PREFACE.

More than a quarter of a century has passed since the publication of the Hindee Dictionary at present in use, viz., that compiled by the late Rev. J. T. Thompson, Baptist Missionary, of Delhi. Although Forbes, while embodying the whole of 'Thompson' in his more recent Dictionary of the Hindústáni language, added many new words, yet experience abundantly proves that the Hindee language is best studied with the help of a Dictionary whose words are arranged in the order of the Devanágarí alphabet. To study Hindee literature by the help of a Hindústáni Dictionary would be analogous to studying English with a Dictionary in which the English words should be written in the Arabic character;—the letters have no one point in common, and are arranged, as to their alphabets, on principles exhibiting the utmost diversity; while each alphabet contains some letters and sounds which have no exact equivalents in the other. Every reader of Hindee whose studies have been anything more than elementary, must have many times regretted the inadequacy of Thompson's work. When it is stated that of the fifty thousand words and forms of words contained in the present Dictionary, there are about twenty-five thousand in excess of those given in 'Thompson,' and that these words have been gathered chiefly from the writings of the people's favourite authors, it will be obvious that to facilitate the study of the Hindee literature a new Dictionary was needed.

From the western border of Bengal to the Panjáb, and from the foot of the Himálayas to the borders of the Madras Presidency, this language is the vernacular of the masses both in British India and in the Feudatory States. Within that vast territory, other languages also are spoken, notably the Urdoo of the Muhammadans, especially in the larger cities. Eight dialects of Hindee are generally enumerated, which in their characteristic diversities are sharply marked; nearly all of these peculiarities are, however, more or less clearly traceable to a common parent. There is difference of opinion, even among the best authorities, as to the number of persons to whom this is a mother-tongue,—the figures ranging from fifty to eighty millions: thus much, however, seems to have been ascertained, that no one language in this vast country of Hindústán is spoken by so large a number of the people. With these facts before us, little need be said to shew the importance of the study of Hindee, yet less, probably, has been accomplished by European enterprize for the cultivation of this language, than for almost any other language in the Queen's dominions in the East.

A feeling exists in some quarters that no words are properly entitled to a place in a Hindee Dictionary that are not traceable to Sanskrit: this opinion, however, has to be weighed against the fact that a strong body of accomplished Orientalists are of the contrary opinion; while the literature produced by native writers, whether ancient or modern, poetical or prose, abounds in words which are commonly regarded as Arabic and Persian. The following may be cited as specimens from one work only,—that most popular of Hindee works the Rámáyaṇ of Tulsí-Dás; गरीबनेवाज, सुपेती, बाग, लायक, जीन, जिनिस, सराफ, खबर, दाम, जोर, हर, मसखरी, फराक, खाना, फौज, हख, लगान, बकसीस, जहाज, बाद, दरबार, कागद, etc. This does not exhaust the list, but the number is sufficient to prove that Hindee, in common with other languages, is composite. Such words are not always given by native authors in their proper form, as the word सुपेती (سفيدي) shews; there is, hence, all the greater reason for giving them a place in a Dictionary of that language. The twenty-five thousand additional words and forms of words contained in this work, are mainly such as the writer has found in Hindee works read by himself.

It would occupy too much space to enumerate the many respects in which the arrangement of the present Dictionary differs from that of its predecessors: the aim has been to prepare a Dictionary that shall meet the wants of students rather than of scholars; and the author will receive with thankfulness any light that may be thrown on the defects of his work.

In the preparation of this Dictionary, the following works have been consulted; viz., Thompson's Hindee Dictionary, the Hindústáni Dictionaries of Shakespear and Forbes, the Bengáli and Sanskrit Dictionary of Sir Graves Haughton, Max Muller's edition of Benfey's Sanskrit Dictionary, and the Sanskrit Dictionary of Prof. Monier Williams. An expression of the author's obligations to his valued and learned friends John Beames, of the Bengal Civil Service, and S. H Kellogg, of the American Presbyterian Mission, is recorded with very much pleasure; also to Dr. Lazarus, of the Medical Hall Press, for the pains and the patience with which he has conducted the work through the press.

अ (a) is the first vowel in the Hindee alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions:—1, It is said to be short a; but if accurately pronounced it has in Hindee the sound of u in the English words 'dust,' 'bud' 'fun,' of o in 'come,' or of a in 'villa' 2, It is the letter which is said to be inherent in every consonant, when the consonant is not followed by some other vowel or by virām expressed or implied; that is, it serves to indicate the sound which is necessary in order to a consonant becoming pronounceable Thus भ cannot be pronounced unless some vowel sound be admitted the vowel-sound which is used for this purpose is that of this letter अ 3, In a large number of instances (which might, indeed, be increased almost ad lib) contiguous consonants which are to be pronounced without the intervention of this sound are formed into compound letters, thus removing the necessity for the constant recurrence of the virām This is one of the causes of the variety and uncertainty of orthography in Hindee thus, one writer will use the form समभव (which in the absence of virām will inevitably be pronounced wrongly by the uninitiated), while another writes more accurately सम्भव. Though the sound of this letter is in Sanskrit always (and in Bengāli, nearly always) produced at the end of words, it is never, excepting in poetry, pronounced at the end of words in Hindee words which end in अ preceded by some other vowel than अ, form the single exception to this rule; thus इन्द्रिय is pronounced with a slight vowel sound at the end. It should be added, that in printing Hindee, it is usual to omit the virām; so that it is only by long and careful attention of both eye and ear that the learner can know where to drop the sound 4, It never appears in Hindee excepting at the beginning of a word or of a syllable. 5, Unlike all the other vowels in Hindee this vowel has no medial or final form. 6, In poetry it is short by nature, whether used separately or joined to a consonant; before a compound consonant, however, it is, like all the other short vowels, long by position. 7, It is sometimes an interjection expressive of pity. 8, It is frequently prefixed to words with the functions of the alpha privitum of the Greek, and of the in or un of many English words of German or Latin origin; for example, in the words 'unfriendly,' 'intact,' 'atheist'. thus, अधर्म्म, अलक्षण. When prefixed as a privitive to words beginning with a vowel it is followed by न, presumably to prevent the hiatus; thus, अनन्त. (See also art अन.) 9, Not unfrequently, however, it is prefixed corruptly and without in any way modifying the sense of a word; thus, अस्थल, more properly स्थल. The explanation of this curious fact seems to be that the natives of India, like the Persians and Arabs, find a difficulty in pronouncing two quiescent consonants at the beginning of a word; with this difference, however, that in Hindee the difficulty does not appear excepting in the pronunciation of a compound consonant whose first element is a sibilant; thus most Hindoos would pronounce the English word 'sprout' as if it were spelt ĭsprout or ĭsprout. It has been thought desirable not to expunge from this Dictionary the words which exhibit this phenomenon; for, if the student find, in the course of his reading, the word अस्तुति, he is not to be supposed to be unreasonable if he expect to find it in his Dictionary, albeit it is a corruption. how, indeed, can he know, unless he is told, whether the word he is in search of is an instance of this phenomenon or not? It may, indeed, be fairly presumed that a Dictionary is intended not for those who have acquired the knowledge of a language, but rather for the assistance of those who seek such knowledge If the student look for अस्तुति and does not find it, he will naturally infer that the word is not in the Dictionary The cases of such words as अस्पर्श, in which the अ is both privitive and redundant, seem to leave no room for doubt either as to the duty of the compiler or the interests of the student In keeping, therefore, with the method adopted by Shakespear, Haughton, Thompson, Forbes and others, such words have, for the most part, been retained in the present work 10, In such Arabic or Persian words as have found their way into the language and literature of the Hindee speaking people, this letter represents alif, also, the fat'ha of the Arabs and the zabar of the Persians. 11, Printed with a dot under it (अ़) it represents in this Dictionary the Arabic letter 'ain as, however, the proper sound of 'ain does not exist in the Hindee or Devanāgarī alphabet, no difference is made in the pronunciation of such words excepting by Muhammadans of education and of taste. Thus, in the very common word अ़र्ज़ or अ़रज़ the अ would be pronounced by a Muhammadan of culture with a spiritus lenis which has no corresponding sound in any European language, and can be perceived only by a delicate and cultivated ear: the true sound is observable in the slight catch in the breath with which many persons pronounce the u in the word 'tea-urn.' Hindoos, however, together with at least nine-tenths of the Muhammadans make no difference between the pronunciation of 'ain and of short a; and it may even be doubted whether their organs of hearing detect any difference. 12, Sometimes, especially in poetry, in Braj, and in the patois, it is inserted like व, and interchangeably with it, to form an extra syllable or to avoid a hiatus; thus सोअत or सोवत, in the place of the proper form of the present participle of सोना. 13, This letter is one of the epithets of Vishṇu: see ओम. 14, Sometimes it is intensive, like its equivalent in some English words; e. g अधारी, अवश. 15, It is frequently put inaccurately for आ; e. g. अघात, more properly आघात. 16, When it is the first letter in the second member of a compound word whose first member ends with a closed syllable, it disappears to the eye though not to the ear; thus, अनवसर = अन + अवसर. 17, It is frequently put inaccurately for य; e. g. सवैआ, more properly सवैया. 18, In some instances this letter, when initial, is dropped: e g. धेला, properly अधेला. 19, In Sandhi this letter is liable to certain important changes which will be found specified at length in any good Hindee or Sanskrit Grammar.

