chdhar Maqala, p. 64 and n. 2 ad calc, and pp. 130-1.

according to the narrator, he was constrained to do. Though extremely pious in most respects, Mulla Muhsin scandalized the orthodox by his approval and sanction of singing. His best-known Persian compilation is probably the Abwdbu'l-Jandn ("Gates of Paradise") composed in 1055/1645, on prayer and its necessity¹, but few of his numerous writings have been published or are now read, and at the present day, at any rate, his name is more familiar than his works

5. Mulld "Abdttr-Razdaq-i-Ldhiji.

The subject of this notice resembled Mulla Muhsin in being a pupil and son-in-law of Mulla Sadra and a poet, who wrote under the pen-name of Fayyad, but Mulla 'Abdu'r-Razzaq-i-Ldhiji his writings, though much fewer in number, are more read at the present day. The best known are, perhaps, the philosophical treatise in Persian entitled Gawhar-t-Murad ("the Pearl of Desire"), and His Gcnvhar~i-Murdd the Sar-mhya-i-Imdn ("Substance of Faith"), also in Persian, both of which have been lithographed. The notices of him in the Rawddtu' l-Janndt (pp. 352-3) and the Qisasii I- Ulamd are short and unsatisfactory. The latter grudgingly admits that his writings were fairly orthodox, but evidently doubts how far they express his real convictions and how far they were designed from prudential motives to disguise them, thus bearing out to some extent the opinion expressed by Gobmeau².

I have been obliged to omit any further notice than that already given³ of the somewhat elusive figure of M^{ir} Abu'l-Qasim-i-Findariski, mentioned by Gobineau⁴ as one of the three teachers of Mulla Sadra, because, apart from the brief notices of him

Mir Abu'l-Qasim-i-Findariski.

¹ Not to be confounded with a later homonymous work on Ethics.

² Op. laud., pp 91-2.

³ See pp 257-8 and 408 supra, contained in the *Riyddul-Arifiri*¹ and the Majma'u'l-Fusahd, in both of which the same poem is cited, and the passing reference in the *Dabistdn to his association with the disciples of Kaywan and adoption of sun-worship, I have been unable to discover any particulars about his life or doctrines. He appears to have been more of a qalandar than a philosopher, and probably felt ill at ease in the atmosphere of Shi'a orthodoxy which prevailed at Isiahan, and hence felt impelled to undertake the journey to India. He must, however, have subsequently returned to Persia if the statement in the Rtyddii I-'Anfin that his tomb is well known in Isiahan be correct.

⁴ Op. laud., p. 82.

Gobineau (op. laud., pp. 91-110) enumerates a number of philosophers who succeeded Mulla Sadra down to the time of his own sojourn in Persia, but most of them have little importance or originality, and we need only mention one more, who was still living when Gobineau wrote, and whom he describes as "personnage absolument incomparable."

6. Hdji Mulla Hddi of Sabzawar

It is not, however, necessary to say much about this celebrated modern thinker, since his philosophical ideas are somewhat fully discussed by Shaykh Muhammad Iqbal at the end of his *Development of Metaphysics in Persia*³, while I obtained from one of his pupils with whom I studied in Tihrdn during the winter of 1887-8 an authentic account of his life, of which I published an English translation in my *Year amongst the Persians*⁴. According to this account, partly derived from one of his sons, Hajji Mulla Hadi the son of Hajji Mahdf was born in 1212/1797-8, studied first in his native town of Sabzawar, then at Mashhad, then at Isiahan

Hajji Mulla
Hddi of Sabzawar,
b 1212/1797-8,
d 1295/1878

¹ Pp. 165-6.

² Shea and Trover's translation (London, 1843), vol. 1, pp. 140-1.

³ Pp. 175-95-

⁴ Pp. 131-4-

with Mulla 'AH Nurfi. Having made the pilgrimage to Mecca, he visited Kirman, where he married a wife, and then returned to Sabzawar, where the remainder of his life was chiefly spent until his death in 1295/1878. His best-

His works known works, written in Persian, are the Asrdru' l-Htkam ("Secrets of Philosophy") and a commentary on difficult words and passages in the Mathnawi, in Arabic he has a versified treatise (Manstlmd) on Logic; another on Philosophy; commentaries on the Morning Prayer and the Jawshan-i-Kabir; and numerous notes on the S hawdhidu' r-Rubtibzyya and other works of Mulla Sadra. He also wrote poetry under the pen-name of Asrar, and a notice of him is given in the Riyddii I-'Anfin (pp. 241-2), where he is spoken of as still living and in the sixty-third year of his age in 1278/1861-2, the date of composition. Most of his works have been published in Persia in lithographed editions.

3. THE SCIENCES—MATHEMATICAL. NATURAL AND OCCULT.

As stated above¹, Mathematics (Riyddiyydf) "the Disciplinary" and Tabi'yydt the Natural Sciences, in conjunction with Metaphysics (Aid ward or Md ba'da't-Tabi'af), constitute the subject-matter of the theoretical or speculative branch of Philosophy, of which, therefore, they form a part. It is probable that to this manner of regarding them is partly due the unfortunate tendency noticeable in most Muslim thinkers to take an a priori view of all natural phenomena instead of submitting them to direct critical observation. The so-called "Arabian," i.e. Islamic, Science was in the main inherited from the Greeks, its Golden Age was the first century of the 'Abbasid Caliphate (A.D. 750--

Evolution of "Arabian"
Science, and its connection with Philosophy

¹ Pp. 423-4 supra.

850), when so much trouble and expense was incurred by the Caliphs, especially al-Mansur, Harunu'r-Rashid and al-Ma'mun, to procure good and faithful Arabic translations of the great Greek philosophers, naturalists and physicians; and the great service it rendered to mankind was to carry on the Greek tradition of learning through the Dark Ages of Europe down to the Renaissance.

So much is generally admitted, but there remains the more difficult and still unsolved question whether the Arabs were mere transmitters of Greek learning, or whether they modified or added to it, and, in this case, whether these modifications or additions were or were not improvements on the original. This question I have endeavoured to answer in the case of medical science in my *Arabian Medicine*¹, but I was greatly hampered by insufficient acquaintance with the original Greek sources. For such investigation, whether in the Medicine, Mathematics, Physics, Astronomy or Chemistry of the Muslims, three qualifications not often combined are required in the investigator, to wit, knowledge of the science or art in question, knowledge of Arabic (and, for later writers, of Persian and even Turkish), and knowledge of Greek. In the case of the "Arabian" (i.e. Muslim) physicians the conclusion at which Immense of Rhazes (ar-Rdizi) as an observer.

What, if anything, did the Arabs add to what they inherited from the Greeks?

I arrived (already reached by Dr Max Neuburger in his monumental *Geschichte der Medizin*²) was that Rhazes (Abu Bakr Muhammad ibn Zakanyya ar-Razi, i.e. a native of Ray in Persia) was, as a physician, far superior to the more celebrated and popular Avicenna (Ibn Sina), and was, indeed, probably the greatest clinical observer who ever existed amongst the Muslims. The notes of actual cases which came under his observation, as recorded in parts of his great "Continens"

¹ Pp. viii+138, Cambridge University Press, 1921.

² Vol. 11, Part 1, pp. 168 et seqq.

{al-Hawi) have an actual and not merely a historical or literary value; and even from his methods of treatment it is possible that here and there a hint might be obtained. Avicenna was more logical, more systematic, and more philosophical, but he lacked the Hippocratic insight possessed by his great predecessor.

In my Arabian Medicine I sketched the history of the art amongst the Muslims from its beginnings in the eighth century of our era down to the twelfth, but made no attempt to follow it down to the period which we are now considering. The Decay or learning after the Mongol Invasion of the thirteenth century, as I have repeatedly and emphatically stated, dealt a death-blow to Muslim learning from which it has not yet recovered. Medical and other quasi-scientific books continued, of course, to be written, but it is doubtful if they ever approached the level attained under the early 'Abbasid Caliphs and maintained until the eleventh, and, to some extent, until the thirteenth century of our era. That they added anything which was both new and true is in the highest degree improbable, though I cannot claim to have carefully investigated the matter. A long list of these books is given by Dr Adolf Fonahn in his most useful work entitled *Zur Quellenkunde der Persischen Medizin*¹, which has pointed the way for future investigators. Of these later works the most celebrated is probably the Tuhiatu'-Mii'minin, compiled for Shah Sulaymdn the Safawf by Muhammad Mu'min-i-Husaynf in A.D. 1669. It deals chiefly with Materia Medica, and there are numerous editions and manuscripts, besides translations into Turkish and Arabic³.

What has been said about Medicine holds good also of Zoology, Botany, Chemistry, etc., and in a lesser degree of Mathematics, Astronomy and Mineralogy. Fine work has been done in some of these subjects by experts who also possessed an adequate knowledge of Arabic. How far did the Muslim scientists observe for themselves? I will only instance Woepcke in Algebra, Wiedemann in Mechanics, Hirschbeig in Ophthalmology, and, amongst younger men, Holmyard in Chemistry. All these, I think, have come to the conclusion that the standard attained by the best Muslim investigators surpassed rather than fell short of what is generally supposed. Yet it is often difficult to assure oneself that direct observation, which is the foundation of true science, has played its proper part in ascertaining the phenomena recorded. Dr Badhlu'r-Rahman, now Professor of Arabic in the Oriental College at Lahore, when he was a Research Student in this University, took as the subject of his studies the works of al-Jahiz, who, Al-Jdhi; on instincts in ants on the strength of his great book on animals, the Kitdbii l-Hayawdn, is often regarded as one of the leading naturalists of the Arabs¹. At my request this able and industrious young scholar devoted especial attention to the question whether the writings of this author afforded any proof that he had himself observed the habits of any of the animals about which he wrote. A passage was ultimately found which seemed conclusive. In speaking of instinct al-Jahiz says that when the ant stores corn for food it mutilates each grain in such a way as to prevent it from germinating. After numerous fruitless enquiries as to the truth of this statement, I finally ascertained from Mr Horace Donisthorpe, one of the chief British authorities on ants, that it was correct, and I began to hope that here at last was proof that this old Muslim scholar had himself observed a fact of Natural History apparently unknown to many modern Zoologists. Unhappily I subsequently discovered the same statement in Pliny, and I am afraid it is much more likely that it reached al-Jahiz by tradition rather than by direct observation.

¹ Leipzig, 1910, pp. v+152.

³ See Fonahn, op. laud., pp 89-91. See also B M.P.C., pp. 476-7.

¹ E.g. by Fr. Wustenfeld in his Geschichte der Arabischen Aerzte und Naturforscher (Gottmgen, 1840), pp 25-6 (No 65). Carl Brockelmann's view is correct (Gesck. d. Arab. Litt, 1, p. 152), but his criticism of Dr L. Leclerc's remarks on the subject (Hist. de la Mjdecine Arabe 1, p. 314) hardly appears justified.

In each of the "Arabian" sciences the same question arises and demands an answer which only one thoroughly versed in the scientific literature of the ancients can give. Does Ibnu'l-Baytar's great Arabic work on medicinal plants, for example, contain any information not to be found in Dioscorides? Be the answer what it may, it is doubtful

Modern European Science
in Persia.

whether the later Muslim writers on these various sciences ever surpassed, or even equalled, their predecessors. In quite recent times, especially since the foundation of the Ddru'l-Fumui, or Polytechnic College, at Tihiran early in the reign of Nasiru'd-Din Shah, numerous Persian translations or adaptations of European scientific works have been made, but these are entirely exotic, and can hardly claim to be noticed in a work on Persian Literature. A number of them are mentioned in my Press and Poetry of Modern Persia, pp 154-66, under the heading "Modernising Influences in the Persian Press other than Magazines and Journals." But of those Persians who since the middle of the nineteenth century have successfully graduated in the European schools of science, I know of none who has hitherto made a reputation for original research.

In conclusion a few words must be said about the Occult Sciences, excluding Astiology and Alchemy, which are in the East hardly to be separated from Astronomy and Chemistry. Alchemy is called in Arabic and Persian Kimiya, and the names of four other Occult Sciences, dealing with Talismans, Necromancy, and the like, are formed on the same model, Limiyd, Himiyd, Simiyd, and Rimzya, the initial letters being derived from the words Kulluhu Sirr (), "All of it is a Mystery." The book entitled Asrdr-i-Qdsimi ("Secrets of Qasim")¹ in Persian, and the Shamsul-Ma'drif ("Sun of Knowledges")² of the celebrated Shaykh al-Buni in Arabic, may be regarded as typical of this class of literature, but to the uninitiated they make but arid and unprofitable reading. Ibn Khaldun is the only Muslim writer I know of who has sought to discover a philosophical and rational basis for these so-called sciences, and his ideas have been collated with the theories of modern Psychological Research in a most masterly manner by Professor Duncan Black Macdonald in his interesting and suggestive book entitled *The Religious Attitude and Life i?i Islam. I have always kept an open mind as to the reality of the powers claimed by Occultists, and, when opportunity offered, have always gone out of my way to investigate such manifestations. Disappointment has invariably been my portion, save in two cases: a "magician" whom I met in Kirman in the summer of 1888, who, amidst much vain boasting, did accomplish one feat which baffled my comprehension⁴; and the late Shaykh Habib Ahmad, author of an astonishing work in English entitled *The Mysteries of Sound and Number, who, if nothing more, was an amazingly skilful thought-reader.

The Occult Sciences

4. HISTORY—GENERAL, SPECIAL AND LOCAL.

It must be admitted, with whatever unwillingness and regret, that in the art of historical compilation the Persians

¹ Lithographed at Bombay in 1885 and 1894.

² I possess the lithographed edition of 1318/1900, but others have appeared in India and Egypt

³ University of Chicago Press, 1909.

⁴ See my Year amongst the Persians, pp. 453-5.

⁵ London, Nichols & Co., 1903; pp. xiv + 211.

fall far short of the Arabs, who, indeed, excel in this branch of literature. The earlier Muslim annalists like Tabari, with their verbatim narratives by eye-witnesses of the events recorded transmitted orally through carefully scrutinized chains of traditionists, are not only singularly graphic but furnish us, even at this distance of time, with materials for history of which, thanks to these isnnds, it is still possible to estimate the authenticity, even if our judgement as to the strength of the respective links in the chain does not always agree with that of Muslim critics. The later Arab historians selected, condensed, and discarded these somewhat wearisome if valuable isnnds, but their narrative, as a rule, continues to be crisp, concise, graphic and convincing. The best of the earlier Persian historians, down to the thirteenth century, though lacking the charm of the Arabian chroniclers, are meritorious and trustworthy. The bad taste of their Tartar and Turkish rulers and patrons gradually brought about a deterioration both of style and substance, very noticeable between Juwaynfs Tdrikh-i-Jahdn-gushdy (completed about 658/1260) and its continuation, the Tarikh-i-Wassaf (completed in 712/1312), which, as already observed¹, exercised an enduring evil influence on subsequent historians in Persia. Of later Persian histories I have met with few equal to a history of the Caliphate by Hindush&h ibn Sanjar ibn 'Abdu'llah as-Sdhibi al-Kirdni, composed in 724/1324 for Nusratu'd-Dfn Ahmad the Atabak of Lunstan, and entitled Tajdribus-Salaf ("Experiences of Yore"). This, however, is entirely and avowedly based on the delightful Arabic history of Saflyyu'd-Dm Muhammad ibn 'Ali al-'Alawf at-Tiqtaqi, composed in 701/1302, commonly known

Superiority of the Arabs to the Persians as historians

Deplorable influence of the Ta'rifkh-u-Wassdf

A Persian version of the KitdbUl-Fakhri

as the *Kitdbu'l-Fakhri*¹, but here entitled Munyatul-Fudald fi Tawarikhi'l-Khulafa wa'l- Wuzard ("the Desire of Scholars on the History of the Caliphs and their Ministers"). That it never appealed to the debased taste which we are here deploring is sufficiently shown by the fact that not only has it never been published, but, so far as I know, it is represented only by my manuscript, G. 3 (copied in 1286/1870), and one other (dated 1304/1886-7) in the Bibhotheque Nationale in Pans².

It would be a wearisome and unprofitable task to enumerate the many Persian historical works composed during the last four centuries. Of the histories of special periods the most important have been not only described but freely quoted in the first part of this volume, notably the Safwatu s-Safd for the life of Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Din from whom the Safawf kings were descended; the monograph on Shah Isma'il described by Sir E. Denison Ross in the J.R A.S. for 1896, pp. 264-83; the Ahsaniit-Tawdrikh, completed in 985/1577-8 by Hasan-i-Rumlu; and the Tdrikh-i-'Alam-drd-yi-'Abbsi of Iskandar Munshi, composed in 1025/1616. There are other monographs on the later Safawf period, such as the Fawd'id-i-Safawiyya (1211/1796—7) and the Tadhkira-i-Al-i-Dawud (1218/1803-4), which I would fain have consulted had they been accessible to me. For the post-Safawi period we have several excellent European accounts which render us less dependent on the native historians, some of whose works moreover (eg. the Tctrikh-

Some notable later Persian histories

¹ Originally edited by Ahlwardt from the Pans MS. 895 (now 2441) and published at Gotha in 1860. A revised text was published by H. Derenbourg at Pans in 1895, and there are at least two cheap and good Egyptian editions. A French translation by Emil Amar has been published by the Socidtd des Etudes Marocames (Pans, 1910).

² See Blochet's Cat. des Mscr. Persans etc. (Pans, 1905), vol. 1, p. 251 (Schefer 237 = Suppl. Pers. 1552).

*i-Zandiyya*¹ and the Mujmalu't-TaWikh^Bctd-Nddiriyya?) have been published in Europe, while others, such as the Durra-i-Nddiri of Mīrza Mahdī Khan of Astarabad, are easily accessible in Oriental lithographed editions. These monographs contain valuable material and are indispensable to the student of this period, but they are generally badly arranged and dully written, and further marred by the florid and verbose style of which we have just been complaining.

For the general histories of our present period, from Khwandamir's Habtbu's-Siyar (929/1523) at the beginning to Rida-qulf Khan's Supplement to the Raw-datits-Safd and Lisanu'l-Mulk's Ndsikhiit-Tawdrtkh at the end, with the very rare Khuld-i-Barin (1071/1660-1) in the middle, there is even less to be said, since, though for events contemporary with their authors they have the same value as the monographs just mentioned, for the earlier periods they are not even good or judicious abstracts of the carelessly selected authorities from whom they derive their information. They are, moreover, histories not of the Persian people but of the kings, princes and nobles who tyrannized over them and contended with one another for the spoils; wearisome records of bloodshed, violence and rapine from which it is hard to derive any general concepts of value³. Only by diligent and patient study can we extract from them facts capable of throwing any real light on the religious, political and social problems which a historian like Ibn Khaldun would have handled in so masterly a manner.

There are, however, hopeful signs of improvement in

¹ Ed. Ernst Beer, Leyden, 1888.

² Ed. Oskar Mann, Leyden, 1891.

³ Compare Mr Vincent Smith's judicious remarks on this subject in his monograph on Akbar, pp. 386-7.

recent times. Poor Mīrzd Janf of Kashan, though a merchant without much literary training, wrote his *Nuqtat-ul-Kadī*¹ on the history of the Bībī sect, of which in 1852 he was one of the proto-martyrs, with violence and passion indeed, but with knowledge, in plain and simple language without that florid rhetoric which we find so intolerable; while the unfinished "History of the Awakening of the Persians" (Tarikh-i-Bidari-yi-Iraniyan) of the Nazim-ul-Istem of Kirman², with its ample documentation and endeavour to estimate personal characteristics and influence on political events, seems to me to stand on an altogether higher level than any preceding Persian historical work composed during the last six or seven centuries.

Signs of improvement in modern times.

5. BIOGRAPHY, AUTOBIOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL.

Muslim writers have always evinced a great partiality for biography, which* may be general, dealing with the lives of eminent men of all sorts, like Ibn Khallikan's Wafaydu'l-A'ydn ("Obituaries of Notable Men") and the Rawddi-i-Janndt, of which I have made such extensive use in the latter part of this volume, the former composed in the thirteenth, the latter in the late nineteenth century, and both in Arabic; and the ambitious but unfinished modern Persian Ndma-i-Ddnishwardn ("Book of Learned Men") compiled by a committee

Biography popular with the Muslims.

¹ Published in 1910 as vol. xv of the "E. J. W. Gibb Memorial" Series.

² This work was published in lithographed fasciculi, and, so far as it has reached me, comprises the Introduction (Mugaddama) of 273 pp; vol 1, completed on the 20th of Dhu'l-Qa'da, 1328 (Nov. 23, 1910), which carries the narrative down to what is called the Hijrat-i-Sughrd (December, 1905), and comprises 256 pp, and vol 11, completed at the end of Safar, 1330 (Feb. 18, 1912), comprising 240 pp. Whether there is any likelihood of the work being completed I do not know.

of some half a dozen scholars, of which the first volume was lithographed at Tihiran in 1296/1879 and the second in 1312/1904-5¹. More often such works treat of the biographies of some particular class of men, such as Ministers, Physicians, Poets or Theologians; or they follow a geographical or a chronological arrangement, merging on the one hand into geography and on the other into history. Khwandamir's Dastturu'l- Wnzard ("Models for Ministers")², composed, according to the chronogram implicit in the title, in 915/1509-10, affords us a Persian example of the first type falling at the beginning of the period reviewed in this volume. For the Physicians and Philosophers no Persian work approaches the level of al-Qift's *Tcirikhul-Hikam and Ibn Abi Usaybi's Uyynu'l-Anbd fi Tabaqdti'l-Atibba, both composed in the thirteenth century of our era, a period so rich in Arabic biographical works. Biographies of poets, on the other hand, abound in Persian, especially in the later period, since Shah Isma'i's son Sam Mirza set the fashion with his Tuhia-i-Sdmi (a continuation of Dawlatshah's *'Memoirs of the Poets') compiled in 957/1550. Eminent representatives of the Shi'a sect, both Arabs and Persians of every category from kings to poets, form the subject-matter of the very useful Majdlisu'l-Mti'mtnin ("Assemblies of Believers"), the author of which, Sayyid Nuru'llah of Shushtar, was flogged to death in 1019/1610-n by order of Jahangir at the instigation of the Sunnis, and who is therefore called by his fellow-believers the "Third Martyr" {Siiahid-i-ThdhtJiy.

¹ See my Press and Poetry in Modern Persia, pp. 165-6.

² Compare Rieu (B.M.P.C.) p. 335. I have a good modern MS professedly collated with the original in 1268/1851-2, now marked j. 11.

³ Edited by Professor Julius Lippert (Leipzig, 1903).

⁴ Printed in Cairo in two volumes in 1299/1882.

⁶ See Rieu (B.M.P.C.), pp. 337-8.

Of the older geographico-biographical works the Athdru'l-Bildd ("Monuments of the Lands") of Zakariyya ibn Muhammad ibn Mahmud al-Qazwini¹, and the Persian Haft Jqlim ("Seven Climes"), composed in 1028/1619 by Amfn Ahmad-i-Razi, are typical specimens². Monographs on different provinces or cities of Persia are also fairly common, and generally include notices of the more eminent natives of the region discussed. Of modern biographical works produced in Persia I have made extensive use, especially in the chapter on the Theologians, of the Arabic Rawddtii l-Janndt ft Ahwdtil-Ulamd was-Sdddt ("Gardens of Paradise, on the circumstances of Men of Learning and Leading"). This comprehensive work, which deserves to be better known, contains some 742 notices of eminent Muslim scholars, saints and poets, ancient and modern, and was compiled by Muhammad Baqir ibn Hajji Amir Zaynu'l-'Abidin al-Musawi of Khwansar in the latter half of the nineteenth century. A good lithographed edition (except that, as usual, it has no Index) appeared at Tihiran in 1306/1888. The notices are arranged in alphabetical order, not very strictly observed, under personal names, such as Ahmad, 'Ali, Muhammad, etc., which, of course, are seldom the names by which those who bear them are commonly known. Thus the Muhammads, who fill the greater part of the fourth and last volume and comprise a hundred and forty-three articles, include the great Shi'a theologians generally referred to as al-Kulayni, Ibn Babawayhi and

¹ Edited in the original Arabic by F. Wustenfeld (Gottingen, 1848), and followed in the succeeding year by the same author's "Wonders of Creation" (Aja'ibu'l-Makhliiqdt).

² In the Haft Iqlim the biographical element preponderates. Unfortunately it remains unpublished, though a critical edition was begun by Mawlawi 'Abdu'l-Muqtadir, of which, so far as I know, only the first fasciculus (pp x+ \ t) has been printed at Calcutta in 1918.

Shaykh-i-Muffd ; the historians Tabarf and Shahristanf; the scientists Rdzi and Bfrunf; the thinkers Fdrabf, Ghazalf and Muhyi'd-Din ibnu'l-'Arabf; and the Persian poets Sana'i, Farfdu'd-Din 'Attar and Jalalu'd-Din Rumf, nor is any subordinate plan, chronological or other, discernible within these sections, so that the owner of the book who wishes to consult it regularly is compelled to make his own Index or Table of Contents.

The other book which I have constantly consulted as to the lives of the theologians is the Persian Qisasii'l- Ulama (" Stories of the Doctors ") of Muhammad ibn Sulayman of Tanakabun, who wrote it in 1290/1873¹. It contains about a hundred and fifty biographies of Shi'a divines, and is more readable, if less accurate, than the work previously mentioned. Another useful Persian book on the same subject is the Nujutti's-Samd, and other biographies of Theologians Nujumi's-Samd ("Stars of Heaven") composed by Mirza Muhammad 'All in 1286/1869-70², dealing with the Shi'a doctors of the eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth centuries of the Jijra (seventeenth, eighteenth and nineteenth of the Christian era). There exist also two special monographs in Arabic on the Shi'a divines of Bahrayn and Jabal 'Amil, the Lt? hi atti I-Bahrayn (" Pearl of Bahrayn ") of Shaykh Yusuf ibn Ahmad al-Bahnini, who flourished in the eighteenth century, and the Amalu'l-Amil fi 'UlamdH Jabal'Amzl (" the Hoper's Hope, on the Doctors of Mount 'Amil"), by Muhammad ibn Hasan ibn 'All... al-Hurr al-'Amilf, who belongs to the previous century.

Mention must also be made of another modern biographical work of a somewhat special character, which, though the work of a Persian, is written in Turkish. This is the Khatt u Khatttdtn ("Writing and Caligraphists Writers")¹, a history of the art of Calligraphy and its votaries by the learned Mirza Habfb of Isiahan, who spent the latter period of his life in Constantinople, where he was a member of the Anjuman-i-Ma'drif, or Turkish Academy.

¹ I possess two lithographed editions, one, the second Tihiran edition, published in 1304/1886; the other, apparently at Lucknow, in 1306/1888-9

² Lithographed at Lucknow in 1303/1885-6.

These are but a selection of the more useful or less known biographical works, of which many more will be found described in Rieu's, Ethels, and other Autobiographies. catalogues of Persian manuscripts. Of autobiographies the most notable is that of Shaykh 'AH Hazin, which contains one of the few first-hand Persian accounts of the Afghan Invasion and fall of Isiahan in A.D. 1722. Travels are a special form of autobiography, in which His late Majesty Nasiru'd-Dfn Shah indulged freely.

An account of the mission of Farrukh Khan Amfnu'l-Mulk to London and Paris at the close of the Anglo-Persian War in 1857-8 was written by one of his staff, Mirza Husayn ibn 'Abdu'llah, but has never been published². It concludes with a description of the French Departments of State and Public Institutions. More valuable and varied in its contents is the

The Bustdnu's-Siydhat Bustdnu s-Siydhat ("Garden of Travel") of Hajji Zaynu'l-'Abidin of Shirwan³, who wrote it in 1247/1831-2. In a brief autobiography under the heading Shamakhi he tells us that he was born in mid-

¹ A very nicely printed edition of this book was published at Constantinople in 1305/1887-8.

² My MS. K. 7, copied in 1276/1860 for Prince Bahman Mirza" Baha 'u'd-Dawla, came to me amongst the Schindler MSS. Concerning Farrukh Khan's mission, see R. G. Watson's History of Persia 1800-1858, pp. 456 et seq

³ Lithographed at Tihran in 1310/1892-3. See Rieu (B.M.P.S) pp 99-101, Nos. 139 and 140, and B. Dorn in Melanges et Extraits, vol. 111, pp. 50-59.

Sha'bdn, 1194 (August 15, 1780), and was taken to Karbala, where he thenceforth made his home, when only five years old. He travelled extensively in 'Iraq, Gilan, the Caucasus, Adharbdyjan, Khurasan, Afghanistan, India, Kashmir, Badakhshan, Turkistan, Transoxiana, the Persian Gulf, Yaman, the Hijaz, Egypt, Syria, Turkey in Asia and Armenia, and in Persia also visited Tihiran, Hamadan, Isiahian, Shiraz and Kirman. He was a Shi'ite and a danvish of the Order of Shah NYmatu'llah, and in this double capacity made the acquaintance and enjoyed the friendship of many eminent doctors ('u/amd) and "gnostics" (^urafd). The author, a man of intelligence and a keen observer, does not give a continuous narrative of his travels, but arranges his materials under the following heads

Chapter I. Account of the Prophet, his daughter Fatima, and the Twelve Imams

Chapter II Account of certain doctors, gnostics, philosophers, poets and learned men

Chapter III. On sundry sects and doctrines.

Chapter IV. Geographical account of towns and villages visited by the author in Persia, Turkistan, Afghanistan, India, parts of Europe and China, Turkey, Syria and Egypt, the names of these places being arranged alphabetically.

Promenade (Sayr) Prolegomena on the arrangement of this Garden, and on certain matters connected therewith.

Rose-bed (Gulshari). Countries and persons to describe which is the ultimate object of the book, arranged alphabetically in twenty-eight sections, corresponding with the letters of the Arabic alphabet.

Spring (Bahdr), containing four Rose-bowers (Gulzdr):

- (I) On the interpretation of dreams ,
- (II) Names of certain halting-places of the author on his travels;
- (iii) Various anecdotes;
- (iv) Conclusion.

The book contains a great deal of miscellaneous biographical and geographical information, which, owing to the alphabetical arrangement generally observed, and the very full table of contents prefixed, is fairly accessible to the reader. The author was full of curiosity, and, though unable to visit Europe, lost no opportunity of cultivating the society of European travellers and acquainting himself with the peculiarities of their countries by hearsay. Under the article Firang (pp. 385-7) he discusses the general characteristics of the chief European nations, amongst whom he puts the French first, the Austrians second, and the English third; and he gives a long account of his conversations with an Englishman whom he calls "Mr Wiklis" ()¹ and with whom he became acquainted at 'Azimabad. He also cultivated the society of the Austrian ambassador at Constantinople, who invited him to visit his country, "but," he concludes, "since there was no great spiritual advantage to be gained by travelling in that country, I declined." More valuable is his account of the various religions and sects of Asia, in which he treats, amongst other matters, of the Zoroastrians, Mazdakites, Jews, Christians, Hindus, Suffis and Ghidat (extreme Shi'a).

It would be impossible to notice here the many excellent books of reference, historical, biographical and geographical, which have been produced in Persia since the middle of the nineteenth century. Many of them, it is true, are for the most part compiled and condensed from older works, both Arabic and Persian, but some contain valuable new matter, not to be found elsewhere. Something must, however, be said as to certain peculiarities connected with this later literature and with the world of books in modern Persia.

European students of Persian are, as a rule, unless they have lived in that country, accustomed to think in terms of manuscripts, and to turn to Dr Rieu's admirable catalogues of the British Museum MSS. for information as to literary history. But since the introduction into Persia of printing and lithography, especially since about 1880, the importance of the manuscript literature has steadily diminished, the more important books written being either transferred to stone or set up in type from the original copy. This printed and lithographed literature has not hitherto received nearly so much attention as the older manuscript literature, and it is often impossible to obtain ready and trustworthy information as to the authors and contents of these modern books. The recent publication of Mr Edwards's *Catalogue of the Persian printed books in the British Museum*¹ marks a great step in advance of anything previously accomplished, but the notices are necessarily very brief, and contain, as a rule, no particulars about the authors and only the most general indication of the character of their works. What is needed is a catalogue raisonné of Persian books composed during the last century and lithographed or printed in Persia, for it is much easier, for reasons which will be stated immediately, to ascertain what has been published in Persian in Turkey, Egypt and India.

¹ Perhaps a corruption of Wilkms (*)

The fact is that the Persian book trade is in the most chaotic condition. There are no publishers or booksellers of substance, and no book-catalogues are issued. Most books have no fixed price or place of sale; many have no pagination; hardly any have indexes or tables of contents. Often books comprising several volumes change their size and shape, their plan, and even their nature, as they proceed, while the author not unfrequently changes his title. Let us take as an illustration a few of the numerous works of reference published under the name of Mirza Muhammad Hasan Khan, who successively bore the titles of Sanf'u'd-

¹ London, 1922. 968 columns. The works are arranged under their authors, but there is a General Index of Titles and a Subject Index.

Dawla, Mu'tamanu's-Sultarijand Ltimadu'd-Dawla, and was the son of Hajji 'Ali Khan of Maragha, originally entitled Hajibu'd-Dawla and later Ttimadu's-Saltana. Now first of all it is very doubtful whether these books were really written by Sani'u'd-Dawla at all; at any rate it is commonly asserted that he coerced various poor scholars to write them, and ascribed the authorship to himself¹, proceedings of which the latter must be regarded as wholly reprehensible, whatever may be said in extenuation of the former. In 1293/1876 he published the first volume of the Mirdtu'l-Bulddu ("Mirror of the Lands"), a geographical dictionary of Persian towns and villages, largely based on Yaqut's well-known Arabic Mu'jamii l-Bulddn, containing the first four letters of the alphabet (I to O). Of this volume, however, there appear to have been two editions, the first ending with the notice of Tabriz and containing 388 pages, the second, published a year later (1294/1877), extending to Tihran, and containing 606 pages. Having reached Tihran, however, the author, growing tired, apparently, of geography, decided to continue his work as a history of the reigning king Nasiru'd-Dfn Shah, and to add at the end of each remaining volume a Calendar and Court Directory for the current year. Vol. li, therefore, comprises the first fifteen years of the Shah's reign (298 pp) and the Calendar (45 pp.) for the year of publication (1295/1878). Vol. iii continues on the same lines, and contains the years xvi-xxxii of the current reign (264 pp.) and the Calendar (50 pp.). At this point, however, the author seems to have remembered his original plan, and in vol. iv he continues the geographical dictionary with the next two letters of the alphabet (), at which point he reverts to history, and gives an account of the events of the year of publication (1296/1879), followed by the annual Calendar. Moreover, in order to celebrate this reconciliation of geography and history, the size of this fourth volume is suddenly enlarged from 10½ x 6¾ inches to 13½ x 8¼ inches.

¹ See my Press and Poetry of Modern Persia, pp. 156 and 164-6.

By this time the author appears to have grown weary of the "Mirror of the Lands," for after a year's rest he began the publication of a new book entitled Muntazaʔn-i-Ndsir{oi which also three volumes appeared in the years 1298-1300/1881-3. Of these three volumes I possess only the first and the third. The first contains an outline of Islamic history from A.H. 1-656 (A.D. 622-1258), that is, of the history of the Caliphate (pp. 3-239), followed by an account of the chief events of the solar year beginning in March, 1880, both in Persia and Europe (pp. 239-57), and the usual Calendar and Court Directory (42 pp.). The third volume contains a history of the reigning Qajar dynasty from 1194/1779 to 1300/1882 (pp. 32-387), followed again by the Calendar for the last mentioned year.

