Ecce spectaculum dignum, ad quod respiciat intentus operi suo Deus Ecce par Deo dignum, vir fortis cum mala fortuna compositus—Seneca, "Lib de Divina providentia." (Behold a worthy sight, to which the God, turning his attention to his own work, may direct his gaze Behold an equal thing, worthy of a God, a brave man matched in conflict with evil fortune.)

Better than a play.

Plus capio voluptatis inde quam spectandis in theatro ludis—Pietro Aretino (1492–1557). (I obtain more of pleasure thence than from seeing plays in theatres.)

We are near awakening when we dream that we dream.
Novalis (Fragments) as translated by Carlyle.

To become properly acquainted with a truth we must first have disbelieved it, and disputed against it. Ib.

The true poet is all-knowing! he is an actual world in miniature. Ib.

My opinion, my conviction, gains infinitely in strength and success, the moment a second mind has adopted it. Ib.

" I must live," said the man [in excuse for his evil manner of gaining a livelihood] " I do not see the necessity," replied the Comte d'Argenson (1696–1764) [Secretary of State] [The person to whom the reply was made is said to have been the Abbe Guyot Desfontaines ; described as a " libeller."]

See Voltaire, Discours Préliminaire to Alzire (1736) Carlyle has several allusions to the phrase.

8. PHRASES AND HOUSEHOLD WORDS.

All the world and his wife.

Quoted in " Noctes Ambrosianæ," Nov. 1832.

" Gigmania," a term used by Carlyle and others in allusion to a celebrated passage at the trial of Thurtell (1823) ·—

Q What sort of a person was Mr Weare ?
A He was always a respectable person
Q What do you mean by respectable ?
A He kept a gig

" Thus does society naturally divide itself into four classes Noblemen, Gentlemen, Gigmen, and Men "—Carlyle s article on Boswell (Note), 1832.

That blessed word " Mesopotamia "

It was said of George Whitefield that he could reduce his hearers to tears by uttering this word According to Mr Francis Jacox, Garrick gave currency to the saying The usual story is that an old woman once told her pastor that "she found great support in that comfortable word 'Mesopotamia '"

A mess of pottage.

This expression seems to have been derived from the heading of Genesis 25 in Matthew's Bible, 1537—" Esaw selleth his byrthright for a messe of potage " The expression does not occur in the Authorised Version of the Bible (1611), but it was used by the Translators in the preface, " The Translators to the Reader," written by Miles Smith, D D , who became Bishop of Gloucester in 1612, and died in 1624 " Neither yet with Esau sell your birthright for a mess of pottage " An earlier example of its use is in The Historie of Jacob and Esau, licensed to be printed 1557 , printed 1568—viz " Better a messe of pottage than nothing, pardy."

Counsels of perfection

A theological term of great antiquity applying to works of supererogation.

The false Southron.

This expression occurs in Blind Harry's Death of Wallace, supposed to have been written in the 15th century.

According to Cocker (i e. Edward Cocker's " Arithmetic," pub 1664, and subsequently in more than a hundred editions).

Sent to Coventry.

Said to have originated during the Civil War from the habit of the Parliamentarians of sending doubtful or useless officers or soldiers to the garrison at Coventry The expression is used also in America " Send them into everlasting Coventry "—Emerson's Essay : Manners

" The Republic of Letters " is a very common expression among the Europeans

Oliver Goldsmith Citizen of the World 20 (1760). See note on p. 144a , also Molière, " La republique des lettres " (Le Mariage forcé, sc 6).

That man has an axe to grind

This expression occurs in Essays from the Desk of Poor Robert the Scribe, by Chas Miner (1780–1863), and first appeared in the Wilkesbarre Gleaner (1811).

"Fuller's Collection of Proverbs," 1732.

According to Fuller's Worthies of Berkshire, a Vicar of Bray in that county was alternately Romish and Protestant under Henry VIII, Edward VI, Mary, and Elizabeth. The centenarian Parr had similar principles. "He held it safer to be of the religion of the King or Queen that were in being, for he knew that he came raw into the world, and accounted it no point of wisdom to be broiled out of it."—John Taylor (Water Poet). A proverb describes proverbs as being "the wisdom of the street."

Going the whole hog.

(Hence in more recent times "whole-hoggers") Said to be connected with the slang "hog," a word meaning at different periods one shilling and five shillings. "Hoger" is Jewish-German for ducat. A correspondent of Notes and Queries (Sept. 27, 1851) ascribes an Irish origin to the expression, stating that in Ireland a shilling was called a hog Masterly inactivity.

According to a correspondent in Notes and Queries (Nov. 29, 1879) this phrase was coined by Sir James Mackintosh (1765–1832), Vindiciæ Gallicæ (1791). It is a parallel phrase with Horace's "strenua inertia" (1 Epl. 11, 28).

Human documents.

"Documents humains" (Fr.) was an expression first used by Edmond de Goncourt in 1876. He claimed the authorship of it in his Preface to La Faustin (1882).

Present company excepted.

This expression occurs in "The London Hermit" (by O'Keefe) (1793). Probably of earlier occurrence.

Good manners to except my Lord Mayor of London.—Ray's Proverbs.

A draught on Aldgate Pump.

Stated by Fielding in his "Essay on the Character of Men," to be, "a mercantile phrase for a bad note."

The girl I left behind me.

Song ascribed to the year 1759.

As published (c. 1810) in The Charms of Melody, No. 72 (Dublin, n d.) the song begins —

I'm lonesome since I crossed the hills,
And o'er the moor that's sedgy;
With heavy thought my mind is filled
Since I parted with Naggy,
Whene'er I return to view the place
The tears doth fall and blind me,
When I think on the charming grace
Of the girl I left behind me.

The roaring forties.

The rough part of the Atlantic between 40° and 50° N. latitude. Sometimes called "the rolling forties," and also applied to that part of the Southern Ocean between 40° and 50° S.

They of the mean estate are happiest.—Tottel's Collection, 1557.

The lone trail.

A poem by Robert W. Service (b. 1874), "And the lone trail lures you on."

Macaulay's Schoolboy.

The frequency of Macaulay's reference to somewhat abstruse matters as subjects which any public schoolboy would know, has led to his being credited with the phrase.* It is to be found, however, in many earlier authors, e.g.: "Every schoolboy hath that famous testament of Grunnius Corocotta Porcellus at his fingers' ends."—R. Burton: Anat Melan. (1621), Part 3, sec. 1, mem 1, 1 See also Swift:

"Oh how our neighbour lifts his nose,
To tell what every schoolboy knows."

The Fourth Estate.

The "three estates of the realm" are the Lords Spiritual, the Lords Temporal, and the Commons. "Ane pleasant satyre of the Three Estatis" was a play by Sir David Lindsay, produced in 1535. The Newspaper Press, owing to its greatly enhanced influence and power, became known as "The Fourth Estate" about the end of the 18th century. Burke is credited with having invented the term, but it does not appear in his published works. It was a term applied to various other extra constitutional powers or influences. The Gazetteer and New Daily Advertiser, Jan. 30, 1789, stated "Mr. Fox's Board of Commissioners, which Mr. Pulteney and Mr. Pitt clamoured against as a Fourth Estate, was to be responsible to Parliament. Mr Pitt's Fourth Estate, of the Queen and her Council, is to have no responsibility."

In Rabelais's Pantagruel, when Pantagruel visits the island of the Papimanes, he is met by four persons, a monk, a falconer, a lawyer, and a husbandman, and is told that they are "les quatre estatz de l'isle" (the four estates of the island) (Book 4, ch. 48).

Geo. Gascoigne (d. 1577), in The Steele Glas (1576), wrote:

Againe I see within my glasse of steele
But foure estates, to serve each country soyle,
The King, the Knight, the Pesant, and the Priest.

Our Place in the Sun.

—Ancient Scottish Prophecy (c. 1450) MS. Cambridge Univ. Lib. (E E.T.S., No. 42, p. 18).

London-over-the-Border.

A term applied to the Metropolitan district in Essex, derived from an article on that area in Household Words (Sept. 12, 1857), entitled "Londoners-Over-the-Border." The article has been attributed, without authority, to Charles Dickens

* E g., "Every schoolboy knows who imprisoned Montezuma."—Essay on Lord Clive.

The Ashes.

"Recovering the Ashes," a term applied to the English victory in test cricket matches with Australia. The expression arose through an epitaph (Sporting Times, London, 1882) "In Affectionate Remembrance of English Cricket, which died at the Oval on 29th August, 1882, deeply lamented . . . N B The body will be Cremated and the Ashes taken to Australia."

Yellow Press.

Twelve Spadassins were seen, by the yellow eye of Journalism, arriving recently out of Switzerland.—Carlyle: French Revolution (1837–9), Part 2, Book 3, ch. 3.

Going West.

This expression, particularly in vogue during the European War as a euphemism for dying, is of much antiquity. With the Greeks Pluto was the "Western God." Sophocles, in Œdipus Tyrannus, referring to a calamity involving death throughout a wide district, says "One after another thou mightest see speeding towards the shore of the Western God."

Habakkuk was capable of everything.

This saying ("Habakkuk était capable de tout") is attributed to Voltaire, but is not found in his works. In his tragedy Zaire (1732) Voltaire makes Orosmane, sultan of Jerusalem, tell Zaire "Apprenez qu' Orosmane est capable de tout" (Act iv. 2). It is alleged that Voltaire said that "with such a name Habakkuk was capable of everything." Probably Voltaire was referring jestingly to the incredible story of Habakkuk being carried off by the hair of his head by the dragon Bel.

Coffee should be strong as death, hot as hell, and sweet as love.

Derived from a punning French saying:

"La café doit être fort comme le mort, noir comme le Maure, et doux comme l'amour" (Coffee should be strong as death, black as the Moor, and sweet as love").

Many other versions.

Cleopatra's nose.

Si le nez de Cléopatre eût été plus court, toute la face de la terre auroit changé.—If Cleopatra's nose had been shorter, all the face of the earth would have been changed.—Blaise Pascal: Pensées, Part 1, Art. 9, 46.

He who knows not and knows not that he knows not, he is a fool—shun him.
He who knows not and knows that he knows not, he is simple—teach him.
He who knows and knows not that he knows, he is asleep—wake him.
He who knows and knows that he knows, he is wise—follow him.

Definition of "news."

If a dog bites a man it is not news, if a man bites a dog it is. (Modern; attributed to Lord Northcliffe.)

9. HISTORICAL AND TRADITIONAL.

"Thou hast conquered, O Galilean!" (Lat. "Vicisti, Galilæe!" Ammianus; from the Greek, first found in Theodoret, 3, 25.)

Ascribed to Julian the Apostate, when at the point of death, in Persia, A.D. 363. (See Montaigne: Essais, 2, 19 [1580], also Swinburne: "Thou hast conquered O pale Galilean," p. 378b.) The phrase is also said to be in Lorenzo de Medici's morality play "St. Giovanni and St. Paolo" (ad fin), (c. 1475–85): "Oh, Christ of Galilee, it is Thou hast conquered."