आ (ā) is the second vowel in the Hindee or Devanāgaree alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions.—1, In pronunciation it has the broad open sound of a in the English words 'far,' 'star.' 2, Its medial and final form is ा, sometimes called mātra, sometimes again ākār, but most commonly kānoon. 3, It is sometimes inaccurately interchanged with अ, or with अव; thus, अघात, more properly आघात; आलि, more properly अलि; अवराधना, more properly आराधना. 4, It is often inaccurately put for the privitive अ; thus, आधर्म, more properly अधर्म. 5, When it occurs as the first letter in the second member of a compound word, the secondary form only is used; thus अनाकार (= अन + आकार). 6, Standing alone in a sentence it is either (1) the second person singular of the imperative mode of the verb आना; or (2) it is the shortest form of the conjunctive participle of that verb; or (3) it is an interjection (Oh! Ah! Alas!) expressive of sudden thought, or of recollecting, or of condolence or participation of sorrowful feeling on any account. 7, It is the sign of the second person singular of the imperative mode of all verbs in which it immediately precedes the ना of the infinitive; thus, खा (inf. खाना); बुझा (inf बुझाना); करवा (inf करवाना). 8, In the future tense and in the present participle, as also in several of the modes and tenses in which the present participle figures, this letter is the sign of the masculine singular. 9, Inserted between the verbal root and the sign of the infinitive mode, it forms causal verbs; e. g. करना, कराना. 10, In words derived from Arabic or from Persian it represents long alif, or alif with the sign madda written over it. 11, With a dot under it and at the beginning of words or of syllables, it represents 'aīn followed by alif, or long 'ain. 12, In some of the words of Arabic origin which appear to have fairly settled themselves down in the language of the Hindee-speaking people, and especially in the larger cities where the Muhammadan influence has long predominated, this letter represents the Arabic letter 'aīn; e g. जमा (properly jam', pronounced 'jama' with the a in each instance like a in the English word 'villa'); बाद (properly ba'd). (See art अ, 11.) In such words the dot is not put unless the full form of the letter is given; e g. कनआत. 13, Sometimes this letter is short a lengthened according to fixed rules, thus imparting to other words the sense (1) of origin; e. g सामुद्र, sea-born (from समुद्र): (2) of ownership, relation, or resemblance; e g. आसुर, appertaining to the Asurs, like an Asur (3) of direction; e. g. आश्विन, directed towards the Ashuin and (4) of relationship (patronymic); e. g. आदित्य, sons of अदिति. 14, As the sign of the masculine singular of the present participle (see 8) it is, in common with all the other vowels that are used as terminations in the conjugation of the verb, very often omitted in poetry and also by inaccurate speakers; so that it is impossible to know, excepting from the context, either the gender, the number, or the person; e. g kahāñ le jāt or kahāñ le jāwat 15, This letter enjoys no exemption from the remark that in poetry nearly all the vowels are liable to be interchanged; and hence, the ordinary requirements of Grammar as to agreement in the matter of gender are entirely subordinate to the caprice of the poet or to the exigencies of his metre 16, In composition this letter often appears as a prefix denoting extent (as far as), limitation (up to, e g आगत), intensity (as in आकम्पन, आशंका), or direction (as in आगमन): in this class of its functions, therefore, it is the reverse of अव. 17, It might be noticed that as a prefix to the words गमन and दान it has the effect of reversing their meaning 18, Not only as a prefix, however, but also as a suffix it is very common in Hindee; accordingly (1) added to the stems of verbs it forms instrumental nouns; e. g. झुला (झुलना): (2) it is one of the suffixes by means of which masculine adjectives are formed from substantives; e. g. भुखा (भुख): (3) sometimes it forms masculine substantives from adjectives; e. g. अधैर्या (adj. अधैर्य): (4) sometimes it forms feminine substantives from adjectives; e g अनपेखा (adj. अनपेख): (5) sometimes it forms masculine substantives from feminine ones; e. g. अड़ंगा (f. अड़ंग): (6) sometimes it forms feminine substantives from masculine ones; e. g. अभिलाषा (m. अभिलाष): (7) while it is sometimes added (e. g. दाम, दामा, m. दिश, दिशा, f.) and sometimes rejected (e. g. दारा, दार, f.) and sometimes interchanged with ई (e. g. दृगी दृगा) without affecting the gender at all: (8) it is often used as a Kridanta suffix to form feminine substantives expressive of volition or of reiteration; e. g. जिज्ञासा, पिपासा, प्रशंसा: (9) for many adjectives which in the masculine end with a consonant, this letter suffixed is the sign of the feminine; e. g. प्रिया (m. प्रिय): (10) added to verbal roots ending with a consonant, this letter forms the masculine singular of the Historical Tense (e. g. सुना, from सुनना), and of the Past Passive Participle; e g. देखा (दुआ) (from देखना): (11) in some few instances it forms diminutives; e. g कीला (कील). 19, In compiling a Hindee Dictionary at the present stage of the language, a question arises as to the best method of representing what is called the imperceptible h at the end of words obtained from the Urdoo. As an attempt at solving this difficulty, and with the view of indicating the grounds for the method adopted in the present work, the following facts are commended to consideration: (1) The letter is called obscure or imperceptible h; by which is meant simply that the true sound at the end of such words is not that of h, — the vowel which happens to precede it having its own proper pronunciation; thus not nah, but na, not kih, but ki; not bandah, but banda · (2) In the oblique cases of the singular, and in the nominative plural, of all words at the end of which this inaudible h occurs in Urdoo, the inflection which takes place is exactly after the manner of the inflection of the ordinary substantives ending in long a, and it is dropped in the oblique cases of the plural; e g. betā, a son; banda, a slave; gen. sing bete kā, bandekā nom pl. bete, bande; gen pl. betonkā, bandoṅkā (3) The sound of a when it precedes this obscure h at the end of words is always that of a in the English word 'villa'; but if in Hindee there be at the end of a word no vowel-sign the genius of the language requires that there be also no vowel sound · (4) The tendency even in Urdoo itself is to drop the imperceptible h, and in doing so, to replace it by alif (5) There is in Hindee no other way of representing short a (excepting at the beginning of words and of syllables) than by आ. For these reasons it seems clear that to represent the inaudible h, whether in Hindee by: or ह, or in English by h, would be to misrepresent entirely the actual fact as to the sound, to ignore both the facts in relation to inflection and also the usage of natives of all classes, and consequently to countenance an error which to accurate pronunciation must be fatal. It should be observed, therefore, that in dismissing the h and representing the sound by आ at the end of such words, the compiler is not arbitrarily attempting to lead the way, but is rather following the way already indicated by the existing phenomena. 20, When it occurs at the end of foreign adjectives as the representative of the inaudible h it is not generally exchanged for ा in the feminine; e. g. ख़फ़ा, m. and f. 21, When, in Hindee, the long a at the end of adjectives represents the nominative form of the Sanskrit substituted for the base, the adjective is the same in form for both genders; e. g. दुष्टचेता (m. and f.) is the nominative form of the base दुष्टचेतस्. 22, There are several words in regular use in Hindee which end in long a to which plural meanings are given: the explanantion is this, that such words are Tatsamas, i. e. they are indentical in form with the original Sanskrit words (the said words being in Sanskrit in the plural number); excepting, however, that they drop the visarga; e. g. दशेन्द्रिया (in Sanskrit, दशेन्द्रियाः). 23, In colloquial usage this letter is sometimes put where we should properly expect य; e. g. संसा, properly संशयः समा, properly समय. 24, In poetry it is, in all situations, long by nature. 25, In the formation of many compound words this letter discharges important functions which will be found carefully specified at length in any good Hindee or Sanskrit Grammar. आप, I, m. water. II, m. pr. n. one of the eight demigods called Vasus. III, (genit. अपना) self. This is the Reflective Pronoun for all persons, genders, and numbers. With the exception of the genitive case it has in all the cases two sets of forms, the one whose base is आप and the other whose base is अपने. The word is an emphatic one, and as such does not supplant the personal pronoun which may chance to be the subject of the sentence, but rather supplements it hence, a sentence in which आप only is used as the nominative (i. e. without the proper personal pronoun) contains nothing to indicate which of the persons it is that is the subject of the sentence; the omission occasions, in fact, inevitable ambiguity: thus, in the sentence Āp gharmeṅ rahtā the nominative of rahtā may be either maiṅ, tū, or wuh; while in the plural (Āp gharmeṅ rahte) there is a twofold ambiguity; for, the āp may here be not merely the Reflective Pronoun, but even the Honorific one. Apart from the mere difference in declension there is a permanent and unvarying distinction between these two pronouns; for, the latter always has its verb in the plural, and never refers to any other person than the second. The proper function of the word is either to emphasize, or to particularize or single out; thus Wuh āpse āp girā, he fell of himself (no one threw him down): Wuh āphi āp āyā, he himself came (no one else came for him, but he came in propriā personā). In the former of these sentences the phrase appears to be used in an instrumental or agentive sense (āpse āp, of, or by the agency of one's very self alone, spontaneously), and the latter in a nominative sense (āphi āp, oneself, one's very self, oneself alone): in each instance, however, the prevailing idea seems to be aloneness and individuality, personality or identity. It might be added that the second āp might be omitted, as it often is, without in any way influencing the sense. This word is sometimes applied to God in the same way as is ātman in Sanskrit and 'He' in English, — taking care, however, to begin with a capital letter and to omit the word 'God'; e. g. Jāke hriday sāñch hai, tāke hriday āp, in whose heart there is truth, in his heart there is Himself (i. e. God). IV (gen आपका), the Honorific Pronoun. Unlike the last mentioned word, this word has, in declension, only one set of forms, — the base of these being āp; and as it is applied only to the second person it never requires a personal pronoun before it it differs also from that word by the fact that it invariably requires the plural form of the verb, and this in the third person. It is used when addressing one's superior; or by equals, when in dignified or respectful conversation Lastly, — the word may be used in addressing either one person or more than one: in the latter circumstance, however, the fact is most generally indicated by adding the word lōg; e. g. Aplōg, Your Honors, your Worships, You, Sirs. Aplōg jānte hoenge ki, You, Sirs, may be aware, that, etc.]

