3. In the mediæval universities, one of two or more representative officers, of whom one was elected by each of the 'nations' into which the students and Regent Masters were divided, having financial, electoral, and disciplinary functions. Hence, at the present day, in some of the Scottish universities, the name of the student representatives, elected, one by each 'nation' of the whole body of students, to preside over the election of a Rector See also PROCTOR, the modern form of this word in the English universities, under which (sense 3) its later history is given

At Paris and Cambridge, and prob also originally at Oxford, they were called indifferently procuratores (proctors) and regentes At Paris there were four 'nations' and four procurators, at the English Universities two, called Pro curator australis and Procurator borealis, the Southern and the Northern Procurator or Proctor

II 4. A public teacher or instructor of the highest rank in a specific faculty or branch of learning, spec. one who holds an endowed or established 'chair' in a university or one of its colleges. Also frequently applied to the tutors or lecturers on the staff of theological and other professional or technical colleges, academies, and seminaries.

In the mediæval European Universities, at first simply a synonym of Magister or Doctor (degrees being originally qualifications to teach); but in this use not common as an English word. The right originally possessed by any Master or Doctor to teach publicly in the schools of his Faculty was gradually restricted to an inner circle of teachers and the term Professor came eventually to be confined to the holders of salaried or endowed teaching offices, or to the highest class of these, such appellations as Reader, Lecturer, Instructor, being given to teachers of lower rank. In the old English Universities the ancient usage survives in the letters S.T.P (Sacræ Theologiæ Professor) for D.D: the modern use is largely due to the creation of five Regius Professors by Henry VIII (a number in recent times increased to seven). The endowed teachers of some other subjects were at first called prælectors, but this has generally been superseded by professor. See Rashdall Univ. Europe Med. Ages I. 21, etc.

b Cheirography. A representation on a plane surface, on any system, geometrical or other, of the whole or any part of the surface of the earth, or of the celestial sphere, any one of the many modes in which this is done

The earlier modes were actually the result of geometrical projection; but the name has been extended to representations which he quite outside the etymological sense

The projections (in this extended sense) that have been used to represent the whole, the half or parts of the earth's surface are more than thirty, they have been classified by Major C. F. Close (Sketch of Map Projections 1901, Text Bk. of Topogr. & Geogr. Surveying, 1905 xi) under the following heads: I. Orthomorphic (conform, or conformable), preserving the forms of areas (but not their relative sizes) II. Equal areas (equivalent, or surface true) in which equal areas of the surface are represented by equal areas on the map but the forms of these when large, are distorted III. Perspective representations of the earth as seen from some point of view at the centre on the surface, or at various distances from it, IV. Zenithal (q v.), V. Conical (q v.) VI. Cylindrical (q v.) VII. Conventional, produced by arbit ary rules for convenience of drawing and the approximate representation of a number of properties such is the globular, commonly so called, and the two hemispheres Of the varieties in actual use many belong to two, and some to three of these classes: thus Mercator's projection is conformal, conical and cylindrical For stereographic, orthographic, polyconic sinusoidal, stereographic etc. projections see these adjs. Many projections are also named after their inventors as Mercator's Bonne's (modified conical equal area) Sanson Flamsteed's (sinusoidal equal area), Airy's (balance of errors), Cassini's (rectangular in the centre) etc. In the Ordnance Maps of England and 6-inch of Great Britain, the six different projections of Lambert etc For these see the work cited above and other treatises

