Stadia (stēˈ diă) [Of obscure history, prob. derived from Stadium, and perhaps from the plural stadia. Cf. F. stadia (Littré Suppl, with quot. of 1876).

It is doubtful in what country the word originated, the statement in the first quot. below lacks confirmation]

An apparatus for measuring distance by optical means a. Mil An instrument consisting of a glass plate, or a brass plate with an opening of the form of an isosceles triangle, marked with figures showing the distance at which a foot- or horse-soldier will be when his image covers a certain height on the instrument held at arm's length.

b. Surveying An apparatus consisting of a rod or staff placed at one end of the distance to be measured and a pair of horizontal lines, hairs or wires on the diaphragm of a telescope placed at the other end. Also attrib, as in stadia hairs, lines, measurement, method, -rod, -surveying, telescope.

By British surveyors stadia is commonly used as equivalent to 'stadia rod', in the U S this use appears to be rare The 'stadia method' has two varieties in the one the staff is graduated and the telescope hairs fixed at a known distance apart; in the other the staff is of known length and the hairs are movable

1865 Mauer in *Jrnl. The precise sense and correct application are very doubtful, most of the successive writers having apparently copied from their predecessors with little understanding The Book of St Albans (quot 1486 s v STAINING ppl a) seems to use staining colowre for any tincture (whether 'colour' or 'metal') which presents a uniform tint in contradistinction to spots, etc, according to this authority the 'staining' colours are the only ones that may appear on the shield of a gentleman On the other hand, according to Legh (1562), 'staynande' colours are those which may not be used in armory; tawny or tenné, being the 'surest' of all the mixed colours, is the only one of them that is not 'staynande', we may perhaps hence infer that Legh took the adj to mean 'fugitive' (cf STAIN v 2), or rather 'indeterminate' Guillim (1610) says that some heralds disallow the use of tawny and murrey (or sanguine) for fields, regarding them as 'staynande' (Ferne in 1586 speaks of these two as 'stains', not colours), but it is not clear how he interpreted the adj The later notion that staynand means 'disgraceful', designating tinctures that are used for the purpose of 'abatement', appears to be entirely unfounded

Still the ordinary use in Scotland, where 'up the stair', 'down the stair' are the usual equivalents for upstairs, downstairs, and 'to go up the stairs' means what in England would be expressed by 'six flights of stairs' (The whole series of steps between two successive floors counts, however, as a single 'stair', even when it consists of two or more 'flights' or portions separated by a landing.) In England the sing in this sense is now very rare, exc in phr on the stair, which is itself slightly archaic

Stake (stēk), sb.[2] [Of uncertain etymology.

Perh. f. STAKE v.[1] On the alternative supposition that the sb. is the source of the vb, the former may be the same word as STAKE sb.[1] The peculiar use might have been developed from the phrase on the stake, which may originally have referred to a custom of placing on a 'stake' or post the object (an article of clothing or the like) hazarded on the event of a game or contest. There is, however, no evidence of the existence of such a custom, and in our quots the first example of the phrase is dated 1592, while the use of the sb to denote the money risked on a game of dice is more than half a century older.]

Stale (stēl), sb 3 [Prob. a AF estale, estal (only in Bozon, 13th c.), applied to a pigeon used to entice a hawk into the net, that this word is not an adoption from English is rendered probable by the occurrence of the extended form estalon in continental Fr. with the same sense (Cotgrave 1611, Godefroy gives earlier instances spelt estolon, etelon) Of Teut origin, cf. OF stælhrán decoy reindeer, stællo (Northumbrian) catching (of fish), prob. from the root of steall place (Stall sb.1) stellan to place; for the sense cf. the rendering of stale by 'stationaria' in the Promptorium, and G stellvogel decoy-bird

It has been usual to regard the stæl- in stælhrán as identical with the combining form of stalu theft (as in stælgiest predatory guest, stælhere plundering army), but the difference of meaning renders this unlikely, and the current identification of ONorthumb stællo with stalu seems inadmissible on grounds both of form and sense]

Stalemate (stēⁱlmēⁱt), sb. Chess. [f STALE sb 6 + MATE sb 1

Strictly a misnomer, as the 'stale' (so called until 18th c) is not really a mate]

A position in which the player whose turn it is to move has no allowable move open to him, but has not his king in check