Thou shalt go thou shalt return never in battle shalt thou perish.

Utterance of the Oracle, favourable or otherwise according to punctuation.

A company of angels can dance on the point of a needle.

Saying attrib. with variations to St. Thomas Aquinas, also known as "The Angelic Doctor" (c. 1227–1274). St. Thomas Aquinas, in Summa Theologiæ, devotes superabundant space and ingenuity to fanciful conjectures about the nature of angels, e g Quæstio liii., Articulus iii., "Utrum Angelus possit esse in pluribus locis simul" ("Whether an angel can be in several places at once"); also Articulus liii., iii: "Utrum plures angeli possint simul esse in loco uno" ("Whether several angels can be in one place at the same time"). He answers the latter question, that "several angels are not prevented by restriction of space from being in one place" but "propter aliam causam" ("on account of another cause"). He expends much laboured argument on this and similar problems. In Quæst. liii., Art. iii., he states:

"Ad primum ergo dicendum, quod locus angeli non accipitur ei æqualis secundum magnitudinem, sed secundum contactum virtutis. Et sic locus angeli potest esse divisibilis, et non semper punctalis: sed tamen loca media etiam divisibilia sunt infinita"

And again in liii., iii.:—

"Angelus in uno instanti potest esse in uno loco, et in alio instanti in alio loco, nullo tempore intermedio existente"

These two passages (the nearest in his works to the alleged statement attributed to Thomas Aquinas) may be translated: (1) "To the first argument then it may be said that the place occupied by an angel is not regarded as equal to him in respect of magnitude but in respect of contact with his spirituality And so the place occupied by an angel is divisible and not always confined to one point but nevertheless the places intermediate—also divisible—are infinite"; (2) "An angel can be in one place at one moment, and in another moment in another place, without any portion of time intervening."

There, but for the grace of God, goes John Bradford.

Tradition ascribes this to John Bradford (b. 1510, burnt at Smithfield 1555) on seeing some criminals going to execution. (See Dict. Nat. Biog.)

The English take their pleasures sadly.

"Ils s'amusaient tristement selon la coutume de leur pays," said Froissart.—Emerson: English Traits, ch. 8.

"They" [the English], says Froissart, "amused themselves sadly after the fashion of their country"—"ils se rejouissoient tristement selon la coutume de leur pays"—Hazlitt: Sketches and Essays: Merry England

The passage is not found in Froissart, but it seems to be derived from the Duc de Sully's Memoirs, written c 1630, as follows. "Les Anglais s'amusent tristement selon l'usage de leur pays" There is a medieval Latin proverb, "Anglica gens est optima flens et pessima ridens" (The English race is the best at weeping and the worst at laughing.) On the other hand there is an early tribute to the jovial disposition of Englishmen "The whole [English] nation, beyond all other mortal men, is most given to banquetting and feasts."—Trans (by Burton Anat Melan, 1621) from Paulus Jovius (1483–1552), Hist, Book 11.

A certain man has called us, "of all peoples the wisest in action", but he added, "the stupidest in speech."—Carlyle: "The Nigger Question" (1849).

Froth at top, dregs at bottom, but the middle excellent.

Description of the English Nation, attributed to Voltaire.

Paris fashions.

"As far as Paris to fetch over a fashion, and come back again."—Ben Jonson: Every Man out of his Humour," ii. 2 (1599).

Paris is well worth a mass. (Paris vaut bien une messe)

Attrib. to Henry IV., King of France, but also in the form "The French crown is well worth a mass." In "Caquets de l'accouchée" (1622) the saying is attrib. to Sully, in the latter form, and as a remark made by Sully to Henry IV.

The Man in the Moon.

The old notion was that the spots on the moon's surface represented a man with a bundle of sticks

Quod Pandarus, thou hast a ful gret care
Lest that the cherl [man] may falle out of the mone!—Chaucer: Troilus, Book 1, 1023.

A great leap in the dark.

Thomas Hobbes, b 1588, d 1679, author of Leviathan, when about to die, is reported to have said, "Now I am about to take my last voyage, a great leap in the dark" Hence the expression, "Hobbes' voyage," used by Vanbrugh in The Provoked Wife (1679), as referring to matrimony.

To leave them nothing but eyes to weep with.

A saying attributed to Caroline, Queen of Naples (1752–1814), in reference to her subjects, who had offended her.

Ne lui laisser que les yeux pour pleurer. —Balzac (repeated in several of his novels). Fr.—To leave him nothing but eyes to weep.

Præter plorare nihil. ("Nothing but to weep.") Latin proverbial expression found in the "Adagia" of Gilbertus Cognatus and printed in Erasmus's "Chiliades" (1574).

What has posterity done for us?

Erroneously attributed to Sir Boyle Roche (1743–1807) in a speech in the House of Commons; but the words occur in John Trumbull's McFingal, canto 2 (1775) Mrs Elizabeth Montagu, in a letter dated Jan 1, 1742, has this allusion: "The man was laughed at as a blunderer who said in a public business, 'We do much for posterity; I would fain see them do something for us'." See Sir Richd. Steele (p. 368b) and John Trumbull (p. 401a).

And have they fixed the where, and when?
And shall Trelawny die?
Here's twenty thousand Cornish men
Will know the reason why!

R. S. Hawker, "Song of the Western Men." Jonathan Trelawny was one of "the Seven Bishops."

All my eye and Betty Martin.

The older form is said to be, "All my eye, Betty Martin." [The tradition that "Betty Martin" is a survival of a medieval invocation, "Beate Martine," is discredited.]

The sun never sets in the Spanish dominions.

*Quoted, as a saying of Spanish soldiers, by Capt. John Smith, 1579–1631.

It may be well to wait a century for a reader, as God has waited six thousand years for an observer. John Kepler (1571–1630).

"If the Almighty God waited 6,000 years for one to see what he had made, I may surely wait 200 for one to understand what I have seen"—Carlyle (referring to Kepler). "Miscellanies" (Voltaire), 1829

England expects every officer and man to do his duty this day.

Nelson's signal, Oct. 26, 1805, as published in "The Times," Dec. 26, 1805. Usually quoted as "England expects every man to do his duty."

Sufficeth this to prove my theme withal,
That every bullet hath a lighting place.

—Gascogne. The Fruites of Warres (1575).

King William was of an opinion, an' please your Honour, quoth Trim, that everything was predestined for us in this world; insomuch that he would often say to his soldiers that "every ball had its billet."—Sterne: Tristram Shandy (1759–60), Vol. 8, ch. 19.

The Army and Navy for ever,
Three cheers for the Red, White, and Blue.

The Red, White, and Blue.

Song originating at the time of the Crimean war, and said to indicate the co-operation of redcoats and bluejackets

No soldier can fight unless he is properly fed on beef and beer.

Attributed to the Duke of Marlborough.

A similar saying, "An army, like a serpent, goes on its belly," has been attributed to Frederick the Great.

"Soldiers, we must never be beat,—what will they say in England?"

Remark by the Duke of Wellington at Waterloo.

The thin red line. "A thin red line topped with a streak of steel."

Despatch by Sir William Howard Russell (1821–1907), to "The Times," October 25, 1854. In the republished volume of these despatches the passage reads: "A thin red streak topped with a line of steel."

"Up, Guards, and at 'em!"

Ascribed to Wellington.

His real words, according to his biographer, Sir Herbert Maxwell, were, "Stand up, Guards!" *

In A. Tels' Guidebook, Excursions to the Lion of Waterloo, 2nd ed., 1904, a Belgian publication, this is improved as follows "At nearly more than 50 yards from the english, Wellington cried —'Upright guards! prepare for battle.'"

Our only General.

Expression applied to Lord Wolseley (1833–1913), but of earlier origin. "He [Danton] stood between [General] Dumouriez and much censure, anxious not to exasperate our only General"—Carlyle. French Revolution (1837–1839), Book 3, ch. 3.

He never would believe that Providence had sent a few men into the world, ready booted and spurred to ride, and millions ready saddled and bridled to be ridden.

Saying of Richard Rumbold, at his execution, 1685, as recorded by Lord Macaulay (History of England, Ch. 5).

Tommy Atkins.

This sobriquet of the British soldier comes from the imaginary name "Thomas Atkins," employed in 1815 in connection with The Soldier's Account Book, called into use by the War Office. "Thomas Atkins" appeared in the sample forms accompanying the official circular letter, August 31, 1815.

* According to a family tradition "Up, Guards, and at 'em!" was the command given at Waterloo by Sir Peregrine Maitland (1777–1854), who was in command of the Guards.

All quiet along the Potomac.

Proverbial saying in America. Supposed to have originated in a report by General G. B. McClellan, U.S. (1826–1885).

Be sure you are right. Then go ahead.

David Crockett, U.S. (1786–1836). Motto used in War of 1812.

Hold the fort! for I am coming!

Signal to General Corse, in Allatoona (Oct. 5, 1864), by General William T. Sherman (1820–1891). His actual words words are said to have been: "Hold out! Relief is coming," but the popular form is as here given and was used by Moody in his revivalist hymn (c. 1865).

The religion of all men of sense.

The Earl of Shaftesbury said at last . . . "Men of sense are really but of one religion." Upon which says the lady, of a sudden, "Pray, my lord, what religion is that which men of sense agree in?" "Madam," says the earl, "men of sense never tell it."—Note by Speaker Onslow, to Burnet's notice of the Earl of Shaftesbury, "History of his own Times," Vol 1.*

A similar anecdote is told of "Mr Rogers" in Froude's "Short Studies on Great Subjects"—"A plea for the Free Discussion of Theological Difficulties" (1863)—no doubt a confusion of memory on Froude's part.

Lord Chatham, with his sword undrawn,
Kept waiting for Sir Richard Strachan;
Sir Richard, eager to be at 'em,
Kept waiting, too—for whom?—Lord Chatham.

Epigram in the "Morning Chronicle," Feb. 26, 1810. Ascribed to Joseph Jekyll, K.C. (d. 1837), Whig M.P., at that time, for Calne.

The reference is to the recriminations following the failure of the military operations of John Pitt, second Earl of Chatham, in the expedition to Walcheren, 1809. He attributed his own fatal delays to the dilatoriness of Admiral Sir Richard Strachan, who retaliated that the Earl was unpunctual in fulfilling his arrangements, and nicknamed him "the late Earl of Chatham." Another version (given in the Dict Nat. Biog) is:

Great Chatham, with his sabre drawn,
Stood waiting for Sir Richard Strachan;
Sir Richard, longing to be at 'em,
Stood waiting for the Earl of Chatham.

Where I saw a Puritane one
Hanging of his cat on Monday,
For killing of a mouse on Sunday.

Richd. Brathwaite's Barnabee's Journal, printed 1638.

Banbury is described by S. R. Gardiner (History of England, Vol 8, p. 93), as "that most Puritan of all Puritan towns."

