

UNIVERSAL LIBRARY

OU_214221

UNIVERSAL LIBRARY

214221

OSMANIA UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

Call No. 894.3/443H ^{Vol 8} Serial No. 3,472

Author F J W Cobb

Title History of the new poetry

This book should be returned on or before the date last marked below

لِلّٰهِ كُنُوزٌ تَحْتَ الْعَرْشِ مَقَابِلَ حُجُبِ السُّعُرِ

'God hath Treasuries aneath the Throne, the Keys whereof are the Tongues of the Poets.'

Hadis-r Sherif.

A HISTORY OF OTTOMAN POETRY

BY

THE LATE

E. J. W. GIBB, M. R. A.S.

VOLUME V

EDITED BY

EDWARD G. BROWNE, M. A., M. B.,

SIR THOMAS ADAMS' PROFESSOR OF ARABIC AND FELLOW OF PEMBROKE
COLLEGE IN THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE; FELLOW OF THE BRITISH ACADEMY.

LONDON
LUZAC & CO., GREAT RUSSELL STREET
1907

PRINTED BY E. J. BRILL, LEYDEN.

EDITOR'S PREFACE.

The publication of this fifth volume of the History of Ottoman Poetry brings to a close the more essential part of the obligation which I undertook, at the wish of the mother and the widow of my late friend, Mr. E. J. W. Gibb, now nearly six years ago, to edit and secure the publication of the great and masterly work to which his too brief life was devoted. All that he wrote is now accessible to the Orientalist, the scholar, the student of literary history and the general reader. Whatever else may be alleged against the Ottoman Turks, it can never again be asserted by the candid and impartial reader that they arc, or ever have been, since their first appearance on the stage of history in the thirteenth century, indifferent to literature. On the contrary, their fault in our own days, as it seems to me, is that they pay too much attention to literature, and expect from it (I speak now especially of the Modern School, with the protagonists of which the present volume deals) a salvation and regeneration which it cannot give. I have lately been looking with some attention into the mass of Turkish tracts and pamphlets which belonged to my late friend, and which were, with other literary materials, placed at my disposal by Mrs. E. J. W. Gibb, and nothing connected with them has impressed me more than the glorification of Turkish men of letters, especially of Ziya Pasha, Shinasi, Kemal

Bey, Ekrem Bey, Mu'allim Najf, 'Abdu'l-Haqq Hamid Bey and others of the modern leaders of Ottoman literature, and the minute and almost meticulous criticisms of their works' which form so considerable a proportions of their contents. Again and again I have exclaimed to myself, "Would that the Turks had a literature comparable in value to those of the Arabs and Persians, and would that the Arabs and Persians had cultivated the art of literary criticism to a degree approaching that of the Ottoman Turks!"

It is, as I observed in the preface to the last volume (p. IX), a matter for profound regret that Gibb did not live to complete his account of the Modern School, with which he had a real sympathy, and for which he entertained a genuine admiration such as can hardly be found since his death outside Turkey. For this modern Ottoman literature, so far as Europe is concerned, is a kind of No Man's Land. The Orientalist by profession is disinclined to devote much time or labour to a literature which is not only quite modern but quasi-European, while the student of modern literary movements rarely possesses a sufficient knowledge of a language which, even in the simpler forms affected by the New School of Ottoman writers, remains more difficult than Arabic or Persian. Yet I begin to see (what I at first was disposed to doubt) that this modern Turkish literature has real value and merit; and, though I cannot myself hope to find leisure to exploit and appreciate it, I feel compelled to express an earnest hope that some other Turkish scholar may arise in Western Europe who will once and for all write its history and appraise its value.

Meanwhile I am still hopeful that Gibb's unfinished work may be completed by a very able Turkish man of letters, whose name I am not now at liberty to mention, and who has for some time been engaged on this work. Personally acquainted with most of the leading spirits of the New School, knowing English well and French still better, and animated by a genuine enthusiasm for his work, he has already surveyed a large portion of the field which Gibb did not live to cultivate. Yet, owing to the atmosphere of suspicion which now broods over Constantinople, and, in particular, the disfavour with which the political ideas of the "Young Turks" (to whose ranks most of the adherents of the New School of Literature belong) are regarded, his task is one of extreme difficulty, since even the works of Kemal Bey, the brightest light of that school while he lived, are banned by the Government and can hardly be seen in Constantinople. That this supplement will be finished in time I have little doubt, but the date of its completion remains so uncertain that it seemed to me best to complete Gibb's work without further delay by publishing the three chapters which he had written on the Modern School, together with the very full and careful Indices prepared by my friend and colleague Mr. R. A. Nicholson; to follow up this fifth volume with a sixth containing the Turkish texts of all the poems translated by Gibb; and to add later the seventh volume containing my Turkish collaborator's supplement, should this be finished and safely reach my hands. The sixth volume, containing the Turkish texts, is, I may add, complete in manuscript, and is now in the press, whence 112 pages of it have already been received in type, so that, if all goes well, it should be published next year. I am glad to say that ultimately, after many a laborious search through the manuscripts, printed books and note-books of my late friend, I have succeeded in recovering the original texts of all the translations contained in these volumes without exception.

My labours are therefore almost finished, and I am thankful that this is so, and that I have so nearly fulfilled the arduous duty which I undertook in December, 1901. My chief regret is that my late friend's mother did not live to see the accomplishment of the work in which she took so profound and affectionate an interest; my chief satisfaction, that I have been enabled to render to a great and single-minded scholar, whose friendship and sympathy I shall ever remember with gratitude and pleasure, that service which of all others he would have valued most.

VIII

August 1, 1907.

EDWARD G. BROWNE.

The Modern School of Ottoman Poetry, that in which the inspiring genius is no longer of the East, but of Western Europe, falls into two periods, the one of Preparation, the other of Accomplishment. The first begins in 1275 (1859) with the publication of Shinasf Efendi's Translations from the French poets; the second in 1296 (1879) with the appearance of Hamid Bey's Sahra.

CHAPTER I.

THE DAWN OF A NEW ERA.

1275—1296 (1859—1879).

We have now to tell the story of a great awakening. We have traced the course of poetic literature amongst the Ottoman Turks during five centuries and a half. We have learned how, throughout this long period, no voice has ever reached it from outside the narrow school where it was reared; how, Persian in its inception, Persian in substance it has remained down to the very end, driven back after a blind struggle to win free, baffled and helpless into the stagnant swamp of a dead culture. But now all is on the verge of change; Asia is on the point of giving place to Europe, and the tradition of ages is about to become a memory of the past. A voice from the Western world rings through the Orient skies like the trumpet-blast of Israfil; and lo, the muse of Turkey wakes from her death-like trance, and all the land is jubilant with life and song, for a new heaven and a new earth are made visible before the eyes of men. Now for the first time the ears of the people are opened to hear the speech of hill and valley, and their eyes unsealed to read the message of cloud and wave. The heavy fetters of secular tradition and convention are broken and cast away, and the poet finds himself at last a free man, free to seek his inspiration where he will, free to voice what is within him as he pleases.

The time is not yet come when it is possible fully and adequately to write the history of this Renaissance. It has shot up and burst into glorious flower under our very eyes. We are too near to the great events that have brought it about to see these in true perspective; we cannot justly determine the relative importance of mighty changes effected while we are looking on. Moreover, we are still, perhaps, somewhat bewildered and dazed by the suddenness and completeness of the revolution, while even were it otherwise, the materials necessary to write a satisfactory account of its development are not yet available. The chief actors have been, as we shall see, more or less intimately concerned in the demand for political reform that has sprung up in the newly-awakened nation, and such accounts of them and their work as have yet appeared have been so mutilated and travestied by the jealous suspicion of the official censor as to be well nigh useless. I can, therefore, in the following chapters attempt no more than to outline the story of this great literary revival. To my successors must be left the task of producing the finished picture. More remote from the actual crisis and with ampler materials at their disposal; they will doubtless be able not only to complete, but in many points to correct, my sketch.

It took the poets twenty years to attain that freedom of which I have spoken; and it is to the consideration of these twenty years during which the way was being prepared that I propose to devote the present chapter. During these two decades, from 1859 to 1879, the Europeanising movement initiated by Selim the Martyr and fostered by Mahmud the Reformer and his son ^cAbd-ul-Mejid, was becoming more than a mere external matter modifying the machinery of the administration and revolutionising the titles and costumes of the official world; it was striking its roots beneath the surface and beginning to exercise a powerful influence on the ideas and opinions of the more thoughtful of the people. The closer connection between Turkey and the Western states, brought about by political and commercial relations and the greater facilities of communication, naturally gave rise amongst intelligent Ottomans to a desire to form some acquaintance with a civilisation which enabled its possessors to achieve such brilliant success in so many diverse directions. This in its turn led men to undertake the study of the French language as the key to this new treasure-house of knowledge. And here we strike the true fountain head of all the development that follows. From the moment when the study of a Western language became general, transformation of the whole intellectual outlook was inevitable, and the only question remaining was when and how this should be accomplished.

The admission of the French language into the educational curriculum is the most revolutionary measure in the history of Ottoman culture. There has been nothing in any way resembling it in the past. This culture was, so to speak, born and reared in that of Persia; it did not adopt this latter, but grew up encompassed by it, unconscious of the existence of any other, so that it has sometimes been regarded, and not altogether unfairly, rather as a branch thereof than as an independent growth. The passage from one Persianist school to another has marked no revolution, but only the several steps in a process of development, or, if the word be preferred, of decline. The Romanticist revolt effected no radical or permanent change, but, for lack of guiding principle, soon spent itself, so that nothing was left but to fall back into the slough of Persianism. But now for the first time an entirely new world of ideas is opened out before the Ottoman mind; and with that genius for assimilation which, as we have so often noticed, is characteristic of the race, this new revelation is made part and parcel of the intellectual life, so that to the Turk of to-day the ghazels of 'Arif Hikmet and his school have come to seem as remote as do the poems of Gower or Occleve to ourselves.

Even when regarded from the literary side alone, the results of this measure have been stupendous. The hoary traditions of five hundred and fifty years, traditions which appeared ineradicably interwoven with the genius of the people, have been all reversed; what were formerly looked upon as merits are now held for faults, and what were once held for faults are now looked upon as merits. Not only have the canons of taste been revolutionised, but the whole conception of poetry has become absolutely changed. In the old time poetry was before all things an art, and whosoever knew and followed the rules of that art was called a poet; but he who would earn such title now must be the interpreter of the heart of man. In prose the change has been as complete and came earlier; while two entirely new forms of literature, the drama and the novel, the very names of which were unknown before, have been introduced and are now fully naturalised.

But the effects of the new education have been by no means confined to literature; the force of the revolution it produced has been felt all along the intellectual line, notably in science and in politics. Indeed, in the earlier years of 'Abdul-Mejid's reign, the few who then undertook the study of French did so almost exclusively for purposes of diplomacy or science, the literary possibilities it opened out being still, except in two memorable instances, practically ignored.

Hence it comes that the earlier historical and scientific treatises of Jevdet and Munif Pashas, produced about the time of the accession of 'Abd-ul-'Aziz, are written with modern knowledge but in the old style. In science, the new learning has transported Turkey from the middle ages to the present day; in politics, it has created the 'Young Turkey' party. This party, whose aims are liberty and progress, was called into existence by the same men who founded the new literature, and the stories of the two are closely linked together. So swiftly grew the demand for political reform which it evoked among the people, and so powerful did this become, that hardly a dozen years had passed ere the Sultan was forced to proclaim the Constitution. And although this Constitution is for the time being in abeyance, suppressed by the present reactionary regime, it is still theoretically the only lawful form of government in Turkey.

The new culture is spoken of by the Turks as 'gharbi' that is 'western' or 'occidental', and is contrasted with the 'sharqi', that is the 'eastern' or 'oriental'. As a matter of fact it is borrowed almost exclusively from France, the other western countries, England, Germany, Italy etc., having contributed little or nothing. Till about the middle of the nineteenth century the Turks who knew French were few and far between; but nowadays every person, man or woman, with any pretensions to education, knows something of the language and can speak and read it with more or less facility. An immense number of works, both literary and scientific, have of late years been translated from French into Turkish, thus enabling even those whose knowledge of the former language is defective to form some conception of 'western' ideas. French philosophers, French dramatists, French novelists, French poets, are now the models of the Turkish man of letters; indeed we might almost say that what Persia was to the Ottomans of bygone years France is to their descendants of to-day. The reason why France, or rather the French language and literature, occupy this position of overwhelming predominance may be found in the fact that French, being the language of diplomacy, would naturally have the greatest claim on officials such as were the first Turks who turned their attention to things western. The French language would thus get a start; the riches which, as was soon discovered, it enshrines would commend it to the scholarly, while its great utility as a lingua franca would readily be appreciated by all.

The first clear note of the revolution was not struck till 1859, but circumstances had for long been preparing the way for the coming change. We have seen how poetry was in a desperate plight, without compass and without rudder, tossed to and fro between Persianism and Romanticism, in sore need of some guiding light. The changes introduced during the last fifty years had gradually accustomed men's minds to the once distasteful idea of adopting anything European; the suspicion born of ignorance had now in great measure passed away. Then the foundation of the Enjumen-i Danish a few years earlier showed that there was some stir in the intellectual world; the literary revival could not therefore be far behind. Thus all was ready; the need was great, the remedy at hand; nothing was wanting but the man who could apply it.

Meanwhile he and his two lieutenants had been quietly preparing themselves for their great work. These three men — and their names are amongst the most illustrious in the history of modern Turkey — are Shinasf Efendi, Kemal Bey and Ziya Pasha. It is primarily to these three that the transformation of Ottoman literature and the creation of the Young Turkey party alike are due. In the following chapters we shall consider the work of each of these three reformers in some detail, but a few words are necessary here to indicate the position in which they stand in relation to the new movement as a whole.

After studying in Paris, Shinasi returned to Constantinople, and there in the year 1859 he published a small volume of translations from various French poets. This was the first translation of a purely literary character ever made from a Western language into Turkish; and although it had little immediate effect, its appearance marks an epoch in Ottoman literature. By a strange coincidence this little book appeared in the same year in which died 'Arif Hikmet, the last poet of eminence of the Old School. Of much more immediate importance was the newspaper — the first non-official journal in Turkey — which Shinasf established in the following year, and in which he endeavoured to promote the great end he had in view. This end was briefly to approximate, as closely as might be, the intellectual life of Turkey to that of the Western nations. To effect this the first thing needful was obviously so to modify the literary language as to render it an adequate medium for the expression of the new and alien ideas which it was sought to naturalise. This was the chief part of Shinasfs work, and so successful was he here that his immediate heirs have been able from the foundations which he laid to elaborate a literary, idiom little inferior in precision and directness to its western prototype. The remodelling of the language, however, was but a means to an end, so, while Shinasi devoted much thought and attention to all matters bearing thereon, he was careful to do what he could towards educating the people by publishing in his paper articles dealing with a great variety of scientific and social questions treated from a modern European point of view. Even politics were discussed with a certain degree of freedom, as under the easy-going regime of those days writers enjoyed a considerable amount of liberty.

About two years after Shinasi had started his journalistic work he was joined by Namiq Kemal, then a young man of some twenty summers. This young mat), who was destined to develop into one of the most brilliant writers Turkey has ever known, at once became the devoted disciple of Shinasi, whose aims and principles he adopted with enthusiasm, and whose ideals he eventually realised with a brilliancy and power far beyond anything which the master himself could ever have achieved. Indeed, when Kemal Bey died in 1888, at a comparatively early age, he left Ottoman prose, which he had found a chaotic welter, without rule or guiding principle, a powerful and delicate instrument capable of expressing with precision, force and grace the manifold complexity of modern thought.

While Shinasi was still maturing his schemes and Kemal was yet a lad in the provinces writing reams of verses in imitation of Nef'i and Fehim, the third of the group, Ziya, then a secretary in the Palace, was independently and entirely on his own account, working in the same direction, translating French classics and constructing for himself a Turkish prose style modelled thereupon. Later on he joined forces with Shinasi and Kemal, and in 1867, when his quarrel with 'Ali Pasha, the all-powerful vezir of 'Abd-ul-'Aziz, made it inexpedient for him to remain in Constantinople, he accepted the invitation of the Egyptian prince, Mustafa Fazil Pasha, to join him in Europe, and along with Kemal and some others of the Young Turkey leaders he fled from his native country. The sojourn of these reformers in the West, which lasted till the death of 'Ali Pasha some four years later, had naturally considerable influence in the development of their ideas both literary and political. Thus the aims of the party grew more precise; a definite demand for constitutional and responsible government took the place of the previous somewhat vague cry for reform, and a newspaper was established in which Kemal and Ziya could not only give expression to their views and aspirations but continue to practise that art of the literary craftsman which to them was hardly less dear.

It is then to the labours of these three men that the creation of modern Ottoman prose is due. The application of the new principles to poetry does not come till later, not till Hamid Bey writes his Sahra. It is with the appearance of this epoch-making booklet in 1879 that the true Modern School of Ottoman poetry begins. Shinasi, Kemal and Ziya did indeed all write poetry, the last two, and particularly Kemal, being further poets of great merit and distinction. But partly because their chief aim was utilitarian, and partly because the bent of their genius lay rather towards prose than poetry, they did not bestow the same attention on the latter. Of the three, Kemal alone lived to profit by the change; for Shinasi was dead and Ziya dragging out the last year or two of his life in virtual exile at Adana, when Hamid Bey inaugurated the new poetry of Turkey. The revelation came too late for them; but Kemal at once saw the potentialities it enshrined and applied himself to its cultivation with the splendid success that attended his every literary effort. It is because of his great success in the new poetry that I have in the following pages placed him amongst the poets of the true Modern School rather than alongside of his colleagues Shinasi and Ziya.

The typical poetry of the twenty years under review finds its best exponent in Ziya, Shinasis work in verse being small in extent and of comparatively little moment. The distinguishing feature of this typical poetry is a combination of the modern spirit with the traditional machinery. The range of subject remains practically the same, the external form is wholly unaltered, but the point of view has changed. The poet looks at much the same things as did his ancestors, and speaks of them in much the same way, but he sees them in a new light and approaches them from a different direction. His knowledge, too, of things in general has grown more mature, so that if he still sometimes speaks about the Seven Spheres, he does so merely as a figure of speech, not because he is in any way ignorant of the nature of the solar system.

But although the more truly representative of its time and, as leading directly to the coming development, infinitely the more important, the poetry of this type is far from forming the bulk of the verse now produced. Most of the poets during these twenty years continued to work upon the lines of the Persianist reaction that had set in during the preceding Period. Nef'i is still on the whole the favourite model; but the poets are eclectic, and no single style is really predominant. The work they produced is often good, and, by the increased clearness and accuracy in thought which it occasionally displays, shows that the writers were not wholly insensible to the influences of the time; but its interest is little more than that of a survival, as the true voice of the age speaks elsewhere. None the less it is not without a certain pathos; for it is the swan-song of the old Oriental genius as it passes away before the all-conquering spirit of the west.

As I have already said, the study of French led to the introduction into Ottoman literature of two absolutely new forms, the novel and the drama. The first of these has no connection with poetry, and so perhaps lies somewhat outside our sphere; but as its appearance is an interesting event in the history of Turkish literature, it may be permissible to say a few passing words concerning it. Up till now there have been no true novels, nothing but some romances of the Arabian Nights type, the best known of which are the Qirq Vezir or Forty Vezirs,¹ the ‘Ibret-numa, or Monitor, of Larni^{of, 2} and the Mukhayyalat, or Phantasms, of ‘Ali ‘Aziz.³ In 1279 (1862) Yusuf Kamil Pasha published in a very graceful though naturally old-fashioned style a translation of Fenelon's Telemaque. This was the first western work of fiction ever turned into Turkish. A few years later, when the number of those who knew the language increased, there began a rush of translations of novels of every description which continues unabated down to the present day, the result being that modern French fiction is now very fairly represented in Turkish. The Turks had of course no name for compositions of this kind, so they have adopted the French term and call a novel, whether original or translated, a 'roman.' These French novels represent of course a manner of life foreign to Turkey; but it was not long before Ahmed Midhat Efendi, an eminent man of letters, conceived the idea of writing similar stories which should depict local life and manners. So in 1287 (1870-1) he began to publish a series of novelettes, under the collective title of Leta'if-i Riwayat or Pleasant Tales,

1 This collection of tales, the earliest Turkish version of which is at least as old as the time of Murad II, was translated and published by me in 1886, under the title of the 'History of the Forty Vezirs'. Nothing is known of the author or compiler, who is variously styled Sheykh-zade and Ahmed-i Misri, i. e. Ahmed the Egyptian (or Cairene), both perhaps names of a single individual. The book is generally called Qirq Vezir Ta'rikhi 'the History of the Forty Vezirs'; its correct title is Hikayetu-Erba‘ina Sabdhan ve Mesa'an, 'The Story of the Forty Morns and Eves.'

² This is Lami‘i the Suleymanic poet an account of whom is given in vol. iii, ch. 2.

³ Giridli ‘Alf ‘Aziz, or ‘Ali ‘Aziz the Cretan, died in 1213 (1798-9). His Mukhayyalat consists of three 'Phantasms', one of which was translated and published by me in 1884, under the title of 'The Story of Jewad'.

which deal for the most part with Ottoman subjects, and in so doing he laid the foundation of the now flourishing branch of literature known as the 'milli roman' or 'national novel'.

The drama, though at first exclusively and always more generally written in prose, was chosen by Hamid Bey as the form into which to cast some of the most noble of his poems, and therefore concerns us more closely than does the novel. The rise of the Ottoman drama proceeded naturally enough along the same lines as the rise of the Ottoman novel. In 1286 (1869—70) the celebrated Ahmed Vefi'q Pasha published translations of three of Moliere's comedies, namely 'George Dandin', 'Le Medecin malgre Lui', and 'Le Manage Force'. In these translations, which are made with great ability and much spirit, the Pasha very cleverly adapted the scenes to Eastern life by here and there slightly modifying an incident or a phrase, and by re-christening the characters with Turkish or Levantine names. Thus George Dandin appears as a Greek with the name Yorgi Dandini; Sganarelle, the doctor by constraint, becomes the Turkish peasant 'Iwaz; while the Sganarelle of the forced marriage figures as 'Iwaz Agha. These three plays, which are entitled Yorgi Dandini, Zoraki Tabib, and Zor Nikahi respectively, were shortly afterwards produced upon the stage, their representation being the first true dramatic performance ever given in Turkish. The expenses of their production were defrayed by a subscription raised amongst those Turks interested in literature and culture; and notwithstanding the inevitable shortcomings of the Turco-Armenian troupe charged with the representation, the performances were very highly appreciated. Later on a permanent theatre for the representation of Turkish plays was established at Gedik Pasha in Stamboul, and this continued to be the chief temple of the Ottoman drama till its destruction by fire some years ago.

In 1288 (1871—2), two years after the appearance of Vefi'q Pasha's translations of Moliere, Ebu-z-Ziya Tevfik Bey, in collaboration with Kemal Bey (whose name, however, did not appear) published the first original Turkish drama. This was not a comedy like Vefi'q's translations, but a tragedy having for title Ejel-i Qaza or 'The Fated Doom'.

Ebu-z-Ziya Tevfik Bey, who is thus closely connected with the introduction of the drama into Ottoman literature, has frequently been mentioned in the course of our History. Although not a poet, this scholarly and accomplished gentleman, with whom I have the pleasure of being personally acquainted, has played so great a part in the new literary movement and rendered such important services to its development, that any sketch thereof, however fragmentary, would be grievously defective were his labours passed over unrecognised. Early associated with Kemal Bey in journalistic work, Tevfik Bey soon became the intimate friend and warm admirer of that great reformer, and about 1874—5, when Sultan 'Abd-ul-'Azi'z, alarmed at the popularity of the latter, as shown by the enthusiastic reception of his play 'The Fatherland',¹ swept down upon the little group of pioneers and summarily banished them to different corners of the Empire, Tevfik Bey was hurried off, an exile to the island of Rhodes. There he employed his time in the compilation of a work which has had a great and beneficial influence on the later literature. This work, the first of its kind in Turkish, has often been referred to in the preceding chapters. It is called Numune-i Edebiyyat-i 'Osmaniyya or Specimens of Ottoman Literature, and consists of a series of selected extracts from the works of the most remarkable Ottoman prose writers, beginning at the fifteenth century.² These selections have been carefully made, partly with the view of showing the development of Ottoman prose, but chiefly in order to supply the young literary aspirant with a series of models which he may study with real advantage. This being the case, the pretentious and wilfully obscure writers of the old time are naturally conspicuous by their absence; there is no word from the Humayun-Name or the Shefiq-Name, while Nergisf and Veysi, those paragons of the Persianists, are mentioned only to be condemned. For not the least valuable and certainly the most interesting feature of the work is a preface and series of critical articles on the authors represented, contributed by the compiler himself. In these, which form the first serious attempt at literary criticism in Turkish, and which are written in a style noteworthy not only for its originality but for its vigour and directness, Tevfik Bey succeeds in compelling the attention of his readers by the new light in which he presents the literature of his country and by the alternately luminous and suggestive character of his remarks. This work, the preface of which is dated from the Knights' Castle in Rhodes, where the author was imprisoned, was first published in 1296 (1879); it has passed through several editions, each in one way or other an improvement on its predecessor.

¹ Watan, yakhod Silistre. The first edition was published in 1289(1872—3).

² In the last edition, that of 1308, the authors represented are: Sindh

In 1299 (1881) Tevfik Rey, who, along with his colleagues, had been recalled from exile by Murad V during his brief reign, established in Galata a printing-press which very soon gained a high and deserved reputation. The founder, who is a man of cultivated and refined taste, with a keen appreciation of all that is artistic, has from the outset taken the greatest interest in the productions of his establishment, sparing neither labour nor expense in his efforts to ensure that these shall be in all ways worthy examples of the typographic art. Nor has his devotion been unrewarded; some of the works issued from this press afford the finest examples in existence of printing in the Oriental characters, surpassing anything hitherto produced either in Europe or in the East.

Pasha, Fuzuli, Qochi Bey, Na'ima, Nedim, Kani, Haqqi Pasha, Qoja Segban-Bashi, Muterjim 'Asim, 'Akif Pasha, Reshid Pasha, Fu'ad Pasha, Edhem Pertev Pasha, Shinasi, Ziya Pasha, Sa'd-ullah Pasha, and Kemal.

But beauty of external form has not been the only, or even the chief, concern of Tevfik Bey; in all his publications he has kept steadily in view that great aim of his party, the education of the people. The Mejmu'a-i Ebu-z-Ziya, or Ebu-z-Ziya's Magazine, contains a vast number of useful and instructive articles on an infinity of subjects; the Kutub-Khane-i Ebu-z-Ziya, or Ebu-z-Ziya's Library, is a series of valuable books comprising new editions of rare and interesting old works, reprints of many of the less accessible writings of the great modern authors, as well as original treatises dealing with matters historical, literary and scientific; while the Lughat-i Ebu-z-Ziya, or Ebu-z-Ziya's Dictionary, is in some respects the best Turkish dictionary yet published, and certainly the most interesting, containing, as it does, a wealth of quotations from standard authors of all periods illustrating the various uses of the words explained and the changes in signification which these have undergone. These are but a few of the many works which Ebu-z-Ziya Tevfik Bey has printed and published — and often himself written or at least edited — and by means of which he has in his own way done as much as any one man to promote the cause of the new learning.

Ebu-z-Ziya's, though the most artistic and most interesting, was but one of several printing establishments that were started in the capital about this time. At first the only institution of the kind had been the Imperial Printing-Office; but later on, when semi-official and private newspapers were established, each of these had its own press, at which it became the practice to print books either on account of the proprietor of the paper, or, as a matter of business, for private persons. Such books were generally issued at a comparatively low price, and their cheapness, combined with the facility of obtaining them, soon began to develop a taste for reading among the public, so that M. Belin, writing of the position of letters in Turkey in 1866, speaks of the numerous reading-rooms and literary societies which were then being established both in Constantinople and in the provinces. It was not till some years after this that printing-presses wholly unconnected with any newspaper and destined solely for the production of books were established. But between 1296 and 1299 (1879—81) a considerable number of such were founded, one of the earliest and most important being that of the Armenian Mihran Efendi, from which many valuable and creditably executed works have issued. Most of the founders of these presses are, like Tevfiq Bey and Mihran Efendi, publishers as well as printers; but so far there were no publishers who were not printers.

Thus during these twenty years which we have been considering the moral and intellectual condition of Turkey was being profoundly modified; and although the full effects of the great change then being prepared have not yet appeared, the signs of it are visible on every hand. A new conception of Duty has arisen. In old times religion was all in all. The Turk never thought of himself as a Turk; he was a Musulman, and that was enough. The idea of nationality hardly existed for him. When he went forth to war, it was not that he might exalt the glory or extend the boundaries of 'Turkey', for which indeed, strictly speaking, he had not even a name; when not from mere love of conquest, his military expeditions were undertaken that infidel or heretic might be brought into obedience to the Servants of God. Of patriotism, as the West understands it, he knew absolutely nothing; he would no more have thought, as some one has said, of dying for his country than of dying for his meridian of longitude.

But now this too is changed, and no word is dearer or more sacred to the modern Turk than that which has been taken to stand for 'Fatherland*'. Here again we come upon the hand of Kemal Bey; till his time the word 'watan' had been without associations and comparatively seldom used; but when he raised it from a vague signification hovering between 'home' and 'birthplace' to be the equivalent of the French 'patrie', it became a sacred watchword in the hearts as on the lips of men. Similarly, another word, 'millet', which used to mean a religious community, such as the Roman Catholic or the self-styled 'orthodox' Greek, has been made to do duty as representative of 'the nation' or 'the people' in the modern European acceptations of these terms. That is to say, 'millet' now means either one individual nation among the family of the nations, or the mass of the community in contradistinction to the sovereign and his court, both of which conceptions are new in Turkey. Yet another word which at this time acquired a new and precious significance, and which forms with 'watan' and 'millet' the sacred triad of the Ottoman patriot of to-day, is 'hurriyyet', that is 'liberty' or 'freedom.'

The Fatherland, the Nation, Liberty, — these three words are the legend on the banner of Young Turkey, and the ideas they represent form the very core of the true and living faith of the regenerated people. This faith, which is now that of practically the whole of the educated portion of the younger generation, and which counts amongst its already mighty army of martyrs some of the very noblest of the race, is the most momentous and in effect far-reaching of the many changes born at this cataclysmic time. Aided by the general spread of education among both sexes and all classes, it has relegated to the background the old dogmatic Muhammedanism, just as in Western Europe the old dogmatic Christianity has been rudely shaken by the popularisation of science and the wide diffusion of all kinds of knowledge. The modern Turkish gentleman still indeed calls himself a Muhammedan, but there is little difference between his attitude towards Islam and that of the typical European scholar of to-day towards Christianity.

In our own immediate subject, a notable, though inevitable result of this has been the deposition of the ^ʿulema from their old position of leaders and arbiters of literature. Under the old system, as we have abundantly seen, by virtue of their being generally the most highly educated members of the community, these jurists had always taken a foremost position in every matter connected with learning or culture. But any body at all resembling a priestly caste — though it be as remotely as the ^ʿulema — seems by a law of nature ever to be reactionary. So the ^ʿulema found no place in their curriculum for the new learning; they could not or would not adapt themselves to the altered condition of affairs, and therefore to-day they are held of no account, while their former place is taken by men of the world, — the diplomatist, the publicist, the journalist.

This period of twenty years is thus the turning-point in the evolution of the new civilisation of Turkey; all that has gone before since the days of the martyred Selim has been leading up to the revolution now accomplished, what follows is its development. In 1859 the Turks were still practically a medieval community; in 1879 they had become a modern nation. Shinasi, Kemal and Ziya had pointed out the way that they should go; the heroic though unavailing struggle against the hordes of Russia had fanned into white heat the nascent flame of patriotism; the triumph of the constitutional party and the creation of an Ottoman Parliament had come the seeming crown and accomplishment of men's dreams of liberty. For the moment all boded fairer for the moral and intellectual advancement of the Turkish people than ever before in the course of their long history.

CHAPTER II.

SHINASI EFENDI.

1242—1288 (1826-7—1871).

Ibrahim Shinasi Efendi, the master who laid the foundations of the new learning, was born in the Top-Khane division of Constantinople in 1242 (1826—7). When little more than a year old he lost his father, a captain in the artillery, who was killed at the defence of Shumla against the Russians in 1828. The child was brought up by some of his mother's relatives, the deceased officer, who was a native of Boli in Asia Minor, having probably no kinsfolk in the capital. After attending the parish school, Shinasi entered the office of the Imperial Arsenal, where he formed a friendship with an elderly and learned clerk named Ibrahim Efendi, with whose assistance he acquired the Arabic and Persian tongues, and at whose suggestion he committed to memory more than half of the huge Arabic dictionary called the Qamus. Amongst the European officers at this time employed in the Arsenal was a certain Chateaufort, who afterwards adopted Islam and became known as Reshad Bey. From him Shinasi received some lessons in the French language, which created in him a great desire to become more intimately acquainted with the culture and civilisation of the West. His opportunity was not long in coming, for shortly afterwards he heard that the authorities were looking for a young man of his own age — some seventeen years — who might proceed to Europe for the purpose of studying certain branches of western science. Shinasis difficulty was how to bring himself under notice, for, being of a shy and retiring disposition, he had always avoided paying court to the great, and consequently was without a patron to push his interests. His friend Reshad Bey came to his assistance, and advised him to apply directly to Fethi Pasha the governor of the arsenal, suggesting to him at the same time how and when he should do this.

So in conformity with Reshad's plan, one day when Sultan 'Abd-ul-Mejid was visiting the Arsenal, and Fethf Pasha was standing in the exercising-ground in full view of the Imperial Kiosque, Shinasi stepped forward, and, having saluted the governor in military fashion, represented how he had studied hard, and, besides acquiring Arabic and Persian, had learned a little French, and how it would be a good and advantageous thing to select him to be sent to Europe. The naivete of the young man's speech pleased the Pasha, who promised to find an opportunity to lay his case before the Sultan. So when shortly afterwards Fethi Pasha was summoned into the Imperial presence, 'Abd-ul-Mejfd, who had seen a young man in the dress of a clerk come out into the exercise-ground and exchange some words with the governor, asked the Pasha who his interlocutor was and what he desired. The Pasha accordingly represented to His Majesty the young clerk's request; and that same day Shinasi was received in audience by the amiable 'Abd-ul-Mejid, who spoke to him in kindly and encouraging terms. A week later Shinasi was sent to Paris with a monthly allowance of 750 francs, and the future of Ottoman literature was determined.

In the French capital the young Turk made the acquaintance of the family of the great orientalist De Sacy, who some dozen years before had himself befriended Reshid Bey, the illustrious Reshid Pasha of later days, on his arrival as a stranger in the western world. Introductions soon followed to many of the leading men of letters in Paris, including Ernest Renan and the poet Lamartine; and in their society Shindsi found ample means to gratify his taste for European culture, while at the same time he assimilated the principles which were to guide him in the great work of his life. For although Shinasi did not neglect the ostensible object of his sojourn in France, and we read of his studying the economic and even the physical sciences, it was to literature and things literary that the best, because the sincerest, efforts of his mind were directed.

On his return to Constantinople ¹ Shinasf was offered by Reshid Pasha, then Grand Vezir, employment in both the Ministry of Public Instruction and the Treasury, but he contented himself with a post in the first only of these departments. He was also made a member of the Enjumen-i Danish, the Imperial Academy of Science and Literature, which had just been established under the auspices of Sultan ^cAbd-ul-Mejfd. But, being a protege of Reshid Pasha, Shinasi incurred the ill-will of that statesman's rivals, Fu'ad and ^cAli Pashas, who took advantage of Reshid's deposition from the Grand Vezirate to accomplish his client's dismissal from his office in the Ministry of Public Instruction as well as his expulsion from the Imperial Academy and his exclusion from a financial appointment given to him by the ex-Prime Minister, bringing forward as justification for this persecution some ridiculous charge as to their victim having shaved his beard while in Paris.¹ Upon this Shinasi addressed a qasida to Reshfd Pasha in which he reflected upon the conduct of Fu'ad and 'Ali and also upon the behaviour of 'Arif Hikmet, the poet Sheykhul-Islam who was president of the Imperial Academy. The persons thus attacked were about to meet this move by impeaching the poet, when Reshid's return to power set matters right, and re-instated Shinasi in his former position. On the death of Reshid Pasha in 1274(1858), Yusuf Kamil Pasha, who afterwards translated Fenelon's Tetemaque, became Shinasi's protector; but out of respect for the deceased statesman who had done so much for Turkey, Fu'ad and 'Ali refrained from taking any steps against his client.

1 The biographers do not mention the dates of Shinasis departure from and return to Constantinople, neither do they tell us how long he stayed in France. We know that he was there as late as 1266 (1849—50), for some of his letters from Paris bearing that date have been published; and as he was on his return made a member of the Enjumen-i Danish (opened in the Shevwal of 1267 (August 1851) which is spoken of as having been then newly formed, it is probable that he returned about the end of 1851 or beginning of 1852.

Official duties were, however, but little to Shinasf's taste, and moreover he perceived that so long as he was connected either with the government service or with state institutions he would be hampered and impeded in what he felt to be the true work of his life. He therefore resigned both his official position and his membership of the Imperial Academy that he might henceforth be free to devote himself entirely to his arduous work, a step he would probably have taken earlier but for deference to his patron Reshid Pasha.

In 1276 (1859—60) Shinasi took the first public step towards the accomplishment of his aim by starting, in conjunction with a friend named Agdh Efendi, a newspaper which he called Terjümdn-i Ahwal or 'The Interpreter of Events'. After six months he withdrew from this paper, and in the year 1278 (1861—2), hi began to publish his far more famous journal, the Tasvir-i Efkar or 'Tablet of Opinions'.

¹ There used to be a prejudice amongst the Turks against a man who shaved his beard after having once allowed it to grow. Fu'ad and 'Ali Pashas were both men of much talent and ability, and far too enlightened to be influenced by any such childish notions; they merely exploited a vulgar prejudice in order to compass their own ends.

Towards the end of the following year, 1279 (1863), he was joined by Namiq Kemal Bey, whose youthful allegiance he at once and for ever secured, and whom he trained to be not only the doughtiest champion of the new learning, but the greatest master of Turkish prose who has ever taken pen in hand.

The publication of this second newspaper marks an epoch in the history both of Ottoman literature and of the Ottoman language. Not merely was it the first unofficial journal in Turkey; it is the first utterance of the Modern School, that School which was destined in the brief space of twenty years to sweep from the stage the crumbling debris of five centuries of Asiaticism. Here for the first time an Ottoman man of letters, conversant with and appreciative of a great European language and literature, deliberately sets to work to reconstruct from its very foundations the whole edifice of Turkish literary style. How he went to work upon this noble but stupendous task, and with what measure of success his efforts were attended, we shall ere long see.

Even those who opposed Shinasf's principles were compelled to admit his courage and ability; and it is pleasant to know that Fu'ad Pasha, who was at heart a friend to progress, lived not only to regret the part he had formerly played, but to receive Shinasf into his circle, and solicit and obtain his co-operation in establishing the 'Military Gazette'.¹ Thanks to the esteem of Fu'ad Pasha and the patronage of Yusuf Kamil, the ill-will of ^ʿAli Pasha was overcome; and it was determined to make Shinasf a member of the Supreme Court, and at the same time to promote him to the First Grade. But Shinasf loved freedom and hated office, and so, to escape having to accept an honour which he could not well refuse, he quietly slipped off to Paris, leaving the young Kemal Bey in charge of his journal.

¹ Jeride-i 'Askeriyye.

This occurred in 1281 (1864—5), and during the next few years Shinasf remained in the French capital busying himself with the compilation of a huge lexicon of the Turkish language, in preparing and arranging the materials for which he examined nearly all the Oriental books likely to be of service that are preserved in the Bibliothèque Nationale. This gigantic work was however, never completed; Shinasf was compelled to stop half way, at the letter ط. Of the fourteen great volumes, each comprising a thousand pages, in which the author's manuscript is contained, some are in the possession of the French Asiatic Society, of which Shinasf was a member, while some found their way into the library of the Hungarian collector Daniel Szilagyi, and are now preserved in the university of Buda-Pesth.

When Sultan ^ʿAbd-ul-^ʿAziz visited Paris in the summer of 1867, Fu'ad Pasha, who was in the Imperial suite, had a private interview with Shinasf in that city during which he entreated him to return to Turkey and assume the governorship of the province of Smyrna. Fu'ad's persuasions were apparently successful; but soon after Shinasf's arrival in Constantinople he induced the Pasha to allow him to return to Paris to collect some documents he had left behind and to arrange certain private affairs. While he was absent, Fu'ad died at Nice (Shevwal 1285 = February 1869); so Shinasf remained in the French capital till the outbreak of the Franco-German war in July 1870, when he again returned to Constantinople. There he died on the 5th of Rejeb 1288 (13th September 1871) of inflammation of the brain, brought on, it is said, by the arduous nature of the work on which he had been so long engaged. His death occurred exactly a week after that of ^cAli Pasha.

Shinasi was, we are told, of a quiet and meditative disposition, speaking but little and in short sentences. When he did speak, his language was terse and concise, and his words were straight to the point. He was very patient and gentle when talking with ignorant or prejudiced people, but used to be displeased if during a serious conversation anyone tried to turn the subject into jest, a proceeding which he looked upon as equivalent to a confession of defeat.

Shinasf is justly regarded as the true founder of the Modern School of Ottoman literature, since he was the first who seriously and systematically strove to raise that literature from being as hitherto a mere plaything for the amusement of the learned into an instrument for the moral and intellectual education of the whole people. The way in which this change might be most surely and most readily effected was the great lesson which Shinasi learned from the West. That way was, briefly, the substitution of the natural for the artificial, involving the subordination of manner to matter, and the adjustment of style to subject. But to accomplish this end it was necessary profoundly to modify the existing Turkish literary idiom. Shinasi felt this, and himself indicated the lines along which such a modification should be made. Other writers before him had indeed endeavoured, though hardly with his object, to refashion the literary idiom, and had at times even met with a partial success. But their success had never been more than partial, and never very far-reaching in result. This was because their efforts had necessarily been only tentative; those would-be reformers had known of no guide whom they could unhesitatingly follow; all their light had come from within; and it is doubtful whether any one among them had ever quite realised either what his ultimate object was, or in what manner it was to be attained.

Where Shinasi differed from all his predecessors was that he knew exactly what he wanted to do, and how to accomplish it. In the literature of France he had a model which displayed to perfection all that he desired. He found there an idiom at once concise, clear and elegant, admirably adapted to convey with happily-mingled simplicity and grace those moral and intellectual lessons which he held to be the true end of literature.

His work then lay plain before him; it was to create in Turkish a corresponding literary idiom. This Shinasi began to do; and his successors have most ably carried on the work. But the method they have followed is very unlike that adopted by the early Turkish scholars who, when they thought to Persianise their language, annexed the whole of the Persian dictionary and practically the whole of the Persian grammar. Shinasf and his followers have not sought to introduce French words and French grammatical rules into Turkish (though some such have almost accidentally crept in); they have looked rather to see how ideas are expressed in French and what standards of literary taste there prevail, and have striven in the light of the lessons thus learned to make their language at once simpler and stronger, and to fit it to hold a place among the languages of modern Europe.

The great principle underlying this revolution is, as I have said, the predominance of the natural over the artificial. Shinasf at once perceived that this entailed the development of the hitherto neglected Turkish core of the language, the first step towards which was the clearing away of the huge mass of useless accretions and false embellishments under which so many centuries of Persianism had well nigh smothered whatever was vital in the written speech. And such was the hearty good-will wherewith the reformer set about this work of stripping off the tattered tinsel of the past, that Tevfiq Bey has somewhere described him as the Death-Angel (°Azra'fl) of literary solecisms. The development of the Turkish core of the language, then, has all along been one of the objects of the Modern School; but this has been sought by natural, not by artificial means. There has been no attempt to replace long-established and thoroughly naturalised Persian or Arabic words by half-forgotten Tartar wraiths; a mirror is still called ayna, not gbzgii; Paradise is still named jennet, not uchmaq. What has been done is to study and systematise the heretofore absolutely neglected Turkish grammar, to discover and then turn to account the resources latent in the native idiom, and to give literary form to many a forceful and idiomatic turn of speech hitherto confined exclusively to the vernacular.¹

In attempting thus to revolutionise the literature of his country, Shinasf was to outward appearances running counter to the spirit of his time, but in reality he was acting in harmony with its deeper tendencies. Apparently he was running counter to the spirit of his age, for we have seen that at this time a Persianist revival held the field, and any recrudescence of Persianism necessarily implied the strengthening of the artificial. But that his labours were in truth in harmony with deeper-seated and more lasting tendencies, though as yet these were working beneath the surface silently and in secret, is proved by the completeness of the revolution whereby within a decade of his death the whole current literature of Turkey — prose and poetry alike — was transformed and remodelled upon the very lines that he laid down.

¹ One of Shinasf's minor innovations was the introduction of punctuation into Turkish writing and printing.

When we reflect upon the magnitude of Shinasi's services, how he led Turkish literature back to healthy and vigorous life from the very gates of death, pointing to the great masters, Truth and Nature, and showing where the lessons taught by these were to be most fully and freely learned, and how he ennobled for his countrymen the aim and purpose of literature, we can well understand the intense admiration with which he is regarded by his disciples, and are ready to excuse those loyal followers if at times in the enthusiasm of their gratitude they attribute to their beloved and revered master more than the critic further distant and less beholden may find it easy to allow.

It in no wise detracts from the very high credit which is most justly Shinasi's due, neither is it the slightest disparagement to the unquestionably great value of his work, to say that had that illustrious reformer never arisen, the revolution which he inaugurated would none the less have come about, and that almost at the moment when it did. The reforms of Sultan Mahmud's reign had familiarised men with the idea of change, and when the study of the French language and literature became fairly general among the educated classes, it was inevitable that ere long some man should arise possessed of sufficient insight to see that salvation for Turkish literature, as for all things Turkish, was to be found in the assimilation, so far as that was practicable, of the spirit of the West, and endowed with sufficient energy and courage to carry his convictions into practice. If any proof were required of this assertion, it would be enough to point to Ziyi Fasha who was at this very time independently developing a literary idiom from the same models as Shinasf, and with hardly less success.

Again, it is father through his example and precept than through anything he actually achieved that the influence of Shinasf has been effective; and here his position is curiously analogous to that of his predecessor Ahmed Pasha, who brought about the Classic movement by drawing attention to the methods of Newa'i and his circle, not by the excellence of the work he himself produced.

Leaving out of sight the uncompleted Lexicon which, never having been published, can have had no effect, the amount of Shinasf's written work is comparatively small. All his most serious efforts, moreover, are in prose, and consist almost entirely of articles political, literary, and social, which he wrote for different newspapers, notably for his own journal the Tasvir-i Efkâr.

The intensely practical turn of his mind and the strong feeling that he had for precision were unfavourable to the cultivation of poetry. Verse was with him merely a relaxation. His own best efforts and those of his immediate followers were directed to the creation of a prose style; poetry was not looked upon by them as a very serious matter, and for the time being was left to shift for itself.

It is therefore not surprising that Shinasf's work in verse is limited in extent and for the most part playful in tone. He has, however, a few religious pieces, especially one hymn, characterised by considerable power and dignity. But his most remarkable work is the series of translations which he made from the French. With the exception of one of La Fontaine's Fables, The Wolf and the Lamb, which is rendered in its entirety, the passages translated are mere fragments, chiefly from Racine and Lamartine. No attempt is made to preserve either the metre or the form of the originals, but the meaning is presented with accuracy and vigour.

It is the appearance of the little volume containing these translations, which was first issued in a lithographed edition in 1859,¹ that I take as the starting-point of the Modern School of Ottoman poetry. It is true that this little book had practically no immediate effect, and it is true that the real modern poetry of Turkey was not developed until twenty years later, but none the less these translations of Shinasi mark the turning-point in the history of Ottoman poetry. For in them breathes for the first time that spirit which is to vitalise and inspire the future. They are the earliest verses in the Turkish language to exhibit any indication that such a thing as European poetry is known to exist. All the Ottoman poetry of the past has been developed in complete ignorance of Western culture, and it would not have differed in one single whit had no line of French verse ever been penned. The Ottoman poetry of the future owes well-nigh all that it has and is — form and substance, inspiration and imagery — to the example of France. Surely this little book of Shinasi, which brings for the first time into Ottoman poetry an echo of that magic song which is to work so mighty a transformation, must be conceded an importance far beyond anything to which by its intrinsic merits it might lay claim. It stands here a landmark on the frontier between Asia and Europe, it shines out a beacon-fire signalling the passing of the old order and the advent of the new.

His study of La Fontaine inspired Shinasi to write versified fables on his own account. Three such occur in the printed editions of his poems, and are named respectively 'The Ass and the Fox', 'The Young Eagle and the Crow', and 'The Mosquito and the Bee'. These, especially the first two, are written in very homely, even colloquial language; there is nothing quite like them before in Turkish poetry.

¹ A second (printed) edition was issued from the office of the Tasvir-i Efkar in Ramazan 1287 (end of 1870).

Something of their manner is to be observed in several among a group of little pieces which we may describe as occasional verses. These deal with very various matters, and are often very short, sometimes consisting of a single couplet. The language is generally quite simple, and in a few instances the poet has amused himself by using only pure Turkish words, avoiding everything borrowed from Arabic or Persian. A similar effect would be obtained in English by the exclusive employment of words of Teutonic origin and the rejection of all derived from French, Latin or Greek. In neither case could the result be anything beyond a tour de force. It should, however, be said that in the selection of his Turkish words Shinasi has shown good taste, and so his verses are not marred by the uncouthness which disfigures those of certain of the Romanticist poets. These occasional verses are, along with the Fables, the most characteristic of their author's metrical works; they are pervaded by a genial and playful spirit, but of true poetic feeling there are few traces.

For the rest, Shinasf's little Diwan contains a few qasidas and ghazels and a fair number of chronograms. These are all in the old style, of which they are poor examples, possessing neither interest nor merit. The ghazels especially are particularly frigid and lifeless; so earnest an advocate of literary sincerity was hardly likely to be at his best where conventionality was the standard of success.

Shinasf's series of translations from the French is by a long way his most important work so far as the history of Ottoman poetry is concerned; but an English translation of Turkish verses which are themselves translations from the French would obviously illustrate nothing. Instead therefore of offering such, I shall give further on a selection of the French verses translated by Shinasi, the Turkish renderings of which will be found in their place among the texts in another volume.

This is the Hymn which I have mentioned as being probably the finest of Shinasi's poetical works.

Hymn [459].

God the Highest, He the Monarch of the world of majesty,
 Omnipresent is; no throne-room in His palace may there be.
 The vast Kingdom of Eternity is His, and His alone;
 Numberless the everlasting stars that always there have shone.
 Lo, the edifice of Earth and Heaven stands, His wisdom's sign;
 Void and peopled, all existent, is His hand of power's design.
 All the angels laud His splendour and His majesty and might,
 Low the Sphere in adoration bows before His glory bright.
 As He biddeth, ever onward day and night careers the earth,
 Seasons change, and bounteous springtide blooms again in freshened birth.
 Sun and moon are sparks of radiance from His mercy's fostering beam,
 From His anger — if from aught — is litten the infernal learn.
 Yon effulgent stars are flashes of His majesty most high,
 'Tis their lustrous sheen that gildeth all the cupole of the sky;
 Fixed are some and others wandering by the Omnipotent decree;
 Each one is a shining proof that God in very truth doth be.
 Though to prove His being where the need of this terrestrial ball,
 When one mote by Him created were enough, enough for all?
 All too weak to see His Essence is His creatures' earthly sight,
 Yet the vision of the understanding may perceive His Light.
 To my intellect 'tis needful to confess His Unity,
 To my heart and soul 'tis needful to adore His Majesty.
 Fain am I before His Signs in ecstasy to bow me low,
 Learn ye thence what else I fain would for my loved Creator do.
 O Shindsi, deep the fear of God is burned into my soul;
 Though my lips may smile, the tears of blood forth from my heart's eye roll.
 Penitence for my transgression doth my spirit overbear;

What can I? — I dare no prayer for pardon with this fell despair!
What said I? — Oh! I repent me! that too was a deed of guile,
 This excuse that I have proffered than my sin is yet more vile!
 How should not the Light of Mercy bid my sad face smile again?
 Which is greater, God's Compassion or my foul rebellion's stain?
 Does not then His boundless Graciousness the whole wide world embrace?
 Else does this poor slave, though in the world, find in the world no place?
 Though His servant's faults, for all his frailty, great and grievous be,
 Does not His compassion o^r His anger gain the victory?
 From His servant's native frailty 'tis his errors still proceed,
 In the World Unseen He therefore for His folk doth intercede.
 Grace of God, divine and free, to pardon me will well avail;
 Deem not, God forefend! that Mercy limitless shall ever fail.

The Ass and the Fox is the most interesting of the poet's original Fables.

The Ass and the Fox [460].

From a vineyard once an aged ass was slowly toiling down
 With a load of 'beauty's faces'¹ he was bearing to the town.
 Lo behold, just then a hungry fox before his eyes appeared, —
 Eager longing for the luscious grapes had all his vitals seared.
 Kicked a bit at first the donkey when the other came him nigh,
 But his waywardness and coyness were not long in passing by.

The Fox: —

'O my lion, brave and mighty, may not I approach to thee,
 'So that I may see thee near? Thy loveliness dumbfounders me!
 'May the shadow of the favour of my lord abide for aye!
 'Wheresoe'er yon blessed feet have trodden, blossom roses gay.
 'Yonder tail so sweetly scented all would rarest musk suppose;
 'Fain I'd smell it, if my master would not kick me on the nose.
 'In those speaking eyes thine inward virtues and thy culture shine;
 'Words poetic and melodious well beseem that mouth of thine!'

¹ Ru-yi Nigar, 'beauty's face', is the name of a variety of grape of a light pink colour.

Hereupon the donkey mightily delighted brayed a deal
Just as though he'd seen a tender thistle or a melon-peel.'

The Fox: —

'Ah, that charming voice hath reached e'en to the very heart of me;
¹ While if thou art silent, lo, another lovesome joy have we;
'For the nightingale hath heard thee, and to steal thy notes is fain,
'Singing so that to the listener comes a gentle sense of pain.'

Thus the fox went on a-prattling, laughing slyly at his fere,
Till that he had brought the donkey where a well was deep and clear.

The Fox: —

'Down there is a lovely stable where are feeds in goodly store;
'But alack! one cannot enter laden, narrow is the door.
'Pleasures many such as sleeping and as resting still are there;
'Eating feeds and drinking water are the only toil and care.
'Then the lady donkeys dwelling there have quite a special grace;
'Just look in, but see thou be not smitten by some pretty face.'

Then the ass went near and gazed down on the liquid mirror bright,
Saw his face therein reflected, — watered then his mouth forthright.

The Ass: —

'Yes indeed, a face all lovely and all gracious there I see.'

The Fox: —

'Call her then to come beside thee that thy playmate she may be.'

All excited, loudly bellowed out the donkey's 'Come thou here!
From the well his words re-echoed fell upon his wildered ear.

The Fox: —

'Hear'st thou not how to that noble banquet they are calling thee?
'Sore I wonder is there ne'er a place as servant there for me?

¹ In Turkey donkeys are often given melon-peel, of which they are very fond.
قابون کورمش اشک کی, 'Like an ass that has seen a melon-skin', is popularly said of one who is taken up with a trifle, the figure being derived from the donkey's habit of making for any piece of peel which he may see on the roadside and from which it is difficult to get him away.

'Leave thy burden here, and free from all impediments descend,
'I shall follow straight behind thee there as lackey to attend,*

Then the donkey cast his load to earth, himself into the well,
Thus unto the fox to heir him and to pray for him¹ it fell.

All the following are examples of what I have called Shinasfs occasional verses. The special names which some of them bear is a new feature in Turkish poetry; it is of course adopted from the French. The love-poem which follows is mere badinage; but it is quite original both in language and expression, and contains a number of fancies and similes that are absolutely new.

Declaration of Love [461].

My heart hath chosen for its love a matchless beauty bright,
And jealous Is it grown, alack, e'en of my very sight.
How passing well do yonder breasts beseem her bosom fair,
As 'twere two guelder-roses that a tender branchlet bare.
Though yonder bosom into mine at times is ardent prest,
Think not thereby the pang of love is driven from my breast.
More dainty than the jessamine yon shapely figure slight;
If ivy-like I clasp it, it will bend to me forthright.
Since I have held heart-converse with that charmer young and free,
I seek none other, houri fair or angel though she be.
When overcome of fond desire, those eyes, a-fainting, swoon,
They waken when my tears are o'er her lovesome face bestrewn.
Shall not the heart within me melt when smile those languid eyes?
The sweet words from her lips that flow bid all my yearning rise.
A-blush at her own beauty, lo, her cheeks with crimson glow;
To veil that bashful face of hers the tresses o'er it flow.
I'm fallen sick of yearning ever dreaming of her hair;
Was 't thus, I wonder, Mejnun did for Leyla frenzied fare?

1 To pray for the repose of his soul. Certain passages from the Koran, notably the 36th chapter, that entitled Ya Sin, are frequently read or recited for the repose of the souls of the dead.

I'll give my life to her and toss no more in mortal pain;¹
 What right has he who loves a dear to spend his life in vain?
 I'd dig my grave before I die, the martyr of her love,
 And with my tears of blood I'd write upon the stone thereof.

During his conversations with the European savants Shinasf doubtless heard something about the speculations of Darwin; probably he never really understood the theory of the great naturalist; at any rate the doctrine of the mutability of species seems to have been little to his liking.

A Tale of Transmigration [462].

A sham philosopher of scant esteem
 Was wont himself Pythagoras to deem.
 The transmigration of the soul his creed,
 Disintegration of the frame his rede.
 He said: The beast that sticketh up his tail²
¹Will come in human form withouten fail.'
 A wise man heard the words that ox³ did say,
 And with this answer stopped his mouth with hay: *
¹How can I question this religion's truth
¹With thee thyself alive to prove its sooth?'

To an Artist's Wife [463].

¹Tis meet that on my heart the image of thy form I trace,
 E'en as the artist on his canvass limns an angel's face.
 I marvel, is it thy fair face, or is it thy sweet soul,
 That to his heart who looks on thee reveals Celestial grace?

¹ A reminiscence of the proverb جان چکشمه دهنسه اولاد یکدر
 'Tis better to die than to be in the throes of death.'

² To stick up or erect the tail (as dogs do when they approach each other) is familiarly said of a man who assumes an aggressively haughty air. Shinasf would here show his contempt for what he conceived to be the insolence and presumption of those whose views he is ridiculing.

³ A stupid fool is sometimes called an 'ox' in Turkish, as he is an 'ass' or a 'goose'.

⁴ 'Shut him up'.

The following four lines are amongst those in which Turkish words alone are employed; I have imitated the original by using only Teutonic words in the translation.

Verse [464].

Who sees the gleaming of thy brow amid thy dusky locks
 Would deem that midst of darkling clouds the sun is risen fair.
 Would not he say who sees me by thy side in tears of blood,
 'Lo, yonder, one whom the sea-maid' hath drowned a-lying there.'

This 'quatrain of condolence'¹, sent to a bereaved friend, is one of the prettiest things that Shinasi wrote.

Quatrain [465].