Next year the author began the publication of a new work in three volumes entitled Mcttlcf risk-Shams ("the Dawning-place of the Sun"). This opens with a perfunctory apology for the incomplete condition in which the "Mirror of the Lands" was left. However, says he, since the next two letters of the alphabet are hd («-) and khd (rf-), and since Khurasan is the most important province beginning with the latter, and since His Majesty Nasiru'd-Din Shah, whose faithiul servant he is, and to whom this and his other works are dedicated, had recently made the journey thither in order to visit the holy shrine of the Imam 'Ali Rida at Mashhad, he has decided to devote this book to an account of that province, which, since it lies to the East, is hinted at in the title. In the first volume (published in 1301/1884) he accordingly describes the route to Mashhad by way of Damd-wand, Ffruzkuh, Bistam, Bujnurd and Quchan, giving a full account of each of these places and the intervening stations.

Jlfatfa'u's/i-
SAams, A H
1:301-3 (A D.
1884-6)

The second volume (published in 1302/1885) contains a detailed description of Mashhad, its monuments, its history from 428/1036 to 1302/1885, the most notable men to whom it has given birth, a monograph on the eighth Imam 'Ali Rida, and in conclusion (pp. 469-500) a valuable list of the books contained in the Mosque library. In the midst of all this topographical matter is inserted (pp. 165-216) the text of Shah Tahmasp's diary, of which such free use was made in a previous chapter¹. The third volume (published in 1303/1886) contains an account of the Shah's return journey by the ordinary Pilgrim route through Nishapur, Sabzawar, Shahrud, Damghan and Samnan, with full descriptions of these and the intervening stations, and biographical notices of eminent men connected with each. A Sdl-ndma, or Calendar and Court Directory for the current year, completes each volume, and it is only fair to add that the price of each is stated on the last page as twelve grdus, at that time about seven shillings.

Henceforward most of Muhammad Hasan Khan's numerous works included a Sdl-ndma, or "Year Book" for the current year, placed at the end of each volume and having a separate pagination. His biographies of eminent Muslim women, entitled Khayrdt^{UK} Hisan^{ut} published in three volumes in the years 1304-7/1887-90, lacks this addition, which is, however, found in the Kitdbu'l-Mcidthir zvdI-Athdr (published in 1306/1888-9), on the Memorabilia of forty years of the reign of Nasiru'd-Dfn Shah, an invaluable book of reference for students of the history, biography and evolution of modern Persia down to the date of publication. The plan of a geographical dictionary was taken up by another writer, Muhammad Taqi Khan called Hakim, who in 1305/1887-8 published, under the title of Ganj-i-Danish ("the Treasure of Learning"), a com-

Other works by the same author

The Ganj-t-Ddnsh of "Hakim."

¹ See pp. 84 et seqq. supra.

plete Encyclopaedia of Persian place-names comprising 574 large pages. One welcome feature of this book is that the author prefixes a long list of the authorities and books of which he made use in his compilation. This includes a number of European (including ancient Greek) works.

These Persian lithographed books, notwithstanding their shortcomings, are, as a rule, pleasant to handle, well written, well bound, and printed on good paper. Some of them, like the Khatt 11 Khatttdtn ("Calligraphy and Calligraphists") of Mirza-yi-Sanglakh, and the excellent edition of the Mathnawi with Concordance of Verses (Kashiit l-Abydf) associated with the name of 'Ala'u'd-Dawla, are really beautiful books, while almost all are far superior to the Indian lithographs. They are, however, hard to obtain in Europe, and indeed anywhere outside Tihiran, Tabriz and perhaps Isiahan. Even the British Museum collection is very far from complete, while my own collection, originally formed by purchase in Persia¹, owes much to the fact that I was able to add to it a number of volumes from two very notable Persian libraries, those of the late M. Charles Schefer and of the late Sir A. Houtum-Schindler. As has been already said, few greater services could be rendered to Persian scholarship than the proper cataloguing and describing of these lithographs, and the devising of means to place them on the European book-market. Since lithography can be carried on with simple apparatus and without any great technical skill or outlay of money, it is often practised by comparatively poor scholars and bibliophiles, who print very small editions which are soon exhausted, so that many books of this class rank rather with manuscripts than with printed books in rarity and desirability².

¹ For a list of the books I bought in Persia in the autumn of 1888, see my Year atnongst the Persians, pp. 554-7

^a Compare p. 551 of the book mentioned in the preceding footnote.

CHAPTER X.

THE MOST MODERN DEVELOPMENTS (AD 1850 ONWARDS).

I have endeavoured to show that under the Qajar Dynasty, especially since »the* middle of the nineteenth century, the ole forms of literatuje, both prose and verse, took ori a fresh Igase. of life, and, so far from deteriorating, rose to a higher level tMn they had hitherto "reached during the four centuries (roughly speaking A.D. 1500-1900) with which we are dealing in this volume. We must now consider three or four quite recent developments due in the first instance to what Mirzd Muhammad 'All Khan "Tarbiyat," the real author of my Press and Poetry in Modern Persia (pp. 154-66), calls "MpHprniyincr |nfliif*nf.p<s \r\ thi Persian Press other than Magazines and Journals." Amongst these he assigns an important place "to the various scientific text-books compiled by, or under the supervision of, the numerous Europeans appointed as teachers in the Ddrul-Ftmi'in and the Military and Political Colleges in Tihran from A.D. 1851 onwards, and the Persian translations of European (especially French) books of a more general character, such as some of Moliere's plays and Jules Verne's novels, which resulted from an increased interest in Europe and knowledge of European languages. Of such books, and of others originally written in Persian in this atmosphere, he gives a list containing one hundred and sixty-two entries, which should be consulted by those who are interested in this matter. The Revolution of A.D. 1906, with the remarkable development of journalism which it brought about, and the increase of facilities for printing resulting from this, gave a fresh

Modernizing
mfyueaces

The DdruH-Funun

impulse to this movement, which, checked by the difficulties and miseries imposed on Persia by the Great War, seems now again to be gathering fresh impetus. What we have to say falls under three heads, the Drama, Fjr.tinn and the Press, of which the first two need not detain us long.

The Drama.

The only indigenous form of drama is that connected with the Muharram mournings, the so-called "Passion Plays" discussed in a previous chapter¹, and even in their case it is not certain that they owe nothing to European influence. Three at least of Moliere's plays {Le Midecin malgre lui, Le Misanthrope> and another entitled TChe Ass, which I think must be intended for L'Etourdt) have appeared in Persian translations, but are seldom met with, and seem never to have attained any great popularity. I possess only Le Misanthrope, printed at Constantinople in the Taswiru7-Affcdr Press in 1286/1869-70 The title is rendered as Guzdrish-i-Mardum-guriz ("the Adventure of him who fled from mankind"), the characters are Persianized, and the text is in verse and follows the original very closely, though occasionally Persian idioms or proverbs are substituted for French. Here, for instance, is the rendering—in this case a paraphrase—of the "Vieille chanson" in Act I, Scene 2 :

The Drama

Translations of Mohere

" Si le roi m'avait donnd
Pans, sa grand' ville,
Et qu'il me fallut quitter
L'amour de ma mie,
Je dirais au ror Henri
' Reprenez votre Paris,
J'aime mieux ma mie, o gail J'aime mieux ma mie !"

گر بیک موی تَرکِ شیرازی،
 بدهد پادشه بمن شیراز،
 گویم ای پادشاه گرچه بُود،
 شهرِ شیراز شهرِ بی انباز،
 تَرکِ شیراز کافی است مرا،
 شهرِ شیراز خویش بستان باز،

The following Persian version of Act II, Scene 7, if compared with the original, will give a fair idea of the translator's method. The characters are MiVnis (Alceste), Fatina (Cclimene), Layld (Eliante), Ndsih (Acaste), NaHm Beg (Philinte) and Farrdsh (un garde de la Marechaussde):

مؤنس (به پیشِ فرّاش میروود) ... چه هست فرمایش؟
 بیما به بینم!
 فرّاش دارم دو حرف با سرکار،
 مؤنس توان دو حرفِ خودت را کنی بلند اظهار،
 فرّاش رتیبِ دیوان آن را که بنده‌ام فرّاش،
 مرا بدست بدادست حکم حاضر باش،
 بتو...
 مؤنس بکس؟ بمن؟
 فرّاش آری بتو،
 مؤنس برای چه کار،
 فرّاش بحرفِ مفت (امیدی) و حضرتِ سرکار،
 فتینه بناصح: چسان؟
 ناصح امیدی و او گشته اند دست و بغل،
 بچند شعر که نگذاشته است وقع و محل،
 کنون ز پیش بخواهند بست واره کار،

مؤنس من و مداهنه هرگز نمیکنم اقرار
 ناصح و ليک حکم چنين رفته هين بجنب از جا
 مؤنس میان ما چه بخوانند داد صلح و صفا
 بحکمهای بزرگان مگر بود تمسيق
 که شعرهای بد مردمان کنی تصديق
 از آنچه گفته ام انکار نيست زان مرجو
 بد است هرچه بخواهی

ناصرح و ليک مضمون نو
 مؤنس نمیتوان گذرم شعرها پر و پوج است
 ناصح قبول رای تو خواهند و جای خواهش هست
 برو!

مؤنس میروم اما نمیتوان ابد
 ز رای خویش بکردم

ناصرح برو تو خود بنما
 مؤنس مگر بحکم شهی خاص کردد و منسوب
 که شعرهای ستیزیده یافت باید خوب
 و گرنه فاش بگویم که شعرهاش بدند
 ببايد اينکه چنين شاعران بدار کشند
 (به نعمان بگ و نعيم بگ همين که دید میخندند)
 حقیقه که چنين سخره هم نبود گمان
 که بوده باشم و هستم بکان!

ناصرح روان شو هان
 فتينه کجا شمارا بايد

مؤنس روم ولی در دم
 بیایم اینجا تا کش مکش برم از هم

No indication of the translator's identity appears on the title-page of my edition, nor is there any prefatory matter. Curiously enough, in the very same year in which this Persian version of Le Misanthrope was published (1286/1869-70) Ahmed Vefi'q (Ahmad Waffq) Pasha printed his Turkish translations of George Dandin, Le Midecin malgre lui and Le Mariage Force while Tartnfe appeared in Turkish somewhat later².

In 1291/1874 there was lithographed in Tihiran a volume containing seven Persian plays with an Introduction on the educational value of the stage by J Mirza Jafar Qaraja-daghi. These plays were originally written in Adharbayjanf Turkish by MIRza Fath-'Ali Darbandi, and were published in Tiflis about A.D. 1861. Five of them have been republished in Europe, with glossaries, notes and in some cases translations. These are (1) the Wazir of Lankurdn, text, translation, vocabulary and notes, by W. H. D. Haggard and G. le Strange (London, 1882), (2) Trots Comedies traduites du dialecte Turc Azeri en Persan et pub hies... avec tin gloss a ire et des notes par C. Barbier de Meynard et S. Guyard (Pans, 1886); (3) Monsieur Jourdan, with translation, notes, etc. edited by A. Wahrmund (Vienna and Leipzig, 1889). The three comedies contained in No. 2 are the "Thief-catching Bear" (Khirs-i-quldur-bdsdn), "the Advocates" (IVukald-yi-Murdfa'a), and "the Alchemist" (Mulld lbrdhim KhalU-i-Kimiyyd-gar). The two remaining plays, hitherto unpublished in Europe, are "the Miser" (JMard-i-Kkasis) and "Yusuf Shah the Saddler"³.

¹ E. J. W. Gibb's History of Ottoman Poetry, vol. v, p. 14.

² Ibid, p. 59 and n. 1 ad calc.

³ "The Alchemist" was translated by G. le Strange in the J R A S. for 1886 (pp. 103-26); "Yusuf Shah" in the same Journal for 1895 (pp. 537-69) by Colonel Sir E. Ross; and the text of the same was published in 1889 at Madras by E. Sell. See E. Edwards's Catalogue of the Persian printed books in the British Museum, 1922, col. 207-8.

Three more plays, written at a date unknown to me, by the late Prince Malkom Khan, formerly Persian Minister in London, were partly published as zfeuilleton (Three plays by Prince Malkom Khan) (pd-waraq) in the Tabriz newspaper Ittihdd ("Union") in 1326/1908. A complete edition, from a copy in the library of Dr F. Rosen, the well-known scholarly German diplomatist, was published in 1340/1921-2 by the "Kaviani" Press in Berlin. These plays are (1) the "Adventures of Ashraf Khan, Governor of 'Arabistan, during his sojourn in Tihiran in 1232/1817"; (2) the Methods of Government of Zaman Khan of Burujird," placed in the year 1236/1820-1, and (3) "Shah-quli Mirza goes to Karbala and spends some days at Kirmanshah with the Governor Shah Murad Mirza."

Finally in 1326/1908 there appeared at Tihiran a bi-weekly newspaper called "the Theatre" (Tiydtr) which published plays satirizing the autocratic regime (The newspaper Tiyatr) I possess only a few numbers, containing part of a play entitled "Shaykh 'All Mirza, Governor of Malayir and Tuysirkan, and his marriage with the daughter of the King of the Fairies."

These are all the Persian plays I have met with¹. All are comedies, and all are satires on the administrative or social conditions of Persia. In the "Wazir of Lankuran" a rather weak and common-place love-story is combined with the satire, but generally speaking this element is lacking, and the object of the writer is simply to arouse dislike and contempt for the old-fashioned methods of government. In other words, these productions, like the "Travels of Ibráhím Beg," of which we shall shortly have to speak, are primarily political pamphlets rather than plays. Hardly one of them has ever been acted on the stage, and none has produced an effect comparable to Kemal Bey's Turkish play *Watan, yakhod Silistra*¹. In short the drama has not succeeded in establishing itself in Persia even to the extent which it has done in Turkey.

¹ Since this was written I have come across a little comedy entitled "Ja'far Khán comes from Europe" (جعفر خان از فرنگ آمده) by Hasan Muqaddam, printed at Tihiran and actually performed there about two years ago.

The Novel.

Of stories after the style of the "Arabian Nights" or the more popular and indigenous "Husayn the Kurd" there is in Persia no end, but of the novel properly so called there is even less to be said than of the drama. Two rather ambitious attempts in this direction have recently come under my notice, and it is characteristic of recent tendencies to glorify Zoroastrian Persia that both of them deal with pre-Islamic times, the one with Cyrus, the other with Qubdd and his son and successor Anusharwan (Nushirwcin) and the heresiarch Mazdak.

The former (or rather the first volume of it, which, to judge by the colophon, was intended to be followed by two more volumes) was completed in 1334/1916, and printed at Hamaddn in 1337/1919. It is entitled "Love and Lordship" (Ishq u Saltanat), and was written by a certain Shaykh Musd, Director of the "Nusrat" Government College at Hamaddn, who was good enough to send me a copy in January, 1920. It is described in the colophon as "the first novel {romari} composed in Persia in the Western fashion":

و می توان گفت اولین رمانی است که در ایران با اسلوب مغرب
زمین تألیف شده

¹ Gibb (op. laud, vol. v, p 15) alludes very briefly to the outburst of patriotic enthusiasm aroused by this play "Fatherland" when it was first acted in the theatre of Gedik Pasha. Sultdn 'Abdu'l-'Azfz was highly displeased and alarmed, and banished Kemal Bey to Famagusta in Cyprus.

It aims at being a historical novel, but the proper names generally have their French, not their Old Persian, forms, e.g. "Mitradat" (correctly explained as Mihr-ddd), "Akbatan" (Ecbatana, instead of Hagmatdna, for Hamadan), "Agradat," "Ispakii (Spako)" and "Siyakzar" (Cyaxares, for Huvakhshatara), though Cambyses (Kambujiya) takes the intermediate form "Kambuziya." The lengthy descriptions of the scenes and persons introduced into the story, and the numerous dialogues are evidently copied from European models. The story itself, into which an element of love as well as of war is introduced, is readable if not very thrilling, but is overloaded with dates, archaeological and mythological notes, and prolix historical dissertations ultimately based for the most part on the statements of Herodotus mixed with information derived from the Avesta. There is no attempt to make use of archaic language or to eschew the use of Arabic words, but the author has at any rate avoided glaring anachronisms. The following short extract (p. 247) from the description of the preparations for the marriage of Cyrus will suffice to show how far removed is the style of this book from that of the type of story hitherto current in Persia:

بلی این تہیہ تہیہ عروسی است و گمان ندارم که عروسی جز
برای کورس پادشاه با اقتدار پارس و مدی باشد چه که امروز
کسی جز او این قدر در نزد اهالی اکباتان محبوبیت ندارد که
مردم عروسی او را چون عیدی بزرگ دانسته و بازارها را زینت کرده و از صمیم قلب اظهار سرور و شادمانی نمایند

" Yes! These preparations are the preparations for a wedding, and I do not think that it can be the wedding of anyone else than Cyrus, the mighty King of Persia and Media, for today none but he commands in so great a measure the affection of the people of Ecbatana, so that they regard his wedding as a great festival, and have decorated the bazaars, and from the bottom of their hearts make manifest their joy and gladness "

I do not know what measure of success this "historical novel" has achieved in Persia, nor did I ever meet with more than the one copy sent me by the author, accompanied by a letter dated 4 Safar, 1338 (Oct. 30, 1919), in which he requested me to review it in the Times. I hope he will accept this brief notice as the best I can do to make his book known in Europe as a praiseworthy attempt to instruct while entertaining his countrymen, and to introduce a literary form hitherto unknown in Persia.

The second of the two historical novels mentioned above was printed at Bombay in 1339/1920-1, was written by San'atf-zada of Kirman, and is entitled "the Ensnarers: or the Avengers of Mazdak¹." Like the last it is incomplete, for it ends (on p. no) with the words "here ends the first volume/" though how many more the author intended to add does not appear, nor do I know whether any further instalment was actually published. In general style it much resembles "Love and Lordship," but presents more archaeological errors, as, for instance, where (p. 10) a portrait of the Sasanian king Bahrdm Gur is described as bearing a label written in the cuneiform character (khatt-i-mikhi) \

Before leaving this subject I must at least mention a Persian translation of three episodes in the career of the immortal Sherlock Holmes, translated from a Russian version by Mir Isma'il'Abdu'llah-zada, and printed at the Khurshid Press in Tihrdn in 1323/1905-6. They are entitled respectively the "Episode of the Gold Spectacles," the "Account of Charles Augustus Milverton²," and "the Village Lords." Holmes in passing through a Russian medium has been transmuted into "Khums" (خمیس) or "Khúmis" (خومیس): Dr Watson

¹ دامر گستران یا انتقام خواهان مزدک،

² The original is entitled "the Adventure of Appledore Towers."

"Sherlock Holmes" in Persia and Turkey.

has been more fortunate. The adventures are narrated in the simplest possible style, and would form an admirable reading-book for beginners in Persian, if the book were obtainable in any quantity, which is unlikely. In Turkey Sherlock Holmes had an enormous success, and I remember a news-vendor on one of the Bosphorus steamers offering me a Turkish version of the "Engineer's Thumb/" while the late Sultan 'Abdu'l-Hamīd was said to entertain the greatest admiration for Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, and to desire above all things to put him in charge of his Secret Police.

It is hard to say whether Hajji Zaynu'l-'Abidm of Maraḡha's fictitious "Travels {Siydhat-ndmci) of Ibrahim Beg,"

The "Travels of Ibrahim Beg, and the cause of his enthusiasm " which, according to Mirza Muhammad'Ali Khan "Tarbiyat¹," had an appreciable effect in precipitating the Persian Revolution of A.D. 1905-6, should be reckoned as a novel or not. The hero and his adventures are, of course, fictitious, but there is little exaggeration, and they might well be actual. The book is a bitter satire on Persian methods of government and social conditions, which are depicted in the most sombre colours, with the definite object of arousing discontent in order to bring about reform. The Persians are very sensitive to ridicule, but on the whole bear it much better than most European nations, and most Persian reformers have made extensive use of satire as a means of promoting their objects. This Siyahat -nama is well and written in a simple yet forcible style, and I know of no better reading-book for the student who wishes to obtain a good knowledge of the current speech and a general, if somewhat lurid, idea of the country.

¹ See my Press and Poetry of Modern Persia pp. 22 and 164. The Persian text was printed in three volumes, the first at Cairo without date; the second at Calcutta in 1323/1905, though publication was apparently delayed until 1907; the third at Constantinople in 1327/1909. The name of the author appears truly on the title-page of vol. iii. A German version of the first volume by Dr Walter Schulz was published at Leipzig in 1903 with the title Zustände im heutigen Persien wie sie das Reisebuch Ibrahim Begs enthüllt

In this connection mention should also be made of the Persian translation made by the talented and unfortunate Hajji Shaykh Ahmad "Ruhi" of Kirman of Morier's HdjjiBdbd, published by Colonel D. C. Phillott at Calcutta in 1905¹. This book, like the last, is a clever satire on the Persians, the more remarkable as being the work of a foreigner; but it belongs rather to the domain of English than Persian literature. All that I had to say about it is contained in the Introduction (pp. ix-xxiii) which I contributed to the edition published by Messrs Methuen in 1895, and all that need be said about the Persian translator and his work has been well said by Colonel Phillott in his Introduction to the Persian text.

The Persian translation of Hdjji Baba.

The Press.

Of Persian Journalism, which has been the most powerful modernizing influence in Persia, I have treated so fully in a previous monograph on the subject² that little need be said here, save by way of summary.

Development of the Press in Persia

Printing was introduced into Persia about a century ago by 'Abbas Mirza, and the first Persian newspaper appeared about A.D. 1851, in the third year of Nasiru'd-Din Shah's reign. It was soon followed by others, but these early news-sheets, issued by the Government, were entirely colourless, and even when I was in Persia in 1887-8 the only Persian newspaper worth reading was the Akhtar ("Star"), published weekly at Constantinople. It was founded in 1875, and lasted about twenty years. Prince Malkom Khan's Qdnitn ("Law")

Five earlier newspapers of importance

¹ See pp. vu-vm of the English Introduction to this work, and also my Persian Revolution, pp. 93-6.

² The Press and Poetry in Modern Persia Cambridge, 1914.

appeared in 1890 and was printed and published in London, but in consequence of its violent attacks on the Persian Government, the Sh^{ah}, and his Ministers, its circulation in Persia was prohibited. The Calcutta Hablu'l-Matin first appeared in 1893, the Thurayyd ("Pleiades") in Cairo in 1898, and the Parwarisk, which replaced it, in 1900. These were the most important Persian papers published outside

The best post-Revolution
newspaper

Persia, and it was not until 1907, when the Revolution was an accomplished fact, and the conflict between King and Parliament was at its height, that independent and influential newspapers began to appear in Persia itself. Amongst the most interesting of these from a literary point of view 1 should place the *Stir-i-hrdfil*¹ "Trumpet of Israfil"—the Angel of the Resurrection), the Nasim-i-Shiml ("Breeze of the North"), the Musawat ("Equality") and the Naw Bahar ("Early Spring").

The Stir-i-
Israfil and its Charand' parand.

The first, second, and fourth of these supplied me with many fine poems from the pens of Dakhaw, Sayyid Ashraf of Gilan, and Bahir of Mashhad, for my Press and Poetry in Modern Persia but the Charand-parand ("Charivari") column of the Stir-i-Isrdfil also contained some excellent and original prose writing of which I shall now give two specimens, since they are unlike anything else which I have met with in Persian. Both are by Dakhaw: the first appeared in No. 1 of the Stir-i-Isrdfil (May 30, 1907); the second in No. 2 (June 6, 1907).

چرند پرند

بعد از چندین سال مسافرت هندوستان و دیدن ابدال و اوتاد و
مبارت در کمپیا و لیمپا و سیما الحمد لله بتجربه بزرگی نائل
شدم و آن دوائی ترک توپاک است اگر این دوا را در هر یک از
میانک خارجه کسی کشف میکرد ناچار صاحب امتیاز میشد

انعامات می گرفت، در همه روزنامه‌ها نامش به‌زورگی درج میشد، اما چکنر که در ایران قدرداران نیست!

عادت طبیعت ثانوی است همینکه کسی بکاری عادت کرد دیگر باین آسانیا نمیتواند ترك کند، علاج منحصر باین است که بترتیب مخصوصی به‌مرور زمان کم کند تا وقتیکه بکلی از سرش بیفتد.

حالا من بتمام برادران مسلمان غیور تریاکی خود اعلان میکنم که ترك تریاك ممكن است باینکه اولاً در امر ترك جازم و مصمم باشند، ثانیاً مثلاً يك نفر که روزی دو مثقال تریاك میخورد روزی يك گندم از تریاك کم کرده دو گندم مُرفین بجای آن زیاد کند، و کسیکه ده مثقال تریاك می کشد روزی يك نخود کم کرده دو نخود حشیش اضافه نماید و همین طور مداومت کند تا وقتیکه دو مثقال تریاك خوردنی به چهار مثقال مُرفین و ده مثقال تریاك کشیدنی به بیست مثقال حشیش برسد، بعد از آن تبدیل خوردن مُرفین به آب دزدك مُرفین و تبدیل حشیش بخوردن دوغ وحدت بهار آسان است،^۱ برادران غیور تریاکی من در صورتیکه خدا کارها را این طور آسان کرده چرا خودتان را از زحمت حرفهای مفت مردم و تلف کردن این همه مال و وقت نمی رها کنید، ترك عادت در صورتیکه باین قسم بشود موجب مرض نیست و کار خیلی آسانی است.

و همیشه بزرگان و متشخصین هم که میخواهند عادت زشتی از سر مردم بپندازند همین طور میکنند مثلاً ببینید واقعاً شاعر خوب گفته است که عقل و دولت قرین یکدیگرست، مثلاً وقتیکه بزرگان ما فکر میکنند که مردم فقیرند و استطاعت نان گندم خوردن ندارند و رعیت همه عمرش را باید بزراعت گندم صرف کند و خودش همیشه کوسنه باشد به ببینید چه میکنند.

روزِ اوّل سال نان را با گندم خالص می پزند، روز دوم در هر خروار يك من تلخه، جو، سیاه دانه، خاك آره، یونجه، شن... مثلاً مختصر عرض میکنم... کلوخ، چارکه، گلوله، هشت مثقالی میزنند، معلوم است در يك خروار گندم که صد من است يك من ازین چیزها هیچ معلوم نمیشود، روز دوم دو من میزنند، روز سوم سه من، و بعد از صد روز که سه ماه و ده روز بشود صد من گندم صد من تلخه، جو، سیاه دانه، خاك آره، کاه، یونجه، شن، شده است در صورتیکه هیچ کس ملتفت نشده و عادت نان گندم خوردن هم از سر مردم افتاده است

واقعاً که عقل و دولت قرین یکدیگر است،

برادران غیور تریاکی من البته میدانید که انسان عالم صغیر است و شباهت تمام بعالم کبیر دارد یعنی مثلاً هرچیز که برای انسان دست میدهد ممکن است برای حیوان، درخت، سنگ، کلوخ، در، دیوار، کوه، دریا هم اتفاق بیفتد و هرچیز هم برای اینها دست میدهد برای انسان هم دست میدهد چرا که انسان عالم صغیر است و آنها جزو عالم کبیر، مثلاً این را میخواستم بگویم همان طور که ممکن است عادت را از سر مردم انداخت همان طور هم ممکن است عادت را از سر سنگ و کلوخ و آجر انداخت چرا که میان عالم صغیر و عالم کبیر مشابَهت تمام است، پس چه انسانی باشد که از سنگ و کلوخ هم کم باشد

مثلاً يك مریضخانه، حاجی شیخ هادی مجتهد مرحوم ساخت موقوفاتی هم برای آن معین کرد که همیشه یازده نفر مریض در آنجا باشند، تا حاجی شیخ هادی حیات داشت مریضخانه یازده نفر مریض عادت کرد، همینکه حاجی شیخ هادی مرحوم شد طلاب مدرسه به پسر ارشدش گفتند ما وقتی تو را آقا میدانیم که

موقوفات مریضخانه‌را خرج ما بکنی، حالا به بینید این پسر خلف ارشد با قوتِ علم چه کرد، ماهِ اول يك نفر از مریض‌ها را کمر کرد، ماهِ دوم دو تا، ماهِ سوم سه تا، ماهِ چهارم چهار تا، و همین طور تا حالا که عدهٔ مریض‌ها به پنج نفر رسیده، و کمر کمر بحسن تدبیر آن چند نفر هر تا پنج ماه دیگر از میان خواهد رفت، پس به بینید که با تدبیر چه طور میشود عادت را از سر همه کس و همه چیز انداخت حالا مریضخانه، که بیازده مریض عادت داشت بدون اینکه ناخوش بشود عادت از سرش افتاد چرا؟ برای آنکه آن هر جزو عالم کبیر است و مثل انسان که عالم صغیر است میشود عادت را از سرش انداخت (دخو)

Translation.

"After several years travelling in India, seeing the invisible saints¹, and acquiring skill in Alchemy, Tahsmans and Necromancy², thank God, I have succeeded in a great experiment; no less than a method for curing the opium-habit³! If any one in any foreign country had made such a discovery, he would certainly have received decorations and rich rewards, and his name would have been mentioned with honour in all the newspapers. But what can one do, since in Persia no one recognizes merit?

"Custom is a second nature, and as soon as one becomes habituated to any act, one cannot easily abandon it. The only curative method is to reduce it gradually by some special procedure, until it is entirely forgotten.

"To all my zealous, opium-eating, Muslim brethren I now proclaim the possibility of breaking the opium-habit, thus. First, they must be firmly determined and resolved on abandoning it. Secondly, one who, for example, eats two *mithqāls*⁴ of opium daily should every day diminish this dose by a grain (nukhūd) and add two grains of morphine in its stead. One who smokes ten mithqdls of opium should daily reduce the amount by one grain, adding instead two grains of hashish (Indian hemp). Thus he should persevere until such time as the two mithqdls of opium which he eats are replaced by four mithqdls of morphine, or the ten mithqdls of opium which he smokes by twenty mithqdls of hashish. After this it is very easy to substitute for morphine pills hypodermic injections of the same, and for hashish 'curds of Unity'.¹ O my zealous, opium-eating brethren, seeing that God has made matters so easy, why do you not save yourselves from the annoyance of men's foolish chatter, and the waste of all this time and money? Change of habit, if it be effected in this way, does not cause illness and is a very easy matter.

¹ The Abdāl ("Substitutes") and Awṭād ("Pegs") are two classes of the Rijālū'l-Ghayb, or "Men of the Unseen World," who play an important part in the cosmogony of the Mystics.

² Concerning these Occult Sciences, see pp. 441-2 supra.

³ The mithqāl = 4.60 grammes, and is divided into 24 nukhūd ("peas"), each of which consists of 4 grains or barley-corns (gandum).

" Moreover great and eminent men who wish to make people forget some evil habit act in precisely this way. See, for example, how well indeed the poet says that intelligence and fortune are closely connected with one another. For example, when our great men consider that the people are poor and cannot eat wheaten bread, and that the peasant must spend all his life in cultivating wheat, yet must himself remain hungry, see what they do.

" On the first day of the year they bake the bread with pure wheat-flour. On the second day in every hundredweight (kharwdr) they put a maund of bitter apricot stones, barley, fennel-flower, sawdust, lucerne, sand—I put it shortly as an illustration—clods, brick-bats and bullets of eight mithqdls. It is evident that in a hundredweight of corn, which is a hundred maunds, one maund of these things will not be noticed. On the second day they put in two maunds, on the third three, and after a hundred days, which is three months and ten days, a hundred maunds of wheat-flour have become a hundred maunds of bitter apricot stones, barley, fennel-flower, sawdust, chaff, lucerne and sand, and that in such fashion that no one has noticed it, while the wheaten bread habit has entirely passed out of men's minds

" In truth intelligence and fortune are closely connected with one another'

" O my zealous, opium-eating brethren ' Assuredly you know that man is a little world, and has the closest resemblance to the great world; that is to say, for example, that whatever is possible for man may happen also in the case of animals, trees, stones, clods, doors, walls, mountains and seas; and that whatever is possible for these is possible also for men, because man is the microcosm, while these form part of the macrocosm. For example, I wanted to say this, that just as it is possible to put a habit out of men's minds, even so it is possible to put a habit out of the minds of stones, clods, and bricks, because the closest resemblance exists between the microcosm and the macrocosm. What sort of a man, then, is he who is less than even a stone or a clod?

¹ Dtigh-I-Wahdat, or Banjdb, is a mixture of hashish and curdled milk similar to asdr, habb-i-nashdt, etc. Buq-i- Wahdat ("the trumpet of unity") is the name given by hashish-smokzxs to a paper funnel through which the smoke of the drug is inhaled.

"For example, the late mujtahid Hajji Shaykh Hddf¹ built a hospital and settled on it certain endowments so that eleven sick persons might always be there. So long as Hajji Shaykh Hddf was alive the hospital was accustomed to receive eleven patients. But as soon as Hajji Shaykh Hadi departed this life, the students of the college said to his eldest son, 'We will recognize you as the Master only when you spend the hospital endowments on us!' See now what this worthy eldest son did by dint of knowledge. In the first month he reduced the number of patients by one, in the second by two, in the third by three, in the fourth by four; and so in like fashion until the present time, when the number of patients has been reduced to five, and gradually, by this excellent device, these few also will disappear in the course of the next five months. See then how by wise management it is possible to expel habit from the minds of every one and every thing, so that a hospital which was accustomed to eleven patients has entirely forgotten this habit without falling ill. Why? Because it also forms part of the macrocosm, so that it is possible to drive a habit out of its mind, just as in the case of man, who is the microcosm."

"Dakhaw."

چرند پرند، مکتوب شهری

کبلائی دخوا! تو قدیمها گاهی بدرد مردم میخوردی مشکلی بدوستانت روی میداد حل میکردی، این آخرها که سرو صدائی از تو نبود میگویم بلکه تو هر تریاکی شده، در گوشه اطاق پای منقل لم داده، اما نگو که تو ناقلای حقّه همان طور که توی صور اسرافیل نوشته بودی پواشکی بی خبر نمیدانم برای تحصیل علم کیمیا و لیپیا و سیمیا گذاشتی در رفتی بهند، حکماً کنج نامه هر

¹ See my Persian Revolution, pp. 406-7.