* Old Lord Shaftesbury, conferring with Major Wildman about the many sects of religion . . . came to this conclusion . . . All wise men are of the same religion. Whereupon a lady in the room . . . demanded what that religion was To whom Lord Shaftesbury straight replied, "Madam, wise men never tell."—John Toland: Clidophorus (1720).

Here lie the bones of Robert Lowe:
Where he's gone to I don't know.
If to the realms of peace and love,
Farewell to happiness above.
If he's gone to a lower level,
I can't congratulate the devil.

From "The Owl" (about 1871). Attributed to E. Knatchbull-Hugessen (afterwards Lord Brabourne).

Hops, Reformation, Bays, and Beer
Came into England all in one year.

Old Rhyme. Another version (probably more correct) is in the edition by Edmund Howes (fl. 1607–1631) of Stow's "Annales or Chronicles" (pub. 1615 and 1631, viz.:

Turkeys, Carpes, Hops: Piccarels and beere,
Came into England: all in one yeere.

(The time being about 1518–1524, but the exact year is not specified.)

You may prove anything by figures.

Stated by Carlyle to be the saying of "a witty statesman." Chartism, No. 2.

All evil comes from Spain; all good from the north.

According to Sir T. Challoner, writing from Florence, 1597, this was then "a common proverb in every man's mouth." (Notes and Queries, 10th Ser., Vol. 2, 23.)

Never was Legate or Cardinal that did good in England.

Referred to by Hall ("Chronicle," 16th Century) as being an "olde sawe" in the time of Henry VIII.

With how little wisdom the world is governed!

"Thou little thinkest what a little foolery governs the whole world." A saying ascribed to "a wise Pope" in Selden's Table Talk (see p 299*b*); also to the Swedish Chancellor Oxenstierna, also told in connection with Conrad van Benningen, the Dutch statesman (1643). Lord Chatham, in a letter to Lord Shelburne (Jan 25, 1775), writes of the expression as "the saying of one of the Popes—Alexander VI., Jules, or Leo—to a son of his."

The world is governed too much.

Motto of the "Globe" newspaper (Boston, U.S.).

Woman's reason.

"It is a woman's reason to say I will do such a thing because I will."
—"Burroughs on Hosea," published 1652, Vol. 4.

"Mere man."

"No mere man since the Fall, is able in this life perfectly to keep the Commandments."
—Shorter Catechism.

We [the Germans] are the greatest haters in the world.

Heinrich von Treitschke (1834–1896).

Modesty is a very good thing, but a man in this country may get on very well without it.

Motto said to have been inscribed on a banner in a Western State.

496*a*

O Athenians, what toil do I undergo to please you!

Alexander the Great Quoted by Carlyle. (Essay on Voltaire, 1829)

Drifting into war

Expression used by the Earl of Clarendon, 1608–1674

His smile is like the silver plate on a coffin

Said of Sir Robert Peel, by Daniel O'Connell (1775–1847), the Irish politician.

Great questions are to be settled, not by speeches and majority resolutions, but by blood and iron

Bismarck, German Diet, 1862.

Every man has his price.

Ascribed to Sir Robert Walpole, Earl of Orford (1676–1745) His nephew, Horace Walpole, in a letter dated August 26, 1785, says it was a maxim ascribed to Sir Robert "by his enemies" Mr J Latham (Famous Sayings and their Authors) states that the saying is said to have originated in Sir R Walpole's remark to Mr Leveson, "I know the price of every man in this house, except three

496*b*

"It is an old Maxim that every Man has his Price"—The Bee, 1733 4, Vol. 8, p 97.

"Gentlemen, I say ditto to Mr Burke!"

Speech by Mr Cruger after being returned with Mr. Burke as member for Bristol.

Truth—truth all round, clearness of vision, is the most fortifying thing in the world

Viscount Milner Speech on War Censorship, Canterbury, Oct 30, 1915

10. POLITICAL PHRASES AND ALLUSIONS.

Peace, Retrenchment, and Reform.

"No sooner does he hear any of his brothers mention reform or retrenchment, than up he jumps"—Washington Irving The Sketch Book John Bull (1820)

An H B cartoon of November 26, 1830, represents Earl Grey as informing William IV that his conditions are "Retrenchment, Reform, and Peace"

I am for Peace, for Retrenchment, and for Reform—thirty years ago the great watchwords of the great Liberal party—Speech by John Bright at Birmingham, April 28, 1859

"The three F's"

"Fair rents, fixity of tenure, and freedom of sale" The three F's were the policy of the Irish land legislation of 1881

"Educate your masters"

Phrase used by Robert Lowe (afterwards Viscount Sherbrooke) (1811–1892).

Poll early and often.

"Vote early and vote often" was an expression, according to a speech by W P Miles (S. Carolina) in the U S House of Representatives (March 31, 1858), "openly displayed" on the election banners "in one of our northern cities"

His Majesty's Opposition.

Term applied by John Cam Hobhouse (1786–1869) to the Opposition in the British House of Commons, April 10, 1826

What Lancashire thinks to day, England will think to morrow.

Nineteenth century saying, found in various forms, "Manchester" (or Birmingham) being occasionally substituted for "Lancashire"

Peace with honour.

Expression used by Lord Beaconsfield on his return from the Berlin Congress on the Eastern Question, July, 1878

He had rather spend £10,000 on Embassies to keep or procure peace with dishonour, than £10,000 on an army that would have forced peace with honour—Sir Anthony Weldon The Court and Character of King James, 1650.

See Southey, "Carmen Aulica," p 362a

Register! Register! Register

From a speech by Sir Robt Peel at a "civic festival" (c 1835) ("Ay, register, register, register!" said the Duke "Those were immortal words" "I can tell your Grace three far better ones," said Mr Tadpole, with a self-complacent air "Object, object, object!"—B Disraeli Coningsby, Book 2, ch 2)

Policy of pin pricks.

From the French expression "coups d'épingle" which seems to have been classical as early as the middle of the 18th century

Defence not defiance.

Motto of the Volunteer Movement (c 1852).

Three acres and a cow

An expression often attributed to the Right Hon Jesse Collings, M P (1831–1920), who carried the Small Holdings amendment against Lord Salisbury's Government in 1886—John Stuart Mill (Principles of Political Economy, 1848, Book 2, ch 6, sec 5), referring to peasant farming in Flanders, wrote "When the land is cultivated entirely by the spade, and no horses are kept, a cow is kept for every three acres of land"

D Defoe (1663–1731) Tour through the whole Islands of Great Britain (published posthumously?)—suggested a provision of three acres of ground for every man in a settlement, and a certain quantity of common land where they should have a few sheep and cows

"Ten acres and a mule"—American phrase indicating the expectations of emancipated slaves (1862)

Latchkey franchise.

Qualification of part of a tenement as an occupier (and not as a lodger) in virtue of right of possessing a latchkey At North Hackney Revision, 1906, many claimants to votes signed papers stating that they had latchkeys. The votes were eventually disallowed.

Look to your Moat.

"'What shall we do to be saved in this world?' There is no other answer but this, 'Look to your moat' The first article of an Englishman's political creed must be that he believeth in the sea"—Geo Savile, Marquss of Halifax (1633–1695), "Rough Draft of a New Model at Sea" (c 1694).

WAIFS AND STRAYS—POLITICAL PHRASES AND ALLUSIONS

497*a*

The only good Indians I ever saw were dead.

According to Edwd. M. Ellis, A.M., who stated that he was present on the occasion, General Sheridan used these words in January, 1869, at old Fort Cobb, Indian Territory, when (after a fight) an Indian Chief, named Old Touch-away, when presented to Sheridan, said, "Me good Indian."

All political parties die at last of swallowing their own lies.

Attributed to John Arbuthnot, M D. (1675–1735), in "Life of Emerson."

The classes and the masses.

A phrase used by Mr. Gladstone.

"This new rage for rhyming badly,
Which late hath seized all ranks and classes,
Down to that new estate 'the masses'"
T. Moore: The Fudges in England (1835). Letter 4.

Passive Resistance.

An old expression In Scott's Heart of Midlothian (1818) (ch 6) he speaks of "the passive resistance of the Tolbooth-gate" as being more effective than "the active interference of the magistrates."

"Jingoes."

From a popular song sung by "the Great Macdermott," c. 1880.

We don't want to fight, but by Jingo if we do,
We've got the ships, we've got the men, we've got the money too;
We've fought the Bear before, and while we're Britons true,
The Russians shan't have Constantinople.

It has been pointed out that Xenophon (Anabasis, Book 7, ch. 1), in an appeal made to him (Xenophon) by his soldiers, was addressed thus: "You have the ships, you have the money, you have the men ourselves"—and that, on the strength of this, he was urged to take Byzantium, that is, Constantinople.

The Duty of an Opposition is to oppose.

Quoted by Lord Randolph Churchill.

When I first came into Parliament, Mr Tierney, a great Whig authority, used always to say that the duty of an Opposition was very simple—it was to oppose everything and propose nothing—Lord Stanley: Hansard's Parliamentary Debates, June 4, 1841.

Are we downhearted? No!

This expression, which came into vogue in England towards the close of the General Election of Jan. 1906, seems to have originated in a speech by Mr. Joseph Chamberlain at Smethwick, Jan. 15, 1906, in which he said "We are not downhearted, but we cannot understand what is happening to our neighbours."

The lonely furrow.

"I must plough my lonely furrow alone."—Earl of Rosebery, July 19, 1901.

Terminological inexactitude.

"It [Chinese Labour in South Africa] could not, in the opinion of His Majesty's Government, be classified as slavery in the extreme acceptance of the word without some risk of terminological inexactitude"—Mr. Winston Churchill in the British House of Commons, Feb. 22, 1906. ("Times" report.)

497*b*

Wait and see.

A phrase frequently used by Mr. Asquith (Premier) in reply to questions in the House of Commons, in the Session of 1910, as to the policy and intentions of the Liberal Government On Feb 6, 1911, speaking in the House of Commons on the Address, he said "Well, the Estimates are not yet produced I do not like to use language that is becoming only too familiar, but I do venture to recommend the right hon. gentleman in this, as in other matters, to—what shall I say?—cultivate the faculty of patient expectancy."

"To doubt is to decide."

A phrase used by Mr. Addington, British Premier in 1802—subjected to considerable ridicule at the time.

A scrap of paper.

"I found the [German] Chancellor [von Bethmann-Hollweg] very agitated. . . . He said the step taken by his Majesty's Government was terrible. . . . Just for a word, 'neutrality,' a word which in war-time had so often been disregarded—just for a scrap of paper, Great Britain was going to make war on a kindred nation."—Despatch by Sir Edward Goschen, British Ambassador at Berlin, Aug 4, 1914.

General French's contemptible little army.

German order of the day issued to the German Army at Aix-la-Chapelle on Aug. 19, 1914, on behalf of the German Emperor, commanding the German forces to employ "all their power and valour to exterminate first of all the perfidious English and to crush the contemptible little army of General French." The Emperor denied responsibility for the expression.

