

TIGHT BINDING BOOK

UNIVERSAL LIBRARY

OU_210994

UNIVERSAL
LIBRARY

OSMANIA UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

Call No. 823/5430 Accession No. 7319

Author Scott

Title Old Mortality

This book should be returned on or before the date last marked below.

EDITOR'S INTRODUCTION.

Sketch of Sir Walter Scott's Life.

WALTER SCOTT was born in Edinburgh in 1771. He belonged to a family which had been famous 011 the Borders for many generations, and on the Borders he spent much of his early childhood. The Scotts had been a fighting clan, and Walter's father was the first of the race to settle down to a town life and a quiet occupation. One of his ancestors, six generations back, was the Walter Scott commemorated in The Lay of the Last Minstrel. Of another ancestor, less remote, he writes in Marmion:

The simple sire could only boast
He had been loyal to his cost;
The banished race of kings revered,
And lost his lands. . . .

Sir Walter inherited the family bias towards the Stuart race, and to it we owe his kindly treatment of Stuart Kings in many of his novels.

While a boy at school he was a worshipper of the past, and, as he tells us in an account of himself, "with my head on fire for chivalry, I was a Cavalier; I was a Tory; I hated resbyterianism and admired Montrose and his victorious Highlanders." But, he adds, in all these views "there was no real conviction on my part. I took up politics at that period from an idea that the Cavalier creed was the more gentlemanlike of the two."

When a mere boy Scott was employed in his father's office, and his Border novel, Redgauntlet, is supposed to give a fairly accurate picture of the relations between father and son. Under his father he began his legal studies, which he continued in the law classes of Edinburgh University, and as he grew up he attracted increasing attention on account of his marvellous memory, his industry, and the vast stores of romantic material with which he filled his mind. His reading was almost all in the direction of military exploits, romance or mediaeval legend, or the Border songs of his own country. In Edinburgh he spent many years and made himself familiar with society of every rank. Edinburgh was then the headquarters of the Scottish nobility, as well as of literary and professional society. This early training bore fruit later in the Waverley Novels, some of which give valuable pictures of life in the city during the 17th and 18th centuries.

In 1799 Scott, having become a barrister, was appointed* Sheriff of Selkirkshire, an office which placed him in a position of independence. He had previously augmented his slender means by literary work, and about this time induced an old school-mate, James Ballantyne, to start a printing business in Edinburgh. Scott entered into secret partnership with James Ballantyne, and in 1809 he started the publishing and bookselling firm of John Ballantyne & Co. Both Ballantynes were men of poor business ability, and to Scott's unfortunate association with them, as well as to his delicate sense of honour, are to be attributed the misfortunes of his later days.

"EDITOR'S INTRODUCTION.

The first product of Scott's labour printed by Ballantyne was The Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border (1802), a collection of ballads of which the whole edition of eighteen hundred copies was sold within a year. This book gained him at once a high literary name, and waff shortly followed by entirely original work, The Lay of the Last Minstrel in 1805. Suott received a large sum for this work, and still more for Marmion and The Lord of the Isles. From 1805 till his death Scott was the foremost and one of the most popular men of letters in Great Britain. His poems brought money and fame greater than any writer of English poetry had ever received. The longer poems are of the nature of verse-romances, and The Lady of the Lake has been described as "more of a versified novelette than of a poem." In all these poems Scott appears as a poet of description, of action, and of narration. From such works he turned to romances in prose.

In 1814 appeared his first novel, Waverley] and a serious crisis in the affairs of John Ballantyne & Co. occurring at the same time, whereby Scott waa brought to the verge of bankruptcy, he was led to turn to novel-writing as a means of obtaining fortune as well as fame. From 1814 until near his death he continued to write novel after novel, as well as editing and doing other miscellaneous work for the Ballantynes to print and for Archibald Constable to publish. Towards the close of his life he produced Tales of a Grandfather and a Life of Napoleon, at which he laboured when physically unfit to work, Scott "practically created the historical novel; and, what is more, he elaborated it to such an extent that no really important additions to his scheme have yet been made" (Saintsbury). Generally speaking, they are Scottish novels, and are remarkable for their correct descriptions of manners, character, and speech of the writer's native land. Ivanhoe, ICenilworlh, and the Talisman, some of the most popular, however, contain no Scottish scenes, though the hero of the last named is a prominent Scotsman. On the other hand, Guy Mannering, The Antiquary, and St. lionaris Well, three novels of the highest order, are not in any way historical.

Although Scott wrote twenty-two historical novels besides other historical and biographical works, he was not an extremely accurate historical writer. He usually makes his history suit his story, and does not scruple to introduce anachronisms which are quite unnecessary and somewhat trying to the reader.

The Waverlcy Novels were at first published anonymously, and many conjectures were made as to the name of the author. The most ingenious critic, writing under the name of Adolphus, cleverly argued that the author of Marmion and The Lady of the Lake must be the author of Waverley. The secret was divulged when the author's misfortunes rendered further concealment impossible, and made it necessary for him to appeal to the world for which he had written so much.

Before Scott reached middle age, his poems and novels had made him a rich man. He was created a baronet in 1820, and was the first baronet made by George IV. on his accession to the throne. With his wealth Scott began to build his now well-known seat, Abbotsford, on the banks of the Tweed. His house and his expenses, limited by no prudential considerations, grew with his fortunes, which were dependent on his connection with reckless and unscrupulous men incompetent to manage their business and ever ready to trade on Scott's own industry and fame. In 1825, Constable, the publisher of most of the novels, failed; with him the Ballantynes came to ruin, and the whole of Scott's fortune, except a little settled on his wife and children, became liable for Ballantyne's debts. He now had nothing but his public appointments to depend on. Not content with his own liabilities, he set to work to pay debts which were not really his own. At the age of fifty-five he undertook to pay debts amounting to £117,000, and the few remaining years of his life were spent in clearing off a large portion of this sum.

Misfortunes accumulated upon Sir Walter during his last years. His wife died within a few months of Constable's failure, his children were scattered, and his own health gave way. He worked on in desperation in opposition to medical advice; and after a fruitless visit to Italy, undertaken to recruit his failing strength, he returned to Abbotsford in 1832, where he died on the 21st of September.

He left debts to the amount of thirty thousand pounds, which were all paid off within fifteen years by the publisher through the value of the copyrights which the great writer had left behind him, and in May, 1847, the small estate of Abbotsford was cleared of debt.

Old Mortality.

Publication. " Tales of my Landlord, collected and arranged by Jedediah Cleishbotham, Schoolmaster and Parish Clerk of Gandrcleugli," was the title of a series of novels written by Sir Walter Scott under the assumed name of Mr. Peter Patieson. They included The Black Dwarf (1816), Old Mortality (1816), The Heart of Midlothian (1818), The Bride of Lammermoor (1819), The Legend of Montrose (1819), Count Robert of Paris (1831), and Castle Dangerous (1831).

Analysis of the Story.

CHAPTER

- I. Preliminary. Explanation of the Title, and a description of Old Mortality.
- II. A wappenschaw of the Upper Ward of Clydesdale on the 5th May, 1679, at which are present the Lord Lieutenant, Lady Margaret, and Miss Edith Bellenden, Lord Evandale, Henry Morton, and others—Lady Bellenden's quota to the muster includes Guse Gibbie.
- III. The game of the popinjay—Henry Morton defeats Lord Evandale and wins the distinction of Captain of the popinjay—when leaving the field Guae Gibbio cuts a sorry figure.
- IV. Niel Blane the Piper—his instructions to his daughter Jenny—the company at the Howff—Serjeant Bothwell's behaviour to Balfuur of Burley—their wrestling bout—news of the murder of Archbishop Sharpe.

- V. Burley accompanies Morton from the Howff and is lodged in the loft at Milnwood—Mrs. Alison Wilson.
- VI. At early dawn Morton wakes Burley and sets him on the road for the moors—Henry Morton tells his uncle of his desire to go abroad and follow his father's profession as a soldier.
- VII. Lady Margaret dismisses Mause and Cuddie Headrigg from her service—conversation between Mause and Cuddie.
- VIII. The Headriggs are received at Milnwood—the visit of Bothwell and his troopers to Milnwood resulting in the arrest of Henry Morton and the expulsion of the Headriggs.
- IX. Bothwell (with Morton as his prisoner) calls at Tillietudlem, and obtains refreshment for himself and his troopers.
- X. Edith Bellenden and Jenny Denmson visit Morton when he is in the charge of Tom Halliday—Edith sends a letter to her uncle, Major Bellenden by Goose Gibbie.
- XI. Major Bellenden arrives at Tillietudlem for breakfast, and helps to entertain Claverhouse at the castle.
- XII. Claverhouse at Tillietudlem—arrival of Lord Evandale—Morton in irons is examined by Claverhouse, and
- XIII. condemned to death—Evandale pleads successfully for Morton's life—Morton is led away by Bothwell—Claverhouse and Evandale set out against the Covenanters.
- XIV. Morton's conversation with Cuddie—who explains how he came to be a prisoner also—the preaching of Kettledrummle and Mause.
- XV. The position of the insurgents on London-hill—Claverhouse's council of war—Cornet Grahame is sent forward with a flag of truce to summon the insurgents to surrender.
- XVI. The Cornet is shot by Burley—the battle at Drumclog—Bothwell is slain by Burley, and Claverhouse is compelled to retreat.
- XVII. The flight of Claverhouse—the escape of Morton, Mause, Cuddie, and Kettledrummle—Morton saves Evandale from Burley.
- XVIII. Sermons by Gabriel Kettledrummle, and Ephraim Macbriar, while Burley and his leaders hold a council of war.
- XIX. Major Bellenden hears of the rout of the Royalists and fortifies Tillietudlem:

- XX. Claverhouse returns to Tillietudlem, leaves 16 men with Corporal Inglis to garrison the castle, and then marches to Glasgow.
- XXI. Morton is chosen to be a captain of the host of the Covenanters, and is induced by Burley to accept the appointment.
- XXII. Morton is introduced by Burley to the council of war and installed in his office of leader and counsellor—Kettledrummy, Poundtext, and Habakkuk Mucklewrath give vent to their feelings and disgust Morton. Morton leaves the council, Builey follows him and makes excuses for the fiinatics.
- XXIII. Early next morning Cuddie appears with spoils of war, a portmanteau, clothes, two horses, and Bothwell's pocket-book—is informed by Builey that from the council a c-ommittpe of six, viz , Burley, Morton, Macbriar, KettledruminJe, Poundtext, and the Laird of Langdale have been chosen—after conference this Committee decides to rest for the day, and next day to detach part of the army to reduce Tillietudlem, while the main body inarches to Glasgow.
- XXIV. On the morning after Drumclog Lord Evandale reaches Tillietudlem wick and wounded. He tells how he owed his life to Morton—Jenny Penmsun tells Edith the news that Morton and Cuddie have joined the Covenanters.
- XXV. The Covenanters appear before Tillietudlem, the Laird of Langdale bearing a flag of truce demands the surrender of the Castle, and carries a letter to Major Bellenden from Morton—the storming of the Castle.
- XXVI. Morton commands the main part of the army—his first attack on Glasgow is unsuccessful—Claverhouse and Ross evacuate Glasgow and march to Edinburgh—the insurgents enter Glasgow—the Duke of Monmouth is made commander of the Government troops.
- XXVII. Morton returns to Milnwood and learns that Evandale is Barley's prisoner, and to be hanged next day unless the Castle surrenders—he hurries with Poundtext to Tillietudlein,
- XXVIII. Morton releases Evandale on parole ; Evandale is to induce Major Bellenden to surrender the Castle, to offer the Major, the ladies, and all that leave the Castle a safe conduct to Edinburgh, and to recommend to his Grace, the Lord Lisutenant of Scotland, the Petition and Remonstrance containing the grievances of the

- insurgents—Evaiidale l caches the Castle just in time to quell the mutiny of Inghs and the troopers
- XXIX The Bellendens leavn the Castle, Morton accompanys them for a tune, and then leaves Evandale to explain hia conduct
- XXX Morton returns to Hamilton—Burley is furious at the releaae of Ev.mdale—he seizes plate, valuables, and papers at the Caatle—Poundtext hurries to Hamilton, Burley anil the rest of the Cameroniana follow—a conference is hold—Morton is sent as envoy to the camp of the Duke of Monmouth—Morton's interview with Monmouth, Dalzell, and Clavprhouse
- XXXI. On hia letuin Moiton finds the camp in confusion and rent with dissensions : he exhorts the Covenanters to defend Bothwell Budge, Burley supports him
- XXXII. The Battle of Bothwell Bridge—the Covenanters are defeated, pursued, and slam—Morton and Cuddie contrive to escape to the moorland.
- XXXIII. Morton and Cuddle seek shelter in a farmhouse in which are Macbriar, Mucklewrath, and several wild Western Whigs—Cuddle escapes through the window and flics for help—Morton is overpowered, bound, and condemned to die when the clock strikes the twelfth hour—Claverhouse (thanks to Cuddie) airives in the nick of time with a troop of soldiers and rescues Morton.
- XXXTV. Morton becomes Claveihonsets prisoner on parole—three Whig prisoners are shot by the order of Claverhouse—Mucklewrath curses Claveihouse and dies.
- XXXV. Claverhouae and Morton ride together and converae freely—a message is brought to Claverhouse from Basil Olifant, a kinsman, but an enemy of the Bellendens—they reach Edinburgh—a procession of prisoners and of trophies through the i-ity—Claveihouse, Morton, and Cuddie make their way to the Council—meeting of Mause and Cuddie.
- XXXVI. At the Council Morton is exiled during the King's pleasure—Cuddie receives a free pardon—Macbriar is tortured with the boot and then condemned to be hanged—Morton is put on board at Leith for Holland
-
- XXXVTT. The events described above occupied only 4 months; the narrative reopens about 10 years later, in 1689, the year after the Revolution—Morton calls at Fairy Knowe and learns from Cuddie Heachrigg and his wife that the Bell endens have been dispossessed of Tillietudie in by Basil Ohfant, and that Lord Evandale in about to marry Miss Edith.

XXXVIII. Morton slept at Fairy Knowe ; Miss Bellenden and Lady Emily Hamilton arrived early the next morning—soon after Evandale arrived—told Edith of Dundee's (Claverhouse's) death at Kilhecrankie, and asked her to marry him before he goes to the war—Morton appeared at the window—Edith thought she saw Morton's ghost, and refused to wed Evandale.

XXXIX. Morton fled from Fairy Knowe, crossed the Clyde, and made his way to Milnwood, where he is recognised by old Ailie.

XL. Morton tells Ailie the story of his life abroad, and then travels on to NIB! Blanc the Piper's Howff,

XLI. Morton drinki and talks with Niel Blane, and then ia directed to Bessie Madlire's

XLII. Bessie Maclure tells Morton much of Lord Evandale, Basil Ohfant, and Burley

XLIII. Morton is guided to the Linn by little Peggy—he crosses the bridge to Barley's cave—is attacked by Burley but escapes in safety -Bessie Maclure meets Morton and Peggy on their return to warn him of the troopeis' conspiracy against Lord Evandale—Morton overhears the conversation of Ingolia and another dragoon.

XLIV. Lord Evandale bids farewell to Edith—is encountered by Olifant, Burley, and others, and is shot—Morton ridPS up with Wittenbold and a company of foreign dragoons- Olifant is killed—Burley is pursued, wounded, and drowned (grappling a dragoon) in the Clyde—Evandale is carried to the house and expires after joining the hands of Morton and Edith.

CONCLUSION. Olifant died without a will—Lady Margaret recovered her estates—Gudyill is reinstated at the Castle—Cuddie returned in cultivate the mains of Tillietudlem and to occupy his original cottage—Morton and Miss Bellenden were married after several months of mourning for Lord Evandale—Mrs. Wilson remained at Milnwood, and once a year Mr. and Mrs. Melville Morton dined there in the great wainscoated chamber Niel Blane lived to a good old age. It is said that Goose Gibbie was whipped through Hamilton for stealing poultry, but there is some doubt about liis fate.

Characters. Of all Scott's works, Old Mortality is very nearly, if not quite, the finest. It has been said that the most striking excellencies of Scott's romances are "the ease and truth with which he painted the life, not of his own time, but of days long past." This is particularly true of Old Mortality, a story dealing with a period of history nearly a century and a half anterior to the time of its composition. All the scenery, the dress, and the customs of the distant past are described exactly : while the leading historical characters, Monmouth, Claverhouse, Dalziel, Lauderdale, and Sharpe, are sketched so clearly and well, that we feel that we are studying the history of men and not merely of constitutions, systems, and religions. And not only does he draw correct historical portraits of individuals, but he enters thoroughly into the spirit of the times he describes. These days of the Restoration were days of gloom, of persecution, and of bloodshed ; such times produce stern, harsh, uncompromising types of men and women. It is only necessary to name Manse, the Covenanter, Mucklewrath, the Madman ; Balfour, the Cameronian ; and Bothwell, the Serjeant ; and hard, fierce faces come before us of unflinching zealots, virulent fanatics, unscrupulous assassins, reckless debauchees, hating, cursing, killing with a text or an oath on their lips. Such were the actors on this stage of religious strife ; the picture is sombre, but it is true.

If Scott had drawn nothing but these gloomy fanatics, he might have given us a true history of the Scottish Covenanters, but not a novel for the nineteenth century. Moreover, as Ruskin writes, " it is a constant law, that the greatest men, whether poets or historians, live entirely 1" their own age, and that the greatest fruits of their work are gathered out of their own age . . . all of them utterly regardless of anachronism and minor error of every kind, but getting always vital truth out of the vital present." Now Scott was both a poet and a historian, and just as Dante paints Italy in the thirteenth century ; Chaucer, England in the fourteenth; and Tintoret, Venice in the sixteenth century; so Scott paints Scotland at the beginning of the nineteenth century. And in this inimitable of Old Mortality we have many characters that only in outward dress are in harmony with the age in which they are made to live; their actions, speech, feelings, and thoughts are all civilised and refined to the fashion of Scott's own time. Most, indeed, of the characters that are not real persons, but actually created by Scott, and bearing fictitious names, are only his neighbours idealised: the hard-fisted laird, the canny inn-keeper, the thrifty housewives, the simple peasants, are such as might be met in Scotland even now, while Lord Evandale, Henry Morton, and Edith Bellenden, irreproachable in their chivalrous and high-minded purity, could hardly have lived amid the selfish licentiousness of the Restoration and reign of " the Merry Monarch."

But though Scott does not make his hero and heroine in this romance think, speak, and act in accordance with the real life of the age to which he transports them, he at anyrate transports us with them, and makes us understand better what is meant by public life, political issues, and religious strifes : and in this way he does the work of the true historian. How true to history his portraits of public men are may be proved by comparing his sketches of Ulverhouse, Monmouth, Dalziel, and Lauderdale with the descriptions given below from Ranke and Burton.

Every true lover of Scott will appreciate the following extracts from Buskin's Fiction Fair and Fold:

" In the work of the great masters death is always either heroic, deserved, or quiet and natural (unless their purpose be totally and deeply tragic, when collateral meaner death is permitted, like that of Polonius or Boderigo). In Old Mortality, four of the deaths, Bothwell's, Ensign Grahame's, Macbriar's, and Evandale's, are magnificently heroic; Burley's and Oliphant's Irmg deserved, and swift; the troopers', met in the discharge of their military duty, and the old miser's, as gentle as the passing of a cloud, and almost beautiful in its last words of—now unselfish—care."

' Ailie' (he aye ca'd me Ailie, we were auld jicquaintance), 'Ailie, take ye care and hand the gear weel thegither, for the name of Morton of Milnwood's gane out like the last sough of an auld sang.' And sae he fell out o' ae dwam into another, and ne'er spak a word mair, unless it were something we cou'dna mak out, about a dipped candle being gude enough to see to dee wi'. He could ne'er tide to see a moulded ane, and there was ans, by ill luck, on the table. . . .

" All healthy and helpful literature sets simple bars between right and wrong; assumes the possibility, in men and women, of having healthy minds in healthy bodies, and loses no time in the diagnosis of fever or dyspepsia in either,, least of all in the particular kind of fever which signifies the ungoverned excess of any appetite or passion. The 'dulness' which many modern readers inevitably feel, and some modern blockheads think it creditable to allege, in Scott, consists not a little in his absolute purity from every loathsome element or excitement of the lower passions ; so that people who live habitually in Satyric or hircine conditions of thought find him as insipid as they would a picture of Angelica's. The accurate and trenchant separation between him and the common railroad station novelist is that, in his total method of conception, only lofty character is worth describing at all; and it becomes interesting, riot by its faults, but by the difficulties and accidents of the fortune through which it passes, while in the railway novel, interest is obtained with the vulgar reader for the vilest character, because the author describes carefully to his recognition the blotches, burrs and pimplea in which the paltry nature resembles his own. . . .

" The groups of personages whose conduct in the Scott romance is definitely affected by religious conviction, may be arranged broadly, as those of the actual world, under these following heads:

1. The lowest group consists of persons who, believing in the general truths of Evangelical religion, accommodate them to their passions, and are capable, by gradual increase in depravity, of any crime or violence. I am not going to include these in our present study. Trumbull (Iredgauntlet), Trusty Tomkyns (Woodstock), Burley (Old Mortality) are three of the principal types.

2. The next rank above these consists of men who believe firmly and truly enough to be restrained from any conduct which they clearly recognise as criminal, but whose natural selfishness renders them incapable of understanding the morality of the Bible above a certain point, and whose imperfect powers of thought leave them liable in many directions to the warping of self-interest or of small temptations.

Fairservice. Blattergowl. Kettledrummle.
Gifted Gilfillan.

3. The third order consists of men naturally just and honest, but with little sympathy and much pride, in whom their religion, while in the depth of it supporting their best virtues, brings out on the sin face all their worst faults, and makes them censorious, tiresome, and often fearfully mischievous.

Illichie Moniplies. David Deans. Mause Hedrigg.

4. The enthusiastic type, leading to missionary effort, often to martyrdom.

Warden in Monastery. Colonel Gardiner. Ephraim Macbriar. Joshua Geddes.

5. Highest type, fulfilling daily duty; always gentle, entirely firm, the comfort and strength of all around them; merciful to every human fault, and submissive without anger to every human oppression.

Kachael Geddes. Jeanie Deans. Bessie Mac-lure, in Old Mortality—the Queen of all"

Historical Personages. The Duke of Lauderdale was a scholar and a great reader, with the full command of the intellectual stores thus at his disposal. But both in the spirit and the flesh he was an uncouth and unlovable figure. A Covenanter, he could scatter profane jests and live a profligate life. His figure was large and full, with a broad, bloated face. His unmistakable sensuality was relieved by touches of the ferocious and sarcastic, [Burton.]

He was one of the most learned ministers who have ever lived, perfectly acquainted with, and clearly determined about all questions of religious politics which came up, absolutely devoted to the King, to whom he had attached himself simply because he deviated from his father's system, otherwise rough and domineering to everyone, obstinate in his views. He was a man of disagreeable appearance—his red hair hanging in disorder over his forehead. . . . The man who conducted Scottish affairs as Secretary, John Maitland, Lord Lauderdale, was more entirely at one with the King than any of the English ministers, in the object of rendering possible for the Crown a freer action than was permitted by the preponderance of the Episcopal system. What was avoided in England occurred in Scotland, in June 1669, a royal decree (the Indulgence) was published, signed by Lauderdale, in consequence of which a large number of Presbyterian ministers who had been expelled from their posts were restored. . . . Lauderdale went himself to Edinburgh as Royal Commissioner, and had a complete success. A recognition of the royal nipremacy was carried through which gave to the Crown an almost absolute authority over the Church. . . . lint this authority was not a little shattered by the rising of the Covenanters, in 1679. [Bankc.]

John Grahame of Claverhouse was a Scottish laird from Angus (Forfarshire), of middle rank and moderate property, but one who in spite of that disadvantage had already played one of the first parts in the country. He was a soldier by profession, and had acquired the military education of that century under Turenne and William Prince of Orange in the campaigns of the war between France and the Netherlands. He had then, apparently on William's recommendation, entered into the service of the Duke of York, and had gained his absolute confidence. Claverhouse was about his person in Scotland, and during his journeys to England, accompanied him on his long walks, or deliberated with him in the retirement of the cabinet as to what was immediately to be desired in reference to persons and affairs, and what advice should accordingly be given to King Charles. He obtained over James the incalculable influence of a military coadjutor who adhered completely to the political points of view of his prince. In this position Claverhouse came into manifold relations with the high nobility ; he lived with its members without, however, abandoning himself to the debaucheries which were then common in Scotland; he remained always temperate and morally blameless. In reference to Charles II. and the Duke of York, his principle, at least, was the correct one: to be at once a subject and a man of honour—that is to say, never to neglect the interest of the crown for the sake of a personal advantage, never to yield to any influence in this matter, not even to the most tender which can sway a man's heart, but withal never to do anything exceptionable or debasing in order to gain favour of the prince. No trace was observed in him of that leaning to Catholicism which many of his friends professed after the accession of James II. : yet even he would not suffer the King's religion to be reviled in the pulpits, he held fast to the Episcopalian and royalist system, as it was established by the Scottish Parliament amid the opposition of parties in the year 1685; while he did not display any leaning towards Catholicism, he showed a hostility to the Cameronians which went so far as to become cruelty. The laws themselves were cruel. To the rise of a republican and fanatical party, which proclaimed open war against the Crown and the King, and revenge and death to their adherents, the Government opposed a system of oppression which subjected all those who refused to abjure the principles of the party above described to a summary jurisdiction from which even female delinquents were not exempted. Claverhouse did not hesitate, in presence of the hostile manner which the fanatics displayed, to execute the bloody laws and ordinances of the ruling powers. When the invasion of the second Argyll set all recalcitrant elements in a ferment, Claverhouse held districts in subjection which were especially strong in their views. Who can ever say in such a case whether the law is merely carried out, or whether personal arbitrariness and even passion intervene? Claverhuuse practised an inexorable rigour which was purposely directed against the men of reputation in the country • he said that to get rid of a laird was better than to put to death a hundred common people. . . . He never lost sight for a moment of the peculiar connexion of Episcopalianism and Koyahsm in Scotland. . . . Dundee combined the rigour which discipline demands with the indulgence which was necessary among these rude forces (of the Highland clans); though inexorable and even cruel to republicans and fanatics (fanatismi et perdudlimis terror, malleus, fulmen) he was in the same degree among the troops who followed him accessible, familiar, and thoughtful for their comfort. [Iianke's History of EnylamL]

The Duke of Monmouth was sometimes called Duke of IJucclench, in Scotland, from his marriage with the heiress of that house. It has been said that he was sent in command of the army against the Covenanters in order to render him unpopular in Scotland; but if this really was the policy of the selection, it was a mistake. He created a place for himself in the hearts of the people at large, and among the persecuted he was a relief from their other enemies. The source of the intensity of the bitterness throughout the contest was that the enemies generally confronting each other were not two nations but two opposite parties of the same people, each detesting the other with a hatred stronger than the hateil of national animosity. It was well, when this had come to its climax, that one exempt from the prejudices and hatreds of both parties should be sent as the chastiser and pacificator. [Burton.]

In Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel, Monmouth is thus described under the character of Absalom:

"Of all his numerous progeny was none
So beautiful, so brave as Absalom.

.
Whate'er he did was done with so much ease
In him alone 'twas natural to please :
His motions all accompanied with grace,
And Paradise wan opened in his face."

It was impossible, in the condition in which England was, to re-establish the old system by force : least of all could Lauderdale himself have been sent to Scotland for this purpose. Under the influence of certain Scots who were present, and who asserted with one voice that the refractory temper might be allayed by some slight concessions, the King determined to entrust the mission to his legitimatised son, Monmouth, Shaftesbury's friend, who himself shared the tendencies of the day. Everyone knew his position and his instructions ; when he arrived he received the support of the country. Without difficulty he dispersed the Covenanters, and re-established universal obedience. The regulations which he then made, although he still forbade the field conventicles, because disguised Jesuits found admittance to them, otherwise breathed mildness and indulgence, and were favourable to the Presbyterians; he appeared as the benefactor and friend of Scotland, and wished to appear so. [Ranke.]

Thomas Dalziel of Binns, had served abroad ; and of all the foreign adventurers, who had brought evil ways from foreign institutions and practices, he had brought home the largest stock of ferocity and rapacity. Others had chiefly served in the centre of Europe and in the Thirty Years' War. They learned enough of evil there; but Ualziel had been doing the work of the barbarous Muscovite, far off at the back of Europe. Of the nature of that work, there was only the general notion that it brought the skill of civilised Europe to aid in perpetrating the cruelties and brutalities of the Calmuc. Dalziel was taunted with his foreign service, and could return the taunts in his own way. At the council-table he struck a man under examination in the teeth with the hilt of his sword so as to draw blood. He had provocation enough—he had been called "a Muscovy beast who roasted men." It did not make him more merciful that he was an honest and ardent fanatic for royalty. Of this he carried a perpetual sign in a beard which had grown since the death of his beloved master, Charles I. [Burton.]

OLD MORTALITY.

CHAPTER 1.

P R E L I M I N A R Y.

"Why seeks he with unwearied toil
Through death's dim walks to urge his Way,
Reclaim his long-asserted spoil,
And lead oblivion into day?

LANGO HORNE.

"MOST readers," says the Manuscript of Mr. Pattieson, "must have witnessed with delight the joyous burst which attends the dismissing of a village school on a fine summer evening. The buoyant spirit of childhood, repressed with so much difficulty during the tedious hours of discipline, may then be seen to explode, as it were, in shout and song and frolic, as the little urchins join in groups on their playground, and arrange their matches of sport for the evening. But there is one individual who partakes of the relief afforded by the moment of dismissal, whose feelings are not so obvious to the eye of the spectator, or so apt to receive his sympathy. I mean the teacher himself, who, stunned with the hum, and soffocated with the closeness of his schoolroom, has spent the whole day (himself against a host) in controlling petu-lance, exciting indifference to action, striving to enlighten stupidity, and labouring to soften obstinacy; and whose very powers of intellect have been confounded by hearing the same dull lesson repeated a hundred times by rote, and only varied by the various blunders of the reciters. Even the flowers of classic genius, with which his solitary fancy is most gratified, have been rendered degraded, in his imagination, by their connection with tears, with errors, and with punishment; so that the Eclogues of Virgil and Odes of Horace are each inseparably allied in association with the sullen figure and monotonous recitation of some blubbering schoolboy. If to these mental distresses are added a delicate frame of body, and a mind ambitious of some higher distinction than that of being the tyrant of childhood, the reader may have some slight conception of the relief which a solitary walk, in the cool of a fine summer evening, affords to the head which has ached, and the nerves which have been shattered, for so many hours, in plying the irksome task of public instruction.

" To me these evening strolls have been the happiest hours of an unhappy life; and if any gentle reader shall hereafter find pleasure in perusing these lucubrations, I am not unwilling he should know that the plan of them has been usually traced in those moments, when relief from toil and clamour, combined with the quiet scenery around me, has disposed my mind to the task of composition.

" My chief haunt, in these hours of golden leisure, is the banks of the small stream, which, winding through a 'lone vale of green bracken,' passes in front of the village school-house of Gandercleugh. For the first quarter of a mile, perhaps, I may be disturbed from my meditations, in order to return the scrape, or doffed bonnet, of such stragglers among my pupils as fish for trouts or minnows in the little brook, or seek rushes and wild-flowers by its margin. Bub beyond the space I have mentioned, the juvenile anglers do not, after sunset, voluntarily extend their excursions. The cause is, that farther up the narrow valley, and in a recess which seems scooped out of the side of the steep heathy bank, there is a deserted burial-ground, which the little cowards are fearful of approaching in the twilight. To me, however, the place has an inexpressible charm. It has been long the favourite termination of my walks, and, if my kind patron forgets not his promise, will (and probably at no very distant day) be my final resting-place after my mortal pilgrimage.¹

It is a spot which possesses all the solemnity of feeling attached to a burial-ground, without exciting those of a more unpleasing description. Having been very little used for many years, the few hillocks which rise above the level plain are covered with the same short velvet turf. (The monuments, of which there are not above seven or eight, are half sunk in the ground, and overgrown with moss. No newly erected tomb disturbs the sober serenity of our reflections by reminding us of recent calamity, and no rank-springing grass forces upon our imagination the recollection that it owes its dark luxuriance to the foul and festering remnants of mortality which ferment beneath. The daisy which sprinkles the sod, and the harebell which hangs over it, derive their pure nourishment from the dew of heaven, and their growth impresses us with no degrading or disgusting recollections. Death has indeed been here, and its traces are before us ; but they are softened and deprived of their horror by our distance from the period when they have been first impressed. Those who sleep beneath are only connected with us by the reflection that they have once been what we now are, and that, as their relics are now identified with their mother earth, ours shall, at some future period, undergo the same transformation

¹ Note, by Mr, Jedediah Cleishbotham. —That I kept my plight in this melancholy matter with my deceased and lamented friend, appeareth from a handsome headstone, erected at my proper charges in this spot, bearing the name and calling of Peter pattieson, with the date of his nativity and sepulture, together also with a testimony of his merits, attested by myself, as his superior and patron.—J. C.

" Yet, although the moss has been collected on the most modern of these humble tombs during four generations of mankind, the memory of some of those who sleep beneath them is still held in reverent remembrance. It is true that upon the largest, and to an antiquary the most interesting, monument of the group, which bears the effigies of a doughty knight in his hood of mail, with his shield hanging on his breast, the armorial bearings are defaced by time, and a few worn-out letters may be read at the pleasure of the decipherer, Dns. Johan—de Hamel,—or Johan—de Lamd—. And it is also true, that of another tomb, richly sculptured with an ornamental cross, mitre, and pastoral staff, tradition can only aver that a certain nameless bishop lies interred there. But upon other two stones, which lie beside, may still be read in rude prose, and ruder rhyme, -the history of those who sleep beneath them. They belong, we are assured by the epitaph, to the class of persecuted Preabyterians who afforded a melancholy subject for history in the times of Charles II. and his successor.¹ In returning from the battle of Pentland Hills (3) a party of the insurgents had been attacked in this glen by a small detachment of the king's troops, and three or four either killed¹ the skirmish, or shot after being made prisoners, as rebels taken with arms in their hands. The peasantry continued to attach to the tombs of those victims of prelacy an honour which they do not render to more splendid mausoleums, and when they point them out to their sons, and narrate the fate of the sufferers, usually conclude by exhorting them to be ready, should tunes call for it, to resist to the diiiiith in the cause of civil and religious liberty, like their brave forefathers.

"Although I am far from venerating the peculiar tenets asserted by those who call themselves the followers of those men, and whose intolerance and narrow-minded bigotry are at least as conspicuous as their devotional zeal, yet it is without depreciating the memory of those sufferers, many of whom united the independent sentiments of a Hampden with the suffering zeal of a Hooper or Latimer. On the other hand, it would be unjust to forget that many even of those who had been most active in crushing what they conceived the rebellious and seditious spirit of those unhappy wanderers, displayed themselves, when called upon to suffer for their political and religious opinions, the same daring and devoted zeal, tintured, in their case, with chivalrous loyalty, as in the former with republican enthusiasm. It has often been remarked of the Scottish character that the stubbornness with which it is moulded shows most to advantage in adversity, when it seems akin to the native sycamore of their hills, which scorns to be biassed in its mode of growth even by the influence of the prevailing wind, but, shooting its branches with equal boldness in every direction, shows no weather-side to the storm, and may be broken, but can never be bended. It must be understood that I speak of my countrymen as they fall under my own observation. When in foreign countries, I have been informed that they are more docile. But it is time to return from this digression.

¹ Jamas, Seventh king of Scotland of that name, and Second according to the numeration of the kings of England. — J. C

"One summer evening, as in a stroll such as I have described, I approached this deserted mansion of the dead, I was somewhat surprised to hear sounds distinct from those which usually soothe its solitude, the gentle chiding, namely, of the brook, and the sighing of the wind in the boughs of three gigantic ash-trees, which mark the cemetery. The clink of a hammer was, on this occasion, distinctly heard; and I entertained some alarm that a march-dike, long meditated by the two proprietors whose estates were divided by my favourite brook, was about to be drawn up the glen, in order to substitute its rectilinear deformity for the graceful winding of the natural boundary.¹ As I approached, I "deem it fitting that the reader should be apprised that this liminary boundary between the conterminous heritable property of his honour the Laird of Gandercleugh, and his honour the Laird of Gnsedub, was to have been in fashion an agger, or rather mums, of uncemented granite, called by the vulgar a "dry-stane dyke," surmounted, or coped, cespite viridi, i. e., with a sod-turf. Truly their honours fell into discord concerning two roods of marshy ground near the cove called the Bedral's Beild, and the controversy, having some years bygone been removed from before the judges of the land (with whom it abode long), was agreeably undeceived. An old man was seated upon the monument of the slaughtered Presbyterians, and busily employed in deepening, with his chisel, the letters of the inscription, which, announcing in scriptural language the promised blessings of futurity to be the lot of the slain, anathematised the murderers with corresponding violence. A blue bonnet of unusual dimensions covered the grey hairs of the pious workman. His dress was a large old-fashioned coat of the coarse cloth called 'hod-din-grey,' usually worn by the elder peasants, with waistcoat and breeches of the same; and the whole suit, though still in decent repair, had obviously seen a train of long service. Strong clouted shoes studded with hobnails, and 'gramoches' or 'leggings' made of thick black cloth, completed his equipment. Beside him, fed among the graves a pony, the companion of his journey, whose extreme whiteness, as well as its projecting bones and hollow eyes, indicated its antiquity. It was harnessed in the most simple manner, with a pair of branks, a hair tether, or halter, and a 'sunk,' or cushion of straw, instead of bridle and saddle. A canvas pouch hung around the neck of the animal, — for the purpose, probably, of containing the rider's tools and anything else he might have occasion to carry with him. Although I had never seen the old man before, yet from the singularity of his employment, and the style of his equipage, I had no difficulty in recognising a religious itinerant whom I had often heard talked of, and who was known in various parts of Scotland by the title of Old Mortality.

"Where this man was born, or what was his even unto the Great City of London and the Assembly of the Nobles therein, is, as I may say, adhuc in pendentis.—J. O.

8 TALES OF MY LANDLORD.

real name, I have never been able to learn ; nor are the motives which made him desert his home, and adopt the erratic mode of life which he pursued, known to me except very generally. According to the belief of most people, he was a native of either the country of Dumfries or Galloway and lineally descended from some of those champions of the Covenant whose deeds and sufferings were his favourite theme. He is said to have held, at one period of his life, a small moorland farm ; but, whether from pecuniary losses, or domestic misfortune, he had long renounced that and every other gainful calling. In the language of Scripture, he left his house, his home, and his kindred, and wandered about until the day of his death, a period of nearly thirty years.

" During this long pilgrimage the pious enthusiast regulated his circuit so as annually to visit the graves of the unfortunate Covenanters who suffered by the sword, or by the executioner, during the reigns of the two last monarchs of the Stewart line. These are most numerous in the western districts of Ayr, Galloway, and Dumfries ; but they are also to be found in other parts of Scotland, wherever the fugitives had fought, or fallen, or suffered by military or civil execution. Their tombs are often apart from all human habitation, in the remote moors and wilds to which the wanderers had fled for concealment. But wherever they existed, Old Mortality was sure to visit them when his annual round brought them within his reach. In the most lonely recesses of the mountains, the moor-fowl shooter has been often surprised to find him busied in cleaning the moss from the grey stones, renewing with his chisel the half-defaced inscriptions, and repairing the emblems of death with which these simple monuments are usually adorned. Motives of the most sincere, though fanciful, devotion induced the old man to dedicate so many years of existence to perform this tribute to the memory of the deceased warriors of the church. He considered himself as fulfilling a sacred duty while renewing to the eyes of posterity the decaying emblems of the zeal and sufferings of their forefathers, and thereby trimming, as it were, the beacon-light which was to warn future generations to defend their religion even unto blood.

"In all his wanderings the old pilgrim never seemed to need, or was known to accept, pecuniary assistance. It is true, his wants were very few, for wherever he went, he found ready quarters in the house of some Oameroman of his own sect, or of some other religious person. The hospitality which was reverentially paid to him' he always acknowledged by repairing the gravestones (if there existed any) belonging to the family or ancestors of his host. As the wanderer was usually to be seen bent on this pious task within the precincts of some country churchyard, or reclined on the solitary tombstone among the heath, disturbing the plover and the blackcock with the clink of his chisel and mallet, with his old white pony grazing by his side, he acquired, from his converse among the dead, the popular appellation of Old Mortality.

"The character of such a man could have in it little connection even with innocent gaiety. Yet, among those of his own religious persuasion, he is reported to have been cheerful. The descendants of persecutors, or those whom he supposed guilty of entertaining similar tenets, and the scoffers at religion by whom he was sometimes assailed, he usually termed the generation of vipers. Conversing with others he was grave and sententious, not without a cast of severity. But he is said never to have been observed to give way to violent passion, excepting upon one occasion, 'when a mischievous truant-boy defaced with a stone the nose of a cherub's face which the old man was engaged in retouching. I am in general a sparer of the rod, notwithstanding the maxim of Solomon, for which schoolboys have little reason to thank his memory; but on this occasion I deemed it proper to show that I did not hate the child. —But I must return to the circumstances attending my first interview with this interesting enthusiast

" In accosting Old Mortality, I did not fail to pay respect to his years and his principles, beginning my address by a respectful apology for interrupting his labours. The old man intermitted the operation of the chisel, took off his spectacles and wiped them, then, replacing them on his nose, acknowledged my courtesy by a suitable return. Encouraged by his affability, I intruded upon him some questions concerning the sufferers on whose monument he was now employed. To talk of the exploits of the Covenanters was the delight, as to repair their monuments was the business, of his life. He was profuse in the communication of all the minute information which he had collected concerning them, their wars, and their wanderings. One would almost have supposed he must have been their contemporary, and have actually beheld the passages which he related, so much had he identified his feelings and opinions with theirs, and so much had his narratives the circumstantiality of an eye-witness.

" 'We,' he said, in a tone of exultation, — 'we are the only true Whigs. Carnal men have assumed that triumphant appellation, following him whose kingdom is of this world. Which of them would sit six hours on a wet hillside to hear a godly sermon? I trow an hour o't wad staw them. They are ne'er a hair better than them that shamena to take upon themsells the persecuting name of blude-thirsty Tories. Self-seekers all of them, strivers after wealth, power, and worldly ambition, and forgetters alike of what has been dree'd and done by the mighty men who stood in the gap in the great day of wrath. Nae wonder they dread the accomplishment of what was spoken by the mouth of the worthy Mr. Peden (that precious servant of the Lord, none of whose words fell to the ground), that the French monzies¹ sail rise as fast in the glens of Ayr, and the kenns of Galloway, as ever the Highlandmen did in 1677 (4)- And now they are gripping to the bow and to the spear, when they suld be mourning for a sinfu' land and a broken covenant.'

"Soothing the old man by letting his peculiar opinions pass without contradiction, and anxious to prolong conversation with so singular a character, I prevailed upon him to accept that hospitality which Mr. Cleishbotham is always willing to extend to those who need it, In our way to the school-master's house, \y;e called at the Wallace Inn, where I was pretty certain I should find my patron about that hour of the evening. After a courteous interchange of civilities, Old Mortality was, with difficulty, prevailed upon to join his host in a single glass of liquor, and that on condition that he should be permitted to name the pledge, which he prefaced with a grace of about five minutes, and then, with Bonnet doffed and eyes uplifted, drank to the memory of those heroes of the Kirk who had first uplifted her banner upon the mountains. As no persuasion could prevail on him to extend his conviviality to a second cup, my patron accompanied him home, and accommodated him in the Prophet's Chamber, as it is his pleasure to call the closet which holds a spare bed, ami which is frequently a place of retreat for the poor traveller.¹

¹ Probably mamicura. It would seem that this was spoken during the apprehensions of invasion from France.—Publishers.

"The next day I took leave of Old Mortality, who seemed affected by the unusual attention with which I had cultivated his acquaintance and listened to his conversation. After he had mounted, not without difficulty, the old white pony, he took me by the hand and said, 'The blessing of our Master be with you, young man! My hours are like the ears of the latter harvest, and your days are yet in the spring; and yet you may be gathered into the garner of mortality before me, for the sickle of death cuts down the green as oft as the ripe, and there is a colour in your cheek that, like the bud of the rose, serveth oft to hide the worm of corruption. Wherefore labour as one who knoweth not when his' master calleth. And if it be my lot to return to this village after ye are gane hame to your ain place, these auld withered hands will frame a stane of memorial, that your name may not perish from among the people.¹

¹ lie might have added, and for the rich also; since, I laud my stars, the great of the earth have also taken harbourage in my poor domicile. And, during the service of my handmaiden Dorothy, who waa buxom and comely of aspect, his Honour the Laird of Smackawa, in his peregrinations to and from the metropolis, was wont to prefer my Prophet's Chamber even to the sanded chamber of daia in the Wallace Inn, and to bestow a mutchkin, tts he would jocosely say, to obtain the freedom of the house, but, as in reality, Co insure himself of my company, during the evening. — J. C.

" I thanked Old Mortality for his kind intentions in my behalf, and heaved a sigh, not, I think, of regret so much as of resignation, to think of the chance that I might soon requite his good offices. But though, in all human probability, he did not err in supposing that my span of life may be abridged in youth, he had over-estimated the period of his own pilgrimage on earth. It is now some years since he has been missed in all his usual haunts, while moss, lichen, and deer-hair are fast covering those stones, to cleanse which had been the business of his life. About the beginning of this century he closed his mortal toils, being found on the highway near Lockerby, in Dumfries-shire, exhausted and just expiring. The old white pony, the companion of all his wanderings, was standing by the side of his dying master. There was found about his person a sum of money sufficient for his decent interment, which serves to show that his death was in no ways hastened by violence or by want. The common people still regard his memory with great respect, and many are of opinion that the stones which he repaired will not again require the assistance of the chisel. They even assert that on the tombs where the manner of the martyrs' murder is recorded, their names have remained indelibly legible since the death of Old Mortality, while those of the persecutors, sculptured on the same monuments, have been entirely defaced. It is hardly necessary to say that this is a fond imagination, and that, since the time of the pious pilgrim, the monuments which were the objects of his care are hastening, like all earthly memorials, into ruin or decay.

"My readers will of course understand that in embodying into one compressed narrative many of the anecdotes which I had the advantage of deriving from Old Mortality, I have been far from adopting either his style, his opinions, or even his facts, so far as they appear to have been distorted by party prejudice. I have endeavoured to correct or verify them from the most authentic sources of tradition afforded by the representatives of either party.

"On the part of the Presbyterians, I have consulted such moorland farmers from the western districts as, by the kindness of their landlords, or otherwise, have been able, during the late general change of property, to retain possession of the grazings on which their grandsires fed their flocks and herds. I must own that of late days I have found this a limited source of information. I have, therefore, called in the supplementary aid of those modest itinerants whom the scrupulous civility of our ancestors denominated travelling merchants, but whom, of late, accommodating ourselves, in this as in more material particulars, to the feelings and sentiments of our more wealthy neighbours, we have learned to call packmen or pedlars. To country weavers travelling in hopes to get rid of their winter web, but more especially to tailors, who—from their sedentary profession, and the necessity, in our country, of exercising it by temporary residence in the families by whom they are employed—may be considered as possessing a complete register of rural traditions, I have been indebted for many illustrations of the narratives of Old Mortality, much in the taste and spirit of the original.

"I had more difficulty in finding materials for correcting the tone of partiality which evidently pervaded those stores of traditional learning, in order that I might be enabled to present an unbiassed picture of the manners of that unhappy period, and, at the same time, to do justice to the merits of both parties. But I have been enabled to qualify the narratives of Old Mortality and his Cameronian friends by the reports of more than one descendant of ancient and honourable families, who, themselves decayed into the humble vale of life, yet look proudly back on the period when their ancestors fought and fell in behalf of the exiled house of Stewart. I may even boast right reverend authority on the same score ; for more than one nonjuring bishop, whose authority and income were upon as apostolical a scale as the greatest abominator of Episcopacy could well desire, have deigned, while partaking of the humble cheer of the Wallace Inn, to furnish me with information corrective of the facts which I learned from others. There are also here and there a laird or two, who, though they shrug their shoulders, profess no great shame in their fathers having served in the persecuting squadrons of Earlshall (5) and Claverhouse. From the gamekeepers of these gentlemen, — an office the most apt of any other to become hereditary in such families — I have also contrived to collect much valuable information.

'Upon the whole, I can hardly fear that at this time, in describing the operation which their opposite principles produced upon the good and bad men of both parties, I can be suspected of meaning insult or injustice to either. If recollection of former injuries, extra-loyalty, and contempt and hatred of their adversaries produced rigour and tyranny in the one party, it will hardly be denied, on the other hand, that if the zeal for God's house did not eat up the conventiclers, it devoured at least, to imitate the phrase of Dryden, no small portion of their loyalty, sober sense, and good-breeding. We may safely hope that the souls of the brave and sincere on either side have long looked down with surprise and pity upon the ill-appreciated motives which caused their mutual hatred and hostility while in this valley of darkness, blood, and tears. Peace to their memory ! Let us think of them as the heroine of our only Scottish tragedy entreats her lord to think of her departed sire : —

Ob, rake not up the ashes of our fathers!
Implacable resentment was their crime,
And grievous has the expiation been."

CHAPTER II.

Summon an hundred horse by break of flay,
To wait our pleasure at the castle gates

Douglas.

UNDER the reign of the last Stewarts, there was an anxious wish on the part of Government to counteract, by every means in their power, the strict or puritanical spirit which had been the chief characteristic of the republican Government, and to revive those feudal institutions which united the vassal to the liege lord, and both to the Crown. Frequent musters and assemblies of the people, both for military exercise and for sports and pastimes, were appointed by authority. The interference, in the latter case, was impolitic, to say the least; for, as usual on such occasions, the consciences which were at first only scrupulous, became confirmed in their opinions, instead of giving way to the terrors of authority; and the youth of both sexes, to whom the pipe and tabor in England, or the bagpipe in Scotland, would have been in themselves an irresistible temptation, were enabled to set them at defiance, from the proud consciousness that they were, at the same time, resisting an Act of Council. To compel men to dance and be merry by authority, has rarely succeeded even on board of slave-ships, where it was formerly sometimes attempted, by way of inducing the wretched captives to agitate their limbs and restore the circulation, during the few minutes they were permitted to enjoy the fresh air upon deck. The rigour of the strict Calvinists increased, in proportion to the wishes of the Government that it should be relaxed. A judaical observance of the Sabbath, —a supercilious condemnation of all manly pastimes and harmless recreations, as well as of the profane custom of promiscuous dancing,—that is, of men and women dancing together in the same party (for I believe they admitted that the exercise might be inoffensive if practised by the parties separately), —distinguishing those who professed a more than ordinary share of sanctity, they discouraged, as far as lay in their power, even the ancient "wappen-schaws," as they were termed, when the feudal array of the county was called out, and each crown-vassal was required to appear with such muster of men and armour as he was bound to make by his fief, and that under high statutory penalties. The Covenanters were the more jealous of those assemblies, as the lord lieutenants and sheriffs under whom they were held had instructions from the Government to spare no pains which might render them agreeable to the young men who were thus summoned together, upon whom the military exercise of the morning, and the sports which usually closed the evening, might naturally be supposed to have a seductive effect.

The preachers and proselytes of the more rigid Presbyterians laboured, therefore, by caution, remonstrance, and authority to diminish the attendance upon these summonses, conscious that in doing so, they lessened not only the apparent, but the actual strength of the Government, by impeding the extension of that esprit de corps which soon unites young men who are in the habit of meeting together for manly sport or military exercise. They therefore exerted themselves earnestly to prevent attendance on these occasions by those who could find any possible excuse for absence, and were especially severe upon such of their hearers as mere curiosity led to be spectators, or love of exercise to be partakers, of the array and the sports which took place. Such of the gentry as acceded to these doctrines were not always, however, in a situation to be ruled by them. The commands of the law were imperative; and the privy council, who administered the executive power in Scotland, were severe in enforcing the statutory penalties against the crown-vassals who did not appear at the periodical wappen-schaw. The landholders were compelled, therefore, to send their sons, tenants, and vassals to the rendezvous, to the number of horses, men, and spears at which they were rated; and it frequently happened that notwithstanding the strict charge of their elders to return as soon as the formal inspection was over, the young men-at-arms were unable to resist the temptation of sharing in the sports which succeeded the muster, or to avoid listening to the prayers read in the churches on these occasions, and thus, in the opinion of their repining parents, meddling with the accursed thing which is an abomination in the sight of the Lord.

The sheriff of the county of Lanark was holding the wappen-schaw of a wild district, called the Upper Ward of Clydesdale, on a haugh, or level plain, near to a royal borough, the name of which is no way essential to my story, on the morning of the 5th of May, 1679, when our narrative commences. When the musters had been made, and duly reported, the young men, as was usual, were to mix in various sports, of which the chief was to shoot at the popinjay¹ (6), an ancient game formerly practised with archery, but at this period with firearms. This was the figure of a bird decked with party-coloured feathers, so as to resemble a popinjay, or parrot. It was suspended to a pole, and served for a mark, at which the competitors discharged their fusees and carabines in rotation, at the distance of sixty or seventy paces. He whose ball brought down the mark, held the proud title of Captain of the Popinjay for the remainder of the day, and was usually escorted in triumph to the most reputable change-house in the neighbourhood, where the evening was closed with conviviality, conducted under his auspices, and, if he was able to sustain it, at his expense.

It will, of course, be supposed that the ladies of the country assembled to witness this gallant strife, — those excepted who held the stricter tenets of Puritanism, and would therefore have deemed it criminal to afford countenance to the profane gambols of the mahgnants Landaus, barouches, or tilburies there were none in those simple days. The lord lieutenant of the county (a personage of ducal rank) alone pretended to the magnificence of a wheel-carriage, — a thing covered with tarnished gilding and sculpture, in shape like the vulgar picture of Noah's ark, dragged by eight long-tailed Flanders mares, bearing eight insides and six outsides. The insides were their Graces in person, two maids of honour, two children, a chaplain stoffed into a sort of lateral recess formed by a projection at the door of the vehicle, and called, from its appearance, the boot, and an equerry to his Grace, ensconced in the corresponding convenience on the opposite side. A coachman and three postilions, who wore short swords and tie-wigs with three tails, had blunderbusses slung behind them, and pistols at their saddle-bow, conducted the equipage, On the foot-board behind this moving mansion-house stood, or rather hung, in triple tile, six lackeys in rich liveries, armed up to the teeth. The rest of the gentry, men and women, old and young, were on horseback, followed by their servants; but the company, for the reasons already assigned, was rather select than numerous.

¹ Note I. — Festival of the Popinjay.

Near to the enormous leathern vehicle which we have attempted to describe, vindicating her title to precedence over the untitled gentry of the country, might be seen the sober palfrey of Lady Margaret Bellenden, bearing the erect and primitive form of Lady Margaret herself, decked in those widow's weeds which the good lady had never laid aside since the execution of her husband for his adherence to Montrose.

Her granddaughter and only earthly care, the fair-haired Edith, who was generally allowed to be the prettiest lass in the Upper Ward, appeared beside her aged relative like Spring placed close to Winter. Her black Spanish jennet, which she managed with much grace, her gay riding-dress, and laced side-saddle, had been anxiously prepared to set her forth to the best advantage. But the clustering profusion of ringlets, which, escaping from under her cap, were only confined by a green ribbon from wantoning over her shoulders; her cast of features, soft and feminine, yet not without a certain expression of playful archness, which redeemed their sweetness from the charge of insipidity, sometimes brought against blondes and blue-eyed beauties, — these attracted more admiration from the western youth than either the splendour of her equipments or the figure of her palfrey.

The attendance of these distinguished ladies was rather inferior to their birth and fashion in those times, as it consisted only of two servants on horse-back. The truth was, that the good old lady had been obliged to make all her domestic servants turn out to complete the quota which her barony ought to furnish for the muster, and in which she would not for the universe have been found deficient. The old steward, who, in steel cap and jack-boots, led forth her array, had, as he said, sweated blood and water in his efforts to overcome the scruples and evasions of the moorland farmers who ought to have furnished men, horse, and harness on these occasions. At last, their dispute came near to an open declaration of hostilities, the incensed Episcopalian bestowing on the recusants the whole thunders of the commination, and receiving from them, in return, the denunciations of a Calvinistic excommunication. What was to be done? To punish the refractory tenants would have been easy enough. The privy council would readily have imposed fines, and sent a troop of horse to collect them. But this would have been calling the huntsman and hounds into the garden to kill the hare.

"For," said Harrison to himself, "the carles have little enough gear at any rate, and if I call in the red-coats and take away what little they have, how is my worshipful lady to get her rents paid at Candlemas, which is but a difficult matter to bring round even in the best of times?"

So he armed the fowler and falconer, the footman and the ploughman, at the home farm, with an old drunken cavaliering butler who had served with the late Sir Richard under Moutrose, and stunned the family nightly with his exploits at Kilsythe and Tippermoor, and who was the only man in the party that had the smallest zeal for the work in hand. In this manner, and by recruiting one or two latitudinarian poachers and black-fishers, Mr. Harrison completed the quota of men which fell to the share of Lady Margaret Bellenden, as life-rentrix of the barony of Tillietudlem and others. But when the steward, on the morning of the eventful day, had mustered his troupe doree before the iron gate of the tower, the mother of Cuddie Headrigg the ploughman appeared, loaded with the jack-boots, boff-coat, and other accoutrements which had been issued forth for the service of the day, and laid them before the steward, demurely assuring him that "whether it were the colic, or a qualm of conscience, she couldna tak upon her to decide; but sure it was, Cuddie had been in sair straits a' night, and she couldna say he was muckle better this morning. The finger of Heaven," she said, "was in it, and her bairn should gang on nae sic errands." Pains, penalties, and threats of dismissal were denounced in vain; the mother was obstinate, and Cuddie, who underwent a domiciliary visitation for the purpose of verifying his state of body, could or would answer only by deep groans. Mause, who had been an ancient domestic in the family, was a sort of favourite with Lady Margaret, and presumed accordingly. Lady Margaret had herself set forth, and her authority could not be appealed to. In this dilemma, the good genius of the old butler suggested an expedient

"He had seen mony a braw callant, far less than Guse Gibbie, fight brawly under Montrose. What for no tak Guse Gibbie?"

This was a half-witted lad, of very small stature, who had a kind of charge of the poultry under the old henwife; for in a Scottish family of that day there was a wonderful substitution of labour. This urchin, being sent for from the stubble-field, was hastily moffled in the buff coat, and girded rather to than with the sword of a full-grown man, his little legs plunged into jack-boots, and a steel cap put upon his head, winch seemed, from its size, as if it had been intended to extinguish him. Thus accoutred, he was hoisted, at his own earnest request, upon the quietest horse of the party; and, prompted and supported by old Gudyill the butler, as his front fi'e, lie passed muster tolerably enough,—the sheriff not caring to examine too closely the recruits of so well-affected a person as Lady Margaret Bellenden.

To the above cause it was owing that the personal retinue of Lady Margaret, on this eventful day, amounted only to two lackeys, with which diminished train she would, on any other occasion, have been much ashamed to appear in public. But for the cause of royalty she was ready at any time to have made the most unreserved personal sacrifices. She had lost her husband and two promising sons in the civil wars of that unhappy period; but she had received her reward, for, on his route through the west of Scotland to meet Cromwell in the unfortunate field of Worcester, Charles the Second had actually breakfasted at the Tower of Tillietudlem, — an incident which formed, from that moment, an important era in the life of Lady Margaret, who seldom afterwards partook of that meal, either at home or abroad, without detailing the whole circumstances of the royal visit, not forgetting the salutation which his Majesty conferred on each side of her face, though she sometimes omitted to notice that he bestowed the same favour on two buxorn serving-wenches who appeared at her back, elevated for the day into the capacity of waiting gentlewomen.

These instances of royal favour were decisive; and if Lady Margaret had not been a confirmed royalist already, from sense of high birth, influence of education, and hatred to the opposite party, through whom she had suffered such domestic calamity, the having given a breakfast to Majesty, and received the royal salute in return, were honours enough of themselves to unite her exclusively to the fortunes of the Stewarts. These were now, in all appearance, triumphant; but Lady Margaret's zeal had adhered to them through the worst of times, and was ready to sustain the same severities of fortune, should their scale once more kick the beam. At present she enjoyed, in full extent, the military display of the force which stood ready to support the Crown, and stifled, as well as she could, the mortification she felt at the unworthy desertion of her own retainers.

Many civilities passed between her ladyship and the representatives of sundry ancient loyal families who were upon the ground, by whom she was held in high reverence; and not a young man of rank passed by them in the course of the muster, but he carried his body more erect in the saddle, and threw his horse upon its haunches, to display his own horsemanship and the perfect biting of his steed to the best advantage in the eyes of Miss Edith Bellenden. But the young cavaliers, distinguished by high descent and undoubted loyalty, attracted no more attention from Edith than the laws of courtesy peremptorily demanded; and she turned an indifferent ear to the compliments with which she was addressed, most of which were little the worse for the wear, though borrowed for the nonce from the laborious and long-winded romances of Calprenede and Scuderi, the mirrors in which the youth of that age delighted to dress themselves, ere Folly had thrown her ballast overboard, and cut down her vessels of the first-rate, such as the romances of "Cyrus," "Cleopatra," and others, into small craft, drawing as little water, or, to speak more plainly, consuming as little time, as the little cockboat in which the gentle reader has deigned to embark. It was, however, the decree of fate that Miss Bellenden should not continue to evince the same equanimity till the conclusion of the day.

CHAPTER III.

Horseman and horse confessed the bitter pang,
And arms and warrior fell with heavy clan';.

Pleasure' of Hope

WHEN the military evolutions had been gone through tolerably well, allowing for the awkwardness of men and of horses, a loud shout announced that the competitors were about to step forth for the game of the popinjay, already described. The mast, or pole, having a yard extended across it, from which the mark was displayed, was raised amid the acclamations of the assembly, and even those who had eyed the evolutions of the feudal militia with a sort of malignant and sarcastic sneer, from disinclination to the royal cause in which they were professedly embodied, could not refrain from taking considerable interest in the strife which was now approaching. They crowded towards the goal, and criticised the appearance of each competitor, as they advanced in succession, discharged their pieces at the mark, and had their good or bad address rewarded by the laughter or applause of the spectators. But when a slender young man, dressed with great simplicity, yet not without a certain air of pretension to elegance and gentility, approached the station with his fusee in his hand, his dark-green cloak thrown back over his shoulder, his laced ruff and feathered cap indicating a superior rank to the vulgar, there was a murmur of interest among the spectators, whether altogether favourable to the young adventurer, it was difficult to discover.

"Ewhow, sirs, to see his father's sou at the like o' thae fearless follies!" was the ejaculation of the elder and more rigid Puritans, whose curiosity had so far overcome their bigotry as to bring them to the playground. But the generality viewed the strife less morosely, and were contented to wish success to the son of a deceased Presbyterian leader, without strictly examining the propriety of his being a competitor for the prize. '

Their wishes were gratified. At the first discharge of his piece the green adventurer struck the popinjay, being the first palpable hit of the day, though several balls had passed very near the mark. A loud shout of applause ensued. But the success was not decisive, it being necessary that each who followed should have his chance, and that those who succeeded in hitting the mark should renew the strife among themselves till one displayed a decided superiority over the others. Two only of those who followed in order succeeded in hitting the popinjay. The first was a young man of low rank, heavily built, and who kept his face moffled in his grey cloak; the second, a gallant young cavalier, remarkable for a handsome exterior, sedulously decorated for the day. He had been since the muster in close attendance on Lady Margaret and Miss Bellenden, and had left them with an air of indifference when Lady Margaret had asked whether there was no young man of family and loyal principles who would dispute the prize with the two lads who had been successful. In half a minute, young Lord Evandale threw himself from his horse, borrowed a gun from a servant, and, as we have already noticed, hit the mark.

Great was the interest excited by the renewal of the contest between the three candidates who had been hitherto successful. The state equipage of the duke was, with some difficulty, put in motion, and approached more near to the scene of action. The riders, both male and female, turned their horses' heads in the same direction, and all eyes were bent upon the issue of the trial of skill.

It was the etiquette in the second contest that the competitors should take their turn of firing after drawing lots. The first fell upon the young plebeian, who, as he took his stand, half-uncloaked his rustic countenance, and said to the gallant in green, "Ye see, Mr. Henry, if it were ousy other day, I could hae wished to miss for your sake; but Jenny Denison is looking at us, sae I maun do my best."

He took his aim, and his bullet whistled past the mark so nearly that the pendulous object at which it was directed was seen to shiver. Still, however, he had not hit it, and, with a downcast look, he withdrew himself from further competition, and hastened to disappear from the assembly, as if fearful of being recognised. The green chasseur next advanced, and his ball a second time struck the popinjay. All shouted; and from the outskirts of the assembly arose a cry of, "The good old cause for ever!"

While the dignitaries bent their brows at these exulting shouts of the disaffected, the young Lord Evandala advanced again to the hazard, and again was successful. The shouts and congratulations of the well-affected and aristocratical part of the audience attended his success; but still a subsequent trial of skill remained.

The green marksman, as if determined to bring the affair to a decision, took his horse from a person who held him, having previously looked carefully to the security of his girths and the fitting of his saddle, vaulted on his back, and motioning with his hand for the bystanders to make way, set spurs, passed the place from which he was to fire at a gallop, and, as he passed, threw up the reins, turned sideways upon his saddle, discharged his carabine, and brought down the popinjay. Lord Evandale imitated his example, although many around him said it was an innovation on the established practice, which he was not obliged to follow. But his skill was not so perfect, or his horse was not so well trained. The animal swerved at the moment his master fired, and the ball missed the popinjay. Those who had been surprised by the address of the green marksman were now equally pleased by his courtesy. He disclaimed all merit from the last shot, and proposed to his antagonist that it should not be counted as a hit, and that they should renew the contest on foot.

"I would prefer horseback, if I had a horse as well bitted, and, probably, as well broken to the exercise, as yours," said the young lord, addressing his antagonist.

"Will you do me the honour to use him for the next trial, on condition you will lend me yours?" said the young gentleman.

Lord Evandale was ashamed to accept this courtesy, as conscious how much it would dimmish the value of victory; and yet, unable to suppress his wish to redeem his reputation as a marksman, he added, "that although he renounced all pretensions to the honour of the day," which he said somewhat scornfully, "yet if the victor had no particular objection, he would willingly embrace his obliging offer, and change horses with him, for the purpose of trying a shot for love."

As he said so, he looked boldly towards Miss Belenden; and tradition says that the eyes of the young tirailleur travelled, though more covertly, in the same direction. The young lord's last trial was as unsuccessful as the former, and it was with difficulty that he preserved the tone of scornful indifference which he had hitherto assumed. But, conscious of the ridicule which attaches itself to the resentment of a losing party, he returned to his antagonist the horse on which he had made his last unsuccessful attempt, and received back his own; giving, at the same time, thanks to his competitor, who, he said, had re-established his favourite horse in his good opinion, for he had been in great danger of transferring to the poor nag the blame of an inferiority which every one, as well as himself, must now be satisfied remained with the rider. Having made this speech in a tone in which mortification assumed the veil of indifference, he mounted his horse and rode off the ground.

As is the usual way of the world, the applause and attention even of those whose wishes had favoured Lord Evandale were, upon his decisive discomfiture, transferred to his triumphant rival.

"Who is he? what is his name?" ran from mouth to mouth among the gentry who were present, to few of whom he was personally known. His style and title having soon transpired, and being within that class whom a great man might notice without derogation, four of the duke's friends, with the obedient start which poor Malvolio ascribes to his imaginary retinue, made out to lead the victor to his presence. As they conducted him in triumph through the crowd of spectators, and stunned him at the same time with their compliments on his success, he chanced to pass, or rather to be led, immediately in front of Lady Margaret and her granddaughter. The captain of the pop-injay and Miss Bellenden coloured like crimson as the latter returned, with embarrassed courtesy, the low inclination which the victor made, even to the saddle-bow, in passing her.

"Do you know that young person?" said Lady Margaret.

"I — I — have seen him, madam, at my uncle's, and — and elsewhere occasionally," stammered Miss Edith Bellenden.

"I hear them say around me," said Lady Margaret, "that the young spark is the nephew of old Milnwood."

"The son of the late Colonel Morton of Milnwood, who commanded a regiment of horse with great courage at Dunbar and Inverkeithing," said a gentleman who sate on horseback beside Lady Margaret.