इ (i) is the third vowel in the Hindee or Devanāgaree alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions —1, In pronunciation it has the sound of short i in such English words as 'mill', 'wit'. It is, however, frequently ignored altogether in pronunciation; e g. रीति is oftener pronounced reet than reeti. This omission of the sound of the letter frequently gives rise to a corrupt spelling of words in which it occurs; e. g धून is common for धूनि. 2, This is its initial form, i. e. the form which the letter assumes when it occurs at the beginning of words or of syllables; in all other situations, however, it assumes the form ि, —— called its medial and final, or secondary, form. This form, unlike any of the other vowel forms in Hindee, invariably appears at the left of the letter after which it is sounded, e g कृति, (not iit but) iti 3, At the beginning of words transliterated from the Arabic it represents alif with kasra; and in like manner, in words from the Persian it represents alif with zer with a dot under it, however, it represents 'ain with kasra or zer. 4, This letter is sometimes (especially in poetry) put redundantly with य before the vowel terminations in the case of verbs whose root ends in a vowel (according to the caprice or the inadvertence of writers, or the exigencies of metre), e g. उठाइये, more properly उठाये or उठाए (उठाना). 5, It is sometimes prefixed like अ (see अ, 9) without in anyway modifying the sense, and seemingly for the same reason, e. g. इस्तहा, more properly सहा. 6, Words beginning with this letter are often inaccurately spelt with ई; e. g ईतेक, more properly इतेक. 7, This letter is often inserted needlessly and corruptly after क; e. g. कहिना, more properly कहना (vulgarly pronounced as if spelt कैना): and, generally, it is a very common redundancy before the last consonant of the root of a verb; e. g. जानि, more properly जान or जानके (जानना). Each of these phenomena is most observable in poetry and in Braj 8, It is frequently inserted (especially in poetry and in Braj), where we should expect long i; e. g. करिण, more properly करण. 9, It is often put in the place of य, e g जाइ, more properly जाय (जाना). 10, It seems impossible to state a rule in reference to the gender of substantives which end with this letter; they seem to be as often masculine as feminine. 11, In Braj this letter often appears where we should expect ए; e. g. खानिवारो = खानेवाला. 12, In poetry it is short by nature, whether used separately or joined to a consonant; before a compound consonant, however, whether that consonant be in the same word with it or in the word that follows, it is like all the other short vowels, long by position 13, It is sometimes interchanged with अ; e. g. इंग्रेज़ी = अंग्रेज़ी. 14, In the case of those adjectives in Hindee which end with this letter, the form for both genders is the same, e g दुर्बुद्धि, m and f Such adjectives are formed by merely prefixing some word or particle to a feminine substantive ending in इ. 15, In the formation of some compound words this letter undergoes important changes which will be found carefully specified at length in any good Hindee or Sanskrit Grammar.

इअ, this element is frequently found at the end of words in the Bhojpuri dialect, especially in the case of dissyllabic words containing two open long syllables, the former of which it shortens, e g. करिअ = काला.

ई (ī) is the fourth vowel in the Hindee or Devanāgaree alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions — 1, In pronunciation it has invariably the sound of long i in the English word 'police' or of ee in 'meek'; never that of long i in 'kite.' 2, When it occurs as a medial or final letter, i. e when it is in any other situation than at the beginning of a word or syllable, its form is ी. Unlike ि, this form invariably appears at the right of the letter after which it is to be sounded. 3, In all modes and tenses of verbs, as also in all participles and adjectives, whose masculine form ends in long a, this letter, displacing the long a, is the sign of the feminine gender : see, however, article आ, 14 and 20. 4, It is very common as a particle of emphasis, and so used, it is put at the end of the word it emphasizes ; e. g. यहीं : if, however, the word it emphasizes be in an oblique case it is generally inserted between the inflective base and the case-sign ; e. g. इसीका (gen. of यही). 5, It is often (but more especially in poetry), used at the end of the conjunctive participle of verbs whose root ends with a vowel, and where we should therefore expect either य or, more properly, nothing excepting the root of the verb (आ, 7,) ; e. g. आई often आय, but more properly आ. 6, In keeping with the last remark it is proper to observe that ई and य are often, though inaccurately and needlessly, interchanged ; e. g. उपाई, more properly उपाय. 7, Frequently, in the corrupt speech of the people, and in books not carefully written, and, again, in poetry for the purpose of metre, the feminine form of the past passive participle (ending, of course, with this letter) is used where we might expect the masculine form. 8, It is often used as the sign of the feminine of the past passive participle and of the singular of the feminine of the Historical Tenses of verbs whose root ends in a vowel, this vowel being dropped or represented by short i; e. g. दई, लई; more generally दिई, लिई: in such case this letter is often inaccurately printed in its secondary form; e. g. दी, ली. 9, When this letter stands alone in a sentence it is an interjection of regret, anger, or compassion: it is also used in calling. 10, Added to masculine substantives ending with consonants it frequently yields the corresponding feminine ones; e. g. कुकुरी (कुकुर). 11, In the case of some adjectives whose masculine form ends in a consonant, this letter, added, forms the feminine; e g. सुन्दरी (सुन्दर). 12, Displacing आ at the end of substantives, it commonly yields the diminutive form, e. g. पोथी (पोथा). 13, It is commonly used for forming abstract substantives feminine from adjectives by being added to the masculine form of them ending in आ; e. g. उंचाई (उंचा). 14, It is frequently added to abstract substantives ending in आ; importing, presumably, some such refined distinction as might be supposed to exist between many English words ending in tion as distinguished from those ending in ness; e. g consideration, considerateness; adaptation, adaptedness; cold, coldness; wonder, wonderfulness; अधीनता, submission, अधीनताई, submissiveness. 15, In the case of nearly all substantives which end with this letter, unless they be adjectival ones, it is the distinguishing mark of their being feminine. In the case, however, of adjectival substantives this is the sign of the masculine, the feminine of such ends most commonly in ini 16, It is often used for forming masculine adjectives and masculine adjectival substantives from substantives ending in a consonant; e. g. ऊनी (ऊन); रोगी (रोग); कोढ़ी (कोढ़); भागी (भाग). In like manner this letter is suffixed to a very large number of substantives in Hindee, thus forming adjectives which signify 'appertaining to', 'possessed of', 'abounding in', 'consisting of' the thing indicated by the substantive; like the letter y in many adjectives in English; e g. rainy, snowy, lucky, wealthy (धनी). It should be carefully marked, however, that inasmuch as in Hindee it is very seldom indeed that the feminine form of the adjective is used to agree with a feminine substantive, excepting in the case of those adjectives which in the masculine end in long a, adjectives ending in long i qualify substantives of either gender. The distinctively feminine forms of adjectives are adopted when the adjectives are used substantively: even here, however, it is not at all unusual to make the masculine form do service for the feminine; just as in English the terms 'author', 'proprietor', are sometimes used where 'authoress' or 'proprietress' would be the more appropriate term. Of all this, one example may suffice; — पापी means 'sinful', and qualifies purush in the phrase पापी पुरुष (a sinful man); but it also qualifies stri in the expression पापी स्त्री (a sinful woman): पापिनी स्त्री is not Hindee; but पापिनी (alone) means a female sinner, and पापी, of course, a male sinner, and it may even be used to designate a female sinner too. 17, This letter sometimes serves to distinguish a vocation from those who follow it; e. g. ठगी (ठग). 18, Sometimes it imports the idea of money; e.g. कतराई (कतरा), खुराकी (खुराक). 19, It is frequently put inaccurately for इ especially at the beginning of words; e.g. ईतर, more properly इतर. 20, In the case of those adjectives whose masculine form ends in āyā, this letter, supplanting yā, yields the feminine form; e.g. पराई (m. पराया): this same observation applies to past passive participles similarly formed; e. g. अनपाई (m. अनपाया). 21, In Braj this letter is used in the Historical Tense for either gender; e. g. राजा कही (= राजाने कहा). 22, It sometimes forms feminine substantives from masculine ones by displacing आ; e. g. घोड़ी (घोड़ा). 23, In words from the Arabic or Persian this letter with a dot under it represents 'ain followed by yā or yi with kasra or zer written under; e. g ईसा. 24, This letter is often inaccurately put for ए or for य; e. g जाई, more properly जाए (3rd pers. sing aor. of जाना), also written जाय. 25, As a suffix this letter sometimes forms patronymics, e. g रामानन्दी (रामानन्द). 26, It occasionally forms feminine substantives from masculine ones by taking the place of the short i of the masculine, e. g. ऋषी (m. ऋषि). 27, This letter sometimes distinguishes the workman from his tool; e g. करान्ती (करान्त). 28, Sometimes it distinguishes an instrument from the use to which it is applied, e g. वेधनी (वधन). 29, Occasionally it serves to distinguish between a tree and its produce; e g कर्पासी (कर्पास). 30, It sometimes, also, distinguishes between an agent and his status, and his business, and his place of business, e g कोतवाली (कोतवाल). 31, Sometimes it is added or rescinded without affecting the gender; e g. मुगडेरी, लतरी, सटली, etc 32, In poetry this, like all the other long vowels, is, in all situations, long by nature 33, In the formation of many compound words this letter exercises important functions which will be found carefully specified at length in any good Hindee or Sanskrit Grammar.

