II. In figurative and transferred applications.

Under the following heads are placed only those figurative uses which admit of being classified under some general concepts. Further illustration will usually be found under the verbs most commonly occurring in the various phrases, together with many special uses which are confined to one or other of these heads (see e.g. Burn v. 20, Cast v. 83, Come v. 69, Draw v. 89, etc.). Some uncertainty attaches to the origin and development of many of these uses, the variety of which is to a great that they both conceive or present a number of highly divergent and even directly opposite senses, e.g. to bind up (sense 19) in contrast with to break up (sense 20).

II. In figurative and transferred applications.

Under the following heads are placed only those figurative uses which admit of being classified under some general concepts. Further illustration will usually be found under the verbs most commonly occurring in the various phrases, together with many special uses which are confined to one or other of these heads (see e.g. Burn v. 20, Cast v. 83, Come v. 69, Draw v. 89, etc.). Some uncertainty attaches to the origin and development of many of these uses, the variety of which is to a great that they both conceive or present a number of highly divergent and even directly opposite senses, e.g. to bind up (sense 19) in contrast with to break up (sense 20).

9. From a lower to a higher status in respect of position, rank, or affluence. (Cf. Set v. 154 j.)