"Ay, and who, before that, fought for the Covenanters both at Marston Moor and Philiphaugh," said Lady Margaret, sighing as she pronounced the last fatal words, which her husband's death gave her such sad reason to remember.

"Your ladyship's memory is just," said the gentleman, smiling ; "but it were well all that were forgot now."

"He ought to remember it, Gilbertscleugh," returned Lady Margaret, "and dispense with intruding himself into the company of those to whom, his name must bring unpleasing recollections."

"You forget, my dear lady," said her nomenclator, "that the young gentleman comes here to discharge suit and service in name of his uncle. I would every estate in the country sent out as pretty a fellow." "

"His uncle, as well as his umquhile father, is a loundhead, I presume," said Lady Margaret.

"He is an old miser," said Gilbertsleugh, "with whom a broad piece would at any time weigh down political opinions; and therefore, although probably somewhat against the grain, he sends the young gentleman to attend the muster, to save pecuniary pains and penalties. As for the rest, I suppose the youngster is happy enough to escape here for a day from the dulness of the old house at Milnwood, where he sees nobody but his hypochondriac uncle and the favourite housekeeper."

"Do you know how many men and horse the lands of Milnwood are rated at?" said the old lady, continuing her inquiry.

"Two horsemen with complete harness," answered Gilbertseugh.

"Our land," said Lady Margaret, drawing herself up with dignity, "has always furnished to the muster eight men, Cousin Gilbertseugh, and often a voluntary aid of thrice the number. I remember his sacred Majesty King Charles, when he took his disjune at Tillietudlem, was particular in inquiring —"

"I see the duke's carriage in motion," said Gilbertseugh, partaking at the moment an alarm common to all Lady Margaret's friends when she touched upon the topic of the royal visit at the family mansion, — "I see the duke's carriage in motion; I presume your ladyship will take your right of rank in leaving the field. May I be permitted to convoy your ladyship and Miss Bellen-den home ? Parties of the wild Whigs have been abroad, and are said to insult and disarm the well-affected who travel in small numbers."

"We thank you, Cousin Gilbertsleugh,¹ said Lady Margaret; "but as we shall have the escort of my own people, I trust we have less need than others to be troublesome to our friends. Will you have the goodness to order Harrison to bring up our people somewhat more briskly; he rides them towards us as if he were leading a funeral procession." •

The gentleman in attendance communicated his lady's orders to the trusty steward.

Honest Harrison had his own reasons for doubting the prudence of this command; but, once issued and received, there was a necessity for obeying it. He set off, therefore, at a hand-gallop, followed by the butler, in such a military attitude as became one who had served under Montrose, and with a look of defiance rendered sterner and fiercer by the inspiring fumes of a gill of brandy, which he had snatched a moment to bolt to the king's health, and confusion to the Covenant, during the intervals of military duty. Unhappily this potent refreshment wiped away from the tablets of his memory the necessity of paying some attention to the distresses and difficulties of his rear-file Goose Gibbie. No sooner had the horses struck a canter, than Gibbie's jack-boots, which the poor boy's legs were incapable of steadying, began to play alternately against the horse's flanks, and, being armed with long-rowelled spurs, overcame the patience of the animal, which bounced and plunged.

while poor Gibbie's entreaties for aid never reached the ears of the too heedless butler, being drowned partly in the concave of the steel cap in which his head was immersed, and partly in the martial tune of the "Gallant Graemes," which Mr. Gudyill whistled with all his power of lungs.

The upshot was, that the steed speedily took the matter into his own hands, and having gambolled hither and thither to the great amusement of all spectators, set off at full speed towards the huge family coach already described. Gibbie's pike, escaping from its sling, had fallen to a level direction across his hands, which, I grieve to say, were seeking dishonourable safety in as strong a grasp of the mane as their muscles could manage. His casque, too, had slipped completely over his face, so that he saw as little in front as he did in rear. Indeed, if he could, it would have availed him little in the circumstances; for his horse, as if in league with the disaffected, ran full tilt towards the solemn equipage of the duke, which the projecting lance threatened to perforate from window to window, at the risk of transfixing as many in its passage as the celebrated thrust of Orlando, which, according to the Italian epic poet, broached as many Moors as a Frenchman spits frogs.

On beholding the bent of this misdirected career, a panic shout of mingled terror and wrath was set up by the whole equipage, insides and outsides, at once, which had the happy effect of averting the threatened misfortune. The capricious horse of Goose Gibbie was terrified by the noise, and stumbling as he turned short round, kicked and plunged violently as soon as he recovered. The jack-boots, the original cause of the disaster, maintaining the reputation they had acquired when worn by better cavaliers, answered every plunge by a fresh prick of the spurs, and, by their ponderous weight, kept their -place in the stirrups. Not so Goose Gibbie, who was fairly spurned out of those wide and ponderous greaves, and precipitated over the horse's head, to the infinite amusement of all the spectators. His lance and helmet had forsaken him in his fall, and, for the completion of his disgrace, Lady Margaret Bellenden, not perfectly aware that it was one of her warriors who was furnishing so much entertainment, came up in time to see her diminutive man-at-arms stripped of his lion's hide,—of the boff-coat, that is, in which he was moffled.

As she had not been made acquainted with this metamorphosis, and could not even guess its cause, her surprise and resentment were extreme; nor were they much modified by the excuses and explanations of her steward and butler. She made a hasty retreat, homeward, extremely indignant at the shouts and laughter of the company, and much disposed to vent her displeasure on the refractory agriculturist whose place Goose Gibbie had so unhappily supplied. The greater part of the gentry now dispersed, the whimsical misfortune which had befallen the gens d'armes of Tillietudlem furnishing them with huge entertainment on their road homeward. The horsemen also, in little parties, as their road lay together, diverged from the pkce of rendezvous, excepting such as, having tried their dexterity at the popinjay, were, by ancient custom, obliged to partake of a grace-cup with their captain before their departure,

CHAPTEE IV.

At fairs he play'd before the bpearmen,
And gaily giaithed in their gear then ;
Steel bonnets, pikes, and swords shone dear than
 As ony bead;
Now wlia sail play before sic weir men,
 Since Babbie's dead '

Elegy on Habbie Simpson.

THE çayalcade of horsemen on their road to the little ' borough-town were preceded by Niel Blane, the town-piper, mounted on his white galloway, armed with his dirk and broadsword, and bearing a chanter streaming with as many ribbons as would deck out six country belles for a fair or preaching. Niel, a clean, tight, well-timbered, long-winded fellow, had gained the official situation of town-piper of——by his merit, with all the emoluments thereof; namely, the Piper's Croft, as it is still called, — a field of about an acre in extent,— five merks, and a new livery-coat of the town's colours, yearly; some hopes of a dollar upon the day of the election of magistrates, providing the provost were able and willing to afford such a gratuity ; and the privilege of paying, at all the respectable houses in the neighbourhood, an annual visit at spring-time, to rejoice their hearts with his music, to comfort his own with their ale and brandy, and to beg from each a modicum of seed-corn,

In addition to these inestimable advantages, Niel's personal or professional accomplishments won the heart of a jolly widow, who then kept the principal change-house in the borough. Her former husband having been a strict Presbyterian, of such note that he usually went among his sect by the name of Gaius the publican, many of the more rigid were scandalized by the profession of the successor whom his relict had chosen for a second helpmate. As the browst (or brewing) of the Howff retained, nevertheless, its unrivalled reputation, most of the old customers continued to give it a preference. The character of the new landlord, indeed, was of that accommodating kind which enabled him, by close attention to the helm, to keep his little vessel pretty steady, amid the contending tides of faction. He was a good-humoured, shrewd, selfish sort of fellow, indifferent alike to the disputes about Church and State, and only anxious to secure the good-will of customers of every description. But his character, as well as the state of the country, will be best understood by giving the reader an account of the instructions which he issued to his daughter, a girl about eighteen, whom he was initiating in those cares which had been faithfully discharged by his wife until about six months before our story commences, when the honest woman had been carried to the kirkyard.

"Jenny," said Niel Blane, as the girl assisted to disencumber him of his bagpipes, "this is the first day that ye are to take the place of your worthy mother in attending to the public: a douce woman she was, civil to the customers, and had a good name wi' Whig and Tory, baith up the street and down the street. It will be hard for you to fill her place, especially on sic a thrang day as this; but Heaven's will maun be obeyed. Jenny, whatever Milnwood ca's for, be sure he maun hae't, for he's the Captain o' the Popinjay, and auld customs maun be supported; if he canna pay the lawing himsell, as I ken he's keepit unco short by the head, I "' find a way to shame it out o' his uncle. The curate is playing at dice wi' Cornet Grahame. Be eident and civil to them baith, — clergy and captains can gie an unco deal o' fash in thae times, where they take an ill-will. The dragoons will be crying for ale, and they wunna want it, and inaunna want it: they are unruly chields, but they pay ane some gate or other. I gat the humle-cow, that's the best in the byre, frae black Frank Inglis and Sergeant Bothwell for ten pund Scots, and they drank out the price at ae downsitting."

"But, father," interrupted Jenny, " they say the twa reiving loons drave the cow frae the gudewife o' Bell's-moor, just because she gaed to hear a field-preaching ae Sabbath afternoon."

"Whisht! ye silly tawpie," said her father, "we have naething to do how they come by the bestial they sell; be that atween them and their consciences. Aweel, take notice, Jenny, of that dour, stour-looking carle that sits by the cheek o' the ingle, and turns his back on a¹ men. He looks like ane o' the hill-folk, for I saw him start a wee when he saw the red-coats, and I jalouse he wad hae liked to hae ridden by, but his horse (it's a gude gelding) was ower sail travailed; he behoved to stop whether he wad or no, Serve him cannily, Jenny, and wi' little din, and dinna bring the sodgers on him by speering ony questions at him; but let na him hae a room to himsell, they wad say we were hiding him. For yoursell, Jenny, ye 'll be civil to a' the folk, and take nae heed o' ony nonsense and daffing the young lads may say t^j ye.

Folk in the hostler line maun put up wi' muckle. Your mither, rest her saul, could pit up wi' as muckle as niaist women; but aft' hands is fair play, and if onybody be uncivil, ye may gie me a cry. Aweel, when the malt begins to get aboon the meal, they 'll begin to speak about government in Kirk and State, and then, Jenny, they are like to quarrel: let them be doing, —anger's a drouthy passion, find the mair they dispute, the mair ale they'll drink; but ye were best serve them wi' a pint o' the sma' browst, it will heat them less, and they "' never ken the difference."

"But, father," said Jenny, "if they come to lounder ilk ither as they did last time, suldna I cry on you?"

"At no hand, Jenny; the redder gets aye the warst lick in the fray. If the sodgers draw their swords, ye "' cry on the corporal and the guard. If the country folk tak the tangs and poker, ye "' cry on the bailie and town-officers. But in nae event cry on me, for I am wearied wi' doudling the bag o' wind a' day, and I am gaun to eat my dinner quietly in the spence. And, now I think on't, the Laird of Lickitup (that's him that was the laird) was speering for sma' drink and a saut herring: gie him a pu' be the sleeve, and round into his lug I wad be blithe o' his company to dine wi' me; he was a gude customer anes in a day, and wants naething but means to be a gude ane again, — he likes drink as weel as e'er he did. And if ye ken ony puir body o' our acquaintance that's blate for want o' siller, and has far to gang hame, ye needna stick to gie them a waught Q' drink and a bannock; we "' ne'er miss't, and it looks creditable in a bouse like ours. And now, hinny, gang awa' and serve the folk; but first bring me my dinner, and twa chappins o' yill and the inutchkin stoup o' brandy."

Having thus devolved his whole cares on Jenny as prime minister, Niel Blane and the ci-devant laird, once his patron, but now glad to be his trencher-companion, sate down to enjoy themselves for the remainder of the evening, remote from the bustle of the public room.

All in Jenny's department was in full activity. The knights of the popinjay received and requited the hospitable entertainment of their captain, who, though he spared the cup himself, took care it should go round with due celerity among the rest, who might not have otherwise deemed themselves handsomely treated. Their numbers melted away by degrees, and were at length diminished to four or five, who began to talk of breaking up their party. At another table, at some distance, sat two of the dragoons whom Niel Klane had mentioned, — a sergeant and a private in the celebrated John Grahame of Claverhouse's regiment of Life Guards. Even the non-commissioned officers and privates in those corps were not considered as ordinary mercenaries, but rather approached to the rank of the French mousquetaires, being regarded in the light of cadets, who performed the duties of rank-and-file with the prospect of obtaining commissions in case of distinguishing themselves.

Many young men of good families were to be found in the ranks, — a circumstance which added to the pride and self-consequence of these troops. A remarkable instance of this occurred in the person of the non-commissioned officer in question. His real name was Francis Stewart, but he was universally known by the appellation of Bothwell, being lineally descended from the last earl of that name, — not the infamous lover of the unfortunate Queen Mary, but Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell, whose turbulence and repeated conspiracies embarrassed the early part of James Sixth's reign, and who at length died in exile in great poverty. The son of this earl had sued to Charles I, for the restitution of part of his father's forfeited estates; but the grasp of the nobles to whom they had been allotted was too tenacious to be unclenched. The breaking out of the civil wars utterly ruined him, by intercepting a small pension which Charles I. had allowed him, and he died in the utmost indigence. His son, after having served as a soldier abroad and in Britain, and passed through several vicissitudes of fortune, was fain to content himself with the situation of a non-commissioned officer in the Life Guards, although lineally descended from the royal family, the father of the forfeited Earl of Bothwell having been a natural son of James VI.¹ Great personal strength, and dexterity in the use of his arms, as well as the remarkable circumstances of his descent, had recommended this man to the attention of his officers. But he partook in a great degree of the licentiousness and oppressive disposition which the habit of acting as agents for Government in levying fines, exacting free quarters, and otherwise oppressing the Presbyterian recusants' had rendered too general among these soldiers! They were so much accustomed to such missions that they corigedxed themselves at liberty to commit all manner of license with impunity, as if totally exempted from all law and authority, excepting the command of their officers. On such occasions Bothwell was usually the most forward.

¹ Note II, — Sergeant Bothwell.

It is probable that Bothwell and his companions would not so long have remained quiet, but for respect to the presence of their cornet, who commanded the small party quartered in the borough, and who was engaged in a game at dice with the curate of the place. But both of these being suddenly called from their amusement to speak with the chief magistrate upon some urgent business, Bothwell was not long of evincing his contempt for the rest of the company.

"Is it not a strange thing, Halliday," he said to his comrade, "to see a set of bumpkins sit carousing here this whole evening, without having drank the king's health?"

"They have drank the king's health," said Halliday. "I heard that green kail-worm of a lad name his Majesty's health."

"Did he?" said Bothwell. "Then, Tom, we'll have them drink the Archbishop of St. Andrews' health, and do it on their knees too."

"So we will, by G—," said Halliday; "and he that refuses it, we "' have him to the guard-house, and teach him to ride the colt foaled of an acorn, with a brace of carabines at each foot to keep him steady."

"Eight, Tom," continued Bothwell; "and, to do all things in order, I "' begin with that sulky blue-bonnet in the ingle-nook."

He rose accordingly, and taking his sheathed broadsword under his arm to support the insolence which he meditated, placed himself in front of the stranger noticed by Niel Blane in his admonitions to his daughter as being, in all probability, one of the hill-folk, or refractory Presbyterians.

"I make so bold as to request of your precision, beloved," said the trooper, in a tone of affected solemnity, and assuming the snuffle of a country preacher, "that you will arise"TronTyour seat, beloved, and, having bent your hams until your knees do rest upon the floor, beloved, that you will turn over this measure (called by the profane a gill) of the comfortable creature, which the carnal denominate brandy, to the health and glorification of his Grace the Archbishop of St. Andrews, the worthy primate of all Scotland."

All waited for the stranger's answer. His features, austere even to ferocity, with a cast of eye, which, without being actually oblique, approached nearly to a squint, and which gave a very sinister expression to his countenance, joined to a frame, square, strong, and muscular, though something under the middle size, seemed to announce a man unlikely to understand rude jesting, or to receive insults with impjimity.

"And what is the consequence," said he, "if I should not be disposed to comply with your uncivil request?"

"The consequence thereof, beloved," said Bothwell, in the same tone of raillery, "will be, firstly, that I will tweak thy proboscis, or nose; secondly, beloved, that I will administer my fist to thy distorted visual optics; and will conclude, beloved, with a practical application of the flat of my sword to the shoulders of the recusant."

"Is it even so?" said the stranger. "Then give rnethecup;" and, taking it in his hand, he said, with a peculiar expression of voice and manner, "The Archbishop of St. Andrews, and the place he now worthily holds: may each prelate in Scotland soon be as the Right Reverend James Sharps I"

"He has taken the test,"¹ said Halliday, exultingly.

"But with a qualification," said Bothwell. "I don't understand what the devil the crop-eared Whig means."

"Come, gentlemen," said Morton, who became impatient of their insolence, "we are here met as good subjects, and on a merry occasion; and we have a right to expect we shall not be troubled with this sort of discussion."

Bothwell was about to make a surly answer; but Halliday reminded him, in a whisper, that there were strict injunction' that the soldiers should give no offence to the men who were sent out to the musters agreeably to the council's orders. So, after honouring Morton with a broad and fierce stare, he said, "Well, Mr. Popinjay, I shall not disturb your reign; I reckon it will be out by twelve at night — Is it not an odd thing, Halliday," he continued, addressing his companion, "that they should make such a fuss about cracking off their bjrfing-pieces at a mark which any woman or boy could hit at day's practice? If Captain Popinjay, now, or any of his troop, would try a bout, either with the broadsword, backsword, single rapier, or rapier and dagger, for a gold noble, the first P3?awn blood, there would be some soul in it, — or, zounds, would the bumpkins but wrestle, or pitch the bar, or put the stone, or throw the axle-tree, if [touching the end of Morton's sword scornfully with his toe] they carry things about them that they are afraid to draw."¹

Morton's patience and pnjdfiuce now gave way entirely, and he was about to make a very angry answer to Bothwell's insolent 'observations, when the stranger stepped forward.

"This is iay quarrel," he said; "and in the name of the good cause, I will see it out myself. — Hark thee, friend," to Bothwell, "wilt thou wrestle a fall with me?"

"With my whole spirit, beloved," answered Bothwell; "yea, I will strive with thee to the downfall of one or both."

"Then, as my trust is in Him that can help," retorted his antagonist, "I will forthwith make thee an example to all such railing Babshakehs."

With that he dropped his coarse grey horseman's coat from his shoulders, and, extending his strong, brawny arms with a look of determined resolution, he offered himself to the contest. The soldier was nothing abashed by the muscular frame, broad chest, square shoulders, and hardy look of his antagonist, but, whistling with great compogjuie, unbuckled his belt and laid aside his military coat. The company stood round them, anxious for the event.

In the first struggle the trooper seemed to have some advantage, and also in the second, though neither could be considered as decisive. But it was plain he had put his whole strength too suddenly forth against an antagonist possessed of great endurance, skill, vigour, and length of wind. In the third close the countryman lifted his opponent fairly from the floor, and hurled him to the ground with such violence that he lay for an instant stunned and motionless. His comrade Halliday immediately drew his sword. "You have killed my sergeant," he exclaimed to the victorious wrestler, "and by all that is sacred you shall answer it!"

"Stand back!" cried Morton and his companions, "it was all fair play; your comrade sought a fall, and he has got it."

"That is true enough," said Bothwell, as he slowly rose; "put up your bilbo, Tom. I did not think there was a crop-ear of them all could have laid the best cap and feather in the King's Life Guards on the floor of a rascally change-house.—Hark ye, friend, give me your hand," The stranger held out his hand. "I promise you," said Bothwell, squeezing his hand very hard, "that the time will come when we shall meet again, and try this game over in a more earnest manner."

"And I "" promise you," said the stranger, returning the grasp with equal firmness, "that when we next meet, I will lay your head as low as it lay even now, when you shall lack the power to lift it up again."

"Well, beloved," answered Bothwell, "if thou be'st a Whig, thou art a stout and a brave one, and so good-even to thee. — Hadst best take thy nag before the cornet makes the round; for, I promise thee, he has stayed less suspicious-looking persons."

The stranger seemed to think that the hint was not to be neglected; he flung down his reckoning, and going into the stable, saddled and brought out a powerful black horse, now recruited by rest and forage. and turning to Morton, observed, "I ride towards Milnwood, which I hear is your home: will you give me the advantage and protection of your company?"

"Certainly," said Morton, although there was something of gloomy and relentless severity in the man's manner from which his mind recoiled. His companions, after a courteous good-night, broke up and went off in different directions, some keeping them company for about a mile, until they dropped off one by one, and the travellers were left atone.

The company had not long left the Howff, as Blane's public-house was called, when, the irumpets and kettle-drums sounded. The troopers got under arms in the market-place at this unexpected summons, while, with faces of anxiety and earnestness, Gurnet Grahame, a kinsman of Claverhouse (7), and the provost of the borough, followed by half-a-dozen soldiers, and town-officers with halberts, entered the apartment of Niel Blane.

"G-uard the doors !" were the first words which the cornet spoke ; "let no man leave the house.—So, Bothwell, how comes this ? Did you not hear them sound boot and saddle ?"

"He was just going to quarters, sir," said his comrade ; "he has had a bad fall."

"In a fray, I suppose ?" said Grahame. "If you neglect duty in tins way, your royal blood will hardly protect you."

"How have I neglected duty ?" said Bothwell, sulkily.

"You should have been at quarters, Sergeant Bothwell," replied the officer ; "you have lost a golden opportunity. Here are news come that the Archbishop of St. Andrews has been strangely and foully assassinated by a body of the rebel Whigs, who pursued and stopped his carriage on Magus Muir, near the town of St. Andrews, dragged him out, and despatched him with their swords and daggers." ¹

All stood aghast at the intelligence.

¹ The general account of this act of assassination is to be found in all histories of the period. A more particular narrative may be found in the words of one of the actors, James Russell, in the Appendix to Kirkton's "History of the Chnrct of Scotland," published by Charles Kirkpatrick Sharpe, Esquire. 4to, Edinburgh, 1317.

"Here are their descriptions," continued the cornet, pulling out a proclamation: "the reward of a thousand merks is on each of their heads."

"The test, the test, and the qualification!" said Bothwell to Halliday; "I know the meaning now. Zounds, that we should not have stopt him! Go saddle our horses, Halliday. — Was there one of the men, Cornet, very stout and square-made, double-chested, thin in the flanks, hawk-nosed?"

"Stay, stay," said Cornet Grahame, "let me look at the paper. Hackston of Rathillet, tall, thin, black-haired."

"That is not my man," said Bothwell.

"John Balfour, called Burley, aquiline nose, red-haired, five feet eight inches in height —"

"It is he, — it is the very man!" said Bothwell. "Skellies fearfully with one eye?"

"Eight," continued Grahame; "rode a strong black horse, taken from the primate at the time of the murder."

"The very man," exclaimed Bothwell, "and the very horse. He was in this room not a quarter of an hour since"

A few hasty inquiries tended still more to confirm the opinion that the reserved and stern stranger was Balfour of Burley, the actual commander of the band of assassins, who, in the fury of misguided zeal, had murdered the primate, whom they accidentally met as they were searching for another person against whom they bore enmity.¹ In their excited imagination the casual rencounter had the appearance of a providential interference, and they put to death the archbishop, with circumstances of great and cold-blooded cruelty, under the belief that the Lord, as they expressed it, had delivered him into their hands.¹

¹ One Carmimhael, sheriff-depute in Fife, who had been active in enforcing the penal measures against nonconformists. He was on the moors hunting, but receiving accidental information that a party was out in quest of him, he returned home, and escaped the fate designed for him, which befell his patron the archbishop.

"Horse, horse, and pursue, my lads!" exclaimed Cornet Grahame; "the murdering dog's head is worth its weight in gold."

¹ Note III—Murderers of Archbishop Sharpe. (8)

CHAPTER V.

Aroasa thee, youth ! it ia no human call :
God's Church is leaguereil: haste to man the wall;
Haste where the Redcross banners wave on high,
Signal of honoured death, or victory !

JAMES DOFF.

MORTON and his companion had attained some distance from the town before either one of them addressed the other. There was something, as we have observed, repulsive in the manner of the stranger, which prevented Morton from opening the conversation, and he himself seemed to have no desire to talk, until, on a sudden, he abruptly demanded, "What has your father's son to do with such profane mummeries as I find you this day engaged in ?"

"I do my duty as a subject, and pursue my harmless recreations according to my own pleasure," replied Morton, somewhat offended.

"Is it your duty, think you, or that of any Christian young man, to bear arms in their cause who have poured out the blood of God's saints in the wilderness as if it had been water ? Or is it a lawful recreation to waste time in shooting at a bunch of feathers, and close your evening with jyine-ldb-bing in public-houses and market-towns, when He that is mighty is come into the land with His fan in His hand, to purge the wheat from the chaff ?"

"I suppose, from your style of conversation," said Morton, "that you are one of those who have thought proper to stand out against the Government. I must remind you that you are unnecessarily using dangerous language in the presence of a mere stranger, and that the times do not render it safe for me to listen to it."

"Thou canst not help it' Henry Morton," said his companion: "thy Master has His uses for thee, and when He calls, thou must obey. Well wot I thou hast not heard the call of a true preacher, or thou hadst ere now been what thou wilt assuredly one day become."

"We are of the Presbyterian persuasion, like yourself," said Morton; for his uncle's family attended the ministry of one of those numerous Presbyterian clergymen who, complying with certain regulations, were licensed to preach without interruption from the Government. This "indulgence," as it was called, made a great schism among the Presbyterians, and those who accepted of it were severely censured by the more rigid sectaries, who refused the proffered terms. The stranger, therefore, answered with great disdain to Morton's profession of faith.

"That is but an ~~equivocation~~, — a poor equivocation. Ye listen on the Sabbath to a cold, worldly, time-serving discourse from one who forgets his high commission so much as to hold his apostleship by the favour of the courtiers and the false prelates, and ye call that hearing the word! Of all the baits with which the devil has fished for souls in these days of blood and darkness, that Black Indulgence has been the most destructive. An awful dispensation it has been, a smiting of the shepherd and a scattering of the sheep upon the mountains, — an uplifting of one Christian banner against another, and a fighting of the wars of darkness with the swords of the children of light!"

" My undle," said Morton, " is of opinion that we enjoy a reasonable freedom of conscience under the indulged clergymen, and I must necessarily be guided by his sentiments respecting the choice of a place of worship for his family."

" Your uncle," said the horseman, "is one of those to whom the least lamb in his own folds at Milnwood is dearer than the whole Christian flock. He is ono that could willingly bend down to the golden calf of Bethel, and would have fished for the dust thereof when it was ground to powder and cast upon the waters. Thy father was a man of another stamp."

" My father," replied Morton, " was indeed a brave and gallant man. And you may have heard, sir, that he fought for that royal family in whose name I was this day carrying arms."

" Ay; and had he lived to see these days, he would have cursed the hour he ever drew sword in their cause. But more of this hereafter: I promise thee full surely that thy hour will come, and then the words thou hast now heard will stick in thy bosom like barbed, arrows. My road lies there."

He pointed towards a pass leading up into a wild extent of djreary and desolate hills; but as he was about to turn his horse's head into the rugged Path which led from the high-road in that direction, an old woman wrapped in a red cloak, who was sitting by the cross-way, arose, and approaching him, said, in a mysterious tone of voice: "If ye be of our ain folk, gangna up the pass the night for your lives. There is a lion in the path, that is there. The curate of Brotherstane and ten soldiers .hae beset the pass, to hae the lives of ony of our puir wanderers that venture that gate to join wi' Hamilton and Dingwall."

"Have the persecuted folk drawn to any head among themselves?" demanded the stranger.

"About sixty or seventy horse and foot," said the old dame; "but, ewhow! they are puirly armed, and warse fended wi' victual."

"Grod will help His own," said the horseman. "Which way shall I take to join them?"

"It's a mere impossibility this night," said the woman, "the troopers keep sae strict a guard; and they say there's strange news come frae the east, that makes them rage in their cruelty mair fierce than ever. Ye maun take shelter somegate for the night before ye get to the muirs, and keep yoursell in hiding till the grey o' the morning, and then you may find your way through the Drake Moss. When I heard the awfu¹ threatenings o¹ the oppressors, I e'en took my cloak about me, and sate down by the wayside, to warn ony of our puir scattered remnant that chanced to come this gate, before they fell into the nets of the spoilers."

"Have you a house near this?" said the stranger; "and can you give me hiding there?"

"I have," said the old woman, "a hut by the way-side, it may be a mile from hence; but four men of Belial, called dragoons, are lodged therein, to spoil my household goods at their pleasure, because I will not wait upon the thowless, thriftless, fissenless ministry of that carnal man, John Half-text, the curate."

"Good night, good woman, and thanks for thy counsel," said the stranger, as he rode away.

"The blessings of the promise upon you," returned the old dame keep you."

"Amen!" said the tn' my head this night, mortal SKILL canuuu unt;ct me."

"I am very sorry for your distress," said Morton; "and had I a house or place of shelter that could be called my own, I almost think I would risk the utmost rigour of the law rather than leave you in such a strait. But my uncle is so alarmed at the pains and penalties denounced by the laws against such as comfort, receive, or consort with intercommuned persons, that he has strictly forbidden all of us to hold any intercourse with them."

"It is no less than I expected," said the stranger; "nevertheless, I might be received without his knowledge: a barn, a hay-loft, a cart-shed — any place where I could stretch me down, — would be to my habits like a tabernacle of silver set about with planks of cedar." ~ ~

"I assure you," said Morton, much embarrassed, "that I have not the means of receiving you at Milnwood without my uncle's consent and knowledge; nor, if I could do so, would I think myself justifiable in engaging him unconsciously in a danger, which, most of all others, he fears and deprecates."

"Well," said the traveller, "I have but one word to say Did you ever hear your father mention John Balfour of Burley?"

"His ancient friend and comrade, who saved his life, with almost the loss of his own, in the battle of Longmarston-Moor? — Often, very often."

"I am that Balfour," said his companion. "Yonder stands thy uncle's house; I see the light among the trees. The avenger of blood is behind me, and my death certain unless I have refuge there., Now to shrink from the e a thief in the night,

 ,o the bloody death from which he.rescued thy father, or to expose thine uncle's worldly goods to such peril as, in this per-ye'&p generation, attends those who give a morsel of bread or a draught of cold water to a ChrisFian man, when perishing for lack of refreshment!"

A thousand recollections thronged on the mind of Morton at once. His father, whose memory he idolized, had often enlarged upon his obligations to this man, and regretted that, after having been long comrades, they had parted in some unkindness at the time when the kingdom of Scotland was divided into Eesolutioiiers and Protesters, — the former of whom adhered to Charles II. after his father's death upon the scaffold, while the Protesters inclined rather to a -- union with the triumphant republicans. The stern fanaticism of Burley had attached him to this latter party, and the comrades had parted in displeasure, never, as it happened, to meet again. These circumstances the deceased Colonel Morton had often mentioned to his son, and always with an expression of deep regret that he had never, in any manner, been enabled to repay the assistance, which, on more than one occasion, he had received from Burley.

To hasten Morton's decision, the night-wind, as it swept along, brought from a distance the sullen sound of a kettle-drum, which, seeming to approach nearer, intimated that a body of horse were upon their inarch towards them.

"It must be Claverhouse, with the rest of his regiment. What can have occasioned this night-march? If you go on you fall into their handsj if you turn back towards the borough-town, you are in no less danger from Cornet Grahame's party; the path to the hill is beset. I must shelter you at Milnwood, or expose you to instant death,—but the punishment of the law shall fall upon myself, as in justice it should, not upon my uncle. Follow me."

Burley, who had awaited his resolution with great composure, now followed him in silence.

The house of Milnwood, built by the father of the present proprietor, was a decent mansion, suitable to the size of the estate, but, since the accession of this owner, it had been suffered to go considerably into disrepair. At some little distance from the house stood the court of offices. Here Morton paused.

"I must leave you here for a little while," he whispered, "until I can provide a bed for you in the house."

"I care little for such delicacy," said Burley; "for thirty years this head has rested oftener on the turf, or on the next grey stone, than upon either wool or down. A draught of ale, a morsel of bread, to say my prayers, and to stretch me upon dry hay, were to me as good as a painted chamber and a prince's table."

It occurred to Morton at the same moment that to attempt to introduce the fugitive within the house, would materially increase the danger of detection. Accordingly, having struck a light with implements left in the stable for that purpose, and having fastened up their horses, he assigned Burley, for his place of repose, a wooden bed, placed in a loft half-full of hay, which an out-of-door domestic had occupied until dismissed by his uncle in one of those fits of paraimony which became more rigid from day to day. In this untenanted loft Morton left his companion, with a caution to so shade his light that no reflection might be seen from the window, and a promise that he would presently return with such refreshments as he might be able to procure at that late hour. This last, indeed, was a subject on which he felt by no means confident, for the power of obtaining even the most ordinary provisions depended entirely upon the humour in which he might happen to find his uncle's sole confident, the old housekeeper. If she chanced to be a-bed, which was very likely, or out of humour, which was not less so, Morton knew the case to be at least problematical.

Cursing in his heart the sordid parsimony which perxajfid every part of his uncle's establishment, he gave the usual gentle knock at the bolted door, by which he was accustomed to seek admittance when accident had detained him abroad beyond the early and established hours of rest at the house of Milnwood. It was a sort of hesitating tap, which carried an acknowledgment of transgression in its very sDund, and seemed rather to solicit than command attention. After it had been repeated again and again, the housekeeper, grumbling betwixt her teeth as she rose from the chimney corner in the hall, and wrapping her checked handkerchief round her head to secure her from the cold air, paced across the stone-passage, and repeated a careful "Wha's there at this time o' night?" more than once before she undid the bolts and bars, and cautiously opened the door,

"This is a fine time o' night, Mr. Henry," said the old dame, with the tyrannic insolence of a spoilt and favourite domestic, — "a braw time o'night and a bonny, to disturb a peaceful house in, and to keep quiet folk out o' their beds waiting for you. Your uncle's been in his maist three hours syne, and Kobin's ill o' the rheumatize, and he's to his bed too, and sae I had to sit up for ye mysell, for as sair a hoast as I hae."

Here she coughed once or twice, in further evidence of the egregious inconvenience which she had sustained.

"Much obliged to you, Alison, and many kind thanks."

"Heh, sirs, sae fair-fashioned as we are ! Mony folk ca' me Mistress Wilson, and Milnwood himsell is the only ane about this town thinks " ca'ing me Alison, and indeed he as aften says Mrs. Alison as ony other thing."

"Well, then, Mistress Alison," said Morton, "I really am sorry to have kept you up waiting till I came in."

"And now that you are come in, Mr. Henry," said the cross old woman, "what for do you no tak up your candle and gang to your bed ? And mind ye dinna let the candle sweal, as ye gang along the wainscot parlour, and haud a' the house scouring to get out the grease again."

"But, Alison, I really must have something to eat, and a draught of ale, before I go to bed."

"Eat ? — and ale, Mr. Henry ? My certie, ye're ill to serve ! Do ye think we havena heard o' your grand popinjay wark yonder, and how ye bleezed away as muckle pouter as wad hae shot a' the wild-fowl that we " want atween and Candlemas; and then ganging majoring to the piper's Howff wi' " the idle loons in the country, and sitting there birling, at your poor uncle's cost, nae doubt, " " the scaff and raff o' the water-side, till sundown, and then coming haine and crying for ale, as if ye were maister and mair!"

Extremely vexed, yet anxious on account of his guest, to procure refreshments if possible, Morton suppressed his resentment, and gnod-humouredly assured Mrs. Wilson that he was really both hungry and thirsty; "and as for the shootiny at the popinjay, I have heard you say you have been there yourself, Mrs. Wilson. I wish you had come to look at us."

" Ah, Maister Henry," said the old dame, " I wish ye binna beginning to learn the way of blawing in a woman's lug wi' a' your whilly-wha's 1 Aweel, sae ye dinna practise them but on auld wives like me, the less matter. But tak heed o' the young queans, lad. Popinjay—ye think yoursell a braw fellow enow; and troth!" surveying him with the candle, "there's nae fault to find wi' the outside, if the inside be conforming. But I mind, when I was a gilpy of a lassock, seeing the duke, that was him that lost his head at London: folk said it wasna a very gude ane, but it was aye a sair loss to him, puir gentleman.—Aweel, he wan the popinjay, for few cared to win it ower his Grace's head,—weel, he had a comely presence, and when " the gentles mounted to show their capers, his Grace was as near to me as I am to you; and he said to me, 'Tak tent " yoursell, my bonny lassie (these were his very words), for my horse is not very chancy.¹—And now, as ye say ye had sae little to eat or drink, I "' let you see that I havena been sae unmindfu' o' you; for I dinna think it's safe for young folk to gang to their bed on an empty stomach."

To do Mrs. Wilson justice, her nocturnal harangues upon such occasions not unfrequently terminated with this sage apophthegm, which always prefaced the producing of some provision a little better than ordinary, such as she now placed before him. In fact, the principal object of her 'maundering was to display her consequence and love of power; for Mrs. Wilson was not, at the bottom, an ill-tempered woman, and certainly loved her old and young master (both of whom she tormented extremely) better than any one else in the world. She now eyed Mr. Henry, as she called him, with great complacency, as he partook of her good cheer.

"Muckle gude may it do ye, my bonny man. I trow ye dinna get sic a skirl-in-the-pan as that at Niel Blane's. His wife was a canny body, and could dress things very weel for ane in her line " business but no like a gentleman's housekeeper, to be sure. But I doubt the daughter's a silly thing, — an unco cockernony she had busked on her head at the kirk last Sunday. I am doubting that there will be news o' a' thae braws. But my auld een's drawing thegither: dinna hurry yoursell, my bonny mftn, tak mind about the putting out the candle, and there's a horn of ale, and a glass of clow-gillie-flower water, — I dinna gie ilka body that; I keep it for a pain I hae whiles in my ain stomach, and it's better for your young blood than brandy. Sae, gude-night to ye, Mr. Henry, and see that ye tak gude care o' the candle,"

Morton promised to attend punctually to her caution, and requested her not to be alarmed if she heard the door opened, as she knew he must again, as usual, look to his horse and arrange him for the night. Mrs. Wilson then retreated, and Morton, folding up his provisions, was about to hasten to his guest, when the nodding head of the old house-keeper was again thrust in at the door, with an admonition to remember to take an account of his ways before he laid himself down to rest, and to pray for protection during the hours of darkness.

Such were the manners of a certain class of domestics, once common in Scotland, and perhaps still to be found in some old manor-houses in its remote counties. They were fixtures in the family they belonged to ; and as they never conceived the possibility of such a thing as dismissal to be within the chances of their lives, they were of course sincerely attached to every member of it.¹ On the other hand, when spoiled by the indulgence or inj'olejfcce of their superiors, they were very apt to become ill-tempered, self-sofficient, and tyrannical, — so much so that a mistress or master would sometimes almost have wished to exchange their cross-grained fidelity for the smooth and accommodating duplicity of a modern monial.

' A masculine retainer of this kind, having offended his master extremely, was commanded to leave his service instantly. " In troth and that will I not," answered the domestic; "if your honour disna ken when ye hae a gude servant, I ken when I hae a gude master, and go away I will not." On another occasion of the same nature the master said, "John, you and I shall never sleep under the same roof again;" to which John replied, with much naivete, " Where the deil can your honour be ganging 1 "

CHAPTER VI.

Yee, this man's brow, like to a tragic leaf,
Foretells the nature of a tragic volume.

SHAKSFEABE.

BEING at length rid of the housekeeper's presence, Morton made a collection of what he had reserved from the provisions set before him, and prepared to carry them to his concealed guest. He did not think it necessary to take a light, being perfectly acquainted with every turn of the road; and it was lucky he did not do so, for he had hardly stepped beyond the threshold ere a heavy trampling of torses announced that the body of cavalry, whose kettle-drums¹ they had before heard were in the act of passing along the high-road which winds round the foot of the bank on which the house of Milnwood was placed. He heard the commanding officer distinctly give the word "halt." A pause of silence followed, interrupted only by the occasional neighing or pawing of an impatient charger.

"Whose house is this?" said a voice, in a tone of authority and command.

"Milnwood, if it like your honour," was the reply.

"Is the owner well affected?" said the inquirer.

¹ Regimental music is never played at night. But who can assure us that such was not the custom in Charles the Second's time? Till I am well informed on this point, the kettle-drums shall clash on, afl adding something to the picturesque effect of the night march.

"He complies with the orders of Government, and frequents an indulged minister," was the response.

"Hum ! ay! indulged ? — a mere mask for treason, very impolitically allowed to those who are too great cowards to wear their principles barefaced. Had we not better send up a party and search the house, in case some of the bloody villains concerned in this heathenish butchery may be concealed in it ?"

Ere Morton could recover from the alarm into which this proposal had thrown him, a third speaker rejoined, "I cannot think it at all necessary; Milnwood is an infirm, hypochondriac old man, who never meddles with politics, and loves his moneybags and bonds better than anything else in the world. His nephew, I hear, was at the wappenschaw to-day, and gained the popinjay, which does not look like a fanatic. I should think they are all gone to bed long since, and an alarm at this time of night might kill the poor old man."

"Well," rejoined the leader, "if that be so, to search the house would be lost time, of which we have but little to throw away. Gentlemen of the Life Guards, forward — march !"

A few notes on the trumpet, mingled with the occasional boom of the kettle-drum, to mark the cadence, joined with the tramp of hoofs and the clash of arms, announced that the troop had resumed its march. The moon broke out as the leading files of the column attained a hill, up which the road winded, and showed indistinctly the glittering of the steel caps; and the dark figures of the horses and riders might be imperfectly traced through the gloom. They continued to advance up the hill and sweep over the top of it in such long succession as intimated a considerable numerical force.

When the last of them had disappeared, young Morton resumed his purpose of visiting his guest. Upon entering the place of refuge, he found him seated on his humble couch with a pocket Bible open in his hand, which he seemed to study with intense meditation. His broadsword, which he had unsheathed in the first alarm at the arrival of the dragoons, lay naked across his knees, and the little taper that stood beside him upon the old chest, which served the purpose of a table, threw a partial and imperfect light upon those stern and harsh features, in which ferocity was rendered more solemn and dignified by a wild cast of tragic enthusiasm. His brow was that of one in whom some strong o'ermastering principle has overwhelmed all other passions and feelings, like the swell of a high spring-tide, when the usual cliffs and breakers vanish from the eye, and their existence is only indicated by the chafing foam of the waves that burst and wheel over them. He raised his head, after Morton had contemplated him for about a minute.

"I perceive," said Morton, looking at his sword, "that you heard the horsemen ride by; their passage delayed me for some minutes."

"I scarcely heeded them," said Balfour; "my hour is not yet come. That I shall one day fall into their hands, and be honourably associated with the saints whom they have slaughtered, I am full well aware. And I would, young man, that the hour were come; it should be as welcome to me as ever wedding to bridegroom. But if my Master has more work for me on earth, I must not do Hia labour grudgingly."

"Eat and refresh yourself," said Morton; "tomorrow your safety requires you should leave this place, in order to gain the hills, so soon as you can see to distinguish the track through the morasses."

¹¹ Young man," returned Balfour, "you are already weary of me, and would be yet more so, perchance, did you know the task upon which I have been lately put. And I wonder not that it should be BO, for there are times when I am weary of myself. Think you not it is a sore trial for flesh and blood to be called upon to execute the righteous judgments of Heaven while we are yet in the body, and continue to retain that blinded sense and sympathy for carnal suffering which makes our owu flesh thrill when we strike a gash upon the body of another? And think you that when pome prime tyrant has been removed from his place, that the instruments of his punishment can at all times look back on their share in his downfall with firm and unshaken nerves? Must they not sometimes even question the truth of that inspiration which they have felt and acted under? Must they nob sometimes doubt the origin of that strong impulse with which their prayers for heavenly direction under difficulties have been inwardly answered and eonfirmed, and confuse, in their disturbed apprehensions, the responses of Truth itself with some strong delusion of the enemy?"

"These are subjects, Mr. Balfour, on which I am ill qualified to converse with you," answered Morton; "but I own I should strongly doubt the origin of any inspiration which seamed to dictate a line of conduct contrary to those feelings of natural humanity which Heaven has assigned to us as the general law of our conduct."

Balfour seemed somewhat disturbed, and drew himself hastily up, but immediately composed himself, and answered coolly, "It is natural you should think so; you are yet in the dungeon-house of the law, •—a pit darker than that into which Jeremiah was plunged, even the dungeon of Malcaiah the son of Hamelmelech, where there was no water but mire. Yet is the seal of the covenant upon your forehead, and the son of the righteous, who resisted to blood where the banner was spread on the mountains, shall not be utterly lost, as one of the children of darkness. Trow ye that in this day of bitterness and calamity nothing is required at our hands but to keep the moral law as far as our carnal frailty will permit? Think ye our conquests must be only over our corrupt and evil affections and passions? No; we are called upon, when we have girded up our loins, to run the race boldly, and when we have drawn the sword, we are enjoined to smite the ungodly, though he be our neighbour, and the man of power and cruelty, though he were of our own kindred and the friend of our own bosom."

"These are the sentiments," said Morton, "that your enemies iinpute to you, and which palliate, if they do not vindicate, the cruel measures which the council have directed against you. They affirm that you pretend to derive your rule of action from what you call an inward light, rejecting the restraints of legal magistracy, of national law, and even of Oommon humanity, when in apposition to what you call the spirit within you."

"They do us wrong," answered the Covenanter; "it is they, perjured as they are, who have rejected all law, both divine and civil, and who now persecute us for adherence to the Solemn League and Covenant between God and the kingdom of Scotland, to which all of them, save a few popish malignants, have sworn in former days, and which they now burn in the market-places, and tread under foot in derision. When this Charles Stewart returned to these kingdoms, did the malignants bring him back? They had tried it with strong hand, but they failed, I trow. Could James Grahame of Montrose and his Highland caterans have put him again in the place of his father? I think their heads on the Westport told another tale for many a long day. It was the workers of the glorious work, the reformers of the beauty of the tabernacle, that called him again to the high place from which his father fell. And what has been our reward? In the words of the prophet, 'We looked for peace, but no good came; and for a time of health, and behold trouble! The snorting of his horses was heard from Dan: the whole land trembled at the sound of the neighing of his strong ones; for they are come, and have devoured the land, and all that is in it.'"

"Mr. Balfour," answered Morton, "I neither undertake to subscribe to or refute your complaints against the Government. I have endeavoured to repay a debt due to the comrade of my father, by giving you shelter in your distress; but you will excuse me from engaging myself either in your cause or in controversy. I will leave you to repose, and heartily wish it were in my power to render your condition more comfortable."

"But I shall see you, I trust, in the morning, ere I depart? I am not a man whose bowels yearn after kindred and friends of this world. When I put my hand to the plough, I entered into a covenant with my worldly affections that I should not look back on the things I left behind me. Yet the son of mine ancient comrade is to me as mine own, and I cannot behold him without the deep and firm belief that I shall one day see him gird on his sword in the dear and precious cause for which his father fought and bled."

With a promise on Morton's part that he would call the refugee when it was time for him to pursue his journey, they parted for the night.

Morton retired to a few hours¹ rest; but his imagination, disturbed by the events of the day, did not permit him to enjoy sound repose. There was a blended vision of horror before him, in which his new friend seemed to be a principal actor. The fair form of Edith Bellenden also mingled in his dream, weeping, and with dishevelled hair, and appearing to call on him for comfort and assistance, which he had not in his power to render. He awoke from these unrefreshing slumbers with a feverish impulse, and a heart which foreboded disaster. There was already a tinge of dazzling lustre on the verge of the distant hills, and the dawn was abroad in all the freshness of a summer morning.

"I have slept too long," he exclaimed to himself, "and must now hasten to forward the journey of this unfortunate fugitive."

He dressed himself as fast as possible, opened the door of the house with as little noise as he could, and hastened to the place of refuge occupied by the Covenanter. Morton entered on tiptoe, for the determined tone and manner, as well as the unusual language and sentiments of this singular individual, had struck him With a sensation approaching to awe. Balfour was still asleep. A ray of light streamed on his uncurtained couch, and showed to Morton the working of his harsh features, which seemed agitated by some strong internal cause of disturbance. He had not undressed. Both his arms were above the bed-cover, the right hand strongly clenched, and occasionally making that abortive attempt to strike which usually attends dreams of violence; the left was extended, and agitated, from time to time, by a movement as if repulsing some one. The perspiration stood on his brow, "like bubbles in a late disturbed stream," and these marks of emotion were accompanied with broken words which escaped from him at intervals: "Thou art taken, Judas — thou art taken — Cling not to my knees — cling not to my knees—hew him down!—A priest? Ay, a priest of Baal, to be bound and slain, even at the brook Kishon. — Firearms will not prevail against him — Strike — thrust with the cold iron — put him out of pain — put him out of pain, we'll it but for the sake of his grey hairs."

Much alarmed at the import of these expressions, which seemed to burst from him even in sleep with the stern energy accompanying the perpetration of some act of violence, Morton shook his guest by the shoulder in order to awake him, The first words he uttered Were, "Bear me where ye will, I will avouch the deed!"

His glance around having then fully awakened him, he at once assumed all the stetn and gloomy composure of his ordinary manner, and throwing himself on his knees, before speaking to Morton, poured forth an ejaculatory prayer for the suffering Church of Scotland, entreating that the blood of her murdered saints and martyrs might be precious in the sight of Heaven, and that the shield of the Almighty might be spread over the scattered remnant, who, for His name's sake, were abiders in the wilderness. Vengeance, speedy and ample vengeance on the oppressors, was the concluding petition of his devotions, which he expressed aloud in strong and emphatic language, rendered more impressive by the Orientalism of Scripture.

When he had finished his prayer he arose, and, taking Morton by the arm, they descended together to the stable, where the Wanderer (to give Burley a title which was often conferred on his sect) began to make his horse ready to pursue his journey. When the animal was saddled and bridled, Burley requested Morton to walk with him a gun-shot into the wood, and direct him to the right road for gaining the moors. Morton readily complied, and they walked for some time in silence under the shade of some fine old trees, pursuing a sort of natural path, which, after passing through woodland for about half a mile, led into the bare and wild country which extends to the foot of the hills.

There was little conversation between them, until at length Burley suddenly asked Morton, "Whether the words he had spoken over-night had borne fruit in his mind?"

Morton answered, "That he remained of the same opinion which he had formerly held, and was determined, at least as far and as long as possible, to unite the duties of a good Christian with those of a peaceful subject."

"la other words," replied Burley, "yon are desirous to serve both God and Mammon, — to be one day professing the truth with your lips, and the next day in arms, at the command of carnal and tyrannic authority, to shed the blood of those who for the truth have forsaken all things ? Think ye," he continued, "to touch pitch and remain undefiled; to mix in the ranks of malignants, papists, papa-prelatists, latitudinarians, and scoffers; to partake of their sports, which are like the meat offered unto idols ; to hold intercourse, perchance, with their daughters, as the sons of God with the daughters of men in the world before the flood, — think you, I say, to do all these things, and yet remain free from pollution ? I say unto you that all communication with the enemies of the Church is the accursed thing which God hateth ! Touch not, taste not, handle not ! And grieve not, young man, as if you alone were called upon to subdue your carnal affections, and renounce the pleasures which are a snare to your feet; I say to you that the Son of David hath denounced no better lot on the whole generation of mankind."

He then mounted his horse, and, turning to Morton, repeated the text of Scripture, "An heavy yoke was ordained for the sons of Adam from the day they go out of their mother's womb, till the day that they return to the mother of all things; from him who is clothed in blue silk and weareth a crown, even to him who weareth simple linen,—wrath, envy, trouble, and unquietness, rigour, strife, and fear of death in the time of rest."

Having uttered these words, he set his horse in motion, and soon disappeared among the boughs of the forest.

"Farewell, stern enthusiast," said Morton, look' ing after him; "in some moods of my mind, how dangerous would be the society of such a companion 1 If I am unmoved by his zeal for abstract doctrines of faith, or rather for a peculiar mode of worship [such was the purport of his reflections], can I be a man and a Scotchman, and look with indifference on that persecution which has made wise men mad? Was not the cause of freedom, civil and religious, that for which my father fought; and shall I do well to remain inactive, or to take the part of an oppressive Government, if there should appear any rational prospect of redressing the insofferable wrongs to which my miserable countrymen are subjected? And yet, who shall warrant me that these people, rendered wild by persecution, would not, in the hour of victory, be as cruel and as intolerant as those by whom they are now hunted down? What degree of moderation, or of mercy, can be expected from this Burley, so distinguished as one of their principal champions, and who seems even now to be reeking from some recent deed of violence, and to feel stings of remorse which even his enthusiasm cannot altogether stifle? I am weary of seeing nothing but violence and fury around me,—now assuming the mask of lawful authority, now taking that of religious zeal. I am sick of my country, of myself, of my dependent situation, of my repressed feelings, of these woods, of that river, of that house, of all but — Edith; and she can never be mine! Why should I haunt her walks? Why encourage my own delusion, and perhaps hers? She can never be mine. Her grandmother's pride, the opposite principles of our families, my wretched state of dependence! — a poor miserable slave, for I have not even the wages of a servant, — all circumstances give the lie to the vain hope that we can, ever be united. Why then protract a delusion so painful?

"But I am no slave," he said aloud, and drawing himself up to his full stature, — "no slave, in one respect, surely. I can change my abode, my father's sword is mine, and Europe lies open before me, as before him and hundreds besides of my countrymen who have filled it with the fame of their exploits. Perhaps some lucky chance may raise me to a rank with our Ruthvens, our Lesleys, our Monroes, the chosen leaders of the famous Protestant champion, Gustavus Adolphus; or, if not, a soldier's life or a soldier's grave."

When he had formed this determination, he found himself near the door of his uncle's house, and resolved to lose no time in making him acquainted with it.

"Another glance of Edith's eye, another walk by Edith's side, and my resolution would melt away. I will take an irrevocable step, therefore, and then see her for the last time."

In this mood he entered the wainscoted parlour, in which his uncle was already placed at his morning's refreshment, — a huge plate of oatmeal porridge, with a corresponding allowance of butter-milk. The favourite housekeeper was in attendance, half standing, half resting on the back of a chair, in a posture betwixt freedom and respect. The old gentleman had been remarkably tall in his earlier days, — an advantage which he now lost by stooping to such a degree that at a meeting where there was some dispute concerning the sort of arch which should be thrown over a considerable brook, a facetious neighbour proposed to offer Milnwood a handsome sum for his curved backbone, alleging that he would sell anything that belonged to him. Splay feet of unusual size, long thin hands garnished with nails which seldom felt the steel, a wrinkled and puckered visage, the length of which corresponded with that of his person, together with a pair of little sharp, bargain-making grey eyes that seemed eternally looking out for their advantage, completed the highly unpromising exterior of Mr. Morton of Milnwood. As it would have been very injudicious to have lodged a liberal or benevolent disposition in such an unworthy cabinet, nature had suited his person with a mind exactly in conformity with it ; that is to say, mean, selfish, and covetous.

When this amiable personage was aware of the presence of his nephew, he hastened, before addressing him, to swallow the spoonful of porridge which he was in the act of conveying to his mouth ; and as it chanced to be scalding hot, the pain occasioned by its descent down his throat and into his stomach inflamed the ill-humour with which he was already prepared to meet his kinsman.

"The deil take them that made them !" was his first ejaculation, apostrophising his mess of porridge.

"They 're gude parritch enough," said Mrs. Wilson, "if ye wad but take time to sup them; I made them mysell. But if folk winna hae patience, they should get their thrapples causewayed."

"Haud you' peace, Alison! I was speaking to my nevoy. — How is this, sir ? And what sort " Scampering gates are these o' going on ? Ye were not at hame last night' till near midnight,"

"Thereabouts, sir, I believe," answered Morton, • in an indifferent tone.

"Thereabouts, sir? What sort of an answer is that, sir? Why came ye na hame when other folk left the grund?"

"I suppose you know the reason very well, sir," said Morton; "I had the fortune to be the best marksman of the day, and remained, as is usual, to give some little entertainment to the other young men."

"The deevil ye did, sir! And ye come to tell me that to my face? You pretend to gie entertainments, that canna come by a dinner except by sorning on a carefu' man like me? But if ye put me to charges, I'se work it out o' ye. I seena why ye shouldna haud the pleugh, now that the pleughman has left us; it wad set ye better than wearing thae green duds, and wasting your siller on powther and lead; it wad put ye in an honest calling, and wad keep ye in bread without being behadden to ony ane."

"I am very ambitious of learning such a calling, sir, but I don't understand driving the plough."

"And what for no? It's easier than your gunning and archery that ye like sae weel. Auld Davie is ca'ing it e'en now, and ye may be goadsman for the first twa or three days, and tak tent ye dinna o'erdrive the owsen, and then ye will be fit to gang between the stilts. Ye '1 ne'er learn younger, I '1 be your caution. Haggie-holm is heavy land, and Davie is ower auld to keep the coulter down now."

"I beg pardon for interrupting you, sir, but I have formed a scheme for myself which will have the same effect of relieving you of the burden and charge attending my company."

"Ay? Indeed? a scheme o' yours? — that must be a denty ane!" said the uncle, with a very peculiar sneer; "let's hear about it, lad."

"It is said in two words, sir. I intend to leave this country, and serve abroad, as my father did before these unhappy troubles broke out at home. His name will not be so entirely forgotten in the countries where he served but that it will procure his son at least the opportunity of trying his fortune as a soldier."

"Crude be gracious to us!" exclaimed the housekeeper; "our young Mr. Harry gang abroad? Na, na! eh, iia! that maun never be."

Milnwood, entertaining no thought or purpose of parting with his nephew, who was, moreover, very useful to him in many respects, was thunder-struck at this abrupt declaration of independence from a person whose deference to him had hitherto been unlimited. He recovered himself, however, immediately.

"And wha do you think is to give you the means, young man, for such a wild-goose chase? Not I, I am sure; I can hardly support you at hame. And ye wad be marrying, I'se warrant, as your father did afore ye, too, and sending your uncle hame a pack o' weans to be fighting and skirling through the house in my auld days, and to take wing and flee aff like yoursell whenever they were asked to serve a turn about the town."

"I have no thoughts of ever marrying," answered Henry.

"Hear till him now!" said the housekeeper. "It's a shame to hear a douce young lad speak in that way, since a^f the warld kens that they maun either marry or do waur."

"Haud your pep.ce, Alison," said her master; "and you, Hairy," he added more mildly, "put this nonsense out o' your head, — this comes o' letting ye gang a-sodgering for a day. Mind, ye hae nae siller, lad, for ony sic nonsense plans."

"I beg your pardon, sir, my wants shall be very few; and would you please to give me the gold chain which the Margrave gave to my father after the battle of Lutzen —"

"Mercy on us ! the gowd chain ?" exclaimed his uncle.

"The chain of gowd!" reechoed the house-keeper, both aghast with astonishment at the audacity of the proposal.

"I will keep a few links," continued the young man, "to remind me of him by yrhom it was won, and the place where he won it," continued Morton ; "the rest shall furnish me the means of following the same career in which my father obtained that mark of distinction."

"Mercifu¹ powers !" exclaimed the governante ; "my master wears it every Sunday !"

"Sunday and Saturday," added old Milnwoofl, "whenever I put on my black velvet coat; and Wylie Mactrickit is partly of opinion it's a kind of heirloom that rather belangs to the head of the house than to the immediate descendant. It has three thousand links; I have counted them a thousand times. It's worth three hundred pounds Sterling."

"That is more than I want, sir; if you engage to give me the third part of the money, and five links of the chain, it will amply serve my purpose, and the rest will be some slight atonement for the expense and trouble I have put you to."

"The laddie's in a creel!" exclaimed his uncle. "Oh, sirs, what will become o' the rigs o' Milnwood when I am dead and gane? He would fling the crown of Scotland awa' if he had it."

"Hout, sir," said the old housekeeper, "I maun e'en gay it's partly your ain faut. Ye maunna curb his head ower sair in neither • and, to be sure, since he has gane down to the Howff, ye maun just e'en pay the lawing."

"If it be not abune twa dollars, Alison," said the old gentleman, very reluctantly.

"I'll settle it mysell wi' Niel Blane, the first time I gang down to the clachan," said Alison, "cheaper than your honour or Mr. Harry can do ;" and then whispered to Henry, "Dinna vex him ony mair; I 'll pay the lave out " the butter siller, and nae mair words about it." Then proceeding aloud, "And ye maunna speak o' the young gentleman handing the pleugh i there's puir distressed Whigs enow aboub the country will be glad to do that for a bite and a soup,—it sets them far better than the like " him."

"And then we'll hae the dragoons on us," said Milnwood, "for comforting and entertaining inter-communed rebels ; a bonny strait ye wad put us in! —But take your breakfast, Harry, and then lay by your new green coat, and put on your Raploch grey; it's a mair mensfu' and thrifty dress, and a mair seemly sight, than thae dangling slops and ribbands."

Morton left the room, perceiving plainly that he had at present no chance of gaining his purpose, and perhaps not altogether displeased at the obstacles which seemed to present themselves to his leaving the neighbourhood of Tillietudlem. The housekeeper followed him into the next room, patting him on the back, and bidding him "be a gude bairn, and pit by his braw things."

"And I'll loop doun your hat, and lay by the band and ribband," said the officious dame; "and ye maun never, at 110 hand, speak o' leaving the land, or of selling the gowd chain, for your uncle has an unco pleasure in looking on you and in counting the links of the chainzie; and ye ken auld folk canna last fur ever; sae the chain and the lands and a' will be your ain ae day; and ye may marry oiyy leddy in the country-side ye like, and keep a braw house at Milnwood, for there's enow o' means; and is not that worth waiting for, my dow?"

There was something in the latter part of the prognostic which sounded so agreeably in the ears of Morton that he shook the old dame cordially by the hand, and assured her he was much obliged by her good advice, and would weigh it carefully before he proceeded to act upon his former resolution.

CHAPTER VII.

Prom seventeen years till now, almost fourscore,
Here lived I, but now live here no more.
At seventeen years many their fortunes seek,
But at fourscore it is too late a week.

As You Like It.

WE must conduct our readers to the Tower of Tillietudlem, to which Lady Margaret Bellenden had returned, in romantic phrase, malecontent and full of heaviness at the unexpected and, as she deemed it, indelible affront which had been brought upon her dignity by the public miscarriage of Goose Gibbie. That unfortunate man-at-arms was forthwith commanded to drive his feathered charge to the most remote parts of the common moor, and on no account to awaken the grief or resentment of his lady by appearing in her presence while the sense of the affront was yet recent

The next proceeding of Lady Margaret was to hold a solemn court of justice, to which Harrison and the butler were admitted, partly on the footing of witnesses, partly as assessors, to inquire into the recusancy of Cuddie Headrigg the ploughman, and the abetment which he had received from his mother, — these being regarded as the original causes of the disaster which had befallen the chivalry of Tillietudlem. The charge being fully made out and substantiated, Lady Margaret resolved to reprimand the culprits in person, and if she found them impenitent, to extend the censure into a sentence of expulsion from the barony. Miss Bellenden alone ventured to say anything in behalf of the accused. But her countenance did not profit them as it might have done on any other occasion; for so soon as Edith had heard it ascertained that the unfortunate cavalier had not suffered in his person, his disaster had affected her with an irresistible disposition to laugh, which, in spite of Lady Margaret's indignation, or rather irritated, as usual by restraint, had broke out repeatedly on her return homeward, until her grandmother, in no shape imposed upon by the several fictitious causes which the young lady assigned for her ill-timed risibility, upbraided her in very bitter terms with being insensible to the honour of her family. Miss Bellenden's intercession, therefore, had, on this occasion, little or no chance to be listened to.

As if to evince the rigour of her disposition, Lady Margaret, on this solemn occasion, exchanged the ivory-headed cane with which she commonly walked, for an immense gold-headed staff which had belonged to her father, the deceased Earl of Torwood, and which, like a sort of mace of office, she only made use of on occasions of special solemnity. Supported by this awful baton of command, Lady Margaret Bellenden entered the cottage of the delinquents.

There was an air of consciousness about old Mause, as she rose from her wicker chair in the chimney-nook, not with the cordial alertness of visage which used, on other occasions, to express the honour she felt in the visit of her lady, but with a certain solemnity and embarrassment, like an accused party on his first appearance in presence of his judge, before whom he is, nevertheless, determined to assert his innocence. Her arms were folded, her mouth primmed into an expression of respect, mingled with obstinacy, her whole mind apparently bent up to the solemn interview. With her best curtesy to the -ground, and a mute motion of reverence, Mause pointed to the chair, which, on former occasions, Lady Margaret (for the good lady was somewhat of a gossip) had deigned to occupy for half an hour sometimes at a time, hearing the news of the county and of the borough. But at present her mistress was far too indignant for such condescension. She rejected the mute invitation with a haughty wave of her hand, and drawing herself up as she spoke, she uttered the following interrogatory in a tone calculated to overwhelm the culprit: —

"Is it true, Mause, as I am informed by Harrison, Gudyill, and others of my people, that you hae taen it upon you, contrary to the faith you owe to (rod and the king, and to me, your natural lady and mistress, to keep back your son frae the wappenschaw, held by the order of the sheriff, and to return his armour and abulyements at a moment when it was impossible to find a suitable delegate in his stead, whereby the barony of Tillietudlem, baith in the person of its mistress and indwellers, has incurred sic a disgrace and dishonour as has-na befa'en the family since the days of Malcolm Canmore?"

Mause's habitual respect for her mistress was extreme; she hesitated, and one or two short cpughs expressed the difficulty she had in defending herself.

"I am sure — my leddy — hem, hem! — I am sure I ajn sorry — very sorry that ony cause of displeasure should hae occurred; but my son's illness —"

" Dinna tell me of your son's illness, Mause! Had he been sincerely unweel, ye would hae been at the Tower by daylight to get something that wad do him gude; there are few ailments that I havena medical recipes for, and that ye ken fu' weel."

" Oh, ay, my leddy! I am sure ye hae wrought wonderful cures; the last thing ye sent Cuddie, when he had the batts, e'en wrought like a charm."

"Why, then, woman, did ye not apply to me, if there was ony real need? But there was none, ye fause-hearted vassal that ye are !"

" Your leddyship never ca'd me sic a word as that before. Ohon ! that I suld live to be ca'd sae," she continued, bursting into tears, "and me a born servant o' the house o' Tillietudlem ! I am sure they belie baith Cuddie and me sair, if they said he wadna fight ower the boots in blude for your leddyship and Miss Edith, and the auld Tower, — ay suld he, and I would rather see him buried beneath it, than he suld gie way; but thir ridings and wapenschawings, my leddy, I hae nae broo " them ava. I can find nae warrant for them whatsoever."

" Nae warrant for them ?" cried the high-born dame. "Do ye na ken, woman, that ye are bound to be liege vassals in all hunting, hosting, watching, and warding, when lawfully summoned thereto in my name ? Your service is not gratuitous. I trow ye hae land for it. Ye're kindly tenants; hae a cot-house, a kale-yard, and a cow's grass on the common. Few hae been brought farther ben, and ye grudge your son suld gie me a day's service in the field?"

"Na, my leddy, na, my leddy, it's no that," exclaimed Mause, greatly embarrassed, "but ane canna serve twa maisters; and, if the truth maun e'en come out, there 's Ane abune whase commands I maun obey before your leddyship's. I am sure I would put neither king's nor kaisar's, nor ony earthly creature's, afore them."

"How mean ye by that, ye auld fule woman? D'ye think that I order onything against conscience?"

"I dinna pretend to say that, my leddy, in regard o' your leddyship's conscience, which has been brought up, as it were, wi' prelatie principles ; but ilka aue maun walk by the light o' their ain; and mine," said Mause, waxing bolder as the conference became animated, "tells me that I suld leave a', — cot, kale-yard, and cow's grass, — and soffer a', rather than that I or mine should put on harness in an unlawfu' cause."

"Unlawfu' !" exclaimed her mistress ; "the cause to which you are called by your lawful leddy and mistress, by the command of the king, by the writ of the privy council, by the order of the lord-lieutenant, by the warrant of the sheriff ?"

"Ay, my leddy, nae doubt; but no to displeasure your leddyship, ye "I mind that there was ance a king in Scripture they ca'd Nebuchadnezzar, and he set up a golden image in the plain o' Dura, as it might be in the haugh yonder by the water-side, where the array were warned to meet yesterday; and the princes and the governors and the captains, and the judges themsells, forby the treasurers, the counsellors, and the sheriffs, were warned to the dedication thereof, and commanded to fall down and worship at the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, and all kinds of music."