उ (u) is the fifth vowel in the Hindee or Devanāgaree alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions: — 1, It has in pronunciation the short sound of u in the English word 'pull', never that of u in 'usage.' 2, Its medial and final form somewhat resembles that of the English comma, and is always written under the letter which it follows in pronunciation: when, however, it follows the letter र its form and position are special: all these facts are illustrated in the word कुमेरु. When it follows ह there is an option; e. g. हु = ऊ or हू. 3, When it occurs at the end of a word the natives of India for the most part make it inaudible or nearly so; thus कृपालु is oftener pronounced kripāl than kripālu an exception to this remark is seen, of course, in the case of monosyllabic words; e. g. सुंह. 4, It is very common in Hindee as an Unādi suffix; e. g कारु. 5, It is used as an interjection implying anger, doubt, calling, command, or respectful address 6, Words properly beginning with this letter are often inaccurately spelt with ऊ, and vice versâ 7, It is frequently interchanged inaccurately with व, e g. तरव, more properly तरु; भाउ, more properly भाव; and with अ, e. g. उड़ाड, more properly अड़ाड़. 8, When found in this Dictionary with a dot under it, it represents 'ain with zamma or pesh 9, This letter is sometimes, and especially in Braj, found at the end of a word where we should ordinarily expect भी, even, also, both. 10, It is sometimes (especially in Braj) found as a sign of the imperative mode as in Sanskrit; e. g. मानु, more commonly मानो (मानना). 11, It is often put by corruption for ओ; e. g. लेउगे, more properly लेओगे (लेना): का करु = क्या करो. 12, In Braj this letter is the termination of the present participle for each person, number, and gender; e. g. चलतु = चलता, चलती, चलते. 13, This letter is one of the epithets of Shiv: see ओम. 14, In poetry, this is, like the other short vowels, short by nature, whether it be used separately or joined to a consonant: when, however, it occurs before a compound consonant whether in the same word with it or in the one that follows, it becomes, like them, long by position. 15, In the case of those adjectives in Hindee which end with this letter, the form for both genders is the same; e. g. द्विधातु, m. or f. Such adjectives are formed by prefixing some word or particle to a substantive ending in उ. In Sanskrit this letter would be lengthened into ऊ or exchanged for वी in the feminine, but these changes are extremly rare in Hindee. 16, In the formation of some compound words, this letter, like the other vowels, discharges important functions which will be found carefully specified at length in any good Hindee or Sanskrit Grammar.

उआ; this element is frequently found at the end of words in the Bhojpuri dialect it is, most probably, merely a jingling termination, and has the effect of shortening a vowel that precedes it in the same word; e. g. अमुआ = आम: also बेटुआ = बेटा; घरुआ = घर; घसुआ = घास.

ऊ (ū) is the sixth vowel of the Hindee or Devanāgaree alphabet and has the following characteristics and functions: —1, In pronunciation it has the long broad sound of u as in the English word 'rude'; never as in 'mule.' 2, The shape of its medial and final form is nearly that of the foregoing letter (उ) reversed; and it is always placed under the letter after which it is to be pronounced; e. g. तूल. There is, however, a single exception both as to its form and position where it follows र; e. g. रूप; also when it follows ह its form is, generally speaking, peculiar; e. g. ह् = हू. 3, As an Unādi suffix it appears at the end of some substantives which are formed, with or without further modification, from the roots of verbs; e. g. पादू (पद), उनू (उन), उड़ाऊ (उड़ा). The substantives so formed are generally feminine. 4, Added to some substantives it forms the corresponding adjectives; e g. आंडू (आंड़). 5, Words properly beginning with this letter are often inaccurately spelt with उ, and vice versâ. 6, This letter is often (especially in Braj) used as the sign of the second person plural of the imperative mode, where we should expect ओ; e. g. तेऊ = तेओ (तेजना). 7, In Braj it is an emphatic particle = भी; e. g. सोऊ = सो भी; वेऊ = वे भी. 8, Often, and especially in the Braj dialect, this letter is found where we might expect व; e. g. ठांऊ, more properly ठांव. 9, In poetry this, like all the long vowels is in all situations long by nature. 10, In certain provincial dialects this letter is sometimes found for यह, that. 11, In the case of those adjectives in Hindee which end with this letter, the form for both genders is the same; e. g. खाऊ, m. or f. a glutton. 12, In the formation of many compound words, this letter exercises important functions and undergoes important changes which may be found carefully specified at length in any good Hindee or Sanskrit Grammar.

ऋ (ṛi) is the seventh vowel in the Hindee or Devanāgaree alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions:— 1, It has in pronunciation the sound of ri in the English word 'rill'. 2, Its medial and final form is merely a hooked figure turned towards the right, and is written under, and attached to, the consonant which it may happen in pronunciation to follow; e g तृण. 3, As this is one of the cerebral letters, if n follows it in the same word, the न becomes ण, provided the न be not final. If the word be a polysyllabic one this change seldom takes place in Hindee unless this letter occur in the syllable immediately preceding the one in which the n occurs. 4, This letter is continually liable to be corrupted into रि; e g. रिषि, more properly ऋषि. 5, Through want of exactness it is often (both to the eye and to the ear) separated from its letter in a way that is eminently calculated to mislead; e. g. गिरहस्थ, more properly गृहस्थ. 6, In poetry, it is, like the other short vowels, short by nature, whether it be used separately or joined to a consonant: when, however, it occurs before a compound consonant, whether in the same word with it or in the one that follows, it becomes, like them, long by position. 7. For a full and clear statement of the functions and vicissitudes of this letter in the formation of compound words, see any good Hindee or Sanskrit Grammar.

ॠ (ṛī) is the eighth vowel of the Hindee or Devanāgaree alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions · — 1, It is the above-mentioned vowel lengthened, and has the sound of ri in the English word 'marine.' 2, Its medial and final form is a kind of double hooked figure turned towards the right, and is written under, and attached to, the consonant which in pronunciation it may happen to follow; e. g. पितॄद्र. 3, In poetry, this, like all the long vowels, is in all situations long by nature. 4, Remark 3, article ऋ applies also to this letter. 5, For a clear statement of the functions and vicissitudes of this letter in the formation of compound words, see any good Hindee or Sanskrit Grammar. 6, m. a demon: an epithet of Shiv. 7, f. an epithet (1) of the mother of the gods (2) of the mother of the demons.

ॠकार, m. the letter ॠ, or any symbol that may represent it.

ऌ (ḷṛi) is the ninth vowel of the Hindee or Devanāgaree alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions: — 1, In pronunciation it ought to have the power of the combination of the three letters lri but it is more usually expressed by the sound of li in the English word 'lip'. 2, Its secondary form is the primary form minus the horizontal and perpendicular strokes (thus ॢ) and is written under (and attached to) the consonant which it may happen in pronunciation to follow. 3, In poetry, it is, like the other short vowels, short by nature, whether used separately or joined to a consonant: when, however, it occurs before a compound consonant, whether in the same word with it or in the one that follows, it becomes, like them, long by position. 4, In regard to this letter and the following one it might be observed that there are no words in Hindee commencing with them: when they occur at all, which is very seldom, they occur in the secondary and not in the primary form; and chiefly in a few verbal roots which are usually recorded in Dictionaries of Sanskrit only; e. g. क्लृप. The reason for inserting them in a Hindee Dictionary is to complete the alphabet. 5, For a full and specific statement of the changes to which this letter is liable in the formation of compound words, see any good Sanskrit Grammar.

ऌकार, m. the letter ऌ or any symbol that may represent it.

ॡ (lṛī) is the tenth vowel of the Hindee or Devanāgaree alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions: — 1, In pronunciation it ought properly to have the power of the three letters in the combination lṛī it has, however, the sound of li in the English word 'police', and is thus the above mentioned vowel lengthened 2, Its secondary form is the primary form minus the horizontal and perpendicular strokes (thus ॣ) and is written under (and attached to) the consonant which it may happen in pronunciation to follow. 3, There do not appear to be any words in which this letter occurs; it is never used excepting in technical grammatical phraseology, and its only raison d'etre seems to be to contribute to the completeness of the alphabet.

