GENERAL INTRODUCTION

NATIONAL REGISTER OF SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNICAL PERSONNEL IN INDIA

The increasing recognition of the role of science in the promotion of national welfare, and the two wars which utilized in an abundant measure and in a spectacular manner a large variety of scientific talent and skill, have spotlighted the scientist who was hitherto content to work in comparative obscurity, and brought him into the public view. It is now realised that the application of science on the scale necessary for social and enconomic development demands large number of workers, and not only should all the trained personnel available be efficiently and effectively utilized, but talented young men and women should be sought out wherever they exist, and trained to undertake the many tasks awaiting attention.

It is the appreciation of this position that has led to a stock taking of scientific personnel in various countries all over the world as an essential pre-requisite for assessing qualitatively and quantitatively the available man-power resources in each country and for formulating plans of training the personnel required for research and development. Thus in the United Kingdom, the collection of data relating to numbers and qualifications of scientists and technologists was undertaken under the supervision of the Royal Society of London in 1939. In the following year, the compilation of a National Register of Scientists was undertaken in the United States of America. In India, the demand for taking stock of the man-power resources was voiced by the delegates attending the 1947 session of the Indian Science Congress (Delhi). In August 1947, the Government of India appointed the Scientific Man-power Committee with Dr. Shanti Swarup Bhatnagar as Chairman, and included among the terms of reference to the Committee, "The maintenance of a register of scientific and technical personnel to facilitate their utilization to the best advantage". The work of compiling the register was later entrusted to the Council of Scientific and Industrial Research.

The National Register, which will be periodically revised and brought up-to-date, will provide a continuous census of the scientific man-power of the nation. It will be of assistance in . (a) the effective utilization of scientific talent, (b) assessing the gaps in the growth of science and technology, (c) supplying service personnel to industry, (d) finding alternative personnel in the prosecution of team work, (e) provision of personnel for educational and research institutions, and (f) keeping check on the drift of technical personnel to administrative departments. For fulfilling these purposes, it is necessary that the Register should be complete and comprehensive.

Appeals have been frequently issued in the past, requesting the scientists and technicians of the nation to co-operate in the compilation of the Register. The Hon'ble Shri Jawaharlal Nehru recently said

> The Government of India have at present under consideration the report of the Scientific Man-power Committee appointed in April 1947, to advise on the best method of utilizing and augmenting the scientific man-power resources of the country. A basic recommendation of the Committee, which the Government have accepted, is that immediate steps should be taken to prepare a roster of scientific talent that is now available. The necessity of such a roster is obvious . . ..I appeal to all persons in India possessing degrees or diplomas in Science to send complete information about themselves such as age, permanent and present addresses, their scientific qualifications, research and industrial experience, their present occupations, the nature of the research work, if any, they are engaged upon, etc.

So far, the response to the appeal has not been as satisfactory as it should have been. The efforts to collect the information, however, continue, and the Council have undertaken the responsibility of publishing the data as collected in a series of volumes. It is earnestly hoped that scientists and technicians would respond to the call of the Prime Minister and supply the needed information so that this national undertaking in which the Council is now engaged, may be completed satisfactorily and expeditiously.

INTRODUCTION

The present publication—Volume II—Medical Personnel, Part II— is a sequel to the Register issued by the Council of Scientific & Industrial Research in March, 1950. It includes the names of medical personnel—graduates, licentiates and dentists—who have furnished particulars for registration in the National Register of India after the issue of Part I and up to March 1951. Subsequent parts will be issued as information becomes available.

The Register includes, in brief outline, information on academic qualifications, post-graduate training, hospital work, special practice, teaching, research and administrative experience, etc., of qualified medical personnel in India. This part contains also a classified statement of the numbers of specialists under the different categories of the profession, information relating to Indian medical journals, the Medical Council of India and medical education in this country. The information has been so arranged that the Register would prove useful to institutions and individuals seeking particulars relating to qualified medical personnel in India.

The usefulness of the National Register as an inventory of the nation's man-power resources is being increasingly recognised. It is earnestly hoped that those who have not registered themselves yet, would do so early, so that the Register may be complete and comprehensive.

I desire to express my deep gratitude to Dr. Shanti Swarup Bhatnagar for giving me an opportunity to do this work. I take this opportunity to thank my colleagues for their loyal co-operation.

NOTE TO THE READER

1. Names are arranged alphabetically according to surnames, and under identical surnames according to first names. If both the surname and the first name are identical, names are arranged according to the second name.