پیدا کرده* در هر حال اگر سؤ ظنّی در حقّ تو برده‌ام باید خیلی خیلی به بخشی عذر می‌خواهم* باز الحمد لله سلامت آمدی جای شکرش باقی است چرا که خوب سر وقتش رسیدی* برای اینکه کارها خیلی شلوق پلوق است*

خدا رفتگان همه را بهامرزد خاک برآش خبر نبرد. در قاقازان ما يك ملاّ اینکعلی داشتیم روضه خوان خیلی شوخ بود. حالا نداشته باشد با من هم خیلی میانه داشت وقتی که میرفت روضه بخواند اول يك مقدمه* دور و درازی مه چید* هرچند بی ادبی است میگفت مطلب این طور خرفه‌تر میشود (در مثل مناقشه نیست) بنظر من می آید برای شما هم محض اینکه درست بمطلب پی ببرید يك مقدمه بچینم بد نیست*

در قدیم الایام در دنیا يك دولت ایران بود در همسایگی ایران هم دولت یونان بود* دولت ایران آن وقت دماغش پُر باد بود* از خودش خیلی راضی بود* یعنی بی ادبی می شود لولپنگش خیلی آب میگرفت* کباده* ملك الملوكی دنیا را می کشید* بلی آن وقت در ایران معشوق السلطنه* محبوب الدوله* عزیز الایاله* خوشگل خلوت* قشنگ حضور* ملوس الملك نبود* در قصرها هم سُرُسِه نساخته بودند* ملاّهای آن وقت هم چماق الشریعه* حاجب الشریعه* پارك الشریعه نداشتند* خلاصه آن وقت کالسکه الاسلام* میز و صندلی المذهب* اسب روسی الدین وجود نداشت* خوش آن روزها واقعاً که درست عهد پادشاه و زوزک بود* مخلص کلام* يك روز دولت ایران لشکرهاى خودش را جمع کرد* یواش یواش رفت تا پشت دیوار یونان* برای داخل شدن یونان يك راه بیشتر نبود که لشکر ایران حکماً باید از آن راه عبور کنند* بلی پشت این راه هم يك كوچه* آشتی کُنان مسجد آقا سید عزیز الله

یعنی يك راه باریك دیگر بود ولی لشکر ایران آن راه را بلد نبود؛ همینکه لشکر ایران پشت دیوار یونان رسید دید این یونانیهای بسد ذات هفت خط با قشون جلو راه را گرفته‌اند؛ خوب حالا ایران چه خاک بسرش کند؟ برود چطور برود؛ هر گردد چطور بر گردد؛ مانده سفیل و سرگردان؛ خدا رحمت کند شاعروا خوب گفته‌است (م) نه در غربت دلم شاد و نه روئی در وطن دارم آخ؛ از آنجا که باید کارها راست بیاید يك دفعه لشکر ایران دیدند یواشکی يك نفر از آن جعفر قلی آقاها پسر بیگلر آقاهاى قزاق یعنى يك نفر غریب نواز يك نفر نوع پرست يك نفر مهمان دوست از لشکر یونان جدا شد؛ و همه جا پا ورجه‌ن پا ورجه‌ن آمد تا اردوی ایرانیا و گفت سلام علیکم خیر مقدم! خوش آمدید صفا آوردید؛ سفر بی خطر؛ ضمناً آهسته با انگشت شهادت آن کوچه آشتی گنان را بایرانها نشان داد؛ گفت ما یونانیا آنجا لشکر نداریم اگر شما از آن راه بروید می توانید مملکت مارا بگیرید؛ ایرانیا هر قبول کرده و از آن راه رفته داخل خاک یونان شدند؛

حالا مطالب اینجا نیست؛ راستی تا یادم نرفته اسم آن غریب نوازا هر عرض کنیم؛ هرچند قدری بزبان ما سنگین است اما چه میشود کرد؛ اسمش (الپاتس) بود؛ خدا لعنت کند شیطان را نمی دانم چرا هر وقت من این اسم را می شنوم بعضی سفرای ایران یادم می افتد؛ باری برویم سر مطلب؛ در آن وقت که جناب چکیده؛ عبرت نتیجه علم و سیاست معلم مدرسه؛ قزاقخانه جناب میرزا عبد الرزاق خان مهندس بعد از سه ماه پیاده روی نقشه؛ جنگی راه مازندران را برای روسها کشیدند ما دوستان گهتیم چنین آدم با وجود حیف است که لقب نداشته باشد؛

بیست نفر سه شبانه روز هر نشستم فکر کردیم که چه لقبی برای ایشان بگیریم چیزی بعقلمان نرسید، حالا از همه بدتر خوش سلیقه هر هستند، میگویند لقبی که برای من میگیرید باید بکر باشد یعنی پیش از من کس دیگر نگرفته باشد، از مستوفیها پرسیدم گفتند دیگر لقب بکر نیست، کتابهای لغت را باز کردیم، در زبان فارسی عربی ترکی از الف تا یا يك كلمه نیست که افلاً ده دفعه لقب نشده باشد، خوب حالا چه کنیم؟ یعنی خدا را خوش میآید این آدم همین طور بی لقب بماند.

از آنجا که کارها باید راست بیآید يك روز من در کمال اوقات تلخی کتاب تاریخی که جلو دستم بود بر داشتم که خودم را مشغول کنم همینکه کتاب را باز کردم در صفحه دست راست سطر اول دیدم نوشته است (از آن روز بعد یونانیها بافیالتس خائن گفتند و خونش را هدر کردند) ای لعنت بشما یونانیها مگر افیالتس بشما چه کرده بود که شما او را خائن بگوئید، مگر مهمان نوازی در مذهب شما کفر بود؟ مگر بغریب پرستی شما اعتقاد نداشتید؟ خلاصه همینکه این اسم را دیدم کفتم هیچ بهتر از این نیست که این اسم را برای جناب میرزا عبد الرزاق خان لقب بگیریم، چرا که هر بکر بود هر این دو نفر شباهت کامل بهم داشتند، این غریب نواز او هر بود، این مهمان پرست بود او هر بود، این میگفت اگر من این کار را نمی کردم دیگری می کرد، او هر میگفت، تنها يك فرق در میانه بود که تکبیه های سرداری افیالتس از چوب جنگل وطن نبود، خوب نباشد این جزئیات قابل ملاحظه نیست، مخلص کلام، ما دوستان جمع شدیم يك مهمانی دادیم شادیه ها کردیم فوراً يك تلگراف هم بکاشان زدیم که پنج شیشه گلاب قمر و دو جعبه جوزقند زود بفرستند که بدهیم لقب را بگیریم، در همین حیص و بیص جناب

حاجی ملک التجار راه آستارا را هروسها واگذار کردند، نمی دانم
 هکدام نامرد حکایت این لقب را هم باو گفت دو پاش را توی یک
 کفش کرد که از آسمان افتاده ام این لقب حق و مالی من است،
 حالا چند ماه است نمی دانی چه امر سراتی راه افتاده، از یک
 طرف میرزا عبد الرزاق خان بقوة علم هندسه، از یک طرف
 حاجی ملک التجار بزور فصاحت و بلاغت و شعرهای امرو القیس
 و ناصر خسرو علوی، کبلاتی دخونمی دانی درچه انشرو منشری
 گیر کرده ای... اگر بتوانی مارا از این بلیه خلاص کنی مثل
 این است که یک بنده در راه خدا آزاد کرده خدا ان شاء الله
 پسرهای را ببخشد، خدا یک روز عمرت را صد سال کند، امروز
 روز غیرت است دیگر خود میدانی، زیاده عرضی ندارم،
 خادم با وفای شما (مهر مگس)

Translation.

Charand-parand. City letter.

"Kabla'i¹ Dakhaw'

" In old days you used sometimes to be a help to people • if any
 A modern difficulty befel your friends, you used to solve it. Latterly, Persian there being no sign or sound of you, I kept telling myself that perhaps you too had taken to opium and were lolling² at the foot of the brazier in the corner of the room. Now don't tell me that³ you, you queer mug⁴, quietly, without any one's knowledge (I do not know whether in order to study Alchemy, Talismans and Necro-mancy, as you have written in the *Sur-i-Is?*⁵ dfil) have cut and run to India. Surely then you have found the key to a treasure also! At any rate, if I have entertained an unworthy suspicion of you, you must ¹ For the half slang use of "Kabte'i" (= Karbala'i*) see my Press and Poetry of Modern Persia, pp. 179-82.

² Lam dadan (slang), "to loll, lounge."

³ Equivalent to balki "perhaps"

⁴ Naqulay huqqa, explained as equivalent to the French "drdle de type."

forgive roe: I ask your pardon! Anyhow, praise be to God, you have got safely back, a lasting cause of thankfulness, for you have come at just the right moment, seeing that affairs are all topsy-turvy.

"May God forgive everybody's departed friends!¹ May the earth not whisper it to him ! In Qiqizin we had a certain Mulla f nak-'Ali², a *rawda-khwdn*³ and a very impudent fellow. Whatever may be the case now, he was at that time very thick with me. When he went to recite a rawda, he used first of all to put forward a long-winded prologue. He used to say (saving your presence)⁴, 'In this way the matter will be more ass-plain' (no need to quarrel over a mere illustration). It occurs to me that it would not be a bad thing if I too were to begin with a prologue for you, simply in order that you may get the hang of the matter.

"In olden days there was in the world one great Persian Empire with the State of Greece as its neighbour. At that time the Persian Empire was puffed up with pride⁵. It was very well pleased with itself, and, if you will pardon the expression, its pipe took a lot of filling⁶. Its ambition was the Kmg-of-Kingship of the world. Yes, there was then in Persia no 'King's Darling,' 'State's Sweetheart,' 'Pet of the Province,' 'Beauty of the Privy Chamber,' 'Charmer of the Presence,' or 'Minion of the Kingdom'⁷. Nor had they yet made 'slides' in their palaces⁸. Nor did the Mullah of that time include a 'Club of the Canon Law,' 'Chamberlain of the Canon Law,' or 'Park of the Canon Law.' At that time, in short, there did not exist a 'Carriage of IsUm,' 'Table

¹ This formula is common amongst the Zoroastrians. See my Year amongst the Persians, p. 375. Here it implies that the Mulla* was dead.

² fnak is the Turkish for a cow. The name is, of course, meant to be ridiculous. Qdqdzdn may be a misprint for Qazan.

³ See pp 181-2 supra.

⁴ Har chand bf-adabist, "Although it be an incivility" to use such an expression. Khar-fahm ("ass-plain") means comprehensible to the greatest fool.

⁵ "To have wind in the brain," a common expression for conceit.

⁶ Luldhingash khayli ab mi-gtrift, "Its jug held a lot of water," said of one who has a great capacity for self-esteem.

⁷ The innumerable titles conferred by the Persian Government form a constant subject of mockery. The fictitious titles here mentioned are, of course, intended to be both barbarous in form and degrading in meaning.

⁸ The reference is to the sursurak in the Nigaristctn Palace at Jihran. See my Year amongst the Persians, p. 96, and Chair of the Faith,' or ⁴ Russian Horse of Religion.' Fine days were those indeed, which were in truth the time of King Wizwizak¹'

480 MODERN DEVELOPMENTS (FROM A.D. 1850) [PTIII

" But to be brief. One day the Persian Government collected its armies and quietly advanced to the back of the wall of Greece. Now to enter Greece there was only one way, by which way the Persian army must needs pass. Yes, but behind that way there was a lane like the Ashti'-kundn² of the Mosque of Aqa Sayyid 'Azfzu'llah, that is to say, there was another narrow lane, but the Persian army did not know about it. As soon as the Persian army arrived behind the wall of Greece, they saw that these seven-fold rascals of Greeks had blocked the road with troops. Well, what dust must Persia now scatter on her head? How, if she would advance, should she advance, or how, if she would retreat, could she retreat? She was left abased and confounded. God have mercy on the poet who so well says, 'Neither does my heart rejoice in exile, nor have I any honour in my native land,' etc. But, since things must somehow come right, suddenly the Persian army saw one of those JaYar-quli Aqas³, a son of the Begler-Aqa of Cossacks, in other words a certain friend of the foreigner and hospitable humanitarian, gently detach himself from the Greek army, and, stepping softly*, approach the Persian host. 'Peace be upon you,' said he; 'Your arrival is fortunate' You are welcome! Your visit is a pleasure' May your journey be without danger!' All the while he was quietly pointing out to the Persians with his forefinger that Ashtf-kunan lane. 'We Greeks,' said he, 'have no troops there. If you go that way, you can take our country.' The Persians agreed, and by that road entered the Greek land.

"This, however, is not the point... By the bye, while I remember, let me mention the name of this foreigner's friend, though it comes a trifle heavy on our tongues; but what is to be done? His name was Ephialtes...God curse the Devil⁶! I don't know why it is that whenever I hear this name I think of some of our Persian Ministers...But let us return to the point.

"When His Excellency, that double-distilled essence of zeal and

¹ An imaginary "good time" in the remote past, as we might say "in the days of good King Cole"

² I understand that this is the name of a narrow lane, or passage, in Tihran. It means "Reconciliation Street."

³ The name of a Persian officer in the Cossack Brigade

⁴ P&'War-cMn, "picking up the feet."

⁶ An expression used when some ill-natured or inappropriate idea occurs to the mind, as though it had been suggested by Satan.

sum of science and political acumen, Mirza 'Abdu'r-Razzdq Kh£n, engineer, and lecturer in the School of the Cossack barracks, after a three months' pedestrian tour drew for the Russians a military map of ~tfieToa3 TErough Mazandaran, we his friends said, *It is a pity that sucü a man of spirit should not have a title.' So some twenty of us sat for three days and nights considering what title we should obtain for him, but nothing occurred to our minds. Worst of all, he was a man of taste 'Any title obtained for me,' says he, 'must be virgin ; that is to say, no one else must have borne it before me.' We enquired of the State Accountants, who said there was no *virgin title' left. We opened our dictionaries, and found that neither in the languages of the Persians, Arabs, Turks, or Franks from A to Z was there one single word left which had not been employed as a title at least ten times over. Well, what were we to do? Would it be pleasing to God that this man should thus remain untitled?

"However, since such things must come right, one day, being in a state of extreme dejection, I picked up a history book which was at hand in order to distract my mind. No sooner had I opened the book than I read in the first line of the right-hand page- 'Ever afterwards the Greeks stigmatized Ephialtes as a traitor whose blood might lawfully be shed.' O you cursed Greeks, what had poor Ephialtes done to you that you should call him a traitor? Is hospitality to strangers blasphemy in your creed? Do you not believe in kindness to foreigners?

"In short as soon as I saw this name I said, 'Nothing could be better than that we should adopt this name as a title for Mlrzd 'Abdu'r-Razzdq Khan, both because it is "virgin," and because these two persons have the closest resemblance to one another. This one was kind to strangers and so was that one. This one was hospitable to guests and so was that one. This one said, "Had I not acted thus, another would have done so," and so did that one. There was only one difference between them, namely, that the buttons of Ephialtes's coat were not made of native forest-wood Well, supposing they were not, such trifles are unworthy of consideration.'

"In short, we friends assembled and gave an entertainment and made great rejoicings. We also instantly despatched a telegram to Kashan bidding them send quickly five bottles of Qamsar rose-water and two boxes of sugared walnuts, so that we might present them [to the Shall] and secure the title In the midst of these proceedings Hajji Maliku't-Tujjdr¹ conceded the Astdra road to the Russians.

¹ This title, "King of the Merchants," was at this time borne by Hajji Muhammad Kazim, whose accomplishments were reputed greater than his honesty.

I don't know what scoundrel told him the history of this title, but he put his two feet in one shoe¹ and declared that he was a heaven-sent genius, and that this title was his rightful property. Now for some months you don't know what a hullabaloo is going on, with Mirzā 'Abdu'r-Razzaq Khan on the one hand, supported by his science of Geometry, and Hajji Mahku't-Tujjar on the other with his persuasive eloquence and his quotations from the poems of Imru'u'l-Qays and Nasir-i-Khusraw-i-'Alawf. O Kabla'f Dakhaw, you don't know in what toil and moil we are caught! If you can deliver us from this calamity it would be as though you had freed a slave for God's sake, and may God, if He will, forgive your sons !

" May God make one day of your life a hundred years ! Today is a day for zealous endeavour. For the rest, you are the best judge I have nothing more to submit.

" Your faithful servant, GADFLY."

It is difficult in a translation to do justice to these articles, which mark an absolutely new departure in Persian satire, and are written in a style at once idiomatic and forcible. Though they appeared under various pseudonyms, I fancy they were all written by Dakhaw, who, little as he wrote, on the strength of them and a few of his poems² deserves, in my opinion, to occupy the first rank amongst contemporary Persian men of letters. It is to be regretted that, though a comparatively young man, he has apparently produced nothing during the last ten or twelve years.

Of the last twelve years I have little to say. The beginning of 1912 saw the culmination of Russian violence and oppression in Persia, and, for the time being, the end alike of liberty and literary effort. Then came the War, when Persia became the passive victim of three contending foreign armies,

Originality of Dakhaw both in prose and verse.

The last twelve years (A.D. 1912-1923).

¹ This means to stand firm, be obstinate.

² Especially "Kablay?" and his elegy on Mirza' Jahangir Khan, the latter a poem of rare beauty and feeling. See my Press and Poetry of Modern Persia[^] pp. 179-82 and 200-4.

with little profit to expect from the success of any one of them, while there was scarcity everywhere and famine and devastation in the western provinces. To Persia at least the Russian Revolution came as a godsend, while the subsequent withdrawal of Great Britain after the failure of the Anglo-Persian Agreement left her at last more or less mistress in her own house. How far she will be able to make use of the breathing-space thus accorded her remains to be seen.

Surprise has sometimes been expressed that during the War there should have existed in Persia a considerable pro-

Persia and Germany

German party, largely composed of prominent Democrats and Reformers. The explanation is simple enough Imperial Russia was hated and feared, and with good reason, and any Power which diverted her attention from her victim and threatened her supremacy was sure of a large measure of popularity, while Persia had no reason to fear or dislike Germany, which lay remote from her borders and had at no time threatened her independence. Germany, of course, took advantage of this sentiment, and carried on an active propaganda, of which the curious history remains to be written.

The old Kawa.
newspaper
(1916-1919)

One of the chief organs of the propaganda was the Kdwa (JKaveJi) newspaper published at Berlin, nominally once a fortnight, from January 24, 1916, to August 15, 1919. There was a long gap between the combined Nos. 29 and 30, July 15, 1918, and Nos. 31 and 32, October 15, 1918, between No. 33, Nov. 15, 1918, and No. 34, March 1, 1919; and between this last and the final number of the old series mentioned above, which appeared five months and a half later. On

The new Kdwa
(1920-1921)

January 22, 1920, appeared the first number of the New Series (Dawra-i-Jadid) which definitely renounced politics in favour of literature and science, while keeping the same external form and high standard of style and typography. In this form the paper, now appearing only once a month, endured for two years more, the last number (No. 12, Jahrg. 2, Neue Folge) being dated December 1, 1921, and containing no less than 33 large pages, closely printed in double columns.

During its propagandist days the contents of the Kdwa were, of course, chiefly political, and, though valuable for the light they throw on events in Persia, and especially on the doings of the Nationalist "Committee of Defence," have little bearing on literary matters until after the armistice, though here and there exceptions to this rule occur. Thus No. 4 (March 14, 1916) contains a Kurdish poem¹; No. 20 an obituary notice of that eminent man of letters Sayyid Muhammad Sadiq "Qa'im-maqam"², better known by his title oi Adibul-Mamdhk, who died on the 28th of Rabf ii, 1335 (Feb. 21, 1917); No. 21 an account of some of the scientific results obtained by Captain Niedermayer's mission to Afghanistan³; No. 23 an article by Professor Mittwoch on the artist Rida-yi-'Abbasi⁴; No. 26 an account of Persian students in Germany; No. 33 (Nov. 15, 1918), a propos of a new publication, which, though bearing the Persian title Rdh-i-Naw (the "New Road"), was written in German, a brief sketch of various attempts to reform or replace the Persian alphabet; No. 34 (March 1, 1919) an account of the foundation in Berlin of a Persian Literary Society, and a letter from Mirza Muhammad of Qazwfn on a point of Persian orthography; and No. 35 (August 15, 1919) a long and very interesting article by the writer last named on the Articles of interest in the old Kawa.

¹ Reprinted from the Persian newspaper Rastakhiz ("the Resurrection").

² So called on account of his descent from the celebrated Mirza Abu'l-Qdsim Qa'im-maqam. See pp 311-16 supra.

³ Translated from the Neue Orient, Nos. 4 and 5, May, 1917.

⁴ Translated from No. 7 of Die Islamische Welt.

oldest recorded Persian verses subsequent to the Arab conquest in the seventh century after Christ¹.

The Kdwa of the New Series, which began on Jan. 22, 1920, is, on the other hand, almost entirely literary, and contains numerous articles of the greatest value and interest. The Persian colony in Berlin, though comparatively small, included several men of great intellectual distinction, and, though ardent patriots, keenly alive to the national faults, and eager to absorb what was best of European learning. The special characteristic of the best German scholarship is its sobriety, thoroughness, painstaking accuracy, and exhaustive examination of relevant material from all available sources. This steadying influence is exactly what the Persians, with their tendency to ingenious but rash conjectures and premature theories, most need. In the leading article which opened the New Series the editor, Sayyid Hasan Taqf-zada, thus defined his aims:

"The Kawd newspaper was born of the War, and therefore its conduct was correlated with the situations arising from the War. Now that the War is ended and International Peace has supervened, the Kawa considers its War period as concluded, and now enters on a Peace period. It therefore adopts, as from the beginning of the Christian year 1920, corresponding with the 9th of Rabi* 11, A. H. 1338, a new basis and line of conduct. It has nothing to do with the former Kdwa, and is, indeed, a new paper, the contents of which will for the most part consist of scientific, literary, and historical articles. Above all else, its object will be to promote European civilization in Persia, to combat fanaticism, to help to preserve the national feeling and unity of Persia, to endeavour to purify and safeguard the Persian language and literature from the disorders and dangers which threaten them, and, so far as possible, to support internal and external freedom...In the opinion of the writer of these lines, that which is today in the highest degree necessary for Persia, which all patriotic Persians should exert themselves to promote, literally, with all their strength, and should place before everything else, is threefold.

¹ Two such early attempts are discussed, both taken from Arabic books of authority, such as Ibn Qutayba's Kitdbrfsh-ShPr wctsh-Shitard, the KitdbuH-Aghdni, and Tabarf's great history. The earliest goes back to the reign of Yazid ibn Mu'awiya (A. H. 60-4=A.D. 680-4).

" First, the adoption and promotion, without condition or reservation, of European civilization, absolute submission to Europe, and the assimilation of the culture, customs, practices, organization, sciences, arts, life, and the whole attitude of Europe, without any exception save language; and the putting aside of every kind of self-satisfaction, and such senseless objections as arise from a mistaken, or, as we prefer to call it, a false patriotism.

" Secondly, a sedulous attention to the preservation of the Persian language and literature, and the development, extension, and popularization thereof

" Thirdly, the diffusion of European sciences, and a general advance in founding colleges, promoting public instruction, and utilizing all the sources of material and spiritual power., in this way...

" Such is the belief of the writer of these lines as to the way to serve Persia, and likewise the opinion of those who, by virtue of much cultural and political experience, share his belief.

" Outwardly and inwardly, in body and in spirit, Persia must become Europeanized.

" In concluding this explanation of fundamental beliefs, I must add that in the writer's opinion perhaps the greatest and most effective service of this sort which one could render would be the publication in Persia of translations of a whole series of the most important European books in plain and simple language."

In pursuance of this programme, there are a certain number of articles on the German system of education, the proceedings of the Perso-German Society¹, and the arrangements for facilitating the studies of Persian students in Germany; but matters connected with the language and literature of Persia supply the subject-matter of most of the articles. Thus we find in the year 1920 a series of admirable articles by Taqfzada (signed Muhassil) on the most notable Persian poets of early times²; an original article written in Persian by

Some interesting articles in the new Kdwa.

¹ Deutsch-Persische Gesellschaft.

² Kawa, Nos. I, pp. 2-6; 4, pp. 15-24; 8, pp. 10-4 j and 10, pp. 9-14.

Dr Arthur Christensen of Copenhagen on the existence of verse in Pahlawi¹; a discussion on the evolution of the Persian language during the last century²; articles entitled "Bolshevism in ancient Persia" on Mazdak⁸; comparisons between Eastern and Western research and its results (greatly in favour of the latter), entitled Mundzara-i-Shab M Rtiz ("Dispute between Night and Day")⁴; the four periods of the Persian language since the Arab conquest⁵; "a Touchstone of Taste," on good modern Persian verse and what the writer calls "Karbala'f verse"⁶; Pahlawi, Arabic and Persian sources of the *Shdh-ndma*¹ \ ancient and modern translations from Arabic into Persian⁸; and a very interesting article on the "Sources of eloquent Persian and 'Khdn-i-Walida Persian'"⁹, in which the writer ridicules and condemns the slavish imitation of Turkish idiom and style practised by certain young Persians resident in Constantinople. These articles, in most cases, display a wealth of knowledge, critical ability, and originality which I have nowhere else encountered in Persian, and deserve a fuller analysis than can be accorded to them in this volume.

During the last year of its existence (1921) the Kdwa maintained the same high standard, publishing many articles, both historical and literary, which were fully up to the level of the best European scholarship. A series of important historical articles on "the Relations of Russia and Persia during the period of the Aq-Qoyunlu and Safawt dynasties, down to the beginning of the retgn of Aqa Muhammad Khan

The last year (1921) of the Kawa.

¹ Nos. 4-5, pp 24-6.

² Nos. 3, pp 3-5, and 4-5, pp. 3-4.

³ Nos. 3, pp. 5-11, and 4-5, pp. 8-15

⁴ Nos. 4-5, pp 7-8; 6, pp. 3-6; 8, pp. 5-10.

⁵ No. 7, pp 5-8.

⁶ No. 7, p. 4.

⁷ Nos. 11, pp. 7-12; 12, pp. 7-12.

⁸ No. 9, pp 4-5.

⁹ No. 12, pp. 3-5 The Khan-i- Walida is where most of the Persian merchants in Constantinople live or have their offices.

Qijar," written by Sayyid Muhammad 'AH Jamal-zada, also appeared as a monthly supplement, and showed very wide and judicious use of all available sources, both Eastern and Western. The sudden cessation of the paper after December, 1921, was a great loss to Persian learning and scholarship.

In June, 1922, there appeared at Berlin a new Persian literary and scientific review entitled Irdn-shahr, edited by Husayn Kazim-zada, which, though described as a "Revue...bimensuelle/" actually appeared only once a month. It is of a lighter and more popular character than was the Kdwa, and shows a more marked preference for matters connected either with pre-Islamic Persia, or with the problems with which the progressive Persians of today are confronted. No. 7 (December, 1922) contains a long article on the sending of Persian students to Europe, in the third section of which, "on the place and manner of study" (pp. 162-4), the writer argues that such students should go to England or Germany rather than to France, for the following reasons :

" We Persians (with the exception of the people of Adhar-bdyjan, whose nature and character agree better with those of the Anglo-Saxons), in respect to character, nature, capacity and mental tendencies, more closely resemble and approach the French, that is to say the Latin races, since quick and piercing intelligence, self-confidence, versatility of thought, wit and acuteness of perception, sociability and amiability in intercourse on the one hand, and inconstancy, fickleness of character, quickly-developed weariness and want of perseverance, recklessness, and lack of moderation in action on the other, are characteristic of the nature and disposition both of ourselves and of the French."

This view seems to have commended itself to the Persians generally, for while in August, 1922, there were seventy

The Irdn-shahr.

German education preferred to French for Persian students

Persian students in Germany, in the following December the number had increased to over 120¹.

In Persia itself the Press, paralysed for a time after the Russian aggressions of 1912, has resumed its activities, especially since the conclusion of the War; but

The post-War
Press of Persia

owing to the badness of the communications and the irregularity of the posts one has to be content with somewhat fragmentary information about it. No. 4 of the Kdwa for 1921 (pp. 15-16) contained a brief list of Persian papers and magazines which had come into being since the beginning of A.H. 1334 (November, 1915). These, forty-seven in number, were arranged alphabetically, the place of publication, name of the editor, and date of inauguration, being recorded in each case. Tihiran heads the list with eighteen papers, next comes Shiraz with seven, Tabrfz and Rasht with four each, and Isiahan, Mashhad, Kirman, Kirmanshah, Khuy, Bushire, Baku, Herat, Kabul and Jalalabad (the last three in Afghanistan) with one or two each. More than half of these papers (twenty-five) first appeared in A.H. 1338 (began on Sept. 26, 1919). That the list is far from exhaustive is shown by the fact that of nine Persian magazines of which copies were sent me by their editors or by friends, only two, the 'Alam-i-Niswdn' ("Women's World") and the 'Armaghdn' ("Gift"), appear in the above list. The latter is one of the best, containing many poems, including some by the late Adibu'l-Matndlik, and accounts of the proceedings of the "Literary Society" (Anjuman-i-Adabi) of Tihiran. The others are the Bahdr ("Spring"), very modern and European in tone, but including some interesting poems; the Fitruqh-i-Tarbiyat ("Lustre of Education"); the Danish ("Knowledge"), published at Mashhad; the Mimat u Hayat ("Death and Life"), entirely devoted to European inventions and material progress; the Firdawsi, edited and written by diplomes of the American College at Tihiran; the Pars, written half in

¹ trdn-shahr, No. 3, p. 55, and No. 7, p. 153.

Persian and half in French, which first appeared at Constantinople on April 15, 1921 ; and the Ganjina-i-Ma'drif ("Treasury of Sciences"), of which the first number appeared at Tabriz on October 24, 1922. None of these approach the Irdn-shahr, still less the Kawa, in excellence of matter or form. An exception should perhaps be made in favour of the Gul-i-Zard ("Yellow Rose"), which appeared in Tehran about the end of August, 1920, and in which the editor, Mirza Yahya Khan, used to publish the poems he composed under the nom de guerre of Rayhanf.

The establishment in Berlin of the "Kaviani" Printing-press (Chdp-khdna-i-Kdwaydni) owned and managed by Mirza 'Abdu'sh-Shukur and other Persians anxious to meet the growing demand for cheap, correct, and well-printed Persian books, marks another very important stage in the Persian literary revival; and at the present time there exists no other Press which can rival it in these respects. Besides modern plays and treatises on Music, Agriculture and the like, and tasteful editions of such well-known classics as the Gulistdn of Sa'df and the "Cat and Mouse" (Milsh u Gurba) of 'Ubayd-i-Zdkinf, the managers have had the spirit and enterprise to print such rare works of the great writers of old as the Zddu'l-Musdfirte ("Travellers' Provision") of Nasir-i-Khusraw, a book of which only two manuscripts (those of Paris and King's College, Cambridge) are known to exist; and are now (November, 1923) printing the Wajh-i-Din ("Way of Religion") of which the unique manuscript has recently been discovered at Petrograd, though books of this sort, recondite in character, costly to print, and unlikely to command a large sale, must almost inevitably be published at a loss. In Mirza Mahmud Ghanf-Zada the Press possesses a most competent scholar, who carries on the high traditions of criticism and accuracy established by Mirza Muhammad Khan of Qazwin.

The "Kaviani Press" in Berlin

Its great services to scholarship

INDEX

In the following Index where many reference-numbers occur under one heading the more important are printed in Clarendon type, which is also used for the first entry under each letter of the alphabet. To save needless repetition, all references to any name common to several persons mentioned in the text are brought together under one heading, the individuals bearing this name being arranged either in chronological order, or in order of importance, or in classes (rulers, men of letters, poets, etc.). The letter b. between two names stands for Ibn ("Son of. ."), and n. after the number of a page indicates a footnote. The addition m brackets of a Roman number after a name or book indicates the century of the Christian era in which the man lived or the book was written. Prefixes like Abii ("Father of. .") and Ibn ("Son of...") in Muhammadan, and de, le, von in European names are disregarded in the alphabetical arrangement, so that names like Abu Sa'id, Ibn Sina, le Strange, de Slane, etc., must be sought under S, not under A, I, L or D. Titles of books and foreign words are printed in italics. A hyphen preceding a word indicates that the Arabic definite article al- should be prefixed to it.

Aaron (Bdriin), 207, 217

Abarcnih, 55, 56

•Abbas, uncle of the Prophet Muhammad and ancestor of the 'Abbasid Caliphs (A.D. 750-1258), 23, 24, 41 n., 54 m, 127, 394, 424-5, 437-9; 'Abbas b. 'Ali b. Abi Tabb (perished with the Imam Husayn, his half-brother, at KarbaliC), 190, 192, 340; Shah — I Safawi (A.D. 1587-1629), 4, 5, 6-8, 9, 25, 28, 99, 100, 101, 102-112, 118, 119, 256, 258, 266, 364 n., 368, 369, 406, 407, 408, 426, 427 n., 428, 434; Shah — II Safawi (A.D. 1642-67), i n., 112, 264, 267; Shah — III Safawi (A.D. 1731-6), 113, 134-5; — Mirza (eldest and favourite son of Fath-'Ali Shah Qajar, d. A.D. 1833), 146, 155, 311, 313, 314" . 315, 468; — Efendi ('Abdu'l-Baha, q.v.), 217 n., 218 n., 220; — of Bistam (poet, better known as Fur'ughl and Miskin, q.v.), 328, 336; Hajji — (fictitious), 183, 185

'AbbdsdMd (near Isiahani), 266

Abddl (a class of the Rijalu'l-Ghayb, or "Men of the Unseen"), 469, 472 n.

Abdal Beg (renegade Christian painter), 283

Abdali Afghans, 125, 138

'Abdu'l-'Azfz Khdn (Afghan envoy to Constantinople, A.D. 1726-7), 131-2

'Abdu'l-BahaT Abbas Efendi, q v.), 207, 217n., 218n., 220

'Abdu'l-Baqi (adescendant of Sayyid Ni'inatu'llah, killed at Chaldira'n, A.D. 1514), 76; Sayyid — Tabib (poet, xviii), 283

'Abdu'l-Hamfd, Sultan — (xix-xx), 13 n., 467

'Abdu'l-Jabbar (artist at the court of Shah 'Abbas I), no

'Abdu'llah b. -Husayn b 'Ali b. Abf Tabb, 393; — Aftah (son of the Imam Ja'far-Sadiq), 391; — i-Shirazi (saint, xiii), 37; — Khan Uzbek (xvi), 105; — i-Yazdi, Mulla (xvi), 427; — i-Tunf, Mulla (xvn), 368; — Afghan (brother of Mir Ways, xviii), 125; Mirza —, physician (xvm), 283

'Abdu'l-Maifd Belshah (d. A.D. 19'3). 366 n.