"And what o' a' this, ye fule wife ? Or what had Nebuchadnezzar to do with the wappenschaw of the Upper Ward of Clydesdale ¹"

"Only Just thus far, my leddy," continued Mauae, firmly, "that prelacy is like the great golden image in the plain of Dura, and that as Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego were borne out in refusing to bow down and worship, so neither shall Cuddie Headrigg, your leddyship's poor pleughman, at least wi' his auld mither's consent, make murgeons or Jenny-flections, as they ca' them, in the house of the prelates and curates, nor gird him wi' armour to fight in their cause, either at the sound of kettle-drums, organs, bagpipes, or ony other kind of music whatever."

Lady Margaret Bellenden heard this exposition of Scripture with the greatest possible indignation, as well as surprise.

"I see which way the wind blows," she exclaimed, after a pause of astonishment; "the evil spirit of the year sixteen hundred and forty-twa is at wark again as merrily as ever, and ilka auld wife in the chimley-neuck will be for knapping doctrine wi' doctors o' divinity and the godly fathers o' the Church."

"If your leddyship means the bishops and curates, I'm sure they hae been but stepfathers to the Kirk " Scotland. And, since your leddyship is pleased to speak " parting wi' us, I am free to tell you a piece " my mind in another article. Your leddyship and the steward hae been pleased to propose that my son Cuddie suld work in the barn " a new-fangled machine ¹ for dighting the corn frae the chaff, thus impiously thwarting the will of Divine Providence, by raising wind for your leddyship's ain particular use by human art, instead of soliciting it by prayer, or waiting patiently for whatever dispensation of wind Providence was pleased to send upon the sheeling-hill. Now, my leddy — "

¹ Probably something similar to the barn-fanners now used for winnowing corn, which were not, however, used in their present shape until about 1730. They were objected to by the more rigid sectaries on their first introduction, upon such reasoning as that of honest Manse in the text.

"The woman would drive ony reasonable being daft!" said Lady Margaret, then, resuming her tone of authority and indifference, she concluded: "Weel, Mause, I'll just end where I sud hae begun: ye're ower learned and ower godly for me to dispute wi'; sae I have just this to say, — either Cuddie must attend musters when he's lawfully warned by the ground officer, or the sooner he and you flit and quit my bounds the better. There's nae scarcity o' auld wives or ploughmen; but if there were, I had rather that the rigs of Tillietudlem bare naething but windle-straes and sandy lavrocks¹ than that they were ploughed by rebels to the king "

"Aweel, my leddy," said Mause, "I was born here, and thought to die where my father died; and your leddyship has been a kind mistress, I "I ne'er deny that, and I'se ne'er cease to pray for you, and for Miss Edith, and that ye may be brought to see the error of your ways. But still — "

"The error of my ways!" interrupted Lady Margaret, much incensed, — "The error of my ways, ye uncivil woman?"

"Ou, ay, my leddy, we are blinded that live in this valley of teara and darkness, and hae "o\Ver mony errors, grit folks as weel as sm"; but, as I said, my puir beiiison will rest wi' you and yours wherever I am. I will be wae to hear o' your affliction, and blithe to hear o' your prosperity, temporal and spiritual. But I canna prefer the commands of an earthly mistress to those of a heavenly master, and sae I am e'en ready to soffer for righteousness¹ sake."

¹ Bent-grass and sand-larks.

"It is very well," said Lady Margaret, turning her back in great displeasure ; "ye ken my will, Mause, in the matter. I '1 hae nae Whiggery in the barony of Tillietudlem ; the next thing wad be to set up a conventicle in my very withdrawing room."

Having said this, she departed, with an air of great dignity; and Mause, giving way to feelings which she had suppressed during the interview, — for she, like her mistress, had her own feeling of pride, — now lifted up her voice and wept aloud.

Cuddie, whose malady, real or pretended, still detained him in bed, lay perdu during all this conference, snugly ensconced within his boarded bedstead, and terrified to death lest Lady Margaret, whom he held in hereditary reverence, should have detected his presence and bestowed on him personally some of those bitter reproaches with which she loaded his mother. But as soon as he thought her ladyship fairly out of hearing, he bounced up in his nest.

"The foul f" ye that I suld say sae," he cried out to his mother, "for a lang-tongued, claverin wife, as my father, honest man, aye ca'd ye! Couldna ye let the ledly alane " your Whiggery ? And I was e'en as great a gomeral to let ye persuade me to lie up here amang the blankets like a hurcheon, instead o' gaun to the wappen-schaw like uther folk. Odd, but I put a trick on ye, for I was out at the window-bole when your auld back was turned, and awa down by to hae a baff at the pop-injay, and I shot within twa on 't. I cheated the leddy for your clavers, but I wasna gaun to cheat my joe. But she may marry whae she likes now, for I'm clean dung ower. This is a waur dirdum than we got frae Mr. Gudyill when ye garr'd me refuse to eat the plum-porridge on Yule-eve, — as if it were ony matter to God or man whether a pleughman had suppit on minched pies or sour sowens."

"Oh, whisht, my bairn, whisht," replied Mause; "thou kensna about thae things. It was forbidden meat, — things dedicated to set days and holidays, which are inhibited to the use of Protestant Christians."

"And now," continued her son, "ye hae brought the ledly hersell on our hands! An I could but hae gotten some decent claes in, I wad hae spanged out o' bed, and tauld her I wad ride where she liked, night or day, an she wad but leave us the free house and the yaird, that grew the best early kale in the haill country, and the cow's grass."

"Oh, wow! my winsome bairn, Cuddie," continued the old dame, "murmur not at the dispensation; never grudge soffering in the gude cause."

"But what ken I if the cause is gude or no, Mither," rejoined Cuddie, "for " ye bleeze out sae muckle doctrine about it? It's clean beyond my comprehension a'thegither. I see nae sae muckle difference atween the twa ways o't as " the folk pretend. It's very true the curates read aye the same words ower again; and if they be right words, what for no? A gude tale's no the waur " being twice tauld, I trow; and a body has aye the b'etter chance to understand it. Everybody's no sae gleg at the uptake as ye are yoursell, Mither."

"Oh, my dear Cuddie, this is the sairest distress of " said the anxious mother. "Oh, how, often have I shown ye the difference between a pure evangelical doctrine, and ane that's corrupt wi' human inventions? Oh, my bairn, if no for your ain saul's sake, yet for my grey hairs — "

"Weel, Mither," said Cuddie, interrupting her, "what need ye mak sae muckle din about it? I hae aye dune whate'er ye bade me, and gaed to kirk whare'er ye likit on the Sundays, and fended weel for ye in the ilka days besides. And that's what vexes me mair than a' the rest, when I think how I am to fend for ye now in time brickee times, I am no clear if I can pleugh ony place but the Mains and Mucklewhame, — at least I never tried ony other grund, and it wadna come natural to me. And nae neighbouring heritors will daur to take us, after being turned aff thae bounds for non-enormity."

"Nonconformity, hinnie," sighed Mause, "is the name that they warldly men gie us."

"Weel, aweel, we'll hae to gang to a far country, maybe twall or fifteen miles aff. I could be a dragoon, nae doubt, for I can ride and play wi' the broadsword a bit; but ye wad be roaring about your blessing and your grey hairs." (Here Mause's exclamations became extreme.) "Weel, weel, I but spoke o't; besides, ye're ower auld to be sitting cocked up on a baggage-waggon wi' Eppie Dumblane, the corporal's wife. Sae what 's to come o' us I canna weel see, — I doubt I'll hae to tak the hills wi' the wild Whigs, as they ca' them; and then it will be my lot to be shot down like a mawkin at some dikeside, or to be sent to heaven wi' a Saint Johnstone's tippit about my hause."

"Oh, my bonnie Cuddie," said the zealous Mause, "forbear sio¹ carnaly self-seeking' language, whilk id just a misdoubting o' Providence. I have not seen the son of the righteous begging his bread, sae says the text; and your father was a douce, honest man, though somewhat warldly in his dealings, and cumbered about earthly things, e'en like yoursell, my jo!"

"Aweel," said Cuddie, after a little consideration, "I see but ae gate for't, and that's a cauld coal to blaw at, Mither. Howsomever, Mither, ye hae some guess o' a wee bit kindness that's atween Miss Edith and young Mr. Henry Morton, that suld be ca'd young Milnwood, and that I hae whiles carried a bit book, or maybe a bit letter, quietly atween them, and made believe never to ken wha it cam frae, though I kend brawly. There's whiles convenience in a body looking a wee stupid,—and I have aften seen them walking at e'en on the little path by Dinglewood-burn; but naebody ever kend a word about it frae Cuddie; I ken I'm gay thick in the head, but I'm as honest as our auld fore-hand ox, puir fallow, that I'll ne'er work ony mair,—I hope they'll be as kind to him that come ahint me as I hae been.—But, as I was saying, we'll awa down to Milnwood and tell Mr. Harry our distress. They want a pleughman, and the grund's no unlike our ain; I am sure Mr. Harry will stand my part, for he's a kind-hearted gentleman. I '1 get but little penny-fee, for his uncle, auld Nippie Milnwood, has as close a grip as the deil himsell. But we '1 aye win a bit bread, and a drap kale, and a fire-side, and theeking ower our heads, and that's a' we'll want for a season.—Sae get up, Mither, and sort your things to gang away; for since sae it is that gang we maun, I wad like ill to wait till M'. Harrison and auld Gudyill cam to pu' us olit by theltig and the horn."

CHAPTER VIII.

The devil aPuiitan or anything else he is, but a time-server Twelfth Night.

IT was evening when Mr. Henry Morton perceived an old woman, wrapped in her tartan plaid (9), supported by a stout, stupid-looking fellow in hoddiii-grey, approach the house of Milnwood. Old Mausc made her curtsey, but Cuddie took the lead in addressing Morton. Indeed, he had previously stipulated with his mother that he was to manage matters his own way; for though he readily allowed his general inferiority of understanding, and filially submitted to the guidance of his mother on most ordinary occasions, yet he said, "For getting a service, or getting forward in the warld, he could some-gate gar the wee pickle -sense he had gang muckle farther than hers, though she could crack like ony minister o' them ""

Accordingly, he thus opened the conversation with young Morton: —

"A braw night this for the rye, your honour; the west park will be breering bravely this e'en."

"I do not doubt it, Cuddie; but what can have brought your mother, — this is your mother, is it Dot?" Cuddie nodded. "What can have brought your mother and you down the water so late?"

'Troth, stir, just what gars the auld wives trot, — neshessity, stir; I'm seeking for service, stir."

"For service, Cuddie, and at this time of the year? How comes that?"

Mause could forbear no longer. Proud alike of her cause and her sufferings, she commenced with an affected humility of tone, "It has pleased Heaven, an it like your honour, to distinguish us by a visitation—"

"Deil's in the wife and nae gudel" whispered Cuddie to his mother. "An ye come out" your Whiggery, they'll no daur open a door to us through the haill country!" Then aloud and acfliessing Morton, "My mother's auld, stir, and she has rather forgotten hersell in speaking to my leddy, that canna weel bide to be contradickit (as I ken naeboddy likes it if they could help themsells), especially by her ain folk; and Mr. Harrison the steward, and Gudyill the butler, they're no. very fond" us, and it's ill sitting at Borne and striving wi' the Pope; sae I thought it best to flit before ill came to waur; and here's a wee bit line to your honour frae a friend will maybe say some inair about it."

Morton took the billet, and crimsoning up to the ears, between joy and surprise, read these words:

If you can serve these poor helpless people, you will oblige
E. B.

It was a few instants before he could attain composure enough to ask, "And what is your object, Cuddie; and how can I be of use to you?"

"Wark, stir, wark, and a service, is my object,—a bit beild for my mither and mysell (we hae gude plenishing" our ain, if we had the cast o' a cart to bring it down), and milk and meal, and greens enow; for I'm gay gleg at meal-time, and sae is my mither.

—lang may it be sae. And, for the penny-fee and a' that, I "1 just leave it to the laird and you. I ken ye "1 no see a poor lad wrauged, if ye can help it."

Morton shook his head. "For the meat and lodging, Cuddie, I think I can promise something; but the penny-fee will be a hard chapter, I doubt."

"I'll tak my chance o't, stir," replied the candidate for service, "rather than gang down about Hamilton, or ony sic far country."

"Well, step into the kitchen, Cuddie, and I'll do what I can for you."

The negotiation was not without difficulties. Morton had first to bring over the housekeeper, who made a thousand objections, as usual, in order to have the pleasure of being besought and entreated; but when she was gained over, it was comparatively easy to induce old Milnwood to accept of a servant whose wages were to be in his own option. An outhouse was, therefore, assigned to Mause and her sou for their habitation, and it was settled that they were for the time to be admitted to eat of the frugal fare provided for the family, until their own establishment should be completed. As for Morton, he exhausted his own very slender stock of money in order to make Cuddie such a present, under the name of "arles," as might show his sense of the value of the recommendation delivered to him.

"And now we're settled ance mair," said Cuddie to his mother; "and if we're no sae bien and comfortable as we were up yonder, yet life's life ony gate, and we're wi' decent kirk-ganging folk " your ain persuasion, Hither; there will be nae quarrelling about that."

"Of my persuasion, hinnie ! " said the too-enlightened Mause; "wae's me for thy blindness and theirs."

Oh, Cuddie, they are but in the court of the Gentiles, and will ne'er win farther ben, I doubt; they are but little better than the prelatists themsells. They wait on the ministry of that blinded man, Peter Poundtext, unce a precious teacher of the Word, but now a backsliding pastor, that has, for the sake of stipend ami family maintenance, forsaken the strict path, and gane astray after the black Indulgence. Oh, my son, had ye but profited by the gospel doctrines ye hae heard in the Glen of Bengonnar, frae the dear Eichaid Kumblebeiry, that sweet youth who soffered martyrdom in the Grassmarket, afore Candlemas ! Didna ye hear him say that Erastianism was as bad as Prelacy, and that the Indulgence was as bad as Erastianism ?"

" Heard ever onybody the like o' this !" interrupted Cuddie; "we'll be driven out o' house and ha' again afore we ken where to turn oursells. Weel, Mither, I hae just ae word mair: An I hear ony mair o' your din — afore folk, that is; for I dinna mind your clavers mysell, they aye set me sleeping — but if I hear ony mair dm afore folk, as I was saying, about Poundtexts and Kumbleberricks, and doctrines and malignants, I'se e'en turn a single sodger mysell, or maybe a sergeant or a captain, if ye plague me the mair, and let Eumleberry and you gang to the deil thegither. I ne'er gat ony gude by his doctrine, as ye ca 't, but a sour fit o' the batts wi' sitting amang the wat moss-hags for four hours at a yoking, and the leddy cured me wi' some hickery-pickery, — mair by token, an she had kend how I came by the disorder, she wadna hae been in sic a hurry to mend it."

Although groaning in spirit over the obdurate and impenitent state, as she thought it, of her son Cuddie, Mause durst neither urge him farther on the topic, nor altogether neglect the warning he had given her. She knew the disposition of her deceased helpmate, whom this surviving pledge of their union greatly resembled, and remembered that although submitting implicitly in most things to her boast of superior acuteness, he used on certain occasions, when driven to extremity, to be seized with fits of obstinacy which neither remonstrance, flattery, nor threats were capable of overpowering. Trembling, therefore, at the very possibility of Cuddie's fulfilling his threat, she put a guard over her tongue ; and even when Poundtext was commended in her presence as an able and fructifying preacher, she had the good sense to suppress the contradiction which thrilled upon her tongue, and to express her sentiments no otherwise than by deep groans, which the hearers charitably construed to flow from a vivid recollection of the more pathetic parts of his homilies. How long she could have repressed her feelings it is difficult to say. An unexpected accident relieved her from the necessity.

The Laird of Milnwood kept up all old fashions which were connected with economy. It was, therefore, still the custom in his house, as it had been universal in Scotland about fifty years before, that the domestics, after having placed the dinner on the table, sate down at the lower end of the board, and partook of the share which was assigned to them, in company with their masters. On the day, therefore, after Cuddie's arrival, being the third from the opening of this narrative, old Bobin, who was butler, valet-de-chambre, footman, gardener, and what not in the house of Milnwood, placed on the table an immense charger of broth, thickened with oatmeal and colewort, in which ocean of liquid was indistinctly discovered, by close observers, two or three short ribs of lean mutton sailing to and fro. Two huge baskets, one of bread made of barley and pease, and one of oat-cakes, flanked this standing dish. A large boiled salmon would nowadays have indicated more liberal housekeeping; but at that period salmon was caught in such plenty in the considerable rivers in Scotland that instead of being accounted a delicacy, it was generally applied to feed the servants, who are said sometimes to have stipulated that they should not be required to eat a food so luscious and surfeiting in its quality above five times a-week. The large black jack, filled with very small beer of Milnwood's own brewing, was allowed to the company at discretion, as were the bannocks, cakes, and broth; but the mutton was reserved for the heads of the family, Mrs. Wilson included, and a measure of ale, somewhat deserving the name, was set apart in a silver tankard for their exclusive use. A huge kebbock (a cheese, that is, made with ewe-milk mixed with cow's milk) and a jar of salt butter were in common to the company.

To enjoy this exquisite cheer was placed, at the head of the table, the old laird himself, with his nephew on the one side, and the favourite housekeeper on the other. At a long interval, and beneath the salt, of course, sate old Robin, a meagre, half-starved serving-man, rendered cross and cripple by rheumatism, and a dirty drab of a housemaid, whom use had rendered callous to the daily exertations which her temper underwent at the hands of her master and Mrs. Wilson. A barnman, a white-headed cow-herd boy, with Cuddie the new ploughman and his mother, completed the party. The other labourers belonging to the property resided in their own houses, happy at least in tills, that if their cheer was not more delicate than that which we have described, they could eat their fill unwatched by the sharp, envious grey eyes of Milnwood, which seemed to measure the quantity that each of his dependents swallowed, as closely as if their glances attended each mouthful in its progress from the lips to the stomach. This close inspection was unfavourable to Cuddle, who sustained much prejudice in his new master's opinion by the silent celerity with which he caused the victuals to disappear before him. And ever and anon Milnwood turned his eyue from the huge feeder to cast indignant glances upon his nephew, whose repugnance to rustic labour was the principal cause of his needing a ploughman, and who had been the direct means of his hiring this very cormorant.

"Pay thee wages, quotha?" said Milnwood to himself,— "them wilt eat in a week the value of mair than thou canst work for in a month."

These disagreeable ruminations were interrupted by a loud knocking at the outer gate. It was a universal custom in Scotland that when the family was at dinner, the outer gate of the court-yard, if there was one, and if not the door of the house itself, was always shut and locked, and only guests of importance, or persons upon urgent business, sought or received admittance at that time.¹ The family of Milnwood were therefore surprised, and, in the unsettled state of the times, something alarmed, at the earnest and repeated knocking with which the gate was now assailed. Mrs. Wilson ran in person to the door, and having reconnoitred those who were so clamorous for admittance, through some secret aperture with which most Scottish door-ways were furnished for the express purpose, she returned, wringing her hands in great dismay, exclaiming, "The red-coats ! the red-coats !"

¹ This was a point of high etiquette. See Note IV. — Locking the Door during Dinuer.

"Robin — Ploughman — what ca' they ye 1 — Barnsman — Nevoy Harry — open the door, open the door !" exclaimed old Milnwood, snatching up and slipping into his pocket the two or three silver spoons with which the upper end of the table was garnished, those beneath the salt being of goodly horn' "Speak them fair, sirs; Lord love ye, speak them fair, — they winna bide throwing; we're " harried, we're a' harried !"

While the servants admitted the troopers, whose oaths and threats already indicated resentment at the delay they had been put to, Cuddie took the opportunity to whisper to his mother, "Now, ye daft auld carline, mak yoursell deaf, — ye hue made us a' deaf ere now, — and let me speak for ye. I wad like ill to get my neck raxed for an auld wife's clashes, though ye be our mither."

"Oh, hinny, ay; I'se be silent or thou Ball come to ill," was the corresponding whisper of Mause. "But bethink ye, my dear, them that deny the Word, the Word will deny—"

•Her admonition was cut short by the entrance of the Life Guardsmen, — a party of four troopers, commanded by Bothwell.

In they tramped, making a tremendous clatter upon the stone floor with the iron-shod heels of their large jack-boots, 'Bud the clash and clang of their long, heavy basket-hilted broadswords. Milnwood and his housekeeper tremblecl, from well-grounded apprehensions of the system of auction and plunder carried 'm during these domiciliary visits. Henry Morton was discomposed with more special cause, for he remembered that he stood answerable to the laws for having harboured Burley. The widow Mause Headrigg, between fear for her son's life and an overstrained and enthusiastic zeal, which reproached her for consenting even tacitly to belie her religious sentiments, was in a strange quandary. The other servants quaked for they knew not well what. Cuddie alone, with the look of supreme indifference and stupidity which a Scottish peasant can at times assume as a mask for considerable shrewdness and craft, continued to swallow large spoonfuls of his broth, to command which he had drawn within his sphere the large vessel that contained it, and helped himself, amid the confusion, to a sevenfold portion.

"What is your pleasure here, gentlemen?" said Milnwood, humbling himself before the satellites of power.

"We come in behalf of the king," answered Bothwell. "Why the devil did you keep us so long standing at the door?"

"We were at dinner," answered Milnwood, "and the door was locked, as is usual in landward towns¹ in this country. I am sure, gentlemen, if I had kend ony servants of our gude king had stood at the door— But wad ye please to drink some ale, or some brandy, or a cup of canary sack, or claret wine?" making a pause between each offer as long as a stingy bidder at an auction, who is loath to advance his offer for a favourite lot.

¹ The Scots retain the use of the word "town" in its comprehensive Saxon meaning, as a place of habitation. A mansion or a farm-house, though solitary, is called "the town." A "landward town" is a dwelling situated in the country.

"Claret for me," said one fellow.

"I like ale better," said another, "provided it is right juice of John Barleycorn."

"Better never was malted," said Milnwood; "I can hardly say sae muckle for the claret. It's thin and cauld, gentlemen."

"Brandy will cure that," said a third fellow; "a glass of brandy to three glasses of wine prevents the curmurring in the stomach."

"Brandy, ale, sack, and claret? — we'll try them all," said Bothwell, "and stick to that which is best. There's good sense in that, if the damn'dest Whig in Scotland had said it."

Hastily, yet with a reluctant quiver of his muscles, Milnwood lugged out two ponderous keys, and delivered them to the governante.

"The housekeeper," said Bothwell, taking a seat, and throwing himself upon it, "is neither so young nor so handsome as to tempt a man to follow her to the gauntrees, and devil a one here is there worth sending in her place. What's this? — meat?" searching with a fork among the broth, and fishing up a cutlet of mutton. "I think I could eat a bit, — why, it's as tough as if the devil's dam had hatched it."

"If there is anything better in the house, sir," said Milnwood, alarmed at these symptoms of disapprobation —

"No, no," said Bothwell, "it's not worth while; I must proceed to business. You attend Pound-text, the Presbyterian, parson, I understand, Mr. Morton?"

Mr. Morton hastened to slide in a confession and apology.

"By the indulgence of his gracious Majesty and the Government, for I wad do nothing out oi law, — I had nae objection whatever to the establishment of a moderate episcopacy, but only that I am a country-bred man, and the ministers are a hamelier kind of folk, and I can follow their doctrine better; and, with reverence, sir, it's a mair frugal establishment for the country."

"Well, I care nothing about that," said Bothwell; "they are indulged, and there's an end of it, But, for my part; if I were to give the law, never a crop-ear'd cur of the whole pack should bark in a Scotch pulpit. However, I am to obey commands.—There comes the liquor; put it down, my good old lady."

He decanted about one-half of a quart bottle of daret into a wooden quaigh, or bicker, and took it off at a draught.

"You did your good wine -injustice, my friend; it's better than your brandy, — though that's good too. Will you pledge me to the king's health?"

"With pleasure," said Miluwood, "in ale,—but I never drink claret, and keep only a very little for some honoured friends."

"Like me, I suppose," said Bothwell; and then, pushing the bottle to Henry, he said, "Here, young man, pledge you the king's health."

Henry filled a moderate glass in silence, regardless of the hints and pushes of his uncle, which seemed to indicate that he ought to have followed his example, in preferring beer to wine.

"Well," said Bathwell, "have ye all drank the toast? — What is that old wife about? Give her a glass of brandy; she shall drink the king's health, by—" great stolidity of aspect, "this is my mither, stir; and she's as deaf as Corra-linn, — we canna mak her hear day nor door; but if your honour pleases, I am ready to drink the king's health for her in as many glasses of brandy as ye think neshessary."

•If your honour pleases," said: Cuddie, with.

"I dare swear you are," answered Bothwell; "you look like a fellow that would stick to brandy, — help thyself, man; all's free where'er I come. — Tom, help the maid to a comfortable cup, though she's but a dirty jilt neither. Fill round once more. — Here 's to our noble commander, Colonel Grabame of Claverhouse! — What the devil is the old woman groaning for? She looks as very a Whig as ever sate on a hill-side. — Do you renounce the Covenant, good woman?"

"Whilk Covenant is your honour meaning? Is it the Covenant of Works, or the Covenant of Grace?" said Cuddie, interposing.

"Any covenant; all covenants that ever were hatched," answered the trooper.

"Mither," cried Cuddie, affecting to speak as to a deaf person, "the gentleman wants to ken if ye will renounce the Covenant of Works?"

"With all my heart, Cuddie," said Mause; "and pray that my feet may be delivered from the snare thereof."

"Come," said Bothwell, "the old dame has come more frankly off than I expected. Another cup round, and then we'll proceed to business. — You have all heard, I suppose, of the horrid, and barbarous murder committed upon the person of the Archbishop of St. Andrews by ten or eleven armed fanatics?"

All started and look at each other; at length Milnwood himself answered, "They had heard, of some such misfortune, but were in hopes it had not been true."

"There is the relation published by Government, old gentleman; what do you think of it?"

"Think, sir? Wh—wh—whatever the council please to think of it," stammered Milnwood.

"I desire to have your opinion more explicitly, my friend," said the dragoon, authoritatively.

Milnwood's eyes hastily glanced through the paper to pick out the strongest expressions of censure with which it abounded, in gleaning which he was greatly aided by their being printed in italics.

"I think it a — bloody and execrable — murder and parricide — devised by hellish and implacable cruelty — utterly abominable, and a scandal to the land."

"Well said, old gentleman!" said the querist. "Here 's to thee, and I wish you joy of your good principles; you owe me a cup of thanks for having taught you them, — nay, thou shalt pledge me in thine own sack: sour ale sits ill upon a loyal stomach. — Now comes your turn, young man; what think you of the matter in hand?"

"I should have little objection to answer you," said Henry, "if I knew what right you had to put the question."

"The Lord preserve us!" said the old house-keeper; "to ask the like o' that at a trooper, when a' folk ken they do whatever they like through the haill country" man and woman, beast and body,"

The old gentleman exclaimed, in the same horror at his nephew's audacity, "Hold your peace, sir, or answer the gentleman discreetly. Do you mean to affront the king's authority in the person of a sergeant of the Life Guards?"

" Silence, all of you !" exclaimed Bothwell, striking his hand fiercely on the table; " silence, every one of you, and hear me ! — You ask me for my right to examine you, sir [to Henry]. My cockade and my broadsword are my commission, and a better one than ever Old Nol gave to his Eoundheads ; and if you want to know more about it, you may look at the Act of Council empowering his Majesty's officers and soldiers to search for, examine, and apprehend suspicious persons; and, therefore, once more, I ask you your opinion of the death of Archbishop Sharpe,— it's a new touch-stone we have got for trying people's metal."

Henry had, by this time, reflected upon the useless risk to which he would expose the family by resisting the tyrannical power which was delegated to such rude hands ; he therefore read the narrative over, and replied, composedly, " I have no hesitation to say that the perpetrators of this assassination have committed, in my opinion, a rash and wicked action, which I regret the more, as I foresee it will be made the cause of proceedings against many who are both innocent of the deed and as far from approving it as myself."

While Henry thus expressed himself, Bothwell, who bent his eyes keenly upon him, seemed suddenly to recollect his features.

" Aha! my friend Captain Popinjay, I think I have seen you before, and in very suspicious company."

" I saw you once," answered Henry, " in the public-house of the town of —"

" And with whom did you leave that public-house, youngster ? Was it not with John Balfour of Burley, one of the murderers of the archbishop ?"

" I did leave the house with the person you have named," answered Henry, " I scorn to deny it; but, so far from knowing him to be a murderer of the primate, I did not even know at the time that such a crime had been committed."

" Lord have mercy on me, I am ruined, utterly ruined and undone ! " exclaimed Milnwood, " That callant's tongue will rin the head aff his ain shoulders, and waste my gudes to the very grey cloak on my back ! "

" But you knew Burley," continued Bothwell, still addressing Henry, and regardless of his uncle's interruption, " to be an intercommuned rebel and traitor, and you knew the prohibition to deal with such persons. You knew that, as a loyal subject, you were prohibited to reset, supply, or intercommune with this attainted traitor, to correspond with him by word, writ, or message, or to supply him with meat, drink, house, harbour, or victual, under the highest pains, —you knew all this, and yet you broke the law." Henry was silent. "Where did you part from him?" continued Bothwell, — "was it in the highway, or did you give him harbourage in this very house?"

"In this house!" said his uncle; "he dared not for his neck bring ony traitor into a house of mine."

"Dare he deny that he did so?" said Bothwell.

"As you charge it to me as a crime," said Henry, "you will excuse my saying anything that will criminate myself."

" Oh, the lands of Milnwood ! the bonny lands of Milnwood, that have been in the name of Morton twa hundred years I" exclaimed his uncle; "they ate barking and fleeing, outfield and infield, haugh and holme!"

"No, air' said Henry, "you shall not suffer on my account. — I own," he continued, addressing Bothwell, "I did give this man a night's lodging, as to an old military comrade of my father. But it was not only without my uncle's knowledge, but contrary to his express general orders. I trust, if my evidence is considered as good against myself, it will have some weight in proving my uncle's innocence."

"Conie, young man," said the soldier, in a somewhat milder tone, "you're a smart spark enough, and I am sorry for you; and your uncle here is a fine old Trojan, — kinder, I see, to his guests than himself, for he gives us wine and drinks his own thin ale, Tell me all you know about this Burley, what he said when you parted from him, where he went, and where he is likely now to be found; and, d—n it, I'll wink as hard on your share of the business as my duty will permit. There's a thousand merks on the murdering Whigamore's head, an I could but light on it. Come, out with it: where did you part with him?"

"You will excuse my answering that question, sir," said Morton; "the same cogent reasons which induced me to afford him hospitality at considerable risk to myself and my friends, would command me to respect his secret, if, indeed, he had trusted me with any."

"So you refuse to give me an answer?" said Bothwell

"I have none to give," returned Henry.

"Perhaps I could teach you to find one, by tying a piece of lighted match betwixt your fingers," answered Bothwell

"Oil, ion pity's sake, sir," said old Alison apart to her master, "gie them siller, — it's siller they 're seeking; they "1 murder Mr. Henry, and yoursell next!"

Milnwood groaned in perplexity and bitterness of spirit, and, with a tone as if he was giving up the ghost, exclaimed, "If twenty p—p—punds would make up this unhappy matter —"

"My master," insinuated Alison to the sergeant, "would gie twenty pund sterling —"

"Punds Scotch, ye b—h!" interrupted Milnwood; for the agony of his avarice overcame alike his puritanic precision and the habitual respect he entertained for his housekeeper.

"Punds sterling," insisted the housekeeper, "if ye wad hae the gudeness to look ower the lad's misconduct. He's that dour ye might tear him to pieces, and ye wad ne'er get a word out o' him; and it wad do ye little gude, I 'm sure, to burn his bonny finger-ends."

"Why," said Bothwell, hesitating, "I don't know. Most of my cloth would have the money, and take off the prisoner too; but I bear a conscience, and if your master will stand to your offer, and enter into a bond to produce his nephew, and if all in the house will take the test-oath, I do not know but —"

"Oh, ay, ay, sir," cried Mrs. Wilson; "ony test, ony oaths ye please!" And then aside to her master, "Haste ye away, sir, and get the siller, or they will burn the house about our lugs."

Old Milnwood cast a rueful look upon his adviser, and moved off, like a piece of Dutch clock-work, to set at liberty his imprisoned angels in this dire emergency. Meanwhile, Sergeant Bothwell began to put the test-oath with such a degree of solemn reverence as might have been expected, being just about the same which is used to this day in his Majesty's custom-house.

" You — what's your name, woman ?"

" Alison Wilson, sir."

" You, Alison Wilson, solemnly swear, certify, and declare that you judge it unlawful for subjects, under pretext of reformation, or any other pretext whatsoever, to enter into Leagues and Covenants —"

Here the ceremony was interrupted by a strife between Ouddie and his mother, which long conducted in whispers, now became audible.

" Oh, whisht, Mither, whisht! they 're upon a communing. Oh, whisht, and they "1 agree weel eneuch e'enow."

" I will not whisht, Cuddie," replied his mother; " I will uplift my voice and spare not, — I will confound the man of sin, even the scarlet man, and through my voice shall Mr. Henry be freed from the net of the fowler."

" She has her leg ower the harrows now," said Cuddie, " stop her wha can. I see her cocked up behint a dragoon on her way to the Tolbooth ; I find my ain legs tied below a horse's belly, — ay, she has just mustered up her sermon, and there—wi' that grane — out it comes, and we are a' ruined, horse and foot!"

" And div ye think to come here," said Mause, her withered hand shaking in concert with her keen, though wrinkled visage, animated by zealous wrath, and emancipated, by the very mention of the test, from the restraints of her own prudence and Cuddie's admonition, — " div ye think to come here, " your soul-killing, saint-seducing, conscience-confounding oaths and tests and bands, — your snares, and your traps, and jour gins ? Surely it is in vain that a net is spread in the sight of any bird."

"Eh I what, good dame?" said the aoldier. "Here's a Whig miracle, egad ! the old wife has gat bath her ears and tongue and we are like to be driven deaf in our turn, — go to, hold your peace, and remember whom you talk to, you old idiot."

"Whae do I talk to ! Eh, sirs, ower weel may the sorrowing land ken what ye are. Malignant adherents ye are to the prelates, foul props to a feeble and filthy cause, bloody beasts of prey, and burdens to the earth."

"Upon my soul," said Bothwell, astonished as a mastiff dog might be should a hen-partridge fly at him in defence of her young, "this is the finest language I ever heard! Can't you give us some more of it?"

"Gie ye some mair o 't?" said Manse, clearing her voice with a preliminary cough, "I will take up my testimony against you ance and again. Philistines ye are, and Edomites; leopards are ye, and foxes; evening wolves, that gnaw not the bones till the morrow ; wicked dogs, that compass about the chosen; thrusting kine, and pushing bulls of Bashan; piercing serpents ye are, and allied baith in name and nature with the great Eed Dragon; Revelations, twalfth chapter, third and fourth verses."

Here the old lady stopped, apparently much more from lack of breath than of matter.

"Curse the old hag!" said one of the dragoons;, "gag her, and take her to head-quarters."

"For shame, Andrews," said Bothwell; "remember the good lady belongs to the fair eex, and uses only the privilege of her tongue. — But hark ye, good woman, every bull of Basilan and Bed Dragon will not be BO civil as I am, or be contented to leave you to the charge of the constable and ducking-stool. In the mean time I must necessarily carry off this young man to head-quarters. I cannot answer to my commanding officer to leave him in a house where I have heard so much treason and fanaticism."

"See now, Mither, what ye hae dune," whispered Cuddle; "there's the Philistines as ye ca' them, are gaun to whirry aw" Mr. Henry, and "wi' your nash-gab, deil be on 't!"

"Haud yere tongue, ye cowardly loon," said the mother, "and layna the wyte on me; if you and thae thowless gluttons that are sitting staring like cows bursting on clover, wad testify wi' your hands as I have testified " my tongue, they should never harle the precious young lad awa' to captivity."

While this dialogue passed, the soldiers had already bound and secured their prisoner. Milnwood returned at this instant, and alarmed at the preparations he beheld, hastened to proffer to Bothwell, though with many a grievous groan, the purse of gold which he had been obliged to rummage out as ransom for his nephew. The trooper took the purse with an air of indifference, weighed it in his hand, chucked it up into the air, and caught it as it fell, then shook his head, and said: "There's many a merry night in this nest of yellow boys, but d—n me if I dare venture for them; that old woman has spoken too loud, and before all the men too. — Hark ye, old gentleman," to Milnwood, "I must take your nephew to head-quarters, so I cannot, in conscience, keep more than is my due as civility-money;" then, opening the purse, he 'gave a gold piece to each of the soldiers, and took three to himself. "Now," said he, "you have the comfort to know that your kinsman, young Captain Popinjay, will be carefully looked after and civilly used; and the rest of the money I return to you."

Milnwood eagerly extended his hand.

"Only you know," said Bothwell, still playing with the purse, "that every landholder is answerable for the conformity and loyalty of his household, and that these fellows of mine are not obliged to be silent on the subject of the fine sermon we have had from that old Puritan in the tartan plaid there; and I presume you are aware that the consequences of delation will be a heavy fine before the council."

"Good Sergeant, worthy Captain !" exclaimed the terrified miser, "I am sure there is no person in my house, to my knowledge, would give cause of offence."

"Nay," answered Bothwell, "you shall hear her give her testimony, as she calls it, herself. — You fellow," to Cuddie, "stand back, and let your mother speak her mind. I see she's primed and loaded again since her first discharge."

"Lord I noble sir," said Cuddie, "an auld wife's tongue 's but a feckless matter to mak sic a fash about. Neither my father nor me ever minded muckle what our mither said."

"Hold your peace, my lad, while you are well," said Bothwell; "I promise you I think you are slyer than yoiy would like to be supposed. — Come, good dame, you see your master will not believe that you can give us so bright a testimony."

Mause's zeal did not require this spur to set her again on full career.

" Woe to the compilers and carnal self-seekers," she said, " that daub over and drown their consciences by complying with wicked exactions, and giving mammon of unrighteousness to the sons of Belial, that it may make their peace with them ! It is a sinful compliance, a base confederacy with the Enemy. It is the evil that Menahem did in the sight of the Lord when he gave a thousand talents to Pul, king of Assyria, that his hand might be with him ; Second Kings, feifteen chapter, nineteen verse. It is the evil deed of Ahab, when he sent money to Tiglath-Peleser • see the saame Second Kings, saxteen and aught. And if it was accounted a backsliding even in godly Hezekiah that he complied with Sennacherib, giving him money, and offering to bear that which was put upon him (see the saame Second Kings, aughteen chapter, fourteen and feifteen verses), even so it is with them that in this contumacious and backsliding generation pays localities and fees, and cess and fines, to greedy and unrighteous publicans, and extortions and stipends to hireling curates (dumb dogs which bark not, sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber), and gives gifts to be helps and hires to our oppressors and destroyers. They are all like the casters of a lot with them, —like the preparing of a table for the troop, and the furnishing a drink-offering to the number."

"There's a fine sound of doctrine for you, Mr. Morton ! How like you that ?" said Bothwell; " or how do you think the Council will like it ? I think we can carry the greatest part of it in our heads without a kylevine pen and a pair of tablets, such as you bring to conventicles. She denies paying cess, I think, Andrews ? "

" Yes, by G—," said Andrews ; " and she swore it was a sin to give a trooper a pot of ale, or ask him to sit down to a table."

" You hear," said Bothwell, addressing Milnwood, — "but it's your own affair;" and he pi offered back the purse, with its diminished contents, with an air of indifference.

Milnwood, whose head seemed stunned by the accumulation of his misfortunes, extended his hand mechanically to take the purse.

"Are ye mad?" said his housekeeper, in a whisper. " Tell them to keep it; they will keep it, either by fair means or foul, and it's our only chance to make them quiet."

" I canna do it, Ailie, I canna do it," said Milnwood, in the bitterness of his heart. " I canna part wi' the siller I hae counted sae often ower, to thae blackguards."

" Then I maun do it mysell, Milnwood," said the housekeeper, " or see a' gang wrang thegither.—My master, sir," she said, addressing Bothwell, " canna think o' taking back onything at the hand of an honourable gentleman like you; he implores ye to pit up the siller, and be as kind to his nephew as ye can, and be favourable in reporting our dispositions to Government, and let us tak nae wrang for the daft speeches of an auld jaud," here she turned fiercely upon Mause, tn indulge herself for the effort which it cost her to assume a mild demeanour to the soldiers, "a daft auld Whig randy, that ne'er was in the house (foul f' her) till yesterday afternoon, aud that sail ne'er cross the door-stane again an anes I had her out o V

"Ay, ay," whispered Cuddie to his parent, "e'en sae ! I kend we wad be put to our travels again whene'er ye suld get three words spoken to an end. I was sure that wad be the upshot o' % Mither."

"Whisht, my bairn," said she, "and dinna murmur at the cross. Cross their door-stane! weel I wot I '1 ne'er cross their door-stane. There's nae mark on their threshold for a signal that the destroying angel should pass by. They '1 get a back-cast o' his hand yet, that think sae muckle " the creature and sae little o' the Creator,—sae muckle " warld's gear and sae little o' a broken covenant; sae muckle about thae wheen pieces o' yellow muck, and sae little about the pure gold " the Scripture; sae muckle about their ain friend and kinsman, and sae little about the elect, that are tried wi' homings, harassings, huntings, searchings' chasings, catchings, imprisonments, torturings, banishments, headings, hangings, dismemberings, and quarterings quick, forby the hundreds forced from their ain habitations to the deserts, mountains, muirs, mosses, moss-flows, and peat-hags, there to hear the word like bread eaten in secret."

"She's at the Covenant now, Sergeant: shall we not have her away?" said one of the soldiers.

"You be d—d!" said Bothwell, aside to him; "cannot you see she's better where she is, so long as there is a respectable, sponisible, money-broking heritor, like Mr. Morton of Milnwood, who has the means of atoning her trespasses? Let the old mother fly to raise another brood,—she's too tough to be made anything of herself.—Here," he cried, "one other round to Milnwood and his roof-tree, and to our next merry meeting with him!—which I think will not be far distant, if he keeps such a fanatical family."

He then ordered the party to take their horses, and pressed the best in Milnwood's stable into the king's service to carry the prisoner. Mrs. Wilson, with weeping eyes, made up a small parcel of necessities for Henry's compelled journey; and as she bustled about, took an opportunity, unseen by the party, to slip into his hand a small sum of money. Bothwell and his troopers, in other respects, kept their promise, and were civil. They did not bind their prisoner, but contented themselves with leading his horse between a file of men. They then mounted, and marched off with much mirth and laughter among themselves, leaving the Milnwood family in great confusion. The old laird himself, overpowered by the loss of his nephew, and the unavailing outlay of twenty pounds sterling, did nothing the whole evening but rock himself backwards and forwards in his great leathern easy-chair, repeating the same lamentation of "Kuined on a' sides, ruined on a' sides; harried and undone, — harried and undone, — body and gudes, body and gudes !"

Mrs. Alison Wilson's grief was partly indulged and partly relieved by the torrent of invectives with which she accompanied Mause and Cuddle's expulsion from Milnwood.

" 111 luck be in the graning corse o' thee! the prettiest lad in Clydesdale this day maun be a sofferer, and a' for you and your daft Whiggery! "

" Gae wa'," replied Mause; " I trow ye are yet in the bonds of sin and in the gall of iniquity, to grudge your bonniest and best in the cause of Him that gave ye a' ye hae. I promise I hae dune as muckle for Mr. Harry as I wad do for my ain; for if Caddie was found worthy to bear testimony in the Grassmarket — "

"And there's glide hope o't," said Alison, "unless you and he change your courses."¹

"And if," continued Mause, disregarding the interruption, "the bloody Doege and the flattering Ziphites were to seek to ensnare me with a proffer of his remission upon sinful compliances, I wad persevere, natheless, in lifting my testimony against popery, prelacy, aitianomianism, erastianism, lapsarianism, sublapsarianism, and the sins and snares of the times; I wad cry as a woman in labour against the black Indulgence, that has been a stumbling-block to professors; I wad uplift my voice as a powerful preacher."

"Hout, tout, Hither," cried Cuddie, interfering and dragging her off forcibly, "dinna deave the gentlewoman wi' your testimony! ye hae preached eneugh for sax days. Ye preached us out " our canny free-house and gude kale-yard, and out " this new city o' refuge afore our hinder end was weel hafted in it; and ye hae preached Mr. Harry awa to the prison; and ye hae preached twenty puns out o' the laird's pocket that he likes as ill to quit "; and sae ye may haud sae for ae wee while, without preaching me up a ladder and down a tow. Sae, come awa, come awa; the family hae had eneugh o' your testimony to mind it for ae while."

So saying he dragged off Mause, the words, "Testimony, Covenant, malignants, indulgence," still thrilling upon her tongue, to make preparations for instantly renewing their travels in quest of an asylum.

"Ill-fard, crazy, crack-brained gowk that she is I" exclaimed the housekeeper, as she saw them depart, "to set up to be sae muckle better than ither folk, the auld besom, and to bring sae muckle distress on a douce quiet family ! If it hadna been that I am mair than half a gentlewoman by my station, I wad hae tried my ten nails in the wizen'd hide o' her I"

CHAPTEK IX.

I am a son of Mars who have been in many wars,
And show my ruts ami scars wherevsr I rome;
This here was for a wench, and that other in a trench,
Whan welcoming the French at ths sound of the drum.

BURNS.

"DON'T be too much cast down," said Sergeant Bothwell to his prisoner as they journeyed on towards the head-quarters; "you are a smart pretty lud, and well connected; the worst that will happen will be strapping up for it, and that is many an honest fellow's lot. I tell you fairly your life's within the compass of the law, unless you make submission, and get off by a round fine upon your uncle's estate; he can well afford it."

"That vexes me more than the rest," said Henry.
^{ft} He parts with his money with regret; and, as he had no concern whatever with my having given this person shelter for a night, I wish to Heaven, if I escape a capital punishment, that the penalty may be of a kind I could bear in my own person."

"Why, perhaps," said Bothwell, "they will propose to you to go into one of the Scotch regiments that are serving abroad. It's no bad line of service; if your friends are active, and there are any knocks going, you may soon get a commission."

"I am by no means sure," answered Morton, "that such a sentence is not the best thing that can happen to me."

"Why, then, you are no real Whig after all?" said the sergeant.

"I have hitherto meddled with no party in the state," said Henry, "but have remained quietly at home; and sometimes I have had serious thoughts of joining one of our foreign regiments."

"Have you?" replied Bothwell. "Why, I honour you for it; I have served in the Scotch French guards (10) myself many a long day; it's the place for learning discipline, d—n me. They never mind what you do when you are off duty; but miss you the roll-call, and see how they¹ arrange you. D—n me, if old Captain Montgomery didn't make me mount guard upon the arsenal in my steel-back and breast, plate-sleeves and head-piece, for six hours at once, under so burning a sun that, gad, I was baked like a turtle at Port Eoyale. I swore never to miss answering to Francis Stewart again, though I should leave my hand of cards upon the drum-head. Ah! discipline is a capital thing."

"In other respects you liked the service?" said Morton.

"Par excellence" said Bothwell; "women, wine, and wassail, all to be had for little but the asking; and if you find it in your conscience to let a fat priest think he has some chance to convert you, gad, he¹ help you to these comforts himself, just to gain a little ground in your good affection, Where will you find a crop-eared Whig parson will be so civil?"

"Why, nowhere, I agree with you," said Henry; "but what was your chief duty?"

"To guard the king's person," said Bothwell, "to look after the safety of Louis le Grand, my boy, and now and then to take a turn among the Huguenots (Protestants, that is). And there we had fine scope; it brought my hand pretty well in for the service in this country. But, come, as you are to be a Ion camarado, as the Spaniards say, I must put you in cash with some of your old uncle's broad-pieces. This is cutter's law; we must not see a pretty fellow want, if we have cash ourselves."

Thus speaking, he pulled out his purse, took out some of the contents, and offered them to Henry without counting them. Young Morton declined the favour; and, not judging it prudent to acquaint the sergeant, notwithstanding his apparent generosity, that he was actually in possession of some money, he assured him he should have no difficulty in getting a supply from his uncle.

"Well," said Bothwell, "in that case these yellow rascals must serve to ballast my purse a little longer. I always make it a rule never to quit the tavern (unless ordered on duty) while my purse is so weighty that I can chuck it over the sign-post.¹ When it is so light that the wind blows it back, then, boot and saddle; we must fall on some way of replenishing. — But what tower is that before us, rising so high upon the steep bank, out of the wooda that surround it on every side?"

"It is the Tower of Tillietudlem," said one of the soldiers. "Old Lady Margaret Bellenden lives there. She's one of the best-affected women in the country, and one that 's a soldier's friend. When I was hurt by one of the d—d Whig dogs that shot at me from behind a fauld-dike, I lay a month there, and would stand such another wound to be in as good quarters again."

¹ A Highland laird, whose peculiarities live still in the recollection of his countrymen, used to regulate his residence at Edinburgh in the following manner: Every day he visited the Water-gate, as it is called, of the Canongate, over which is extended a wooden arch. Specie being then the general currency, he threw his purse over the gate, and as lung as it was heavy enough to be thrown over, he continued his round of pleasure in the metropolis; when it was too light, he thought it time to retire to the Highlands. Query: How often would he have repeated this experiment at Temple Bar?

¹¹ If that be the case," said Bothwell, " I will pay my respects to her as we pass, and request some refreshment for men and horses; I am as thirsty already as if I had drunk nothing at Milnwood. But it is a good thing in these times," he continued, addressing himself to Henry, " that the king's soldier cannot pass a house without getting a refreshment. In such houses as Tillie — what d' ye call it? — you are served for love; in the houses of the avowed fanatics you help yourself by force; and among the moderate Presbyterians and other suspicious persons, you are well treated from fear; so your thirst is always quenched on some terms or other."

" And you propose," said Henry, anxiously, " to go upon that errand up to the Tower yonder?"

"To be sure I do," answered Bothwell. "How should I be able to report favourably to my officers of the worthy lady's sound principles, unless I know the taste of her sack? — for sack she will produce, that I take for granted; it is the favourite consoler of your old dowager of quality, as small claret is the potation of your country laird."

" Then, for Heaven's sake," said Henry, " if you are determined to go there, do not mention my name, or expose me to a family that I am acquainted with. Let me be moffled up for the time in one of your soldier's cloaks, and only mention me generally as a prisoner under your charge."

"With all my heart," said Bothwell; "I promised to use you civilly, and I scorn to break my word.—Here, Andrews, wrap a cloak round the prisoner, and do not mention his name, nor where we caught him, unless you would have a trot on a horse and wood." i

They were at this moment at an arched gate-way, battlemented and flanked with turrets, one whereof was totally ruinous, excepting the lower story, which served as a cow-house to the peasant, whose family inhabited the turret that remained entire. The gate had been broken down by Monk's soldiers during the Civil War, and had never been replaced, therefore presented no obstacle to Bothwell and his party. The avenue, very steep and narrow, and causewayed with large round stones, ascended the side of the precipitous bank in an oblique and zigzag course, now showing, now hiding a view of the tower and its exterior bulwarks, which seemed to rise almost perpendicularly above their heads. The fragments of Gothic defences which it exhibited were upon such a scale of strength as induced Bothwell to exclaim, "It's well this place is in honest and loyal hands. Egad, if the enemy had it, a dozen of old Whigamore wives with their distaffs might keep it against a troop of dragoons, at least if they had half the spunk of the old girl we left at Milnwood. Upon my life," he continued, as they came in front of the large double tower and its surrounding defences and flankers, "it is a superb place, founded, says the worn inscription over the gate, — unless the remnant of my Latin has given me the slip, — by Sir Ralph de Bellenden in 1350, — a respectable antiquity. I must greet the old lady with due honour, though it should put me to the labour of recalling some of the compliments that I used to dabble in when I was wont to keep that sort of company."

i Note V. — Wooden Mare'

As he thus communed with himself, the butler, who had reconnoitred the soldiers from an arrow-slit in the wall, announced to his lady that a commanded party of dragoons, or, as he thought, Life Guardsmen, waited at the gate with a prisoner under their charge.

"I am certain," said Gudyill, "and positive that the sixth man is a prisoner; for his horse is led, and the two dragoons that are before have their carabines out of their budgets, and rested upon their thighs. It was aye the way we guarded prisoners in the days of the great marquis."¹

"King's soldiers?" said the lady, — "probably in want of refreshment. Go, Gudyill, make them welcome, and let them be accommodated with what provision and forage the Tower can afford.—And stay, tell my gentlewoman to bring my black scarf and manteau. I will go down myself to receive them; one cannot show the king's Life Guards too much respect in times when they are doing so much for royal authority. And d'ye hear, Gudyill, let Jenny Dennison slip on her pearlings to walk before my niece and me, and the three women to walk behind; and bid my niece attend me instantly."

Fully accoutred, and attended according to her directions, Lady Margaret now sailed out into the court-yard of her Tower with great courtesy and dignity. Sergeant Bothwell saluted the grave and reverend lady of the manor with an assurance which had something of the light and careless address of the dissipated men of fashion in Charles the Second's time, and did not at all savour of the awkward or rude manners of a non-commissioned officer of dragoons. His language, as well as his manners, seemed also to be refined for the time and occasion; though the truth was that, in the fluctuations of an adventurous and profligate life, Bothwell had sometimes kept company much better suited to his ancestry than to his present situation of life. To the lady's request to know whether she could be of service to them, he answered, with a suitable bow, "That as they had to march some miles farther that night, they would be much accommodated by permission to rest their horses for an hour before continuing their journey."

"With the greatest pleasure," answered Lady Margaret; "and I trust that my people will see that neither horse nor men want suitable refreshment."

"We are well aware, madam," continued Bothwell, "that such has always been the reception, within the walls of Tillietudlem, of those who served the king."

"We have studied to discharge our duty faithfully and loyally on all occasions, sir," answered Lady Margaret, pleased with the compliment, "both to our monarchs and to their followers, particularly to their faithful soldiers. It is not long ago, and it probably has not escaped the recollection of his sacred Majesty now on the throne, since he himself honoured my poor house with his presence, and breakfasted in a room in this castle, Mr. Sergeant, which my waiting-gentlewoman shall show you; we still call it the king's room."

Bothwell had by this time dismounted his party, and committed the horses to the charge of one file, and the prisoner to that of another; so that he himself was at liberty to continue the conversation which the lady had so condescendingly opened.

"Since the king, my master, had the honour to experience your hospitality, I cannot wonder that it is extended to those that serve him, and whose principal merit is doing it with fidelity. And yet I have a nearer relation to his Majesty than this coarse red coat would seem to indicate."

"Indeed, sir? Probably," said Lady Margaret, "you have belonged to his household?"

"Not exactly, madam, to his household, but rather to his house,—a connection through which I may claim kindred with most of the best families in Scotland, not, I believe, exclusive of that of Tillietudlem."

"Sir?" said the old lady, drawing herself up with dignity at hearing what she conceived an impertinent jest, "I do not understand you."

"It's but a foolish subject for one in my situation to talk of, madam," answered the trooper; "but you must have heard of the history and misfortunes of my grandfather, Francis Stewart, to whom James L, his cousin-german, gave the title of Bothwell, as my comrades give me the nickname. It was nob in the long run more advantageous to him than it is to me."

"Indeed?" said Lady Margaret, with much sympathy and surprise. "I have indeed always understood that the grandson of the last earl was in necessitous circumstances, but I should never have expected to see him so low in the service. With such connections, what ill-fortune could have reduced you —"

"Nothing much out of the ordinary course, I believe, madam," said Bothwell, interrupting and anticipating the question. "I have had my moments of good luck like my neighbours,—have drunk my bottle with Rochester, thrown a merry main with Buckingham, and fought at Tangiers side by side with Sheffield. But my luck never lasted; I could not make useful friends out of my jolly companions. Perhaps I was not sufficiently aware," he continued, with some bitterness, "how much the descendant of the Scottish Stewarts was honoured by being admitted into the convivialities of Wilmot and Vilhers."

"But your Scottish friends, Mr. Stewart, your relations here, so numerous and so powerful?"

"Why, ay, my lady," replied the sergeant, "I believe some of them might have made me their gamekeeper, for I am a tolerable shot;—some of them would have entertained me as their bravo, for I can use my sword well; and here and there was one who, when better company was not to be had, would have made me his companion, since I can drink my three bottles of wine. But I don't know how it is, between service and service among my kinsmen, I prefer that of my cousin Charles as the most creditable of them all, although the pay is but poor, and the livery far from splendid."

"It is a shame, it is a burning scandal!" said Lady Margaret. "Why do you not apply to his most sacred Majesty? He cannot but be surprised to hear that a scion of his august family —"

"I beg your pardon, madam," interrupted the sergeant; "I am but a blunt soldier, and I trust you will excuse me when I say his most sacred Majesty is more busy in grafting scions of his own, than with nourishing those which were planted by his grandfather's grandfather."

"Well, Mr. Stewart," said Lady Margaret, "one thing you must promise me, —remain at Tillietudlem to-night; to-morrow I expect your commanding officer, the gallant Claverhouse, to whom king and country are so much obliged for his exertions against those who would turn the world upside down. I will speak to him on the subject of your speedy promotion; and I am certain he feels too much both what is due to the blood which is in your veins, and to the request of a lady so highly distinguished as myself by his most sacred Majesty, not to make better provision for you than you have yet received."

"I am much obliged to your ladyship, and I certainly will remain here with my prisoner, since you request it, especially as it will be the earliest way of presenting him to Colonel Grahame, and obtaining his ultimate orders about the young spark."

"Who is your prisoner, pray you?" said Lady Margaret.

"A young fellow of rather the better class in this neighbourhood, who has been so incautious as to give countenance to one of the murderers of the primate, and to facilitate the dog's escape."

"Oh, fie upon him!" said Lady Margaret; "I am but too apt to forgive the injuries I have received at the hands of these rogues, though some of them, Mr. Stewart, are of a kind not like to be forgotten; but those who would abet the perpetrators of so cruel and deliberate a homicide on a single man, an old man, and a man of the archbishop's sacred profession,—oh, fie upon him! If you wish to make him secure, with little trouble to your people. I will cause Harrison, or Gudyill, look for the key of our pit, or principal dungeon. It has not been open since the week after the victory of Kilsythe, when my poor Sir Arthur Bellenden put twenty Whigs into it; but it is not more than two stories beneath ground, so it cannot be unwholesome, especially as I rather believe there is somewhere an opening to the outer air,"

"I beg your pardon, madam," answered the sergeant, "I daresay the dungeon is a most admirable one; but I have promised to be civil to the lad, and I will take care he is watched, so as to render escape impossible. I set those to look after him shall keep him as fast as if his legs were in the boots, or his lingers in the thumbikins."

"Well, Mr. Stewart," rejoined the lady, "you best know your own duty. I heartily wish you good evening, and commit you to the care of my steward, Harrison. I would ask you to keep ourselves company, but a — a — a —"

"Uh, madam, it requires no apology; I am sensible the coarse red coat of King Charles II. does and ought to annihilate the privileges of the red blood of King James V."

"Not with me, I do assure you, Mr. Stewart; you do me injustice if you think so. I will speak to your officer to-morrow; and I trust you shall soon find yourself in a rank where there shall be no anomalies to be reconciled."

"I believe, madam," said Bothwell, "your goodness will find itself deceived; but I am obliged to you for your intention, and, at all events, I will have a merry night with Mr. Harrison."

Lady Margaret took a ceremonious leave, with all the respect which she owed to royal blood, even when flowing in the veins of a sergeant of the Life Guards, again assuring Mr. Stewart that whatever was in the Tower of Tillietudlem was heartily at his service and that of his attendants.

Sergeant Bothwell did not fail to take the lady at her word, and readily forgot the height from which his family had descended, in a joyous carousal, during which Mr. Harrison exerted himself to produce the best wine in the cellar, and to excite his guest to be merry by that seducing example, which, in matters of conviviality, goes farther than piecept. Old Gudyill associated himself with a party so much to his taste, pretty much as Davy, in the Second Part of Henry the Fourth, mingles in the revels of his master, Justice Shallow. He ran down to the cellar, at the risk of breaking his neck, to ransack some private catacomb, known, as he boasted, only to himself, and which never either had, or should, during his superintendence, render forth a bottle of its contents to any one but a real king's friend.

"When the duke dined here," said the butler, seating himself at a distance from the table, being somewhat overawed by Bothwell's genealogy, but yet hitching his seat half a yard nearer at every clause of his speech, "my leddy was importunate to have a bottle of that Burgundy,"—here he advanced his seat a little,—"but I dinna ken how it was, Mr. Stewart, I misdoubted him, I jaloused him, sir, no to be the friend to Government he pretends : the family are not to lippen to. That auld Duke James lost his heart before he lost his head ; and the Worcester man was but wersh parritch, neither gude to fry, boil, nor sup cauld." With this witty observation, he completed his first parallel, and commenced a zigzag, after the manner of an experienced engineer, in order to continue his approaches to the table. "Sae, sir, the faster my leddy cried ¹ Burgundy to his Grace—the auld Burgundy—the choice Burgundy—the Burgundy that came ower in the thirty-nine," the mair did I say to mysell, 'Deil a drap gangs down his hause unless I was mair sensible o' his principles; sack and claret may serve him.¹ Na, na, gentlemen, as lang as I hae the trust "butler in this house o' Tillietudlem, I'll tak it upon me to see that nae disloyal or doubtfu¹ person is the better "our Linns. But when I can find a true friend to the king and his cause, and a moderate episcopacy; when I find a man, as I say, that will stand by Church and Crown as I did mysell in my master's life, and all through Montrose's time, I think there's naething in the cellar ower gude to be spared on him." ,

By this time he had completed a lodgment in the body of the place, or, in other words, advanced his seat close to the table.

"And now, Mr. Francis Stewart of Bothwell, -I have the honour to drink your gude health, and a commission ¹ ye, and much luck may ye have in raking this country clear o' Whigs and Roundheads, fanatics and Covenanters," Bothwell, who, it may well be believed, had long ceased to be very scrupulous in point of society, which he regulated more by his convenience and station in life than his ancestry, readily answered the butler's pledge, acknowledging, at the same time, the excellence of the wine; and Mr. Gudyill, thus adopted a regular member of the company, continued to furnish them with the means of mirth until an early hour in the next morning.

CHAPTER X.

Did I but purpose to embark with thee
On the smooth surface of a summer sea,
Alid would forsake the skiff and make the shore
When the winds whistle and the tempests roar?

FRIOB.

WHILE Lady Margaret held, with the high-descended sergeant of dragoons, the conference which we have detailed in the preceding pages, her granddaughter, partaking in a less degree her ladyship's enthusiasm for all who were sprung of the blood-royal, did not honour Sergeant Bothwell with more attention than a single glance, which showed her a tall, powerful person, and a set of hardy, weather-beaten features, to which pride and dissipation had given an air where discontent mingled with the reckless gaiety of desperation. The other soldiers offered still less to detach her consideration; but from the prisoner, muffled and disguised as he was, she found it impossible to withdraw her eyes. Yet she blamed herself for indulging a curiosity which seemed obviously to give pain to him who was its object.

"I wish," she said to Jenny Dennison, who was the immediate attendant on her person, "I wish we knew who that poor fellow is."

"I was just thinking sae mysell, Miss Edith," said the "Waiting woman; "but it canna be Cuddie Headrigg, because he's taller, and no sae stout,"

"Yet," continued Miss Bellenden, "it may be some poor neighbour, for whom we might have cause to interest ourselves."

"I can aune learn wha he is," said the enterprising Jenny, "if the sodgers were anes settled and at leisure, for I ken ane o' them very weel, — the best-looking and the youngest " them."

"I think you know all the idle young fellows about the country," answered her mistress.

"Na, Miss Edith, I am no sae free " my acquaintance as that," answered the fille-de-chambre. "To be sure, folk canna help kenning the folk by head-mark that they see aye glowring and looking at them at kirk and market; but I ken few lads to speak to, unless it be them o' the family, and the three Steinsons, and Tain Hand, and the young miller, and the five Howisons in Nethersheils, and lang Tarn Gilry, and —"

"Pray cut short a list of exceptions which threatens to be a long one, and tell me how you come to know this young soldier," said Miss Bellenden.

"Lord, Miss Edith, it's Tarn Halliday, — Trooper Tarn, as they ca' him, that was wounded by the hill-folk at the conventicle at Outer-side Muir, and lay here while he was under cure. I can ask him onything, and Tarn will no refuse to answer me, I "l be caution for him."

"Try, then," said Miss Edith, "if you can find an opportunity to ask him the name of his prisoner, and come to my room and tell me what he says."

Jenny Denniaon proceeded on her errand, but soon returned with such a face of surprise and dismay as evinced a deep interest in the fate of the prisoner.

"What is the matter?" said Edith, anxiously. "Does it prove to be Cuddie, after all, poor fellow?"

"Cuddie, Miss Edith? Na! na! it's nae Cuddie,"¹¹ blubbered out the faithful fille-de-chambre, sensible of the pain which her news were about to inflict on her young mistress. "Oh, dear, Miss Edith, it's young Milnwood himsell!"

"Young Milnwood!" exclaimed Edith, aghast in her turn; "it is impossible, — totally impossible! His uncle attends the clergyman indulged by law, and has no connection whatever with the refractory people; and he himself has never interfered in this unhappy dissension; he must be totally innocent, unless he has been standing up for some invaded right."

"Oh, my dear Miss Edith," said her attendant, "these are not days to ask what's right or what's wrang; if he were as innocent as the new-born infant, they would find some way of making him guilty, if they liked. But Tain Halliday says it will touch his life, for he has been resetting ane o' the Fife gentlemen that killed that auld carle of an archbishop."

"His life!" exclaimed Edith, starting hastily up, and speaking with a hurried and tremulous accent, — "they cannot — they shall not; I will speak for him — they shall not hurt him!"

"Oh, my dear young leddy, think on your grandmother; think on the danger and the difficulty," added Jenny; "for he's kept under close confinement till Claverhouse comes up in the morning; and if he doesna gie him full satisfaction, Tarn Halliday says there will be brief wark wi' him. Kneel down — mak ready — present — fire, — just as they did wi' auld deaf John Macbriar, that never understood a single question they pat till him, and sae lost his life for lack o' hearing."

"Jenny," said the young lady, "if he should die, I will die with him; there is no time to talk of danger or difficulty. I will put on a plaid, and slip down with you to the place where they have kept him; I will throw myself at the feet of the sentinel, and entreat him, as he has a soul to be saved —"

"Eh, guide us!" interrupted the maid; "our young leddy at the feet o' Trooper Tain, and speaking to him about his soul, when the puir chield hardly kens whether he has ane or no, unless that he whiles swears by it, — that will never do; but what maun be maun be, and I '1 never desert a true-love cause. And sae, if ye maun see young Milnwood, though I ken nae gude it will do, but to make baith your hearts the sairer, I '1 e'en tak the risk o't, and try to manage Tarn Halliday; but ye maun let me hae my ain gate, and no speak ae word, — he's keeping guard o'er Milnwood in the easter round of the tower."

"Go, go, fetch me a plaid," said Edith. "Let me but see him, and I will find some remedy for his danger. Haste ye, Jenny, as ever ye hope to have good at my hands."

Jenny hastened, and soon returned with a plaid, in which Edith moffled herself so as completely to screen her face, and in part to disguise her person. This was a mode of arranging the plaid very common among the ladies of that century and the earlier part of the succeeding one, — so much so, indeed, that the venerable sages of the Kirk, conceiving that the mode gave tempting facilities for intrigue, directed more than one Act of Assembly against this use of the mantle. But fashion, as usual, proved too strong for authority, and while plaids continued to be worn, women of all ranks occasionally employed them as a sort of moffler or veil.¹ Her face and figure thus concealed, Edith, holding by her attendant's arm, hastened with trembling steps to the place of Morton's confinement.

This was a small study, or closet, in one of the turrets opening upon a gallery in which the sentinel was pacing to and fro; for Sergeant Bothwell, scrupulous in observing his word, and perhaps touched with some compassion for the prisoner's youth and genteel demeanour, had waived the indignity of putting his guard into the same apartment with him. Halliday, therefore, with his carabine on his arm, walked up and down the gallery, occasionally solacing himself with a draught of ale, a huge flagon of which stood upon the table at one end of the apartment, and at other times humming the lively Scottish air, —

¹¹ Between Saint Johnstons anil Bonny Dundee,
I'll gar ye be fain to follow me."

Jenny Dennison cautioned her mistress once more to let her take her own way.