2. The information given in the Register has been carefully abstracted from replies to the questionnaire furnished by the individuals themselves. Where information is extensive, only the most outstanding facts are given. The Council of Scientific and Industrial Research assumes no responsibility for the correctness of statements published.

3. The information holds good up to the date of the replies furnished by individuals.

4. Information relating to incomes and remuneration has been withheld at the request of a large majority of persons listed.

5. In arranging the information, the requirements of Government departments, institutions, endowments and other employers have been taken into consideration. The compilation provides information on the qualifications and careers of qualified personnel.

6. The names of personnel listed in this volume have been classified as Medical Graduates, Medical Licentiates and Dentists. The same name may appear under more than one head if qualifications and experiences warrant multiple entries.

7. It is not claimed that the names of all medical personnel are found in the Part I & II of this Volume and more names would appear in subsequent parts as and when the particulars become available.

MEDICAL COUNCIL OF INDIA

The Medical Council of India was constituted under the Indian Medical Council Act (No. XXVII of 1933) passed by the Indian Legislature in order to establish a uniform minimum standard of higher qualifications in Medicine for all Provinces but not the Indian States. The creation in August, 1947, of the Dominion of India and later the declaration of Republic in January, 1950, introduced certain consequential changes and the operation of the Act now extends to States parts A & C only. Proposals are however under consideration for extending it to Part B States as well.

The Council is composed of :

(i) One nominated member from each State Part A. (Nine at present).

(ii) One elected representative of each Indian University having a Medical Faculty. (Twelve).

(iii) One elected representative of registered medical graduates from each State Part A where a Medical Register is maintained. (Nine).

(iv) Four members nominated by the Central Government. Each member's term of membership is five years.

The President is now elected by the Council from amongst its members for a term of five years. The Council also elects, for terms of two years each, a Vice-President and five members for the Executive Committee.

The medical qualifications recognized under the Act are listed in two Schedules. The First Schedule lists those granted by medical institutions in India, while the Second Schedule those granted outside India.

The Council after considering the reports of its inspectors on the standards of examinations for a medical degree or diploma granted in India recommends the inclusion therefore, or its deletion from, the Schedule to the Act and the Central Government notifies the change by a publication in the Government Gazette. This ensures that the qualification is an evidence of the satisfactory knowledge and skill possessed by a holder of the recognized qualification.

Foreign qualifications are now to be recognized on a basis of reciprocal recognition between India and a foreign country of medical qualifications approved by the appropriate authority in the foreign land and this Council respectively.

Thus the functions of the Council fall under two heads :—

(a) Ensuring that each recognized qualification comes upto, or betters, the minimum standard laid down by the Council.

(b) Securing the recognition by countries outside India of the recognized Indian medical qualifications and as a corollary the reciprocal recognition in this country of approved qualifications of such countries.

Thus the Council by its functioning both in India and outside ensures that only efficiently trained personnel is engaged in the practice of medicine in India. It is neither an administrative nor a legislative body, but is the chief statutory body concerned with laying down the standards of medical education in this country.

The questions of starting an All-India Register and enforcing by this Council of the observance of ethical standards by the practitioners in this country are under active consideration. The Council has also under consideration the standardisation of post-graduate medical studies.

STATE MEDICAL COUNCILS

The various State Acts of Medical Registration provide for the formation of a Medical Council in each State where such legislation obtains, the registration of qualified medical practitioners and maintenance of periodical publication of the register of such practitioners. There are 13 State Medical Councils in India such as Assam, Bihar, Bombay, Madhya Pradesh, Punjab, Madras, Orissa, Uttar Pradesh, West Bengal, Hyderabad, Mysore, Travancore & Cochin and Rajputana The functions of the Medical Councils include, besides the maintenance of a register of qualified medical practitioners, the supervision of medical education, inspection of examinations, exercise of disciplinary control over medical practitioners and that of advising the Local Government in regard to the recognition of the various medical qualifications.