'Abdu'l-Muhammad-Mahallatf (xix), 149

'Abdu'l-Mii'min Khan Uzbek (xvi), 104, 105

- 'Abdu'l-Muqtadir, Mawlawi — (xx), 448 n.
- 'Abdu'l-Qadir-i-Bada'uni (historian of Akbar, xvi-xvn), 243, 243, 249
- 'Abdu'r-Rahim Khan-khanan (xvi), 165, 245, 252
- 'Abdu'r-Rahman Bey Sheref (Turkish historian, xx), 71 n.
- 'Abdu'r-Razzaq-i-Lahiji, called Fayyaci (philosopher, xvn), 250n., 408-9, 426, 427, 435-6; — Khan (of the Cossack Brigade, A.D. 1907), 476-8, 481-2
- 'Abdu'sh-Shukur (proprietor of the "Kaviani" Press, Berlin, 1924),
- 'Abdu'l-Wahh'b Nashat (poet, d. A.D. 1828-9), 307, 311
- 'Abdu'l-Wasi'-i-Jabali (poet, xii), 299
- Abiward, 109
- Abraham {Ibrdhim}, 388, 389
- Abtin (legendary father of Firidun), 310 and n.
- Abwabii l-Jandn (A.D. 1645, by Mulla' Muhsin-i-Fayd), 407, 435
- "Accomplishments" (Kamdhyydt)" 26-j
- "Achmetes" (i.e. Ahmad Pasha), 70
- Acree, 15m., 154, 187 n. See "Akka A dab (newspaper), 346-7
- Adam, 207, 217, 388
- Ad-ham (poet, xvn), 267
- Adhar (poet and biographer). See Atash-kada, LutpAli Beg
- Adhar Kay wan (xvn), 258
- Adharbayjan, 45, 47, 5'. 55, 82, 87, 93, 104, 139, 279, 3'6, 347, 375n., 451, 462, 488
- Adib Sdbir (poet, xii), 299
- Adibu'l-MamaUik (poet and journalist, d. A.D. 1917), 303, 346-9, 484, 489
- ⁴ Add Shah Afshar (A.D. 1747-8), 116, 138, 141
- 'Adhyya (Ministry of Justice), 347
- Adonis, 188
- Adnanople, 76, 154, 237
- Adventure of Appledore Towers', 466x1, Advocates, The — (Wukald -yi-Mura-fa'a), 462
- Afdal of Qa'm, Mulla" — (xvi), 427
- Afghans, Afghanistan, 10, 24, 111, 115-118, 121-133, 135, 138, 139, 168, 278-9, 282, 450, 451, 484, 489
- Afliki (author of the Manaqibu'l-'Artfln), 35
- Afrasiyab, 13, 14, 414
- Africa, North —, 59
- Afshar, 52 n., 137
- Aftdb (newspaper), 347
- Aftahiyya sect, 391
- Agah (poet of Shiraz, d. A.D. 1828-9), 225n., 3n
- Agha (or Aqa), title given to eunuchs, 141
- Aghayefi, Ahmad Bey — (xix-xx), 346
- Agra, 255, 256, 266, 267
- Agradates, 465
- Ahar, 50
- Ahll (poet of Turshiz, d. A.D. 1527-8), 233-4; — (poet of Shiraz, d. A.D. 1535-6), 233-4
- Ahlu l-Buyiitd, 209 n.
- Ahlwardt, 358 n., 444 n.
- Ahmad-A'rabi, Sayyid — (ancestor of the Safawis), 33 n.; — b. 'All-Najashi (d. A.D. 1063), 355, 358, 405, — (son of Rashidu'd-Din Fadlu'lhCh (xiv), 33; — Mirza" (brother of Sluih Isma'fl I Safawi), 59; — Mhza" (another Safawi prince, put to death by Shah Isma'fl II in A.D. 1577), 99; — Khdn (ruler of Gfln, ctrcd A.D. 1567), 96; — Beg Aq-qoyrinlu, 58 n.; — Jan (envoy to Sultdn Salfm, A.D. 1514), 75; — b. Muhammad-Ardabilf, Mulld—, known as Muqaddas-i-Ardabili ("the Saint of Ardabil," d. A.D. 1585), 369, 406; — b. Abu'l-Fath (author of the Ahsanu'l-Qisas), 30; — i - Razi (author of the Haft Iqlm, composed in A.D. 1619), 448, — b. Zaynu'l-'Abidin-'Alawi (opponent of Xavier, xvn), 421; — Qazwlni (musician at Court of Shah 'Abdds I, xvn), no, — Hatif, Sayyid — (poet of Isiahan, xvn-xvin), 283-297, 305, — Pisha' of Baghdad {ctrcd A.D. 1732}, 134; — Khan Abdall, afterwards — Shah Durrani (A.D. 1747-73), 138, — b. Zaynu'd-Din-Ahsa'i, Shaykh — (d. A.D. 1827), 407, 410-411, 421-2, 429, 434; — Niraqf, Mulla — (d. A.D. 1828-9), 411; Wafiq (Vefiq) Pasha (Turkish scholar and man of letters, xix), 462; — Safa'i (son of the poet Yaghm'S), 338; — -l- Ruhi-i-Kirmanf (put to death in A.D. 1896), 468; — Bey Aghayefi (xix-xx), 346; Ahmad Shah Qajar, Suljin — (regnant), 158

 Ahmadabad (Gujerat), 45a
 Ahmadrnagar, 169 n.
 -Ahsa, 364
 -Ahssii See under Ahmadb. Zayntfd-Din (d. A. D. 1827) and Shaykhls Ahsanul-Qisas, 30 n.
Aksanut-Ta-wdrikh (composed in A.D. 1577). 5, 14, 20, 28n., 32 n., 43, 48n., 54~5⁶·5⁸n- 6 4 , 7' 7' 77 n., 78, 80-83, 85, 87, 88, 89, 92, 94, 98, 100, 168-172, 23 n., 413-415, 444
 'A'isha (wife of the Prophet Muhammad), 392
Alina-i-Haqq-numd (by Xavier), 421
 'Aja'ibti'l-Makhliqat (of -Qazwini), 448 n.
 -'Ajamf, Shrine of—, 46 n.
 Akbar (Moghul Emperor of India, A. D. 1556-1605), 92, 137, 165, 245, 249, 250
Akbar-ndma (poem by Faydi), 244
 AkhMri Sect, 374-6, 402-3, 407, 434
 Akhlaq-j-/a/i//; 424, 427; — -'Mahsini, 424; — -i-Ndsiri, 405, 424
 Akhlat, 58
Akhtar (newspaper), 157, 468; — Press, 344
 •Akka" (Acre in Syria), 15m., 154, 187 n.
Aksun (a black brocade), 209 n.
 'Alam-t-Niswdn (periodical), 489,
 'Alam-Shdh Begum (daughter of Uziin Hasan, xv), 47
 'Alamu'l-Huda" (d. A. D. 1044), 405.
 Alamut, 89, 102
 'Ala'u'd-Dawla Samnanf (xin), 37; — Dhu'l-Qadar (ctrcd A. D. 1510: the "Aliduli" of the Venetian travellers), 58, 61, 77n.; —. edition of Mathnaw named after —, 457
 'Ala'u'd-Din Mahmud (physician of Shah 'Abbas I), 427 Alchemist {Kimiyyd-gar} a Persian comedy) 462 and n. d'Alessandr, Vincentio — (A. D. 1571), 50 n., 85
 Alexander the Great (Jskandar-t-Rumi), 13-14, 52, 80n., 199, 209, 211 n., 246, 247, 270, 391
 Aliiyya of Ibn Malik, 363, 364
 Algebra (of 'Umar Khayyam), 425

«Ali b Abf Talib (First Imam of the Shi'a, cousin and son-in-law of the Prophet Muhammad, vn), 16, 17, 19, 28, 29, 32, 33n., 43, 44. 46. 52, 54. 58. 86, 87, 174-6, 178, 180, 192 n., 230, 235, 236, 248, 264, 356, 369, 385. 390, 391', 392, 418, 433; — b. -Husayn b. 'Ali, entitled Zaynu'l-'Abidin (Fourth Imam, vn-vn), 18, 179, 181 n., 347, 393; the Third Imam -Husayn had three sons named •Ali, distinguished according to their ages by the titles -Akbar, -Awsaj and -Asghar; -Akbar, 191, 93. 393, — -Awsat (identical with — Zaynhi'Abidin just mentioned) anci Asghar, 393; — Rida (Eighth Imam, vn-ix), 36/65, 87, 109, 394, 455, 456, — Naqi (Tenth Imam, ix), 394; Khwaja — (grandson of Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Din, d. A. D. 1427), 19, 45-6; doubtful identifications of him with Sayyid — -'Ajami, or — b. 'Alawi, buiied in Palestine, 45-46 and footnote; — Mirza\ or Sultan — (brother of Shah Isma'il I Safawi), 21, 48n., 49; Mir — Shir Nawa'i (d. A. D. 1501), 83, 163, 227, 234; — Beg Aq-qoyunhi, 58 n.; — Beg Chakarlii (Turkman Sultan, ctrcd AD, 1500, possibly identical with preceding), 51; Sidi— Ra'is (Turkish naval officer, A D. 1554-6), ion , —b 'Abdu'l-'Ali-'Amili, Shaykh Nriru'd-Din, called Muhaqqiq-i-Thani (d. A. D. 1533), 256, 406, 428; Sultan — Mir/a (Safawi prince, murdered by Shah Isma'fl. II in A. D. 1577), 99; — Pasha or Agha (envoy to Shah Tahmasp in A. D. 1562), 90-1; — Pashd (minister of Sultan Biyazfd II), 70 and note; Mulla" — Mudhahhib (teacher of Shaykh-i-Baha'i), 427, — Shah (early xvm), 284, — Mardank Mn (ctrcd A D. 1750), 139, Shaykh — Khdn (general of Karfm Khin-i-Zand, circa A D. 1760), 140, — Murad nephew of Karim Khan-i-Zand, d. A. D. 1785), 142; — Rida (historian of Zand dynasty), 140 n.; Mir Sayyid — of Isiahan, poetically surnamed Mushtaq, 283, 248;

- Mulla — Nilri (early xviii), 376, 437; — Akbar (poet of Shirdz, surnamed Bismil, author of the Tadhkira-i-Dilgushd, circa A.D. 1821), 304; — Ashraf (brother of the preceding, poetically surnamed Agah), 311; — Muhammad of Shiraz, called the Bab, q.v. (put to death in A.D. 1850), 150. Hajji — Khali-i-Maragha'i Hdjibu'd-Dawla, 153, 454; — Asghar b. — Akbar (lithographer, xix), 381
- 'All-i-quli Salm (poet at Akbar's Court), 166; Shalnhi (servant of Shall Isma'ill II -Safawi, xvi), 99; — Khan (general of Shah 'Abbas I), 104; — Khali (nephew and successor of Nachr Shall, A.D. 1747-8), 138; see also 'Adil Shah, supra
- "Ahdoh," or "Ahduh" (an Italian corruption of 'Ala'u'd-Dawla, q.v.), 58, 61
- 'Alldma-i-Hilli ("the Sage of Hilla"), whose proper name was Hasan b. Yusuf b. 'Ali b. Mutahhar (q.v.) and who died in A.D. 1325, 356, 406
- Alma Qulaghi, Battle of —; 82
- Alqas Mirza (brother of Shall Tahmasp, put to death in A.D. 1576-7), 81, 89, 93
- "Alumut" (an Italian corruption of Alwand, q.v.), 61
- Alwah ("Tablets," plural of Lawh),
- 423
- Alwand (prince of the "White Sheep" Dynasty, defeated by Shall Isma'ill I in A.D. 1503), 52, 55, 58, 61, 62, 68, 82
- Amaltil-Amilft 'Ulamtfijabal 'Amlt (xvn), 356, 359, 360, 449
- Amahi (poet of Mazandarin, d. A.D. 1651), 251, 258.
- Amaliu'lteh Khan (Afghan general, A.D. 1722), 130
- Amar, Emil — (translator of Kitdbu'l-Fakhrf), 444 n.
- Amaiya, 76
- America, 12, 150, 422, 489
- 'Aiml, Jabal — (in Syria), 360, 449
- Aminf (poet, xvi), 81
- Ammu'd-DinTibrsi'il (father of Shaykh Safiyyu'd-I)fn, xni), 32 n., 37
- Amirf, 303, 347. See above, Adibu'l-Matndlik
- Amfr-i-Kabfr, or Amfr Nizam (Mirzi Taqi Kh'n, d. A.D. 18[^]2), 152-3
- Amfr Nizam, Hasan 'Ali Khan-i-Garnisi (circa A.D. 1890), 347
- 'Amr and Zayd, 380 and n.
- Anatolia, 48, 70. See also Asia Minor
- Anatomy, 425
- Andakhud, 109
- 'Andaifb (Mirza' Husayn Khan, poet, xix), 309
- Angels, 384, 390, 394-8
- Angioletto (Venetian traveller in Persia, xv-xvi), 22, 47, 49, 60-61
- Anglo-French rivalry in Persia, 146
- Anglo-Persian War (A.D. 1856-7), 154, 450—Agreement (A.D. 1919, 157, 483
- Anglo-Russian rivalry in Persia, 147
- Anglo-Saxon character, 488
- Angora, 15
- Anjuman-i-Adabi ("Literary Society" of Tihran), 489;—%Khdqdn (biographies of poets), 298; — t-Ma'drif (Turkish Academy), 450
- 'Anqd (mythical bird), 263
- Anthropomorphism (tashbih), 17, 382
- Antichrist (Dajidl), 399
- Antinomiamsm (suqu-i-'ibddt), 382
- Ants, instinct in —, 440-1
- Aniisharwdn (Khusraw —, Sasanian king, vi), 52, 391, 401, 464. See also Nushlrwn
- Anwarf (poet, xn), 246, 284, 299, 348
- Anwdr-i'Suhayt, 83, 412
- Anwdrun Nu'mdntyya (by Sayyid Ni'matu'llali-Jaza'irf, A.D. 1678), 36m., 366
- Apostates, punishment of —, 402
- Apostles of Christ (Hawdrtyun), 207, 218
- Apotheosis (Ittihdd), 382
- Aqa Khan, 148-9
- 'Aqd'tdu'sh-Sh'a, 381-402
- Aq-qoyunlu Turkman dynasty. See White Sheep
- Arabia, Arabs, 18 (democratic tendencies), 77, 125, 388 (Prophets of —), 401 (idolatrous —): Arab conquest of Persia, 3, 14 n., 32, 122, 128, 485, 487
- Arabian Medicine, Philosophy and Science, 4'4"5, 437-44°
- Arabic language, 15, 359, 363, 388, 415-420, 425 n.
- Ibnu'l-'Arabf, Shaykh Muhyi'd-Din —.37

- 'Arabistan, 126, 129
A'r'di(Purgatory), 401
 Ardabll, 21, 28, 32, 33, 35, 36, 37, 41, 44, 45, 47, 48, 49, 50, 5>1,60, 67, 88, 109, 369, 370
 -Ardabflf, -Muqaddas —, 369, 406
Arda Vtrdi-ndma, 396 n.
 Ardistsdn, 307
 ArfaVd-Dawla, Mirza" Rida" Khan, 344 n.
 'Ānf of Qazwin (contemporary poet), 223, 345
 Aristotle, 201, 212
 Arjasp, 230. See Umfdi
 Arjawan (on the Caspian), 51
 Arjfsah, 58, 93
Armaghan (Persian magazine), 346 n, 489
 Armenia, Armenians, 49,128, 134,45/
Armenia and Erzeroum, by" the Hon. Robert Curzon, 152
 Arnold, Mathew —, 186
'ArsAyya, -Hikmatu'l- — (by Mulla" Sadrd), 430
 Art and Architecture during the Safavvi period, 24-25
 Artillery, 75, 93, 105, 106
 Arzinjan, or Erzinjan, 22, 52, 62, 75, 76, 77
 Asadi (poet, xi) 299; Salmndn-i — (contemporary student), 346 n.
 Asaf (Solomon's chief Minister), 310
 Ascension (Mi'rdj) of the Prophet, 390, 395
Asjdr of Mulla" Sadra", 419-430 and note
 -A'sha (Arabian poet), 284
 Ash'arl sect, 384
 Ash'ath b. Nafis, 392
 'Ashiq (poet of Isiahah, xvm), 283
 Ashraf, Mahk-i — (xiv), 45 ; — (place in Mazandardn), 109; — (Afghan prince, killed A.D 1730), 116, 131, 133; — (of Giliin, contemporary poet), 223, 345, 469
 Asian, Malik — (Dhu'l-Qadar dynas-'ty), 77 n.
Ashti-kunan, Kiicha-i- — ("Reconciliation Lane"), 475-6, 480
'Ashird (the 10th of Muharram, or Rtiz-i-Qatt), 29, 188. See aLo Ta 'ziya.
 Asia Minor, 16, 20, 44, 51, 67, 106. See also Anatolia
 Asma (Ja'da bmt-Ash'ath b. Nafis, vn), 392
Asmd'ur-Rtjal of -Najashi (d. A. D. 1063), 355
 Asrar, pen-name of Hajji Mulla" Hadi of Sabzawar (d. A.D. 1878), 326,411,437; — i-Khudi(" Secrets of the Self"), by Dr Muhammad Iqbal, 431 n.; — i-Qasimf, 442, — u'l-Hikam, by Hajji Multe Hidi of SabzawaY, 437, — u'sA-Shahddat ("Mysteries of Martyrdom"), 182, 188, 194
 "Assambei" (Italian corruption of Hasan Beg, or tiziin Hasan, q.v.), 48 Astdra, 51, 277, 478, 481
 Astarbabad, 56, 59, 109, 137, 234, 251, 428
 Astumar (supposed to be Lake Van), 49
Atash-kada (of Lutf-'AU Beg AdAar), 87 n., 231, 235, 236, 238, 241, 244, 251, 264, 266, 282-4
AthdrUH-Bildd (of -Qazwinf, xiii), 307 n., 448
 Ibnu 1-Athlr (the historian, xm), 118n.
 Atonement, Doctrine of — in Islm, 187, 188. See also Intercession
 'Attar, Shaykh Farfdu'd-Din — (xm), 220
 Ibn 'Attash, Ahmad —, execution of —, 222
 Attributes of God, 382-6
Atwaqu'lh-Dhahab of -Zamakhsharf, ' 317
 Austria, Austnans, 106, 452
Avesta, i4 n., 122, 465
 Avicenna (Shaykh Abu 'Ali b Sina), 201, 212, 257, 357, 425, 430-1, 438
 "Awakening of the Persians" (7V-rikh-i-Biddri-yi-lrdniydn, q.v.), 413
 'Awad-Khawwas (ancestor of Safa wis), 32 n., 36
 Awhadi(poet, xm-xiv), 267
 Awjif (poet, xvn), 267
 Awranzib (Moghul Emperor, A.D 1659-1707). 165
 Ayas Bey of Latakia (killed at Chaldirdn, A.D.1514), 76
 Aybu Khwaja (descendant of Chingiz Khan), 64 n.
i'Aynu'l-Hayat (by Mulla Muhammad Baqir-i-Majlisi, xvii), 409, 417
'AynuU-Kamdl (the Evil Eye so called), 117 n.

- Azad (Afghan ruler of Adharbayjan, xviii), 139-140; — (poet, xix), 225 n.
- Azalis, 187 n., 423
- Azhar, University of — in Cairo, 377, 416
- Azhidahaka {Dahhdh of the Muslim writers}, 14 n.
- 'Azimabad, 452
- 'Azfu'llih, Mosque of Aqa Sayyid —, 475i 480
- 'Azra'il (the Angel of Death), 389, 395
- Azraqf (poet, xi), 299
- Baal, Priests of —, 188
- Bab (Mirza' 'Ali Muhammad of Shiraz, put to death in A.D. 1850), and his followers the Babis, 121, 122, 147, 140-151, 153-4, 156, 162, 18711., 194-220 (poem), 329, 354, 355, 380-1, 399n., 403, 4 " . 415, 420-3, 430, 446
- Ibn Bdbawayhi (eminent Shi'a theologian, d. A.D. 991-2), 358, 377, 405, 448
- Bab-el-Wad (Hebron), 46 ad cak.
- Babil (grandiather of Shaykh Zahid of Gflsin), 42
- Babmger, Dr F. —, 35 n., 44 n., 45 n., 46 n., 47 n.
- Babu'llah ("the Gate of God," 'Ali so called), 385
- Babur (Timiind founder of the Moghul Empire in India, d. A.D. 1530-1), 63, 64, 66, 74 n., 85, 91, 92, 234
- Babylon (meaning Baghdad, q v.), 112
- BadakhshaVi, 322, 451
- Bada'uni (author of the Muntakhabu7-Tawdr/kh), 165
- Badhlu'r-Rahman, Professor —, 440
- Badi'u'z-Zaman Mirza" (Timiind prince), 55, 64, 77, 99
- Badru'd-Din Muhammad (father of the poet 'Urfi), 245
- Bafq, 238
- Baghdad, 24, 30-31, 55, 58, 62, 93, 106, ii2, 137, 134, 140, 149, 154, '35'236, 279'280, 321, 364, 364, 425,
- Baha'i, a follower of BahduCildh, q.v. Shaykh-t —, 28. See Baha'u'd Din-'Amili, infra
- Bahar (contemporary poet), 223, 345; 469; — (newspaper), 469
- BahaVd-Dawla, Bahman Mirza¹ — (xix), 149, 450 n.
- Baha'u'd-Din-'Amili, Shaykh — (theologian, d. A.D. 1621-2), 28, no., 250, 253, 278, 364, 366, 372, 407, 408, 426-8, 429
- Baha'u'lU'h, Baha'fs, 151, 187 n., 194-220 (poem), 354, 415, 420-3; — "the Splendour of God" (book by Ibralifm Khaynrillah), 214 n.
- Bahjatu'r-Rawdj* (treatise on music), 223 n.
- Bahman Mirzsl. See above under Bahd'u'd-Dawla
- Bahram Giir (Sasanian King), 466; — Mirza (son of Bad(u'z-Zaman Mir-d), 99; — Mirza' (son of Shah Tahmasp, xvi), 81, 88-9
- Bahrmdabaci (near Kirman), 126
- Bahrayn, 125, 356, 360, 364, 374, 421 433
- BahruVUhim (Sayyid Muhammad Mahdi of Burujird, d. arcd A.D. 1825), 410
- Bajazet, 70; a corrupt spelling of Bdyazt'd, q.v.
- Bakhtiya, is, 139
- Bald Aqa (daughter of Uzun Hasan), 47
- Abu Bakr (the First Caliph, vn), 17, 22, 53, 54, 74, Son, 94, 95, 104, 391, 392, 418
- Baku, 52, 109, 130, 135, 346, 347, 489
- Ba'labakk (Baalbek), 407, 42S
- Bal'amf (translator of -Tabari's history into Persian), 412
- Balance {Mt'zan}, 400
- Balkh, 51, 55, 82, 109
- Balkhi (schismatic), 384
- Baliichistan, Baliichis, 24, 128 n., 133
- Bam, 149
- Bandar-i-'Abba's, 279, 280
- Bang* (Cannabis Indica, Hashish), 87 m, 470, 473
- Bankipore Library, 358
- Banna'i (poet, killed m A.D. 1512), 63. 83, 94, 227
- Baptist Mission Press, Calcutta, 358 n.
- Baqaf'f (poet, rival of Hilalf, xvi), 235
- Baqiyatu'llaTi ("the Remnant of God," the Imam Mahdiso called), 394
- Bardhinu7-'Ajatn* (by Sipih), 326
- Barahut, Wadi —, 397 and note
- Barbad (minstrel of Khusraw Parwiz), 221
- Barbaro, J osepho—(Venetian traveller, xv), 10

- Barbier de Meynard, 462
Bar-bitan (the seven great noble families of Ancient Persia), 209 n.
 Barfk Parnalc (ruler of 'Iraq-i-'Arab about A.D. 1500), 5'
 Barkhiya (father of Asaf, Solomon's Prime Minister), 310 and note
 Barniqi, Shamsu'd-Dm —, 44
 St Bartholomew, Massacre of —, 72
 Barzakh (the "World of the Barrier"), 395, 397
 -Basasirf (xi), 54 and note
 Basra, 200, 210, 279, 363, 429
 "Bassa" (»i.e. Pasha), 70
 Ibn Batuta (traveller, xiv), 27
Baydn, Persian — (by the Ba"b), 150, 197, 472
 Bayandari, 67 and note, another name for the "White Sheep" [Jq-Qoytin/ti] dynasty, q.v.
 Bayazid of Bistdm (saint and mystic), 336, 357; — II (Ottoman Sultan, A.D. 1482-1512), 9, 57, 65, 67-9, 70, 71, 72, — son of Sulayman I (Ottoman Prince, A.D. 1562), 89-91
 Bayburt, 76
 Bayram Beg (Humay'm's envoy), 57; — Khan-Khanan (murdered in A.D. 1561), 165, 245
 Baysunghur, or Baysunqur (of the "White Sheep" dynasty), 49-50, 58 n.
 Bayt Mahsir (Hebron), 46 n.
 lbnu'l-Baytdr (botanist), 441
Bazm-z-Wtsdl, 317
 lbnu'l-Bazzaz (author of Safwatu's-Safd, xiv), 34 Bear, the Thief-catching — {Khirs-i' Quldiir-ddsdn, Persian comedy), 462 Bedr ed-Dln der Sohn des Richters von Stdw by b. Babinger, 44n., 48n.
 Beer, Ernst —, 140 n., 445 n.
 Bees, Habits of — observed by Mir Dmad, 428-9
 Belfour, F. C. —, 115, 277
 Benares, 115
 Bengal, Asiatic Society of —, 358
 Berlin, 13 n., 425, 483-9
 Bethune, Sir Henry Lindsay —, 147
 Bfbl Fatima (wife of Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Din, xin), 42
 -Bidd (doctrine of —), 385
 Bidibdd (quarter of Isiahan), 410
 Bf-dil (poet), 178, 269
BihdruH-Anwdr (by Mulla" Muham-mad Baqir-i-Majhsi), 359, 366 n., 409, 417
 Bihbihani, Muhammad 'Ali —, 420
 Bihzad (artist, circa A.D. 1500), 25
 -Bfnini, Abii Rayhan — (xi), 357, 449
Bhh bdd, kam ma-bdd (a curse), 54
 Bismil, Mirza 'Ali Akbar of Shiraz (poet, circa A.D. 1821), 304-5, 311, 317; Murgh-i- —, 166 n.
 Bistam, 328, 336, 455
 Bitlis, 58
 "Blasi," 62
 Blochet, E. —, 444 n.
 Blochmann, Zion., 2490.
 Blunt, Wilfrid Sea wen —, 196
 de Boer, Dr T. J. —, 424 n., 425, 426 n.
 Bolsheviks, Bolshevism, 371, 487
 Bombay, 149
 Bosphorus, 467
 British Legation at Tihiran, 370; — Museum, 457. See Edwards, Rteu.
 Brockelmann's Gesch. d. Arab. Litt., 57 n., 440 n.
 Brydges, Sir Harford Jones —, 142-4, 146
 Btidaq Sultan (father of Shaybak or Shaybani Khan), 64 n.
 Buddhists, 258
 Buhlul (the "Wise fool"), 387
 BuymSrd, 455
 Bukhara, 51, 64, 136, 250, 258, 265, 269, 282 n.
 Buldq, 253
 Bulghay (descendant of Chingfz Kha'n), 64 n.
 -Biini, Shaykh — (occultist), 442
 Bunker, Mr — (Lunatic at Large), 322
B6q-i-Wakdat, 473 n.
 Buqrat (Hippocrates), 201
Btiqu'l-'Isq (poet, xvi), 97
 Burhan (Nizsim Shah, A.D. 1508-'55)t 169 n.; — (descendant of Shirwan-shah, ctrcd A.D. 1549), 96; — u'd-Din, Qadi — [ctrcd A.D. 1384], 406
 Bury, Professor J. B. —, 186 n.
 Busbecq, n, 93
 Bushaq (poet of Shiraz), 241
 Bushire (Abu Shahr), 489
Bustdnu's-Siydhat (A.D. 1831-2), 45°-2
 Buwayhid (or Daylamite) dynasty, 3, 8, 30-31, 54 n.

- Buzghush, Shaykh — of Shiraz, 41
 Byron, 227
 Byzantine Empire, 80 n.
- Caesarea, 23, 76
 Cam (Qabil), 207, 217
 Cairo (-Qahira), 425, 469
 Calcutta, 469
 Caliph (A"yW//a), Caliphate (Khildiat), 3, 11, 13, 15, 16, 17, 24, 58, 104, 136-7, 131-2, 348, 363, 391; Cursing of first three Caliphs, 53-54, 58, 74, 104, 135, 363
 Calligraphy, History of — (Khatt u Khattatan), 450 (by Mirza Habib), 457 (by Mirza-yi-Sangl&kh)
 Cambridge University Library, 1511., 49n., 51 n., 52 n., 53 n., 55, 56 m, 59 n., 63 n., 65 n., 77 n., 194 n., 431
 Cambyes (Kambujiya), 465
 Canaan (Kan'dn), 207, 217 and note
 Canopus (Suhayl), 184, 185
 Capuchin Mission (Isiahan), 9
 Carabas (corruption of Qaid-bdgK), 49
 Caramania (Qaramdn), 48
 Carmel, Mount—, 204, 214
 Cartwright (xv), 10
 Cashmere (Kashmir), no, 245, 451
 Caspian Sea, 6, 42, 51, 62, 116, 130, 139
 Catholicism, Persian converts to —, 6
 Caucasus, 347, 451
 Cawnpore (Kdnpur), 28 m.
 Cellini, Benvenuto —, 303
 Chaghatay Turks, 234
Chahdr Maqdla ("the Four Discourses," xii), 196-7, 209 n., 412, 434 n.
Chahar-sitiq (cross-roads), 95 n
Chahar-tdiri (player on four-stringed lute), 110 and note
Chahil Sutiin (palace at Isiahan), 92
 Chakarl, 'Alî Beg—(Turkmanluler, xv), 51
Chakma wa shalwdr (boots and breeches), 320, 322
 Chawal, Husayn Kiya-yi— (ruler of Samnan about A.D. 1500), 55, 56
 Chaldiran, Battle of — (Aug. 23, 1514), 9, 24, 57, 73, 75-7.82
Changl (harper), 110 and note
Charand-parand ("Charivari"), 469-482
 Chardin (the Chevalier —), 10, 20, 113,115
- "Chasan Chehie," 70. See Hasan Khalifa
 Chelsea, 221
 Chighala-zada Sinan Pasha (Turkish geneial, circd A.D. 1603), 106
 China (Chin, Sin), 128, 202, 205, 21 m, 212, 215, 451
 Chingfz Khan, 3, 64 and note, 94, 322
Chrestomathie Persane (by M. Ch. Schefer), 9n.
 Christ, 187, 420. See Jesus ('Jsd)
 Chnstensen, Dr Arthur —, 487
 Christians, 6, 7, 9, 112, 113, 123, 137, 187, 188-9, 293-4, 314 n, 401, 421, 422, 434, 452 See also Georgians, Missionaries
 Cicala, 106
 Circassians, 101
 Clavijo, 41 n., 57
 Clements Markham, 4 m.
 Clive, Lord —, 186
 Clouston, J. Storer —, 322 n.
 "Committee of Defence," 484
 Communism (Ibdhat), 382 and note
 Comneni, 47
 Constantinople, 11,65, 66n, 76, 77n., 89, 93 n, 94, 104, 130, 131, 133, 157, 158, 164 n, 173 n, 344, 450, 452, 468, 487, 490
 Contanm, Ambrosio —, 10
Continens of Rhazes (-Hiwf of -Razi, x), 438-9
Controversial Tracts, etc., by Professor Samuel Lee, 421
 Copenhagen, 487
 Cossacks, 48011, 481
 Court Directory, Persian —, 454-6
 Cowley, Lord —,154
 Creasy's History of the Ottoman Turks, 1 i n, 75, 90 m, 93
 Crimea, 76, 103
 Croesus, 209 n.
 de la Croix, Petis —, 10
 "Cudi de Lac," 101 n
 Cuneiform writing (khatt-i-mikhi), 466
 Curds, 58 n See JFurdr
 Cureton, 15 n
 Curzon, Hon. Robert —, 152; Lord — of Kedleston, 92 n, 109, 132 n.
 Cyaxares, 465
 Cynic (Kalbi), 200, 201
 Cyprus, 154, 464 m
 Cyrus, 464, 465
- Dabistan, 258, 436
 Daghistan, 269

- Dahhak, 14
 Dd'i (court-poet of Shah 'Abtas, xvi), no, — (poet, d A.D. 1742-3), 282
 Dajjal (Antichrist), 399 Dakhaw (contemporary poet and writer), 223, 345, 469-482 Daldhl-i-Sab'a ("Seven Proofs" of the Bab), 422
 Damad, Mir Muhammad Ba'qir
 (philosopher and theologian, d.
 A.D. 1630), no, 250, 252, 256-7, 372, 406-7, 408, 426-9
 Damascus, 179, 406
 Damawand, 455
 DamghiCn, 133, 456
Damir (thought-reading), 434 n.
 Damiri (poet, xv), no
 Dandm, George —, 462
 Daniel (the Prophet), 204, 214
Danish (newspaper), 489
 Daia, Darab, 13, 14
 Dirab [jird], 59, 218n.
 Darband, 48, 60, 109, 130, 134, 135
 Darmesteter, James —, 122
Daru'l-Funiin (College at Tihnan),
 155, 441, 458
Ddriis-Salbm, 204 See Baghdad
Ddru't- Tarjuma (Translation Bui eau), 347
 Darv\ mian theory, 21 m.
 Dastan, Mirza Ibrahim — (son of the poet Yaghma), 338 Dasturu'l-Inshd (by Sa'i 'Abdu'llah,
 d. A.D. 1668), on.
DastumU-Wuzara(by Khwdndamir,
 A D. isro), 447
 Davies, John—, 114
 Ddwart (poet, xix), 163, 300-301,
 319-322
 Dawlati (wife of Aminu'd-Dm Jibrd'il and mother of Shaykh Safiyyu'd-a>m), 37 Dawlatshdh (author of "Memoirs of the Poets," A D. 1550), 447
 Dawlat Shaykh, 64 n.
 Death slain, 401
 Deccan, 168, [69, 253, 259, 266, 267, 269, 365
 Delhi. See Dihli
 Democracy, Arabian —, 18
 Dengiz Beg Shamlu (envoy of Shdh 'Abbas, put to death A D. 1613-4), 6n,
 Derenbourg, M. Hartwig —, 444 n.
 Despina Khatun ("Despinacaton"),
 47 Determinism (Jabr). See Fatalism
Deutsh-Perstche Gesellschaft, 486 n.
Development of Metaphysics in Persia
 (by Shaykh Muhammad Iqbal),
 430 n, 431, 436
 Devil, 384
 Abu Dharr, 208, 218
Dharra u Khurshid (poem by Zutelf,
 d. A.D. 1614-5), 252 Dhu'l-Fiqar Khan of Samnan (patron of Yaghma), 337
 Dhu'l-Qadar (Tuikish tribe), 52 n., 58, 77, 104, 414
 Dhu'l-Qarnayn, Son. See Alexander
the Great Dhu'n-Niin, Amir — (ruler of Qandahar about A D. I=00), 55
 Dhu'r-Rumma (Arabian poet), 357 Diego, Don — of Persia (about A.D.
 1600), 6
 Dihlf (Delhi), 28, 91, 92, 136, 168, 169, 266, 281
 Dijla (the Tigus), 321
 Dilgusha\ Garden of— at Shiraz, 221
Dindr, 410 n.
 Din Muhammad Sultan Uzbek (xvi), 92
 Divine Right of Kings, 18
 Diya (Ziya) Pasha" (xix), 164 n., 173, 242
 Dryar Bakr, 47, 55, 58, 69, 82, 106
 Duful, 46, 59, 279
 Doe, John —, 380
 "Dog of the Threshold of 'Ali," or
 "of the Immaculate Ima"ms," 354, 369
 Donisthorpe, Horace —, 440
 Dorn, Bernard —, 30, 450 n
 Doyle, Sir Arthur Conan —, 467
 Dreams, Shah Tahmasp's —, 86-8
Droit Musulman by M. Amadae
 Query, 377-8
Dugh-i-Wahdat, 473 n
 Dunlop's Perzie, 10, 129
Duna-i-Nddiri (by Mirza Mahdi Khan of Astarabad), 445
 Dutch, 10, 129, 280
 Ecbatana (Hagmatana, Hamadan),
 465
 Edom, 204, 214
 Edwards, Ldward —, 304n., 330n., 335, 379, 453, 46211
 Egypt, 11, 14n., 24, 69, 77, 416, 427,
 451, 453
 Elephant, Year of the —, 391