The large thing to do is the only thing we can do.

Woodrow Wilson, President, U.S. Message to Congress, March 5, 1914.

Some Americans need hyphens in their names, because only part of them has come over.

Id. Speech at Washington, May 16, 1914.

There is such a thing as a man being too proud to fight. There is such a thing as a nation being so right that it does not need to convince others by force that it is right.

Id. Speech at Philadelphia, May 10, 1915. (After the sinking of the "Lusitania," May 7, 1915.)

The thing to do is to supply light and not heat.

Id. Speech, Pittsburgh, Jan. 29, 1916.

The world must be made safe for democracy.

Id. Message to Congress, April 2, 1917.

Self-determination is not a mere phrase. It is an imperative principle of action which statesmen henceforth will ignore at their peril.

Id. Speech in Congress, Feb. 11, 1918.

You will always be fools; we shall never be gentlemen.

Quoted as "a classic" by Lord Fisher in "The Times," June 16, 1919, and described as "the apposite words spoken by a German naval officer to his English

498a

confrère." "On the whole," commented Lord Fisher, "I think I prefer to be the fool—even as a matter of bussness!"

This war, like the next war, is a war to end war.
Anon.

What is a Socialist? One who has yearnings
To share equal profits from unequal earnings;

498b

Be he idler or bungler or both, he is willing
To fork out his sixpence and pocket your shilling.
Quoted in this form by Dean Inge, c. 1925.

The British Army should be a projectile to be fired by the British Navy.
Viscount Grey of Fallodon. Quoted by Lord Fisher ("Memories," 1919) as "the splendid words of Sir Edward Grey."

11. FORENSIC.

The law of England is the greatest grievance of the nation, very expensive and dilatory.
Bishop Burnet's "History of his own Times" (1724).

The glorious uncertainty of the law.
First found in Macklin's Love à la Mode (1759). Afterwards used as a toast at legal dinners.—See Macklin, p. 226*b*.

Corporations have no souls.
Lord Chancellor Thurlow said that the corporations have neither bodies to be punished nor souls to be damned; they therefore do as they like — Poynder's "Literary Extracts."
"They [corporations] feel neither shame, remorse, gratitude, nor goodwill."—Hazlitt Table Talk, Essay 27 (1817).

When he [a judge] put on his robes, he put off his relation to any; and like Melchisedech, becomes without pedigree.
Fuller's "Holy State" (1642).

As guardian of His Majesty's conscience.
Lord Chancellor Thurlow's speech in his defence in the House of Lords, c. 1780 ("Butler's Reminiscences," p. 199).

Eight points of the law.
1. A good cause; 2. A good purse; 3. An honest and skilful attorney, 4 Good evidence; 5 Able counsel, 6. An upright judge; 7. An intelligent jury, 8 Good luck.
Old saying, attributed to Mr. Selwyn, a former candidate for the Chamberlaincy of the City of London.

Thurlow looked wiser than any man ever was.
Charles James Fox's reference to Lord Chancellor Thurlow (according to Lord Campbell, Life of Thurlow, ch 158 In ch. 161 the saying is repeated as "No man could be so wise as Thurlow looked").

A silly old man who did not understand even his silly old trade.
Attributed to Lord Westbury in reference to a witness from the College of Arms.
Also attributed to Lord Chesterfield, and referred to by G. B Shaw as a saying by Whately.

Drive into something cheap.
The famous injunction of Lord Westbury (1800–1873) to his coachman when the horses ran away.

Here you are, an able-bodied man, respectably brought up, instead of which you go about the country stealing ducks.
Said to have been addressed to a prisoner by an Indian judge.

The man of law
Who never saw
The way to buy or sell,
Who seeks to rise
By merchandise,
God never speeds him well.
In Warton's History of English Poetry, Sec 43, the lines (which are attributed to Sir Thomas More) appear
A man of law that never saw
The wayes to buy and sell,
Wenyng to rise by merchandize,
I pray God speed him well
Lines to similar effect are attributed to Sir John Fortescue, Chief Justice (1422–1476).

For lawyers and their pleading,
They 'steem it not a straw;
They think that honest meaning
Is of itself a law.
"The Herdman's Happy Life."
From Sonets and Pastorales included in Psalmes, Sonets and Songs of Sadnes and Pietie, made into musicke of five parties, by W. Byrd, 1588.

12. TOASTS.

Here's to you, as good as you are,
And here's to me as bad as I am;
But as good as you are and as bad as I am,
I'm as good as you are, as bad as I am.
Old Scottish Toast.

God speed the Plow and bless the Cornmow.
Title of a Black-letter rhymed Dialogue, c. 1500.

Horn, corn, wool, and yarn.
Agricultural Toast formerly proposed at farming and other dinners in North Britain.

Here's a health to all those that we love,
Here's a health to all those that love us,
Here's a health to all those that love them that love those
That love them that love those that love us.
Old Toast.

Here's a health to poverty; it sticks by us when all our friends forsake us.

Then who need care a fig
Who's a tory or whig?
Here's a health to all honest men!
Tom Brown (1663–1704): Song, Every man take a glass in hand.

Here's a health unto his majesty,
With fa, la, la;
Conversion to his enemies,
With fa, la, la.
And he that will not pledge his health,
I wish him neither wit nor wealth,
Nor yet a rope to hang himself,
With a fa, la, la, etc.
From "Catch that Catch Can, or, The Musical Companion," 1667.
["Conversion" in line 2 seems to mean "Confusion."]

Honest men and bonnie lasses.
A Toast formerly common in Scotland.

Hounds stout, horses healthy,
Earths well stopped, and foxes plenty.

Here's a health to the barley-mow;
Here's a health to the man
Who very well can
Both harrow and plough and sow.
Custom-rhyme (Suffolk).—J. H. Dixon's Collection.

May you live all the days of your life!
Swift: Polite Conversation. Dial. 2. (Given as a proverbial or "cant" saying.)

Here's to old Adam's crystal ale,
Clear, sparkling and divine!
Fair H_2O, long may you flow,
We drink your health (in wine).
Oliver Herford (b. 1863) Toast. Adam's Crystal Ale.

Here's to you in water,
I wish it was in wine;
You'll drink to your true love,
An' I'll drink to mine. Scottish.

499*b*

Here's a health to you and yours,
Likewise to us and ours;
And if ever you and yours
Need help that's in our powers,
We'll do as much for you and yours
As you have done for us and ours.
Traditional.

Here's to thee and me and aw' on us!
May we ne'er want nought, nawn on us!
Neither thee nor me, nor anyone else,
Aw' on us—nawn on us! Yorkshire.

Army Toasts (for each evening in the week): Monday, "Our Men"; Tuesday, "Our Women"; Wednesday, "Our Noble Selves"; Thursday, "Our Swords"; Friday, "Our Religion"; Saturday, "Our Sweethearts"; Sunday, "Absent Friends."

As you ascend the hill of prosperity, may you never meet a friend coming down!
Said to have been "popular with Essex farmers" about 1875.

Here's to the happiest days of my life,
Spent in the arms of another man's wife—
My Mother's.

The Honours Three (Old Traditional Custom). The "honours" being (1) the guests stand up; (2) each guest places his right foot on his chair and his left on the table; (3) he empties his glass and throws it over his left shoulder "so that no less worthy toast may be drunk out of it."

"Here's to One and only One, and may that One be She;
And may She love but only One, and may that One be Me." Old Toast.

Here's to "the love that lies in Woman's eyes,"—and lies, and lies, and lies.
Old Toast.

I wish you health,
I wish you wealth,
I wish you happiness galore,
I wish you heaven when you die,
What could I wish you more?
Irish Toast.

Sweethearts and Wives, and may they never meet!
Quoted at Pepys Club Dinner, London, Nov. 24, 1933, as "a certain old toast found in the Trinity House records."

13. FOLK-LORE AND WEATHER RHYMES.

Weather Proverbs are included under the general heading of Proverbs, but will be found indexed, in the General Index, under the heading "Weather Proverbs."

The red is wise,
The brown trusty;
The pale peevish,
The black lusty. Old Rhyme.

With a red man rede thy rede;
With a brown man break thy bread;
At a pale man draw thy knife;
From a black man keep thy wife.
—Old Rhyme. Found in Thos. W[right]'s Passions of the Mind in General, 1604.

First comes David (March 1), and then comes Chad (March 2),
And then comes Winnold roaring mad (March 3). Cambridgeshire and elsewhere.

Winnold is an Armorican (Breton) saint of the fifth century, commemorated on March 3. There are said to be 50 different spellings of the name. A religious house in Norfolk was named after him, as was "Winnold Horse Fair" at Downham Market, called, in 1326, the fair of Wynawalvi. "Winwaloe" was also a popular spelling.

Monday's child is fair in face,
Tuesday's child is full of grace,
Wednesday's child is full of woe,
Thursday's child has far to go,
Friday's child is loving and giving,
Saturday's child works hard for its living;
And a child that's born on Christmas Day,
Is fair and wise, and good and gay.
From Halliwell's "Popular Rhymes and Nursery Tales."

Cut them on Monday, cut them for health;
Cut them on Tuesday, cut them for wealth;
Cut them on Wednesday, cut them for news;
Cut them on Thursday, a pair of new shoes;
Cut them on Friday, cut them for sorrow;
Cut them on Saturday, see your true love to-morrow;
Cut them on Sunday, your safety seek,
The devil will have you the rest of the week.
Lines on Cutting Finger-nails.—Traditional.

Friday's hair and Sunday's horn,
Goes to the D'ule on Monday morn.
Ray's Proverbial Rhymes

Lancashire law:
No stakes, no draw.
This saying implies that a wager does not hold good unless stakes are deposited.

Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John,
Bless the bed that I lay on;
Four corners to my bed,
Four angels round my head,
One to watch and one to pray,
And two to bear my soul away.
J. O. Halliwell states that the first two lines were used in the time of Queen Mary, according to Ady, "Candle in the Dark," 1655.

Walk fast in snow,
In frost walk slow,
And still as you go,
Tread on your toe.
When frost and snow are both together,
Sit by the fire and spare shoe-leather.
Quoted by Swift as "a good Devonshire proverb."

Cuckoo rhymes:

In April come he will,
In May he sings all day,
In June he changes his tune,
In July he prepares to fly,
In August go he must.
Rhyme of the Cuckoo (E. of England).

In April cuckoos come,
In May he play his drum,
In June he change his tune
In July away he fly. Midland Counties' version.

In April he show his bill,
In May he sings happy day,
In June his song he prune,
In July away he fly.
Another Midland Counties' version.

Heard in September,
A thing to remember;
Heard in October,
You're not sober.
Additional lines published as "probably unauthentic" in "The Observer," Sept. 15, 1912.

The cuckoo is a purty bird, 'er zings as 'er vlies.
'Er bringeth good tidins and telleth no lies:
'Er eateth zweet vlowers to make 'er voice clear,
And when 'er zingeth "cuckoo," the summer dra-eth near. Devonshire Rhyme.