MEDICAL EDUCATION IN INDIA

By C. G. PANDIT

(Secretary, Indian Council of Medical Research, New Delhi)

I

It will be readily agreed that the ultimate objective of any enlightened health policy is the promotion of sound health in the community and elimination of disease in man. Owing to the advances made in medical sciences during recent years, the outlook in these respects has changed considerably. It is now possible to conceive of measures which will help, ultimately, to eradicate disease and thus ensure the removal of one obstacle which would stand in the way of promotion of positive health. It is unnecessary to list here the advances made in medical sciences in recent years, but it is necessary to emphasise that if those measures are to be put to practical use in the country, there will be the need to produce adequate medical and auxiliary personnel for the purpose. The facilities for producing such personnel are, however limited for the present. The first medical college for the study of modern medicine was established in India over a century ago. While medical education has progressed to some extent since then, it can not be said that the pace has been adequate. The subject was also complicated by the fact that two standards of training were adopted in the initial years, the so called graduate training and the licentiate training. Thus in 1935 there were as many as 27 medical schools which were giving instruction for the licentiate course. The conference convened by the Government of India in 1938 to examine this question recommended that one minimum standard of medical education should be adopted throughout the country. The Central and Provincial Governments accepted this recommendation and the majority of medical schools were either closed, or converted into full-fledged medical colleges giving instruction leading to university degrees. There are at present in India 30 medical colleges for the degree course and only 4 medical schools for the licentiate training. Provision exists at present for the admission of about 2,500 students per year in these institutions and the output of doctors from them is about 1,600 per year.

At this pace it will be sometime before the required number of trained personnel is available, for the purpose of putting into effect some of the plans envisaged by the Health Survey and Development Committee, and for ensuring a minimum level of medical relief in rural areas. That Committee had drawn pointed attention to this fact and had indicated, as the following table would show, what the country would need if it were to organise the health services of the country on sound lines.

Class of personnel	Number available now	Ratio of numbers in column 2 to the present population of India (300 m)	Existing ratio in the United Kingdom	Suggested ratio to be attained in India with an estimated population of 370 millions	Number required in 1971.

The Scientific Manpower Committee appointed by the Government of India in 1947 had also estimated that for the next 5 years 18,000 doctors would be needed apart from auxiliary personnel, to put into effect some of the Bhore Committee's plans, including Workmen's State Insurance Programme and other projects.

It does not seem possible, however, with the facilities now available, to have the adequate number of doctors trained in the near future in existing medical colleges. It would appear essential to expand such facilities in them and also to establish newer ones before the target can ever be reached within a reasonable period of time. In some medical colleges a double shift system has been introduced to remedy this state of affairs. In the opinion of many, such a system is not conducive either to the "maintenance of proper standards of medical education and the well being of patients or the efficiency of teachers", in these institutions.

It is in this connection that the question of wastage due to 'failures' in medical examinations becomes important. It has already been pointed out that while 2,500 students are admitted to medical colleges each year, the out-turn of graduates is only limited to 1,600 per year.

It is well known that a very large number of students nowadays seek admission to medical colleges and proportionately only a small number succeeds in getting it. Admissions are made, presumably, entirely on academic qualifications, that is, on the number of marks obtained by the student at the prescribed qualifying examination. If academically, therefore, the material is suitable, it is not easily understood why there should be so many failures during the period of medical instruction. This question has received considerable attention at the hands of many medical educationists abroad, and yet the ultimate solution to the problem has not been found. Many remedies have been suggested namely, selection of students by interviews and psychological tests, weeding out of students after the first failure and many such devices. Weeding out of students is suggested to save unnecessary expenditure to the State, for, a considerable amount of tax payer's money is always spent for providing facilities for medical education. There is no doubt, however, that whatever may be the factors that operate, inadequacy of instruction in some subjects, absence of proper guidance during the period of clinical instruction, and non-availability of full time teachers, at least in the major subjects in the medical curriculum, are probably the most important ones which are responsible for this state of affairs. It was for this reason that a suggestion has been made that in each medical college there should be whole-time teaching units at least for the three major subjects, medicine, surgery and midwifery.

It must be mentioned that for the production of auxiliary personnel such as nurses, midwives, sanitary inspectors, compounders, laboratory technicians, etc., the facilities available in the medical colleges are normally utilized. However, apart from the question of training of nurses, there do not appear to be many difficulties which would stand in the way of producing the auxiliary personnel in the required number if a determined effort is made to do so.

II

Medical education is, however, not merely a question of numbers. The form and content of the medical curriculum are of paramount importance. During recent years, the concepts of medical education have come under very close scrutiny both of individuals and the concerned academic bodies in most countries. It has now been accepted "that the aim of medical education is not to impart to the student a mass of factual information in each branch of medicine, but to equip him with sound basic principles, including the scientific outlook and methods, a knowledge of the fundamentals of the medical sciences, competence in, and understanding of, certain indispensable techniques, and an intellectual resourcefulness and initiative in the handling of unusual and unexpected situations". (Memorandum of British Medical Association on the Training of a Doctor - para 19, page 9). In order to foster this outlook, a reorientation of the curriculum is considered essential. None of the subjects included in the curriculum are to be taught in a compartmentalised manner but an attempt is to be made for a co-ordinated teaching of all the subjects in order that the students may have full understanding of the basic principles involved both in health and in disease.