Harris Lex. Techn. I, Projection of the Sphere in Plane, is a true Geometrical Delineation of the Circles of the Sphere or any assigned Part thereof upon the Plane of some one Circle; as on the Horizon, Meridian, Equator, Tropick etc. Ibid Polar Projection is a Representation of the Earth, or the Heaven projected on the Plane of one of the Polar Circles 1706 Phillips (ed Kersey) s.v., Astrolabes, Quadrants Sun dials Maps, &c., are Projections of the Sphere which are three sorts viz. Gnomonick, Orthographick and Stereographick 1790 Mosse Amer Geog I. 56 General maps are projected upon the plane of some great circle and from this circle the projection is said to be meridional equatorial or horizontal 1866 Proctor Handbk Stars 12 Note The term projection has come to be applied in mapping to any method of construction founded on some definite geometrical principle. 1867 Denison Astron without Math 13 In Mercator's projection, which is a favourite one for maps, the globe is supposed to be stretched out on the inside of a cylinder which touches it all round the equator, and the cylinder is then cut and opened out flat or developed 1905 C. F. Close Topogr & Geogr. Surveying xi 92 The term projection, though sanctioned by long usage, is an unfortunate one The great majority of useful map projections are not obtained in any geometrical way A map projected is to be treated as the representation on a plane, by any law, of the terrestrial meridians and parallels.

c Cryst. The projection of a point in each face of a crystal upon an imaginary containing sphere, called the sphere of projection

From the centre of the sphere a line is drawn perpendicular to each face of the crystal, so that to each face there corresponds a point on the sphere a plane map of the sphere showing all these points is called a projection of the crystal

1878 Gurney Crystallogr 32 The diameter of the sphere of projection which is at right angles to the zone plane is called the zone axis 1892 Story Maskelyne Crystallogr 21 27 On the sphere of projection and the principles of its stereographic representation Ibid 28 Fig 9 represents in orthographic projection the faces and the poles of the cubo octahedron Ibid 29 The plane of projection is represented by a great circle of the sphere is represented by the plane of the paper on which the circle is drawn, which latter will be termed the circle of projection or primitive.

Pronoun (prōˈnaʊn). [f. Pro 1 + Noun, after F pronom, I pronomen.] One of the Parts of Speech, a word used instead of a noun substantive, to designate an object without naming it, when that which is referred to is known from context or usage, has been already mentioned or indicated, or, being unknown, is the subject or object of inquiry

Personal pronouns of the first and second persons (I thou pl. we, you, with their cases) stand instead of the names of the speaker and the person spoken to Those of the third person (he, she, it, they with their cases, originally demonstratives) avoid the repetition of a name already mentioned or indicated Interrogative pronouns (who? what? which?) ask the name, etc. of a person or thing unknown Relative pronouns (who, which, that) combine the function of a personal or demonstrative pronoun with that of a conjunction, and subordinate one sentence or phrase to another, as 'I met a friend who told me for 'I met a friend, and he told me' Possessive pronouns are adjectives arising out of the original genitive case of personal pronouns In king, as in many other modern langs., they have developed two forms, one absolute or strictly pronominal (mine, thine, ours, yours, etc.), the other adjectival (my, thy, our, your, etc.)

In addition to these, several definitive adjectives are very commonly used absolutely or pronominally, and are classed as adjective pronouns or pronominal adjectives These include the Demonstratives this (pl these), that (pl. those), yon (or yonder); Distributives, each, every either, neither (of which every as a pronoun is now archaic), Indefinite numerals, etc., any, some, one, other (another, none, to which some add all, both), few, enough, several, also when used absolutely One is often used as an indefinite personal pronoun (One 20), and the words self and own, to which some add all, form reflexive and possessive pronouns, are sometimes classed with them

Gr. προφήτης an interpreter, proclaimer, speaker, esp. of the will of the deity; an inspired person, a prophet, f. προ forth, before, for + -φητης speaker, f. φάναι to speak.]

1. One who speaks for God or for any deity, as the inspired revealer or interpreter of his will, one who is held or (more loosely) who claims to have this function; an inspired or quasi inspired teacher.

In popular use generally connoti g the special function f revealing or predicting things future.