The cuckoo is a merry bird, she sings as she flies,
She brings us good tidings and tells us no lies,
She picks up the dirt in the spring of the year,
And sucks little birds' eggs to make her voice clear Sussex version

17. BOOK INSCRIPTIONS.

Improbe facit qui in alieno libro ingeniosus est.
—He does vilely who displays his cleverness in another man's book.
Martial. Bk. 1. To the Reader.

Mutare dominum non potest liber notus.
—A book which is known [or marked] cannot change its master.
Martial. 1, 66.
(Intended to apply to piratical plagiarism.)

Exigis ut nostros donem tibi, Tucca, libellos.
Non faciam; nam vis vendere, non legere.
—You beg us, Tucca, to give you our books. I will not do it, for your desire is to sell, not to read.
Martial. 7, 77.

Qui ce livre ci emblera
Propter suam malitiam
Au gibet pandue sera
Qui ce livre ci emblera.
(Emblera is from embler, Old French for "to steal.") 14th century.

Qui librum furet, per collum pendere debet.
—Whoso shall steal a book ought to be hanged by the neck.
Latin hexameter verse, with a false quantity and a doubtful Latin word—"furet" instead of "furetur"—found in MS. belonging to Walter Pollard, Plymouth, in 23 Henry VI (1444–1445).

This booke is mine, Eleanour Worcester:
An I yt loos and yow it find,
I pray yow hartely to be so kynd,
That yow will take a letel payne
To se my boke brothe [brought] home agayne.
Inscription in 15th century Primer (Book of Devotion) at Brit. Museum. (These four lines of verse are found in many volumes of 15th century.)

Quisquis hunc librum rapiat scelestus,
Sive furtivis manibus prehendat,
Vadat ad tætras Acheruntis undas,
Non rediturus.
—Whatsoever scoundrel shall seize this book or appropriate it with felonious hands, may he go to the black waves of Acheron, never to return.
Medieval.

This boke is one thing,
The halter is another;
He that stealeth the one
Must be sure of the other.
Found in a copy of Aristotle, dated 1578.

Aspice Pierrot pendu,
Qui hunc librum n'a pas rendu.
Si hunc librum reddidisset,
Pierrot pendu non fuisset.

510*a*

—Behold Pierrot hanged, who had not returned this book. If this book he had returned, Pierrot would not have been hanged

Old French-Latin Inscription, 17th Century.

Qui ce livre volera
Pro suis crimimbus
Au gibet il dansera
Cum alus latrombus.

Oh quel honte ce sera
Pro suis parentibus
De le voir dans cet état
Pedibus pendentibus

—Whoso shall steal this book for his crimes he shall dance on a gibbet with other thieves. Oh what shame it will be for his relations to see him in that condition with his feet dangling.

Old French-Latin Inscription.

Hic liber est meus;
Testis est Deus.
Quis me querit,
Hic nomen erit.—JOHN ATKINSON (1693).

This book is mine; God is witness Whosoever seeks me, this shall be the name.

This booke is one thing,
And hemp is another;
Steale not the one,
For feare of the other;
For if you steale this booke,
It is very true
A harder thing heare after
Will ensue [to you]. MS. (about 1693.)

If to your hand I chance to come,
Do not forget to send me home.
Finder, whoe'er thou art,
I speak to thee unknown,
Think always, in thy heart,
All men would have their own.
If I him lose, and thee him find,
Pray return him unto me;
I will content thee, to thy mind,
For thy good will and courtesy;
And if my name you chance to miss,
Look underneath and there it is.

Signed MARY PLAYER (1709).

In a Quakeress's Book, dated "the 26 of the 4 month, 1709."

Si tenté du démon,
Tu dérobes ce livre,
Apprends que tout fripon
Est indigne de vivre.

—If tempted of the devil you appropriate this book, learn that every thief is unworthy to live.

A common French book inscription, c. 1850. (Usually with picture of a thief on the gallows.)

Steal not this book, for fear of shame,
For in it is the owner's name;
And when you're dead, the Lord will say,
"Where is that book you stole away?"

510*b*

There are many variants of this inscription
The last two lines sometimes read:
And if I catch you by the tail,
You must prepare for Newgate jail.

Sometimes there are two additional lines:
And if you say you do not know,
Down to the flames you'll have to go.

Small is the wren,
Black is the rook;
Blacker the sinner
That steals this book. Traditional rhyme.

He who doth this book borrowe,
And doth not bring it back,
Certes shall he have sorrowe,
And comforte he shall lack.

Probably modern.

If you this precious volume bone,
Jack Ketch will claim you as his own

Traditional.

Steal not this book, mine honest friend,
For fear the gallows be thine end;
Up the ladder and down the rope,
There you'll hang until you choke.

Schoolboy rhyme.

Hic liber ad me pertinet,
Si quisquis furetur,
Per collum suspendetur,
Like this poor creatur.

[A sketch of a gibbet follows.]

A Schoolboy Inscription.

Take care, my friend, this book you ne'er with grease or dirt besmear it
While none but awkward puppies will continue to dogs-ear it.
And o'er my books, when bookworms grub,
I'd have them understand
No marks the margin must deface from any busy hand.
Marks, as remarks, in books of CLARK'S,
whene'er some critic-spy leaves
It always him so waspish makes, though they're but on the fly-leaves

From the Bookplate of Charles Clark, of Totham Hall, Essex (1806–1880).

Few of my friends are good arithmeticians but nearly all of them are good book-keepers.

—SIR WALTER SCOTT

If thou art borrowed by a friend,
Right welcome shall he be
To read, to study,—not to lend,
But to return to me;
Not that imparted knowledge doth
Diminish learning's store;—
But this I know, that books, when lent,
To me return no more. c. 1865.

This book, a child of Adam's race,
Amongst my human friends I place,
Whereof this label on his face
The symbol and the pledge is;
And all who offer him disgrace
I count as basest of the base;
Have pity then upon his case,
And reverence his edges.

Anon. (19th century.)

18. BELL INSCRIPTIONS.

"The Six Uses"
Men's death I tell by doleful knell;
Lightning and thunder I break asunder;
On Sabbath all to church I call;
The sleepy head I raise from bed;
The winds so fierce I doe disperse;
Men's cruel rage I doe asswage.
Fuller's tr. of the Latin lines:
Funera plango, fulmina frango, Sabbata pango,
Excito lentos, dissipo ventos, paco cruentos.

(Rev.) Henry van Dyke (U.S.A.) (1852–1933).

The shadow by my finger cast
Divides the future from the past:
Before it sleeps the unborn hour
In darkness, and beyond our power:
Behind its unreturning line,
The vanished hour, no longer thine:
One hour alone is in thy hands—
The NOW on which the shadow stands.

L'ombre passe et repasse, mais
L'homme passe et ne repasse jamais.—
The shadow passes and re-passes, but man passes and re-passes never.
On a church sundial near Vire, Normandy.

Life's but a shade; man is but dust;
The dyall sayes dyall we must.

Horas signo,
Umbra movente;
Flores gigno,
Sole fovente.—
I indicate the hours with the shadow moving;
I give birth to the flowers with the sun fostering.
On a sundial in Botanic Gardens, Cape Town.

Think!—the shadow on the dial,
For the nature most undone,
Marks the passing of the trial,
Proves the presence of the sun.
Mrs. E. B. Browning. Fourfold Aspect.

With warning hand I mark Time's rapid flight
From life's glad morning to its solemn night.
Yet, through the dear God's love, I also show
There's Light above me by the Shade below.
J. G. Whittier. Inscription on Sundial.

Give God thy heart, thy service, and thy gold;
The day wears on and time is waxing old.
Sundial. Gloucester Cathedral Cloister Garden.

No shadow, no sun.
At Hawarden.

Sine sole sileo.—Without the sun I am silent. Old Inscription.

As the long hours do pass away,
So doth the life of man decay.

Multa petentibus
Desunt multa. Bene est, cui Deus obtulit
Parca, quod satis est, manu.
—Those who seek for much are left in want of much. Happy is he to whom God has given, with sparing hand, as much as is enough.
Horace. Odes, Book 3, 16, 42.

Multa quidem scripsi: sed quæ vitiosa putavi,
Emendaturis ignibus ipse dedi.
—Much I have written, but what I have considered faulty I have myself given to the flames, which will remove errors.
Ovid. Tristia, Book 4, 10, 61.

Multa renascentur quæ jam cecidere, cadentque
Quæ nunc sunt in honore vocabula, si volet usus,
Quem penes arbitrium est, et jus, et norma loquendi
—Many words, which are now in disuse, will revive, and those which are now in vogue will fall into disuse, if custom so wills, in whose power are the decision and the law and the rules of speech.
Horace. De Arte Poetica, 70.

Multa rogant utenda dari; data reddere nolunt —They ask many things to be given them for use; but when given they are not willing to return them.
Ovid. Ars Amat, Book 1, 433.

Multa senem circumveniunt incommoda.—Many disadvantages attend an old man.
Horace. De Arte Poetica, 169.

Multa sunt mulierum vitia, sed hoc e multis maximum est,
Cum sibi nimis placent, minusque operam dant ut placeant viris.
—Many are the faults of women, but out of many this is the chief, when they study their own pleasure over much, and take too little trouble about pleasing their husbands.
Plautus. Pœnulus, v. 4.

Multa tulit, fecitque puer, sudavit et alsit.
—Many things has the boy borne and done, and he has both sweated and endured cold.
Horace. De Arte Poetica, 413.

Multa viros nescire decet. Pars maxima rerum
Offendat, si non interiora tegas.
—It is well for men to be in ignorance of many things. The greatest part of affairs will be repulsive unless their secrets be hidden.
Ovid. Ars Amat, Book 3, 229.

630*a*

Nam neque divitibus contingunt gaudia solis,
Nec vixit male, qui natus moriensque fefellit.
—For enjoyments do not appertain to the wealthy alone, nor has he lived badly who has been unnoticed either in his birth or death. Horace. Ep., Book 1, 17, 9.

Nam nos decebat coetus celebrantes domum,
Lugere, ubi esset aliquis in lucem editus,
Humanæ vitæ varia reputantes mala;
At qui labores morte finisset graves,
Hunc omnes amicos laude, et lætitia exsequi.
—For we ought to assemble and lament at the house where one has been brought into the world, having regard to the varied woes of human life; but when one has by death finished his weary labours, him should all his friends follow to the grave with honour and rejoicing.
Cicero (trans. of Euripides). Tusc. Quæst, Book 1, 48.

Nam nulli tacuisse nocet, nocet esse locutum.
—For it is harmful to no one to have been silent, but it is harmful to have spoken.
Cato. Disticha 1, 12, 2.

Nam nunc mores nihil faciunt quod licet, nisi quod lubet.—For modern customs have no regard to what is right unless it is also enjoyable. Plautus.