May the God of might and glory deck the Heavenly garden-close
 With the fruitage of thy heart that Death now in the dust bestows!
 Ah! how Death is like the bitter blast that all untimely blows,
 Tearing from the branch the blossom which amid the mire it throws.

Here are two independent couplets.

Couplet [466].

My being doth to my Creator's being witness bear;
 Superfluous were other proofs, however strong they were.

Couplet written in Paris [467].

Though I am far from my dear home, why should I feel distress —
 Thus runs the proverb: God doth build the stranger bird a nest.²

¹ Su qizi 'the sea-maid', or more commonly, su malikesi ¹the sea-queen', is the mermaid or siren. The Turks derived their notions of such a being from their Greek neighbours. The Persians know nothing of her, so she does not figure in their literature, and consequently not in that of the old Ottomans; but the men of the Modern School, carrying out and extending a practice begun by the Romanticists, adopt into their verses beautiful fancies or legends wheresoever they find them, so the 'sea-queen' is pretty often to be met with in the newer poetry.

• غريب قوشى يرواستى الله يلهار ¹God builds the stranger bird's nest,' a well-known proverb meaning that God is the helper of the helpless.

CHAPTER III.

ZIYA PASHA.

1245—1297 (1829-30—1880).

If we were studying the history of Ottoman literature, and not merely that of Ottoman poetry, this chapter would be devoted to the life and work of Kemal Bey. That author was, as we have seen, trained directly by Shinasi Efendi, of whose principles and aims he became the immediate heir. As he thus directly carried on the work of the master, this would be the natural place in which to consider his career and labours; but seeing that his best and most characteristic poetry is all in the modern style, I have thought it advisable to defer doing so until we have learned something of the nature of this new style and of the manner of its introduction. We shall thereupon pass on to Ziya Pasha, the third of the illustrious triumvirate.

^cAbd-ul-Hamfd Ziya, that Ziya Pasha whose criticisms on the earlier poets we have so often quoted, was universally known as Ziya Bey until a very few years before his death when he received the rank of vezfr, which bears with it the title of pasha. He was born in Constantinople in 1245

(1829—3°) just three years after Shinasi. Some forty years afterwards when he had mastered French and created for himself a charmingly simple and lucid style, Ziya Bey made a translation of Jean Jacques Rousseau's 'Emil\ To this he prefixed a preface of his own, dealing with the education question in Turkey, in the course of which he gives a most interesting account of his own childhood. This I shall translate in its entirety, not only for the sake of the biographical details it contains and the glimpses of Turkish child-life it affords, but because it will serve to show something of the marvellous change which even then had been effected in the character of Ottoman prose.²

'My father', begins Ziya, 'who was a clerk in the Galata custom-house, was a thrifty man who understood his business and was content with his salary. During my childhood we lived summer and winter alike³ at Qandilli on the Bosphorus. My father bought a Circassian slave-boy, called 'Omer, who was some seventeen or eighteen years of age, to accompany me to school and to do the household errands. As this slave had in his own country been brought up to thieving, he ¹ This is the date given by Fatfn Efendi. Tevffq Bey gives 1241 (1825—6). Both authorities knew Ziya personally; but in this case I prefer the former, as the date he gives tallies better with Ziya's statement in the preface to the Kharabat that at the time he was writing he had passed his forty-fourth year. This would give 1289 (1872—3) as the date of the preface; the Kharabat was published in 1291 (1874—5). Had Ziya been born in 1241, his forty-fourth year would have fallen in 1285; but we know that from 1284 to 1288 he was in voluntary exile in Europe, while the Kharabat was not compiled till after his return to Turkey.

² This preface was published in the second volume of Ebu-z-Ziya's Magazine (Mejmu'a-i Ebu-z-Ziyd) under the title of 'Ziya Pasha's Story of his Childhood'

ضیا پاشانکی اوان طفولیتی حقدہ کی مقالہ سی. The portion translated occurs in Nos. 14 and 15, issued respectively on the 1st and 15th of the Latter Rebf^c 1298 (March, 1881).

* Not removing into Constantinople for the winter, as is usual.

used when the cherries and grapes were ripe, to take me along with him to the vineyards and steal such fruit as he could reach, which we would eat together. One day, when I must have been six or seven years old, we went together to a vineyard called the Tank Vineyard (Hawuzlu Bagh), which was one of those above Qandilli belonging to the ex-Grand Admiral Damad Khalil Pasha. As this vineyard was protected by thorny shrubs which surrounded it on every side, the slave could find no way to get in. So he parted the shrubs with a stick that he had, and made a little hole. "I can't squeeze through there", said he to me, "but you are little; in you go, pull the grapes from the vines near you, hand them out to me, and we'll eat them together." "All right", said I, and pushing my way in, I set to work to gather the grapes.

'Now it happened that just then Khalil Pasha had come into that particular vineyard to practise shooting, and as it so chanced that the jug for the mark had been set up at the very spot where I was making my raid, he saw me in the distance. Now there was in his household a qawas² called Qandillili Ahmed Bey³ who had tremendous moustachios which used to frighten me whenever I met him. On that day he was in attendance on the Pasha, who pointed me out to him and told him to bring me before him. As for me, I was quite unconscious of the presence of anyone and was busy pulling grapes and handing them through the hedge to the slave, when all of a sudden some one came up from behind and caught me in his arms. Far from seeking to frighten me, he managed to reassure and quiet me, and so brought me up to the Pasha who pushed in front of me a plate of grapes that was lying before him, and invited me to eat some. This kindly act of his quite removed my fear and shyness, and I began to eat without more ado. He then asked me whose child I was and where our house was situated, and I told him. Then he asked how I came to be stealing grapes, whereupon, concealing nothing, I told him all that the slave had taught me to do. My candour and truthfulness were quite apparent and they pleased the Pasha, so he put some money into my hand and sent me home in charge of Ahmed Bey.¹

¹ An ordinary earthenware jug is a very common target for practice with the musket. Many of the earlier poets have chronograms on the 'breaking of the jug' by some royal or distinguished marksman.

² A qawas (originally qawwas 'a bowman') was formerly a man-at-arms attached to a great man's household; nowadays the name is given to certain armed servants attached to the public offices and foreign embassies.

³ That is, Ahmed Bey of Qandilli.

'Some time after this, my father freed the slave and sent him back to his own country; while I was sent to the School of Humanities, which had recently been opened

¹ Ziyd Pasha has here the following note: — 'During the late Khalil Pasha's last Grand-Admiralship I was, as Fate determined, in the personal service of the Sultan. One day the Pasha came to the Imperial palace, and while I was conversing with him the incident mentioned above came into my mind, and I said, 'Do you remember how, some sixteen or seventeen years ago, when you were practising in the Tank Vineyard at Qandilli, you once saw a child in a green gown stealing grapes, and sent the qawas Ahmed Bey to fetch him, and how you treated him with great kindness?' The Pasha, who was very intelligent and shaip-witted, at once remembered and said, 'To this day I am sorry for that child, for his father, whoever he was, had entrusted him to a thief of a slave; but as for the child himself, I could, see no signs of anything bad in him, for he told me all about the matter, hiding nothing, and he pleased me much. Ahmed Bey, too, afterwards corroborated what the child had said. But how come you to know anything about that child or that affair?' I answered, 'That child whom you treated with such undeserved kindness when you caught him stealing grapes in your vineyard is now a bearded man, and it is he who has the honour of addressing you.' No sooner had I said this than the Pasha blushed, so great was his modesty, as though it were he who had been the thief, and not permitting me to thank him, he overwhelmed me with his graciousness.'

2 The School of Humanities — Mekteb-i Edebiyye — was in its day a well-known educational institution; it is no longer in existence.

near the Suleymdniyya Mosque under the direction of the late Imam-zade; and a lala,¹ whose name was Isma'il Agha and whose age was from fifty-five to sixty years, was engaged to superintend my education.

'My lala, who was a native of a village in the district of Qaysariyya,² had served as page to certain vezfrs in the provinces at the time of the janissaries, and had seen many things and knew the world fairly well; he was in truth a competent and experienced man. He was most anxious to be reunited to his children; indeed his thought and care day and night was how to gain a few piastres so that he might some day return to his own country and pass his closing years amongst his family. So when it came to the question of money the lala would forget all his duties as a man. Thus although my father's first injunction both to the lala and myself was that I should not go into the mosque courtyard and play with the little ragamuffins, we used every day when I came out of school to go for a turn with my companions in the courtyard of the Suleymaniyya Mosque. If the lala looked as though he might prove a little fractious, I would take from my pocket twenty or thirty paras, what remained of the daily allowance given me by my father, and slip them into his hand, whereon he would smile and say, "Oh dear! I have not said the afternoon prayer, go and play while I say it." And after the prayer he would most often fall asleep amongst the worshippers outside the mosque, and leave me to myself for an hour or two. Afterwards we would together arrange some story to tell my father, should he on our return ask why we were late.

¹ There is no English equivalent to the Turkish lala, who is a male slave or man-servant to whom the care of a child is given, in short a kind of male nursery-governess.

² In the original the name of the village is given as

'But for all this my lala was never remiss in encouraging me in every way he could to apply myself to my studies and to strive to surpass the other children in my class. Indeed my beginning to write poetry was owing to the influence of this man, and as it was brought about in a curious way, it may not be without interest to relate it here.

•My lala was very fond of poetry; for all that his spelling was so bad that it was difficult to read what he wrote, he was for ever, in season and out of season, reciting verses which he knew by heart from 'Ashiq 'Omer and Gevheri.¹ At times too he would compose things something like qit'as or ghazels, which occasionally contained lines in metre. This is the opening couplet of a ghazel of his:

"The anguish of my heart do I with pen unto this page declare;

"Let's see what thing will hap, what it will say unto the rose-lipped fair."²

'A teacher of Persian named 'isa Efendi had been appointed to my school, and came on the Tuesday of each week. Some of the children took lessons from him; but as this counsel which my father gave me when I was sent to the school, "Take good heed that you do not learn Persian, for 'who Persian read lose half their creed,"³ hung like an earring in my ear, I, far from having any hankerings after Persian, looked upon those who learned it as infidels.

'My lala, who was aware of this, explained to me privately how Persian was necessary for everything; how it was possible to learn it without hurt to one's religion; how every

¹ ['Ashiq (Lover) is the title given to a class of wandering half erotic, half mystic poets to which the two troubadours here named belonged. E. G. B.]

■ درونم در دین عصیانم بو قرطاسه قلملمه
گورمه نه ظهور ایلر نه سویلر غنچه فلله

* هر کیم اوقور فارسی کیدر دینک یاریسی. This well-known jingle expresses the wide-spread prejudice against Persian which used to exist among ignorant Turks, who looked upon it as the special language of heresy and of the mysticism which to them was atheism.

one who read Persian was not an infidel, 'isa Efendi, for instance, being a very pious and religious man; how he himself regretted that he had not learned it long ago, and would, if that were possible, learn it even now when his beard was white; how if I did not learn it I should be beaten by my companions when the examination-time came; how my father's counsel to me was due to his own ignorance of Persian; and how if I were now to learn it unbeknown to him, I should not only surprise but delight him by coming out first in the examination. Persuaded by such arguments, I resolved to learn Persian; and that very week I began my studies, borrowing, as though I were committing some secret crime, a copy of the *Tuhfe-i Vehbi*¹ belonging to the school.

'I well remember that one night, before I had quite finished the Tuhfe, I was seated opposite my lala, for we were grinding wheat for bulghur² in a hand-mill. It came to my turn to work the mill, and as I was doing so I saw that tears were rolling from my lala's eyes; he was weeping. I asked him the reason. He replied, "You are still a child; you could not understand." I pressed him till he was forced to answer, "Do you know what that mill is saying with its silent tongue?" As up to that moment I had never heard of a mill speaking, I looked in the lala's face in bewilderment and said, "Pray tell me how the mill speaks."

'The lala heaved a deep sigh and said, "Yes, the mill speaks, and speaks far more eloquently and sensibly than we; but one needs ears to hear it. Aye, this mill is saying with its silent tongue, 'O ye heedless who look at me, open your eyes and look well at me, for I am a symbol of the world. The grains that you put in me are as the men who come into the world. Bruising these grains between two stones, I break them and grind them small, and when they have been brought to that state of fitness in which they become bulghur, I cast them out and busy myself with those that take their place. Even so does the world crush the men who enter it with all manner of trials and sorrows between (the stones of) earth and sky till they are made perfect — that is, till each has received his share, — when it casts them out into the grave and busies itself with others. Yes, and there have occurred to me," added the lala, "some verses to this effect." Then he improvised a few couplets of which, alas, nothing but this line remains in my memory:

¹ The riming Persian-Turkish vocabulary by Sunbul-zdde Vehbi, See Vol. IV, pp. 257-8.

² Bulghur is wheat deprived of its husk by boiling and pounding; it is used in making soups and pilaws.

¹I looked upon that Harmony which makes the mill to turn.¹

'As I was not of an age to understand the import of these words, I was more impressed by my lala's talents and accomplishments than by the mill's pretty speech, and my desire to learn Persian and so know the meaning of the words asyab and ahenk ² was increased. Moreover, the way in which the lala worked his eyes and eyebrows, and the melody of the poetry, which he recited in a fashion I understood not, ³ delighted me yet more than the meaning, and I besought him to explain to me the poetic art. "What they call Poetry," answered he, "is a divine gift granted to some alone; it does not come by study and application. If God has decreed it for you, you will be a poet; otherwise you can never attain to that glory. Can Khoja Nu'man

آسیابی دور ایمن او آهنگه نظر قیلمشدم

The 'Harmony' referred to is of course the Divine Scheme of things.

* In the lala's hemistich the Persian words asyab (mill) and ahenk (harmony) are used.

³ I. e. having regard to the metre, etc.

write poetry for all that he is so profoundly learned in every science? Look at ^ctsa Efendi; though he is unrivalled in his knowledge of Persian, has he the skill to make poetry? Poetry is the gift of God; it is not to be obtained through learning."

'No sooner had I heard this than I felt in myself an emotion as though a smouldering fire had been blown into flame within me. I could rest still no longer. I left the mill, and weeping, threw my arms about my lala's neck, and prayed him earnestly to teach me how poetry is written. The lala was a sympathetic though sad-hearted man, and he looked at me pitifully, and said in a tender voice, "Since this love and desire is in you, I believe you will be a poet." He then explained to me, so far as he himself understood it, how what is called Poetry is simply words arranged conformably to the movements and pauses of the Fa^cilatuns and Mefa^ciluns ¹ which they call metres and prosody, and how it is necessary that the ends of the lines should rime together. After which he said, "As you are so eager after poetry, let your first verse be, for good luck, a hymn to the Prophet.² Now try to-night; make something in that manner, and show it to me to-morrow; we shall correct the places where there are mistakes; and in this way you will become a poet." And he recommended me to use as a refrain ³ the words, 'O apostle of God!'⁴

'Delighted, I mounted the stair at full speed, ran into my room, shut the door, and spread out before me a sheet of paper. I seized my pen, as though I were about to write down a crowd of things that were heaped up in my mind. Think! go on! think! — not a thing would come into my head. Where were metre and prosody? — even common words had fled from my mind as though they had feared to be taken and thrust by force into the fetters of metre. In short, I could think of absolutely nothing. And so the dawn came; I had not slept for a moment. Then saying to myself, "Let come what will," I wrote down on the paper a few lines of nonsense; but I did not forget to end each with 'O apostle of God!' I read these over a hundred times, and found them all to my own thinking correct in metre and very fine; but it never occurred to me to give any thought as to their meaning.

¹ Fa'ilatun and Mefa'ilun are the paradigms or meaningless model words for two of the Oriental prosodic feet. The first stands for 1-2-2-1, the second for 1 — - 1.

* A na^ct. 3 Redif.

يا رسول الله⁴

'As soon as it was light I ran full of joy to my lala's room and caught him performing his ablution, having just risen from bed. I thrust my paper triumphantly into his hand. He cast his eye over it, then handed it back to me and said with a smile, "This is not bad; but poetry must be metrical, that is, the movements and pauses must be equal in every line; now not only are some of these Fa^cilatun and some Mustef^cilun,¹ but there is no sense to be made out of any one of them. The words glare at one another like mad bulls. Now sense as well as metre is an essential of poetry. Keep these; but try to write as I told you last night, and to-morrow we shall see."

'Then I read my poem over again and saw all the faults the lala had pointed out. Who could care for lessons any longer! To become a poet was more desirable in my eyes than to be King of all the world. So I thought about poetry all that day in school; even when playing walnuts² in the mosque courtyard I was dreaming about poetry. Again I worked hard all night till morning and managed to scribble something. Next day I showed it to the lala, and while he was glancing over it, my heart beat fast, and I looked at his eyes, wondering what he would say. I do not know whether it was to encourage me, or whether the metre and sense were really correct, or whether they seemed so to my lala, but in any case he clasped me in his arms and said, "Well done! I no longer doubt that you will be a poet; your father or whosoever will may forbid, but I no longer fear." These words fanned, as it were, the fires of eagerness in my heart. Saving up from a few days' allowances, I went secretly with my lala to the booksellers and we bought a collection of 'Ashiq 'Omer's verses which I diligently studied in the evenings.

¹ This word is the paradigm of the prosodic foot 1-2-3-1.

* Walnuts are used for playing many games, some of which resemble those played with marbles by boys in this country.

I very soon began to discover which of the verses the lala used to compose and recite were out of metre, and even to make 'parallels' to the couplets I liked best in the 'Ashiq 'Omer and Gevherf that I was reading. But I did not pay much attention to sense until I became acquainted with the late Fatin Efendi.¹ I had been fancying myself a full-fledged poet and the worshipped 'Ashiq 'Omer an erudite master whose like had never been seen on earth when the aforesaid Efendi was the means of rectifying my errors.'

At this point the autobiographical portion of Ziya Bey's preface ends. It was written to introduce and illustrate what follows it, a series of reflections on the education of children, the subject of Rousseau's work to the translation of which it is prefixed. There is however a section in the preface to his anthology, the oft-quoted Kharabat or Tavern, in which Ziya describes how he came to be interested in poetry, and of which, as it supplements the story just told, I shall here give a translation. The original is in verse, but for brevity's sake I shall render it in prose, omitting whatever is irrelevant.

¹ The author of the Tezkire which has been so often quoted.

'Before I was fifteen years of age I busied myself with verse; what first gave me the taste therefor was the braying of the street-poets.* Sometimes I would read Gharibi or be stirred up by 'Ashiq Kerem;² at other times I would take up 'Ashiq 'Omer and be confounded by his erotic speeches. But I was not content with admiring; sometimes I made bold to pilfer, and I would try to write 'parallels'. What productions they were! May all ears be spared hearing such things, and all lips uttering them! Yet I wrote them in my little diwan, and would, if I could, have carved them on the rocks. Whoever cast the stone of derision at my verses got himself into trouble with me, and I answered the criticiser with a satire. A year or so passed thus when I became possessed of a treasure in the shape of one or two old printed diwans, and when I got these I entered into another world. Gevheri's slippers were now thrown aside.³ I" admired Vehbi and Wasif, and strove to imitate them. When reading I would say, 'What magic! what a miracle! Can any speech surpass this, so sweet in language, so brilliant in conception? Look at that cypress, that form and figure! How charming the connection of rose and nightingale! Surely the moth is indeed the taper's lover!' But as yet I was unable to discriminate. However, when I read the

¹ Literally 'public-square poets' (raaydan shu'arasi) that is, men who for money sing or recite verses from the popular poets such as 'Ashiq 'Omer in public places.

² Gharibi and 'Ashiq Kerem (Kerem the Minstrel), popular poets of the type of 'Ashiq 'Omer and Gevheri.

³ پالوجی دامد آتلدی 'His slippers have been thrown on the roof,' is a proverbial expression meaning 'he has fallen from the high esteem in which he was held (some other having taken his place.)' It is often said of a first child when a second is born. Here Ziya would imply that his youthful allegiance was transferred from Gevheri and the folk-poets to Vehbi and Wasif.

Gulistan¹ I began to discover what language is. Just then, too, I was assisted in my studies by certain poets,² one of whom induced me to read a considerable part of Hafiz. My whole nature was enthralled by what I read; it was as though my closed eyes were opened. The Persian poets became my masters, and I gathered gems from many of their Khamsas and Diwans.'

Such were the circumstances under which Ziya's poetic talents were developed. I have given them here in detail and in the author's own words; for, apart from its personal interest, the narrative may be taken as typical. No other Ottoman poet has left a similar record, but, save that Ziya was probably more than usually fortunate in his lala, the story which he tells was doubtless in its main outlines that of many a Turkish poet born in a non-literary family. A natural talent for poetry first awakened by the songs and rimes of the folk-poets heard in public places from the lips of ‘ashiqs or wandering minstrels, followed by attempts at versifying modelled with more or less accuracy upon the poems in any stray diwan the young enthusiast might lay hands on, refined and corrected by intercourse with literary friends won to interest by his manifest abilities, and matured by study of the great Persian classics, — such must have been the steps by which many a Turkish poet of bygone times scaled the slopes of the national Parnassus.

In the biographical and critical notice which Ebu-z-Ziya Tevfi'q Bey has prefixed to the selections from Ziya's prose works in his *Specimens of Ottoman Literature*³ we find many interesting particulars of the poet's subsequent career.

¹ The famous Persian work by Sheykh Sa'fī of Shī'raz which is held as a classic throughout the East.

² No doubt Fatin Efendi is one of those referred to.

³ Numtine-i Edebiyyat-i 'Osmaniyya, edition of 1308.

The information from this source is of special value, as Tevfiq Bey was personally acquainted not only with Ziyi., but with many of that author's friends and associates. The following details may therefore be regarded as scarcely less authoritative than the story just related.

In 1262 (1846), when Ziya Bey was some seventeen years of age, he received an appointment in the office of the Chief Secretary of the Grand Vezirate. It was very soon after he entered upon his duties at the Porte that he made the acquaintance of Fati'n Efendi, to whose assistance he confesses that he owed so much. Encouraged by him and by other literary men whom he soon got to know, he worked assiduously at his poetry, producing verses which Tevfiq Bey declares to be equal, if not superior, to the best of those of his most distinguished contemporaries.

His literary efforts for the next nine years or so were directed exclusively towards poetry, and the amount of verse written by him during this period must have been considerable. Indeed his friend and counsellor Fatin Efendi, writing in 1271 (1854), says that by that time Ziya had composed ghazels enough to form a diwan. But all this work was in the old style, chiefly in the then fashionable manner of the 'Arif Hikmet group, so that what has been preserved of it is now of little account, having been altogether eclipsed by the far more original and brilliant work which the poet produced later on under the influence of the new learning.

During these nine years when Ziya Bey. was employed at the Porte and was exercising his poetic talent in the production of Neo-Persianist verses, he was leading a wild and gay, not to say dissolute, life. This was perhaps inevitable, seeing that it was in the taverns and other places of debauchery where drinking-parties used to be held that the young poets of those days made their rendezvous. 'Alas!' cries Tevffq Bey, 'some of those who used to frequent those rendezvous have since roamed the wastes of madness,¹ while others still in their youth have been snatched away by the hand of death.' Tevflq Bey then mentions as being of the number of these unhappy ones, whom he never saw, but whose sad story he heard from their boon-companions, Hafiz Mushfiq and ^cAli; while amongst those whom he himself had met were Ghalib and Halet Beys and Emin Firdevsi.² But whether it was that he possessed a stronger constitution, or that he had the good sense to temper self-indulgence with moderation, Ziya Bey, although he associated with such men as these and shared in their merry-makings and dissipations, escaped the untoward fate by which so many among them were overtaken.

Yet this same Ziya Bey, who spent his nights in the tavern carousing with his boon-companions, passed his days in his office at the Porte, where, owing partly to his self-reliance and partly to his ambition to outstrip his colleagues, he soon made his way and attracted general attention. His devil-may-care airs, his dissolute life, his familiarity with disreputable characters, the satires and lampoons which he launched against high and low, — all were notorious; but so keen was his intelligence and so brilliant were his talents that everything besides was overlooked. His colleagues in the Chief Secretary's office, when they saw the extraordinary ease and grace with which he composed in that highly elaborated and wonderfully involved official style — to write in which was sore travail to even the oldest of his fellow-clerks, — were, whether they would or no, constrained to acknowledge and admire his marvellous ability.

¹ This perhaps refers to the poet Haqqi who went mad.

² The men whose names Tevfiq Bey mentions here as being among Ziya's gay companions were mostly journalists connected with the Jeride-i Hawddis, the well-known Turkish semi-official newspaper. Hafiz Mushfiq was born in Constantinople in 1221 (1806-7), and is said to have known the Koran by heart when eight years old. He was in the Civil Service, was for a time editor of the Jeride, and wrote a volume which he called Mushfiq-ndme, the Book of Mushfiq (i. e. of the Compassionate one). ^cAli Efendi, who was likewise a native of Constantinople, was also in the Civil Service, and at one time edited the Jeride. The Ghalib Bey referred to is probably the poet who is generally known as Lesqofchali Ghalib Bey. Halet Bey was born in 1255 (1837-40) and when quite young contributed to the Jeifde. He was in Aleppo when the local official journal Furdt, The Euphrates, was started, whereon he brought out a private paper which he called Ghadir-ul-Furdt, The Pool of the Euphrates. When he returned to Constantinople he started a literary magazine called Doldd, The Cupboard. He wrote a life of Fu'dd Pasha, also a volume of poems entitled Hdlet-ush-Shebdb, The World of Youth. He died in 1295 (1878).

For all this, Ziya made no money by his pen; his father's purse had to provide for all, from the clothes upon his back to the expenses of his nightly revels.¹ This, however, gave but little concern to the young Bey, all of whose serious efforts were directed to the increase and advancement of his own culture. The way in which he set about accomplishing this may at first sight seem peculiar; but we must remember how, as Tevfik Bey points out, it was in the taverns that the more brilliant of the younger literary men of those days were in the habit of holding their symposia, and how consequently it was thither he who would share the pleasure or advantage of their society must go. 'We too', continues the biographer, 'have our Gumush-Halqali (Silver-Ring), our Servili (Cypress-Inn), and our Altun-Uluq (Golden-Spout),² cabarets which are now looked upon as places of historic interest, even as the Cafe Procope, the Cafe Moliere or the Chat-Noir in Paris, once the resorts of Moliere,

¹ It should be mentioned to Ziya's credit that after he had¹ ranged himself he set about repaying his father with interest all the money which he had caused him to disburse.

² These are the names of taverns frequented by Ziya and his friends.

Piron, Voltaire, Diderot, Mirabeau and other men of letters.' In one or other of these Constantinople taverns, according to the season, met the wits and poets of those times, and while the glasses were going round some one would recite a ghazel of Hafiz or criticise a couplet of Feyzf, or some other would declaim a ghazel composed by himself in the manner of Fuzuli or a few verses from a qasida written after the fashion of Neff.

Things went on in this way till the year 1271 (1854—5), when Ziya Bey was, through the influence of Reshid Pasha, appointed third secretary to the Sultan. Ziya's wonderful skill in secretarial work, as well as his poetic talent, had come under the notice of Reshid Pasha and the Sheykh-ul-Islam 'Arif Hikmet Bey; and the former, who was then Grand Vezir, wishing to promote the interests of so promising a young man, procured for him the above-mentioned office in the Imperial household. From the day he entered the Sultan's palace Ziya began a new life; he felt that he owed the honourable position in which he found himself neither to his birth nor to any favouritism, but to his own merit and talent alone, and he determined that he would do what in him lay to maintain and increase his fair fame. He therefore turned his back on his former life, gave up his Bohemian companions, and set himself to walk in the straight way as became a dignified and learned member of so august a household.

But so sudden and violent a break from habits of long standing could hardly be effected with absolute impunity; a kind of mental paralysis seemed to come over the young man; the Ziya who used to sing 'like a nightingale' amongst his jovial friends seated on the bare benches of some dingy, grimy little tavern, moved silent as a mute through the gilded saloons of the Imperial palace. Edhem Pasha, the then marshal of the Sultan's household, noticed the depression of Ziya Bey, and strongly urged him to seek relief from it by turning his attention to the study of French. The Bey followed this advice, and, devoting all his energies to this new pursuit, acquired in six months so good a knowledge of the French language that he was able to translate into Turkish an historical treatise by Viardot on the Moors in Spain. This work, the Turkish title of which is Endelus Tarikhi, The History of Andalusia, is the first of Ziya's prose productions important from a literary point of view. Of course, the evidences of the translator's training are apparent in every sentence. The style has more affinity with the bureaucratic idiom of the Sublime Porte than with the simple and graceful manner of the translator's maturer works. Not even a Ziya Bey could at once master a foreign language and evolve a new literary style in the brief space of six months.

For several years Ziya retained his position in the Imperial household, and during the whole time he worked continuously at his French studies, translating numerous books, and ever seeking to make for himself a more and more perfect literary style, by assimilating and applying those principles which he recognised as lying at the foundations of the idiom and the literature that he was studying. There is nothing to indicate that in so doing Ziya was in any way influenced by the very similar efforts that were then being made by Shinasi. The two reformers appear, independently of one another, to have attacked the same problem with the same weapons at very nearly the same time, a not unnatural occurrence under the circumstances, and one which confirms what has been said as to the inevitableness of the rise of the Modern School in Ottoman literature at this particular juncture.

Amongst the French works mentioned as having been translated by Ziya during these years are Moliere's 'Tartufe', a 'History of the Inquisition*', Fenelon's 'Telemaque', and La Fontaine's 'Fables', the last being rendered into verse. But as there was little demand for such literature in those days, these works remained unpublished, and with the exceptions of the 'Tartufe' and the 'History of the Inquisition',² which were issued shortly after the translator's death, they appear to have been lost. The translation of Rousseau's 'Emil' is probably later; at least the preface, a part of which we have just read, is dated 15th Muharrem 1287 (April 1870), and was written at Geneva where Ziya was then living in quasi-exile.

Although so busy with prose, Ziya was not neglecting poetry. A large number of his lyric poems, including the best known of all, a 'Terjîc'-bend, were written during his tenure of office in the Palace. The effects of the author's European studies are very noticeable in these verses, alike in the clarity and directness of the thought and in the relative simplicity and sobriety of the expression. The outlook on life, too, is Western rather than Eastern, though the external form and mechanism of the verse remains Oriental throughout.

¹ Ziya's translation of the 'Tartufe' is entitled Riyanin Enjami 'The Result of Hypocrisy', and was issued in 1298 (1881), the year after his death, from the printing-office of the Waqt newspaper. It is rendered literally, line for line, in a kind of blank verse without regular rhyme or metre. The printed edition begins abruptly in the middle of the sixth scene of the first act. Perhaps the first few pages of the manuscript were lost.

² The Inkizisyon Tarikhi or 'History of the Inquisition' was published in 1299 (1882) by Ebu-z-Ziya Tevfik Bey, who says in a prefatory note that the translation was made twenty-two years ago, and that on the author's death his heirs, who were ignorant of its real value, sold the manuscript at Adana for a quarter mejdidiyye (about one shilling), and that he, unwilling that the public should be deprived of a precious work by so great an author, bought the manuscript for four hundred times the price at which it had been sold, and published it.

The story of Ziya's later life cannot be given here in any detail. The materials out of which to form it have not yet been published, nor are they likely to be under the present repressive regime; for the Bey became one of the most prominent members of the Young Turkey party, no word concerning which is allowed to issue from the Ottoman press.

Some time after the accession of ^cAbd-ul-^cAziz, which occurred in 1277 (June 1861), the Bey ceased to be a member of the Imperial household. This change was in all probability a result of the hostility which existed between him and ^cAli Pasha, whose influence had become all powerful with the new Sultan. ^cAli and his colleague Fu'ad Pasha had, as we have seen, been the rivals of Reshid Pasha and the persecutors of Shinasi, and Ziya bitterly resented the growing power of the former. He had more than once tried to bring about the fall of his enemy by representing to Sultan ^cAbd-ul-^cAziz how ^cAli was in reality usurping the imperial power, a proceeding which naturally roused the resentment of the Pasha, and eventually entailed the dismissal of Ziya from his position as secretary to the Sultan.

After his removal from the Palace, Ziya was appointed to a succession of more or less nominal offices; and it was during this time that he, in conjunction with several of the better educated and more talented of his younger contemporaries, laid the foundations of the Young Turkey party. These young men, among the most prominent of whom was Kemal Bey, had begun to realise the unhappy and backward state of their country, and were filled with an overmastering desire to do something to bring about a brighter and better state of things. Their aim was the regeneration of Turkey and her establishment as one of the great civilised powers of the world. Among the most important of the means by which they sought to accomplish this end was an idea, at first not very clearly defined, of substituting for the absolute despotism which had hitherto prevailed a constitutional regime under which the Sultan should rule conjointly with a parliament duly elected from all the nationalities within the Empire. The reformers flooded Constantinople and the provinces with tracts and pamphlets setting forth their views and drawing attention to the evils of the existing system. This brought them into collision with Ziya's old enemy, the then all-powerful Grand Vezir 'Alf Pasha, who, although sincerely desirous of the welfare of the country, did not approve of the revolutionary schemes of the reformers, holding that such reforms as were made must be compatible with the principle of absolute monarchy which was in harmony with the genius of the East. Hoping therefore to check the new movement and nip in the bud any aspirations after Freedom, as that word was understood in the West, he thought to break up the party by banishing under one pretext or another its leading spirits from the capital and scattering them in remote provinces. A large number of suspected persons were thus got rid of in the spring and summer of 1867.

Ziya was naturally amongst those singled out for banishment; and so he received the titular appointment of Governor of Cyprus, but before he could be shipped off to Famagusta, where he believed he would be secretly poisoned, he contrived to elude the authorities and escape to Europe along with his colleagues Kemal, Nurf and Rif'at Beys, and 'Ali Su'avi Efendi. This took place at the beginning of the year 1284, that is, in the early summer of 1867.

Some at least of the refugees who at this time made their escape to Europe had been invited by the Egyptian Prince, Mustafa Fazil Pasha, to join him in Paris, whither he had fled from Constantinople some little time before on account of a quarrel between himself and ^cAli Pasha. Until June 1866, when the direct succession to the Viceroyalty was granted by the Sultan, Mustafa Fizil had been the heir to the viceregal throne, and this alteration of the law, which resulted in his exclusion from his hereditary rights, had naturally incensed him against its authors. In order to carry out his scheme of revenge by attacking the Imperial government through the press, he desired to have with him in Europe some able Turkish writers who were opposed to the Grand Vezir and the system he represented. Hence his invitation to the leaders of the Young Turkey party. The Prince was enormously wealthy, and the promised to maintain as long as they lived those men who came to Europe at his request, a promise which he soon afterwards broke, as ere long he made his peace with the Ottoman court, and, leaving his proteges to shift for themselves as best they could, returned to Constantinople where he was reinstated in high favour, — for all of which he is bitterly reproached by Ziya in his famous satire called the Zafer-name.

After a time Ziya and his companions found it advisable to move their camp from Paris to London, which city they accordingly made their head-quarters. While in the West they brought out two Turkish newspapers, named respectively, the Mukhbir or 'Correspondent*' and the Hurriyyet or 'Liberty'.¹ In these papers/very many copies of which were smuggled into Turkey, they continued their propaganda in favour of a limited monarchy and representative government; and many of the articles contributed by Kemal and Ziya were most ably and eloquently written.

From London Ziya went to Geneva, where he was in the spring of 1870, and whence, as we have seen, he dated the preface to his translation of 'Emil. About this time the fugitives who had been pardoned by the Sultan for their unceremonious departure began to return singly to Constantinople; but Ziya did not dare to set foot in Turkey so long as his enemy 'Ali Pasha lived. At length, however, in 1288 (September 1871), the Grand Vezir died, whereupon Ziyd addressed to the Sultan a qasda in which, after praising him in the conventional extravagant and fulsome manner, he apologises for his flight, which, he says, was exclusively due to the rancour of an enemy who sought to banish him to Cyprus in order to kill him there, and humbly craves the Imperial pardon. Although it is not likely that Ziya's palinode had much effect on Sultan^c Abd-ul-^c Aziz, his prayer was granted, and he shortly afterwards received the much-desired permission to return.

¹ In 1894 the Hurriyyet was revived in London in the interest of the Ottoman constitutional party under the editorship of 'Djiwanpire' (Juvan-pfr), i. e. Selfm Faris Efendi.

Back in his native country, Ziya was once more enrolled in the government service, being employed, after the fashion of the Porte, now in one capacity and now in another. His leisure was given to the compilation of his great anthology, the often-mentioned Kharabat or 'Tavern', the publication of the three volumes of which extended from 1291 (1874—5) to 1292 (1875—6).

On the accession of Sultan 'Abd-ul-Hamid in Sha'ban 1293 (August 1876), Ziya Bey was promoted to the rank of Vezfr, and so acquired the title of Pasha, whence it has been usual to speak of him since then as Ziya Pasha. At the same time he was nominated governor of Syria, the suspicious and nervous monarch who now occupied the throne wishing, perhaps, to get one who had been so intimately connected with the constitutional party removed to a safe distance from the capital. Like Kemal, Ziya was not permitted to stand as a candidate for the Parliament to the creation of which his influence had so greatly contributed. From Syria Ziya" Pasha was transferred to Qonya, and from Qonya to Adana, where he died early in the Latter Jemdzi of 1297 (May 1880), worn with disease and broken-hearted at what he deemed the failure of his life-work.

Ziya Pasha is described by his friend Ebu-z-Ziya Tevfiq Bey as having been a brilliant conversationalist and delightful companion, gifted with a great command of language, a ready wit and a keen sense of humour.

Besides the translations from the French already referred to, Ziya wrote in prose a number of articles and treatises on various political and social questions. In such of these as were produced after he had perfected his style, we find, an ease and an absence of visible effort such as Shinasf never attained. Shinasf set out upon his work as reformer with greater earnestness of purpose, Ziya with greater brilliancy of native talent. The superiority of the purely literary gift of the latter is beyond question, and should it be asked how Shinasf and not Ziya has come to be regarded by the modern writers as the founder of their school, the answer must be sought in the all-powerful influence of Kemal Bey. It was the extraordinary literary genius and unvarying loftiness of purpose of that great writer — by many held to be the greatest Turkey has ever known — that brought about the wonderfully swift and complete success of the Modern School; and all Kemal's contemporaries and successors have ever been at one in looking up to him as their master and their greatest glory. Now Kemal was the disciple of Shinisf, the inspiring influence of whose precept and example he never lost an opportunity of gratefully acknowledging. Ziya, on the other hand, became known to Kemal only later on, and then not as teacher but as fellow-worker. Kemdl is the chief captain of the Moderns, Shinasf was the guide and inspirer of Kemal; therefore Shinasf, and not another, is honoured as the founder.

Unlike Shinasf, Ziya was a born poet. His earlier productions, the verses that he wrote before entering the Imperial household, were, as has been said, in the current fashion of the day, that is in the manner of ^cArif Hikmet and his school. His old friend Fatin Efendi mentions him with praise in his Tezkire, but as that work was published in 1271 (1854), before the poet had well passed his salad days, the notice it contains is necessarily confined to this immature work. Fatin however mentions two productions which I have seen noticed nowhere else; these are a riming Persian-Turkish vocabulary written as a 'parallel' to Vehbi's Tuhfe, and a commentary to an Arabic Tuhfe by ^cAsim Efendi the famous translator of the Qamus and the Burhan-i Qati^c. The biographer states further that his young friend had written a series of supplementary articles to the then recently published 'Ottoman Grammar' of Jevdet and Fu'ad Efendis.

The best of Ziya's lyric work was produced between the years 1271 (1854—5), when he became secretary to the Sultan, and 1284 (1867) when he fled to Europe. The verses written during this period, after the poet had made some acquaintance with French literature, are of great interest as presenting the earliest examples of Turkish poetry produced under the direct influence of Western culture. In the best known of all, the very remarkable Terji^c-bend which Ziya wrote in 1276 (1859), the inspiration is wholly Western. It is the spirit of Western agnosticism that breathes throughout this poem; it is Western science that has revealed to the poet those mysteries at which he stands aghast; the attitude of his mind before the terrible problem faced is not that of the Muhammedan thinker, nor yet of the dervish mystic, it is that of the European of the nineteenth century.

And so in most of the poems written about this time we can see in one form or another traces of the author's Occidental studies. In the past the general tendency had been to consider poetry either as a sort of intellectual play-thing or as a medium for the expression of transcendental ideas. Ziya thought to bring it more into harmony with modern life by employing it, much as he employed prose, as a vehicle for expressing what he, a man of the world and no mystic, regarded as practically the truth. The French poets had taught him that serious and earnest poetry might be written without flying off into the regions of mysticism, that the hopes and fears common to all men, if treated with sympathy and sincerity, would yield material for the noblest efforts of genius. Ziya's lyrics, then, differ widely in purpose from those of most of his contemporaries and predecessors; there is little attempt at prettiness, still less at transcendentalism;¹ his object is to state things as he believes them to be, and to give voice to his own views regarding them. In his attempts, however, to avoid the futilities of the 'Arif Hikmets on the one hand and the enigmas of the Esrar Dedes on the other, he at times stumbles into yet a third ditch. So great is his respect for common-sense that sometimes his verses are little else than rather ordinary prose thrown into metrical form. The language of these poems is in keeping with their substance, simple and straightforward on the whole, with little that is merely decorative, nothing that is wilfully obscure.

Although the pervading spirit is Western, the imagery remains Oriental. It is the same with the external form; there is no attempt at any innovation in the mechanism of verse. Ziya's Diwan contains nothing but what is quite orthodox, — qasfda and ghazel, terji^c and sharqi, all as in the past. The next step, the introduction into Turkish poetry of European verse-forms and rime-schemes was reserved for another and a greater than Ziya.

¹ So far as I have seen, it is only in the hymn which opens the preface to the Kharabat that there is any trace of the dervish mysticism in Ziya's poetry.

While inspired by the genius of the West, Ziya's work is never an imitation of European poetry; he did not attempt to write French poetry in Turkish words, as did certain of his successors, who thus unconsciously walked in the footsteps of those ancestors of theirs whose aim had been to manufacture Persian poetry out of the same materials. These poems of Ziya are the expression of a mind which, without ceasing to be, or seeking to cease to be, essentially Oriental, has been open to the influences of European culture. And in this respect they are unique; what has gone before has been exclusively Eastern, while from that which follows the Oriental element has been in great part deliberately eliminated. Ziya's Diwan forms the link between the purely Asiatic work of the Old School and the Europe-inspired poetry of the Modern. It might be taken either as the last word of the former or as the first word of the latter. The qasidas alone are wholly Eastern, and these form the least important section of the Diwan, being neither better nor worse than hundreds of their kind.

When I spoke in a previous chapter of Ziya's poetry being in an eminent degree typical of the twenty years between 1859 and 1879 it was more especially this Diwan that was present in my mind; for in it more particularly we feel that the author is struggling to deal with modern themes, yet can find no means of utterance but that of the by-gone generations.

No edition of Ziya's lyric poems was published during his life-time; but in 1298 (1881), a year after his death, a. selection of these edited by his brother-in-law Commander Hamdi Bey was brought out under the title of Esh'ar-i Ziya or 'Poems of Ziya.' It is this selection which I have spoken of as the 'Diwan'; but the author has very many poems not included therein. Some of these are to be found in his own anthology the Khairat; but the majority, especially those that touch on political affairs, have never been printed and still circulate in manuscript alone.

Among the best known of these prescribed poems is one which, according to the story, was found among the author's papers after his death. In form this too is a terjîc-bend, which, like the poet's earlier work of the same class, is pessimistic in tone. But here the note is more personal. Ziya Pasha died in the belief that the great work to which he had devoted his life and his splendid talents had ended in hopeless failure. He had worked hard and suffered much in his country's cause; and now at the end he saw the old evil Byzantinism again triumphant, and the infant constitution strangled by despotic hands; while the champions of liberty, slain, imprisoned, or, like himself, in virtual exile, were powerless to strike one blow or raise one cry on behalf of freedom. And the people — the people for whose sake they had toiled so hard and borne so much — stood still and did nothing. Instincts born of centuries of unquestioning submission to a ruler's will were not to be wholly done away by a brief propaganda, however earnest and gifted might be the preachers; but Ziya, disappointed in his dearest hopes and racked with suffering physical and mental, thought not of this, nor had he faith to foresee that the seed which he had sown would yet ere many years were past bear a rich and abundant harvest. And so he arose and with almost his dying breath denounced his people and his country, and anathematised his own efforts made to save them.

'Naught but sorrows on the loyal to this Empire ever wait;
'Sheerest madness is devotion to this People and this State.'

Such is the refrain of what is probably the saddest poem in the Turkish language.

In many respects the most remarkable of all Ziya's writings is his famous satire the Zafer-Name. This work stands by itself in Ottoman literature; there is nothing the least like it in the past, and as yet no one has attempted to imitate it. Several of the earlier poets, it is true, wrote what they were pleased to regard as satires; but the verses of this class composed by such men as Nefi and Sururf are little else than strings of grossly abusive epithets, exercises in vulgar vituperation, the grotesque abominations of which serve only to disgust the reader with their foul-mouthed authors. The work of Ziya is very different; the Zafer-Name is really a satire as that term is understood in modern Europe. Although it is not quite free from personal allusions, which are at times in somewhat dubious taste, there is no trace, however faint, of the outrageous scurrility of the 'Shafts of Doom'; the poet seeks his purpose either through bitterly ironical praise of his victim, or by holding up to ridicule his pretentious ignorance. Here again the influence of the West is evident; had Ziya known nothing of French literature, the Zafer-Name would either never have been written, or it would have been quite other than it is.

The satire is directed against the political enemies of the Young Turkey party, who for the most part were also the personal enemies of the author. While the chief victim is, of course, the Grand Vezir 'Ali Pasha, many of his colleagues and flatterers, notably Fu'ad Pasha, are incidentally attacked. The name Zafer-Name or 'Book of Victory', (we might translate it as 'The Paean'), which is a very common title in old Turkish and Persian literature for an account, in either prose or verse, of the military triumphs of some great warrior or monarch, was chosen by Ziyd on account of the irony of its suggestiveness. The poem which he so called is in form a qasida, and is composed in a strain of the most exaggerated and bombastic eulogy. Its ostensible object, and that to which it owes its name, is the celebration of the Grand Vezir's expedition to Crete in the autumn of 1867 in order to bring to a close the rebellion which had for some time been devastating that island; but its scope is really much wider, the whole of the Vezir's policy being passed in review, always in the same tone of ridiculously extravagant laudation.

The satire would have lost much of its point had Ziya avowedly written it himself; he therefore attributes it to one of 'Ali Pasha's warmest partisans, Fazil Pasha the Bosnian, who was then mutesarraf or governor of Izmid. In thus making him the author of this absurd panegyric on his patron, Ziya deals a by-thrust at the old Bosnian, with whom he had a crow to pluck. For when the reformers fled from Constantinople, this Fazil, wishing yet further to ingratiate himself with 'Ali Pasha, had written some verses on the subject which, if we are to believe Ziya, so pleased the infuriated Vezir that he straightway appointed the writer mutesarraf of Izmid.

But the Zafer-Name qasfda by no means completes the satire; in order to reinforce his attack on 'Ali Pasha, and at the same time to wing a shaft against another adversary, Ziya wrote a takhmis on the qasida, which he attributed to Khayri Efendi, a retired employe of the quarantine department. Even this was not enough; the satirist crowns the whole by a prose commentary on the qasfda thus turned into a mukhammes, which he fathers on an adversary to whom he owed a very special grudge, Husnf Pasha, 'Alis Marshal of Police. In this extraordinary production Ziyd pushes home ruthlessly and relentlessly his attack alike on ^cAli and Fu'ad Pashas, on Fazil, Khayri, and Husni, as well as on a host of minor foes.

Fazil, Khayri and Husni had all three dabbled in poetry, hence the appropriateness of the ascription to them of the three parts of the mock-eulogy. This ascription was not made by Ziya with the least intention that it should be credited; still less was it prompted by any notion of screening himself, for when he wrote the work he was safe in Europe, far beyond the reach of any adversary. The threefold attribution not only enabled him to hold up to ridicule the three fictitious authors, but heightened the whole effect of his work by imparting to it an air of verisimilitude which would otherwise have been lacking.

In conformity with their feigned authorship, qasida, takhmfs, and commentary are all written in the old style, or rather in the old style travestied. But while the first two, that is the verse portions of the satire, are presented as the work of men who, though they may be shameless flatterers and very mediocre poets, are at least educated, as education was understood in the school to which they belonged, the prose commentary, on the other hand, displays its suppositious author not only as a bare-faced sycophant, but as a ridiculously pretentious and grossly illiterate clown.

The Qasfda consists of sixty-six couplets, which, when the poem is extended into a mukhammes, give as many five-line stanzas. The first dozen of these are taken up with the mock-heroic panegyric on ^cAli Pasha's doings in Crete. This is followed by an ironical eulogy of the Grand Vezir's literary skill, notably as shown in the report which he presented to the Sultan on his return from the Cretan expedition. This again leads to a consideration of the Pasha's other accomplishments, which, in its turn, opens the way to a review of the whole of 'Alfs past policy, more especially of the various financial arrangements that he made, and of his dealings with the several foreign and quasi-foreign questions that arose between 1860 and 1868. References to a number of personal matters follow, and the poem is wound up, in imitation of the orthodox usage, with a kind of burlesque prayer for the continuance of the great man's prosperity and welfare.

¹ Zabtiyye Mushiri.

Even cleverer than the verse, and certainly far more amusing, is the prose commentary. Here Ziya had a much wider field for the exercise of his talents, and he availed himself of the opportunity to produce what is probably the wittiest piece of writing in Turkish literature. It is of considerable length, as Husni Pasha is made to follow the time-honoured practice of the Eastern commentator, who takes stanza by stanza, explaining first the individual words in each, with continual digressions more or less relevant, and then giving an explanatory paraphrase of the complete verse. This method of elucidation applied to the sixty-six stanzas of the mukhammes occupies 125 out of the 135 pages of which the lithographed edition of the satire consists. It is therefore impossible to give more than a succinct account of it here; but some further idea of certain of its features may be gained from the portions incorporated in the notes to the translated extracts from the poem.

Husni Pasha, the nominal author, was, as has been said, Marshal of Police when the Zafer-Name was written. He had much to do with the repressive measures adopted by the Government to check the new political movement, and was consequently in exceptionally bad repute with the would-be reformers. He seems to have been a typical official of the old style, probably without much culture, possibly without too many scruples; but he can hardly have been so amazingly ignorant as he is represented, else 'Ali Pasha would scarcely have placed him in so important a position.

In a preface which is prefixed to the commentary proper Husni Pasha is made to say, after a kind of parody on the usual introductory doxologies, that ever since his childish days he has been a devoted student of poetry, especially of the priceless works of 'Ashiq 'Omer and Gevheri,¹ and that he has himself composed some little songs and ballads.² He then goes on in a comically colloquial style to give a quaintly naive account of his career as an official and of the way in which he came to be appointed to his present position.

'The first instructions, he proceeds, 'that I received on being appointed to this honourable office (i. e. the Marshalship of Police) were to take means to prevent the circulation in Constantinople of papers like the Hurriyyet, the Mukhbir, and the 'Ulum³ published by the pestilent society called the 'New Turks',⁴ which had for some time dared to disturb the peace and repose of our lord 'Ali Pasha by their seditious publications. So, putting my trust in God, I tucked up my trousers⁵ and with or without right (may God pardon what ¹ The folk-poets mentioned on pp. 46 and 51 supra.

² In M. Belin's notice of the Turkish books published in Constantinople in 1289 (1872—3) occurs the entry: 'منظومة حسنى', Poesies de Husni pacha, ancien ministre de police.' I have been unable to procure a copy of this book.

³ The Hurriyyet and Mukhbir have been already mentioned. The 'Ulum was a literary and scientific paper edited by Su'avi Efendi.

⁴ The 'new Turks' i. e. the members of the Young Turkey party.

⁵ Pachalarini sighamag 'to tuck up the legs of one's trousers,' is a colloquial phrase meaning to prepare to set about some important business.

I did amiss!) I imprisoned some of those connected with the leaders of this society, while some I sent into exile. When they were being examined, I could not restrain myself for my anger, and cursed and swore at every one of them like a street rough. I gave much money to spies and agents whom I found amongst the Greeks, and multiplied detectives beyond what was required; and though in view of the present state of the treasury this useless expenditure may be deplored, yet, in accordance with the saying 'necessity maketh lawful the forbidden,'^f my heart could grudge nothing, since the peace of the inspired mind of my bounteous benefactor was dependent on the accomplishment of this serious business. Yet the miscreants still found a thousand ways and means to smuggle their papers into Constantinople; and so my heart bleeds for that while I have been the object of so much boundless favour and kindness, I have up till now been unable to perform this important service which would be acceptable to His Highness.

'Now the other day the Zafer-Name which my brother² Fazil Pasha, the ex-governor of Izmid, has versified upon the Cretan victory came into my hands. A thousand times I read it, laying it down and taking it up again, and I was amazed at its eloquence and beauty of style. Then I saw the graceful takhmfs which Khayri Efendi, the retired quarantine secretary, has composed on that delightful poem, and I was so impressed by the pearls of rare words and the lustres of strange fancies that it contains that the dungeon of my desolate heart was filled with the rays of desire and zeal and enthusiasm. And I said to myself: 'That fool of a Bosniac,

الضَّرُورَاتُ تُبَيِّحُ الْمَعْظُورَاتِ : A well-known Arabic phrase equivalent to 'necessity knows no law.*

2 I. e. my dear friend, or my colleague.

Fazil Pasha, showed his devotion to the vezirial throne by yon qit^a he composed when Ziya Bey went to Europe, and thereby obtained the governorship of Izmid; Khayrf too, though fit for nothing, while sitting at home with a pension of 5,000 piastres, praying God for the prosperity of His Highness the Grand Vezir, gave proof of his claim to clientship by making a chronogram on the departure of Ziya Bey and Kemal Bey and Su^cavi Efendi; yet I, who, though unworthy, have, through the special favour of that lofty-purposed one, obtained this rank and this office, and who am, moreover, amongst the illustrious poets of the age and formerly wrote a commentary on Ziya Bey's terj^c-bend, I sit still, as though now I could do nothing! What assishness is this!'

And so the Pasha, determined not to be behindhand, resolves to write a commentary on this poem in praise of his illustrious patron.

In the commentary on the first few stanzas Ziya's object is to hold up to ridicule the crass ignorance of the nominal writer. Thus, whenever any somewhat unusual Arabic or Persian word occurs, acquaintance with which would imply some little culture, Husni is supposed to turn up his Qamus or Burhan, when out of the several meanings shown in the dictionary he invariably selects a wrong one, so that when he comes to the paraphrase of the stanza he writes the most ludicrous nonsense, which has not the slightest resemblance to the real meaning. But Ziya soon leaves off this fooling, persistence in which would have grown wearisome, and begins to use the commentary as a channel for the indirect expression of his own views. The language, indeed, continues uncouth, is sometimes even gross, such as the real author deemed appropriate for the mouth of the feigned; things are still put in a whimsical fashion, and laughable blunders yet occur from time to time, but these are only incidental, and never intrude where they can affect the meaning of the passage; it is now Ziya himself who is speaking through the voice of Husnf. The commentary is a very skilful device to enable the satirist to extend his attack; in the mukhammes, owing to inherent limitations, only 'Alf and Fu'ad Pashas and the two fictitious authors are directly assailed, but in the prose part of the work, where there are no such limitations, not only is the attack on the two most prominent victims renewed and driven home, but a number of other more or less important persons, including the Egyptian Mustafa Fazil Pasha, are brought under the lash, while Husnf, the tool of the oppressor, is gibbeted for ever as the type of ignorant and brutal officialdom.

That the chastisement meted out by Ziya in this satire was on the whole well-deserved may be allowed, but at the same time it is impossible to deny that he is on occasions very unfair to 'Alf Pasha. Apart from the bad taste displayed in twitting him with his humble origin and his short stature, it is preposterous to lay to his charge all the misfortunes that befell the Empire while he was connected with the government. Ziya Bey knew perfectly well that many of the unfortunate arrangements to which he alludes were none of the Vezir's choosing, but that he was bullied into them by the European ambassadors; and in upbraiding him with these, the poet only weakens his otherwise powerful satire.

It must, on the other hand, be remembered that if Ziya sometimes lets his resentment get the better of his judgment, it was owing to 'Ali Pasha that he was then an exile, that 'Ali Pasha was his bitter personal enemy and the determined opponent of constitutional government in which, as the author truly saw, lay the only hope for his country.

The Zafer Ndme is not to be criticised as poetry; the greater part of the work is in prose, while what is in verse is purposely exaggerated to the point of becoming absurd; but it is the one great satire in Turkish literature.

The date of the composition of the work is nowhere given; but a reference in the commentary to Fu'ad Pasha as having died 'last year' enables us to fix it as 1286 (13 April 1869 — 3 April 1870).

As might be expected, the circulation of the Zafer-Name is, and always has been, prohibited in Turkey; lithographed copies are, however, none the less easily procurable.

The last volume of the Kharabat or Tavern, the great Turkish, Persian and Arabic anthology compiled by Ziya after his return from Europe, was published just four years before the true Modern School of Turkish poetry was inaugurated by the appearance of Hamid Bey's Sahra. This work of Ziya marks the last endeavour of the old Asiatic culture to retain what was left of its ancient supremacy in Ottoman literature. Never again can the dead past be held up, as it is here, as the model to which the living present must conform. But for this final effort all the forces of re-action are mustered. Side by side with what the anthologist held to be the most brilliant examples of Turkish poetry from the Birth-Song of Suleyman Chelebi down to his own Diwan, these are here presented to the young Ottoman poet, to evoke his admiring fealty and incite him to emulation, those famous and glorious masterpieces of the old Arabian and Persian classics which his fathers had ever regarded as the topmost pinnacles in the temple of human speech, the matchless paragons to approach which must be the aim of every poet. But all was in vain; 'when comes the true, the false departs,'¹ and this last barrier raised by a once mighty but now dying spirit fell almost without a struggle before the destructive criticism of Kemal and the creative genius of Hamid.

1 Kor'an xvii, 83: — جَاءَ الْحَقُّ وَ زَهَقَ الْبَاطِلُ.

That Ziya the reformer, Ziya the satirist of the Zafer-Name, should appear as a champion of the moribund past may seem strange; but it must be borne in mind, firstly that Ziya had by this time lost much of his old energy, and secondly that he does not set himself up as a defender of the Old School of poetry against the New, which latter indeed was not yet in existence. If Ziya was to make an anthology at all, it must necessarily be compiled from the works of the Old School; yet the making of such at this juncture and the offering of it as a textbook to young poets was in fact, if not in intention, a defence of the Asiatic School.

The work consists of three volumes, the first of which was published in 1291 (1874-5), and the remaining two in the following year. The first volume contains the long and elaborate preface in mesnevi verse, and the selection of Qasidas, those in Turkish coming first, arranged in the alphabetical order of the poets' names, those in Persian following, while those in Arabic come last. The second volume consists likewise of three parts, Turkish, Persian and Arabic, each of which is divided into several sections, as follows: Terkib-Bends and Terjî^c-Bends (including Mukhammeses and Museddeses), Qit^cas, Ruba^cfs, Ghazels and selected couplets from such. The third volume contains extracts from famous Mesnevfs, in two parts, Turkish and Persian.