According to modern rules, the game which ends in stalemate is drawn In England from the 17th c to the beginning of the 19th c the player who received stalemate won the game Various other rules have been in vogue at different times, sometimes the player giving stalemate won, either wholly or to the extent of half the stake, sometimes the last few moves had to be played over again until a mate resulted, sometimes the piece causing the obstruction was removed

1765 LAMBE Hist Chess 91 When the King has no man whom he can play, and is not in check, yet is so blocked up, that he cannot move without going into check, this position is called a stale mate, or Pat, in this case the King who is the mated wins the game 1847 STAUNTON Chess-Player's Handbk 33 He places the adverse King in the position of stalemate

The Teut. stamp-* is the source of the Com. Rom verb represented by It stampare to tread, press, print, Pr, Sp, Pg. estampar to stamp, print, OF. estamper (mod F estamper, in some technical senses étamper) to stamp, whence the verbal noun It stampa press, printing-press, Sp, Pg estampa, F estampe engraving, estampe, étampe stamp, die

The view stated above seems on the whole more likely than the alternative supposition that the verb did not exist in OF, but is solely an adoption of OF estamper (see above) At the same time there can be little doubt that the sense development of the Eng verb has been influenced by the uses of its Fr cognate

The Teut root stamp* is prob a nasalized form of stap-* to tread, if so the primary sense of the verb would seem to be that of branch II below, from which the other senses might easily be derived. Some scholars regard the root (pre-Teut stomd-*) as cogn w Gr στραβ-εω † to shake, †to maltreat (occurring only once), radical connexion with STUMP sb. has also been suggested]

Stand (stænd), v Forms see below. [A Com Teut strong verb, in most of the Teut. langs more or less defective, certain parts being supplied by a synonymous defective verb from the same ultimate root (see below). The OE. standan (stondan), pa. t stód, stódon, pa. pple. gestanden, corresponds to OFris stônda, pa t pl stôdon, pa pple stenden, OS standan, pa. t. stôd (stuod), stôdun (stuodun), pa pple -standan, MLG imp stant, pa t stôt, stôden, also nasalized stunt, stunden (mod.LG. pa. t stund, stunden), MDu standen, pa t stond, stonden, Flem stoet, stoeden, pa pple †gestanden (mod Du pa t stond, stonden); OHG. stantan, pa t stuont, pl stuondum, -stuotun, pa pple. -stantan (MHG inf raie standen, pa t stuont, pa. pple. gestanden, mod G imp †stand, pa t stand, pl. standen, earlier †stund,e etc, pl †stunden etc, pa pple gestanden), ON standa, pa t stóð, pl stóðom, pa pple staðenn (Norw standa, pa t stod, pa pple stadet, standa etc, MSw standa, pa t. stóþ, pl. stóþo, pa pple. standin, also staþin, mod Sw pa t. stod, pl stodo, pa. pple. stånden, Da †stande, stonde, pa t. stod, pl. stode, pa pple. †standet), Goth standan, pa t. stôþ, pl stôþum (pa pple unrecorded)

In OTeut. the forms of the verb were probably as follows pres.-stem stand-, perfect sing stôþ-, plural stôđ-, formed, with suffix -nd- (−pre-Teut. -nt-) in the present-stem, and -þ-, đ (−pre-Teut -t-) in the perfect stem, on the root sta- stō-* —Indogermanic st(h)ə- st(h)ā-*, found in all branches of the family exc Armenian and Albanian with the senses 'to stand', 'to cause to stand' cf. Skr. sthā (pres ind tiṣṭhati, inf sthātum), Avestic histaiti, Gr laναναι, L. stāre, sistĕre, Lith stoju-s I set myself, OSl. stojati, stati. OIrish tâu, tó I am (−OCeltic stāđō*)

In Ger and Du. the n of the present stem has within historical times passed into the pa t. The pa pple, which this vb prob. did not possess in OTeut, has been variously supplied in the different langs the type stadono-*, which conforms to the general rule of the a, ō conjugation, is represented in ON, Norw., MSw., the other Teut. langs, so far as they do not take their pa pple from the shorter form of the verb (see below) have a formation based on the present stem, as In OE. (ge)standen. In English the regular form of the pa. pple, standen (with the variants stande, etc.) continued until the 16th c., when its place was taken by stood from the pa t. A few examples of a weak form standed occur in writings of the 16th c, in compounds (understanded, withstanded) this formation was less rare, and survived into the 17th c.

