He is said to have been the son of the sage Jamadagni and contemporary of the principal Rām, the son of Dasharath: he is also sometimes called Jāmadagni, after his father. Parashurām, or Rām of the battle-axe, is said to have appeared in the world for the purpose of repressing the tyranny of the Kshatriyas and punishing their violence. Renukā, the mother of Parashurām, was interrupted while bringing water from the river, by Kārtaveerjārjun, a prince of the Kshatriyas, who was sporting in the water with his thousand wives, for which Jamadagni, her husband, cursed him. The Kshatriya prince killed Jamadagni, whereupon Parashurām vowed that he would not leave a Kshatriya on the face of the earth. He is reported to have extirpated them twenty-one times,—the women with child producing each time a new race. It is said that there have been no real Kshatriyas since that time, —those so called being Varnasankars (of spurious or mixed breed). Parashurām and his feats appear to typify the race of Brāhmans and their contests with the Kshatriyas

ब (b) is the twenty-third consonant in the Hindee alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions:— 1, It is the third letter of the पवर्ग or labial class, and has in pronunciation the sound of the English letter b one of the most common phænomena, however, of the Hindee language is the interchange of this letter with व. This is particularly so in the case of Sanskrit words commencing with व; and to such an extent has the process been carried that every such word occurring in Hindee is liable to be spelt with ब, and the careful observance of the distinction between these two letters is usually condemned as pedantic. It has been usual to record twice, with all their meanings, those words in which either of these letters occurs, especially if they occur at the beginning of words: an attempt has been made in the present work to economize the space that might thus be absorbed, by giving the meanings under the original form of the word only. By so doing, however, it is not by any means the author's intention to administer a sweeping condemnation to a practice which is, in fact, almost universal, but rather to compass the twofold purpose of economizing valuable space, and of indicating (for the benefit of any student who may wish it) the true or original form of the word. It may be added that careful native writers and speakers usually prefer the uncorrupted Sanskrit form of Tatsama words. 2, Standing alone, this letter may denote (1) the Sun (2) the ocean (3) water in general, and (4) the god of the waters, viz. Varuṇ. 3, This letter is sometimes interchanged with म; e.g. नरबदा, more properly नर्मदा; ताजिम, properly ताज़्ज़ुब, and sometimes even with ह; thus, बिलम्बना, more properly, बिलम्बना. 4, In one of the dialectic forms of the future tense, very much used in poetry and in the villages, this letter with virām under it is the sign of the first person singular and plural (e.g. जानब, I [or we] shall know), and without virām it is the sign of the second person singular and plural (e.g. जानब, thou shalt know, or you shall know). Of course, in pronunciation the distinction is indicated by the expression of the inherent vowel in the latter case (thus, jānaba) and the omission of it in the former (thus, jānab). 5, In a few foreign compounds that have become current in Hindee speech and books this letter is prefixed pleonastically (as in बग़ैर) and in some instances intensively (as in बग़ैर).