- Elias, Ney —, 64 n.
 Elizabeth, Queen —, 85, 92, 412
 Ellis, A. G. —, 5, 14n., 34, 35, 43n., 54n., 55ⁿ, 5ⁿ n., 71 n., 414
Engineer's Thumb (by Sir A. Conan Doyle), 467
 England, 5, 105, 107, 146, 147, 154, 156, 452, 488
 Enoch (Idris), 390
Envoutement, 375
 Ephialtes, 476-7, 480-1
 Epirus, 72
 "Epistles to the Kings" (Alwdk-t-Saldin), 423
 Envan, 109, 130, 135, 137
 Erlangen, 425
 Erskme, W. —, 57 n., 64, 85, 91, 170 n.
 Erzeroum, 135, 152; Treaty of —, 146
 Erzmdn, 22. See Atzinjd
 "Essential meanings of words," 409
Estat de la Perse en 1660, 9, 20 n., H5> u6
 Ethe, Professor Hermann —, 25, 168, '33ⁿ, '34, 264 n., 265
riitourdi (Moliere), 459
Euclid, 201, 212
 Eunuchs, 141
 Euphrates (Furdt), 341
 Euphuists, 412
Europe (monthly review), 153 n.
 Europeans, Persian view of —, 452; — as instructors in Persia, 458, —, their ships highly esteemed, 280
 Evil not created by the Devil, 384
 Evil Eye (Aynu'l-Kamd), H7n., 216n., 274 n.
 Executions, compulsory attendance at —, 108
 Abu'l-Fadl (Akbar's Minister), 242, 249, 252, — b. Idris of Bitlis, 72
 Fairchild, Blair —, 222
Fakhri KitabuH- —, 127, 180 n., 443-4
FakhruU-Muhaqqiqin[^] 406
 Famagusta (Cyprus), 464 n.
 -Fdra'bi, AbtS Nasr — (philosopher), 257, 449
 Farahabad (near Isiahan), 128, 129,
 Farahan, 303, 311
 Abu'l-Faraj-i-Rilni (poet), 246, 299
Faras-ndma (by Shaykh 'Ali Hazin), 278
 Farazdaq (Arabic poet), 357
 Farghana, 64
 Farhad Mirza (uncle of Nasiru'd-Din Shall), 157, 312; — Pasha' (Turkish General, xvi), 104; — u Shirin (romantic poem by Wahshi and Wisal), 238, 317, 319
 Farbang (Mirza' Abu'l-Qasim, poet, of Smraz, xix), 300, 319, 322-5
 Ibnu'l-Fdnd (Egyptian mystic and poet), 357
 Faridu'd-Din 'Attar (mystical poet, xiii), 357, 449; — Ahmad Taftazani (d. A.D. 1510), 63, 69
 Farman-farma (grandson of Fath-'Ali Shah), 146
Farqaddn ("Guard-stars"), 295 and note
 Farrukh Khan (Persian plenipotentiary at Pans in A.D. 1857), 154, 450; — Yasar (Shirwan-shah, killed in A.D. 1500), 22, 52, 60, 82
 Farrukhi (poet, xi), 265, 299
 Fars (province), 49, 56, 57, 59, 60, 82, 134, 225, 283
 Fasih (poet, xvi), 243
 Fatalism (jabr), 382, 384 n., 385, 386-7, 424
 Fath-'Ali Shdh Qajar (A.D. 1797-1834), 115, 145-6, 298, 303, 304, 305, 309- 311- 314n . 315n, 368, 374-6, 411; — Khdn Qajar (circa A.D. 1728), 132, 139; — Khan of Kashdn (poetically surnamed Sabd, q.v.), 309-310; — i-Darbandi(xix), 462
 Abu'l-Fath Beg Bayandari (ruler of Kirman, circa A.D. 1500), 55; — -Husayni (xvi), 34-5; — (son of Karim Khan-i-Zand, xvm), 142; — of Gilan (Hakim, xvi), 245
 Fathi (rhapsodist at Court of Shah 'Abbas the Great), 110; — (Indian poet), 267
 Fatima (daughter of the Prophet Muhammad, wife of 'Ali, and mother of the Imams al-Hasan and al-Husayn, vn), 17, 18, 29, 32, 33 n., 176 n., 178, 180, 182, 185, 190, 192, 391, 392, 400 n., 451; — -Kubra and Sughra (daughters of the Imam-Husayn), 181, 393
 Fatimid Caliphs, 54 n., 98
Fatwa (legal decision), 372
Fawd'id-iSafawiyya (composed A.D. 170-7), 444

- Fawa 'idu'l-Madaniyya* (by Mulla Muhammad Amin, d. A.D. 1623-4). 374
- Fayd, Mulla' Muhsin-i —. See under Muhsn
- Faydl (Fayzf, Feyzf, poet at Akbar's Court, d. A.D. 1595), 163, 164, 167, 242-5, -249, 267
- Fayyad, 'Abdu'r-Razzaq-i-Lahiji (theologian and philosopher, xvii), 250 n., 408-g, 435-6; Sultan — (heretic suppressed by Shah Isma'fl, circa A.D. 1508), 59
- Felenk and Felenk (factions), 119
- Ferdinand, the Archduke, n, 93
- Feuvner, Dr —, 371
- Fig, Valley of the —, 214, 219
- Fighdnl, Balxi — of ShinCz (d. A.D. 1519), 164, 229-230, 242
- Figuerosa, Don Garcias de Silva —, TO
- Fihrist* (of -Trisi, xi), 355, 405
- Fin (near Keshan), 56, 152
- Fmdanski, Mir Abu'l-Qasim-i- — (d. circa A.D. 1640), 250, 257-8
- "Firangi ambassador" at the Court of Yazfd, r88
- Firangis Khanum (daughter of Shah Isma'll, xvi), 81 n
- Firdawsl (poet, xi), 13, 228, 229, 299, 309; — (magazine), 489
- Firfdiin (legendary Persian king), 12, 13, 14, 310; — Bey (compiler of Turkish State Papers, xvi), 8, 12, 13 n, 66-9, 73-80, 88 n., 91, 93 n
- Firuzkuh, 55, 56, 455
- Flriiz Mir7d (A.D. 1840), 149
- FirtiishAh-t-Zarr/n-Kulak* (ancestor of Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Din), 32 n., 36
- Fishing as a pastime, 51
- Five Years tn a Persian Town* (by Napier Malcolm), 195
- Flttgel, 66 n.
- Fonahn, Dr Adolf —, 439
- Forbes's Persian Grammar % 387 n.
- "Four Books" of the Shl'a, 359, 405
- "Fourteen Immaculate Ones" (Chahardah Ma'siim, I e the Prophet, Fatima, and the Twelve Imims), 400
- France, 5, 6, 146, 153, 450
- Franks (Firangi), 275, 283
- Frederick Duke of Holstem, 114
- Free Will, 15, 384-5, 386-7, 424
- French, 226-7, 371, 452, 45⁸, 4⁸8', — language, 10, 323-5. 459", 465. 490; — Legation at Tihiran, 378
- Fudiili (Fuzrllf), poet of Baghdad (d. A.D. 1562-3), 236-7
- Fdlad-Oghlan (descendant of Chmgiz Khan), 64 n
- Furat (Euphrates), 340
- Furiighl of Qazwin (court-poet of Shah 'Abbas, xvii), no; — of Bistam (xix), 26, 168, 225, 307 n., 326, 328, 336-7
- Funigh-i-Tarbiyat* (magazine), 489
- Furtighu'd-Dawla (son of Hasan 'Ali Mirza' Shiyav? s-Sallana), 328
- Gabr (guebre), 80 n., 95, 126, 179
- See also Marian, Zo? oastnan
- Gabriel (Jibra'ft), the Archangel, 175, 177, 229, 291, 294 n., 297, 388, 389» 390
- Ganja, 99, 104, 109, 134, 229
- Ganj-i-Danish* ("the Treasure of Learning," published in 1887-8), 456-7
- Ganjina* of Nashit (d. A.D. 1828-9); — -i-Ma'drif (magazine), 490
- Gardanne, General —, 146
- "Gates" (Abwab), 150. See Bdb
- Gawhar-i-Murdd* ("the Pearl of Desire," by 'Abdu'r-Razzaq-i-Lahiji), 408, 435
- Gedik Pasha, Theatre of — at Constantinople, 464 n.
- Genoa, 6
- Georgia, Georgians, 37, 44, 52, 95, 103, 104, 107, 123, 134, 137, 140, 144, 298, 375 n.
- Germany, 5, 6, 13 n., 128, 153, 483-9; people of —, 425, 463, language of—10,12
- Geschichte der Arabischen Aerzte* (by Wustenfeld), 440 n.; — der Chaltfen (by Weil), 54n., — der Mediztn (Max Neuburger), 438
- Ghahb, Sayyid Muhammad Husayn (poet, xviii), 283
- Ghanl-zida, Mirza MahmiSd —, 490
- Ghaybt ("Occupation" of the Twelfth Inruim), 150, 381, 398-9
- Ghazala, 393. See Shahrbanu
- Ghazili, 449
- Ghazan Khan (xiv), 18, 41
- Abu'l-Ghdzi Husayn b. Bayqari, Sultan — (Timund, xv-xvi), 63, 64. 69, 77, 83

- Ghazna, 228; House of—, 3, 18
 Ghuiduwan, Battle of— (A.D. 1512), 66
Ghuldt (extreme Shi'a), 17, 58, 385, 395i 452
 Ghiirf, Sultan — (of Egypt, xvi), 69
 Ghuriydnf, Khwaja Kalan— (xvi), 97
 Ghuzz Turks, 348
 Gibb, E. J. W. — (History of Ottoman Poetry), 13 n., 20 n., 89 n., 107 n., 163 n., 164 n., Zion., 236-7, 242, 250, 265, 462 n., 464 n.
 Gibbon (Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire), 186
 Gflan, 19, 36, 50, 96, 104, 130, 134, 135, 223, 237, 238, 277, 279, 280, 45', 469; dialect of— (Gflaki), 43
 Gilkhwara, 36 n. See Kalkhordn
 Giustimani, Nicolo — (A.D. 1514), 72
 Gobmeau, M. le Comte de —, 147 n., 153, 403, 423, 430 n., 431, 435, 436
 Gog and Magog (Yajuj iva Mjijij), 211 and note, 400
 Goldziher, Prof. Ignaz —, 424 n.
 Good and Evil, Problem of—, 384-5 Gospels {Injd, Ingilyun), 137, 204, 214, 388 di Govea, Antonio —, 10
 Grahame, George —, 190, 198, 222
Grand Maitre des Assassins, un —, by S. Guyard, 149 n
 Grebaïodofi (Russian Minister murdered at Tihran, Feb. 11, 1829), 146, 3'2
 Greeks, 47, 475-481; Philosophy and Science of the —, 219, 424-5, 437-8, 457
 Green birds of Paradise, 395, 397
 Grey, Charles —, 48 n., 49 n.
 "Guard-stars" (Farqaddn), 295 and n.
 Guebre, 80 n. See Gabr, Magian, Zoroasinan
 Gujerat, 168, 169, 252
 Guhstan (place), 52, 146; (book) 269, 326, 335, 490
Gul-i-zard (magazine), 490
 Gulkhanddn (fortress), 56
 Gulnabad, Battle of — (March 8, 1722), 126-8
Gulshan-'-Mahmud, 298;—i-Rdz, 37;—i-Sabd, 309
 Gurgdn (Jurjdn), 130, 234
 Gurgin Khan, 123-4
Guzdnsh 1 -Mardum-guriz (Persian version of le Misanthrope), 459
Gyawur ("giaour"), 80 n. See Gabr
 Gyuk Chay (near Siwas), 71
 alabfb, 328, 332 (the early pen-name of Qd'dnl, a.v.); Mirza — of Isiahan (xix), 450; Shaykh — Ahmad (contemporary), 442, — u's-Styar (by Khwdndamfr, A.D. 1523), 445
HabluH-Matin (newspaper), 469
 Hadhiq (poet, xvn), 267
 Hadi, HUIJI Mulla — of Sabzawar (philosopher, d. A.D. 1878), 326, 409, 411, 426, 430, 431, 436-7; Hajji bhaykh — [-i-Najmabadi], 471, 474
 Hadiqatu I-Haqlqa (by Sand'i), 256; — 's-Sifadd (by Fudull), 237
 Hdiiz (of Shiraz, xiv), 25, 122, 216 n., 222, 268, 299, 348, 38211., 38311.; — Pasha (A.D. 1625), 107; — (title of Qur an-reciters), no
Haft-band (of Muhtasham), 173-7; — Iqlim (of Amfn Ahmad-i-Razi), 23 m., 234, 235, 241 n., 448 and note;—A'ishwat (of Faydi), 244; — Manzar (of Hatifi), 229; — Paykar (of Ni/dmi), 229; — Sin ("the seven S's"), 333 n.
 Haggard, W. H. D. —, 462
 Hajibu'd-Dawla, Hdjji 'All Khan —, 153» 454
 Hajji Baba (Moner's), 195, 468, — Khalifa ("KyatibChelebi"), 66 n.; — Mirza Aqdsi, 147, 149, 151, 329
 Ibnu'l-Hajib, 362
 Hakim, Mirza Mahmiid — (poet and physician, son of the poet Wisal, d. A.D. 1851), 300, —, Muhammad Taqi Khan (A.D. 1887), 456-7
 Hakluyt Society, 41 n., 481, 49 n., 50 n., 57 n., 60 n., 85 n., 90 n
 Halaki (poet of the time of Shdh 'Abbds), no
 Hdlati (poet of the time of Shdh 'Abbas), no
 Halevy, 397 n.
 "Half the World" (NisJ-i-Jahdn, "Medio Mundo"), Isiahan so called, 4
 Halima (daughter of tfzun Hasan), 47
 Hamadan (Hagmatana, Ecbatana), 57, 82, 89, 109, 130, 132, 134, 258, 279, 451, 464, 465
Hamasa, 270
 Hamerton, P. G. —, 226

- von Hammer, 66 n., 71 n., 73, 73
Hamza, Abu'l-Qdieim — (son of the Seventh Imam MiisdKazim), 33 n., 36', — ("White Sheep" dynasty), 58 n.; — (son of the Safawi Shah Muhammad Khuda-banda, d. A.D. 1586), 101, 102
Ibnu'l-Hanafiyya (son of 'Ali b. Abi Tilib), 17, 39i
Hanauer, Rev. Canon J. E —, 46 n.
Ibn Hanbal (Ahmad b. Muhammad —, A.D. 855), 353
Abu Hanifa (d. A.D. 767), 353, 357
Han way, Jonas — (xvm), 4, 112, 116, 118, iipn., 126, 127, 129, 130n., 132 n., 134, 136
Haqu'l-Yaqin (by Mulla' Muhammad Baqir-i-Majhsi), 381, 417, 418
Haram. See Holy Cities, Mecca, -Madina
Hardra (a kind of ballad), 222
Harfi (poet of Isiahan), 237
Harford Jones Brydges, Sir —, 142-6
Harimu'r-Rashid, 394, 438
-Hat id, 412
Harith (slayer of Muslim's children), 191, 193
Hasan b. 'Ali (the Second Imam), i6n., i73, i75, i76n., i93n, 392-3; — -'Askari (the Eleventh Imam), 394; — b. Muhammad (ancestor of the Safawis), 33 n.; — -Basri, 384, — b. Yusuf b. 'Ali b Mu-tahhar-Hillf (called 'Allama-i-Hillf, q v, d, A.D. 1326), 356, 406, —(of the Aq-qoyiinludynasty, AD 1466-1478), see Uzi in Hasan; — Khalifa (xv), 70, — Beg (Turkish governor of Morea, killed in AD 1514), 76, — Beg Rumhi (author of AhsanuH-Tawarikh, A.D. 1577-8, qv) 85, 100, 444; — Beg (gaoler of Alqas Mirza, xvi), 89, — Aqa (Turkish officer, xvi), 91, — Beg (favourite of Isma'il II, xvi), 99-100; — Pasha (Begler-begi of Rumelia, killed in A.D. 1514), 76; — Mirza, Sultan — Safawi (xvi), 99; — of Yazd, Mull' — (defies Fath-'Ali Shah), 368-9; — of Shiraz, Hajji Mirza —, and of Ashtiyan (opponents of Tobacco concession in A.D. 1890-1) 370-'5 ~ Mutjaddam (author of a play), 463 n.
Hasan 'All Khan-i-Garnisi (A.D. 1890), 347; — Khan-i-Nawwab (xix), 301-2, 319; — Mirza Shujd'its-Saltana (early patron of Qa'anf and Furughi, xix), 328
Abu'l-Hasan-Jandaqf, 337. See Yaghamd; Sayyid — Khan (head of Isma'flf sect, xvm), 148; — Mirza, called Hajji Shaykhu'r-Ra'fs (xix-xx), '303, 420
Ha"shim-i-Qazwinf, Hdiiz — (time of Shall'Abbas I), no
Hashish (Indian hemp), 87 n., 470, 473 and note
Hasht Bihisht, 151
Hatif of Isiahan (poet, xvm), 221, 277, 283-297, 305, 309
Hftiif (poet of Kharjird, d. A.D. 1520), 25, 83, 227-9
Hatim of Tayy, 401; — of Kashan (poet of the time of ShCh 'Abbas I), no
-Hawi("Continens")of-Ra"zi(Rhazes), 438-9
Hawiya (the lowest Hell), 400-401
Hayati (poet), 167
Haydu'l- Qulub ('the Life of Hearts"), by Mulla Muhammad Baqir-i-Majhsi (xvn), 409, 417
Haydar, Shaykh — (father of Shall Isma'il I, xv), 19, 21, 47-9, 60, 67, 70; — l-Mu'amm&'i (poet of the time of Shah 'Abbas I), no; — (rhapsodist, contemporary with the preceding), no, — Mirza" (son of Shah Tahmasp I, xvi), 98; — Mirza (nephew of Shah 'Abbds I), 104, — 'All Khan Nawwdb (xix). 328
Haydarabad (Deccan), 269, 365
Haydari and Ni'rnatl (factions), ri9n.
Hayrat (pen-name of Abu'l-Hasan Mirza, q v), 303
Hayrati (poet, d. A.D. 1553), 97, 170
Hayya tla khayrtl-amal, 54
HazaVjarfb, 283
Hazin, Shaykh 'Ali — (xvm), 115, 117-118, 265, 277-281, 450
Heaven and Hell described, 395-401, 418
Hebron, 46 n.
Hells, the Seven —, 400-401
Herachus, Prince of Georgia (xviii), 140
Hera, 25, 44, 63, 69, 83, 86, 94, 95, 97, 99, 100, 125, 133, 147, 154, 229, 234, 334 n., 489

- Herbert, Sir Thomas —, 10
 Heretics put to death, 57, 71-3
 Hermes, 201, 212
 Herodotus, 465
 -Hiddya of -Maybudi, 57 n.
 Hidayat (the pen-name of Ridd-qulfi Khan, g.v.), 224, 225, 304, 307 n., 3»6, 344
 Hijaz, 280, 427, 451
Hijrat-i-Sughrd ("the Minor Migration," Dec. 1905), 446 n
 •Hikmatu'l-'Arshiyya and Hikmatu'l-Ishrdg, 430
 Hilali (poet, put to death in A.D. 15'8), 25, 83, 94, 227, 234-5
 -Hilli, 378, 405 (see -Muhagqiq-Azwwal); 54 and note, 406 (see 'Allama-i'Hilli) Htlyatu'l-Muttaqin ("the Ornament of the Pious," bv Mulla" Muhammad Baqir-i-Majhsi), 409, 417
 Himmat (poet, xix), 300
 Hmd (wife of Abu Sufyan, vn), 178, 180 and note
 Hindi language, 259 n.
 Hindiis, 179, 181, 258, 452
 Hindusha'h b. Sanjar -Kirdnf (author of Tajaribu's-Salaf, xiv), 443
 Hindustan, 282. See India
 Hippocrates {Bugrdt), 212, 439
 Hirschberg, Dr Julius—, 425, 440
 Hisdbf (poet of the time of Shah 'Abbas I), no
 Hishim b. 'Abdu'l-Malik (Umayyad, vni), 393
Histoire de la Mddecme Arabe (by Dr L. Leclerc), 440 n.
Histoire des Mongols (by d'Ohsson), 45 n., 322
Holmyard, 440
 Holstem, Frederick Duke of —, 114
 Holy Cities, n, 24, 59, 280. See Karbald, Mecca, -Madlno, Najaf etc.
 Hoopoe {Hudhud), 190, 192
 Horn, Dr Paul —, 13 n., 84 n., 86 n., 87 n., 88n., 90
 Houtsma, 18 n.
 Houtum-Schindler, Sir Albert —, 5, 33 n., 48 n., 223, 305, 450 n., 457
Huart, M. Clement —, 35, 40
 Hud (the Prophet), 388
Hujjatu'l-Isldm (Hajji Sayyid Muhammad Bdqir so entitled), 368
Hujjatu'llah (title of the Imam Mahdi), 394
 Hiilagu Khan (Mongol, xiii), 37, 41 n., 148, 405
Hulul (Incarnation), 382
 Humayyin (Moghul Emperor of India, xvi), 28n., 57, 91-2, 165, 169-170
 Hunar, Mirza Isma'il — (son of the poet Yaghma), 338
 Hunayn b. Ishaq ("Johanitius"), 357
 Hiiris (of Paradise), 190, 192 and note
 Hurmuz, Island of —, 107
 Hurr-'Amili, Shaykh —, 28
 Hurr b. Yazid-Rrvahi, 190
 Husayn b. 'Ali b. Abi Talib (the Third Imam), 17, 30-31, 87 n., 135, 176 n., 177, 178, 180, 182, 184-193, 241, 392-3, 399» 434; — b Bayqara, Sultan Abu'l-Ghazi — (Tfmund, xv-xvi), 55-6, 63, 64, 69, 77, 83; — Shah-i-Safawi (A.D. 1694-1722), i n., 113-4, 116, 120, 123, 125, 128, 129, 131, 138, 139, 283; — b. Mansur-Hallaj (mystic, x), 336, 357, — Kiya-yi-Chalawi (killed by Shall Isma'il I about A.D. 1503), 55, 56; — -i-Maybudi, Mir — (xvi), 57; — Wa'iz-i-Kashifi (xv-xvi), 83, 182, 227, 237, —, Shaykh — (father of Shaykh-i-Baha'l, xvi), 427, — 'Ali Beg (Persian ambassador to Spam, A.D. 1599), 5, 6 n., —, Khwaja — (poet) and — Tanbdra'i (musician), contemporaneb of Shah 'Abbas the Great, no; — Pasha (Governor of Basra, xvn), 363. Mulla" — Rafiq (poet of Isiahan, xvm), 282, — Husayn of Yazd (turbulent ecclesiastic, A.D. i8r7), 148; Sayyid — -i-Tabataba'i of Ardistan (poetically surnamed Mijmar, g.v., d. A.D. 1810), 307-8; — Khan, poetically surnamed 'Andalib (xix), 309, Mirza' — b. 'Abdu'llah (A.D. 1857-8), 450; — quli (author of Minhdju't-'tdhbin, qv.) 423; — Danish Bey (contemporary man of letters), 8 n., 29; — i-Kurd (fictitious hero of popular romance), 464
Husn-i-taHil ("poetical aetiology"), 164
Hutama (the sixth of the Seven Hells), 400-401
Huwargilyd, Jism-i- —, Ard-t- —, 397 and note, 403
 IUwayza, 58, 362, 367

Ibdhat, 382. See Communism

Ibrahim, the Patriarch, see Abraham; — (son of the Prophet Muhammad), 391; — b. Adham (samt, vm), 36, 357; — b. Ja'far (ancestor of the Safawis), 33 n.; —, commonly called Shaykh Shah (xv), 47; — (brother of Shah Isma'il I), 48 n.; — Mirza (son of Shah Tahmasp I), 98; — (nephew of Nadir Shah, ctrcd A.D. 1750), 138; — Shah (xvm), 284; — (son of Mulla Sadra, xvu), 376, 408 n., 429; — Khan (custodian of Alqas Mirzd, xvi), 89, Hajji — (betrayer of Lutf-'Ali Khan-i-Zand), 143 n., 145 and note, 146; Mirzi — (opponent of Henry Martyn), 421; — Dastan (son of the poet Yaghmd), 338; — Khayru'lteh (Bahd'i propagandist in America), 214 n.; Siydhat-ndma-i- — Beg, 463-4; 467-8

" Ibrat-ndma of Saba (xix), 309

IddhtCl-Ishubdh (of -Hilli, xm-xw), 356

Idolatry, 386, 401

Idris (Enoch), 388; — of Bitlis (historian, xvi), 72

Ikqdu'l-Haqq (Refutation of the Babis), 423

V)iz Husayn, Sayyid — (d. A. D. 1870), 357

Ijtihdd (doctrine of —), 353, 382.

See also Mujtahid

H?nu'r-Rijdl (Biography of Traditionists), 355

Iliti-oghUn (descendant of Chmgiz Khan), 64 n.

'Imadu'l-Kuttab (contemporary poet and calhgraphist), 303

Imamate, Imams, 16-9, 22, 28, 32, 36, 46, 48 and note, 53-5, 88, 109, 148, 150, 162, 172-3, 181, 197, 214, 236, 241, 372, 382, 386, 391-5, 451

Imami Sect, 18 See ShPa and Twelve, Sect of the — Imami (poet of Herat, xin), 334 n.

Imam-quK Mirza" (Safawi prince murdered in A.D. 1577), 99

tmdn and Islam, 401-2

'Imran (father of Moses), 292

Imru'u'l-Qays (old Arabian poet), 478, 481

Inak-'Aii, Mulla' —, 475, 479

Incarnation (Hulut), 382

India, 4, 24, 25, 115, 123, 135, 136, 148, 154, 164-170, 189, 205, 215, 341, 245-6, 252, 253, 254, 255, 258-260, 265-6, 277, 280-1, 282, 283, 284, 300, 356, 365' 408, 431' 438, 451, 453, 472; literary taste in —, 226, 227, 229, 300

Indsi(fairness, a Persian characteristic), 196 n

"Inspector's head," 375

Intellectual Life (by Hamerton), 226

Intercession (Doctne of — in Islam), 179, 186-7, 390

Iqdn (Babi apology), 422-3

Iran and Turan, 13; — (newspaper), 157

Irdn-shahr (magazine), 488-9, 490

'Irdq, 47, 55, 57, 59, 82, 191, 192, 234, 255, 347, 366, 410, 451

'Irdq-i-'Ajam (newspaper), 346, 347

Irish language, 185 n., 223

Irsdlu'Umatal ("Proverbial Commission"), 164

Irshdd (newspaper), 346, 347

'Isa, see Jesus; Mirza — of Fardhan. Qa'im-maqdm, 147 n., 303, 311, 347

Isaiah, 204, 214

'Isdwiiyya (N African order of derivatives), 59

Isiahan, 4, 6, 9, 10, 15, 25, 56, 59, 92, 107, 109, no, r 15, 116, 118, 119, 120, 123-133, 134, 139, 140, 141, 167, 184, 186, 195, 198, 222, 225, 237, 265, 268, 277-9, 281, 282, 283, 284, 307, 325, 365-6, 368, 408, 410, 427, 428, 429, 436, 450,451, 489

Isiaranjan (in Gflan), 36

Ishaq Beg 'Udhri (poet, died A.D. 1771-2). 283

Ishnael, 388. See Isma'ill

"hhpukhtar" (Inspector), 375

'Ishq u Saltanat ("Love and Lordship," a novel), 464

Ishriq (pen-name of Mulla' Muhammad Baqir-i-Damad, q.v.), 257, 407, 428

Ishrdqiyyan ("Illuminati," Platonists), 431

Iskandar (Alexander the Great, 9 v), 13, 14, — Munshi (author of the Ta'rikh-i-'Alam-ara-yi' 'Abbds{, composed in A.D. 1616, q.v), 99, 108, 109, 444

- Islam Shah b. Shir Shah (the Afghan ruler of Dihli, d. A.D. 1553-4), 168
- Islamsche Welt, Die* —, 484 n.
- Isma'il b. Ja'far-SsSdiq (Seventh Imam of the Isma'ihyya), 391; — b. Muhammad (ancestor of the Safawis), 33 n.; — b. Amfnu'd-Din Jibra'il (ancestor of the Safawis, xm), 37; Shah — I (A.D. 1502-1524), 5, 9, 12-15, 19-24, 25 n., 49-83 passim, 92, 10r n., U2, 158, 172, 224, 229, 360, 444, 447, his character and appearance, 22-23, 60-63; Shah — II (A.D. 1576-7), 98-100, 101, 102; Shah — (xviii), 284; — Khan Sarbaz (poet), 188; — son of Yaghma, poetically surnamed Hunar, 338; — Nasiri Qaraja-Daghi (A.D. 1890), 344; — 'Abdn'llah-zada (A.D. 1905), 466
- Isma'fli Sect, 17, 18, 147-9, 391
- Isnads*, 443
- Israel, Children of —, 207, 388
- Israel (Angel of the Resurrection), 400
- Istakhr, 49
- Istibsar* (of -Tiisi, d. A.D. 1067), 359, 405
- Ishdldltyya* (Bahd'i controversy), 214 n.
- Italy, Italians, 6, 58 n., 60, — language, 10
- Ftimidu'd-Dawla (Muhammad Hasan Kha"n, xix), 84 n., 454
- Ftima'du's-Saltana (Hajji 'Ali Khan Hajibu'd-Dawla, father of the above), 454
- Ittiffad (Apotheosis), 382; — (Tabriz newspaper), 463; — ul-Isldm ("Union of Islam," by Hajji Shaykhu'r-Ra'is), 420 n.
- Ittild'* (newspaper), 157
- Jabal 'A mil (Syria), 360, 427
- Jabdni, Battle of — (A.D. 1500), 82
- Jabr* (Fatalism, q.v.), 382
- "Jacma" (I e. Yahya Pasha), 70
- Jacob (Ya'qub), 207
- a'da bmt-Ash'ath (vii), 392
- a'far-Sadiq (the Sixth Imam, VIII), 391, 394; — b. -Husayn b. 'Ali (vii), 393; — b. Muhammad (ancestor of the Safawis), 33 n.; — Bey (Turkish officer, A.D. 1514), 76; Shaykh — -Bahrani (xvii), 364-5; — b. Sachq-i-Zand (A.D. 1785), 143; — of Isiahan, poetically surnamed Safi (xvm); Mirza" — Qaraja-daghi (xix), 462; — -quli Aqa" (officer of Persian Cosacks, A.D. 1907), 476, 480, — Khdn az Firattg dmada (Persian comedy), 463 n.
- Ja'fari, Ithnd-'ashariyya ("Sect of the Twelve") why so called, 394
- Jafia, 46 n.
- Jahin, Qadi-i—(contemporary of Shdh Tahmasp I), 92
- Jahangir Mirza ("White Sheep" dynasty), 58 n.; — (Moghul Empeior of India, A.D. 1605-1628), 253, 255, 447; Mirza — Khan of Shiraz (editor of the Siir-i-Isrdil, put to death in A.D. 1908), 302, 345, 482 n.
- Jahanshah (Turkman ruler of Adhar-bdyjdn, xv), 47
- Jahim* (the fourth of the Seven Hells), 400-401
- Jdhiz (Arab philologist and poly-graph, ix), 440-441
- Jalajil-i-Iukharzi (musician at Court of Shah 'Abbas), 110
- Jalal (or Jelal, Turkish heresiarch, A.D. 1519), 106, — (chief astrologer of Shah 'Abbas the Great, A.D. 1593), 7, — l-Asir (poet, A.D. 1640), 251, 258, 268-9
- Jalalabad (Afghanistan), 489
- Jalalu'd-Din Rrimi (xm), 35 n., 37, 38, 220, 357, 411, 449; — Dawani (philosopher, circa A.D. 1500), 69, 83, 231, 427
- JMial~ Uyun* (by Mulla Muhammad Baqir-i-Majlisi, d. A.D. 1700), 410, 417
- Jama'a, Ibn —, Qadi (A.D. 1384), 406
- Jamal, Aqa — Isiahan!, 373
- Jamalud-Din, Sayyid — (Spiritual director of Shaykh Zhdid of Gilan, xm), 42; — b. Mutahhir-Hilli, Shaykh —, 54; — Muhammad b. Badru'd-Din, 245, see 'Urfi; — Muhammad b. Husayn-Khwan-sari (theologian and jurisconsult), 373; Sayyid—Afghan (xix), 155, 371
- Jamal-zada, Mirza Muhammad 'All — (contemporary writer), 488

- Jamf, Mulla Nuru'd-Dm 'Abdu'r-Rahman — (poet and writer, xv), 25, 26, 40 n., 42 n., 69, 83, 162, 163, 220, 227, 228, 230, 242, 299, 362
- Jami'-i-'Abdsl (by Shaykh-i-Baha'i, d. A.D. 1622), 407, 428
- Jamshid, 29, 246, 247
- Jandaq, 337
- Jani Beg Khan (xiv), 45; Haiji Mirva' — of Keshan (historian of the Dab, killed in A.D. 1852), 198, 218 n., 44⁶
- Janissaries (Yeni-cheri), 77, 106
- Japan, 205, 215
- Jarbardi, 362
- Jarir (old Aiab poet), 284
- Jarrett, H. S. —, 249
- Jaubert, 146
- Jawhar (servant of Humayiln), 91
- Jawshan-i-Kahil*, 437
- Jayhiin (the River Oxus), 108, 219; — (poet of Yazd, xix), 325
- Jaza ni.Sayyid Ni'matu'llah — (x'n), 360-367
- Jenkmson, Anthony — (xvi), 10, 85, 90, 91, 92
- Jerusalem, 46 n., 204, 214
- Jesuits, 116
- Jesus ('sd), 174, 176, 187, 189, 207, 117, 388, 390, 392, 420
- Jews, 179, 181, 214 n., 392, 400, 404, 421, 452
- Jibra'fl (Gabriel, q v), 175
- Jigar-gusha*, 185 n
- Jihad* (Religious War), 371, 377
- Jihannam* (the first of the Seven Hells), 400-401
- Jinn*, 36 and note, 39, 42, i n., 190, 192, 388, 389, 396
- Jisr-i-Jiiban, 76
- Jones, Sir William —, 229 n., E. R. —, 424 n., 425
- "Jonuses" (Yiinus Pishi, executed in A.D. 1517), 71
- Joseph (Yisuf), 207, 217
- Jourdan*, Momieitr — (Persian comedy), 462
- Journalism, Persian —, 413
- Juan di Persia, Don — (xvi-xvn), 4, 5 and note, 6, 21, i o m., 102 n.
- Jubilee (of Queen Victoria), 322
- Judaism, 137. See also Jews
- Judas Iscariot, 207, 218
- Juji (son of Chingiz Khan, xiii), 6411.
- Julfa (suburb of Isiahan), 128
- Junayd, Shaykh — Safawi (xv), 19, 47. 5', 5'
- Jurjani, Sayyid-i-Sharif-i- —, 59, 427
- Justice (Insdi) a Persian characteristic, 196
- Juwayni (author of the Ta'rtkk-i-Jahan-guskdy, xin), 443
- Ka'ba, 386
- "Kablay" (poem by Dakhaw, A.D. 1907), 345, 482 n.
- Kabul, 136, 489
- Kafi* (of -Kulayni, x), 359, 405
- Kafiya* (of Ibnu'l-Hajib), 362, 363, 364
- Ka'ka (poet of the time of Shah 'Abds the Great), no
- Kaldm*, Ahl-i- —, 376, 403, 426; 'limitf- —. See Mutakalhmun
- Kalan, Khwaja—l-Ghunyani (xvi), 97
- Kalat-i-Naduf 132
- Kalb-'Ali ("the Dog of «Ali»), a common name amongst the Shi'a,
- Kalfm, Abu Talib — (poet, d. A.D. 1651), 164, 166, 250, 258-263, 268
- Kalkhoran (in GiMn), 36
- Kalo Ioannes (last Chnstian Emperor of Tiebizond), 47
- Kamakh (near Amnjari), 77
- Kamal (or Kernel) Bey, Ndmq — (Turkish reformer and writer, xix), 464
- Kamdhydyt* (" Accomplishments "), 27 and note
- Kamalud-Din 'Arabshdh, Khwaja — (xiii), 37, Husayn of Ardabfl (the first to write in Persian on Shi'a theology, A.D. 1500), 359-360, Khwaja — Sagharchi (A.D. 1510), 65-6
- Kamarij, Battle of — (A.D. 1753), 140
- Kandahar, 112. See Qandahdr
- "Kanlu olditm" ("I am guilty of bloodshed"), 113
- Kanpiir (Cawnpore), 281 n.
- Karak, 406
- Karamat* ("Gifts" or miracles of Saints), 40 and note
- Karbald, 28, 30, 58, 147, 149, 174, 175, 176 n., 177-181, 182, 187, 188, 189, 197, 198, 344 n., 370, 371. 372. 375, 393, 396, 45'1 463
- "Kaibate'i verse," 487