The Greek προφήτης was originally the spoke man or interpeter of a divinity e g of Zeus, Dionysus, Apoll or the deity worshipped at a particular oracle; applied generally to the Latin r ītes By the LXX it was adopted to render the Heb. nābī', in the O Test. applied in discriminately to the prophets of Jehovah of Baal and other heathen deities and even to 'false prophets' reputed or pretended soothsayers. In the N I T it is used in the same senses as in the LXX, but mainly applied to the Hebrew prophets of Jehovah also to John the Baptist as well as to certain persons in the Early Church who were recognized as possessing more or less of the character of the old Hebrew prophets, or as inspired to utter special revelations or predictions; also applied historically to Balaam, and by St. Paul, in the old Greek sense, to 2 poets of the Cretan, while 'false prophets' are frequently mentioned. The Greek word was adopted in I as pr phēta chiefly in post classical times, and largely under Christian influences, and thus in the regular rendering in the Italic, Vulgate, and Christian Fathers. From Ecclesiastical Latin it has passed down into the Romanic and Teutonic la guages. In English the prophets of Israel are distinguished by capitals, and the word is currently used in all the ancient senses and in modern ones derived from these.

† a Name given by Mulder to a complex residual nitrogenous substance, of todefinitely constant com position, obtained from casein, fibrin, and egg albumin, to which he assigned the formula $C_{40}H_{62}N_{10}O_{12}$, and which he regarded as the essential constituent of organized bodies, animal or vegetable (obs)

b In current use, any one of a class of organic compounds, the proteins, consisting of carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, and nitrogen, with a little sulphur, in complex and more or less unstable combination, forming an important part of all living organisms, and constituting the nitrogenous portion of the food of animals, obtained as amorphous solids, differing in solubility and other properties, and usually coagulable by heat Also called albuminoids, and very generally proteids (see Proteid ¹)

When the advance of chemical kn wledge showed that there was no such definite compound as Mulder's protein the albuminoid substances of wh h he had co sidered it to be the basis continued to be known as the protein bodies or proteinaceous, protein stuffs (see c) To render the latter the term proteids (at first proteides) was used by H Watts in 1871 in his translation of Gmelin's Handbook of Che mistry, and by the end of the Chemical Society, and the 11th ed of Fownes Chemistry 1873 and became common (though not universal) in English use. Proteid had however in German been applied to designate compounds still more complex e g hæmi globin (see Hoppe Seyler, Han dbch ed 3 1885) 290 The ice arose confusion in nomenclature, to remedy which a Committee on Proteid Nomenclature was appointed and in 1907 recommended the disuse of the term proteid in either sense and the use of proteins as the collective name for the proteic or protein like substances This recommendation was adopted by the International Congress of Physiologists at Heidelberg in the same year

The ample proteins are the protamines, histones, albu mins, and globulins (derivatives of which are fibrin and myosin) The combination compounds are the sclero proteins (see -in ¹ 2), chromo proteins (e g. mucin) chromo nucleo proteins, gluco proteins (e g. mucin) chromo proteins (e g. hæmoglobin) Derivatives of proteins are meta proteins (acid albumin, alkali albumin) impioperly called albuminates 1 proteoses (e. g albumose, globulose, peptone) Appl an Jurisprudence See Journ of Physiology XXXV Proc 26 Jan 1907 pp xvii xx, and Proc Chem Soc XXIII 56

In the 17th c., 'protestant was primarily opposed to 'papist' and thus accepted by English Churchmen generally; in more recent times, being generally opposed to Roman Catholic or (after common Ecumenical and R C use) to Catholic (see CATHOLIC A 7 b 3 a) it is viewed with disfavour by those who lay stress on the claim of the Anglican Church to be equally Catholic with the Roman