Nam pro jucundis aptissima quæque dabunt Di.
Carior est illis homo, quam sibi.
—For the gods will give whatsoever things are most fitting rather than pleasant things Man is dearer to them than to himself *
Juvenal. Sat 10, 349

Nam qui ipse haud amavit, ægre amantis ingenium inspicit—For he who has not himself loved, hardly understands a lover's feelings.
Plautus. Miles Gloriosus, iii 1, 44.

Nam quis me scribere plures
Aut citius possit versus?
—For who can write more verses or turn them out more quickly than I?
Horace. Sat., Book 1, 9, 23.

Nam quum magna malæ superest audacia causæ,
Creditur a multis fiducia.
—For when there is abundant impudence in a bad cause, it is regarded by the many as integrity. Juvenal. Sat. 13, 109.

Nam scelus intra se tacitum qui cogitat ullum,
Facti crimen habet.
—For he who meditates in silence a crime within himself, possesses the guilt of it as though it were done. Juvenal. Sat. 13, 209.

Nam tua res agitur, paries cum proximus ardet;
Et neglecta solent incendia sumere vires.
—For it is your concern surely when the wall of your neighbour's house is burning; and fire neglected is apt to gain in power.
Horace. Ep., Book 1, 18, 84.

fruitful fields, which return far more than they have received ?

Cicero. De Officiis, Book 1, 15.

Quidquid Amor jussit, non est contemnere tutum —Whatsoever love has ordained, it is not safe to despise. Ovid. Heroides, 4, 11.

Quidquid dicunt, laudo ; id rursum si negant, laudo id quoque.
Negat quis ? Nego. Ait ? Aio.
—Whatever they say I praise , if again they deny it I praise that also. Does anyone deny a thing ? I deny it. Does anyone affirm a thing ? I affirm it.

Terence. Eunuchus, ss. 2, 20.

Quidquid erit, superanda omnis fortuna ferendo est —Whatsoever it be, every fortune is to be overcome by bearing it.

Virgil. Æneid, 5, 710.

Quidquid id est, timeo Danaos, et dona ferentes —Whatever it be, I fear the Greeks even when bringing gifts.

Virgil. Æneid, 2, 49.

Quidquid præcipies, esto brevis ; ut cito dicta Percipiant animi dociles, teneantque fideles ; Omne supervacuum pleno de pectore manat.
—Whatever you teach, be brief, for minds grasp with readiness what is said shortly, and retain it firmly ; all that is unnecessary overflows from the charged mind.

Horace. De Arte Poetica, 335.

Quidquid principes faciunt præcipere viden tur.—Whatsoever princes do they seem to command it Quintilian. Declam , 3

Quin dicant non est merito ut ne dicant, id est —That they speak (evil of me) is not the point ; that they do not speak it justly, that is the point. Plautus. Trinummus, s. 2.

Quin corpus, onustum
Hesternis vitiis, animum quoque prægravat una,
Atque adfligit humo divinæ particulam auræ.
—So that the body, laden with the vices of yesterday, weighs down also the soul at the same time, and fastens a particle of God's heaven into the earth.

Horace. Sat , Book 2, 2, 77.

Quinque advocavi , sex enim convivium
Cum rege justum si super, convicium est.
—I have chosen five [for a dinner] ; for six are a suitable feast with a king : if more, it is an assembly.

See "Septem convivium." (Athenæus, Book 1, quoting from Archestratus, a Sicilian poet, says that the number at table should be three or four, or at most five.)

Quique alius cavit, non cavet ipse sibi —And he who has safeguarded others, does not himself safeguard his own person.

Ovid. Ars Amat , Book 1, 84.

Quis desiderio sit pudor aut modus
Tam cari capitis ?
—What shame or what measure can there be in our grief for the loss of one so dear ?

Horace. Odes, Book 1, 24, 1

Quis furor est census corpore ferre suo ?—What sort of madness is it to carry one's fortune upon one's body ?

Ovid. Ars Amat., Book 3, 172.

Quis legem det amantibus ?
Major lex amor est sibi.
—Who can give law to lovers ? Love is a greater law to itself.

Boëthius. De Consolatione Philosophiæ, Book 3, Met 12, 47.

Quis nescit, primam esse historiæ legem, ne quid falsi dicere audeat, deinde ne quid veri non audeat ?—Who does not know that it is the first law of history that it shall not dare to state anything which is false, and consequently that it shall not shrink from stating anything that is true ?

Cicero. De Oratore, Book 2, 15.

Quis separabit ?—Who shall separate ?

Motto of Order of St Patrick. (See Vulgate : Rom. 8, 35.)

Quis sit homo nescio,
Neque novi ; neque natus necne is fuerit, id solide scio
—Who the man is I know not, nor have I known, nor do I know for a certainty whether he was ever born or not.

Plautus. Trinummus, sc. 2, 7.

Quis sum, qualise ram, quid ero tu mitte rogare:
Nil mea vita refert ; ducere disce tuam.
—Who I am, what manner of person I was, what I shall be, refrain from asking ; my life matters naught to you ; study to lead your own. Epitaph at Reading.

Quis talia fando
Temperet a lacrymis ?
—Who in telling such things can refrain from tears ? Virgil. Æneid, 2, 6 and 8.

Quis tulerit Gracchos de seditione querentes ?—Who shall endure the Gracchi [two brothers famous for ambition and unscrupulousness] complaining about sedition ? (Juvenal's meaning is fairly clear, but the line has been incorrectly interpreted as meaning, "Who shall draw the complaining Gracchi away from sedition ?")

Juvenal. Sat. 2, 24.

Quisnam hominum est, quem tu contentum videris uno Flagitio ?
—What man can you find anywhere who is contented with one crime only ?

Juvenal. Sat. 13, 243.

Quisnam igitur liber ? Sapiens, sibi qui imperiosus ;
Quem neque pauperies, neque mors, neque vincula terrent ;

685a

Responsare cupidinibus, contemnere honores
Fortis ; et in seipso totus teres atque rotundus.

Plenum ?
—Whither, O Bacchus, wilt thou lead me, full of thee ? Horace. Odes, Book 3, 25, 1.

Quo mihi fortunam, si non conceditur uti ? —For what purpose is fortune given me, if it is not granted me to use it ? Horace. Epod., 1, 5, 12.

Quo moriture ruis ? majoraque viribus audes ?—Where are you rushing, O man about to perish ? And why do you attempt things beyond your power ? Virgil. Æneid, 10, 811.

Quo nihil majus meliusve terris
Fata donavere bonique Divi,
Nec dabunt, quamvis redeant in aurum
Tempora priscum.
—Than which thing the fates and the good gods have given nothing better or greater to the earth, nor will give anything, even though the time should return to the ancient age of gold. Horace. Odes, Book 4, 2, 37.

Quo non præstantior alter
Ære ciere viros, Martemque accendere cantu.
—Than whom no one else was more apt to rouse men with the trumpet, and to kindle the battle with its sound. Virgil. Æneid, 6, 164.

685b

Quo quisque stultior, eo magis insolescit.—The more foolish a man is, the more insolent does he grow. Pr.

Quo res cunque cadent, unum et commune periclum,
Una salus ambobus erit.
—However things may befall, there shall be to both of us one common danger, one source of safety. Virgil. Æneid, 2, 709.

Quo ruitis, generosa domus ? Male creditur hosti.
Simplex nobilitas, perfida tela cave !
—O high-born house, to what ruin are you impelled ? It is evil to trust the enemy. O simple nobility, beware of treacherous weapons ! Ovid. Fast., 2, 225.

Quo semel est imbuta recens servabit odorem Testa diu.
—The vessel will long retain the odour (of the liquor) with which when new it was once saturated. Horace. Ep., Book 1, 2, 69.

Quo tamen adversis fluctibus ire paras ?—Where then are you trying to go against the adverse waves ? Ovid. Heroides, Ep., 7, 40.

Quo tendis inertem
Rex peritura, fugam ? Nescis heu, perdite ! nescis
Quem fugias ; hostes incurris, dum fugis hostem.
Incidis in Scyllam cupiens vitare Charybdim.
—Where, O king, destined to perish, are you directing your unavailing flight ? Alas, lost one, you know not whom you flee ; you are running upon enemies, whilst you flee from your foe. You fall upon the rock Scylla desiring to avoid the whirlpool Charybdis. Walter de Lille. Alexandreis, Book 5, 298.

Quo teneam vultus mutantem Protea modo? —By what means can I hold this Proteus who changes his shapes ? Horace. Ep., Book 1, 1, 90.

Quo timoris minus est, eo minus ferme periculi est.—The less there is of fear, so much the less generally is there of danger. Livy. 22, 5.

Quo tua non possunt offendi pectora facto,
Forsitan hoc alio judice crimen erit.
—The action which cannot injure your feelings will perhaps, in someone else's judgment, be deemed a crime. Ovid. Remedia Amoris, 427.

Quocirca vivite fortes,
Fortiaque adversis opponite pectora rebus.
—On that account live as brave men, and oppose brave hearts to adverse fate. Horace. Sat., Book 2, 2, 135.

Quocunque aspicias, nihil est nisi pontus et aer ;
Nubibus hic tumidus, fluctibus ille minax.
—Wherever you look, there is nothing but sea and air; this thick with clouds, that threatening with waves. Ovid. Trist, 1, 2, 23.

Quocunque aspicio, nihil est nisi mortis imago.—Wheresoever I look there is nothing but the shape of death.
Ovid. Trist., 1, 11, 23.

Quocunque domini præsentis oculi frequenter accessere, in ea parte majorem in modum fructus exuberat.—Wherever the eyes of the master, himself upon the spot, have been frequently cast, in that part the fruit will ripen in greater profusion. Columella. Book 3.

Si incolumem servaveris, æternum exemplar clementiæ ero.—If you preserve me uninjured, I (Caractacus) shall be a lasting example of your clemency.
Tacitus. Annals, Book 12, 37.

Si ista vera sunt, ratio omnis tollitur, quasi quædam lux, lumenque vitæ.—If those things are true all reason is taken away, which is, as it were, the light and lamp of life.
Cicero. Academicarum Quæst, Book 4, 8.

Si ita e republica videretur, age et feri.—If it so seems good to the republic, do it and strike.
Tacitus. Hist 1, 41 (adapted). (The last words of the Emperor Galba on his beheadal)

Si judicas, cognosce; si regnas, jube.—If you are a judge, give (my cause a) hearing; if you are (merely) a ruler, command.
Seneca. Medea, ii. l. 194.

Si mereor in me.—Against me, if I deserve it.
Motto. *On coin struck at James I.'s Coronation, bearing the representation of a hand holding a sword.

Si mihi difficilis formam natura negavit;
Ingenio formæ damna rependo meæ.
Sum brevis; at nomen, quod terras impleat omnes,
Est mihi; mensuram nominis ipsa fero.
—If untoward nature has denied me beauty, I make up for want of beauty by my mental attainments; I am little; but I have a name which shall fill all lands; and I claim the measure of my name. Ovid. Heroides, 15, 31.