ॡकार, m. the letter ॡ or any symbol that may represent it.

ए (ē) is the eleventh vowel of the Hindee or Devanāgaree alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions. — 1, As this is the only vowel in the Devanāgaree alphabet to represent the e sound, its quantity is sometimes short, as in the English word 'grey', and sometimes long, as in the English word 'there', or the French crême. This latter pronunciation is by far the more usual one; but, in fact, nothing but long and careful practice can inform the student in what words it should have the one pronunciation, and in what words the other. 2, Its medial and final form is a kind of curve, and is always written above the letter which it follows in pronunciation and is contiguous to it; thus के. 3, As a vocative particle (O!) it implies respect. 4, When preceded by a vowel this letter is frequently interchanged with य, e. g. होए = होय; उपाए, more properly उपाय; and occasionally when preceded by the inherent vowel only; e. g. बिषे, properly बिषय. 5, It is often interchanged with ये; e. g. भए = भये. 6, In provincial brogue, this letter is often put inaccurately for ऐ; e. g. हे, more properly है. 7, This letter is the characteristic termination of the second and third persons singular of the "aorist". e. g. करे, पाए. 8, in reference to its function as the distinctive termination of the masculine plural of participles, it may be important to remember article आ, 14. 9, This letter is invariably the inflectional substitute of आ; e. g. बेटा, बेटेका; होना, होनेका. 10, As the inflection of the infinitive mode this letter is often dropped, especially by the lower classes and by the peasantry; e. g. रहन देओ, more properly रहने देओ. 11, This letter forms adverbial ordinals by displacing the आ or the आं of adjectival ordinals; e. g. पहिला, first; पहिले in the first place, firstly: दसवां, tenth; दसवे, in the tenth place, tenthly. (See articles वां, वे, वें.) 12, In provincial brogue this letter is often exchanged for इ; more especially in numerals or in words that imply collectiveness. e. g. इकावन, more properly एकावन; इकट्ठा, more properly एकट्ठा. 13, Of all inflectible substantives this letter is the sign of the nominative plural; e. g. कुत्ते, nominative plural of कुत्ता. 14, In poetry this letter is, in all situations, long by nature. 15, In some dialectic pronunciations this letter = यह, this. 16, This letter is one of the names of Vishṇu. 17, For a full and careful statement of the functions and changes of this letter in the formation of compound words, see any good Hindee or Sanskrit Grammar.

एउ; freq. in Braj as the termination of the past part. (m. and f.); e. g. कहेउ = कहा or कहा हुआ.

एं; 1, This is the characteristic termination of the nominative plural of substantives feminine ending with a consonant (e. g. बातें, nominative plural of बात), and of substantives feminine ending in the uninflected आ; e g आज्ञाएं, nominative plural of आज्ञा. 2, In verbs this is the characteristic termination of the first and third persons plural of the "aorist"; e. g. करें, कराएं. 3, This form is often used in Braj where we should expect to find ए; e. g. ऐसें, more properly ऐसे.

एक, m. (f. ā) one; a, an; the same, similar, alike; alone; any, only; preeminent, chief: somebody. This word is much used in composition, especially in the formation of compound adjectives, just as in Persian; e. g. Ekdil, ekchit Ekse dūn na rahnā is a phrase that is applied to a change of condition, — most commonly from good to bad, but sometimes the reverse. Ekkā das sunānī is a phrase that is applied to a person who replies in many words, especially in giving abuse; lit. to reply ten (words) for one. Ek na ek (gen. ek na ekkā, ki, ke) either, one or other. Ek is frequently united to the following word, even when no special reason for the connexion is apparent; e. g. ekdin. When used in immediate proximity to another numeral, and following it, this word exhibits an important idiom, which is observable, however, in other Indian languages besides Hindee: in such a position it is equivalent to one of the senses of the English word 'about'; e. g. Ek kos, one kos; but kos ek, about a kos; das ek kos, about ten kos; ādmee das ek, about ten persons; sau ek, about a hundred; (but ek sau ek a hundred and one); sau das ek or ek sau das ek about a hundred and ten. Ek ek, each, each severally, each separately, one by one, one at a time, one each. Ek ek karke, one by one, singly, in detail, one at a time.

ऐ (ai) is the twelfth vowel of the Hindee or Devanāgaree alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions: — 1, In pronunciation it has the long sound of ai in the English word 'aisle'. 2, Its medial and final form is that of the above-mentioned letter doubled, and, like it, is always written above the letter which it follows in pronunciation, and is attached to it: e.g. जैसा. 3, In Braj, in poetry, and in the jargon of the peasantry, it is often put inaccurately for ए; e.g. करै, more properly करे. 4, This letter is frequently found in Hindee works as a vocative particle: as such, however, it is probably nothing more than a transliteration of the vocative particle of the Urdoo, and is sometimes printed ओ, — a form which has properly speaking no existence in Hindee. As a particle of address it implies respect. It is also used in summoning, as are the English expressions, Holloa there! Ho! Heigh! 5, As an interjection or exclamation this letter expresses recollection, after the manner of the English words Ha! Aye! 6, In poetry, this, like all the long vowels, is, in all situations long by nature 7, This letter is frequently put corruptly for ह; e.g. बैली, properly बहली; कैना, properly कहना. 8, This letter is one of the epithets of Shiv. 9, The changes and functions of this letter in the formation of compound words will be found carefully specified at length in any good Hindee or Sanskrit Grammar.

ओ (o) is the thirteenth vowel of the Hindee or Devanāgaree alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions. — 1, In pronunciation it has the long broad sound of o in the English word 'go'. 2, Its medial and final form is, in some founts of type, made to approximate too closely to the secondary form of ई, — which, indeed, it somewhat resembles: it is always written at the right of the letter which it follows in pronunciation, and is attached to it; e. g कोना. 3, It is the invariable termination of the vocative plural of all substantives irrespective of gender or of the manner of their inflection. 4, When used in calling, it indicates respect. 5, It is equivalent to the conjunctions, and, also, too, even, indeed, verily; and when used in these senses it is sometimes attached, like an emphatic suffix particle, to the word it emphasizes; e. g. एको = एक भी. 6, This letter is often interchanged corruptly with व; e. g बवना, more properly बोना; बिलाओ, more properly बिलाव. 7, This letter is sometimes put corruptly for आ, especially in the last syllable; e. g. छोटो, more properly छोटा; करनो (but more commonly करनों) is a Braj form of करना. 8, This letter is the uniform termination of the second person plural of the "aorist" and of the imperative. 9, In poetry, this, like all the long vowels, is, in all situations, long by nature. 10, In certain provincial dialects this letter sometimes = वह, that. 11, This is a vocative particle = Oh. 12, It is also an interjection (1) of calling = Ho! Holloa! (2) of reminiscence = Ho! Ah! (3) of compassion = Ah! Oh! 13, This is one of the epithets of Brahmā. 14, In the formation of compound words this letter undergoes important changes which will be found carefully specified at length in any good Hindee or Sanskrit Grammar.

ओं, 1, = ओम, q.v.: 2, This form is invariably inserted between the base and the terminations of all substantives in the oblique cases of the plural; and this, irrespective of their gender or of the manner of their inflection; e g. बेटोंका, जलोंका, बातोंका, साधुओंका, माताओंका: 3, This is the termination of pronominal numerals in Hindee; e. g. दोनों, चारों, बीसों: 4, This is also the termination of aggregate numerals; e. g. सहस्रों. In this function this termination imparts various shades of meaning; thus सहस्रों = (1) thousands (2) thousands upon thousands, many thousands (3) the whole thousand of them (4) in groups of a thousand, by thousands (5) a thousand times, a thousandfold. It should be observed that we cannot prefix a numeral to any of these aggregate forms; thus, not तीन सहस्रों, but तीन सहस्र; the letter, in fact, is, in aggregate numerals, not merely a mark of pluralization, it is also strongly emphatic, just as when in English we wish to convey a vivid idea of an indefinitely large number, we pluralize the numeral and emphasize strongly in pronunciation; e. g. "tons and tons", "hundreds upon hundreds", "thousands" 5, This form is often, in Braj, a sign of the infinitive; e. g. पढ़नों = पढ़ना.

औ (au) is the fourteenth vowel of the Hindee or Devanāgaree alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions. — 1, In pronunciation it has the long broad sound of ou in the English word 'round'. 2, The shape of its medial and final form is nearly that of the above-mentioned letter: it is always placed at the right of the letter after which it is to be pronounced, and is attached to it; e. g. गौरिया. 3, As a term of calling or of address, it implies respect. 4, It is also used as an interjection of prohibition and of asseveration. 5, In poetry, in Braj, and in the corrupt jargon called gaṅwārī (or the brogue of the peasantry) this letter is frequently put where we might expect (1) आ; e. g. करनौ = करना; (2) ए; e. g. ऐसौ, = ऐसे; (3) ओ; e. g. करौ = करो; (4) व; e. g. औलगि = अबलग; (5) भी; e. g. कनकौ = कनक भी; (6) व; e. g. औतार = अवतार; (7) और क्या, or ओ (and) of which it is, especially among the peasantry, a very common abbreviation and corruption. 6, In poetry, this, like all the other long vowels, is, in all situations, long by nature. 7, It is sometimes corrupted into ल; e. g. दौ सल, properly दो सौ. 8, m. sound. 9, m. an epithet of the serpent Shesh or Anant. 10, The functions and changes of this letter in the formation of compound words will be found carefully specified at length in any good Hindee or Sanskrit Grammar.

