IV. 27. A mode of expressing dates. Chiefly, Either of the two methods of dating that have been current in the Christian world since the introduction of the Gregorian calendar in 1582 viz, the New Style (abbreviated N S.), which is the result of the Gregorian reform, and the Old Style (O S) which follows the unreformed calendar. The New Style is occasionally called the Roman Style, and the Old Style the English Style. In historical dates earlier than 1582, however, Roman Style, as used by modern writers, means only that the year mentioned is to be understood as beginning on 1 Jan.

The Julian calendar was based on the assumption that the tropical year consisted of 365¼ days In order that the average calendar year should have this length, it was provided that the normal year should contain 365 days, but every fourth year 366 days Down to A.D. 1582 the Julian calendar continued to be used by all Christian nations In calendars and almanacs, the year began on 1 Jan (like the Roman consular year), but for ordinary purposes the time of beginning the year was different in different places; in England, after some fluctuations, the beginning of the legal year was fixed for 25 March After the adoption of the Christian era, the leap years were those whose number A D (reckoned from 1 Jan) was divisible by 4

The Julian estimate of 365¼ days for the length of the tropical year was too great by about 11 minutes, an error which amounts to one day in about 128 years Hence in 1582 the date of 21 March for the vernal equinox, assumed since the early 4th c in the rule for computing Easter, was 10 days too late. To remedy this inconvenience, and to prevent its recurrence, Pope Gregory XIII, acting on the advice of the Jesuit Clavius and other eminent astronomers, ordained that in A D 1582 the day after 4 Oct. should be reckoned as 15 Oct, and that in future the years which had a number ending in two cyphers should not be leap years unless the number were divisible by 400 The Julian date of 1 Jan. for the beginning of the year was retained The difference between the old and new calendars continued to be 10 days until 1700 (the first disputed leap year), when it became 11 days, in 1800 it became 12 days, and in 1900 13 days, from which there will be no further increase till 2100

The Gregorian calendar (so called from the name of the Pope) was speedily adopted in all Roman Catholic countries, while the other nations of Europe adhered to their traditional reckoning In the 17th and 18th centuries, it was often found necessary to state whether or not the year was according to Old or New Style, or to give both datings. As the nations which accepted the reform usually began the year on 1 Jan., not, as in England, on 25 Mar., there was for the March quarter (in addition to the other difference) a discrepancy in the number of the year between the Old Style and New Style dates

In England and Scotland the Gregorian calendar was established by the Act 24 Geo II c 23 (1752), which provided that the year 1752 and all future years should begin on 1 Jan instead of 25 Mar (in Scotland this rule had been adopted in 1600), that the day after 2 Sep 1752 should be reckoned the 14 Sep., and that the reformed rule for leap year should in future be followed Ireland followed in 1788 The use of New Style is now universal throughout the Christian world with the exception of certain countries of the Greek Church, in Russia it was officially adopted by the revolutionary government in 1918

The use of stilus for 'mode of dating' was current in med L., as a specific application of the sense 'usage' (cf 19 above). In France the expression New Style (nouveau style) had been current before the time of the Gregorian reform, with reference to the change in the beginning of the year from Easter to 1 Jan., which took place in that country in 1563

15. sub voce, under the word (so-and-so); abbreviated s. v.

Sub- (səb, sʌb) prefix, repr. L. sub- = the prep. sub under, close to, up to, towards, used in composition (cf. UNDER-) with the various meanings detailed below (The related Skr. upa-, Gr. ὑπο- have a similar range of meaning)

The b of L. sub- remained unchanged when it preceded a radical beginning with s, t, or v; before m and r it was frequently assimilated (see e. g. SUMMON, SURROGATE), and before c, f, g, and p it was almost invariably assimilated (see e g. SUCCEED, SUFFER, SUGGEST, SUPPOSE). Variation is illustrated by L subfuscus SUBFUSC beside L. suffuscus, subrogâtus SUBROGATE beside surrogâtus SURROGATE A by-form subs- (cf. ABS-) was normally reduced to sus- in certain compounds with words having initial c, p, t, e. g. suscipĕre, suspendĕre, sustinēre (see SUSCEPTION, SUSPEND, SUSTAIN), and before sp- the prefix becomes su-, as in suspĭcĕre, suspicio, suspirāre (see SUSPECT, SUSPICION, SUSPIRE).