The preface to the Kharabat is very interesting. It opens, according to old custom, with a hymn to God followed by one in honour of the Prophet. Then comes the 'Reason of the Compilation.' This begins with the writer's account of his early interest in poetry which has already been translated. After studying the Persian masters he tells us that he turned his attention to the critical examination of the Turkish poets, all of whom, starting with their protagonist the Chaghatay Mfr ^cAli Shir, he found to be imitators of the Iranians. Next we have a few remarks on the injury done to Turkish poetry by those early writers having substituted the Perso-Arabian prosodic system for the native 'finger-counting' or syllabic metres, and on the relations thus established between the poetry of the Ottomans and that of the Persians and Arabs. Ziya then mentions his great desire to be a poet, and states that though his studies may not have enabled him to attain this honour, they have at least given him a critical knowledge of the art. He is now past his forty-fourth year,¹ and reflecting on the transitoriness of life, he is filled with longing to leave behind him some memorial which will preserve his name from oblivion, when he bethinks him of the story of Qitmir the dog of the Seven Sleepers of Ephesus,² and how his name, though he was only a beast, has been handed with theirs down the ages by reason of his faithful service to these noble men. Ziya will therefore follow his example, and do a service to the illustrious poets. When during the course of his reading he came across any verses which specially pleased him, it had been his custom to copy them into an album. He now set to work to arrange this collection as an ordered anthology. He has preserved, he says, the old spelling; while as Chaghatay is, so to speak, the 'mother' of Ottoman Turkish, he has felt bound to grant it a place. He has passed the poets in review, and criticised each according to the best of his judgment. He has also included the best-known works of his contemporaries. He has inserted in his collection all his favourite pieces; yet in order to show both merits and faults, he has given examples of every style. He then bids the reader think how many books he must have read and how much labour the compilation must have cost him. This section of the preface winds up thus: 'Since the topers¹ meet therein, I have named this book the 'Tavern'; none would have given credit had I entitled it the 'Mosque', as not many poets frequent that place.'

¹ This would give 1289 or 1290 as the date of the preface to the Kharabat, allowing Ziya to have been born in 1245.

² The Seven Sleepers of Ephesus are reckoned as saints by the Muslims; they and their dog Qitmir are mentioned in Siira xviii of the Koran.

In the next section, 'Concerning the Conditions of Poetry in Turkey,' the author 'gives a brief account of the development of Ottoman poetry as he understood it. He ignores all the archaic writers and begins with Ahmed Pasha, Nejati and Zatf, who, he says, laid the foundations of Turkish literature. Although the matter of these early poets is good, their language is uncouth, and owing to the changes that have taken place, their idiom is only with "difficulty intelligible nowadays. The advancement of the language was much assisted by the encouragement which Sultans Selim I and Suleyman I gave to the poets, notably to Baqf, who, although obsolete words still occur in his verses, may justly be entitled the first reformer of the language. After his time the literary idiom became more thoroughly Persianised, chiefly through the influence of Nef' i and Nabi, the result being that it grew to be the most copious in the world.'³ Sabit and Sami, however, introduced a number of prosodial solecisms, which, being adopted by Raghib and ^cAsim, became the rule for subsequent poets.

The section which follows deals with the necessary quali-

i The old poets were fond of speaking of themselves as 'topers.'

* احوال اشعار روم.

3 Perhaps this is true; during the seventeenth century, at any rate, every word in the Persian and Arabic dictionaries was a possible Ottoman word.

fications of the Poet.¹ Two things are needful before a man can be a poet, of which the first is natural genius, the second culture. The first is the gift of God, for unless a man is born a poet, he can never become one: yet native talent, however great, is insufficient without diligent study and application. The typical poet is described as a man of free and easy temper, fond of pleasure, not over scrupulous in his religious duties, nor (except in his verses) particularly subservient to the great. He ought, we are told, to be neither rich nor poor. The reader is counselled to throw aside prejudice and learn the languages of Europe, as one cannot otherwise become a perfect poet. For in the poetry of these languages there is another eloquence, by which 'the mirror of thy heatt will be polished and the strength of thy soul doubled.' At the same time one must not copy this to the extent of losing one's own nationality; East and West are essentially different, and it is not good to destroy one's individuality. The poets of the West worship 'the Muses', and write very artistic dramas. These, especially when played by good actors, are very powerful; but it is a mistake to imagine that they are all lessons in morals, for though one in a hundred may be so, with the remaining ninety and nine it is otherwise. Poetry, continues Ziya, is the flower of speech; and it is because royal edicts have not always sounded sweet that kings have been wont to regard poets with favour.² It is, moreover, by the words of poets that the names of monarchs are saved from oblivion: who would ever mention the Atabek³ but for Sa^cdi? It is Jami and Newa'f who have preserved the fame of

مشروط و احوال شاعری

² That the poets by praising the kings in their vertses may gain for these rulers the admiration of the people.

³ The Atabek Abu Bakr ibn Sa^cd ibn Zangi, the prince of Shiraz to whom Sa^cdi dedicated his immortal Oulistan.

Huseyn Bayqara. The words of true poetry are eternal; the shifts and changes of time cannot destroy them. Whosoever can utter such words is an emperor in the realms of culture; his diwan will abide till the end of time; and while his enemies will pass away and be forgotten, his name and fame will endure for ever, — and in this lies his revenge.

In the succeeding section, 'On the Characteristics of the Ottoman Poets,' Ziya passes in review a considerable number of the more important of his predecessors, devoting a few lines to the criticism of each in turn. As almost all these criticisms have already been discussed when dealing with the several poets to whom they refer, it is unnecessary in this place to do more than remark that it is hard to imagine by what principle Ziya was guided when deciding whom to mention. The critical remarks are prefaced by a few lines in which we are told that those who have studied the subject divide Turkish poetry into three periods: the Early, which ends with Baqi (beginning presumably with Ahmed, Nejdti and Zاتف, whom a previous section describes as having laid the foundations); the Middle, which goes down to Nabf; and the Later, extending to the writer's own time. We are further informed that during the first and second of these periods poetry suffered no deterioration; but that during the third, poets have become rare.

This section is followed by two others similar in character, but of less extent, dealing respectively with the Persian and Arabian poets.

The preface to the Kharabat is brought to a conclusion by an epilogue in which Ziya, after saying that his collection does, as it were, prefigure the Judgment Day, the poets of many lands and ages being gathered together to receive sentence according to their works, offers his anthology as a guide to aspirant poets and as a souvenir to the 'men of heart.' He then seeks to disarm adverse criticism by reminding the would-be caviller that poems which appear trivial to him may be dear to others, that the world is not confined to him alone, and that a single couplet which appeals to a man, or which meets his case, is of more value to him than a whole 'dfwan. Again, the present collection is but a compendium, it does not profess to contain everything that is good; 'I plunged into an ocean full of jewels, I took just as many as I was able, the sea is still brimful.' And last of all the compiler claims indulgence on the score of his failing health. 'When the body no longer enjoys health the mind cannot remain unaffected; when I made this book my body was racked with pain and my heart was full of anguish; all my days have passed in troubles, and suffering has been the fruit that I have gathered; I have written as I could, well or ill; is not the plight of the sick man known? I trust, therefore, that the courteous and refined will hold my excuse worthy of acceptance.'

These excuses and entreaties of Ziya availed but little with the most illustrious of his whilom colleagues. The first volume of the Kharabat was published in Sha^cban 1291 (Sept.—Oct. 1874); before the year was out Kemal Bey had penned and sent to the compiler, from Famagusta in Cyprus, where he was then involuntarily residing as nominal governor, an attack upon the book, which for bitterness of tone is scarcely inferior to the Zafer-Name itself. Ziya had indeed laid himself open to criticism; he was not much of a critic — nothing where Kemal came; — and his selection of poems is no doubt a long way from being the best that could be made; his preface, moreover, is crude and ill-digested, often inconsequent, sometimes self-contradictory; but all this is insufficient to account for the acrimony of the attack.

The real motive of this violent onslaught of Kemdi was threefold. In the first place, he held — and held rightly — that at this time of day a man of learning and a professed reformer like Ziya had no business to set up as models of literary excellence many of the pieces included in the Kharabat. In the second place, the critic, ever a sturdy defender of the national cause, was disgusted at the sycophantic poems which, since his return from Europe, Ziya had been in the habit of addressing to Sultan ‘Abd-ul-‘Aziz, and of which several are printed in his collection. In the third place, Kemal felt it as a personal slight that, whilst all the other contemporary poets — including the compiler himself — were largely quoted, he was represented only by three rather feeble juvenile couplets, although he had, as Ziya knew perfectly well, written a great number of poems, many of which were of high merit. Whatever may have been the reason for this shabby treatment of an old fellow-worker, whether Ziya was jealous of his friend's greater poetic gift, or whether, as is more likely, he dreaded offending the Palace by quoting one who was anything but a persona grata, certain it is that Kemal took the matter to heart, and did not hesitate to avail himself of the opportunity which a criticism of the book offered to take revenge for what was to him an unmerited personal affront.

Under such circumstances strict fairness is not to be looked for; none the less, along with much that is beside the mark, being obviously written with the deliberate intention to wound, there is in this review a great deal of pure literary criticism which is extremely valuable and suggestive. The literary instinct in Kemal was too true and too strong to permit of his writing anything that had not in some degree a real and enduring Value; and while we cannot but think it would have been better for the author's fair fame had he magnanimously ignored an old ally's discourtesy, it is nevertheless true that had this review not been written, Turkish literature would have been the poorer by one of its best and most remarkable essays in criticism.

On the appearance of the second volume in the following year, Kemal wrote on it another similar review.

I have been assured by Turks who were personally acquainted with both Kemal Bey and Ziya Pasha that notwithstanding the unpleasantness of this incident the two poets remained good friends down to the death of the latter. So long as Ziya lived these letters remained unpublished, but in 1298 (1881), a year or so after his death, they were printed in Ebu-z-Ziya's Magazine, the first under the title of Takhrib-i Kharabat 'The Demolition of the Tavern,' the second under that of Ta^cqib 'The Pursuit.'¹

In spite of all the strictures of Kemal Bey, the Kharabat is an extremely useful book. It is unquestionably the best anthology of old Turkish poetry in existence; and in its three volumes it presents a fairly adequate picture of the achievements of the Asiatic School. No doubt every reader thinks with Kemal that he could improve the selection by omitting this and inserting that; but such is the common lot of all anthologies. A graver drawback is the evident haste and lack of care with which the preface was written; this, which has led to several inconsistencies, seriously impairs the value of a piece of work which, for all its faults, is yet full of interest. But here the state of the author's health may be pleaded in extenuation.

¹ The Takhrib runs through six consecutive numbeis of the Mejmu^ca-i Ebu-z-Ziya, beginning with No. 19 in the Second Volume, the issue for 15 Jemazi-ul-Akhir 1298. The Ta^cqib begins in No. 30 in the Third Volume — that for 15 Rebi^c-ul-Evvel 1300 — and runs on to No. 36. Both articles were afterwards (in 1303) published separately by Ebu-z-Ziyd Tevfiq Bey amono the volumes of his 'Library' (Kutub-Khane-i Ebu-z-Ziya).

Less easy to forgive is the egotism which has led the compiler to insert among his selections page after page from his own diwan, and that to so disproportionate an extent that he holds a position of exceptional prominence in a collection where the canons of taste should have ruled precisely the reverse. It might perhaps be urged in excuse that, no edition of his poems having at that time been published, the author was naturally anxious to ensure for his favourite verses such immortality as he could. But here his case was in no wise different from that of many — probably of most — of his contemporaries, including Kemal Bey himself. From the beginning it had always been the exception, rather than the rule, for a Turkish poet to collect his own diwan, or even to see it collected during his lifetime. It was much more usual to defer the collecting and arranging of a poet's works until after his death, when the task generally devolved upon some enthusiastic disciple or admiring friend, — of which practice we have seen many examples in the course of this History.

Brave and earnest, talented and industrious, Ziya rendered signal and enduring service alike to the cause of progress and to the new learning. But he was lacking in stamina; if he did not fall, he at least grew faint in the heat of battle. The years of exile wrecked his health and broke his spirit. Poor Ziya, he had overestimated the strength that was in him! Yet but for him, the literary revolution had not been the swift success it was; while had he only been the leader, it would have died, a mere flash in the pan.

Ziyd's famous Terjîc-Bend consists of twelve stanzas, ten of which are here translated; the remaining two are omitted as they are somewhat commonplace and tend to detract from the effect of the poem. The refrain is an ancient Arabic couplet here used by the poet as a sort of commentary on his own reflections, in fearful submission, in bewildered consternation, or in bitter irony, — as the reader will. Since Ziya's employment of it, this distich has become a household word among the Turks.

Terjî-Bend [468].

How passing strange a school this workshop of creation shows!
 Its every fabric doth some script of the unknown expose.
 The whirling heaven is a mill whose yield is agony,
 Bewildeed man is e'en the grain it grinds the while it goes. •
 Like to a demon fierce and fell its offspring it devours:
 How strange a nest doth this old hostelry of earth disclose!
 If one should heedful scan the shows of all existent things,
 Behold a dream, a phantasy, a tale of joys and woes.
 All things soever in the world are borne towards an end;
 Spring into autumn glides, and summer's heat to winter's snows.
 Belike 'tis man will never win Eternal Truth unto;
 All faiths and creeds appear to reason vague and futile shows.
 O wheiefore, Lord, is all this bitter stress and strife of pain,
 The while a crust of bread is all the need man really knows?¹
 There is no buckler underneath yon dome of turquoise hue;²
 Each atom is the butt 'gainst which fierce Fate his arrows throws.
 The scheme of the Everlasting Will is working out its end;
 But means are all the seeming good and ill that e'er arose.
 All things existent are the workings of some mighty Power:
 No circlings of the Heaven's wheel, no tricks of Fortune, those.
 'Glory to Him before whose work all intellect is dazed!
 'Glory to Him before whose might the wisest stand amazed!

With spheres beyond all reckoning the boundless sky is dight,
 Compared to which this earth were scarce an atom in our sight.

1 As Tevfîq Bey points out, the figure in this couplet recalls the incident with his lala which first directed the author's childish thoughts to poetry.

* The sky.

A thousand blazing suns are there, a myriad shining moons,
 A hundred thousand stars, and many a wandering planet bright.
 Each sun with its own satellites is journeying on its road,
 Whilst other satellites in turn attend each satellite.
 Each sun a special virtue o'er its own dependents sheds,
 While ever hidden from its feres is each dependent's plight.
 Around its centre every system ceaselessly revolves,
 In its own orbit every sphere Eternal Grace doth sight.
 Myriad existences are scattered through each system vast,
 In every spacious sphere a thousand worlds ' are brought to light.
 Each several being for a thousand beings is the source;
 Each several world suggests a myriad other worlds forthright.
 In every atom lies a viitue special to itself,
 In every frame according to its nature is the spright.
 The changing seasons and the years are different in each world;
 Nay, every land a different reckoning of time doth cite.
 In brief, this boundless ocean is an ocean that doth lead
 On every side into the dizzy whirlpool of affright.
 'Glory to Him before whose work all intellect is dazed'
 'Glory to Him before whose might the wisest stand amazed!'

This mighty mote of earth's a mote on such wise fashioned
 That separate therefrom not any mote may fix its stead.
 A fiery ball it is whose heart is scorching lambent flame,
 Whose crust is scarred with many a river-course and ocean-bed.
 Its crust, if thou compare it with that heart of raging fire,
 Is even as the vines that over dome or cupole spread.
 This crust it is that night and day for every living thing
 Provideth all that needful is and yieldeth daily bread.
 What time the fiery subterranean dragon breatheth forth,
 The burning mountains, showering flame, make earth to quake for dread.
 Even as by a shade of glass a lamp is circled round,
 By limpid air this giant mote is all encompassed.
 From off that world-embracing board it is that every day
 All creatures that have breath, whate'er their rank or power, are fed.
 This dot it is that marketh off the left hand from the right;

¹ By 'worlds' is meant 'Kingdoms' of natural objects, such as plants, animals and so on.

From hence the intellect sets out where'er its flight is sped.
 Here each existent atom tasteth life's hilarity,
 Here each created thing must drain the draught that dooms it dead.
 All creatures lie, reposing calm upon the couch of ease,
 Upon a burning globe they sleep sans fear, sans thought, sans dread.

'Glory to Him before whose work all intellect is dazed!

'Glory to Him before whose might the wisest stand amazed!'

The lion's cruel fangs do rend the screaming fawn, their prey;
 The fierce and ravening wolf devours the sheep, ah! welaway'
 The fly, though guiltless, yet becomes the hungry spider's meal;
 E'en so the royal falcon doth the harmless pigeon slay;
 The toitoise all defenceless must the eagle's victim fall;
 And with the helpless frog the snake his hunger doth allay;
 The chicken, though he doth no wrong, is mangled by the kite;
 The mouse, although he sins not, by the cat is torn in tway;
 The bitter eager hawk likewise the hapless sparrow kills;
 The buzzard's cruel talons too the blameless pheasant flay;
 The bird, though swift of wing, becomes the grovelling serpent's' meal,
 The fish that swims the sea becomes the fowl of heaven's prey;
 'Tis greed of pearls that handeth o'er the diver to the shark;
 'Tis lust of grain that doth the partridge to the snare betray;
 'Tis for the pearl anear its heart the oyster riven is;
 'Tis .for its song the nightingale imprisoned pines away;
 His castor 'tis that brings about the luckless beaver's doom;
 His fur it is that doth the sable unto death bewray.
 The universal law is this: — The strong shall slay the weak.
 On earth, in air, in sea this hideous carnage rageth aye.

'Glory to Him before whose work all intellect is dazed!

'Glory to Him before whose might the wisest stand amazed!'

At times the sun, at times a star, yea, e'en at times a stone
 Hath been the trusted god fore which a race has fallen prone.
 Now to the calf,¹ and now to fire, Ormuzd and Ahriman,²
 And now to darkness, now to light, have worship's rites been shown.

¹ Referring to the worship of the golden calf by the Jews.

² Ormuzd and Ahriman, the Principles of Good and Evil with the Zoroastrians.

Of old time beauty, wisdom, love were all as gods revered;¹
 For many a year in every land were idols served alone.
 At length the season came wherein God's Unity was learned,
 But e'en through that a thousand strifes, disputes and feuds were sown.
 The mind now thought Creator and Created one, now two,
 Believed now endless difference, now final union.
 Some held the Substance manifold, the Attributes as one,
 Then in one Origin did many an origin depone.
 Each one desires to shape a God conformable unto Those thoughts and aspirations which in truth are all his own.
 As different as mind and matter each from other is,
 So different the varied faiths and creeds the world hath known.
 How passing strange that every folk holds others' creeds in scorn,
 And deems the way of righteousness belongs to it alone,
 While yet with all this difference the aim of every sect
 Is but with true devotion one Creator's rule to own!
 'Glory to Him before whose work all intellect is dazed!
 'Glory to Him before whose might the wisest stand amazed!'

The roses smile, the nightingale breathes out his life in sighs,
 His fee is all the leech's thought the while the sick man dies.
 The corpse of him who riches had is e'en as carrion,
 Like vultures are the lavers and the heirs with greedy eyes.
 Upon the couch of luxury the city lord reclines,
 The stranger starves within the dust of scorn in woful guise.
 The smiling taper sheddeth radiance o'er the joyous feast,
 Amidst its flame, with crippled wing, the moth unheeded dies.
 Garlic and onion freely smile like tulip or narcisse,
 While prisoned close in narrow vial sweetest perfume lies.
 The sordid fool reposeth glad on cushions of delight,
 While in the stoke-hole of contempt croucheth the good and wise.
 Earthly prosperity is oft the lot of ignorance,
 What time the world a crust for wisdom's evening-meal denies.
 The banquet of society receives the false and vile,
 The spirit of the world doth oft the true and leal despise.
 The gifted poet many a time becomes the jest of fools,

¹ As by the ancient Greeks.

The wise and learned many a time the idiot's mirth supplies.

The feeble and opprest must often want for daily bread

What while a cruel tyrant's deeds to fame and glory rise.

'Glory to Him before whose work all intellect is dazed!

'Glory to Him before whose might the wisest stand amazed!'

O Lord, how comes it every man of learning here below

Must through the curse of knowledge ever rest and peace forego?

O Lord, why is it that with every wise man here on earth

The measure of his gifts is still the measure of his woe?

His peace of mind is gone, whatever side he turn his glance;

His understanding is abased, where'er his thoughts may go.

With knowledge as the only weight for understanding's scales

Is't possible the utmost truth of things to weigh and know?

Thus impotent may any vision ever win to see

The final verity of all the things and haps that show?

And then, as though the burden of this sorrow were too light,

From fools' o'erbearing tyranny in blood his vitals flow.

I know not; is it ordered in the canon of the world

That ever upon earth the brutish folk shall prosper so?

Since e'er the world hath been the world this rule hath still prevailed,

Before the vilest lout the man of heart is humbled low.

The dullard prosperous and courted lifts on high his head

Contemned and destitute the sage must ever humbly bow.

Fair Fortune doth caress the fool, crowning his every hope,

While fickle Fate the wise and good to beggary doth throw.'

'Glory to Him before whose work all intellect is dazed!

'Glory to Him before whose might the wisest stand amazed!'

The Father of Mankind was cast from Eden's happy plain;

As place of trial for Abraham his offspring's neck was ta'en;

The dole of separation from his son made Jacob weep;

The saintly Joseph's bidding-place was e'en the well of bane;

Ailments and aches of frame and limb made Job to groan full sore;

¹ These five last couplets have a peculiar appropriateness in the East, where not unfrequently those in authority are both ignorant and overbearing.

And Zacharias to the saw must needs his head constrain;¹
 John the Apostle² was beheaded by fell tyranny;
 Jesus the Fatherless endured full much of grief and pain;
 At Ta'if were the Prophet's shoon to ruby turned,³ and then
 Yon lustrous pearls were on the Day of Uhud broke atwain;⁴
 For hunger's pangs he bound the stone fast to his blessed waist,⁵
 Full little recked the Lord of Humankind of wordly gain;⁶
 Poisoned, from hence unto the Other World set forth the Leal;⁷

¹ According to the Muhammedan legend, Herod, when he had determined to slay John, was fearful lest some evil should overtake him through the prayers of his victim's father the saintly Zacharias. He therefore determined to murder the old man before slaying his son. Zacharias, becoming aware of this purpose, fled, and while on his way, saw a tree the trunk of which was split open as if to offer him a hiding-place. He concealed himself therein, whereon the trunk closed upon him, but a corner of his robe remained hanging out. Herod's emissaries passing by met an old man who, having enquired their errand, told them that he whom they sought was concealed in the tree, showing them the coiner of the robe that was hanging out. At the instigation of this old man — who was Satan in disguise — they got a great saw and cut longwise down through the trunk of the tree, so that the saint was cloven in two from the crown downwards.

² John the Baptist is referred to.

³ At Ta'if the Prophet Muhammed was stoned by some heathen and wounded in the legs, so that they were stained with the blood which ran down over his feet.

⁴ At Uhud the Prophet was struck on the mouth by a stone thrown by Ibn-Abi-Waqqas, and two of his front teeth were broken.

⁵ Referring to the hardships the Prophet underwent during his wanderings. In a former note (vol. iii, p. 56, n. 1) the custom of tying a stone against the stomach to lepel hunger has been already spoken of. The poet Sdmi hints at this practice in the following rather pretty little conceit on a qibla-name (for qibla-numa), as the Turks call a particular kind of compass arranged to point out the direction of Mekka; the compass itself is here likened to a pilgrim-lover seeking with fear and trembling the dwelling of his loved one, the needle being his staff; and the china face on which the directions are marked, his 'contentment stone.'

باغزده طاش باصوب آتش اینه آهن عصا کوی جسانانی ارار دتپهره قبله نما

'Stone against its middle bounden, and with iron staff in hand,

'Trembling sore, the compass ever seeketh out the Loved One's land.'

There is also a proverb, آجلقدن گوبکنه طاش باغلدی 'for hunger he has bound the stone against his navel.

⁶ Referring to the Prophet's simple life.

⁷ Es-Siddiq the Leal' was the title bestowed by the Prophet on his father-

And by the sword of doom at last was martyred 'Omar slain;¹
 And martyrdom befell him too who ordered the Koran;²
 The Blessed Hayder sank at last beneath the blade profane;³
 And Hasan, poisoned, passed away to Paradise above;⁴
 And foully murdered was the Monarch of the martyr-train.⁵
 In whomsoe'er the love of the Divine doth master all,
 To him in that same fashion woe and anguish still pertain.
 'Glory to Him before whose work all intellect is dazed!
 'Glory to Him before whose might the wisest stand amazed!'

Who made the human race this woful impotence to bear?
 Who raised that race on high above all worlds exalted fair?
 Who makes the devil and the flesh the instruments of sin?
 Who casteth into hell all those that lust doth overbear?
 Who drove Mansur into the region of 'I am the Truth'⁵
 Who gave the Holy Law the right to slay him then and there?
 Who made the wine unlawful and of bitter taste the while?
 Who taught Jemshid the bowl and heady potion to prepare?⁷
 Who made the Jew deny the miracles of Heavenly Truth?
 Who breathed the Messiah into Mary debonair?

in-law Ebu" Beki, who became his immediate successor in the government of the Faithful. According to one tradition, he died of the effects of poison administered a year before by some Jews.

¹ 'Omar, Ebu Bekr's successor, was assassinated by a Persian slave.

² 'Osman (in Arabic, 'Uthman,) was the Prophet's son-in-law and 'Omar's successor. He was murdered by a band of conspirators in his eighty-second year. It was he who made the final revision of the Koran.

³ Hayder, more often called 'Ali, another son-in-law of the Prophet, and 'Osman's successor, was killed with a poisoned sword by Ibn Muljem. Ebu Bekr, 'Omar, 'Osman and 'Ali, the first four Caliphs, are collectively called the Khulefd-yi Rashidin or 'Right-guided Caliphs.'

⁴ Hasan, the son of 'Ali, was poisoned in Medina by his wife Ja'fda at the instigation of Mu'awiya, the usurping Caliph and founder of the Umayyad, dynasty who had promised to marry her to his son Yezid.

⁵ That is Huseyn, 'All's other son, and the chief of the martyrs of Kerbeld.

⁶ Mansur, (properly Huseyn ibn Mansur, called el-Hallaj, the Wool-carder) the oft-mentioned martyr of the mystics, put to death by the decree of the 'ulema, the official interpreters of the Holy Law.

⁷ Jemshid, one of the ancient legendary Persian Kings, who is reputed to have discovered the art of making wine.

Who gave Sufyan and Ja'da,² Ibn Muljem,³ aye, and Shimr⁴
 The hardihood the foulest of all infamies to dare?
 Who sent Nasir-ud-Din of Tiis to counsel Huldgi?⁵
 Who caused Musta^csim all his trust with Ibn ^cAlqam to share?⁵
 Who makes the sick man stand in need of physic and of drug?
 Who makes the balm remedial its healing virtue wear?
 From whom is it the bee hath learned the geometric art?
 Who is it that hath taught the nightingale his plaintive air?
 Who is it round this Work-shop draws the veil of mystery?
 Who is it that inspireth man to search this everywhere?
 'Glory to Him before whose work all intellect is dazed!
 'Glory to Him before whose might the wisest stand amazed!'

He changeth moin to even and He turneth night to day;
 He maketh summer winter and He maketh autumn May.
 From the death-throe He bringeth life, He makes the dead to live;
 He turns the clay to man, He turns the body back to clay.
 For Abraham His might transformed the Fire into the Light; °
 To Moses did His wisdom high the Light as Fire display.⁷

¹ Ebu Sufyan, though he eventually embraced Islam, was for long among the most determined of the Prophet's opponents.

² Ja'da, Hasan's treacherous wife and murderess.

³ Ibn Muljem, the murderer of ^cAli.

⁴ Shimr, a commander in Yezid's army which defeated Huseyn at Kerbela, and the reputed slayer of the martyr Imam.

⁵ Nasir-ud-Din of Tus, a very famous philosopher and astronomer, was attached to the service of Hulagu the Mongol conqueror, whom he urged to march against Baghdad. Ibn ^cAlqam (properly Ibnu'l-^cAlqamf), the treacherous vezir of el-Musta^csim billah, the last Caliph of the house of ^cAbbas, was the means of admitting into Baghdad the Mongols, who thereupon murdered the Caliph, massacred the people, and laid the city in ruins. All these historical allusions are of course familiar to every educated Muslim.

• Referring to the legend according to which Nimrod cast Abraham into a huge blazing furnace for blaspheming his divinity, whereupon God sent the Angel Gabriel who changed for Abraham the fire into a garden of flowers. The story is practically the same as that of Shadrach, Meshach and Abed-nego in the Book of Daniel.

⁷ In the Burning Bush* With the mystics the terms Fire and Light are used to typify respectively the Awfulness and the Beauty of the Divinity.

Showing the Leyla-beauty Shirin-sweet before his eyes,
 For dole of love He made Ferhdd Mejun-distracted stray.
 He makes a heart bereft of peace for long through some desire;
 For some fond hope He makes a soul for years to thole dismay.
 He overthrows a kingdom for some greedy tyrant's sake;
 He casts through some intriguer a whole nation in deray.
 He fosters in all luxury a body many a year,
 And then at last He yields it to the clutch of death as prey.
 He maketh one a treasure-hoard of knowledge year on year,
 And in the dust sepulchral at the end lie doth him lay.
 Ziyd, the sage is he who doth his helplessness confess,
 And taketh warning by the things that pass before him aye.
 Throughout His Kingdom ever lules the Truth ;e'en as He will':
 The universe, e'en as He please, He makes or doth away.
 'Glory to Him before whose work all intellect is dazed'
 'Glory to Him before whose might the wisest stand amazed"

The following little ballad was written by Ziya in imitation of the Turkfs or folk-songs; the curious inconsequence, the lack of apparent connection between the lines even of a single stanza, is characteristic of the type.

Turkf [469].

The sun is sinking, and the evening-dusk is falling now,
 And from the vale the shepherd-lad is piping soft and low.
 May He who made thee keep the safe, for very young art thou.
 Come, join the flock, my little lamb, the wolf might seize on thee :
 Parted at last from thy dear love, my little one, thou'lt be.

Since that the Lord hath made of me thy slave for aye and aye,
 Where'er thou treadest it were meet my face and eyes I lay.
 Be not deceived by rivals' craft, but heed the words I say.
 Come, join the flock, my little lamb, the wolf might seize on thee :
 Parted at last from thy dear love, my little one, thou'lt be.

The mist wraps all the mountain round, the rival can't tie seen;
 One may not win unto one's love, the hunter 's laid his gin.

Wine is not drunk in company of faithless friend, I ween.

Come, join the flock, my little lamb, the wolf might seize on thee :

Parted at last from thy dear love, my little one, thou'lt be.

Of the sixty-six stanzas of the Zafer-Name I have translated thirty-three. These thirty-three have been selected as being either characteristic or interesting; and, taken as a whole, they give a fairly adequate idea of the poem.

From the Zafer-Name [470].

Lo! what a royal triumph! glorious! splendid! of high degree!

Lo! what a joyous conquest! lo! what a banner of victory!

'Twere meet that Zdl and Kustem ' ciy in Heaven, as they wondcring see : —

'Clod bless us all! what a meteor bright of loftiest radiancy'

'God save us all! what a wondrous triumph crowned by Fortune free!'

Here is the history of the past, if of argument there's need;²

The fights that have been fought on earth are many and many indeed;

But thus say men below, with angels bright above agreed: —

'The truth is this, that never since the spheres began to speed

'Hath any ever won so brave a victory to see!'

In dread looked the earth to the sky, the sky looked to earth in dismay;

And each in its terror sought some place where to hide away ;

The peoples of carth and sky wailed and cried in dire affray;

The welkin shook with the shouts: 'God giant him to live for aye!'

And quaked the earth with the cries: 'Exalted on high be he!'

Let us search all records through since history hath begun,

E'en from the furthest East to where sinks the westering sun.

Heroes and conquerors bold have arisen — many an one, — •

But ne'er to a triumph grand like to this hath any won,

Iskendei nor Hulagu, Hannibal nor Ctesar, nay'

¹ Zal and Rustem, the legendary Persian heroes.

² I. e. If the greatness of 'Ali Pasha's victory over the Cretan rebels be questioned, we appeal to history to show a more brilliant triumph.

Waving on Candia's towers, his flag triumphant flew;
 And the charm of the words he wrote * did Europe's heart subdue.
 To save the State in sooth was all that he held in view;
 •The might of his sword and pen hath conquered Crete anew
 Although that its folk were bent on independency.

'If the aim and purpose be but to rule the State aright,
 'Such number of lands and towns will all endeavour blight.'
 Himself did invent that rule illumed with wisdom's light.*
 He freed the State in sooth from a passing parlous plight;
 Elsewise were affairs to-day in a sad perplexity.

¹ 'Ali Pasha's official notes promising reforms, etc.

'Ali Pasha maintained, not without some truth, that much of the difficulty of governing the Ottoman Empire arose from the number and diversity of its subject races; and in order to remove, or at least alleviate, this difficulty he was in favour of granting a species of home-rule to certain districts where one or other of those subject races was in a large numerical preponderance. This was a scheme for which much might have been said, but it was hardly likely to commend itself to a Turkish patriot zealous of maintaining the supremacy of his people. In the following passage from the Commentary the idea and its originator are both turned into ridicule by Ziya who here for the first (but by no means the last) time makes Husni Pasha's fictitious work an instrument for the expression of his own political views: 'In the perspicacious opinion of our lord 'Ali Pasha the absence of good administration throughout the Sublime Empire is due solely to the extent of its territories and to the want of cohesion amongst these. Thus if a number of districts were cut off and formed into compact governments, like the Kingdom of Greece, the administration would in the future certainly be improved. Now this sagacious suggestion is of the inventions of that Fountain-head of Perfections, and none before him ever uttered it. And by this sage scheme it is that Crete has been placed under a special government, and the Empire relieved from that trouble. Although such diversities and the symptoms of bad administration may still be seen in the Principalities (Walachia and Moldavia), in Servia, in Montenegro, in Egypt, in Arabia and in Bulgaria, it is beyond doubt that, through the lofty zeal of His Highness, these troubles also will shortly be removed from the Empire.

"What sorrow for the nation's bulwarks buttressed by thy like?" ' This Persian hemistich which Ziya makes Husni quote may be read either as a question or as an exclamation.

چه غم دیوارِ اُمت را که باشد چون تو پشتیبان

While safe and snug was his home in the midst of his maidens fair,
 And while with his servants' jests his nights enlivened were,¹
 Unbidden did he all such delight and peace forswear;
 He chose this hard campaign in the winter-tide to share,²
 While never an one had wished of him to be rid or free.

There were vessels twenty-and-five his high commands to obey;
 He took one Greekish steamer, the fruit of a year's essay.³
 Although he ne'er had studied things naval till that day,
 He wrought that on the squadron nor slight nor stigma lay;
 Full worthy he an admiral of the English fleet to be.*

When forth to that bitter war did this valiant champion go,
 The very thought of his sword made the paynim hordes bow low.

* Ziya here takes the opportunity to deal a blow at some of his opponents, notably at his old patron Mustafa Fazil Pasha who had played him false. Husni is made to say in his Commentary: 'That is, his servants such as Vehbi Molld, Sa'ib Bey, Billuri Mehmed Efendi, 'Omer Fa'iz Efendi, Khalil Bey and Mustafa Fazil Pasha, whose nights are usually spent in drinking and making merry at the private feasts of His Highness our benefactor, and who, when their pates get heated, amuse His Highness with ribaldries of which larrikins would be ashamed.'

² 'Ali Pasha arrived in Crete on the 28th of September 1867.

³ The Greek steamer Arkadi, after having repeatedly run the blockade bearing arms for the rebels and landing filibusters, was taken by the Imperial vessel
 'Izz-ud-Din. »

⁴ The 'Summary of the Meaning' which winds up the commentary on this stanza is a good example of Ziya's satirical praise. 'When he who is versed in all learning and science, to wit, His Highness the accomplished 'Alo Pasha, set in motion the wheel of departure to conquer and restore Crete, that island was blockaded by twenty-five government vessels. Notwithstanding this, the steamer Arkadi and Russian and Italian steamers were purling about bearing stores to the island rebels. At length, after a year's untold efforts, he succeeded in capturing the aforesaid steamer, and by this marvellous victory he saved the honour of the fleet from any hurt. Now when one who never in all his life had seen any sea except the Bosphorus or any ship beyond a row-boat is able to achieve so glorious a triumph solely through his own energy and ability, is he not worthy to be an admiral in the English navy? For the English naval chiefs are more skilful than those of any other nation; but while they have to study a long time in their schools and do not become admirals until after forty or fifty years, our benefactor has attained to this degree of perfection through his inborn genius or through the sheer grace of God. O happy Empire!'

He held the soldiers back, nor let one pursue the foe;¹
 How 'Pardon is the alms of victory' he did show,²
 Nor swept from the face of earth the dastard rebel crew.

His skill in all arts that be unto everyone is known;
 But in letters more than all is his wondrous talent shown.
 E'en supposing we could not prove these pretensions one by one,³
 That Note * of his which recounts all the deeds that he hath done
 Unmatched and unrivalled stands for its rhetoric's brilliancy.

No eye may pierce to his reed with art invested fair,
 For circling o'er its head doth the halo of wisdom flare.

¹ In the Commentary on this line Ziya says through his monthpiece Husni Pasha: 'When that Mine of Magnanimity (i. e. ^cAli Pasha) was in Crete, the Greek rebels used often to attack the guard-houses held by the Muslim troops and to seize captives whom they murdered with all kinds of tortures, and to come down into the environs of the towns and destroy the vineyards and orchards. In brief, there is not a brutality that they have left undone; still His Highness forbade the troops to pursue them. It was even as in the Montenegrin trouble, when, though the mountaineers used to cut off the noses and ears of the Muslim soldiers, our lord ^cAli Pasha would permit no attack on them, in order that the question might be settled by diplomacy.'

Of course, ^cAli Pasha's abstention from chastising those malefactors as they deserved was really brought about by the pressure put upon the Porte by certain of the European embassies. Ziya knew this perfectly well, and his reflections on the Vezir's conduct in this and some other similar cases are unfair. None the less an Ottoman minister who seems to yield over much to foreign insolence can hardly expect to stand well with his countrymen, who naturally and justly can see no reason why they should not deal with their revolted subjects in the same way as Englishmen have dealt with revolted Indians, Frenchmen with revolted Algerians, and Russians with revolted Poles and Turcomans.

العفو زكاة الظفر 'Pardon is the alms of Victory', is a hadfs.

³ These pretensions, i. e. our claim that he is skilled in all the arts that be.

⁴ The Note which ^cAli Pasha presented to the Sultan on his return from Crete. In it he gave an account of all he had done in the island and of the measures he had taken to ensure tranquility. It was published in the Constantinople newspapers. Having satirised ^cAli's exploits in Crete, Ziya now proceeds to turn his literary and other accomplishments into ridicule. ^cAli Pasha was not, and did not pretend to be, a man of letters; there is, however, a ghazal by him (the only one known) in Fatin's Tezkire,

This verse from his Victory-Book ' read thou with heed and care:
In questions and upon points that touch the loved one's hair²
The threads suggestive coil at his pen's foot verily.

Whatever thing he writes, the world is compelled to praise;
Whatever thing he doth, the people admire always.
How could it be that his works should not all men amaze?
Mumtaz³ and Fu'ad⁴ applaud and extol his every phrase,
Gazette⁵ and Journal⁶ both proclaim his doings aye.

Sharpen he but his wits anything whate'er to do,
In one or another way he is certain to pull it through,
E'en matters held by all for impossible hitherto.
Such is his might and power that if he but choose pursue,
Impossible things by scores to possibles changed will be.⁷

That is this qasida called Zafer-Name or Victory-Book, which Fazil Pasha is feigned to have written, and on which Khayri Efendi is here supposed to be making a takhmis.

* زلف یاره طوقندی * To touch (caress) the locks of the beloved,' is a proverbial phrase meaning either to wound the susceptibilities of some one by touching his sore point, or, as here, to attack indirectly the policy of the government or of some great man. The phrase is quoted in the following couplet of Munif:

زلف یاره طوقندی گیبی صبا یینه بر پیچ و تاب وار دلدہ

¹Tis as though played the breeze with the loved one's locks,

¹Once again is there qualm and throe in my heart.'

Ebu-z-Ziya Tefiq Bey, who cites this couplet in his book of proverbs, has followed a manuscript in which the last line of this distich has been transposed with the last line of the preceding one, the result being that the quotation, as he prints it, is meaningless. The preceding couplet, which is mystic, is:

ذره بیوجود عشقم لیک صد هزار آفتاب وار دلدہ

'A mote in-existent of Love am I;

'Yet suns by the myriad glow in my heart.'

³ Mumtaz Efendi, a government official of those days.

⁴ Fu'ad Pasha, 'Alis famous colleague.

⁵ Taqwim-i Vaqayi', the Ottoman official Gazette.

⁶ Jeride-i Hawadis, 'the Journal of Events', the well-known Constantinople paper with which so many of Ziya's early associates were connected.

" Ilusni Pasha is made to say that this is of course a poetical exaggeration

'Tween him and the King of the Age¹ no sundering veil is spread;²
 There is but this, that his name is not in the Khutbe read.⁸
 But such is the power of his word in every spot and stead,
 The Sultan is but a name on the tongue of the people said;
 The one who truly rules from the throne of the State is he.

The chief in Damascus town was by his orders slain;⁴

on the part of the author of the Zafer-Name who by 'impossible things' means things which none would have conceived possible of accomplishment, such for instance, as this suppression of a Cretan insurrection at the cost of only some eighty thousand lives and a' million or two of purses in so short a time as two and a half years, or as the imprisonment and banishment of many Musulmans without even the pretence of a trial, after the numerous Imperial proclamations guaranteeing the liberty and the protection of the lives, property and honour of all Ottoman subjects. Husni adds that Fazil and Khayrf proceed in the following stanzas to give further examples of 'Ali Pasha's successful accomplishment of other similar 'impossible things.'

¹ Sultan 'Abd-ul-'Aziz.

² I. e. 'Ali Pasha is on the most intimate terms with the Sultan whom he has replaced, as the following lines declare, in the virtual sovereignty of the Empire. 'It is among those impossible things which, through the power possessed by our lord 'Ali Pasha, have become possible, that he should subject to himself a monarch so zealous of defending the rights of sovereignty as Sultan 'Abd-ul-'Aziz.' (Commentary.)

³ The Khutbe is the prayer recited in the mosques every Friday, in which the name of the reigning sovereign is mentioned. Khayri Efendi is here made to say that the only distinction between the sovereignty of 'Abd-ul-'Aziz and that of 'Ali Pasha is that the latter's name is not mentioned in this prayer.

⁴ In the summer of 1277 (1860) there was a serious riot in Damascus, in the course of which many of the Christian inhabitants lost their lives. Pressure was brought to bear upon the Porte by certain of the European powers, in consequence of which 'Ali's colleague, Fu'dd Pasha, was despatched to the Syrian capital with instructions to put to death a number of the Muhammedan inhabitants, including the governor Ahmed Pasha. This Ahmed Pasha was a military officer who had served with distinction in the Crimea, and the shameful treatment which, if Ziya's account be correct, he received at the hands of the Porte, culminating in his sacrifice to the bloodthirstiness of Europe, was most likely the work of some high-placed rivals at head-quarters. This is what Ziya says through the mouth of Husni: 'This Waif (Governor-General) of Syria and Marshal of the 'Arabistan army-corps was the innocent and martyred Ahmed Pasha. As is known to everyone, some three or four months before the outbreak of the Damascus riot there were in that city four battalions of troops. At that time Ahmed Pasha was ordered by Riza Pasha, the then commander-in-chief, to despatch two of these with all speed to Rumelia' Ahmed Pasha replied that owing to the intrigues of some foreign priests, and especially of the French consul in Damascus, signs of ill-feeling between the Muhammedan and Christian citizens had for some time been apparent, that it was difficult to maintain order even with the four battalions that he had, and that if the half of these were withdrawn, a tumult among the people was almost certain to occur. He added that should the despatch of these battalions be insisted on, he would pray that he might be allowed to resign his post and that another might be appointed thereto, as he would not be responsible for any evil results that might ensue. To these words Their Excellencies the Ministers paid not the slightest attention; they withdrew the battalions from Damascus and they did not replace Ahmed Pasha. Not long after this they demanded further one of the two battalions which still remained. Ahmed Pasha, who then foresaw what would happen, wrote an answer — a copy whereof was sent to the Imperial Palace and so must be lying pigeon-holed there — in which, after describing in an almost prophetic manner the disastrous events which would occur in Damascus, he categorically announced his resignation, as should this other battalion be withdrawn, he declared himself unable to preserve order in the city; while should his resignation be declined, he would none the less look upon himself as having resigned, as he would in no wise accept responsibility for the future. This reply was discussed in the cabinet, yet the battalion was withdrawn. Three or four days later the tumult broke out. The cry 'the Muhammedans are murdering the Christians!' made Europe jump up, and there was a tremendous uproar. Fu'ad Pasha was despatched, investigations were made, the upshot being that one hundred and sixty-eight innocent Muhammedans were executed, while they shot Ahmed Pasha, whom they reproached, saying, 'why did you not go out of the palace during the riot and let them tear you in pieces?' Requisitions were made on behalf of the Christian families who had suffered, and the Treasury indemnified them to the extent of 800,000 purses; and in such fashion was the matter closed. Many different reports were current concerning the execution of Ahmed Pasha; some people declared that on the occasion of a drunken quarrel between him and Fu'dd Pasha, when they were on service at Bucharest, Fu'dd said to Ahmed, 'Thy death shall be at my hands!' and in order to make good his words sacrificed him at Damascus. Others maintain that 'Ali Pasha had for long borne ill-will to Ahmed Pasha, and, using this question as a pretext, brought about his death; and indeed when, during the course of the investigations, Ahmed Pasha was brought to Constantinople, 'Ali Pasha urged his being sent back to Damascus, ostensibly for the completion of the investigation, but really, it is said, that he might complete the term of his life. Others again are of opinion that 'Ali Pasha sacrificed Ahmed Pasha as a sop to Europe, and especially to the Emperor of the French; while, according to some, there was in addition to these reasons a rivalry for office between Riza and Ahmed Pashas. But, be all this as it may, although the unfortunate Ahmed Pasha had fully and carefully instructed the government as to the state of affairs in his province, the authorities paid no attention to him, and the arms that he had and the troops that were with him were taken away, and he himself was afterwards shot. As our lord ^CAli Pasha was then reigning supreme as Grand Vezir and Foreign Minister, the orders in these matters were executed at his instructions. Now before the occurrence of these events none would have believed it possible had it been said that such a state of affairs should arise, that a Marshal of the Ottoman Empire should be shot like a brigand, a sacrifice to the rancour of 'Ali Pasha, that one hundred and sixty-eight Muhammedans should be butchered, and that several hundreds of households should be driven into exile, and their women and children left to perish. Yet the might of our lord 'Ali Pasha has brought these seemingly impossible occurrences into the field of possibility!

And thus did he heal the hates that clave the folk in twain.¹

He granted the Nazarenes in the Lebanon to reign.²

¹ This line is of course ironical, racial and religious enmity not being extinguishable by the blood of any number of Walis.

² In consequence of continued fighting between the Druses and Maronites, a body of French troops under General Hautpoul and of Turkish troops under Fu'ad Pasha marched upon Mount Lebanon in the autumn of 1860. Later on the district was, through French influence, formed into a separate province, the governor of which must be a Roman Catholic, that is, a co-religionist of the Maronites. Here is Ziya's account of the business as given through the Commentary: 'Another instance of the power of our lord 'Ali Pasha to make possible the impossible is the placing of the government of the Lebanon in the hands of a member of the Catholic sect. As is generally known, until the question of the Lebanon arose, those parts were under the administration of the governors of Sidon and Beyrut. The inhabitants of the Mountain are of two peoples of different religions who are called Druses and Maronites. The Maronites are Catholics, and so they have always had the moral support of France; but as the Druses, who have a special creed of their own, are the more numerous, they are unable to put up with the privileges of the Maronites. Consequently there is never any cessation of strife and quarreling between them; the more especially as the Catholic priests, seeking to drive the Druses into the Catholic sect, and the French consuls, hoping some day to annex those districts to France like Algiers, never leave off exciting hostility between the two peoples. At length, after the trouble in the Lebanon, it was decided to give over the government of those parts entirely over to the Catholics by placing the administration in the hands of a mushir who must belong to that sect. A number of privileges were also granted which do not prevail in other provinces. The governorship, along with the rank of mushir, was conferred first on Dawud Efendi, who had been charge d'affaires at Berlin and had written a book in the German language, and who was moreover one of the most steadfast in obedience and humility among

In Egypt-land a change in the heirs did he ordain.¹

He made a captain Prince of Roumania to be.²

Ten thousand Muslim households, obeying his command,

Abandoned hearth and homestead and fled their native land.

That there should float our banner — with this condition grand —

To Servia the fortress of Belgrade did he hand:³

Thus perfectly he preserved the Empire's integrity!⁴

Ali Pasha's servants. But after some years certain indications of thoughts of independence were perceived in him, so he was brought under a clever pretext to Constantinople, and the notorious Franco Efendi, one of Fu'ad Pasha's sycophants, was made mushir and appointed governor of the Mountain in his stead. As Maronites and Druses alike are savage mountaineers, honest and trustworthy men are exceedingly rare among them; while very plentiful are the likes of Rizq-ullah Hasun, who, while chief secretary of the tobacco customs, was for well-known reasons put in prison, whence he escaped and took up his abode with his compatriot Ghadban, the Ottoman consul in London. Now before these events would it have been thought possible that the Mountain should have been thus placed under a practically independent government which is virtually under the control of France? But lo, the might of our lord "Ali Pasha has achieved this!"

¹ Direct succession to the Khedivial throne was granted in 1866 to the Viceregal family of Egypt, in place of the Ottoman system which had prevailed since the time of Mehmed 'Ali(Pasha. By the change thus effected, Mustafa Fazil Pasha, Ziya's former patron, lost his chance of succession; and it is in the commentary on this line of the Zafer-Name that the poet takes his revenge on his faithless friend, by making Husni bring forward many charges against him ostensibly to justify 'Ali Pasha in sanctioning this change in the succession on the ground of Mustafa Fazil's being an imbecile and consequently unfit to reign.

² Prince Charles of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, elected in 1866.

³ The Imperial government maintained a garrison in the citadel of Belgrade till 1867, when the troops were withdrawn, and the fortress handed over to the Servians. It was stipulated that the Ottoman flag should continue to fly over the citadel, — a barren recognition of the Sultan's suzerainty which the Servians did not very long respect. The first two lines of the stanza refer to the Muhamraedan inhabitants of Belgrade, who, unable to trust the native government, had to leave their homes when the troops that had hitherto protected them were withdrawn.

* Referring to the oft quoted phrase 'the integrity and independence of the Ottoman Empire.'

The Kenez,¹ too, hath been brought by his words to the rightful way,
 No more will he pounce as of old to left and right on his prey;
 In a realm so safe as that what need for a guard to stay?
 What though in Montenegro he did the forts away!

A gnat can a mount o'erthrow, if the will of God it be!²

If but the help of God assist in his purpose dear,
 Full soon will these gypsies sit on the couch of the Grand Vezir;
 It is but the Jews alone that form the exception here,³

¹ The Kenez (sometimes pronounced Kinz) is the title given by the Turks to the Prince of Montenegro. Formerly, when that savage chieftain exercised the functions of an ecclesiastical as well as of a temporal ruler, he was called the Ladiqa. Both Kenez (Knyaz) and Ladiqa are originally Slavonic words.

² In the commentary on this stanza we read: 'As is well known, this Montenegrin business, during the four years that it lasted, swallowed up the pick of the Ottoman officers and soldiers and the bravest youths of Bosnia and Herzegovina, was the cause of the present desolation of these two provinces, and inflicted on the Treasury a loss of many thousand purses. At the same time it was the making of certain men who, though previously unknown, have now come to the front; Kani Pasha, Dervish Pasha and their likes have fattened on the soup of that free-kitchen, but it is in the blood of many thousands of the Muslims that they have broken their bread. At length the mountainers were overcome, and the Muslim troops entered Cettigne. On this the Sublime Poite conferred with the Five Powers, and it was unanimously agreed that block-houses built of stone should be erected in such places as were necessary in Montenegro and garrisoned with a sufficient number of troops, in order to protect the adjacent Ottoman territories from further depredations by the inhabitants of that country, as these know not of such matters as trade and agriculture, and have no other occupation than brigandage and highway robbery. Now although the mountaineers, through their native savagery, used during the war to cut off the ears and noses of our soldiers, and to rip up the slain and tear out their entrails, and had indeed formed at Cettigne a regular museum of the heads of our soldiers, yet as they represented to our lord His Highness 'Ali Pasha, through the medium of the Russian embassy, that the decision to build such block-houses was very distressful to them, and that so long as they saw these before their eyes a certain coolness might overtake the loyalty they were all eager to bestow upon their Suzerain, and as the French embassy supported the Russian by friendly advice, the pity and compassion of our lord the Pasha were excited, and all those block-houses, bought with the blood of so many thousand Muslim soldiers and at the cost of so many thousand purses, were levelled with the ground.'

³ When Ziya wrote, no Jew had ever been promoted to the grade of Bala or Mushir.

For of Greeks and Armenians both doth he make Bey and Mushir;
The equality of rights ¹ to perfection brought hath he.²

* * *

Though the purpose of Fu'ad was to win at Damascus fame,
What need a wholesale slaughter of the Muslims to proclaim?³
Were 't not enow had he acted like him of noble name?⁴
Such are the deeds they do who at lasting glory aim;

Is 't meet to defile Zemzem though one would remembered be? *

Were it strange at all that he⁶ who doth Fortune's charger ride,
When armed with the whip of zeal, should the wall like a donkey guide,
What else could have brought such weal within so brief a tide?
Had ever the steed of Empire so swift unto progress hied,
Had he not urged it on with the spur of his energy?

¹ The equality of rights between the different races subject to the Sultan.

² This stanza is followed by three in which 'Ali Pasha's financial arrangements are criticised.

³ A return to Fu'ad Pasha and the Damascus executions.

⁴ That is, Fu'ad should have acted at Damascus as 'Ali did in Crete.

⁵ Referring to a legend of a certain filthy and foolish fellow who defiled the Zemzem, the sacred well at Mekka, in the hope that by thus doing what none had ever done before, he might immortalize his name. 'And in truth, because of that villainy of his, will the name of that accursed one be mentioned with execration while the world lasts. * * * * The writer of the poem, attributing Fu'ad Pasha's proceedings in Damascus to a desire to perpetuate his name, compares him to the fellow who defiled the Zemzem; the humble commentator would say that as Yezid is also, like the defiler of the Zemzem, amongst those who have made a name at Damascus, it would have been most appropriate to have compared the Pasha to him. Alas, that the metre would not admit of it!' The Yezid here mentioned was the son and successor of the usurping Caliph Mu'awiya, and is loathed and execrated above all others by the Muslims; indeed he holds in the Muhammedan world much the place occupied by Judas Iscariot in the Christian. It was by his orders that the martyrs of Kerbeld were slain, and it was he who most cruelly insulted the hapless survivors of that fatal day when brought into his presence at Damascus. One Muslim can cast no more bitter reproach at another than to compare him to Yezid.

⁶ I. e. 'Alf Pasha.

⁷ A reference to a legend concerning the saint Hajji Bektash, which says that when that holy man desired to go from one place to another he used to mount a wall which carried him whither he would be.

To his private audience none may win who is base or low
 He doth on the 'ulema" whate'er they desire bestow.
 No scorn of the Prophets race would he in public show;
 So great a lord is he, did the Dean of the Sherifs ¹ go
 Up to his audience-hall, his place would the shoe-rank be.²

The Arab and Persian Kings are eclipsed by his high renown;
 The titles of royalty he appropriates as his own,
 By the style of Son Altesse in the Moniteurs he is known.³
 Is it much though to Europe's lands his eagle-fame is flown?
 Were it strange should a vulture fly to Beyqoz from Geybize? ⁴

Should he but his holy ire to the raging lion show,
 Its body would fall in bits for the dread it were sure to know,
 So let not the evil beasts in heedless surety go;
 As yet they have felt not his wrath, but should they once do so,
 Not a Wolf would the mountain roam, not a mouse o'er the ceiling flee!

Although he may harshly deal with the righteous men and wise,
 'Tis but as a father acts when he doth his son chastise.
 For alum from sugar well enough can he recognize.⁵

¹ The Naqib-ul-Eshrdf or Dean of the Sherifs, the registrar of the descendants of the Prophet in a province or city. The Dean of the Sherifs for Constantinople is a much venerated official.

² The shoe-rank (saff-i ni'al) is the place by the door of an Oriental room where shoes are left on entering and where servants wait. See Browne's remarks on this subject in the J. R. A. S. for 1895, PP. 805—808.

³ By the 'Moniteurs' the European press is meant.

⁴ Beyqoz is a village on the Bosphorus, Geybize is a small town between Scutari and Izmid. ¹The humble commentator would say that if the comparison of the passage of our benefactor's fame into Europe to the flight of a vulture from Geybize to Beyqoz appear somewhat vulgar, this results from the fact that the author of the poem is a provincial. As is well known:

"Never is the country beauty dainty, e'en though fair she be." '

It will be borne in mind that the pseudo-author of the Zafer-Ndme qasida is Fdzil Pasha the Bosnian. The line Husnf is made to quote is from a ghazel of Nabi: —

کنارِ دلبری نازکده اولسه نازنین اولماز
 شاپ ايله شکری قری ایدره
¹He can tell between alum and sugar, is a proverb,

Full many a fair and cultured home would he pulverize,
Did not his noble heart incline towards clemency.

The Turkish virtues old are all, alack, undone;
The ancient Turkish zeal abideth in ne'er an one;
The Turkish glory of yore is past away and gone;
The Turkish State is come into such a plight that none
The signs and portents sad of approaching doom can see.

Though to show what is naught as aught doth no little talent need,
Harder yet than the juggle is to get it believed indeed.*
For all that many a hap hath occurred the work to speed,
What skill is thine that it doth these twenty years succeed
In cheating Europe still and deceiving the world away!²

The King of earth unto thee subjected boweth low;
Supreme in his name thou'st ruled since many a year ago.
All manner of wonderment and amaze were it meet to show.
How happy-starred, for so long, with all the world thy foe,
To sit all uncontrolled on the throne of mastery!

No longer confiding now in thy promises full fair,
Regarding thy notions wise as though they but follies were,
And seeking each evil plight to thee alone to refer,
At thee swear the Muslims all, and at thee non-Muslims swear;
Alack, there is never an one who knoweth the worth of thee!

Relying on thine indulgence, extended to those who claim,
Fazil³ hath sung thy lauds, while Khayri* details the same:
(Never did he when young vituperate thee or blame.)⁵
Although in his dotage, still will Fazil they praise proclaim;
Though his teeth be gone, will the dog of race still of service be.⁶

¹ Difficult as the actual juggle is, it is yet more difficult so to execute it that people may never guess there has been any juggle at all.

² From this stanza the poem is addressed directly to ^cAli Pasha.

³ Old Fazil Pasha the Bosnian, the pretended author of the Zafer-Name qasida.

⁴ Khayri Efendi, the pretended author of the Takhmis on the Zafer-Name.