There are several marks or symbols which are of frequent occurrence in Sanskrit, some of which never occur in Hindee: the following however, will be often found in Hindee:—

This mark (called Anuswār, sometimes also Maste) is properly of a diamond figure, but in most founts of type used for printing Hindee it is merely a dot. Properly speaking it has in pronunciation the nasal sound of ṅg in the English word 'king'. many, however, prefer to give it, as often as possible, the sound of the letter which it displaces; thus संसार is often pronounced as if spelt सन्सार. As the principles which regulate the use of this sign are very fully and carefully specified in all good Hindee or Sanskrit Grammars, it has been deemed needless to occupy space by the repetition of them here: the following observations, however, may be of use to the student in reading Hindee:—1, Anuswār is, in Hindee books, frequently inserted where it would not be expected, and dropped where strict accuracy would require that it should be used;—peculiarities which seem to depend sometimes on the caprice or inadvertence of the writer or compositor, and sometimes upon the requirements of metre or of euphony; thus जौं and जौ are often used interchangeably; as also चारों and चारो and the other pronominal numerals. 2, A large number of words in Hindee are spelt sometimes with Anuswār and sometimes without it; a great quantity of space has been saved in this Dictionary by the care that has been exercised to avoid the recurrence of such words. In the case of any word in which this variety in spelling may occur, the student will speedily learn for what forms to look: especially if he understand the principles which operate in the use of this sign; e. g. if he fail to find in the Dictionary the form आंत he will infer that this is a mis-spelling and will look for आन्त. 3, This sign is often put in Hindee where in Sanskrit and Bengálee we should find Anunásika (ँ) called also Chandravindu: it is, in fact, very seldom indeed that this latter sign is found in Hindee books. 4, In poetry, a short vowel followed by Anuswár becomes long by position. 5, In the transliterations that occur in the present work, this sign is represented by n with a dot over it; e. g. Kańs = कंस. 6, This sign is sometimes interchanged with आ; e. g. निरंकाल = निराकार. 7, Anuswár written over the final letter of feminine substantives ending in yá or iyá yields the nom. plural; e. g ठिलियां, water-pots. 8, Lastly, this sign is in some books used as a mark of punctuation inferior in value to the sign । (chhewá).

This mark (called Visarg, sometimes also Durbásce) consists properly of two small rings written perpendicularly; it is, however, more frequently represented in Hindee by a couple of diamond-shaped figures (:), and most commonly by a couple of dots. For a full statement of the principles which regulate its use the student is referred to the Grammars; the following remarks, however, will be found of importance in reading Hindee. — 1, This sign always occurs after some vowel, which it slightly and almost imperceptibly aspirates; — the aspiration is, in fact, so slight that both to the eye and to the ear the symbol is very commonly dropped, thus दुःख (dukkh) is as often written and pronounced दुख (dukh). 2, It is often, both in pronunciation and in writing represented by a sibilant; thus निस्सन्दह, more properly निःसन्दह; अन्तष्करण, more properly अन्तःकरण. 3, Excepting the case of prefixes, there seems to be a tendency in Hindee to drop this sign when it occurs at the end of words, and to substitute ह or आ for it. (See Art. आ, 19.) 4, It is sometimes inflected before the case-signs and sometimes not; e. g श्रेयःको or श्रेयेको (dat. of श्रेयः). 5, In poetry, a short vowel followed by Visarg becomes long by position. 6, If no vowel-sign intervene between this symbol and the consonant that precedes it, it is usual to transliterate it by a (short) or more accurately by ah; e. g. पुनः, punah; also, but less accurately, puna. And, conversely a and ah (final) are properly rendered by Visarg; but see 3.

This mark (called Soon, [prop. Shúnya] 'vacant', 'empty') discharges several functions. — 1, It is, in Arithmetic, the cipher (naught). 2, It is a mark of repetition, indicating that the word or sentence which it follows should be repeated. 3, It is used for indicating abbreviation as the dot is in English; e. g क° = करना; उ° = e. g. = उदाहरण = exempli gratiâ. 4, As a sign of elision or abbreviation it may occur not only at the end of a word but also at the beginning, or even at the beginning and at the end; e. g. °लो° = तिलोदन. Of course, such abbreviations can only be resorted to in cases in which there is no danger of misunderstanding what the elided elements are.

This mark (called in Hindee Virám, 'rest', 'pause', 'stop') is placed under consonants to indicate the absence of the so-called inherent vowel (अ, 2, 3.). It is sometimes employed by natives like a mark of punctuation at the close of a sentence ending with a quiescent consonant, -- all the preceding words being written without separation, because supposed to be pronounced or read without stopping (see the sign ।).

This mark is sometimes called छेवा, and in relation to ॥ (see below) it is also called a half pause. It is a stop or mark of punctuation, and is usually placed at the end of the first line of a couplet or stanza. In relation to Virám (see above) it indicates the close of a sentence ending with a vowel, — all the preceding words being written without separation, because supposed to be pronounced or read without stopping.

This mark is sometimes called "double chhewá", and in relation to । (see above) it is also called a whole or full pause. It has the function of a full stop, — indicating at the close of a couplet, verse, section, paragraph, or chapter, that the subject ends there.

क

क (k) is the first consonant in the Hindee or Devanágaree alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions: — 1, It is the first letter of the कवर्ग, or guttural class, and is, in pronunciation, a simple hard consonant, having the sound of k in the English word 'king'. 2, With a dot under it, it represents káf of the Arabic or Persian alphabet 3, It is sometimes prefixed with the same effect as कु; e. g. कपुत्र. 4, As a suffix it forms diminutives with the effect of expressing (1) simple diminutiveness; e. g. पुत्रक: (2) depreciation or contempt; e. g. मानवक: (3) endearment; e. g. मामक: (4) similarity or resemblance; e. g. अश्वक, horse-like. 5, Added to substantives or to the roots of verbs this letter forms certain adjectives, adjectival participles or nouns of agency; e. g. स्वादक, रक्तक, प्रवेशक. 6, This letter is sometimes put corruptly for ग; e. g. अंक, more properly अंग. 7. This letter is sometimes put corruptly for ष; e. g जोतिक = ज्योतिष; and for श; e. g. ढनेक = धनेश. 8, This letter is also a substantive masculine, and as such denotes (1) the highest deities; e. g. Brahmá, Vishṇu, etc. (2) a Bráhman: (3) air (4) water. (5) the sun: (6) the soul: (7) the head.

ख

ख (kh) is the second consonant in the Hindee alphabet, being the aspirated form of the letter क. It is the second letter of the कवर्ग or guttural class, and has, in pronunciation, the sound of kh in the English word 'blockhead' with the ead dropped. This letter is constantly interchanged (1) with the unaspirated form क; e. g. कक्करी = कखरी (2) with ह; e.g खीन = हीण (3) with ष; e. g. खट = षट : षट्टांग = खट्टांग. It is also interchanged with ह; e. g. खरहरा = खरखरा. In many of the words in common use in Hindee which are of Arabic or Persian origin, this letter has, properly speaking, a guttural sound which does not in reality exist either in Hindee or in English, but which is exactly represented by the sound of ch in the Scotch loch and in the German buch. that this is the required pronunciation in any particular instance will be indicated in this Dictionary by this letter with a dot under it; e g. ख़. Lastly :—this letter is alone a substantive masculine signifying the sky, ether; a cavity, vacuity; zero; a cipher; and hence, in the ingenious system of reckoning by symbols adopted by Hindoos in their poetry, this letter is a symbol for the cipher (0) naught.

ग (g) is the third consonant of the Hindee alphabet and the third letter in the कवर्ग or guttural class, and has invariably the hard sound of g in the English word 'go'; — in no circumstances has it the soft sound of that letter in the English word 'gem'. This letter is sometimes interchanged inaccurately with क; e g अंक, corruption of अंग. It is sometimes found as a suffix [m. (f. ā)] in compound words derived from Sanskrit, importing in such case the idea of 'motion'; e g. खग: the feminine of such words is formed sometimes by adding आ and sometimes by ई; e.g. कामगा, f. a lascivious female: तुरगी, f. a mare. In works on Prosody this letter is used as an abbreviation of the word गुरु to denote a long syllable. In many of the words in common use in Hindee which happen to be of Arabic or Persian origin, this letter has a rough guttural sound which properly speaking has no representative either in Hindee or in English, but which is exactly represented by the sound of g in the German sagen, and by the sound given to r by many of the more uncultivated people about the banks of the Tweed and in some parts of Devonshire, where the word 'round', for example, is often pronounced as if spelt 'ghound'. By the Hindee speaking people, however, the distinction is far from universally observed, so that 'kāghaz' is most frequently corrupted into 'kāgaj'. That this is the required pronunciation of the letter in any given instance will be indicated in this Dictionary by a dot underneath the letter; e. g. काग़ज़. This letter is in provincial jargon, sometimes exchanged with a sibilant, e. g. दिग (= दिक) = दिश (from Sk. दृश).