य (y) is the twenty-sixth consonant in the Hindee alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions —1, It belongs to the class of palatals, and is the first of the semivowels or antahsth letters; see अन्तःस्थ. 2, At the beginning of words and syllables its true pronunciation is that of the English letter y in 'young'; in other situations also (especially when it is part of a compound letter) this is its sound; e. g. सूर्य्य. When, however, it does not stand at the head of a word or syllable, its pronunciation (in Hindee, though not in Sanskrit) resembles that of the English letter i; thus जाय is pronounced as if it were spelt जाइ or जाई; and, indeed, it often is so spelt. This arises from the fact that in Hindee the inherent vowel (see अ, 2,3) is not, as a rule, pronounced at the end of words. 3, It is of very great importance to observe that this letter, in whatsoever situation it may be found (excepting when it ends a word, as in जाय, जय, etc.) is continually interchanged with ज; e. g. जुग = युग; सूरज = सूर्य्य (see ज, 2). In compiling the present work it has been thought advisable (even at the risk of the imputation of pedantry) to give the meanings of a word under its true form only, whenever that form has been ascertainable. There is scarcely one word beginning with this letter which is not continually pronounced and written as if it began with ज. 4, This letter is very frequently interchanged with ऐ; e. g. नैन = नयन; and occasionally with च; e. g. लोयन, properly लोचन; and with र; e g बिरोग, properly बियोग; and with श; e g. संसा, properly संशय; समा, properly समय. 5, In the Rāmāyan, and in the poets generally, this letter is found in place of the proper sign of the second person plural of the imperative; e g दारय = दारो; धारिय = धारिये. 6, This letter is inserted euphonically in the formation of the masculine of the past participle passive of the historical tenses of those verbs whose base ends in a vowel; e. g पाया, किया; in the feminine form of such words the proper spelling is resumed; e. g. पाई, किई. It may be important to guard against the remark of Shakespear (see s v. आस; 4th edn. 1861) and of Forbes (see s. v. आस; 2nd edn. 1866) that पियास = पी + आशा; since, if this were an accurate account of the construction of पियास, this word (and others similar in appearance) might seem to point to another class of instances of a euphonic function of य. पियास is a Prākrit form of the Sanskrit word पिपास, which is formed in accordance with the rules for the formation of Desiderative words (see the Sanskrit Grammars). The point to guard against is, that पियास does not (as those learned gentlemen have affirmed it does) contain the word आशा. 7, As a Taddhita suffix it is employed to form patronymics; e g. गार्ग्य, a male descendant of गर्ग. 8, As a Taddhita suffix it also forms a number of adjectives from substantives (e g. नासिक्य, from नासिका; द्वैप्य, from द्वीप), the radical vowel of the word to which it is thus subjoined sometimes remaining unaltered (in which case the fem. is formed by the addition of ā), and sometimes undergoing a vriddhi change (in which case the fem. is formed by adding ī) 9, As a Taddhita suffix it also serves to form abstract substantives masculine equivalent to those ending in त्व; e. g तरुण्य = तरुणत्व; मौढ्य = मूढ़त्व. 10, When it follows a vowel it is liable to be interchanged with ए. This phenomenon takes place most frequently in the dependant mode of verbs whose base ends in a long vowel, and assumes a variety of forms; e. g. होए is most frequently written होय, होये, होवे. It is also continually found added to the first form of the conjunct participle of verbs of that description; e g. जाय, more properly जा, i. e. जाके. These phenomena occur chiefly in colloquial speech, and seem to be occasioned by nature's horror vacui. 11, This is one of the terminations by which in Sanskrit the future participle of the passive is formed: it is important to notice this as this Sanskrit form is very largely represented in Hindee. The form is expressed in English by the phrase 'to be' and by the termination 'able'; e. g. याह्य, to be accepted, i. e. acceptable: the fem. is formed by adding ā. 12, In some parts of the country this letter (when it occurs at the beginning of words) is frequently interchanged with ए: the most noteworthy instance of this is the word एक, which is continually pronounced and written after the Persian manner, यक. It is liable also to be interchanged with अ; e g यकेला. It is also occasionally corrupted into ए or ऐ; e. g. बिषे, बिषै, properly बिषय. 13, In works on Prosody this letter is used for the metrical foot Bacchic or Bacchius (⏑ — —) consisting of a short syllable followed by two long ones. 14, In the older Hindee and in poetry, this letter is frequently joined to the final consonant in the past participial forms of certain verbs; e. g. बोल्यो = बोला. 15, Not only do words which properly contain this letter frequently reject it for ज, but the reverse is also true, viz. that words which properly contain ज exchange it for य; e g राय, properly राजा. 16. This letter also stands occasionally for an original ज्ञ, and even for झ; e. g. सयाना = सज्ञान; and मयारे = मझारे. 17. In very corrupt Hindee this letter is occasionally found where we might properly expect यह.