The original force of the prefix is either entirely lost sight of or to a great extent obscured in many words derived immediately or ultimately from old Latin compounds, such as subject, suborn, subscription, subserve, subsist, substance (Where the prefix occurs in an assimilated form and is consequently disguised, as in succeed, suffer, suppose, an analysis of the compound does not readily suggest itself.) As a living prefix in English it bears a full meaning of its own and is freely employed in the majority of the senses defined below. Appropriate originally to composition with words of Latin origin it has become capable of being prefixed to words of native English or any other origin. This extension took place as early as the 15th c., but the beginnings of the wide use of which it is now capable date from the latter half of the 18th c., to which a large number of the earliest examples of scientific terms belong.

The more important and permanent compounds, whether general or technical, are entered in this Dictionary as main words, in the present article are treated such compounds of a general character as have not a permanent status in the language and scientific terms the meaning of which may (for the most part) be gathered from the meaning of the prefix and that of the radical element.

In Romanic, sub- was replaced by subtus- as a living prefix, e g subtulevāre, whence OF sous-, sousleve, mod F soulever (Cf SOUTH-*). But sub- appears in OF (1) from the 12th cent. in learned adoptions of old Latin compounds, e g subornerto SUBORN, substance, subtĕrsion, (2) from the 14th cent (with variant soub) in forms substituted for older compounds with sous-, sous-, e g submayeur (cf soubmaire) sub-mayor, subprieur (cf souspriour) SUBPRIOR, (AF) subtaxour subtaxer, subvicaire sub-vicar (see 6 below); soubmetre for soumettre to SUBMIT Pronunciation. The prefix bears the main stress (1) in the following words derived from compounds of the old Latin stock, viz. sub'ject (sb.), sub'script, sub'stance, sub'urb; sub'altern, sub'dolous, sub'jugate, sub'limate, sub'sequent, sub'sidise, su bsidy, sub'stantive, su bstitute, sub'trahend; also in sub'marine, (2) in words in which there is an implicit contrast with the simple word, e.g. su barch, sub'class, su bfuvour, su bgenus, sub-office, su bsection, sub'soil. (As with other prefixes that express contrast, the principal stress is always on sub- when the contrast is explicit, as deacon and sub'deacon, to let or sub'let, epithelial and sub'epithelial tissue.) The prefix is stressless and the quality of its vowel is consequently reduced in subdu ce, subdue', subje ctive, subjoin, subju nctive, subli me, submerge, submi t, subo rdinate, subscription, subscri be, subse rve, subsi de, subsi diary, subsi st, substa ntial, substra tum, subsu me, subte nd, subtra ct, subu rban, subve ne, subver't, and their derivatives In other cases the prefix bears a stress varying from a light secondary to a stress even with that of the second element of the compound (the vowel being consequently unobscured), as in su ba cid, su bcla vian, su bdea n, su bope rcular, su bterra nean. In compounds belonging to branch II, even stress tends to prevail.