⁵ From this it seem that Fazil at one time opposed 'Ali, which Khayri here takes credit to himself for never having done

صبري كريك ديشلري دوکولسده سالديره The dog of race will attack even when his teeth are gone,' is a proverb. ¹The humble commentator

Wan was my ¹ face and pale for dejection and despair, ²
 And ever the tribe of duns would pluck at my beard and hair;³
 Belike with this torment dure the reels full wounden were; *
 A mutesarrianship through a qit'a became my share;⁵
 So this qasida⁶ should win a waliship⁷ for me.⁸

would say: When Fazil Pasha, curbing his pride, compares himself for fidelity to a dog, he must mean either a sporting dog or one of those that guard the flocks and vineyards. For such dogs, even when they have lost their teeth, and can no longer chase away wolves and thieves, do not sit idle, they at least howl. Similarly, Fazil Pasha, being a man of good family, though no longer in full possession of his senses, does not cease from making verses, good or bad, in praise and honour of our benefactor.'

¹ Although Khayri is still the pretended author of the takhmis, Fazil is the supposed speaker throughout the whole of this and the following stanzas.

² A reference to the proverb, بورجلو اونئر بئزى صارار 'the debtor dies not, but his face grows pale.'

³ Referring to a time when Fazil Pasha was out of office and hard pressed by his creditors, Husni proceeds: 'The (once) debt-laden commentator would say that the importunity of duns is indeed intolerable. When I was out of office I learned the taste of it. But now, since, thank God, I have become a Marshal, I have been delivered from that torment, not indeed through saving from my salary and paying my debts, but by appointing some of my creditors keepers or wardens at the prisons, and by employing others as spies or members of the secret police.'

چلئسى طولدى 'The reel thereof is filled' is a proverb which we might paraphrase by 'the cup of misery has run over.'

⁵ Referring to the mutesarrianship of Izmid which Fazil held, and which Ziya would have us believe was conferred on him by 'Ali Pasha on his composing a qit'a (here referred to) on Ziya's flight to Europe.

⁶ This qasida, i. e. the Zafer-Name.

⁷ A waliship, i. e. the governor-generalship of a vilayet or province, which comprises several mutesarriships.

⁸ Not desiring to be overlooked when there is a question of favours being conferred, the 'humble commentator' thus delivers himself here: 'The humble commentator would say: It is not too much to hope for a waliship in recompense of a brilliant qasida like the Zafer-Name from that source of bounty which rewarded a qit'a of four lines with the mutesarrianship of Izmid. Since it is the usage of poets, at the end of a qasida just before the prayer, to crave some boon from him whom they praise, the author of the poem here requests that he may be provided for with a waliship, while the portionless commentator will confine himself to a little hint to that benign physician, namely to the gracious, belauded Sublime one (a play on the name 'Ali or Sublime), that the attack of the itch wherefrom he is suffering might be

As the month of May is the tide of health (so physicians say),
 For them who would blessings crave the time is the dawn of day;¹
 So now let us to the Lord with loyal devotion pray.
 Desist from thy toil and moil, and cast thy reed away,
 And Mekka-ward bow thy head with all sincerity.²

So long as the Salamander in his fiery dwelling lies,
 So long as the Phoenix doth from his ashes heavenward rise,
 So long as the Stellar Eagle³ circling and soaring flies,
 So long as Huma and Simurgh do wing them through the skies.
 May the partridge of his pomp 'scape the hawk of adversity I

May nothing that is or is not e'er his noble heart offend,⁴ cured by a decoration set with jewels. That Khayri Efendi is entitled to ask for some favour on account of his takhmis is self-evident, but the exigencies of metre have prevented him from making any request} there is, however, no doubt that he too will get his desire through the channel of His Highness's sons.' Husni Pasha is elsewhere made to hint at his eagerness for a decoration (presumably the Mejidiyye, since the 'Osmdniyye order was not instituted until 1288 = A. D. 1871—2). Thus when speaking, in the commentary on a preceding untranslated stanza, on the usual penuriousness and jealousy of poets, he says: 'As the present writer likewise (though he has no claim thereto) is reckoned among the poets, for all that he is Marshal of Police, he has been unable to escape from penuriousness, and although there is no jealousy in his soul, yet were he to say that he feels no pangs when he sees ministers on whose breasts is the decoration in question, he would tell a lie.'

¹ The old poets used to say that the prayers uttered at dawn were the most effectual.

² In these two lines the poet addresses himself. The two stanzas which follow, which are the last of the poem, contain the prayer for 'Ali Pasha's prosperity.

* That is the constellation Aquila; it will noticed that they are all fabulous animals the continuance of whose existence is to be the measure of 'Ali Pasha's spell of prosperity.

⁴The humble commentator would say that seeing how as it is impossible that the heart of any man, so long as he is in this world, should always be free from every actual or possible trouble, to express such a wish concerning one is a polite way of expressing a desire that he may depart to the Here-after; but that the intention of the author of the poem must be to declare his hope that the ears of our lord 'Ali Pasha may be strong.' 'May the ears of So-and-so be strong' is a whimsical way of praying that he may continue to enjoy good health.

And him may God exempt from the spite of the envious band! ¹
 While e'en as his stature, far may ever his shade extend!²
 And like to his boundless grace, may his lifetime know no end!
 And great as his pity is, may his fortune and favour be!

¹ 'Seeing that so long as man lives he is an object of envy, and that so long as he is an object of envy he is exposed to spite, exemption from the envier's spite is only possible with death. But the author of the poem means that His Highness 'Ali Pasha ought not to be worried.' (Commentary.)

² 'Ali Pasha was short of stature.

(Here ends the Author's manuscript. The continuation and completion of the book, undertaken by a Turkish man of letters, will form the seventh and concluding volume of the work.)

E. G. B.

INDEX I.

NAMES OF PERSONS AND PLACES, ETC.

- ^cAba-push-i Veil (Prince I Felt-clad the Saint), Sultan, I 423 seq.
^cAbbas, ancestor of the ^cAbbasid dynasty, II 260.
^cAbbas, the house of, V 94 n. 5.
^cAbbas, a Qadi^casker, IV 140.
^cAbbas I, Shah, III 107.
 Abdal Murad, the promisee of, IV 141.
^cAbdi, pen-name, I 431.
^cAbd-ul-^cAziz el-Baghdadi, I 207 n. 2.
^cAbd-ul-^cAziz Efendi III 294.
^cAbd-ul-^cAziz, Sultan, III, 142; IV 136, 306; V 7, 10, 15, 27, 60, 63, 84, 101.
^cAbd-ul-Baqi, name of Vejdi, III 303.
^cAbd-ul-Ghaffar, IV 101 n. I.
^cAbd-ul-Hamid I, Sultan, IV 151, 221, 243, 249, 250, 304.
^cAbd-ul-Hamid II, Sultan, V 63.
^cAbd-ul-Hamid Ziya, V 41.
 See Ziya Pasha.
^cAbd-ul-Haqq Hamid Bey.
 See Hamid Bey.
- ^cAbdullah, father of the Prophet, I 243.
^cAbdullah, Prince, eldest son of Bayezid II, II 96, 116, 117 n. 3, 366; III 36 n. 1.
^cAbdullah, Prince, son of Murad III, III 172.
^cAbdullah of Bosnia, Sheykh, I 60, 62, 407 n. 3.
^cAbdullah Na'ili Pasha, IV 176 n. 2.
^cAbdullah ibn Tahir, III 22 n. I.
^cAbd-ul-Mejfd, Sultan, IV 327, 351; V 4, 6, 23, 24.
^cAbd-ul-Mejid-i QirimI, II 148 n. 2.
^cAbd-ul-Qadir, the Hamidi, III 199 n. I.
^cAbd-ur-Rezzaq Nevres. See Nevres.
 Abednego, V 94 n. 6.
^cAbid, son of Sultan Veled, I 422,
 Abraham, I 38, 168, 233 n. 4, 374, 376; II 118 n. 2, 151, 253. 339 n. 5; III 35 n. 2, 325 ; IV 63 n. 4, III n. 9; V 94 n. 6.
 Absal. See Selaman and Absal.

Abu ^cAbdullah of Samar-cand, Khoja, IV 92.

Abu Bakr ibn Sa^d ibn Zangf, V 81 n. 3.

Abu Hanifa, III 250 n. 3.

Abu-1-Hashim, I 53 n. 2.

Abu Ishaq of Shiraz, II 335 n. 7.

Abu-1-Mahasin Jemal-ud-Dfn Yusuf ibn Taghri-bardf, II 358 n. 3.

Abu Nuwas, III 115 n. 1.

Abyssinia, II 158; IV 228.

Achiq Qazi, II 289.

Acre, IV 220 seq.

^cAd, name of a king, I 281.

^cAd, tribe of, I 326 n. 5, 389 n. 2; II 270.

Adam, I 119 n. 5, 233 n. 4, 236, 353, 362 n. 6, 399; II 151, 215 n. 10, 253 n. 4, 281 n. 2, 329, 339 n. i ; IV 211 n. I.

^cAdana, I 204; III 163; IV 266 seq.; V II, 59 n. 2, 64.

Adem Chelebi, III 119.

^cAden I 326 n. 5 ; II 89 n-2, 278 n. 9 and 11; III 230 n. 2, 300 n. 2 ; IV 265 n. I.

^cAdeni, II 25 n. 3.

^cAdli, pen-name of Bayezid II, I 417 n. I; II 28, 31, 85, 88 n. 6.

^cAdli, pen-name of Mahmud Pasha, II 25, 31, 32 n. 1, 36, 85, 88 n. 6.

^cAdli, pen-name of Muham-med III, I 417 n I; III 165, 170.

^cAdni, pen-name, II 25 n. 3. 28, 32, 33 n. 3, 37, 85.

Adrianople, I 114, 252, 255, 256, 263, 299 n. I, 381, 382 n. 2, 387, 415, 427, 428; II 16, 30, 42, 49, 50, 73 n. I, 93, 139, 172, 232, 234, 251, 272, 273 n. 2, 317, 347, 349, 350, 352, 370; III 40, 41, 50, 60, 61, n. 3, 62, 175, 202, 204, 222, 294, 312, 313, 326, 332; IV 65 n. 4, 211, 218, 309 32r, 326 seq., 332.

Adrianople Gate, the, II 353; III 50, 135, 194.

Adrianople Gate Mosque, the, III 194.

Aesop, I 389 n. 2.

, name of a village V 45 n. 2.

Afrasiyab, III 269 n. 3.

Afyon, III 89.

Agah Efendi, V 26.

^cAhdi, III 8, 19, 36, 45, 52, 57, 72, 76, 79, 89, 90, 108, 109, n. 1, 127, 138, 165, 167, 173, 175, 186, 187, 198.

Ahf, I 107, 306, 311 ; II 108 n. 1, 286 sqq., 370, 376; III 21, 52; IV 181 n. 2.

Ahli of Shiraz, III 23.

Ahmed, personal name of Kemal-Pasha-zade, II 347, 357 n. 3.

Ahmed, name of Muham-med the Prophet, I 377; II 57 n. 4, 220 n. I. 239 n. I, 357, n 3; IV 23 n. 8.

- Ahmed, personal name of Nedim, IV 30.
- Ahmed, hero of Yahya Bey's Shah u Geda, III 123.
- Ahmed (old Turkish poet), I 225, 226, 260, 427.
- Ahmed, Prince, son of Bayezid II, II 125, 129, 135, 228, 257, 259, 266, 367.
- Ahmed I, Sultan, I 417 n. I; III 2, 165, 201, 205 sqq., 209, 252, 263.
- Ahmed II, Sultan, III 233 n. 1, 302.
- Ahmed III, Sultan, I 417 n. I; II 142 n. 1; III 2, 155 n. 3, 202, 205, 233 n. I, 245; IV 3, 4, 8, 11 sqq., 24, 29-31, 37, 53, 61, 67, 75, 77 n. 5, 81, 88, 107, 108, no sqq., 243, 279.
- Ahmed, Sultan, Mosque of, I 237 n. 2.
- Ahmed Bey, V 43 seq.
- Ahmed-i Bfjan, I 396 sqq., 406.
- Ahmed Burhan-ud-Din. See Burhan-ud-Dfn, Cadi.
- Ahmed-i Da^cf, I 211, 249, 253, 256 seq.
- Ahmed Dede, IV 37 n. I.
- Ahmed Jelayirf, Sultan, I 207 n. 2.
- Ahmed Midhat Efendi, V 13.
- Ahmed-i Misri, I 430 n. I; V 13 n. I.
- Ahmed Mukhtar Efendi, III 171; IV 151, 349.
- Ahmed Neylf Efendi. See Neylf.
- Ahmed Pasha, the poet, 1128, 228—230, 231 n. 1, 416; II 10, 16, 18, 25, 31, 32, 40 sqq., 85, 88 n. 2, 93, 94, 95, 104, 106, 109, 123, 229, 230 n. 1, 277, 284, 288, 365, 368, 371, 388; III 53, 85, 179 n. 2, 325; IV 99; V 32, 80, 82.
- Ahmed Pasha, ex-governor of Baghdad, IV 93.
- Ahmed Pasha, governor of Damascus, V 101 n. 4.
- Ahmed Pasha, governor of Salonica, III 294.
- Ahmed el-Qudurf, IV 342.
- Ahmed Ratib Pasha, IV 125 n. 3.
- Ahmed Reff^ca Efendi, IV 211.
- Ahmed bin Shemsf, personal name of ^cAhdi, III 8.
- Ahmed, Sheykh, I 304 n. 1.
- Ahmed Veffq Pasha, V 14, 15.
- Ahmed Wasif Efendi IV 279 n. 1.
- Ahmed-i Yesevi, I 71, 76, 92, 95, 104, 169.
- Ahmedf, I 108, 211, 228, 253, 255, 260 sqq., 299, 308, 311, 336, 414, 427, 429, 436, 443, 444; II 19, 51, 52, 200, 377; III 86, 171 n. I.
- Al-Ahqaf, I 326 n. 5.
- Ahriman, V 89 n. 2.
- Akbar, Sultan, III 190 n. 4.

- Akhf-zade ^cAbd-ul-Halqm I 147, 164, 165, 166, 177, 178, Efendi, III 233. 205, 208, 225, 226 n. 1, 228, 230, 231 n. 1, 232 n. 3, 233
- 'Akif Pasha, IV 323 sqq., 238, 251, 254—258, 260, 265, 333; V 15 n. 2. 268, 300, 302, 303, 307, 312
- ^cAla-ud-Din, personal name of Sabit, IV 14. n. 1, 343, 346, 354, 381 n. 2, 384 n. 5, 390, 391, 393, 395, 406, 411, 413—416, 427—429;
- ^cAla-ud-Din, Seljuq Sultan, I 176 178 n. 1; II 72. II 84, 86, 90, 95, 102, 103, 106, 107, 109, 128, 140, 191 n. 3, 262, n. 1, 266, 269, 272, 276, 277, 283, 292, 294, 317, 318 n. 1, 319, 320 n. 8, 322, 323, 324, 350, 353—356; III 119.
- ^cAla-ud-Din ^cAli, I 406 n. 1. 'Ali Efendi, Editor of the Jeride, V 55 n. 1.
- ^cAla-ud-Din ^cArebi, I 300. ^cAli Pasha, V 10, 24, 25, 27, 28, 60 sqq., 69 sqq., 96 sqq.
- Ala-Shehr, III 208. 211. ^cAli, son-in-law of the Prophet, I 61 n. 2, 187 n. 3, 216 n. 2 and 3; II 41, 82 n. 1, 150; III 105 n. 2, 191 n. 2 and 5, 215 n. 10, 281 n. 2, 339 n. 1; IV III n. 2, 123 n. 2; V 93, 94 n. 3.
- Albania, II 226; IV 228. 'Ali, a lawyer, III 276.
- ^cAlem-Shah, name of a boy, II 253 n. 8. 'Ali (poet), I 72 seq., 76, 92, 95, 104.
- Aleppo, I 205, 346, 349; II 29, 74, 139, 391; III 284, 294, 326, 330, 332; IV 17, 66, 101 n. 3, 108, 192, 228, 242 seq.; V 55 n. 2. ^cAli, personal name of ^cA-shiq Pasha, I 17, 6.
- Alexander the Bicorned, III 209. 'Ali, grandfather of Lami^ci, III 20.
- Alexander Borgia (Pope Alexander VI), II 81. I ^cAli b. Abi Talib. See ^cAli, son-in-law of the Prophet.
- Alexander the Great, I 144 n. 3, 149 n. 1, 172 n. 1, 266 sqq., 296 n. 1, 330 n. 4; II 10, 11, 125 n. 5, 126 n. 1, 137 n. 2, 270 n. 2; III 9 n. 2, 152 n. 2, 209 n. 1, 324 n. 2; IV 103 n. 3, in n. 6, 317 n. 1. See Iskender.
- Alexander, the Waywoda, IV 160 seq. 'Ali of Adrianople, II 370.
- Alexandria, I 278, 283, 284; IV 327. ^cAli 'Aziz, V 13.
- Algiers, IV 228; V 103 n. 2.
- ^cAli Efendi, author of the Kunh-ul-Akhbar, I 139, 140, I

- ^cAli Bey, College of, 349 n. 4.
^cAli Chelebi, II 227.
^cAli Chelebi, translator of the Anvar-i Suheyli, III 90 n. II.
^cAli Efendi, Seyyid, IV 178.
^cAli Enver Efendi, 1422, 424.
 'Ali Hayder Bey, I 114.
 'Ali ibn-Ilyas, II 387.
^cAli-i Jurjani, II 349 n. 3. See Sherif-i Jurjani.
 'Ali-i Mest, Baba, III 59.
 'Ali Pasha, vezir, I 41 n. 1.
 'Ali Pasha, a contemporary of Zati, III 50.
 'Ali Pasha, the Archer, III 274.
 'Ali Pasha, vezir of Bayezi'd II, II 226 seq., 229; III 47, 48.
 'Ali Pasha of Chorli, IV 37.
 'Ali Pasha, Turkish general under Ahmed III, IV 93.
 'Ali Qushji, II 25, 364, n. 1.
^cAli Shir Nawa'i, I 127. See Nawa'i.
^cAli Su^cavi Efendi, V 61, 73 n. 3, 75.
^cAli Zahir, IV 221.
 Alric, M. A., IV 328 n. 2.
 Alti-Mermer, IV 90.
 Altun-Uluq (Golden-Spout), name of a tavern, V 56.
 Amasiya (Amasia), I 176, 177, 180, 262, 263, 357 n. 3; II 29, 30, 73, 108, 124—126, 128 n. 2, 129, 132 n. 1, 135, 138, 263, 264, 267, 268, 272, 366, 367; III 171, 303 n. 1.
 Amazia, I 357 n. 3.
 Amed (Amid), I 343; IV 71. See Diyar-bekr.
 America, IV 228.
 Amine, mother of the Prophet I 241, 243; II 191.
 Amir Khusraw, Persian poet, IV 192, 193 n. I.
 'Amr ibn-Hisham, II 357 n. 3.
^cAmuja-zade Huseyn Pasha, III 303 n. 1.
 Anahita, II 61 n. 3.
 Anaites, II 61 n. 3.
 Anatolia, I 10, 164, 179 n. I, 257; II 25, 30, 74, 109, 259 n. 2, 264 n. 1, 350, 383, 395, 399; III 222, 274, 294, 312, 326; IV 228, 324.
 Anatolia, the Castle of, III 295.
 'Anbar (Ambergris), name of a negro, III 362.
 Angora, I 178, 204, 230, 250, 255, 299, 302, 389—391, 421, 428, 429; II 75, 138, 139, 276.
 Ani, poetess, IV 150.
 'Anqa, the, II 280 n. 5 and 6; III 67 n. 7, 127; IV 53 n. 3. See Simurgh.
 Antakiyali Munif, IV 68. See Munif of Antioch.
 Antichrist, I 399.
 Antioch, II 370; IV 68.
 Ants, Queen of the, III 56 n. 5.
 Ants, the Valley of, III 56 n. 5.
 Antun, the Frank, III 359.

- Anvari, I 144.
- Aq-'Alem, name of a girl, n. I, 179 n. 3; IV 48 n. 1.
- III 185 n. 4.
- Aq-Qazi-oghli, III 33411.1.
- Aq-Qoyunlu (White Sheep), name of a dynasty, I 204.
- Aq-Saray, IV 213 n. I.
- Aq-Shehr, I 304 n. 1, 414; III 275.
- Aq-Shems-ud-Din, Sheykh, I 312; II 128 n. 2, 138 sqq., 150; III 171.
- 'Arab, Monla, III 23.
- Arabia, II 260; V 97 n. 2.
- 'Araq, III 89.
- Aras (Araxes), river, I 320, 323.
- Araxes, river, I 320.
- Archipelago, the, IV 228.
- Ardeshr, King, I 284; III 358, 360.
- 'Arif, Chelebi Emir, I 145 n. 2, 421.
- 'Arif Hikmet Bey, III 277; IV 34, 336, 350 sqq.; V 6, 9, 25, 54, 57, 65, 66.
- 'Arifi, Persian poet, III 23.
- 'Arifi Ahmed Pasha, IV 93.
- 'Arish, II 156.
- Aristotle, I 53 n. 2, 69, 266, 270, 271, 276, 280.
- Aristu (Aristotle), I 270.
- Arkadi, name of a steamer, V 98.
- Armenia, 315 sqq.
- Armenians, the, IV 228, 235.
- Arnold, Matthew, III 152 n. I.
- Asaph, II 39 n. 1; III 18 n. I, 179 n. 3; IV 48 n. 1.
- Ashqar, name of Bertram's horse, III 365.
- 'Ashiq Chelebi, I 139, 164, 166, 169, 226, 227, 231, n. I, 238, 255, 256, 260, 265, 268, 300—303, 306, 307, 312 n. I, 343, 348, 384 n. 5, 392, 416, 427, 429, 431 n. I; II 25 n. 3, 28, 32 n. I, 33 n. 2, 34, 35, 41, 44, 45, 47—49, 51, 56, 58, 71, 72 n. 8, 73, 77, 78, 84, 86, 93. 95. 97. 98, 102, 103, 105, 106, 108, 109, 124 n. I, 126, 128, 129, 131, 135, 136, 141, 148, 174, 186 n. I, 190, 191, 199, 200, 226, 227, 229, 231, 237, 238, 263 n. 1, 269—272, 275, 276, 286, 288 n. I, 289, 291, 294, 295, 311, 312, 318, 319, 320 n. 8, 322—324, 346, 353, 355—358, 372, 380 n. 3, 383, 385; III 7 seq., 59—62, 71, 72, 123 n. I, 138, 162, n. 4, 200.
- 'Ashiq Kerem, V 52.
- 'Ashiq 'Omer, V 46, 51, 52, 73.
- 'Ashiq Pasha, I 108, 141, 176 sqq., 202, 210, 213, 235, 267, 268, 308, 371, 392, 436; II 124 n. I, 388; III 349.
- 'Ashiq Qasim, II 271.
- Ashji-zade Hasan Chelebi, II 358.
- Asia Minor, II 259; III 17 n. 1, 38, 291, 303 n. I.

- Asia, Western, I 25.
- 'Asim Efendi (Chelebi-zade), I 121; III 329; IV 38, 58, 74 sqq., 98, 143; V 80.
- 'Asim Efendi, translator of the Qamus, IV 248 n. 1; V 65.
- ^cAsim Muterjim, V 15 n. 2.
- See 'Asim Efendi, translator of the Qamics.
- Aspuzi, III 312, 317, 318.
- ^cAsqalan, II 156.
- 'Assar, III 221.
- Assyria, I 357.
- 'Ata (historian), 1417 n. I, 419 n. I; IV 222.
- 'Ata of Uskub, minor poet, II 191 n. 3.
- Atabek, the, V 81. See Abu Bakr ibn Sa^cd.
- 'Ata'i I 100, 109, 110, 232 n. 3, 411, 415 seq.; III 140, 166, 171, 173, 174, 180 n. I, 205, 206, 209, 210, 223, 224, 226 n. 1, 227, 232 sqq. IV 20, 192, 231. See Nev^ci-zade ^cAta³i
- ^cAta-ullah, name of ^cAta^oi, III 232.
- ^cAtif Efendi, IV 68 sqq.
- ^cAtike, name of a girl, IV 292 n. I.
- At Meydani (At Meydan), III 123, 368.
- 'Attar, FerId-ud-Din, II 7, 242 n. 2, 243 n. 6; IV 190.
- See Fedd-ud-Din-i 'Attar.
- 'Attar, minor poet, II 375.
- Avars, the, II 91 n. 6.
- Avji Sultan Muhammed, III 302.
- 'Avni, pen-name of Sultan Mehmed II, I 417 n. I; II 28.
- el-'Awfi, Jemdl-ud-Din, II 102 n. 2.
- Ayas Pasha, III 186.
- Ayaz Pasha, III 6, 193.
- Aydin, I 142, 249, 260 n. I; II 52 n. 1, 79, 148 n. 2.
- Aydinjiq, I 431.
- 'Aysishe, name of a girl, III 183—185.
- 'Aysishe, name of Hubbi Qadin, III 170.
- 'Aysishe Qadin, IV 267.
- 'Ayni, the poet, II 327 n. I; IV 246, 271, 272, 336 sqq.
- See Hasan 'Ayni Efendi.
- 'Ayni, Bedr-ud-Din, I 206 n. 2, 207, 208, 212; IV 38.
- 'Ayntab, IV 336.
- 'Ayntabi-zade Mahmud, IV 324.
- Aywan-i Kisra (Kisra's Palace), IV 55 n. I.
- Azad, I 430 seq.
- Azamia, I 357.
- 'Azazfl, II 253 n. 3; III 216 n. 6.
- Azer, III 35 n. 2.
- 'Azerbaijan, I 204; II 374 n. 2; III 75.
- 'Azeriyun, Princess, III 366.
- 'Azfzi, II 236 seq.; III 165, 179 sqq.; IV 182.
- 'Azmi, III 221.
- 'Azmi-zade Haleti, I 89.

- 'Azmi-zade Mustafa, name of Haleti, III 221.
- 'Azra, heroine of the romance Wamiq and 'Azra, III 183 n. 4; IV 306. See Wamiq and 'Azra.
- 'Azra'il, I 173 n. 3; II 216 n. 3; V 30.
- Azraqi, III 37 n. 2.
- Baba Chelebi, II 78.
- Baba Ilyas, I 176 seq., 178 n, I; II 124 n. 1.
- Babel, II 61 n. 3.
- Babel, the Tower of, IV 63 n. 4.
- Baber, IV 96 n. i.
- Babil, II 61 n. 3.
- Babil, the King of, III 298.
- Babis, the, I 341.
- Babylon, III 298; IV 156 n. 2. See Babil.
- Badakhshan, I 333 n. 2; II 89 n. 2, 255 n. 4, 340 n. 2; IV 216 n. 1, 265 n. 1.
- Baghban-zade, I 414.
- Baghdad, I 21 n. 2, 280, 281, 310 n. 2, 343, 344 n. I, 377; II 112 n. 6, 118 n. I, 138 n. 2, 148 n. 2, 172 n. 3, 364; III 5, 6, 8, 9, 39, 60, 70 sqq., 83, 86, 106, 172, 186, 187, 191 n. 2, 207, 208, 210, 250 n. 3, 274, 275, 286 n. I; IV 42 n. 3, 134, 228, 243, 244; V 94 n. 5.
- Bagh-i Wefa, name of a garden, IV 50.
- Bakhshi, said to be the personal name of Zati, III 47 n. I.
- Bakhti, pen-name of Ahmed I, I 417 n. 1; III 208.
- Balat, quarter of Constantinople, II 269.
- Bali, I 423. See 'Aba-push-i Veli.
- Bali, minor poet, II 370.
- Balikessi, III 47.
- Balim, I 179 n. I.
- Balkh, I 150; II 118 n. 3.
- Baltaji Muhammed Pasha, III 326; IV 24.
- Bal-yemez 'Osman, II 268.
- Baq'a'I, III 180 n. 1; IV 231.
- Baqi, I 83, 86, 129; II 16, 51, 104, 123; III 2, 63, 70, 78, 133 sqq., 171 —175, 205, 206, 223, 246—248, 258—261, 278, 279, 296, 305, 333; IV 7, 259, 347; V 80, 82.
- Baqlawaji Sheykh, IV 161.
- Barbad (Barbed), I 315, 302, 324, 325; III 354.
- Barker, John, IV 101 n. 3.
- Bartholomew, I 48 n. 2.
- Bash Tekye, III 275.
- Basfri, II 48 n. 2; 364 seq.
- Bayezid, author of the epilogue to Sheykhi's Khusrev and Shirin, I 304, 414.
- Bayezid Bey, I 264, 429, 430. See Bayezid, Sultan Yildirim.
- Bayezid of Bistam, I 21.
- Bayezid Pasha, medrese of, II 288.

Bayezid, Prince, son of Murad III, III 172.

Bayezid, Prince, son of Suleyman I, II 86; III 10, n.

Bayezid I, Sultan Yildirim,
I 165, 204, 206, 207 n. I, 225,
228, 230—232, 249, 250, 254,
257 n. I, 261 n. I, 262, 265,
269 n. I, 389, 418, 428; II
47, 347.

Bayezid II, Sultan, I 231 n.
I, 384 n. 4, 385, 417 n. I; II
28, 29 sqq., 35, 40, 47, 48, 70,
73 sqq., 80, 82, 96, 115, 125,
148 n. 2, 149, 226, 234, 257,
263 sqq., 269 n. I, 272, 317,
318 n. 3, 347, 348, 351, 364
sqq., 377 n. 4, 395; III 7, 12,
20, 36 n. I, 37, 47, 48, 170,
221 n. 2.

Bayezid, Sultan, the Mosque of, III 48; IV 152.

Bazigha, II 160.

Bedi^c-ul-Jemal, I 439.

Bedr-ud-Dfn ^cAyni. See
^cAyni, Bedr-ud-Din.

Bedr-ud-Din Hasan, II 113
n. 6.

Beha-ud-Din Ahmed, name of Sultan Veled, I 151.

Beha-ud-Din, Khoja, II 374.

Beha-ud-Din Veled, I 145.

Beha'i Efendi, III 245, 277,
294 sqq.; IV 35, 36.

Beha'i Kurfezi, III 295 n. 1.

Behemoth, I 39.

Behistun, Mount, III 310 n. 5.
See Bf-Situn, Mount.

Behmen, III 357 sqq.

Behram, general of the king of Jurjan, III 361.

Behram-i Chubin, I 311, 314
n. I, 319.

Behram-i Gur, King, I 144
n. 3; II 378; III 27, 224, 266
n. 5, 365 sqq.

Behrnauer, I 157 n. I.

Bekdash, I 179. See Hajji
Bekdash.

Bektashi dervishes, I 179 n.
I 357, 358; IV 248 n. I.

Bela'i, II 124.

Belgrade, I 98 n. 2; III 319;
V 104 n. 3.

Beligh, I 140, 230, 231 n. I,
233 n. I, 239; II 41, 52; III
206; IV 107, 117 sqq., 143,
145, 182, 228, 276 n. 2; IV
117, 118.

Belighi, I 82 n. I.

Belin, M., V 18, 73 n. 2.

Beloor, Mount, IV 27 n. 1.

Benecke, E. F. M., I 64 n. 2.

Bcng, King, III 89.

Benf ^cAmir, II 175.

Benf Mahabbet, IV 198 n. I.

Beni Ramazan, I 204, 250;
II 364; III 163.

Benjamin, II 151, 170.

Benlu Hasan, popular name of the poet 'Ahi, II 286.

Berge, Adolph, III 106 n. 2.

Berghama, II 368.

Berlin, V 103 n. 2.

Berlin, Royal Library of, II
84, 324 n. 4, 380 n. 1.

- Beshik-Tash, III 39; IV 90, 222.
- Beshir, III 357.
- Bevan, Professor A. A., IV 248 n. 2.
- Beylikji 'Izzet Bey, the, IV 213.
- Beyqoz, V 107 n. 4.
- Beyram Pasha, III 253.
- Beyramf dervish-order, I 299 n. I,
- Beyrut, V 103 n. 2.
- Bibliothèque Nationale, V 27.
- Bicknell, Hermann, IV 273 n. I.
- Bidil, IV 143.
- Bihishti, II 148 n. 2, 172 n. 3, 174 n. 2, 225, 376; III 24 n. 2, 86.
- Bihishti of Vize, II 356 n. 2.
- Bihzad, III 296 n. 2, 361.
- Bikr Basha, IV 290 n. 2.
- Billurf Mehemmed Efendi, V 98 n. I.
- BI-Situn, Mount, I 322; II 107 n. 2; III 99 n. 1, 310 n. 5; IV 29 n. 2, 105 n. 2.
- Bistam, I 21.
- Bisyan, II 156.
- Bithynia, I 141.
- Bitlfs, II 267 n. I, 379.
- Black Sea, the, IV 114 n. 3.
- Black Sheep, dynasty of the, I 204, 250.
- Black Sheep Turkmans, II 260.
- Bogha Khan, 429 n. 3, 431.
- Bokhara (Bukhara) I 72, 232 n. 2; II 374; IV 96 n. I, 101 n. I, 264 n. 2.
- Boli, I 164, 390; II 140; V 22.
- Boqra Khan, I 71.
- Bosna-seray, IV 15.
- Bosnia, II 228; III 119; IV 228; V 105 n. 2.
- Bosphorus, the, III 39; IV 241 n. I, 277 n. I, 351; V 42, 98 n. 4, 107 n. 4.
- Boza, III 89.
- Brahmans, City of the, I 282.
- Brazil, II 213 n. 2.
- Bezmf, III 42,
- British Museum, I 139 n. 3, 5, 140 n. 1, 181 n. 3, 209; II 358 n. 1, 376 n. I, 392 n. I.
- Brockelmann, C, II 178 n. I.
- Browne, Arthur, II 287 n. 1.
- Browne, Professor E. G., I 15 n. I, 19 n. I, 24 n. I, 62 n- I, 337—340, 354, 370 n. 4, 385 n. 5; II 20 n. 1, 46 n. 2; IV 172 n. 3; V 107 n. 2.
- Brusa, I 140, 228, 232—234, 236, 254, 255, 261 n. 1, 300, I 343, 415; II 41—43. 46—48, 53 n.I, 73, 82, 94, 109, 140, 172 n. 3, 237, 288, 319, 368, 375, 377, 390 n. 4, 394; III 2, 7, 20, 23, 24, 28, 36—38, 41, 159, 162 n. 4, 199, 222, 312, 313, 323, 363; IV 67, 117, 134, 140—2, 145, 299 n. 2, 327.
- Bu Hanifa. See Abu Hanifa.
- Bucharest, IV 160; V 101 n. 4.
- Buda, II 358.

- Buda-Pesth, V 27.
 Bukhara. See Bokhara.
 Bukhari, Sheykh, II 374;
 III 20.
 Bulaq, I 41 n. 1.
 Bulgaria, V 97 n. 2.
 Bulgarians, the, IV 228.
 Bulghur, V 47 n. 2.
 Buqrat (Hippocrates), I 270.
 Bulqiya, I 433 sqq.
 Buluqiya, I 433 n. 3.
 Buraq, III 336; IV 22, 23 n. 5.
 Burhan-ud-Din, Cadi, I 201,
 204sqq., 229, 236, 249, 285, 336.
 Burhan-ud-Din, Son of Je-lal Arghun, I 424.
 Burhan-ud-Din of Tirmiz, I
 151.
 Burns, III 67 n. 3; IV 33.
 Burton, Sir Richard, I 326
 n. 5, 331 n. 7, 389 n. 2, 432
 n. 1, 439 n. 1; III 175 n. 1,
 320 n. 4.
 Buzurg-Umid, I 305, 311,
 314, 317, 319, 324, 325.
 Byron, IV 33.
 Cadi Burhan-ud-Dm. See
 Burhan-ud-Din, Cadi.
 Cadi-Kyuy, IV 325.
 Caesarea, II 193, 198.
 Cafe Moliere, the, V 56.
 Cafe Procope, the, V 56.
 Cairo, I 207 n. 2, 260, 261;
 II 74, 81, 178 n. 1, 260, 374
 n. 2; III 16 n. 2, 45, 125, 222,
 274, 284, 290, 312, 316 n. 5;
 IV 93 n. 1, 228 351.
 Caliphs, the Just. See Khulefd-yi Rashidin.
 Callirrhoe, III 325 n. 2.
 Cambridge, the University of, II 172 n. 3.
 Caminieci, III 327 n. 2.
 Canaan, II 154, 170; III 125.
 Candahar, IV 265 n. 7.
 Canopus, II 89 n. 3.
 Cantemir, Prince, III 155
 n. 3. 313 sqq.
 Canton, I 274 n. 2.
 Capella (star), IV 209 n. 3.
 Capua, II 81.
 Caria, I 142.
 Cashmere, I 277; IV 264 n. 3.
 Caspian Sea, the, III 22 n. 1.
 Cathay, I 431; II 112 n. 4,
 137 n. 1, 192 n. 2, 254 n. 7,
 339 n. 8, 361 n. 8; III i n n.
 2, 157 n. 1, 268 n. 2, 282 n. 4.
 Cecilia, Saint, II 61 n. 3.
 Cettigne, V 105 n. 2.
 Chakeri, II 148 n. 2.
 Chalak, name of a burglar,
 III 371 sqq.
 Chaldiran, II 30, 259, 267.
 Charles of Hohenzollern-
 Sigmaringen, Prince, V 104 n. 2.
 Charles of Savoy, Duke, II 80.
 Charles II, I 357.
 Charles XII of France, II 81.
 Chat-Noir (name of a tavern), V 56.
 Chateaufort, V 22.
 Chaucer, III 249 n. 1.
 Chekraghi, II 96.
 Chelebi Biistan Efendi, 1422.

- Chelebi Emir ^cArif. See ^cArif, Chelebi Emir.
- Chelebi FerrukhEfendi, 1422.
- Chelebi Khusrev Efendi, Jenab, I 422.
- Chelebi Mehemed, the Real's Efendi, IV 74.
- Chelebi Sultan Mehemed. See Mehemed I, Sultan.
- Chelebi-zade 'Asim, IV 74.
- Chenarli Medrcsa (the Planetree College), III 172.
- Chidem (name of a woman), IV 302, n. 8.
- Chigil, III in n. 2.
- China, I 276; II 137 n. 1, 192 n. 2; III no, 185 n. 2, 268 n. 2; IV 56 n. 1, 146.
- China, the Great Wall of, IV 103 n. 3.
- China Sea, the, I 274.
- Chinese Tartary, III 157 n. I, 185 n. 2.
- Chingiz Khan, IV 42 n. 3.
- Chosroes, the, II 59 n. 1, 62 n. 4, 63 n. 4.
- Chostoes I, I 314 n. I.
- Chosroes II, I 310, 314 n. I.
- Christ, IV 85 n. I.
- Church of the HolySepulchre, the, in Jerusalem, IV 24 n. 4.
- Churchill, William, IV 325 seq.
- Circassians, the, IV 228, 234.
- College of Ibrahim Pasha, III 40.
- College of Sultan Orkhan, III 41.
- College of Traditions, the, at Adrianople III 41.
- Comorin, III 32 n. 4.
- Constantine, III 214 n. I.
- Constantinople, I 209; II 25 n. 5, 26, 27, 30, 31, 43 n. 1, 55 n. I., 58, 72, 73, 79, 82 n. 2, 95—97, 104, 110, 126 n. 3, 132 n. I, 141 n. I, 194 sqq., 226, 227 n. 3 and 4, 236, 237, 257, 258, 264, 266, 267 n. I, 269, 270, 286, 317, 319, 335 n. 7, 352, 365, 366, 370, 372, 374, 382; III 8, 38, 39, 41, 47, 48, 50, 59, 63, 70, 71, 75, 90, 108, 116, 118, 119, 123, 133, 135, 162 n. 4, 172, 173, 175, 179, 181, 184 n. 6, 186, 194, 195, 202, 213, 214 n. I, 221, 222, 232, 233, 252, 274, 280 n. 2, 290, 294, 303, 304, 312, 313. 325, 326, 330, 349, 368; IV 26 n. 2, 65 n. 4, 81, 101 n. 1, 108, 134, 138, 152, 159, 160, 175, 177, 207, 213, 220 seq., 228, 235, 240 n. 5, 243 seq., 266, 267, 279 n. 1, 280, 283, 292 n. 3, 298 n. 6, 304, 305—308, 310, 311, 324, 328 n. 2, 342, 349—35 1; V 9, 10, 18, 22, 24, 27, 28, 41, 42 n. 3, 57, 61—63, 73, 74, 100 n 6, 101 n. 4, 105 n. I.
- Constantinople, the Cannon Gate of, IV 79.
- Court of the Eight, the, III 41, 42.
- Creasy, III 172.

- Crete, I 150 n. 1; V 70, 71, I anople, II 349, 352, 354; III 41.
96 sqq. Dar-ul-Hadis college built
Crimea, the, II 257; IV 73, by Suleyman I, II 399,
133 n. 7, 245, 250; V 101 n. 4. Dar-ut-Ta'limat, name of a
Croatia, II 91 n. 6. college in Constantinople, IV
Croats, the, IV 228. 349 n. 2.
Croesus, II 344 n. 8. Darwin, V 39.
Ctesiphon, I 270 n. 1, 317 n.
I; IV 55 n. I. Dastagherd (name of a pa-
Cyprus, III 287 n. I, 294; lace), I 317 n. I.
V 61, 63, 83. D'Aubusson, II 76, 81.
Cyrus, I 432, 436. David, I 16, 233 n. 4, 389
Czar, of Russia, the IV 146. n. 2; II 254 n. 5; IV 187 n. I.
Daghli Baba, shrine of, III Dawlatshah, II 243 n. 6, 291
364. n. 2; III 22 n. I, 37 n. 2.
Da'i, minor poet, II 368. Dawud Efendi, V 103 n. 2.
Damad Khalil Pasha, V 43 seq. Daye-zade Judi Efendi, IV
Damascus, II 74, 118 n. 3, 212.
138; III 41, 187, 222, 284, De Musset, Alfred, IV 185.
294; IV 179 n. 2, 228; V 101 De Sacy, V 24.
n. 4, 106. Decourdemanche, M., IV
Daniel, I 389, 432, 433 n. 233 n. 2.
I; III 298. Dede Bey, II 387.
Danish Bey, IV 336, 341. Dedc Jan, title of the poet
Dante, I 404. Ghalib, IV 185.
Danube, river, III 8. Delhi, III 51 n. I.
Dara (Darius), I 270; III Deli Birader, nickname of 152 n. 2. Ghazali of Brusa, III 36.
Darab (Darius Codomanus), Deli Lutfi, II 349 n. 1.
I 270. Dellak-zade, II 289.
Darchin Guli, name of a Demitoka, II 29, 258, 347 n. 2.
dancing boy, IV 236. Democritus, I 67 n. I.
Daricha, village of, IV 332. Dervish (name of a poet), I
Darius, I 270 sqq.; III 152 257 n. I.
n. 2. Dervish Efendi, IV 151 seq.
Darmesteter, J., II 324 n. I. Dervish Pasha, V 105 n. 2.
Dar-ul-Hadis college at Adri- Deyr-Mesfh, III 318 n. 2.
Diderot, V 57.
Dieterici, III 21 n. I.

- Dilaver 'Osman Wahid, IV 103 n. 4.
- Dilkusha, Castle, III 358.
- Dilpezfr, Princess, III 358 sqq.
- Diogenes the Cynic, I 281 n. I; III 9 n. 2.
- Diwan Yolu, name of a street, IV 193 n. 3.
- Diyar-bekr, I 204, 343; II 260, 267 n. 1, 379; IV 15, 71. See 'Amed.
- Djiwanpire, V 62 n. I.
- D'Ohsson, I 237 n. 2; IV 356 n. 2.
- Doquzlar (name of a village) I 301, 302.
- Doquzlu, I 301 n. 2.
- Dozy, I 414 n. 2.
- Druses, the, V 103 n. 2.
- Dschemalisade (Jemali-zade), I 428.
- Due Jean, III 117 n. 2.
- Dukagfn, family of, III 108, 117 n. 2.
- Dukagin-zdda Ahmed Bey, III 117 n. 2.
- Duldul, name of 'Alis mule, IV 123 n. 2.
- Durr-i Bakht (Pearl of Fortune), II 114 n. I.
- DurustI, Princess, III 366.
- Dvorak, Dr. Rudolf II 287 n. I.
- Ebu Bekr, the Caliph, II 150; V 92.
- Ebu Bekr Kanf. See Kani.
- Ebu Bekr Ritib Efendi. See Ratib Efendi.
- Ebu Eyyub, companion of the Prophet, II 26, 139; III 146.
- Ebu'l-Feth, surname of Mehmed II, II 22 n. I.
- Ebu 'l-Hasenat, surname of Mehmed II, II 23 n. I.
- Ebu Jehl, II 357 n. 3.
- Ebu ³l-Khayr, III 332 seq., 343 n. 4.
- Ebu ^Dl-Khayrat, surname of Mehmed II, II 23 n. I.
- Ebu Sufyan, V 94 n. I.
- Ebu-s-Su^cud, III 108, 116, 277, 294, 296.
- Ebu-z-Ziya Tefiq Bey, I 394 n. I; II 25 n. 4; III 71 n. 1, 182 n. 2, 208, 215 n. 5, 217 n. 3, 323 n. 2; IV 34, 35, 161, 163, 268, 269, 272; V 15 seq., 17 seq., 30, 42 n. 1, 53—56, 59 n. 2, 64, 87 n. I, 100 n. 2.
- Eden, Garden of, I 37; III 300 n. 2.
- Edessa, III 325 n. 2.
- Edhem Pasha, V 57.
- Edhem Pertev Pasha, V 15 n. 2.
- Edib. See Mehmed Edib.
- Eflah, II 155.
- Eflaki, I 145, 151.
- Eflatun (Plato), I 270.
- Eflatun-zade Mehmed, II 48.
- Efrasiyab. IV 23 n. 2.
- Egypt, I 205, 278, 281; II 81, 83, 143, 154, 156 sqq., 260; III 42, 125, 287 n. 3,

- 290; IV 172 n. 5, 217 n. 1, 332; V 97 n. 2, 104 n. 1.
- Egypt, meaning the Egyptian capital, III 16 n. 2.
- Egypt, the Grandee of, II 145, 157 sqq.; III 15. See Potiphar and Qitfir.
- Eight Colleges, the, II 23, 30.
- Ekmel-ud-Din, Sheykh, I 261.
- Ekrem Bey, I 124; III 14 n. 2, 81, 82, 90, 143 seq., 203, 246, 257, 262, 266—268, 271, 293, 327, 329, 331; IV 31, 32, 34—36, 53, 75, 118, 181, 183, 185, 223.
- Elbistan, IV 258 n. 2.
- Elburz, Mount, II 280 n. 5; III 357; IV 53 n. 3.
- Elias, I 172 n. I.
- Elmali, village, III 312.
- Emin Beligh. See Beligh.
- Emin Firdevsi, V 55.
- Emin Pasha, IV 332.
- Emine, II 39 n. I.
- Emine Tuti, IV 301 n. 2.
- Emir 'Adil, I 422.
- Emir 'Alim, I 422.
- Emir Bukhari, II 374 n. I.
- Emir Sultan, I 232; II 47.
- Emri, III 133, 160.
- Emr-ullah of Isparta, II 52 n. I.
- Emr-ullah, son of Sheykh Aq Shems-ud-Din, II 140 n. 2.
- Enderunf 'Osman Wasif Bey. See Wasif.
- England, IV 146, 228.
- Enver. See 'Ali Enver Efendi.
- Enverf Efendi, IV 176 n. 2.
- Ephesus, V 79.
- Eregli, III 130.
- Ergene, town, IV 321.
- Erivan, IV 93.
- Er-Toghrol, I 10, 141; III 4.
- Erzerum, I 86, 204; II 259 n. 2; III 252, 273, 323; IV 162.
- Erzinjan, I 204, 205, 207, 249.
- Es'ad, former pen-name of Sheykh Ghalib, IV 177.
- Es'ad Efendi, III 274.
- Esau, II 151.
- Esed, tribe, II 180.
- Eshref, Persian poet, II 243 n. 6.
- Eshref Khan, IV 68.
- Eski Hammam (Old Bath), quarter, IV 351.
- Eski-Zaghra, IV 118, 244, 267.
- Esma Khanim, IV 301 n. I.
- Esrar Dede, I 348, 422 n. 2; II 32; IV 179, 196, 207 sqq.; V 66.
- Ethe, Dr. H., III 22 n. 1.
- Etmekji, village, II 50.
- Euphrates, the, III 318 n. 2.
- Eve, I 339, 399.
- Evhad-ud-Din, Sheykh, II 193.
- Evliya Efendi, II 124 n. 1, 141, 142.
- Evrenos Bey, II 348 n. 2.
- Evrenos-oghli Ahmed Bey, II 348.

- Eyyub, place-name, II 128
n. 2, 222; III 135.
Eyyub Pasha, III 290.
Ezheri, I 411, 414.
Ezra, II 219 n. I.
- Fa'iq Reshad Bey, I 264.
Fakhr, poet. See Fakhr-i Jurjani.
Fakhr-i Jurjani, III 22, 27,
345. 370 sqq.
Fakhr-ud-Din-i 'Ajemi, I
381 seq.
Fakhshad, I 429.
Famagusta, V 61, 83.
Faqfri II 237 seq.
Farisf, pen-name of Sultan
'Osman II, I 417 n. 1; III 208.
Fasih Dede, IV 207.
Fasfhf, II 376 n. I.
Fatih, surname of Sultan
Mehemmed II, II 22 n. I.
Fatima, daughter of the Prophet, III 105 n. 2, 215 n. 2.
Ftima daughter of Salah-ud-Din Feridun, I 151.
Fatima Khatun, IV 150.
Fatin Efendi, III 200, 202;
IV 61, 81, 117, 118, 140, 151,
162, 222, 266 n. 1, 311, 343,
352, 355; V 42 n. 1, 51, 53
n. 2, 54, 65, 99 n. 4.
Faylaqus (Philip), I 270.
Fayzf, I 127, 129; III 247,
263; IV 5; V 57.
Fazil Ahmed, III 303 n. 1.
Fdzil Bey, I 109; IV 220
sqq., 252 n. 2.
- Fazil Pasha, the Bosnian,
V 70, 71, 74, 75, 100 n. I,
107 n. 4, 108, 109.
Fazl-i Khuda, Persian equivalent of Fazl-ullah, I 355.
Fazl-i Yezdan, Persian equivalent of Fazl-ullah, I 355.
Fazl-ullah the Hurufi, I 253
n. 2, 336 sqq.
Fazl-ullah, son of Sheykh
Aq Shems-ud-Din, II 140 n. 2.
Fazlf, I 109; III 3, 108 sqq.,
206; IV 186.
Fazli, son of Fuzuli, III 72.
Fehim, III 245, 290 sqq.;
V 10.
Fenar, village, I 261 n. I.
Fenari, Mevlana, I 261,
381.
Fenari-zade Qazi-^cAsker
Shah Chelebi, II 288 n. i.
Ferazdaq, IV 248.
Fenelon, V 13, 25, 59.
Ferhad, I 321 sqq.; II 107
n. 2, 245 n. 2 and 3, 292, 386
n. 8; III 10 n. 2, 99 n. I,
123, 191 n. I, 310 n. 5; IV
29 n. 2, 105 n. 2, 306 seq.,
314 n. I.
Fed, III 357 sqq.
Ferid-ud-Dfn-i ^cAttar, II 242
n. 2, 243 n. 6; III 335 seq.,
345, 371 seq. See 'Attar, Fe-rid-ud-Din.
Feridun, III 266 n. 6.
Ferkhar, city, III III n. 2;
IV 265 n. 4.
Ferrukh-shad, I 430 seq.

- Fethi Pasha, V 23.
 Fettahi, II 287, 292, 302 n. 2; III 21, 52; IV 181, 186.
 Fevn, III 133, 160.
 Feyzi. See Fayzi.
 Fez, the city of, IV 41 n. 3.
 Fez, the kingdom of, IV 170 n. 4.
 Fighanf, I 284; III 20, 34 sqq., 126.
 Fighani of Qaraman, III 36 n. I.
 Firdawsi, I 71, 269; II 9, 105, 142 sqq., 151, 157 n. 2, 162 n. 2, 170 n. 2, 201, 390 sqq.; III 4, 36 ll. I, 120, 341 n. I; IV 192.
 Firuz Shah, King of Herat, III 361.
 Fitne, name of a slave-girl, III 366.
 Fitnet Khanini, IV 94, 140, 150 sqq., 168 n. I, 342.
 Fitzgerald, Edward, I 89; II 332 n. 2; III 22, 224 n. I, 344 n. 4; IV 157 n. 3.
 Fleischer, Prof., I 157 n. I, 161 n. 4.
 Fluegel, G., I 18211.6, 256 n. I, 257 n. 1, 286 n. 2.
 France, II 76, 77, So, 81; IV 228.
 Franco Efendi, IV 103 n. 2.
 Franks of Constantinople, the, IV 228.
 Fu'ad Pasha, I 120; III 331; IV 306; V 15 n. 2, 24—27, 55 n. 2, 60, 65, 69, 71, 76, 77, 100 n. 4, 101 n. 4, 103 n. 2, 106.
 Fur (Porus), I 273.
 Fiirek, Princess, III 224 n. 3, 366.
 Fuzuli, I 83, 103, 107, 116 n. 2; II 13, 104, 148, 172 n. 3, 174, 295; III 2, 3, 9, 14 n. 3, 70 sqq., 205—207, 226, 236, 237 n. 1, 241, 252, 258, 278, 306, 327, 330; IV 31, 32, 35, 67 n. 4, 89 n. I, 175, 180, 182, 185, 197, V 1511.2, 57.
 Gabriel, I 35 n. 3, 36, 239 n. 2, 363 n. 4, 5, 366 n. 3, 432; II 154, 171, 217, 21911. 5, 253 n. 7; IV 22, 23 n. 4; V 94 n. 6.
 Galata, III 186, 297; IV 178 seq., 196, 207, 301 ll. 4, 304 305 ll. I; V 16, 42.
 Galland, I 432 n. T.
 Gallipoli, I 391, 392, 397, 400, 402; II 375; III 172, 295.
 Garden, the New, in Constantinople, II 258, 318.
 Geda. See Shah u Geda.
 Gedik Pasha, place, V 14.
 Geneva, V 59, 62.
 Genje, I 144, 309; IV 1821n.I.
 Gentile Bellini, II 27, 70 n. I.
 George, S^t., 1 172 n. I, 393.
 George Dandin, V 14.
 Georgians, the, IV 228.
 Germans, the, IV 228.
 Germiyan, I 142 ll. 1, 249,

- 256, 257 n. I, 260, 262, 264, I Ghiyas-ud-Din Pasha Che-
 265, 269 n. I, 285—287, 299, lebi, II 128 n. 2.
 302, 311, 312, 412 n. 4, 423, Ghulam Muhammed, I 71
 428, 429, 442; II 6, 147. n. 2.
 Germiyan Bey, I 423 n. 2. Ghur, name of a demon,
 Gevherf, V 46, 51, 52, 73. III 360.
 Geybize, V 107 n. 4. Gilan-shah, III 334.
 Geyikli Baba, III 38. Gipsies, the, IV 228.
 Geyikli Baba, shrine of, III Giray, Ghazi, Khan of the 364. Crimea, III 207.
 Ghadban, V 103 n. 2. Giridli 'Ali 'Aziz, V 13 n. 3.
 GhafTari, III 278 n. I. Gobineau, Comte de, I 24
 Ghalib Bey, IV 350 n. 1, n. 2, 27 n. 1.
 353; V 55. Goeje, M. J. de, I 274 n. 2 ;
 Ghalib Dede, IV 175. III 280 n. 2.
 Ghalib Edhem Bey. See Gog, I 277, 287 n. 1, 289
 Edhem Bey. n. 2, 399.
 Ghalib, Sheykh, I 103, 107, Gog and Magog, Dyke of, I
 115, 146 n. 4, 422 n. 2; III 277, 284, 287 n. I; IV 103 n. 3.
 14 n. 3, 87, 205, 236, 291, 327, Golden Horn, the, II 227
 329, 336, 353 n. I, 354, 374; n. 3; III 298; IV 301 n. 4,
 IV 32, 35, 175 sqq., 207, 211, 302 n. 3.
 213, 215, 268. Gower, V 6.
 Gharami, III 133, 160. Greece, V 97 n. 2.
 Gharibi, V 52. Greeks, the, IV 228, 234.
 Ghazali of Brusa, III 20, Gul Shah, heroine of the 36 sqq. romance Verqa and Gul Shah,
 Ghazali, the Imam, II 102; III 107.
 III 162 n. 4. Gul-Shah (Princess Rose), I
 Ghazi Giray, Khan of the 272 n. I, 309 n. 2.
 Crimea, III 207. Gulf, the Persian, II 39 n. 2.
 Ghazi Hasan Pasha, IV 220. Gulgun (Rose-hued), name
 Ghazna, the King of, III of a horse, I 318; III 231
 360. n. 4.
 Ghiyas-ud-Din II, Sultan, I Gulsheni, minor poet, II 192, 176—178. 374, 378.
 Ghiyas-ud-Din Muhammed, Gulsheni, Sheykh. See Ibra-
 Emir, I 337, 344, 351, 356. him Gulsheni.

- Gumush-Halqali (Silver-Ring), name of a tavern, V 56.
 Gumush Suyu, IV 26 n. 2.
 Gurgan, III 22 n. I.
 Gushtasb, I 433 n. I.
 Guwahi, II 124, 126.
 Guy-Allard, II 80 n. I.
 Guynuk, II 140, 141.
 Guzelja Rustem Pasha, III 193 n. I.
 Habib Efendi, I 394, 420 n. I.
 Habeshi-zada ^cAbd-ur-Rahfm Bey, III 327 n. 4.
 Hadramaut, I 326 n. 5.
 Hafiz, I 23, 127, 144, 163 n. 2, 166 n. 3, 214 n. 6, 286 n. 1, 350; II 8, 41, 49, 52—55. 89 n. 6, 106, 198 n. I, 280 n. 6, 322, 331 n. i; III 11 n. 3, 31 n. 6, 51 n. I, 77, 145, 146, 179 n. 4, 224, 328; IV 12, 259, 264, 273 n. 1; V 53, 57.
 Hafiz Musa, IV 267.
 Hafiz Mushfiq, V 55.
 Hafiz ^cOsman, IV 78.
 Hafiz Pasha, III 208, 245, 248 sqq.
 Hagar, II 87 n. 3.
 Hajja Khatun, III 221 n. 2.
 Hajji ^cAbdu 'l-Wahid, IV 273 n. 1.
 Hajji Ahmed, father of Seyyid Vehbi, IV 107.
 Hajji Ahmed Hayati, IV 258 n. 2. See Hayati.
 Hajji Ahmed Pasha, IV 73.
 Hajji "Akif Pasha, IV 324, See ^cAkif Pasha.
 Hajji Bektash, I 165 n. 1, 179. 357 n. 1, 358 n. 2; V 106 n. 7.
 Hajji Beyram, I 299, 300, 390-392, 396, 401, 412, 421; II 138, 139, 375.
 Hajji Hasan-zade, II 264, 273 350 seq., 357.
 Hajji Ibrahim Pasha, III 222.
 Hajji Khalifa (Hajji Khalfa), I 182 n. 6; III 20 n. 2, 28 n. 2, 41 n. 3, 43, 109 n. 1, 161, 162 n. 4, 254; IV 38, 82. See Katib Chelebi.
 Hajji Pasha, I 260, 261, 390.
 Hakim (Sage), surname of Loqman, I 389 n. 2.
 Hakim-oghli (Hakim-zade) ^cAli Pasha, IV 90, 159 seq.
 Halebi College, the, II 352.
 Halet Bey, V 55.
 Halet Efendi, IV 305.
 Haletf, I 103, 110; III 205, 206, 221 sqq., 235; IV 209.
 Halfmf, II 267 n. 2, 38611. 10.
 Halfmf Chelebi, II 267.
 Hamadan, IV 73, 93.
 Hamd-ullah Chelebi, II 140.
 Hamdi, I 107, 109, 238, 306, 312; II 138 sqq., 234, 254 n. 2, 357, 376; III 3, 12, 13, 54, 87, 335.
 Hamdi Bey, Commander, V 68.
 Hami, IV 58, 71 seq.