- Karim Khan-i-Zand (A.D. 1750-1779), 121, 139-142, 144, 282, 368
- Kar-Kiya Mirza 'Ali (ruler of Lahijan, A.D. 1500), 50
- Karnal, Battle of — (February, 1739), 136
- KashsC, Mirza" — (fictitious), 184, 186
- Ka W n, 28, 55, 56, 108, 130, 152, 161, 170, 225, 258, 309, 326, 344, 407, 432> 477. 481
- Kashiu'-l- A by at (concordance of verses in Mathnawt), 457; — -Hujub (Shi'a bibliography, A.D. 1870). 355 n., 357-8. 359» 3^m., 36411., 366 n., 374 n.
- Kashkul* (of Shaykh Baha Vd-Din al-'Amili, d. A.D. 1622), 253, 278, 407, 408
- Kashmir. See Cashmere
- Kasru Asndmi'l-Jahihyyat* (by Mulla Sadra), 430
- Ibn Kathir (historian), 30, 31
- Ka'us (legendary King of Persia), 81
- "Kaveh {Kawa} newspaper, 346, 348, 483-9, 490
- "Kaviani" (Kawaydni) Press, Berlin, 346, 463. 490
- Kawa*, Kdiuaydni, the legendary blacksmith who revolted against the tyrant Dahhak {Azhidahdka}, and, raising aloft his leather apron, made it, under the name of Dt-rafsh-t-Kawaydtiy the standard and symbol of all Persian patriots, lovers of freedom, and foes of foreign dominion. The paper and Press mentioned above (under "Kaveh" and "Kavian V") are named after this blacksmith and his flag, but spell their names thus m the Roman character. See 14 n.
- Kawthar, Water of — in Paradise, 401
- Kay, Kaydni, Kay-Khusraw, 13, 14
- Kaysanf Sect, 17, 391
- Kay win, 436; — ChaViish (A.D. 1502), 68
- Kazarun, 55, 97
- Kazim, Sayyid — of Rasht, 421. See Shaykhis
- Kizimayn, 366
- Kazimirski, A. de Biberstein —, 417
- Kazimzida, Mirza Husayn —, 488
- Kemal Bey See under Kamdl
- Khaby* (a kind of divination), 434 n.
- Khadija (wife of the Prophet Muhammad), 391, 392; — (sister of tfziin Hasan, xv), 47
- Khiidim 'All P'sha (xvi), 71
- Ibn Khalddn (historian, xiv-xv), 163, 425, 442, 445
- Khalid b -Walid, 170, 171, — Bey (killed in A.D. 1514), 76
- Khalifa, 16, see Caliph, Caliphate, — Sultan (xvii), 204
- Khalil Shirwdnshdh (xv), 52; •— Aq-Qoymilti (xv), 58 n.; — Khan Afshar (xvi), 101; — u'llah, Shdh — (head of the Isma'ili sect until A.D. 1817), 148
- Khalkhal, 51
- Ibn Khalhkan (biographer, xm), 446
- Khamsa* ("Quintet" of Nizdmf and Faydi), 229, 244
- Khamkofi, 35 n.
- Khdnish Khanum (daughter of Shah Isma'f I), 8 m.
- "Khan-i-Walida Persian," 487
- Khan-Khanan (Bayram KhaVi and his son 'Abdu'r-Rahim, xvi), 166, 245
- K M n Malik-i-Husayni-i-Sdsani, 346,
- Khaqan (title of Emperor of the Turks), 14 and note, 52; — (pen-name of Fath-'Ali Shah), 146, 298
- Khaqani (poet, xn), 52, 246, 299
- Khaydbdt* (anthology compiled by Diya Pasha, xix), 164 and note, 173, 242, 248, 270
- Kharak (island in Persian Gulf), 154
- Khanjf (pi Khawanj), 392
- Kharjird (in Khurasan), 227
- Khata'i (pen-name of Shih Isma'f I), 13
- Khatar, Muhammad 'All, son of the poet Yaghma\ 338
- Khatt u Khattdtdn* ("Calligraphy and Calligraphists," by Mirza Habib of Isiahan), 450, 457
- Khawdrqtu'l^Addt* (thaumaturgy), 40 n.
- Khaybar, 392
- Abu'l-Khayr Khdn (descendant of Chingfz Khan), 64 n.
- Khayrdt^m Hisdt^m* (biographies of eminent women), 456
- Khayyam, 'Umar — (astronomer and poet), 425
- Khiqlr, 270
- Khiva (Khiwaq), 136, 347. See also Khwarazm

- Khuda-diarin* ("Creator of Gods"), 151
- Khuda-banda (Uljiytu, Mongol, xiv), 18; Shall Muhammad — (Safawi, A D 1577-1587), 98, 100-103; — (son of Shall 'Abbas the Great), 111
- Khuda-verdi (barber), 101, 103
- Kkuddwand-n&ma* (of Sabd, d. A.D. 1822), 309
- Khulasatu'l-Hisab (by Shaykh-i Baha'f, d. AD 1622), 428; — -Tftiddh (of Yaghmd), 339
- Khuld-i-Barin (poem by Wahshi, d AD 1583), 238, — (history, A D. 1660), 100, 445
- Khunkdr* (title of Ottoman Sultdns), 90 n.
- Khurasan, 25, 55, 63, 64, 65, 66, 78 n., 82, 95, 99, 101, 104, 105, 133, 138, 140, 151, 167, 227, 229, 230, 233, 234, 328, 399, 451, 455
- Khurram (Russian wife of Sultan Sulayman I), 89
- Khurram-abad (Lunstali), 104, 279
- Khurshid Press (Tihran), 466
- Khusraw Parwiz (Sasaman king), 221, Amir — of Dihli (poet, xin), 164, 167, 242 n.; — Khan {ctrcd A D. 1713), 124; — Mirza (son of 'Abbas Mirza, A.D. 1829), 313, 314 and note
- Khusraw wa Shirin (poem by Nizami), 248; — (poem by Sayyid Muhammad Sadiq), 283
- Khutan, 321
- Khuy, 76, 130, 489
- Khuzistan, 82
- Khwaja Mawlana-yi-Isiahani (poet, d A D. 1521), 78-80
- Khwandamir (historian, xvi), 445, 447
- Khwasar, 251, 252
- Khwar, 55
- Khwarazm, 78 n., 347. See also Khiva
- Khwarazmshahs, 3
- King, Sir Lucas White —, 64 n.
- King's College, Cambridge, 229 n., 490
- Kirami Sect, 384
- Kirman, 55, 64, 76, 82, 104, 118, 126, 128 n., 131, 133, 137, r48, 149, 151, 157, 184, 186, 238, 280, 328, 413, 446, 451, 466, 489
- Kirmsanshah, 131, 134, 151, 184, 186, 279, 347. 410, 463, 489
- Kitab al-Aghani*, 485; — Ahmad (by Yaghma), 339; — Aqdas ("the Most Holy Book" of the Baha'fs), 423; — -Fakhri, 444; — -Hayatvdn (of-Jalnz), 440; — Hiddya (of-Maybudi), 57 n., 430; — -Madthir waH-Athar 456; — -Milal (of -Shahnstanf), 15 n., 16-17; — -Sht'r (of Ibn Qutayba), 485; — -Sufra, 182-6; — Suku-ku'd-Dald'tl (of Yaghmi), 339; — -WaridatiC l-Qalbiyya (by Mulli Sadra), 430
- Knolles, Richard —, 70, 72, 90 n.
- Korah, 209 n See Qdnbn
- Krusinski, 4, 10, 21 n, in, 112, 114 n., 115, 116, 119, 129
- Kufa, 174, 176, 190, 191, 192, 193, 200, 210
- Kufwi (poet, xvi), 168
- Kulayni, Muhammad b. Ya'qib (d A P. 941), 358, 404 n., 405, 44⁸
- Kulthum, 179, 181, Umm —, 392
- Kurdish poem, 484
- Kuidistan, Kurds, 27, 46, 58, 76, 125, 151' 279, 347
- Kutahiya, 89
- Kutub-Arba'a* ("the Four Books"), 359; — -Rijal, 355, 405
- Lahijan, 21, 50, 277
- Lahore, 136, 266, 267, 281 n., 440
- Lami'i (poet), 299
- Lane-Poole, Stanley —, i69 n.
- Langles, 115
- Lar, 149, 279, 283
- Latakia, 76
- Latin, 10, 359, 425 n.; — races, 488
- Law, Muhammadan —, 377-8
- Lawh-t-Mahiuz* (" Preserved Tablet"), 388. See also Alwdh
- Lawhi (poet), 194
- Lay Id wa Majndn*, 206, 216, 229, 283
- Laylatu'l-Qadr* ("Night of Worth," on which the Qur'dn was revealed), 388
- Lazgfs, 125, 137
- Lazzh* (the fifth of the Seven Hells), 400-1
- Leclerc, Dr L. —, 440 n.
- Lee, Samuel —, 421
- Leroux, E. —, 9 n.
- Lion in the Husayn-legend, 189; — killed by Shah Isma'il, 62
- Lippert, Prof. Julius —, 447 n.

- Lisanl (poet of Shiraz, d. A.D. 1533), 235-6
- Lisanu'l-Mulk (historian, xix), 326, 413, 445. See also Sipih
- London, 450, 469
- Louis Philippe, 325
- Lucknow (Lakhnaw), 281
- Lu'lu l-Bahrayn, 356, 360, 406 n., 408, 449
- Lunatic at Large (by J. Storer Clouston), 322 n
- Luqmaniyya College (Tabriz), 347
- Lur, Lurfstan, 59, 76, 104, 279, 443
- Lutf 'All Beg (poetically surnamed Adhar, author of the Atash-kada, q.v.), 277, 282-4, 309; — Khan (Persian General, A.D. 1720), 125, 129; — Khan-i-Zand (A.D. 1789—1794), 121, 142-4
- Ma'alimu'l-'Ulama (by Muhammad b. 'All b. Shahr-dshub, d. A.D. 1192), 356
- Mdathir-i-Sult&mya (History of the Qajar dynasty to A.D. 1826), i44 n.
- Macauley, Lord —, 186
- Macdonald, Professor Duncan Black —, 40, 442
- Macedonia, 72
- McNtill, Sir John — (Bntish Minister in Persia, A.D. 1838-1841), 147
- M'Taggart, Dr J. E. —, 431
- Madina, 24, 174, 175, 391, 392
- Madras, 462 n
- Mafdtihu'sh-Shardyi' (by Mulla' Muh-sin-i-Fayd, d. A.D. 1680), 432
- Magians (Ma'tis), 179, 18 r, 292, 293, 297, 401. See also Gadr, 20-roastrtan
- Magic, Lawful — (Sthr-i-Haldl), poetry so called, 196
- MahalUt of Qum, 148
- Mahd-i-'Ulyd^{ti} the Supreme Cradle," title of the Queen-mother in Persia), 151, 332
- Mahdi, the Imsim — (Twelfth Imam, -Qd\m), 150, 151, 197, 394; — Khin of Astarabad (author of the Durra-t'Nadiri), 445; Haiji — (father of Ham Mulla Hadi of Sabzawdr), 430
- Mahmud of Ghazna, Sultan — (x-xi), 228; — III of Gujenit (d. A.D. 1553) J 168-9; Mir—Afghan (murdered m A.D. 1725), 116, 118, 125-131; — Aqa Chawtish'bdshi (envoy of Sultan Ba'yazfd II, A.D. 1502), 68; Sultan — Mirza' (Safawi prince, murdered m A.D. 1577)' Jjp; — -i-Shabistarl (author of the Gulshan-i-adz, d. A.D. 1320), 37, 220; — Qiri of Yazd (author of the Diwdn-i-Albisa[^] d. A.D. 1585), 241; Mirza" — (physician, poetically surnamed Hakim, son of Wisal, d. A.D. 1851), 300, 319
- MahmM u Aydz (poem by Zulalf, d. A.D. 1614), 252
- Majahsu'l-Mtfminin (by Sayyid Niiru'llah Mar'ashi of Shiistar, put to death in A.D. 16ro), 54 n., 230, 234, 235, 236, 249, 356, 3581 447
- Majid, Sayyid — of Bahrayn (xvn), 433-4
- Majlis (newspapei), 346-7
- Majhsi family, 28, 120, 253, 416. See under Muhammad Bdqir and Muhammad Taql
- Majma'rfl-Bayan (by Shaykh Tabar-si), 409
- Majmd-ul-Fusahd (by Ridi-qull Khan, xix), 25, 147 n., 172, 225, 228 n., 230, 232, 234 n., 23^511., 238, 241, 243-4, 245 m, 251, 265, 298-9, 300 n., 304, 305, 309, 31 sn , 319, 323, 325 n., 326 n., 328, 337, 344, 408, 411, 428, 432
- Majnun, 206, 216. See also under Lay/a
- Majiis\ 179, 181. See above under Magians
- MakhzanuH-Astrd- (of Nizdmi of Ganja, xu), 248
- Maku, 151
- Malayir, 463
- Malcolm, Sir John —, 4, 7, 8, 46 n., 77> 85, 91, icon, ror, i n, 116, 134, 137 n., 138 n., 139, 14 m , 144, 145 n , 146, 372, 373, 420 n ; Rev Napier —, 195
- Maltha (poisons the Twelfth Imam), 399
- Malik b. Anas (d. A.D. 795), 353; Ibn — (Aiab grammarian), 363-364
- Malik (poet of Qum, xvn), no, 253, 259, 267; — u't-Tujjdr (Hajji Muhammad Kdzim, xix-xx), 478, 481, 482
- Malkom Khan Ndzimu'd-Dawla, Prince — (xix), 463, 468

Mameluke (Mam?6h) dynasty, 1411.
 -Ma'miin ('Abbasid Caliph, ix), 394, 438
 Ma'n b. Za'ida, 207, 217
Mandqibu'l-Jnfln (by Aflaki, A.D. 13'8), 35, 40
 "Manifestation" of the Bab (Zuhiir, May 23, 1844), 150
Man id YahduruHuF-Faqih (by Ibn Bdbawayhi, d. A.D. 991), 359, 405
 Mann, Oskar —, 137 n., 445 n.
 Mansur ('Abbasid Caliph, vui), 394, 438, — Beg Painik (xv), 49
 Mansuriyya College (Shiraz), 360-1, 363, 364
 Maqamat (of -Hariri), 412; — (of Adibu'l-Mamahk), 349
 Mardgha, 44, 131, 467
 Marand, 76
 Mar'ash, 69; — i Sayyids, 102
 Ma>din, 414-415
Manage force', le — (Moliere), 462
Mdriqln ("Rebels," i.e. the Khan-jites), 392
 Mdnya, Plain of — (Karbala' so called), 178, 180
 Marjana (mother of Ibn Ziyad), 178, 180
Markaz-i-Adwdr (by Faydi), 244
 Markham, Sir Clements —, 4
 Marta (daughter of Uziin Hasan, xv), 47
 Martin, Dr R. F. —, 63 n.
 Martyn, Henry — (missionary), 421-2
 Martyrdom, Passion for —, 19^8
 Marwan (Umayyad Caliph, A D 683-5). '3. 343
 Mary (Maryam) the Copt (wife of the Prophet), 391 MashdHr (of Mulla" Sadra), 408 n., 430
 Mashhad, 30, 65, 94, 98, 105, 109, 133, 137, '38, 157. 223, 230, 251, 279, 284, 345, 346, 347, 367, 371, 394, 428, 429, 436, 455, 456, 469, 489
 Mashhad 'All, 30
Mashshd'iin ("Peripatetics," Aristotelians), 431
 Masih, Mirza — (Mujtahid, A D 1829), 315
 Masihi (Turkish poet), 237
 Mas'iid-i-Sa'd-i-Salman (poet, d. A.D 1130, 299, Mawland — {circa A.D. 1500 ruled in Kashan), 55

Ma'siim, Mir — (poet, xvii), 259, 268; — Kamancha'f (musician at the Court of Shih 'Abbds the • Great), no; — (darwfsh and mystic, xvin), 420
MatdHnu's-Sufyya (by Muhammad Rafi, A.b. 1806), 420
Materials for the Study of the Bdbt Religion (by E. G. Browne), 150, 154 n., 197 n, 198, 422 n.
Mathnawf (of Jalalu'd-Din Rumf, xm), 35 n., 411, 457
Matla'u'sh-Shams (by Muhammad Hasan Khan, xix), 84 n., 455
 Mawsil (Mosul), 137
 Mawsilld (tribe), 14
 Mawzun (poet), 194
 Maybudi, Mir Husayn— (xvi), 57
 Maydan-i-Shih (Isiahan), 368
Maykhdna (poem by Zulalf, xvi-xvn), 252
 Mazandara"n, 65, 102, 109, 130, 132, 140, 141, 151, 153, 197, 251, 258, 284, 355, 476, 481
 Mazdak (heresiarch and communist, vi), 382 n., 452, 464, 466, 487
 Mazhari (poet of Cashmere at Court of Shall 'Abbas), 110
 Mecca, 24, 45, 123, 124, 149, 177 n., 192n., 252, 258, 279, 284, 374n., 386, 391, 399, 427. See also Holy Cities
Midecin malgrS lui, Le — (Moliere), 459' 462
 Media, 465
 Medina See -Madna
 Mejd ed-Din (Majdu'd-Din, historian), 46 n.
Melanges Asiatiques, 30, 35 n.
 Merchants, European — m Persia, 107
 Merv (Marw), 82, 109
 Mesopotamia, 24, 27, 427. See also Iraq
 Metempsychosis {Tandsukhu'l-Arwah), 382
 Methuen, Messrs —, 468
Miftdu'l-Faldh (by Shaykh-i-Bahi'i, xvi-xvn), 428
Miftdhtl-Labib (by Sayyid Ni'matu'llah-Jaza'iri), 364
 Mihinbami Sultanum (daughter of Shah Isma'il, xvi), 8r n.
 Mijmar (poet of Ardistan, d. 1810), 225, 307-8
Mikhlat (of Shaykh-i-Baha'i), 407, 428

- Abu Mikhnaf Lut b. Yahya, 188
Mimdu u Hayat ("Death and Life," newspaper), 489
Minhdju't-TaliMn (Refutation of the Babfs), 423
 Mmorsky, V. —, 35 n., 36 n., 153 n., 375 n.
 Minuchihrf (poet, xi), 265, 299
Miqbdsril-Masabik (by Mulla" Muhammad Baqir-i-Majhsi), 417
M'r'dj (Ascension of the Prophet), 39°
 Miracle Plays, 28-9. See also Mu-harram, Ta'ziya
 Miracles of the Prophet, 40 n., 389-390
MiratuU-Bulddn (by Muhammad Hasan K Mn, xix), 454-5
Mirdtu'l-Mamdlik (by Sfdi 'All Ra'is, xvi), ion.
 Mirkhwand (historian, xv), 5, 83, 250, 304, 413 See also Rawdatu's-Sajd
 Mirza Buzurg (Mirza 'Isa of Fara-han, the elder Qa'im-maqdm, d. A.D. 1831), 311; — of Nur, 316
 Mirza Kuchak, 317. See Wisdl Misanthrope, Le — (Moliere), 459
Mtser, The — [Mard-t-JChasis, a Persian comedy], 462
MishkdutH-Anwar (by Mulla" Muhammad Baqir-i-Majhsi), 409
 Miskfn, Mirza 'Abbas of Bistam (poet, d. A.D. 1858), 338, 336. See also Furtigkl
 Missionaries in Persia, 107, 195, 421-2
 Mithradates, 465
 Mitlaq ("the great Divorcer")i the Imam Hasan so named, 393
 Mittwoch, Professor E. —, 484
Mochyn du ("the Black Pig," Welsh song), 223
 Moghul Emperors of India (A.D. 1525-1857), 25, 28, 92, 123, 164. See also Akbar, BSur, Httmdyun, Jahdngir and Shdhjahdn
 Moliere, 458-462
 Mongols, 3, 14 n., 37, 41, 122, 127, 128, 147, 299, 322, 348, 405, 412, 439
 Moon, Cleaving of the — (ShacquH-qamar), 389
 Moore, Thomas —, 80 n.
 Moner's Hajji Bada, 195, 468
 Moscow, 6
 Moses (Mtisd), 207, 254n., 292, 297 n., 388
 Mosul, 137. See Mawsil .
 Mu'amma'f, Amir Husayn — (d. A.D. 1498), 83; Mir Haydar — (poet at Court of Shah 'Abbas the Great), no
 Mu'awrya (Umayyad Caliph, A.D. 661-680), 16 n., 46, 175 n., 392
 Mubarak, Shaykh — (father of the poet Faydi, xvi), 245
MuddatuH-'Umr (by Shaykh 'Ali Hazin, xvni), 278
 -Mufid, -Shaykh — (Muhammad b. Muhammad -Hdriithi, d. A.D. 1022), 405, 449
 Muhammad (the Prophet), 16, 17, 80, 173, 174, 176, 235, 314 n., 381, 387-392, 451; ~ b. 'Ali called Ibnul'-Hanafiyya, 17, 391, — b. Husayn b. 'Ali (brother of the Fourth Imam 'Ali Zaynu'l-'Abidin), 39s; — b. 'Ali Zaynu'l-'Abidin, see Muhammad Baqir, — b. 'Ali-Rida, see Muhammad Taqi Amongst the ancestors of the Safawis and descendants of the Imam MiSsa-Ka"zim mention is made (in the footnote on pp. 32-3) of six persons named Muhammad, viz. Nos. 6, 9, 11, 13, 16, 18, and one, No 20, named Abd Muhammad; and, on p. 37, of a son of Aminu'd-Din Jibra'il and brother of Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Din likewise so named. — (Kings and Princes named Muham-mad) — Mirza or Beg of the "White Sheep" dynasty, early sixteenth century, probably identical, 58 n., 74; — Khuda-banda (Safawi, A.D. 1578-1587), 98, 100-103; — III (Ottoman Sultan, ^{AD} 1595-1603), 106, — Shah (Moghul Em peror of Dihli, A.D. 1739), 136; Sayyid — (grandson of Shall Sulaymsin II the Safawi, xvni), 138; "Aqa" — Khan Qajar (assassinated in A.D. 1797), 139-145, 158, 298, 487, — Shah Qajir (A.D. 1834-1848), 149, 151, 311, 329, 381, Sultan — Shah, contemporary pontifi of the Isma-'fliyya, commonly known as the Aqa Khan, qv, 149 n (Muhammad Ibn —) — b. 'Abdu'l-Wahhab-Qazwini (Mirza Muham-mad Khan, contemporary scholar), 16, 33W, 484, 490; — b. 'Ali b. Musi, 358, see Ibn Babawayhi; — b. 'All b. Shahr-ashub (d. A.D. 1192 355-6; — b. Hasan b. Ali...-Hurr-Amill (d. A.D. 1686), 356, 359, 449; — b. Hasan b. Ali-Tdsi, 355, 358, see -Tusi; — b. Makki-'Amili (put to death in A.D. 1384), 406, see Shahid-i-Awwal; — b. — b. Nu'mdn-Hanthi, 405, see Shaykh-Mufid; — b. -Murtadd, 359, see Muhs m-i-Fayd; — b. Sddiq b. Mahdi, 357, see under Nujiimu's-Samd ("Stars of Heaven"), of which he was the author; — Sulaymdn-Tanukabuni, author of the Qsasuy-Ulamd, q.v., 354-5 and 449, — b. 'Abf Tabb oFGilan, 277, see under 'Ali Hazin supra; — b. Ya'qub, 358, see -Kulayni. — (Muhammad Beg) — (envoy of Sultan Salim I, A.D. 1514), 73; — Hajji — (uncle of Lutf-'Ali Beg, xviii), 283. — (Muhammad Khan) — Ustajhi (A.D. 1509), 414-415; KMn — (killed at Chldirdn, A.D. 1514), 76; — Qajdr (assassin of Nddir Shdh, A.D. 1747), 137 n.; Mirza — Qazwini (contemporary scholar), 261, 372, 484, 490. — (Mufcamads distinguished only by profession, native place, or pen-name.) Qadi — -i-Kashi (ctrcd A.D. 1500), 55, 59; Ra'is — Karra (cited A.D. 1500), 55-6; Sayyid — Kamiina-i-Najafi (killed at Chldiran, A.D. 1514), 76; four Muhammads are mentioned on p. 110 amongst the musicians and rhapsodists of the court of Shall 'Abbas the Great, a harper (ChangC), a drummer (Tanbilra'), a violinist (KamdncchaH), and a Shahndma-kfywan, surnamed Khursand; Aqa — 'Ashiq, poet of Isiahan (d. A.D. 1767), 283, 325; Sayyid — Shu'la (xviii), poet of Isiahan, 28-2; Sayyid — Sahab, poet of Isiahan (d. A.D. 1807), 305-6; — quli Afshdr TJlfat, poet (d. 1824), 311; — Akhbdri of Bahrayn (ctrcd A.D. 1825), 374-6, Mulld — Ma'maqanf (ctrcd A.D. 1850), 422; Sayyid — (father of Mir Damad, xvi), 438

Muhammad 'Abduh, Shaykh — (Grand Mufti of Egypt and Chancellor of the University of al-Azhar, died A.D. 1905), 377, 41

Muhammad 'Ali Shall Qajdr (succeeded to the throne of Persia in A.D. 1907; deposed in A.D. 1909), 158; — son of Karl m KMn-i-Zand (ctrcd A.D. 1782), 142; — Mirza (buys a mansion in Paradise), 370, 411; Mull' — "Silff-kush" (ctrcd A.D. 1750), 368, Aqa — Bihibhanf (another great antagonist of the Sufis), 420; Mirzd — (son of Bahd'u'llah, contemporary), 2i8n. 1; Mirzd — (author of Nujtimu's-Samd, q.v., ctrcd A.D. 1870), 449; Mirzd — Lahiji, see Shaykh 'Ali Hazin, — Beg son of Abdjll Beg (xviii), 283; —, poet of Ya'z (xix), 325, see Jayhiin; — Khatar, son of the poet Yaghma, 338; — Gulshan (father of the poet Qa'dni), 328; Mirza —, see Sd'ib; — Subuh, q.v., of Isiahan, 282, — Surush, q.v., of Si-dih (d. A.D. 1868), 325

Muhammad Amin b. Muhammad Sharif of Astardbad (d. A.D. 1623), founder of the Akhbdrri school (q.v.), 374

Muhammad Baqir, the fifth Imam (vn-viii), 393-4, Mir — 1-Damad, q.v., Mulkt — b. Muhammad Taqi-i-Majhsi (d. A.D. 1700), 120, '94, 358, 359, 366, 379, 381 403-4, 409-410, 416-418, 432, Hajji Sayyid — b. Muhammad Taqi, entitled Hujatu'l-Islam (d. A.D. 1844), 368, 378, 410, Mulla' — b. Hajji Zaynu'l-'Abidin of Khwdnsar (author of the Rawdatu'l-Jannat, composed in A.D. 1870, q.v.), 356-7, 448; — Mirza (Safawi prince, murdered at the age of two in A.D. 1577), 99

Muhammad Hasan Khdn Qajar (killed in A.D. 1757) '139~'41 — called Zargar (poet of Isiahan, d. A.D. 1853), 325; ~ Khan I'timaau-Saltana (d. A.D. 1896), 84n., 453-6

- Muhammad Husayn Mirza' (nephew of Shah Isma'f I I, murdered by his uncle in A.D. 1577) 99; — of Tabriz, caligraphist (xvii), 100; — Ghalib (poet, xviii), 483; — Hidiyat (contemporary), 357
- Muhammad Iqbal, Shaykh — (author of Development of Metaphysics in Persia and Asdr-%Khudi, q.v., contemporary thinker), 430, 431, 436; — Professor —, Ph.D. (contemporary scholar), 56 n.
- Muhammad Karim Khan of Kir man, Hajji — (head of the later Shaykhis and rival of the Bab, xix), 421
- Muhammad Kazim of Khurasan, Mulla — (patriotic mujtaht> d. Dec 12, 1911), 371
- Muhammad Mahdi, Sayyid — of Bu,nijird, entitled Bahru'l-'Ulam ("the Ocean of Learning") (d. ctrcd A.D. 1834), 379, 410
- Muhammad Muhsm Mirza' (son of Sultan Husayn Mirz' the Timund, A.D. 1504), 56
- Muhammad Mu'min (musician at the court of Shall 'Abbas the Great), no; —, poetically surnamed Da'i (d. A.D. 1742), 282; — Husaynf (author of the Tuhiatu'l-Mu'minin, q.v., A.D. 1669), 439
- Muhammad Rafi⁴ b. Muhammad Shaft' of Tabriz (author of the MatdHntf s-Siifiyya> A.D. 1806), 420
- Muhammad Rahim (court-physician to Sultan Husayn, ctrcd A.D. 1700),
- Muhammad Sadiq (poet of Tafrfsh, xviii), 18a, 283; — Qa'im-maq^mi, better known as Adibu'1-Mama-lik, q.v. (d. Feb. 21, 1917), 346-9, 484; — Tabdtaba'f (editor of the newspaper Mag lis in A.D. 1906), 347
- Muhammad Sali'j (cruelly put to death about A.D. 1574), 97; — Khan (one of the assassins of Waclir Shah in A.D. 1747), 137 n.
- Muhammad Shafi', Professor — (contemporary scholar), 281 n.
- Muhammad Tahir Wahid (poet, d. A.D. 1708), 158, 264-5
- Muhammad Taqi, the ninth Imam (ix), 46, 394; Mulla — -i-Majlisi (d. A.D. 1660), 253, 493-4, 409, 417; — of Kashan, state-historian and poet, entitled Liaanu'1-Mulk and Sipih (xix), 336, 344, 445; Mulla — of Qazwfn (assassinated by Babis about A.D. 1847, and hence entitled Shahid-i-Thalith, the Third Martyr," q.v.), 411, 4'1; — Khan, called tfakim (author of the Ganj-i-Ddnish, A.D. 1887), 456; — of Hamadan (author of the Ihqdu'l~flaqqi, A.D. 1908), 423
- "Muhammads, "the Three —" (i.e. -Kulayni, Ibn Babawayhi and -Tusi q.v.), all before A.D. 1067; and, in a later age (between A.D. 1600 and 1700), Mulla Murisin-i-PaVd, Mulla Muhammad Baqir-i-Majlisi, and the author of the Amalu'i'Amti, q.v., 358-9' 366 n., 405
- Mul'aqqiq--Awwal ("the First Verifier," xm), 378, 405-6; — >i-Thdni ("the Second Verifier," xvu), 28, 379, 406, 409; — >T'si(Nasiru'd-Din-i-Tusi, d. A.D. 1'74), 405; — -i-Ardabfli (xvn), 370
- Muharram (month of mourning), 28-31, 162, 194. See Raw<ja'kkwdn, Tcfnya
- Muhassm (son of ⁴Ali b. Abi Tilib, vii), 392
- Mufcsin, Mir Sultan — (d. ctrcd A.D. 1508), 59; Mull' — -i-Fayd (philosopher and poet, d. A.D. 1680), 250, 359, 377, 407-8. 411> 426-7, 432-6
- Muhtasham (poet of Kashan, d. A.D. 1587), 28, no, 162, 172, 173-7, 178, 193, 241
- Muhyi'd-Din ibnu'l-'Arabf, Shaykh — (d. A.D. 1240), 37, 432, 434, 449; — of Barda'a, Qacli — (xiv), ~45
- Mu'izzf, Amir — (poet, d. A.D. 1148), 168, 299
- Mu'izz-i-Kashi, Mir — (caligraphist, xvii), no
- Mu'izzu'd-Dawla (Buwayhid, x), 30-1
- Mu'jamu'l-Bulddn (of Yaqt, xm), 397 n., 454
- Mu'jindt (Miracles, q.v.), 40n.
- Mujtaba (title of the Imam Hasan), 393

INDEX

S'S

- Mujtahids* 353-4. 367-380
Mujtahidv'sh-Shu'ard, 307. See Mij-mar
Mukhlis (poet), 194
Mukhtdri (poet, xu), 299
Ibn Muljam (the murderer of 'Ali b. Abi Talib), 39'
Muils, 353-4. See Mujtahtds above
MumUu'd-Din ("the Slayer of Religion"), Shaykh Muhyi'd-Din so called, 434
Munajitm-bdshi ("Chief Astrologer," author of a history entitled Sahd-hittl-Akhbdar, q.v.), 106 n.
Mundzara-i-Shab u JZtiz ("Dispute of Night and Day," title of an article in the Kawa newspaper), 487
Munkir and Nakir (the Angels who conduct the "Questioning of the Tomb"), 370, 396
Munshddt-i-Rashidi (xm-xiv), 33-4
Munshd? dtu's-Saldtin (Turkish State Papers collected and arranged about A.D. 1583 by Firidiin Bëy, q.v.), 8 n., 66 n.
Muntakhabu't-Tawdrihk (by 'Abdu'l-Qadir-i-Bada'uni), 165 n., 242 n., 243 n., 245 n., 249
Muntazam-x-Ndsi i. (by Muhammad Hasan Khdn I'timddu's-&altana, A.D. 1881-3), 455
Munyatu'l-Fiidald (title ascribed to the Kitdbri/-Fakhrf), 444
Miiqan, Plain of —, 144 n.
Muqbil (poet), 194
Murad Beg Bdyandarf (ruler of Yazd, circa AD 1500), 55; Sultdn — Aq-qoyiinhi (ruler of 'Iraq, ctrcd A.D. 1500), 55, 58, 69, 76, 82; Sultiin — IIIU.D.^^-iS QsJ^j-Sultdn — IV (A.D. 1623-1640), Miirchakhiir (near Isiahan), 133, 142
Murid (disciple), 20
Murshd (spiritual director), 19-20
Murshid-qulf Khan Ustdjlu (tutor of Shall 'Abbas the Great, A.D. 1586), 101, 104
Murtatja (title of 'Ali b. Abi Talib, a v.); Sayyid —, entitled 'A-Iamu'l-Huda, q.v.
Musa (the Prophet Moses, q.v.); — Kazim (the seventh Imam, vni), i9» 33ⁿ, 36, 87 n., 391, 394, 405; — Beg Afshar (one of the murderers of Nadir Shah, A.D. 1747)» 137 n.; — of Bistim, father of the poet Furdghi (xvii-xix), 336; Shaykh — of Hajj^adin (author of Vshq u Saltana, "Love and Lordship," A.D. 1920), 464
Musamntaf (a kind of poem), 163 and note
Musdwtd (newspaper), 469
Muscat, 280
Mlish u Gurba ("the Mouse and the Cat," a poem by 'Ubayd-i-Zakani, xiv), 490
Musha'shi' Sayyids of Huwayza (chastised by Sha'h Isma'f I in A.D. 1508), 58
Mushtaq (poet of Isiahan, xvii), 283, 284
MushUq 'Ali (Siifl killed by fanatics about A.D. 1796), 420
Music, Persian —, 222-3
Muslim b. 'Aqil, martyrdom of — (vn), 190-3
Abd Muslim ('Abbsid propagandist, vm), 23
Mustafa (title of the Prophet Muhammad, q.v.), 178, 180; — Mirza" (son of Shah Tahm&p, murdered by his brother Shall Isma'f II in A.D. 1577), 98
-Mustansir bi'llah (Fdtimid Caliph, A.D. 1035-1004), 54 m, 98
-Musta'sim (the last 'Abbasid Caliph, A.D. 1242-1258), 41 n.
Mutahhar-HilH, 356
Mutakallimtin (Schoolmen), 376,402, 426
MuUamanu's-SuUdn (earlier title of Muhammad Hasan Khan, q.v.), 190^
Mu'tamcdud'd-Da'ivla (title conferred on the poet Nashat by Fath-'Ali Shah), 311
-Mu'tamid ('Abbasid Caliph, A.D. 870-892), 394
-Mutanabbi (Arab poet, d. A.D. 965), 357
-Mu'tasim ('Abbsid Caliph, A.D. 833-84^), 394
MutcvwalU (pi. Mataim la, Shi'a so called in Syria), 16
Mu'tazila (sect), 17, 384, 424
-Mu'tazz ('Abbasid Caliph, A.D. 866-9)» 394
MutC (poet, xvii), 267
Mutiny, Indian —, 154
Muzafiar Sultan (governor of Rasht,