Main modifications are suggested in the teaching of pre-clinical subjects such as anatomy, physiology and biochemistry. The newer concepts in the teaching of anatomy were referred to by the Royal Colleges in England in their report as follows :—

> "The study of the general principles of structural organization and of structural details in terms of living processes, such as growth, repair and adaptation to functional demands, with frequent resort to the experimental method, is coming more and more to occupy a dominant position in the anatomy curriculum. In contrast to the pure memorisation of topographical details this may be termed the new anatomy."

This view has now been widely accepted. In practice, it would mean that it would be possible to condense the teaching of this subject in much short a period than was considered possible hitherto. If along side, the teaching of Physiology is also remodelled according to newer conceptions, it would be feasible to finish the pre-medical subjects within 1½ years, instead of 2 years as has been the practice hitherto. The Committee of the British Medical Association referred to above have summarized the concepts of teaching pre-medical subjects such as anatomy and physiology as follows:—

> " The teaching of anatomy, physiology and biochemistry, i.e. of preclinical subjects, should be completely reorientated and emphasis should be laid on the study of normal man with the following aims:—
> (i) To provide a basis for the understanding of the morphological, physiological and psychological principles which determine and influence the organization of the living body as a functioning unit ;
> (ii) To relate and interpret the structural organization and normal physiology of the human body and thus to provide the data on which to anticipate the disturbances of function which will probably result from interference with normal structure and structural relationship ;
> (iii) To enable the students to recognise the anatomical, physiological and psychological basis of the clinical signs and symptoms of disorder due to injury, disease, or mal-development;
> (iv) Similarly, to help the student to understand the factors involved in the development of pathological processes and the posssible complications which may arise therefrom ,
> (v) To give the student such knowledge of the preclinical subjects as will > enable him, ultimately, to employ competently and rationally all ordinary methods of examination and treatment (including minor surgery) that may involve such knowledge."

While there is the emphasis on the study of man as a whole, as indicated above, all committees and medical educationists have agreed that such a study would not be complete unless it is also accompanied by the study of psychology in the preclinical stage in the curriculum. The study of psychology at this stage is important because it helps the student in understanding the relationship of mental processes to bodily functions and provides him with a yardstick with which to measure any departure from the normal in subsequent years of clinical study and practice. It is generally agreed, however, that the ultimate form of teaching of the subject, so far as its place in the medical curriculum is concerned, will have to be evolved after considerable trial and error. A view has been expressed that the best way of teaching the subject to medical students would be by seminar discussions, rather than by formal lectures. It will be sometime, however, before the subject receives adequate recognition in medical schools in India and arrangements are made for its proper teaching.

In the clinical period many committees have recommended drastic changes in the curriculum hitherto followed in most medical schools anywhere. In the study of the clinical subjects the purpose "should be to teach the student the general principles of medicine; to train him to a sufficient degree of skill, to diagnose and treat common ailments in minor medicine and surgery and to recognize conditions for which he should summon some expert help and so orientate his attitude towards medicine that he sees his patient as a whole". Emphasis is being laid on the fact that the student should understand and assimilate the general principles of medicine rather than try and master a variety of details and specialised techniques.

Attention is being now directed to the study of 'social medicine' as a special subject in the curriculum in the years devoted to the study of clinical medicine. Social medicine is, indeed, a new concept which is being formulated during recent years. It is sought to replace the old concept of public health by this new term so that the term now includes as stated by the Goodenough Committee "the more restricted, though very important, subject of disease prevention. It signifies a broad conception of medicine; a conception that regards promotion of health as a primary duty of the doctor, that pays need to man's social environment and heredity as they affect health, and that recognises that personal problems of health and sickness may have communal as well as individual aspects".