"I can manage the trooper weel eneugh," she said, "for as rough as he is, — I ken their nature weel; but ye maunna say a single word."

She accordingly opened the door of the gallery just as the sentinel had turned his back from it, and taking up the tune which he hummed, she sung in a coquettish tone of rustic raillery, —

¹ Concealment of an individual, while in public or promiscuous society, was then very common. In England, where DO plaids were worn, the ladies used vizard masks for the same purpose, and the gallants drew the skirts of their cloaks over the right shoulder, BO as to cover part of the face. This is repeatedly alluded to in Fepys's Diary.

"If I were to follow a poor sorlger lad,
My friends wad be angry, my nninrie be umi ;
A lainl, or a lord, they were fitter for me,
Sue I'll never be Jain to follow thee "

"A fair challenge, by Jove," cried the sentinel, turning round, "and from two at once; but it's not easy to bang the soldier with his bandoleers ;" then, taking up the song where the damsel had stopt, —

"To follow me ye weel may be glad' —
A share of my supper, a share of my bed ;
To the sound of the drum to range fearless and free,
I'll gar ye be fain to follow me.

Come, my pretty lass, and kiss me for my song."

"I should not have thought of that, Mr. Halliday," answered Jenny, with a look and tone expressing just the necessary degree of contempt at the proposal, "and, I'se assure ye, ye "1 hae but little o' my company unless ye show gentler havings. It wasna to hear that sort o' nonsense that brought me here wi' my friend, and ye should think shame " yoursell, 'at should ye."

"Umph! and what sort of nonsense did bring you here then, Mrs. Denmson ?"

"My kinswoman has some particular business with your prisoner, young Mr. Harry Morton, and I am come " her to speak till him."

"The devil you are!" answered the sentinel; "and pray, Mrs. Dennison, how do your kinswoman and you propose to get in? You are rather too plump to whisk through a keyhole, and opening the door is a thing not to be spoke of."

"It's no a thing to be spoken o', but a thing to be dune," replied the persevering damsel.

"We '1 see about that, my bonny Jenny;" and the soldier resumed his march, humming, as he walked to and fro along the gallery, —

" Keek into the draw-well,
 Janet, Janet,
 Then ye '1 see your bonny sell,
 My joe Janet."

"So ye're no thinking to let us in, Mr. Halliday? Weel, weel; gude e'en to you,—ye hae seen the last o' me, and o' this bonny die too," said Jenny, holding between her finger and thumb a splendid silver dollar.

"Give him gold, give him gold," whispered the agitated young lady.

"Silver's e'en ower gude for the like " him," replied Jenny, "that disna care for the blink o' a bonny lassie's ee,—and what's waur, he wad think there was something mair in't than a kinswoman " mine. My certy ! siller⁷s no sae plenty wi' us, let alane gowd." Having addressed this advice aside to her mistress, she raised her voice, and said, "My cousin winna stay ony langer, Mr. Halliday; sae, if ye please, gude e'en t' ye."

"Halt a bit, halt a bit," said the trooper; "rein up and parley, Jenny. If I let your kinswoman in to speak to my prisoner, you must stay here and keep me company till she come out again, and then we'll all be well pleased, you know."

"The fiend be in my feet then," said Jenny. "D'ye think my kinswoman and me are gaun to lose our gude name wi' cracking clavers wi' the like o' you or your prisoner either, without somebody by to see fair play 7 Heh, heh, sirs, to see sic a difference between folk's promises and performance! Ye were aye willing to slight puir Cuddie ; but an I had asked him to oblige me in a thing, though it had been to cost his hanging, he wadna hae stude twice about it."

»D_n Cuddie!" retorted the dragoon ; "he'll be hanged in good earnest, I hope. I saw him to-day at Milnwood with his old puritanical b——of a mother; and if I had thought I was to have had him cast in my dish, I would have brought him up at my horse's tail, — we had law enough to bear us out."

"Very weel, very weel. See if Cuddie winna hao a lang shot at you ane " thae days, if ye gar him tak the inuir wi' sae mony honest folk. He can hit a mark brawly; he was third at the popinjay; and he's as true of his promise as of ee and hand, though he disna mak sic a phrase about it as some acquaintance o' yours. But it's a' ane to me.—Come, cousin, we'llawa'."

"Stay, Jenny ; d—n me, if I hang fire more than another when I have said a thing," said the soldier, in a hesitating tone. "Where is the sergeant?"

"Drinking and driving ower," quoth Jenny, "wi' the steward and John Gudyill."

"So, so, — he's safe enough; and where are my comrades ?" asked Halliday.

"Birling the brown bowl wi' the fowler and the falconer, and some o' the serving folk."

"Have they plenty of ale?"

"Sax gallons, as gude as e'er was masked," said the maid.

"Well, then, my pretty Jenny," said the relenting sentinel, "they are fast till the hour of relieving guard, and perhaps something later; and so, if you will promise to come alone the next time — "

"Maybe I will, and maybe I winna," said Jenny ; "but if ye get the dollar, ye "l like that just as weel."

"I "l be d—n'd if I do," said Halliday, taking the money, however; "but it's always something for my risk ; for if Claverhouse hears what I have done, he will build me a horse as high as the tower of Tillietudlem. But every one in the regiment takes what they can come by; I am sure Bothwell and his blood-royal shows us a good example. And if I were trusting to you, you little jilting devil, I should lose both pains and powder; whereas this fellow," looking at the piece, "will be good as far as he goes. So come, there is the door open for you; do not stay groaning and praying with the young Whig now, but be ready, when I call at the door, to start, as if they were sounding 'Horse and away,'" .

So speaking, Halliday unlocked the door of the closet, admitted Jenny and her pretended kinswoman, locked it behind them, and hastily reassumed the indifferent measured step and time-killing whistle of a sentinel upon his regular duty.

The door, which slowly opened, discovered Morton with both arms reclined upon a table, and his head resting upon them in a posture of deep dejection. He raised his face as the door opened, and perceiving the female figures which it admitted, started up in great surprise. Edith, as if modesty had quelled the courage which despair had bestowed, stood about a yard from the door without having either the power to speak or to advance. All the plans of aid, relief, or comfort which she had proposed to lay before her lover, seemed at once to have vanished from her recollection, and left only a painful chaos of ideas, with which was mingled a fear that she had degraded herself in the eyes of Morton by a step which might appear precipitate and unfeminine. She hung motionless and almost powerless upon the arm of her attendant, who in vain endeavoured to reassure and inspire her with courage by whispering, "We are in now, madam, and we maun mak the best o' our time; for, doubtless, the corporal or the sergeant will gang the rounds, and it wad be a pity to hae the poor lad Halliday punished for his civility."

Morton, in the mean time, was timidly advancing, suspecting the truth,—for whnt other female in the house, excepting Edith herself, was likely to take an interest in his misfortunes?—and yet afraid, owing to the doubtful twilight and the moffled dress, of making some mistake which might be prejudicial to the object of his affections. Jenny, whose ready wit and forward manners well qualified her for such an office, hastened to break the ice.

"Mr. Morton, Miss Edith's very sorry for your present situation, and —"

It was needless to say more; he was at her side, almost at her feet, pressing her unresisting hands, and loading her with a profusion of thanks and gratitude which would be hardly intelligible from the mere broken words, unless we could describe the tone, the gesture, the impassioned and hurried indications of deep and tumultuous feeling, with which they were accompanied.

For two or three minutes, Edith stood as motionless as the statue of a saint which receives the adoration of a worshipper; and when she recovered herself sufficiently to withdraw her hands from

Henry's grasp, she could at first only faintly articulate, "I have taken a strange step, Mr. Morton, — a step,"¹¹ she continued with more coherence, as her ideas arranged themselves in consequence of a strong effort, "that perhaps may expose me to censure in your eyes. But I have long permitted you to use the language of friendship,—perhaps I might say more,—too long to leave you when the world seems to have left you. How, or why, is this imprisonment? what can be done? Can my uncle, who thinks so highly of you,—can your own kinsman, Milnwood, be of no use? Are there no means; and what is likely to be the event?"

"Be what it will," answered Henry, contriving to make himself master of the hand that had escaped from him, but which was now again abandoned to his clasp, — "be what it will, it is to me from this moment the most welcome incident of a weary life. To you, dearest Edith, — forgive me, I should have said Miss Bellenden, but misfortune claims strange privileges,—to you I have owed the few happy moments which have gilded a gloomy existence; and if I am now to lay it down, the recollection of this honour will be my happiness in the last hour of suffering."

"But is it even thus, Mr. Morton?" said Miss Bellenden. "Have you, who used to mix so little in these unhappy feuds, become so suddenly and deeply implicated that nothing short of —"

She paused, unable to bring out the word which should have come next.

"Nothing short of my life, you would say?" replied Morton, in a calm, but melancholy tone. "I believe that will be entirely in the bosoms of my judges. My guards spoke of a possibility of exchanging the penalty for entry into foreign service. I thought I could have embraced the alternative; and yet, Miss Belltinden, since I have seen you once more, I feel that exile would be more galling than death."

"And is it then true," said Edith, "that you have been so desperately rash as to entertain communication with any of those cruel wretches who assassinated the primate?"

"¹¹I knew not even that such a crime had been committed," replied Morton, "when I gave unhappily a night's lodging and concealment to one of those rash and cruel men, the ancient friend and comrade of my father. But my ignorance will avail me little; for who, Miss Bellenden, save you, will believe it? And, what is worse, I am at least uncertain whether, even if I had known the crime, I could have brought my mind, under all the circumstances, to refuse a temporary refuge to the fugitive."

"¹¹And by whom," said Edith, anxiously, "or under what authority, will the investigation of your conduct take place?"

"Under that of Colonel Grahame of Claverhouse, I am given to understand," said Morton, — "one of the military commission to whom it has pleased our king, our privy council, and our parliament, that used to be more tenacious of our liberties, to commit the sole charge of our goods and of our lives."

"To Claverhouse?" said Edith, faintly. "Merciful Heaven, you are lost ere you are tried! He wrote to my grandmother that he was to be here to-morrow morning, on his road to the head of the county, where some desperate men, animated by the presence of two or three of the actors in the primate's murder, are said to have assembled for the purpose of making a stand against the Government. His expressions made me shudder even when I could not guess that — that — a friend — "

"Do not be too much alarmed on my account, my dearest Edith," said Henry, as he supported her in his arms ; " Claverhouse, though stern and relentless, is, by all accounts, brave, fair, and honourable. I am a soldier's son, and will plead my cause like a soldier. He will perhaps listen more favourably to a blunt and unvarnished defence than a truckling and time-serving judge might do. And, indeed, in a time when justice is, in all its branches, so completely corrupted, I would rather lose my life by open military violence than be conjured out of it by the hocus-pocus of some arbitrary lawyer, who lends the knowledge he has of the statutes made for our protection, to wrest them to our destruction."

"You are lost, you are lost, if you are to plead your cause with Ulaverhouse !" sighed Edith; "root and branch work is the mildest of his expressions. The unhappy primate was his intimate friend and early patron. 'No excuse, no subterfuge,' said his letter, 'I shall save either those connected with the deed, or such as have given them countenance and shelter, from the ample and bitter penalty of the law, until I shall have taken as many lives in vengeance of this atrocious murder as the old man had grey hairs upon his venerable head.' There is neither ruth nor favour to be found with him."

Jenny Dennison, who had hitherto remained silent, now ventured, in the extremity of distress which the lovers felt, but for which they were unable to devise a remedy, to offer her own advice, " your leddyship's pardon, Miss Edith, and young Mr. Morton's, we maunna waste time. Let Milnwood take my plaid and gown; I '1 slip them aff in the dark corner, if he '1 promise no to look about, and he may walk past Tam Halliday, who is half blind with his ale, and I can tell him a canny way to get out o' the Tower, and your leddyship will gang quietly to your am room, and I '1 row mysell in his grey cloak, and pit on his hat and play the prisoner till the coast's clear, and then I '1 cry in Tam Halliday, and gar him let me out."

"Let you out?" said Morton; "they '1 make your life answer it."

"Ne'er a bit," replied Jenny; "Tam daurna tell he let onybody in, for his ain sake; and I '1 gar him find some other gate to account for the escape."

"Will you, by G—?" said the sentinel,—suddenly opening the door of the apartment; "if I am half blind, I am not deaf, and you should not plan an escape quite so loud, if you expect to go through with it. Come, come, Mrs. Janet, march, troop; quick time, — trot, d—n me ! And you, madam kinswoman, —I won't ask your retil name, though you were going to play me so rascally a trick, —but I must make a clear garrison; so beat a retreat, unless you would have me turn out the guard."

"I hope," said Morton, very anxiously, "you will not mention this circumstance, my good friend, and trust to my honour to acknowledge your civility in keeping the secret. If you overheard our conversation, you must have observed that we did not accept of, or enter into, the hasty proposal made by this good-natured girl."

"Oh, devilish good-natured, to be sure," said Halliday. "As for the rest, I guess how it is, and I scorn to bear malice, or tell tales, as much as another; but no thanks to that little jilting devil, Jenny Dennison, who deserves a tight skelping for trying to lead an honest lad into a scrape, just because he was so silly as to like her good-for-little chit face."

Jenny had no better means of justification than the last apology to which her sex trust, and usually not in vain; she pressed her handkerchief to her face, sobbed with great vehemence, and either wept, or managed, as Halliday might have said, to go through the motions wonderfully well

"And now," continued the soldier, somewhat mollified, "if you have anything to say, say it in two minutes, and let me see your backs turned; for if Bothwell take it into his drunken head to make the rounds half an hour too soon, it will be a black business to us all."

"Farewell, Edith," whispered Morton, assuming a firmness he was far from possessing; "do not remain here,—leave me to my fate; it cannot be beyond endurance, since you are interested in it. Good night, good night! Do not remain here till you are discovered."

Thus saying, he resigned her to her attendant, by whom she was quietly led and partly supported out of the apartment.

"Every one has his taste, to be sure," said Halliday; "but d—n me if I would have vexed so sweet a girl as that is, for all the Whigs that ever swore the Covenant."

When Edith had regained her apartment, she gave way to a burst of grief which alarmed Jenny Dennison, who hastened to administer such scraps of consolation as occurred to her.

"Dinna vex yoursell sae muckle, Miss Edith," said that faithful attendant; "wha kens what may happen to help young Milnwood? He's a brave lad, and a bonny, and a gentleman of a good fortune, and they winna string the like o' him up as they do the puir Whig bodies that they catch in the milirs, like straps o' onions; maybe his uncle will bring him aff, or maybe your ain grand-uncle will spsak a gude word for him, — he's weel acquent wi' " the red-coat gentlemen."

"You are right, Jenny, you are right,"¹ said Edith, recovering herself from the stupor into which she had sunk; "this is no time for despair, but for exertion. You must find some one to ride this very night to my uncle's with a letter."

"To Charnwood, madam? It's unco late, and it's sax miles an¹ a bittock down the water; I doubt if we can find man and horse the night, mair especially as they hae mounted a sentinel before the gate. Puir Cuddie! he's gane, puir fallow, that wad hae dune aught in the world I bade him, and ne'er asked a reason, — an¹ I've had nae time to draw up wi' the new pleugh-lad yet; forby that, they say he's gaun to be married to Meg Murdieson, ill-faur'd cuttie as she is."

"You must find some one to go, Jenny; life and death depend upon it."

¹¹I wad gang mysell, my leddy; for I could creep out at the window " the pantry, and speel down by the auld yew-tree well eneugh, — I hae played that trick ere now. But the road's unco wild, and sae mony red-coats about, forby the Whigs, that are no muckle better (the young lads " them) if they meet a fraim body their lane in the muirs. I wadna stand for the walk, — I can walk ten miles by moonlight weel eneugh."

"Is there no one you can think of, that, for money or favour, would serve me so far?" asked Edith, in great anxiety.

"I dinna ken," said Jenny, after a moment's consideration, "unless it be Guse Gibbie; and he '1 maybe no ken the way, though it's no sae difficult to hit, if he keep the horse-road, and mind the turn at the Cappercleugh, and dinna drown himsell in the Whomlekirn-pule, or f' ower the scaur at the Deil's Loaning, or miss ony o' the kittle steps at the Pass o' Walkwary, or be carried to the hills by the Whigs, or be taen to the tolbooth by the red-coats."

"All ventures must be run," said Edith, cutting short the list of chances against Goose Gibbie's safe arrival at the end of his pilgrimage; "all risks must be run, unless you can find a better messenger. Go, bid the boy get ready, and get him out of the Tower as secretly as you can. If he meets any one, let him say he is carrying a letter to Major Bellen-den of Charnwood, but without mentioning any names."

"I understand, madam," said Jenny Dennison; "I warrant the callant will do weel eneugh, and Tib the hen-wife will tak care o' the geese for a word o' my mouth; and I '1 tell Gibbie your leddyship will mak his peace wi' Lady Margaret, and we'll gie him a dollar."

"Two, if he does his errand well," said Edith.

Jenny departed to rouse Goose Gibbie out of his slumbers, to which he was usually consigned at sundown, or shortly after, he keeping the hours of the birds under his charge. During her absence, Edith took her writing materials, and prepared against her return the following letter, superscribed! —

For the hands of Major Bellenden of Charnwvud, my much honoured unclej These:

MY DEAR UNCLE, — This will serve to inform you I am desirous to know how your gout is, as we did not see you at the wappen-schaw, which made both my grandmother and myself very uneasy. And if it will permit you to travel, we shall be happy to see you at our poor house to-morrow at the hour of breakfast, as Colonel Grahame of Claverhouse is to pass this way on his march, and we would willingly have yimr assistance to receive and entertain a military man of such distijction, who, probably, will not be much delighted with the company of women. Also, my dear uncle, I pray you to leb Mrs. Carefor't, your himsekeepcr, send me my double-trimmed paduasoy with the hanging sleeves, which she will find in the third drawer of the walnut press in the green room, which you are so kind as to call mine. Also, my dear uncle, I pray you to send me the second volume of the "Grand Cyrus," as I have only read as far as the imprisonment of Philidaspes upon the seven hundredth and thirty-third page; but, above all, I entreat you to come to us to-morrow before eight of the clock, which, as your pacing nag is so good, you may well do without rising before your usual hour. So, praying to God to preserve your health, I rest your dutiful and loving niece, EDITH BELLENDEN.

Postscriptum.—A party of soldiers have last night brought your friend, young Mr. Henry Morton of Milnwood, hither as a prisoner. I conclude you will be sorry for the young gentleman, and, therefore, let you know this, in case you may think of speaking to Colonel Grahame in his behalf. I have not mentioned his name to my grandmother, knowing her prejudice against the family,

This epistle being duly sealed and delivered to Jenny, that faithful confidant hastened to put the same in the charge of Goose Gibbie, whom she found in readiness to start from the castle. She then gave him various instructions touching the road, which she apprehended he was likely to mistake, not having travelled it above five or six times, and possessing only the same slender proportion of memory as of judgment. Lastly, she smuggled him out of the garrison through the pantry window into the branchy yew-tree which grew close beside it, and had the satisfaction to see him reach the bottom in safety, and take the right turn at the commencement of his journey. She then returned to persuade her young mistress to go to bed, and to lull her to rest, if possible, with assurances of Gibbie's success in his embassy, only qualified by a passing regret that the trusty Cuddie, with whom the commission might have been more safely reposed, was no longer within reach of serving her.

More fortunate as a messenger than as a cavalier, it was Gibbie's good hap rather than his good management, which, after he had gone astray not oftener than nine times, and given his garments a taste of the variation of each bog, brook, and slough between Tillietudlem and Charnwood, placed him about day-break before the gate of Major Bellenden's mansion, having completed a walk of ten miles (for the bittock, as usual, amounted to four) in little more than the same number of hours.

CHAPTER XL

At last comes the troop, by the word of command Drawn up in our court, where the captain cries, Stand !

SWIFT.

MAJOR BELLENDEN'S ancient valet, Gideon Pike, as he adjusted his master's clothes by his bedside, preparatory to the worthy veteran's toilet, acquainted him, as an apology for disturbing him an hour earlier than his usual time of rising, that there was an express from Tillietudlem.

"From Tillietudlem?" said the old gentleman, rising hastily in his bed, and sitting bolt upright. "Open the shutters, Pike — I hope my sister-in-law is well — furl up the bed-curtain. — What have we all here?" glancing at Edith's note. "The gout? Why, she knows I have not had a fit since Candlemas. — The wappen-schaw? I told her a month since I was not to be there. — Paduasoy and hanging sleeves? Why, hang the gipsy herself! — Grand Cyrus and Philipdastus? — Philip Devil! — Is the wench gone crazy all at once? Was it worth while to send an express and wake me at five in the morning for all this trash? But what says her poatscriptum? — Mercy on us!" he exclaimed on perusing it, — "Pike, saddle old Kilsythe instantly, and another horse for yourself."

"I hope nae ill news frae the Tower, sir?" said Pike, astonished at his master's sudden emotion.

" Yes —no —yes — that is, I must meet Claverhouse there on some express business; so boot and saddle, Pike, as fast as you can. — O Lord ! what times are these ! — the poor lad — my old cronie's son ! — and the silly wench sticks it into her postscriptum, as she calls it, at the tail of all this trumpery about old gowns and new romances !"

In a few minutes the good old officer was fully equipped; and having mounted upon his arm-gaunt charger as soberly as Mark Antony himself could have done, he paced forth his way to the Tower of Tillietudlem.

On the road he formed the prudent resolution to say nothing to the old lady (whose dislike to Presbyterians of all kinds he knew to be inveterate) of the quality and rank of the prisoner detained within her walls, but to try his own influence with Claverhouse to obtain Morton's liberation.

" Being so loyal as he is, he must do something for so old a cavalier as I am," said the veteran to himself; "and if he is so good a soldier as the world speaks of, why, he will be glad to serve an old soldier's son. I never knew a real soldier that was not a frank-hearted, honest fellow; and I think the execution of the laws (though it's a pity they find it necessary to make them so severe) may be a thousand times better intrusted with them than with peddling lawyers and thick-skulled country gentlemen."

Such were the ruminations of Major Miles Belenden, which were terminated by John Grudyill (not more than half-drunk) taking hold of his bridle, and assisting him to dismount in the rough-paved court of Tillietudlem.

" Why, John," said the veteran, ' what devil of a discipline is this you have been keeping ? You have been reading Geneva print this morning already."

"I have been reading the Litany," said John, shaking his head with a look of drunken gravity, and having only caught one word of the major's address to him. "Life is short, sir; we are flowers of the field, sir,—hiccup,—and lilies of the valley."¹

"Flowers and lilies ? Why; man, such carles as thou and I can hardly be called better than old hemlocks, decayed nettles, or withered rag-weed ; but I suppose you think that we are still worth watering."

"I am an old soldier, sir, I thank Heaven — hiccup—"

"An old skinker, you mean, John. But come, never mind, show me the way to your mistress, old lad."

John Gudyill led the way to the stone hall, where Lady Margaret was fidgeting about, superintending, arranging, and re-forming the preparations made for the reception of the celebrated Claverhouse, whom one party honoured and extolled as a hero, and another execrated as a blood-thirsty oppressor.

"Did I not tell you," said Lady Margaret to her principal female attendant, — "did I not tell you, Mysie, that it was my especial pleasure on this occasion to have everything in the precise order wherein it was upon that famous morning when his most sacred Majesty partook of his disjune at Tillietudlem ?"

"Doubtless, such were your leddyship's commands, and to the best of my remembrance —" was Mysie answering, when her ladyship broke in with, " Then wherefore is the venison pasty placed on the left side of the throne, and the stoup of claret upon the right, when ye may right weel remember, Mysie, that his most sacred Majesty with his ain hand shifted the pasty to the same side with the flagon, and said they were too good friends to be parted ? "

¹¹ " I mind that weel, madam," said Mysie; " and if I had forgot, I have heard your leddyship often speak about that grand morning sin' syne ; but I thought everything was to be placed just as it was when his Majesty, God bless him, came into this room, looking mair like an angel than a man, if he hadna been sae black-a-vised,"

" Then ye thought nonsense, Mysie; for in whatever way his most sacred Majesty ordered the position of the trenchers and flagons, that, as weel as his royal pleasure in greater matters, should be a law to his subjects, and shall ever be to those of the house of Tillietudlem."

" Weel, madam," said Mysie, making the alterations required, " it's easy mending the error; but if everything is just to be as his Majesty left it, there should be an unco hole in the venison pasty."

At this moment the door opened.

" Who is that, John Gudyill ?" exclaimed the old lady. " I can speak to no one just now.— Is it you, my dear brother?" she continued, in some surprise, as the major entered; " this is a right early visit."

¹¹ " Not more early than welcome, I hope," replied Major Bellenden, as he saluted the widow of his deceased brother; " but I heard, by a note which Edith sent to Charnwood about some of her equipage and books, that you were to have Claver'se here this morning, so I thought, like an old fire-lock as I am, that I should like to have a chat with this rising soldier. I caused Pike saddle Kilsythe, and here we both are."

"And most kindly welcome you are," said the old lady; "it is just what I should have prayed you to do, if I had thought there was time. You see I am husy in preparation. All is to be in the same order as when —"

"The king breakfasted at Tillietudlem," said the major, who, like all Lady Margaret's friends, dreaded the commencement of that narrative, and was desirous to cut it short, — "I remember it well; you know I was waiting on his Majesty."

"You were, brother," said Lady Margaret; "and perhaps you can help me to remember the order of the entertainment."

"Nay, good sooth," said the major, "the damnable dinner that Noll gave us at Worcester a few days afterwards drove all your good cheer out of my memory. — But how's this? You have even the great Turkey-leather elbow chair, with the tapestry cushions, placed in state."

"The throne, brother, if you please," said Lady Margaret, gravely.

"Well, the throne be it, then," continued the major. "Is that to be Claver's post in the attack upon the pasty?"

"No, brother," said the lady; "as these cushions have been once honoured by accommodating the person of our most sacred monarch, they shall never, please Heaven, during my life-time, be pressed by any leas dignified weight."

"You should not, then," said the old soldier, "put them in the way of an honest old cavalier who has ridden ten miles before breakfast; for, to confess the truth, they look very inviting. But where is Edith?"

"On the battlements of the warder's turret," answered the old lady, "looking out for the approach of our guests."

"Why, I "1 go there too ; and so should you, Lady Margaret, as soon as you have your line of battle properly formed in the hall here. It's a pretty thing, I can tell you, to see a regiment of horse upon the march."

Thus speaking, he offered his arm with an air of old-fashioned gallantry, which Lady Margaret accepted with such a curtsy of acknowledgment as ladies were wont to make in Holyrood House before the year 1642, which, for one while, drove both curtsies and courts out of fashion.

Upon the bartizan of the turret, to which they ascended by many a winding passage and uncouth staircase, they found Edith, not in the attitude of a young lady who watches with fluttering curiosity the approach of a smart regiment of dragoons, but pale, downcast, and evincing, by her countenance, that sleep had not, during the preceding night, been the companion of her pillow. The good old veteran was hurt at her appearance, which, in the hurry of preparation, her grandmother had omitted to notice.

"What is come over you, you silly girl?" he said. "Why, you look like an officer's wife when she opens the News-letter after an action, and expects to find her husband among the killed and wounded. But I know the reason, — you will persist in reading these nonsensical romances, day and Bight, and' whimpering for distresses that never existed. Why, how the devil can you believe that Artamines, or what d' ye call him, fought single-handed with a whole battalion? One to three is as great odds as ever fought and won, and I never knew anybody that cared to take that, except old Corporal Eaddlebanes. But these d—d books put all pretty men's actions out of countenance. I dare-say you would think very little of Eaddlebanes, if he were alongside of Artamines. I would have the fellows that write such nonsense brought to the picket for leasing-making." ¹

Lady Margaret, herself somewhat attached to i,he perusal of romances, took up the cudgels.

¹ "Monsieur Scuderi," she said, "is a soldier, brother, and, as I have heard, a complete one; and so is the Sieur d'Urfe."

"Mora shame for them; they should have known better what they were writing about. For my part, I have not read a book these twenty years except my Bible, 'The Whole Duty of Man,' and, of late days, 'Turner's Pallas Arrnata, or Treatise on the Ordering of the Pike Exercise,'² and I don't like his discipline much neither. He wants to draw up the cavalry in front of a stand of pikes, instead of being upon the wings. Sure am I, if we had done so at Kilsythe, instead of having our handful of horse on the flanks, the first discharge would have sent them back among our Highlanders. — Bub I hear the kettle-drums."

All heads were now bent from the battlements of the turret, which commanded a distant prospect down the vale of the river. The Tower of Tillietudlem stood, or perhaps yet stands, upon the angle of a very precipitous bank formed by the junction of a considerable brook with the Clyde.¹ There was a narrow bridge, of one steep arch, across the brook near its mouth, over which, and along the foot of the high and broken bank, winded the public road ; and the fortalice, thus commanding both bridge and pass, had been, in times of war, a post of considerable importance, the possession of which was necessary to secure the communication of the upper and wilder districts of the country with those beneath, where the valley expands, and is more capable of cultivation. The view downwards is of a grand woodland character; but the level ground and gentle slopes near the river form cultivated fields of an irregular shape, interspersed with hedgerow-trees and copses, the enclosures seeming to have been individually cleared out of the forest which surrounds them, and which occupies, in unbroken masses, the steeper declivities and more distant banks. The stream, in colour a clear and sparkling brown, like the hue of the Cairngorm pebbles, rushes through this romantic region in bold sweeps and curves, partly visible, and partly concealed by the trees which clothe its banks. With a providence unknown in other parts of Scotland, the peasants have, in most places, planted orchards around their cottages, and the general blossom of the apple-trees at this season of the year gave all the lower part of the view the appearance of a flower-garden.

¹ Note VI — Romances of the Seventeenth Century, a Note VII. — Sir James Turner,

Looking up the river, the character of the scene was varied considerably for the worse. A hilly, waste, and uncultivated country approached close to the banks; the trees were few, and limited to the neighbourhood of the stream; and the rude moors swelled at a little distance into shapeless and heavy hills, which were again surmounted in their turn by a range of lofty mountains, dimly seen on the horizon. Thus the tower commanded two prospects,—the one richly cultivated and highly adorned; the other exhibiting the monotonous and dreary character of a wild and inhospitable moorland.

¹ The Castle of Tillietadlem is imaginary; hut the ruins of Craignethan Castle, situated on the Nethan, about three miles from its junction with the Clyde, hare something of the character of the description in the text.

The eyes of the spectators on the present occasion were attracted to the downward view, not alone by its superior beauty, but because the distant sounds of military music began to be heard from the public high-road which wound up the vale, and announced the approach of the expected body of cavalry. Their glimmering ranks were shortly afterwards seen in the distance, appearing and disappearing as the trees and the windings of the road permitted them to be visible, and distinguished chiefly by the flashes of light which their arms occasionally reflected against the sun. The train was long and imposing, for there were about two hundred and fifty horse upon the march, and the glancing of the swords and waving of their banners, joined to the clang of their trumpets and kettle-drums, had at once a lively and awful effect upon the imagination. As they advanced still nearer and nearer, they could distinctly see the files of those chosen troops following each other in long succession, completely equipped and superbly mounted.

"It's a sight that makes me thirty years younger," said the old cavalier; "and yet I do not much like the service that these poor fellows are to be engaged in. Although I had my share of the civil war, I cannot say I had ever so much real pleasure in that sort of service as when I was employed on the Continent, and we were hacking at fellows with foreign faces and outlandish dialect. It's a hard thing to hear a hamely Scotch tongue cry 'quarter,' and be obliged to cut him down just the same as if he called out 'mise'ricorde.' —So, there they come through the Netherwood haugh; upon my word, fine-looking fellows, and capitably mounted. He that is galloping from the rear of the column must be Claver'se himself, — ay, he gets into the front as they cross the bridge, and now they will be with us in less than five minutes,"

At the bridge beneath the Tower the cavalry divided, and the greater part, moving up the left bank of the brook and crossing at a ford a little above, took the road of the Grange, as it was called,—a large set of farm-offices belonging to the Tower, where Lady Margaret had ordered preparation to be made for their reception and suitable entertainment. The officers alone, with their colours and an escort to guard them, were seen to take the steep road up to the gate of the Tower, appearing by intervals as they gained the ascent, and again hidden by projections of the bank and of the huge old trees with which it is covered. When they emerged from this narrow path, they found themselves in front of the old Tower, the gates of which were hospitably open for their reception. Lady Margaret, with Edith and her brother-in-law, having hastily descended from their post of observation, appeared to meet and to welcome their guests, with a retinue of domestics in as good order as the orgies of the preceding evening permitted. The gallant young cornet (a relation as well as namesake of Claverhouse, with whom the reader has been already made acquainted) lowered the standard amid the fanfare of the trumpets, in homage to the rank of Lady Margaret and the charms of her granddaughter, and the old walls echoed to the flourish of the instruments, and the stamp and neigh of the chargers.

Claverhouse¹ himself alighted from a black horse, the most beautiful perhaps in Scotland. He had not a single white hair upon his whole body,—a circumstance which, joined to his spirit and fleetness, and to his being so frequently employed in pursuit of the Presbyterian recusants, caused an opinion to prevail among them that the steed had been presented to his rider by the great Enemy of Mankind, in order to assist him in persecuting the fugitive wanderers. When Claverhouse had paid his respects to the ladies with military politeness, had apologized for the trouble to which he was putting Lady Margaret's family, and had received the corresponding assurances that she could not think anything an inconvenience which brought within the walls of Tillietudlem so distinguished a soldier and so loyal a servant of his sacred Majesty,—when, in short, all forms of hospitable and polite ritual had been duly complied with, the colonel requested permission to receive the report of Bothwell, who was now in attendance, and with whom he spoke apart for a few minutes. Major Bellenden took that opportunity to say to his niece, without the hearing of her grandmother, "What a trifling, foolish girl you are, Edith, to send me by express a letter crammed with nonsense about books and gowns, and to slide the only thing I cared a marvedie about into the postscript!"

¹ Note VIII.—John Grahams of Claverhouse.

"I did not know," said Edith, hesitating very much, "whether it would be quite — quite proper for me to —"

"I know what you would say, —whether it would be right to take any interest in a Presbyterian. But I knew this lad's father well. He was a brave soldier; and if he was once wrong, he was once right too. I must commend your caution, Edith, for having said nothing of this young gentleman's affair to your grandmother, — you may rely on it I shall not. I will take an opportunity to speak to Claver'se. Come, my love, they are going to breakfast. Let us follow them."

CHAPTER XII.

Their breakfast BO warm to be sure they did eat,
A cuatom in travellers mighty discreet.

PRIOR.

THE breakfast of Lady Margaret Bellenden no more resembled a modern de'eund than the great stone-hall at Tillietudlem could brook comparison with a modern drawing-room. No tea, no coffee, no variety of rolls, but solid and substantial viands, — the priestly ham, the knightly sirloin, the noble baron of beef, the princely venison pasty; while silver flagons, saved with difficulty from the claws of the Covenanters, now mantled, some with ale, some with mead, and some with generous wine of various qualities and descriptions. The appetites of the guests were in correspondence to the magnificence and solidity of the preparation, — no piddling, no boy's play, but that steady and persevering exercise of the jaws which is best learned by early morning hours, and by occasional hard commons.

Lady Margaret beheld with delight the cates which she had provided descending with such alacrity into the persons of her honoured guests, and had little occasion to exercise with respect to any of the company, saving Claverhouse himself, the compulsory urgency of pressing to eat, to which, as to the peine forte et dure, the ladies of that period were in the custom of subjecting their guests.

But the leader himself, more anxious to pay courtesy to Miss Bellenden, next whom he was placed, than to gratify his appetite, appeared somewhat negligent of the good cheer set before him. Edith heard, without reply, many courtly speeches addressed to her, in a tone of voice of that happy modulation which could alike melt in the low tones of interesting conversation, and rise amid the din of battle, "loud as a trumpet with a silver sound," The sense that she was in the presence of the dreadful chief upon whose fiat the fate of Henry Morton must depend, the recollection of the terror and awe which were attached to the very name of the commander, deprived her for some time, not only of the courage to answer, but even of the power of looking upon him. But when, emboldened by the soothing tones of his voice, she lifted her eyes to frame some reply, the person on whom she looked bore, in his appearance at least, none of the terrible attributes in which her apprehensions had arrayed him.

Grahams of Olaverhouse was in the prime of life, rather low of stature, and slightly, though elegantly, formed; his gesture, language, and manners were those of one whose life had been spent among the noble and the gay. His features exhibited even feminine regularity. An oval face, a straight and well-formed nose, dark-hazel eyes, a complexion just sufficiently tinged with brown to save it from the charge of effeminacy, a short upper lip, curved upward like that of a Grecian statue, and slightly shaded by small mustachios of light brown, joined to a profusion of long curled locks of the same colour, which fell down on each side of his face, contributed to form such a countenance as limnera love to paint, and ladies to look upon.

The severity of his character, as well as the higher attributes of undaunted and enterprising valour which even his enemies were compelled to admit, lay concealed under an exterior which seemed adapted to the court or the saloon rather than to the field. The same gentleness and gaiety of expression which reigned in his features seemed to inspire his actions and gestures; and, on the whole, he was generally esteemed, at first sight, rather qualified to be the votary of pleasure than of ambition. But under this soft exterior was hidden a spirit unbounded in daring and in aspiring, yet cautious and prudent as that of Machiavel himself. Profound in politics, and imbued, of course, with that disregard for individual rights which its intrigues usually generate, this leader was cool and collected in danger, fierce and ardent in pursuing success, careless of facing death himself, and ruthless in inflicting it upon others. Such are the characters formed in times of civil discord, when the highest qualities, perverted by party spirit, and inflamed by habitual opposition, are too often combined with vices and excesses which deprive them at once of their merit and of their lustre.

In endeavouring to reply to the polite trifles with which Claverhouse accosted her, Edith showed so much confusion that her grandmother thought it necessary to come to her relief.

"Edith Bellenden," said the old lady, "has, from my retired mode of living, seen so little of those of her own sphere that truly she can hardly frame her speech to suitable answers. A soldier is so rare a sight with us, Colonel Qrahame, that unless it be my young Lord Evandale, we have hardly had an opportunity of receiving a gentleman in uniform. And, now I talk of that excellent young nobleman, may I inquire if I was not to have had the honour of seeing him this morning with the regiment ?"

"Lord Evandale, madam, was on his march with us," answered the leader, "hut I was obliged to detach him, with a small party, to disperse a conventicle of those troublesome scoundrels, who have had the impudence to assemble within five miles of my head-quarters."

"Indeed !" said the old lady ; "that is a height of presumption to which I would have thought no rebellious fanatics would have ventured to aspire. But these are strange times! There is an evil spirit in the land, Colonel Grahame, that excites the vassals of persons of rank to rebel against the very house that holds and feeds them. There was one of my able-bodied men the other day who plainly refused to attend the wappen-scha,w at my bidding. Is there no law for such recusancy, Colonel Grahame?"

"I think I could find cne," said Claverhouse, with great composure, "if your ladyship will inform me of the name and residence of the culprit."

¹His name," said Lady Margaret, "is Cuthbert Headrigg; I can say nothing of his domicile, for ye may weel believe, Colonel Grahame, he did not dwell long in Tillietudlem, but was speedily expelled for his contumacy. I wish the lad no severe bodily injury; but incarceration, or even a few stripes, would be a good example in this neighbourhood. His mother, under whose influence I doubt he acted, is an ancient domestic of this family, which makes me incline to mercy; although," continued the old lady, looking towards the pictures of her husband and her sons, with which the wall was hung, and heaving, at the same time, a deep sigh, "I, Colonel Grahams, have in my ain person but little right to compassionate that stubborn and rebellious generation. They have made me a childless widow, and but for the protection of our sacred sovereign and his gallant soldiers, they would soon deprive me of lands and goods, of hearth and altar. Seven of my tenants, whose joint rent-mail may mount to well nigh a hundred merks, have already refused to pay either cess or rent, and had the assurance to tell my steward that they would acknowledge neither king nor landlord but who should have taken the Covenant."

"I will take a course with them, — that is, with your ladyship's permission," answered Claverhouse; "it would ill become me to neglect the support of lawful authority when it is lodged in such worthy hands as those of Lady Margaret Bellenden. But I must needs say this country grows worse and worse daily, and reduces me to the necessity of taking measures with the recusants that are much more consonant with my duty than with my inclinations. And, speaking of this, I must not forget that I have to thank your ladyship for the hospitality you have been pleased to extend to a party of mine who have brought in a prisoner charged with having resetted¹ the murdering villain, Balfour of Burley."

"The house of Tillietudlem," answered the lady, "hath ever been open to the servants of his Majesty, and I hope that the stones of it will no longer rest on each other when it surceases to be as much at their command as at ours. And this reminds me, Colonel Grahame, that the gentleman who commands the party can hardly be said to be in his proper place in the army, considering whose blood flows in his veins ; and if I might natter myself that anything would be granted to my request, I would presume to entreat that he might be promoted on some favourable opportunity."

¹ Resettled, i. e., received or harboured.

"Your ladyship means Sergeant Francis Stewart, whom we call Bothwell?" said Claverhouse, smiling. "The truth is, he is a little too rough in the country, and has not been uniformly so amenable to discipline as the rules of the service require. But to instruct me how to oblige Lady Margaret Bellenden, is to lay down the law to me. — Bothwell," he continued, addressing the sergeant, who just then appeared at the door, "go kiss Lady Margaret Bellenden's hand, who interests herself in your promotion, and you shall have a commission the first vacancy."

Bothwell went through the salutation in the manner prescribed, but not without evident marks of haughty reluctance, and, when he had done so, said aloud, "To kiss a lady's hand can never disgrace a gentleman; but I would not kiss a man's, save the king's, to be made a general."

"You hear him," said Claverhouse, smiling, "there 's the rock he splits upon ; he cannot forget his pedigree."

"I know, my noble colonel," said Bothwell, in the same tone, "that you will not forget your promise; and then, perhaps you may permit Cornet Stewart to have some recollection of his grandfather, though the Sergeant must forget him."

"Enough of this, sir," said Claverhouse, in the tone of command which was familiar to him ; "and let me know what you came to report to me just now."

"My Lord Evandale and his party have halted on the high-road with some prisoners," said Bothwell.

"My Lord Evandale?" said Lady Margaret. "Surely, Colonel Grahame, you will permit him to honour me with his society, and to take his poor disjune here, especially considering that even his most sacred Majesty did not pass the Tower of Tillietudlem without halting to partake of some refreshment."

As this was the third time in the course of the conversation that Lady Margaret had adverted to this distinguished event, Colonel Grahame, as speedily as politeness would permit, took advantage of the first pause to interrupt the farther progress of the narrative, by saying, "We are already too numerous a party of guests ; but as I know what Lord Evandale will suffer pocking towards Edith] if deprived of the pleasure which we enjoy, I will run the risk of overburdening your ladyship's hospitality.—Bothwell, let Lord Evandale know that Lady Margaret Bellenden requests the honour of his company,"

"And let Harrison take care," added Lady Margaret, "that the people and their horses are suitably seen to."

Edith's heart sprung to her lips during this conversation ; for it instantly occurred to her that, through her influence over Lord Evandale, she might find some means of releasing Morton from his present state of danger, in case her uncle's intercession with Claverhouse should prove ineffectual. At any other time she would have been much averse to exert this influence; for, however iux-perienced in the world, her native delicacy taught her the advantage which a beautiful young woman gives to a young man when she permits him to lay her under an obligation. And she would have been the farther disinclined to request any favour of Lord Evandale, because the voice of the gossips in Clydesdale had, for reasons hereafter to be made known, assigned him to her as a suitor, and because she could not disguise from herself that very little encouragement was necessary to realise conjectures which had hitherto no foundation. This was the more to be dreaded, that, in the case of Lord Evandale's making a formal declaration, he had every chance of being supported by the influence of Lady Margaret and her other friends, and that she would have nothing to oppose to their solicitations and authority, except a predilection, to avow which she knew would be equally dangerous and unavailing. She determined, therefore, to wait the issue of her uncle's intercession, and, should it fail, which she conjectured she should soon learn, either from the looks or language of the open-hearted veteran, she would then, as a last effort, make use in Morton's favour of her interest with Lord Evandale. Her mind did not long remain in suspense on the subject of her uncle's application.

Major Bellenden, who had done the honours of the table, laughing and chatting with the military guests who were at that end of the board, was now, by the conclusion of the repast, at liberty to leave his station, and accordingly took an opportunity to approach Claverhouse, requesting from his niece, at the same time, the honour of a particular introduction. As his name and character were well known, the two military men met with expressions of mutual regard ; and Edith, with a beating heart, saw her aged relative withdraw from the company, together with his new acquaintance, into a recess formed by one of the arched windows of the hall. She watched their conference with eyes almost dazzled by the eagerness of suspense, and, with observation rendered more acute by the internal agony of her mind, could guess, from the pantomimic gestures which accompanied the conversation, the progress and fate of the intercession in behalf of Henry Morton.

The first expression of the countenance of Claverhouse betokened that open and willing courtesy which, ere it requires to know the nature of the favour asked, seems to say how happy the party will be to confer an obligation on the suppliant. But as the conversation proceeded, the brow of that officer became darker and more severe, and his features, though still retaining the expression of the most perfect politeness, assumed, at least to Edith's terrified imagination, a harsh and inexorable character. His lip was now compressed as if with impatience; now curled slightly upward, as if in civil contempt of the arguments urged by Major Bellenden. The language of her uncle, as far as expressed in his manner, appeared to be that of earnest intercession, urged with all the affectionate simplicity of his character, as well as with the weight which his age and reputation entitled him to use. But it seemed to have little impression upon Colonel Grahame, who soon changed his posture, as if about to cut short the major's importunity, and to break up their conference with a courtly expression of regret, calculated to accompany a positive refusal of the request solicited. This movement brought them so near Edith that she could distinctly hear Claverhouse say, "It cannot be, Major Bellenden; lenity, in his case, is altogether beyond the bounds of my commission, though in anything else I am heartily desirous to oblige you. — And here comes Evandale with news, as I think. What tidings do you bring us, Evandale?" he continued, addressing the young lord, who now entered in complete uniform, but with his dress disordered, and his boots spattered, as if by riding hard.

"Unpleasant news, sir," was his reply. "A large body of Whigs are in arms among the hills, and have broken out into actual rebellion. They have publicly burnt the Act of Supremacy, that which established episcopacy, that for observing the martyrdom of Charles L, and some others, and have declared their intention to remain together in arms for furthering the covenanted work of reformation."

This unexpected intelligence struck a sudden and painful surprise into the minds of all who heard it, excepting Claverhouse.

"Unpleasant news call you them?" replied Colonel Grahams, his dark eyes flashing fire; "they are the beat I have heard these six months. Now that the scoundrels are drawn into a body, we will make short work with them. When the adder crawls into daylight," he added, striking the heel of his boot upon the floor, as if in the act of crushing a noxious reptile, "I Can trample him to death; he is only safe when he remains lurking in his den or morass. — Where are these knaves?" he continued! addressing Lord Evandale.

"About ten miles off among the mountains, at a place called Loudon-hill," was the young nobleman's reply. "I dispersed the conventicle against which you sent me, and made prisoner an old trumpeter of rebellion,—an intercommuned minister, that is to say,—who was in the act of exhorting his hearers to rise and be doing in the good cause, as well as one or two of his hearers who seemed to be particularly insolent; and from some country people and scouts I learned what I now tell you,"

"What may be their strength?" asked his commander.

"Probably a thousand men; but accounts differ widely."

¹¹ Then," said Claverhouse, "it is time for us to be up, and be doing also.—Bothwell, bid them sound to horse."

Bothwell, who, like the war-horse of Scripture, snuffed the battle afar off, hastened to give orders to six negroes, in white dresses richly laced, and having massive silver collars and armlets. These sable functionaries acted as trumpeters, and speedily made the castle and the woods around it ring with their summons.

"Must you then leave us?" said Lady Margaret, her heart sinking under recollection of former unhappy times; "had ye not better send to learn the force of the rebels? Oh, how many a fair face hae I heard these fearfu¹ sounds call away frae the Tower of Tillietudlem, that my auld een were ne'er to see return to it!"

"It is impossible for me to stop," said Claverhouse; "there are rogues enough in this country to make the rebels five times their strength, if they are not checked at once." •

"Many," said Evandale, "are flocking to them already, and they give out that they expect a strong body of the indulged Presbyterians, headed by young Milnwood, as they call him, the son of the famous old Roundhead, Colonel Silas Morton."

This speech produced a very different effect upon the hearers. Edith almost sunk from her seat with terror, while Claverhouse darted a glance of sarcastic triumph at Major Bellenden, which seemed to imply, — "You see what are the principles of the young man you are pleading for."

"It's a lie, — it's a d—d lie of these rascally fanatics," said the major, hastily. "I will answer for Henry Morton as I would for my own son. He is a lad of as good church-principles as any gentleman in the Life Guards. I mean no offence to any one. He has gone to church service with me fifty times, and I never heard him miss one of the responses in my life. Edith Bellenden can bear witness to it as well as I. He always read on the same prayer-book with her, and could look out the lessons as well as the curate himself. Call him up; let him Ije heard for himself."

"There can be no harm in that," said Claverhouse, "whether he be innocent or guilty. — Major Allan," he said, turning to the officer next in command, "take a guide, and lead the regiment forward to Loudon-hill by the best and shortest road. Move steadily, and do not let the men blow the horses; Lord Evandale and I will overtake you in a quarter of an hour. Leave Bothwell with a party to bring up the prisoners."

Allan bowed, and left the apartment with all the officers, excepting Claverhouse and the young nobleman. In a few minutes the sound of the military music and the clashing of hoofs announced that the horsemen were leaving the castle. The sounds were presently heard only at intervals, and soon died away entirely.

While Claverhouse endeavoured to soothe the terrors of Lady Margaret and to reconcile the veteran major to his opinion of Morton, Evandale, getting the better of that conscious shyness which renders an ingenuous youth diffident in approaching the object of his affections, drew near to Miss Bellenden, and accosted her in a tone of mingled respect and interest.

"We are to leave you," he said, taking her hand, which he pressed with much emotion,— "to leave you for a scene which is not without its dangers. Farewell, dear Miss Bellenden, — let me say for the first, and perhaps the last time, dear Edith ! We part in circumstances so singular as may excuse some solemnity in bidding farewell to one whom I have known so long, and whom I—respect so highly."

The manner, differing from the words, seemed to express a feeling much deeper and more agitating than was conveyed in the phrase he made use of. It was not in woman to be utterly insensible to his modest and deep-felt expression of tenderness. Although borne down by the misfortunes and imminent danger of the man she loved, Edith was touched by the hopeless and reverential passion of the gallant youth, who now took leave of her to rush into dangers of no ordinary description.

"I hope — I sincerely trust," she said, "there is no danger. I hope there is no occasion for this solemn ceremonial; that these hasty insurgents will be dispersed rather by fear than force; and that Lord Evandale will speedily return to be what he must always be, the dear and valued friend of all in this castle."

"Of all" he repeated, with a melancholy emphasis upon the word. "But be it so : whatever is near you is dear and valued to me, and I value their approbation accordingly. Of our success I am not sanguine. Our numbers are so few that I dare not hope for so speedy, so bloodless, or so safe an end of this unhappy disturbance. These men are enthusiastic, resolute, and desperate, and have leaders not altogether unskilled in military matters. I cannot help thinking that the impetuosity of our colonel is hurrying us against them rather prematurely. But there are few that have less reason to shun danger than I have."

Edith had now the opportunity she wished to bespeak the young nobleman's intercession and protection for Henry Morton, and it seemed the only remaining channel of interest by which he could be rescued from impending destruction. Yet she felt at that moment as if, in doing so, she was abusing the partiality and confidence of the lover, whose heart was as open before her as if his tongue had made an express declaration. Could she with honour engage Lord Evandale in the service of a rival; or could she with prudence make him any request, or lay herself under any obligation to him, without affording ground for hopes which she could never realize? But the moment was too urgent for hesitation, or even for those explanations with which her request might otherwis' have been qualified.

"I will but dispose of this young fellow," said Claverhouse, from the other side of the hall, "and then, Lord Evandale, —I am sorry to interrupt again your conversation,—but then we must mount.—Bothwell, why do not you bring up the prisoner 1 and, hark ye, let two files load their carabines."

In these words, Edith conceived she heard the death-warrant of her lover. She instantly broke through the restraint which had hitherto kept her silent.

"My Lord Evandale," she said, "this young gentleman is a particular friend of my uncle's, — your interest must be great with your colonel, — let me request your intercession in his favour; it will confer on my uncle a lasting obligation."

"You overrate my interest, Miss Bellenden," said Lord Evandale; "I have been often unsuccessful in such applications, when I have made them on the mere score of humanity."

"Yet try once again for my uncle's sake,"

"And why not for your own?" said Lord Evandale. "Will you not allow me to think I am obliging you personally in this matter? Are you so diffident of an old friend that you will not allow him even the satisfaction of thinking that he is gratifying your wishes?"

"Surely, surely," replied Edith; "you will oblige me infinitely — I am interested in the young gentleman on my uncle's account. Lose no time, for God's sake!"

She became bolder and more urgent in her entreaties, for she heard the steps of the soldiers who were entering with their prisoner.

"By Heaven, then," said Evandale, "he shall not die, if I should die in his place ! But will not you," he said, resuming the hand, which in the hurry of her spirits she had not courage to withdraw, "will not you grant me one suit, in return for my zeal in your service ?"

"Anything you can ask, my Lord Evandale, that sisterly affection can give."

"And is this all," he continued, — "all you can grant to my affection living, or my memory when dead?"

"Do not speak thus, my lord," said Edith; "you distress me, and do injustice to yourself. There is no friend I esteem more highly, or to whom I would more readily grant every mark of regard, — providing — But—"

A deep sigh made her turn her head suddenly, ere she had well uttered the last word; and as she hesitated how to frame the exception with which she meant to close the sentence, she became instantly aware she had been overheard by Morton, who, heavily ironed and guarded by soldiers, was now passing behind her in order to be presented to Claverhouse. As their eyes met each other, the sad and reproachful expression of Morton's glance seemed to imply that he had partially heard, and altogether misinterpreted, the conversation which had just passed. There wanted but this to complete Edith's distress and confusion. Her blood, which rushed to her brow, made a sudden revulsion to her heart, and left her as pale as death. This change did not escape the attention of Evaidale, whose quick glance easily discovered that there was between the prisoner and the object of his own attachment some singular and uncommon connection. He resigned the hand of Miss Bellenden, again surveyed the prisoner with more attention, again looked at Edith, and plainly observed the confusion which she could no longer conceal.

"This," he said, after a moment's gloomy silence, "is, I believe, the young gentleman who gained the prize at the shooting-match."

"I am not sure," hesitated Edith; "yet — I rather think not," scarce knowing what she replied.

"It is he," said Evandale, decidedly; "I know him well. A victor," he continued, somewhat haughtily, "ought to have interested a fair spectator more deeply."

He then turned from Edith, and advancing towards the table at which Claverhouse now placed himself, stood at a little distance, resting on his sheathed broadsword, a silent, but not an unconcerned, spectator of that which passed.

CHAPTEK XIII.

Oh, my lord, beware of jaalousy!

Othello.

To explain the deep effect which the few broken passages of the conversation we have detailed made upon the unfortunate prisoner by whom they were overheard, it is necessary to say something of his previous state of mind, and of the origin of his acquaintance with Edith.

Henry Morton was one of those gifted characters which possess a force of talent unsuspected by the owner himself. He had inherited from his father an undaunted courage, and a firm and uncompromising detestation of oppression, whether in politics or religion. But his enthusiasm was unsullied by fanatic zeal, and unleavened by the sourness of the puritanical spirit. From these his mind had been freed, partly by the active exertions of his own excellent understanding, partly by frequent and long visits at Major Belleriden's, where he had an opportunity of meeting with many guests whose conversation taught him that goodness and worth were not limited to those of any single form of religious observance.

The base parsimony of his uncle had thrown many obstacles in the way of his education ; but he had so far improved the opportunities which offered themselves that his instructors as well as his friends were surprised at his progress under such disadvantages. Still, however, the current of his soul was frozen by a sense of dependence, of poverty, above all, of an imperfect and limited education. These feelings impressed him with a diffidence and reserve which effectually concealed from all but very intimate friends the extent of talent and the firmness of character which we have stated him to be possessed of. The circumstances of the times had added to this reserve an air of indecision and of indifference; for, being attached to neither of the factions which divided the kingdom, he passed for dull, insensible, and uninfluenced by the feeling of religion or of patriotism. No conclusion, however, could be more unjust; and the reasons of the neutrality which he had hitherto professed had root in very different and most praiseworthy motives. He had formed few congenial ties with those who were the objects of persecution, and was disgusted alike by their narrow-minded and selfish party-spirit, their gloomy fanaticism, their abhorrent condemnation of all elegant studies or innocent exercises, and the envenomed rancour of their political hatred. But his mind was still more revolted by the tyrannical and oppressive conduct of the Government, the misrule, licence, and brutality of the soldiery, the executions on the scaffold, the slaughters in the open field, the free quarters and exactions imposed by military law, which placed the lives and fortunes of a free people on a level with Asiatic slaves. Condemning, therefore, each party as its excesses fell under his eyes, disgusted with the sight of evils which he had no means of alleviating, and hearing alternate complaints and exultations with which he could not sympathise, ho would long ere this have left Scotland, had it not been for his attachment to Edith Bellenden.

The earlier meetings of these young people had been at Charnwood, when Major Bellenden, who was as free from suspicion on such occasions as Uncle Toby himself, had encouraged their keeping each other constant company, without entertaining any apprehension of the natural consequences. Love, as usual in such cases, borrowed the name of Friendship, used her language, and claimed her privileges. When Edith Bellenden was recalled to her mother's castle, it was astonishing by what singular and recurring accidents she often met young Morton in her sequestered walks, especially considering the distance of their places of abode. Yet it somehow happened that she never expressed the surprise which the frequency of these rencontres ought naturally to have excited, and that their intercourse assumed gradually a more delicate character, and their meetings began to wear the air of appointments. Books, drawings, letters, were exchanged between them, and every trifling commission, given or executed, gave rise to a new correspondence. Love, indeed, was not yet mentioned between them by name, but each knew the situation of their own bosom, and could not but guess at that of the other. Unable to desist from an intercourse which possessed such charms for both, yet trembling for its too probable consequences, it had been continued without specific explanation until now, when fate appeared to have taken the conclusion into its own hands.

It followed,- as a consequence of this state of things, as well as of the diffidence of Morton's disposition at this period, that his confidence in Edith's return of his affection had its occasional cold fits. Her situation was in every respect so superior to his own, her worth so eminent, her accomplishments so many, her face so beautiful, and her manners so bewitching, that he could not but entertain fears that some suitor more favoured than himself by fortune, and more acceptable to Edith's family than he durst hope to be, might step in between him and the object of his affections. Common rumour had raised up such a rival in Lord Evandale, whom birth, fortune, connections, and political principles, as well as his frequent visits at Tillietudlfem and his attendance upon Lady Bellenden and her niece at all public places, naturally pointed out as a candidate for her favour. It frequently and inevitably happened that engagements to which Lord Evandale was a party, interfered with the meeting of the lovers, and Henry could not but mark that Edith either studiously avoided speaking of the young nobleman, or did so with obvious reserve and hesitation.

These symptoms, which, in fact, arose from the delicacy of her own feelings towards Morton himself, were misconstrued by his diffident temper, and the jealousy which they excited was fermented by the occasional observations of Jenny Dennison. This true-bred serving-damsel was, in her own person, a complete country coquette, and when she had no opportunity of teasing her own lovers, used to take some occasional opportunity to torment her young lady's. This arose from no ill-will to Henry Morton, who, both on her mistress's account and his own handsome form and countenance, stood high in her esteem. But then Lord Evandale was also handsome; he was liberal far beyond what Morton's means could afford, and he was a lord, moreover; and if Miss Edith Bellenden should accept his hand, she would become a baron's lady, and, what was more, little Jenny Dennison, whom the awful housekeeper at Tilhetudlem huffed about at her pleasure, would be then Mrs. Dennison, Lady Evandale's own woman, or perhaps her ladyship's lady-in-waiting. The impartiality of Jenny Dennison, therefore, did not, like that of Mrs. Quickly, extend to a wish that both the handsome suitors could wed her young lady; for it must be owned that the scale of her regard was depressed in favour of Lord Evandale, and her wishes in his favour took many shapes extremely tormenting to Morton,—being now expressed as a friendly caution, now as an article of intelligence, and anon as a merry jest, but always tending to confirm the idea that, sooner or later, his romantic intercourse with her young mistress must have a close, and that Edith Bellenden would, in spite of summer walks beneath the greenwood tree, exchange of verses, of drawings, and of books, end in becoming Lady Evandale.

These hints coincided so exactly with the very point of his own suspicions and fears that Morton was not long of feeling that jealousy which every one has felt who has truly loved, but to which those are most liable whose love is crossed by the want of friends' consent, or some other envious impediment of fortune. Edith herself, unwittingly, and in the generosity of her own frank nature, contributed to the error into which her lover was in danger of falling. Their conversation once chanced to turn upon some late excesses committed by the soldiery on an occasion when it was said (inaccurately, however) that the party was commanded by Lord Evandale. Edith, as true in friendship as in love, was somewhat hurt at the severe strictures which escaped from Morton on this occasion, and which, perhaps, were not the less strongly expressed on account of their supposed rivalry. She entered into Lord Evandale's defence with such spirit as hurt Morton to the very soul, and afforded no small delight to Jenny Dennison, the usual companion of their walks. Edith perceived her error, and endeavoured to remedy it; but the impression was not so easily erased, and it had no small effect "in inducing her lover to form that resolution of going abroad which was disappointed in the manner we have already mentioned.

The visit which he received from Edith during his confinement, the deep and devoted interest which she had expressed in his fate, ought of themselves to have dispelled his suspicions; yet, ingenious in tormenting himself, even this he thought might be imputed to anxious friendship, or, at most, to a temporary partiality, which would probably soon give way to circumstances, the entreaties of her friends, the authority of Lady Margaret, and the assiduities of Lord Evandale.

"And to what do I owe it," he said, "that I cannot stand up like a man, and plead my interest in her ere I am thus cheated out of it, — to what, but to the all-pervading and accursed tyranny which afflicts at once our bodies, souls, estates, and affections? And is it to one of the pensioned cut-throats of this oppressive Government that I must yield my pretensions to Edith Bellenden? I will not, by Heaven ! It is a just punishment on me for being dead to public wrongs that they have visited me with their injuries in a point where they can be least brooked or borne."

As these stormy resolutions boiled in his bosom, and while he ran over the various kinds of insult and injury which he had sustained in his own cause and in that of his country, Bothwell entered the tower, followed by two dragoons, one of whom carried handcuffs.

"You must follow me, young man," said he; "but first we must put you in trim."

"In trim!" said Morton. "What do you mean?"

"Why, we must put on these rough bracelets, I durst nob—nay, d—n it, I durst do anything—but I would not for three hours' plunder of a stormed town bring a Whig before my colonel without his being ironed. Come, come, young man, don't look sulky about it."

He advanced to put on the irons; but, seizing the oaken seat upon which he had rested, Morton threatened to dash out the brains of the first who should approach him.

"I could manage you in a moment, my youngster," said Bothwell, "but I had rather you would strike sail quietly."

Here indeed he spoke the truth, not from either fear or reluctance to adopt force, but because he dreaded the consequence of a noisy scuffle, through which it might probably be discovered that he had, contrary to express orders, suffered his prisoner to pass the night without being properly secured.

"You had better be prudent," he continued, in a tone which he meant to be conciliatory, "and don't spoil your own sport. They say here in the castle that Lady Margaret's niece is immediately to marry our young captain, Lord Evandale. I saw them close together in the hall yonder, and I heard her ask him to intercede for your pardon. She looked so devilish handsome and kind upon him that on my Boul— But what the devil's the matter with you? You are as pale as a sheet,—will you have some brandy?"

"Miss Bellenden ask my life of Lord Evandale?" said the prisoner, faintly.

"Ay, ay; there's no friend like the women,—their interest carries all in court and camp. Come, you are reasonable now. Ay, I thought you would come round."

Here he employed himself in putting on the fetters, against which Morton, thunderstruck by this intelligence, no longer offered the least resistance.

"My life begged of him, and by her! — ay — ay — put on the irons; my limbs shall not refuse to bear what has entered into my very soul. My life begged by Edith, and begged of Evandale I"

"Ay, and he has power to grant it too," said Bothwell. "He can do more with the colonel than any man in the regiment."

And as he spoke, he and his party led their prisoner towards the hall. In passing behind the seat of Edith, the unfortunate prisoner heard enough, as he conceived, of the broken expressions which passed between Edith and Lord Evandale, to confirm all that the soldier had told him. That moment made a singular and instantaneous revolution in his character. The depth of despair to which his love and fortunes were reduced, the peril in which his life appeared to stand, the transference of Edith's affections, her intercession in his favour, which rendered her fickleness yet more galling, seemed to destroy every feeling for which he had hitherto lived, but, at the same time, awakened those which had hitherto been smothered by passions more gentle, though more selfish. Desperate himself, he determined to support the rights of his country, insulted in his person. His character was for the moment as effectually changed as the appearance of a villa, which, from being the abode of domestic quiet and happiness, is, by the sudden intrusion of an armed force, converted into a formidable post of defence.

We have already said that he cast upon Edith one glance in which reproach was mingled with sorrow, as if to bid her farewell for ever; his next motion was to walk firmly to the table at which Colonel Grahame was seated.

"By what right is it, sir," said he, firmly, and without waiting till he was questioned,— "by what right is it that these soldiers have dragged me from my family, and put fetters on the limbs of a free man?"

"By my commands," answered Claverhouse; "and I now lay my commands on you to be silent and hear my questions."

"I will not," replied Morton, in a determined tone, while his boldness seemed to electrify all around him. "I will know whether I am in lawful custody, and before a civil magistrate, ere the charter of my country shall be forfeited in my person."

"A pretty springald this, upon my honour!" said Claverhouse.

"Are you mad?" said Major Bellenden to his young friend. "For God's sake, Henry Morton," he continued, in a tone between rebuke and entreaty, "remember you are speaking to one of his Majesty's officers high in the service."

"It is for that very reason, sir," returned Henry, firmly, "that I desire to know what right he has to detain me without a legal warrant. Were he a civil officer of the law I should know my duty was submission."

"Your friend, here," said Claverhouse to the veteran, coolly, "is one of those scrupulous gentlemen, who, like the madman in the play, will not tie his cravat without the warrant of Mr. Justice Overdo(n), but I will let him see, before we part, that my shoulder-knot is as legal a badge of authority as the mace of the justiciary. So, waving this discussion, you will be pleased, young man, to -tell me directly when you saw Balfour of Burley."

"As I know no right you have to ask such a question," replied Morton, "I decline replying to it."

"You confessed to my sergeant," said Claverhouse, "that you saw and entertained him, knowing him to be an intercommuned traitor; why are you not so frank with me?"

"Because," replied the prisoner, "I presume you are, from education, taught to understand the rights upon which you seem disposed to trample; and I am willing you should be aware there are yet Scotsmen who can assert the liberties of Scotland."

"And these supposed rights you would vindicate with your sword, I presume?" said Colonel Grahame.

"Were I armed as you are, and we were alone upon a hill-side, you should not ask me the question twice."

"It is quite enough," answered Claverhouse, calmly; "your language corresponds with all I have heard of you. But you are the son of a soldier, though a rebellious one, and you shall not die the death of a dog; I will save you that indignity."

"Die in what manner I may," replied Morton, "I will die like the son of a brave man; and the ignominy you mention shall remain with those who shed innocent blood."

"Make your peace, then, with Heaven, in five minutes' space. — Bothwell, lead him down to the court-yard, and draw up your party."

The appalling nature of this conversation, and of its result, struck the silence of horror into all but the speakers. But now those who stood round broke forth into clamour and expostulation. Old Lady Margaret, who, with all the prejudices of rank and party, had not laid aside the feelings of her sex, was loud in her intercession.

"Oh, Coloiifil Grahame," she exclaimed, "spare his young blood! Leave him to the law; do not repay my hospitality by shedding men's blood on the threshold of my doors!"

¹¹Colonel Grahame," said Major Bellenden, "you must answer this violence. Don't think, though I am old and feckless, that my friend's son shall be murdered before my eyes with impunity. I can find friends that shall make you answer it."

"Be satisfied, Major Bellenden, I will answer it," replied Claverhouse, totally unmoved; "and you, madam, might spare me the pain of resisting this passionate intercession for a traitor, when you consider the noble blood your own house has lost by such as he is."