- barbarously put to death about A.D. 1574), 96; — 'Ali (artist at court of Shah 'Abdus the Great), and Hafiz — of Qum (musician at the same, about A.D. 1600), no; — u'd-Din Shah Qajar (A.D. 1896-1907), 157-8
- Mysteries of Sound and Number* (by Shaykh Habib Ahmad), 44a
- Nabil (numerically equivalent to Muhammad), of Zarand, Baha'f poet (d. A.D. 1802), 15 m., 187 n.
- Nadir-qulf, no, 132, afterwards Na'ir Shdh (A.D. 1736-1747), 11, 52 n., 113, 116, 141, 122, 128, 132-8, 139, 141, 144 n., 158, 280, 281, 283, 284, 420
- Nafahat' l-Uns* (by Jamf, xv), 40 n., 42 n.
- Nafsiyya* (prose work by 'Urfi on Sufism, xvi), 248
- Na'fm (Baha'f poet, xix), 163 n., 198-220
- Najaf, 58, 59, 76, 251, 370, 372, 376
- Naj&shi, Ahmad b. 'Ali — (author of the Asmd'tSr-Rijdl, d. A.D. 1063), 355, 358, 405
- Najfbu'd-Din Buzgmish. See below under Najmu'd-Din
- Najjar (heretical views of —), 384
- Najmu'd-Din Kubra (xiii), 37; — Buzghiish (d. A.D. 1279), 37, 42 and note; — Mas'iid of Rasht (called Najm-i-awwal, "the First Star," d. A.D. 1510), 59, 74 n.; he was succeeded by Najm-i-thani, "the Second Star," Amir Yar Ahmad-i-Khrizdnf (killed m A.D. 1512), 59, 66, 74, 83» 231; — Ja'far b. Yahya, entitled Muhaqqiq-i-awwal, q.v. (d. A.D. 1335), 378, 405-6
- Nakhjuwan, 76, 93, 104, 100, 130
- Ndkithin* ("troth-breakers, 'A'isha, Talha and Zubayr), 392
- Nalho, Professor—, 13 n.
- Nalu Daman* (poem by Faydi, xvi), 244
- Ndma-t-Ddnishwardn* (xix), 446
- Namakddn* (by Jayhtin of Yazd), 326; — -t-Haqiqat (by Shifa'i, d. A.D. 1627), 256
- Nam! (poet, xvi), 231
- Nan u Halwd* ("Bread and Sweetmeats," by Shaykh-i-Baha'i, xvn), 253, 407, 428
- Napoleon, 128, 199, 209, 325
- Ndqitin* ("Covenant-breakers," a name applied by the followers of 'Abbas Efendi 'Abdu'l-Baha to the partisans of his half-brother Muhammad 'Ali), 220
- Narjfs Khatiin (mother of the Imam Mahdi, A.D. 860), 394
- Nasab-ndma-i-Silsila-t-Safawtyya* (or Stlstatu'n-Nasab, q.v., xvn), 4, 5, 3 n., 35 and note, 36, 40
- Nashat (poet of Isiahah, d. A.D. 1828), 225, 307, 311
- Ndsikhu'l-Tatvdrikh* (general history by Lisanu'l-Mulk, q.v., xix), 145 n., 148, 326, 413, 445
- Naslm (poet), 194; — -uSkimdl (newspaper), 345, 469
- Nasimatu' s-Sahar /{-man tashayya'a wa ska'ar* (biography of Shi'a poets who wrote in Arabic), 3'8
- Nasir-i-Khusraw (poet, philosopher and piopagandist, xi), 177, 257, 299, 357, 412, 478, 482, 490; — 'Ali (poet, xvii), 269; — u'd-Din Shah Qajar (A.D. 1848-1896), 151-8, 161, 224, 298, 319, 329, 33» 344» 370, 441! 450, 454-6 468; — u'd-Din (of the Dhu'l-Qadar dynasty, xv-xvi), 77 n.
- Nasiru'd-Din-i-Tusi (called Muhaqqiq-i-Tusi, d. A.D. 1274), 405
- Nasir b. 'Abdu'llah, Mirza — (poet, d. A.D. 1778), 283
- Nasru'd-Din Efendi, Khoja (Khwaja), Turkish wit, 416
- Nasru'llah Zaytiini, Qadi — {cued A.D. 1500), 54; — (Zoroastrian general of Afghans, A.D. 1722), 126, 130
- Abu Nasr Fathu'lldh Khan Shaybsiof (poet of Kashdn, xix), 326, 344
- Nassau Lees, 40 n
- Nationalism, ancient and modern, 12-14
- Nawi'f, Mir 'Ali Shir — (xv), 83, 163, 227
- Naw Bahdr* (newspaper), 345, 469
- Naw'f (poet, xvn), 168, 267
- Nawrtiz* (Persian New Year's Day), 135, 333-4
- Nawwab Mirza' Hasan 'Ali Khan (xix), 301-2, 319
- Nayriz, 153, 218 n
- Nazimu'l-Istem of Kirman (xx), 413, 446

- Naziri (poet, xvii), 167, 250, 252, 268
Nazir u Manzur (poem by Wahshi, xvi), 238
 Nero, 23, 62
 Neuburger, Dr Max —, 438
Neue Orient, 484 n
 Nicholson, Dr R. A. —, 431 n.
 Nicolas, A.-L.-M —, 422 n.
 Niedermeyer, Captain —, 484
 Nietzsche, 431 n.
 Nigaristan (palace in Tihiran), 47Qn.; — -i-Dara (biographies of poets of Fath-'Ali Shah's reign), 298
 Nihdward, 279
 Ni'matu'llah, Shall — of Kirman (saint and poet, xiv-xv), 76; — -Jaza'iri, Sayyid — (theologian, xvii), 360-7, 376
 Niraqi, Mulla" Ahmad -1- — (theologian and poet, d. A D. 1828), 411
 Nisa, 109
 Nishapur, 132, 133, 252, 456
 Niyazi (poet, xvi), 81
 Nizamf (poet of Ganja, xn), 229, 244, 248, 299
 Nizam'u'l-Mulk (Minister of Alp Arslan and Mahksh&h, xi), 412, — (King of the Deccan, d A.D. 1553) 168-9
 Noah {*Nti*h}, 207, 217, 388
 Noldeke, Prof Th. —, 209 n
Niia-i-Sina-zani (a special form of poem by Yaghmd), 339-344
Nujumu's-Samd ("Stars of Heaven," AD 1570), 357, 358, 359 n, 449
Nuqta ("Point," title assumed by the Bab), 197, — -i-A'-Id, or — -1-Baydn (the same), 150
Nuqtatu l-Kdi(contemporary history of the Bab by his admirer and disciple Hajji Mirza Jani of Keshan, killed in A D. 1852), 218 n., 446
Nuqtawiyya sect, 8
 Nur (in Mazandaran), 316
 Nur 'Ali Shah (Sufi killed by fanatics, arcd A.D 1806), 420
 Nur-bakhshi, Qiwamu'd-Din — (A D. 1520), 231
 Nur-i-Isiahanf, Qactf — (poet, circd A D 1600), 110
 Nuru'd-Din 'Abdu'l-Wahhab (envoy of Shah Isma'il I to the Turks, about A D. 1515), 77, — (physician of Shah Tahmasp, A.D. 1544)1 92
 Niiru'llah b. Shartf-Mar'ashi of Shush-tar (author of the Majdlisu'l-Mtftmnin, a.v., put to death by Jahangir in A.D. 1610), 356, 447
 Ntishirwan (Anrisharwan, Sasaman king, vi), 52, 96, 391, 464
 Nusrat College, Hamad&i, 464
 Nusratu'd-Din Ahmad, Atabak of Lunstan (A D 1324), 443
 Abu Nuwas (Arab poet, ix), 357
 Occultation (Ghaybat) of the Twelfth Imam, 150
 Occult Sciences, 441-2
 Oelschlager. See Olearius
 Ogotay Qa'an (son of Hasan 'Ali Mirza Shuj'd'u's-Saltana, xix), 328 d'Ohsson (author of Histotre des Mongols), 45n, 322
 Olearius, 10, 15n., 28, 114-115
 Olives, Mount of—, 214, 218
 Opium-eating, 472-3
 'Osman, Topal — (Turkish general, killed in A D. 1733). '34
 'Osmanlf See Ottoman, Turk
 Ottoman Turks, 6, 11, 13, 24, 26, 44, 55, 57, 60, 63, 65, 66, -9, 80 n., 87-8, 103-7, 135, 315, 316; — poetry, Persian influences on —, 163-5
Oude, Catalogue of the Library of the King of— by Sprenger, 165 n.
 Ouseley Sir Gore —, 227 n.
 Oxus {Amtij Jayhun), 219
Pddzahr-1-haywdni ("animal antidote"), 59
 Pahlawi, 209 n, 487
 Palestine, 45, 46 n., 428
 Pan-Iblamism, 24, 303
 Pantheism (Wahdatu'l-Wujtid), 382, 333
 Pan-Turanian Movement, 15
 Pari-Khan Khanum, 81 n., 101, 102, 172
 Pans, 323-5 (Farhang's poem on —), 444, 450, 459, 49° '> Treaty of —, 154
Pattshan, Kitdb-t- — (by Qa'anf, A D 1836), 326-8, 335
 Parry, 10
Pars (newspaper), 489
Pdrsi-mgdri (use of pure Persian by Yaghmd), 338; cf. 423
 Parwdna (earlier pen-name of the Aaibu'l-Mamdhk, q.v) 347

- Parwarish* (newspaper, A.D. 1900), 469
Passion Plays, 29, 186-194. See Muharram, Pelly, Sir Lewis —, and Ta'zya
Pelenk and Felenk, 119
Pelly, Sir Lewis —, 29, 186, 187 n., 188 n., 190 n., 193 n.
Peloponnesus, 73
Pentateuch (Tawrdl), 204, 414, 388
 "Perfection," "the Blessed —" (Jamdl'i-Mubdraky title of Bahd'u-'Uah, g.v.), 214 n.
Persecution, 69, 77, 92, 94-5, 120, 147, 227. See Bdbis, ShPa, Siifis, Sunnis
Persepohs, 133
Persian belief in Divine Right of Kings, 18; — Gulf, 107, 154, 451; — language, 13; — Revolution (by E. G. Browne), 371
Peshawur, 136
Peter the Great, 131
Petrograd, 490
Pharaoh (Fir'awn, pl. Fard'ma), 14, 336
Philhpe, Don — of Persia, 6
Phillott, Col. D. C. —, 468
Philosophy, 422-437
Pir (spiritual director), 19, 20; — zada (family name), 42
Plato (Afldtuti), 201, 202, 2X2
Platts (ed of Gitlistdn), 269n
Pliny, 441
Point (Nuqta, g.v.), 150
Poland, 5
Polytheism (Shirk), 385-6
Pope, the —, 5, 7
Portugal, Portuguese, 4, 10, 92, 107
Pote Collection of MSS. (Eton and King's Colleges), 35, 229 n.
Predestination (jabr), 15, 384-5. See also Fatalism
Press and Poetry of Modern Persia by E. G. Browne, 155 n., 162 n., 223, 302, 303 n., 340, 343, 345, 346, 371, 441, 447, 454 n., 457 n., 467 n., 468 n., 469, 478 n., 482 n.
Priests, Christian —, 4-6, 9-10. See also Missionaries
Printing introduced into Persia, 155, 468
Prophetic Office, 387-8
Prose, Varieties of —, 412
Psalms (Zudiir, Mazdmir), 388
Psychical Research, 40
Ptolemy, 201, 212
Purchas's Pilgrims, 105
Pusht6 (Afghan) language, 12s
Qa'ail, 14 n. See also Khdqdn
Qa'anf (poet, d. A.D. 1853), 26, 163, 168, 177-181, 225, 227, 265, 299, 307 n., 326-335, 336, 337, 339, 344
Qabfl (Cain), 207, 217
Qdbus-ndma (xi), 412
Qadisiyya, Battle of — (vii), 126-7
Qahqaha, Castle of —, 89, 96, 98
Qa'im-i-AI-i-Muhammad (the Twelfth Imam or Imam Mahdl, q.v.), 150, 394' 4'9; — ('Abbasid Caliph, A.D. 1031-1075), 54 n., — maqdtm (Mirza "Isa" of Farattian, d. A.D. 1831, and his son Mixza Abu'l-Qasim, put to death in A.D. 1835), 147 and note, 152, 303, 311-316, 34-5, 347, 484 n.
Qajdrs, 10, 26, 29, 52 n., 115, 121, 122, a28, 132, 139, 140-158, 168, 224, 298, 299, 300, 375, 455, 487-8. See also under the names of the individual kings of this dynasty
Qamsar (near Kashaii), 477, 481
Qanba-r-i-Rawda-kkwdn, Sayyid — (satirized by Yaghma), 339
Qandahai, 55, 112, n 8 n., 123-5, 136
-Qanun (newspaper), 468-9
Qamini ("the Law-giver," title of Sultdn Sulaymdn I), 81
Qaqdzan (?Qazan), 475, 479
Qara-bagh, 49, 346
Qaraman (Caramama), 48
Qaren, 109, 209 and note
Qar-iin (Corah, amongst the Muslims proverbial for his wealth, like Croesus in Europe), 199, 207, 209, 217
Qaxs, 104
Qarshi, Massacre of Sunnis at — in A.D. 1512, 63, 83, 94, 227
Qaruyal (or Quryal, or Qdriyan), 47
Qasim (son of the Prophet Muhammad, died in infancy), 391; — Beg Ibn Jahdngfr Beg Ibn 'All Beg (ruler of Diya Bakr about A.D. 1500), 55; Mawlana — (poet, circd A.D. 1554), 169-170
Abu'l-Qasim Hamza (son of the seventh Imam Musa Kazim, and ancestor of the Safawis), 33 n.; — Findanski (xvi-xvn), 250, 257-8, 408, 435; Mirza — Qa'im-

- maqam* (fi.v.), 147, 3x1-316, 484 n.; — (poet of Shiraz, xrx), 225 n.
- Qisimi* (poet to Shah Isma'il, xvi), 83, 229 n.
- Qasimu'l-Anwar* (poet, xiv-xv), 44
- Qasimu'l-Arza'j* ("the Assigner of Daily Bread," 'All so called), 385
- Qasitfn* ("Wrong-doers," Mu'a'wiya and the Umayyads so called), 392
- Qasr-i-Zar* (m Fa's), 59
- Qasiabtyya* (by the poet Yaghma'), 339
- Qatran* (poet, xi), 299
- Qawd'idil-Islam* (Shi'a theological work by -Hilli), 54 and note
- Qdyin* (in Khurasan), 427
- Qaysar-i-Rtitn*, 80 n.
- Qaysariyya* (Caesarea), 71
- Qazwin*, 4, ion., 26, 85, 90, 97, 98, 100, 104, 105, 109, no, 129, 130, 131, 135, 170, -172 (Hayrati's satire on the people of —), 223, 264, 282 n., 345
- Qazwini, Zakanyya b. Muhammad b. Mahmiid (geographer, xm), 397 n, 448
- Qiiti (author of the Ta'rikhtCL Hukamd, xm), 447
- Qipchaq*, Dasht-i—, 45
- Qtsasul-'Ulamd* (Biographies of Shi'a doctors, by Muhammad b. Sulaymdn of Tanukdbun, A.D. 1873), 120, 354-5, 356, 358, 360 n., 361, 368 n., 369 n, 370 n., 372, 373, 376, 377. 378n., 379 n., 404-9' 416, 426, 427 n., 428, 429, 432, 434, 435, 449
- Qiskri* (formalist, externalist), 376, 402
- Qi wamu'd- Din Niir-bakshi* (A.D. 1519), 231 and note
- Qiyds* (analogy), 374
- Qizil-bdsh* (also called Qizil-burk and Surkh-sar, "Red-heads"), 12, 13, 14, 48 (why so called), 68-9, 74, 76, 80 n. (Qizil-burk), 93, 102, 104, 106, 236 and note
- Qoja Beg Giinduzlu* (one of the assassins of Nadir Shah), 137 n.
- Qubad* (Sasanian king), 464
- Qiichan*, 455
- Qudsi* (poet of Mashhad, d. A.D. 1646), 251, 258
- Quds wa'l-Khalil (Jerusalem and Hebron), 46 ad cole.
- Quellenkunde der Persischen Medizin* (by Dr A. Fonahn), 439
- Query, M. Ame'de'e —, 377, 378
- ««Questioning of the Tomb^h (StSdl-i-Qabr), 396
- Quhnid*, 109
- "Quintet," 229. See Khatnsa
- Qum*, 30, 56, 100, 130, 148, 149, 237, 253, 259, 283, 309, 429
- Qur an*, 16, 36, 39, no, 114, 137, 209 n., 210, 212 n., 214, 215 n., 217n., 243, 254n., 336n., 361, 374, 381, 382, 388-390, 401, 4'5, 418, 430, 432
- Quriydn* (Qaruyal, or Quryal), 47
- Qurratu'l-'Ayn* (the Babf heroine, put to death in A.D. 1852), 154, 197, 421
- Ibn Qutayba*, 485 n.
- Qutbu'd-Din Ahmad* (great-grandfather of Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Din), 32 n., 36-7
- Rabino, H. L.* —, 30
- RabPu'l-Asdbi'* (by Mulla Muhammad Baqir-i-Majlisi, d. A.D. 1700), 417
- Rafidi*, 234. See Shi'a
- Rafiq, Mulla'* Husayn — (poet, xviii), 282
- Rafsinjan*, 126
- Rahatu' r-Sudiir* (history of the Saljilqs by -Rawandi), 18n., 56 n., 222 and note
- Rahim, -Malik* — (Buwayhid, xi), 54 n.
- Rah-i-Naw* (newspaper), 484
- Raj'at* ("Return," doctrine of —), 197, 398-400
- Rangfn* (m Gflan), 36
- Raphael du Mans, Pere* — (xvn), 9, 20, 115, 116
- Raqim* (poet, xvii), 267
- Rashahdt-i'Sahdb/ly* SahabofIs fahan, d. A.D. 1807), 305
- Rashidu'd-Dm Fadlu'lWh* (xiv), 19, 33
- Rasht*, 50, 59, 96/135, 184, 186, 222, 410, 489
- Rasmi* (poet, xvi), 166
- Rastakhiz* ("the Resurrection," newspaper), 484 n.
- Rawandi, Abu Bakr Najmu'd-Dm Muhammad* — (author of the Rahatu's-Sudibr, xu-xiii), 222
- Rawda-khwdn*, 29, 181 (why so called); 182-194
- Rawdatu'l-fanndt* (Biographies of eminent Muslims, compiled in A.D. 1870), 251, 257, 350-7, 358,

- 359, 408-411 passim, 416, 417, 421-2, 426-432 passim, 435, 446, 448
- Rawdati-Safd* (vols, I-vii by Mir-khwand, xv; supplementary vols, viii-x by Rida-qulfi Kha'n Hidyyat, xix), 5, 7, 8, 102, 250-251, 304, 317, 413, 445
- Raw data? sh'Shuhadd* ("Garden of the Martyrs," by Husayn Wa'iz-i-Kashifi, xv), 29, 181, 237
- Ray, 232, 233, 438
- RayMni, Yahyd Khan — (contemporary poet), 490
- Razi (Abu Bakr Muhammad b. Zakanyya, physician, x), 425, 438-9, 449
- Recording Angels (named Sd iq and Shahid), 398, 400
- "Red-heads." See Qizil-bdsh
- Redhouse, Sir James —, 35
- "Reign of Terror at Tabriz" (by E. G. Browne), 37 m
- Religions et Philosophies dans VAsie Centrale* (by the Comte de Gobmeau). See Gohncait
- Religious Attitude and Life in Islam* (by D. B. Macdonald), 40
- Renaissance, 438
- Resurrection (Qiydmat), 382, 390, 399-401, 422
- "Return" (Raj'at, q.v.), 419
- Revolution of 1906 in Persia, 121, 123, 155-8, 162, 302, 303, 340, 344, 345, 467; Persian Revolution of 1905-1909 (by E. G. Browne, 1910, 155, 302, 468 n
- Rhodes, 81
- Ri(son-quli (son of Nslidir Shah, xviii), 135, 136, 138; — Khan, poetically surnamed Hidyyat, q.v. (born A.D. 1800, died 1872), 5, 7, 25, 26, 28, 102, 164 n., 172, 224, 230, 233, 234, 235, 245, 250, 251, 256, 258, 264, 265, 298, 299, 304, 305, 307, 309, 311', 317, 319, 326, 344, 413, 445. See also Majma'u'l-Fusahd, Riyddu'l-'Anfin, etc.
- Ridd - yi - 'Abbasi (portrait • painter, xvii), 25, 484; Shaykh — yi-Kurd (poet, date unknown), 29; Sayyid — b. Mahdi, 370; — of Kirman (assassin of Nasiru'd-Din Shdh, A.D. 1896), 155; — Khan (Commander-in-chief and practically Dictator of Persia, A.D. 1923-4), 15; — Khdn, Mirza —. See Arfa'rid'Daivla
- Rieu, Dr Charles — (author of the British Museum Catalogues of Arabic, Persian and Turkish MSS), 35n., 54n., 57n, 66n., 83n., 229 n., 23m., 233, 235 n., 237 n., 238, 24m., 243n., 251, 252, 253, 256, 257, 264, 265, 278 n., 281 n., 298, 408 n., 420 n., 447 n., 453
- Rijdlu'l-Ghayb* ("Men of the Unseen World"), 472 and note
- Risdla-i-Khayrditiyya* (by Aqa' Muhammad 'Ali Bihbindni), 420
- Riydddt* (mortification, discipline), 382
- Riyddiyydt* (the exact or mathematical sciences), 437
- Riyddu'l-'Anfin* (by Rida"-quli Khan, xix), 230, 251, 265, 304, 305, 309n., 319, 32<Sn., 436, 437
- Riyddu'sk-Shu'atd* (by Wahh, A.D. 1748), 229
- Roe, Richard —, 380
- Rome, 5, 6; Church of—, 359
- Rosen, Dr F —, 463
- Rosenzweig-Schwannau (ed. of Hdiiz), 2i6n.
- Ross, Col Sir E. —, 462 n
- Ross, Sir E. Denison —, 15 n, son, 64n., 358, 444
- Roxburgh Club, 105 n.
- Riidagf, or Rildaki (poet, x), 221, 299
- Ruhl, Hajji Shaykh Ahmad—of Kirman (put to death in A.D. 1896), 468
- Rukna" (poet, xvn), 268
- Ruknu'd-Din Mas'iid or Kazariin (burned to death about A.D. 1574), 97
- Riim, 166-7. See Asia Minor
- Rumeha, 76
- Rumhi, 14, 52 n.
- Ruqayya (daughter of the Prophet Muhammad), 392
- Riis-i-Manhiis* (the "sinister Russians"), 316
- Russia, 4, 5, 114, 128, 130, 131, 134, 146, 147, 155, 156, 157, 312-316, 371. 374-5. 476, 478, 480-483, 489; Russian wife of Sultan Sulayman, 89-90; — Mission massacred at Tihiran in A.D. 182^, 146, 312-316; — cruelties in Tabriz, 371, — general's death compassed by Persian theologian, 374-5; — aggression in Persia, poem on —, 348

- Rustam Aq-qoyunlu, grandson of i W n Hasan (xv), 49, 50, 58 n.; — Beg the Kurd, Haju — (A.D. 1502), 68-69; — Ruz-afzun (ruler of Mazandaran, A.D. 1510), 65; Shah — of Lunstan (A.D. 1508), 59, 76, — K M n (general, A.D. 1713), 124, — us-Sddt (Sayyid Qanbar, satirized by Yaghma), 339; Kamdn-i- — (the Rainbow), 414
- Ruzbihani, Sabri — (poet at court of Shall 'Abbas I), no
- Mz-t-Qatl* (the "Day of Slaughter," i.e. the 'AsMrd or 10th of Muharram), 29, 188. See also Miiharram, Passion Play, Ta^Kztya^A etc
- Riizndma • 1 • frdn -1 - Sultdnl* (news-paper), 346, 347
- Sata (Fath-'Ali Khan of Keshan, poet, d. A.D. 1822), 307 n., 309-310
- Saba' (Sheba), 190, 192
- Sabahi (Hajji Sulaymali, poet of Kashan, d. A.D. 1791), 142, 178, 282, 309
- Sabri Ruzbihdni (poet of the court of Shah 'AbMs), no
- Sabzawdr, 105, 136, 326, 436-7, 456
- Ibn Sa'd ('Umar — b. Abi Waqqas, vn), 178, 180, 188
- Sa'di (of Shiraz, xiii), 37, 42, 246, 299, 348, 490
- Sadiq Beg (artist at the court of Shah 'Abbas I), no, — Khan (brother of Karim Khan-i-Zand, killed m A D 1782), 140, 142; — Khan-i-Qd'im-maqami (d. A D . 197)t 346-9. See AdibuH-Ma-mdhk
- Sadr, Office of —, 59, 427
- Sadra, Mulla" — of Shiraz (philosopher, d. A.D. 1640), 257, 376, 407, 408, 411, 426, 427, 428-432, 434-7
- Sadru'd-Din, Shaykh — (son of Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Din, whom he succeeded m A.D. 1334 and died m A.D. 1392), 19, 34, 35, 39, 42-46; — Muhammad (calligraphist at the court of Shalt 'Abbas I), 110. See also under Sadrd above
- Sa'du'd-Din-Taftazanf, 63, — (Turkish historian), 72; — 'Inayatu'llah Khuzani, Amir — (burned to death, xvi), 97
- adiiq, title of Ibn Bdbatuayhi, q.v.
- afa, 225, 307 n., an error for Sabd,
- Safi ^ Mulla' Ahmad-i-Niraqi (d. A.D. 1828), 41 x; Mirza' Ahmad —, son of the poet Yaghma\ 338
- Safar-ndma* (of Nasir-i-Khusraw, xi), 412
- Safdrat-ndma'i-Khwdrazm(Ri&a'C±yiji* Khali, A.D. 1855), 304
- Safawi Dynasty (A.D. 1502-1736), 1, 1ZZ passim, 168, 372, 487; historical importance of the —, 3-4; historical records of the —, 4-11; characteristics of the —, 11 et seq., poetry under —, 26-8, 221, 250, 354; rise of the —, 32-83; culmination and decline of the —, 84-120, — greatly venerated by their subjects, 86, Shi'a faith promoted by —, 353-4
- Safi I, Shall — (A.D. 1629-1641), 111, 231; — II (subsequently called Sulayman I, A.D. 1666-1694), in
- Saff (Mirza Ja'far, poet, of Isiahan, xvni), 282
- Safnatifl' Mahm&d* (anthology of Fath-'Ali ShaVs poets, xix), 298
- Safi-quli Khan (Persian general, xviii),
- Safiyyu'd-Din, Shaykh Abu'l-Fath Ishaq — (born A D . 1252, died 1334)) 4, 19, 32-44, 4611., 88, 115, pedigree, 32-3 ad calc, 87 n., 444
- Safwatus - Safd* (biography of the above-mentioned Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Din), 4, 19, 32 n., 38-42, 444
- Sagharchi, Kamalu'd-Din — (xvi), 65-6
- Sahabf (poet, of Astardbad, d. A.D. 1601), 251
- Saha'ifu l-Akhbdr* (Turkish version of Munajjfm-bashi's history), 106 n.
- Sahba, Aqa Taqf — (poet, of Qum, xviii), 283
- Sahib-Diwan (A.D. 1888), 221
- Sahib-Qiran, 108
- SsSchilali (near Tabriz), 76
- Sahl 'Ali, Imaln-zacla — (neai Hama-din), 57
- Sahwu'l-Ltsdn* ("Lapsus Linguae," Sharifs compilation of Lisani's poems so called), 236
- Sa'ib (poet of Tabriz, d. A.D. 1670), 25, 163-5, 242, 250, 251, 258-261, 265-276, 299

- Sa'id ('Umar b. Sa'd, q.v.) appears to be intended, 170, 171 AbuSa'fd (Tfmtirid, A.D., 1452-1467), 100
 Sa'iq (Recording Angel), 400
 Sa'ir(the second of the Seven Hells), 400-401
 Sajjad (title of the Fourth Imam 'AII b. -Husayn, better known as Zaynu'l-'Abidin, q.v.), 179, 181 and note, 393
 Sakina (daughter of the Imam Husayn, vn), 179, r8r, 393
 Sakisa~ (minstrel of Khusraw Parwiz), 291
 Sakkaki (earlier pen-name oiFtghdni, q.vX 230 n.
 Sala'iu'd-Dm Rashid b. Muhammad Hafiz (ancestor of the Safawis), 32 n., 36-7
 Salasma, 393. See ShahrbdnA
 Sale's Qurdn, 209 n.
Salifc (Prophet sent to ancient Arabs), 388 ; — b. Qutbu'd-Din Ahmad (ancestor of the Safawis), 32 n.; — Beg (assassin of Nddir Shdh), 137-8
Salim I (Ottoman Sultan, A.D. 1512-1520), 9, n-14, 20, 23-4, 65 n., 67, 71 n., 72, 73-80, 93; — II (Ottoman Sultan, called "the Sot," A.D. 1566-1574), 90-92; — (poet of Tihiran, d. A.D. 1647), 251, 258
 Saljuq Dynasty, 3, 18, 54, 222
 Salman-1-Asadi(Persian student), 346 n.
 Salmis, 106
Sal-ndma (Year Book), 456
 Salsabil (over in Paradise), 175, 177, 228 n., 229
Sam Mirza (son of Shah Isma'il I, xvi), 25 n., 81, 88, 89, 231 n., 237, 238, 447; — (grandson of Shah 'AbMs the Great, who succeeded him in A.D. 1629 under the title of Shdh Safi I, q.v.), in Sdmmdm Dynasty, 221
 Samarqand, 64, 348
 Samarra, 366
 Samnan, 55, 337, 347, 456
 Sand'i (poet, xn), 220, 299, 357, 449
 San'ati-zada of Kirman (contemporary wnter), 466
 Sangldkh, Mirza-yi—, 457
 Sani'u'd-Dawla (early title of Muhammad Hasan KMn, better known by his later title of rtimddtfs-Saltana, q.v), 453-6
 Sanskrit, 244
Saqar (the third of the Seven Hells), 400-401
 Sdqi-ndma (of Umidi, xvi), 231; — (of Zuhuri, xvn), 253
 Sar-afrdz Khan, Nawwdb — (xviii), 283
 Sarbaz (Isma'il Khan, ooet), 188
Sarddnyya (of Yaghma), 337, 338
 Sari (in Mdzandardn), 65
 Sari'Abdu'lldhEfendi (d. A.D. 1668), 9n.
Sar-mdya-i-Imdn (by 'Abdu'r-Raz-zaq-i-Ldhiji), 408, 435
 Sasanian Dynasty (ui-vii), 3, 4, 18, '29, 32, 52, 60, 126, 209n., 221, 382 n., 393, 466
Sawdti'u'l-Jsldm (Faydi's Commen'tary on the Qur'dtt), 244 n
 Sayyida (wife of Shdh Khudd-banda, xvi), 103
Sayyidu'sh-Shuhadd ("the Chief of Martyrs," i.e. the Imam Husayn[^] q.u), 393 «' Schach Cub," 70. See Shah-quli
 Schefer, M Charles —, 9, 10, 20n., 115, 116, 304, 457
 Schemann, Ludwig —, 153 ad calc.
 Schindler, Sir Albert Houtum- —, 5, 450 n. See also Houtum-Schindler
 Schuitz, Dr Walter —, 467 n.
 Scotland, 5
Sean Bheart Bhochd, 223
 Don Sebastian of Portugal (xvi), 92
 " Sechaidar," 47. See Haydar, Shaykh
 Sell, E. —, 462 n.
 Seniory of Venice, 5
 Seth (Prophet), 388
 "Seven," "Sect of the—" (Sab'iyya), 17. See IsmaHUs
 "Seven Martyrs" of the Bdbis (SAuAadd-i-Sab'a), 196
 "Seventy-two Sects" (Haftdd u du Millat) 15
 Shafi'a Athar (poet of Shirdz, xvni), 282 n.
 Shafi'f (poet), 194
 •Shaiya, 362
 Shdh 'Abdu'l-Azim, Shrine of—, 151, 155
 Shahid-t-awwa/("the First Martyr,"

- put to death in A.D. 1384), 406;
—t'tkdni ("the Second Martyr"),
379, 427; —t'thldth ("the Third Martyr," assassinated by a Bahl in A.D. 1847), 411, 421; but on
p. 447 this title is given to Sayyid Niiru'llah of Shushtar, q.v., who was put to death by Jahangir in
A.D. 1610
- "Shdh-i-Dln-pandh" (Tahmdsp so entitled), 84
- Shahmshdh-ndma* (by Saba, xix), 309
- Shah Jahdn (A.D. 1628-1659), 259, 260, 408
- Shah-nama (of Firdawsi, xi), 13, 14n., 228n., 229, 309, 339, 487;
— khwdns (rhapsodists), no; —
—i-IsmaHl (by Hdrtifi, A.D. 1512), 83, 229
- Shdh-quli (xvi), 69, 70, 71, 75
- Shahr-angh* and Shahr-dshib (a kind of topical ballad), 237, 238
- Shahr-ashib (name of a Shi'a divine), 355
- Shahrbdmi (daughter of Yazdigird and wife of the Imam Husayn, vn), 393
- Shahr-i-Bdbak, 149
- bhahnstndf (author of the Kitdbifl-Milai, xn), 15 n., 16-17, 449
- Shahrtfd, 104, 456
- Shahrulkh (Tfmiind, xv), 44; —
Shirwdnshdh (killed by Shah Tahmdsp m A.D. 1540), 96; —
Dhu'l-Qadar (A.D. 1508), 414; —
(grandson of Nddir Shah, xvm), 138, 140
- Shah-seven* ("King-lovers," a coalition of tribes created by Shall 'Abba's
the Great), 106, 119
- Shdh Shujd' (infant son of Shall Isma'il II killed by his successor,
A.D. 1577), 101
- Shahsuwar-i-Chahdr-tdrf (musician at the court of Shall 'Abbs the Great), no
- Shdh u Darwish* or Shdh u Gadd
("the King and the Beggar" by Hilali, xvi), 234
- Shaki, 104
- Shakibi (poet, xvi), 167
- Shaltdq-i-SipdM* (chronogram yielding A.H. 909 = A.D. 1503-4), 56
- Shamakhi, 104, 115, 134, 450
- Shamdsi (near Ardabil), 50
- Shamkhal Khan (put to death by Shah Khudd-banda about A.D.
1577), 101
- Shdmalu" (one of the Seven Tribes),
14. 52 n.
- Shams-i-Shupurgmi'f (musician at court of Shall 'Abbs the Great),
no
- Shams-i-Tabriz (xiii), 37
- Shamsu'd-Din Barniqi of Ardabfl,
44, — Kuhistdnf (poet, xvi), 235
- ShamsuV-Ma'drif* (by the Shaykh al Biini), 442
- Shamsu'sh-Shu'ard*, 325. See Sur&SA
- Shdpiir (poet, xvn), 267
- Sharafshdh (ancestor of the Safawis),
32 n.
- Sharafu'd-Din Hasan, 256. See
ShifdH
- Shardy'i'u'LiIdm* (by Najmu'd-Dm-Hilli, xm), 54 n., 378, 405-6
- Sharlhu"/- Fawd'idand — 'z-Ziydratt-l-Kabira (by Shaykh Ahmad-Ahsa'f, xvni-xix), 411; — s-Sadr
(by Mulla Muhsm-i-Fayd, A.D.
16:54), 432 and note
- Sharif, Sayyid-i- — (killed at Chdldiran, A.D. 1514), 59, 76; — of Tabriz (compiler of Lisdni's poems, xvi), 236
- Sharmi (poet of Qazwin at court of Shall'Abbas), no
- Shawdhidu'r- Rubiibtya* (by Mulla' Sadra, xvn), 430, 437
- Shawkat (poet of Bukhard, d. 1695),
250» 258, 265, 269, 282 n., 299
- Shawqi (poet, xvn), 267
- Shaybak, 63, 74. See ShaybdnI
- Shaybani, or Shaybak, Muhammad Khdn — Uzbek (killed in battle with Shdh Isma'il at Tdhirdbdd in A.D. 1510), 63, 64-6, 74, 78 and note, 82, 94; —, Abu'n-Nasr
Fathu'lldh Khdn — of Kashdn
(poet, xix), 326, 344
- Shaykh Shdh (Shaykh Ibrdhim, grandson of Sadru'd-Dinand great-grandfather of Shdh Isma'il I, d.
A.D. 1447), 47; — son of Farrukh
Yasar Shirwdnshdh, 60, 96
- Shaykhisect, 150, 355, 397 n., 399n., 402-3, 407, 408, 410-41 x, 42if
422, 429, 430
- Snaykhu'r-Ra'is. See Avicenna and AbuH-Hasan Mh id
- ShaykhuH-Td'ifa*. See -Tusi
- Shaypiirghu'l (trumpeter), 110 and note