ङ (n·) is the fifth consonant in the Hindee alphabet and is generally called 'gnua'. It is the nasal of the कवर्ग or guttural letters, i. e. it never occurs in Hindee excepting in connexion with one or the other of these letters, with which it forms compound letters and is always the first element in such combinations: it is hence called the guttural nasal, or nasal of the gutturals When combined with the letters of its class it generally remains unchanged; thus, ङ्क ङ्ख ङ्ग, ङ्घ. Followed by क or by ख it has the sound of n in the English word 'blink'; followed by ग or by घ it has the sound of n in the word 'sing'. It is unpronounciable unless there be a vowel before it; and though of very frequent occurrence in the language it never occurs at the beginning of words or of syllables, even though preceded by a vowel-sound. Like all the nasal consonants this letter is liable to be printed interchangeably with anuswār; excepting ङ, however, this letter is more frequently so represented than either of the other nasals: thus, अंक is very frequently put for अङ्क; less frequently कंप for कम्प. It has been usual in Hindee Dictionaries to insert twice all words in which anuswār and the nasal consonants might be interchanged, together with all their explanations and notes; — a plan which augments needlessly, as it seems, the ultimate bulk of the work. In the present Dictionary it has been thought desirable to avoid all such repetition and to reserve the space for better uses: in pursuance of this plan ङ and ञ are invariably represented by anuswār (— the manner most frequently found in print), and the other nasals (ण, न, म) uniformly in combination with the letters of their respective classes. There are no words in the language beginning with this letter,

च (ch) is the sixth consonant in the Hindee alphabet and has the following characteristics and functions: — 1, It is the first letter of the चवर्ग or palatal class, and has invariably the sound of ch in the English word 'cherry'. 2, As a suffix (1) it is sometimes emphatic like ही or भी (2) it sometimes forms adjectives derived from prepositional particles; e g. उच्च (उत + च); नीच (नि + च). 3, In Sanskrit (1) it is sometimes an epithet of Shiv, and signifies a tortoise; a thief: seedless: vile, base (2) it is sometimes adverbial, signifying mutually, equally (3) it is sometimes disjunctive signifying either — or, otherwise, but (4) it is sometimes prepositional signifying for, on account of (5) it is very common as a copulative particle, signifying and, also, moreover; and is invariably placed after its word or clause like the Greek τε and the Latin que: like these also, it is frequently repeated, having the signification of both — and, as well — as (6) it is sometimes emphatic, like the English even, and even (7) it is sometimes used as an expletive to fill up the measure of a verse. 4, It is occasionally interchanged (1) with य; e. g. लोयन, properly लोचन (2) with छ; e g. छमस, properly चमस (3) with क; e. g. चंक; see (1) चंग (2) चंच (3) चक. ज

ज (j) is the eighth consonant in the Hindee alphabet and has the following characteristics and functions:— 1, It is the third letter of the चवर्ग or palatal class, and has in pronunciation the full sound of j in the English word 'judge', — never the imperfect sound of dz that it often has in Bengālee. 2, It is frequently interchanged with य and even with य्य; it is only, however, in certain words that this phenomenon takes place, and these, very common ones; e. g. जात्रा (properly यात्रा), सूरज (properly सूर्य्य), जष्टि (properly यष्टि), etc. This change is so widespread that the true pronunciation is the exception; the attempt, in fact, to keep the two letters ज and य distinctly in their proper places both to the eye and to the ear, seems to many to savour of the pedantic. 3, In the present work such foreign words as contain either of the letters zāl, ze, zād, or zoe have these letters represented by the present letter with a dot under it, the dot signifying that the true sound is that of z in the English word 'zone'; e g. हाज़िरी, काग़ज़. It should be observed, however, that among the masses of the people, and especially among the lower classes, this foreign sound is very frequently ignored. 4, This letter is sometimes found as a suffix particle (from the root जन) in compound words, especially epithets or descriptive nouns, importing the idea of (1) begotten, born (2) produced (3) caused: the feminine form of such words always ends in long a; e. g. अण्डजा, the female of any oviparous animal. In this sense the letter is only used in composition. 5, In Sanskrit treatises on prosody and metre, this letter denotes an amphibrachys. 6, This letter is sometimes put corruptly (1) for ज्ञ: e. g. भिनहड्डा, properly ज्ञीयाड्डा: (2) for ज्य; e. g. जोत = ज्योति.

ञ (n) is the tenth consonant in the Hindee alphabet, and is commonly called 'gna' or 'ña'. It is the nasal of the चवर्ग or palatal letters, i.e. it never occurs in Hindee excepting in connexion with one or the other of these letters, with which it forms compound letters, and is always the first element in such combinations. It is hence called the palatal nasal or nasal of the palatals. When combined with the letters of its class, it generally loses its horizontal and perpendicular strokes; thus, ञ्च, ञ्छ, ञ्ज, ञ्झ. Its sound is that of n in the English words 'flinch', 'cringe'. Much of what has been said in the article on the guttural nasal ङ applies equally to the present letter. There are no words in the language beginning with this letter.

ट

ट (ṭ) is the eleventh consonant of the Hindee alphabet, and the first letter of the टवर्ग or cerebral class. In transliteration into the Roman character this letter is most commonly represented by ṭ with a dot under it (ṭ); all attempts, however, to describe its exact sound must be unavailing and misleading, —it can only be learnt by the ear. Though it is generally pronounced like ṭ in the English word 'top,' yet its true pronunciation requires that the tip of the tongue be brought further back than in pronouncing that letter, and kept more firmly up against the roof of the mouth. In books this letter is constantly interchanged inadvertently with its aspirate ठ (e. g. कटघरा), and with ड (e. g. कड़ाह), and with त (e.g. टसर).

ठ(ṭh) is the twelfth consonant in the Hindee alphabet, and the second letter of the टवर्ग or cerebral class.

It is the aspirate of ट, and its pronunciation, like the pronunciation of that letter, can only be learnt by the ear. Its nearest representative in English is the sound of th in such English expressions as 'fathen', 'penthouse', 'sweetheart'. In transliterating into the Roman character, this letter is generally represented by th with a dot under the t (th). Like the other aspirated letters, it is constantly interchanged inadvertently with its unaspirated form. In a very large number of the instances in which this letter occurs in Hindee, it is a Prākṛitized modification of some Sanskrit combination such as स्थ (e.g. ठान; Sk. स्थान), or ष्ट (e. g. काठ; Sk. काष्ट).

ड (ḍ) is the thirteenth consonant in the Hindee alphabet, and the third letter of the टवर्ग or cerebral class. Though it is said generally to be pronounced like the English letter d, yet it should be borne in mind that this letter, like the other letters of its class, has, strictly speaking, no exact representative in any European language nor even in Arabic;—its true sound can only be perceived by the ear. Instead of being pronounced by the upper surface of the tip of the tongue striking against the foremost part of the palate, as is the case with the English d, it requires that the tongue be drawn further back and that the tip of its under surface be kept well up against the palate. Its true sound is much more perceptibly explosive than that of the English d. In Hindee, this letter is frequently (excepting at the beginning of words and syllables) printed with a dot under it (ड़); it then loses its characteristic sound, and is pronounced nearly like the letter r in the more outlandish parts of the northern and western counties of England, or as in the French 'eternel'. In this its secondary form it is frequently interchanged corruptly with ढ़, र, and even with ल, while in its first form it is similarly interchanged with ड and द. It is generally represented in Roman character by d with a dot under it (ḍ), and ड़ by r with a dot under it (ṛ).

ढ

ढ (ḍh) is the fourteenth consonant in the Hindee alphabet and the fourth letter of the टवर्ग or cerebral class. All that is said in the article on ड as to the question of pronunciation applies equally to this letter, excepting that this is the aspirated form of ड and requires to be pronounced nearly like dh in the English word 'land*h*older'. In Hindee this letter is frequently (excepting at the beginning of words and of syllables) printed with a dot under it (ढ़): it then loses its characteristic sound and is pronounced as r in the French 'eternel' would be if it were aspirated. ढ़ is constantly interchanged corruptly with ड़, र, and ल; and ढ with ड, द and ध; while in some founts of type this letter is printed in the Bengālee form; thus ঢ for ढ, and ঢ় for ढ़. It is generally represented in the Roman character by dh with a dot under the d (ḍh); and ढ़ by rh with a dot under the r (ṛh).