- Hamid, province, I 142, 249.
- Hamid Bey, I 70, 132, 133, 135; III 209; IV 34; V 1, 11, 14, 77, 78.
- Hammam Anasi, IV 303 n. 4.
- Hammer, Joseph Von, I 139n. 5, 157 n. 1, 177, 178 n. I, 179 n. 3, 183, 202, 208, 256 n. 4—6, 257, 263, 312 n. 2, 389, 390, 414, 422 n. 2, 428, 429, 433 n. 1; II 25 n. 3, 74 n. I, 78 n. 3, 90 n. 5, 9611. 1, 124n. I, 199, 237, 267 n. 2, 324 n. 4, 380 n. 3, 390; III 1, 24, 26—28, 36 n. 1, 37 n. 2, 41 n. 3, 50 n. 1, 108—no, 147, 160, 161, 181, 182, 184 n. 6, 186, 202, 203, 206, 207, 210, 219, 234, 254, 298, 313 n. 1, 314, 315, 374; IV 20 n. 1, 17, 91, 118, 145, 146 n. 1, 176, 179 n. 2, 181, 185 seq., 233 n. 2 and 3, 242 n. 3, 270, 279 n. I.
- Hamza, uncle of the Prophet, I 170 n. 3, 255.
- Hamza Bey, College of, at Brusa, III 199.
- Hamzevi, I 255, 260.
- Hanif-zada Ahmed, IV 38, 82.
- Haqqi, the poet, V 55 n. I.
- Haqqi Pasha, V 15 n. 2.
- Hariri, author of the Maqdmty IV 82, 342.
- Hariri, of Brusa, II 368.
- Hariin-ur-Rashid, II 269, 276 n. I; IV 48 n. 3.
- Harut, IV 156 n. 2.
- Harut and Marut, II 61 n. 3.
- Hasan, personal name of 'Ahi, II 286.
- Hasan, son of 'Ali, I 216 n. 2, 399; II 41; III 90, 105 n. 2; V 93 n. 4, 94 n. 2.
- Hasan, younger brother of Fazil Bey, IV 221.
- Hasan 'Aynf Efendi, IV 336. See 'Ayni.
- Hasan Chelebi, I 139 n. 5, 169 228—230, 231 n. I, 256—258, 264, 265, 268, 300, 302, 303, 307, 312 n. 1, 349, 384 n. 5, 392, 416 n. 1, 427; II 25 n. 3, 33 n. 2, 35, 41, 45, 47, 48, 51, 51, 52, 53 n. 1, 56, 58, 72 n. 8, 73 n. 3, 78, 82, 86, 93 n. 1, 94, 95 n. 2, 96, 102, 106, 108 n. 2, 109—111, 115, 128, 132, 136, 141, 148, 149, 174, 190, 199, 200, 230, 263 n. 3, 269, 270, 272, 273, 276, 291, 292, 294, 295, 318 n. 1, 319, 320 n. 8, 322—324, 326, 355, 357, 358 n. 2, 377, 380 n. 3, 383; III 199.
- Hasan of Delhi, III 51 n. 1.
- Hasan Qal'ā, III 252.
- Hashmet, I 100 n. 1; IV 101 n. 3, 133, 134, 140 sqq., 152, 153 n. 1, 183.
- Hasib Kerim-ud-Din, I 433 n. I.
- Hassan ibn-Thabit, II 276.
- Hatíf Efendi, IV 343 n. 1.
- Hatifi, III 22.

- Hatim of Tayy, III 266 n. 2.
 Hautpoul, General, V 103 n. 2.
 Hawuzlu Bagh, V, 43, 44 n. 1.
 Hayati, IV 242 n. 3, 243, 358 seq.
 Hayder, treasurer of Prince Jem, II 72 seq., 82.
 Hayder Pasha, Governor of Yemen, III 300.
 Hayder Pasha, place, IV 69.
 Hayder, Sheykh, II 259 n. 2.
 Hayderi, II 72 n. 8.
 Hayderf Khafi, Sheykh, I 392, 403.
 Hayreti, III 61.
 Hekfm Sinan, I 301.
 Helhilan, King, III 359 seq.
 Helvaji-zade Mahmud, name of Huda'i, III 218.
 Herat, I 278; II 8, 10, n, 40, 41, 48 n. 2, 243 n. 6, 365.
 Herod, V 92 n. 1.
 Herzegovina, V 105 n. 2.
 Hewa'i, pen-name employed by Sururi, IV 271, 276.
 Hezarf, former pen-name of Munif, IV 68.
 Hibet-ullah, Princess, IV 147.
 Hijaz, the, I 281; III 150 n. 2; IV 228.
 Hilalf, III 122.
 Hilla, III 71.
 al-Himar (the Ass), title of Merwan II, III 365 n. 1.
 Hindustan, IV 241 n. 6.
 Hippocrates, I 270, 301 n. 1.
 Hippodrome, the, in Constantinople, III 123.
 Hira, Mount, II 217 n. 3.
 Hishmet, IV 146 n. 1.
 Holland, IV 146 n. 2, 228.
 Hormisdas IV, I 314 n. 1.
 Horn, the Golden. See Golden Horn, the.
 Horn, P., II 335 n. 7.
 Hot Baths, College of the, at Brusa, II 375.
 House, the Frequented, I 37, 365 n. 9; II 59 n. 3 and 4, 61 n. 2. See Beyt-i Ma'mur.
 Houtsma, Th., I 73 n. 1.
 Howorth, Sir H., I 222 n. 2.
 Hubbi Qadin, I 286; III 165, 170 seq.; IV 150.
 Hud, II 270 n. 3.
 Huda'i, III 166, 205, 218 sqq.
 Hughes, Thomas Fiott, 1209.
 Hugo, Victor, IV 181, 185.
 Hulagu, I 176; IV 42 n. 3; V 94 n. 5.
 Hululiyye, sect of the, I 382 n. I.
 Huma, Princess, III 359.
 Humay, Prince, III 110.
 Humay, Princess, III 366.
 Humayun, I 324.
 Humayun, Princess, III no.
 Hungary, II 77, 83, 91 n. 6.
 Hungary, the King of, II 77.
 Hurmuz, I 314.
 Hurufis, sect of the, I 336 sqq.; III 315 n. 2.
 Husam, IV 310.
 Husam-ud-Din, Sheykh, I 151.

- Husam-ud-Din, ancestor of Seyyid Vehbi, IV 107.
- Husami, former pen-name of Seyyid Vehbi, IV 10;.
- Huseyn, son of 'Ali, I 216 n. 2, 399; III 23, 90, 105, 106 n. 1; IV 112 n. 1, 350; V 93 n. 5, 94 n. 4.
- Huseyn Bayqara, I 127, II 8, 10, 11, 41, 365; V 82.
- Huseyn Chelebi, II 95, 99.
- Huseyn Efendi. See Vehbi, Seyyid.
- Huseyn [ibn] Mansur-i Hallaj, I 21 n.2; IV 210 n. 1; V 93 n. 6. See Mansur-i Hallaj.
- Huseyn Pasha, the Grand Vezir, III 332.
- Huseyn Va'iz, III 90.
- Huseyni, pen-name, III 36.
- Husni Pasha, V 70 sqq., 97 sqq.
- Huzni, former pen-name of Sururi, IV 266.
- Huzuri II 375.
- Hyrkania, III 22 n. 1.
- Iamblichus, I 39, 53 n. 2.
- Iblfs, I 119 n. 5, 339; II 253 n. 3; III 216 n. 5.
- Ibn 'Alqam, V 94 n. 5.
- Ibn-ul-'Alqami, V 94 n. 5.
- Ibn 'Arab-Shah, I 207 n. 2; II 102 n. 2.
- Ibn-ul-Farid, II 212 n. 3.
- Ibn-Hajar, I 205, 206 n. 2, 207, 208, 336.
- Ibn-i Husam, II 243 n. 6.
- Ibn-Katib (Son of the Scribe), patronymic, I 391 n. 3.
- Ibn Kemal, II 347 n. 1. See Kemal-Pasha-Zade.
- Ibn-ul-Muhtesib, III 162 n. 4.
- Ibn Muljem, V 93 11. 3, 94 n. 3.
- Ibn-un-Nejjar, IV 90.
- Ibn-us-Selam, II 180, 183, 184, 188.
- Ibn-Shuhne, I 206 n. 2.
- Ibn Teymiyya, III 162 n. 4.
- Ibn-ul-Verdi, I 274 n. 1.
- Ibn-Abi-Waqqas, V 92 n. 4.
- Ibn-i Yemin, II 243 n. 6.
- Ibn-Yusuf, I 439.
- Ibrahim (Abraham), III 35 n. 2. See Abraham.
- Ibrahim, father of Ishaq Chelebi, III 40.
- Ibrahim, father of Sheykh Riza, IV 89.
- Ibrahim Agha, IV 79.
- Ibrahim Chelebi, name of Jevri, III 297.
- Ibrahim ibn-Edhem, II 118 n. 3.
- Ibrahim Efendi, V 22.
- Ibrahim Gulsheni, Sheykh, II 374, 375; HI 45. 61 n. 3; IV 316 n. 1.
- Ibrahim Haqqi, Sheykh, IV 162.
- Ibrahim 'Ismet Bey, IV 350.
- Ibrahim Pasha, College of, III 40.

- Ibrahim Pasha, Grand Vezir under Ahmed III, IV 11, 13, 14, 30, 34, 37, 47, 53, 81, 82, 88, III n. 8.
- Ibrahim Pasha, the Grand Vezir, III 5 seq., 34 seq., 49, 59 seq., 61 n. 3, 71 n. 2, 72, 118, 126.
- Ibrahim Pasha, son of Khaim Pasha, II 348.
- Ibrahfm Shahidi Dede, IV 176 n. 3.
- Ibrahim Shinasi Efendi, V 22. See Shinasf.
- Ibrahfm, Sultan, III 245, 251, 276, 290, 302, 304.
- Iconium, I 10. See Qonya.
- Idrfs, Monla, historian, I 206 n. 2; II 106, 267 n. 1, 351, 364; III 7 n. 1.
- Idrfsf, I 274 n. 1.
- Ikhwan-us-Safa (the Brethren of Sincerity), III 21.
- Ilahf, Sheykh, II 373 seq.; III 61.
- Ilghin, III 291.
- Ilhamf, pen-name of Selim III, I 417 n. 1.
- Ilmi-zada Muhammed Chelebi, name of Sabri, III 286.
- Ilyds, the Prophet I 172 n. 1, 393. See Khizr.
- Ilyas, personal name of Rewanf, II 317.
- Ilyas of Gallipoli, I 231 n. 1.
- Ilyas Pasha, I 423 seq.
- Imad-ud-Din, Seyyid, I 343.
- Imams, the Twelve, III 214 n. 2, 215 n. 2, 217 n. 5.
- Imam-zade, of Yeni Shehir, IV 107.
- Imam-zade, principal of a school in Constantinople, V 45.
- Imran, IV 241 n. 5.
- Imru-ul-Qays, IV 246.
- Inas, II 152.
- India, II 62 n. 7, 213 n. 2; IV 228, 241 n. 6, 264 n. 3.
- India Office, the, II 102 n. 2.
- Injili Chawush, IV 252.
- Innocent VIII, Pope, II 81.
- Ionian, I 149 n. 1, 177, 178 n. 1.
- Iqbalf, pen-name of Mustafa II, I 417 n. 1; III 302.
- Iraq, I 343, 344 n. 1; II 112 n. 6, 158; III 188.
- Iraq-i Arab, III 71, 74.
- Irem, I 326 n. 5; II 59 n. 6, 113 n. 3; III 150 n. 7, 214 n. 5, 265 n. 2.
- Isa, personal name of Nejatif, II 56, 95.
- Isa Efendi, V 46 seq., 49.
- Isa, Prince, son of Bayezid I, I 250.
- Isaac, II 151, 152.
- Isauria, I 142.
- Isfahan, II 291 n. 2; III 328 n. 1; IV 243, 258.
- Isfendyarli (dynasty), I 142 n. 2, 415 n. 1.
- Ishaq, Arabic form of Isaac, III 40 n. 2.
- Ishdq Chelebi, II 105, 271, 322; III 20, 40 sqq., 85.

- Ishaq Pasha College, the, II 351.
- Ishmael, II 87 n. 3 ; IV 111 n. 9.
- 'Ishqi, II 192, 225, 368, 377.
- Iskele Qapusi (the Harbour Gate) of Constantinople, II 72.
- Iskender (Alexander), I 270; III 152 n. 2. See Alexander the Great.
- Iskender Chelebi, son of Sinan Pasha, II 124, 125, 129, 131.
- Iskender Chelebi, the Defterdar, III 6, 35, 39, 59 seq., f 18.
- Iskender Pasha, III 221 n. 2.
- Iskender-i Rumf (Alexander the Roman) I 149 n. 1.
- Iskenderus, I 282, 284.
- Islambol, III 214 n. I.
- Isma^cfl Agha, V 45 sqq.
- Isma^cil ^cAsim Efcndi. See ^cAsim Efendi (Chelebi-zade).
- Isma^cil Bey, I 415-
- Isma^cil Bey, the Re'is-ul-Kuttab, IV 243 seq.
- Ismail Ferrukhf, IV 81 n. I.
- Isma^cfl Haqqi, I 392 n. I, 398 n. 3, 406.
- Isma^cil Rusukhi of Angora, IV 81 n. I, 178.
- Isma^cfl, Shah, the Safevi, I 204 n. 2 ; II 30, 227 n. 4, 259, 260, 267, 374 n. 2; III 88, 106.
- Isma^c ilis, the, I 341.
- Isparta, II 52 n. 1.
- Israel, II 151.
- Israel, the children of, I 396 n. 4.
- Israfil, V 3.
- Istambol, III 280 n. 2.
- Istanbul, III 214 n. 1.
- Italy, IV 228.
- Itfir, III 15 n. 1.
- ^cIwaz, V 14.
- ^cIwaz, said to be the personal name of Zati, III 47 n. I.
- 'Iwaz Agha, V 14.
- ^cIwaz Pasha, I 415.
- ^cIzari, Mevlana, II 369.
- Izmid, IV 332; V 70, 74, 75, 107 n. 4, 109.
- Iznik and Izniq (Nicaea), II 380 seq.; III 41.
- ^cIzz-ud-Dfn, name of a Turkish war-ship, V 98 n. 3.
- ^cIzzet Bey, IV 77 n. 5.
- ^cIzzet Bey, the Beylikji, IV 213, 218.
- 'Izzet Molla, I 109, II 10; IV 151, 268, 279, 304 sqq., 342.
- Jaba, Isle of, I 275.
- Jacob, II 151 sqq., 254 n. 3 ; III 287 n. 3, 309 n. 3 ; IV 217 n. 1 and 2.
- Ja^cda, V 93 n. 4, 94 n. 2.
- Ja^cfer, the Barmaki, II 269; IV 48 n. 3.
- Ja^cfer Chelebi, I 306; II 56, 228, 230, 241, 243 n. 3, 263 sqq., 326, 350 n. 1, 378; III 47, 48, 118.
- Ja'fer Pasha, the Admiral, III 141 n. 3.

- Ja^cfer-i Tayyar, I 216 11.2.
 Jam, in Khurasan, III 156 n. 5.
 Jamasb, I 433 n. 1.
 Jamesb, I 433 sqq.
 Jamf, I 5, 15, 20, 30, 100,
 127—129, 151, 231 n. I; II
 8 sqq., 26, 28, 40, 48 n. 2,
 129 n. 1, 141, 142 sqq., 148
 n. 2, 151, 157 n. 2, 162 n. 2,
 170 n. 2, 173, 201, 224 seq.,
 357 n. 5, 365; III 3 n. 1, 13,
 21, 22, 26, 37 n. 2, 51 n. I,
 77, 87 n. 1, 120, 125, 156 n. 5,
 161, 166, 224, 234, 236, 238,
 248, 328; IV 6, 7, 195, 225
 n. 1; V 81,
 Jan-Shah, I 434 n. 3.
 Japan, I 274 n. 2.
 Javid, III 345, 370 sqq.
 Javid Bey, IV 336, 341.
 Jebbar-zade Suleyman Bey,
 IV 324.
 Jelal Arghun, I 424.
 Jelal Bey, IV 35, 61, 64,
 67 n. 4, 79, 118,
 Jelal-ud-Dfn-i Dewanf, II
 28, 29.
 Jelal-ud-Dm Rumi, I 17 n.
 2, 53 n. 1, 108, 126, 141,
 145—147, 149—153, 163 n.
 2, 169, 170, 177, 309, 421, 422,
 425 n. 6; II 7, 356, 374; III
 186, 293 n. I, 297, 328; IV
 79 sqq., 125 n. 1, 182, 189,
 190, 194, 196 seq., 205 n. 5,
 209 n. 2, 306 sqq.
 Jelal-ud-Din Rumi', mausoleum of, I 151 n. 3, 185.
 Jelal-zade, the Nishanji, II
 269 n. I.
 Jelilf, I 311; II 172 n. 3,
 287, 290, 390 n. 4; III 86,
 133, 159 seq.
 Jem, Persian King. See
 Jemshfd.
 Jem, Prince, II 28, 31, 32
 n. 1, 70 sqq., 96, 104, 172, 366.
 Jem Baghchesi (Jem's Garden), II 78.
 Jem Sa^cdisi, II 72 n. 7.
 Jemal-zade, Sheykh, II 148
 n. 2.
 Jemalf, I 304, 314, 427.
 Jem'f, III 226 n. I.
 Jemshfd, Persian King, II
 71, 114 n. 3, 330 n. 1, 392;
 III 176 n. 8, 190 n. I, 266
 n. 6; IV 148 n. I; V 93 n. 7, Jemshfd, son of the Emperor of China, I 286.
 Jenabi, I 177.
 Jengiz Khan, I 10, 176. Sec
 Chingiz Khan.
 Jerba, III 160.
 Jerir, IV 248.
 Jerrah Pasha, mosque of,
 IV 108.
 Jerusalem, I 53 n. 2, 281;
 II 74, 76; III 284; IV 350.
 Jesus, I 233, 363 n. 8, 372,
 376; II 57 n. 4; III 214 n.
 3, 230 n. 3, 299 n. 1, 314,
 315 n. 4, 316 n. 4; IV 206 n. 2.
 Jevdet Pasha, II 360 n. 7;
 IV 161, 164 sqq., 222, 270,
 305 n. 2; V 7, 65.

- Jevri, I 391; III 245, 297 sqq.; IV 179.
- Jews, the, IV 228, 235
- Jeyhun, I 220 n. 2, 432; II 360 n. 7.
- Jihdngfr, Prince, son of Suleyman I, III 10, 11.
- Jihan-Shah, I 434 sqq.
- Jinji Khoja, III 276.
- Joachim, S^t, IV 241 n. 5.
- Job, I 389 n. 2.
- Joe Miller, IV 276 n. 1.
- John the Baptist, V 92 n. 1 and 2.
- Jones, Sir William, II 102 n. 2, 232.
- Joseph, I 168, 259 n. 5; II 12, 63 n. 4, 64 n. I, 112 n. 2, 116 n. 4, 136 n. 2, 142 sqq., 254; III 31 n. I, 55 n. 1, 87, 236, 287 n. 3, 309 n. 3, 313; IV 172 n. 5, 201 n. I, 217 n. I, 265 n. 2.
- Jouanin, M., IV 333.
- Judah, II 153, 154, 170, 171; III 287 n. 3.
- Judas Iscariot, V 106 n. 5.
- Juliet, I 220 n. I.
- Juneyd, I 377 N.2.
- Jupiter, I 259 n. 3; II 125 n. 1; III 147 n. 4, 311 n. 2.
- Jurjan, III 22 n. 1, 334.
- Jurjan, the King of, III 31, 360 seq.
- Juvan-pfr, V 62 n. 1.
- Ka^cba, the, I 37, 38, 170 n. 1, 243 n. 3, 281; II 59 n. 2 and 3, 87 n. 2, 118 n. 2 and 3, 178; IV 65 n. 4, 91, i n n. 3 and 10.
- Kabul, I 434, 435.
- KafYa, II 257.
- Kafur, name of a Greek, III 362.
- Kaghid-Khane (the Paper* Mill), IV 44 n. 2.
- Kamf, Sheykh Jemal-zade, II 148 n. 2.
- Kamil, younger brother of Fazil Bey, IV 221.
- Kanghri, II 369.
- Kanf, IV 15, 140, 159 sqq., 176 n. 2, 183, 275 n. 1, 303 n. 5; V 15 n. 2.
- Kanf Pasha, V 105 n. 2.
- Kashghar, I 71.
- Katib Chelebi, I 43 n. 1, 179 n. 3, 182, 202, 206 n. 2, 207 n. 2, 239, 256 n. 1, 257 n. 1, 286, 302, 304 n. I, 311 n. 2, 337 n. 3, 347, 386, 390, 391, 427—429, 439; II 72 n.3, 73 n. 1, 103 n. I, 141 n. 2, 148 n. 2, 172, 190, 191, 199, 289, 324 n. 3, 326 n. 1, 380 n. 3. See Hajj Khalifa.
- Katibf, II 191 n. 3, 368.
- Kawa, III 266 n. 6.
- Kawus IV 136 n. 2.
- Kazim Bey, I 398 n. 3.
- Kecheji-zade Mehemed ^cIzzet, IV 304. See ^cIzzet Molla.
- Kelfm, IV 115 n. 2.
- Kemal of Berghama, II 368.
- Kemal Bey, I 132; III I,

- 81, 82, 127, 175, 203, 205, 257, 262, 264, 286—288, 291, 296, 307, 319, 323; IV 4, 15, 19, 30, 32—36, 61, 71, 98, 110, 118, 119, 280—282, 311, 352; V 8, 10, 11, 15, 19, 26, 27, 41, 60, 62—65, 75, 78, 83 sqq.
- Kemal-ud-Di'n Ismd'il of Isfahan, II 291 n. 2; III 51 n. I.
- Kemal-i Khalveti, 1411, 412.
- Kemal of Khujend, II 291 n. 2.
- Kemal Pasha, II 347.
- Kemal-Pasha-oghli, II 347 n. I. See Kemal-Pasha-zade.
- Kemal-Pasha-zade, I 107; II 148, 264 n. 1, 288, 347 sqq.; III I, 12, sqq., 54, 116, 118, 277.
- Kemal, Sheykh, III 51.
- Kemal-i Ummi, I 411, 413.
- Keman-Kesh 'Ali Pasha, III 274.
- Kerbela, I 216 n. 2; III 90, 106 n. I; IV 112 n. I; V 93 n. 5, 94 n. 4, 106 n. 5.
- Kerfm Khan-i Zend, IV 243 seq., 249.
- Kerkuk, IV 134, 138.
- Kermanshah. See Kirman-shah.
- Kermiyan, I 142. See Ger-miyan.
- Keshan, IV 279 n. I, 305, 308 sqq.
- Keshfi, II 375.
- Kesteli, Mevlana, II 349.
- Kevser, a river of Paradise, I 36, 259 n. 4; II 136 n. 3; III 183 n. 7; IV 65 n. 1, 112 n. 3, 115 n. 4.
- Key, a legendary king of Persia, IV 136 n. 2.
- Key Ka'us, IV 23 n. 2.
- Keyanf dynasty, the, III 149 n. 5; IV 136 n. 2.
- Keyd, King of India, I 272, 273.
- Key-Khusraw. See Key-Khusrev.
- Key-Khusrev (Cyrus), I 432; III 265 n. 8; IV 23 n. 2.
- Key-Qubad, III 149 n. 5.
- Keyumers, I 280.
- Khadim 'Ali Pasha, II 226 n. 1.
- Khaki, I 411, 415.
- Khalifa, name of a poet, I 311 n. 2; II 148 n. 2, 172 n. 3.
- Khalfl ibn-Ahmed, I 209.
- KhaHl Bey, V 98 n. I.
- Khalfl Efendi, IV 14.
- Khalfl Hamid, Grand Vizier, IV 258.
- Khalil Khalid Efendi, II 227 n. 2.
- Khalfl Nurf Bey, IV 176 n. 2. See Nurf Bey.
- Khalfl Pasha, II 348 n. 1.
- Khalfl Pasha, IV 279.
- Khalfl Pasha. See Damad Khalfl Pasha.
- Khalflf, II 192, 379 sqq.
- Khalflf, a mistake for jelflf, II 172 n. 3.
- Khani Dudu, IV 304 n. 6.

- Khans, the Qipchaq, I 222 I n. 2.
- Khaqan of Turan, the III 357.
- Khdqan of Turkistan, the, III 366 seq.
- Khaqanf, Turkish poet, I 109; III 165, 166, 193 sqq., 299. I
- Kharijites, the, II 82 n. I.
- Kharput, I 206; IV 66.
- Khata (Cathay), II 112 n. 4; III III n. 2.
- Khata'i, pen-name of Shah Isma^cfl, III 106.
- Khatemi, pen-name of Mu'eyyed-zade, II 31, 126 n. 2.
- Khatib-zade, Mevlana, II 349.
- Khatfb-zade Nasuh Chelebi, II 82.
- Khaverf, II 289, 370.
- Khavernaq, Palace of, III 28, 365 sqq.
- Khayali, an obscure writer in the time of Selfm I, II 172 n. 3, 377; III 62 n. 1, 86.
- Khayali Bey, III 47, 49, 58 sqq., 80, 118 seq. 206, 297; I IV 197,
- Khayri Efendi, IV 161; V 70, 71, 74, 75, 100 n. 1, 101 n. 3, 108, 109.
- Khazar, I 277.
- Khios, IV 113 n. 4.
- Khizr, the Prophet, I 172, n. I, 271, 282—284, 370, 377, 393, 423 n. 3, 430, 435; II 112 n. I, 137 n. 2, 247 n. 3; III 251 n. I, 299 n. I, 318 n. 3.
- Khizr-Agha-zade Sa^cid, IV 342. See Sa^cfd Bey.
- Khizr Pasha, I 423 seq.
- Khizr u Ilyas Maqame, name of a mosque, I 393.
- Khizri, II 375.
- Khoja Ahmed-i Ycsevi. See Ahmed-i Yesevi.
- Khoja Chelebi Efendi, the Mufti, II 272.
- Khoja Nu^cman, V 48.
- Khonaz, II 148 n. 2.
- Khotan, II 254 n. 7; IV 264 n. 3.
- Khufff, II 368.
- Khujend, II 291 n. 2; III 51.
- Khulusi Efendi, IV 207.
- Khurasan, I 176, 178, 179 n. 1, 203, 278; II 139 n. I, 374; III 22 n. I, 156 n. 5.
- Khurrem, King of Jurjan, III 336, 345, 370 sqq.
- Khurrem, Sultana, III 6, n., 119.
- Khurshid, heroine of Jemshid and Khurshid, I 286.
- Khurshid, heroine of the Khurshid-name, I 430 seq.
- Khusraw of Delhi, II 8, 107, 191 n. 3, 291, 292; III 238; IV 192. See Amir Khusraw.
- Khusraw Parwiz. See Khusrev-i Perviz.
- Khusrev, II 12, 291, 311 seq.; III 27, 99 n. 1, 236. See Khusrev-i Perviz and Khusrev and Shirin.
- Khusrev-i Perviz (Chosroes

- II), I 310, 314 sqq.; II 63 n. I Lahijan, King of the Fairies, 4, 287; III 231 n. 4, 265 n. III 357, 360.
 8, 266 n. 8, 354; IV 262 n. Lali, II 365.
 I. See Khusrev. La'li, II 73.
 Khwaju of Kirman, III 110. Lamartine, V 24, 32.
 Khwand Amir, IV 82 n. 1. Lami'f, I 107, 307; II 287,
 Kirman, the King of, III 288, 292, 294, 296 sqq., 378 ;
 373 seq. III 2, 3, 20 sqq., 52—54, 88,
 Kirmanshah, I 318 n. 1, 322 110, 181, 206, 335, 353 sqq.;
 n. I and 2, 310 n. 5. IV 181 n. 2; V 13.
 Knights' Castle, the, V 16. Lane, Edward, I 432 n. 1,
 Knights of St John, II 76 439 n. I.
 sqq. Larendé, I 151, 178 n. I,
 Kopri, III 303 n. 1. 413; II 72.
 Koprili Muhammed Pasha, Larissa, II 237; IV 117,
 III 303 n. 1. 125 n. 3.
 Koprilis, the, III 302 seq., 326. Latffi, I 139, 169, 178, 180,
 Koprili-zada Ahmed Pasha, 181, 183, 186, 228—233, 238,
 III 303 n. I, 312, 327 n. 2. 256—258, 260, 263—265, 268,
 Koprili-zada Mustafa Pasha, 285, 286, 299—301, 303, 304,
 III 303 n. I, 313. 306, 311 n. 2, 312, 325, 343,
 Koprili-zada Nu'man Pasha, 344, 347, 348, 350, 383—385,
 III 303 n. I. 391, 405, 412—416, 418, 429;
 Korah, II 117 n. 4, 331 n. II 11, 25 n. 3, 27, 28 n. 2,
 1, 344 n. 8. 33-35, 41, 42, 45, 49, 54, 56,
 Kremer, Alfred von, III 115 58 n. I, 72 n. 8, 73, 75 n. I, n. I, 240 n. 3. I 78, 82, 86, 90, 93, 95, 96 n.
 Kiih-i Billur (Mt Beloor), IV 2, 101—109, 124, 125, 127,
 27 n. I. 128, 130, 135, 136, 141 n. 2,
 Kuh-i Surkhab, name of a 147, 148 n. 2, 172 n. 3, 190, mountain, IV 202 n. 3. 191, 199, 229, 230, 238, 244
 Kurdistan, III 116. n. 7, 263 n. I and 2, 275, 276,
 Kutahiya, I 299, 300, 302, 291, 293, 311, 318—322, 324,
 303; II 6, 373; III 323. 354, 356, 367—369, 371, 376
 Ladiq, II 132 n. I. n. I, 377, 380, n. 3, 383, 384;
 Ladiqa, the, V 105 n. I. III 7, 13, 18, 19, 25, 34, 35,
 La Fontaine, V 32, 33, 59. I 37, 38, 43, 45, 47 n. 1, 50—53,
 I 58, 62, 64, 71, 72, 76, 79, 86

- n. I, 89, 90, 109, no, 127, 133, 138, 160, 161, seq., 200.
- Lavends (Levantines) the, IV 114 n. 2.
- Leander's Tower, IV 241 n. I.
- Lebanon, Mt, V 103 n. 2.
- Lees, W. N., I 348 n. 2.
- Lemnos, III 313; IV 161.
- Leroux, M., IV 233 n. 2, 328 n. 2.
- Lesqofchali Ghalib Bey, V 55 n. 2.
- Levantines, the, IV 114 n. 2, 228.
- Leyla (Leylf), I 220 n. 1; II 12, 175 sqq., 222 n. 7, 247 n. 4, 356 n. 2, 362 n. 9; III 66 n. 2, 93 n. 3, 100, 101, 236, 311 n. 2; IV 29 n. 1, 204 n. 2, 306, 343 n. 1.
- Leyla Khanim, IV 336, 342 sqq.
- Liqaf, II 370.
- Lofcha, III 233.
- London, IV 326; V 62.
- Loqman, the Sage, I 389, 414 n. 1; II 38 n. 3.
- Lutff, Monla, II 349, 352.
- Lutff Pasha, III 6.
- Lutf-ulldh, son of Sunbulzada Vehbf, III 335; IV 254 seq., 257 seq.
- Lyall, Sir Charles, III 174 n. 3.
- Lycaonia, I 142.
- Lycia, I 142.
- Lydia, I 142.
- Maghnisa, I 419; II 97, 148 n. 2; III 330.
- Maghrib (Sunset Land), I 278, 430.
- Magnesia, III 37, 109.
- Magog, I 277, 287 n. I, 289 n. 2, 399.
- Mahmud, personal name of Lami^cf, III 20.
- Mahmud ^cAbd-ul-Baqi, III 133.
- Mahmud Chelebi Efendi, II 287.
- Mahmud of Ghazna, Sultan, III 153 n. 5; IV 24 n. 3.
- Mahmud Pasha, Grand Vizier, I 381, 382; II 25, 28 n. 2, 31—33, 35, 371; II 366, 369.
- Mahmud Pasha ibn-Qassab, I 401, 402 n. 1. See Mahmud Pasha, Grand Vizier.
- Mahmud Pasha, College of, II 264.
- Mahmud, Prince, son of Bayezfd II, II 96, 97, 102, 117, 366; III 7.
- Mahmud-i Shebisteri, I 18 n. I.
- Mahmud, Sheykh, 1411 seq.
- Mahmud, Sheykh, the Cloister of, II 353.
- Mahmud I, Sultan, I 417 n. I; IV 13, 58, 151.
- Mahmud II, Sultan, I 262 n. 2, 415, 417 n. I; II 268 n. 2; IV 248 n. I, 305, 311, 323, 324, 326, 327, 333, 336; V 4, 31.

Ma^cjun, name of a character, III 89.

Malatia, III 312; IV 66.

Malghara, I 392 n. I; III 172.

Malik, name of a merchant, II 154 sqq., 159, 160.

Mal-Tepe, cemetery of, IV 79.

Ma^cmuret-ul-^cAziz, province, II 259 n. 2; III 312.

Manes. See Manf.

Mani (Manes), II 313 n. 5; III 66 n. I; IV 43 n. 3, 70 n. 2.

Mansur. See Mansur-i Hallaj.

Mansur-i Hallaj, I 21, 168, 345, 347, 351, 359; III 286 n. I; IV 168 n. 5; V 93 n. 6. See Huseyn Mansur-i Hallaj.

Maqam-i Khizr (the Station of Khizr), in the mosque of St Sophia, II 141 n. I.

Marcian, the column of, IV 292 n. 3.

Mardfn, II 260; III 312.

Maria, daughter of Maurice, I 321.

Maritze, river, II 251 n. 3; IV 305.

Marmora, the Sea of, II 43 n. I.

Maronites, the, V 103 n. 2.

Mars, I 297 n. 4; II 125 n. I, 373 n. 3; III 147 n. 4, 148 n. 2, 176 n. 5.

Marut, IV 156 n. 2. See Harut and Marut.

Mary, the Virgin, III 308 n. 6.

Mas^cudi, III 280 n. 2.

Maurice, the Caesar, I 321.

Mazdak, II 63 n. 4.

Mazenderan, I 277.

Me'ali Bey, III 290.

Meda³in, I 270, 272, 316 sqq.

Medina, I 216 n. 2; II 317; III 265 n. 3, 320 n. 4, 326, 327 n. 3; IV 220, 351; V 93 n. 4.

Mediterranean Sea, the, IV 114 n. 3.

Mehabad, Castle of, III 361.

Mehdf, the, II 57 n. 4; III 214 n. 2, 215 n. 2.

Mehemed "Akif Pasha. See "Akif Pasha.

Mehemed Efendi, the Sheykh of Islam, III 267.

Mehemed Pasha, the Georgian, III 254.

Mehemmed Bey, II 353.

Mehemmed the Conqueror. See Mehemmed II.

Mehemmed the Conqueror, Mosque of, III 133, 135, 172.

Mehemmed Edib, IV 161 n. 2.

Mehemmed Emm Bey, I 134 n. I.

Mehemmed Esrar Dede. See Esrar Dede.

Mehemmed Fu'ad Bey, II 31.

Mehemmed Pasha, I 98 n. 2.

Mehemmed Pasha, ambassador, IV 79.

Mehemmed Pertev Efendi. See Pertev Efendi.

- Zeyneb, poetess, II 123, 135 sqq.
 Zidan, IV 220.
 Zihni, II 148 n. 2; III 98 n. 4.
 Zihnf Efendi, IV 151, 343.
 Zinjfd, II 370.
 Zfrek-zade, II 288, 290.
 Ziya Bey, V 41. See Ziya Pasha.
 Ziya Pasha, I 121, 235 n. I, 239, 307; II 52; III 52 sqq., 57, 63, 81, 127, 142 sqq., 188, 189, 195, 203, 215 n. 5, 237, 259, 262, 279, 284—287, 291, 296, 306, 319, 323, 329 sqq, 335 sqq.; IV 4, 19, 34—36, 60, 69, 71, 75, 80, 81, 98, 109, no, 118, 119, 185, 196, 247 n. I, 251, 281, 311; V 8, 10, 11, 15 n. 2, 21, 31, 41 sqq.
 Zizim, Zizimi, European form of Jem, II 76 n. 1.
 Zoroastrians, the, II 44 n. 4:
 Zubeyde, personal name of Fitnet Khanim, IV 151.
 Zuhre, II 61 n. 3 and 4; III 356 seq.; IV 156 n. 2.
 Zu-1-Qadr dynasty, the, I 204, 206, 250; II 260.
 Zu-1-Qarnayn (the Bicorned), surname, I 270; III 209 n. I.
 Zulaykha, Persian pronunciation of Zelikha, II 143 n. I.
 Zvornik, III 119.

INDEX II.

BOOKS, JOURNALS, POEMS, ETC.

A.

- Academy, the*, III 326 n. I.
- 'Adam Qasidasi (the Qasida of Nothingness), IV 329 sqq.
- Advice, a Mother's — to her Daughter*, IV 285 n. I.
- Ahddis* (Traditional Sayings of the Prophet), collected and translated by Baqi, III 146.
- Ahmediyye* of Hamdi, III 199.
- Ahmed u Mahmicd* of Zati, HI 50, 53.
- 'Ajd°ib'iil-Makhluqdt (Marvels of Creation) of Qazwini, translated by Ahmed-i Bfjan, I 392, 406.
- Akhldq-i °Ala°i* (the Exalted Ethics), I 41 n. I; II 45.
- Akhldq-i Jelali*, II 28 n. I.
- Akhter*, Persian newspaper, I 359 n. I.
- 'Alem-numd (World-Display), title of 'Ata'is Saqi-Name, III 235.
- Alfiyya u Shalfiyya*, III 37.
- Ancient Arabian Poetry*, III 174 n. 3.
- Anemone, the Blood-red*, III 41 n. 3. See Peony, the Crim-
- son and Shaqdfiq-un-Nifmd-niyya.*
- Antimachus of Colophon and the Position of Women in Greek Poetry*, I 64 n. 2.
- A°ivdr-i Suheyli* (Lights of Canopus), III 90 n. 1.
- Arabian Nights, the*, I 274 n. 1, 331 n. 7, 432 sqq.; II 113 n. 6, 331 n. 4; III 175 n. 1; IV 48 n. 3; V 13.
- 'Arsh-Name (The Book of the Throne), I 337, 376, 385 n. 5.
- Art of Poetry, the*, by Puttenham, IV 273 n. I.
- 'Ashiq Pasha Diwani (Diwan of 'Ashiq Pasha), I 183 n. I.
- 'Ashiq u Ma°shuq, mesnevi wrongly attributed to Zati, III 50 n. I.
- Ass and the Fox, Fable of the*, V 33, 36 sqq.
- 'Atesh-Kede (The Fire-Temple), IV 247 n. I.
- Athenaeum, the*, I 152 n. I.
- 'Azliyya, name of a qasida by Nabf, III 332.

B.

Bahdristdn (Spring-Land) of Jami, II 8, 11, 357 n. 5; III 37 n. 2, 161.

Bahr-ul-Ghard'ib (The Sea of Wonders), II 386 sqq.

Bahr-ul-Mcfarif (The Ocean of the Sciences) by Sururi, III, 11 n. I.

El-Bahr-uz-Zakhkhdr (The Flowing Tide), I 177 n. 3.

Ball and Bandy, II 12. See Guy u Chevgdn.

Batman uppon Bartholome, his Booke "De Proprietatibus Rerum," I 48 n. 2.

Beauty and Heart, II 12. See Husn u Dil

Beauty and Love, I 115. See Husn u 'Ashq.

Behdr-i Efkār (Fancy's Spring), IV 311.

Beheld and Beholder, II 12.

Beng u Bada (Nepenthe and Wine), III 88, 104.

Berber-Name (Barber-Book) of Sabit, IV 21.

Berber-Name Barber-Book of Beligh, IV 121.

Besharet-Name (Book of Glad Tidings) I 344, 369 sqq.

Bible, the, I 162 n. 4, 166 n. 3, 171 n. 4, 444 seq.; II 140 n. 3.

Boke of the Duchesse, III 249 n. 1.

Burhdn-i Qati, I 121, 291

n. I; IV 145 n. I, 231, 248 n. I; V 65, 75.

Bustan of Sa'di, I 159 n. 6, 202, 203 n. I; III 125.

C.

Caravan of the Poets, III 41 n. 3; IV 20, 118.

Catalogue of the Persian Manuscripts belonging to the University of Cambridge, by Prof. E. G. Browne, I 337 n. 2.

Catalogue of the Turkish Manuscripts in the British Museum, by C. Rieu, I 181 n. 2, 393 n. 1, 431 n. 2; II 261 n. 1; III 160 n. 2, 226 n. 2.

Chahdr Maqala (Four Discourses), Prof. E. G. Browne's translation of, II 20 n. I.

Chengi-Name (The Book of Dancers), IV 223, 235 seq., 242 n. 2.

Chenk-Ndme (The Book of the Harp), I 256 n. 6.

Chtite des Feuilles, IV 329.

Contention between the Parrot and the Crow, by Nev'i, III 137 n. I.

Course of Literature, by Ekrem Bey, IV 118, 185. See Ta'lim-i Edebiyyat.

Crimson Peony, the. See Peony, the Crimson and Shaq'iq-un-Nu'maniyya.

Crown of Chronicles, the, II 273 n. 2; III 199. See Tajut-TeXvdrikh.

- Culturgeschichte* Streifzuges, III 115 n. 1, 240 n. 3.
- D.
- Dafi'-ul-Humum* ve Rafi'-ul-Ghumkm (The Repeller of Sorrows and Dispeller of Cares), III 37 seq.
- Dawlatshah's* Memoirs of the Poets, II 233 n. 6, 291 n. 2.
- Daqt' iq-ul-Haqa' iq* (The Subtleties of the Verities), II 358.
- Defter-i 'Ashq* (Love's Register), I 109; IV 223 sqq., 232, 236.
- Deh Murgh* (The Ten Birds), II 384.
- De Proprietatibus Rerum*. See Batman uppon Bartholome.
- Dere-Name* (The Valley-Book), IV 21.
- Devhat-ul-Mesha' ikh* (The Tree of the Sheykh), I 381 n. 2.
- Dichtungen* Trans-Kaukasischer Sanger des XVIII und XIX Jahrhunderts in Adserbeidschanischer Mundart, III 106 n. 2.
- Dictionary of the Technical Terms used in the Sciences of the Musulmans*, I 348 n. 2.
- Divina Comedia*, the, IV 181.
- Diwdn-i 'Ashiq Pasha*, I 183 n. 1.
- Diwan-i At'ima* (Book of Foods), II 335 n. 7.
- Diwdn-i Hikmet* (Philosophic Poems), I 71 seq., 76, 95, 104.
- Diwan of 'Ahi*, II 290.
- Dizvdn of Ahmedi*, I 285.
- Dizvdn of 'Ashiq Chelebi*, III 162 ll. 4.
- Diwan of 'Ashiq Pasha*, I 183.
- Diwan of Burhan-ud-Din*, I 209 sqq.
- Diwan of Fazil*, IV 223 seq., 242 n. 2.
- Diwan of Fuzuli*, III 82 sqq.
- Diwan of Ghalib*, IV 159sqq.
- Diwan of Ishaq Chelebi*, III 43.
- Diwan of Jelal-ud-Din Rumi*. See Diwan of Shams-i Tabriz.
- Diwan of Ja'fer Chelebi*, II 275 sqq.
- Diwan of Jem*, II 71, 77, 84 sqq.
- Diwan of Kemal-Pashazdde*, II 358 seq.
- Diwdn of Lami'i*, III 23, 28, 33.
- Diwan of Mesihi*, II 230 sqq.
- Diwan of Nejati* II 97, 104 sqq.
- Diwan of Nesimi*, I 351, 359 n. 1, 376, 384 n. 3.
- Diwan of Newa'i*, II 48 n. 2.
- Diwan of Rewani*, II 322.
- Diwan of Shams-i Tabriz*, I 146, 149. 169; III 293 n. 1; IV 125 n. 1.

- Diwdn of Sheykhi*, I 305. Ejel-i Qazd (The Fated Doom), V 15.
- 31 sqq. Elf Ghulam ve Ghulam (The Thousand and one Youths), IV 233 n. 3.
- Diwan of Sultan Me hemmed*, II 31. Elf Jariye ve Jariye (The Thousand and one Damsels), IV 233 n. 3.
- Diwdn of Sultan Selim* II 261. Emily V 42, 59, 63.
- Diwdn of Sultan Suleyman* I, III 8 sqq. Endelus Tarikhi (The History of Andalusia), V 58.
- Diwan of Sultan Veled*, I 163. Enis-ul-^cUshshdq (The Lo-vers³ Familiar), II 199 n. 2.
- Diwan of Sunbul-zade Vehbi*, IV 245 sqq., 249. Enwdr-ul-^oAshiqin (Lights for Lovers), I 395 n. 2, 396 sqq., 402, 403 n. 1, 406 n. 3.
- Diwan of Zati*, III 54 n. I. Epistle to the Corinthians, the First, II 140 n. 3.
- Djem-Sultan, Etude sur la Question d' Orient a la Fin du XVe Siecle*, II 70 n. i. Esdmi (Biographical Dictionary), by Professor Najf, III 162 n. 4.
- Doldb* (The Cupboard), V 55 n. 2. Esh^{ca}-i Ziya (The Poems of Ziya), V 68.
- Dukhter-i Hindu* (The Indian Maid), I 133 n. 2. Etudes Iramennes, by J. Darmesteter, II 324 n. 1.
- Ed-Durer-ul-Kamine* (The Hidden Pearls), I 205. Examples of Literature, by Ebu-z-Ziya Tevfiq Bey, IV 35. See. Numune-i Edebiyydt-i 'Osmaniyya and Specimens of Literature.
- Durret-ut- Taj fi Siret-i Sahib-il-Mi'raj* (The Pearl of the Crown concerning the Life of the Lord of the Ascension), III 208 n. I. Eyler Qasidasi (The "Doth" Qasida), III 263.
- Durr-i Meknun* (the Hidden Pearl), I 406.
- Durub-ul-Emsdl*, III 215 n. 5.
- E.
- Edebiyyat-i Islamiyya* (Muslim Literature), an article by Mehmed Veled Chelebi, I 150 n. I.
- Edkem u Humd*, IV 20, V 32, 59-21, 27. Fables of La Fontaine, the, Al-Fakhri, IV 246 n. 2.

- Famous Women*, IV 151.
- Ferah-Ndme* (The Book of Gladness), I 256 n. 1.
- Ferah-ur-Ruh* (The Joy of the Soul), I 406.
- Ferhdd-Ndme* (The Book of Ferhad), III 22, 27, 28, 353, 354,
- Ferrukh-Ndme* (The Book of Ferrukh), by Sheykh-Oghli, I 256, 427 sqq.
- Ferrukh-Ndme* (Ferrukh-Book), by Zati, III 50, 53.
- Firdq-Ndme* (The Book of Severance), II 380 n. 3.
- Forty Vezirs, History of the*, I 430 n. 1; II 113 n. 6; V 13 n. 1.
- Furdt* (The Euphrates), name of a journal, V 55 n. 2.
- Furqat-Ndme* (The Book of Severance), II 380 sqq.
- Fusus-ul-Hikem* (The Gems of Philosophy), I 60 n. 2, 406; HI 173.
- Futuhdt-us-Siydm* (The Victories of Fasting), III 170.
- the Treasure), by Reft^cf, I 376 sqq.
- George Dandin*, V 14.
- Geschichte der Arabischen Litteratur*, by C. Brockelmann, II 178 n. i.
- Geschichte der Osmanischen Dichtkunst*, by Von Hammer, II 237 n. 1; III 374.
- Geschichte 'der Persischen Litteratur*, by Paul Horn, II 335 n. 7.
- Ghadir-ul-Furdt* (The Pool of the Euphrates), V 55 n. 2.
- Gharib-Name* (The Book of the Stranger), I 108, 181 sqq., 202, 235, 236, 308, 371, 436; II 388.
- Gospel, the*, I 375 n. 2, 376; II 105 n. 2; III 191 n. 3, 215 n. 2.
- Grundriss der Iranischen Philologie*, III 22 n. 1.
- Giddeste-i Riyaz-i 'Irfan* (Posy from the Bowers of Culture), I 140.
- Gul-i Sad-Berg*, (The Hundred-Leaf Rose), of Belfgh, IV 117 n. 2.
- Gul-i Sad-Berg* (The Hundred-Leaf Rose) of Jelilf, II 290 n. 2; III 160.
- Gul-i Sad-Berg* (The Hundred-Leaf Rose), of Mesfhi II 230.
- Gulistdn* (Rose-garden) of Sa^cdf, I 191 n. 1; II 8, 55 n. 4, 215 n. 1, 357, 386 n. 4; III 109, 136; V 53, 81.

G.

- Genesis, Book of*, II 146, 159 n. 1, 170.
- Genjine-i Raz* (Mystic Treasury), I 109; III 117 n. 2, 121, 122, 126, 236.
- Genj-Name* (The Book of the Treasure), by Jelal Arg-hun, I 424.
- Genj-Name* (The Book of

- Gulshen-i 'Ashq* (The Garth ! of Love), IV 306 sqq., 310, 312.
- Gulshen-i Enwar* (The Rosebed of Radiance), I 109; III 117 n. i, 122, 126, 236.
- Gulshen-ush-Slui'ard* (The Rosebed of the Poets), III 8.
- Gulu Bulbul* (Rose and Nigh-tingale), I 109; III 110 sqq.
- Gul u Khusrev* (Rose and Khosroes), II 291 n. I.
- Gul u Nevriiz* (Rose and New-Year), III 160.
- Gul u Saba* (Rose and Zep-hyr), II 101 sqq.
- Guy u Chevgan* (Ball and Bandy), of 'Arifi, III 23.
- Guy u Chevgdn* (Ball and Bandy), of Lami^ci, III 22, 28, 253.
- Guy u Chevgdn* (Ball and Bandy), of Talib-i Jajarmi, III 23.
- H.
- Habib-us-Siyer*, IV 82 n. 1.
- Hadd"iq-ul-Haqd"iq fi Tek-milet'i sh-Shaq'a"iq* (The Garths of Truths in Completion of the Peony), III 233 n. I.
- Hadiqa* (The Garden), I 428 n. 6.
- Hadiqat-ul-Jewdmf* (The Garden of Mosques), II 141 n. 1.
- Hadiqat-us-Sifadd* (The Garth of the Blessed), III 90, 105.
- Hadiqat-ul- Vuzerd* (The Garden-close of the Vezirs), IV 103 n. 4.
- Hdlet-ush-Shebdb* (The World of Youth), V 55 n. 2.
- Hammdm-Ndme* (The Book of the Bath), IV 121, 127.
- Hasb-i Hal* (Plaint), by Be-half, III 296.
- Hasb-i Hal* (Plaint), by Nev^ci, III 174.
- Heft Azvrang*, (The Seven Thrones), II 8; III 22.
- Heft Khzvdn*, (The Seven Courses), III 234.
- Heft Manzar* (The Seven Belvederes), III 22.
- Heft Peyker* The Seven Effigies), by Lami^ci, III 22, 24, 27 seq., 353, 365 sqq.
- Heft Peyker* (The Seven Effigies), by Nizami, I 144 n. 3; II 377; III 22, 224 n. 3, 266 n. 5.
- Heft Peyker* (The Seven Effigies), by 'Ulvi of Brusa, III 24 n. 2.
- Hesht Bihisht* (The Eight Paradises), by Mevlana Idris, II 106, 267 n. I.
- Hesht Bihisht* (The Eight Paradises), by Sehi Bey, III 7.
- Heves-Ndme* (Book of Love-Desire), I 307; II 56, 265, 275, 284, 378, 380.
- Hezehyydt* (Facetiae), by Su-ruri, IV 270 sqq., 276.
- Hikdydt-i DehBirdder* (Brother Madcap's Tales), III 37 n. 1.

Hikdye-i Khoja Fesdd (The Story of Fesad), IV 21.

Hikdyetu ErbaHna Sabdh™ ve Mesa' an (The Story of the Forty Morns and Eves), V 13 n. I.

El-Hilyat- un-Nebeviyya (The Prophetic Physiognomy), III 195-

Hilye-i Slier ifa (Sacred Physiognomy), I 109; III 193, 195 sqq., 299.

Hilyet-ul- Enwar (The Jewel of Lustres), IV 8r.

Hisloire de l' Empire Ottoman, I 177 n. 1 and 2.

History of the Forty Vezirs. See Forty Vezirs.

History of the Inquisition, V 59.

History of the Mongols, I 222 n. 2.

History of the Present State of the Ottoman Empire, I 357.

Humdy u Humayun, by Fazli, III 109.

Humdy u Humayun, by Khwaju of Kirman, III 109 seq.

Htwidyun-Ndme, III 90 n. I; V 16.

Hurriyyet (Liberty), name of a newspaper, V 62, 73.

Husn u 'Ashq (Beauty and Love), I 108; III 87, 329, 336 seq., 353 n. 1, 354, 374; IV 180 sqq.

Husn u Dil (Beauty and Heart), by 'Ahi, II 288, 291 sqq., 296 sqq.

Husn u Dil (Beauty and Heart), by Fettahf, II 287; III 21, 52; IV 181, 186.

Husn u Dil (Beauty and Heart), by Lami^ci, III 21, 24 n. 4.

Husn u Dil (Beauty and Heart), by Sidqi, II 293 n. 1.

Husn u Nigar (Beauty and Belle), II 376 n. r.

Hyacinth Qasida, I 86.

I.

'Ibret-numd (Exemplar), by Lami^ci, III 21, 24 n. 4.

'Ibret-Numa (Monitor), V 13.

Ihya-ul-'Ulum (Quickening of the Sciences), by Ghazali, II 102 n. I.

Iksir-us-Sa'adet (The Elixir of Felicity), I 208.

Ilahi-Name (Divine Book) by Ferid-ud-Din "Attar, III 370.

Ilahiyyat (Hymns) by Huda'i, III 219.

Inkizisyon Tarikhi (History of the Inquisition), V 59 n. 2.

Intisab-ul-Muluk (The Service of Kings), IV 146.

Iqbal-Name (Book of Fortune), by Nizami, I 144 n. 3.

Iqdam (newspaper), I 139 n. 3.

'Iqd ul-Juman fi Tarikhi

- Ehl-iz-Zeman* (The Necklace I of Pearls concerning the History of the Men of the Time), I 206 n. 2; IV 37.
- Isaiah*, the Book of, II 140 n. 3.
- Ishaq-Nama* (Ishaq-Book), III 43.
- 'Ishret-Ndme* (The Book of Wassail), by Rewani, II 322, 324 sqq., 378.
- Iskender-Name*, of Ahmedi, I 108, 253 n. 2, 263 sqq., 305, 308, 309 n. 2, 336, 429, 436, 443; II 377.
- Iskender-Ndme* (Book of Alexander), by Jami, II 10.
- Iskender-Name* (Book of Alexander), by Nizami, I 144 n. 3.
- Iskender-Ndme* (Book of Alexander) by Fighanf of Qaraman, I 284; III 36 n. 1.
- Istiwd-Ndme* (Book of the Ascent) I 337, 344, 351, 369, 385 n. 5.
- J.
- Jabir-Name*, III 28 n. 2.
- Jahrbucher der Literatur*, I 157 n. I.
- Jamesb-Name* (Book of Jamesb), I 310 n. 1, 431 sqq.
- Jami-ul-Hikayat* (The Collector of Stories), II 102 seq.
- Javidan-Name* (Eternal-Book), I 337, 375, 376, 386. I 376; III 12 sqq.
- Jdviddn(-Name)-i Kebir*, I 337 n. 2, 385 n. 5.
- Jawami^c-ul-Hikayat wa Lawdrnf-ur-Riwdydt*, II 102 n. 2.
- Jemshid and Khurshid*, by Ahmedf, I 286.
- Jemshid and Khurskid*, by Khwaja Selman, II 72.
- Jenk-Name* (The Book of War), I 256, 257 n. 1.
- Jeride-i 'Askeriyye* (The Military Gazette), V 26.
- Jeride-i Hawadis* (The Journal of Events), IV 325 n. 2; V 55 n. 2, 100 n. 6.
- Jewdd, the Story of*, Y 13 n. 3.
- Jezire-i Mesnevi* (The Isle of the Mesnevi), III 299.
- Jezmi*, historical romance of, by Kemal Bey, III 175.
- Jihan-Numa* (Belvedere), I 43 n. I.
- Joseph and Zelikha*, by ^cAli, I 72, 76, 92, 95, 104.
- Joseph and Zelikha* of Bi-hishtf, II 376 n. 1.
- Joseph and Zelikhd* of Hamdf, I 306; II 141, 143 sqq., 173 sqq., 190, 199 n. 3, 201 sqq., 224 seq., 357, 376; III 3, 12, 87.
- Joseph and Zelikha*, by Jamf, I 15; II 9, 142 sqq.; III 22; IV 225 n. 1.
- Joseph and Zelikhk* of Kemal-Pasha-zade, I 306; II 358, I 376; III 12 sqq.

Joseph and Zelikhd of Yahya Bey, III 120, 122, 125.

Joseph and Zelikhd of Zihni, III 98 n. 4.

Joseph and Zulaykhd of Firdawsf, II 142 sqq.

Journal Asiatique, II 78 n. 3; III 37 n. 2.

Journal of the German Oriental Society, I 73 n. 1.

Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, I 337 ; V 10711.2.

K.

Kefshger-Ndme (The Book of the Shoemaker), IV 121.

Kerem Qasidasi (The Grace Qasida), II 43.

Keshf-uz-Zunun, I 179 n. 3, 182 n. 6.

Khamsa, (Quintet), of 'Ata'i III 234 sqq.

Khamsa (Quintet), of Bi-hishtf, II 148 n. 2, 172 n. 3, 376 n. 1; III 24 n. 2.

Khamsa (Quintet), of Fuzulf, III 71, 89.

Khamsa (Quintet), of Jami, II. 10.

Khamsa (Quintet), of Nergisf, III 208.

Khamsa (Quintet), of Nizamf, I 144 n. 3, 145; II 8, 148 n. 2, 190, 376 n. I; III 89, 160, 365; IV 182 n. 1, 193 n. I.

Khamsa (Quintet), of Yahya Bey, III 121 sqq.

Khamsa-i Rumi, II 324 n. 3.

Khar adat (Tavern), I 235 n. 1, 240, 305 n. 2, 307; III 52, 54; IV 34, 118; V 42 n. 1, 51, 63, 66 n. 1, 68, 77 sqq. See Tavern, the.