The concept is not, however, entirely new for the subject has been debated in one form or another ever since 1936, especially in its relation to the study of preventive medicine in its broader aspects. Even so the line of demarcation between the subject as it is taught, viz. Hygiene & Public Health, and the newer concept of social medicine is not clear and distinct. The viewpoint has been best expressed by Dr. Leathers as follows :—

> In reality Preventive Medicine constitutes a part of clinical medicine, obstetrics and psychiatry and even much of surgery. Its purpose is to avert those disorders for which there are specific preventive measures; to detect early, by accurate and thorough methods of diagnosis, the beginnings of illness for which remedial therapy should be effectively applied. Its objective is to aid in the solution of social, economic and welfare problems of the community in relation to disease. It involves the use of a special technique in dealing with the public. The application of the principles of Preventive Medicine through organised administrative procedure in relation to local, state and national needs constitutes public health. Obviously, preventive medicine and public health are complimentary and interdependent. Each is indispensable to the community welfare."

There has been general agreement not only on the inclusion of the two subjects mentioned above but also on the need for a complete reorientation of the teaching programme with regard to all the clinical subjects to be taught during the final stages of the medical curriculum. This applies to the teaching of medicine, surgery and midwifery and all other subjects also. The object, as stated previously, is to give the student a grasp of the general principles involved rather than technical details of any one speciality in particular. In order to bring this about, it has also been suggested that the arrangements of beds in the wards of teaching hospitals should be such as to facilitate the implementation of the co-ordinated teaching programme envisaged above. A suggestion has also been made, that it is preferable indeed to have general wards in which cases of all types of diseases are admitted rather than to have special wards devoted to the treatment of cases relating to specific branches of either medicine or surgery.

The changes which have been proposed in the medical curriculum, as envisaged above, will also entail the re-arrangement of the time-table allotted for the teaching of specific subjects during the entire period of the medical curriculum. Incidently, it will be equally necessary to re-arrange the time-table of examinations in several subjects, not only to suit the newer concepts of medical education, but to facilitate the teaching programmes in medical institutions. It is unnecessary to refer here to the proposed changes in detail. Suffice it to say, that the sum total of the changes effected would reduce the total period of training to more or less to 4 to 4½ years, instead of 5 to 5½ years hitherto required, at least in some of the institutions in the country. The reduction in the teaching period has been suggested deliberately in order to provide sufficient time to the students for spending a minimum period of one year as an 'internee' in the same institution. The Goodenough Committee had defined this period as compulsory period of "approved and responsible clinical practice under supervision and as a prelude to the candidate's entry into independent medical practice". It has now been generally agreed that this period of internship should follow and not precede the examinations which the students are required to pass before being enrolled into the medical register. It is intended that this period should be utilised by the students in familiarizing themselves with the actual conditions of medical practice as they would encounter when setting up independent practice themselves. In addition, it has also been emphasized that the students, if they so desire, could devote part of this period to take up the special study of any branch of medicine in which they feel individually interested.

The main ideas underlying the proposed changes, as stated hitherto, have been accepted by the Indian medical educationists also. Taking into consideration the specific needs of this country, they have recommended the creation of only one type of doctor to be called the "Basic Doctor". In the basic doctor's training, the emphasis will be on the principles and methods which will enable the student to learn for himself, think, observe and draw conclusions. The general conclusions arrived at will be found embodied in the report of the Bhore Committee. Suffice it to say here that the conception of the basic doctor's training includes "as an inseparable component of education in the community and preventive aspects of medicine". It has been generally agreed that "whereas up to the present, there has been a division of medical duties into (a) preventive and (b) curative, the need of the future is quite definitely for a type of doctor who will combine both these functions in his own person". In order to ensure this, the Committee had recommended that out of one year's internship at least three months should be devoted to work in a public health unit.

The various recommendations of the Committee are now being considered by the Indian Medical Council with a view to have them implemented as soon as possible in the existing medical institutions in India.

III

It is recognised, however, that apart from any administrative procedures which could be undertaken to implement the proposals mentioned above, the complete re-orientation of the teaching programme in medical institutions cannot be achieved unless provision is also made for the creation of competent teachers for the purpose.

In order to achieve this, adequate provision has to be made in the country for post-graduate medical education in all the branches of medical sciences. Facilities for this purpose at present are very inadequate. The Health Survey and Development Committee which had investigated this question in great detail had recommended that post-graduate medical education should be organised to meet two different needs "each important in itself but not connected with each other", namely, (a) the training of consultants and specialists and (b) the training of practitioners desirous of practising some speciality without definite status of specialists. The training in the first category mentioned above can only be given in various specialities in institutions or departments in existing hospitals. It will also involve many years of work in such departments. The intention is that after the period of training the candidates would be able to obtain highest post-graduate qualifications of recognised universities in India, namely, the M.D. and M.S. degrees. For the other type of training, the Bhore Committee had recommended that special courses should be established in the following specialities, at any rate in the first instance:

(i) Oto-Rhino-Laryngology.