In all the Teut langs exc. English, Gothic, and Old Norse, the present stem has a shorter form, the OTeut. type of which varies between sta-* and stā-* (WGer stō-), in some of the langs this is used exclusively, and in others along with the longer form stand-. In some of the languages the earlier form of pa pple has been wholly or partially superseded by a new formation from the shorter present stem. The dialectal range of the shorter type will appear from the following list of typical forms (minor variations being omitted) OS inf stân (rare, MLG inf stân, pa. pple gestân, mod LG inf staan, pa pple staan), OLow Frankish inf stan (MDu inf staen, 3 pres. ind staet, steet, pa pple gestaen, mod Du inf staan, pa. pple gestaan), OFris inf stan, stên, 3 pres ind stet, pa. pple stên (WFris inf, 3 pres ind stean), OHG inf stân, stên (MHG inf stân, stên, mod G stehen, stehn), MSw inf. stå (mod Sw stå, pa pple wk stådd), Da inf staa, pa. pple staaet, Norw inf staa, pres staar, staer.

The remarkable parallel between the verbal stems stā-, stat, stand* and gā-, gat-, gang- (see GO, GANG vbs) strongly suggests that one of the two series has been assimilated to the other. The relation between the two, however, and the precise mode of formation of the shorter verbal stems from the roots, is very uncertain. For an outline of the different views, with references, see Deutsches Wb ('Grimm') X. II 1433]

The origin of sense 9 ('standard of measure or weight'), whence the other senses in branch II are derived, is somewhat obscure It appears in Afr. (estandart) and Anglo-L. (standardus) in the 13th c., two centuries earlier than our earliest vernacular instance It has not been found in continental OF.; the use of Du. standaard in this sense is believed to be imitated from English. It is noteworthy that in early instances the standard of measure is always either expressly or by implication called 'the king's standard', an expression which belongs to the older sense 1. It seems probable that sense 9 is a fig. use of sense 1; the king's standard being the point of reunion of the army, and the centre from which commands are issued

The senses grouped as branch III are of doubtful, probably of various and in some instances of mixed origin. The notion of 'something conspicuously erected', involved in sense 1, would account for several of them; others may be referred to the idea of 'something permanent, fixed, or stationary', generalized from sense 9. Etymological association with Stand v. has, however, certainly affected the whole group, and it is possible that in some uses the word should be regarded as an alteration of Stander. The senses of this branch are almost confined to English OF. has estandart some kind of torch (rare—1), and WFlem has standaart mill-post (De Bo; standaert, Kilian), but the relation of these to the English uses is obscure]

I. A military or naval ensign

1 A flag, sculptured figure, or other conspicuous object, raised on a pole to indicate the rallying-point of an army (or fleet), or of one of its component portions, the distinctive ensign of a king, great noble, or commander, or of a nation or city.

† Standard general the principal standard of an army

In Eng the word appears first with reference to the 'Battle of the Standard' in 1138. A contemporary writer, Richard of Hexham, relates the victory of the battle, and describes the 'standard' there used as a mast of a ship, with flags at the top, mounted in the middle of a machine which was brought into the field He quotes a Latin couplet written on the occasion, which says that the standard was so called from 'stand', because 'it was there that valour took its stand to conquer or die'

2. (More fully Court of Star-chamber) A court, chiefly of criminal jurisdiction, developed in the 15th c from the judicial sitting of the King's Council in the Star Chamber at Westminster. The judges were the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper, the Lord Treasurer, the Lord Privy Seal, and any peers that chose to attend. The rules of procedure of the court rendered it a powerful instrument in the hands of a sovereign or a ministry desirous of using it for purposes of tyranny, and the abuse of it under James I and Charles I have made it a proverbial type of an arbitrary and oppressive tribunal. It was abolished by an Act of the Long Parliament in 1641.

App. first used with reference to the bill of 1775 'for restraining Trade and Commerce with the New England Colonies', which the Opposition denounced as intended to combat the rebellion by producing a famine in which the innocent would suffer equally with the guilty. The remark of Mr. Dundas (Hansard's Deb., 6 March 1775), that he was 'afraid' that the famine spoken of 'would not be produced by this Act', excited great indignation, and in 1781 Walpole and Mason call him by the nicknames 'Starvation Dundas' and 'Starvation'. The statement of Mitford (Corr. Walpole & Mason, 1851, II 396) that Dundas himself used the word is in itself not improbable, but appears to lack confirmation. The verb starve occurs several times in the reports of speeches on the bill, but the sb. does not appear.]