I. Under, underneath, below, at the bottom (of).

1 Forming adjs. in which sub- is in prepositional relation to the sb implied in the second element, as in L. subaquāneus = that is sub aquâ under water, SUBAQUANEOUS, subdiālis = that is sub diō, SUBDIAL, subterrāneus = that is sub terrâ, SUBTERRANEAN, -EOUS.

a. Compounds of a general character (mainly nonce-wds.) and miscellaneous scientific terms.

b. Anat. (Path., Surg.) and Zool. = Situated or occurring under or beneath (occas. behind) the part or organ denoted by the radical element, or lying on the ventral side of it or ventrally with respect to it; as in (late) L. subālāris that is sub ālis under the wings, subcucullāris SUBOCULAR, mod.L. sublinguālis SUBLINGUAL, etc

Compounds of this class may coincide in form with compounds having a different analysis Thus, subabdominal = under the abdomen, f. sub abdomine + -AL coincides with subabdominal = not quite abdominal, f SUB- 20 d + ABDOMINAL; so SUBCARTILAGINOUS, SUBCENTRAL, SUBMUCOUS sub-glossal, Also, such a form as SUBUMBRELLAR may be analysed as (1) sub umbrellā + -AR[1] = situated beneath the umbrella, or (2) f. subumbrella (see f below) + -AR[1] = pertaining to the subumbrella; so SUBMENTAL. (In this second case the resultant signification is much the same whichever analysis is taken.)

In some of these compounds the implied regimen of the prep is not a simple sb. but a group consisting of an adj. and a sb., the adj being the element represented in the compound; e g subdural.

In the following list explanations of the radical element have been occasionally added in brackets; in most instances the meaning of the compound is readily inferred from that of the prefix and of the second element Many more words of this class are to be found in the medical dicts. of Billings, Dorland's, and others, Sydenham Society's Lex, Allbutt's Syst Med, Buck's Handbk Med Sci, etc.

Neither L. subdūcĕre nor OF. souduire is recorded in the sense of 'subdue', so that it is to be presumed that the AF. form took over the sense from L. subdĕre, the pa. pple. of which is represented in Eng. by SUBDIT from c 1375.

There is no clear connexion in form or sense with the AF subdue of Edw. III stat. II. c. 17, ann. 1353; the meaning is app. 'attached' or 'arrested', not 'subdued'. The 15th c. AF subduer (Littleton Instr., ed. 1516, A vij b) was prob. modelled on the current Eng. form.]

9 Modern Philos. More fully conscious or thinking subject The mind, as the 'subject' in which ideas inhere, that to which all mental representations or operations are attributed; the thinking or cognizing agent; the self or ego. (Correlative to Object sb 6.)

The tendency in modern philosophy after Descartes to make the mind a consciousness of itself the starting point of enquiry led to the use of subjectum for the mind or ego considered as the subject of all knowledge, and since Kant this has become the general philosophical use of the word (with its derivatives subjective, etc.)

[The following quotes illustrate a transitional use —

OE hwulc beside hwelc ('—hwalīko-*), and Goth. hwileks. Evidence for the rounding of swilc to swylc appears late in the 9th c , and a sporadic spelling swulc is found from c 1000 Swylc and swulc became in ME swulch, swulch, which, by the absorption of w and loss of l, gave such (in ME. written also soch), the modern standard form. The dropping of w was carried through into the other types swe(l)ch and swi(l)ch, whence the widespread dial forms sech and sich Thus, and by similar cross-influences, a large variety of forms arose, which can be grouped according to (1) the quality of the vowel, (2) the retention or loss of w, (3) the retention or loss of l, as well as (4) the palatalization or non-palatalization of c The unpalatalized forms Swilk and Sic (swelk, swik, silk, etc.) are treated separately in their alphabetical places

The vocalism of the continental forms is in many points obscure Some of them indicate the possibility of there having been new formations distinct from the original types, and there has no doubt been interaction of the forms of Which, the development of which, presumably on account of the difference of the initial sound, has not been entirely parallel]

B. Signification.

Such is a demonstrative word used to indicate the quality or quantity of a thing by reference to that of another or with respect to the effect that it produces or is capable of producing. Thus, syntactically, such may have backward or forward reference; in the uses of branch I it has the former, in those of branch II mainly the latter

The use of such and such a in the attributive position is illustrated in detail only in sense 1, but the same rules apply to the adj. generally; for special uses see branch IV.

I. 1. Of the character, degree, or extent described, referred to, or implied in what has been said.