Si mihi pergit, quæ vult, dicere, ea quæ non vult, audiet.—If he persists in telling me what he wishes, he shall hear what he does not wish to hear. Terence. Andria, v. 4, 17.

Si mihi quæ quondam fuerat, quamque esse decebat,
Vis in amore foret, non hoc mihi namque negares.
—If the same influence in love was mine which formerly was, and which should be, you would not have denied me this thing.
Virgil. Æneid, 10, 613.

Si monumentum requiris, circumspice.—If you seek his monument, look around you.
Sir C. Wren's Epitaph in St. Paul's Cathedral, London.

Si nihil velis timere, metuas omnia.—If you wish to be afraid of nothing, fear everything. Publilius Syrus.

Si non errasset, fecerat ille minus.—If he had not done wrong, he would have accomplished less. Martial.

Si non esse domi, quos des, causabere nummos,
Litera poscetur.

701b

—If you pretend that the money, which you are to give, is not in your house, a written bond will be requested.
Ovid. Ars Amat., 1, 427.

Si numeres anno soles et nubila toto,
Invenies nitidum sæpius isse diem.
—If you count up the sunny and cloudy days in a complete year, you will find that the fine day has come more often.
Ovid. Trist, 5, 8, 31.

Si parva licet componere magnis.—If it is allowable to compare small things with great.
Virgil. Georgics, 4, 176.

Si possis suaviter: si non, quocunque modo.—If you can, by kind means; if not, by any other means. Pr.

Si post fata venit gloria, non propero.—I am in no haste, if glory will but come after my death. Martial. Epig., Book 5, 10, 12.

Si poteris, vere; si minus, apta tamen.—If you can, truly; if not, at any rate readily.
Ovid. Ars Amat., Book 1, 228.

Si pulchra est, nimis ornata est.—If she is beautiful, she is too much dressed up.
Plautus. Mostellaria, Act i. 3, 134.

Si qua fidem tanto est operi latura vetustas.—If any far-distant age will give credit to so great a work. Virgil. Æneid, 10, 792.

Si qua, metu dempto, casta est, ea denique casta est;
Quæ, quia non liceat, non facit, illa facit.
—If any woman, when there is no fear of detection, remains chaste, she is truly chaste; she who does not sin because it is not safe, does the sin. Ovid. Amorum, Book 3, 4, 3.

Si quid amicum erga benefeci, aut consului fideliter,
Non videor meruisse laudem; culpa caruisse arbitror.
—If I have in any way acted well towards a friend, or have faithfully advanced his interest, I do not regard myself as deserving praise, but I consider (only) that I am free from blame. Plautus. Trinummus, Act v. 1, 3.

Si quid bene facias, levior pluma est gratia:
Si quid peccatum 'st, plumbeas iras gerunt.
—If you do anything well, gratitude is lighter than a feather; if you give offence in anything, people's wrath is as heavy as lead.
Plautus. Pœnulus, Act iii. 6, 17.

Si quod feceris honestum cum labore, labor abit, honestum manet. Si quid feceris turpe cum voluptate, voluptas abit, turpitudo manet.—If you have done an honourable action accompanied by hard labour, the labour is over, the honour remains. If you have done anything disgraceful with pleasure, the pleasure is over, the disgrace remains. Anon.

Si quid ingenui sanguinis habes, non pluris eum facies quam lutum.—If you have any noble blood in you, you will esteem him as no more than dirt. Petronius Arbiter.

* Milton (Tenure of Kings) wrote that this inscription "seemed also to presage the sentence of divine justice in this event upon his son" (Charles I.).

702a

Si quid novisti rectius istis,
Candidus imperti ; si non, his utere mecum.
—If you have learned anything better than these principles, be frank and impart them ; if not, use these with me.
Horace. Ep., Book 1, 6, 67.

Si quid scis me fecisse insc te aut improbe,
Si id non accusas, tu ipse objurgand s es, scio.
—I know that if you know that I have done anything unskilfully or badly, and have not found fault with it, you are yourself to be blamed. Plautus. Trinummus, Act i. 2.

Si quis clericus, aut monachus, verba joculatoria risum moventia serat, anathemata esto —If any clerk or monk utters jocular words causing laughter, let him be excommunicated Ordinance of Second Council of Carthage.

Si quis non vult operari, nec manducet.—If any one will not work, neither let him eat.
Vulgate. 2 Thess. 3, 10.

Si quoties homines peccant, sua fulmina mittat
Jupiter, exiguo tempore inermis erit.
—If Jupiter sends forth his thunderbolts as often as men sin, he will soon be without arms.
Ovid. Trist., 2, 33.

Si res labat
Itidem amici collabascunt : res amicos invenit.
—If property totters, friends begin to waver simultaneously with it. Property finds friends. Plautus. Stichus, ii. 4.

Si sapias, sapias ; habeas quod Di dabunt boni.—Be wise if you are wise ; possess what amount of good the gods will give you.
Plautus.

Si sitis, nihil interest utrum aqua sit an vinum : nec refert utrum sit aureum poculum an vitreum.—If you are thirsty it matters not whether it be water or wine ; nor is it of consequence whether the cup be of gold or glass. Seneca.

Si stimulos pugnis cædis, manibus plus dolet.—If you beat goads with your fists, your hands suffer most.
Plautus. Truculentus, iv. 2, 55.

Si te nulla movet tantæ pietatis imago.—If no idea of so much devotion moves you.
Virgil. Æneid, 6, 405.

Si te nulla movet tantarum gloria rerum.—If no glory appertaining to such illustrious deeds moves you. Virgil. Æneid, 4, 272.

Si te proverbia tangunt,
Mense malas Maio nubere vulgus ait.
—If proverbs weigh with you, people say that May is the month to marry bad wives.
Ovid. Fast., 5, 489.

Si tibi cura mei, sit tibi cura tui.—If you have any care for me, take care of yourself.
Ovid. Heroides, 13, 166.

702b

Si tibi deficiant medici, medici tibi fiant
Hæc tria, mens hilaris, requies, moderata diæta.*
—If doctors fail you, let these three be your doctors : a cheerful mind, rest, and moderate diet. Maxims of School of Salerno.

Si tibi vis omnia subjicere, te subjice rationi.—If you wish to subject all things to yourself, subject yourself to reason.
Seneca. Ep. 37.

Si turpia sunt quæ facis, quid refert neminem scire, cum tu scias ?—If what you do is disgraceful, what matters it that no one knows, when you yourself know ? Seneca.

Si vis amari, ama.—Love, if you wish to be loved. Seneca. Epist., 9.

Si vis me flere, dolendum est
Primum ipse tibi.
—If you wish me to weep, you must first feel grief yourself.
Horace. De Arte Poetica, 102.

Si vis pacem, para bellum.—If you wish for peace, prepare for war.
Founded on "Qui desiderat," etc. (q.v.).

Si vis ut loquar, ipse tace —If you want me to speak, be silent yourself.
Martial. Epig , Book 5, 54, 7.

Sibi benefacit qui benefacit amico.—He does good to himself who does good to his friend. Erasmus. Fam. Col.

Sibi non cavere, et aliis consilium dare,
Stultum esse.
—It is the part of a fool to give counsel to others but himself not to be on his guard.
Phædrus. Fab., Book 1, 9, 1.

Sibi parat malum qui alteri parat.—He prepares evil for himself who prepares it for another. Pr.

Sibi quisque peccat.—It is against himself that everybody sins. Pr.

Sibi quivis
Speret idem ; sudet multum, frustraque laboret
Ausus idem.
—Anyone may hope the same thing possible to himself, and may sweat much and labour hopelessly when he attempts the same.
Horace. De Arte Poetica, 240.

Sibi uni fortunam debet.—He owes his fortune to himself alone. Pr.

Sic agitur censura, et sic exempla parantur ;
Cum vindex, alios quod monet, ipse facit.
—In this way is the censor's function fulfilled, and thus are examples set, when the vindicator (of morality) himself does that which he advises others to do.
Ovid. Fast., Book 6, 647.

---

* In a version given by Gabriel Harvey the second line is : "Haec tria, mens hilaris, labor, et moderata dieta" (These three, a cheerful mind, labour, and moderate diet).

703a

Sic ait, et dicto citius tumida æquora placat.—Thus he speaks, and by his word he quickly pacifies the raging waters.
Virgil. Æneid, 1,142.

Sic animum tempusque traho; meque ipse reduco
A contemplatu, summoveoque, mali.
—Thus I distract my mind and pass the time; and lead and force myself from the contemplation of woe. Ovid. Trist., 5, 7, 65.

Sic animus per se non quit sine corpore, et ipso
Esse homine illius quasi quod vas esse videtur.
—So the soul cannot exist separate from the body, and the man himself, whose body seems as it were the urn of the soul.
Lucretius. De Rer. Nat, 3, 553.

Sic cogitandum est tanquam aliquis in pectus intimum inspicere possit.—A man should so think that anyone might be allowed to look into his innermost heart. Seneca.

Sic cum inferiore vivas, quemadmodum tecum superiorem velles vivere.—So live with an inferior as you would wish a superior to live with you. Seneca. Ep. 47.

Sic ego nec sine te nec tecum vivere possum;
Et videor voti nescius esse mei.
—Thus I am not able to exist either with you or without you; and I seem not to know my own wishes. Ovid. Amorum, Bk. 3, 11, 39.

Sic erat in fatis.—It was so in the decrees of fate. Ovid. Fast, 1, 381.

Sic fac omnia . . . tanquam spectet aliquis.—Do all things as though someone were watching. Seneca.

Sic itur ad astra.—Thus is the journey to the stars accomplished
Virgil. Æneid, 9, 641.

Sic leve, sic parvum est, animum quod laudis avarum
Subruit ac reficit.
—So light and so small a thing it is which pulls down or restores a mind greedy of praise.
Horace. Ep., Book 2, 1, 179.

Sic me servavit Apollo.—Thus did Apollo preserve me. Horace. Sat., Book 1, 9, 78.

Sic natura jubet; velocius et citius nos
Corrumpunt vitiorum exempla domestica, magnis
Quum subeunt animos auctoribus.
—So nature ordains. Evil examples in the household corrupt us more readily and promptly, since they insinuate themselves into our minds with extreme force of authority.
Juvenal. Sat. 14, 31.

Sic ne perdiderit non cessat perdere lusor.—So the gambler, lest he should lose, does not stop losing. Ovid. Ars Amat., 1, 451.

Sic noctem patera, sic ducam carmine, donec
Injiciat radios in mea vina dies.
—So I will pass the night with the winecup and with song, until at length the light of day sheds its rays into my wine.
Propertius. Book 4, 6, 85.

703b

Sic omnes amor unus habet decernere ferro.—So the same love of deciding by warlike means possessed them all.
Virgil. Æneid, 12, 282.

Sic omnia fatis
In pejus ruere, et retro sublapsa referri.
—So by fate all things deteriorate rapidly, and have a tendency to retrograde.
Virgil. Georgics, 1, 199.

Sic passim.—So in various places.