Khar-Name (The Book of the Ass), I 302, 303, 305.

Khdtimat-ul-Wdnddt (The Postscript to the Inspirations), IV 91 n. 2.

Khatt ti Khattatan (Calligraphy and Calligraphists), I 394 n. I; III 220 n. 2, 273 n. 1, 297 n. I.

Khayrdbdd, the, by Nabf, III 329, 330, 332, 335 seq., 345, 349, 353 n. I, 354, 370 sqq.; IV 183, 190 sqq.

Khayriyya, the, by Nabi, III 332 sqq., 337, 343, 351, 352; IV 246, 254, 256.

Khayyat-Name (The Book of the Tailor), IV 121, 125, 129.

Khazdn-i 'Asar (Labour's Autumn), IV 311.

Khired-Ndme (The Book of Wisdom), I 302, 305.

Khuban-Name (The Book of Beauties), IV 222 n. 1, 223 seq., 227 sqq., 236.

Khuldsat-ul'Eser, III 224.

Khurshid u Ferrukh-Shad, by Sheykh-oghli, I 428 sqq.

Khurshid u Ferrukh-Shad, by Prince Jem, II 72.

Khurshid u Jemshld, by Ahmedf, III 171 n. I.

- Khurshid u Jemshid*, by Hubbi, III 171.
- Khurshid-Name* (Book of Khurshid), I 430.
- Khusrev u Shirin*, of 'Ahi, II 287 sqq., 291 sqq., 311 sqq., 376.
- Khusrev u Shirin*, of Jelili, II 172 n. 3; III 159.
- Khusrev u Shirin*, of Khalifa, II 148 n. 2, 172 n. 3.
- Khusrev u Shirin*, of Mir^c Alf Shir, II 10.
- Khusrev u Shirin*, of Mu^cidi, III 160.
- Khusrev u Shirin*, of Nizamf, I 144 n. 3.
- Khusrev u Shirin*, of Sheykhf, I 303 sqq., 427, 431 n. 1, 437, 443; II 147, 234, 287, 291 n. 1, 369; III 3, 54, 354-
- Khwab-Name* (The Vision), by Veysi, III 209.
- Kimiya-i Sa'adet* (Elixir of Felicity), II 102 seq.
- Kitdb-ut- Tanbih wa-l-Ish-rdf*, of Mas^cudi, III 280 n. 2.
- Kitdb-i Usui* (Book of Principles), II 239 n. 4; III 121, 122, 125 seq., 236.
- Koran*, the, I 22, 24, 34 n. 2, 35, 36, n. 3, 37 n. 2, 53 n. 1, 57 n. 1, 61 n. 2, 112, 119 n. 5, 159 n. 3 and 4, 171, 172 n. 1, 173 n. 5, 174, 175 n. 3 and 4, 180 n. 2, 182 n. 1, 184, 187 n. 4, 188 n. 3, 189 n. 1, 190 n. 1, 219 n. 1, 230 n. 1, 233, 234 n. 1, 236 n. 1, 240, 245 n. 1, 257 n. 2, 287 n. 1, 289 n. 2, 297 n. 1, 326 n. 5, 337 n. 3, 338, 339, 340 n. 3, 341, 350 n. 1, 353, 361 n. 5 and of 7, 362, 363, 364 n. 3, 365, 366, 369 n. 1, 370, 372, 374, 375, 376, 389 n. 2, 395, 397, 398, 399, 406, 423, 444 seq; II 45, 46 n. 1, 59 n. 7, 61 n. 3, 65 n. 4, 89 n. 7, 100 n. 4, 105 n. 2, 117 n. 4, 136 n. 2, 146, 157 n. I, 197, 198 n. I and 2, 206 n. 5, 211 n. 3, 213 n. 9, 217 n. 6, 218 n. 6 and 8, 219, 249 n. 8, 254 n. 4, 270 n. 3, 334 n. 4, 354, 369 n. 2, 386 n. 2 and 5; III 35 n. 2, 45 n. 2, 55 n. 2, 56 n. 5, 61 n. 2, 112 n. 4, 113 n. I, 191 n. 3 and 5, 195, 196, 197, 198 n. 1, 209, 210, 214 n. 5, 215 n. 2, 223 n. 2, 224 n. 4, 289 n. 1, 295 n. 3, 318 n. 5; IV 19, 22 n. 1, 76, 111, 85 n. 2, 100 n. 5, 147, 156 n. 2, 162, 192, 241 n. 5, 316 n. 2 and 4, 341 n. 2; V 38, 40, 41, 55, 111, 2, 77 n. 1, 79, 111, 2, 93 n. 2.
- Kulliyyat* (Collected Works) of Lamfi, III 24 n. 4, 354.
- Ktmh-ul-Akhbdr* (the Essence of Histories), I 140.
- Kus-Ndtne*, II 275.
- Kutub-Khane-i Ebu-z-Ziya* (Ebu-z-Ziya's Library), V 17, 85 n. 1.

L.

Lata°if-i Riwayat (Pleasant Tales), V 13.

Leyla and Mejnun, of Ahmed Pasha, II 50, n. I.

Leyla and Mejnun, of Bi-hishti, II 376 n. I.

Leyla and Mejnun, of Fuzuli, II 148; III 3, 71, 81 seq., 85 sqq., 89, 90, 127; IV 180.

Leyla and Mejnun, of Hamdi, II 141 n. 2, 172 sqq., 190, 192, 211 sqq., 225, 234, 376.

Leyla and Mejnun, of Jami, II 9; III 22.

Leyla and Mejnun, of Jeh'li, III 159.

Leyla and Mejnun, of Khayali, III 62 n. i.

Leyla and Mejnun, of Mir °Ali Shir, II 10.

Leyla and Mejnun, of Nejati, II 102 seq.

Leyla and Mejnun, of Nizamf, I 144 n. 3.

Leyla and Mejnun, of Qafzade Fa'izi, III 204, 226 n. I;

IV no.

Leyla and Mejnun, of Shahidf, II 73 n. i.

Livre des Femmes, le, IV 233 n. 2.

Locks ley Hall, I 108.

Lughat-i Ebu-z-Ziyd (Ebu-z-Ziya's Dictionary), V 17.

Lutjiyya, the, III 334; IV 246, 249, 254 sqq.

I

M.

Ma°arif-Name (The Book of the Sciences), I 182.

Magharib-uz-Zaman (The Setting-Points of Time), I 396 sqq.

Mahabbet-Ndme (Book of Love), I 337, 370 n. 4, 376, 385 n. 5.

Mukhayyaldt (Phantasms), V 13.

Mukhbir (Correspondent), name of a newspaper, V 62, 73.

Mulchtasar (Compendium of Jurisprudence), by Ahmed cl-Quduri, IV 342.

Makhzen-ul'Esrd (The Treasury of Secrets), I 144 n. 3; II 9; III 234, 236.

Mantiq-nt-Tayr (The Language of Birds), II 242 n. 2.

Manzuma-h Husni (Poems of Husn{ Pasha), V 73 n. 2.

Maqldt (Discourses), by Gulsheni, II 378.

Maqdnidt (Seances), of Hariri, IV 342.

Maqtel-i Hazret-i Huseyn (Martyrdom of Saint Huseyn), III 23, 24 n. 1, 28, 353.

Mariage Force, le, V 14.

Masnavi i Ma'navi, The Spiritual Couplets of Maulana Jalalu'ddin i Rumf, by E. H. Whinfield, I 17 n. 2; IV 84 n. 2.

See Mesnevi.

Matdlf-ul-Emvdr (The Ori-ents of Radiance), II 349 n. 3.

Matla-ul-Enwar (Rising-point of Radiance), II 191 n. 3.

Matthew, St., the Gospel of, I 162 n. 4,

Medecin malgre Lui,, le, V 14.

Mejdalis-un-Nefais (Parties of the Elegant), III 161.

Mejalis-ut- Tefasir (The Reunions of the Commentaries), II 140.

Mejmu'a-i Ebu-z-Ziya (Ebu-z-Ziya's Magazine), V 17, 42 n. 2, 85.

Mejmu'a-i Mu'allim (The Professor's Scrap-Book), II 55 n. I; III 273 n. I, 294 n. I.

Mejmu'a-i Muntakhabat-i 'Asdr-i 'Osmaniyya (Turkish Chrestomathy), II 132 n. I.

Menaqib-ul-° Arifin (The Acts of the Adepts), I 145 n. 2.

Mendqib-i Ghazdli (The Anecdotes of Ghazalf), III 37 h. I.

Menaqib-ul- Wasilin (The Acts of the Attainers), I 351.

Mesha'ir-ush-Shu'ara, III 162 n. 4.

Mesnevi, the, of Jelal-ud-Din Rumi, I 17 n. 2, 53 n. 1, 108, 146, 149 sqq., 162 n. 4, 169, 406, 421, 422; III 297, 299, 349; IV 79 sqq., 125 n. 1, 178 seq., 182, 189, 193 seq., 212 seq. See Masnavi i Ma'navi.

Mesnevi, Response to the, II 3/4-

Mevlid-i Jismani u Mevlid-i Ruhdni (The Corporeal Birth-song and the Spiritual Birth-song), II 190.

Mevlid-i Jismani u Mevrid-i Ruhani (The Corporeal Birth-song and the Spiritual Arriving-Place), II 190.

Mevlid-i Nabi (Birthsong on the Prophet's Nativity), by Hamdi, II 190, 217 sqq.

Mevlid-i Nabi (Hymn on the Prophet's Nativity), by Suleyman of Brusa, I 108, 232 sqq., 308.

Miftah-ul-Hiddya (Key of Guidance), III 37.

Mihnet-Keshdn, I n o; IV 151, 279 n. 1, 305 seq., 308 sqq., 314 sqq.

Mihr u Mah (Sun and Moon), II 101 sqq.

Mihr u Mushteri (Sun and Jupiter), III 221, 226.

Mines de FOrient, III 181, 210, 213; IV 101 n. 3.

Mi'rajiyya (Ascension-Song), by Sabit, IV 19, 22.

Moniteur, the, V 107 n. 3.

Mosquito and the Bee, the, V 34.

Mu'allaqat, the, I 83; III 174 n. 3.

Mudhikat-i Sururi-i Hezzal (The Drolleries of Sururi the Wag), IV 271.

Muhammediyye, the, by Yaziji-oghli Mehmed, I 392 n. 1, 396 sqq.

Muhammediyye, the, by ths of Intimacy), I 151; II Hamdi, II 190, 199. 129 n. 1; III 21.

Mukhtasar-ul- Vildye, IV 92. Nefhat-ul Ezhar (The Waft Mulhima (Revealer), by Jev- of the Flowers), I 101, 109; rf, III 298. III 234 sqq.

Mulhima, by Salah-ud-Din, Nejdt-ul-Ghariq (The Rescue of the Drowning), III 219.

Mundzara-i Behdr u Khazdn (Contention ofcSpring and Autumn), III 21 n. 3. Netda'ij-ul-Funiin (The Results of the Sciences), III 173.

Mundzara-i Behdr u Shita (Contention of Spring and Newddir-uz-Zurefd (Anec-Winter), III 21, 24 n. 4, 28, 29, 88, 110, 353, 354, 363, sqq. Nigdistdn, by Ghaffari, III 278 n. I.

Mundzara-i Tuti u Zagħ (The Contention of the Parrot and the Crow), III 174. Nigar-Name (The Book of Beauties), II 237.

Mundzara-i Gul u Khusrev (The Contention of the Rose and the Chosroes), II 100sqq. Nock Einmal die Seldschu-

Mtfnis-ul-^cUshshaq (The Lovers³ Familiar), II 148 n. 2. Notting Hill High School Magazine, IV 275 n. 3.

Munsh'e'at, the Letters of En-Nujum-uz-Zahire (The Shining Stars), II 358.

Nabi, III 327 n. 4. Nukhbe-i Vehbi (Vehbi's Selection), IV 257 sqq.

Mushfiq-Name (The Book of Mushnq), V 55 n. 2. Nuits, les, IV 185.

N. Numbers, the Book of, II 117 n. 4.

Nakhlistan (Palm-land), III 109. Numima-i Edebiyyat ^c*Os-*

Naqa'id (Flytings), IV 248 n. 2. nidniyya (Specimens of Otto-Nasihah-i Isldmbol (A Mo- 'Osmanli Sha'irlari (Otto-

Nazm-i Jewdhir (The String man Poets), II 55.

of Gems), IV 338. Ottoman Grammar, by Jev- Ottoman Poems translated Nefahdt-ul-Uns (The Brea- into English verse, IV 250 n. 1.

O.

Ottoman Sultans, History of the, by Bihishti, II 376 n. 1. Naji, III 50. See Mejmu a-i Mu'allim.

Ottomans, History of the, by Kemal-Pasha-zade, II 358. Psalms, the, I 375 n. 2, 376; II 105 n. 2; III 18 n. 1, 191 n. 3, 215 n. 2.

Our Poetesses, by Ahmed Mukhtar Efendi, IV 151, 349. See Sha'ir Khanimlarimiz.

P.

Pend-Name (Book of Counsels), by Guwahi, II 124.

Penj Genj (Five Treasures), of Nizami, III 365.

Pentateuch, the, I 375 n. 2, 376; II 105 n. 2.

Peony, the Crimson, I 262, 263, 264, 265, 299, 300, 380, 390, 406, 413 n. I; II 44 n. 1, 139 n. 1, 140 n. 2, 141 n. 2, 148, 174, 190, 199, 273 n. 2, 276, 348, 354; III 140, 162 n. 4, 171, 233. See Shaqa'iq-un-Nitmaniyya.

Persians, a Year amongst the, I 15 n. 1, 62 n. 1; II 46 n. 2, 334 n. 7, 336 n. 1, 340 n. 1, 341 n. 8; IV 172 n. 3, 225 n. 1, 293 n. 1.

Poems, the Suspended, III 174 n. 3. See Mifallaqdt.

Poeseos Asiaticae commentariorum libri sex, II 232 n. 1.

Posy from the Garths of Culture, by Beligh of Brusa, XV 117. See Guldeste-i Riyaz-i 'rfdn.

Professor's Magazine, by

Q

Qabus-Nama, III 334.

Qahraman-Nama, III 149 n. 6.

Qanun-Name (Book of Laws), II 21.

Qamus, the, I 121; IV 231, 248 n. 1; V 22, 65, 75.

Qasida-i 'Azliyya (The Deposal Qasida), III 342.

Qasida, the Hyacinth, III 133-

Qasida-i Tanndna (The Resonant Qasida), IV 244, 249 sqq., 264.

Qasida-i Tayydra (The Volant Qasida), IV 245, 249 sqq.

Qasidet-ul-Birde (The Mantle-Poem), IV 82.

Qastamuni-Name (Qastamuni-Book), II 108; III 161.

Qirq Vezir Ta'rikhi (The History of the Forty Vezirs), V 13 n. 1. See Forty Vezirs, History of the.

Qudatqu Bilik (The Auspicious Knowledge), I 71, 78, 104 seq.

R.

Raqqas-Name (Book of Dancers), IV 235 n. 2.

Rawz-nl-Akhyar, III 162 n. 4.

Rawzat-ush-Shuhadd (Garden of Martyrs), III 90.

Rebdb-Ndme (The Book of the Rebeck), I 108, 152 sqq., 167, 235, 308, 421.

Religions et Philosophies dans VAsie Centrale, les, I 24 n. 2.

Religious Systems of the World, I 15 n. I.

Rcscfil Ikhwan-us-Safa (Tracts of the Brethren of Sincerity), III 21.

Risdle-i Khizriyya, IV 82.

Er-Risdlet-ul-Muhammediyye, I 403. See Muhammediyye, by Yaziji-oghli Memhemmed.

Riydnh Enjami (The Result of Hypocrisy), V 59 n. 1.

Rose and Nightingale, by Fazlf, IV 186. See Gulu Bulbul.

Rosebed of Poets, III 57, 73. See Gulshen-ush-Shu^card.

RubdHs, the, of ^cOmar-i Khayyam, I 89.

Rujif-ush-Sheykhi ild Sibdh (The Return of the Elder to his Youth), II 358.

S.

Sdqi-Ndme (Cup-bearer Book), by ^cAta'i, I 110; III 234 seq.

Sdqi-Name (Cup-bearer Book), by ^cAyni, IV 337 sqq.

Sdqi-Ndme (Cup-bearer Book), by Beligh, IV 122.

Saqi-Name (Cup-bearer Book), by Fuzulf, III 88.

Saqi-Name (Cup-bearer Book), by Haleti, I 110; III 224 sqq.

Saqi-Name (Cup-bearer Book), of Kemal Bey, IV 34.

Saqi-Name (Cup-bearer Book) by Qaf-zada, III 204, 226 n. 1.

Saqi-Name (Cup-bearer Book), by Yahya Efendi, I 110; III 278 seq.

Suheyl u Nev-Bahar (Canoopus and Vere), of Bihishti, II 376 n. I.

Sahra (The Country), I 133, 135 n. I; V 1, 11, 77.

Seb^ca-i Seyyare (The Seven Planets), IV 117 n. 2.

Sefinet-ur-Raghib (The Ship of Raghib), IV 95 n. 1.

Seldmdn u Ebsal, of Jami, II 10; III 22, 25.

Selaman u Ebsal, of Lami^ci, III 22, 25 seq., 28, 353, 354 sqq.

Selected Poems from the Divdni Shatnsi Tabriz, I 53 n. 1, 146 n. 2, 169 n. 1.

Sened-ush-Shu^card (Title-deed of Poets), IV 147.

Ser-guzesht-Ndme (The Book of Adventures), IV 117 n. 2.

Servet-i Funiin, name of a newspaper, I 150 n. 1; III 307 n. 1.

Shafts of Doom, the, III 253.

See Siham-i Qaza.

Shah u Dervish (King and Dervish), by Hilali, III 122.

Shah u Geda (The King and Beggar), by Yahya Bey, I 109; III 121, 122 sqq., 126, 353, 368 sqq., 374.

Shah-Nama, the, by Firdawsf, I 71, 105, 226, 269, 272 n. 1, 289 n. 1, 433 n. 1; II 142 n. 2, 390 sqq; III 25, 36 n. 1, 152 n. 1, 160, 269 n. 3, 341 n. 1; IV 23 n. 2, 48 n. 2.

Shd'ir KhAnimlarimiz (Our Poetesses), III 171. See Our Poetesses.

Shaqfiq-un-NU'maniyya (The Crimson Peony), I 139; III 162 n. 4, 233. See Peony, the Crimson.

Shebistdn-i Khaydl (The Nightchamber of the Fantasy), II 287 n. 1; III 52.

Shefiq-Name, V 16.

Shehr-engiz of ^cAshiq Chelebi, III 162 n. 4.

Shehr-engiz of ^cAzizi, III 179 sqq.

Shehr-engiz of Brusa, by Lami^cf, III 23, 28.

Shehr-engiz, by Mesihi, I 107; II 17, 231 sqq., 249 sqq.

Shehr-engiz of Vardar Yenijesi, by Usulf, III 45.

Shehr-engiz of Adrianople, by Zatf, III 50.

Shem^c u Perwdne (Taper and Moth), by Ahlf, III 23.

Shem^c u Perwane (Taper and Moth), by Lami'i, III 22, 28, 353, 362 seq.

Shem' u Perwane (Taper and Moth), by Mu'idi, III 160.

Shem' u Pewane (Taper and Moth), by Zati, I 107; III 50, 53 seq., 57, 354.

Shemsiyye (Solar Poem), of Salah-ud-Din, I 389 seq; III 298.

shereful-Insdn (The Noblesse of Humanity), III 20, 21, 24 n. 4, 27.

Sheref-Name (Book of Glory), I 144 n. 3.

Shevq-Engiz (The Provoker of Mirth) by Sunbul-zada Vehbf, III 272 n. 2; IV 246 seq., 252 sqq., 262 n. 5, 289 n. 3.

Shifa-ul-Esqam ve Dewa-ul-'Alam (The Healing of Ills and the Cure of Pains), I 260 n. 1.

Shikdyet-Ndma (Plaint), by Fuzulf, III 91.

Shirin, a mesnevf attributed to Zdtf, III 50 n. 1.

Sihdm-i Qazd (Shafts of Doom), III 253 n. 1, 273; IV 272; V 69.

Sihilet-uz-Zeheb, (The Chain of Gold), by Jamf, I 231 n. 1; II 10.

Sima'-Khane-i Edeb (Auditory of Culture), I 422 n. 2; III 294 n. 1, 297 n. 1.

Siret-un-Nebi (Biography of the Prophet), by Veysf, III 208 n. 1.

Siyasat-Nama, II 63 n. 4. es-Siyaset-ush-Sher'iyye, III 162 n. 4.

Siyer-i Nebi (Acts of the Prophet) by Zatf, III 50.

Siyer-i Veysi (Veysi's Life), III 208.

Song of the Reed, the, IV 84 n. 2.

Spring, Ode on, by Mesihf, II 231 seq., 238 sqq.

Story of the Nations' Series, II 26 n. 3; IV 229 n. 1.

Subhet-ul-Ebrdr (Rosary of the Just), I 100; II 9; III 234. 236.

Suhbet-ul-Ebkdr (Communion of Virgins), I 100, 109; III 234 sqq.

Suheyli u Nev-Bahdr (Canoopus and Vere), of Ahmed, I 226, 427.

Suleyman-Name (The Book of Suleyman), I 286.

Sidhiyya, the, III 332.

Supplement aux Dictionnaires Arabes, I 414 n. 2.

Sur-Name (The Book of the Festival), by Hashmet, IV 147.

Sur-Name (The Book of the Festival), by Seyyid Vehbi, IV 110.

Sururi the Chronogrammatist, by Ebu-z-Ziya Tevfiq Bey, IV 268.

T.

Taberi, the Annals of, I 310 n. 2; III 15 n. 1.

Tableau General de l'Empire Othoman, I 237 n. 2.

Takhrib-i Khardbdt (The Demolition of the Tavern) V 85.

Tdj-ut- Tewdrikh (The Crown of Chronicles), I 164 n. 1; III 20 n. 2. See Crown of Chronicles, the.

Ta'lim-i Edebiyyat (Course, of Literature), by Ekrem Bey, I 124; III 14 n. 2, 81 n. 1, 116, 266, 267, 293, 329. See Course of Literature.

Ta'qib (The Pursuit), V 85.

Taqwim-i Meskukat-i 'Osmdniyya (Essai de Numismatique Ottomane), I 225 n. 1, 262 n. 2; II 73 n. 5.

Taqwim-i Vaqayi', the Ottoman official Gazette, V 100 n. 5.

Tdrikh-i 'Ata ('Ata's History), I 417 n. 1; II 78 n. 3, 84 n. 1.

Tarikh-i Chelebi-zdde, IV 75 n. 1.

Tarikh-i Qamincha, III 327 n. 2.

Tartufe, V 59.

Tasvir-i Efkâr (The Tablet of Opinions), V 26, 32, 33 n. 1.

Taverriy the, by Ziya Pasha, III 142, 189, 195, 237. See Khardbdt.

Tazarru'at-Name (Book of Humiliations), II 25.

Tebsire (The Elucidation), IV 328.

Tejnlsat, II 191 n. 3.

Telemaque, V 13, 25, 59.

Telmih, the, I 208.

Terjih, the, by Cadi Burhan-ud-Din, I 208.

Terjuman-i Ahwal (The Interpreter of Events), V 26.

Terjuman-i Haqiqat, name of a journal, I 150 n. 1.

Teshil-ut-Tibb (The Facilitation of Medicine), I 260 n. 1.

Tezkire, by Fatfn Efcndi, V 51 n. I, 65, 99 n. 4.

Tezkire (Memoirs of the Poets), by Latifi, I 139; III 7. See Latifi.

Tezkire (Memoirs of the Poets), by Mfr 'Ali Shir, II 11.

et-Tibr-id-Mesbuk fi nastfih-il-Muluk, III 162 n. 4.

Tuhfe (Gift), by 'Asim Efendi, V 65.

Tuhfe (Gift), by Shahidi, IV 176 n. 3, 257, 258 n. 2.

Tuhfe (Gift), by Vehbf, IV 242 n. 3, 257 sqq.; V 47, 65.

Tuhfet-ul-Ahrdr (Gift for the Free), II 9; III 125, 236.

Tuhfet-ul-Haremeyn, III 327 n. 3.

Tuhfet-ul-Irshdd (The Gift of Guidance), IV 91 n. 2.

Tuhfet-ul 'Ushshdq (A Gift to Lovers), by Hamdf, II 190, 191 sqq., 220 sqq., 376.

Turkje Shi'rlar (Turkish Poems), by Mehemmed Emin Bey, I 134 n. I.

Turkey in the Story of the Nations' Series, II 26 n. 3; IV 229 n. I.

Turkish Poetry, pamphlet on, by Sir James Redhouse, IV 314 n. 4.

U.

Uigur isc he Sprachmonumente una das Kudatku Bilik, I 71 n. I.

'Ulum, name of a newspaper, V 73.

Un Diplomate Ottoman en 1836, IV 328 n. 2.

'Uqud-ul-Jewdhir (The Strings of Gems), I 257.

V.

Vamiq and 'Azra, of Bi-hishti, II 376 n. I; III 24 n. 2.

Vamiq and 'Azra, of Lamî^c i, III 22, 24, 28, 353, 357 sqq.

Vamiq and 'Azra, by 'Un-surf, III 22, 26.

Vaqi'a-Name (The Vision), by Veysi, III 208, 209.

- Venus and Adonis*, I 115. Yusuf u Zelikha. See Joseph and Zelikha.
- Verqd u Gulsha*, III 107. Young Eagle and the Crow, the, V 34.
- Viladet-Name*, IV 147.
- Vise u Ramin*, I 107.
- Visa (Vis) and Ramin*, by Fakhr-i Jurjani, III 22, 370 n. 1.
- Visa and Ramin*, of Lami'i, III 22, 27, 28, 31, 353, 360 sqq.
- Vocabulary*, riming Persian-Turkish, by Ziya Pasha, V 65.
- Vulgate, the*, II 159 n. 1.
- W.
- Waqt*, name of a newspaper, V 59 n. 1.
- Watan* (The Fatherland), V 15.
- Wdridat-i Ghaybiyya* (Inspiration from the Unseen), IV 91 n. 2.
- Wegweiser zum Verstandniss der Turkischen Sprache*, I 438 n. 3.
- Wolf and the Lamb, the*, V 32.
- Y.
- Yatimat-ud-Dahr*, IV 73 n. 2.
- Year amongst the Persians*, a. See Persians, a Year amongst the.
- Yorgi Dandini*, V 14.
- Z.
- Zafer-Ndme* (Victory-Book), by Sabit, IV 21, 28.
- Zafer-Name* (The Book of Victory), by Ziya Pasha, V 62, 69 sqq., 83, 96 sqq.
- Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenlandischen Gesellschaft*, I 157 n. 1. See Journal of the German Oriental Society.
- Zemzeme*, by Ekrem Bey, III 271.
- Zenan-Name* (The Book of Women), IV 223 seq., 227 sqq., 236 sqq.
- Zenbur u 'Ase* (Bee and Honey), III 107.
- Zeyl-i Siyer-i Veysi*, III 327 n. 1.
- Ziya Pasha's Story of his Childhood*, V 42 n. 2.
- Zizimi, prince Ottoman, amoureux de Philippine-Helene de Sassenage*, II 80 n. 1.
- Zor Nikahi*, V 14.
- Zoraki Tabib*, V 14.
- Zubdet-ul-Esh'ar* (Cream of Poems), III 162 n. 4; 204.
- Zuhurd-i Mekkiyye* (Mecan Manifestations), IV 91 n. 2.

INDEX III.

INDEX OF TECHNICAL TERMS AND ORIENTAL WORDS.

- ' Abd-i Seb'ca (The Seven Sires), I 48.
- ' Abir, unguent, I 334 n. 3.
- ' Adam (not-being), IV 330. See Not-being.
- ' Adan, Arabic name for Eden and Aden, III 300 n. 2.
- ' Agha (sergeant), III 364.
- ' Ahenk (harmony), V 48 n. 2.
- ' Ajil, II 345 n. 5.
- ' Akdsira, plural of Kisrd, III 148 n. 6.
- ' Akhlat-i erba'a (the four humours), I 301 n. I. See Humours, the four.
- ' Aks (Antistrophe), I 115.
- ' Al (red), II 239 n. 2.
- ' Al (family), II 239 n. 2.
- ' Alern (The Universe), I 41.
- ' Alem-i 'Ab (The World Aquose), IV 106 n. I.
- ' Alem-i A'yan-i Sabita (The World of the Fixed Prototypes), I 55.
- ' Alem-i Berzakh (The Intermediate World), I 55.
- ' Alem-i Ghayb (The Invisible World), I 56.
- ' Alem-i Hissi (The Sensible World), I 56 n. 1.
- ' Alem-i Insan (The World of Man), I 56.
- ' Alem-i Jeberut (The World of Might), I 55.
- ' Alem-i Kevn u Fesad (The World of Generation and Corruption), I 56 n. I.
- ' Alem-i Kubra (The Greater World or Macrocosm), I 62.
- ' Alem-i Lahut (The World of Godhead), I 55.
- ' Alem-i Ma' ani (The World of Meanings), I 55 n. 2.
- ' Alem-i Melekut (The Angel World), I 55, 56.
- ' Alem-i Misal (The World of Similitudes), I 55.
- ' Alem-i Mulk (The World of the Kingdom), I 56, 188 n. 2.
- ' Alem-i Shehddet (The Visible World), I 55, 56.
- ' Alern-i Sughra (The Lesser World or Microcosm), I 62.
- ' Alem-i Suret (The World of Form), I 56 n. I.
- ' Al-i 'Abd (The Family of the Cloak), III 105 n. 2.
- ' Alim (Knower), name of God, I 409 n. I.-
- ' Allahu Ekber, II 244 n. 2.

- Alttnishlu*, class oimuderris, II 398.
- Altun*, name of a coin, II 26 n. 2.
- 'Amedji*, the office of, IV 324.
- Anadoli Muhdsibejisi* (Auditor for Anatolia), III 326.
- Anbshak-rubdn*, title, II 63 n. 4. See Nushfrewan.
- Aq*, used as a sobriquet, II 138 n. 1.
- Aqcha*, name of a coin, I 262 n. 2.
- Aqcha-i 'Osmd?il*, I 262 n. 2.
- 'Aql* (Reason), I 197 n. 2; II 389 n. 1.
- 'Aql-i Evvel* (First Intelligence), I 42. See Intelligence, the Primal \ Logos.
- 'Aql-i Fa^{cc}al* (Active Intelligence), I 43; III 356.
- 'Aql-i Kull* (Universal Intelligence), I 42. See 'Aql-i Evvel.
- 'Aql-i Mahjub* (Veiled Reason), II 199 n. I.
- 'Aql-i Nefsani* (Carnal Reason), III 128 n. 5.
- 'Aqa-yi Seyyid*, nickname of hashish, II 340 n. 1.
- 'Araba* (coach), IV 314.
- 'Araq* (spirit), III 89 n. 2.
- 'Araz* (Accident), I 41.
- Arpa Emini* (Intendant of the Barley), IV 58.
- 'Arsh* (Throne of God), I 35, 68, 172 n. 3, 372, 399; III 55 n. 3; IV 70 n. 3.
- 'Asdr* (works), I 407.
- 'Ases-Baski* (Captain of the Watch), III 217 n. 1.
- 'Ashiq*, title given to a class of poets, V 46 n. 1.
- 'Ashq-i haqiqi* (real love), III 174 n. 2; IV 123 n. 1. See Love, Typal and Real.
- 'Ashq-i mejazi* (typal love), III 174 n. 2; IV 123 n. 1. See Love, Typal and Real.
- 'Ashurd* (10th of Muharrem), the, IV 112 n. 1.
- 'Asitdna*, name of Constantinople, III 214 n. 1.
- 'Asitdna-i Sa'adet* (The Threshold of Felicity), III 214 n. 1.
- 'Asmdn u risman*, Persian phrase, IV 152 n. 1.
- Asper* = aqcha, I 262 n. 2.
- 'Asumani*, name of a boot, III 295 n. 2.
- 'Asyab* (mill), V 48 n. 2.
- Atles* (satin), I 43 n. 2; IV 136 n. 1.
- 'Awalim-i Khamsa* (The Five Worlds), I 54. See Worlds, the Five.
- A'yan* (Prototypes), 1410n.2.
- A'yan-i Devlet* (Grandeess of the Empire), II 274 n. 2.
- A'yan-i Sabita*, (The Fixed Prototypes), I 55 n. I. See Ideas, the Platonic.
- Ayaq*, III 186 n. I.
- 'Ayna* (mirror), V 30.
- 'Ayn-i Tevhid* (The Eye of Unity), I 328 n. 1.

- ^c*Ayni* Yaqin (The Eye of Certainty), I 328 n. 1.
^c*Ayyash*, III 185 n. 7.
^c*Azdd* (free), epithet of the cypress, II 208 n. 8.
^c*Azdd*, meanings of, II 324 n. 1.
^c*Azebs* (light horse), III 364.
Azghds-i ahldm (tangled dreams), I 57 n. 1.
^c*Aziz-i Misr* (Grandee of Egypt), II 157 n. 1.
^c*Azrd* (virgin), III 183 n. 4.
Bdb (Chapter), I 183.
Baba (Father), I 176.
Bahr-i Muhit (The Encircling Ocean), I 38.
Bal tutan par maghini yalar, II 320 n. 5.
Baqam (brazil-wood), II 213 n. 2.
Bdld, the grade of, V 105 n. 3.
بلاتوز, a kind of brocade, IV 133 n. 3.
Bari (Creator), name of God, I 409 n. 1.
Bashmaqliq (Shoe-money), III 216 n. 2.
Batt-i tney (wine-goose), III 346 n. 6.
Ba^cz (Partial), I 119.
Bedf (Euphuism), I 112, 124, 212, 306. See ^c*Ilm-i Bedi*.
Beglikji, name of an official, III 304 n. 1. See Beylikji.
Behemut (Behemoth), I 39.
Belde-i Tayyiba (The Goodly City), name of Constantinople, III 214 n. 1.
Bend (Tie), I 90, 91.
Beng (bang), III 89 n. 1.
Berd^cat-i Istihlal (Eloquent Presagement), I 123.
Bey an (Exposition), I in, - 124. See 'Ihn-i Beydn.
Beylikji, the office of, IV 324.
Beyt (Couplet), I 79.
Beyt (house of a planet), I 328 n. 1.
Beyt-ul-Ahzdn or Beyt-i Ahzdn (The House of Sorrows), II 162 n. 1; III 309 n. 3.
Beyt-ul-G hazel (Beyt-i Gha- zel), I 81.
Beyt-i Ala'mur (The Frequented House), I 37. See Ka^cba.
Beyt-ul-Qasid, I 85.
Binish, double meaning of, IV 131 n. 6.
Bismil, I 174 n. 2.
Borek, II 334 n. 1.
Boza, III 89 n. 2.
Bulbul (Nightingale), I 246 n. 3.
Bulugh-i haqiqi (the true age of discretion), III 42.
Burhdn (Proof), I 209 n. 3.
CJiaqshir, IV 131 n. 7.
Charsy III 89 n. 1.
Chawush (Pursuivant), II 237 n. 2.

- Chay*, IV 68 n. 2.
Chekmek, IV 156 n. 3.
Chelebi, meaning of, I 139 n. 4.
Chelebi Efendi (title), I 151
n. 3, 422 ; IV 177 n. I, 178, 212.
Chelebi Sultan (title), II 366.
Cherkh-i Atlas (The Fleckless Sphere), I 43. See Primum Mobile.
Cherkh-i A'zam (the Most Great Sphere), I 43. See Primum Mobile.
Chille, IV 156 n. 3.
r, IV 170 n. I.
Ch'drek, II 334 n. 12.
Ddgh (sore), II 206 n. 2,
214 n. 4, 279 n. 5.
Dd'i (bedesman), makhlas
of the poet Ahmed, I 259 n. 8.
Dakhil, I 75 n. 1.
Ddkhily class of mtiderris,
11398-
Ddkhil medreses, II 396.
Ddnishmendy II 397.
Dar u gir, III 19 n. 4.
Darisi bashine, IV 292 n. 2.
Ddriyye (mansion-poem), III
177.
Ddr-ul-Hadis, a class of
Muderris, II 399.
Ddr-ul-Jeldl (The Mansion of Glory), I 36 n. I.
Dar-ul-Jihad (Seat of the holy war), I 397 n. 2.
Ddr-us-Seldm (The Abode of Peace), name of Baghdad,
III 71.
Dar-us-Selam (The Mansion of Peace), one of the Eight
Paradises, I 36 n. I.
Ddstdn (legend), I 183, 270.
Dede (title), I 195 n. 3; IV
175 n. 1.
Defter-i A'nal (Register of Deeds), II 213 n. 7.
Defter Emini, the office of,
IV 93-
Defterdar, the office of, I
428; II 25, 366; II 264; III
216 n. 4; IV 68, 93.
Defter-Khdne, IV 92.
Deniz qulaghi, III 99 n. 2.
Der-i Devlet, name of Constantinople, III 214 n. I.
Der-i Sa'adet, name of Constantinople, III 214 n. 1.
Destdr, IV 133 n. 1.
Deverdn-i Vujud (the Circle of Existence), I 52.
Devlet-i'Aliyya, official title of the Ottoman State, III 207 n. 1.
Devlet-i Behiyya-i 'Iran, official title of the Persian State,
III 207 n. 1.
Devshima, a species of conscription, III 117, 120.
Dibdje (Prologue), II 234.
Dik-i 'Arsk (The Cock of the Throne), II 333 n. 3.
Din ve dunydsim yapmaq,
II 320 n. 7.
Div-bend, title of King Tahmuras, III 360.
Dhvdn (Collection of Poems),
[I 85, 100, 102.

- Diwdn Efendisi* (Secretary of Divan), II 96 n. 2.
Du-Bcyt, I 89.
Dukhter-i pir-i nuighdn, III 269 n. 4.
Dukhter-i rez, III 269 n. 4.
Durr-i mekniin (hidden pearls), I 398 n. 2.
 دوزلش, IV 128 n. 6.
Eflak-ijuziyye (subordinate spheres), I 45 n. 1.
Ehl-i Batin (Followers of the Esoteric), I 26 n. 1.
Ehl-i Tasawwuf (Followers of Sufiism), I 26 n. 1. See Sufi and Sufiism.
Ejr-i gheyr-i memnun, I 398 n. 2.
E-lest, Day of, I 363 n. 9; II 75 n. 1, 207 n. 6.
E'lest, the Feast of, IV 339 n. 6. See Banquet, the Primal.
E-lest, the Pact of, IV 6q n. 6.
E-lest, Wine of, I 23.
E-lestu, I 22, 246 n. 4.
Elif, the letter, III 177 n. 2.
Emdnet (trust), III 316 n. 1. See Trust, the.
Enderiin, IV 221 n. 1. See Seraglio.
Enderuni, IV 221 n. 1, 279.
Engclyun, IV 70 n. 2.
Entariy IV 131 n. 9.
Enjumen-i Danish (the Imperial Academy of Science and Literature), V 8, 24,
Ergen, IV 321 n. 1.
Erghavan, III 30 n. 3, 152 n. 5. See Judas-tree.
Evqd/ (religious endowments), III 162 n. 4.
Erteng, II 313 n. 5; III 66 n. 1; IV 43 n. 3, 70 n. 2.
Erwah-i Jeberutiyye (Spirits of Might), I 55.
Erzheng, II 313 n. 5; III 66 n. 1; IV 43 n. 3.
Esmd (Names), I 61 n. 2. See Names of God, the.
Esmd-i Ilahiyye (Divine Names), I 61. See Names of God, the.
Esrđ, name of a chapter of the Koran, IV 22 n. 1.
Estaglifiru'llah (I ask pardon of God), II 244 n. 2.
Ey Deli (0 mad one), I 191 n. 2.
Ey Hakim (O Sage), I 191 n. 2.
Ey jan (O Soul), I 191 n. 2.
Ey Safa (O Joy), I 191 n. 2.
Eyu, the Category of Place, I 41 n. 2.
Faghfur, title of the Emperor of China, I 286; III 110, 139 n. 1.
Fa'llatun (in Arabic Prosody), V 49 n. 1.
Fakhriyya, III 158 n. 1, 257, 270, 293; IV 193.
Fa^{cl} (Activity), I 41 n. 2.
Falji (diviner), III 48 n. 1.

- Fanus*, III 175 n. 2.
Fanus-i ger dan, III 175 n. 2.
Fdniis-i Khayal, (Magic-fanal), III 175 n. 2.
Faqih (jurist), III 67 n. 5.
Fasdhat (correctness of diction), III 255.
Fas/ (canto), I 236.
Fdtiha (opening chapter of the Koran), the, I 236, 339, 361 n. 7, 365 n. 1, 406; III 61 n. 2, 191 n. 5, 195, 295 n. 3; IV 162.
Felek-i Atlas, IV 136 n. 1, 339 n. 1. See Sphere, the Satin, and Primum Mobile.
Felck-td-Efldk (the Sphere of Spheres), I 43; IV 339 n. 1. See Sphere, the Ninth, and Primum Mobile.
Fel-fes, IV 170 n. 2.
Fenn-i Furs, II 364. See Persian ism.
Ferd (Unit), I 79.
Fermele, IV 132 n. 6.
Fermene, IV 132 n. 6.
Ferrdsh, the, III 16 n. 5.
Ferz, III 249 n. 1. See Chess.
Ferzana, III 249 n. 1.
Ferzin, III 249 n. 1.
Fettvd (canonical decision), I 234; II 353 n. 2.
Firqa-i Ndjiye (the sect that will be saved), I 379 11. 1.
Firqa-i Hdhke (the sect that will perish), I 379 n. 1.
Fitne (worry), I 257 n. 3.
Funun-i juz'iyye (the particular arts) I 261 n. 2.
Futa (bathing-towel), II 251 n. 5.
Genj-i Rewan (The moving Treasure), II 117 n. 4.
Germiyan-oghli, patronymic, I 264.
Gevher (jevher), meanings of, I 295 n. 3.
Ghanimet, name of a musical air, III 347 n. 5.
Gharbi (western) V 7.
Ghayb-i Muzaf (Relatively Invisible), I 55.
Ghazel, I 80, 102, 144.
Ghazel-i mudevver (circular ghazel), IV 250 n. 1.
Ghdzi (Champion), title, III 155 n. 3.
Gliilmdn (youths of Paradise), I 245 n. 3. See Eternal Youths.
Ghuluvv, I 112 n. 1.
Ghurdb-ul-Beyn (The Crow of Parting), II 214 n. 3. See Crow, the.
Ghuriish, Turkish coin, I 262 n. 2.
Gil (clay), III 237 n. 3.
Giriban, III 154 n. 5, 230 n. 4.
Girishme, IV 170 n. 1.
Giti-numd (world-displayer), name of a glass, I 278,
G'ozine durmaq II 320 n. 2.
Gozgu (mirror), V 30.
Gul (rose), III 237 n. 3.

Gul Qasidasi (Rose Qasida),
I 101.

Gul-i sad-berg (Cabbage rose), III 162 n. 2.

Gulaj, II 335 n. 5.

Gulndr, III 267 n. 2.

Gulshen (rose-garden), II 75
n. 1.

Guriz, I 84 n. i.

Guriz-gah, I 84 n. 1 ; III
148 n. 4, 266 n. 1, 269 n. 2.
Giiyende (minstrel), II 386n.4.

Habbet-ul-Khazra (grain of green), I 385 n. 3.

Habib (Beloved), title of
Muhammed, III 197 n. 1.

Habib-ulladh, title of Muhammed, I 243 n. 2; III 113
n. 1.

Habs-i nefes (holding the breath), III 240 n. 3.

Hadda (gauge-plate), IV 261
n. 1.

Hadis, (Apostolic Tradition), I 16, 17 n. 1, 24, 54
n. 1, 113, 170 n. 5, 184, 188
n. 1, 194 n. 2, 216 n. 2, 241
n. 1, 242 n. 1, 366 n. 7, 369
n. I 373, 379 n. I, 396 n.4,
397 n. I, 399, 424 n. 2; II
23, 57 n. 4, 68 n. 1, 140 n.
3, 210 n. 2, 239 n. 2, 247
n. 1, 271 n. 4, 274 n. 1, 390
n. 1; III 195; IV 117 n. 2,
136 n. 3, 147, 150 n. 2, 187
n. 1; V 99 n. 2. See Traditions of the Prophet.

Hadis-i Qudsi (Divine Tradition), I 17 n. 1, 370 n. 4.

Hadis-i Sher if (Blessed Tradition), I 17 n. 1.

Hdjiz, meaning of, II 218
n. 8, 254.

Hdfiza (memory), IV 172

Hajj, the pilgrimage to Mecca, I 243 n. 3.

Hajji Leylek (Pilgrim Stork),
II 386 n. 9.

Hdl (Ecstasy), I 59.

Haldli (union-tissue), IV
293 n. 2.

El-hamdu li'llah (Praise be to God), II 244 n. 2.

Hdmil (deferent), I 45 n. 1.

Haqd°iq (Verities), I 407.

Haqq (the Divine), I 42.

Haqq (Truth), Suff term for God, I 60.

Haqq-i Tevhid (Truth of Unity), I 328 n. 1.

Haqq-i Yaqin (Truth of Certainty), I 328 n. 1.

Hardret-i Ghariziyye (Natural Heat), I 190 n. 3.

Hareket-i Altmishlu, class of Muderris, II 399.

Hareket-i Dakhil, class of
Muderris, II 399.

Hareket-i Eyniyye (Spatial Movement), I 45 n. 2.

Hareket-i Ke?niyye (Quantitative Movement), I 45 n. 2.

Hareket-i Keyfiyye (Qualitative Movement), I 45 n. 2.

- Hareket-i Kharij*, class of I Hezej, name of a metre, I Muderris, II 399. 88 n. I, 89, 107, 110, 309, 376; III 213.
- Hasb-i Hal* (Plaint), II 78 n. 3. Hezeliyyat (Facetiae), I 98.
- Hashish*, II 340 n. I ; III Hijab-i nurani (veil of radiance), I 405 n. 2.
- 89 n. I. Hijab-i zulmani (veil of darkness), I 405 n. 2.
- Hatif*, the unseen. III 124. Hijaz, name of a musical mode, III 150 n. 2.
- Hatifi Jan* (Inward Monitor), I 313. Hijre (the Muhammedan era), I 98.
- Hawa*, the two meanings of, II 204 n. 3, 206 n. 1, 209 n. 2, 221 n. II ; III 157 n. 4. Hijv (Satire), I 98.
- Hawa-engiz*, II 204 n. 3. Hikayet-i Mundsib (Apposite Tale), II 145.
- Hawaii-Top* (sky-cannon), II 239 n. 4. Hikmet-i 'Amaliyye (Practical Philosophy), I 40.
- Hayder* (Lion), surname of the Caliph 'Ali, III 289 n. 3; IV 123 n. 2; V 93 n. 3. Hikmet-i Nazariyye (Theoretic or Speculative Philosophy), I 39.
- el-Hayy* (the Living), a name of God, II 202 n. 3. Hinna (henna), pronounced qina in Turkish, III 98 n. I.
- Hazf*, name of a rhetorical figure, I 121. Hisdb-ul-Benan (Finger-Counting), I 104 n. 2. See Parmaq Hisabi.
- Hazrat-i Khamsa* (The Five Planes), I 55. j Hiss-i Mushterek the (Common Sense), I 50.
- Hazret-i 'Amd* (Plane of the Nebulosity), I 55. Hubiit, astrological term, I 328 n. 1.
- Hazret-i Ghayb-i Mutlaq* (Plane of the Absolutely Invisible), I 55- Hu-hang, III 139 n. 1.
- Heft Manzar* (the Seven Pavilions), III 367. Hulul (immanence of God in Man), I 382 n. 1.
- Hekim Bashi* (Chief Physician), II 399 n. 2. Humd, the, I 331 n. 5 and 6; II 90 n. 1 and 2, 210 n. 3 221 n. n ; III 153 n. 3; IV 27 n. 2, 92 n. I.
- Helwd-yz raqib* (rival's sweetmeat), II 108 n. I. Huqqa-bdz (juggler), II 38 n. 4.
- Hemshire-i sdqi-i sheng*, III 269 n. 4. Heyidd (Matter), I 45.

- Hurriyyet* (liberty), II V 19. I 186 n. I, 249 n. i; IV 156
Huseyni, IV 132 n. 10. n. 3. See Amphibology.
Husn-i Maqtcf (Beauty of the Maqta^c), I 81. ' Ihdm-i Tendsub (Amphibological Congruity), I 113.
Htism-i Matlcf (Beauty of the Matla^c), I 81. Iki-telli qabaq, a kind of lute, IV 170 n. 3.
Husn-i Ta'lip (Aetiology), I 113, 220 n. 3, 333 11.3 and 4; II 36 n. 2, 37 n. 4, 87 n. 1, 246 n. 8, 279 11. 3, 361 n. 10; III 55 11.5/9311.2, 152 n. 4, 154 n. 3, 156 n. 3, 282 n. 3, 301 n. 2; IV 63 n. 2, 127 n. 1. See Aetiology. ' Ilm (Knowledge), I 19711. 1.
Fade (Epanastrophe), I 116. ' Ilm-i Ahddis (Tradition), II 397. See Hadis and Traditions of the Prophet.
Ib/is, derivation of, IV 172 n. 1. ' Ilm-i Akhldq (Ethics), I 40.
Ibn, used as a patronymic, III 12 n. 2. ' Ilm-i A^cla (the Higher Science), I 40 n. 3.
Ibtidd-i AltmisJdn, class of Muderris, II 399. ' Ilm-i ^zAqa^oid (Dogmatics), II 397.
Ibtidd-i DdkJul, class of Muderris, II 399. ' Ilm-i Bed? (Art of Euphuism), I III, 112; II 396.
Ibtidd-i Kharij, class of Muderris, II 399. ' Ilm-z Beldgkat (Art of Rhetoric), I III; II 396 n. 3.
Ich gwvegisi (indoor bridegroom), IV 304 n. 1. ' Ilm-i Bey an (Art of Exposition), I III; II 396.
I chine qan olmaq, II 320 n. 2. ' Ilm-i Edeb (Humanity), II 396-
Ildrck (perception), IV 172 n. 3- ' Ilm-i Esfel (the Lower Science), I 40 n. 3.
Ighraq, I 112 n. 1. ' Ilm-i Evsat (the Intermediate Science), I 40 n. 3.
'Ihdju (Amphibology), I 113, 215 n. 1, 216 n. 2, 230 n. 5, 295 n. 3, 364 n. 5; II 137 n. 1; III 144 150 n. 2, 156 n. 2, 157 n. 4, 178 n. 8, ' Ilm-i Fiqh (Jurisprudence), II 397.
' Ilm-i Hendese (Geometry), II 396. See Geometry.
' Ilm-i Hey'et (Astronomy), II 396. See Astronomy.
' Ilm-i Huruf (Science of the Letters), I 341.
' Ilm-i Ilahi (Metaphysics), I 40.
' Ilm-i Kelam (Scholastic Philosophy), II 396. See Mutekellimin and Scholastics.

'Ilm-i Ma'ani (Science of Significations), I III ; II 396.

'Ilm-i Mantiq (Logic), I 40 n. 4; II 396.

'Thn-i Nahv (Syntax), II 396.

'Ilm-i Reml (Geomancy), I 389 n. I.

'Ilm-i Riyazi (Mathematics), I 40.

'Ilm-i Sarf (Grammar), II 396.

'Ilm-i Tabi'i (Physics), I 40.

'Ilm-i Ta'bir (the Science of Interpretation of Dreams), I 389 n. I. See Dreams.

'Ilm-i Tasavvuf (Sufrism, I 15. See Sufrism; Sufi; Mysticism; Mystics.

'Ilm-i Tedbir-ul-Medine (Politics), I 40.

'Ilm-i Tedbir-ul-Menzil (Oeconomics), I 40.

'Ilm-i Teressul, I 257.

'Ilm-i Tevhid (Knowledge of the Unity), I 166 n. 6, 304 n. 2, 328 n. 1.

'Ilm-i Te'vil (Exegesis), II 397.

'Ilm-i Yaqin (the Knowledge of Certainty), I 328 n. I.

Iltilzam (Supererogation), I 75 n. 1, 122.

Imdle (Inclination), I 106; III 14, 15, 53, 143, 256.

Imam, meaning of, II 218 n. I.

Imdm = precentor, III 215 n. 4.

Imkdn (Contingent Existence), I 42 n. 2. See Being, Contingent.

rndt, name of a rhetorical figure, I 122.

Infial (Passivity), I 41 n. 2.

Ins an (Man), I 48.

Insdn-i Kdmil (the Perfect Man), I 52. See Man, the Perfect.

IpsiZy IV 131 n. 2.

Iqtibds (Quotation), I 112.

Irddi (voluntary), I 44.

Irsdd (Preparation), I 121.

Irsdl-i Mesel (Proverbial Commission), I 114; III 329; IV 76.

Isfahan, name of a melody, IV 49 n. 3.

Islitiqdq (Paronymy), I 120.

Ism-i A'zam (the Most Great Name), I 379 ll. 2; III 56 n. 6. See Name, the Most Great; and God, the Most Great Name of.

Ism-i Rabb (the Name Sustainer), I 410 n. 3.

Ism-i Zdt (the Name of Self), I 409 n. 1.

Ismid (stibium), II 274 n. 1.

Istfdre (Trobe), I in n. 1.

Izdfet (Persian genitive construction), III 81 n. 2.

Izdfet (Relation), I 41 n. 1.

^c*Izdr* (cheek), III 183 n. 4.

^z*Izzet* (Excellence), IV 157 n. 2.

- Jam* (bowl, III 156 n. 5.
Jdm-i Giti-numd (the World-displaying Cup), II 71 n. 1.
Jdm-i Jem, Jdm-i Jemshid.
 See Jemshid, the cup of.
Jdm-i Jihdn-numd (the World-displaying Cup), II 71 n. 1.
Jdn-i °Alem (the World-Soul), I 42 n. 3.
Jdn-i Jihdn (the World-Soul), I 42 n. 3.
Janizari, II 76 n. 1. See Janissaries.
Jdriye (slave-girl), II 361 n. 7.
Jeberiit (Might), I 55 n. 4, 56 n. 2.
Jeberutiyye, I 55 n. 4.
Jeldl (the Awful), I 171 n. 2. See Attributes of Awfulness.
Jemdl (the Beautiful), I 171 n. 2. See Attributes of Beauty.
Jemdzi, the Latter, IV 298 n. 2.
Jennet (Paradise), III 183 n. 6; V 30.
Jennet-i °Adn (Garden of Eden), I 36.
Jennet-ul-Firdevs (the Garden of Paradise), I 36 n. 1.
Jennet-ul-Khutd (the Garden of Eternity), I 36 n. 1.
Jennet-ul-Me'wd (the Garden of the Abode), I 36 n. 1.
Jennet-un-Na'im (the Garden of Delight), I 36 n. 1.
Jennet-ul-Qadr (the Garden of Abidance), I 36 n. 1.
Jerid, III 287.
Jerr (Traction), I 187 n. 2.
Jevher (Substance), I 41.
Jevher-i ferd (atom), I 67 n. 1, 217 n. 5, 295 n. 3.
Jevher chichegi (jewel-flower), IV 286 n. 3.
Jevherddr (Gemmed), I 98.
Jevherin (Gemmed), I 98.
Jewdb (Response), I 100.
Jewdb-i shafi (healing answer), II 273 n. 4.
Jinds (Homonymy), I 116 sqq.
Jinds-i Muzdevij (Coupled Homonymy), I 119.
Jinn, the, I 38, 245 n. 5; II 218 n. 2; III 113 n. 2; IV 201 n. 2.
Jism (Body), definition of, I 45 n. 3.
Jism-i Kull (Universal Body), I 43 n. 3. See Primum Mobile.
Jism-i Mutlaq (Body in the Abstract), I 45.
Kafir (infidel), name for a beauty, II 44 n. 3. See Infidel and Paynim.
Kdfir qizi (paynim maid), III 85.
Kdfiri kharti, II 78.
Kdtib-i Diwdn (Secretary of Divan), II 98 n. 2.
Kebab, IV 214 n. 1.
Keh-Keshdn (the Straw-bearers), III 147 n. 3. See Strawbearers' path, the.

- Kelime* (the Muslim Confession of Faith), II 218 n. 4.
- Kern* (Quantity), I 41 n. 2.
- Kemend*, (lasso), II 114 n. 6.
- Kendini oqt*, IV 25 n. 1.
- KeneZ* (title) V 105 n. 1.
- Kerake*, IV 132 n. 4.
- Keshf* (unveilment), I 59, 327 n. 2.
- Keshkid*, (begging-bowl), IV 173.
- Kesre-i khafifa*, III 212, 213 n. 1; IV 184 n. 1.
- Kevn u Fesad* (Generation and Corruption), I 47.
- Keyf* (Quality), I 41 n. 2.
- Keyfiyyat* (Qualities), I 47.
- Keymus* (chyme), IV 340 n. 2.
- Kh°ab-i bi'ghaflet* (sleep unoblivious), II 210 n. 2.
- Kh'ab-i ghaflet* (sleep oblivious), II 210 n. 2.
- Khafif*, name of a metre, I 109, 305; II 144, 199 n. 3.
- Khafan Aghast* (Master of the Robes of Honour), IV 212.
- Khald* (vacuum), I 44.
- Khalil* (Intimate), II 253 n. 5.
- Khalil-ulldh* (God's Intimate), title of Abraham, II 118 n. 2, 253 n. 5.
- Khalldqn °l-Ma°ani* (Creator of Ideas), title of Kemal-ud-Din of Isfahan, II 291 n. 2; III 51 n. 1.
- Khalqin gozlerini boyardi*, a Turkish idiom, I 300 n. 1.
- Khan*, meanings of, I 413 n. 2.
- Khdnim*, title given to Turkish ladies, II 123 n. 1.
- Khdqdn*, title of the Emperors of Tartary, II 115 n. 6; III 139 n. 1.
- Khar chin*, name of a metal, I 276.
- Kharij* (External), class of Muderris, II 398.
- Khdrij* (External) medreses, II 396.
- Khdss Hajib* (Privy Councillor), I 71.
- Khatib* (preacher), II 73 n. 6.
- Khatt* (writing or down), II 89 n. 5, 137 n. 1, 282 n. 2, 315 n. 7. See Down.
- Khatti* (Scriptory), I 119.
- Khatt-i reyhani* a kind of handwriting, II 282 n. 2.
- Khatt-i Yaquti*, a kind of handwriting, III 220 n. 2.
- Khatun* (Lady), II 123 n. 1.
- Khawdnus-i Suleymdyuyye*, class of Muderris, II 399.
- Khaydl* (Fantasy), I 50, II 36 n. 7, 208 n. 2; IV 172 n. 3. See Fantasy.
- Khay/d*, rhetorical figure, I 121.
- Khayr-id- Al* (the Best of Families), II 239 n. 3.
- Khayr-ul-Besher* (Best of Mankind), title of Muhammed, I 243 n. 1.
- Khayr-ul-Endm* (Best of - Mankind), title of Muhammed, I 243 n. 1.