"Colonel Grahame," answered the lady, her aged frame-trembling with anxiety, "I leave vengeance to God, who calls it his own. The shedding of this young man's blood will not call back the lives that were dear to me; and how can it comfort me to think that there has maybe been another widowed mother made childless, like mysell, by a deed done at my very door-stane !"

"This is stark madness," said Claverhouse; "I must do my duty to Church and State. Here are a thousand villains hard hy in open rebellion, and you ask me to pardon a young fanatic who is enough of himself to set a whole kingdom in a blaze! It cannot be. — Remove him, Bothwell."

She who was most interested in this dreadful decision had twice strove to speak, but her voice had totally failed her; her mind refused to suggest words, and her tongue to utter them. She now sprung up and attempted to rush forward, but her strength gave way, and she would have fallen flat upon the pavement, had she not been caught by her attendant.

"Help!" cried Jenny, — "help, for God's sake! my young lady is dying."

At this exclamation, Evandale, who, during the preceding part of the scene, had stood motionless, leaning upon his sword, now stepped forward, and said to his commanding officer, "Colonel Grahame, before proceeding in this matter, will you speak a word with me in private?"

Claverhouse looked surprised, but instantly rose and withdrew with the young nobleman into a recess, where the following brief dialogue passed between them: —

"I think I need not remind you, Colonel, that when our family interest was of service to you last year in that affair in the privy-council, you considered yourself as laid under some obligation to us?"

"Certainly, my dear Evandale," answered Claverhouse; "I am not a man who forgets such debts; you will delight me by showing how I can evince my gratitude."

"I will hold the debt cancelled," said Lord Evandale, "if you will spare this young man's life."

"Evandale," replied Grahame, in great surprise, "you are mad,— absolutely mad; what interest can you have in this young spawn of an old Roundhead? His father was positively the most dangerous man in all Scotland,— cool, resolute, soldierly, and inflexible in his cursed principles. His son seems his very model; you cannot conceive the mischief he may do. I know mankind, Evandale; were he an insignificant, fanatical country booby, do you think I would have refused such a trifle as his life to Lady Margaret and this family? But this is a lad of fire, zeal, and education; and these knaves want but such a leader to direct their blind, enthusiastic hardiness. I mention this, not as refusing your request, but to make you fully aware of the possible consequences. I will never evade a promise, or refuse to return an obligation; if you ask his life, he shall have it."

"Keep him close prisoner," answered Evandale, "but do not be surprised if I persist in requesting you will not put him to death. I have most urgent reasons for what I ask."

"Be it so then," replied Grahame. "But, young man, should you wish in your future life to rise to eminence in the service of your king and country, let it be your first task to subject to the public interest, and to the discharge of your duty, your private passions, affections, and feelings. These are not times to sacrifice to the dotage of greybeards, or the tears of silly women, the measures of salutary severity which the dangers around compel us to adopt. And remember that if I now yield this point, in compliance with your urgency, my present concession must exempt me from future solicitations of the same nature."

He then stepped forward to the table, and bent his eyes keenly on Morton, as if to observe what effect the pause of awful suspense between death and life, which seemed to freeze the bystanders with horror, would produce upon the prisoner himself. Morton maintained a degree of firmness which nothing but a mind that had nothing left upon earth to love or to hope, could have supported at such a crisis.

"You see him?" said Claverhouse, in a half whisper to Lord Evandale. "He is tottering on the verge between time and eternity,— a situation more appalling than the most hideous certainty; yet his is the only cheek unblenched, the only eye that is calm, the only heart that keeps its usual time, the only nerves that are not quivering. Look at him well, Evandale. If that man shall ever come to head an army of rebels, you will have much to answer for on account of this morning's work." He then said aloud,¹¹ "Young man, your life is for the present safe, through the intercession of your friends. — Remove him, Bothwell, and let him be properly guarded, and brought along with the other prisoners."

"If my life," said Morton, stung with the idea that he owed his respite to the intercession of a favoured rival, — "if my life be granted at Lord Evandale's request—"

"Take the prisoner away, Bothwell," said Colonel Grahame, interrupting him; "I have neither time to make nor to hear fine speeches."

Bothwell forced off Morton, saying, as he conducted him into the court-yard, "Have you three lives in your pocket, besides the one in your body, my lad, that you can afford to let your tongue run away with them at this rate? Come, come, I'll take care to keep you out of the colonel's way; for, egad, you will not be five minutes with him before the next tree or the next ditch will be the woyd. So, come along to your companions in bondage."

Thus speaking, the sergeant, who, in his rude manner, did not altogether want sympathy for a gallant young man, hurried Morton down to the court-yard, where three other prisoners (two men and a woman), who had been taken by Lord Evandale, remained under an escort of dragoons.

Meantime, Claverhouse took his leave of Lady Margaret. But it was difficult for the good lady to forgive his neglect of her intercession.

"I have thought till now," she said, "that the Tower of Tillietudlem might have been a place of succour to those that are ready to perish, even if they werena sae deserving as they should have been; but I see auld fruit has little savour,—our soffering and our services have been of an ancient date."

"They are never to be forgotten by me, let me assure your ladyship,"⁷ said Claverhouse. "Nothing but what seemed my sacred duty could make me; hesitate to grant a favour requested by you and the major. Come, my good lady, let me hear you say you have forgiven me, and, as I return to-night, I will bring a drove of two hundred Whigs with me, and pardon fifty head of them for your sake."

"I shall be happy to hear of your success, Colonel," said Major Itellenden; "but take an old soldier's advice, and spare blood when battle's over,—and once more let me request to enter bail for young Morton,"

" We will settle that when I return," said Claverhouse. " Meanwhile, be assured his life shall be safe."

During this conversation, Evandale looked anxiously around for Edith; but the precaution of Jenny Dennison had occasioned her mistress being transported to her own apartment.

Slowly and heavily he obeyed the impatient summons of Claverhouse, who, after taking a courteous leave of Lady Margaret and the major, had hastened to the court-yard. The prisoners with their guard were already on their march, and the officers with their escort mounted and followed. All pressed forward to overtake the main body, as it was supposed they would come in sight of the enemy in little more than two hours.

CHAPTER XIV.

My hounds may a' riu masterless,
My hawks may fly frae tree to tree,
My lord may grip my vassal lands,
For there again maun I never be '

Old Ballad.

WE left Morton, along with three companions in captivity, travelling in the custody of a small body of soldiers, who formed the rear-guard of the column under the command of Claverhouse, and were immediately under the charge of Sergeant Bothwell. Their route lay towards the hills in which the insurgent Presbyterians were reported to be in arms. They had not prosecuted their march a quarter of a mile ere Claverhouse and Evandale galloped past them, followed by their orderly-men, in order to take their proper places in the column which preceded them. No sooner were they past than Bothwell halted the body which he commanded, and disencumbered Morton of his irons.

"King's blood must keep word," said the dragoon "I promised you should be civilly treated as far as rested with me.—Here, Corporal Inglis, let this gentleman ride alongside of the other young fellow who is prisoner; and you may permit them to converse together at their pleasure, under their breath, but take care they are guarded by two files with loaded carabines. If they attempt an escape, blow their brains out. — You cannot call that using you uncivilly," he continued, addressing himself to Morton,— "it's the rules of war, you know.—And, Inglis, couple up the parson and the old woman; they are fittest company for each other, d—n me : a single file may guard them well enough. If they speak a word of cant or fanatical nonsense, let them have a strapping with a shoulder-belt. There^fs some hope of choking a silenced parson; if he is not allowed to hold forth, his own treason will burst him."

Having made this arrangement, Bothwell placed himself at the head of the party, and Inglis, with six dragoons, brought up the rear. The whole then set forward at a trot, with the purpose of overtaking the main body of the regiment.

Morton, overwhelmed with a complication of feelings, was totally indifferent to the various arrangements made for his secure custody, and even to the relief afforded him by his release from the fetters. He experienced that blank and waste of the heart which follows the hurricane of passion, and, no longer supported by the pride and conscious rectitude which dictated his answers to Claverhouse, he surveyed with deep dejection the glades through which he travelled, each turning of which had something to remind him of past happiness and disappointed love. The eminence which they now ascended was that from which he used first and last to behold the ancient Tower when approaching or retiring from it; and, it is needless to add, that there he was wont to pause, and gaze with a lover's delight on the battlements, which, rising at a distance out of the lofty wood, indicated the dwelling of her whom he either hoped soon to meet, or had recently parted from. Instinctively he turned his head back to take a last look of a scene formerly so dear to him, and no less instinctively he heaved a deep sigh. It was echoed by a loud groan from his companion in misfortune, whose eyes, moved, perchance, by similar reflections, had taken the same direction. This indication of sympathy on the part of the captive was uttered in a tone more coarse than sentimental; it was, however, the expression of a grieved spirit, and so far corresponded with the sigh of Morton. In turning their heads their eyes met, and Morton recognised the stolid countenance of Cuddie Headngg, bearing a rueful expression, in which sorrow for his own lot was mixed with sympathy for the situation of his companion.

"Heh, sirs !" was the expression of the ci-devant ploughman of the mains of Tillietudlem, "it's an unco thing that decent folk should be harled through the country this gate, as if they were a world's wonder."

"I am sorry to see you here, Cuddie," said Morton, who, even in his own distress, did not lose feeling for that of others.

"And sae am I, Mr. Henry," answered Cuddie, "baith for mysell and you; but neither of our sorrows will do muckle gude that I can see. To be sure, for me," continued the captive agriculturist, relieving his heart by talking, though he well knew it was to little purpose, — "to be sure, for my part, I hae nae right to be here ava', for I never did nor said a word against either king or curate; but my mither, puir body, couldna bauld the auld tongue-o' her, and we maun baith pay for't, it's like."

"Your mother is their prisoner likewise?" said Morton, hardly knowing what he said.

"In troth is she, riding ahint ye there like a bride, " that auld carle o' a minister that they ca' Gabriel Kettledrummle, — Deil that he had been in the inside of a drum or a kettle either, for my share o' him! Ye see, we were nae sooner chased out o' the doors o' Milnwood, and your uncle and the housekeeper banging them to arid barring them ahint us, as if we had had the plague on our bodies, than I says to my mother, ' What are we to do neist ? for every hole and bore in the country will be steekit against us, now that ye hae affronted rny auld leddy, and gar't the troopers tak up young Milnwood,' Sae she says to me, ' Binna cast down, but gird yoursell up to the great task o' the day, and gie your testimony like a man upon the mount o' the Covenant.'¹"

"And so I suppose you went to a conventicle ?" said Morton.

"Ye sail hear," continued Cuddie. "Aweel, I kendna muckle better what to do, sae I e'en gaed " her to an auld daft carline like hersell, and we got some water-broo and bannocks; and many a weary grace they said, and mony a psalm they sang, or they wad let me win to, for I was amaisht famished wi' vexation. Aweel, they had me up in the grey o' the morning, and I behoved to whig awa wi' them, reason or nane, to a great gathering o' their folk at the Miry-sikes; and there this chield, Gabriel Kettledrummle, was blasting awa to them on the hill-side about lifting up their testimony, nae doubt, and ganging down to the battle of Roman Gilead, or some sic place. Eh, Mr. Henry ! but the carle gae them a screed o' doctrine! Ye might had heard him a mile down the wind. He routed like a cow in a fremd loaning. — Weel, thinks I, there's nae place in this country they ca' Roman Gilead; it will be some gate in the west muirlands; and or we win there I "I see to slip awa wi' this mither o' mine, for I winna rin my neck into a tether for ony Kettledruinmle in the country side. Aweel," continued Cuddie, relieving himself by detailing his misfortunes, without being scrupulous concerning the degree of attention which his companion bestowed on his narrative, "just as I was wearying for the tail of the preaching, cam word that the dragoons were upon us. Some ran, and some cried, 'Stand!' and some cried, 'Down " the Philistines!' I was at my mither to get her awa sting and ling or the red-coats cam up; but I might as weel hae tried to drive our auld fore-a-hand ox without the goad,—deil a step wad she budge. Weel, after a', the cleugh we were in was strait, and the mist cam thick, and there was good hope the dragoons wad hae missed us if we could hae held our tongues; but, as if auld Kettledrummle himsell hadna made din eneugh to waken the very dead, they behoved a' to skirl up a psalm that ye wad hae heard as far as Lanrick ! Aweel, to mak a lang tale short, up cam my young Lord Evandale, skelping as fast as his horse could trot, and twenty red-coats at his back. Twa or three chields wad needs fight, wi' the pistol and the whinger in the tae hand, and the Bible in the tother, and they got their crouns weel cloured; but there wasna muckle skaith dune, for Evandale aye cried to scatter us, but to spare life."

"And did you not resist?" said Morton, who probably felt, that, at that moment, he himself would have encountered Lord Evandale on much slighter grounds.

"Na, truly," answered Cuddie, "I keepit aye before the auld woman, and cried for mercy to life and limb; but twa o' the red-coats cam up, and ane " them was gaun to strike my mither wi' the side o' his broadsword. So I got up my kebbie at them, and said I wad gie them as gude. Weel, they turned on me, and clinked at me wi' their swords, and I garr'd my hand keep my head as weel as I could till Lord Evandale came up, and then I cried out I was a servant at Tillietudlem, —ye ken yourself he was aye judged to hae a look after the young leddy; and he bade me fling down my kent, and sae me and my mither yielded ousells prisoners. I'm thinking we wad hae been letten slip awa, but Kettledrummle was taen near us; for Andrew Wilson's naig that he was riding on had been a dragoon lang syne, and the sairer Kettledrummle spurred to win awa, the readier the dour beast ran to the dragoons when he saw them draw up. Aweel, when my mother and him forgathered, they set till the sodgers, and I think they gae them their kale through the reek! Bastards " the hure " Babylon was the best words in their wame. Sae then the kiln was in a bleeze again, and they brought us " three on " them to mak us an example, as they ca't."

" It is most infamous and intolerable oppression !" said Morton, half speaking to himself; " here is a poor peaceable fellow, whose only motive for joining the conventicle was a sense of filial piety, and he is chained up like a thief or murderer, and likely to die the death of one, but without the privilege of a formal trial, which our laws indulge to the worst malefactor! Even to witness such tyranny, and still more to suffer under it, is enough to make the blood of the tamest slave boil within him."

"To be sure," said Cuddie, hearing, and partly understanding, what had broken from Morton in resentment of his injuries, "it is no right to speak evil o' dignities, — my auld leddy aye said that, as nae doubt she had a gude right to do, being in a place o' dignity hersell; and troth I listened to her very patiently, for she aye ordered a dram, or a sowp kale, or something to us, after she had gien us a hearing on our duties. But deil a dram, or kale, or onything else—no sae muckle as a cup " cauld water — do thae lords at Edinburgh gie us; and yet they are heading and hanging amang us, mid trailing us after thae blackguard troopers, and taking our goods and gear as if we were outlaws. I canna say I tak it kind at their hands."

"It would be very strange if you did," answered Morton, with suppressed emotion.

"And what I like warst o' a'," continued poor Cuddie, "is thae ranting red-coats coming amang the lasses, and taking awa our Joes. I had a sair heart o' my ain when I passed the Mains' down at Tillietudlem this morning about parritch-tiine, and saw the reek coniin' out at my ain lum-head, and kend there was some ither body than my auld mither sitting by the ingle-side. But I think my heart was e'en sairer when I saw that hellicat trooper, Tarn Halliday, kissing Jenny Dennison afore my face. I wonder women can hae the impudence to do sic things; but they are a' for the red-coats. Whiles I hae thought o' being a trooper mysell, when I thought naething else wad gae down wi' Jenny, — and yet I "I no blame her ower muckle neither, for maybe it was " for my sake that she loot Tarn touzle her tap-knots that gate."

"For your sake?" said Morton, unable to refrain from taking some interest in a story which seemgd to bear a singular coincidence with his own.

"E'en sae, Milnwood," replied Cuddie; "for the puir quean gat leave to come near me " speaking the loun fair (d—n him, that I suld say sae!), and sae she bade me God speed, and she wanted to stap siller in my hand, — I'se warrant it was the tae half o' her fee and bountith, for she wared the ither half on pinners and pearlins to gang to see us shoot yon day at the popinjay."

"And did you take it, Cuddie?" said Morton.

"Troth did I no, Milnwood; I was sic a fule .as to fling it back to her, — my heart was ower grit to be behadden to her, when I had seen that loon slaving and kissing at her. But I was a great fule for my pains; it wad hae dune my mither and me some gude, and she'll ware't " on duds and nonsense."

There was here a deep and long pause. Cuddie was probably engaged in regretting the rejection of his mistress's bounty, and Henry Morton in considering from what motives, or upon what conditions, Miss Bellenden had succeeded in procuring the interference of Lord Evandale in his favour.

Was it not possible, suggested his awakening hopes, that he had construed her influence over Lord Evandale hastily and unjustly? Ought he to censure her severely, if, submitting to dissimulation for his sake, she had permitted the young nobleman to entertain hopes which she had no intention to realize? Or what if she had appealed to the generosity which Lord Evandale was supposed to possess, and had engaged his honour to protect the person of a favoured rival?

Still, however, the words which he had overheard recurred ever and anon to his remembrance, with a pang which resembled the sting of an adder.

"Nothing that she could refuse him! Was it possible to make a more unlimited declaration of predilection? The language of affection has not, within the limits of maidenly delicacy, a stronger expression. She is lost to me wholly, and for ever; and nothing remains for me now but vengeance for my own wrongs, and for those which are hourly inflicted on my country."

, Apparently, Cuddie, though with less refinement, was following out a similar train of ideas; for he suddenly asked Morton in a low whisper: "Wad there be ony ill in getting out o' thae chields' h?nds an ane could compass it?"

"None in the world," said Morton; "and if an opportunity occurs of doing so, depend on it I for one will not let it slip."

"I 'm blytlie to hear ye say sae," answered Cuddie. "I 'm but a puir silly fallow, but I canna think there wad be muckle ill in breaking out by strength " hand, if ye could mak it onything feasible. I am the lad that will ne'er fear to lay on, if it were come to that; but our auld leddy wad hae ca'd that a resisting o' the king's authority."

"I will resist any authority on earth," said Morton, "that invades tyrannically my chartered rights as a freeman; and I am determined I will not be unjustly dragged to a jail, or perhaps a gibbet, if I can possibly make my escape from these men either by address or force,"

"Weel, that's just my mind too, aye supposing we hae a feasible opportunity o' breaking loose. But then ye speak " a charter; now these are things that only belang bo the like o' you that are a gentleman, and it mightna bear me through that am but a husbandman."

"The charter that I speak of," said Morton, "is common to the meanest Scotchman. It is that freedom from stripes and bondage which was claimed, as you may read in Scripture, by the Apostle Paul himself, and which every man who is freeborn is called upon to defend, for his own sake and that of his countrymen."

"Hegh, sirs!" replied Cuddie, "it wad hae been lang or my Ledily Margaret, or my mither either, wad hae fund out sic a wiselike doctrine in the Bible! The tane was aye graning about giving tribute to Caesar, and the tither is as daft wi' her Whiggery. I hae been clean spoilt, just wi' listening to twa blethering auld wives; but if I could get a gentleman that wad let me tak on to be his servant, I am confident I wad be a clean contrary creature; and I hope your honour will think on what I am saying, if ye were ance fairly delivered out " this house of bondage, and just take me to be your ain wally-de-shamble."

"My valet, Cuddie?" answered Morton; "alas! that would be sorry preferment, even if we were at liberty."

"I ken what ye 're thinking, — that because I am landward-bred, I wad be bringing ye to disgrace afore folk; but ye maun ken I'm gay gleg at the uptak. There was never onything dune wi' hand but I learned gay readily, 'septing reading, writing, and ciphering; but there 's no the like o' me at the fit-ba', and I can play wi' the broadsword as weel as Corporal Inglis there. I hae broken his head or now, for as massy as he's riding ahint us. And then ye 'll no be gaun to stay in this country ?" said he, stopping and interrupting himself.

¹¹ Probably not," replied Morton.

"Weel, I carena a boddle. Ye see I wad get my mither bestowed wi' her auld graning tittie, auntie Meg, in the Gallowgate o' Glasgow, and then I trust they wad neither burn her for a witch, or let her fail for fau't o' fude, or hang her up for an auld Whig wife; for the provost, they say, is very regardfu' o' sic puir bodies. And then you and me wad gang and pouss our fortunes, like the folk i' the daft auld tales about Jock the Giant-killer and Valentine and Orson; and we wad come back to merry Scotland, as the sang says, and I wad tak to the stilts again, and turn sic furs on the bonny rigs o' Milnwood hnlms that it wad be worth a pint but to look at them."

"I fear," said Morton, "there is very little chance, my good friend Cuddie, of our getting back to our old occupation."

"Hout, stir, bout, stir," replied Cuddie, "it's aye gude to keep up a hardy heart; as broken a ship's come to land.—But what's that I hear? Never stir, if my old mither isna at the preaching again! I ken the sough o' her texts, that sound just like the wind blawing through the spence; and there's Kettledrummle setting to wark, too. Lordsake, if the sodgers anes get angry, they'll murder them baith, and us for company!"

Their farther conversation was in fact interrupted by a blatant noise which rose behind them, in which the voice of the preacher emitted, in unison with that of the old woman, tones like the grumble of a bassoon combined with the screaming of a cracked fiddle. At first, the aged pair of sofferers had been contented to condole with each other in smothered expressions of complaint and indignation; but the sense of their injuries became more pungently aggravated as they communicated with each other, and they became at length unable to suppress their ire.

"Woe, woe, and a threefold woe unto you, ye bloody and violent persecutors!" exclaimed the Reverend Gabriel Kettledrummle. "Woe, and three-fold woe unto you, even to the breaking of seals, the blowing of trumpets, and the pouring forth of vials!"

"Ay, ay, a black cast to a' their ill-fa'ur'd faces, and the outside " the loof to them at the last day!" echoed the shrill counter-tenor of Mause, falling in like the second part of a catch.

"I tell yon," continued the divine, "that your rankings and your ridings, your neighings and your prancings, your bloody, barbarous, and inhuman cruelties, your benumbing, deadening, and debauching the conscience of poor creatures by oaths, soul-damning and self-contradictory, have arisen from earth to Heaven like a fearful and hideous outcry of perjury for hastening the wrath to come—hugh! hugh! hugh!"

"And I say," cried Mause, in the same tune, and nearly at the same time, "that " this auld breath " mine, — and it's sair taen down wi' the asthmatics and this rough trot —"

"Deil gin they would gallop," said Cuddie, "wad it but gar her haud her tongue!"

"— " this auld and brief breath," continued Mause, "will I testify against the backslidings, defections, defalcations, and declinings of the land; against the grievances and the causes of wrath!"

"Peace, I pr'ythee, peace, good woman," said the preacher, who had just recovered from a violent fit of coughing, and found his own anathema borne down by Mause's better wind, "peace, and take not the word out of the mouth of a servant of the altar. — I say, I uplift my voice and tell you that before the play is played out, — ay, before this very sun gaes down, — ye sail learn that neither a desperate Judas, like your prelate Sharpe, that's ganc to his place; nor a sanctuary-breaking Holofernes, like bloudy-mnuled Claverhouse; nor an ambitious Diotriches, like the lad Evaiddale, nor a covetous and warld-foiowing Demas, like him they ca' Sergeant Buthwell, that makes every wife's plack and her inenl-ark his ain; neither your carabines, nor your pistols, nor your broadswords, nor your horses, nor your saddles, bridles, surcingles, nosebags, nor martingales, shall resist the arrows that are whetted and the bow that is bent against you!"

"That shall they never, I trow," echoed Mause; "castaways are they ilk ane o' them, — besoms of destruction, fit only to be flung into the fire when they have sweepit the filth out o' the Temple; whips of small cords, knotted for the chastisement of those wha like their warldly gudes and gear better than the Cross or the Covenant, but when that wark's done, only meet to mak latchets to the deil's brogues."

"Fiend hae me," said Cuddie, addressing himself to Morton, "if I dinna think our mither preaches as weel as the minister! But it's a sair pity o' his hoast, for it aye conies on jusfe when he's at the best o't, and that lang routing he made air this morning, is sair again him too. — Deil an I care if he wad roar her dumb, and then he wad hae't a' to answer for himsell. It's lucky the road's rough, and the troopers are no taking muckle tent to what they say, wi' the rattling o' the horses' feet; but an we were anes on saft grund, we 'll hear news o' a this."

Caddie's conjectures were but too true. The words of the prisoners had not been much attended to while drowned by the clang of horses' hoofs on a rough and stony road; but they now entered upon the moorlands, where the testimony of the two zealous captives lacked this saving accompaniment. And, accordingly, no sooner had their steeds begun to tread heath and greensward, and Gabriel Kettle-drummle had again raised his voice with, "Also I uplift my voice like that of a pelican in the wilderness —"

"And I mine," had issued from Mause, "like a sparrow on the house-tops —"

When "Hollo, ho I" cried the corporal from the rear; "rein up your tongues, the devil blister them, or I 'll clap a martingale on them."

"I will not peace at the commands of the profane," said Gabriel.

"Nor I neither," said Mause, "for the bidding of no earthly potsherd, though it be painted as red as a brick from the Tower of Babel, and ca' itsell a corporal."

"Halliday," cried the corporal, "hast got never a gag about thee, man? We must stop their mouths before they talk us all dead."

Ere any answer could be made, or any measure taken in consequence of the corporal's motion, a dragoon galloped towards Sergeant Bothwell, who was considerably a-head of the party he commanded. On hearing the orders which he brought Bothwell instantly rode back to the head of his party, ordered them to close their files, to mend their pace, and to move with silence and precaution, as they would soon be in presence of the enemy.

CHAPTER XV.

Quanturn in nobis, we've thought good
To save the axpense of Christian blood,
And try if we, by mediation
Of treaty, and accommodation,
Can end the quarrel, and compose
This bloody duel without blows

BUTLER.

THE increased pace of the party of horsemen soon took away from their zealous captives the breath, if not the inclination, necessary for holding forth. They had now for more than a mile got free of the woodlands, whose broken glades had, for some time, accompanied them after they had left the woods of Tillietudlem. A few birches and oaks still feathered the narrow ravines, or occupied in dwarf-clusters the hollow plains of the moor. But these were gradually disappearing; and a wide and waste country lay before them, swelling into bare hills of dark heath, intersected by deep gullies, — being the passages by which torrents forced their course in winter, and during summer the disproportioned channels for diminutive rivulets that winded their puny way among heaps of stones and gravel, the effects and tokens of their winter fury, — like so many spendthrifts dwindled down by the consequences of former excesses and extravagance. This desolate region seemed to extend farther than the eye could reach, without grandeur, without even the dignity of mountain wildness, yet striking, from the huge proportion which it seemed to bear to such more favoured spots of the country as were adapted to cultivation, and fitted for the support of man; and thereby impressing irresistibly the mind of the spectator with a sense of the omnipotence of Nature, and the comparative inefficacy of the boasted means of amelioration which man is capable of opposing to the disadvantages of climate and soil.

It is a remarkable effect of such extensive wastes that they impose an idea of solitude even upon those who travel through them in considerable numbers, — so much is the imagination affected by the disproportion between the desert around, and the party who are traversing it. Thus the members of a caravan of a thousand souls may feel, in the deserts of Africa or Arabia, a sense of loneliness unknown to the individual traveller, whose solitary course is through a thriving and cultivated country.

It was not, therefore, without a peculiar feeling of emotion that Morton beheld, at the distance of about half a mile, the body of the cavalry to which his escort belonged, creeping up a steep and winding path which ascended from the more level moor into the hills. Their numbers, which appeared formidable when they crowded through narrow roads, and seemed multiplied by appearing partially, and at different points, among the trees, were now apparently diminished by being exposed at once to view, and in a landscape whose extent bore such immense proportion to the columns of horses and men, which, showing more like a drove of black cattle than a body of soldiers, crawled slowly along the face of the hill, their force and their numbers seeming trifling and contemptible.

" Surely," said Morton to himself, " a handful of resolute men may defend any defile in these mountains against such a small force as this is, providing that their bravery is equal to their enthusiasm."

While he made these reflections, the rapid movement of the horsemen who guarded him, soon traversed the space which divided them from their companions; and ere the front of Claverhouse's column had gained the brow of the hill which they had been seen ascending, Bothwell, with his rear-guard and prisoners, had united himself, or nearly so, with the main body led by his commander. The extreme difficulty of the road, which was in some places steep, and in others boggy, retarded the progress of the column, especially in the rear; for the passage of the main body, in many instances, poached up the swamps through which they passed, and rendered them so deep that the last of their followers were forced to leave the beaten path, and find safer passage where they could.

On these occasions the distresses of the Reverend Gabriel Kettledrummle and of Mause Headrigg were considerably augmented, as the brutal troopers, by whom they were guarded, compelled them, at all risks which such inexperienced riders were likely to incur, to leap their horses over drains and gullies, or to push them through morasses and swamps.

"Through the help of the Lord I have luppen ower a wall," cried poor Mause, as her horse was, by her rude attendants, brought up to leap the turf enclosure of a deserted fold, in which feat hercurch flew off, leading her grey hairs uncovered.

"I am sunk in deep mire where there is no standing; I am come into deep waters where the floods overflow me," exclaimed Kettledrummle, as the charger on which he was mounted plunged up to the saddle-girths in a well-head, as the springs are called which supply the marshes, the sable streams beneath spouting over the face and person of the captive preacher.

These exclamations excited shouts of laughter among their military attendants; but events soon occurred which rendered them all sufficiently serious.

The leading files of the regiment had nearly attained the brow of the steep hill we have mentioned, when two or three horsemen, speedily discovered to be a part of their own advanced guard, who had acted as a patrol, appeared returning at full gallop, their horses much blown, and the men apparently in a disordered flight. They were followed upon the spur by five or six riders, well armed with sword and pistol, who halted upon the top of the hill on observing the approach of the Life Guards. One or two who had carabines dismounted, and, taking a leisurely and deliberate aim at the foremost rank of the regiment, discharged their pieces, by which two troopers were wounded, one severely. They then mounted their horses, and disappeared over the ridge of the hill, retreating with so much coolness as evidently showed that, on the one hand, they were undismayed by the approach of so considerable a force as was moving against them, and conscious, on the other, that they were supported by numbers sufficient for their protection. This incident occasioned a halt through the whole body of cavalry ; and while Claverhouse himself received the report of his advanced guard, which had been thus driven back upon the main body, Lord Evandale advanced to the top of the ridge over which the enemy's horsemen had retired, and Major Allan, Cornet Grahame, and the other officers employed themselves in extricating the regiment from the broken ground, and drawing them up on the side of the hill in two lines, the one to support the other.

The word was then given to advance; and in a few minutes the first lines stood on the brow and commanded the prospect on the other aide. The second line closed upon them, and also the rear-guard with the prisoners ; so that Morton and his companions in captivity could, in like manner, sue the form of opposition which was now offered to the farther progress of their captors.

The brow of the hill, on which the royal Life Guards were now drawn up, sloped downwards (on the side opposite to that which they had ascended) with a gentle declivity for more than a quarter of a mile, and presented ground, which, though unequal in some places, was not altogether unfavourable for the manoeuvres of cavalry, until near the bottom, when the slope terminated in a marshy level, traversed through its whole length by what seemed either a natural gully, or a deep artificial drain, the sides of which were broken by springs, trenches filled with water, out of which peats and turf had been dug, and here and there by some straggling thickets of alders which loved the moistness so well that they continued to live as bushes although too much dwarfed by the sour soil and the stagnant bog-water to ascend into trees. Beyond this ditch, or gully, the ground arose into a second heathy swell, or rather hill, near to the foot of which, and as if with the object of defending the broken ground and ditch that covered their front, the body of insurgents appeared to be drawn up with the purpose of abiding battle.

Their infantry was divided into three lines. The first, tolerably provided with fire-arms, were advanced almost close to the verge of the bog, so that their fire must necessarily annoy the royal cavalry as they descended the opposite hill, the whole front of which was exposed, and would probably be yet more fatal if they attempted to cross the morass. Behind this first line was a body of pikemen, designed for their support in case the dragoons should force the passage of the marsh. In their rear was their third line, consisting of countrymen armed with scythes set straight on poles, hay-forks, spits, clubs, goads, fish-spears and such other rustic implements as hasty resentment had converted into instruments of war. On each flank of the infantry, but a little backward from the bog, as if to allow themselves dry and sound ground whereon to act in case their enemies should force the pass, there was drawn up a small body of cavalry, who were, in general, but indifferently armed, and worse mounted, but full of zeal for the cause, being chiefly either landholders of small property, or farmers of the better class, whose means enabled them to serve on horseback. A few of those who had been engaged in driving back the advanced guard of the royalists might now be seen returning slowly towards their own squadrons. These were the only individuals of the insurgent army which seemed to be in motion. All the others stood firm and motionless as the grey stones that lay scattered on the heath around them.

The total number of the insurgents might amount to about a thousand men; but of these there were-scarce a hundred cavalry, nor were the half of them even tolerably armed. The strength of their position, however, the sense of their having taken a desperate step, the superiority of their numbers, but, above all, the ardour of their enthusiasm, were the means on which their leaders reckoned for supplying the want of arms, equipage, and military discipline.

On the side of the hill that rose above the array of battle which they had adopted, were seen the women, and even the children, whom zeal, opposed to persecution, had driven into the wilderness. They seemed stationed there to be spectators of the engagement, by which their own fate, as well as that of their parents, husbands, and sons, was to be decided. Like the females of the ancient German tribes, the shrill cries which they raised when they beheld the glittering ranks of their enemy appear on the brow of the opposing eminence, acted as an incentive to their relatives to fight to the last in defence of that which was dearest to them. Such exhortations seemed to have their full and emphatic effect; for a wild halloo, which went from rank to rank on the appearance of the soldiers, intimated the resolution of the insurgents to fight to the uttermost.

As the horsemen halted their lines on the ridge of the hill, their trumpets and kettle-drums sounded a bold and warlike flourish of menace and defiance that rang along the waste like the shrill summons of a destroying angel. The wanderers, in answer, united their voices, and sent forth, in solemn modulation, the two first verses of the Seventy-sixth Psalm, according to the metrical version of the Scottish Kirk:—

" In Judah's land God ia well krmwn,
His name 's in Israel great;
In Salem is his tabernacle,
In Zion is his seat.

There arrows of the bow he brake,
The shield, the sword, the war.
More glorious thou than hills of prey,
More excellent artfai."

A shout, or rather a solemn acclamation, attended the close of the stanza; and after a dead pause, the second verse was resumed by the insurgents, who applied the destruction of the Assyrians as prophetic of the issue of their own impending contest: —

" Those that were stout ot heart are spoiled,
They slept their sleep outright;
And none of those their hands did find,
That were the men of might.

When thy rebuke, 0 Jacob's God,
Had forth against them past,
Their horses ami their chariots both
Were in a deep fleep cast."

There was another acclamation, which was followed by the most profound silence.

While these solemn sounds, accented by a thousand voices, were prolonged amongst the waste hills, Claverhouse looked with great attention on the ground, and on the order of battle which the wanderers had adopted, and in which they determined to await the assault.

" The churls," he said, " must have some old soldiers with them; it was no rustic that made choice of that ground."

" Burley is said to be with them for certain," answered Lord Evandale, " and also Hack&ton of Rathillet, Paton of Meadowhead, Cleland, and some other men of military skill."

"I judged as much," said Claverhouse, "from the style in which these detached horsemen leapt their horses over the ditch as they returned to their position. It was easy to see that there were a few Eoundheaded troopers amongst them, — the true spawn of the old Covenant. We must manage this matter warily as well as boldly. EvandaL', let the officers come to this knoll."

He moved to a small moss-grown cairn, — probably the resting-place of some Celtic chief of oth«r times, — and the call of "Officers to the front," soon brought them around their commander.

"I do not call you around me, gentlemen," said Claverhouse, "in the formal capacity of a council of war, for I will never turn over on others the responsibility which my rank imposes on myself. I only want the benefit of your opinions, reserving to myself, as most men do when they ask advice, the liberty of following iny own. — What say you, Cornet Grahame? Shall we attack these fellows who are bellowing yonder? You are youngest and hottest, and therefore will speak first, whether I will or no."

"Then," said Cornet Grahame, "while I have the honour to carry the standard of the Life Guards, it shall never, with my will, retreat before rebels. I say, charge, in God's name and the king's!"

"And what say you, Allan?" continued Claverhouse; "for Evandale is so modest, we shall never get him to speak till you have said what you have to say."

"These fellows," said Major Allan, an old Cavalier officer of experience, "are three or four to one:

I should not mind that much upon a fair field, but they are posted in a very formidable strength, and show no inclination to quit it. I therefore think, with deference to Cornet Grahame's opinion, that we should draw back to Tillietudlem, occupy the pass between the hills and the open country, and send for reinforcements to my Lord Boss, who is lying at Glasgow with a regiment of infantry. In this way we should cut them off from the Strath of Clyde, and either compel them to coine out of their stronghold and give us battle on fair terms, or, if they remain here, we will attack them so soon as our infantry has joined us, and enabled us to act with effect among these ditches, bogs, and quagmires."

"Pshaw !" said the young cornet; "what signifies strong ground, when it is only held by a crew of canting, psalm-singing old women ?"

"A man may fight never the worse," retorted Major Allan, "for honouring both his Bible and Psalter. These fellows will prove as stubborn as steel; I know them of old."

"Their nasal psalmody," said the cornet, "reminds our major of the race of Dunbar."

"Had you been at that race, young man," retorted Allan, "you would have wanted nothing to remind you of it for the longest day you have to live."

"Hush, hush, gentlemen," said Claverhouse, "these are untimely repartees. — I should like your advice well, Major Allan, had our rascally patrols (whom I will see duly punished) brought us timely notice of the enemy's numbers and position. But having once presented ourselves before them in line, the retreat of the Life Guards would argue gross timidity, and be the general signal for insurrection throughout the West. In which case, so far from obtaining any assistance from my Lord Eoss, I promise you I should have great apprehensions of his being cut off before we can join him, or he us. A retreat would have quite the same fatal effect upon the king's cause as the loss of a battle; and as to the difference of risk or of safety it might make with respect to ourselves, that, I am sure, no gentleman thinks a moment about. There must be some gorges or passes in the morass through which we can force our way; and, were we once on firm ground, I trust there is no man in the Life Guards who supposes our squadrons, though so weak in numbers, are unable to trample into dust twice the number of these unpractised clowns. — What say you, my Lord Evandale?"

"I humbly think," said Lord Evandale, "that, go the day how it will, it must be a bloody one; and that we shall lose many brave fellows, and probably be obliged to slaughter a great number of these misguided men, who, after all, are Scotchmen and subjects of King Charles as well as we are."

"Rebels! rebels! and undeserving the name either of Scotchmen or of subjects," said Claverhouse. "But come, my lord, what does your opinion point at?"

"To enter into a treaty with these ignorant and misled men," said the young nobleman.

"A treaty ¹ and with rebels having arms in their hands? Never while I live," answered his commander.

"At least send a trumpet and flag of truce, summoning them to lay down their weapons and disperse," said Lord Evandale, "upon promise of a free pardon. I have always heard that had that been done before the battle of Pentland Hills, much blood might have been saved."

"Well," said Claverhouse, "and who the devil do you think would carry a summons to these headstrong and desperate fanatics? They acknowledge no laws of war. Their leaders, who have been all most active in the murder of the Archbishop of St. Andrews, fight with a rope round their necks, and are likely to kill the messenger, were it but to dip their followers in loyal blood, and to make them as desperate of pardon as themselves."

"I will go myself," said Evandale, "if you will permit me. I have often risked my blood to spill that of others, — let me do so now in order to save human lives."

"You shall not go on such an errand, my lord," said Claverhouse; "your rank and situation render your safety of too much consequence to the country in an age when good principles are so rare. Here's my brother's son Dick Grahame, who fears shot or steel as little as if the devil had given him armour of proof against it, as the fanatics say he has given to his uncle. ¹He shall take a flag of truce and a trumpet, and ride down to the edge of the morass to summon them to lay down their arms and disperse."

"With all my soul, Colonel," answered the cornet; "and I'll tie my cravat on a pike to serve for a white flag, — the rascals never saw such a pennon of Flanders lace in their lives before."

"Colonel Grahame," said Evandale, while the young officer prepared for his expedition, "this young gentleman is your nephew and your apparent heir ; for God's sake, permit me to go. It was my counsel, and I ought to stand the risk."

¹ See Note IX. — Cornet Grahame.

"Were he my only son," said Claverhouse, "this is no cause and no time to spare him. I hope my private affections will never interfere with my public duty. If Dick Grahame falls, the loss is chiefly mine; were your lordship to die, the king and country would be the sufferers. — Come, gentlemen, each to his post. If our summons is unfavourably received, we will instantly attack ; and, as the old Scottish blazon has it, God shaw the right 1"

CHAPTER XVI.

With many a stiff thwack, many a bang,
Hard crab-tree and old iron rang

Hudibras

CORNET RICHAD GRAHAME descended, the hill, hearing in his hand the extempore flag of truce, and making his managed horse keep time by bounds and curvets to the tune which he whistled. The trumpeter followed. Five or six horsemen, having something the appearance of officers, detached themselves from each flank of the Presbyterian army, and, meeting in the centre, approached the ditch which divided the hollow as near as the morass would permit. Towards this group, but keeping the opposite side of the swamp, Cornet Urahame directed his horse, his motions being now the conspicuous object of attention to both armies; and, without disparagement to the courage of either, it is probable there was a general wish on both sides that this embassy might save the risks and bloodshed of the impending conflict.

When he had arrived right opposite to those, who, by their advancing to receive his message, seemed to take upon themselves as the leaders of the enemy, Cornet Grahame commanded his trumpeter to sound a parley. The insurgents having no instrument of martial music wherewith to make the appropriate reply, one of their number called out with a loud, strong voice, demanding to know why he approached their leaguer.

"To summon you in the king's name, and in that of Colonel John Grahame of Claverhouse, specially commissioned by the right honourable Privy Council of Scotland," answered the cornet, "to lay down your arms and dismiss the followers whom ye have led into rebellion, contrary to the laws of God, of the king, and of the country."

"Return to them that sent thee," said the insurgent leader, "and tell them that we are this day in arms for a broken Covenant and a persecuted Kirk; tell them that we renounce the licentious and perjured Charles Stewart, whom you call king, even as he renounced the Covenant, after having once and again sworn to prosecute to the utmost of his power all the ends thereof, really, constantly, and sincerely, all the days of his life, having no enemies but the enemies of the Covenant, and no friends but its friends. Whereas, far from keeping the oath he had called God and angels to witness, his first step, after his incoming into these kingdoms, was the fearful grasping at the prerogative of the Almighty by that hideous Act of Supremacy, together with his expulsing, without summons, libel, or process of law, hundreds of famous, faithful preachers, thereby wringing the bread of life out of the mouth of hungry, poor creatures, and forcibly cramming their throats with the lifeless, saltless, foisonless, lukewarm drammock of the fourteen false prelates and their sycophantic, formal, carnal, scandalous creature-curates."

"I did not come to hear you preach," answered the officer, "but to know, in one word, if you will disperse yourselves, on condition of a free pardon to all but the murderers of the late Archbishop of St. Andrews; or whether you will abide the attack of his Majesty's forces, which will instantly advance upon you."

"In one word, then," answered the spokesman, "we are here with our swords on our thighs, as men that watch in the night. We will take one part and portion together, as brethren in righteousness. Whosoever assails us in our good cause, his blood be on his own head. So return to them that sent thee, and God give them and thee a sight of the evil of your ways ! "

"Is not your name," said the cornet, who began to recollect having seen the person whom he was now speaking with, "John Balfour of Burley ?"

"And if it be," said the spokesman, "hast thou aught to say against it ? "

"Only," said the cornet, "that, as you are excluded from pardon in the name of the king and of my commanding officer, it is to these country people, and not to you, that I offer it; and it is not with you, or such as you, that I am sent to treat."

"Thou art a young soldier, friend," said Burley, "and scant well learned in thy trade, or thou wouldst know that the bearer of a flag of truce cannot treat with the army but through their officers, and that if he presume to do otherwise, he forfeits his safe-conduct"

While speaking these words, Burley unslung his carbine, and held it in readiness.

"I am not to be intimidated from the discharge of my duty by the menaces of a murderer," said Cornet Grahame. "Hear me, good people: I proclaim, in the name of the king and of my commanding officer, full and free pardon to all, excepting—"

"I give thee fair warning," said Burley, presenting his piece.

"A free pardon to all," continued the young officer, still addressing the body of the insurgents, — "to all but—"

"Then the Lord grant grace to thy soul,—amen!" said Burley.

With these words he fired, and Cornet Richard Grahame dropped from his horse. The shot was mortal. The unfortunate young gentleman had only strength to turn himself on the -ground and mutter forth, "My poor mother!" when life forsook him in the effort. His startled horse fled back to the regiment at the gallop, as did his scarce less affrighted attendant.

"What have you done?" said one of Balfour's brother officers,

"My duty," said Balfour, firmly. "Is it not written, 'Thou shalt be zealous even to slaying'?" Lot those, who dare, NOW venture to speak of truce or pardon!"¹

Claverhousie saw his nephew fall. He turned his eye on Evandale, while a transitory glance of indescribable emotion disturbed, for a second's space, the serenity of his features, and briefly said, "You see the event."

"I will avenge him, or die!" exclaimed Evandale; and, putting his horse into motion, rode furiously down the hill, followed by his own troop and that of the deceased cornet, which broke down without orders; and, each striving to be the foremost to revenge their young officer, their ranks soon fell into confusion. These forces formed the first line of the royalists. It was in vain that Claver-house exclaimed, "Halt! halt ! this rashness will undo us." It was all that he could accomplish, by galloping along the second line, entreating, commanding, and even menacing the men with his sword, that he could restrain them from following an example so contagious.

¹ Note IX. — Cornet Grahame.

"Allan," he said, as soon as he had rendered the men in some degree more steady, "lead them slowly down the hill to support Lord Evandale, who is about to need it very much. — Bothwell, thou art a cool and a daring fellow— "

"Ay," muttered Bothwell, " you can remember that in a moment like this."

"Lead ten file up the hollow to the right," continued his commanding officer, "and try every means to get through the bog; then form and charge the rebels in flank and rear, while they are engaged with us in front."

Bothwell made a signal of intelligence and obedience, and moved off with his party at a rapid pace.

Meantime, the disaster which Claverhouse had apprehended, did not fail to take place. The troopers, who, with Lord Evandale, had rushed down upon the enemy, soon found their disorderly career interrupted by the impracticable character of the ground. Some stuck fast in the morass as they attempted to struggle through, some recoiled from the attempt and remained on the brink, others dispersed to seek a more favourable place to pass the swamp. In the midst of this confusion, the first line of the enemy, of which the foremost rank knelt, the second stooped, and the third stood upright, poured in a close and destructive fire that emptied at least a score of saddles, and increased tenfold the disorder into which the horsemen had fallen. Lord Evandale, in the mean time, at the head of a very few well-mounted men, had been; able to clear the ditch, but was no sooner across than he was charged by the left body of the enemy's cavalry, who, encouraged by the small number of opponents that had made their way through the broken ground, set upon them with the utmost fury, crying, "Woe, woe to the uncircumcised Philistines ! down with Dagon and all his adherents !"

The young nobleman fought like a lion ; but most of his followers were killed, and he himself could not have escaped the same fate but for a heavy fire of carabines, which Claverhouse, who had now advanced with the second line near to the ditch, poured so effectually upon the enemy that both horse and foot for a moment began to shrink, and Lord Evandale, disengaged from his unequal combat, and finding himself nearly alone, took the opportunity to effect his retreat through the morass. But notwithstanding the loss they had sustained by Claverhouse's first fire, the insurgents became soon aware that the advantage of numbers and of position were so decidedly theirs that, if they could but persist in making a brief but resolute defence, the Life Guards must necessarily be defeated. Their leaders flew through their ranks, exhorting them to stand firm, and pointing out how efficacious their fire must be where both men and horse were exposed to it; for the troopers, according to custom, fired without having dismounted. Claverhouse, more than once, when he perceived his best men dropping by a fire which they could not effectually return, made desperate efforts to pass the bog at various points, and renew the battle on firm ground and fiercer terms.

But the close fire of the insurgents, joined to the natural difficulties of the pass, foiled his attempts in every point.

"We must retreat," he said to Evandale, "unless Bothwell can effect a diversion in our favour. In the mean time, draw the men out of fire, and leave skirmishers behind these patches of alder-bushes to keep the enemy in check."

These directions being accomplished, the appearance of Bothwell with his party was earnestly expected. But Bothwell had his own disadvantages to 'struggle with. His detour to the right had not escaped the penetrating observation of Burley, who made a corresponding movement with the left wing of the mounted insurgents; so that when Bothwell, after riding a considerable way up the valley, found a place at which the bog could be passed, though with some difficulty, he perceived he was still in front of a superior enemy. His daring character was in no degree checked by this unexpected opposition.

"Follow me, my lads!" he called to his men; "never let it be said that we turned our backs before these canting Roundheads! "

With that, as if inspired by the spirit of his ancestors, he shouted, "Bothwell! Bothwell!" and throwing himself into the morass, he struggled through it at the head of his party, and attacked that of Burley with such fury that he drove them back above a pistol-shot, killing three men with his own hand. Burley, perceiving the consequences of a defeat on this point, and that his men, though more numerous, were unequal to the regulars in using their arms and managing their horses, threw himself across Bothwell's way, and attacked him of the combatants was con-

 .pion of his respective party, and more usual in romance than in real .. followers, on either side, instantly paused, and looked on as if the fate of the day were to be decided by the event of the combat between these two redoubted swordsmen. The combatants themselves seemed of the same opinion; for after two or three eager cuts and pushes had been exchanged, they paused, as if by joint consent, to recover the breath which preceding exertions had exhausted, and to prepare for a duul in which each seemed conscious he had met his match.

"You are the murdering villain, Burley," said Bothwell, gripping his sword firmly, and setting his teeth close; "you escaped me once, but" — he swore an oath too tremendous to be written down — "thy head is woith its weight of silver, and it shall go home at my saddle-bow, or my saddle shall go home empty for me."

"Yes," replied Burley, with stern and gloomy deliberation, "I am that John Balfour who promised to lay thy head where thou shouldst never lift it again; and God do so unto me, and more also, if I do not redeem my word!"

"Then a bed of heather, or a thousand merks!"
 said Bothwell, striking at Burley with his full force.

"The sword of the Lord and of Gideon!" answered Balfour, as he parried and returned the blow.

There have seldom met two combatants more equally matched in strength of body, skill in the management of their weapons and horses, determined courage, and unrelenting hostility. After exchanging many desperate and inflicting several wounds, consequence, they grappled toget desperate impatience of mortal ha seizing his enemy by the shoulder-belt, while the grasp of Balfour was upon his own collar, they came headlong to the ground. The companions of Burley hastened to his assistance, but were repelled by the dragoons, and the battle became again general. But nothing could withdraw the attention of the combatants from each other, or induce them to uncloze the deadly clasp in which they rolled together on the ground, tearing, struggling, and foaming, with the inveteracy of thorough-bred bull-dogs.

Several horses passed over them in the melk without their quitting hold of each other, until the sword-arm of Bothwell was broken by the kick of a charger. He then relinquished his grasp with a deep and suppressed groan, and both combatants started to their feet. Bothwell's right hand dropped helpless by his side, but his left griped to the place where his dagger hung : it had escaped from the sheath in the struggle; and, with a look of mingled rage and despair, he stood totally defenceless, as Balfour, with a laugh of savage joy, flourished his sword aloft, and then passed it through his adversary's body. Bothwell received the thrust without falling : it had only grazed on his ribs. He attempted no farther defence, but, looking at Burley with a grin of deadly hatred, exclaimed: " Base peasant churl, thou hast spilt the blood of a line of kings I "

" Die, wretch ! — die ! " said Balfour, redoubling the thrust with better aim; and, setting his foot on

Bothwell's body as he fell, he a third time transfixed him with his sword. "Die, bloodthirsty dog! die as thou hast lived! — die, like the beasts that perish, hoping nothing, believing nothing— "

"And FEARING nothing!" said Bothwell, collecting the last effort of respiration to utter these desperate words, and expiring as soon as they were spoken,

To catch a stray horse by the bridle, throw himself upon it, and rush to the assistance of his followers, was, with Burley, the affair of a moment. And as the fall of Bothwell had given to the insurgents all the courage of which it had deprived his comrades, the issue of this partial contest did not remain long undecided. Several soldiers were slain, the rest driven back over the morass and dispersed, and the victorious Burley, with his party, crossed it in their turn, to direct against Claverhouse the very manoeuvre which he had instructed Bothwell to execute. He now put his troop in order, with the view of attacking the right wing of the royalists; and, sending news of his success to the main body, exhorted them, in the name of Heaven, to cross the marsh and work out the glorious work of the Lord by a general attack upon the enemy.

Meanwhile, Claverhouse, who had in some degree remedied the confusion occasioned by the first irregular and unsuccessful attack, and reduced the combat in front to a distant skirmish with firearms, chiefly maintained by some dismounted troopers whom he had posted behind the cover of the shrubby copses of alders which in some places covered the edge of the morass, and whose close, cool, and well-aimed fire greatly annoyed the enemy, and concealed their own deficiency of numbers;—'

Claverhouse, while he maintained the contest in this manner, still expecting that a diversion by Bothwell and his party might facilitate a general attack, was accosted by one of the dragoons, whose bloody face and jaded horse bore witness he was come from hard service.

⁴⁴What is the matter, Halliday?" said Claverhouse, for he knew every man in his regiment by name. "Where is Bothwell?"

"Bothwell is down," replied Halliday, "and many a pretty fellow with him."

"Then the king," said Claverhouse, with his usual composure, "has lost a stout soldier. The enemy have passed the marsh, I suppose?"

"With a strong body of horse, commanded by the devil incarnate that killed Bothwell," answered the terrified soldier.

"Hush! hush!" said Claverhouse, putting his finger on his lips, "not a word to any one but me,—Lord Evandale, we must retreat. The fates will have it so. Draw together the men that are dispersed in the skirmishing work. Let Allan form the regiment, and do you two retreat up the hill in two bodies, each halting alternately as the other falls back. I'll keep the rogues in check with the rear-guard, making a stand and facing from time to time. They will be over the ditch presently, for I see their whole line in motion and preparing to cross; therefore lose no time."

"Where is Bothwell with his party?" said Lord Evandale, astonished at the coolness of his commander.

"Fairly disposed of," said Claverhouse, in his ear,—"the king has lost a servant, and the devil has got one. But away to business, Evandale; ply jour spurs and get the men together, Allan and you must keep them "steady. This retreating is new work for us all; but our turn will come round another day."

Evandale and Allan betook themselves to their task; but ere they had arranged the regiment for the purpose of retreating in two alternate bodies, a considerable number of the enemy had crossed the marsh. Claverhouse, who had retained immediately around his person a few of his most active and tried men, charged those who had crossed in person, while they were yet disordered by the broken ground, Some they killed, others they repulsed into the morass, and checked the whole so as to enable the main body, now greatly diminished, as well as disheartened by the loss they had sustained, to commence their retreat up the hill.

But the enemy's van being soon reinforced and supported, compelled Claverhouse to follow his troops. Never did man, however, better maintain the character of a soldier than he did that day. Conspicuous by his black horse and white feather, he was first in the repeated charges which he made at every favourable opportunity to arrest the progress of the pursuers, and to cover the retreat of his regiment. The object of aim to every one, he seemed as if he were impassive to their shot. The superstitious fanatics, who looked upon him as a man gifted by the Evil Spirit with supernatural means of defence, averred that they saw the bullets recoil from his jack-boots and boff-coat like hailstones from a rock of granite, as he galloped to and fro amid the storm of the battle. Many a Whig that day loaded his musket with a dollar cat into slugs, in order that a silver bullet (such was their belief) might bring down the persecutor of the holy kirk, on whom lead had no power.

"Try him with the cold steel," was the cry at every renewed charge, — "powder is wasted on him. Ye might as weel shoot at the Auld Enemy himsell."¹

But though this was loudly shouted, yet the awe on the insurgents' minds was such that they gave way before Claverhouse as before a supernatural being, and few men ventured to cross swords with him. Still, however, he was fighting in retreat, and with all the disadvantages attending that movement. The soldiers behind him, as they beheld the increasing number of enemies who poured over the morass, became unsteady; and at every successive movement, Major Allan and Lord Evandale found it more and more difficult to bring them to halt and form line regularly, while, on the other hand, their motions in the act of retreating became, by degrees, much more rapid than was consistent with good order. As the retiring soldiers approached nearer to the top of the ridge from which in so luckless an hour they had descended, the panic began to increase. Every one became impatient to place the brow of the hill between him and the continued fire of the pursuers; nor could any individual think it reasonable that he should be the last in the retreat, and thus sacrifice his own safety for that of others. In this mood, several troopers set spurs to their horses and fled outright, and the others became so unsteady in their movements and formations that their officers every moment feared they would follow the same example.

Amid this scene of blood and confusion, the trampling of the horses, the groans of the wounded, the continued fire of the enemy, which fell in a succession of uninterrupted musketry, while loud shouts accompanied each bullet which the fall of a trooper showed to have been successfully aimed, — amid all the terrors and disorders of such a scene, and when it was dubious how soon they might be totally deserted by their dispirited soldiery, Evandale could not forbear remarking the composure of his commanding officer. Not at Lady Margaret's breakfast-table that morning did his eye appear more lively, or his demeanour more composed. He had closed up to Evandale for the purpose of giving some orders, and picking out a few men to reinforce his rear-guard.

¹ Note X. — Proof against Shot given by Satan.

"If this bout lasts five minutes longer," he said, in a whisper, "our rogues will leave you, my lord, old Allan, and myself, the honour of fighting this battle with our own hands. I must do something to disperse the musketeers who annoy them so hard, or we shall be all shamed. Don't attempt to succour me if you see me go down, but keep at the head of your men; get off as you can, in Grod's name, and tell the king and the council I died in my duty!"

So saying, and commanding about twenty stout men to follow him, he gave, with this small body, a charge so desperate and unexpected that he drove the foremost of the pursuers back to some distance. In the confusion of the assault he singled out Burley, and, desirous to strike terror into his followers, he dealt him so severe a blow on the head as cut through his steel head-piece and threw him from his horse, stunned for the moment, though unwounded. A wonderful thing it was afterwards thought, that one so powerful as Balfour should have sunk under the blow of a man to appearance so slightly made as Claverhouse; and the vulgar, of course, set down to supernatural aid the effect of that energy which a determined spirit can give to a feebler arm. Claverhouse had, in this last charge, however, involved himself too deeply among the insurgents, and was fairly surrounded.

Lord Evandale saw the danger of his commander, his body of dragoons being then halted, while that commanded by Allan was in the act of retreating. Begaidless of Claverhouse's disinterested command to the contrary, he ordered the party which he headed to charge down hill and extncate their colonel. Some advanced with him; most halted and stood uncertain ; many ran away. With those who followed Evandale, he disengaged Claverhouse. His assistance just came in time, for a rustic had wounded his horse in a most ghastly manner by the blow of a scythe, and was about to repeat the stroke when Lord Evandale cut him down. As they got out of the press, they looked round them. Allan's division had ridden clear over the hill, that officer's authority having proved altogether unequal to halt them. Evandale's troop was scattered and in total confusion.

"What is to be done, Colonel?" said Lord Evandale.

" We are the last men in the field, I think," said Claverhouse; "and when men fight as long as they can, there is no shame in flying. Hector himself would say, 'Devil take the hindmost,'when there are but twenty against a thousand- — Save yourselves, my lads, and rally as soon as you can. — Come, my lord, we must e'en ride for it."

So saying, he put spurs to his wounded horse; and the generous animal, as if conscious that thelife of his rider depended on his exertions, pressed forward with speed unabated either by pain or loss of blood.¹ A few officers and soldiers followed him, but in a very irregular and tumultuary manner. The flight of Claverhouse was the signal for all the stragglers, who yet offered desultory resistance, to fly as fast as they could, and yield up the field of battle to the victorious insurgents.

¹ Note XL— Claverhouse's Charger.

CHALTEK XVII.

But haik ! through the fast-flashing lightning of war,
What bteed to the cLsert flies frantic anil far ?

CAMPBELL

DURING} the severe skirmish of which we have given the details, Morton, together with Cuddie and his mother and the Eeverend Gabriel Kettle-drummle, remained on the brow of the hill, near to the small cairn, or barrow, beside which Claverhouse had held his preliminary council of war, so that they had a commanding view of the action which took place in the bottom. They were guarded by Corporal Inglis and four soldiers, who, as may readily be supposed, were much more intent on watching the fluctuating fortunes of the battle than in attending to what passed among their prisoners.

"If yon lads stand to their tackle," said Cuddie, "we'll hae some chance o' getting our necks out " the brecham again; but I misdoubt them, — they hae little skeel o' arms."

"Much is not necessary, Cuddie," answered Morton; "they have a strong position, and weapons in their hands, and are more than three times the number of their assailants. If they cannot fight for their freedom now, they and theirs deserve to lose it for ever."

"Oh, sirs," exclaimed Mause, "here's a goodly spectacle indeed! My spirit is like that of the blessed Elihu, it burns within me; my bowels are as wine which lacketh vent,—they are ready to burst like new bottles. Oh that He may look after His ain people in this day of judgment and deliverance ! — And now, what ailest thou, precious Mr. Gabriel Hettledrummle ? I say, what ailest thou, that wert a Nazarite purer than snow, whiter than milk, more ruddy than sulphur" (meaning, perhaps, sapphires), — " I say, what ails thee now, that thou art blacker than a coal, that thy beauty is departed, and thy loveliness withered like a dry potsherd ? Surely it is time to be up and be doing, to cry loudly and to spare not, and to wrestle for the puir lads that are yonder testifying with their ain blude and that of their enemies."

This expostulation implied a reproach on Mr, Kettledrummle, who, though an absolute Boanerges, or son of thunder, in the pulpit, when the enemy were afar, and indeed sufficiently contumacious, as we have seen, when in their power, had been struck dumb by the firing, shouts, and shrieks which now arose from the valley, and—as many an honest man might have been, in a situation where¹ he could neither fight nor fly—was too much dismayed to take so favourable an opportunity to preach the terrors of presbytery as the courageous Mause had expected at his hand, or even to pray for the successful event of the battle. His presence of mind was not, however, entirely lost, any more than his jealous respect for his reputation as a pure and powerful preacher of the Word.

" Hold your peace, woman!" he said, " and do not perturb my inward meditations and the wrestlings wherewith I wrestle. — But of a verity the shooting of the foemen doth begin to increase I Peradventure some pellet may attain unto ua even here. Lo! I will ensconce me behind the cairn, as behind a strong wall of defence."

"He's but a coward body after "," said Cuddie, who was himself by no means deficient in that sort of courage which consists in insensibility to danger; "he's but a daidhng coward body. He'll never fill Rumbleberry's bonnet. — Odd i Rumbleberry fought and flyted like a fleeing dragon It was a great pity, puir man, he couldna cheat the woodie. But they say he gaed singing and rejoicing till't, just as I wad gang to a bicker o' brose, — supposing me hungry, as I stand a gude chance to be. Eh, sirs ! you 's an awfu' sight, and yet ane canna keep their een aff frae it!"

Accordingly, strong curiosity on the part of Morton and Cuddle, together with the heated enthusiasm of old Mause, detained them on the spot from which they could best hear and see the issue of the action, leaving to Kettledrummle to occupy alone his place of security. The vicissitudes of combat, which we have already described, were witnessed by our spectators from the top of the eminence, but without their being able positively to determine to what they tended. That the Presbyterians defended themselves stoutly was evident from the heavy smoke, which, illumined by frequent flashes of fire, now eddied along the valley, and hid the contending parties in its sulphureous shade. On the other hand, the continued firing from the nearer side of the morass indicated that the enemy persevered in their attack, that the affair was fiercely disputed, and that everything was to be apprehended from a continued contest in which undisciplined rustics had to repel the assaults of regular troops, so completely officered and armed.

At length horses, whose caparisons showed that they belonged to the Life Guards, began to fly masterless out of the confusion. Dismounted soldiers next appeared, forsaking the conflict, and straggling over the side of the hill, in order to escape from the scene of action. As the numbers of these fugitives increased, the fate of the day seemed no longer doubtful. A large body was then seen emerging from the smoke, forming irregularly on the hill-side, and with difficulty kept stationary by their officers, until Evandale's corps also appeared in full retreat. The result of the conflict was then apparent, and the joy of the prisoners was corresponding to their approaching deliverance.

"Theyhae dune the job for anes,¹¹ said Cuddie, "an they ne'er do't again."

"They flee! they flee¹" exclaimed Mause, in ecstasy. "Oh, the truculent tyrants' they are riding now as they never rode before. Oh, the false Egyptians, the proud Assyrians, the Philistines, the Moabites, the Edomites, the Ishmaelites! The Lord has brought sharp swords upon them, to make them food for the fowls of heaven and the beasts of the field. See how the clouds roll, and the fire flashes ahint them, and goes forth before the chosen of the Covenant, e'en like the pillar o' cloud and the pillar o' flame that led the people of Israel out o' the land of Egypt¹ This is indeed a day of deliverance to the righteous, a day of pouring out of wrath to the persecutors and the ungodly I"

"Lord save us, Hither," said Cuddie, "hand the clavering tongue " ye, and lie down ahint the cairn, like Kettlednimmle, honest man ! The Whigamore bullets ken unco little discretion, and will just as'

sune knock out the barns o' a psalm-singing auld wife as a swearing dragoon."

"Fear naething for me, Cuddie," said the old dame, transported to ecstasy by the success of her party; "fear naething for me! I will stand, like Deborah, on the tap " the cairn, and tak up my sang o' reproach against these men of Harosheth of the Grentiles whose horse-hoofs are broken by their prancing."

The enthusiastic old woman would, in fact, have accomplished her purpose, of mounting on the cairn, and becoming, as she said, a sign and a banner to the people, had not Cuddie, with more filial tenderness than respect, detained her by such force as his shackled arms would permit him to exert.

"Eh, sirs!" he said, having accomplished this task, "look out yonder, Milnwood: saw ye ever mortal fight like the deevil Claver'se? Yondel he's been thrice doun amang them, and thrice cam free aff.—But I think we'll soon be free ourselfs, Milnwood. Inglis and his troopers look ower their shouthers very aften, as if they liked the road ahint them better than the road afore."

Cuddie was not mistaken; for when the main tide of fugitives passed at a little distance from the spot where they were stationed, the corporal and his party fired their carabines at random upon the advancing insurgents, and, abandoning all charge of their prisoners, joined the retreat of their comrades. Morton and the old woman, whose hands were at liberty, lost no time in undoing the bonds of Cuddie and of the clergyman, both of whom had been secured by a cord tied round their arms above the elbows. By the time this was accomplished, the rear-guard of the dragoons, which still preserved some order, passed beneath the hillock or rising ground which was surmounted by the cairn already repeatedly mentioned. They exhibited all the hurry and confusion incident to a forced retreat, but still continued in a body. Claverhouse led the van, his naked sword deeply dyed with blood, as were his face and clothes. His horse was all covered with gore, and now reeled with weakness. Lord Evandale, in not much better plight, brought up the rear, still exhorting the soldiers to keep together and fear nothing. Several of the men were wounded, and one or two dropped from their horses as they surmounted the hill.

Mause's zeal broke forth once more at this spectacle, while she stood on the heath with her head uncovered, and her grey hairs streaming in the wind, no bad representation of a superannuated bacchante or Thessalian witch in the agonies of incantation. She soon discovered Claverhouse at the head of the fugitive party, and exclaimed with bitter irony, "Tarry, tarry, ye wha were aye sae blithe to be at the meetings of the saints, and wad ride every muir in Scotland to find a conventicle ! Wilt thou not tarry, now thou hast found ane ? Wilt thou not stay for one word inair ? Wilt thou na bide the afternoon preaching ?—Wae betide ye !" she said, suddenly changing her tone, "and cut the houghs of the creature whase fleetness ye trust in ! Sheugh, sheugh ! awa wi' ye, that hae spilled sae muckle blude, and now wad save your ain, — awa wi' ye for a railing Rabshakeh, a cursing Shimei, a bloodthirsty Doeg ! The sword's drawn now that winna be lang " o'ertaking ye, ride as fast as ye will."