ण (ṇ) is the fifteenth consonant in the Hindee alphabet, and the fifth letter of the टवर्ग or cerebral class. It is called ṇa, and is sometimes said to be equivalent in sound to n in the English word 'can': it has, however, no exact representative in any English sound, so that it is impossible to describe accurately its true sound, — the ear only can guide. When it is properly pronounced there seems to the ear to be an attempt at a compromise between न and ड़, so that मणि, for example, might seem to the unaccustomed ear to be pronounced muṛi, with, however, an infusion of the n-sound distinctly traceable in the sound of these ṛs. This letter is represented in the present work by n with a dot under it, e. g. Brāhman = ब्राह्मण. It is doubled by two faint oblique strokes joining each of the outer strokes to the middle one; e g ण्ण. It is the nasal of the टवर्ग letters, and stands in the same relation to them that ङ and ञ stand in to the letters of their respective classes. Combined with the cerebrals, it loses only its last stroke to the right; thus टण, ठण, डण, ढण. Like the other nasals, this letter is constantly liable to be represented in print by anuswār; e g. खंड ! it has, accordingly, been usual to insert nearly all such words twice. In the present work it has been thought important to avoid this needless prodigality of space, and to insert such words only once, — the more correct form being the one fixed upon for insertion; e g खण्ड: the pronunciation of this form is nearly khaṇḍ, while that of the form खंड should be nearly khaṇṇḍ, — a corrupt sound. To the eye it is usual to distinguish this letter (in transliterating into Roman characters) from the dental n (न) by putting a dot under it; thus bhaṇḍār. It might be observed that in the Hindee literature this letter is constantly interchanged maccurately with न, and this, even to the extent of forming what are, theoretically, impossible combinations; e g टन्टा: this combination might be said to be impossible; for when the n-sound precedes any letter of the टवर्ग in the same word, and without the intervention of a vowel, it must always be represented by this letter ण; — this, indeed, is what is meant when it is said that ण is the nasal of the टवर्ग. If, again, the n-sound be preceded in the same word by either of the letters ऋ, ॠ, र or ष, it should always be written ण, and this, even though any letter of the guttural or labial class, any vowel, the semivowels र or व and the letter ह, or visarg or anuswār intervene. If the n sound be final in a word (i. e. if no vowel-sound follow it, — not even the inherent vowel sound) it is always written न, whatever letters may precede it in the same word: immediately, however, any vowel-sound is added in the same word, the न gives place to ण if the foregoing letters be such as to call for the change; thus अक्षरिन्, m.: अक्षरिणी, f. When न occurs under such circumstances, it is always (in theory if not to the eye) followed by virām. As has been already observed (Art. अ), the genius of the Hindee language requires (contrary to the rule which is uniform in the case of Sanscrit) that the inherent vowel be not pronounced at the end of all words and syllables accordingly, although ण terminate a word (thus indicating that in Sanscrit that word must be pronounced with the inherent vowel at the end), yet in Hindee the inherent vowel is, generally speaking, not pronounced in such case, excepting in poetry where the metre may require that it be retained. The retention of ण serves to shew the true mode of spelling the word, and indicates what the pronunciation of the word would be in Sanscrit and in metrical composition; thus रामायण would be pronounced in Hindee 'Rāmāyan' but in Sanscrit 'Rāmāyaṇa'. If the n-sound be followed in the same word by a letter which is not of the टवर्ग, and without the intervention of a vowel sound, it should be written न (never ण); and this, even though, in the absence of that letter, the ण would, properly speaking, be required; e. g गिन; but गिन्ती (not गिणती). Lastly, in Hindee the rule for the change of न into ण never operates in the case of the ना of the infinitive mode, even though the verbal substantive end in ण; e g गहना (never गहणा, although गहण).

Inasmuch as this letter always requires a vowel-sound before it in the same word, there are no words in Hindee that begin with it: in the older Prākrit dialects, however, it is very frequently found at the beginning of words; e g. णारिएला, i.e नारियल; in fact, inasmuch as the letter न does not occur in those dialects, this letter is uniformly substituted for it.

णकार, m. the letter ण, or any symbol that may represent it.

णगण, a combination of two short syllables.

त (t) is the sixteenth consonant in the Hindee alphabet, and the first letter of the तवर्ग or dental class. 1, It is almost as difficult to quote exact equivalents in English of the Devanāgaree dental letters as of the cerebrals, — the ear only can safely guide. It may be observed that though the sound of this letter resembles that of the English t, yet instead of the front edge of the tongue being placed against the front part of the roof of the mouth near the roots of the teeth, the exact pronunciation of त requires rather that the upper surface of the tip of the tongue be pressed gently against the upper front teeth: the sound, indeed, should be very perceptibly softer than the ordinary sound of the English t, as in the Irish pronunciation of t in the word 'water.' 2, As a Kridanta suffix this letter forms the masculine of past passive participles, — the feminine being formed by the addition of आ; e g कत, m. (f. कता). 3, Standing alone this letter has a variety of unconnected meanings, viz. an outcaste, barbarian a wicked man: a thief. nectar: a tail. the flank: crossing: a tree. 4. When followed by त or by र without the intervention of any vowel-sound, this letter assumes the form of a single horizontal stroke, e. g त्त = tt, त्र (freq. त्र) = tr; त्त = ttr. 5, In Braj, in the patois, and in poetry, this letter is often the only sign of the present participle, — the gender and the number of the nominative being a matter of inference; e. g वह चलत (= चलता or चलती) है: also वे कहत (= कहते or कहती) हैं. 6, In works on prosody this letter is used for the metrical foot called Hypo bacchic (— — ⏑) consisting of two long syllables followed by one short one.

The term is specially applied as the designation of one of the sacred books of the Hindoos, a theological treatise teaching peculiar and mystical rites and formulae for the worship of the Gods or for the attainment of superhuman power. It is mostly in the form of a dialogue between Shiv and Durgā, who are the peculiar deities of the Tantrikas. There are a number of these works, and their authority seems, in many parts of India, to have, in great measure, superseded that of the Veds. According to one account, a tantra comprizes five subjects, viz. (1) the creation and the destruction of the world; (2) the worship of the gods; (3) the attainment of all objects; (4) magical rites for the acquirement of six superhuman faculties; and (5) four modes of union with spirit by meditation. A variety of subjects are, however, introduced into many of them, while some, again, are limited to a single topic, such as the mode of breathing in certain rites, the language of birds, beasts, etc. The term is also applied to that branch of the Veds which teaches spells, charms, mantras, or mystical and magical formulae.

न (n) is the twentieth consonant of the Hindee alphabet, and has the following characteristics and functions:— 1, Its pronunciation is nearly that of the English letter n. 2, It is the fifth letter of the नवर्ग or dental class, of which it is called 'the nasal'. By calling it 'the nasal of the dentals' is meant that if a compound letter is formed in which the n sound precedes a dental without the intervention of a vowel-sound, the n-sound must be represented by this letter (i. e. never by ण); e. g. गिन्ती; never गिण्ती. Accordingly, if a simple nexus be formed, the first element of which is the n sound and the second a letter of the टवर्ग, or cerebral class, this sound is to be represented by ण even though it were originally न; e. g. पणडुब्बी, a diver, from पन (the composite form of पानी) and the verb, डूबना. 3, In conformity with the principles mentioned in Art. ण, it is sometimes necessary that these two letters displace each other; frequently, however, they are interchanged inaccurately; e. g. गुन, more properly गुण. 4, This letter is frequently a sign of simple negation (=no, not, nay, neither, nor); frequently also, it is prohibitive, and, as such, it is much less strong than मत; e. g. Aisā nā kaho, pray don't say so. 5, When this letter precedes a labial without the intervention of a vowel-sound, it loses its natural sound and is most frequently represented by either ं (Anuswār) between the letter that precedes and the letter that follows it, or by म; e g संपत्ति or सम्पत्ति, etc.: when, however, it is so followed by a dental (i e. by a letter of its own class) it is more properly represented by its secondary form (ँ) than by Anuswār; e g दान्त (rather than दांत): when, again, it is so followed by any letter of the कवर्ग, चवर्ग, or टवर्ग, its sound is represented either by anusvār or by the secondary forms of the letters ङ, ञ, ण (see the notes on these letters): Lastly, it should be observed that this letter is sometimes interchanged inaccurately with Anuswār; e. g. सन्सार, properly संसार. See the art. on Anuswār (ं) 6. The provincial usages of this letter, especially its usages in Braj and in poetry, it will be important to notice: (1) It is frequently added to the nominative singular to form the nominative plural; e. g जनन, persons; फलन, fruits: (2) It is not unfrequently carried into the oblique cases of the plural; e. g. मनुष्यनको = मनुष्योंको: (3) It is sometimes displaced by व; e. g. चलवो = चलना; टिकवेके = टिकनेके. In the case of some words this letter added distinguishes the feminine form from the masculine; e. g दुल्हन, साहन, सेठन, etc. It is also the frequent termination of the older forms of the infinitival substantive; e g. मरन = modern मरण or मरना. 7, As a Kridanta suffix, this letter is frequently added to verbal roots, thus forming substantives masculine expressive of the act denoted by the verb to whose root it is subjoined; e g. यत्न (root यत्, striving). 8, As a Taddhita suffix, this letter, added to substantives, forms some adjectives masculine: the feminine form of these is sometimes obtained by adding ī, sometimes by adding i, and in some instances by adding either of these vowels. 9, This letter is sometimes interchanged colloquially with ल [see ल, 4, (2)]; e.g. लूरी, properly नूरी. 10, In Sanskrit prosody, this letter is the abbreviated term for the foot called 'tribrachys' (ᴗᴗᴗ) consisting of three short syllables.