Sic præsentibus utaris voluptatibus ut futuris non noceas.—So use the pleasures of the present time that you may not mar those that are to be. Seneca.

Sic quibus intumuit suffusa venter ab undas;
Quo plus sunt potæ plus sitiuntur aquæ.
—So with those who are swollen with dropsy, the more water they drink the more they thirst. Ovid. Fast., 1, 215.

Sic quisque pavendo
Dat vires famæ, nulloque auctore malorum,
Quæ finxere timent.
—So every person by his dread gives strength to rumour, and with no foundation for the existence of evils, they fear the things which they have imagined.
Lucanus. Pharsalia, Book 1, 480.

Sic transit gloria mundi.—So passes away the glory of the world.*

Sic utere tuo ut alieno ne lædas.—So employ your own property as not to injure that of another. Coke.

Sic visum Veneri; cui placet impares
Formas, atque animos sub juga ahenea
Sævo mittere cum joco.
—So it seems fit to Venus; to whom it is a delight to place, with cruel humour, incongruous forms and minds under her brazen yoke. Horace. Odes, Book 1, 33, 10.

Sic vita erat; facile omnes perferre ac pati.—Such was his life, gently to bear with and endure all men. Terence. Andria, i. 1, 35.

Sic vive cum hominibus tanquam Deus videat, et videt.—So live with men as if God saw you, and He does see you. Seneca. Ep. 10, 5.

Sic vos non vobis mellificatis apes.—So do you bees make your honey, not for yourselves.
Virgil. Lines on Bathyllus claiming the authorship of certain verses by Virgil.

Sicut dies juventutis tuæ, ita et senectutis.—As is the day of thy youth, so shall be that of thine old age.† Vulgate. Deut. 33, 25.

Sicut in stagno generantur vermes, sic in otioso malæ cogitationes. As worms are bred in a stagnant pool, so are evil thoughts in idleness. Pr.

* The sentence is used in the Service of the Pope's enthronement after the burning of flax. According to Zonaræ Annales (Basle, 1553), a similar rite was used in the triumphal processions of the Roman republic. See also "O quam cito."

† In Revised Version of Bible: "As thy days, so shall thy strength be."

Tempora labuntur, tacitisque senescimus annis;
Et fugiunt fræno non remorante dies.
—Time glides by, and we grow old with the silent years; and the days flee away with no restraining curb. Ovid. Fast., 6, 771.

Tempora mutantur et homines deteriorantur.—Times change and men deteriorate.
Gesta Romanorum (c. 1300). Morality to 10th Tale (Harl. MS. 7333).

Tempora mutantur, nos et mutamur in illis.*
—Times change and we change with them.
Quoted in Harrison's "Description of England" (1577) and in Lyly's "Euphues" (1579), where it is erroneously ascribed to Ovid.

Tempora sic fugiunt pariter, pariterque sequuntur,
Et nova sunt semper. Nam quod fuit ante, relictum est;
Fitque quod haud fuerat; momentaque cuncta novantur.
—Thus the days flee away in like manner, and in like manner follow each other, and are always new. For that which was previously is left behind, and that takes place which never was; and every moment is replaced by another. Ovid. Metam., 15, 183.

Tempore crevit amor, qui nunc est summus habendi.
—That love of possessing, now at its height, has grown with time.
Ovid. Fast., Book 1, 195.

* A second line is sometimes added "Astra regunt homines, sed regit astra Deus"—"The stars rule men, but God rules the stars" The two lines are printed as "common and very true words of wisdom" (dicteria) in the preface of Cellarius's Harmonia Macrocosmica, published at Amsterdam in 1661. The line appears in the form, "Tempora mutantur, et nos mutamur in illis," in Harrison's Description of England (1577), Bk. 3, ch. 3. This form involves a false quantity. Harrison describes it as "the saying of the poet"—See also "Omnia mutantur nos et mutamur in illis" dabo. Thuscus ille, qui Scaurum Mamercum, in quo Scaurorum familia extincta est, majestatis reum fecerat, homo quam improbi animi tam infelicis ingenii, cum hanc suasoriam declamaret, dixit Expectemus, si nihil aliud hoc effecturi, ne insolens barbarus dicat 'Veni, vidi, vici,'—cum hoc post multos Divus Julius, victo Pharnace, dixerit"

(But if you wish I will also give you an example of a blundering historian Thuscus, the same who charged Scaurus Mamercus [in whom the family of the Scauri became extinct] with treason, [this Thuscus] a man as vile in disposition as mean in intellect, when he declaimed this discourse [i e respecting an event in the reign of Xerxes] said "Let us expect that this, if nothing else, would be done, lest the haughty barbarian should say, Veni, vidi, vici"—whereas the divine Julius [Cæsar] said this many years after, when Pharnaces was conquered)

Seneca the Elder appears to have written this passage shortly before his death, about A D 32

According to Suetonius, at the public triumph after Julius Cæsar's victories in Pontus, the three words were displayed before Cæsar's title, "non acta belli significantem, sicut ceteri, sed celeriter confecti notam"—(not as being a record of the events of the war, as in other cases, but as an indication of the rapidity with which it was concluded)

Suetonius does not ascribe the words to Cæsar, but Plutarch, writing a few years later, in his Life of Julius Cæsar, says that after Cæsar had defeated Pharnaces at Zela, in Pontus, a kingdom of Asia Minor (B.C. 47), "in the account he gave to Amintus, one of his friends in Rome, of the rapidity and despatch with which he had gained his victory, he made use of three words only, 'I came, I saw, I conquered'" Plutarch adds to this that "their having all the same form and termination, in the Roman language, adds grace to their conciseness"

There is no authority for the frequent misstatement that the words were applied by Cæsar to his expedition to Britain (B C. 55), which was only partially successful.

Âme damnée.—A lost soul; a hopeless individual; a mere drudge or parasite.

Âme de boue.—A soul of mud.

* This phrase is applied in France to sayings or doings which are without motive. The expression is alleged to have arisen in the time of Francis I. when a suitor who had been "debouté" (from the Low Latin "debotare," to decide adversely) told the King by mistake that he had been "debotté." This led to the abolition of pleading in Latin, much to the displeasure of the barristers, who accordingly used this phrase to imply insufficient motive or reason.

† "Mettez, pour me jouer, vos flûtes mieux d'accord." (If you want to play a trick on me, put your flutes more in accord.)—Molière: L'Étourdi, i. 4 (1653).

Bouche va toujours.—The mouth is always going. Pr.

Boutez en avant.—Push forward.

Ca ira.—It will go on; it will speed.
French Revolution Song, 1789, or early 1790.‡

* "Après moi le déluge," an old French proverb, applied to spendthrifts, is in Dictionnaire des Proverbes, Paris, 1758. There is an old Greek proverb to the same effect, denounced by Cicero (De Finibus, 3, 19) as an inhuman and disgraceful saying. See "Ἐμοῦ θανόντος."

† In the French National Assembly, July 7, 1792, in response to an appeal from the Abbé Lamourette for unity, the Senators embraced each other, forgetting former grudges and disputes.

‡ Later in 1790 the words of the song were modified and became:

Ça ira,
La liberté s'établira,
Malgré les tyrans tout réussira.

Some say that Benj. Franklin used the words " Ça ira " as far back as 1776, when asked by Frenchmen for news of the American Revolution.

Debout les Morts!—Rise, the Dead!

It was stated in an official communication to the French Senate, June 16, 1916, that on April 8, 1915, Adjutant Péricard, after a furious encounter with Germans at Brulé wood, when the French trenches seemed full of dead and wounded soldiers, cried out in desperation "Debout, les morts!" Maurice Barrès, in an account of the incident (Nov., 1915) in the Echo de Paris, stated that Péricard seized an armful of grenades and that his appeal caused the wounded to rise, with the result that they drove back the Germans. "His sublime word of command had produced a resurrection." There is some doubt as to the actual words.

Vogue la galère.‡—Come what may (lit., On with the galley).

* The expression is found in Four Tracts on Political and Commercial Subjects (1766), by Josiah Tucker, D D, Dean of Gloucester (1711–1799) "A shopkeeper will never get the more custom by beating his customers, and what is true of a shopkeeper is true of a shopkeeping nation." (The words are said to have been used by Dr Tucker, in a sermon, some years before they appeared in print.) In Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations, Bk. 4, ch 7, Pt 3 (1776), the phrase appears thus. "To found a great empire for the sole purpose of raising up a nation of shopkeepers, may at first sight appear a project fit only for a nation of shopkeepers. It is, however, a project altogether unfit for a nation of shopkeepers, but extremely fit for a nation whose government is influenced by shopkeepers."—Speaking in the State House, Philadelphia, Aug 1, 1776, Samuel Adams said: "Had Great Britain a single eye to our advantage? A nation of shopkeepers is very seldom so disinterested"

† Founded upon an older saying, thus alluded to by Gower · Confessio Amantis, Bk. 4.

* The earliest reference appears in Richard the Redeles (1399), passus 3, l. 144, where it is suggested that "by the lawe of Lydford" the fashionable fops of Richard II.'s time, who forestalled their incomes and spent more than their possessions were worth on jewellery and clothing, ought to thrive ill.

† The saying is attributed to the Spanish commander, Gonsalvo Fernandez de Cordova, d. 1515; but it appears in Rabelais, Gargantua, 1, 43 (1534) as an old-established military principle "Always leave all the doors and roads open to your enemies, and even make them a bridge of silver in order for them to cross" See also under "Waifs and Strays," p. 487a, where it will be seen that the origin of the phrase is found in Plutarch.

Mind your P's and Q's.

Said to be due to the old custom of hanging up a slate in the tavern with P and Q (for pints and quarts), under which were written the names of customers and ticks for the number of "P's and Q's." Another explanation is that the expression referred to "toupées" (artificial locks of hair) and "queues" (tails). But see also the lines from S Rowlands' "Four Knaves" (c. 1609)·

Bring in a quart of malligo, right true,
And looke, you rogue, that it be pee and kew

A further explanation (fanciful) is that "p's" and "q's" in type are apt to be confused by compositors, especially on account of occupying adjoining compartments in the printer's "case."

St. Matthy [Feb 24], all the year goes by. (R.)

Ray says "Because in Leap-year the supernumerary day is then intercalated." The additional day in Leap-year was, under the Roman system, as introduced by Julius Cæsar, inserted between Feb 24 and Feb 25, the 25th being the 6th of the Kalends of March. The inserted day was called "bis-sexto calendas," whence the Latin "Bissextile." Until the introduction of New Style (1752), the legal year in England began on March 25.

St. Valentine [Feb. 14], set thy hopper by mine. (R.)

Vice should not correct sin.—Quoted as a "just proverb," by Wm Penn, "Reflexions and Maxims," 46 (1693).

* Bacon uses a similar maxim in several forms. In his Essay on "Seditions," he has it: "And money is like muck, not good except it be spread."

* As to all these dates, it must be remembered that the change of style put them forward ten days in the season, thus altering the application of the proverbs.