Claverhouse, it may be easily supposed, was too busy to attend to her reproaches, but hastened over the hill, anxious to get the remnant of his men out of gun-shot, in hopes of again collecting the fugitives round his standard. But as the rear of his followers rode over the ridge, a shot struck Lord Evandale's horse, which instantly sunk down dead beneath him. Two of the Whig horsemen, who were the foremost in the pursuit, hastened up with the purpose of killing him, for hitherto there had been no quarter given. Morton, on the other hand, rushed forward to save his life, if possible, in order at once to indulge his natural generosity and to requite the obligation which Lord Evandale had conferred on him that morning, and under which circumstances had made him wince so acutely. Just as he had assisted Evandale, who was much wounded, to extricate himself from his dying horse and to gain his feet, the two horsemen came up, and one of them, exclaiming, "Have at the red-coated tyrant!" made a blow at the young nobleman which Morton parried with difficulty, exclaiming to the rider, who was no other than Burley himself, "Give quarter to this gentleman, for my sake, — for the sake," he added, observing that Burley did not immediately recognise him, "of Henry Morton, who so lately sheltered you."

"Henry Morton?" replied Burley, wiping his bloody brow with his bloodier hand. "Did I not say that the son of Silas Morton would come forth out of the land of bondage, nor be long an indweller in the tents of Ham? Thou art a brand snatched out of the burning. — But for this booted apostle of prelacy, he shall die the death! We must smite them hip and thigh, even from the rising to the going down of the sun. It is our commission to slay them like Amalek, and utterly destroy all they have, and spare neither man nor woman, infant, nor suckling; therefore hinder me not," he continued, endeavouring again to cut down Lord Evandale, "for this work must not be wrought negligently."

"You must not, and you shall not, slay him, more especially while incapable of defence," said Morton, planting himself before Lord Evandale so as to intercept any blow that should be aimed at him. "I owed my life to him this morning, — my life, which was endangered solely by my having sheltered you; and to shed his blood when he can offer no effectual resistance, were not only a cruelty abhorrent to God and man, but detestable ingratitude both to him and to me."

Burley paused. "Thou art yet," he said, "in the court of the Gentiles, and I compassionate thy human blindness and frailty. Strong meat is not fit for babes, nor the mighty and grinding dispensation under which I draw my sword, for those whose hearts are yet dwelling in huts of clay, whose footsteps are tangled in the mesh of mortal sympathies, and who clothe themselves in the righteousness that is as filthy rags. But to gain a soul to the truth is better than to send one to Tophet; therefore I give quarter to this youth, providing the grant is confirmed, by the general council of God's army, whom he hath this day blessed with so signal a deliverance. — Thou art unarmed. Abide my return here. I must yet pursue these sinners, the Amalekites, and destroy them till they be utterly consumed from the face of the land, even from Havilah unto Shur."

So saying, he set spurs to his horse, and continued to pursue the chase.

"Cuddie," said Morton, "for God's sake catch a horse as quickly as you can. I will not trust Lord Evandale's life with these obdurate men. — You are wounded, my lord. Are you able to continue your retreat?" he continued, addressing himself to his prisoner, who, half-stunned by the fall, was but beginning to recover himself.

"I think so," replied Lord Evandale. "But is it possible? Do I owe my life to Mr. Morton?"

"My interference would have been the same from common humanity," replied Morton; "to your lordship it was a sacred debt of gratitude."

Cuddie at this instant returned with a horse.

"God-sake, munt, munt, and ride like a fleeing hawk, my lord," said the good-natured fellow; "for ne'er be in me if they arena killing every ane" the wounded and prisoners!"

Lord Evandale mounted the horse, while Cuddie officiously held the stirrup.

"Stand off, good fellow; thy courtesy may cost thy life. — Mr. Morton," he continued, addressing Henry, "this makes us more than even: rely on it, I will never forget your generosity. Farewell."

He turned his horse, and rode swiftly away in the direction which seemed least exposed to pursuit.

Lord Evandale had just rode off, when several of the insurgents, who were in the front of the pursuit, came up, denouncing vengeance on Henry Morton and Cuddie for having aided the escape of a Philistine, as they called the young nobleman.

"What wad ye hae had us to do?" cried Cuddie. "Had we aught to stop a man" that had twa pistols and a sword? "Sudna ye hae come faster up yourself, instead offlyting at huz?"

This excuse would hardly have passed current; but Kettledrummy, who now awoke from his trance of terror, and was known to and revered by most of the wanderers, together with Mause, who possessed their appropriate language, as well as the preacher himself, proved active and effectual intercessors.

"Touch them not, harm them not," exclaimed Kettledrummy, in his very best double-bass tones ; "this is the son of the famous Silas Morton, by whom the Lord wrought great things in this land at the breaking forth of the reformation from prelacy, when there was a plentiful pouring forth of the Word and a renewing of the Covenant,—a hero and champion of those blessed days, when there was power and efficacy, and convincing and converting of sinners, and heart-exercises, and fellowships of saints, and a plentiful flowing forth of the spices of the garden of Eden."

"And this is my son Cuddie," exclaimed Mause, in her turn, "the son of his father, Judden Headrigg, wha was a douce honest man, and of me, Mause Middlemas, an unworthy professor and follower of the pure gospel, and ane o' your ain folk. Is it not written, 'Cut ye not off the tribe of the families of the Kohathites from among the Levites?' Numbers, fourth and aughteenth. — Oh, sirs ! dinna be standing here prattling wi' honest folk, when ye suld be following forth your victory with which Providence has blessed ye."

This party having passed on, they were immediately beset by another, to whom it was necessary to give the same explanation. Kettledrummy, whose fear was much dissipated since the firing had ceased, again took upon him to be intercessor, and grown bold, as he felt his good word necessary for the protection of his late fellow-captives, he laid claim to no small share of the merit of the victory, appealing to Morton and Cuddie whether the tide of battle had not turned while he prayed on the Mount of Jehovah-Nissi, like Moses, that Israel might prevail over Amalek; but granting them, at the same time, the credit of holding up his hands when they waxed heavy, as those of the prophet were supported by Aaron and Hur. It seems probable that Kettledruinmle allotted this part in the success to his companions in adversity, lest they should be tempted to disclose his carnal self-seeking and falling away, in regarding too closely his own personal safety. These strong testimonies in favour of the liberated captives quickly flew abroad, with many exaggerations, among the victorious army. The reports on the subject were various; but it was universally agreed that young Morton of Milnwood, the son of the stout soldier of the Covenant, Silas Morton, together with the precious Gabriel Kettledruinmle and a singular devout Christian woman, whom many thought as good as himself at extracting a doctrine or an use, whether of terror or consolation, had arrived to support the good old cause with a reinforcement of a hundred well-armed men from the Middle Ward.¹

¹ Note XII. — Skirmish at Druraclog.

CHAPTEE XVIII.

When pulpit, drum ecclesiastic,
Was beat with fist instead of a stii-k.

Hudibras.

IN the mean time, the insurgent cavalry returned from the pursuit, jaded and worn out with their-unwonted efforts, and the infantry assembled on the ground which they had won, fatigued with toil and hunger. Their success, however, was a cordial to every bosom, and seemed even to serve in the stead of food and refreshment. It was, indeed, much more brilliant than they durst have ventured to anticipate; for, with no great loss on their part, they had totally routed a regiment of picked men, commanded by the first officer in Scotland, and one whose very name had long been a terror to them. Their success seemed even to have upon their spirits the effect of a sudden and violent surprise, so much had their taking up arms been a measure of desperation rather than of hope. Their meeting was also casual, and they had hastily arranged themselves under such commanders as were remarkable for zeal and courage, without much respect to any other qualities. It followed, from this state of disorganization, that the whole army appeared at once to resolve itself into a general committee for considering what steps were to be taken in consequence of their success, and no opinion could be started so wild that it had not some favourers and advocates. Some proposed they should march to Glasgow, some to Hamilton, some to Edinburgh, some to London. Some were for sending a deputation of their number to London to convert Charles II. to a sense of the error of his ways; and others, less charitable, proposed either to call a new successor to the crown, or to declare Scotland a free republic. A free parliament of the nation, and a free assembly of the Kirk, were the objects of the more sensible and moderate of the party. In the mean while, a clamour arose among the soldiers for bread and other necessaries ; and while all complained of hardship and hunger, none took the necessary measures to procure supplies. In short, the camp of the Covenanters, even in the very moment of success, seemed" about to dissolve like a rope of sand, from want of the original principles of combination and union.

Burley, who had now returned from the pursuit, found his followers in this distracted state. With the ready talent of one accustomed to encounter exigencies, he proposed that one hundred of the freshest men should be drawn out for duty, that a small number of those who had hitherto acted as leaders should constitute a committee of direction until officers should be regularly chosen, and that, to crown the victory, Gabriel Kettledrummle should be called upon to improve the providential success which they had obtained, by a word in season addressed to the army. He reckoned very much, and not without reason, on this last expedient, as a means of engaging the attention of the bulk of the insurgents while he himself and two or three of their leaders held a private council of war, undisturbed by the discordant opinions or senseless clamour of the general body.

Kettledrummle more than answered the expectations of Burley. Two mortal hours did he preach at a breathing; and certainly no lungs, or doctrine, excepting his own, could have kept up, for so long a time, the attention of men, in such precarious circumstances. But he possessed in perfection a sort of rude and familiar eloquence peculiar to the preachers of that period, which, though it would have been fastidiously rejected by an audience which possessed any portion of taste, was a cake of the right leaven for the palates of those whom he now addressed. His text was from the forty-ninth chapter of Isaiah: "Even the captives of the mighty shall be taken away, and the prey of the terrible shall be delivered: for I will contend with him that contendeth with thee, and I will save thy children.

"And I will feed them that oppress thee with their own flesh; and they shall be drunken with their own blood, as with sweet wine: and all flesh shall know that I the Lord am thy Saviour and thy Eedeemer, the Mighty One of Jacob."

The discourse which he pronounced upon this subject was divided into fifteen heads, each of which was garnished with seven uses of application, two of consolation, two of terror, two declaring the causes of backsliding and of wrath, and one announcing the promised and expected deliverance. The first part of his text he applied to his own deliverance and that of his companions; and took occasion to speak a few words in praise of young Milnwood, of whom, as of a champion of the Covenant, he augured great things. The second part he applied to the punishments which were about to fall upon the persecuting government. At times he was familiar and colloquial; now he was loud, energetic, and boisterous; some parts of his discourse might be called sublime, and others sunk below burlesque. Occasionally he vindicated with great animation the right of every freeman to worship God according to his own conscience; and presently he charged the guilt and misery of the people on the awful negligence of their rulers, who had not only failed to establish presbytery as the national religion, but had tolerated sectaries of various descriptions, Papists, Prelatists, Erastians, assuming the name of Presbyterians, Independents, Socinians, and Quakers,—all of whom Kettledruimnle proposed, by one sweeping act, to expel from the land, and thus re-edify in its integrity the beauty of the sanctuary. He next handled very pithily the doctrine of defensive arms and of resistance to Charles II, observing, that, instead of a nursing father to the Kirk, that monarch had been a nursing father to none but his own bastards. He went at some length through the life and conversation of that joyous prince, few parts of which, it must be owned, were qualified to stand the rough handling of so uncourtly an orator, who conferred on him the hard names of Jeroboam, Omri, Ahab, Shallum, Pekah, and every other evil monarch recorded in the Chronicles, and concluded with a round application of the Scripture, "Tophet is ordained of old; yea, for the KING it is provided: he hath made it deep and large; the pile thereof is fire and much wood: the breath of the Lord, like a stream of brimstone, doth kindle it."

Kettledrumrale had no sooner ended his sermon and descended from the huge rock which had served him for a pulpit, than his post was occupied by a pastor of a very different description. The reverend

Gabriel was advanced in years, somewhat corpulent, with a loud voice, a square face, and a set of stupid and unanimated features, in which the body seemed more to predominate over the spirit than was seemly in a sound divine. The youth who succeeded him in exhorting this extraordinary convocation, Ephraim Macbriar by name, was hardly twenty years old ; yet his thin features already indicated that a constitution, naturally hectic, was worn out by vigils, by fasts, by the rigour of imprisonment, and the fatigues incident to a fugitive life. Young as he was, he had been twice imprisoned for several months, and soffered many severities, which gave him great influence with those of his own sect. He threw his faded eyes over the multitude and over the scene of battle; and a light of triumph arose in his glance, his pale yet striking features were coloured with a transient and hectic blush of joy. He folded his hands, raised his face to heaven, and seemed lost in mental prayer and thanksgiving ere he addressed the people. When he spoke, his faint and broken voice seemed at first inadequate to express his conceptions. But the deep silence of the assembly, the eagerness with which the ear gathered every word, as the famished Israelites collected the heavenly manna, had a corresponding effect upon the preacher himself. His words became more distinct, his manner more earnest and energetic; it seemed as if religious zeal was triumphing over bodily weakness and infirmity. His natural eloquence was not altogether untainted with the coarseness of his sect; and yet, by the influence of a good natural taste, it was freed from the grosser and more ludicrous errors of his contemporaries; and the language of Scripture, which, in their mouths, was sometimes degraded by misapplication, gave, in Macbriar's exhortation, a rich and solemn effect, like that which is produced by the beams of the sun streaming through the storied representation of saints and martyrs on the Gothic window of some ancient cathedral.

He painted the desolation of the Church, during the late period of her distresses, in the most affecting colours. He described her, like Hagar watching the waning life of her infant amid the fountainless desert; like Judah, under her palm-tree, mourning for the devastation of her temple; like Rachel, weeping for her children and refusing comfort. But he chiefly rose into rough sublimity when addressing the men yet reeking from battle. He called on them to remember the great things which God had done for them, and to persevere in the career which their victory had opened.

"Your garments are dyed, but not with the juice of the wine-press; your swords are filled with blood," he exclaimed, "but not with the blood of goats or lambs; the dust of the desert on which ye stand is made fat with gore, but not with the blood of bullocks,—for the Lord hath a sacrifice in Bozrah, and a great slaughter in the land of Idumea. These were not the firstlings of the flock, the small cattle of burnt-offerings, whose bodies lie like dung on the ploughed field of the husbandman; this is not the savour of myrrh, of frankincense, or of sweet herbs, that is steaming in your nostrils; but these bloody trunks are the carcasses of those who held the bow and the lance, who were cruel and would show no mercy, whose voice roared like the sea, who rode upon horses, every man in array as if to battle, — they are the carcasses even of the mighty men of war that came against Jacob in the day of his deliverance, and the smoke is that of the devouring fires that have consumed them. And those wild hills that surround you are not a sanctuary planked with cedar and plated with silver, nor are ye ministering priests at the altar, with censers and with torches ; but ye huld in your himds the sword and the bow and the weapons of death. And yet verily, I say uutu you, that not when the ancient Temple was in its first glory was there offered sacrifice more acceptable than that which you have this day presented, giving to the slaughter the tyrant and the oppressor, with the rocks for your altars, and the sky for your vaulted sanctuary, and your own good swords for the instruments of sacrifice. Leave not, therefore, the plough in the furrow ; turn not back from the path in which you have entered, like the famous worthies of old, whom God raised up for the glorifying of his name and the deliverance of his afflicted people ; halt not in the race you are running, — lest the latter end should be worse than the beginning. Wherefore, set up a standard in the land ; blow a trumpet upon the mountains ; let not the shepherd tarry by his sheepfold, or the seedsman continue in the ploughed field -, but make the watch strong, sharpen the arrows, burnish the shields, name ye the captains of thousands, and captains of hundreds, of fifties, and of tens ; call the footmen like the rushing of winds, and cause the horsemen to come up like the sound of many waters ; for the passages of the destroyers are stopped, their rods are burned, and the face of their men of battle hath been turned to flight. Heaven has been with you, and has broken the bow of the mighty ; then let every man's heart be as the heart of the valiant Maccabeus, every man's hand as the hand of the mighty Samson, every man's sword as that of Gideon, which turned not back from the slaughter; for the banner of Reformation is spread abroad? on the mountains in its first loveliness, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

"Well is he this day that shall barter his house for a helmet, and sell his garment for a sword, and cast in his lot with the children of the Covenant, even to the fulfilling of the promise ; and woe, woe unto him who, for carnal ends and self-seeking, shall withhold himself from the great work, for the curse shall abide with him, even the bitter curse of Meroz, because he came not to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Up, then, and be doing ; the blood of martyrs, reeking upon scaffolds, is crying for vengeance ; the bones of saints, which lie whitening in the highways, are pleading for retribution; the groans of innocent captives from desolate isles of the sea, and from the dungeons of the tyrants' high places, cry for deliverance ; the prayers of persecuted Christians, sheltering themselves in dens and deserts from the sword of their persecutors, famished with hunger, starving with cold, lacking fire, food, shelter, and clothing, because they serve God rather than man, — all are with you, pleading, watching, knocking, storming the gates of heaven in your behalf. Heaven itself shall fight for you, as the stars in their courses fought against Sisera. Then whoso will deserve immortal fame in this world, and eternal happiness in that which is to come, let them enter into God's service, and take arms at the hand of his servant, — a blessing, namely, upon him and his household, and his children, to the ninth generation, even the blessing of the promise, for ever and ever ! Amen."

The eloquence of the preacher was rewarded by the deep hum of stern approbation which resounded through the armed assemblage at the conclusion of an exhortation so well suited to that which they had done, and that which remained for them to do. The wounded forgot their pain, the faint and hungry their fatigues and privations, as they listened to doctrines which elevated them alike above the wants and calamities of the world, and identified their cause with that of the Deity. Many crowded around the preacher, as he descended from the eminence on which he stood, and, clasping him with hands on which the gore was not yet hardened, pledged their sacred vow that they would play the part of Heaven's true soldiers. Exhausted by his own enthusiasm, and by the animated fervour which he had exerted in his discourse, the preacher could only reply, in broken accents : " God bless you, my brethren, —it is HIS cause. Stand strongly up and play the men ; the worst that can befall us is but a brief and bloody passage to heaven."

Balfour, and the other leaders, had not lost the time which was employed in these spiritual exercises. Watch-fires were lighted, sentinels were posted, and arrangements were made to refresh the army with such provisions as had been hastily collected from the nearest farm-houses and villages. The present necessity thus provided for, they turned their thoughts to the future. They had despatched parties to spread the news of their victory, and to obtain, either by force or favour, supplies of what they stood most in need of. In this they had succeeded beyond their hopes, having at one village seized a small magazine of provisions, forage, and ammunition which had been provided for the royal forces. This success not only gave them relief at the time, but such hopes for the future that whereas formerly some of their number had begun to slacken in their zeal, they now unanimously resolved to abide together in arms, and commit themselves and their cause to the event of war

And whatever may be thought of the extravagance or narrow-minded bigotry of many of their tenets, it is impossible to deny the praise of devoted courage to a few hundred peasants, who, without leaders, without money, without magazines, without any fixed plan of action, and almost without arms, borne out only by their innate zeal, and a detestation of the oppression of their rulers, ventured to declare open war against an established government, supported by a regular army and the whole force of three kingdoms.

CHAPTEE XIX.

Why, than, say an old mail can do somewhat.

Hemy IV. Part II.

WE must now return to the tower of Tillietudlem, which the march of the Life Guards, on the murning of this eventful day, had left to silence and anxiety. The assurances of LordEvandale had not succeeded in Duelling the apprehensions of Edith. She knew him generous, and faithful to his word; but it seemed too plain that he suspected the object of her intercession to be a successful rival; and was it not expecting from him an effort above human nature, to suppose that he was to watch over Morton's safety, and rescue him from all the dangers to which his state of imprisonment, and the suspicions which he had incurred, must repeatedly expose him? She therefore resigned herself to the most heart-rending apprehensions, without admitting, and indeed almost without listening to, the multifarious grounds of consolation which Jenny Dennison brought forward, one after another, like a skilful general who charges with the several divisions of his troops in regular succession.

First, Jenny was morally positive that young Milnwood would come to no harm; then, if he did, there was consolation in the reflection that Lord Evandale was the better and more appropriate match of the two; then there was every chance of a battle, in which the saidLord Evandale might be killed, and there wad be nae mair fash about that job ; then if the Whigs gat the better, Milnwood and Cuddie might come to the Castle and carry off the beloved of their hearts by the strong hand.

" For I forgut to tell ye, madam," continued the damsel, putting her handkerchief to her eyes, "that puir Cuddie's in the hands of the Philistines as weel as young Milnwood, and he was brought here a prisoner this morning, and I was fain to speak Tarn Halliday fair, and fleech him, to let me near the puir creature ; but Cuddie wasna sae thankfu' as he needed till hae been neither," she added, and at the same time changed her tone, and briskly withdrew the handkerchief from her face ; " so I will ne'er waste my een " greeting about the matter. There wad be aye enow o' young men left, if they were to hang the tae half o' them."

The other inhabitants of the Castle were also in a state of dissatisfaction and anxiety. Lady Margaret thought that Colonel Grahame, in commanding an execution at the door of her house, and refusing to grant a reprieve at her request, had fallen short of the deference due to her rank, and had even encroached on her seignorial rights.

" The colonel," she said, " ought to have remembered, Brother, that the barony of Tillietudlem has the baronial privilege of pit and gallows ; and therefore, if the lad was to be executed on my estate (which I consider as an unhandsome thing, seeing it is in the possession of females, to whom such tragedies cannot be acceptable), he ought, at common law, to have been delivered up to my bailie, and justified at his sight."

" Martial law, Sister," answered Major Bellenden, " supersedes every other. But I must own I think Colonel Grahame rather deficient in attention to you; and I am not over and above pre-eminently nattered by his granting to young Evandale (I suppose because he is a lord, and has interest with the privy council) a request which he refused to so old a servant of the king as I am. But so long as the poor young fellow's life is saved, I can comfort myself with the fag-end of a ditty as old as myself." And therewithal he hummed a stanza : —

"Anil what though winter will pinch severe,
Through locks of grey, and a, cloak that 'a old]
Yet keep up thy heart, bold cavalier,
For a tup of sack shall fence the cold.

I must be your guest here to-day, Sister. I wish to hear the issue of this gathering on Loudon-hill, though I cannot conceive their standing a body of horse appointed like our guests this morning.— Woe's me, the time has been that I would have liked ill to have sate in biggit wa's waiting for the news of a skirmish to be fought within ten miles of me ! But, as the old song goes, —

For time will rust the brightest blade,
And years will break the strongest bow ;
Was ever wight so starkly made.
But time and years would overthrow ?"

"We are well pleased you will stay, Brother," said Lady Margaret; " I will take my old privilege to look after my household, whom this collation has thrown into some disorder, although it is uncivil to leave you alone."

" Oh, I hate ceremony as I hate a stumbling horse," replied the major. " Besides, your person would be with me, and your mind with the cold meat and reversionary pasties. — Where is Edith ? "

" Gone to her room a little evil-disposed, I am informed, and laid down in her bed for a gliff," said her grandmother; "as soon as she wakes, she shall take some drops."

"Pooh! pooh! she's only sick of the soldiers," answered Major Bellenden. "She's not accustomed to see one acquaintance led out to be shot, and another marching off to actual service, with some chance of not finding his way back again. She would soon be used to it, if the civil war were to break out again."

"God forbid, Brother!" said Lady Margaret.

"Ay, Heaven forbid, as you say, — and, in the mean time, I'll take a hit at trick-track with Harrison."

"He has ridden out, sir," said G-udyill, "to try if he can hear any tidings of the battle."

"D—n the battle," said the major; "it puts this family as much out of order as if there had never been such a thing in the country before, — and yet there was such a place as Kilsythe, John."

"Ay, and as Tippermuir, your honour," replied Gudyill, "where I was his honour my late master's rear-rank man."

"And Alford, John," pursued the major, "where I commanded the horse; and Inverlochy, where I was the Great Marquis's aide-de-camp; and Auld Earn, and Brig " Dee," (12)

"And Philiphaugh, your honour," said John.

"Umph!" replied the major; "the less, John, we say about that matter, the better."

However, being once fairly embarked on the subject of Montrose's campaigns, the major and John Gudyill carried on the war so stoutly as for a considerable time to keep at bay the formidable enemy called Time, with whom retired veterans, during the quiet close of a bustling life, usually wage an unceasing hostility.

It has been frequently remarked that the tidings of important events fly with a celerity almost beyond the power of credibility, and that reports, correct in the general point, though inaccurate in details, precede the certain intelligence, as if carried by the birds of the air. Such rumours anticipate the reality, not unlike to the "shadows of coming events" which occupy the imagination of the Highland Seer. Harrison, in his rule, encountered some sur;h report concerning the event of the battle, and turned his horse back to Tillietudlcm in great dismay, lie made it his first business to seek out the major, and interrupted him in the midst of a prolix account of the siege and storm of Dundee, with the ejaculation, "Heaven send, Major, that we do not see a siege of Tillietudlem before we are many days older?"

"How is that, Harrison? What the devil do you mean?" exclaimed the astonished veteran.

"Troth, sir, there is strong and increasing belief that Claver'se is clean broken, some say killed; that the soldiers are all dispersed; and that the rebels are hastening this way, threatening death and devastation to " that will not take the Covenant."

"I will never believe that," said the major, starting on his feet, — "I will never believe that the Life Guards would retreat before rebels, — and yet why need I say that," he continued, checking himself, "when I have seen &uch sights myself? — Send out Pike, and one or two of the servants, for intelligence, and let all the men in the Castle and in the village that can be trusted take up arms. This old tower may hold them play a bit, if it were but victualled and garrisoned, and it commands the pass between the high and low countries. — It's lucky I chanced to be here. — Go, muster men, Harrison. You, Gudyill, look what provisions you have, or can get brought in, and be ready, if the news be confirmed, to knock down as many bullocks as you have salt for. — The well never goes dry. — There are some old-fashioned guns on the battlements; if we had but ammunition, we should do well enough."

"The soldiers left some casks of ammunition at the Grange this morning, to bide their return," said Harrison.

"Hasten, then," said the major, "and bring it into the Castle, with every pike, sword, pistol, or gun that is within our reach; don't leave so much as a bodkin. — Lucky that I was here! — I will speak to my sister instantly "

Lady Margaret Bellenden was astounded at intelligence so unexpected and so alarming. It had seemed to her that the imposing force which had that morning left her walls was sufficient to have routed all the disaffected in Scotland, if collected in a body; and now her first reflection was upon the inadequacy of their own means of resistance to an army strong enough to have defeated Claverhouse and such select troops. "Woe's me! woe's me i" said she ; "what will all that we can do avail us, Brother] What will resistance do but bring sure destruction on the house, and on the bairn Edith ! for, God knows, I thinkna on my ain auld life."

"Come, Sister," said the major, "you must not be cast down ; the place is strong, the rebels ignorant and ill-provided: my brother's house shall not be made a den of thieves and rebels while old Miles Bellenden is in it. My hand is weaker than it was, but I thank my old grey hairs that I have some knowledge of war yet. Here comes Pike with intelligence. What news, Pike ? Another Philiphaugh job, eh?"

"Ay, ay," said Pike, composedly; "a total scattering. I thought this morning little gude would come of their newfangled gate of slinging their carabines."

"Whom did you see? — Who gave you the news?" asked the major.

"Oh, mair than half-a-dozen dragoon fellows that are " on the spur whilk to get first to Hamilton. They'll win the race, I warrant them, win the battle wha like."

"Continue your preparations, Harrison," said the alert veteran; "get your ammunition in, and the cattle killed. Send down to the borough-town for what meal you can gather. We must not lose an instant. — Had not Edith and you, Sister, better return to Charnwood, while we have the means of sending you there?"

"No, Brother," said Lady Margaret, looking very pale, but speaking with the greatest composure; "since the auld house is to be held out, I will take my chance in it. I have fled twice from it in my days, and I have aye found it desolate of its bravest and its bonniest when I returned; sae that I will e'en abide now, and end my pilgrimage in it."

¹⁴It may, on the whole, be the safest course both for Edith and you," said the major; "for the Whigs will rise all the way between this and Glasgow, and make your travelling there, or your dwelling at Charnwood, very unsafe."

"So be it then," said Lady Margaret; "and, dear brother, as the nearest blood-relation of my deceased husband, I deliver to you, by this symbol," — here she gave into his hand the venerable gold-headed staff of the deceased Earl of Torwood, — "the keeping and government and senesrhalship of my Tower of Tillietudlem, and the appurtenances thereof, with full power to kill, slay, and damage those who shall cssail the same, as freely aa I might do myself. And I trust you will so defend it as becomes a house in which his most sacred Majesty has not disdained —"

"Pshaw! Sister," interrupted the major, "we have no time to speak about the king and his breakfast just now."

And, hastily leaving the room, he hurried, with all the alertness of a young man of twenty-five, to examine the state of his garrison and superintend the measures which were necessary for defending the place.

The Tower of Tillietudlem, having very thick walls and very narrow windows, having also a very strong court-yard wall, with flanking turrets on the only accessible side, and rising on the other from the very verge of a precipice, was fully capable of defence against anything but a train of heavy artillery.

Famine or escalade was what the garrison had chiefly to fear. For artillery, the top of the Tower was mounted with some antiquated wall-pieces, and small cannons, which bore the old-fashioned names of culverins, sakers, demi-sakers, falcons, and falconets. These, the major, with the assistance of John Gudyill, caused to be scaled and loaded, and pointed them so as to command the road over the brow of the opposite hill by which the rebels must advance, causing, at the same time, two or three trees to be cut down, which would have impeded the effect of the artillery when it should be necessary to use it. With the trunks of these trees, and other materials, he directed barricades to be constructed upon the winding avenue which rose to the Tower along the high-road, taking care that each should command the other. The large gate of the court-yard lie barricadoed yet more strongly, leaving only a wicket open for the convenience of passage. What he had most to apprehend, was the slenderness of his garrison; for all the efforts of the steward were unable to get more than nine men under arms, himself and Gurlyill included, so much more popular was the cause of the insurgents than that of the Government. Major Bellenden and his trusty servant Pike made the garrison eleven in number, of whom one-half were old men. The round dozen might indeed have been made up, would Lady Margaret have consented that Goose Gibbie should again take up arms. But she recoiled from the proposal, when moved by Gudyill, with such abhorrent recollection of the former achievements of that luckless cavalier that she declared she would rather the Castle were lost than that he were to be enrolled in the defence of it. With eleven men, however, himself included, Major Bellenden determined to hold out the place to the uttermost.

The arrangements for defence were not made without the degree of fracas incidental to such occasions. Women shrieked, cattle bellowed, dogs howled, men rein to and fro, cursing and swearing without intermission, the lumbering of the old guns backwards and forwards shook the battlements, the court resounded with the hasty gallop of messengers who went and returned upon errands of importance, and the din of warlike preparation was mingled with the sound of female laments

Such a Babel of discord might have awakened the slumbers of the very dead, and therefore was not long ere it dispelled the abstracted reveries of Edith Bellenden. She sent out Jenny to bring her the cause of the tumult which shook the Castle to its very basis; but Jenny, once engaged in the bustling tide, found so much to ask and to hear that she forgot the state of anxious uncertainty in which she had left her young mistress. Having no pigeon to dismiss in pursuit of information when her raven messenger had failed to return with it, Edith was compelled to venture in quest of it out of the ark of her own chamber into the deluge of confusion which overflowed the rest of the Castle. Six voices, speaking at once, informed her, in reply to her first inquiry, that Claver'se and all his men were killed, and that ten thousand Whigs were marching to besiege the Castle, headed by John Balfour of Burley, young Milnwood, and Cuddie Headrigg. This strange association of persons seemed to infer the falsehood of the whole story; and yet the general bustle in the Castle intimated that danger was certainly apprehended.

"Where is Lady Margaret?" was Edith's second question.

"In her oratory," was the reply, — a cell adjoining to the chapel, in which the good old lady was wont to spend the greater part of the days destined by the rules of the Episcopal Church to devotional observances, as also the anniversaries of those on which she had lost her husband and her children, and, finally, those hours, in which a deeper and more solemn address to Heaven was called for, by national or domestic calamity.

"Where, then," said Edith, much alarmed, "is Major Bellendeu?"

"On the battlements of the Tower, madam, pointing the cannon," was the reply.

To the battlements, therefore, she made her way, impeded by a thousand obstacles, and found the old gentleman in the midst of his natural military element, commanding, rebuking, encouraging, instructing, and exercising all the numerous duties of a good governor.

"In the name of God, what is the matter, Uncle?" exclaimed Edith.

"The matter, my love?" answered the major, coolly, as, with spectacles on his nose, he examined the position of a gun,—"The matter? Why—raise her breech a thought more, John Gudyill—the matter? Why, Claver'se is routed, my dear, and the Whigs are coming down upon us in force, that's all the matter."

"Gracious powers!" said Edith, whose eye at that instant caught a glance of the road which ran up the river, "and yonder they come!"

"Yonder? where?" said the veteran; and, his eyes taking the same direction, he beheld a large body of horsemen coming down the path. "Stand to your guns, my lads!" was the first exclamation; "we'll make them pay toll as they pass the heugh.—But stay, stay, these are certainly the Life Guards."

"Oh, no, Uncle, no," replied Edith; "see how disorderly they ride, and how ill they keep their ranks: these cannot be the fine soldiers who left us this morning."

"Ah, my dear girl!" answered the major, "you do not know the difference between men before a battle and after a defeat; but the Life Guards it is, for I see the red and blue and the king's colours. I am glad they have brought them off, however."

His opinion was confirmed as the troopers approached nearer, and finally halted on the road beneath the Tower; while their commanding officer, leaving them to breathe and refresh their horses, hastily rode up the hill.

"It is Claverhouse, sure enough," said the major; "I am glad lie has escaped, but he has lost his famous black horse. Let Lady Margaret know, John Gudyill; order some refreshments; get oats for the soldiers' horses; and let us to the hall, Edith, to meet him. I surmise we shall hear but indifferent news."

CHAPTEE XX.

With careless gesture, mind unmoved,
On rade ha north the plain,
His seem in thrarig of fieriest strife,
When winner aye the sania

Hat dyknute.

COLONEL GRAHAME of Claverhouse met the family, assembled in the hall of the Tower, with the same serenity and the same courtesy which had graced his manners in the morning. He had even had the composure to rectify in part the derangement of his dress, to wash the signs of battle from his face and hands, and did not appear more disordered in his exterior than if returned from a morning ride.

"I am grieved, Colonel Grahame," said the reverend old lady, the tears trickling down her face, "deeply grieved."

"And I am grieved, my dear Lady Margaret," replied Claverhouse, "that this misfortune may render your remaining at Tillietudlem dangerous for you, especially considering your recent hospitality to the king's troops, and your well-known loyalty. And I came here chiefly to request Miss Bellenden and you to accept my escort (if you will not scorn that of a poor runaway) to Glasgow, from whence I will see you safely sent either to Edinburgh, or to Dumbarton Castle, as you shall think best."

"I am much obliged to you, Colonel Grahame," replied Lady Margaret; "but my brother, Major Bellenden, has taken on him the responsibility of holding out this house against the rebels; and, please God, they shall never drive Margaret Bellenden from her ain hearth-stane while there's a brave man that says he can defend it."

"And will Major Bellenden undertake this?" said Claverhouse, hastily, a joyful light glancing from his dark eye as he turned it on the veteran, "Yet why should I question it? It is of a piece with the rest of his life. — But have yuu the means, Major i?"

"All, but men and provisions, with which we are ill supplied," answered the major.

"As for men," said Claverhouse, "I will leave you a dozen or twenty fellows who will make good a breach against the devil. It will be of the utmost service if you can defend the place but a week, and by that time you must surely be relieved."

"I will make it good for that space, Colonel," replied the major, "with twenty-five good men and store of ammunition, if we should gnaw the soles of our shoes for hunger; but I trust we shall get in provisions from the country."

"And, Colonel Grahame, if I might presume a request," said Lady Margaret, "I would entreat that Sergeant Francis Stewart might command the auxiliaries whom you are so good as to add to the garrison of our people; it may serve to legitimate his promotion, and I have a prejudice in favour of his noble birth,"

"The sergeant's wars are ended, madam," said Grahame, in an unaltered tone, "and he now needs no promotion that an earthly master can give."

"Pardon me," said Major Bellenden, taking Claverhouse by the arm, and turning him away from the ladies, "but I am anxious for my friends : I fear you have other and more important loss. I observe another officer carries your nephew's standard."

"You are right, Major Bellenden," answered Claverhouse, firmly ; "my nephew is no more, He has died in his duty, as became him."

"Great God ! " exclaimed the major, "how unhappy ! — the handsome, gallant, high-spirited youth !"

"He was indeed all you say," answered Claverhouse; "poor Richard was to me as an eldest son, the apple of my eye, and my destined heir. But he died in his duty, and I — I — Major Bellenden" — he wrung the major's hand hard as he spoke — "I live to avenge him."

"Colonel Grahame," said the affectionate veteran, his eyes filling with tears, "I am glad to see you bear this misfortune with such fortitude."

"I am not a selfish man," replied Claverhouse, "though the world will tell you otherwise; I am not selfish either in my hopes or fears, my joys or sorrows. I have not been severe for myself, or grasping for myself, or ambitious for myself. The service of my master and the good of the country are what I have tried to aim at. I may, perhaps, have driven severity into cruelty, but I acted for the best; and now I will not yield to my own feelings a deeper sympathy than I have given to those of others."

"I am astonished at your fortitude under all the unpleasant circumstances of this affair," pursued the major.

"Yes," replied Claverhouse, "my enemies in the council will lay this misfortune to my charge: I despise their accusations. They will calumniate me to my sovereign: I can repel their charge. The public enemy will exult in my flight: I shall find a time to show them that they exult too early. This youth that has fallen stood betwixt a grasping kinsman and my inheritance, for you know that my marriage-bed is barren ; yet peace be with him ! the country can better spare him than your friend Lord Evandale, who, after behaving ver}' gallantly, has, I fear, also fallen."

"What a fatal day!" ejaculated the major. "I heard a report of this, but it was again contradicted ; it was added that the poor young nobleman's impetuoaity had occasioned the loss of this unhappy held."

"Not so, Major," said Grahame ; "let the living officers bear the blame, if there be any; and let the laurels flourish untarnished on the grave of the fallen. I do not, however, speak of Lord Evandale's death as certain, but killed, or prisoner, I fear he must be. Yet he was extricated from the tumult the last time we spoke together. We were then on the point of leaving the field with a rear-guard of scarce twenty men ; the rest of the regiment were almost dispersed."

"They have rallied again soon," said the major, looking from the window on the dragoons, who were feeding their horses and refreshing themselves beside the brook.

" Yes," answered Claverhouse, " my blackguards had little temptation either to desert or to straggle farther than they were driven by their first panic. There is small friendship and scant courtesy between them and the boors of this country; every village they pass is likely to rise on them, and so the scoundrels are driven back to their colours by a wholesome terror of spits, pike-staves, hay-forks, and broomsticks. — But now let us talk about your plans and wants, and the means of corresponding with you. To tell you the truth, I doubt being able to make a long stand at Glasgow, even when I have joined my Lord Ross; for this transient and accidental success of the fanatics will raise the devil through all the Western counties."

They then discussed Major Bellenden's means of defence, and settled a plan of correspondence, in case a general insurrection took place, as was to be expected. Claverhouse renewed his offer to escort the ladies to a place of safety; but, all things considered, Major Bellenden thought they would be in equal safety at Tillietudlem.

The Colonel then took a polite leave of Lady Margaret and Miss Bellenden, assuring them that, though he was reluctantly obliged to leave them for the present in dangerous circumstances, yet his earliest means should be turned to the redemption of his character as a good knight and true, and that they might speedily rely on hearing from or seeing him.

Ill of doubt and apprehension, Lady Margaret was little able to reply to a speech so much in unison with her usual expressions and feelings, but contented herself with bidding Claverhouse farewell, and thanking him for the succours which he had promised to leave them. Edith longed to inquire the fate of Henry Morton, but could find no pretext for doing so, and could only hope that it had made a subject of some part of the long private communication which her uncle had held with Claverhouse. On this subject, however, she Was disappointed; for the old cavalier was so deeply immersed in the duties of his own office that he had scarce said a single word to Claverhouse, excepting upon military matters, and most probably would have been equally forgetful, had the fate of his own son, instead of his friend's, lain in the balance.

Claverhouse now descended the bank on which the castle is founded, in order to put his troops again in motion, and Major Bellenden accompanied him to receive the detachment who were to be left in the tower.

"I shall leave Inglis with you," said Claverhouse, "for, as I am situated, I cannot spare an officer of rank; it is all we can do, by our joint efforts, to keep the men together. But should any of our missing officers make their appearance, I authorize you to detain them; for my fellows can with difficulty be subjected to any other authority."

His troops being now drawn up, he picked out sixteen men by name, and committed them to the command of Corporal Inglis, whom he promoted to the rank of sergeant on the spot.

"And hark ye, gentlemen," was his concluding harangue, "I leave you to defend the house of a lady, and under the command of her brother, Major Bellenden, a faithful servant to the king. You are to behave bravely, soberly, regularly, and obediently, and each of you shall be handsomely rewarded on my return to relieve the garrison. In case of mutiny, cowardice, neglect of duty, or the slightest excess in the family, the provost-marshal and cord, — you know I keep my word for good and evil."

He touched his hat as he bade them farewell, and shook hands cordially with Major Bellenden.

" Adieu," he said, " my stout-hearted old friend! Good luck be with you, and better times to us both."

The horsemen whom he commanded had been once more reduced to tolerable order by the exertions of Major Allan; and, though shorn of their splendour, and with their gilding all besmirched, made a much more regular and military appearance on leaving, for the second time, the Tower of Tillietudlem, than when they returned to it after their rout.

Major Bellenden, now left to his own resources, sent out several videttes, both to obtain supplies, of provisions, and especially of meal, and to get knowledge of the motions of the enemy. All the news he could collect on the second subject tended to prove that the insurgents meant to remain on the field of battle for that night. But they, also, had abroad their detachments and advanced guards to collect supplies, and great was the doubt and distress of those who received contrary orders, in the name of the king and in that of the Kirk, — the one commanding them to send provisions to victual the Castle of Tillietudlem, and the other enjoining them to forward supplies to the camp of the godly professors of true religion, now in arms for the cause of covenanted reformation, presently pitched at Drumclog, nigh to Loudon-hill. Each summons closed with a denunciation of fire and sword if it was neglected; for neither party could confide so far in the loyalty or zeal of those whom they addressed, as to hope they would part with their property upon other terms. So that the poor people knew not what hand to turn themselves to; and, to say truth, there were some who turned themselves to more than one,

"Thir kiltie times will drive the wisest " us daft," said Niel Blane, the prudent host of the Howff; "but I 'se aye keep a calm sough. — Jenny, what meal is in the girdel?"

"Four bows " aitmeal, twa bows o' bear, and twa bows o' pease," was Jenny's reply.

"Aweel, hinny," continued Niel Blane, sighing deeply, "let Bauldy drive the pease arid bear meal to the camp at Drumellog,—he's a Whig, and was the auld gudewife's pleughman: the mashlum bannocks will suit their muirland stamachs weel. He ma'Uii say it's the last unce o' meal in the house, or, if he scruples to tell a lie (as it's no likely he will when it's for the gude " the house), he may wait till Duncan Glen, the auld drucken trooper, drives up the aitmeal to Tillietudlem, wi' my dutifu' service to my leddy and the major, and I haena as muckle left as will mak my parritch; and if Duncan manage right, I 'll gie him a tass o' whiskey shall mak the blue low come out at his mouth."

"And what are we to eat oursells then, father," asked Jenny, "when we hae sent awa the hail meal in the ark and the girdel?"

"We maun gar wheat-flour serve us for a blink," said Niel, in a tone of resignation; "it's no that ill food, though far frae being sae hearty or kindly to a Scotchman's stomach as the curney aitmeal is; the Englishers live amaist upon't, — but, to be sure, the pock-puddings ken nae better."

While the prudent and peaceful endeavoured, like Niel Blane, to make fair weather with both parties, those who had more public (or party) spirit began to take arms on all sides. The royalists in the country were not numerous, but were respectable from their fortune and influence, being chiefly landed proprietors of ancient descent, who, with their brothers, cousins, and dependents to the ninth generation, as well as their domestic servants, formed a sort of militia, capable of defending their own peel-houses against detached bodies of the insurgents, of resisting their demand of supplies, and intercepting those which were sent to the Presbyterian camp by others. The news that the Tower of Tillietudlem was to be defended against the insurgents, afforded great courage and support to these feudal volunteers, who considered it as a stronghold to which they might retreat, in case, it should become impossible for them to maintain the desultory war they were now about to wage.

On the other hand, the towns, the villages, the farm-houses, the properties of small heritors, sent forth numerous recruits to the Presbyterian interest. These men had been the principal sufferers during the oppression of the time. Their minds were fretted, soured, and driven to desperation by the various exactions and cruelties to which they had been subjected; and although by no means united among themselves, either concerning the purpose of this formidable insurrection, or the means by which that purpose was to be obtained, most of them considered it as a door opened by Providence to obtain the liberty of conscience of which they had been long deprived, and to shake themselves free of a tyranny directed both against body and soul. Numbers of these men, therefore, took up arms, and, in the phrase of their time and party, prepared to cast in their lot with the victors of Loudon-hill.

CHAPTEK XXI.

Ananias I do not like the man he is a heathen,
And speaks the language of Canaan truly.

Tribulation. You must await his calling, and the coming Of the good spirit. You did ill to upbraid him.

The Alchemist.

WE return to Henry Morton, whom we left on the field of battle. He was eating, by one of the watch-fires, his portion of the provisions which had been distributed to the army, and musing deeply on the path which he was next to pursue, when Burley suddenly came up to him, accompanied by the young minister whose exhortation after the victory had produced such a powerful effect.

"Henry Morton," said Balfour, abruptly, "the council of the army of the Covenant, confiding that the son of Silas Morton can never prove a lukewarm Laodicean or an indifferent Gallic in this great day, have nominated you to be a captain of their host, with the right of a vote in their council, and all authority fitting for an officer who is to command Christian men."

"Mr. Balfour," replied Morton, without hesitation, "I feel this mark of confidence; and it is not surprising that a natural sense of the injuries of my country, not to mention those I have sustained in my own person, should make me sufficiently willing to draw my sword for liberty and freedom of conscience. But I will own to you that I must be better satisfied concerning the principles on which you bottom your cause ere I can agree to take a command amongst you."

"And can you doubt of our principles," answered Burley, "since we have stated them to be the reformation both of Church and State, the rebuilding of the decayed sanctuary, the gathering of the dispersed saints, and the destruction of the man of sin?"

"I will own frankly, Mr. Balfour," replied Morton, "much of this sort of language, which, I observe, is so powerful with others, is entirely lost on me. It is proper you should be aware of this before we commune further together." The young clergyman here groaned deeply. "I distress you, sir," said Morton; "but perhaps it is because you will not hear me out. I revere the Scriptures as deeply as you or any Christian can do. I look into them with humble hope of extracting a rule of conduct and a law of salvation. But I expect to find this by an examination of their general tenor, and of the spirit which they uniformly breathe, and not by wrestling particular passages from their context, or by the application of Scriptural phrases to circumstances and events with which they have often very slender relation."

The young divine seemed shocked and thunder-struck with this declaration, and was about to remonstrate.

"Hush, Ephraim!" said Burley, "remember he is but as a babe in swaddling-clothes. — Listen to me, Morton. I will speak to thee in the worldly language of that carnal reason, which is, for the present, thy blind and imperfect guide. What is the object for which thou art content to draw thy sword? Is it not that the Church and State should be reformed by the free voice of a free parliament, with such laws as shall hereafter prevent the executive government from spilling the blood, torturing and imprisoning the persons, exhausting the estates, and trampling upon the consciences of men, at their own wicked pleasure?"

"Most certainly," said Morton; "such I esteem legitimate causes of warfare, and for such I will fight while I can wield a sword"

"Nay, but," said Macbriar, "ye handle this matter too tenderly; nor will my conscience permit me to fard or daub over the causes of divine wrath —"

"Peace, Ephraim Macbriar¹" again interrupted Burley.

"I will not peace," said the young man. "Is it not the cause of my Master who hath sent me? Is it not a profane and Erastian destroying of his authority, usurpation of his power, denial of his name, to place either king or parliament in his place as the master and governor of his household, the adulterous husband of his spouse?"

"You speak well," said Burley, dragging him aside, "but not wisely. Your own ears have heard this night in council how this scattered remnant are broken and divided; and would ye now make a veil of separation between them? Would ye build a wall with unslaked mortar? If a fox go up, it will breach it."

"I know," said the young clergyman, in reply, "that thou art faithful, honest, and zealous even unto slaying; but, believe me, this worldly craft, this temporizing with sin and with infirmity, is in itself a falling away; and I fear me Heaven will not honour us to do much more for his glory, when we seek to carnal cunning and to a fleshly arm.

The sanctified end must be wrought by sanctified means."

"I tell thee," answered Balfour, "thy zeal is too rigid in this matter; we cannot yet do without the help of the Laodiceans and the Erastians; we must endure for a space the indulged in the midst of the council,—the sous of Zeruiah are yet too strong for us."

"I tell thee I like it not," said Macbriar; "God can work deliverance by a few as well as by a multitude. The host of the faithful that was broken upon Peitland-hills, paid but the fitting penalty of acknowledging the carnal interest of that tyrant and oppressor, Charles Stewart."

"Well, then," said Balfour, "thou knowest the healing resolution that the council have adopted, — to make a comprehending declaration that may suit the tender consciences of all who groan under the yoke of our present oppressors. Return to the council, if thou wilt, and get them to recall it, and send forth one upon narrower grounds. But abide not here to hinder my gaining over this youth, whom my soul travails for; his name alone will call forth hundreds to our banners."

"Do as thou wilt, then," said Macbriar; "but I will not assist to mislead the youth, nor bring him into jeopardy of life, unless upon such grounds as will insure his eternal reward."

The more artful Balfour then dismissed the impatient preacher, and returned to his proselyte.

That we may be enabled to dispense with detailing at length the arguments by which he urged Morton to join the insurgents, we shall take this opportunity to give a brief sketch of the person by whom they were used, and the motives which he had for interesting himself so deeply in the conversion of young Morton to his cause.

John Balfour of Kinloch, or Burley, — for he is designated both ways in the histories and proclamations of that melancholy period, — was a gentleman of some fortune, and of good family, in the county of Fife, and had been a soldier from his youth upwards. In the younger part of his life he had been wild and licentious, but had early laid aside open profligacy, and embraced the strictest tenets of Calvinism. Unfortunately, habits of excess and intemperance were more easily rooted out of his dark, saturnine, and enterprising spirit than the vices of revenge and ambition, which continued, notwithstanding his religious professions, to exercise no small sway over his mind. Daring in design, precipitate and violent in execution, and going to the very extremity of the most rigid recusancy, it was his ambition to place himself at the head of the Presbyterian interest.

To attain this eminence among the Whigs, he had been active in attending their conventicles, and more than once had commanded them when they appeared in arms, and beaten off the forces sent to disperse them. At length, the gratification of his own fierce enthusiasm, joined, as some say, with motives of private revenge, placed him at the head of that party who assassinated the Primate of Scotland, as the author of the sufferings of the Presbyterians. The violent measures adopted by Government to revenge this deed, not on the perpetrators only, but on the whole professors of the religion to which they belonged, together with long previous sufferings, without any prospect of deliverance except by force of arms, occasioned the insurrection, which, as we have already seen, commenced by the defeat of Claverhouse in the bloody skirmish of Loudon-hill.

But Burley, notwithstanding the share he had in the victory, was far from finding himself at the summit which his ambition aimed at. This was partly owing to the various opinions entertained among the insurgents concerning the murder of Archbishop Sharpe. The more violent among them did, indeed, approve of this act as a deed of justice executed upon a persecutor of God's Church through the immediate inspiration of the Deity; but the greater part of the Presbyterians disowned the deed as a crime highly culpable, although they admitted that the archbishop's punishment had by no means exceeded his deserts. The insurgents differed in another main point, which has been already touched upon. The more warm and extravagant fanatics condemned, as guilty of a pusillanimous abandonment of the rights of the Church, those preachers and congregations who were contented, in any manner, to exercise their religion through the permission of the ruling government, This, they said, was absolute Erastianism, or subjection of the Church of God to the regulations of an earthly government, and therefore but one degree better than prelacy or popery. Again the more moderate party were content to allow the king's title to the throne, and in secular affairs to acknowledge his authority, so long as it was exercised with due regard to the liberties of the subject, and in conformity to the laws of the realm. But the tenets of the wilder sect, called, from their leader, Eichard Cameron, by the name of Cameronians, went the length of disowning the reigning monarch and every one of his Successors who should not acknowledge the Solemn League and Covenant. The seeds of disunion were, therefore, thickly sown in this ill-fated party; and Balfour, however enthusiastic, and however much attached to the most violent of those tenets which we have noticed, saw nothing but ruin to the general cause if they were insisted on during this crisis, when unity was of so much consequence. Hence he disapproved, as we have seen, of the honest, downright, and ardent zeal of Macbriar, and was extremely desirous to receive the assistance of the moderate party of Presbyterians in the immediate overthrow of the Government, with the hope of being hereafter able to dictate to them what should be substituted in its place.

He was, on this account, particularly anxious to secure the accession of Henry Morton to the cause of the insurgents. The memory of his father was generally esteemed among the Presbyterians; and as few persons of any decent quality had joined the insurgents, this young man's family and prospects were such as almost insured his being chosen a leader. Through Morton's means, as being the son of his ancient comrade, Burley conceived he might exercise some influence over the more liberal part of the army, and ultimately, perhaps, ingratiate himself so far with them as to be chosen commander-in-chief, which was the mark at which his ambition aimed. He had, therefore, without waiting till any other person took up the subject, exalted to the council the talents and disposition of Morton, and easily obtained his elevation to the painful rank of a leader in this disunited and undisciplined army.

The arguments by which Balfour pressed Morton to accept of this dangerous promotion, as soon as he had gotten rid of his less wary and uncompromising companion, Macbriar, were sufficiently artful and urgent. He did not affect either to deny or to disguise that the sentiments which he himself entertained concerning church government went as far as those of the preacher who had just left them; but he argued that when the affairs of the nation were at such a desperate crisis, minute difference of opinion should not prevent those who, in general, wished well to their oppressed country, from drawing their swords in its behalf. Many of the subjects of division — as, for example, that concerning the Indulgence itself — arose, he observed, out of circumstances which would cease to exist, provided their attempt to free the country should be successful, seeing that the Presbytery, being in that case triumphant, would need to make no such compromise with the Government, and, consequently, with the abolition of the Indulgence all discussion of its legality would be at once ended. He insisted much and strongly upon the necessity of taking advantage of this favourable crisis, upon the certainty of their being joined by the force of the whole Western shires, and upon the gross guilt which those would incur, who, seeing the distress of the country, and the increasing tyranny with which it was governed, should, from fear or indifference, withhold their active aid from the good cause.

Morton wanted not these arguments to induce him to join in any insurrection which might appear to have a feasible prospect of freedom to the country. He doubted, indeed, greatly, whether the present attempt was likely to be supported by the strength sufficient to insure success, or by the wisdom and liberality of spirit necessary to make a good use of the advantages that might be gained. Upon the whole, however, considering the wrongs he had personally endured' and those which he had seen daily inflicted on his fellow-subjects ; meditating also upon the precarious and dangerous situation in which he already stood with relation to the Government, he conceived himself, in every point of view, called upon to join the body of Presbyterians already in arms.

But while he expressed to Burley his acquiescence in the vote which had named him a leader among the insurgents, and a member of their council of war, it was not without a qualification.

"I am willing," he said, "to contribute everything within my limited power to effect the emancipation of my country. But do not mistake me. I disapprove, in the utmost degree, of the action in which this rising seems to have originated; and no arguments should induce me to join it, if it is to be carried on by such measures as that with which it has commenced."

Burley's blood rushed to his face, giving a ruddy and dark glow to his swarthy brow.

"You mean," he said, in a voice which he designed should not betray any emotion,—"you mean the death of James Sharpe?"

"Frankly," answered Morton, "such is my meaning."

"You imagine, then," said Burley, "that the Almighty, in times of difficulty, does not raise up instruments to deliver his Church from her oppressors? You are of opinion that the justice of an execution consists, not in the extent of the sufferer's crime, or in his having merited punishment, or in the wholesome and salutary effect which that example is likely to produce upon other evil-doers' but hold that it rests solely in the robe of the judge, the height of the bench, and the voice of the doomster? Is not just punishment justly inflicted, whether on the scaffold or the moor? And where constituted judges, from cowardice, or from having cast in their lot with transgressors, suffer them not only to pass at liberty through the land, but to sit in the high places and dye their garments in the blood of the saints, is it not well done in any brave spirits who shall draw their private swords in the public cause?"

"I have no wish to judge this individual action," replied Morton, "further than is necessary to make you fully aware of my principles. I therefore repeat that the case you have supposed does not satisfy my judgment. That the Almighty, in his mysterious providence, may bring a bloody man to an end deservedly bloody, does not vindicate those who, without authority of any kind, take upon themselves to be the instruments of execution, and presume to call them the executors of divine vengeance."

"And were we not so?" said Burley, in a tone of fierce enthusiasm. "Were not we, was not every one who owned the interest of the Covenanted Church of Scotland, bound by that covenant to cut off the Judas who had sold the cause of God for fifty thousand merks a-year? Had we met him by the way as he came down from London, and there smitten him with the edge of the sword, we had done but the duty of men faithful to our cause, and to our oaths recorded in heaven. Was not the execution itself a proof of our warrant? Did not the Lord deliver him into our hands, when we looked out but for one of his inferior tools of persecution ' Did we not pray to be resolved how we should act, and was it not borne in on our 'hearts as if it had been written on them with the point of a diamond, 'Ye shall surely take him and slay him ' ? — Was not the tragedy full half an hour in acting ere the sacrifice was completed, and that in an open lieath, and within the patrols of their garrisons ? And yet who interrupted the great work ? What dog so much as bayed us during the pursuit, the taking, the slaying, and the dispersing ? Then whu will say — who dare say — that a mightier Arm than curs was not herein revealed ?"

"You deceive yourself, Mr. Halfour," said Morton; "such circumstances of facility of execution and escape have often attended the commission of the most enormous crimes. — But it is not mine to judge you. I have not forgotten that the way was opened to the former liberation of Scotland by an act of violence which no man can justify, — the slaughter of Gumming by the hand of Robert Bruce ; and, therefore, condemning this action as I do and must, I am not unwilling to suppose that you may have motives vindicating it in your own eyes, though not in mine or in those of sober reason. I only now mention it because I desire you to understand that I join a cause supported by men engaged in open war, which it is proposed to carry on according to the rules of civilized nations, without, in any respect, approving of the act of violence which gave immediate rise to it."

Balfuur bit his lip, and with difficulty suppressed a violent answer. He perceived, with disappointment, that, upon points of principle, his young brother-in-arms possessed a clearness of judgment and a firmness of mind which afforded but little hope of his being able to exert that degree of influence over him which he had expected to possess. After a moment's pause, however, he said, with coolness, " My conduct is open to men and angels. The deed was not done in a corner; I am here in arms to avow it, and care not where, or by whom, I am called on to do so, — whether in the council, the field of battle, the place of execution, or the day of the last great trial. I will not now discuss it further with one who is yet on the other side of the veil. But if you will cast in your lot with us as a brother, come with me to the council, who are still sitting, to arrange the future inarch of the army, and the means of improving our victory."

Morton arose and followed him in silence, not greatly delighted with his associate, and better satisfied with the general justice of the cause which he had espoused, than either with the measures or the motives of many of those who were embarked in it.

CHAPTEK XXII.

And look how many Grecian tents do stand
Hollow upon this plain, —so many hollow factions.

Troilus and Cressida.

IN a hollow of the hill, about a quarter of a mile from the field of battle, wag a shepherd's hut, — a miserable cottage, which, as the only enclosed spot within a moderate distance, the leaders of the Presbyterian army had chosen for their council-house. Towards this spot Burley guided Morton, who was surprised, as Jie approached it, at the multifarious confusion of sounds which issued from its precincts. The calm and anxious gravity which it might be supposed would have presided in councils held on such important subjects, and at a period so critical, seemed to have given place to discord wild, and loud uproar, which fell on the ear of their new ally as an evil augury of their future measures. As they approached the door they found it open, indeed, but choked up with the bodies and heads of countrymen, who, though no members of the council, felt no scruple in intruding themselves upon deliberations in which they were so deeply interested. By expostulation, by threats, and even by some degree of violence, Burley, the sternness of whose character maintained a sort of superiority over these disorderly forces, compelled the intruders to retire, and, introducing Morton into the cottage, secured the door behind them against impertinent curiosity. At a less agitating moment, the young man might have been entertained with the singular scene of which he now found himself an auditor and a spectator.

The precincts of the gloomy and ruinous hut were enlightened partly by some furze which blazed on the hearth, the smoke whereof, having no legal vent, eddied around, and formed over the heads of the assembled council a clouded canopy, as opaque as their metaphysical theology, through which, like stars through mist, were dimly seen to twinkle a few blinking candles, or rather rushes dipped in tallow, the property of the poor owner of the cottage, which were stuck to the walls by patches of wet clay. This broken and dusky light showed many a countenance elated with spiritual pride, or rendered dark by fierce enthusiasm ; and some whose anxious, wandering, and uncertain looks showed they felt themselves rashly embarked in a cause which they had neither courage nor conduct to bring to a good issue, yet knew not how to abandon, for very shame. They were, indeed, a doubtful and disunited body. The most active of their number were those concerned with Burley in the death of the Primate, four or five of whom had found their way to London-hill, together with other men of the same relentless and uncompromising zeal, who had, in various ways, given desperate and unpardonable offence to the Government

With them were mingled their preachers, men who had spurned at the Indulgence offered by Government, and preferred assembling their flocks in the wilderness, to worshipping in temples built by human hands, if their doing the latter should be constrained to admit any right on the part of their rulers to interfere with the supremacy of the Kirk. The other class of counsellors were such gentlemen of small fortune, and substantial farmers, as a sense of intolerable oppression had induced to take arms and join the insurgents. These also hark their clergymen with thorn; and such divines, having many of them taken advantage of the Indulgence, were prepared to resist the measures of their more violent brethren, who proposed a declaration in which they should give testimony against the warrants and instructions for Indulgence as sinful and unlawful acts. This delicate question had been passed over in silence in the first draught of the manifestoes which they intended to publish, of the reasons of their gathering in arms; but it had been stirred anew during Balfour's absence, and, to his great vexation, he now found that both parties had opened upon it in full cry, Macbriar, Kettle-drummle, and other teachers of the wanderers being at the very spring-tide of polemical discussion with Peter Poundtext, the indulged pastor of Milnwood's parish, who, it seems, had even girded himself with a broadsword, but, ere he was called upon to fight for the good cause of Presbytery in the field, was manfully defending his own dogmata in the council. It was the din of this conflict, maintained chiefly between Poundtext and Kettle-drummle, together with the clamour of their adherents, which had saluted Morton's ears upon approaching the cottage. Indeed, as both the di-vines were men well gifted with words and lungs, and each fierce, ardent, and intolerant in defence of his own doctrine, prompt in the recollection of texts wherewith they battered each other without mercy, and deeply impressed with the importance of the subject of discussion, the noise of the debate betwixt them fell little short of that which might have attended an actual bodily conflict.

Burley, scandalised at the disunion implied in this virulent strife of tongues, interposed between the disputants, and, by some general remarks on the unreasonableness of discord, a soothing address to the vanity of each party, and the exertion of the authority which his services in that day's victory entitled him to assume, at length succeeded in prevailing upon them to adjourn farther discussion of the controversy. But although Kettledrummle and Poundtext were thus for the time silenced, they continued to eye each other like two dogs, who, having been separated by the authority of their masters while fighting, have retreated, each beneath the chair of his owner, still watching each other's motions, and indicating, by occasional growls, by the erected bristles of the back and ears, and by the red glance of the eye, that their discord is unappeased, and that they only wait the first opportunity afforded by any general movement or commotion in the company, to fly once more at each other's throats.

Balfour took advantage of the momentary pause to present to the council Mr. Henry Morton of Milnwood, as one touched with a sense of the evils of the times, and willing to peril goods and life in the precious cause for which his father, the renowned Silas Morton, had given in his time a soul-stirring testimony. Morton was instantly received with the right hand of fellowship by his ancient pastor, Poundtext, and by those among the insurgents who supported the more moderate principles. The others muttered something about Erastianism, and reminded each other, in whispers, that Silas Morton, once a stout and worthy servant of the Covenant, had been a backslider in the day when the resolutioners had led the way in owning the authority of Charles Stewart, thereby making a gap whereat the present tyrant was afterwards brought in, to the oppression both of Kirk and country. They added, however, that, on this great day of calling, they would not refuse society with any who should put hand to the plough ; and so Morton was installed in his office of leader and counsellor, if not with the full approbation of his colleagues, at least without any formal or avowed dissent. They proceeded, on Burley's motion, to divide among themselves the command of the men who had assembled, and whose numbers were daily increasing. In this partition, the insurgents of Poundtext's parish and congregation were naturally placed under the command of Morton, — an arrangement mutually agreeable to both parties, as he was recommended to their confidence, as well by his personal qualities as his having been born among them.

When this task was accomplished, it became necessary to determine what use was to be made of their victory. Morton's heart throbbed high when he heard the Tower of Tillietudlem named as one of the most important positions to be seized upon. It commanded, as we have often noticed, the pass between the more wild and the more fertile country, and must furnish, it was plausibly urged, a stronghold and place of rendezvous to the Cavaliers and malignants of the district, supposing the insurgents were to march onward and leave it uninvested. This measure was particularly urged as necessary by Poundtext and those of his immediate followers, whose habitations and families might be exposed to great severities if this strong place were permitted to remain in possession of the royalists.

"I opine," Staid Poundtext, — for' like the other divines of the period, he had no hesitation in offering his advice upon military matters, of which he was profoundly ignorant, — "I opine that wo should take in and raze that stronghold of the woman Lady Margaret Bellenden, even though we should build a fort and raise a mount against it; fur the race is a rebellious and a bloody race, and their hand has been heavy on the children of the Covenant both in the former and the latter times. Their hook hath been in our noses, and their bridle betwixt our jaws."

"What are their means and men of defence?" said Burley. "The place is strong; but I cannot conceive that two women can make it good against a host."

"There is also," said Poundtext, "Harrison, the steward, and John Gudyill, even the lady's chief butler, who boasteth himself a man of war from his youth upward, and who spread the banner against the good cause with that man of Belial, James Grahame of Montrose."

"Pshaw !" returned Burley, scornfully, "a butler! "

"Also, there is that ancient malignant," replied Poundtext, "Miles Bellenden of Chamwood, whose hands have been dipped in the blood of the saints."

"If that," said Burley, "be Miles Bellenden, the brother of Sir Arthur, he is one whose sword will not turn back from battle; but he must now be stricken in years."

"There was word in the country as I rode along," said another of the council, "that so soon as they heard of the victory which has been given to us, they caused shut the gates of the Tower, and called in men and collected ammunition. They were ever a fierce and a malignant house."

"We will not, with my consent," said Burley, "engage in a siege which may consume time. We must rush forward and follow our advantage, by occupying Glasgow; for I do not fear that the troops we have this day beaten, even with the assistance of my Lord Ross's regiment, will judge it safe to await our coming."

"Howbeit," said Poundtext, "we may display a banner before the Tower, and blow a trumpet, and summon them to come forth. It may be that they will give over the place into our mercy, though they be a rebellious people. And we will summon the women to come forth of their stronghold, that is, Lady Margaret Bellenden and her granddaughter, and Jenny Dennison, which is a girl of an ensnaring eye, and the other maids, and we will give them a safe conduct, and send them in peace to the city, even to the town of Edinburgh. But John Gudyill and Hugh Harrison and Miles Bellenden we will restrain with fetters of iron, even as they, in times bypast, have done to the martyred saints."

"Who talks of safe conduct and of peace fa," said a shrill, broken, and overstrained voice from the crowd.

"Peace, brother Habakkuk," said Macbriar, in a soothing tone, to the speaker.

"I will not hold my peace," reiterated the strange and unnatural voice. "Is this a time to speak of peace, when the earth quakes, and the mountains are rent, and the rivers are changed into blood, and the two-edged sword is drawn from the sheath to drink gore as if it were water, and devour flesh as the fire devours dry stubble?"

While he spoke thus, the orator struggled forward to the inner part of the circle, and presented to Morton's wondering eyes a figure worthy of such a voice and such language. The rags of a dress which had once been black, added to the tattered fragments of a shepherd's plaid, composed a covering scarce fit for the purposes of decency, much less for those of warmth or comfort. A long beard, as white as snow, hung down on his breast, and mingled with bushy, uncombed, grizzled hair, which hung in elf-locks around his wild and staring visage. The features seemed to be extenuated by penury and famine, until they hardly retained the likeness of a human aspect. The eyes, grey, wild, and wandering, evidently betokened a bewildered imagination. He held in his hand a rusty sword, clotted with blood, as were his long, lean hands, which were garnished at the extremity with nails, like eagle's claws.