- Khazina Odasi* (Treasury Chamber), IV 227.
- Khifat* (robe of honour), IV 133 n. 8.
- Khirman* (stackyard), II 55 11. 3.
- Khirman-i mdh* (stackyard of the moon), II 63 n. 3.
- Khirqā* (frock worn by der-vishes), IV 133 n. 1.
- Khitdm-ul-misk* (a musky close), IV 181 11. 1.
- KJiitta-i Sham*, double meaning of, III 343 n. 2.
- KJwja* (government master-clerk), III 194.
- Khoja* (preceptor), I 164 n. 1; II 395 n. 2, 399 n. 2.
- Khoja Merjdn* (Master Coral), II 340 n. 1.
- Khojaliq* (Master-Clerkship), III 333.
- Khordsdni* turban, the, IV 262 n. 4.
- Khoshdb (Khoshaf)*, II 335 n. 2.
- Khuddvendgdr* (the Master), I 384 n. 3.
- Khulefd-yi Rdshidin* (the Just Khalifas), II 150 n. 1; V 93 n. 3.
- Khurits-i Arsh* (the Cock of the Throne), II 333 n. 3.
- Khusrev, Khusraw*, title of the Persian Emperor, III 139 n. 1. See Chosroes; Kisrd.
- Khusrev* (Chosroes) used for Sultan^D or Prince³, II 91 n. 5, 115 n. 6; IV 112 n. 4.
- Khutbe* (homily), II 73 n. 6; V 101 n. 3.
- Khutbet-un-na^ct* (prayer), II 73 n. 6.
- Khutbet-ul-wa^cz* (homily), II 73 n. 6.
- Kibdr-i Muderrisin* (Grand Principals), II 400.
- Kif*, III 89 n. 1.
- Kilar Kyahyasi* (Comptroller of the Buttery), IV 279.
- Kilid* (lock), II 323 n. 7.
- Kilid-i Endishe* (the key of care) II 323 n. 3.
- Kindye* (Metonymy), I III n. 1.
- Kinz* (title), V 105 11. 1.
- Kiramu 'l-Katibin* (the Noble Scribes), IV 115 n. 3.
- Kisrd* (Chosroes), I 270 n. 1; II 62 n. 4, 63 n. 4; III 139 n. 1, 148 n. 6.
- Kiswet* (the covering of the Ka'ba), IV 91 n. 1.
- Knyaz* (title), V 105 n. 1.
- Kokona*, title given to Greek ladies, IV 241 n. 2.
- Kosti* (girdle), II 44 n. 4. See Zunnar; Girdle; and Cord, the paynim.
- Kith-ken* (Mountain-hewer), title of Ferhad, I 322 n. 1.
- Kuhl* (stibium), II 274 n. 1.
- Knlkhan* (stove-room), II 75 n. 1.

- Kulkkan-beyi*, II 75 n. 1. Leylet-id-Qadr (the Night of Power), I 293 n. 4. See Night of Power.
- Kulkhani*, II 75 n. 1.
- Kun* (Be), III 112 n. 4.
- Kurdiyye*, IV 132 n. 9. Lisdn-id-Ghayb (the Tongue of the Unseen World), I 166 n. 3.
- Kursi* (Footstool), I 35, 68, 172 n. 2.
- Kuse, kose* (a beardless man), Lisdn-i Hal (mute eloquence), II 216 n. 2.
- IV 153 n. 1, 321 n. 2.
- Knshdda* (opened) = joyful, Lisdn-i Qal (uttered language), II 216 n. 2.
- HI 155 n. 5.
- Kushti* (girdle), II 44 n. 4. Lop injiri (a kind of fig), II 385 n. 2.
- See Kosti.
- Kuy* (ward), II 66 n. 2. Lu^cbet (puppet), II 209 n. 1.
- Kyaya* (Steward), III 180, 325, 364. Lughaz (Riddle), I 100.
- La havla ve Id quvveta illa bi'llah*, Arabic phrase, IV 29 n. 3. Luziim-i md Id Yelzeni (Making Necessary the Unnecessary), I 122.
- Ldhiq* (Contiguous), I 118. Mcfdni, I 124. See Ilm-ul-Ma^cdni.
- Lala* (tutor), II 263 n. 1. Maghdrib, I 396 n. I.
- Lata*, the Turkish, V 45 n. 1. Maghrib (setting place), I 396 n. I.
- Ldm*, the letter, I 120 n. I.
- La-mekan* (the Placeless), III 54 n. 2. Mahalla (ward), IV 213 n. 1.
- Leb-i dilber* (Sweetheart's lip), name of a confection, II 108 n. 1. Mahjiib (screened), I 122.
- Leff u Neshr* (Fold and Spread), I 115 ; II 114 n. 5, 216 n. 5. Mdhiyydt (Essences), I 406.
- Levh-i Mahfuz* (the Preserved Tablet), IV 316 11.4, 338 n. I. See Tablet, the Preserved. Ma'hud, IV 132 n. 12.
- Levitiya* (Leviathan), 139 n. I. Mahziif, I 121.
- Leylet-ul-Berat* (The Night of Assignments), I 293 n. 4; III 221 n. I. Md-jerd (event), II 88 n. 8.
- Mdliyya Tezkirejisi*, IV 68, 93- Ma^cjun (Electuary), IV 157 n. 5.

- Ma^cmur* (flourishing), II 59 I n. 4.
- Mani* (Ottoman folk-verses), I 90.
- Maq^dla* (Discourse), III 126.
- Maq^dm* (Station), III 125.
- Maq^dm-i Mahmiid* (the Station Laudable), II 59 n. 7.
- Maqsad*, Maqsud (Purpose), I 84.
- Maqsad-i Aqsd* (the Utmost Goal), I 326 n. 1.
- Maqtcf* (the last Couplet of a Ghazel), I 80 seq.
- Maqu^ldt-i ^cAs here* (the Ten Categories), I 41 n. 2. See Categories, the Ten.
- Mardumek* (pupil of the eye), III 154 n. 4.
- Mdrpich* (snake), IV 161 n. I.
- Md-sewd* (What is beside), I 181 n. 1.
- Md-sewd-llah* (what is beside God), I 181 n. I.
- Mathbakh Emini* (Comptroller of the Imperial Kitchens), II 319.
- Matlcf* (the first Couplet of a Ghazel), I 79 sqq.
- Mawzun*, IV 128 11. 6.
- Maydan shifardsi* (Public-square poets), V 52 n. 1.
- Mebde-i Evvel* (First Cause), I 40.
- Medhiyye* Eulogy), 1 98.
- Medrese* (College), II 395 sqq.
- Mef^dHlun*, in Arabic Prosody, V 49 n. I.
- Mefriiq* (Disjoined), I 117.
- Mejdz-i Mursel* (Synecdoche), I III n. I.
- Mejidiyye*, coin, V 59 n. 2.
- Mejidiyye*, order, V 109 n. 8.
- Mejma^c-ul-Bahreyn* (Confluence of Two Seas), II 249 n. 8.
- Mekteb-i Edebiyye* (The School of Humanities), V 44 n. 2.
- Mektubji* (Chief Secretary), IV 93.
- Meld* (plenum), I 44.
- Mele-i A^cld* (the Heavenly Host), I 58.
- Melek* (Angel), used as a name, II 253 n. 1.
- Meiekut*, I 55 n. 5, 56 n. 2. See Angels, the.
- Meliket-ul-Hayydt* (Queen of the Serpents), I 433 n. 2.
- Me'muniyye*, a kind of short-bread, II 334 n. 13.
- Menazil* (mansions), II 360 n. 8.
- Menqut*, rhetorical figure, I 121.
- Merfu* (Repaired), I 117, 186 n. 1, 212.
- Merjdn du'asi*, III 184 n. 6.
- Merke^b* (vehicle), II 313 n. 4.
- Mersiye* (Elegy), I 98.
- Meshdhkh* (Sheykhs), I 26 n. I.
- Mesnevi* verse, I 71, 76, 103.
- Mesnevi-Kh'an* (Mesne vi-chanter), IV 213.

- Mesnevis*, I 101, 102, 107 sqq.
- Meta* (Time), I 41 n. 2.
- Mevjud* (Actualised), I 407.
- Mevlnd*, title, I 145 n. 1.
- Mevlid*, Mevlud (Birthsong), I 232 n. 4, 233.
- Mevlid-Kh'an*, I 238.
- Mevlud Jem'iyeti* (Birth-song Meeting), I 237.
- Mcvludji*, I 238.
- Metudlid-i Seldse* (the Three-fold Offspring), I 48.
- Mi'ir*, double meaning of, II 204 n. 1; III 97 n. 5.
- Mihrd* (prayer-niche), I 224 n. 1; II 35 n. 2, 210 n. 1, 249 n. 4, 252 n. 4, 283 n. 2; III 94 n. 1, 115 n. 2.
- Mil* (needle), II 274 n. 1.
- Millet* (the Nation), V 19.
- Milli romdn* (national novel), V 14.
- Minder* (cushion), III 189 n. 2.
- Mintan*, IV 131 n. 5.
- Mir-i Mejhs* (Master of the Feast), II 333 n. 2.
- Mi'raj* (Ascension of the Prophet), I 77 236, 366 n. 2; IV 19. See Muhammed, the Ascension of.
- Misrd'*, misra' (Hemistich), I 79.
- Misrd'-i ' Azdde* (Independent Hemistich) I 79.
- Mistar*, an instrument for ruling paper, II 241 n. 6, 342 n. 6.
- Miydn* (Middle), musical term, I 97.
- Miydn-Khdne* (Middle-House), I 97.
- Mu'ad*, I 116.
- Mu'amma* (Enigma), I 100.
- Mu'arrif* (mosque-chorister), II 368.
- Mu'ashsher* (Tensome), 194; IV 122.
- Mubalagha* (Hyperbole), I 112.
- Muderris* (Principal), II 30, 395 sqq.; III 219.
- Muderris* (Principal), classes of, II 398 seq.
- Mu'esses* rhyme, I 75 n. 1.
- Mufred* (Unit), I 79.
- Mufti*, II 353 n. 2.
- Mufti*, official dress of the, III 295 n. 2.
- Mufti-us-Saqalayn* (Mufti of the Two Ponderables), II 354.
- Mughilan* (acacia), IV 263 n. 1.
- Muhaddid-ul-Jihat* (Limiter of Directions), I 43 n. 3. See Primum Mobile.
- Muharref* (Altered), I 118.
- Muharrem*, the first month of the Muhammdan year, II 387 n. 1.
- Muhmel* (Unmarked), I 98.
- Muhtdj* (Dependent), I 42.
- Muhtesib* (censor of public morals), II 77 n. 2; III 59 n. 2.
- Mu'id* (Repetiteur), II 397.
- Mujtes* metre, I 109.

- Mukhammes* (Fivesome), I ! 92; III 97.
- Muldzim* (Bachelor) II 287, 397-
- Mulemmof* (Pied), I 124, 149, 230, III 171 n. 2.
- Mulk* (Kingdom), I 56 n. 2.
- Mulk* (Possession), 141 n. 2.
- Mum stigundiren*, I 358 n. 1.
- Mumkin-ul- Vujud* (Possible or Contingent), I 41.
- Mumsconduren*, I 358 n. 1.
- Mumteni'-ul- Vujud* (Impossible) I 41.
- Mundjdt* (Hymn addressed to God), I 101.
- Mundzara* (Contention), III 21, 137 n. 1, 363.
- Munajjim Bashi* (Chief Astrologer), II 399 n. 2 ; IV 37.
- Muqattcf*, rhetorical figure, I 121.
- Murdqaba* (spiritual communion), I 180 n. 2, 425 n. 2.
- Murassa^c* (Bejewelled), 1123.
- Murebbcf* (Foursome) verse, I 72, 91—94; II 231; IV 235-
- Murebba'-i Mutekerrir* (Repeating Foursome), I 91.
- Murebba^c-i Muzdevij* (Pairing Foursome), I 92.
- Murgh'isheb-khiz*, the nightingale, III 29 n. 2.
- Murid* (Wilier), a name of God, I 409 n. I.
- Musalld* (Oratory), I 383 n. I.
- Musammāt*. See Musemmat.
- Musarra^c* (Rhymed), I 79, 367.
- Musebba^c* (Sevensome), I 94.
- Museddes* (Sixsome), I 93.
- Musejjaf* verse, I 72 n. 1.
- Musellesdt* (Triplicities), I 328 n. 3.
- Musemmat* verse, I 72,-97; III 264.
- Musemmen* (Eightsome), 194.
- Mushdkele*, I 120.
- Mushir* (marshal), III 18 n. 2.
- Muskir*, the grade of, V 105 n. 3.
- Musile-i Sahn* (Avenue to the Sahn), II 396, 399.
- Musile-i Suleymdhiyye* (Avenue to the Suleymaniyye), II 399.
- Musmuly* a corruption of bistnil, I 174 n. 2.
- Mustef'ilun*, in Arabic Pro-sody, V 50 n. 1.
- Mustezad* (Complemented), I 87; IV 333 n. 1, 348.
- Mutaqdrib* metre, I 105, 109, 226 n. I; II 144.
- Mutaqqarrin* (Adjacent), I 122.
- Mutasarrif* (governor), V 70.
- Mutasarrifa* (the faculty of arranging), IV 172 n. 3.
- Mutekellimin* (Scholastics), I 33, 67 n. 1, 407 n. 3.
- Mutekerrir* (Repeating), I 92—94; II 231 n. I.
- Mutelevvin* (Polychromatic), I 124.

- Mutesscf* (Ninesome), I 94. II 101; III 319; IV 19, 216,
Mutevelli (administrator), 338; V 49 n. 2.
- II 46. Nazira (Parallel), I 99, 228.
Muveshshah (Acrostic), I Nazm, I Sy.
 124. Nebidi, nebiz, III 89 n. 2.
Muwassaly rhetorical figure, Nefs (lust), I 198 n. 1.
 I 121. Nefs (the Psychic), I 42.
Muzari^c metre, I 109. Nefs (self) contrasted with Muzdevij (Pairing), 192—94; ^c*Aql* (reason), II 296 n. 2, 389
 IV 235. n. I.
Nefs-i Emmare (the Com-
Nahs-i Asghar (the Lesser manding Flesh), I 198 n. 1;
 Infortune), II 125 n. I. IV 277 n. 3.
Nahs-i Ekber (the Greater Nefs-iEvvel (the First Soul), Infortune), II 125 n. I. I 42.
Na'ib (Deputy-judge), II 397. Nefs-i Hayzvdniyye (the Soul Naqardt (Chorus), I 97. Sensible), I 48, 198 n. I.
Naqd-i Rewan, double mea- Nefs-i Kull, (the Univerning of, IV 126 n. 3. sal Soul), I 42.
Naqib-td-Eshrsf (Dean of Nefs-i Levwdme (the Up-the Sherifs), II 399 n. 2; IV braiding Flesh), I 198 n. I.
 351; V 107 n. I. Nefs-i Mutma'inne (the Pa-Naqis (Defective), I 118. cified Flesh), I 198 n. I.
Naqisat-ul-^cAql (Deficient Nefs-i Ndtiqa (the Soul Rea-in Reason), term applied to sonable), I 48. women, II 130 n. I. Nefs-i Nebdtiyye (the Soul Naqqash (miniaturist, etc.) Vegetable), I 48, 198 n. 1.
 II 98 n. I. Nehdvend(name of a melody)
Naqsh ber ab (a picture upon IV 49 n. 3.
 water), II 242 n. 5. Nehr-ul-^cAsi (the Rebel Nar (fire), symbolical mea- Stream), IV 147 n. 2.
 ning of, I 171 n. 2. Nejdshi, title, III 139 n. 1.
Ndrgil, IV 65 n. 3. Nesib (Exordium), I 84.
Nasb (Fixture), I 187 n. 2. Nesim (Zephyr), I 370 n. 3.
Nasib (portion), II 108 n. I. Neskh, a kind of handwri-
Nasib, meaning of in the ting, I 420; IV 78 n. 2.
 Qastamuni dialect, II 108 n. 1. Nevbet (performance by a Na't (Hymn to the Prophet), military band), II 248 n. 4.

- Nev-riiz* (New-Year's Day), III 160 n. 1, 360. See New Year, Festival of the.
- Nev-riiz*, name of a musical air, III 347 n. 1.
- Netvd*, name of a melody, IV 49 n. 3.
- Ney* (reed-flute), IV 176 n. 1. See Flute, the.
- Neyyiran* (the Two Luminaries), II 91 n. 4.
- Nigdr* (picture), term applied to a beauty, II 209 n. 1.
- Nihuft* (Hidden), name of a musical note, II 207 n. 1.
- Nim-fatha*, III 213 n. 1.
- Nim-ten*, IV 131 n. 5.
- Nisdr* (stewage), II 62 n. 5; IV 22 n. 2.
- Nishd?i* (engagement-present), IV 292 n. 6.
- Nishdn-i Iftikhdr* (Order of Glory), IV 336.
- Nishd?iji* (Chancellor), I 428 n. 3; II 25, 264, 366; III 147 n. 5.
- Nun*, the letter, III 168 n. 7.
- Nuql* (appetizers), II 345, n. 5. See Appetizers.
- Nur* (light), symbolical meaning of, I 171 n. 2.
- Niir-i Ahmed* (Light of Ahmed), I 34 n. 1. See Muhammed, Light of.
- Nur-i Muhammed* (Light of Muhammed), I 34. See Muhammed, Light of.
- Nur-i Siyah*, (Black Light) I 66 n. 1.
- Oghlu* (son), used as a patronymic, III 12 n. 2.
- Ojaq oghli*, III 211, 218.
- 'Osmdni*, name of a coin, I 262 n. 2.
- 'Osmamyye* order, the, V 109 n. 8.
- 'Osmanli* (Ottoman), I 10 seq.
- Pacha*, double meaning of, IV 291 n. 1.
- Pachalarini sighamag*, colloquial phrase, V 73 n. 5.
- Pdk-ddmen* (clean-skirted), II 101 n. 5.
- Pdlude*, II 335 n. 3 and 4.
- Parmaq-Hisdbi* (Finger-Counting), I 104; IV 280. See Finger-counting.
- Penche tutmaq* (to lock fingers), II 342 n. 5.
- Perchem*, III 55 n. 5, 177 n. 3.
- Perde*, double meaning of, I 425 n. 5; II 207 n. 2; III 93 n. 1.
- Perde-ddr* (Chamberlain), III 239 n. 1.
- Pide*, a kind of cake, II 37 n. 2.
- Pir* (Spiritual Director) I 179 n. 1; III 211 n. 1, 232 n. 4.
- Piydz* (hashed onions), figurative use of, IV 169 n. 3.
- Portuqal*, double meaning of, IV 265 n. 6.

TECHNICAL TERMS AND ORIENTAL WORDS.

- Qaddyif*, II 335 n. 6. Qara yel (the black wind), II 120 n. 5.
- Qddi-^cAsfer*, See Qazi-'Asker. Qasida (Purpose-Poem), I 83
- Qadin* (Lady), II 123 n. I. sqq., 101, 102, 144.
- Qddir* (Able), a name of God, I 409 n. 1. Qasida-i Behariyya (Spring Qasida), I 101.
- Qafes* (Cage), name of a head-dress, IV 262 n. 4. Qasida-i Dariyya (Mansion-al Purpose-Poem), III 177 n. 9.
- Qdftan* a kind of robe, IV 131 n. 4. Qasida-i Rdfiyya (R Qasida), I 101.
- Qalavi*, a kind of head-dress, III 295 n. 2. Qasri (Compulsory), I 44.
- Qalb* (Anagram), I 119. Qavs-i Nuzul (the Arc of Descent), I 52.
- Qalb-i Mustevi* (Palindrome), I 119. Qavs-i ^cUruj (the Arc of Ascent), I 52.
- Qalem* (Reed-pen), III 272 n. 3. See Reed-pen. Qawas, qazvas, V 43 n. 2.
- Qalem-ddn* (Pen-and-ink case), III 308 n. 4. Qaysar (Caesar), I 259 n. 7; III 139 n. I.
- Qalender*, I 357 n. 1, 385 n. 1 and 3. Qaysar-i Rum (Caesar of Rome), I 149 n. 1.
- Qalldb* (hook, perch), IV 116 n. 3. Qazi-^cAsker (Army-Judge), II 24 n. 3, 394 seq., 398 seq.
- Qalyonji Odasi* (Barracks of the men-of-war's men), IV 301 n. 3. Qdzi-ul-Hajat, a title of God, I 365 n. 6.
- Qalyonjis* (galleon-men), the, IV 301 n. 3. Qibla, I 361 n. 4; II 59 n. 2.
- Qan bichaq olmaq*, idiomatic phrase, II 321 n. 4. Qibla-ndme, V 92 n. 5.
- Qand'at tashi* (Stone of contentment), III 56 n. 1. Qibla-nuiud, V 92 n. 5.
- Qdnun* (Code of Laws), III 8. Qich levendi, IV 114 n. 2.
- Qara* (Black), used as a sobriquet, II 138 n. I. Qilij-Timari (Sword-Fief), III 216 n. 1.
- Qara Bataq* (Cormorant), name of a melody, III 346 n. 5. Qina, the Turkish pronunciation of hinna (henna), III 98 n. 1.
- Qara-qulluqi* (Black Watchman), title, III 185 n. 5. Qifa (Section), I 87.
- Qiydm* (standing up), III 150 n. 4.
- Qiz naqshi* (maidenly), II 131-

- Qiz yashmaghi* (girl's veil), I IV 289 n. 3.
- Qizil Bash* (Red Head), II 259 n. 2; III 44 n. 4.
- Qontosh*, a kind of robe, IV 133 n. 7.
- Qoqu ne*, (Turkish phrase), I IV 241 n. 2.
- Qubbe-i Khazrd* (the Green Dome), I 151 n. 3.
- Qudum* (kettle-drum), IV 176 n. 1.
- Qudum-zen* (kettle-drum player), IV 176.
- Qutndriy* the best variety of aloes-wood, III 32 n. 4.
- Qurb-i Fera'iz*, mystical term, I 348 n. 2.
- Qurbdn Bayrdmi* (Festival of the Sacrifices), I 361 n. 1.
- Qurna* (basin), III 56 n. 3.
- Qurret-id-^cAyn* (Coolness of the Eye), a term of endearment, I 247 n. 1.
- Qurret-id-^cAyn*, used figuratively; III 177 n. 5.
- Qush dili* (Bird's language), II 385 n. 1; IV 239 n. 2.
- Quvvet-i 'Alime* (the Virtue Speculative), I 51.
- Quvvet-i °Amile* (the Virtue Practical), I 51.
- Quvvet-i Dafi'a* (the Virtue Expulsive), I 49.
- Quvvet-i Ghdziya* (the Virtue Nutritive), I 49.
- Quvvet-i Ghazabiyya* (the Virtue Irascible), I 49.
- Quvvet-i Hafiza* (the Virtue Memorative), I 50.
- Quvvet-i Hazime* (the Virtue Digestive), I 49.
- Quvvet-i Jazibe* (the Virtue Attractive), I 49.
- Quvvet-i Masike* (the Virtue Retentive), I 49.
- Quvvet-i Mudrike* (the Virtue Apprehensive), I 49.
- Quvvet-i Muharrike* (the Virtue Motive), I 49.
- Quvvet-i Musavvira* (the Virtue Informative), I 49.
- Quvvet-i Mutasarrifa* (the Virtue Ordinative), I 50.
- Quvvet-i Muvellide* (the Virtue Generative), I 49.
- Quvvet-i Namiye* (the Virtue Augmentative), I 49.
- Quvvet-i Shehviyye* (the Virtue Concupiscible), I 49.
- Quvvet-i Wdhime* (the Virtue Estimative), I 50.
- Quzum* (my lamb), a form of familiar address, I 150 n. 3.
- Raqi*, III 89 n. 2.
- Raqiby* double meaning of, I 364 n. 3. See Rival.
- Raqtd*, rhetorical figure, I 121.
- Rdst* (True), name of a musical note, I 222 n. 5.
- Rastiq*, a kind of ointment, IV 101 n. 3.
- Rebdb* (Rebeck), I 152; II 116 n. 1.

Rebf, the First, name of a month, I 237 n. 1.

Redd-ul-^cAjzi ^c*ale-s-Sadr* (Epanadiplosis), I 116.

Redd-i Matlc^f (Return of the Matla^c), I 80; III 272 n. 1.

Redif, metrical term, I 73, 75, 99; V 49 n. 3.

Ref^f (Elevation), I 187 n. 2.

Refref, the, IV 23 n. 6.

Riis Efendiy title, III 216 n. 4, 304 n. 1; IV 324 seq.

Rfis-ul-Kuttdb (Master of the Scribes), III 216 n. 4; IV 222 n. 1.

Rejeb, name of a month, IV 298 n. 2.

Rejez, name of a metre, I 108; II 101.

Remely name of a metre, I 105, 108, 109, 185, 211 n. 2, 309, 431 n. I; II 191 n. I.

Remel-i Museddes, name of a metre, I 185 n. I.

Revi (Rhyme-letter), I 75 n. 1.

Revzen (window), II 60 n. 6.

Roman (Novel), V 13. See Novel.

RubdH (Quatrain), the, I 88 sqq., 102, no.

Rubai-i Musarra' (Rhymed Quatrain), I 88 n. 2.

Rub^ci Meskiin (the Habitable Quarter), I 47 n. 1; III 9 n. 1. See Habitable Quarter, the.

Ruh-i Haywani (the Spirit Vital), II 313 n. 4.

Ruh-i Nefsani (the Spirit Animal), II 313 n. 4.

Ruh-i Tabfi (the Spirit Natural), II 313 n. 4.

Rujif (Epanorthosis), I 112; III 293.

Rukh (rook, in chess), III 249 n. 1. See Chess.

Rukh-be-ruk^h, double meaning of, III 249 n. I.

Rumi = Grecian, II 361 n. 6.

Rumi (Roman), I 149 n. I.

Rtfus, name of a diploma, II 398.

Ru-yi Nigdr (Beauty's face), of a kind of grape, V 36 n. 1.

Ruzgdr, double meaning of, I 114.

Ruzndm che-i Humayun, name of an official register, II 397.

Sabdy name of a musical air, III 347 n. 1.

Sachi, IV 22 n. 2.

Sa^cd-i Asghar (the Lesser Fortune), an astrological term, II 125 n. 1.

Sa^cd'i Ekber (the Greater Fortune), an astrological term, II 125 n. 1.

Safdy used amphibologically, II 87 n. 3.

Saff-i Ni^cal, (Shoe-rank), III 139 n. 3; V 107 n. 2.

- Safin* (the Court), II 396 sqq.
- Safin* (Court), class of Mu-derris, II 398.
- Sahn-i Maderrisi* (Court Principal), II 23 n. 2.
- Sahn-i Medaris-i Semdmye* (the Court of the Eight Colleges), II 23 n. 2.
- Sahn-i Semdn* (the Court of the Eight), II 396 sqq., 399 seq.; III 41. See Eight, Court of the.
- Salazvdt getirmek*, I 242 11.4.
- Sa^cfeb*, IV 25 n. 5.
- Salep*, name of a drink, IV 25 n. 5.
- Sat ma*, a sort of stew, II 335 n. 1.
- Samsunjilar* (Mastiff-keepers), II 268 n. 2.
- Satfat* (Rhetorical Figure), I 112.
- Sanem* (Idol), name for "a beauty, II 209 n. 1. See Idol.
- Sanjaq* (Department of a province), II 47 n. 3; III 60.
- Sanjaq Bcqi* (the Sanjaq Bey), II 47 n. 3.
- Saqanqur* (Skink), the, II 331 n. 5.
- Saqi* (Cup-bearer), the, II 327 n. 1. See Cup-bearer.
- Sdqi* (Cup-bearer), the, invoked by Turkish poets, III 127. See Cup-bearer.
- Sdqi-Ndme* (the Book of the Cup-bearer), a name given to certain poems, I 101 ; II 325 ; III 166.
- Saqi-Names*, Turkish, III 225 seq., 248.
- Saqiz* (mastic), IV 113 n. 4, 114 n. 1. See Mastic.
- Saqqd* (water-carrier), the, III 16 n. 5.
- Sebil* (charity), IV 112 n. 6.
- Sebil* (fountain), IV 112 n. 1.
- Seb^c-ul-Mesdni* (the Seven of the Repetition), I 339 n. 1.
- Sedir*, a piece of furniture, III 189 n. 2. *Sehl-i Mumteni (Unapproachable Simplicity), I 240 n. 2.
- Senuf* (Mystic Dance), III 219, 292; IV 176 n. 1, 203, 204 n. 1. See Dervishes, dancing.
- Semdniye Muderrisi* (Eight Principal), II 23 n. 2.
- Semt* (parish), IV 213 n. 1.
- Segbdn-Bashi* (Chief Hound-Keeper), II 268 n. 2.
- Segbdnlar* (Hound-keepers), II 268 n. 2.
- Senbuse* (Lady's kiss), name of a sweet, II 345 n. 7.
- Serdy* (Seraglio), III 147 n. 2.
- Ser-halqa* (ring-centre), used figuratively, II 341 n. 3.
- Serf*, name of a metre, I 109.
- Seva* (Melancholia), II 6$ n. 2, 206 n. 2.
- Sewad-i A'zam* (the Most

- Great Blackness), mystical term, I 377 n. 1. See Dazzling Darkness and Light, the blackest. Seyyid, title, I 343 ; II 390.
Sha^cban, the month of, IV
298 n. 2.
Shah, title, 433 n. 2.
Shah-Beyt (Couplet-Royal),
I 81. See Shek-Beyt.
Shahna-l Mejlis (Master of the Feast), II 333 n. 2.
Shah-smvdr (Cavalier), IV
114 n. 2.
Shalwar (trousers), IV 131
n. 3.
Shalwarli shindver, IV 131
n. 3.
Shami (Syrian), meaning
'dark', III 150 n. 2.
Sliaqq (Cleavage), a mode of execution, II 279 n. 7.
Sharqi (Oriental) V 7.
Sharqi, the, a verse-form,
I 96, 103; III 319 seq., 322;
IV 8, 44 sqq., 211, 280 seq.
Shdyagdn hoard, the, IV
262 n. 1.
Sheb-chirdgh (Night-Lamp),
a fabulous gem, I 291 n. I;
IV 145 n. 1.
Shefaq (After-glow), II 89
n. 1.
Sheftdlu (peach), term for a kiss, II 371 n. I; III 58
n. 3, 156 n. 2 ; IV 149 n. 1.
See Kiss and Peach.
Sheh-Beyt (Couplet-Royal),
I 81; III 174 n. 4. Sec *Shah-
Beyt*.
Shehid(Martyr), III 155 n. 3.
Shehirli, II 227 n. 2.
Shehndma, books entitled,
III 4.
Shehndmaji, the office of,
III 4.
Shehndz (Coquetry), name of a musical note, I 222 n. 5.
Shehr oghlani (City lad),
II 227 n. 2.
Shehr-engiz (City-Thriller),
the, II 232; III 55; IV 15,
121, 228.
Sheker-kulahi (Sugar-cap),
I 238.
Shekker Bayrami (the Feast of Sweetmeats), IV 62 n. 4.
Sliemse (Solar disc), II 60
n. 5.
Shemse-i zer-kar (gilt sun),
II 341 n. I.
Shemsi dulbend, name of a head-dress, II 242 n. 7.
شربتلىك, a word used by tailors, IV 132 n. 2.
Sherf(Exaltation), an astrological term, I 328 n. 3.
SJieref (Honour), used as a proper name, IV 157 n. 2.
Sherif (descendant of the Prophet), IV 351.
Shewwdl, the month of, IV
62 n. 4, 68 n. 1.
Sheykh-ul-Harem (the Elder of the Sanctuary), title, III
265 n. 3.

- Sheykh-id-Islam*, title, II 395.
- Shibh-i Ishtiqaq* (Quasi-Pa-ronymy), I 120.
- Shfa*, a, I 120 n. 2.
- Shirdb size bdqiyor*, idiomatic phrase, IV 40 n. 2.
- Shirden*, name of a dish, II 334 n. 8.
- Shishe-Khdne* (Mirror-chamber), III 342 n. 1.
- Sku'ba* (Branch), III 126.
- Shu'le-i Jevwdle* (Whirling Spark), I 67 n. 2.
- سیکلمش*, IV 128 n. 6.
- Si murgh* (thirty birds), II 280 n. 5.
- Sidret'id-Muntehd* (the Lote-Tree of the Limit), IV 23 n. 3. See Lote-Tree, the celestial.
- Sifdt* (Attributes of God), I 61 n. 2.
- Sih-r-i haldl* (Licit magic), III 175 n. I.
- Sipahis*, the, III 216 n. 3.
- Sipend* (rue), used as a charm, IV 64 n. 4.
- Siyah-dil* (black-hearted), II 250 n. 3.
- Soqqaq supergisi*, name for a prostitute, IV 289 n. 2.
- Su malikesiy* V 40 n. 1.
- Su qizi*, V 40 n. 1.
- Su-Bashi* (Police Magistrate), III 217 n. I.
- Subh-i sadiq* (the true dawn), III 151 n. 3.
- Subhdncflldh* (I recite the praise of God), II 244 n. 2.
- Subut* (Potentiality), I 407.
- Suhey* (Canopus), virtues attributed to, II 89 n. 3.
- Sukhan* (the Logos), IV 187.
- Sukun* (Rest), grammatical term, I 187 n. 2.
- Sujud* (prostration in worship), III 150 n. 4.
- Suleymdniyye*, class of Murderers, II 399.
- Suls*, a kind of handwriting, I 420; IV 78 n. 2.
- Sunnet* (the practice of the Prophet), IV 321 n. 2.
- Surdhi* (flagon), II 333 n. I.
- Buret* (Form), I 45.
- Suret-i Jismiyye* (Corporeal Form), I 45.
- Suret-i Nev'iyye* (Specific Form), I 45.
- Surme* (stibium), II 274 n. I; III 66 n. 2, 98 n. 2; IV 70 n. 4.
- Surme-dan*, II 274 n. 1.
- Surre* (purse), II 317 n. 2.
- Suivdri Muqabelejisi* (Col-lator for the Cavalry), III 326.
- Suweyda* (the black core of the heart), IV 64 n. 4.
- Suyu yumshaq* (Soft of temper), IV 240 n. 4.
- Ta Ha*, the Chapter of, I 257 n. 2.
- Ta'ayyun* (Particularisation), I 61.
- Tabaqat* (Strata), I 46 n. 1.
- Tabayi'* (Natures), I 47.

- Tabi'i* (Natural), I 44.
- Taj* (Crown), name of a couplet, I 85; III 150 n. 6.
- Tajik*, I 186 n. 2.
- Takhmis*, name of a verse-form, I 92, 93; II 78 n. 3.
- Talib* (Student), II 396.
- Taliq*, a kind of handwriting, I 394 n. 2; III 220 n. 2; IV 78.
- Ta' miya* (Enigmatizing), 198.
- Taq* (Arch), II 59 n. 1, 60 n. 6, 62 n. 4, 63 n. 4. See Taq-i Kisra.
- Taq-i muqarnes*, a kind of dome, IV 42 n. 2.
- Taqcke*, II 60 n. 6.
- Taqdis*, name of a throne, 11315.
- Taqsim*, double meaning of, III 347 n. 5.
- Tar*, different meanings of, IV 132 n. 4.
- Tard u 'Aks* (Epanodos), I 115.
- Tarikh* (Chronogram), I 87, 98. See Chronogram, Oriental.
- Tarikh-i Tamm* (Perfect Chronogram), I 98.
- Tariq-i Mebde* (the Outward Track), I 52.
- Tariq-i Ma'ad* (the Homeward Track), I 52.
- Tazadd* (Antithesis), I 112.
- Tazmin* (Quotation), I 113; II 49 n. 4.
- Tebligh*, a kind of Hyperbole, I 112 n. 1.
- Tedvir* (Epicycle), I 45 n. 1.
- Tegellemek*, a tailor's term, IV 131 n. 10.
- Tejdul-i 'Arif* (Feigned Ignorance), I 114; II 59 n. 3.
- Tejelli* (Epiphany), I 408 n. I.
- Tejnis* (Homonymy), I 116, 212; II 77 n. 3, 221 n. 5; III 156 n. 5, 183 n. 4.
- Tekye*, I 357.
- Tekfur*, title, II 194 n. 2.
- Tekur*, title, II 194 n. 2.
- Tel qirmaq*, double meaning of, III 347 n. 4.
- Telmf* a rhetorical figure, I 124.
- Telmih* (Allusion), I 112.
- Teng* (closed), meaning Sorrowful³, III 155 n. 5.
- Ter* (wet), II 101 n. 5.
- Terdne*, a name for the Ruba'i I 89.
- Terbi'*, name of a verse-form, I 92, 93.
- Ter-damen* (wet-skirted), II 101 n. 5.
- Terjf-Band*, name of a verse-form, I 90, 91; III 64; V 65, 75, 86 sqq.
- Terjf-Khane*, metrical term, I 90.
- Terkib-Bend*, name of a verse-form, I 91, 94; III 90.
- Terkib-Khane*, metrical term, I 91.
- Tersi'* (Bejewelling), a rhetorical figure, I 123.

Tesdis, name of a verse-form, I 92, 94.

Teshbih (Comparison), I III n. I.

Teshshir, II 36 n. 2.

Te'sis, metrical term, I 75 n. I.

Tetimme (Complement), II 396 n. I.

Tevejjuh, mystical term, I 425 n. 2.

Tevhid (Ken of Unity), I 325.

Tevjihy metrical term, I 75 n. I.

Tevliyet (Administratorship), II 319.

Tevriye (Amphibology), I 113; III 144. See Amphibology and Tham.

Tezkires, Turkish, I 139 seq.

Tezkiret-ush-Shu'ara (Dictionary of the Poets), I 139 n. I.

Timar, a kind of fief, III 216 n. I.

Tiryaq (Theriack), II 112 n. 6.

Tugh (pennant of horse-hair), II 71 n. 3; III 17 n. I, 177 n. 3; IV 129 n. 2, 205 n. 2.

Tughra (the Cipher of the Sovereign), I 428 n. 3; II 25 n. I; III 147 n. 5.

طغوزہ چیشیق, IV 115 n. I.

Turbe (mausoleum), II 47.

Turki (Turkish popular ballad), I 95; III 246, 319 seq.; IV 9 seq.; V 95.

Tumajilar (Crane-keepers) II 268 n. 2.

Tuti (Parrot), a title given to elderly ladies, IV 301 n. 2.

Tuti-i Asrar, a name of hashish, II 340 n. I.

Tutiya (tutty), II 49 n. 4.

Tuyugh, Tuynq, name of a verse-form, I 90, 105, 211 seq.

Tuyughat, I 210 11. 2.

Uchmaq (Paradise), V 30.

Uchqur, IV 132 n. 1, 297 n. 3.

Ulagh (Courier), II 237 n. 2.

'Ulema, the, I 31 n. I; II 21, 24; IV 350; V 20, 93 n. 6.

'Ulema, the Hierarchy of the, II 394 sqq.

'Ulemd, official dress of the, III 295 n. 2.

'Ulemd, well-known phrase used by the, I 346 n. 3.

'Ulum-i Kulliyye (Universal Sciences), I 261 n. 2.

Umm-ul-Kitab (the Mother of the Book), I 339 n. 3. See Mother of the Book.

Ummehdt-i Erbc'ta (the Four Mothers), I 48.

Ummeti (My Folk), III 215 n. 8.

Umitr-i Dakhiliyya Naziri (Minister of the Interior), IV 326 n. 1.

Umiir-i Kharijiyya Naziri (Minister of Foreign Affairs), IV 325.

- Umur-i Milkiyya Naziri* (Minister of Civil Affairs), IV 325 n. 1.
- Unndb* (the fruit of the jujube-tree), II 92 n. 2.
- Urđi-bihisht*, the Old Persian month of, III 265 n. 1.
- Urf*, a kind of turban, III 295 n. 2.
- Ushshdq* (Lovers), a name for the Suffis, I 26 n. 1.
- Ustd*, title, IV 302 n. 8.
- Usitl-i Qalem* (the Bureaucratic style), IV 328 n. 1.
- Vaq'a-Nevis* (Imperial Annalist), IV 67. See Waqia-Nevis.
- Vebdl* (Fall), an astrological term, I 328 n. 3.
- Vehtn* (Fancy), IV 172 n. 3.
- Vesme*, a kind of ointment, IV 101 n. 3.
- Vesmelu* (painted with indigo), III 98 n. 4.
- Vezir* (Minister), III 18 n. 2.
- Vilayet* (province), I 164.
- Vujub* (Necessary Existence), I 42 n. 2.
- Vujitd* (Actuality), I 407, 408 n. 1.
- Vujud* (All-comprising Existence), I 42 n. 2.
- Vujudiyye*, a heretical sect, I 406.
- Wdjib-ul- Vujud* (Necessary), I 41.
- Wait*, the office of, V 109 n. 7.
- Wdqfa-Nevis* (Imperial Annalist), IV 58. See Vaq'a-Nevis.
- Warsaghi*, a kind of ballad, I 166 n. 5.
- Wasita* (Link), name of a couplet, I 90, 91, 94.
- Watan* (Fatherland), V 19.
- Waz*^c (Situation), I 41 n. 2.
- Yd'amic* (O uncle), II 389 n. 2.
- Yd Hit* (Oh He!), IV 204 n. 3.
- Yd Sin*, name of a chapter of the Koran, V 38 n. 1.
- Yagh qapani* (Oil weighing-house), IV 301 n. 4.
- Yashmaq*, a veil worn by Turkish ladies, III 180 n. 1; IV 219 n. 1, 294 n. 2.
- Yazvuz* (Grim), title of Sultan Selim I, II 257 n. 1.
- Yazili elma* (written apples), the, of Aspuzi, III 318 n. 4.
- Yede tashi*, a magic stone, I 120 n. 1.
- Yel-qowan* (wind-chaser), name of a bird, IV 277 n. 1.
- Yehicheri* (Janissary), I 179 n. 1; II 76 n. 1. See Janissaries.
- Yehicheri Aghasi* (General of the Janissaries), II 268 n. 2.
- Yeshil toz* (the green poplar), III 98 n. 4.
- Yetishme, Yetishmesi* (Mayst thou not grow up!) IV 294 n. 3.

- Yildiz chichigi* (Star-flower), I IV 286 n. 3.
- Zabtiyye Mushiri* (Marshal of Police), V 71 n. I.
- Zdde*, used in patronymics, I III 12 n. 2.
- Zadehu 'llah* (God give him increase 1), II 312 n. 3.
- Zagh*, name of a vitriolic substance, IV 101 n. 3.
- Zagharjilar* (Bloodhound-keepers), II 268 n. 2.
- Zahid* (Zealot), III 67 n. 3.
- Zamime* (Addition), I 92.
- Zamir-dan* (Thought-reader), II 369 n. 3.
- Zaqqum*, name of a tree in hell, II 369 n. 5.
- Zat-i 'Imad* (Many-columned), epithet of Irem, II 59 n. 6.
- Zdt-ul-Matati'* a kind of Qasida, I 85 n. I.
- Zeban-i Hal* (Mute eloquence), II 216 n. 2.
- Zemin-i Khaver* (Land of the West), III no.
- Zen-buse* (Lady's kiss), name of a sweet, II 345 n. 7.
- Zenji* (Negro), a type of blackness, II 214 n. 2.
- Zerde*, name of a dish, II 334 n. 10.
- Zerrin-kuldh* (golden-cap), a name for the narcissus, II 278 n. 3.
- Zevq* (Taste), a mystical term, I 326 n. 2.
- Zevraq-i Sahbd* (the Wine-skiff), IV 106 n. 2.
- Zi^cdmet*, a kind of fief, III 216 n. I.
- Zihaf*, a fault in prosody, III 14 n. 2, 53, 256.
- Zi-l-Hijja*, the month of, III 41 n. 4.
- Zmjir-i ^caddlet* (the Chain of justice), II 63 n. 4.
- Zinjir-i Nushirewan* (the Chain of Nushfrewan), II 63 n. 4.
- Zird^zati* (husbandman), I 358 n. 1.
- Ziydde* (Complement), I 87.
- Zn ^ol-Faqdr*, the sword of the Caliph ^cAli, III 289 n. 3.
- Zu 'l-Hayat* (Living), III 289 n. 3.
- Zu-l-Qdjiyeteyn* (Double-Rhyme), I 122.
- Zii-l-Qawdfi* (Polyrhyme), I 123.
- Zunndr* (Zone), an emblem of infidelity, II 44 n. 4. See Zone; Girdle; Cord, the Paynim.

INDEX IV.

- 'Abbas, enigma on, I 100 n. 1.
- 'Abbasid Caliphs, black standards of the, II 213 n. 1.
- 'Abdullah, used in naming slaves, II 93 n. 2.
- Ablution, the canonical, II 218 n. 6.
- Absorption in the Deity, I 59, 63.
- . Acrostic, the, I 124.
- Adam, worshipped by the angels, IV 211 n. 1.
- Admiral, the Grand, official dress of, I I I 295 n. 2.
- Admiral, the Lord High, IV 47.
- Adrianople, Treaty of, IV 306.
- Aetiology, II 220 n. 4, 273 n. 5, 281 n. 5. See Husn-i Ta'lil.
- Ages of Man, the Seven, I 184.
- Ahmed, the Light of, I I I 196 n. 3.
- 'Ajemi Oghlans, Corps of, I I I 118.
- Alexander's Dyke, IV 103 n. 3.
- Alexander, the Mirror of, I 284; I I 339 n. 2.
- ' Alien', the, I 360 n. 7.
- Allah (God), I 181 n. 1, 379 n. 2, 409 n. 2.
- Allah, definition of, I 409 n. 2.
- Almond, the, type of a beautiful eye, II 371 n. 2.
- Alms, the public, II 89 n. 7.
- Aloes-wood, the best variety of, I I I 32 n. 4.
- Aloes-wood, perfume of, I 215 n. 1.
- Alphabet, the Ottoman, I 98 n. 1.
- Ambergris, the type of darkness, I I I 32 n. 2.
- Amphibology, II 87 n. 3, 108 n. 1, 114 n. 9, 127 n. 4, 137 n. 1, 204 n. 1, 207 n. 2. See Word-plays, 'Ikdm, and Tevriye.
- Anagram. See Qalb.
- Angels, the, I 38. See Me-lekut.
- Angels, the, called Heavenly Birds, IV 204 n. 1.
- Angels, Recording, II 213 n. 7.

- Angora, Battle of, 250, 255, 428, 429.
- Anthologies, Turkish, III 203.
- Antistrophe, I 115.
- Appetizers, things eaten as, II 92 n. 1, 345 n. 5.
- Apples, the written, of Aspuzi, III 318 n. 4.
- Aquila, constellation, IV 53 n. 2; V no n. 3.
- Arc of Ascent, the. See Qavs-i 'Uruj.
- Arc of Descent, the. See Qavs-i Nuziil.
- Arithmetic, I 40.
- Artificial School of Turkish poets, the, III 245 sqq., 259, 278, 329.
- ^cAshiq Chelebi, account of, III 162 n. 4.
- Asper, value of the, II 26 n. 1.
- Ass, considered undignified to ride an, IV 277 n. 5.
- Astrology, Muhammedan, I 328 n. 3; II 69 n. 3, 125 n. 1.
- Astronomy, I 40, 41. See Q'ilm-i Hey'et.
- Astronomy, the new, IV 356 n. 3.
- Athletes, Oriental, II 72 n. 4.
- Atomistic Theory, the, I 67 n. 1.
- Attributes of Awfulness, I 66 n. 2, 171 n. 2. See Jeldl.
- Attributes of Beauty, I 66 n. 2, 171 n. 2. See jemal
- Attributes, the Divine, I 66, 407 n. 3, 408 n. 3 and 4, 409 n. 1.
- Autumn, the, compared to Zelikha, III 31 n. 1.
- Autumn, personified as a rich householder, III 149 n. 3.
- 'Azerbaijani dialect of Turkish, III 75.
- Azerbaijanf poems, collection of, III 106 n. 2.
- 'Azerbaijani Turkish poets, III 106.
- Badakhshan, rubies of, II 255 n. 4, 340 n. 2; IV 216 n. 1. See Rubies of Badakhshan.
- Balance, the allegorical, I 174 n. 4.
- Ball, the Golden, in the dome of St Sophia, II 142 n. 1.
- Ban, military title, II 91 n. 6; III 154 n. 7.
- Band, the military, IV 205 n. 4-
- Banquet, the Primal, I 23; IV 313 n. 2. See E-lest, the Feast of.
- Barber-Books, III 248.
- ^cBare-headed³, equivalent to ^chalf-drunk^D, II in n. 4.
- Bath, the Eastern, II 255 n. 6.
- Baths, public, in Turkey, IV 127 sqq., 303 n. 3.
- Bath-room, windows of the, IV 128 n. 10.

Bayezfd I, date of his accession, I 225 n. 1.

Bayram Festival, I 84; III 109 n. 2, 287 n. 1, 310 n. 4; IV 167 n. 4, 299 n. 5.

Beads, what Moslems say when they tell their, II 244 n. 2:

Beaker, the, conceived as a magician, II 341 n. 8.

Bear, the Great, III 17 n. 2.
'Bear in one's hand' = 'make much of, II 340 n. 7.

Beard, shaving of the, V 2$ n. I.

Beard, wearing of the, IV 321 n. 2.

Beauty, Absolute, I 16 seq., 59 seq.

Beauty, the Celestial, III 64 n. 2, 65 n. I and 3, 66 n. 2.

Beauty, the diwan of = a fair face, IV 316 n. 3.

Beauty, the walk of a, compared to that of a partridge, IV 217 n. 4.

Bed, nine mattresses of the, compared to the nine Ptolemaic spheres, III 58 n. 2.

Beds, Eastern, III 58 n. 1.

Beggars, compared to bathers, III 56 n. 4.

Beggars, phrase used in refusing alms to, II Zy n. 6.

Begging-bowl, the, IV 173 n. 2.

Being, Absolute or Necessary, I 15 sqq., 41, 42 n. 2.

Being, Contingent or Possible, I 18, 41, 42 n. 2.

Bells, horns, or gongs, sounded to warn travellers that the caravan is about to start, III 11 n. 3.

Beloved, the, addressed as a physician, III 168 n. 2.

Beloved, the, compared to a falcon, III 281 n. 5.

Beloved, the, compared to an idol, I 218 n. 1.

Beloved, the, compared to a lamp, III 308 n. 6.

Beloved, the, compared to a sapling, IV 46 n. 2.

Beloved, the, compared to a Turk, I 214 n. 6.

Beloved, the, first described as golden-haired by Nedfm, IV 46 n. 1.

Beloved, the, generally described as black-haired, IV 46 n. 1.

Beloved, the, in mysticism, I 21 seq.

Beloved, the, a personification of the Ideal, II 316 n. 5.

Beloved, the dog of the, II 247 n. 4, 362 n. 9.

Beloved of God, the, title of Muhammed, II 217 n. 5.

Beyram, Festival of. See Bayram.

Bibliomancy, II 49, 198 n. 1.

Bird language, IV 239 n. 2.

Biting upon the finger, an

- expression of bewilderment, I I 33* n. 1.
- Black Stone, the, I 38.
- Blackness, the Most Great. See SewAd-i A'zam,
- Blackness of face, typifying 1 disgrace, IV 72 n. 6.
- Blood, to take blood upon one's neck, IV 262 n. 5.
- Blue and green, regarded as shades of one colour, I 151 n. 3 j II 112 n. 7; III 31 n. I 6, 98 n. 4.
- Body, the, compared to a cage, I 190 n. 4.
- Body, definition of, I 45 n. 3.
- Books, the four, I 375 n. 2.
- Books, want of reverence for, II 355 n. 2.
- Bosom, the, compared to a sepulchre, IV 171 n. 2.
- Bowl, the Elder of the, IV 205 n. 1.
- Brazil-wood, II 213 n. 2, 254 n. 8.
- Bread and salt rights, II 315 n. 6.
- Breath of God, the, title of Jesus, III 214 n. 3.
- Breath, holding of the, practised by dervishes, III 240 n. 3.
- Breezes playing on water, likened to chains, II 242 n. 4.
- Bride, the Spheral = the sky, II 60 n. 6.
- Brides, the faces of, ornamented with gilt spangles, III 31 n. 3.
- Bridge, the, of Hell, I 174 n. 2. See Sirat.
- Bridle-fere, IV 49 n. 1.
- Brocade, Venetian, II 255 n. 2.
- Bud, a, compared to a goblet, IV 334 n. 1.
- Bull, the, in Muhammedan cosmogony, I 39.
- Burning Bush, the miracle of the, IV 104 n. I; V 94 n. 7.
- Buttons, alluding to a lady's breasts, III 97 n. 2.
- Cadi, the office of, II 394 seq., 397 sqq.
- Cadiasker, the office of, II 24 n. 3. See Qazi-'Asker.
- Caiques, the public, IV 44 n. 3.
- Calf, the golden, V 89 n. 1.
- Caliphs, the Orthodox. See Khulefd-yi Rashidin.
- Camels, unruly, II 110 n. 4.
- Camphor, the type of anything white, III 16 n. 7, 32 n. 2.
- Canaan, the Moon of, IV 265 n. 2.
- Canopy surmounting the Sultan's throne, III 309 n. 6.
- Caravan, the, of human individuals, I 193 n. 1.
- Caravanseray, I 193 n. 1.
- Carlowitz, the Peace of, III 33²-
- Carnelians of Yemen, II 89 n. 2 and 3; IV 216 n. 1.

Categories, the Ten, 141 n.
2. See Maqulat-i 'As here.

Cause, the First, I 40 n. I.
See Mebde-i Evvel

Censer, the, used at wine-feasts, II 338 n. 3.

Censor, the, a type of conventionality, I 360 n. I.

Cercis Siliquastrum, III 30 n. 3.

Chaghatay dialect, the, V 79. See Jaghatay.

Chapter of Light, the, II 334-

Cheek, the (mystical term), I 23.

Cheek, the, compared to a rose, III 197 n. 3.

Cheeks, of a beauty, compared to a garden, II 35 n. 6, 298 n. 2.

Cheeks, the lustre of, compared to pomegranate-blossom, III 16 n. 3.

Chess, III 176 n. 2, 249 n. 1.

Child of the grape, the, IV 43 n. 1.

Children, querulous, threat sometimes used towards, IV 169 n. I.

Chin, of a beauty, compared to an apple or orange, II 122 n. 2; IV 25 n. 3.

Chin, the well of the, IV 26 n. I.

China, the land of fragrance, IV 44 n. I.

China, the native land of musk, II 65 n. 6, 112 n. 4.

China, use of, in Turkish poetry, II 313 n. 5.

'Chinese' = artistically beautiful, II 383 n. I.

Chinese Idol, term applied to a beautiful person, III 185 n. 2.

Chosroes (title), III 139 n. 1, 148 n. 6; IV 112 n. 4. See Khusraw; Khusrev; and Kisra.

Christian pictures and images, III 65 n. 3.

Christians, the Eastern, II 197 n. 1.

Chronograms, English, IV 273 n. I,

Chronograms, Oriental, I 87, 98; II 99, 265 n. 1; III 39, 41, 85 seq., 110, 126 n. 2, 235, 295 n. 3, 299; IV 90, 108 seq., 159, 175 n. 2, 179 n. 2, 181 n. 1, 211 n. 3, 224, 233, 246, 256, n. 1, 258, 265 sqq., 275 n. I.

Churchill affair, the, IV 325 seq., 328.

Circassian, the typical, IV 41 n. 4.

Circle of Existence, the, I 52, 53 n. I. See Deveran-i Vujud.

Civilians, arms seldom carried by, IV 322 n. 1.

Climates, the Seven, I 47 n. 1, 289 n. 3; III 9 n. 1.

Clouds, compared to women mourning the dead, II 314 n. 3.

- Coaches, reserved for women, IV 298 n. 1.
- Cock's eye, a term applied to red wine, IV 51 n. I.
- Coinage, the Ottoman, I 262 n. 2.
- Coins, the first Ottoman gold, II 26 n. 2.
- Coins, scattered among the people on festival days, II 113 n. 9.
- College for Muslim Ladies, IV 349-
- Collyrium, II 49 n. 4; IV 66 n. 1.
- Comb, the, use of in poetry, III 157 n. 5, 269 n. I.
- Concubines in Muhammedan countries, III 333 n. I.
- Confession of Faith, the Muslim, II 218 n. 4.
- Conscience, the eye of, III 323 n. I.
- Conqueror, the, surname of Mehemmed II, II 22.
- Constantinople, the capture of, I 406.
- Constantinople, the names of, III 214 n. I.
- Coolness of the eye, a term of endearment. See Qurret-ul-'Ayn.
- Coolness of the eye = tranquillity, III 177 n. 5.
- Copernican System, the, I 43 n. I.
- Cord, the paynim, IV 71 n. I. See Zunnar and Girdle.
- Cord of Unity, the, IV 71 n. I.
- Cosmogony, Muhammedan, I 34 sqq.
- ^cCotton hands³, IV 300 n. I.
- Cotton-wool, put in the mouth of a corpse, II 216 n. 4.
- Couplet. See Beyt.
- Crane-eye, epithet of wine, IV 148 n. 2.
- Crow, the, a bird of illomen, II 214 n. 3. See Gkurab-ul-Beyn.
- Crow, black, typifying night, II 115 n. 3.
- Crucifixion of Jesus, the, Muhammedan belief concerning, I 233 n. 3.
- Crystal, epithet applied to a clear white skin, I 330 n. 6.
- Culture, Eastern and Western, in the Middle Ages, I 444 sqq.
- 'Cup-bearer' = the author's poetic genius, II 338 n. I. See Saqi
- Cup-bearer, the ideal, IV 340 n. 3.
- Curl, of a beauty, compared to a hyacinth, I 296 n. 2.
- Curl, of a beauty, compared to a snake, I 294 n. 7, 330 n. 3; II 36 n. 1.
- Curls, of a beauty, compared to chains, I 330 n. 5.
- Curls, of a beauty, compared to the wards of a key, II 323 n. 2.

- Curtains, Eastern, I 330 n. 7.
 Cypress, the, called 'free', n. I.
 II 208 n. 8.
 Cypress, type of a graceful figure, I 331 n. 7; II 64 n. 4, 101 n. 3, 361 n. 4.
 Cypress, type of a noble man, II 246 n. 6.
- Dagger of the beloved, the, IV 356 n. 2.
 Daggers, worn by Turkish ladies, IV 356 n. 2.
 Damascening of sword-blades, IV 101 n. 3.
 Dancing, Eastern, IV 126 n. 4.
 Dancing-boys, IV 235 seq.
 Dancing-girls, II 113 n. 2.
 Dancing-girls, Greek, IV 289 n. 1.
 Daughter of the Grape, the, IV 113 n. 1. See 'Child of the grape' and dukhter-i rez.
 Daughter of the Vine, the eyes of the, IV 168 n. 3.
 Dawn, the breath of, II 68 n. 6.
 Dawn, the shaft or column of, IV 40 n. 3.
 Dazzling Darkness (Sufi phrase), I 66 n. 1. See Light, the blackest.
 Dead, examination of the, IV 297 n. 2.
 Decarchy, the West-Turkish, I 11, 141, 178 n. I, 249.
 Demons, the, said to have been created from fire, IV 202 n. I.
 Deri, dialect of Persian, IV 258.
 Dervish orders, the, I 25, 146, 149, 151, 179 n. I, 195 n. 3.
 Dervishes, dancing, I 146 n. 3; IV 83, 203. See Sema'.
 Dervishes, phraseology of, III 231 n. 2.
 Dervishes, a practice of, in ecstatic trance, II 382 n. 2.
 Dcwdrops conceived as silver studs, II 277 n. 2.
 Dimple, the, on the chin of a beauty, conceived as a pit, II 126 n. 4, 223 n. 3.
 Directions, the Six, I 425 n. 4; III 46 n. I.
 Dishes, Eastern, glossary of, II 335 n. 7.
 Divan, the, II 24.
 Divination, I 58 n. I, 166 n. 3. See Falji.
 Doctors, Eastern, IV 101 n. 2.
 Dog, a, popularly called fitne, I 257 n. 3.
 Dogs frequenting the beloved's ward, II 315 n. 5.
 Domes, raised over the tombs of saints, III 93 n. 2.
 Donkeys, Turkish proverb concerning, V 37 n. I.
 Down (khatt), double meaning of, II 89 n. 5; IV 104 n. 2. See Khatt.