(ii) Dermatology.

(iii) Radiology, diagnostic and therapeutic.

(iv) Ophthalmology.

(v) Obstetrics and gynæcology.

(vi) Venereology.

(vii) Anæsthesia.

(viii) Psychiatry.

(x) Tuberculosis.

(xi) Malariology.

(xii) Blood transfusion and resuscitation.

(xiii) Orthopædics.

A course of training under any of these heads will enable the candidate to obtain a diploma in the respective subject entitling him to practise, in some measure, that branch of medicine as a speciality.

Facilities for obtaining instruction in some of the subjects mentioned above are already available in some of the medical colleges in India, and steps are being taken to create those in other subjects. In addition to the above, courses of instruction in other subjects, such as maternity and child welfare, dietetics and nutrition have also been arranged at the All-India Institute of Hygiene & Public Health, Calcutta. Augmentation of these facilities to still greater extent are also under contemplation.

A very important recommendation had been made by the Bhore Committee in this respect, namely, the creation of facilities for "the training of a sufficient number of workers capable of undertaking research in the medical and allied problems, on a scale far in advance of what has been accomplished in the past", by establishing a special Institute—The "All-India Medical Institute" for the purpose. The objects of such an institute were envisaged as follows:—

(1) to bring together in one place educational facilities of the highest order for the training of all the more important types of health personnel and to emphasise the close inter-relation existing between the different branches of professional education in the field of health;

(2) to promote research of the highest type in all the branches of study for which the Institute will be responsible;

(3) to coordinate training and research;

(4) to provide post-graduate training of an advanced character in an atmosphere which will foster the true scientific outlook and a spirit of initiative, and

(5) to inspire all persons who undergo training, undergraduate or post-graduate, with the loftiest ideals of the profession to which they belong and to promote in them a community outlook and a high degree of culture, in order that they may become active apostles of the progressive spirit in whatever field they may be called upon to serve, whether it be teaching, research, general health work or administration.

The purpose in view is not merely to train medical men in the art and science of medicine so as to make them eventually able teachers and researchers in medical and allied sciences, but to pass them on to other medical institutions in the country, there to establish their "cells" and to serve and raise the level of medical teaching and research in those institutions.

This recommendation was accepted in principle by the Government of India and a special committee was appointed in 1947 to advise them on the steps to be taken to establish such an institution as soon as possible. This Committee, while providing the blueprint for the purpose, estimated that to bring the institute in being an initial capital expenditure of about 5 crores of rupees will have to be incurred, in the first instance, and provision will have to be made for an annual recurring expenditure of 60 lakhs for its maintenance. The proposal had to be kept in abeyance, however, owing to the present financial stringency.

In view of the costs involved, some members of the above Committee had recommended that, in the interim period, the facilities for medical research and education in existing institutions should be immediately explored, and certain departments in them, especially those under the guidance of men with initiative and originality, should be upgraded to the required extent, to enable them to function as effective units for post-graduate teaching and research on an all-India basis. In pursuance of this recommendation, the Government appointed a Committee to examine this question in all its aspects. After considerable deliberation and visits to important institutions in the country, this Committee recommended "the upgrading" of eleven separate departments in many of the existing institutions in India. The Central Government have accepted this recommendation. It is expected that with additional equipment and staff that will be made available to these centres, a beginning will be made for the provision of advance post-graduate training facilities, on an all-India basis, for some of the specialities listed previously.

The Bhore Committee had also discussed in detail the type of organisation needed to ensure and maintain satisfactory standards of post-graduate medical education throughout the country. The maintenance of standard of under-graduate medical education in different universities and institutions in India is the function of the Indian Medical Council. The question was debated at great length, whether the same Council should be entrusted with the responsibility of maintaining standards in the sphere of post graduate medical education also. The Committee, however, came to the conclusion that, in view of the several factors involved which need not be summarized here, it would be advisable, in the first instance, to create a separate body which shall be entrusted with this task, namely, a Central Committee or Council for post-graduate medical education. This has been done It is expected the Council would frame rules and regulations for post-graduate medical examinations also which would serve to maintain a uniform and high standard in the award of post-graduate medical qualifications by all the universities in India.