"In the name of Heaven, who is he?" said Morton, in a whisper to Poundtext, surprised, shocked, and even startled, at this ghastly apparition, which looked more like the resurrection of some cannibal priest, or Diuid red from his human sacrifice, than like an earthly mortal.

"It is Habakkuk Mucklewrath," answered Poundtext, in the same tone, "whom the enemy have long detained in captivity in forts and castles, until his understanding hath departed from him, and, as I fear, an evil demon hath possessed him. Nevertheless, our violent brethren will have it that he speaketh of the spirit, and that they fructify by his pouring forth."

Here he was interrupted by Mucklewrath, who cried in a voice that made the very beams of the roof quiver: "Who talks of peace and safe conduct? Who speaks of mercy to the bloody house of the malignants? I say take the infants and dash them against the stones; take the daughters and the mothers of the house and hurl them from the battlements of their trust, that the dogs may fatten on their blood as they did on that of Jezebel, the spouse of Ahab, and that their carcasses may be dung to the face of the field even in the portion of their fathers!"

"He speaks right,"¹¹ said more than one sullen voice from behind; "we will be honoured with little service in the great cause, if we already make fair weather with Heaven's enemies."

"This is utter abomination and daring impiety," said Morton, unable to contain his indignation. "What blessing can you expect in a cause, in which you listen to the mingled ravings of madness and atrocity?"

"Hush, young man!" said Kettledruminle, "and reserve thy censure for that for which thou canst render a reason. It is not for thee to judge into what vessels the spirit may be poured."

"We judge of the tree by the fruit," said Poundtext, "and allow not that to be of divine inspiration that contradicts the divine laws."

"You forget, brother Poundtext," said Macbriar, "that these are the latter days, when signs and wonders shall be multiplied."

Poundtext stood forward to reply; but ere he could articulate a word, the insane preacher broke in with a scream that drowned all competition.

"Who talks of signs and wonders? Aui not I Habakkuk Mucklewrath, whose name is changed to Magor-Missabib, because I am made a terror unto myself and unto all that are around me? I heard it — When did I hear it? Was it not in the Tower of the Bass, that overhangeth the wide wild sea? And it howled in the winds, and it roared in the billows, and it srreamed, and it whistled, and it clanged, with the screams and the clang and the whistle of the sea-birds, as they floated and flew and dropped and dived on the bosom of the waters. I tiaw iL — Where did I see it? Was it not from the high peaks of Dumbarton, when I looked westward upon the fertile land, and northward on the wild Highland hills, when the clouds gathered and the tempest came, and the lightnings of heaven flashed in sheets as wide as the banners of an host? — What did I see? — Dead corpses and wounded horses, the rushing together of battle, and garments rolled in blood. — What heard I? — The voice that cried, Slay, slay; smite, slay utterly; let not your eye have pity! Slay utterly, old and young, the maiden, the child, and the woman whose head is grey. Defile the house, and fill the courts with the slain!"

"We receive - the command," exclaimed more than one of the company. "Six days he hath not spoken nor broken bread, and now his tongue is unloosed. We receive the command; as he hath said, BO will we do."

Astonished, disgusted, and horror-struck at what he had seen and heard, Morton turned away from the circle and left the cottage. He was followed by Burley, who had his eye on his motions.

"Whither are you going?" said the latter, taking him by the arm.

"Anywhere, — I care not whither; but here I will abide no longer."

"Art thou so soon weary, young man?" answered Burley. "Thy hand is but now put to the plough, and wouldst thou already abandon it? Is this thy adherence to the cause of thy father?"

"No cause," replied Morton, indignantly, — "no cause can prosper, so conducted. One party declares for the ravings of a bloodthirsty madman; another leader is an old scholastic pedant; a third — " He stopped, and his companion continued the sentence: "Is a desperate homicide, thou wouldst say, like John Balfour of Burley? — I can bear thy misconstruction without resentment. Thou dost not consider that it is not men of sober and self-seeking minds who arise in these days of wrath to execute judgment and to accomplish deliverance. Hadst thou but seen the armies of England during her Parliament of 1640, whose ranks were filled with sectaries and enthusiasts wilder than the Anabaptists of Munster, thou wouldst have had more cause to marvel; and yet these men were unconquered on the field, and their hands wrought marvellous things for the liberties of the land."

"But their affairs," replied Morton, "were wisely conducted, and the violence of their zeal expended itself in their exhortations and sermons, without bringing divisions into their counsels, or cruelty into their conduct. I have often heard my father say so, and protest that he wondered at nothing so much as the contrast between the extravagance of their religious tenets, and the wisdom and moderation with which they conducted their civil and military affairs. But our councils seem all one wild chaos of confusion."

"Thou must have patience, Henry Morton," answered Balfour; "thou must not leave the cause of thy religion and country either for one wild word, or one extravagant action. Hear me. I have already persuaded the wiser of our friends that the counsellors are too numerous, and that we cannot expect that the Midiariites shall, by so large a number, be delivered into our hands. They have hearkened to my voice, and our assemblies will be shortly reduced within such a number as can consult and act together; and in them thou shalt have a free voice, as well as in ordering our affairs of war, and protecting those to whom mercy should be shown. Art thou now satisfied?"

"It will give me pleasure, doubtless," answered Morton, "to be the means of softening the horrors of civil war; and I will not leave the post I have taken, unless I see measures adopted at which my conscience revolts. But to no bloody executions after quarter asked, or slaughter without trial, will I lend countenance or sanction; and you may depend on my opposing them, with both heart and hand, as constantly and resolutely, if attempted by our own followers, as when they are the work of the enemy."

Balfour waved his hand impatiently.

"Thou wilt find," he said, "that the stubborn and hard-hearted generation with whom we deal, must be chastised with scorpions ere their hearts be humbled, and ere they accept the punishment of their iniquity. The word is gone forth against them, 'I will bring a sword upon you that shall avenge the quarrel of my Covenant,' But what is done shall be done gravely, and with discretion, like that of the worthy James Melvin, who executed judgment on the tyrant and oppressor, Cardinal Beaton."

"I own to you," replied Morton, "that I feel still more abhorrent at cold-blooded and premeditated cruelty than at that which is practised in the heat of zeal and resentment."

"Thou art yet but a youth," replied Balfour, "and hast not learned how light in the balance are a few drops of blood in comparison to the weight and importance of this great national testimony. But be not afraid; thyself shall vote and judge in these matters: it may be we shall see little cause to strive together anent them."

With this concession Morton was compelled to be satisfied for the present; and Burley left him, advising him to lie down and get some rest, as the host would probably move in the morning.

"And you," answered Morton, "do not you go to rest also?"

"No," said Burley; "my eyes must not yet know slumber. This is no work to be done lightly; I have yet to perfect the choosing of the committee of leaders, and I will call you by times in the morning to be present at their consultation."

He turned away, and left Morton to his repose.

The place in which he found himself was not ill adapted for the purpose, being a sheltered nook, beneath a large rockj well protected from the prevailing wind. A quantity of moss, with which the ground was overspread, made a couch soft enough for one who had soffered so much hardship and anxiety. Morton wrapped himself in the horseman's cloak which he had still retained, stretched himself on the ground, and had not long indulged in melancholy reflections on the state of the country and upon his own condition, ere he was relieved from them by deep and sound slumber.

The rest of the army slept on the ground, dispersed in groups which chose their beds on the fields as they could best find shelter and convenience. A few of the principal leaders held wakeful conference with Burley on the state of their affairs, and some watchmen were appointed, who kept themselves on the alert by chanting psalms, or listening to the exercises of the more gifted of their number.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Got with much ease; now merrily to horse

Henry IV. Parti.

WITH the first peep of day Henry awoke, and found the faithful Cuddie standing beside him with a portmanteau in his hand.

"I hae been just putting your honour's things in readiness again ye were waking," said Cuddie, "as is my duty, seeing ye has been sae gude as to tak me into your service."

"I take you into my service, Cuddie?" said Morton; "you must be dreaming."

"Na, na, stir," answered Cuddie; "didna I say, when I was tied on the horse yonder, that if ever ye gat loose I would be your servant, and ye didna, say no? And if that isna hiring, I kenna what is. Ye gae me nae arles, indeed, but ye had gien me eneugh before at Milnwood."

"Well, Cuddie, if you insist on taking the chance of my unprosperous fortunes —"

"Ou ay, I' se warrant us a' prosper weel eneugh," answered Cuddie, cheeringly, "an anes my auld mither was weel putten up. I hae begun the campaigning trade at an end that is easy eneugh to learn."

"Pillaging, I suppose?" said Morton; "for how else could you come by that portmanteau?"

"I wotna if it's pillaging, or how ye ca't," said Cuddie, "but it comes natural to a body, and it's a profitable trade. Our folk had tirl'd the dead dragoons as bare as bawbees before we were loose amaist. But when I saw the Whigs " weel yokit by the lugs to Kettledrumrule and the other chield, I set off at the lang trot on my ain errand and your honour's. Sae I took up the syke a wee bit, away to the right, where I saw the marks o' mony a horse-foot, and sure eneugh I cam to a place where there had been some clean leatherin', and a' the puir chields were lying there buskit wi' their claes just as they had put them on that morning, — naebody had found out that pose o' carcages; and wha suld be in the midst thereof (as my mither says) but our auld acquaintance, Sergeant Bothwell?"

"Ay, has that man fallen?" said Morton.

"Troth has he," answered Cuddie; "and his een were open and his brow bent, and his teeth clenched thegither like the jaws of a trap for fougarts when the spring's doun, — I was amaist feared to look at him. However, I thought to hae turn about " him, and sae I e'en ripped his pouches, as he had dune mony an honest man's; and here's your ain siller again (or your uncle's, which is the same) that he got at Milnwood that unlucky night that made us " sodgers thegither."

"There can be no harm, Cuddie," said Morton, "in making use of this money, since we know how he came by it; but you must divide with me."

"Bide a wee, bide a wee," said Cuddie. "Weel, and there's a bit ring he had hinging in a black ribbon doun on his breast. I am thinking it has been a love-token, puir fallow, —there's naebody sae rough but they hae aye a kind heart to the lasses.

And there's a book "a wheen papers, and I got twa or three odd things that I'll keep to myaell, forby."

"Upon my word, you have made a very successful foray for a beginner," said his new master.

"Haena I e'en now?" said Cuddie, with great exultation. "I tauld ye I wasna that dooms stupid, if it cam to lifting things. And forby, I hae gotten twa gude horse. A feckless loon of a Straven weaver, that has left his loom and his bein house to sit skirling on a cauld hill-side, had catched twa dragoon ndgs, and he could neither gar them hup nor wind, sae he took a gowd noble for them baith, — I suld hae tried him "half the siller, but it's an unco ill place to get change in. Ye "I find the siller's missing out o' Bothwell's purse."

"You have made a most excellent and useful purchase, Cuddie; but what is that portmanteau?"

"The pockmantle?" answered Cuddie. "It wag Lord Evandale's yesterday, and it's yours the day; I fand it ahint the bush o' broom yonder, — ilka dog has its day. Ye ken what the auld sang says, —

Take turn about, Mither, qu' Tarn o' the Linn.

And, speaking o' that, I maun gang and see about my mither, puir auld body, if your honour liasna ony immediate commands."

"But, Cuddie," said Morton, "I really cannot take these things from you without some recompense."

"Hout fie, stir," answered Cuddie, "ye suld aye be taking; for recompense, ye may think about that some other time, — I hae seen gay weel to mysell wi' some things that fit me better. What could I do wi' Lord Evandale's braw claes? Sergeant Bothwell's will serve me weel eneugh."

Not being able to prevail on the self-constituted and disinterested follower to accept of anything for himself out of these warlike spoils, Morton resolved to take the first opportunity of returning Lord Evandale's property, supposing him yet to be alive; and, in the mean while, did not hesitate to avail himself of Cuddie's prize, so far as to appropriate some changes of linen and other trifling articles amongst those of more value which the portman-teau contained.

He then hastily looked over the papers which were found in Bothwell's pocket-book. These were of a miscellaneous description. The roll of his troop, with the names of those absent on furlough, memorandums of tavern-bills, and lists of delinquents who might be made subjects of fine and persecution, first presented themselves, along with a copy of a warrant from the Privy Council to arrest certain persons of distinction therein named. In another pocket of the book were one or two commissions which Bothwell had held at different times, and certificates of his services abroad, in which his courage and military talents were highly praised. But the most remarkable paper was an accurate account of his genealogy, with reference to many documents for establishment of its authenticity; subjoined was a list of the ample possessions of the forfeited Earls of Bothwell, and a particular account of the proportions in which King James VI. had bestowed them on the courtiers and nobility by whose descendants they were at present actually possessed; beneath this list was written, in red letters, in the hand of the deceased, Haud Immeinor, F. S. E. B., the initials probably intimating Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell. To these documents, which strongly painted the character and feelings of their deceased proprietor, were added some which showed him in a light greatly different from that in which we have hitherto presented him to the reader.

In a secret pocket of the book, which Morton did not discover without some trouble, were one or two letters, written in a beautiful female hand. They were dated about twenty years back, bore no address, and were subscribed only by initials. Without having time to peruse them accurately, Morton perceived that they contained the elegant yet fond expressions of female affection directed towards an object whose jealousy they endeavoured to soothe, and of whose hasty, suspicious, and impatient temper the writer seemed gently to complain. The ink of these manuscripts had faded by time, and, notwithstanding the great care which had obviously been taken for their preservation, they were in one or two places chafed so as to be illegible.

¹¹ "It matters not," — these words were written on the envelope of that which had suffered most, — "I have them by heart."

With these letters was a lock of hair wrapped in a copy of verses, written obviously with a feeling which atoned, in Morton's opinion, for the roughness of the poetry, and the conceits with which it abounded, according to the taste of the period: —

Thy hue, dear pledge, is pure and bright,
 Ah in that well-remember'd night,
 When first thy mystic braid was wove,
 And first my Agnss whisper'd love.
 Since then, how often hast thou press'd
 The torrid zone of tins wild breast,
 Whose wrath and hate have sworn to dwell
 With the first ain which peopled hell;
 A breast whose blood's a troubled ocean,
 Each throb the earthquake's wild commotion I —

Oh, if such clime them canst endure,
Yet keep thy hue unstain'd and pure,
What conquest o'er each erring thought
Of that fierce realm had Agnes wrought
I had not wander'd wild and wide,
With such an angel for my guide;
Nor heaven nor earth could then reprove me,
If she had lived, and lived to love me
Not then this world's wild joys had been
To me our savage hunting-scene,
My sole delight the headlong race,
And frantic hurry of the chase,
To start, pursue, and bring to bay,
Kush in, drag down, and rend my prey,
Then from the carcass turn away ;
Mine ireful mood had sweetness tamed,
And soothed each wound which pride inflamed,—»
Yes, God and man might now approve me.
If thou hadst lived, and lived to love me !

As he finished reading these lines, Morton could not forbear reflecting with compassion on the fate of this singular and most unhappy being, who, it appeared, while in the lowest state of degradation, and almost of contempt, had his recollections continually fixed on the high station to which his birth seemed to entitle him; and, while plunged in gross licentiousness, was in secret looking back with bitter remorse to the period of his youth, during which he had nourished a virtuous, though unfortunate, attachment.

"Alas! what are we," said Morton, "that our best and most praiseworthy feelings can be thus debased and depraved; that honourable pride can sink into haughty and desperate indifference for general opinion, and the sorrow of blighted affection inhabit the same bosom which licence, revenge, and rapine have chosen for their citadel? But it is the same throughout; the liberal principles of one man sink into cold and unfeeling indifference, the religious zeal of another hurries him into frantic and savage enthusiasm. Our resolutions, our passions, are like the waves of the sea, and, without the aid of Him who formed the human breast, we cannot say to its tides, 'Thus far shall ye come, and no farther.'¹

While he thus moralised, he raised his eyes, and observed that Burley stood before him.

"Already awake?" said that leader. "It is well, and shows zeal to tread the path before you. — What papers are these?" he continued.

Morton gave him some brief account of Cuddie's successful marauding party, and handed him the pocket-book of Bolhwell, with its contents. The Cameronian leader looked with some attention on such of the papers as related to military affairs or public business; but when he came to the verses, he threw them from him with contempt.

"I little thought," he said, "when, by the blessing of God, I passed my sword three times through the body of that arch tool of cruelty and persecution, that a character so desperate and so dangerous could have stooped to an art as trifling as it is profane. But I see that Satan can blend the most different qualities in his well-beloved and chosen agents, and that the same hand which can wield a club or a slaughter-weapon against the godly in the valley of destruction, can touch a tinkling lute or a gittern to soothe the ears of the dancing daughters of perdition in their Vanity Fair."

"Your ideas of duty, then," said Morton, "exclude love of the fine arts, which have been supposed in general to purify and to elevate the mind?"

"To me, young man," answered Burley, "and to those who think as I do, the pleasures of this world, under whatever name disguised, are vanity, as its grandeur and power are a snare. We have but one object on earth, and that is to build up the temple of the Lord."

"I have heard my father observe," replied Morton, "that many who assumed power in the name of Heaven, were as severe in its exercise, and as unwilling to part with it, as if they had been solely moved by the motives of worldly ambition. But of this another time. — Have you succeeded in obtaining a committee of the council to be nominated?"

"I have," answered Burley. "The number is limited to six, of which you are one, and I come to call you to their deliberations."

Morton accompanied him to a sequestered grass-plot, where their colleagues awaited them. In this delegation of authority, the two principal factions which divided the tumultuary army had each taken care to send three of their own number. On the part of the Gameronians were Burley, Macbriar, and Kettledrummle; and on that of the moderate party, Poundtext, Henry Morton, and a small proprietor called the Laird of Langcale. Thus the two parties were equally balanced by their representatives in the committee of management, although it seemed likely that those of the most violent opinions were, as is usual in such cases, to possess and exert the greater degree of energy. Their debate, however, was conducted more like men of this world than could have been expected from their conduct on the preceding evening. After maturely considering their means and situation, and the probable increase of their numbers, they agreed that they would keep their position for that day, in order to refresh their men and give time to reinforcements to join them, and that, on the next morning, they would direct their march towards Tillietudlem, and summon that stronghold, as they expressed it, of malignancy. If it was not surrendered to their summons, they resolved to try the effect of a brisk assault; and, should that miscarry, it was settled that they should leave a part of their number to blockade the place, and reduce it, if possible, by famine, while their main body should march forward to drive Claverhouse and Lord Ross from the town of Glasgow. Such was the determination of the council of management; and thus Morton's first enterprise in active life was likely to be the attack of a castle belonging to the parent of his mistress, and defended by her relative, Major Bellenden, to whom he personally owed many obligations! He felt fully the embarrassment of his situation, yet consoled himself with the reflection that his newly-acquired power in the insurgent army would give him, at all events, the means of extending to the inmates of Tillietudlem a protection which no other circumstance could have afforded them; and he was not without hope that he might be able to mediate such an accommodation betwixt them. and the Presbyterian army as should secure them a safe neutrality during the war which was about to ensue.

CHAPTEK XXIV.

There came a knight from the field nf slain,
His steed was drenched in blood and rain.

FINLA.Y.

WE must now return to the fortress of Tillietudlem and its inhabitants. The morning, being the first after the btitle of Loudon-hill, had dawned upon its battlements, and the defenders had already resumed the labours by which they proposed to render the place tenable, when the watchman, who was placed in a high tuiret, called the War-der's Tower, gave the signal that a horseman was approaching. As he came nearer, his dress indicated an officer of the Life Guards ; and the slowness of his horse's pace, as well as the manner in which the rider stooped on the saddle-bow, plainly showed that he was sick or wounded. The wicket was instantly open to receive him, and Lord Evandale rode into the court-yard, so reduced by loss of blood that he was unable to dismount without assistance. As he entered the hall, leaning upon a servant, the ladies shrieked with surprise and terror; for, pale as death, stained with blood, his regimentals soiled and torn, and his hair matted and disordered, he resembled rather a spectre than a human being. But their next exclamation was that of joy at his escape.

" Thank God!" exclaimed Lady Margaret, " that you are here, and have escaped the hands of the bloodthirsty murderers who have cut off so many of the king's loyal servants ! "

" Thank God ! " added Edith, " that you are here and in safety ! We have dreaded the worst. But you are wounded, and I fear we have little the means of assisting you."

" My wounds are only sword-cuts," answered the young nobleman, as he reposed himself on a seat ; "the pain is not worth mentioning, and I should not even feel exhausted, but for the loss of blood. But it was not my purpose to bring my weakness to add to your danger and distress, but to relieve them, if possible. What can I do for you?— Permit me," he added, addressing Lady Margaret, — " permit me to think and act as your son, my dear madam, — as your brother, Edith ! "

He pronounced the last part of the sentence with some emphasis, as if he feared that the apprehension of his pretensions as a suitor might render his proffered services unacceptable to Miss Bellenden. She was not insensible to his delicacy, but there was no time for exchange of sentiments.

" We are preparing for our defence," said the old lady, with great dignity. " My brother has taken charge of our garrison; and, by the grace of God, we will give the rebels such a reception as they deserve,"

" How gladly," said Evandale, " would I share in the defence of the Castle ! But in my present state I should be but a burden to you, — nay, something worse ; for the knowledge that an officer of the Life Guards was in the Castle would be sufficient to make these rogues more desperately earnest to possess themselves of it. If they find it defended only by the family, they may possibly march on to Glasgow rather than hazard an assault,"

"And can you think so meanly of us, my lord," said Edith, with the generous burst of feeling which woman so often evinces, and which becomes her so well, her voice faltering through eagerness, and her brow colouring with the noble warmth which dictated her language, — "Can you think so meanly of your friends as that they would permit such considerations to interfere with their sheltering and protecting you at a moment when you are unable to defend yourself, and when the whole country is filled with the enemy? Is there a cottage in Scotland whose owners would permit a valued friend to leave it in such circumstances? And can you think we will allow you to go from a castle which we hold to be strong enough for our own defence?"

"Lord Evaiidale need never think of it," said Lady Margaret. "I will dress his wounds myself, — it is all an old wife is fit for in war time; but to quit the Castle of Tilhetudlem when the sword of the enemy is drawn to slay him, — the meanest trooper that ever wore the king's coat on his back should not do so, much less my young Lord Evandale. Ours is not a house that ought to brook such dishonour. The Tower of Tillietudlem has been too much distinguished by the visit of his most sacred —"

Here she was interrupted by the entrance of the major.

"We have taken a prisoner, my dear uncle," said Edith, — "a wounded prisoner; and he wants to escape from us. You must help us to keep him by force."

" Lord Evandale !" exclaimed the veteran. " I am as much pleased as when I got my first commission. Claverhouse reported you were killed, or missing at least."

" I should have been slain, but for a friend of yours," said Lord Evandale, speaking with some emotion, and bending his eyes on the ground, as if he wished to avoid seeing the impression that what he was about to say would make upon Miss Bellenden. " I was unhorsed and defenceless, and the sword raised to despatch me, when young Mr. Morton, the prisoner for whom you interested yourself yesterday morning, interposed in the most generous manner, preserved my life, and furnished me with the means of escaping."

As he ended the sentence, a painful curiosity overcame his first resolution ; he raised his eyes to Edith's face, and imagined he could read, in the glow of her cheek and the sparkle of her eye, joy at hearing of her lover's safety and freedom, and triumph at his not having been left last in the race of generosity. Such, indeed, were her feelings ; but they were also mingled with admiration of the ready frankness with which Lord Evandale had hastened to bear witness to the merit of a favoured rival, and to acknowledge an obligation which, in all probability, he would rather have owed to any other individual in the world.

Major Bellenden, who would never have observed the emotions of either party, even had they been much more markedly expressed, contented himself with saying, " Since Henry Morton has influence with these rascals, I am glad he has so exerted it; but I hope he will get clear of them as soon as he can. Indeed, I cannot doubt it. I know his principles, and that he detests their cant and hypocrisy. I have heard him laugh a thousand times at the pedantry of that old Presbyterian scoundrel Poundtext, who, after enjoying the indulgence of the Government for so many years, has now, upon the very first ruffle, shown himself in his own proper colours, and set off, with three parts of his cropped congregation, to join the host of the fanatics. — But how did you escape after leaving the field, my lord?"

"I rode for my life, as a recreant knight must," answered Lord Evamlale, smiling. "I took the route where I thought I had least chance of meeting with any of the enemy, and I found shelter for several hours, — you will hardly guess where"

"At Castle Bracklan, perhaps," said Lady Margaret; "or in the house of some other loyal gentleman?"

"No, madam. I was repulsed, under one mean pretext or another, from more than one house of that description, for fear of the enemy following my traces; but I found refuge in the cottage of a poor widow whose husband had been shot within these three months by a party of our corps, and whose two sons are at this very moment with the insurgents."

"Indeed?" said Lady Margaret Bellenden; "and was a fanatic woman capable of such generosity? But she disapproved, I suppose, of the tenets of her family?"

"Far from it, madam," continued the young nobleman; "she was in principle a rigid recusant, but she saw my danger and distress, considered me as a fellow-creature, and forgot that I was a Cavalier and a soldier. She bound my wounds and permitteil me to rest upon her bed, concealed me from a party of the insurgents who were seeking for stragglers, supplied me with food, and did not suffer me to leave my place of refuge until she had learned that I had every chance of getting to this Tower without danger."

"It was nobly done," said Miss Belleiiden • "and I trust you will have an opportunity of rewarding her generosity."

"I am running up an arruar of obligation on all sides, Miss Bellenden, during these unfortunate occurrences," replied Lord Evandale; "but wlen I can attain the means of showing my gratitude, the will shall not be wanting"

All now joined in pressing Lord Evandale to relinquish his intention nf leaving the Castle; but the argument of Major Bellenden proved the most effectual

"Your presence in the Castle will be most useful, if not absolutely necessary, my lord, in order tn maintain, by your authority, proper discipline among the fellows whom Claverhouse has left in gcirrison here, and who do not prove to be of the most orderly description of inmates ; and, indeed, we have the colonel's authority, for that very purpose, to detain any officer of his regiment who might pass this way."

"That," said Lord Evandale, "is an unanswerable argument, since it shows me that my residence here may be useful, even in my present disabled state."

"For your wounds, my lord," said the major, "if my sister, Lady Bellenden, will undertake to give battle to any feverish symptom, if such should appear, I will answer that my old campaigner, Gideon Pike, shall dress a flesh-wound with any of the incorporation of barber-surgeons. He had enough of practice in Montrose's time, for we had few regularly bred army chirurgeons, as you may well suppose.— You agree to stay with us, then ?"

"My reasons for leaving the Castle," said Lord Evandale, glancing a look towards Edith, " though they evidently seem weighty, must needs give way to those which infer the power of serving you. May I presume, Major, to inquire into the means and plan of defence which you have prepared ? or can I attend you to examine the works ?"

It did not escape Miss Bellenden that Lord Evandale seemed much exhausted both in body and mind. " I think, sir," she said, addressing the major, " that since Lord Evandale condescends to become an officer of our garrison, you should begin by rendering him amenable to your authority, and ordering him to his apartment, that he may take some refreshment ere he enters on military discussions."

" Edith is right," said the old lady, " you must go instantly to bed, my lord, and take some febrifuge, which I will prepare with my own hand ; and my lady-in-waiting, Mistress Martha Weddell, shall make some friar's chicken, or something very light. I would not advise wine. — John Gudyill, let the housekeeper make ready the chamber of dais. Lord Evandale must lie down instantly. Pike will take off the dressings and examine the state of the wounds."

"These are melancholy preparations, madam," said Lord Evandale, as he returned thanks to Lady Margaret, and was about to leave the hall, " but I must submit to your ladyship's directions; and I trust that your skill will soon make me a more able defender of your castle than I am at present. Yon must render my body serviceable as soon as you can, for you have no use for my head while you have Major Bellenden."

With these words he left the apartment.

"An excellent young man, and a modest," said the major.

"None of that conceit," said Lady Margaret, "that often makes young folk suppose they know better how their complaints should be treated than people that have had experience."

"And so generous and handsome a young nobleman," said Jenny Dennison, who had entered during the latter part of this conversation, and was now left alone with her mistress in the hall, the major returning to his military cares, and Lady Margaret to her medical preparations.

Edith only answered these encomiums with a sigh; but, although silent, she felt and knew better than any one how much they were merited by the person on whom they were bestowed. Jenny, however, failed not to follow up her blow.

"After ", it's true that my lady says, — there's nae trusting a Presbyterian; they are "faithless, man-sworn loons. Whae wad hae thought that young Milnwood and Cuddie Headrigg wad hae taen on "thae rebel blackguards?"

"What do you mean by such improbable nonsense, Jenny?" said her young mistress, very much displeased.

"I ken it's no pleasing for you to hear, madam," answered Jenny, hardily, "and it's as little pleasant for me to tell; but as gude ye suld ken a' about it sune as syne, for the haill Castle's ringin wi V

" Ringing with what, Jenny ? Have you a mind to drive me mad ?" answered Edith, impatiently.

" Just that Henry Morton of Milnwood is out wi' the rebels, and ane o' their chief leaders."

"It is a falsehood !" said Edith, — " a most base calumny ! and you are very bold to dare to repeat it to me. Henry Morton is incapable of such treachery to his king and country, — such cruelty to me — to — to all the innocent and defenceless victims, I mean, who must suffer in a civil war. I tell you he is utterly incapable of it, in every sense."

^ Dear ! dear ! Miss Edith," replied Jenny, still constant to her text, "they maun be better acquainted wi' young men than I am, or ever wish to be, that can tell preceesely what they're capable or no capable o'. But there has been Trooper Tarn, and another chield, out in bonnets and grey plaids, like countrymen, to recon—reconnoitre, — I think John Gudyill ca'd it; and they hae been among the rebels, and brought back word that they had seen young Milnwood mounted on ane o' the dragoon horses that was taen at Loudon-hill, armed wi' swords and pistols, like wha but him, and hand and glove wi' the foremost o' them, and dreeling and commanding the men ; and Cuddie at the heels " him, in ane " Sergeant Bothwell's laced waistcoats, and a cockit hat with a bab o' blue ribbands at it for the auld cause o' the Covenant (but Cuddie aye liked a blue ribband), and a roffled sark, like ony lord o' the land, — it sets the like o' him, indeed ! "

"Jenny," said her young mistress, hastily, "it is impossible these men's report can be true; my uncle has heard nothing of it at this instant."

" Because Tarn Halliday," answered the hand-maiden, "caine in jusb five minutes after Lord

Evandale ; and when he heard his lordship was in the Castle, he swore (the profane loon!) he would be d—d ere he would make the report, as he ca'd it, of his news to Major Bellenden, since there was an officer of his ain regiment in the garrison. Sae he wad have said naething till Lord Evandale wakened the next morning ; only he tauld me about it¹¹ (here Jenny looked a little down), "just to vex me about Cuddie."

"Poh, you silly girl," said Edith, assuming some courage, "it is all a trick of that fellow to teaze you."

"Na, madam, it canna be that, for John Gudyill took the other dragoon (he's an auld hard-favoured man, 1 wotna his name) into the cellar, and gae him a tass o' brandy to get the news out o' him, and he said just the same as Tain Halliday, word for word; and Mr. Gudyill was in sic a rage that he tauld it a' ower again to us, and says the haill rebellion is owing to the nonsense "my leddy and the major, and Lord Evandale, that begged off young Milnwood and Cudilie yesterday morning, for that, if they had suffered, the country wad hae been quiet,—and troth, I am muckle o' that opinion mysell."

This last commentary Jenny added to her tale, in resentment of her mistress's extreme and obstinate incredulity. She was instantly alarmed, however, by the effect which her news produced upon her young lady,—an effect rendered doubly violent by the High-Church principles and prejudices in which Miss Bellenden had been educated. Her complexion became as pale as a corpse, her respiration so difficult that it was on the point of altogether failing her, and her limbs so incapable of supporting her that she sunk, rather than sat, down upon one of the seats in the hall, and seemed on the eve of fainting. Jenny tried cold water, burnt feathers, cutting of laces, and all other remedies usual in hysterical cases, hut without any immediate effect.

"God forgie me! what hae I done?" said the repentant fille-de-chambre. "I wish my tongue had been cuttit out! Wha wad hae thought o' her taking on that way, and " for a young lad? — Oh, Miss Edith, dear Miss Edith, haud your heart up about it; it's maybe no true for a' that I hae said. Oh, I wish my mouth had been blistered! A', body tells me my tongue will do me a mischief some day. What if my leddy comes? or the major? — And she's sitting in the throne, too, that naebody has sate in since that weary morning the king was here! — Oh, what will I do! Oh, what will become o' us!"

While Jenny Dennison thus lamented herself and her mistress, Edith slowly returned from the paroxysm into which she had been thrown by this unexpected intelligence.

"If he had been unfortunate," said she, "I never would have deserted him. I never did so even when there was danger and disgrace in pleading his cause. If he had died, I would have mourned him, if he had been unfaithful, I would have forgiven him; but a rebel to his king, a traitor to his country, the associate and colleague of cut-throats and common stabbers, the persecutor of all that is noble, the professed and blasphemous enemy of all that is sacred, — I will tear him from my heart, if my life-blood should ebb in the effort!"

She wiped her eyes, and rose hastily from the great chair (or throne, as Lady Margaret used to call it), while the terrified damsel hastened to shake up the cushion, and efface the appearance of any one having occupied that sacred seat; although King Charles himself, considering the youth and beauty, as well as the affliction, of the momentary usurper of his hallowed chair, would probably have thought very little of the profanation. She then hastened officiously to press her support on Edith, as she paced the hall, apparently in deep meditation.

"Tak my arm, madam; better just tak my arm; sorrow maun hae its vent, and doubtless —"

"No, Jenny," said Edith, with firmness, "you have seen my weakness, and you shall see my strength."

"But ye leaned on me the other morning, Miss Edith, when ye were sae sair grieved."

"Misplaced and erring affection may require support, Jenny, — duty can support itself; yet I will do nothing rashly. I will be aware of the reasons of his conduct, and then — cast him off for ever," was the firm and determined answer of her young lady.

Overawed by a manner of which she could neither conceive the motive nor estimate the merit, Jenny muttered between her teeth, "Odd, when the first flight 'a ower, Miss Edith taks it as easy as I do, and muckle easier; and I'm sure I ne'er cared half sae muckle about Cuddie Headrigg as she did about young Milnwood. Forby that, it's maybe as weel to hae a friend on baith sides; for if the Whigs suld come to tak the Castle, as it 's like they may, when there's sae little victual, and the dragoons wasting what's o't, ou, in that case, Milnwood and Cuddie wad hae the upper hand, and their freendship wad be worth siller, — I was thinking sae this morning or I heard the news."

With this consolatory reflection the damsel went about her usual occupations, leaving her mistress to school her mind as she best might, for eradicating the sentiments which she had hitherto entertained towards Henry Morton.

CHAPTER XXV.

Once more unto the breach, dear fneails, once more!

Hemy V.

ON the evening of this day all the information which they could procure led them to expect that the insurgent army would be with early dawn on their march against Tillietudlem. Lord Evandale's wounds had been examined by Pike, who reported them in a very promising state. They were numerous, but none of any consequence, and the loss of blood, as much perhaps as the boasted specific of Lady Margaret, had prevented any tendency to fever; so that, notwithstanding he felt some pain and great weakness, the patient maintained that he was able to creep about, with the assistance of a stick. In these circumstances he refused to be confined to his apartment, both that he might encourage the soldiers by his presence, and suggest any necessary addition to the plan of defence, which the major might be supposed to have arranged upon something of an antiquated fashion of warfare. Lord Evandale was well qualified to give advice on such subjects, having served, during his early youth, both in France and in the Low Countries. There was little or no occasion, however, for altering the preparations already made; and, excepting on the article of provisions, there seemed no reason to fear for the defence of so strong a place against such assailants as those by whom it was threatened.

With the peep of day, Lord Evandale and Major Bellenden were on the battlements again, viewing and re-viewing the state of their preparations, and anxiously expecting the approach of the enemy. I ought to observe that the report of the spies had now been regularly made and received; but the major treated the report that Morton was in arms against the Government with the most scornful incredulity.

, "I know the lad better," was the only reply he deigned to make; "the fellows have not dared to venture near enough, and have been deceived by some fanciful resemblance, or have picked up some story."

"I differ from you, Major," answered Lord Evandale; "I think you will see that young gentleman at the head of the insurgents; and though I shall be heartily sorry for it, I shall not be greatly surprised."

"You are as bad as Claverhouse," said the major, "who contended yesterday morning down my very throat that this young fellow, who is as high-spirited and gentleman-like a boy as I have ever known, wanted but an opportunity to place himself at the head of the rebels."

"And considering the usage which he has received, and the suspicions under which he lies," said Lord Evandale, "what other course is open to him? For my own part, I should hardly know whether he deserved most blame or pity,"

"Blame, my lord? Pity!" echoed the major, astonished at hearing such sentiments, — "he would deserve to be hanged, that's all; and were he my own son, I should see him strung up with pleasure. Blame, indeed ! But your lordship cannot think as you are pleased to speak?"

"I give you my honour, Major Bellenden, that I have been for some time of opinion that our politicians and prelates have driven matters to a painful extremity in this country, and have alienated, by violence of various kinds, not only the lower classes, but all those in the upper ranks whom strong party feeling, or a desire of court interest, does not attach to their standard."

"I am 110 politician," answered the major, "and I do not understand nice distinctions. My sword is the king's, and when he commands, I draw it in his cause."

"I trust," replied the young lord, "you will not find me more backward than yourself, though I heartily wish that the enemy were foreigners. It is, however, no time to debate that matter, for yonder they come, and we must defend ourselves as well as we can."

As Lord Evandale spoke, the van of the insurgents began to make their appearance on the road which crossed the top of the hill, and thence descended opposite to the Tower. They did not, however, move downwards, as if aware that, in doing so, their columns would be exposed to the fire of the artillery of the place. But their numbers, which at first seemed few, appeared presently so to deepen and concentrate themselves that, judging of the masses which occupied the road behind the hill from the closeness of the front which they presented on the top of it, their force appeared very considerable. There was a pause of anxiety on both sides; and while the unsteady ranks of the Covenanters were agitated, as if by pressure "behind, or uncertainty as to their next movement, their arms, picturesque from their variety, glanced in the morning sun, whose beams were reflected from a grove of pikes, muskets, halberds, and battle-axes. The armed mass occupied, for a few minutes, this fluctuating position, until three or four horsemen, who seemed to be leaders, advanced from the front, and occupied the height a little nearer to the Castle. John Gudyill, who was not without some skill as an artilleryman, brought a gun to bear on this detached group.

"I'll flee the falcon," — so the small cannon was called, — "I'll flee the falcon whene'er your honour gies command; my certie, she'll ruffle their feathers for them!"

The major looked at Lord Evandale.

"Stay a moment," — said the young nobleman, "they send us a flag of truce."

In fact, one of the horsemen at that moment dismounted, and, displaying a white cloth on a pike, moved forward towards the Tower, while the major and Lord Evandale, descending from the battlement of the main fortress, advanced to meet him as far as the barricade, judging it unwise to admit him within the precincts which they designed to defend. At the same time that the ambassador set forth, the group of horsemen, as if they had anticipated the preparations of John Gudyill for their annoyance, withdrew from the advanced station which they had occupied, and fell back to the main body.

The envoy of the Covenanters, to judge by his mien and manner, seemed fully imbued with that spiritual pride which, distinguished his sect. His features were drawn up to a contemptuous prim-ness, and his half-shut eyes seemed to scorn to look upon the terrestrial objects around, while, at every solemn stride, his toes were pointed outwards with an air that appeared to despise the ground oil which they trode. Lord Evandale could not suppress a smile at this singular figure.

"Did you ever," said he to Major Bellenden, "see such an absurd automaton? One would swear it moves upon springs. Can it speak, think you?"

"Oh, ay," said the major; "that seems to be one of my old acquaintance, — a genuine Puritan, of the right pharisaical leaven. Stay, — he coughs and hems; he is about to summon the Castle with the butt-end of a sermon, instead of a parley on the trumpet."

The veteran, who in his day had had many an opportunity to become acquainted with the manners of these religionists, was not far mistaken in his conjecture; only that, instead of a prose exordium, the Laird of Langcale — for it was no less a personage — uplifted, with a stentorian voice, a verse of the twenty-fourth Psalm: —

"Ye gates lift up your heads I ye doors, Doors that do last for aye,
Be lifted up" —

"I told you so," said the major to Evandale; and then presented himself at the entrance of the barricade, demanding to know for what purpose or intent he made that doleful noise, like a hog in a high wind, beneath the gates of the Castle.

"I come," replied the ambassador, in a high and shrill voice, and without any of the usual salutations or deferences, — "I come from the godly army' of the Solemn League and Covenant, to speak with two carnal malignants, William Maxwell, called Lord Evandale, and Miles Bellenden of Chamwood."

"And what have you to say to Miles Bellenden and Lord Evandale?" answered the major.

"Are you the parties?" said the Laird of Langcale, in the same sharp, conceited, disrespectful tone of voice.

"Even so, for fault of better," said the major.

"Then there is the public summons," said the envoy, putting a paper into Lord Evandale's hand, "and there is a private letter for Miles Bellenden from a godly youth who is honoured with leading a part of our host. Eead them quickly, and God give you grace to fructify by the contents; though it is muckle to be doubted."

The summons ran thus: —

"We, the named and constituted leaders of the gentlemen, ministers, and others, presently in arms for the cause of liberty anil true religion, do warn and summon William Lord Evandale, and Miles Bellenden of Charnwood, and others presently in arms, and keeping garrison in the Tower of Tillietudlem, to surrender the said Tower upon fair conditions of quarter, and license to depart with bag and baggage, otherwise to soffer such extremity of fire and sword as belong by the laws of war to those who hold out an untenable post. And so may God defend his own good cause ! "

"This summons was signed by John Balfour of Burley, as quartermaster-general of the army of the Covenant, for himself, and in name of the other leaders.

The letter to Major Bellenden was from Henry

Morton. It was couched in the following language : —

I have taken a step, my venerable friend, which, among many painful consequences, will, I am afraid, incur your very decided disapprobation. But I have taken my resolution, in honour and good faith, and with the full approval of my own conscience. I can no longer submit to have my own rights and those of my fellow-subjects trampled upon, our freedom violated, our persons insulted, and our blood spilt, without just cause or legal trial. Providence, through the violence of the oppressors themselves, seems now to have opened a way of deliverance from this intolerable tyranny, and I do not hold him deserving of the name and rights of a freeman, who, thinking as I do, shall withhold his arm from the cause of his country. But God, who knows my heart, be my witness that I do not share the angry or violent passions of the oppressed and harassed sufferers with whom I am now acting. My most earnest and anxious desire is to see this unnatural war brought to a speedy end, by the union of the good, wise, and moderate of all parties, and a peace restored, which, without injury to the king's constitutional rights, may substitute the authority of equal laws to that of military violence, and, permitting to all men to worship G-od according to their own consciences, may subdue fanatical enthusiasm by reason and mildness, instead of driving it to frenzy by persecution and intolerance.

With these sentiments, you may conceive with what pain I appear in arms before the house of your venerable relative, which we understand you propose to hold out against us. Permit me to press upon you the assurance that such a measure will only lead to the effusion of blood; that, if repulsed in the assault, we are yet strong enough to invest the place and reduce it by hunger, being aware of your indifferent preparations to sustain a protracted siege. It would grieve me to the heart to think what would be the sufferings in such a case, and upon whom they would chiefly fall.

Do not suppose, my respected friend, that I would propose to you any terms which could compromise the high and honourable character which you have so deservedly won and so long borne. If the regular soldiers (to whom I will insure a safe retreat) are dismissed from the place, I trust no more will be required than your parole to remain neuter during this unhappy contest; and I will take care that Lady Margaret's property, as well as yours, shall be duly respected, and no garrison intruded upon you. I could say much in favour of this proposal; but I fear, as I must in the present instance appear criminal in your eyes, good arguments would lose their influence when coming from an unwelcome quarter. I will, therefore, break off with assuring you that whatever your sentiments may be hereafter towards me, my sense of gratitude to you can never be diminished or erased; and it would be the happiest moment of my life that should give me more effectual means than mere words to assure you of it. Therefore, although in the first moment of resentment you may reject the proposal I make to you, let not that prevent you from resuming the topic, if future events should render it more acceptable; for whenever, or howsoever, I can be of service to you, it will always afford the greatest satisfaction to

HENRY MORTON.

Having read this long letter with the most marked indignation, Major Bellenden put it into the hands of Lord Evandale.

"I would not have believed this," he said, "of Henry Morton, if half mankind had sworn it! The ungrateful, rebellious traitor! Rebellious in cold blood,-and without even the pretext of enthusiasm, that warms the liver of such a crack-brained fop as our friend the envoy there. But I should have remembered he was a Presbyterian, I ought to have been aware that I was nursing a wolf-cub, whose diabolical nature would make him tear and snatch at me on the first opportunity. Were Saint Paul on earth again, and a Presbyterian, he would be a rebel in three months, — it is in the very blood of them."

"Well," said Lord Evandale, "I will be the last to recommend surrender; but if our provisions fail, and we receive no relief from Edinburgh or Glasgow, I think we ought to avail ourselves of this opening to get the ladies, at least, safe out of the castle."

"They will endure all, ere they would accept the protection of such a smooth-tongued hypocrite," answered the major, indignantly; "I would renounce them for relatives were it otherwise. But let us dismiss the worthy ambassador. — My friend," he said, turning to Langcale, "tell your leaders and the mob they have gathered yonder, that if they have not a particular opinion of the hardness of their own skulls, I would advise them to beware how they knock them against these old walls. And let them send no more flags of truce, or we will hang up the messenger in retaliation of the murder of Cornet Grabame."

With this answer the ambassador returned to those by whom he had been sent. He had no sooner reached the main body than a murmur was heard amongst the multitude, and there was raised in front of their ranks an ample red flag, the borders of which were edged with blue. As the signal of war and defiance spread out its large folds upon the morning wind, the ancient banner of Lady Margaret's family, together with the royal ensign, were immediately hoisted on the walls of the Tower, and at the same time a round of artillery was discharged against the foremost ranks of the insurgents, by which they sustained some loss. Their leaders instantly withdrew them to the shelter of the brow of the hill.

"I think," said John Gudyill, while he busied himself in re-charging his guns, "they hae fund the falcon's neb a bit ower hard for them. It's no for nought that the hawk whistles."

But as he uttered these words, the ridge was once more crowded with the ranks of the enemy. A general discharge of their fire-arms was directed against the defenders upon the battlements. Under cover of the smoke, a column of picked men rushed down the road with determined courage, and, sustaining with firmness a heavy fire from the garrison, they forced their way, in spite of opposition, to the first barricade by which the avenue was defended. They were led on by Balfour in person, who displayed courage equal to his enthusiasm, and, in spite of every opposition, forced the barricade, killing and wounding several of the defenders, and compelling the rest to retreat to their second position. The precautions, however, of Major Bellenden rendered this success unavailing; for no sooner were the Covenanters in possession of the post than a close and destructive fire was poured into it from the Castle, and from those stations which commanded it in the rear. Having no means of protecting themselves from this fire, or of returning it with effect against men who were under cover of their barricades and defences, the Covenanters were obliged to retreat; but not until they had, with their axes, destroyed the stockade, so as to render it impossible for the defenders to re-occupy it.

Balfour was the last man that retired. He even remained for a short space almost alone, with an axe in his hand, labouring like a pioneer amid the storm of balls, many of which were specially aimed against him. The retreat of the party he commanded was not effected without heavy loss, and served as a severe lesson concerning the local advantages possessed by the garrison.

The next attack of the Covenanters was made with more caution. A strong party of marksmen (many of them competitors at the game of the pop-injay), under the command of Henry Morton, glided through the woods where they afforded them the best shelter, and, avoiding the open road, endeavoured, by forcing their way through the bushes and trees, and up the rocks which surrounded it on either side, to gain a position from which, without being exposed in an intolerable degree, they might annoy the flank of the second barricade, while it was menaced in front by a second attack from Burley. The besieged saw the danger of this movement, and endeavoured to impede the approach of the marksmen, by firing upon them at every point where they showed themselves. The assailants, on the other hand, displayed great coolness, spirit, and judgment in the manner in which they approached the defences. This was, in a great measure, to be ascribed to the steady and adroit manner in which they were conducted by their youthful leader, who showed as much skill in protecting his own followers as spirit in annoying the enemy.

He repeatedly enjoined his marksmen to direct their aim chiefly upon the red-coats, and to save the others engaged in the defence of the Castle; and, above all, to spare the life of the old major, whose anxiety made him more than once expose himself in a manner that, without such generosity on the part of the enemy, might have proved fatal. A dropping fire of musketry now glanced from every part of the precipitous mount on which the Castle was founded. From bush to bush, from crag to crag, from tree to tree, the marksmen continued to advance, availing themselves of branches and roots to assist their ascent, and contending at once with the disadvantages of the ground and the fire of the enemy. At length they got so high on the ascent that several of them possessed an opportunity of firing into the barricade against the defenders, who then lay exposed to their aim, and Eurley, profiting by the confusion of the moment, moved forward to the attack in front. His onset was made with the same desperation and fury as before, and met with less resistance, the defenders being alarmed at the progress which the sharpshooters had made in turning the flank of their position. Determined to improve his advantage, Burley, with his axe in his hand, pursued the party whom he had dislodged even to the third and last barricade, and entered it along with them,

"Kill, kill; down with the enemies of God and his people! No quarter. The Castle is ours!" were the cries by which he animated his friends; the most undaunted of whom followed him close, whilst the others, with axes, spades, and other implements, threw up earth, cut down trees, hastily labouring to establish such a defensive cover in the rear of the second barricade as might enable them to retain possession of it, in case the Castle was not carried by this coup-de-main.

Lord Evandale could no longer restrain his impatience. He charged with a few soldiers who had been kept in reserve in the court-yard of the Castle: and although his arm was in a sling, encourage[d] them, by voice and gesture, to assist their companions who were engaged with Burley. The combat now assumed an air of desperation. The narrow road was crowded with the followers of Burley, who pressed forward to support their companions. The soldiers, animated by the voice and presence of Lord Evandale, fought with fury, their small numbers being in some measure compensated by their greater skill, and by their possessing the upper ground, which they defended desperately with pikes and halberds, as well as with the butt of the carabines and their broadswords. Those within the Castle endeavoured to assist their companions, whenever they could so level their guns 'as to fire upon the enemy without endangering their friends. The sharpshooters, dispersed around, were firing incessantly on each object that was exposed upon the battlement. The Castle was enveloped with smoke, and the rocks rang to the cries of the combatants. In the midst of this scene of confusion, a singular accident had nearly given the besiegers possession of the fortress.

Cuddie Headrigg, who had advanced among the marksmen, being well acquainted with every rock and bush in the vicinity of the Castle, where he had so often gathered nuts with Jenny Dennison, was enabled, by such local knowledge, to advance farther, and with less danger, than most of his companions, excepting some three or four, who had followed him close. Now, Cuddie, though a brave enough fellow upon the whole, was by no means fond of danger, either for its own sake, or for that of the glory which attends it. In his advance, therefore, he had not, as the phrase goes, taken the bull by the horns, or advanced in front of the enemy's fire. On the contrary, he had edged gradually away from the scene of action, and turning his line of ascent rather to the left, had pursued it until it brought him under a front of the Castle different from that before which the parties were engaged, and to which the defenders had given no attention, trusting to the steepness of the precipice. There was, however, on this point, a certain window belonging to a certain pantry, and communicating with a certain yew-tree which grew out of a steep cleft of the rock, being the very pass through which Goose Gibbie was smuggled out of the Castle in order to carry Edith's express to Charnwood, and which had probably, in its day, been used for other contraband purposes. Cuddie, resting upon the butt of his gun, and looking up at this window, observed to one of his companions ; " There 's a place I ken weel; mony a time I hae helped Jenny Dennison out o' the winnock, forby creeping in whiles mysell to get some daffin, at e'en after the pleugh was loosed."

" And what's to hinder us to creep in just now ?" said the other, who was a smart, enterprising young fellow.

" There 's no muckle to hinder us, an that were "," answered Cuddie; " but what were we to do neist ?"

" We'll take the Castle," cried the other; " here are five or six o' us, and a' the sodgers are engaged at the gate."

"Come awa wi' you then," said Cuddie; "but mind, deil a finger ye maun lay on Lady Margaret, or Miss Edith, or the auld major, or, aboon a', on Jenny Dennison, or onybody but the sodgers, — cut and quarter amang them as ye like, I carena."

"Ay, ay," said the other; "let us once in, and we will make our ain terms with them a'."

Gingerly, and as if treading upon eggs, Cuddie began to ascend the well-known pass, not very willingly; for, besides that he was something apprehensive of the reception he might meet with in the inside, his conscience insisted that he was makipg but a shabby requital for Lady Margaret's former favours and protection. He got up, however, into the yew-tree, followed by his companions, one after another. The window was small, and had been secured by stanchions of iron; but these had been long worn away by time, or forced out by the domestics to possess a free passage for their own occasional convenience. Entrance was therefore easy, provided there was no one in the pantry, — a point which Cuddie endeavoured to discover before he made the final and perilous step. While his companions, therefore, were urging and threatening him behind, and he was hesitating and stretching his neck to look into the apartment, his head became visible to Jenny Dennison, who had ensconced herself in said pantry as the safest place in which to wait the issue of the assault. So soon as this object of terror caught her eye, she set up a hysteric scream, flew to the adjacent kitchen, and, in the desperate agony of fear, seized on a pot of kail-brose which she herself had hung on the fire before the combat began, having promised to Tarn Halliday to prepare his breakfast, for him. Thus burdened, she returned to the window of the pantry, and still exclaiming, "Murder ! murder ! We are a' harried and ravished ; the Castle taen, — tak it amang ye !" she discharged the whole scalding contents of the pot, accompanied with a dismal yell, upon the person of the unfortunate Cuddie. However welcome the mess might have been if Cuildie and it had become acquainted in a regular manner, the effects, as administered by Jenny, would probably have cured him of soldiering for ever, had he been looking upwards when it was thrown upon him. But, fortunately for our man of war, he had taken the alarm upon Jenny's first scream, and was in the act of looking down, expostulating with his comrades, who impeded the retreat which he was anxious to commence, so that the steel cap and boff coat which formerly belonged to Sergeant Bothwell, being garments of an excellent endurance, protected his person against the greater part of the scalding brose. Enough, however, reached him to annoy him severely; so that in the pain and surprise he jumped hastily out of the tree, oversetting his followers, to the manifest danger of their limbs ; and, without listening to arguments, entreaties, or authority, made the best of his way by the most safe road to the main body of the army whereunto he belonged, and could neither by threats nor persuasion be prevailed upon to return to the attack.

As for Jenny, when she had thus conferred upon one admirer's outward man the viands which her fair hands had so lately been in the act of preparing for the stomach of another, she continued her song of alarm, running a screaming division Upon all those crimes which the lawyers call the four pleas of the Crown, —namely, murder, fire, rape, and robbery. These hideous exclamations gave so much alarm, and created such confusion within the Castle, that Major Bellenden and Lord Evandale judged it best to draw off from the conflict without the gates, and, abandoning to the enemy all the exterior defences of the avenue, confine themselves to the Castle itself, for fear of its being surprised on some unguarded point. Their retreat was unmolested; for the panic of Cuddie and his companions had occasioned nearly as much confusion on the side of the besiegers as the screams of Jenny had caused to the defenders.

There was no attempt on either side to renew the action that day. The insurgents had suffered most severely; and, from the difficulty which they had experienced in carrying the barricadoed positions without the precincts of the Castle, they could have but little hope of storming the place itself. On the other hand, the situation of the besieged was dispiriting and gloomy. In the skirmishing they had lost two or three men, and had several wounded; and though their loss was in proportion greatly less than that of the enemy, who had left twenty men dead on the place, yet their small number could much worse spare it, while the desperate attacks of the opposite party plainly showed how serious the leaders were in the purpose of reducing the place, and how well seconded by the zeal of their followers. But, especially, the garrison had to fear for hunger, in case blockade should be resorted to as the means of reducing them. The major's directions had been imperfectly obeyed in regard to laying in provisions; and the dragoons, in spite of all warning and authority, were likely to be wasteful in using them. It was, therefore, with a heavy heart that Major Bellenden gave directions for guarding the window through which the Castle had so nearly been surprised, as well as all others which offered the most remote facility for such an enterprise.

CHAPTER XXVI.

The king hath drawn
The special head of all the land together
Henry IV. Part II.

THE leaders of the Presbyterian army had a serious consultation upon the evening of the day in which they had made the attack on Tilhetudlern. They could not but observe that their followers were disheartened by the loss which they had sustained, and which, as usual in such cases, had fallen upon the bravest and most forward. It was to be feared that if they were suffered to exhaust their zeal and efforts in an object so secondary as the capture of this petty fort, their numbers would melt away by degrees, and they would lose all the advantages arising out of the present unprepared state of the Government. Moved by these arguments, it was agreed that the main body of the army should march against Glasgow, and dislodge the soldiers who were lying in that town. The council nominated Henry Morton, with others, to this last service, and appointed Burley to the command of a chosen body of five hundred men, who were to remain behind, for the purpose of blockading the Tower of Tillietudlem. Morton testified the greatest repugnance to this arrangement.

"He had the strongest personal motives," he said, "for desiring to remain near Tillietudlem; and if the management of the siege were committed to him, he had little doubt but that he would bring it to such an accommodation as, without being rigorous to the besieged, would fully answer the purpose of the besiegers "

Burley readily guessed the cause of his young colleague's reluctance to move with the army; for, interested as he was in appreciating the characters with whom he had to deal, he had contrived, through the simplicity of Cuddie and the enthusiasm of old Mause, to get much infurination concerning Morton's relations with the family of Tillietudlem. He therefore took the advantage of Foundtext's arising to speak to business, as he said, for some short space of time (which Burley rightly interpreted to mean an hour at the very least), and seized that moment to withdraw Morton from the hearing of their colleagues, and to hold the following argument with him: —

"Thou art unwise, Henry Morton, to desire to sacrifice this holy cause to thy friendship for an uncircumcised Philistine, or thy lust for a Moabitish woman."

"I neither understand your meaning, Mr. Balfour, nor relish your allusions," replied Morton, indignantly; "and I know no reason you have to bring so gross a charge, or to use such uncivil language."

"Confess, however, the truth," said Balfour, "and own that there are those within yon dark Tower, over whom thou wouldst rather be watching like a mother over her little ones, than thou wouldst bear the banner of the Church of Scotland over the necks of her enemies."

"If you mean that I would willingly terminate this war without any bloody victory, and that I am more anxious to do this than to acquire any personal fame or power, you may be," replied Morton, "perfectly right."

"And not wholly wrong," answered Burley, "in deeming that thou wouldst not exclude from so general a pacification thy friends in the garrison of Tillietudlem."

"Certainly," replied Morton; "I am too much obliged to Major Bellenden not to wish to be of service to him, as far as the interest of the cause I have espoused will permit. I never made a secret of my regard for him."

"I am aware of that," said Burley; "but, if thou hadst concealed it, I should, nevertheless, have found out thy riddle. Now, hearken to my words. This Miles Bellenden hath means to subsist his garrison for a month."

"This is not the case," answered Morton; "we know his stores are hardly equal to a week's consumption."

"Ay, but," continued Burley, "I have since had proof, of the strongest nature, that such a report was spread in the garrison by that wily and grey-headed malignant, partly to prevail on the soldiers to submit to a diminution of their daily food, partly to detain us before the walls of his fortress until the sword should be whetted to smite and destroy us."

"And why was not the evidence of this laid before the council of war?" said Morton.

"To what purpose?" said Balfour. "Why need we undeceive Kettledrummy, Macbriar, Poundtext, and Langcale, upon such a point? Thyself must own that whatever is told to them escapes to the host out of the mouth of the preachers at their next holding-forth. They are already discouraged by the thoughts of lying before the fort a week. What would be the consequence were they ordered to prepare for the leaguer of a month?"

"But why conceal it, then, from me? or why tell it me now? and, above all, what proofs have you got of the fact?" continued Morton.

"There are many proofs," replied Burley; and he put into his hands a number of requisitions sent forth by Major Bellenden, with receipts on the back to various proprietors, for cattle, corn, meal, etc., to such an amount that the sum total seemed to exclude the possibility of the garrison being soon distressed for provisions. But Burley did not inform Morton of a fact which he himself knew full well, namely, that most of these provisions never reached the garrison, owing to the rapacity of the dragoons sent to collect them, who readily sold to one man what they took from another, and abused the major's press for stores pretty much as Sir John Falstaff did that of the king for men.

"And now," continued Balfour, observing that he had made the desired impression, "I have only to say that I concealed this from thee no longer than it was concealed from myself, for I have only received these papers this morning; and I tell it unto thee now, that thou mayest go on thy way rejoicing, and work the great work willingly at Glasgow, being assured that no evil can befall thy friends in the malignant party, since their fort is abundantly victualled, and I possess not numbers sufficient to do more against them than to prevent their sallying forth."

"And why," continued Morton, who felt an inexpressible reluctance to acquiesce in Balfour's reasoning, — "why not permit me to remain in the command of this smaller party, and inarch forward yourself to Glasgow? It is the more honourable charge."

"And therefore, young man," answered Burley, "have I laboured that it should be committed to the son of Silas Morton. I am waxing old, and this grey head has had enough of honour where it could be gathered by danger. I speak not of the frothy bubble which men call earthly fame, but the honour belonging to him that doth not the work negligently. But thy career is yet to run. Thou hast to vindicate the high trust which has been bestowed on thee through my assurance that it was dearly well-merited. At Loudon-hill thou wert a captive, and at the last assault it was thy part to fight under cover, whilst I led the more open and dangerous attack; and, shouldst thou now remain before these walls when there is active service elsewhere, trust me that men will say that the son of Silas Morton hath fallen away from the paths of his father."

Stung by this last observation, to which, as a gentleman and soldier, he could offer no suitable reply, Morton hastily acquiesced in the proposed arrangement. Yet he was unable to divest himself of certain feelings of distrust which he involuntarily attached to the quarter from which he received this information.

"Mr. Balfour," he said, "let us distinctly understand each other. You have thought it worth your while to bestow particular attention upon my private affairs and personal attachments; be so good as to understand that I am as constant to them as to my political principles. It is possible that, during my absence, you may possess the power of soothing or of wounding those feelings. Be assured that whatever may be the consequences to the issue of our present adventure, my eternal gratitude, or my persevering resentment, will attend the line of conduct you may adopt on such an occasion; and, however young and inexperienced I am, I have no doubt of finding friends to assist me in expressing my sentiments in either case."

"If there be a threat implied in that denunciation," replied Burley, coldly and haughtily, "it had better have been spared. I know how to value the regard of my friends, and despise, from my soul, the threats of my enemies. But I will not take occasion of offence. Whatever happens here in your absence shall be managed with as much deference to your wishes as the duty I owe to a higher power can possibly permit"

With this qualified promise Morton was obliged to rest satisfied.

"Our defeat will relieve the garrison," said he, internally, "ere they can be reduced to surrender at discretion; and, in case of victory, I already see, from the numbers of the moderate party, that I shall have a voice as powerful as Burley's in determining the use which shall be made of it."

He therefore followed Balfour to the council, where they found Kettledrummy adding to his lastly a few words of practical application. When these were expended, Morton testified his willingness to accompany the main body of the army, which was destined to drive the regular troops from Glasgow. His companions in command were named, and the whole received a strengthening exhortation from the preachers who were present. Next morning, at break of day, the insurgent army broke up from their encampment, and marched towards Glasgow.

It is not our intention to detail at length incidents which may be found in the history of the period. It is sufficient to say that Claverhouse and Lord Eoss, learning the superior force which was directed against them, intrenched, or rather barricaded themselves, in the centre of the city, where the town-house and old jail were situated, with the determination to stand the assault of the insurgents rather than to abandon the capital of the West of Scotland. The Presbyterians made their attack in two bodies, one of which penetrated into the city in the line of the College and Cathedral Church, while the other marched up the Gallowgate, or principal access from the south-east. Both divisions were led by men of resolution, and behaved with great spirit. But the advantages of military skill and situation were too great for their undisciplined valour.

Eoss and Claverhouse had carefully disposed parties of their soldiers in houses, at the heads of the streets, and in the entrances of closes, as they are called, or lanes, besides those who were intrenched behind breast-works which reached across the streets. The assailants found their ranks thinned by a fire from invisible opponents, which they had no means of returning with effect. It was in vain that Morton and other leaders exposed their persons with the utmost gallantry, and endeavoured to bring their antagonists to a close action; their followers shrunk from them in every direction. And yet, though Henry Morton was one of the very last to retire, and exerted himself in bringing up the rear, maintaining order in the retreat, and checking every attempt which the enemy made to improve the advantage they had gained by the repulse, he had still the mortification to hear many of those in his ranks muttering to each other that "this came of trusting to latitudinarian boys ; and that, had honest, faithful Burley led the attack, as he did that of the barricades of Tillietudlem, the issue would have been as different as might be."

It was with burning resentment that Morton heard these reflections thrown out by the very men who had soonest exhibited signs of discouragement. The unjust reproach, however, had the effect of firing his emulation, and making him sensible that, engaged as he was in a perilous cause, it was absolutely necessary that he should conquer or die.

"I have no retreat," he said to himself. "All shall allow—even Major Bellenden; even Edith—that in courage, at least, the rebel Morton was not inferior to his father."

The condition of the army after the repulse was so undisciplined, and in such disorganization, that the leaders thought it prudent to draw off some miles from the city to gain time for reducing them once more into such order as they were capable of adopting. Recruits, in the mean while, came fast in, more moved by the extreme hardships of their own condition, and encouraged by the advantage obtained at Loudon-hill, than deterred by the last unfortunate enterprise. Many of these attached themselves particularly to Morton's division. He had, however, the mortification to see that his unpopularity among the more intolerant part of the Covenanters increased rapidly. The prudence beyond his years, which he exhibited in improving the discipline and arrangement of his followers, they termed a trusting in the arm of flesh, and his avowed tolerance for those of religious sentiments and observances different from his own, obtained him, most unjustly, the nickname of Gallio, who cared for none of those things. What was worse than these misconceptions, the mob of the insurgents, always loudest in applause of those who push political or religious opinions to extremity, and disgusted with such as endeavour to reduce them to the yoke of discipline, preferred avowedly the more zealous leaders, in whose ranks enthusiasm in the cause supplied the want of good order and military subjection, to the restraints which Morton endeavoured to bring them under. In short, while bearing the principal burden of command (for his colleagues willingly relinquished in his favour everything that was troublesome and obnoxious in the office of general), Morton found himself without that authority which alone could render his regulations effectual.¹

Yet, notwithstanding these obstacles, he had, during the course of a few days, laboured so hard to introduce some degree of discipline into the army, that he thought he might hazard a second attack upon Glasgow with every prospect of success.

¹ Thea feuds, which tore to pieces the little army of insurgents, turned merely on the point whether the king's interest or royal authority was to be owned or not, and whether the party in arms were to be contented with a free exercise of their own religion, or insist upon the re-establishment of Presbytery in its supreme authority, and with full power to predominate over all other forms of worship. The few country gentlemen who joined the insurrection, with the most sensible part of the clergy, thought it best to limit their demands to what it might be possible to attain. But the party who urged these moderate views were termed, by the more zealous bigots, the Erastian party,—men, namely, who were willing to place the Church under the influence of the civil government, and therefore they accounted them "a snare upon Mizpah, and a net spread upon Tabor." See the Life of Sir Robert Hamilton in the "Scottish Worthies," and his account of the Battle of Bothwell Bridge, passim.

It cannot be doubted that Morton's anxiety to measure himself with Colonel Grahame of Claverhouse, at whose hands he had sustained such injury, had its share in giving motive to his uncommon exertions. But Claverhouse disappointed his hopes ; for, satisfied with having the advantage in repulsing the first attack upon Glasgow, he determined that he would not, with the handful of troops under his command, await a second assault from the insurgents, with more numerous and better disciplined forces than had supported their first enterprise. He therefore evacuated the place, and marched at the head of his troops towards Edinburgh. The insurgents of course entered Glasgow Without resistance, and without Morton having the opportunity, which he so deeply coveted, of again encountering Claverhouse personally. But although he had not an opportunity of wiping away the disgrace which had befallen his division of the army of the Covenant, the retreat of Claverhouse and the possession of Glasgow tended greatly to animate the insurgent army, and to increase its numbers. The necessity of appointing new officers, of organizing new regiments and squadrons, of making them acquainted with at least the most necessary points of military discipline, were labours which, by universal consent, seemed to be devolved upon Henry Morton, and which he the more readily undertook because his father had made him acquainted with the theory of the military art, and because he plainly saw that unless he took this ungracious but absolutely necessary labour, it was vain to expect any other to engage in it.