- Sbaytan-quli, 70. See Shdh-quli
 Abu Sha'yun, 108, 218
 Sheba (Saba), 190, 192
 Sherley brothers (Sir Anthony and Sir Robert, xvi-xvii), 5, 6, 10, 105
 Sherlock Holmes, 466-7
 Shi'a (Ithnd-²ashariyya, "Sect of the Twelve"), 16-19, 20, 22, 23, 26, 32, 43, 46, 5²~4» 56, 58, 64, 65, 66, 70-73, 83, 92, 94-5, 122, 132, 135, 230, 234, 235, 264
 409, 415-423, 424; the doctrine of the Perfect —, 150 See also Ghuldt
 Shibli (Siifi saint), 357; — Nu'ma'ni (Indian scholar, author of the Shi'rti'l-¹Ajam, q v.), 164, 165, 229, 241, 242, 244, 246, 248, 250, 251, 252, 254, 258, 259, 260, 262, 265, 266 n., 268, 269, 299
Shifd (of Avicenna), 430
 Shifii'f (Sharafu'd-Din Hasan, nhy-sician and poet, d. A.D. 1027), 250, 256, 268
 Shihabu'd-Din Suhrawardi, Shaykh —, 88; — Maqtiil, 430 Shilun p Solon), 201, 212 and note
 Shimr, 178, 180
 Shiraz, 42, 55, 56, 76, 100, 104, 125, 130, 133, 140,, 141' 143n 151, 157, 184, 186,, 221, 222, 225, 230, 233, 235, 241, 245, 246, 258, 270, 282 n., 283, 300, 302, 305, 316, 317, 322, 326, 328, 360, 363, 365, 407, 420, 429, 434, 451, 489
Shirin u Khitsraw (by HaMi, d. A.D. 1520-1), 229
 Shirley. See Sherley, above
 Shir Sarim (Kurdish chief, killed m battle in A.D. 1510), 58
Shi'ru'l-¹Ajam ("Poetry of the Persians," by Shibli Nu'm[^]nf), 164, 165, 166n., 229, 241, 244, 246, 250' 251' 258, 259, 265 n., 26611., 299 n.
Shir u Shakkar (by Shaykh Baha'u'd-Dm-'Amili, xvi-xvn), 253, 428
 Shirwan, 22, 52, 60, 82, 106, 134, 135, 137, 450
 Shirwanshah, 41, 47, 48, 52, 90
 Shu'ayb (Jethro), 388
 Shuja'u's-Saltana, Hasan 'All Mirza —, 328
 Shu'la (poet of Isiahan, xviii), 282
 Shurilr, Battle of — (A.D. 1501), 52, 82
 Shushtar, 59, 184, 186, 279, 356, 366, 447
Sdratu'l-Miintahd ("Lote-tree of the Limit"), 401
 Si-dih (near Isiahan), 198, 325
 Sifat (Attributes of God), 382-6
Sifdtul-Ashzqin (by Hilali, d. A.D. 1528), 234
 Sikandaror Iskandar, Alexander the Great, q.v., 13-14, — ndma (of Nizami of Ganja, xn), 229
Silsilatifn-Nasab-i-Safawiyya, 4, 5, 13 n., 20, 32 n., 35, 36, 37, 40, 42, 44, 45, 46
 Similitudes, World of — ('Alam-t-Mithdl), 397
 Simon, Dr Max —, 425
 Simon Petei, 207, 218
Simutgh (mythical bud), 26311.
 Ibn Sina". See Avicenna
 Sinai, Mount — (Jabal Tur), 292
 Sindn Pasha Chigala-zada ("Cicala," A.D. 1605), 106
 Sion (Sayviin), 204, 214
 Sipihr (Mirza Muhammad Taqi of Kdshdn, Lisdn7-Afulh, q.v., xix), 326, 344, 413
 Sirat, Bridge of —, 401; — Mustaqim (by Mir Damdd), 407
 Sirjan, 149
Sirru'ldh ("God's Secret"), 2 1 7 n
 See 'Abbds Efendi, 'Abdu'l-Bahd
 Sistan, 125
 Siwa's, 71, 76, 106 n
Siydhat-ndma-i-Ibrdhlrm Beg (about A.D. 1900), 463-4, 467-8
 Siyimak {"Siydh-tnarg") son of Shirwanshah, 41
Stydiat-nama (of the Ntazdmu' l-Mulk, xi), 18n., 412
 Siyawushanf, Mawldna" Ishaq — (calligraphist at the court of Shall ' Abbas), no Sizdah band (of Shifa'f, d. A.D. 1627), 256
 Smart, W. A. — (Consul), 196, 302
 Smith, Vincent —, 249, 445 n.
 Socrates (Suqrdt), 201, 212
 Solaq-zada (Turkish historian), 72
 Solomon (Sulayman), 190, 192, 310n.; a legend of —, 111
 Solon (Shiltin), 212
 "Sophi," "the Great —/" 20, ix, 23, 61, 112; — sect, 48, 50. See St/i

- Spain, Spanish, 4, 5, 6, 7, 10, 101 n.
 See also Don Juan di Persia
 Spirit (Ruh), Five grades of—, 389
 Sprenger, Dr A —, 165, 234, 281 n., 355
 Squeezing of the Tomb, 396-7
 Stewart, Major Charles —, 91
 le Strange, Guy —, 360 n., 462
 Strettell, Alma — ("Twelve Persian Folk-Songs"), 222
 Style, good and bad —, 412-415
Stidl u Jawdb (by Hajji Sayyid Muhammad Baqir, circa A.D. 1820), 378-381
 Subuh (poet of Isiah, xviii), 282
 "Sufiavean," 48, 51. See Safawis
Sufi-kush ("the Sufi-slayer," title given to Aqa" Muhammad 'Ali, xvm), 368
 Stifis, 19-21, 26-7, 47, 50-51, 56, 120, 220-221, 254 n., 354, 376, 383, 403-4, 409, 411'. 420-1, 422, 452
 Abu Sufyan (father of Mu'awiya, the first Umayyad Caliph, vn), 180 n.
 Sufyanl (appearance with Antichrist in the last days), 399
Suhtif (Book revealed to Abraham), 388
 Sulayman, Sultan — I (A.D. 1520-1566), 9, 11, 13 n., 67, 76, 80, 81, 87, 89, 92, 93, 236; — Mirza (murdered by his brother Shah Isma'il II in A.D. 1577), 98; — Pasha (great-grandson of the Tlmiind Abu Sa'f'd, xvi), 100; Shah — I -l-Safawi (originally named Safi, A.D. 1669-1694), 111, 112-113, 439; Shah — II (xvm), 138, 284, — Efendi (Turkish envoy to Persia, AD 1728), 133; — Sabahi (poet of Kashan, arch A.D. 1791) q v.; — Khan (prominent Bibi put to death in A.D. 1852), 196, 213 n., — u Bilqis (poem by Faydi, xvi), 244
 Sulaymaniyya, 27
 Sultaniyya, 88
SultdnuH-Fuqard (poet at the court of Shall 'Abbas), no
 Sultanum Khanum (sister of Shall Tahmasp I, xvi), 92
 Sunduq (Turkman envoy to Constantinople, A.D. 1553) 194
 Sunnis, 16-19, 22, 43-4. 53. 55' 57» 63-4, 66, 74, 78, 93-5, 97 123, 132. 137» 170-2, 234, 353-4, 363, 30r, 402, 420, 447
Suqutu'l-'Zbddd (Antinomianism, neglect of religious duties), 382
Sur't-Isrdil (newspaper), 302, 345, 469-482
Surkk-sar ("Red-head"). See Qizil-bdsh
Sursurak ("the Slide"), 221, 479
 Suriish (Angel), 294-5; — (poet of Isiah, d A.D. 1868), 225, 307 n., 325
 Siizanf (poet, xii), 348
 Sykes, Sir Percy Molesworth—, 92 n., 144 m, 154, 156
 Syria, Syrians, 16, 36, 51, 77, 360, 388 (Prophets), 427, 428, 451
 -Tabari (Muhammad b. Jan'r —, histonan, IX-X), 188, 217 n., 412, 443' 449, 485
 Tabarsaran, 48
 -Tabarsi, Shaykh —, 153, 197-8, 409
 Tabfb, Sayyid 'Abdu'l-Bdqf — (poet and physician to Nadir Shah, xvm), 283
 Tabkhi (poet of the court of Shah 'Abbas the Great), no
 Tabriz, 21, 22, 23, 44, 45, 49, 52, 53, 61, 62, 71, 76, 77, 96, 104, 109, 130, 131, 134, 14411., 151, 153, 155, 222, 230, 235, 236, 237, 265 n., 266, 346, 347, 360, 371, 380, 422, 454, 489, 490
 Tadhkiratu'l-Ahwal (by Shaykh «Ali Hazin, A.D. 1741), 277-281; — Al-i-Dawud (A.D. 1803), 444; — Dawlatshdh (xv), 447 j — Dtl-gushd (A.D. 1821), 304, 307, 309, 317, 328, 337; — Mu'dsirin (by Shaykh 'Ali Hazin, AD 1752), 281, — Muhammad-Shdhl (xvm-xix), 298
 Tafrish, 282
 -Taftazdni, Faridu'd-Dm Ahmad — (put to death in A.D. 1510), 63, 69
Tafwa, 386. See Free Will and Fatalism
 Tahdhib (of Shaykh Bahd'u'd-Din -'Amili), 364; — u'l-Ahkdm (of -Tdsi, xi), 359, 405 Tahir (son of the Prophet Muhammad), 391; — (poet of Qazwin, xviii), 282 ad calc.
 Tahir-abad, Battle of — (A.D. 1510), 65

- fahmasp, Shall — I (A.D. 1524-1576), 5, 9.10n,19,28,34,43, 50n., 51, 57, 81, 84-98, 100-103, 106, 172, 238, 241,406,456; — b. Muhammad Khuda-banda {circd A.D. 1586}, 101; Shah— II (put to death by Nadir Shah's son Rida-qulf in A.D. 1739), 129-136
- Tajdrtbu's-Salaf* (Persian version of the Kitabu'Zakkri made by Hindu-Shall, g.v., in A.D. 1324), 443
- Taj-t-duwdzdah tark* (the scarlet cap with twelve gores worn by the Qizil-bdsh), 48
- Taju'd-Din Ibrdhim. See Zdhid-i-GMni, Shaykh —
- Takallii (one of the Seven Tribes), 52n., 70n.
- Takfir* (denunciation as an infidel),
- Takya-i-Humdytin* (the Royal Theatre, Tihran), 194
- Talha (vn), 392
- Tahb-i-Amuli (poet, d. A.D. 1626), 164, 250, 253-256, 267
- Abu Talib (uncle of the Prophet Muhammad), 392; — Mirza (son of Shah Muhammad Khudd-banda, circd A.D. 1586), 101-2; — Kalfm (poet, d. A.D. 1651), 164, 166, 250, 258-263, 268; Shaykh — (father of Shaykh 'All Hazfn, d. A.D. 1715), 278
- Taliqan (m Khurasan), 399
- Abil Tamma'm (compiler of the Hamasa, IX), 270
- Tandsukh* (Metempsychosis, q.v.), 382
- TanburaH* (drummer), no
- Tanukdbun, 355
- Tdqdis* (poem by Mulla' Ahmad-i-Niraqi, d. A.D. 1828), 411
- Taqi, Mirza' — (founder of a College at Isiahan, xvn), 366; Aqa — (poet of Qum, called Sahbd, q. U., xvm), 283; — K Mn Amtr-i-Kabir (put to death by Nasiru'd-Din Shah on Jan. 9, 1852), 152-3, 316, 329, 333 ;—zada Sayyid Hasan — (contemporary), 29, 485
- Taqiyyu'd-Din Muhammad (pnme minister, xvii), 264
- Taqiya-i-Turkmanl* (the Turkman cap), 48
- Taqiyya* (prudent concealment of opinions), i6n., 17
- Taqldd* (submission to ecclesiastical authority), 382
- "Tarbiyat," Mirza Muhammad «Ali Khan — (contemporary), 458,467. See Press and Poetry of Modern Persia
- Ta'rikh-'-'Alam-drd-yi'^AbbdH (by Iskandar Munshi, A.D. 1616), 5, 6, 7, 8, 47, 48, 88, 99 n., 100, iom., ro3n., 105n., 107-8, 172, 238, 256, 257, 427n., 428, 444; — i-ba'd'Nadtriyya (xvin), 137 n., 445 J — i-Biddriyi-Irdmydn (A.D. 1910), 413, 446; — i-Guzlda (by Hamdu'llah Mustawfl of Qazwin, xiv), 118n.; — u'l-Huhamd (by -Qifti, xin), 447; — i-Jadid (the "New History," xix), 197n.; — i-Jahdn-gushdy (by Juwaynf, xin), 443» — i" Wassdiy 443; — t-Zan-diyya (xviii), i4on., 141 n., 142 n., 444-5
- Tartais (more correctly Tatdrs), 3. See Mongols
- Tartufe* (by Moliere, translated into Turkish), 462
- Tarum, 22, 51
- Tashblh* (Anthropomorphism), 17,382
- Tashkand, 64
- Tashrlhu'l-Afldk* (by Shaykh Ba-ha'u'd-Din-'Amidi, xvii), 428
- Tasnif* (ballad), 162, 221-3
- Taswiru'l-Afkdr* (Press in Constantinople), 459
- Tauns, 61. See Tabriz
- Ta'usi sect, 391
- Ta vernier, 10, 112
- Tawakkul (or Tiiklf) b. Isma'fl, 34. See Ibnu'l -Bazzaz and Safwatu's-Safa
- Tahid (Doctrinre of the Divine Unity), 382-6
- Tayfur (poet at the court of Shah 'Abbas the Great), no
- Tayyib (son of the Prophet Muhammad), 391
- Taza Bahdr* (newspaper), 345
- Taza-gai* (originality of expression), 163
- Ta'ztya* ("mourning"), 28, 29, 162, 172-194, 459
- "Techelhs" (Tekelhi, Takallu), 70-72
- "Teckel Schachoculu" (Tekellu Shali-quli), 70 and note
- Teixeira, 10

- Telegraph, Indo-European —, 154-5
Tennyson, 227
Thdhit b. Qurra, 357
Thales, 201, 212
Thana'i (poet, xvi), 242; — pen-name of Mirza" Abu' l-Qasim Qd'im-magdm, q.v.
Theologians, Rise of the Great Shi'a —, 26-8, 83, 114
Thevenot, 10
Thibet, 128
Thiqatu'l-Isla'm (put to death by the Russians at Tabriz on Jan. 1, 1912), Thurayyd ("Pleiades," newspaper), 469
Tiflis, 104, 109, 130, 134, 298, 462
Tigris (Dijla), 198, 321
Tihran, 105, 137, 146, 149, 151, 155, 194, 198, 222, 231, 251, 258, 279, 301' 303, 312, 3'9. 328, 346-8, 368, 371, 374. 378, 441, 451. 454, 458, 463' 466, 489, 49°
Times, 466
Timur, 9, 25, 46, 57, 348; House of —, 3, '5, 63-4, 77, 83. 229; — -ndma (of Hatifi), 229
Tiqtaqf, Safiyyu'd-Din Muhammad — (author of the KitdbuH-Fakhri) 443
Tiydtr ("the Theatre," newspaper), 463
Tobacco concession (A.D. 1890-1), 156, 370-1
Tolerance, Growth of — in modern Persia, 420
"Tom, Dick and Harry" (English equivalent of 'Atnr and Zayd), 380 n.
Tomb, State of the Dead in the —, 396-7
Topal 'Osmdn (or 'Uthmdn, Turkish general, killed in October, 1733), '34
Transmigration oi Souls (tandsukh), 382
Transoxiana (Md ward'a'n-Nakr), 4, 24, 63, 92, 125, 451
Travel, Five Advantages of —, 433
Traveller's Narrative (ed. and transl. by E. G. Browne), 150, 154 n., 294 m, 329, 381, 397 n., 399 n., 420 n., 422 n.
Trebizond, 47, 48
Trinity, The —, 293-4
Trots Ans a la Cour de Perse (by Dr Feuvrier), 371
Trots Comidies Persanes (ed. and transl. by C. Barbier de Meynard and S. Guyard), 462
Tsar of Russia, Murder of — by Bolsheviks, 371
Tsitsianoff (Russian general called by the Persians Ishpukhtar), 374, 375 and note
Tuba (tree in Paradise), 401
'Tiifan (poet of Hazar-jarfb, d. A.D. 1776), 283; — u'LBukd (the "Deluge of Weeping"), 182
Tughnl (the Saljiq, A.D. 1037-1063), 3'» 54
Tuhiatu'l-Mtfminin (on Materia Medica, composed by Muhammad Mu'min-i-Husayni in A.D. 1669), 439 \ — 'z-Zdhrin (the "Pilgrims' Present," by Mulla Muhammad Bagir-i-Majhsi, d. A.D. 1700), 410, 417
Tuhia-i-Sdmi (biographies of contemporary poets compiled by Sam Mirza in A.D. 1550), 25, 88 n., 230, 237, 447
Tiikli (or Tawakkul), 34 and note
See Ibnitl-Bazzdz and Safwatu's-Safd
Tuman, value of the —, 410 n.
Tunis, 425
Abd Turab, Mir — (Turkmdn envoy to Constantinople, A.D. 1553), 94
Turan, 13, 282
Turkey, 4, 10. 92, 130, 134, 135, 137, 146, 164, 241, 246, 250, 260, 265, 451, 453, 467, Turks, 10, 135, 140, 280, 427, 450; Turkish dynasties, 3; Tuikish language, 14-15, 250, 375 n.; Turkish literary taste, 226, 227, 265, 300, 412, 443, 487, "Turkish Sufis," 46. See also Ottomans
Turki (poet of Shiraz), 182 n.
Tuikistan, 451
Turkman-chay, Treaty of — (A.D. 1826), 146
Tuikmans, 47, 50, 93, 137, 230. See also Whtte Sheep
Turner Macan (ed. of Shdhndmd), 228
Turshiz, 233, 234, 253
Tus, 94
-Tusi, Muhammad b. -Hasan b. 'Ali (d. A.D. 1067), 355, 358, 405
Tuti, Mir — (Turkman envoy to Constantinople in A.D. 1553), 94

- Tuysirkan, 463
 Twelve, Sect of the" — (*Ithna-
 'ashanyya*), 17, 39 tf. Se&SM'a
- 'Ubayd-i-Zakanf (poet and) satirist, xiv), 141, 490; — u'llah Khan-i-
 Uzbek (d. A.D. 1540), 43, 73-4, 77, 92, 94-5, 97, "7, 234-5
- 'Udhri (poet, d. A.D. 1771), 183
- ¹ Ulamd (doctors of theology), 353 et seqq See Mujtahids, Mullds
- Ulfat (poet of Kashan, d. A.D. 1824),
 , 225n., 311
- Uljaytu (Khuda-banda, Mongol ruler of Persia, xiv), 18, 413
- Olu'l-'Azm* (the Five Great Prophets), 388
- 'Umar b. -Khattab (thesecond Caliph, assassinated in A.D. 644), 17, 22,
 '29, 53, 54, 74. 8on., 95 n., 104,
 391, 392, 418; — b. Sa'd b. Abi
 Waqqas (vn), 178, 180
- Umayyad Caliphs, 16 n., 180 n., 39'-4
- Umid (or Ummid, poet of Kir man-shah, xix), 225 n.
- Umidi (or Ummidi, poet of Tihiran,
 d. A.D. 1519 or 1524), 59, 230-233
- Umm 'Abdillah (wife and cousin of
 'All Zaynu'l-'Abidin, the fourth
 Imam), 393
- Umm Kulthum (daughter of 'All and Fatima), 392
- Utnml* ("illiterate," an attribute of the Prophet Muhammad), 389
- 'Unsuri (poet, xi), 299
- Urdu (or Hindustani) language, 164, 300
- 'Urfi (poet of Shiraz, d. A.D. 1590), 25, 163, 164, 167^, 241-9, 265,
 268, 299
- Ibn Abi Usaybi'a (author of the well-known biographies of Physicians, xm), 447
- "Ussein Alibeg" (A.D. 1599-1600),
- Usti (fortress of—), 56
- Ustajlu (one of the Seven Tribes), 52 n.
- Usul school, 374, 376, 402
- Vsu'l Kafi* (Mulla Sadra's commentary on the —), 430
- 'Uthman (the third Caliph, assassinated in A.D. 656), 17, 22, 53, 54,
 80 n., 94, 95, 104, 391, 392, 418;
 Qara — (of the Aq qoyiinlu or "White Sheep" dynasty), 58n.
- 'Uy6nu?l-Anbd fi TabaqdtVI Atibbd (Lives of notable Physicians, by Ibn Abi Usaybi'a), 447
- Uzbeks, 19, 43, 45, 60, 63-6, 73,
 74n., 77, 78, Ss, 86-7, 92, 93,
 94, 97, 103, 104, 105, 107, 109,
 125, 136, 137, 227, 235,
- "Uzen Aly Bech" (A.D. 1599-1600),
 , 5n
- Uzun Hasan (Aq-qoyunlu, A.D. 1466-1478), 47-49, 51, 58 n.
- Valladolid, 21n.
- Valle, Pietro della —, 10
- V am Wry, Armmius —, ion.
- Van, Lake —, 49, 106
- Venice, Venetians, 5, 6, 10, 21, 22,
 47, 48, 50n., 51, 85-6
- Verlaine, Paul —, 344
- Verne, Jules —, 458
- Victoria, Queen —, 322; "Victorian Era" of Persia (A.D. 1848-1896), 161
- Vienna, n
- Virgin Mary, 398
- Volga, 6
- Wadi'at (Trusts, Law of—), 379-380
- Wadis s-Saltdn* (Terrestrial Paradise), 397
- Wafaydtu'l-Aydn* (Biographies of Ibn Khallikan, xm), 446
- Wdii (by Mulla Muhsin-i-Fayd, xvn), 359
- WahdatuH-WuiM* (Pantheism), 382, 383, 420
- Wahid (title given by the Bab first to Sayyid Yahya of Darab or Nayifz, and after his death to Mhza Yahya Subk-i-Azal), 208,
 218 and note; Muhammad Tahir
 — (poet, d. A.D. 1708), 258, 264-5
- Wahidi (poet of Qum» xvi), 237
- Wahrmund, A. —, 462
- Wahshi (poet of Bafq, d. A.D. 1583),
 no, 238-240, 241
- Wajh'i-Din* (by Nasir-i-Khusraw, xi), 490
- WajhiMdh* ("the Face of God," title given to 'All), 385
- Wakil* (Regent), 139. See *Karim
 Khan-t-2and*
- Wall (poet of the court of Shah
 ' Abbas), no
- Wahh (of Qum, poet at the court of Shah 'Abbas the Great), no; —

- of Daghistan (author of the PiyddWsh-Shu'atd), 229, 269
- Wamiq u 'Adhrd (romantic poem), 283
- Waqifi sect, 391
- Wasdhl (of Muhammad b. Hasan b. Hurr-'Amili), 359
- Wdsxta ("Means" or "Channel of Grace"), 150
- Wassaf (historian of Mongols, xiv), 413
- Wat an, yakhod Sihstra (Turkish patriotic play by Kemal Bey), 464
- Watson, R. G. — (author of the History of Persia), 3, 139 n., 144 n., 145 n., 146 and note, 147, 48 n., 151 n., 152 n., 311 n., 312 n., 314 n., 31611., 450 n.; Dr — (m Sherlock Holmes), 466
- Ways, Mir— (Afghan), n8₀n., 123-5
- Wazlr of Lankurdn, 462, 463
- Weil's Geschichte der Chahien, 54 n.
- Welsh song {Mochyn du}, 223
- "White Hand" (Yad-i-Baydd) of Moses, 254 n
- "White Sheep" {Aq-qoyunlu} Turkman dynasty (A. D 1378-1502), 21, 47» 51' 541 58 and note, 63, 67-9, 76, 230, 487
- Who's Who, 149 n.
- "Why-less" {Bi-chun}, God so called, 212 and note, 218
- Wiedemann, Dr Eilhard —, 425, 440
- "WikHs" (?Wilkins), Mr —, 452
- Wine-drinking, 114
- Wiqar (poet, son of Wisal, xix), 178, 2'5. Zoo, 307 n , 319
- Wisal (poet of Shirdz, d. A. D. 1846), 168, 178, 225, 300, 307 n., 316-319
- Wizwizak, King —, 475, 480
- Woepcke, 425, 440
- Wood-worm and Solomon, Legend of the —, 111
- Wustenfeld, 440 n., 448 n.
- Xavier, 421
- Yadu'llah ("the Hand of God," 'Ali so called), 385
- Yaghma (poet of Jandaq, xix), 26, 168, 326, 337-344
- Yahya, Sayyid — of Darab (Wahid-i-Awwal), and Mirza — Subh-t-Azal (Wahld-i-thdni), two notable followers of the Bab, 218 n.; Hajji Mirza — Dawlatabadi (contemporary scholar), 225, 307; Mirza — Khan Rayhdnl (contemporary poet and editor of the Gul-t-Zard, or "Yellow Rose"), 490
- Yajuj (Gog), 201, 211 and note
- Yaman, 279, 451
- Ya'qib b. Amlnu'd-Din Jibra'il (younger brother of Shaykh Satiyyu'd-Din, xm), 3Jrn.; Sultan — Aq-qoyiinht (son of Uzun Hasan, xv), 49, 58 n.; — Khan Dhu'l-Qadar (x'i), 104
- Ya'qubi (historian, IX), 18, 36
- Yaqiit (geographer and biogtapher, xm), 397 n , 454
- Yar Ahmad-i-Khdzani, Amir — (entitled Najm-i-thdnf, q v), 59
- Yasa'ul, Darwish Muhammad— (A. D. 1510), 65
- Ya-Sin, Ali— (the Prophet's family so called), 343
- Yazd, 55, 56, 118, 126, 130, 133, 148, 151, 153, 184-6, 195, 238, 325, 348, 368, 410, 427
- Yazdanl (son of the poet Wisal, xix), 300. 319
- Yazdigird (last Sasanian king of Persia, vn), 18, 393
- Yazdlkhwest, 89
- Yazld b Mu'awiya (Umayyad Caliph, A D 680-683), 178, 180, 188, 485
- Yazidi sect (so-called "Devil-worshippers"), 46, 58
- Year amongst the Persians* (by E. G. Browne), 109 n., 147 n., 156 n., 198 n., 213 n., 221 n., 300 n., 326 n., 3⁴5 n., 411 n., 436 n , 442 n., 457 n , 479 n.
- "Young Persians," 15
- Yunus Pasha (executed A. D. 1517), 71 n
- Yrisuf (Joseph), 239-240; Romance of — and Zulaykha (Potiphar's wife) by Lutf-'All Beg Adhar (xvm), 284; Fakhru'd-Din — b. Amlnu'd-Din Jibra'il (younger brother of Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Din), 37 n.; — b. Ahmad b. Ibrahim-Bahrani (d. A. D. 1773), 356, 449; — b Yahya -Yamani- San 'ani (author of the Nasimatu's-Sahar), 358; — the Saddler (Persian comedy), 462
- Yiisufi (heretic put to death by Shah 'Abbas the Great in A. D. 1593), 8

- Zabardast Khan (Afghan general, A.D. 17'4), 130
- Zadu''l Ma'ad {by Mulla Muhammad Baqir-i-Majlisi, xvn), 417; — Musdiirin (of Nasir-i-Khusraw, xi), 490
- Zafar Khan (patron of the poet Sa'ib, xvii), 266
- Zahid-i-Gflanf, Shaykh — (d. circd A.D. 1300), 38, 4'-43, 115 '77
- Zahir-i-Faryabi (poet, xm), 284
- Zahiru'd-Dinb. Buzghiish (xm), 42
- Zahra (i.e. Fatima, q.v.), 343
- Zakanyya b. Muhammad b. Mahmiid -Qazwinf (author of the AthdruH-Bildd and 'Ajftbu'l'MakhMqdt, xm), 448
- Zamakhshari (philologist, xn), 317
- Zand dynasty (A.D. 1750-1794), 121, 139-144, 148, 282, 283
- Zanjan, 153
- Zanjani (Arab grammarian), 361
- "Zan-qahba" the poet Yaghma, q.v., so called, 337-9
- Zarand, 151 n.
- Zargar ("Goldsmith," pen-name of Aqa Muhammad Hasan of Isiahan, d. A.D. 1853), 325
- ZartiTi-Kuldh ("Golden-cap"), Fl-ruzshah — (ancestor of Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Dm), 32 n., 36; — -Tdj ("Golden-crown"). See Qurratul-Ayn
- Zaydb. 'All b. Husayn (d. A.D. 712), 393 \ — h. Hasan, whom the Zaydi sect (pp. 17, 391) recognize as Imam, 391; 'Amr and Zayd (equivalent to John Doe and Richard Roe in Muslim law-books), 380 and note
- Zaynab (daughter of the Prophet Muhammad), 392; — (daughter of 'All and Fatima and sister of the Imam-Husayn), 179, 181, 191+ 193, 392; — Khanum (daughter of Shah Isma'll I, xvi), 81 n.
- Zaynu'l-'Abidin, 'All b. -Husayn, the fourth Imam, q.v., 393, — (artist at the court of Shah 'Abbas the Great), no; — (printer of Tabriz, circd A.D. 1820), 378; — of Shirwan (author of the Bustdnu's-Siydhat, circa A.D. 1831), 450; — (praised by Qa'anl), 332; — of Maragha (author of the Stydhathndma-i-Ibrdhim Beg), 467
- Zaynu'd-Din, called "the second Martyr" (Shahid-i-thdni) 427
- Zaytuni, Qadi Nasru'llah — (ctrcd A.D. 1500), 54
- Zeno (Zimin), 201, 212; Catarino — (Venetian traveller in Persia, xv), 10, 22, 60
- Zij-ullkhdni (by Nasru'd-Din-Tiisi, Mil), 405
- Zillu's-Sultan (son of Fath-'Ali Shah, A.D. 1835), 146
- ZinatiH'l-Madd'th (Biography of Poets of Fath-'Ali Shah's reign), 298
- Ziya (Diya) Pasha (circd A.D. 1874), 164 n., 173, 228 n., 242
- Ibn Ziyad (vn), 178, 180
- Ztydrat-ndma (of the Bab), 430 n
- Zoroastnans, 3, 80, 95, 122, 126, 130-1, 230 n., 258, 29411., 384, 396 n, 401, 423, 452, 464, 479 n
- See also Gabr (or Guebre), Magian
- Zotenberg, H —, 217 n.
- Zubayr (vii), 392
- Zubda (by Shaykh Baha'u'd-Dm-'AmiH, xvn), 428
- Zuhtir (the "Manifestation" of the Bab on May 23, 1844), 150
- Zuhurf (poet of Turshiz, d. A.D. 1615), 234, 250, 253, 268
- Zulalf (poet of Khwansar, d. A.D. 1615), 251, 252
- Zustande im keutigen Persien* (by Dr Walter Schulz), 467 n.

OTHER WORKS, INCLUDING TRANSLATIONS, BY THE AUTHOR OF THIS BOOK

- A Traveller's Narrative written to illustrate the Episode of the Bab. Edited in the original Persian, and translated into English, with an Introduction and Explanatory Notes, in two volumes. Vol. i, Persian Text, pp. \ + iv i« net Vol. 11, English Translation and Notes, pp. lv + 447 (Out of print.) Cambridge University Press, 1891
- A Year amongst the Persians: Impressions as to the Life, Character and Thought of the People of Persia, received during twelve months' residence in that country in the years 1887-8. Pp. x + 594. Published at its London A. and C. Black, 1893 New edition with a Memoir by Sir E. Denison Ross, and a portrait. Pp. xxiv + 650. 25J net Cambridge University Press, 1926
- The Tarikh-i-Jadid or New History of Mirza 'Alli Muhammad the Bab. By Mirza Huseyn of Hamadan. Translated from the Persian, with an Introduction, Illustrations and Appendices. Pp. hi + 459 + xl. 16s. net Cambridge University Press, 1893.
- A Catalogue of the Persian Manuscripts in the Library of the University of Cambridge. Pp. xl + 472 ijs. net. Cambridge University Press, 1896.
- A Hand-list of the Muhammadan Manuscripts in the Library of the University of Cambridge. Pp. xvm + 440. 21j.net. Cambridge University Press, 1900
- A Supplementary Hand-list of the Muhammadan Manuscripts in the Libraries of the University and Colleges of Cambridge. Pp. xn + 348. 42j.net. Cambridge University Press, 1922
- A Hand-list, arranged alphabetically under the titles, of the Turkish and other printed and lithographed books presented by Mrs E J W Gibb to the Cambridge University Library. Pp. vm + 87. ys net. Cambridge University Press, 1906
- A Literary History of Persia. Vol. i, from the earliest times until Firdawsi, Pp. xiv 4- 521 Vol 11, from Firdawsi to Sa'di. Pp. xiv + 568. 12s. dd each. London T. Fisher Unwm, 1902 and 1906. Re-issue i/s. net each Cambridge University Press, 1928.
- A History of Persian Literature under Tartar Dominion (A D 1265—1502), being the continuation of the Literary History of Persia mentioned above. Pp. xvi + 586. With 12 illustrations. 35J. net Cambridge University Press, 1920 Second Impression, with change of title, A Literary History of Persia, Vol. in. 21s. net 1928.
- A History of Persian Literature. Modern Times (1500-1924), being the continuation of the above. Pp. xvi + 532 With 16 illustrations. 1924 Re-issue as A Literary History of Persia, Vol. iv. 21s. net Cambridge University Press, 1928.
- An Abridged Translation of the History of Tabaristan.. of Muhammad Ibn Plasan Ibn Isandiyar, being Vol. II of the "E. J. W. Gibb Memorial Series" Pp. xv + 356 8J London. Luzac and Co., 1905.
- The Persian Revolution of 1905-1909. Pp. xxvi + 470. With 46 illustrations. (Out of print.) Cambridge University Press, 1910
- The Press and Poetry of Modern Persia, partly based on the Manuscript Work of Mirzā Muhammad 'Alli "Tarbiyāt" of Tabriz. Pp. 1 + 257 + »« iw- net. Part II, containing specimens of the Political and Patriotic Poetry of Modern Persia, separately. 5s. net. Cambridge University Press, 1914.
- Materials for the Study of the Babi Religion. Pp. xxiv + 380, with 15 illustrations and fac-similes. 16J net. Cambridge University Press, 1918.
- Revised Translation of the Chahar Maqala ("Four Discourses") of Nizami-i-'Anidi of Samarqand, followed by an abridged translation of Mirza Muhammad's Notes to the Persian Text, which constitutes Vol. xi, 1 of the "E. J. W. Gibb Memorial Series," this translation being Vol. xi, 2. Pp. xv + 184. 15s. net. London: Luzac and Co., 1911.
- Arabian Medicine, being the Fitzpatrick Lectures delivered at the College of Physicians in 1919 and 1910. Pp. viii + 138, with Frontispiece. 12s. net. Cambridge University Press, 1911.