र (r) is the twenty-seventh consonant in the Hindee alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions.—1, It belongs to the class of cerebrals, and is the second of the semivowels or antahsth letters · see श्रन्तःस्थ. 2, It is uniformly pronounced like the r in the English word 'rough' (the 'r' being fully and distinctly rung) 3, When the secondary symbol of उ or of ऊ occurs after this letter their forms are unique; thus रु (rŭ) and रू (rū) 4, In conformity either to dialectic laws or colloquial and corrupt usage, this letter is continually interchanged (1) with ऋ; e. g. रिषि, properly ऋषि (2) with ड़, e.g. बाड़ो, properly बारो; again, खरक, properly खड़क; again बिराल, properly बिडाल (3) with ल; e g गारी, properly गाली (4) with य; e g बिरोग, properly बियोग. 5, When this letter is followed by a consonant without the intervention of the inherent vowel-sound, it undergoes a peculiar change of form and is then written over another letter; e. g. धर्म्म. If, when it is so written, the letter under it be an unaspirated consonant, or either of the letters ध, भ, म, this letter is generally doubled: great latitude is, however, exercised by writers as to the application of this principle; thus, properly धर्म्म, though many write धर्म. A good rule for the application of this secondary form seems to be that it is to be used when र is pronounced as if virām were written under it, i. e. when no vowel-sound intervenes between र and the letter that follows it. thus, the form दरशन would be pronounced in three syllables ('darashan'); while the form दर्शन (the true spelling of this word) would be pronounced in two syllables ('darshan') as if written दरशन. As writers have done pretty much as they have liked in this matter, the student should, in all cases of words containing either र or ◌्र, but which may not be found in the Dictionary, look under the other form: thus, if he do not find the form दरशन he should look for the form दर्शन It is important to note this, lest the student infer that the word he has met with is not given in the Dictionary 6, This letter occurs in Hindee (1) as a Kridanta suffix, by means of which adjectives are formed from verbal roots; e. g. हिंस्र, from the root हिंस्, hurting (2) as a Taddhita suffix, forming adjectives from substantives, e. g भ्रमर, from the root भ्रमन्, a stone (3) as an Unādi suffix, forming a number of adjectives and substantives from verbal roots; e. g. शक्र, from the root शक्, to be able. 7, In works on Prosody this letter denotes the metrical foot (-⌣--) called Amphimacer or Cretic, consisting of two long syllables separated by a short one. 8, When this letter follows a consonant not attended by the inherent vowel-sound, it is represented by a short transverse stroke at the foot of the letter; thus क् + र = क्र; द् + र = द्र; ष + ट + र = ष्ट्र. This kind of nexus (as, indeed, all the other kinds) is continually liable in Hindee to dissolution it is also (especially in the older Hindee) frequently used by attraction in the place of the other secondary form of र; thus, धर्म्म, more properly धर्म्म; again, सर्ग or सग्ग, more properly स्वर्ग.

व (v or w) is the twenty-ninth consonant in the Hindee alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions:—1, It belongs to the class of labials, is sometimes called 'dento-labial,' and is the fourth of the semi-vowels or antaksth letters · see अन्तःस्थ. 2, The pronunciation of this letter is sometimes the same as that of the English letter v, and sometimes of w: it is not easy, however, to lay down rules that shall embrace all instances When it occurs as the latter element in a compound letter, it is pronounced like w, unless the first element be र; e. g. स्वर swar: it is also pronounced like w, or better still, perhaps, like o, when it follows a vowel; e. g शिव, 'Shiw' or 'Shio' At the beginning of words it is generally pronounced like v, though sometimes like w; e. g विशेष, properly vishesh, but sometimes also wishesh. 3, Some substantives [m. (f. ā)] are formed by the addition of this letter as a suffix; e. g. अश्व. 4, This letter is also found as a Taddhita suffix by means of which some adjectives and epithets [m. (f. ā)] are derived from substantives; e g. केशव, from केश. 5, This letter is constantly interchanged (1) with ब (see ब, 1); for all words therefore beginning with this letter, but not found in the following pages, see under the form ब (2) with न [see न, 6 (3)], especially in the infinitive form of verbs in poetry and in Braj; e. g. करवो = करना: देखवेके = देखनेके (3) with श्रो; e. g बवना, properly बोना (4) with श्रो; e g अनश्रोसर, properly अनवसर (5) with म; e g. रवन, more properly रमण (6) with उ and ऊ; e. g. तरव, properly तरु, etc. (7) with य or श्र; e g. पुतलिवां, more commonly पुतलियां or पुतलिश्रां; किवा, more commonly किया or किश्रा (8) with ह; e. g. जीव constantly found in poetry for जीव. 6, This letter is frequently put, interchangeably with य, (see य, 10, and ए, 4), for ए as a kind of euphonic fulcrum on which to rest the vowel; e g. हावे or होये for होए. 7, It is also inserted like श्र, and interchangeably with it, (see श्र, 12), to create an additional syllable or to avoid a hiatus: e. g सोवत = सोश्रत = सोता है. 8, It is frequently inserted redundantly before the signs of mode and tense in the case of those verbs whose base ends with श्रा; e. g. नचावना, कहावता, जावेगा, properly नचाना, कहाता, जाएगा. 9, This letter, inserted between the base of a verb and the sign of the causal form, gives what has been called the 'doubly causal' form; e. g. लगना, to be struck: लगाना, to cause a thing to stick: लगवाना, to cause that a thing be stuck on by someone else. This, however is a feature in Hindee that is beset with difficulty, for it is by no means always easy to perceive the exact function of the letter when it occurs in this position, and it may even be supposed that it is in some instances redundant.