Down, on the cheek, compared to the nap on satin, IV 133 n. 4.

Down on the face, compared to a turquoise, II 372 n. 3.

Down on the face, compared to writing, II 67 n. 6, 89 n. 5.

Dowry, the, in Muhammadan law, IV 188 n. I.

Drama, the Ottoman, V 14 seq.

Dreams, I 57 n. 1. See 'Ilm-i Ta'bir.'

Drinking-vessels, shaped like the crescent moon, II 338 n. 2.

Drunkenness, (mystical term), I 364 n. 4.

Drunkenness, four degrees of, II 329 n. 1.

Dulcimer, the, compared to a mistar, II 342 n. 6.

Dust on the heart = chagrin, II 243 n. 7.

Eagle, the, trained for the chase, II 115 n. 4.

Ear of the mandoline = peg, III 347 n. 3.

Ears of the lute, the, III 290 n. I.

Ear-shell, the, III 99 n. 2.

Earths, the Seven, I 38, 399.

East-Turkish dialects, I 4 n. I.

Ecstasy, I 59. See Hal

Eggs, red, IV 241 n. 3.

Eglantine, the, usually associated with the idea of whiteness, II 222 n. I.

Egypt, the tribute of, I 262 n. I.

Eight, Court of the, III 172. See Sahn and Sahn-i Seman.

Elder of the Magians, the, III 232 n. 4, 269 n. 4.

Elements, the four, I 46, 48, 187 n. 2.

Elif, the letter, type of a slight and erect figure, II 192 n. I.

Elixir, II 49 n. 2,

Emanation, the doctrine of, I 42, 60.

Empyrean, the, III 55 n. 3, 310 n. 3; IV 100 n. 2, 136 n. 1. See 'Arsk.'

English, used as an epithet in Turkish poetry, IV 113 n. 2.

English, the, reckoned experts in the use of fire-arms, IV 146 n. 3.

English women, description of, IV 241.

Enigmas, I 100. See Lughaz and Mu'amma.

'Epanadiplosis. See Redd-ul-'Ajzi 'ale-s-Sadr.

'Epanastrophe. See I'ade.

'Equivoque, IV 332 n. 2. See Iham; Jinas; Tejnis; and Word-plays.

Eternal youths, I 37. See Gkilman.

Ethics. See 'Ilm-i Akhlaq.'

Eunuch, the chief, official I dress of, III 295 n. 2.

Euphuism, Art of, I III sqq. See 'Ilm-i Bedi'.

Evil, the mystery of, I 18.

Execution, barbarous Persian mode of, II 279 n. 7.

Existence, the Circle of, I 52 seq.

Eye, the arrow of the, I 214 n. 5.

Eye, of a beauty, conceived as restless, I 216 n. I.

Eye, of a beauty, compared to a witch, I 295 n. 4.

Eye, of a beauty, compared to a narcissus, I 296 n. 3.

Eye, of a beauty, described as drunken³ or Sleeping³, II 301 n. 2.

Eye, of the beloved, compared to Mars, II 373 n. 3.

Eye of Certainty, the, I 328 n. 1, 425 n. 4. See 'Ayn-i Yaqin'.

Eye, the, compared to a mirror, II 273 n. 5.

Eye, coolness of the = tranquillity, III 177 n. 5.

Eye, the evil, II 274 n. 6; III 168 n. 3; IV 64 n. 4, 295 n. 4.

Eye, the house of the, II 359 n. 4.

Eye of understanding, the, I 160 n. 5.

Eyebrow, the, compared to a bow, I 214 n. 5; II 64 n. 3; III 98 n. 3 and 4.

Eyebrow, the, compared to a crescent moon, III 308 n. 2.

Eyebrow, the, compared to a prayer-niche (mihrad), I 361 n. 3 and 4.

Eyebrow, the, compared to a scimitar, III 324 n. 4.

Eyebrows, compared to bridges, II 360 n. 7.

Eyebrows, compared to a pavilion, II 373 n. 4.

Eyebrows, compared to tents, II 67 n. 2.

Eyelashes, compared to arrows, II 279 n. I.

Eyelashes, compared to ranks of spearmen, II 361 n. I.

Eyes, of a beauty, compared to Turks, I 214 n. 6.

Eyes, the light of the, a term of endearment, III 177 n. 4.

Fables, composed by Shinasf, V 33 seq.

Face, of a beauty, compared to a lovely day, II 69 n. I.

Face, of a beauty, compared to a moon, II 69 n. 3; IV 219 n. I.

Face, of the beloved, compared to the sun, II 69 n. 6, 88 n. I.

Face, blackness of, II 213 n. 9, 249 n. 10.

Face, a fallow, compared to a gilt plate, II 69 n. 5.

- Face, a sallow, compared of the Mevlevi dervishes I, to a lotus II 360 n. 5. 425 n. 5. See Ney.
- Falcon, a habit of the, II Flute, finger of the, III 36 279 n. 3. n. 2.
- Fantasy, the, II 36 n. 7, Flute, the wail of the, III 302 n. 1; II 362 n. 4. See 92 n. I, 157 n. 4. Khayal.
- Fate, the, of every man Flytings, IV 248. written on his skull, II 91 n. I.
- Fawn, image for a graceful a prayer-niche, II 35 n. 2. beauty, II 62 n. 2.
- Felt, worn by the poor, Form, I 45 seq. See Suret.
- IV 133 n. 6.
- Fountain, the jet of a, compared to a lasso, III 346 n. 4.
- Feudal system, the Ottoman Fountain of Life, the, I 219 n. 3, 281 sqq. See Life, the
- III 216 n. I.
- Figures (rhetorical), I III Water of.
- sqq.
- Friend, the = God, I 173 n. 2.
- Finger-counting (native n. 2.
- Turkish syllabic metres), V 79. Funeral prayers, II 261 n. 2.
- See Parmaq hisabi.
- Furniture, of an old-fashioned Turkish room, III 189 n. 2.
- Fire, the sphere of, II 315 Fuzuli's Turkish, peculiarities of, III 76 n. I.
- n. I, 316 n. 2.
- Fire, symbolic meaning of, Games of children in the East, IV 116 n. 1, 277 n. 4, 320 n. I,
- I 171 n. 2; V 94 n. 7.
- Fish, the, in Muhammedan cosmogony, I 39; II 114 m 7.
- Fishes, rings of silver fastened through the noses of, Games, military, of the Turks, IV 28 n. I.
- II 242 n. I.
- Garden, the, red with tulips, compared to a sea of blood, III 267 n. I.
- Flax, cloth of, supposed to go into shreds when exposed to moonlight, IV 117 n. I.
- Gems and metals believed to ripen in mines, III 46 n. 2.
- Florin, the Ottoman, II 26 n. 3.
- Generation, meaning of, I 47 n. 2.
- Flowers, wet red, compared to drops of blood, II 240 n. I.
- Genies confined in bottles, II 331 n. 4.
- Flute, the, sacred instrument

- Geography, Muhammedan, I 47 n. 1.
- Geometry, I 40. See ‘Ilm-i Hendese.
- Ghazel, the, I 80, 102, 144.
- Ghazels, introduced into the mesnevi, I 309.
- Ghazels, introduced into gasfdas, III 149 n. 8.
- Ghost, the Holy, III 308 n. 6.
- Gipsy wedding customs, IV 227.
- Girdle, the, worn by Christians and pagans in the East, II 44 n. 4. See Zunnar and Cord, the paynim.
- Glances, compared to arrows, I 64 n. 3; III 98 n. 3.
- God, the fourteen letters of, I 340.
- God, the Most Great Name of, I 379 n. 2. See Ism-i A'zam.
- God, the thirty-two words of, I 368 n. 1.
- Godhead, the Effulgence of the, I 66, 327 n. 1, 377 n. 1.
- Good, Absolute, I 16 sqq.
- Grapes, a bunch of, compared to the Pleiades, III 287 n. 4.
- Greek girls, the gait of, IV 240 n. 3.
- Greek in Persian characters, I 152.
- Greek pronunciation of Turkish, IV 239 n. 1.
- Greek women, description of the, IV 238 sqq.
- Green, the sacred colour, II 239 n. 2.
- Habitable Quarter, the, III 139 n. 2. See Rud'-i Meskun.
- Hail-stones, compared to cannon-balls, II 239 n. 4.
- Hail-stones, compared to glass balls, II 243 n. 2.
- Hair, of the beauty, regarded as a dragon, II 120 n. 7.
- Hair of the beloved, scented with ambergris, II 35 n. 5.
- Hair, black locks of, compared to snakes or scorpions, IV 155 n. 2.
- Hair, compared to the basil, I 294 n. 6.
- Hair, compared to clouds, II 88 n. 1.
- Hair, compared to a snare, I 385 n. 1; III 168 n. 6.
- Hair, compared to the violet, II 89 n. 4.
- Hand = leaf, II 113 n. 7; III 158 n. 2.
- Hand-mill, the Eastern, II 245 n. 3.
- Harem dialect, poems in the, IV 283 sqq.
- Hare's sleep, II 201 n. 2.
- Harp, the Eastern, II 342 n. 3, 372 n. 2.
- Head = selfhood, I 163 n. 2.
- Head-bounden = bound to obey, IV 262 n. 4.
- Headdresses, extravagant,

- worn by English ladies, IV I 242 n. I.
- Headlessness, mystical term, I 163 n. 2.
- Heads, of lovers, compared to cups spun by a juggler, II 38 n. 4.
- Heart, of the beauty, compared to a stone, I 214 n. 4.
- Heart, of the lover, compared to a glass or crystal vial, I 214 n. 4; II 66 n. I.
- Heart, of the lover, compared to a piece of roast meat, II 37 n. 2.
- Heart, the compared to a flint, II 360 n. 4.
- Heart, the, compared to a mirror, II 250 n. 3, 332 n. 3, 372 n. I.
- Hearts, of lovers, conceived as hanging from a beauty's tresses, II 120 n. 7.
- Heat and cold = all things, IV-200 n. I.
- Heavens, the Seven, I 37, 399.
- Hells, the Seven, I 399.
- Henna, used as a dye, III 31 n. 5, 98 n. I.
- Henna night, IV 290 n. 3.
- Hindu, type of blackness, II 214 n. 2.
- Hips, the, of a girl, compared to a mountain, IV 27 n. I.
- Holy men, a lamp lit over the graves of, IV 205 n. 3. See Saints, the tombs of the.
- Holy men, pilgrimage to the tombs of, I 180 n. 2. See Saints, the tombs of the.
- Holy Spirit, the, a title of Gabriel, II 217 n. 4.
- Homonymy, See Jinas and Tejnis.
- Honey, popularly regarded as a universal panacea, II 65 n. 4.
- Hoopoe, the, II 386 n. 5.
- Houris, the, I 37 n. I.
- Humour in Turkish poetry, IV 15 seq.
- Humours, the four, I 301 n. I ; II 65 n. 2, 329 n. I. See Akhlat-i erbe'a.
- Huseyn, soft of ^cAli, elegies on, IV 350.
- Hyacinth, the, a type of luxuriant locks, III 153 n. 6, 156 n. I.
- Hyperbole, I 112.
- Ideas, the Platonic, III 114 n. I. See A^cyan-i Sabita.
- Idioms, Persian, II 246 n. I, 270, 272 n. I.
- Idol, name for a beauty, I 218 n. I; II 44 n. 2; III 185 n. 2, 265 n. 7; IV 171 n. I. See Sanem.
- Idol, a type of false religions, I 170 n. I.
- Idol, Chinese, name for a beauty, II 313 n. 5, 314 n. I.
- Immortality of the Soul, the, I 52.

Incense, burned in the invocation of spirits, III 179 n. I.

Infidel, name for a beauty, II 44 n. 3. See Paynim and Kafir.

Ink, Eastern, IV 318 n. 3.

Inscriptions, the Achaemenian, III 310 n. 5.

Insomnia, remedy for, II 204 n. 8.

Intelligence, the Primal, I 188 n. 4; III 129 n. 2. See 'Aql-i Evvel.'

Intelligence, the Universal, I 42, 60.

Intelligences, of the nine Spheres, the, I 44.

Intimacy, mystical term, I 151 n. 2.

Islam, less rigid than is generally supposed, I 24.

Istambol, derivation of, III 280 n. 2.

Istambol, the fawns of IV, 138 n. I.

Jaghatay dialect of Turkish, I 72, 127; II 10; III 75, 76. See Chaghatay.

Jamf, derivation of his name, III 156 n. 5.

Janissaries, the, I 179 n. I; II 228, 248, 249 n. 3, 257, 266, 268; III 185 n. 5, 206, 319; IV 248 n. I. See Janizari.

Jasmine-breast, term for a beauty, I 331 n. 2.

Jemshid, the cup of, II 71

n. I, 90 n. 4, 221 n. 6, 339 n. 4, 392; III 129 n. I, 220 n. I; IV 148 n. I.

Jesus, the life-giving breath of, II 120 n. 6.

Jewellers = dealers in beautiful fancies, III 308 n. 3.

Jonquil, flower of the, compared to a golden bowl, III 282 n. 2.

Joseph, the type of youthful beauty, III 179 n. 3.

Joseph, the shirt of, III 287 n. 3.

Joseph and Zelikha, the romance of, IV 28.

Joseph and Zelfkha, poems on the subject of, II 148 n. 2.

Journey, the homeward, mystical term, I 52, 53 n. I.

Judas-tree, the, III 30 n. 3, 152 n. 5; IV 348 n. 2. See Erghavan.

Judgment, the Day of, IV 209 n. 3, 211 n. 2.

Jug, an earthenware, used as a target, V 43 n. T.

Jujube-tree (zizyphus), the, II 92 n. 2.

Juniper, the, III 30 n. 4.

Jurisprudence. See 'Ilm-i Fiqh.'

Jurist, the, a type of conventional respectability, III 67 n. 5.

Ka'ba, circumambulation of the, I 243 n. 3.

- Ka'ba, the Heavenly, II 59 n. 3, 61 n. 2.
- Ka'ba, the Lord of the, II 320 n. 3.
- Kebabs, cooking of, II 37 n. 2.
- Kerbela, the Martyrs of, Elegies on, IV 350.
- Keys, Eastern, II 323 n. 5.
- Khalvetf order of dervishes, I 232 n. 2; II 148 n. 2, 213 n. 4, 374; III 108, 312.
- Khoten, the deer of, III 301 n. 2.
- Kingdom, the Fair = Persia, III 207.
- Kiss, a, compared to a peach, III 58 n. 3. See Peach and Sheftalu.
- Koran, the first revelation of the, II 219 n. 5.
- Koran, the Fourteen letters of the, I 340 n. 3.
- Koran, sanctity of the, IV 319 n. 4.
- Lasso, the, a weapon of the Persian heroic age, II 114 n. 6.
- Lawsonia inermis (henna), III 98 n. 1.
- Leather, a piece of, used as a chess-board, III 176 n. 2.
- Leaves, yellow, compared to gold fish, III 31 n. 2.
- Leaves, yellow, compared to meteors, III 31 n. 7.
- Leonine verse, III 264. See Musemmat.
- Letters, Arabic, metaphors derived from, II 373 n. 2; III 168 n. 7; IV 67 n. 5.
- Letters, the shape of, word-plays on, II 373 n. 2; III 320 n. 2.
- Letters of God, the Fourteen, I 340.
- Leviathan, I 39 n. 1.
- Leyla, a type of the Divine Beauty, III 65 n. 1.
- Leyla and Mejnun, poems on the subject of, II 172.
- Library, the first private, among the Ottomans, II 31.
- Licences, metrical, IV 184.
- Life, the Water of, III 168 n. 4, 198 n. 2, 209 n. 1; IV 45 n. 1, III n. 6, 317 n. 1.
- Sec Fountain of Life, the.
- Life, the Water of = gentle speech, etc., III 321 n. 4.
- Life of me, term of endearment, IV 238 n. 2.
- Light, the blackest, III 272 n. 2. See Dazzling Darkness.
- Light, mystical meaning of, V 94 n. 7.
- Light, symbolic meaning of, I 171 n. 2.
- Light of Ahmed. See Muhammed, Light of.
- Light of Muhammed, the, I 34, 68. See Muhammed, Light of.
- Light of my eyes, a term of endearment, IV 172 n. 6.
- Lily, the leaf of the, com-

- pared to a sword, II 239 n. 3.
- Lily, the tongue of the, III 112 n. 3.
- Lily, the tongues of the = petals, II 361 n. 9.
- Lines and Curves = letters, I 166 n. 4.
- Lion, the Persian, III 289 n. 3.
- Lip, of a beauty, compared to a rose-bud, IV 65 n. 1.
- Lip, the, compared to a ruby, II 372 n. 3.
- Lips, red, described as pearl-bestrewing rubies, III 285 n. 3.
- Liver, the, believed to consist of solid blood, II 359 n. 3; III 92 n. 3.
- Liver, the, the seat of passion, I 294 n. 3; II 35 n. 1.
- Locks, of a beauty, compared to a snare, I 360 n. 2.
- Locks, of a beauty, dark and sweet-scented, II 64 n. 6.
- Locks, of the beloved, compared to a girdle, II 44 n. 4, 66 n. 6.
- Locks, of the beloved, compared to ornamental crucifixes, II 283 n. 1.
- Locks, of the beloved, compared to a snake or dragon, II 87 n. 4.
- Locks, black, of a beauty compared to charcoal, I 215 n. 1.
- Locks, sweet-scented, com-
- pared to the violet and hyacinth, II 345 n. 2.
- Logic, I 40 n. 4. See 'Ilm-i Mantiq.
- Logos, the, I 42 n. 1, 158 n. 1, 374 n. 2; IV 187 seq., 199. See 'Aql-i Evvel.
- Lote-tree, the celestial, I 35. See Sidret-ul-Munteha.
- Love, in Sufiism, I 20 sqq., 63.
- Love, in Turkish poetry, III 83 sqq.
- Love, Platonic or masculine, I 64; II 380; III 122 sqq.; IV 230 seq. See Misogyny.
- Love, Typal and Real, I 21; II 86 n. 1; III 174 n. 2. See 'Ashq-i haqiqi; 'Ashq-i mejazi.
- Love, the man of, I 222 n. 4, 247 n. 4.
- Loved One, the = God, I 173 n. 1.
- Love-letter compared to a carrier-pigeon, II 121 n. 4.
- Lover, the, in Sufiism, I 22, 23, 160 n. 2, 162 n. 1, 173 n. 5.
- Lover, the wasted form of the, compared to a shadow, II 212 n. 3.
- Lute, the ears of the, II 86 n. 2.
- Macrocosm, the, I 62, 63 n. 1, 187.
- Mad, mystical term, I 159 n. 2, 192 n. 1.
- Madmen, chained in the

- East, I 330 n. 5, 360 n. 8; II 222 n. 5.
- ^cMagian^D, use of, in Persian and Turkish poetry, III 232 n. 4.
- Magic, Muhammedan, III 175 n. 1.
- Magic lantern, the. See Fd-nus-i Khayal.
- Magic rite, a, practised by the Tartars, II 120 n. I.
- Man, the Microcosm, I 194 11. 1, 366 n. 7 and 8.
- Man, the Perfect, II 284 n. 3. See Insdn-i Kamil.
- Mandoline, ears of the, II 342 n. 4.
- Mantles, trimmed with squirrel-fur, IV 355 n. I.
- Market, a 'hot' or 'warm'³, III 67 n. 4.
- Marriages, Muslim, IV 114 n. 4.
- Mars, the Sphere of, II 373 n. 3.
- Mastic, proverbial phrase in connection with, IV 38 n. 1. See Saqiz.
- Mathematics, I 40 n. 3.
- Matter, I 45 seq.
- Meat, pieces of, compared to prayer-rugs, II 335 n. I.
- Mejnun, Arabic poems ascribed to, II 178 n. I.
- Mekka pilgrims, the sandal worn by the, IV 263 n. 1.
- Melancholia, II 65 n. 2. See Sevdd.
- Mercury, the planet, III 147 n. 4.
- Mercury, the Sphere of, II III n. I.
- Mercy to the Worlds, title of Muhammed, II 217 n. 2.
- Mermaid, the, V 40 n. 1.
- Metal, a thin leaf of, placed beneath precious stones, IV 286 n. 2.
- Metaphysic, I 40 n. 3.
- Metaphysical poets, the English, I 28 n. 1.
- Metonymy, I III n. I. See Kindye.
- Metres, used in Ottoman poetry, I 107 sqq.
- Mevlevi costume, the, 1423.
- Mevlevi orchestra, the, IV 176 n. I.
- Mevlevi order of dervishes, the, I 146, 149, 151, 195 n. 3, 421, 422; II 356 n. I; III 61 n. 3, 186, 211, 219, 292, 297, 312; IV 80, 83, 124 n. 4, 125 n. 1, 137 n. 1, 159, 175 n. I, 176 n. 3, 177 sqq., 203, 207, 212, 320 n. 3, 337.
- Mevlevi poets, I 411, 422 sqq.
- Mevlevi poets, biographical work on the, IV 197.
- Microcosm, the, I 62, 63 n. I, 66, 187, 194 n. I.
- Mine, the, a type of generous wealth, III 149 n. 2.
- Miracles. See Saints; Moon, splitting of the.

Mirror, the magic, of Alexander the Great, III 324 n. 2.

Mirrors, metallic, III 189 n. 4; IV 127 n. 3.

Mirrors = phenomena, III 316 n. 2.

Misogyny, III 42, 85, 179 I sqq., 238 seq., 284. See Love, Platonic.

Mohacz, Battle of, II 358 n. 2.

Mole, the, regarded as a beauty, II 279 n. 6, 286 n. 1.

Mole, of a beauty, compared to a grain in a snare, I 360 n. 2; III 168 n. 6.

Mole, of a beauty, compared to her Indian slave, I 214 n. 6.

Mole, a black, compared to a pepper-corn, IV 169 n. 1.

Mollas, the, ignorance of, II 386 n. 2.

Money, given to the bearer of good news, III 283 n. 2.

Mongols, sack of Baghdad by the, IV 42 n. 3.

Moon, the, compared to the white forehead of the beloved, III 157 n. 3.

Moon, 28 mansions of the, II 360 n. 8; IV 349 n. 1.

Moon, name for a beauty, I 328 n. 2; II 119 n. 1.

Moon, the new, compared to a skiff, II 360 n. 9.

Moon, the ^cpalm³ of the, III 55 n. 2.

Moon, personification of the, III 147 n. 4.

Moon, splitting of the, I 374 n. 3; III 55 n. 2.

Moonlight, exposure to, injurious, IV 125 n. 2.

Moonlight ghazel, the, by Beligh, IV 119, 124.

1 Moth, symbol of the perfect lover, II 55 n. 4, 280 n. 4; IV 100 n. 1.

Moth and Taper, IV 64 n. 3.

Mother of the Book, I 339, 374. See Umm-td-Kitdb.

Mother of the world, a name of Cairo, IV 93 n. 1.

Mothers, the four, I 48.

Mouth, of a beauty, compared to an atom, I 217 n. 5.

Mouth, of a beauty, compared to a ruby casket, I 294 n. 5; IV 168 n. 4.

Mouth, of the beloved, compared to the Fountain of Life, I 219 n. 3; II 121 n. 3, 126 n. 1, 298 n. 2.

Mouth, of the beloved, compared to a rosebud, II 281 n. 4; IV 155 n. 1.

Mouth, smallness of the, a charm of the conventional beauty, I 217 n. 5, 295 n. 2; III 149 n. 9.

Movement, kinds of, I 45 n. 2.

Muhammed, the Ascension of, I 236, 366 n. 2; II 57 n. 4, 150. See Mi' raj.

- Muhammed, the body of, supposed to cast no shadow, III 54 n. 3; IV 210 n. 3.
- Muhammed, date of his birth, I 237 n. 1.
- Muhammed, Light of, I 34, 68, 236, 240, 247 n. 3, 399, 410; II 239 n. I; III 54 n. 3, 196 n. 3; IV 313 n. I.
- Murad, the name of, III 177 n. 8.
- Murad III and his sons, elegy on, by Nev'i III 175 sqq.
- Music, I 40.
- Musk, how obtained, I 294 n. 4.
- Musk, where procured, III 157 n. I.
- Musk, parcels of, wrapped in red silk, II 68 ll. 2; III 156 n. 3.
- Musk, the usual simile for hair, II 6j n. 6.
- Musk-pod, the, II 112 n. 4.
- Musky = dark-coloured, IV 127 n. 6.
- Mysticism. See Sufiism.
- Mysticism in Turkish poetry, III 311. See Sufiism.
- Mystics, famous sayings of the, I 21, 187 n. 3, 192 n. 3, 369 n. 1; IV 102 n. 1, 123 n. 1, 150 n. 2, 158 n. 1, 167 n. 6, 210 n. 3.
- Nakhsheb, the Moon of, IV 265 n. 3.
- Name, the Most Great, I 379 n. 2; III 56 n. 6; IV III n. 3. See God, the Most Great Name of, and Ism-i A'zam.
- Names, the Most Comely, III 114 n. I, 192 n. I.
- Names of God, the, I 61, 172 n. 3, 407 n. 3, 408 n. 3, 409 n. I, 410 n. I; III 315 n. I.
- Narcissus == eye, I 360 n. 3; II 101 n. 2; III 321 n. 3.
- Narcissus, the, described as languishing, I 364 n. 6.
- Narcissus, the, called golden-cap³, II 278 n. 3.
- Narcissus, the eye of the, II 101 n. 3; III 112 n. 2.
- Narcissus, the flower of the, II 278 n. 4.
- Narcissus, the yellow centre of the, compared to a gold sequin, II 113 n. 8.
- National spirit, the, in Ottoman poetry, I 130 sqq.; IV 3 sqq.
- Natural School of Ottoman poetry, the, III 245 sqq., 259 sqq., 278, 329.
- Nature, the four-columned dome of, III 112 n. 6.
- Neo-platonism, 142 n. I and 3, 53, 64 n. I, 359.
- New Turks, the, V 73. See Young Turkey Party.
- New Year, Festival of the, III 33 n. I. See Nev-ruz.
- Newspaper, the first non-official in Turkey, V 9.

- Nibelung hoard, the, IV 262 n. I.
- Night, called the 'Indian Sea', II 62 n. 7.
- Night of Assignments, the, I 293 n. 4.
- Night of Power, the, I 293 n. 4; II 125 n. 2; III 33 n. I. See Leylet-ul-Qadr.
- Nightingale, the, called a minstrel, II 386 n. 4.
- Nightingale, the, invoked by Turkish poets, III 127.
- Nightingale, the, lover of the rose, II 55 n. 4. See Rose and Nightingale.
- Not-Being, I 17 sqq.; IV 330. See 'Adam.
- Nous, the, of Plotinus, I 42 n. I.
- Novel, the Ottoman, V 12 sqq.
- Ocean, the, a type of bounty, II 114 n. 7 and 9, 244 n. I.
- Ocean, the Encircling, I 38, 398. See Bahr-i Muhit.
- Open-eyed = generous, II 341 n. 4.
- Orange/ the, figurative use of, IV 265 n. 6.
- Oriental Translation Fund, the, II 124 n. I.
- Orphanlike behaviour, meaning of, IV 130 n. 5.
- 'Osman, the sword of, II 26, 258.
- 'Osmanli dialect, the, II 6; III 76. See Ottoman dialect, the.
- Ottoman, meaning of the name, I II n. I.
- Ottoman dialect, the, III 75, 91. See 'Osmanli dialect, the.
- Ottoman Empire, the integrity of the, V 104 n. 4.
- Owl, the, described as an eremite, II 385 n. 3.
- Ox = stupid fool, V 39 n. 3.
- Oyster-shell, the, III 308 n. 5.
- Pages, the Imperial, IV 227.
- Palm, the, type of a graceful figure, III 286 n. 2.
- Paradise, II 66 n. 4, 67 n. 5, 88 n. 3, 134 n. 4; III 318 n. 5.
- Paradise, sensual pictures of, IV 100 n. 4, 214 n. I.
- Paradise, the streams of, III 66 n. 5.
- Paradises, the Eight, I 36, 399; IV 55 n. 3, 64 n. I.
- Paronomasia, II 221 n. 5; III 184 n. I. See Tejnis.
- Paronymy. See Ishtiqaq.
- Parrot, the == the beloved, III 44 n. I.
- Parrot, the, in Eastern poetry, I 214 n. 3.
- Parrot, the, invoked by Turkish poets, III 127.
- Parrot, name for a beauty, II 62 n. 3; IV 239 n. 2; IV 294 n. 4.

Parrot, a title given to elderly ladies. See Tutu

Parrots, taught to speak by means of a mirror, II 333 n. 5; IV 116 n. 2.

Tasha of three tails', III 17 n. I

Pashas, the Turkish, III 343 sqq.

Path, the mystic's, I 157 n. 4.

Patron, prayer for the, which should conclude every ode, III 151 n. 2.

Pattens, worn in the bath, IV 127 n. 5.

Paynim, name for a beauty, II 44 n. 3. See Infidel and Kdfir.

Peach, term for a kiss, II 371 n. 1; IV 149 n. 1. See Kiss and Sheftdlii.

Peacock, the, in Muhammedan legend, III 339 n. 1.

Peacock of Paradise, the, II 67 n. 5; IV 194 n. 2.

Pearl, generation of the, II 121 n. 2; IV 84 n. 4, 156 n. 4.

Pearls of Aden, the, II 89 n. 2, 278 n. 9 and 11.

Pebble, a, thrown into a beaker as a signal, III 151 n. 6.

Pehlevi dialect of Persian, the, IV 258.

Pen, the Divine, I 35; III I 113 n. 1; IV 316 n. 4.

Pen-names in Turkish poetry. See Makhlās.

Persia, title of, III 207.

Persian genitive construction, the, III 81 n. 2.

Persian genius, the true nature of the, I 24 seq.

Persian language, the, Turkish prejudice against, V 46 n. 3.

Persian mystical poetry, I 21 sqq.

Persianism, meaning of the term, I 5 n. 1. See Fenn-i Furs,

Persians, the, connected by Turkish poets with the tulip, III 44 n. 4.

Perspiration, regarded as a charm, II 278 n. 8.

Petals of the almond-tree compared to silver coins, II 238 n. 2.

Philosophy, Muhammedan, I 39 sqq.

Philosophy, mystic, the first rule of, III 64 n. 1.

Phrases, Arabic, II 273 n. 7; IV 276 n. I

Physic, I 40 n. 3.

Physiognomy, the science of, II 199 seq.

Piastre, value of the, I 262 n. 2.

Pigeon, the, often associated with the cypress, II 242 n. 3.

Pine, the, type of a graceful figure, II 281 n. 5.

Pistols, Arnaut or Albanian, IV 322 n. 2.

- Planes, the Five, I 55.
- Plane-tree, palmated leaves of the, III 30 n. 5, 31 n. 5.
- Planets, the, personified in poetry, III 147 n. 4.
- Planets, the Seven I 43, 48, 183.
- Plato, the Ideas of, I 55.
- Plurality, symbol for the illusory nature of, IV 71 n. I
- Poet, necessary qualifications of the, V 80 sqq.
- Poetry, compared to a rosary, II 244 n. 2.
- Poetry, native Turkish, III 14 n. I
- Poetry, Ottoman, its development described by Ziya Pasha, V 80.
- Poetry, Ottoman, the New School of, I 4, 8, 43 n. 1, 64, 132 sqq.
- Poetry, Ottoman, the Old School of, I 4 seq., 8.
- Poetry, Ottoman, the origin, character, and scope of, II sqq.
- Poetry, Ottoman, outline of its development, I 125 sqq.
- Poetry, Persian, character of, I 13 sqq., 26 sqq.
- Poetry, Turkish popular, I 70 sqq., 95 sqq., 104 seq.
- Poets, the Ottoman, Dictionaries of the, I 139 seq.
- Points, the diacritical, III 128 n. I
- Pole of Saints, the, a title, I 157 n. 3.
- Pomegranate pips, dish made from, II 113 n. 6.
- Pond, the Spheral, II 212 n. 4.
- Poplar, the green, III 98 n. 4.
- Prayer, salutation of the guardian angels in, IV 115 n. 3.
- Prayers, uttered at dawn, V 110 n. I.
- Prayers, for the dead, V 38 n. I.
- Prayers recited over mad or sick persons, II 25 n. 1; IV 25 n. I.
- Preacher, the, a type of orthodoxy, II 68 n. 3; III 290 n. 2.
- Pride of the World, the, title of Muhammed, III 197 n. 4.
- Primal Compact, the, I 22. See E-lest.
- Primal Feast, the, I 23/See Banquet, the Primal; and E-lest, the Feast of.
- Primum Mobile, the, I 43 n. 3; III 310 n. 3; IV 100 n. 2, 136 n. 1. See Sphere, the Ninth.
- Prophets, the, regarded as Muslim, I 233 n. 4.
- Prophets, the render, wild creatures docile, II 202 n. 2.
- Prosody, Perso-Arabian, I 104 sqq.
- Proverbs, Arabic, I 192 n. 2, 218 n. 4, 230 n. 3, 298 n. 2, 360 n. 6, 363 n. 7, 369 n.

- I; II 263 n. 2, 344 n. 6; III 297 n. 1, 365 n. I; IV 63 n. 1, 73 n. 2, 102 n. I; V 74 n. I.
- Proverbs, Persian, IV 73 n. 2, 152 n. I.
- Proverbs, Turkish, II 66 n. 5, 67 n. 4, 118 n. I, 206 n. 6, 256 n. r, 320 n. 5; III 182 n. 2, 183 n. 2 and n. 5, 215 n. 5, 217 n. 2, 238, 323 n. 2, 329, 340 n. 2, 344 n. 4; IV 28 n. 2, 29 n. 2, 38 n. 1, 63 n. 1, 72 n. 6, 73 n. 2, 89 n. I, 101 n. I, 115 n. I, 129 n. 8, 130 n. 4, 131 n. I, 163, 276 n. 2, 290 n. 3, 294 n. 1 and n. 5, 295 n. 3, 297 n. 3, 298 n. 3 and 5, 299 n. I, 2, 3, 300 n. 2 and 3, 302 n. I, 303 n. 5.
- Pseudonyms in Turkish poetry. See Makhlās.
- Psychology, Muhammedan, I 48 sqq.
- Ptolemaic system, the, I 43 sqq., 68 seq.
- Punctuation, introduced into Turkish by Shīnasf, IV 30 n. 1.
- Pupil of the eye, called the 'mannikin³, II 68 n. 4. See Mardumek.
- Pustules on the lips, compared to pieces of cotton, II 314 n. 5.
- Qasfda, the, the usual vehicle for didactic poetry, IV 330 n. I.
- Qastamuni dialect, the, II 107 n. I.
- Qinali-zade, derivation of, III 199 n. I.
- Quatrain. See Rubā'i and Rubā'fs, the first Turkish.
- Radiance incorporate = the beloved, III 19 n. 7.
- Ramazan, the month of Forgiveness, IV 321 n. 6.
- Ramazan, the moon of, III 308 n. 2, 310 n. 4.
- Ramazdn, the Muslim Lent, I 84; III 308 n. 2, 310 n. 4; IV 57 n. 1, 62 n. 4, 167 n. 4.
- Reason. See 'Aql'
- Reason, Carnal, III 128 n. 5.
- Reason, Universal. See 'Aql-i Kull'; 'Aql-i Evvel'.
- Reckoning-Day, the, III 94 n. 3.
- Red Apple, the, an old name for Rome, IV 25 n. 2, 265 n. 5.
- Red Heads, the, II 259 seq. See Qizil Bash.
- Reed, a long, used by children in the East to ride on, IV 116 n. 1, 320 n. 1.
- Reed = reed-pen, III 19 n. 6.
- Reeds, Persian, IV 317 n. 2.
- Reeds, used by weavers, IV 319 n. 2.
- Reed-flute, the, I 152; IV 83, 137 n. 1, 176 n. 1, 204 n. i, 320 n. 3. See Ney.

- Reed-pen, the, III 154 n. 5 seq.
- Resurrection, figurative use of the term, II 312 n. 13.
- Revelation, Oriental theory of, I 58 n. I.
- Rhetoric, Persian, I 26.
- Rhetoric, Perso-Arabian Art of, I III sqq. See 'Ilm-i Belaghat.
- Rhyme, in Ottoman poetry, I 74 sqq.
- Riddle, the, in Ottoman poetry, I 100; IV 157 n. 2.
- Ring, the collet of a, called in Turkish the Eyebrow³, II 246 n. 2.
- Ring, the stone of a, called in Turkish the 'eye', II 246 n. 2.
- Rival, the, in Eastern love-poetry, I 293 n. 3; III 340 n. 1. See Raqib.
- Rome, an old name for, IV 25 n. 2, 265 n. 5.
- Roofs, the flat, of Eastern houses, IV 157 n. 4.
- Room, the Chamberlains³, II 45 n. I.
- Rope-dancers, II 370 n. I.
- Rose, the, compared to a tumbler pigeon, III 29 n. 7.
- Rose, the, conceived as a book, II 89 n. 6. 243 n. 2.
- Rose, petal of the, compared to the ear, III 29 n. I; 321 n. 3.
- Rose, a species of, the smell- ing of which produces a cold in the head, III 343 n. I.
- Rose and Nightingale, the, II 55 n. 4, 204 n. 5, 242 n. 2 and 6. See Nightingale.
- Rose of Scio, the, IV 285 n. 2.
- Rosebud, the, conceived as a pot or jug used as a target, II 242 n. 9.
- Rosebud, the calyx of the, called a garment³, III 322 n. I.
- Rosebud, the drooping, compared to a head, II 240 n. 3.
- Rosebud, the mouth of the, II 246 n. 8, 255 n. 7.
- Rosebud, the shut, compared to a rolled-up scroll, III 267 n. 3.
- Rosebud, stamens of the, compared to sequins, III 283 n. 2.
- Rose-oil, the way of making, II 116 n. 2.
- Ruba^cis, Turkish, III 226 sqq.
- Ruba^cis, the first Turkish, I 211.
- Rubies of Badakhshan, the, I 333 n. 2; II 89 n. 2. See Badakhshan.
- Rubies, lips compared to, I 214 n. I.
- Rubies, supposed to be common stones reddened by the sun, III 128 n. 3.
- Rue, seeds of the wild, used as a fumigation, III 32 n. 3.

Rue, used as a charm against the evil eye, IV 64 n. 4.

Rum, the people of, representative of the fair-skinned races, II 361 n. 7.

Rush-mat, lines imprinted on the skin by a, II 315 n. 2.

Rust, used figuratively for sorrow, I 223 n. 2.

Sable, a favourite figure for dark hair, IV 41 n. 5, 46 n. 3.

Saddles, embroidered, when first brought into Turkey, III 20 n. I.

Saffron, the virtues of, IV 275 n. 3.

Saints, miracles of the, I 412 n. I.

Saints, the tombs of the, I 180 n. 2; III 93 n. 2. See Holy men.

Salankeman, Battle of, III 303 n. I.

Salt, sprinkled over newborn infants, IV 299 n. 6.

Sandal, the, worn by the Mekka pilgrims, IV 263 n. I.

Sappan, a dye-wood, II 213 n. 2.

Saturn, personified in poetry, III 147 n. 4.

Scales, the, of Judgment-Day, II 250 n. I.

Scholasticism. See 'Ilm-iKe-Idm; Mutekellemin; and Theology, Scholastic.

Scholastics, the, I 33, 67 n. I. See Mutekellemin.

Science, Disciplinary, I 40 n. 2.

Sciences, the Ten, II 396.

Scio, the scarlet dye and cloth of, IV 302 n. 5.

Scorpio, an inauspicious sign, II 69 n. 3.

Scriptures, the four, III 191 n. 3, 3, 215 n. 2.

Sea, the, a type of generous wealth, III 149 n. 2.

Seal of the Prophets, the, title of Muhammed, I 244 n. 3.

Seals, Oriental, IV 232 n. I.

Seas, the Seven, I 38; II 101 n. 4, 249 n. 9 and 10.

Sects, the Seventy-Two, I 379 n. I.

Selim I, Sultan, Elegy on, by Kemal-Pasha-zade, III 17 sqq., 154 n. 6.

Seljuq dialect of Turkish, the, I 152.

Sense, the Common, I 50.

Senses, the Five Inner, I 50; IV 172 n. 3.

Senses, the Five Outer, I 50; IV 172 n. 3.

Seraglio, the Imperial, II 26 n. 3; IV 221 seq., 228 seq.

Seven Towers, Wardens of the, III 180.

Shade, meaning protection, III 55 n. 4.

Shadow of God, title of the Sultan, III 153 n. 5, 2170.4.

Shaving of the head, III 55 n. 5.

Sheep's trotters, a favourite dish, IV 291 n. I, 295 n. 5.

Shfrfn, meaning of the name, IV 29 n. 4.

Shooting-stars, Muhammedan legend concerning the, II 341 n. 7; III 31 n. 7.

Showers, heavy, compared to cords, II 112 n. 2.

Sighs, always pictured as ascending, II 316 n. 2.

Sighs breathed at dawn, more efficacious, II 95 n. 4, 31611. 1.

Sighs, compared to smoke, I 393 n. 4; II 120 n. 4, 214 n. 6; III 153 n. I.

Sighs, fire-enkindling, II 315 n. I.

Signet-ring, the Eastern, II 246 n. 1; IV 72.

'Signs', meaning miracles, IV 321 n. 4.

Silk, red, presented £0 a bride, IV 295 n. 2.

Silver-wire drawers, IV 261 n. I.

Silvery-bodied = white-skinned, II 340 n. 3.

Siren, the, V 40 n. I.

Sires, the Seven, I 48.

Skink, the, used as a cure, II 331 n. 5.

Skirt, the, used figuratively, II 360 n. 2.

Sky, the, compared to a blue dome, V 87 n. 2.

Sky, the, compared to a blue-tiled belvedere, III 310 n. I.

Sky, the, compared to an inverted bowl, II 116 n. 6; IV 157 n. 3.

Sky, the starry, compared to a spotted leopard, III 149 n. I.

Sky, the starry, compared to a steel bowl inlaid with gold, III 151 n. 4.

Sleep, compared to surme, IV 101 n. 3.

Smile, to said of a bud, II 208 n. 7, 209 n. 5.

Snake, guarding a treasure, myth of the, I 330 n. 3; IV 155 n. 2. See Treasure, guarded by a serpent.

Society, the French Asiatic, V 27.

Society, the Royal Asiatic, I 139 n. 3 and 5; II 124 n. I; III 297. See Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society,

Solomon, the Seal of, I 379 n. 2; II 39 n. I, 339 n. I; III 56 n. 6; IV III n. 3.

Soul, the human, called a 'slave', I 162 n. 2.

Soul, the Suff theory of the, I 56 sqq.

Soul, three degrees of, 148 sqq.

Soul, the Universal, I 42, 60.

Souls of the Nine Spheres, the, I 44.

Spark, the Whirling, I 67 n. 2.

Sphere, the, compared to a mill, III 240 n. I.

Sphere, the, meaning the vault of heaven, II 113 n. 5, 311 n. I; IV 157 n. 3.

Sphere, the, personified as a beggar clad in blue, II 247 n. 2.

Sphere, the, regarded as an evil power, I 44 n. 3; II 36 n. 6, 38 n. 1, 113 n. 4, 116 n. 8, 247 n. 2.

Sphere, the, represented as a chess-player, I 259 n. 6.

Sphere, the Ninth, I 43; II 243 n. 7. See Sphere, the, regarded as an evil power, and Felek-ul-Eflak.

Sphere, the Satin, IV 157 n. 1. See Felek-i Atlas and Primum Mobile.

Sphere, the starless, III 310 n. 3.

Sphere of Spheres, the, I 42 seq. See Felek-ul-Eflak and Primum Mobile.

Spheres, the, of Fire, Air, and Water, IV 339 n. 7.

Spheres, the Nine, I 43, 242 n. 2; II 60 n. 1 and 3, 316 n. 5; III 46 n. 1, 64 n. 4.

Spheres, the seven planetary, called 'seven goblets', III 310 n. 7.

Spheres, the motion of the, I 44 n. 2.

Spheres, the theory of the revolutions of the, in Ottoman poetry, I 44 n. 3.

Spirit, the Animal. See Ruh-i Nefsdni.

Spirit, the Holy, I 239 n. 2.

Spirit, the Vital. See Ruh-i Hayivdni.

Spirit, degrees of, II 313 n. 4.

Spirit of God, the, a title of Jesus, III 214 n. 3.

Spoons, made of box-wood, IV 298 n. 6.

Squint-eyed people, I 161 n. 5.

Standing on one foot, the conventional attitude of awe, II 112 n. 3.

Stars, compared to coins or gems, II 62 n. 5.

Stars, the, compared to grains, III 240 n. 1.

Stars, compared to ships, II 62 n. 7.

Stars, representing gold embroideries, III 283 n. I.

State, Pillars of the = Ministers, III 178 n. 5.

Stone, the Black, in the Ka^cba, I 38.

Stone, the Philosopher's, II 49 n. 2.

Stone, a, tied against the stomach to repel hunger, V 92 n. 5. See Qana'at tashi.

Stork, popular name for the, II 386 n. 9.

Straps, attached to the saddle, IV 148 n. 3.

Strawbearers' path, the, III 241 n. I. See Keh-keshan.

Streamlets likened to jugglers, III 30 n. 2.

String, a long, used to unlatch a door, IV 303 n. I.

Substance and Accident, I 51 n. 2.

Stiff, double sense of the term, I 26.

Stiff, the, a type of pietism, IV 65 n. 5.

Sufrism, I 15 sqq., 33 seq., 53 sqq., 145 sqq., 153, 336 sqq., 407 n. 3; II 11, 14, 55 n. 4, 197 n. 2.

Sufrism in Ottoman poetry, II 11, 14 seq.

Sufrism, the origin of, I 53 n. 2, 64 n. 1.

Sufrism, the ultimate aim of, I 63.

Stiffs, aphorisms of the. See Mystics, famous sayings of the.

Sugar = sweet words, III 44 n. I.

Sugar-bale, the, a type of sweetness, I 214 n. 2.

Suleyman I, Sultan, elegy on, by Baqf, III 146, 151 sqq.

Suleymanic Age, the, III I sqq.

Sultan, the, a title of God, I 162 n. 3.

Sultans, Ottoman, who were poets, I 417 n. I.

Sun, the, compared to a candle, III 151 n. 3.

Sun, the, compared to a cannon-ball, II no n. 6.

Sun, the, compared to Joseph, III 31 n. I.

Sun, the, compared to a king, II 62 n. 4 and 5.

Sun, the, compared to a peacock, II 63 n. 2.

Sun, the, compared to a ship, II 63 n. I.

Sun, the, described as a yellow rose, II 211 n. 4.

Sun, the, figured as a tambourinist, III 148 n. I.

Sun, the, personified as a sovereign, III 147 n. 4.

Swan-maidens, the, I 437.

Swearing, forms of, II 254 n. 6.

Sword, the Prayer of the, II 304 n. 2.

Sword-cutlery, Turkish, IV 101 n. 3.

Synecdoche, I III n. I.

Tablet, the Preserved, I 35, 339 n. 3, 423 n. I; n 59 n. 8; III 113 n. I; IV 316 n. 4, 338 n. I. See Levh-i Mahfuz, Tabret, the, II 342 n. 7, 346 n. 5.

Tailor-Books, III 248.

Talismans, II 67 n. 6.

Tambourine, the, II 342 n. 7.

Taper, the, conceived as laughing, II 55 n. 2.

- Taper, the, loved by the I Moth, II 55 n. 4, 280 n. 4, 308 n. 1.
- Taper, the, a symbol for a beauty, I 215 n. 3; II 42 n. 2, 205 n. 7.
- Taper, the, a symbol for the beloved, II 87 n. 1, 280 n. 3.
- Taper, the tongue of the, meaning its wick, I 215 n. 3; II 87 n. 1.
- Tattooing, of the beloved's name, IV 240 n. 6.
- Tavern, the, mystical signification of, I 23.
- Tavern folk, i.e. mystics, III 290 n. 2.
- Tea-drinking, Persian custom of, IV 68 n. 2.
- Tears, compared to stars, II 69 n. 6, 89 n. 3.
- Tears, described as children of the pupil of the eye, II 315 n. 3; III 154 n. 4.
- Tears, supposed to consist of blood, I 217 n. 1; II 35 n. 4, 37 n. 1; III 100 n. 1.
- Teeth, compared to pearls, II 372 n. 4, 379 n. 3.
- Theology, I 40.
- Theology, Scholastic, I 254. See Scholasticism.
- Theriaca (Theriack), II 112 n. 6.
- Things, known through their opposites, I 17, 61 n. 1, 327 n. 4.
- Thirty-two, the Huruff symbol for, I 372 n. 1.
- Thirty-two, a sacred number, I 340, 372 n. 1.
- 'This and that', denoting individuality as opposed to Unity, IV 77 n. 4.
- Thorn, the, conceived as a lancet, II 278 n. 1.
- Thorns, looked upon as the guardians of the rose, II 206 n. 8.
- Thread, custom of tying a, round one's finger, II 343 n. 2.
- Throne of God, the. See 'Arsh.
- Tiles, blue-green, III 310 n. 1.
- Tobacco, IV 65 n. 2.
- 'Tongueless', meaning of, in mysticism, I 150 n. 4.
- Topers, term applied by the old poets to themselves, V 80 n. 1.
- Torment, name applied to a beauty, III 182 n. 4.
- Tradition, the Science of. See 'Ilm-i Ahadis.
- Traditions of the Prophet, the, I 16, 34 n. 2, 54; III 112 n. 5, 114 n. 2, 196 n. 2, 214 n. 6, 292 n. 2, 300 n. 1, 316 n. 3. See Hadis.
- Transition Period, the, III 247 seq., 260, 277 seq., 319, 328, 330, 337, 351; IV 3 sqq., 59.
- Treasure, guarded by aser-

- pent, II 334 n. 9; IV 262 n. 1. See Snake.
- Treasure, the Hidden, Tradition regarding, I 16, 367 n. I.
- Treasures, hidden in ruins, I 361 n. 2.
- Tresses, mystical signification of, I 23.
- Trinity, the Christian doctrine of the, II 230.
- Trotters' Day, the, IV 295 n. 5.
- Troubadours, the, I 28 n. 1, 446.
- Trouser-knot, the, IV 262 n. 2.
- Trust, the, offered by God and accepted by Man, I 350 n. I; II 316 n. 6; IV 76 n. 1. See Emdnet.
- Truth, the, the last degree in the perception of Unity, I 326 n. 4.
- Truth, the, meaning God, I 15, 60. See Haqq.
- Tuba tree, the, I 36, 292 n. 1; II 61 n. 6, 251 n. I.
- Tulip, the brand of the, II 361 n. 12.
- Tulip, the, compared to a gaily dressed beauty, II 277 n. I.
- Tulip, the flower of the, compared to a cup of red wine, II 205 n. 8.
- Tulips, red, compared to musk-pods, II 112 n. 4.
- Tunic of the rose, i.e. its corolla, II 359 n. 6.
- Turban, the Khorasanf, IV 262 n. 4.
- Turk-land = Turkistan, III 63 n. 1.
- Turkish. See Ottoman.
- Turkish, the vowels in, I 104 n. I.
- Turks of Asia Minor, the, IV 274 n. 3.
- Turks of Azerbaijan and Persia, III 74.
- Turks, characteristics of the, I 6 seq.
- Tutty, II 49 n. 4.
- Tychonic system, the, 143 n. I.
- Unity, the Sufi doctrine of, illustrated, IV 105 n. I.
- Universe, the. See 'Alem.
- Uyghur dialect, the, I 71.
- Uzbek dialect, the, I 72.
- Vagrants, Eastern, IV 277 n. 2.
- Vamiq and 'Azra, the romance of, III 26, 183 n. 4.
- Vedanta philosophy, the, I 53 n. 2, 64 n. 1.
- Veil, of phenomenal existence, the, I 294 n. I, 405 n. 2.
- Veil worn by brides, the, IV 292 n. 6.
- Venetian treacle, II 112 n. 6.
- Verities, the Divine, I 407, 408 n. 3 and 4, 410 n. 1—3.
- Verse-forms, the Perso-Arabian, I 70 sqq.

- Verses, compared to pearls, I 115 n. 2.
- Vezfr, the Grand, official dress of the, III 295 n. 2.
- Viewers, female friends of 1 would-be bridegrooms, IV 294 n. 6.
- Vintner, the, a mystical term, I 23.
- Viol, the 'shaft' of the, II 343 n. I.
- Violet, the bowed head of the, III 112 n. I.
- Violet, the, a symbol for a beauty's hair, II 323 n. 5.
- Violet, used as an epithet of hair, I 293 n. 1.
- Vision, the Beatific, I 37 ; II 66 n. 4, 252 n. 3; IV 100 n. 3, 206 n. I.
- Vowels, the, in Turkish, I 104 n. I.
- Waist, of a beauty, compared to a silver arch, II 299 n. 3.
- Waist, the slender, compared to a hair, II 221 n. 1, 299 n. 3, 313 n. 2; IV 4711. I.
- Waist, the slender, a point of beauty, I 217 n. 6; II 221 n. 1, 313 n. 2.
- Walnuts, used for playing games, V 50 n. 2.
- Water, of the face, meaning 'honour', I 294 n. 2.
- Water, the surface of, considered as a prayer-rug, III 338 n. 1.
- Water of Life, the. See Life, the Water of.
- Water-wheel, the, II 110 n. 3, 341 n. 9.
- Waves, rippling, compared to the teeth of a file, III 324 n. 1.
- Way, the, meaning 'Sufiism', I 157 n. 4, 182 n. 3.
- Waywoda, the, IV 160.
- Wedding festivities, Turkish, IV 290 n. 3, 295 n. 5, 296 n. 1.
- Wedding-chests, IV 295 n. 1.
- Wedding-palm, the, IV 202 n. 2.
- West-Turkish dialects, I 4 n. 1.
- White, symbolising good, II 99 n. 4.
- Willow, leaves of the, compared to daggers, II 246 n. 6.
- Willow, type of a graceful figure, III 150 n. 3.
- Willow, the weeping, image for a thoughtful man, II 246 In. 6.
- Wind, the Black, II 120 n. 5.
- Wind-chaser, the, name of a bird, IV 277 n. 1.
- Wine, the discovery of, II 330; V 93 n. 7.
- Wine, forbidden by the law of Islam, II 341 n. 5.
- Wine, a mystical term, I 23.
- Wine, red, described as 'roses', III 285 n. I.
- Wine, sold in Persia by

Magians and Christians, III 232 n. 4.

Wine, usually diluted with water, IV 113 n. 3.

Wine-drops, compared to stars, II 341 n. 6.

Winter, conceived as a police magistrate, II m n. 3.

Woe, term applied to a beauty, III 184 n. I.

Woman, the assertion that a soul is denied to, I 36 n. 3.

Word, mystical term, I 158 n. I.

Word-plays, I 43 n. 2, 355, 364 n. 3, 425 n. 5; II 66 n. 6, 6y n. 3, 89 n. 5, 108 n. I. 204 n. 3, 206 n. 1, 209 n. 2, 221 n. 5 and 11, 24611. 3, 248 n. 7, 282 n. 2, 290 n. 3, 298 n. 3, 361 n. 7; III 93 n. I, 97 n. 5, 144, 150 n. 2, 316 n. 5, 347 n. 5; IV 18, 126 n. 2, 128 n. 7, 131 n. 6, 157 n. 1, 193 n. 3, 240 n. 2, 241 n. 2. See Jinds; Tejnis; Ihdm.

Words, beautiful, compared to pearls, I 359 n. 2.

World, the, called a house of mourning, IV 77 n. 2.

World, the, compared to an ancient hospice, III 310 n. 2.

World, the, compared to a juggler's stage, III 310 n. 6.

World, the, compared to a market, IV 62 n. 1.

World, the, compared to an orchard, III 342 n. 2.

World, the, compared to a parterre, a fair, and a workshop, III 340 n. 3.

World, the, compared to a woman, II 128 n. I.

World, the Aquose. See 'Alem-i 'Ab.

World, the Intermediate. See 'Alem-i Berzakh.

World, the Invisible. See 'Alem-i Ghayb.

World of Form, the. See 'Alem-i Suret.

World of Similitudes, the. See 'Alem-i Misal.

World, the Sensible. See 'Alem-i Hissi.

World, the Visible. See 'Alem-i Shehddet.

Worlds = Kingdoms of natural objects, V 88 n. 1.

Worlds, the eighteen thousand, I 54 n. 1, 340, 366 n. 7, 373.

Worlds, the Five, I 54, 60. See 'Awalim-i Khamsa.

Worlds, the Three, I 56.

Worlds, the Two, I 56, 221 n. 2.

Wounds, compared to flowers, III 10 n. I; IV 294 n. I.

Writing, compared to surme, IV 70 n. 4.

Yak, tail of the, used as a standard, III 17 n. 1.

Young Turkey Party, the, V 7, 8, 60 sqq., 69, 73 n. 4.

Zealot, the, a type of rigid orthodoxy, I I I 67 n. 3, 189 n. 3.

Zephyr, the, II 64 n. 6, 101 n. 5.

Zerati, a name given to the Bektdshis, I 358 n. I.

Zodiac, Signs of the, 13 28 n. 3.

Zone, the, an emblem of infidelity, II 363 n. I; I I I 155 n. 4. See Zunndr.

Zoroastrian religion, the, V 89 n. 2.

ADDENDA TO INDEX.

The following words should be added to Index III.

Feylaqus, name of a wonderful stone, I 276.

FMri (florin), II 26 n. 3.

Jubbe, IV 132 n. 5.

APPENDIX.

First lines of the Turkish Text of the Poems translated in Volume V.

- [۴۵۹] حَقِّ نَعَالِ عَظَمَتِ عَالَمِنَا پادشهی
[۴۶۰] چَقْدی بِرِ بَاغِنَا اِيچِنِدِن یولنه بِرِ بِاشلو حمار
[۴۶۱] اشی بوف بِرِ گوزلی سودی بگندلی گوگلم
[۴۶۲] بایمه بِرِ فیلسوف نامشهور
[۴۶۳] سزا در گوگلمه ایتسم خیال صورتن ارقم
[۴۶۴] گورن صاجکن آراسندن یوزن پارلدیسی
[۴۶۵] زینتِ روضه جنت اید حَقِّ عَزَّ وَجَل
[۴۶۶] وارنغم خالفکن وارنغمه شاعد در
[۴۶۷] نه غم اوجوب وطنمدن بعید دوشدمسه
[۴۶۸] بو کارگاه صنع عجب درسخانه در
[۴۶۹] افشام اولور گونش گدر شمدی یورادن
[۴۷۰] حَبْلُا نصِرِ همایون بدیع الاحوال