3 In Chemistry a. With names of binary compounds in -IDE (formerly uret), designating that in which the element or radical combines in the first or smallest proportion with another element; e g PROTOXIDE, PROTOCHLORIDE (†protochloruret), PROTIODIDE, PROTOSULPHIDE (†protosulphuret), q v So protobro mide (†protobromuret), protocarbide (-carburet), protocyanide (-cyanuret), protophosphide (-phosphuret), etc , a compound of bromine, carbon, cyanogen, phosphorus, etc, with another element or radical, in which the bromine, etc , is present in the smallest proportion, or in a smaller proportion than in another (designated by per-) Also in the generalized term proto-compound Hence, in derived verbs, ppl adjs , etc , as PROTOIODIZE, PROTOXIDIZE, proto ca rburetted, -phosphuretted, -sulphuretted, now rarely used

This use of proto was introduced in 1804 by Dr T Thomson, in his System of Chemistry ed 2, for combinations of oxygen with a metal; protoxide being used to denote the first degree or minimum of oxidizement see quot s v PEROXIDE. It was extended by later chemists to similar combinations of other elements as in 1815 to PROTOCHLORIDE, and so on In later chemical nomenclature names in proto have been to a great extent superseded by others with more definite and graduated prefixes, in which the constitution of the substance is differently expressed (e g protoxide of manganese by manganous mo xoxide or manganous oxide, protochloride and protoxide of iron by ferrous chlo ride, ferrous o xide, protocarburet of hydrogen by light carburette d hydrogen, methyl hydride, or methane But the proto- forms are retained in some cases especially when they correspond with meso compounds, and in pharmacy and popular use

b In ternary compounds proto was formerly used to designate salts produced from protoxides (cf PROTOSALT), which thus contain the smallest (or smaller) proportion of the acid radical Thus, proto carbonate or proto chlorate of iron, = the earlier expressions, 'carbonite' or 'chlorate of the protoxide of iron', i e the salts formed by the action of carbonic and chloric acid on the protoxide of iron The latter is now ferrous oxide, and the salts are called ferrous carbonate and ferrous chlorate respectively So with organic salts, as protacetate, protoxalate, as protoxalate of tin, the salt produced by the action of oxalic acid upon the protoxide of tin (stannous oxide) , now called stannous oxalate So † proto hydro chlorate (proto-muriate), † proto halous salt a salt formed by the action, on a metallic protoxide, of hydrochloric (muriatic) acid or other haloid acid (see HALOID) † Proto hydrate, the hydrate of a protoxide, as proto hydrate of lime $CO\ H_2O$ Hence † Proto combination, combination of the protoxide

These terms are common in chemical writings of the first half of the nineteenth century but now belong mostly to the history of chemistry

c In Organic and Physiological Chemistry and Pharmacy, proto occurs in senses having little or no connexion with a or b, but rather akin to its use in 1 or 2

Thus in proto-catechuic acid ($C_7H_6O_4$) the name was given because the substance has some resemblance to catechuic acid or catechin ($C_{15}H_{14}O_6$), but has a simpler composition † proto-albumoses were the albumoses first produced in the process of digestion from the acid albumins and are now called primary proteoses † protalbumic acid the first product of the action of alkalies upon albumin or protein

1856-42 BRANDE & Chem (ed 5) 1315 Acetic acid forms a well defined class of salts, called acetates Some of these convert part of this acid into carbonic acid and water, by which they are reduced to a soluble state, and form †prot acetates 1876 HARLEY Urine & Med 161 The bromine and the iron, in equivalent proportions unite to form a protobromide of iron. 1858 MAYNE Expos Lex †Protobromuret protocarburet protochloruret protocyanuret protofluoruret; protohydriodiuret; protophosphuret protoselenuret, protosulphuret 1876 DUNGLISON Dis Shin 84 Iron may be prescribed in the form of the protocarbonate, citrate, py rophosphate [etc.]. 1858 MAYNE Expos Lex, †Protocarbonated 1826 HENRY Elem Chem I 492 Carbureted retted hydrogen Gas This gas has been distinguished also by the name of gas of marshes, nitro carburet †proto-carburet of hydrogen 1849 R.