श (sh) is the thirtieth consonant in the Hindee or Devanāgarī alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions:—1, It belongs to the palatal class, and is the first of the three sibilants, which, including ह, form the class called ūshṃa or ūshmāṇah; it is hence called the palatal sibilant 2, In pronunciation it has the sound of sh in the English word 'shun,' or of s in the English 'sure' or of ch in the French 'cheval' it never has the z sound of s in the English word 'wise,' nor the zh sound of s in 'pleasure.' By many persons this letter is slightly aspirated, so that the word शरीर is pronounced by them as if it were spelt shharīr. It is of some importance to observe that though the natives of Bengal seldom make any perceptible difference in the pronunciation of the three sibilants, yet that among the Hindee-speaking people the sounds of these letters are distinctly marked even among the masses, excepting by persons of singular carelessness or of some vocal inability to produce the respective sounds. 3, This letter is constantly interchanged inaccurately with ष and स, and occasionally even with ग and ह; e g दिग = दिक = दिश; केहर = केशर. 4, When compounded with another letter it assumes (according to the option of the writer) the form श, e g श्च, श्न, श्र, श्व. When so compounded it is pronounced by many with a sharp sibilant sound; thus परिश्रम is often (though with questionable accuracy) pronounced parisram rather than parishram 5 This letter occasionally occurs as a Taddhita suffix [m. (f ā)] by means of which adjectives are formed from substantives, e g लोमश, from लोम. 6, In foreign words in this Dictionary it stands for ش; e g. निशान = نشان.

ष

ष (sh or sh̤) is the thirty-first consonant in the Hindee or Devanāgarī alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions — 1, It belongs to the cerebral class, and is the second of the three sibilants; it is hence called the cerebral sibilant. (See श, 1) 2, It is generally represented in the Roman character by sh, but with a view to distinguishing between it and its predecessor (श), two dots (as indicated above) are sometimes placed under the h. 3, In pronunciation it has the sound of the English sh; but its sound differs from that of श in being slightly rougher and more aspirated, as many persons pronounce the ss in 'session' or the ti in 'unction'. (See श, 2) The difference, however, between the pronunciation of श and of ष is hardly sufficiently noticeable to be detected by a beginner, unless he has an acute ear and is on the alert in the matter. It should be added that by the larger portion of the Hindee-speaking people this letter is pronounced exactly like the aspirated letter ख. 4, This letter is frequently called "peṭkaṭā sha," seemingly in allusion to its form. 5, It is occasionally interchanged with क; e g जोतिक, more properly ज्योतिष; and is constantly liable to be interchanged with क्ष, त्स, ख, श, and स; e g सन्तोख, properly सन्तोष: again बेषानस, more properly बैखानस, etc. We have also noteworthy instances of interchange in the words षटांक, षामगडलं, and षट. 6, In the formation of the word मानुष from मनु, this letter appears as a Taddhita suffix. 7, As a cerebral, this letter requires न to be exchanged for ण in words in which it precedes the n-sound: See ऋ, 3, and notes on ण. 8, It should be observed that it is not always easy or even possible to ascertain whether श or ष should be used, e g कोश = कोष. 9, In Sandhi this letter undergoes important changes which will be found carefully specified at length in any good Hindee or Sanskrit Grammar.

स (s) is the thirty-second consonant in the Hindee or Devanāgarī alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions:—1, It belongs to the dental class, and is the last of the three sibilants; which, including ह, form the class called by grammarians ūshmā, or ūshmānah: it is hence called the dental sibilant. 2, In pronunciation it has the common sound of s as in the English word 'son': it never has the z sound of that letter in the English word 'nose', nor the zh-sound of s in 'measure'. By many persons this letter is slightly aspirated, so that the word सकल is sometimes pronounced as if it were spelt shakal or even shhakal. It may be of some importance to observe that though the natives of Bengal seldom make any perceptible difference in their pronunciation of the three sibilants, yet among the Hindee-speaking people the sounds of these letters are distinctly marked even among the masses, excepting by persons of singular carelessness or of some vocal inability to produce the respective sounds 3, As a Taddhita suffix, it is used to form a few adjectives from substantives; e g तृणस, grassy; from तृण, grass. 4, This letter sometimes = the English personal pronoun 'he', 'that': in such case it is one of the Sanskrit forms of the nominative of the personal pronoun तद् he. 5, As, apparently, an abridged form of सह with, it is frequently found (1) as the first member in Bahuvrīhi compounds; e. g सकमल, with lotus flowers: सजीव, alive (2) as = the same, like, equal; e g सधर्म्मा, adj of the same caste, etc: सगोत्र, of one ancestry or family 6 This letter is sometimes found as an abbreviation (1) of सु; e g. सपुत्र = सुपुत्र, a filial son (2) of स्व; e g सगुण = स्वगुण. 7, It is constantly interchanged with श, and not unfrequently with ष; while sometimes it interchanges with छ (छिर्का = सिर्का), and once with ल (निकलना, etc. = निकसना, etc): it is also liable to be interchanged with ह. 8, In foreign words current in Hindee, this letter stands for (1) ؏ (2) ص, and (3) س. 9, In many words it is quite common to drop this letter; e. g. इसमें (= इसमें); नेह (= सेह); थान (= स्थान); थिति (= स्थिति). 10, In Prosody, this letter represents the metrical foot (⏑⏑—) called anapæst, consisting of two short syllables followed by one long one.

सा, a very common and most important adjunct in Hindee, is most probably the Prākrit form of सदृश or सादृश्य or सम (समान): by some, however, it is believed to be merely a contraction of the word ऐसा in one of the idiomatic usages of this word. It denotes, 1, similitude, likeness, resemblance, e. g. हाथीसा मुंह, an elephant-like face: हाथी सा मुंह, a face like the elephant's: लिखासा, as if written: बादलसा, like a cloud, cloud like. 2, When suffixed to adjectives, it is sometimes intensive; e. g थोड़ासा, a very little, बहुतसा, very much and sometimes modificatory, like the English 'ish', or '-like', or 'as if', or 'so to speak'; e. g. कालासा, black-ish, black-like: similarly the English 'faintish', 'faint-like', 'as if in a swoon': 3, When suffixed to pronouns, it is sometimes added to the base, sometimes to the unaltered nommative, and sometimes to the genitive; e.g तुझसा or तुसा or तेरासा, like thee, such as thee or thou. 4, It is to be observed that popular usage (with however much of questionable accuracy or logic) has decided in favour of treating the श्रा in in this particle as if it were an unquestioned adjectival termination; hence, it has become the fashion to inflect it (m. sā, f sī, pl. m se) as an adjective. Like many other inaccuracies or anomalies in language, it is probably past recovery now.

ह (h) is the thirty-third consonant in the Hindee or Devanāgarī alphabet, and has invariably the aspirated sound of the English letter h, as in the word 'hard.' It belongs to the class of gutturals, is the aspirate of the Devanāgarī alphabet, and is the last letter of the class called by grammarians ūshmā or ūshmāṇah: it is hence called the guttural sibilant. By inaccurate writers and speakers this letter is constantly corrupted into ai (see ऐ, 7); e.g. ठैरना, properly ठहरना; again, गैना, properly गहना. Great care should be taken not to confound the 'inaudible h' (see आ, 19) with this aspirate. Lastly, this letter is occasionally displaced by घ; e.g. सिंघनी; again, रघूगण, properly रघुगण; it is also occasionally interchanged with श; e.g. केहरी, properly केशरी; and even with ञ and भ; thus, बिलम्हना, properly विलम्बना; and सम्हालना, properly सम्भालना. Very frequently, also, and especially in poetry, it is interchanged with ष; thus, नाह, properly नाथ; and with प; thus, कोह, properly कोप, and with व; e.g. जोह, properly जोष. One instance occurs in the Rāmāyaṇ in which this letter is used euphonically as a kind of fulcrum for the plural termination, thus भोंहें = भोंएं, eyebrows.