In the mean while, fortune appeared to favour the enterprise of the insurgents more than the most sanguine durst have expected. The Privy Council of Scotland, astonished at the extent of resistance which their arbitrary measures had provoked, seemed stupefied with terror, and incapable of taking active steps to subdue the resentment which these measures had excited. There were but very few troops in Scotland, and these they drew towards Edinburgh, as if to form an army for protection of the metropolis. The feudal array of the Crown vassals in the various counties \yas ordered to take the field, and render to the king the military service due for their fiefs. But the summons was very slackly obeyed. The quarrel was not generally popular among the gentry; and even those who were not unwilling themselves to have taken arms, were deterred by the repugnance of their wives, mothers, and sisters to their engaging in such a cause.

Meanwhile, the inadequacy of the Scottish Government to provide for their own defence, or to put down a rebellion of which the commencement seemed so trifling, excited at the English court doubts at once of their capacity, and of the prudence of the severities they had exerted against the oppressed Presbyterians. It was, therefore, resolved to nominate to the command of the army of Scotland the unfortunate Duke of Monmouth, who had by marriage a great interest, large estate, and a numerous following, as it was called, in the southern parts of that kingdom. The military skill which he had displayed on different occasions abroad was supposed more than adequate to subdue the insurgents in the field; while it was expected that his mild temper, and the favourable disposition which he showed to Presbyterians in general, might soften men's minds, and tend to reconcile them to the Government. The duke was, therefore, invested with a commission containing high powers for settling the distracted affairs of Scotland, and despatched from London with strong succours to take the principal military command in that country.

CHAPTER XXVTI.

I am bound to Bothwell-hill,
Where I miuui either do or die.

Old Ballad.

THERE was now a pause in the military movements on both sides. The Government seemed contented to prevent the rebels advancing towards the capital, while the insurgents were intent upon augmenting and strengthening their forces. For this purpose, they established a sort of encampment in the park belonging to the ducal residence at Hamilton, — a central situation for receiving their recruits, and where they were secured from any sudden attack, by having the Clyde, a deep and rapid river, in front of their position, which is only passable by a long and narrow bridge, near the castle and village of Bothwell.

Morton remained here for about a fortnight after the attack on Glasgow, actively engaged in his military duties. He had received more than one communication from Burley, but they only stated, in general, that the Castle of Tillietudlem continued to hold out. Impatient of suspense upon this most interesting subject, he at length intimated to his colleagues in command his desire, or rather his intention, — for he saw no reason why he should not assume a license which was taken by every one else in this disorderly army, — to go to Milnwood for a day or two to arrange some private affairs of consequence. The proposal was by no means approved of; for the military council of the insurgents were sufficiently sensible of the value of his services to fear to lose them, and felt somewhat conscious of their own inability to supply his place. They could not, however, pretend to dictate to him laws more rigid than they submitted to themselves, and he was suffered to depart on his journey without any direct objection being stated. The Eeverend Mr. Poundtext took the same opportunity to pay a visit to his own residence in the neighbourhood of Milnwood, and favoured Morton with his company on the journey. As the country was chiefly friendly to their cause, and in possession of their detached parties, excepting here and there the stronghold of some old cavaliering baron, they travelled without any other attendant than the faithful Cuddie.

It was near sunset when they reached Milnwood, where Poundtext bid adieu to his companions, and travelled forward alone to his own manse, which was situated half a mile's march beyond Tillietudlem. When Morton was left alone to his own reflections, with what a complication of feelings did he review the woods, banks, and fields that had been familiar to him! His character, as well as his habits, thoughts, and occupations, had been entirely changed within the space of little more than a fortnight, and twenty days seemed to have done upon him the work of as many years. A mild, romantic, gentle-tempered youth, bred up in dependence, and stooping patiently to the control of a sordid and tyrannical relation, had suddenly, by the rod of oppression and the spur of injured feeling, been compelled to stand forth a leader of armed men, was earnestly engaged in affairs of a public nature, had friends to animate and enemies to contend with, and felt his individual fate bound up in that of a national insurrection and revolution. It seemed as if he had at once experienced a transition from the romantic dreams of youth to the labours and cares of active manhood. All that had formerly interested him was obliterated from his memory, excepting only his attachment to Edith; and even his love seemed to have assumed a character more manly and disinterested, as it had become mingled and contrasted with other duties and feelings. As he revolved the particulars of this sudden change, the circumstances in which it originated, and the possible consequences of his present career, the thrill of natural anxiety which passed along his mind was immediately banished by a glow of generous and high-spirited confidence.

"I shall fall young," he said, "if fall I must, my motives misconstrued, and my actions condemned, by those whose approbation is dearest to me. But the sword of liberty and patriotism is in my hand, and I will neither fall meanly nor unavenged. They may expose my body, and gibbet my limbs \ but other days will come, when the sentence of infamy will recoil against those who may pronounce it. And that Heaven, whose name is so often profaned during this unnatural war, will bear witness to the purity of the motives by which I have been, guided."

Upon approaching Milnwood, Henry's knock upon the gate no longer intimated the conscious timidity of a stripling who has been out of bounds, but the confidence of a man in full possession of his own rights, and master of his own actions, — bold, free, and decided. The door was cautiously opened by his old acquaintance, Mrs. Aliaon Wilson, who started back when she saw the steel cap and nodding plume of the martial visitor.

"Where is my uncle, Alison?" said Morton, smiling at her alarm.

"Lordsake, Mr. Harry ! is this you ?" returned the old lady. " In troth, ye garr'd my heart loup to my very mouth. But it canna be your ainsell, for ye look taller and mair manly-like than ye used to do."

"It is, however, my own self," said Henry, sighing and smiling at the same time ; " I believe this dress may make me look taller, and these times, Ailie, make men out of boys."

"Sad times, indeed!"¹¹ echoed the old woman; "and oh that you suld be endangered " them! But wha can help it ? Ye were ill enough guided, and, as I tell your uncle, if ye tread on a worm it will turn."

" You were always my advocate, Ailie," said he, and the housekeeper no longer resented the familiar epithet, " and would let no one blame me but yourself, I am aware of that Where is my uncle ?"

"In Edinburgh," replied Alison; "the honest man thought it was best to gang and sit by the chimley when the reek rase — a vex'd man he's been and a feared; but ye ken the laird as weel as I do."

" I hope he has soffered nothing in health ?" said Henry.

"Naething to speak of," answered the housekeeper, "nor in gudes neither, — we fended as weel as we could; and though the troopers of Tillietudlem took the red cow and auld Hackie (ye '1 mind them weel), yet they sauld us a gude bargain o' foul they were driving to the Castle."

"Sold you a bargain?" said Morton,—"how do you mean?"

"Ou, they cam out to gather marts for the garrison," answered the housekeeper; "but they just fell to their auld trade, and rade through the country couping and selling a' that they gat, like sae many west-country drovers. My certie, Major Bellenden was laird " the least share o' what they lifted, though it was taen in his name."

"Then," said Morton, hastily, "the garrison must be straitened for provisions?"

"Stressed eneugh," replied Ailie; "there's little doubt o' that."

A light instantly glanced on Morton's mind.

"Burley must have deceived me: craft as well as cruelty is permitted by his creed." Such was his inward thought; he said aloud, "I cannot stay, Mra Wilson; I must go forward directly."

"But oh! bide to eat a mouthfu'," entreated the affectionate housekeeper, "and I 'll mak it ready fol you as I used to do afore thae sad days."

"It is impossible," answered Morton.—"Cuddie. get our horses ready."

"They're just eating their corn," answered the attendant.

"Cuddie!" exclaimed Ailie; "what garr'd ye bring that ill-faur'd, unlucky loon along wi' ye? It was him and his randie mother began a' the mischief in this house."

"Tut, tut," replied Cuddie, "ye should forget and forgie, mistress. Mither 's in Glasgow wi' her tittie, and sail plague ye nae mair; and I'm the captain's wallie now, and I keep him tighter in thack and rape than ever ye did. Saw ye him ever sae wee] put on as he is now?"

"In troth and that's true," said the old housekeeper, looking with great complacency at her young master, whose mien she thought much improved by his dress. "I'm sure ye ne'er had a laced cravat like that when ye were at Milnwood; that's nane o' my sewing."

"Na, na, mistress," replied Cuddie, "that's a cast o' my hand,—that's ane o' Lord Evandale's brows."

"Lord Evandale?" answered the old lady,—"that's him that the Whigs are gaun to hang the morn, as I hear say."

,"The Whigs about to hang Lord Evandale?" said Morton, in the greatest surprise.

"Ay, troth are they," said the housekeeper. "Yesterday night he made a sally, as they ca't (my mother's name was Sally,—I wonder they gie Christian folk's names to sic unchristian doings),—but he made an outbreak to get provisions, and his men were driven back and he was taen, an' the Whig Captain Balfour garr'd set up a gallows, and swore (or said upon his conscience, for they winna swear), that if the garrison was not gien ower the morn by daybreak, he would hing up the young lord, poor thing, as high as Haman. — These are sair times, but folk canna help them; sae do ye sit down and tak bread and cheese until better meat's made ready. Ye suldna hae kend a word about it, an I had thought it was to spoil your dinner, hinny."

"Fed or unfed," exclaimed Morton, "saddle the horses instantly, Cuddie. We must not rest until we get before the Castle."

And, resisting all Ailie's entreaties, they instantly resumed their journey.

Morton failed not to halt at the dwelling of Poundtext and summon him to attend him to the'

Camp. That honest divine had just resumed for an instant his pacific habits, and was perusing an ancient theological treatise, with a pipe in his mouth and a small jug of ale beside him, to assist his digestion of the argument. It was with bitter ill-will that he relinquished these comforts (which he called his studies) in order to recommence a hard ride upon a high-trotting horse. However, when he knew the matter in hand, he gave up, with a deep groan, the prospect of spending a quiet evening in his own little parlour; for he entirely agreed with Morton that whatever interest Burley might have in rendering the breach between the Presbyterians and the Government irreconcilable, by putting the young nobleman to death, it was by no means that of the moderate party to permit such an act of atrocity. And it is but doing justice to Mr. Poundtext to add that, like most of his own persuasion, he was decidedly adverse to any such acts of unnecessary violence ; besides that his own present feelings induced him to listen with much complacence to the probability held out by Morton, of Lord Evandale's becoming a mediator for the establishment of peace upon fair and moderate terms. With this similarity of views, they hastened their journey, and arrived about eleven o'clock at night at a small hamlet adjacent to the Castle at Tillietudlem, where Burley had established his head-quarters.

They were challenged by the sentinel, who made his melancholy walk at the entrance of the hamlet, and admitted upon declaring their names and authority in the army. Another soldier kept watch before a house, which they conjectured to be the place of Lord Evandale's confinement; for a gibbet of such great height as to be visible from the battlements of the Castle was erected before it, in melancholy confirmation of the truth of Mrs. Wilson's report.¹ Morton instantly demanded to speak with Burley, and was directed to his quarters. They found him reading the Scriptures, with his arms lying beside him, as if ready for any sudden alarm. He started upon the entrance of his colleagues in office.

"What has brought ye hither?" said Burley, hastily. "Is there bad news from the army?"

"No," replied Morton; "but we understand that there are measures adopted here in which the safety of the army is deeply concerned. Lord Evandale is your prisoner?"

"The Lord," replied Burley, "hath delivered him into our hands."

"And you will avail yourself of that advantage, granted you by Heaven, to dishonour our cause in the eyes of all the world by putting a prisoner to an ignominious death?"

If the house of Tillietudlem be not surrendered by daybreak," replied Burley, "God do so to me and more also, if he shall not die that death to which his leader and patron, John Grahame of Claverhouse, hath put so many of God's saints."

"We are in arms," replied Morton, "to put down such cruelties, and not to imitate them, far less to avenge upon the innocent the acts of the guilty. By what law can you justify the atrocity you would commit?"

¹ The Cameronians had suffered persecution, but it was without learning mercy. We are informed by Captain Crichton that they had set up in their camp a huge gibbet, or gallows, having many hooks upon it, with a coil of new ropes lying beside it, for the execution of such royalists as they might make prisoners. Guild, in his "Bellum Bothuellianum," describes this machine particularly

"If thou art ignorant of it," replied Burley, "thy companion is well aware of the law which gave the men of Jericho to the sword of Joshua, the son of Nun."

"But we," answered the divine, "live under a better dispensation, which instructeth us to return good for evil, and to pray for those who despitefully use us and persecute us."

"That is to say," said Burley, "that thou wilt join thy grey hairs to his green youth to controvert me in this matter ?"

"We are," rejoined Pountext, "two of those to whom, jointly with thyself, authority is delegated over this host, and we will not permit thee to hurt a hair of the prisoner's head. It may please God to make him a means of healing these unhappy breaches in our Israel."

"I judged it would come to this," answered Burley, "when such as thou wert called into the council of the elders."

"Such as I ?" answered Pouidtext. "And who am I, that you should name me with such scorn ? Have I not kept the flock of this sheep-fold from the wolves for thirty years ? Ay, even while thou, John Balfour, wert fighting in the ranks of uncircumcision, a Philistine of hardened brow and bloody hand. Whn am I, say'st thou ?"

"I will tell thee what thou art, since thou wouldst so fain know," said Burley. "Thou art one of those who would reap where thou hast not sowed, and divide the spoil while others fight the battle ; thou art one of those that follow the gospel for the loaves and for the fishes, that love their own manse better than the Church of God, and that would rather draw their stipends under prelatists 01 heathens, than be a partaker with those noble spirits who have cast all behind them for the sake of the Covenant."

"And I will tell thee, John Balfour," returned Poundtext, deservedly incensed, "I will tell thee what thou art. Thou art one of those for whose bloody and merciless disposition a reproach is flung upon the whole Church of this suffering kingdom, and for whose, violence and blood-guiltiness, it is to be feared, this fair attempt to recover our civil and religious rights will never be honoured by Providence with the desired success."

"Gentlemen," said Morton, "cease this irritating and unavailing recrimination; and do you, Mr. Balfour, inform us whether it is your purpose to oppose the liberation of Lord Evandale, which appears to us a profitable measure in the present position of our affairs?"

"You are here," answered Burley, "as two voices against one; but you will not refuse to tarry until the united council shall decide upon this matter?"

"This," said Morton, "we would not decline, if we could trust the hands in whom we are to leave the prisoner. — But you know well," he added, looking sternly at Burley, "that you have already deceived me in this matter."

"Go to," said Burley, disdainfully; "thou art an idle, inconsiderate boy, who, for the black eyebrows of a silly girl, would barter thy own faith and honour, and the cause of God and of thy country."

"Mr. Balfour," said Morton, laying his hand on his sword, "this language requires satisfaction."

"And thou shalt have it, stripling, when and where thou darest," said Burley; "I plight thee my good word on it."

Foundtext, in his turn, interfered to remind them of the madness of quarrelling, and effected with difficulty a sort of sullen reconciliation.

"Concerning the prisoner," said Burley, "deal with him as ye think fit. I wash my hands free from all consequences. He is my prisoner, made by my sword and spear, while you, Mr. Morton, were playing the adjutant at drills and parades, and you, Mr. Poundtext, were warping the Scriptures into Erastianism. Take him unto you, nevertheless, and dispose of him as ye think meet. — Dingwall," he continued, calling a sort of aide-de-camp, who slept in the next apartment, "let the guard posted on the malignant Evandale give up their post to those whom Captain Morton shall appoint to relieve them. The prisoner," he said, again addressing Poundtext and Morton, "is now at your disposal, gentlemen. But remember that for all these things there will one day come a term of heavy accounting,"

So saying, he turned abruptly into an inner apartment, without bidding them good evening. His two visitors, after a moment's consideration, agreed it would be prudent to insure the prisoner's personal safety by placing over him an additional guard, chosen from their own parishioners. A band of them happened to be stationed in the hamlet, having been attached, for the time, to Burley's command, in order that the men might be gratified by remaining as long as possible near to their own homes. They were, in general, smart active young fellows, and were usually called by their companions, the Marksmen of Milnwood. By Morton's desire, four of these lads readily undertook the task of sentinels, and he left with them Headrigg, on whose fidelity he could depend, with instructions to call him if anything remarkable happened.

This arrangement being made, Morton and his colleague took possession, for the night, of such quarters as the over-crowded and miserable hamlet could afford them. They did not, however, separate for repose till they had drawn up a memorial of the grievances of the moderate Presbyterians, which was summed up with a request of free toleration for, their religion in future, and that they should be permitted to attend gospel ordinances as dispensed by their own clergymen, without oppression or molestation. Their petition proceeded to require that a free Parliament should be called for settling the affairs of Church and State, and for redressing the injuries sustained by the subject; and that all those who either now were, or had been, in arms, for obtaining these ends, should be indemnified, Morton could not but strongly hope that these terms, which comprehended all that was wanted, or wished for, by the moderate party among the insurgents, might, when thus cleared of the violence of fanaticism, find advocates, even among the royalists, as claiming only the ordinary rights of Scottish freemen.

He had the more confidence of a favourable reception that the Duke of Mournouth, to whom Charles had intrusted the charge of subduing this rebellion, was a man of gentle, moderate, and accessible disposition, well known to be favourable to the Presbyterians, and invested by the king with full powers to take measures for quieting the disturbances in Scotland. It seemed to Morton that all that was necessary for influencing him in their favour was to find a fit and sufficiently respectable channel of communication, and such seemed to be opened through the medium of Lord Evandale. He resolved, therefore, to visit the prisoner early in the morning, in order to sound his dispositions to undertake the task of mediator; but an accident happened which led him to anticipate his purpose.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Gie ower your house, lady, he said, —
Gia ower your house tQ me.

Edom of Gordon.

MORTON had finished the revisal and the making out of a fair copy of the paper on which he and Poundtext had agreed to rest as a full statement of the grievances of their party, and the conditions on which the greater part of the insurgents would be contented to lay down their arms; and he was about to betake himself to repose, when there was a knocking at the door of his apartment.

"Enter," said Morton; and the round bullet-head of Cuddie Headrigg was thrust into the room. "Come in," said Morton, "and tell me what you want. Is there any alarm?"

"Na, stir; but I hae brought ane to speak wi' you."

"Who is that, Cuddie?" inquired Morton.

"Ane o' your auld acquaintance," said Cuddie; and, opening the door more fully, he half led, half dragged in a woman, whose face was muffled in her plaid. "Come, come, ye needna be sae bashfu' before auld acquaintance, Jenny," said Cuddie, pulling down the veil, and discovering to his master the well-remembered countenance of Jenny Dennison. "Tell his honour now, — there's a braw lass, — tell him what ye were wanting to say to Lord Evandale, mistress."

"What was I wanting to say," answered Jenny, "to his honour himsell the other morning, when I visited him in captivity, ye muckle hash? D'ye think that folk dinna want to see their friends in adversity, ye dour crowdy-eater?"

This reply was made with Jenny's usual volubility; but her voice quivered, her cheek was thin and pale, the tears stood in her eyes, her hand trembled, her manner was fluttered, and her whole presence bore marks of recent suffering and privation, as well as nervous and hysterical agitation.

"What is the matter, Jenny?" said Morton, kindly. "You know how much I owe you in many respects, and can hardly make a request that I will not grant, if in my power."

"Many thanks, Milnwood," said the weeping damsel; "but ye were aye a kind gentleman, though folk say ye hae become sair changed now."

"What do they say of me?" answered Morton.

"A' body says," replied Jenny, "that you and the Whigs hae made a vow to ding King Charles aff the throne, and that neither he, nor his posteriors from generation to generation, shall sit upon it ony mair; and John Gudyill threeps ye're to gie a' the church-organs to the pipers, and burn the Book o' Common Prayer by the hands of the common hangman, in revenge of the Covenant that was burnt when the king cam hame."

"My friends at Tillietudlem judge too hastily and too ill of me," answered Morton. "I wish to have free exercise of my own religion, without insulting any other; and as to your family, I only desire an opportunity to show them I have the same friendship and kindness as ever."

"Bless your kind heart for saying sae," said

Jenny, bursting into a flood of tears; "and they never needed kindness or friendship mair, for they are famished for lack o' food."

"Good God!" replied Morton; "I have heard of scarcity, but not of famine! Is it possible? Have the ladies and the major —"

"They hae suffered like the lave o' us," replied Jenny; "for they shared every bit and sup wi' the whole folk in the Castle. I'm sure my poor een see fifty colours wi' faintness, and my head's sae dizzy " the mirligoes that I canna stand my lane."

{The thinness of the poor girl's cheek, and the sharpness of her features, bore witness to the truth of what she said. Morton was greatly shocked.

"Sit down," he said, "for God's sake!" forcing her into the only chair the apartment afforded, while he himself strode up and down the room in horror and impatience. "I knew not of this," he exclaimed, in broken ejaculations, — "I could not know of it. Cold-blooded, iron-hearted fanatic, deceitful villain! — Cuddie, fetch refreshments, — food, wine, if possible, — whatever you can find."

"Whisky is gude enugh for her," muttered Cuddie; "ane wadna hae thought that gude meal was sae scant amang them, when the quean threw sae muckle gude kail-brose scalding het about my lugs."

Faint and miserable as Jenny seemed to be, she could not hear the allusion to her exploit during the storm of the Castle, without bursting into a laugh which weakness soon converted into a hysterical giggle. Confounded at her state, and reflecting with horror on the distress which must have been in the Castle, Morton repeated his commands to Headrigg in a peremptory manner; and when ha had departed, endeavoured to soothe his visitor.

"You come, I suppose, by the orders of your mistress, to visit Lord Evandale?—Tell me what she desires; her orders shall be my law."

Jenny appeared to reflect a moment, and then said, "Your honour is sae auld a friend, I must needs trust to you, and tell the truth."

"Be assured, Jenny," said Morton, observing that she hesitated, "that you will best serve your mistress by dealing sincerely with me."

"Weel, then, ye maun ken we're starving, as I said before, and have been mair days than ane; and the major has sworn that he expects relief daiiy, and that he will not gie ower the house to the enemy till we have eaten up his auld boots, — and they are unco thick in the soles, as ye may weel mind, forby being teugh in the upper-leather. The dragoons, again, they think they will be forced to gie up at last, and they canna bide hunger weel, after the life they led at free quarters for this while by-past; and since Lord Evandale's taen, there's nae guiding them; and Inglis says he '1 gie up the garrison to the Whigs, and the major and the led-dies into the bargain, if they will but let the troop-ers gang free themsells."

"Scoundrels !" said Morton; "why do they not make terms for all in the Castle ?"

"They are fear'd for denial o' quarter to themsells, having dune sae muckle mischief through the country; and Burley has hanged ane or twa " them already,—sae they want to draw their ain necks out o' the collar at hazard o' honest folk's."

"And you were sent," continued Morton, "to carry to Lord Evandale the unpleasant news of the men's mutiny 1"

"Just e'en sae," said Jenny. "Tarn Halliday took the rue, and tauld me " about it, and gat me out o' the Castle to tell Lord Evandale, if possibly I could win at him."

"But how can he help you ? " said Morton ; "he is a prisoner."

"Well-a-day, ay," answered the afflicted damsel. "But maybe he could mak fair terms for us; or, maybe, he could gie us some good advice; or, maybe, he might send his orders to the dragoons to be civil; or — "

' "Or, maybe," said Morton, "you were to try if it were possible to set him at liberty ?"

"If it were sae," answered Jenny, with spirit, "it wadna be the first time I hae done my best tn serve a friend in captivity."

"True, Jenny," replied Morton; "I were most ungrateful to forget it. But here comes Cuddie with refreshments; I will go and do your errand to Lord Evandale, while you take some food and wine."

"It willna be amiss ye should ken," said Cuddie to his master, "that this Jenny — this Mrs. Denison — was trying to cuittle favour " Tam Band, the miller's man, to win into Lord Evandale's room without onybody kennin¹. She wasna thinking, the gipsy, that I was at her elbow."

"And an unco fright ye gae me when ye cam ahint and took a grip o' me," said Jenny, giving him a sly twitch with her finger and her thumb; "if ye hadna been an auld acquaintance, ye daft gomeril — "

Cuddie, somewhat relenting, grinned a smile on his artful mistress, while Morton wrapped himself up in his cloak, took his sword under his arm, and went straight to the place of the young nobleman's confinement. He asked the sentinels if anything extraordinary had occurred.

"Nothing worth notice," they said, "excepting the lass that Cuddie took up, and two couriers that Captain Balfour had despatched, one to the Eeverend Ephraui Maubriar, another to Kettle-druminle," both of whom were beating the drum ecclesiastic in different towns between the position of Burley and the head-quarters of the main army near Hamilton.

"The purpose, I presume," said Morton, with fin affectation of indifference, "was to call them hither."

"So I understand," answered the sentinel, who had spoke with the messengers.

"He is summoning a triumphant majority of the council," thought Morton to himself, "for the purpose of sanctioning whatever action of atrocity he may determine upon, and thwarting opposition by authority. I must be speedy, or I shall lose my opportunity."

When he entered the place of Lord Evandale's confinement, he found him ironed, and reclining on a flock bed in the wretched garret of a miserable cottage. He was either in a slumber or in deep meditation when Morton entered, and turned on him, when aroused, a countenance so much reduced by loss of blood, want of sleep, and scarcity of food that no one could have recognised in it the gallant soldier who had behaved with so much spirit at the skirmish of Loudon-hill. He displayed some surprise at the sudden entrance of Morton.

"I am sorry to see you thus, my lord," said that youthful leader.

"I have heard you are an admirer of poetry," answered the prisoner; "in that case, Mr. Morion, you may remember these lines :—

Stone walls do not a prison make,
Nor iron bars a cage ;
Minds innocent and quiet take
That for an hermitage.

But, were my imprisonment less endurable, I am given to expect to-morrow a total enfranchisement."

"By death ?" said Morton.

"Surely," answered Lord Evandale; "I have no other prospect. Your comrade, Burley, has already dipped his hand in the blood of men whose meanness of rank and obscurity of extraction might have saved them. I cannot boast such a shield from his vengeance, and I expect to meet its extremity."

"But Major Bellenden," said Morton, "may surrender, in order to preserve your life,"

"Never, while there is one man to defend the battlement, and that man has one crust to eat. I know his gallant resolution, and grieved should I be if he changed it for my sake."

Morton hastened to acquaint him with the mutiny among the dragoons, and their resolution to surrender the Castle, and put the ladies of the family, as well as the major, into the hands of the enemy. Lord Evandale seemed at first surprised, and something incredulous, but immediately afterwards deeply affected.

¹¹ "What is to be done ?" he said. "How is this misfortune to be averted ?"

"Hear me, my lord," said Morton. "I believe you may not be unwilling to bear the olive-branch between our master the king and that part of his subjects which is now in arms, not from choice, but necessity."

"You construe me but justly," said Lord Evandale ; "but to what does this tend ?"

"Permit me, my lord," continued Morton. "I will set you at liberty upon parole, — nay, you may return to the Castle, and shall have a safe conduct for the ladies, the major, and all who leave it, on condition of its instant surrender. In contributing to bring this about, you will only submit to circumstances ; for with a mutiny in the garrison, and without provisions, it will be found impossible to defend the place twenty-four hours longer. Those, therefore, who refuse to accompany your lordship, must take their fate. You and your followers shall have a free pass to Edinburgh, or wherever the Duke of Monmouth may be. In return for your liberty, we hope that you will recommend to the notice of his Grace, as Lieutenant-General of Scotland, this humble petition and remonstrance, containing the grievances which have occasioned this insurrection, a redress of which being granted, I will answer with my head that the great body of the insurgents will lay down their arms."

Lord Evandale read over the paper with attention.

"Mr. Morton," he said, "in my simple judgment, I see little objection that can be made to the measures here recommended; nay, farther, I believe, in many respects, they may meet the private sentiments of the Duke of Monmouth : and yet, to deal frankly with you, I have no hopes of their being granted, unless, in the first place, you were to lay down your arms."

"The doing so," answered Morton, "would be virtually conceding that we had no right to take them up; and that, for one, I will never agree to."

"Perhaps it is hardly to be expected you should," said Lord Evandale; "and yet on that point I am certain the negotiations will be wrecked. I am willing, however, having frankly told you my opinion, to do all in my power to bring about a reconciliation."

"It is all we can wish or expect," replied Morton; "the issue is in God's hands, who disposes the hearts of princes. — You accept, then, the safe conduct?"

"Certainly," answered Lord Evandale; "and if I do not enlarge upon the obligation incurred by your having saved my life a second time, believe that I do not feel it the less."

"And the garrison of Tillietudlem?" said Morton.

"Shall be withdiawn as you propose," answered the young nobleman. "I am sensible the major will be unable to bring the mutineers to reason; and I tremble to think of the consequences, should the ladies and the brave old man be delivered up to this bloodthirsty roffian, Burley."

"You are in that case free," said Morton. "Prepare to mount on horseback; a few men whom I can trust shall attend you till you are in safety from our parties."

Leaving Lord Evandale in great surprise and joy at this unexpected deliverance, Morton hastened to get a few chosen men under arms and on horseback, each rider holding the rein of a spare horse. Jenny, who, while she partook of her refreshment, had contrived to make up her breach with Cuddie, rode on the left hand of that valiant cavalier. The tramp of their horses was soon heard under the window of Lord Evandale's prison. Two men, whom he did not know, entered the apartment, disencumbered him of his fetters, and, conducting him downstairs, mounted him in the centre of the detachment. They set out at a round trot towards Tillietudlem.

The moonlight was giving way to the dawn when they approached that ancient fortress, and its dark massive tower had just received the first pale colouring of the morning. The party halted at the Tower barrier, not venturing to approach nearer for fear of the fire of the place. Lord Evandale alone rode up to the gate, followed at a distance by Jenny Dennison. As they approached the gate, there was heard to arise in the court-yard a tumult which accorded ill with the quiet serenity of a summer dawn. Cries and oaths were heard, a pistol-shot or two were discharged, and everything announced that the mutiny had broken out. At this crisis Lord Evandale arrived at the gate where Halliday was sentinel. On hearing Lord Evandale's voice, he instantly and gladly admitted him, and that nobleman arrived among the mutinous troopers like a man dropped from the clouds. They were in the act of putting their design into execution, of seizing the place into their own hands, and were about to disarm and overpower Major Bellenden and Harrison, and others of the Castle, who were offering the best resistance in their power.

The appearance of Lord Evandale changed the scene. He seized Inglis by the collar, and upbraiding him with his villany, ordered two of his comrades to seize and bind him, assuring the others that their only chance of impunity consisted in instant submission. He then ordered the men into their ranks. They obeyed. He commanded them to ground their arms. They hesitated; but the instinct of discipline, joined to their persuasion that the authority of their officer, so boldly exerted, must be supported by some forces without the gate, induced them to submit.

"Take away those arms," said Lord Evandale to the people of the Castle; "they shall not be restored until these men know better the use for which they are intrusted with them. And now," he continued, addressing the mutineers, "begone! Make the best use of your time, and of a truce of three hours which the enemy are contented to allow you. Take the road to Edinburgh, and meet me at the House-of-Muir. I need not bid you beware of committing violence by the way; you will not, in your present condition, provoke resentment, for your own sakes. Let your punctuality show that you mean to atone for this morning's business."

The disarmed soldiers shrunk in silence from the presence of their officer, and, leaving the Castle, took the road to the place of rendezvous, making such haste as was inspired by the fear of meeting with some detached party of the insurgents, whom their present defenceless condition, and their former violence, might inspire with thoughts of revenge. Inglis, whom Evandale destined for punishment, remained in custody. Halliday was praised for his conduct, and assured of succeeding to the rank of the culprit. These arrangements being hastily made, Lord Evandale accosted the major, before whose eyes the scene had seemed to pass like the change of a dream.

"My dear Major, we must give up the place."

"Is it even so?" said Major Bellenden. "I was in hopes you had brought reinforcements and supplies."

"Not a man, — not a pound of meal," answered Lord Evandale.

"Yet I am blithe to see you," returned the honest major; "we were informed yesterday that these psalm-singing rascals had a plot on your life, and I had mustered the scoundrelly dragoons ten minutes ago in order to beat up Burley's quarters and get you out of limbo, when the dog liiglis, instead of obeying me, broke out into open mutiny. But what is to be done now?"

"I have, myself, no choice," said Lord Evandale; "I am a prisoner, released on parole, and bound for Edinburgh. You and the ladies must take the same route. I have, by the favour of a friend, a sale conduct and horses for you and your retinue. For God's sake, make haste; you cannot propose to hold out with seven or eight men, and without provisions. Enough has been done for honour, and enough to render the defence of the highest consequence to Government. More were needless, as well as desperate. The English troops are arrived at Edinburgh, and will speedily move upon Hamilton. The possession of Tilhetudlem by the rebels will be but temporary."

"If you think so, my lord," said the veteran, with a reluctant sigh, — "I know you only advise what is honourable. — if, then, you really think the case inevitable, I must submit; for the mutiny of these scoundrels would renfler it impossible to man the walls, — Gudyill, let the women call up their mistresses, and all be ready to march. — But if I could believe that my remaining in these old walls till I was starved to a mummy could do the king's cause the least service, old Miles Bellenden would not leave them while there was a spark of life in his body !"

The ladies, already alarmed by the mutiny, now heard the determination of the major, in which they readily acquiesced, though not without some groans and sighs on the part of Lady Margaret, which referred, as usual, to the dfjeune of his most sacred Majesty in the halls which were now to be abandoned to rebels. Hasty preparations were made for evacuating the Castle; and long ere the dawn was distinct enough for discovering objects with precision, the ladies, with Major Bellenden, Harrison, Gudyill, and the other domestics, were mounted on the led horses, and others which had been provided in the neighbourhood, and proceeded towards the North, still escorted by four of the insurgent horsemen. The rest of the party, who had accompanied Lord Evandale from the hamlet, took possession of the deserted Castle, carefully forbearing all outrage or acts of plunder; and when the sun arose, the scarlet and blue colours of the Scottish Covenant floated from the Keep of Tillietudlem.

CHAPTER XXIX.

And, to my breast, a bodkin in her hand
Were worth a thousand daggers

MARLOW.

THE cavalcade which left the Castle of Tillietudlem halted for a few minutes at the small town of Bothwell, after passing the outposts of the insurgents, 'o take some slight refreshments which their attendants had provided, and which were really necessary to persons who had suffered considerably by want of proper nourishment. They then pressed forward upon the road towards Edinburgh, amid the lights of dawn which were now rising on the horizon. It might have been expected, during the course of the journey, that Lord Evandale would have been frequently by the side of Miss Edith Bellenden. Yet, after his first salutations had been exchanged, and every precaution solicitously adopted which could serve for her accommodation, he rode in the van of the party with Major Bellenden, and seemed to abandon the charge of immediate attendance upon his lovely niece to one of the insurgent cavaliers, whose dark military cloak, with the large flapped hat and feather, which drooped over his face, concealed at once his figure and his features. They rode side by side in silence for more than two miles, when the stranger addressed Miss Bellenden in a tremulous and suppressed voice.

"Miss Bellenden," he said, "must have friends wherever she is known, even among those whose conduct she now disapproves. Is there anything that such can do to show their respect for her, and their regret for her sufferings?"

"Let them learn, for their own sakes," replied Edith, "to venerate the laws, and to spare innocent blood. Let them return to their allegiance, and I can forgive them all that I have suffered, were it ten times more."

"You think it impossible, then," rejoined the cavalier, "for any one to serve in our ranks, having the weal of his country sincerely at heart, and conceiving himself in the discharge of a patriotic duty?"

"It might be imprudent, while so absolutely in your power," replied Miss Bellenden, ^{fi} to answer that question."

"Not in the present instance, I plight you the word of a soldier," replied the horseman.

"I have been taught candour from my birth," said Edith; "and if I am to speak at all, I must utter my real sentiments. God only can judge the heart, — men must estimate intentions by actions. Treason, murder by the sword and by gibbet, the oppression of a private family, such as ours, who were only in arms for the defence of the established Government and of our own property, are actions which must needs sully all that have accession to them, by whatever specious terms they may be gilded over."

"The guilt of civil war," rejoined the horseman, "the miseries which it brings in its train, lie at the door of those who provoked it by illegal oppression, rather than of such as are driven to arms in order to assert their natural rights as freemen."

"That is assuming the question," replied Edith, "which ought to be proved. Each party contends that they are right in point of principle, and therefore the guilt must lie with them who first drew the sword, — as, in an affray, law holds those to be the criminals who are the first to have recourse to violence "

"Alas !" said the horseman, "were our vindication to rest there, how easy would it be to show that we have suffered with a patience which almost seemed beyond the power of humanity, ere we were driven by oppression into open resistance ! — But I perceive," he continued, sighing deeply, " that it is vain to plead before Miss Bellenden a cause which she has already prejudged, perhaps as much from her dislike of the persons as of the principles of those engaged in it."

"Pardon me," answered Edith; "I have stated with freedom my opinion of the principles of the insurgents; of their persons I know nothing,—excepting in one solitary instance."

"And that instance," said the horseman, "has influenced your opinion of the whole body?"

"Far from it," said Edith; "he is — at least I once thought him — one in whose scale few were fit to be weighed ; he is — or he seemed — one of early talent, high faith, pure morality, and warm affections. Can I approve of a rebellion which has made such a man, formed to ornament, to enlighten, and to defend his country, the companion of gloomy and ignorant fanatics or canting hypocrites, the leader of brutal clowns, the brother-in-arms to banditti and highway murderers ? Should you meet such an one in your camp, tell him that Edith Bellenden has wept more over his fallen character, blighted prospects, and dishonoured name than over the distresses of her own house, and that she has better endured that famine which has wasted her cheek and dimmed her eye, than the pang of heart which attended the reflection by and through whom these calamities were inflicted."

As she thus spoke, she turned upon her companion a countenance whose faded cheek attested the reality of her sufferings, even while it glowed with the temporary animation which accompanied her language. The horseman was not insensible to the appeal; he raised his hand to his brow with the sudden motion of one who feels a pang shoot along his brain, passed it hastily over his face, and then pulled the shadowing hat still deeper on his forehead. The movement, and the feelings which it excited, did not escape Edith, nor did she remark them without emotion.

"And yet," she said, "should the person of whom I speak seem to you too deeply affected by the hard opinion of — of — an early friend, say to him that sincere repentance is next to innocence ; that, though fallen from a height not easily recovered, and the author of much mischief, because gilded by his example, he may still atone in some measure for the evil he has done."

"And in what manner?" asked the cavalier, in the same suppressed and almost choked voice.

"By lending his efforts to restore the blessings of peace to his distracted countrymen, and to induce the deluded rebels to lay down their arms. By saving their blood, he may atone for that which has been already spilt. And he that shall be most active in accomplishing this great end, will best deserve the thanks of this age, and an honoured remembrance in the next."

"And in such a peace," said her companion, with a firm voice, "Miss Bellenden would not wish, I think, that the interests of the people were sacrificed unreservedly to those of the Crown?"

"I am but a girl," was the young lady's reply; "and I scarce can speak on the subject without presumption. But since I have gone so far, I will fairly add, I would wish to see a peace which should give rest to all parties, and secure the subjects from military rapine, which I detest as much as I do the means now adopted to resist it."

"Miss Bellenden," answered Henry Morton, raising his face, and speaking in his natural tone, "the person who has lost such a highly valued place in your esteem has yet too much spirit to plead his cause as a criminal; and conscious that he can no longer claim a friend's interest in your bosom, he would be silent under your hard censure, were it not that he can refer to the honoured testimony of Lord Evandale that his earnest wishes and most active exertions are, even now, directed to the accomplishment of such a peace as the most loyal cannot censure."

He bowed with dignity to Miss Bellenden, who, though her language intimated that she well knew to whom she had been speaking, probably had not expected that he would justify himself with so much animation. She returned his salute, confused and in silence. Morton then rode forward to the head of the party.

"Henry Morton!" exclaimed Major Bellenden, surprised at the sudden apparition.

"The same," answered Morton; "who is sorry that he labours under the harsh construction of Major Bellenden and his family. He commits to my Lord Evandale," he continued, turning towards the young noblemen, and bowing to him, "the charge of undeceiving his friends both regarding the particulars of his conduct and the purity of his motives. — Farewell, Major Bellenden ; all happiness attend you and yours. May we meet again in happier and better times!"

"Believe me," said Lord Evandale, "your confidence, Mr. Morton, is not misplaced; I will endeavour to repay the great services I have received from you by doing my best to place your character on its proper footing with Major Bellenden, and all whose esteem you value."

"^{ff}I expected 110 less from your generosity, my lord," said Morton.

He then called his followers, and rode off along the heath in the direction of Hamilton, their feathers waving and their steel caps glancing in the beams of the rising sun. Cuddle Headrigg alone remained an instant behind his companions to take an affectionate farewell of Jenny Dennison, who had contrived, during this short morning's ride, to re-establish her influence over his susceptible bosom. A straggling tree or two obscured, rather than concealed, their tete-d-tete, as they halted their horses to bid adieu.

"Fare ye weel, Jenny," said Cuddie, with a loud exertion of his lungs, intended perhaps to be a sigh, but rather resembling the intonation of a groan. "Ye 'll think o' puir Cuddie sometimes,— an honest lad that lo'es ye, Jenny; ye 'll think o' him now and then?"

"Whiles,— at brose time," answered the malicious damsel, unable either to suppress the repartee, or the arch smile which attended it.

Cuddie took his revenge as rustic lovers are wont, and as Jenny probably expected, — caught his mistress round the neck, kissed her cheeks and lips heartily, and then turned his horse and trotted after his master.

"Deil 's in the fallow," said Jenny, wiping her lips and adjusting her head-dress, "he has twice the spunk o' Tain Halliday, after a'.—Coming, my leddy, corning. — Lord have a care o' us, I trust the auld leddy didna see us !"

"Jenny," said Lady Margaret, as the damsel came up, "was not that young man who commanded the party the same that was captain of the popinjay, and who was afterwards prisoner at Tilhetudlem on the morning Claverhouse came there?"

Jenny, happy that the query had no reference to her own little matters, looked at her young mistress, to discover, if possible, whether it was her cue to speak truth or not. Not being able to catch any hint to guide her, she followed her instinct as a lady's maid, and lied.

"I dinna believe it was him, my leddy," said Jenny, as confidently as if she had been saying her catechism; "he was a little black man, that."

"You must have been blind, Jenny," said the major; "Henry Morton is tall and fair, and that youth is the very man."

"I had ither thing ado than be looking at him," said Jenny, tossing her head; "he may be as fair as a farthing candle, for me."

"Is it not," said Lady Margaret, "a blessed escape which we have made, out of the hands of so desperate and bloodthirsty a fanatic?"

"You are deceived, madam," said Lord Evandale; "Mr. Morton merits such a title from no one, but least from us. That I am now alive, and that you are now on your safe retreat to your friends, instead of being prisoners to a real fanatical homicide, is solely and entirely owing to the prompt, active, and energetic humanity of this young gentleman."

He then went into a particular narrative of the events with which the reader is acquainted, dwelling upon the merits of Morton, and expatiating on the risk at which he had rendered them these important services, as if he had been a brother instead of a rival.

"I were worse than ungrateful," lie said, "were I silent on the merits of the man who has twice saved my life."

"I would willingly think well of Henry Morton, my lord," replied Major Bellenden, "and I own he has behaved handsomely to your lordship and to us ; but I cannot have the same allowances which it pleases your lordship to entertain for his present courses."

"You are to consider," replied Lord Evandale, "that he has been partly forced upon them by necessity; and I must add that his principles, though differing in some degree from my own, are such as ought to command respect. Claverhouse, whose knowledge of men is not to be disputed, spoke justly of him as to his extraordinary qualities, but with prejudice, and harshly, concerning his principles and motives."

"You have not been long in learning all his extraordinary qualities, my lord,"¹ answered Major Bellenden. "I, who have known him from boyhood, could, before this affair, have said much of his good principles and good-nature ; but as to his high talents——"

"They were probably hidden, Major," replied the generous Lord Evandale, " even from himself, until circumstances called them forth ; and if I have detected them, it was only because our intercourse and conversation turned on momentous and important subjects. He is now labouring to bring this rebellion to an end, and the terms he has proposed are so moderate that they shall not want my hearty recommendation."

" And have you hopes," said Lady Margaret, " to accomplish a scheme so comprehensive ?"

" I should have, madam, were every Whig as moderate as Morton, and every loyalist as disinterested as Major Bellenden. But such is the fanaticism and violent irritation of both parties that I fear nothing will end this civil war save the edge of the sword."

It may be readily supposed that Edith listened with the deepest interest to this conversation. While she regretted that she had expressed herself harshly and hastily to her lover, she felt a conscious and proud satisfaction that his character was, even in the judgment of his noble-minded rival, such as her own affection had once spoke it.

" Civil feuds and domestic prejudices," she said, " may render it necessary for me to tear his remembrance from my heart; but it is no small relief to know assuredly that it is worthy of the place it has so long retained there "

While Edith was thus retracting her unjust resentment, her lover arrived at the camp of the insurgents, near Hamilton, which he found in considerable confusion. Certain advices had arrived that the royal army, having been recruited from England by a large detachment of the King's Guards, were about to take the field. Fame magnified their numbers and their high state of equipment and discipline, and spread abroad other circumstances, which dismayed the courage of the insurgents. What favour they might have expected from Monmouth, was likely to be intercepted by the influence of those associated with him in command. His lieutenant-general was the celebrated General Thomas Dalziill, who, having practised the art of war in the then barbarous country of "Russia, was as much feared for his cruelty and indifference to human life and human sufferings as respected for his steady loyalty and undaunted valour. This man was second in command to Monmtmth, and the horse were commanded by Claverhouse, burning with desire to revenge the death of his nephew, and his defeat at Drumclog. To these accounts was added the most formidable and terrific description of the train of artillery and the cavalry force with which the royal army took the field.¹

Large hodies, composed of the Highland clans, having in language, religion, and manners no connection with the insurgents, had been summoned to join the royal army under their various chieftains ; and these Amorites, or Philistines, as the insurgents termed them, came like eagles to the slaughter. In fact, every person who could ride or run at the king's command, was summoned to arms, apparently with the purpose of forfeiting and fining such men of property whom their principles might deter from joining the royal standard, though prudence prevented them from joining that of the insurgent Presbyterians. In short, every rumour tended to increase the apprehension among the insurgents that the king's vengeance had only been delayed In order that it might fall more certain and more heavy.

¹ Note XIII.—Royal Army at Bothwell Bridge.

Morton endeavoured to fortify the minds of the common people by pointing out the probable exaggeration of these reports, and by reminding them of the strength of their own situation, with an unfordable river in front, only passable by a long and narrow bridge. He called to their remembrance their victory over Claverhouse when their numbers were few, and then much worse disciplined and appointed for battle than now; showed them that the ground on which they lay afforded, by its undulation, and the thickets which intersected it, considerable protection against artillery, and even against cavalry, if stoutly defended; and that their safety, in fact, depended on their own spirit and resolution.

But while Morton thus endeavoured to keep up the courage of the army at large, he availed himself of those discouraging rumours to endeavour to impress on the minds of the leaders the necessity of proposing to the Government moderate terms of accommodation while they were still formidable as commanding an unbroken and numerous army. He pointed out to them that, in the present humour of their followers, it could hardly be expected that they would engage, with advantage, the well-appointed and regular force of the Duke of Monmouth; and that if they chanced, as was most likely, to be defeated and dispersed, the insurrection in which they had engaged, so far from being useful to the country, would be rendered the apology for oppressing it more severely.

Pressed by these arguments, and feeling it equally dangerous to remain together or to dismiss their forces, most of the leaders readily agreed that if such terms could be obtained as had been transmitted to the Duke of Monmouth by the hands of Lord Evandale, the purpose for which they had taken up arms would be, in a great measure, accomplished. They then entered into similar resolutions, and agreed to guarantee the petition and remonstrance which had been drawn up by Morton. On the contrary, there were still several leaders, and those men whose influence with the people exceeded that of persons of more apparent consequence, who regarded every proposal of treaty which did not proceed on the basis of the Solemn League and Covenant of 1640, as utterly null and void, impious, and unchristian. These men diffused their feelings among the multitude, who had little foresight, and nothing to lose, and persuaded many that the timid counsellors who recommended peace upon terms short of the dethronement of the royal family, and the declared independence of the Church with respect to the State, were cowardly labourers who were about to withdraw their hands from the plough, and despicable trimmers who sought only a specious pretext for deserting their brethren in arms. These contradictory opinions were fiercely argued in each tent of the insurgent army, or rather in the huts or cabins which served in the place of tents. Violence in language often led to open quarrels and blows, and the divisions into which the army of sufferers was rent served as too plain a presage of their future fate.

CHAPTER XXX.

The curse of growing factions and divisions
Still vex your councils !

Venice Preserved.

THE prudence of Morton found sufficient occupation in stemming the furious current of these contending parties, when, two days after his return to Hamilton, he was visited by his friend and colleague, the Reverend Mr. Poundtext, flying, as he presently found, from the face of John Balfour of Burley, whom he left not a little incensed at the share he had taken in the liberation of Lord Evandale. When the worthy divine had somewhat recruited his spirits, after the hurry and fatigue of his journey, he proceeded to give Morton an account of what had passed in the vicinity of Tilletudlem after the memorable morning of his departure.

The night march of Morton had been accomplished with such dexterity, and the men were so faithful to their trust, that Burley received no intelligence of what had happened until the morning was far advanced. His first inquiry was whether Macbriar and Kettledrummle had arrived, agreeably to the summons which he had despatched at midnight. Macbriar had come, and Kettledrummle, though a heavy traveller, might, he was informed, be instantly expected. Burley then despatched a messenger to Morton's quarters to summon him to an immediate council. The messenger returned with news that he had left the place. Poundtext was next summoned; but he, thinking, as he said himself, that it was ill dealing with fractious folk, had withdrawn to his own quiet manse, preferring a dark ride, though he had been on horseback the whole preceding day, to a renewal in the morning of a controversy with Hurley, whose ferocity overawed him when unsupported by the firmness of Morton. Burley's next inquiries were directed after Lord Evandale; and great was his rage when he learned that he had been conveyed away over night by a party of the marksmen of Milnwnod, under the immediate command of Henry Morton himself.

"The villain!" exclaimed Burley, addressing himself to Macbriar; "the base, mean-spirited traitor, to curry favour for himself with the Government, hath set at liberty the prisoner taken by my own right hand, through means of whom, I have little doubt, the possession of the place of strength which hath wrought us such trouble might now have been in our hands!"

"But is it not in our hands?" said Macbriar, looking up towards the Keep of the Castle; "and are not these the colours of the Covenant that float over its walls?"

"A stratagem, — a mere trick," said Burley, "an insult over our disappointment, intended to aggravate and embitter our spirits."

He was interrupted by the arrival of one of Morton's followers, sent to report to him the evacuation of the place, and its occupation by the insurgent forces. Burley was rather driven to fury than reconciled by the news of this success,

" I have watched," he said, " I have fought, I have plotted, I have striven for the reduction of this place; I have forborne to seek to head enterprises of higher command and of higher honour, I have narrowed their outgoings, and cut off the springs, and broken the staff of bread within their walls ; and when the men were about to yield themselves to my hand, that their sons might be bondsmen, and their daughters a laughing-stock to our whole camp, cometh this youth, without a beard on his chin, and takes it on him to thrust his sickle into the harvest, and to rend the prey from the spoiler ! Surely the labourer is worthy of his hire, and the city, with its captives, should be given to him that wins it ? "

" Nay," said Macbriar, who was surprised at the degree of agitation which Balfour displayed, " chafe not thyself because of the ungodly. Heaven will use its own instruments ; and who knows but this youth — "

" Hush! hush!" said Burley; " do not discredit thine own better judgment. It was thou that first badest me beware of this painted sepulchre, this lacquered piece of copper that passed current with me for gold. It fares ill, even with the elect, when they neglect the guidance of such pious pastors as thou. But our carnal affections will mislead us, — this ungrateful boy's father was mine ancient friend. They must be as earnest in their struggles as thou, Ephraim Macbriar, that would shake themselves clear of the clogs and chains of humanity."

This compliment touched the preacher in the most sensible part; and Burley deemed, therefore, he should find little difficulty in moulding his opinions to the support of his own views, more especially as they agreed exactly in their high-strained opinions of church government.

"Let us instantly," he said, "go up to the Tower; there is that among the records in yonder fortress which, well used as I can use it, shall be worth to us a valiant leader and an hundred horsemen."

"But will such be the fitting aids of the children of the Covenant?" said the preacher. "We have already among us too many who hunger after lands, and silver and gold, rather than after the Word; it is not by such that our deliverance shall be wrought out."

"Thou errest," said Burley; "we must work by means, and these worldly men shall be our instruments. At all events, the Moabitish woman shall be despoiled of her inheritance, and neither the malignant Evandale nor the Erastian Morton shall possess yonder castle and lands, though they may seek in marriage the daughter thereof."

So saying, he led the way to Tilhetudlem, where he seized upon the plate and other valuables for the use of the army, ransacked the charter-room and other receptacles for family papers, and treated with contempt the remonstrances of those who reminded him that the terms granted to the garrison had guaranteed respect to private property.

Burley and Macbriar, having established themselves in their new acquisition, were joined by Kettledrummle in the course of the day, and also by the Laird of Langcale, whom that active divine had contrived to seduce, as Poundtext termed it, from the pure light in which he had been brought up. Thus united, they sent to the said Poundtext an invitation, or rather a summons, to attend a council at Tillietudlem. He remembered, however, that the door had an iron grate, and the Keep a dungeon, and resolved not to trust himself with his incensed colleagues. He therefore retreated, or rather fled, to Hamilton, with the tidings that Burley, Macbriar, and Kettledrummle were coming to Hamilton as soon as they could collect a body of Cameronians sufficient to overawe the rest of the army.

"And ye see," concluded Poundtext, with a deep sigh, "that they will then possess a majority in the council; for Langcale, though he has always passed for one of the honest and rational party, cannot be suitably or precesely termed either fish, or flesh, or gude red-herring: whoever has the stronger party has Langcale."

Thus concluded the heavy narrative of honest Poundtext, who sighed deeply as he considered the danger in which he was placed betwixt unreasonable adversaries amongst themselves and the common enemy from without. Morton exhorted him to patience, temper, and composure, informed him of the good hope he had of negotiating for peace and indemnity through means of Lord Evandale, and made out to him a very fair prospect that he should again return to his own parchment-bound Calvin, his evening pipe of tobacco, and his noggin of inspiring ale, providing always he would afford his effectual support and concurrence to the measures which he, Morton, had taken for a general pacification.¹ Thus backed and comforted, Poundtext resolved magnanimously to await the coming of the Cameronians to the general rendezvous.

Burley and his confederates had drawn together

¹ Note XIV,—H[>derate Preibysterians.

a considerable body of these sectaries, amounting to a hundred horse and about fifteen hundred foot, clouded and severe in aspect, morose and jealous in communication, haughty of heart, and confident as men who believed that the pale of salvation was open for them exclusively; while all other Christians, however slight were the shades of difference of doctrine from their own, were in fact little better than outcasts or reprobates. These men entered the Presbyterian camp rather as dubious and suspicious allies, or possibly antagonists, than as men who were heartily embarked in the same cause, and exposed to the same dangers, with their more moderate brethren in arms. Burley made no private visits to his colleagues, and held no communication with them on the subject of the public affairs, otherwise than by sending a dry invitation to them to attend a meeting of the general council for that evening.

On the arrival of Morton and Poundtext at the place of assembly, they found their brethren already seated. Slight greeting passed between them, and it was easy to see that no amicable conference was intended by those who convoked the council. The first question was put by Macbriar, the sharp eagerness of whose zeal urged him to the van on all occasions. He desired to know by whose authority the malignant, called Lord Evandale, had been freed from the doom of death, justly denounced against him.

"By my authority and Mr. Morton's," replied Poundtext, who, besides being anxious to give his companion a good opinion of his courage, confided heartily in his support, and, moreover, had much less fear of encountering one of his own profession, and who confined himself to the weapons of theological controversy, in which Poundtext feared no man, than of entering into debate with the stern homicide Balfour.

"And who, Brother," said Kettledrummle, "who gave you authority to interpose in such a high matter?"

"The tenor of our commission," answered Poundtext, "gives us authority to bind and to loose. If Lord Evandale was justly doomed to die by the voice of one of our number, he was of a surety lawfully redeemed from death by the warrant of two of us."

"Go to, go to," said Burley; "we know your motives, — it was to send that silkworm, that gilded trinket, that embroidered trifle of a lord, to bear terms of peace to the tyrant."

"It was so," replied Morton, who saw his companion begin to flinch before the fierce eye of Balfour, "it was so; and what then? Are we to plunge the nation in endless war, in order to pursue schemes which are equally wild, wicked, and unattainable?"

"Hear him!" said Balfour; "he blasphemeth."

"It is false," said Morton; "they blaspheme who pretend to expect miracles, and neglect the use of the human means with which Providence has blessed them. I repeat it, — our avowed object is the re-establishment of peace on fair and honourable terms of security to our religion and our liberty. We disclaim any desire to tyrannise over those of others."

The debate would now have run higher than ever, but they were interrupted by intelligence that the Duke of Monmouth had commenced his march towards the West, and was already advanced half way from Edinburgh. This news silenced their divisions for the moment, and it was agreed that the next day should be held as a fast of general humiliation for the sins of the land; that the Reverend Mr. Poundtext should preach to the army in the morning, and Kettledrummle in the afternoon; that neither should touch upon any topics of schism or of division, but animate the soldiers to resist to the blood, like brethren in a good cause. This healing overture having been agreed to, the moderate party ventured upon another proposal, confiding that it would have the support of Langcale, who looked extremely blank at the news which they had just received, and might be supposed reconverted to moderate measures. It was to be presumed, they said, that since the king had not intrusted the command of his forces upon the present occasion to any of their active oppressors, but, on the contrary, had employed a nobleman distinguished by gentleness of temper and a disposition favourable to their cause, there must be some better intention entertained towards them than they had yet experienced. They contended that it was not only prudent, but necessary to ascertain, from a communication with the Duke of Monmouth, whether he was not charged with some secret instructions in their favour. This could only be learned by despatching an envoy to his army.

"And who will undertake the task?" said Burley, evading a proposal too reasonable to be openly resisted, — "who will go up to their camp, knowing that John Grahame of Claverhouse hath sworn to hang up whomsoever we shall despatch towards them, in revenge of the death of the young man his nephew?"

¹¹ Let that be no obstacle," said Morton; "I will with pleasure encounter any risk attached to the bearer of your errand."

"Let him go," said Balfour, apart to Macbriar; our councils will be well rid of his presence."

The motion, therefore, received no contradiction even from those who were expected to have been most active in opposing it \ and it was agreed thuit Henry Morton should go to the Cfimp of the Duke of Monmouth, in order to discover upon what terms the insurgents would be admitted to treat with him. As soon as his errand was made known, several of the more moderate party joined in requesting him to make terms upon the footing of the petition intrusted to Lord Evandale's hands ; for the approach of the king's army spread a general trepidation, by no means allayed by the high tone assumed by the Caineronians, which had so little to support it excepting their own headlong zeal. With these instructions, and with Cuddie as his attendant, Morton set forth towards the royal camp, at all the risks which attend those who assume the office of mediator during the heat of civil discord.

Morton had not proceeded six or seven miles before he perceived that he was on the point of falling in with the van of the royal forces ; and as he ascended a height, saw all the roads in the neighbourhood occupied by armed men inarching in great order towards Bothwell-muir, an open common, on which they proposed to encamp for that evening, at the distance of scarcely two miles from the Clyde, on the farther side of which river the army of the insurgents was encamped. He gave himself up to the first advanced-guard of cavalry which he met, as bearer of a flag of truce, and communicated his desire to obtain access to the Duke of Monmouth. The non-commissioned officer who commanded the party made his report to his superior, and he again to another in still higher command, and both immediately rode to the spot where Morton was detained.

"You are but losing your time, my friend, and risking your life," said one of them, addressing Morton; "the Duke of Monmouth will receive no terms from traitors with arms in their hands, and your cruelties have been such as to authorise retaliation of every kind. Belter trot your nag back and save his mettle to-day, that he may save your life to-morrow."

"I cannot think," said Morton, "that even if the Duke of Monmouth should consider us as criminals, he would condemn so large a body of his fellow-subjects, without even hearing what they have to plead for themselves. On my part I fear nothing. I am conscious of having consented to, or authorised, no cruelty, and the fear of suffering innocently for the crimes of others shall not deter me from executing my commission."

The two officers looked at each other.

"I have an idea," said the younger, "that this is the young man of whom Lord Evandale spoke."

"Is my Lord Evandale in the army?" said Morton.

"He is not," replied the officer; "we left him at Edinburgh, too much indisposed to take the field. Your name, sir, I presume, is Henry Morton?"

"It is, sir," answered Morton.

"We will not oppose your seeing the duke, sir," said the officer, with more civility of manner, "but you may assure yourself it will be to no purpose; for were his Grace disposed to favour your people, others are joined in commission with him who will hardly consent to his doing so."

"I shall be sorry to find it thus," said Morton ; "but my duty requires that I should persevere in my desire to have an interview with him."

"Lumley," said the superior officer, "let the duke know of Mr. Morton's arrival, and remind his Grace that this is the person of whom Lord Evandale spoke so highly."

The officer returned with a message that the general could not see Mr. Morton that evening, but would receive him by times in the ensuing morning. He was detained in a neighbouring cottage all night, but treated with civility, and everything provided for his accommodation. Early on the next morning the officer he had first seen came to conduct him to his audience

The army was drawn out, and in the act of forming column for march or attack. The duke was in the centre, nearly a mile from the place where Morton had passed the night. In riding towards the general, he had an opportunity of estimating the force which had been assembled for the suppression of the hasty and ill-concerted insurrection. There were three or four regiments of English, the flower of Charles's army; there were the Scottish Life Guards, burning with desire to revenge their late defeat; other Scottish regiments of regulars were also assembled, and a large body of cavalry, consisting partly of gentlemen-volunteers, partly of the tenants of the Crown who did military duty for their fiefs. Morton also observed several strong-parties of Highlanders drawn from the points nearest to the Lowland frontiers, — a people, as already mentioned, particularly obnoxious to the Western Whigs, and who hated and despised them in the same proportion. These were assembled under their chiefs, and made part of this formidable array. A complete train of field-artillery accompanied these troops ; and the whole had an air so imposing that it seemed nothing short of an actual miracle could prevent the ill-equipped, ill-modelled, and tumultuary army of the insurgents from being utterly destroyed. The officer who accompanied Morton endeavoured to gather from his looks the feelings with which this splendid and awful parade of military force had impressed him. But, true to the cause he had espoused, he laboured successfully to prevent the anxiety which he felt from appearing in his countenance, and looked around him on the warlike display as on a sight which he expected, and to which he was indifferent.

"You see the entertainment prepared for you," said the officers.

"If I had no appetite for it," replied Morton, "I should not have been accompanying you at this moment. But I shall be better pleased with a more peaceful regale, for the sake of all parties."

As they spoke thus, they approached the commander-in-chief, who, surrounded by several officers, was seated upon a knoll commanding an extensive prospect of the distant country, and from which could be easily discovered the windings of the majestic Clyde, and the distant camp of the insurgents on the opposite bank. The officers of the royal army appeared to be surveying the ground, with the purpose of directing an immediate attack. When Captain Lumley, the officer who accompanied Morton, had whispered in Monmouth's ear his name and errand, the duke made a signal for all around him to retire, excepting only two general officers of distinction. While they spoke together in whispers for a few minutes before Morton was permitted to advance, he had time to study the appearance of the persons with whom he was to treat.

It was impossible for any one to look upon the Duke of Monmouth without being captivated by his personal graces and accomplishments, of which the great High-Priest of all the Nine afterwards recorded,—

Whate'er he did waa done with so much ease, (13)¹
In him alone 't was natural tp please;
His motions all accompanied with grace,
Ami Paradise was opened in his face.

Yet to a strict observer, the manly beauty of Monmouth's face was occasionally rendered less striking by an air of vacillation and uncertainty, which seemed to imply hesitation and doubt at moments when decisive resolution was most necessary.

Beside him stood Claverhouse, whom we have already fully described, and another general officer whose appearance was singularly striking. His dress was of the antique fashion of Charles the First's time, and composed of shamoy leather, curiously slashed, and covered with antique lace and garniture. His boots and spurs might be referred to the same distant period. He wore a breastplate, over which descended a grey beard of venerable length, which he cherished as a mark of mourning for Charles the First, having never shaved since that monarch was brought to the scaffold. His head was uncovered, and almost perfectly bald. His i See Editor's Notes at the end of the Volume. Wherever a similar reference occurs, the reader will understand that the same direction applies.

high and wrinkled forehead, piercing grey eyes, and marked features evinced age unbroken by infirmity, and stern resolution unsoftened by humanity. Such is the outline, however feebly expressed, of the celebrated General Thomas Dalzell,¹ a man more feared and hated by the Whigs than even Claverhouse himself, and who executed the same violences against them out of a detestation of their persons, or perhaps an innate severity of temper, which Grahame only resorted to on political accounts, as the best means of intimidating the followers of Presbytery, and of destroying that sect entirely.

The presence of these two generals, one of whom he knew by person, and the other by description, seemed to Morton decisive of the fate of his embassy. But notwithstanding his youth and inexperience, and the unfavourable reception which his proposals seemed likely to meet with, he advanced boldly towards them upon receiving a signal to that purpose, determined that the cause of his country, and of those with whom he had taken up arms, should suffer nothing from being intrusted to him. Monmouth received him with the graceful courtesy which attended even his slightest actions; Dalzell regarded him with a stern, gloomy, and impatient frown; and Claverhouse, with a sarcastic smile and inclination of his head, seemed to claim him as an old acquaintance.

"You come, sir, from these unfortunate people now assembled in arms," said the Duke of Monmouth, "and your name, I believe, is Morton; will you favour us with the purport of your errand?"

"It is contained, my lord," answered Morton,

¹ Note XV.—General Dalzell. (14)

'in a paper, termed a Remonstrance and Supplication, which my Lord Evandale has placed, I presume, in your Grace's hands 1"

"He has done so, sir," answered the duke; "and I understand from Lord Evandale that Mr. Morton has behaved in these unhappy matters with much temperance and generosity, for which I have to request his acceptance of my thanks "

Here Morton observed Dalzell shake his head indignantly, and whisper something into Claverhouse's ear, who smiled in return, and elevated his eyebrows, but in a degree so slight as scarce to be perceptible. The duke, taking the petition from his pocket, proceeded, obviously struggling between the native gentleness of his own disposition, and perhaps his conviction that the petitioners demanded no more than their rights, and the desire, on the other hand, of enforcing the king's authority, and complying with the sterner opinions of the colleagues in office, who had been assigned for the purpose of controlling as well as advising him.

"There are, Mr. Morton, in this paper, proposals, as to the abstract propriety of which I must now waive delivering any opinion. Some of them appear to me reasonable and just; and although I have no express instructions from the king upon the subject, yet I assure you, Mr. Morton, and I pledge my honour, that I will interpose in your behalf, and use my utmost influence to procure you satisfaction from his Majesty. But you must distinctly understand that I can only treat with supplicants, not with rebels; and as a preliminary to every act of favour on my side, I must insist upon your followers laying down their arms and dispersing themselves."

"To do so, my Lord Duke," replied Morton, undauntedly, "were to acknowledge ourselves the rebels that our enemies term us. Our swords are drawn for recovery of a birthright wrested from us; your Grace's moderation and good sense has admitted the general justice of our demand, — a demand which would never have been listened to, had it not been accompanied with the sound of the trumpet. We cannot, therefore, and dare not, lay down our arms, even on your Grace's assurance of indemnity, unless it were accompanied with some reasonable prospect of the redress of the wrongs which we complain of."

"Mr. Morton," replied the duke, "you are young, but you must have seen enough of the world to perceive that requests, by no means dangerous or unreasonable in themselves, may become so by the way in which they are pressed and supported."

"We may reply, my lord," answered Morton, "that this disagreeable mode has not been resorted to until all others have failed."

"Mr. Morton," said the duke, "I must break this conference short. We are in readiness to commence the attack; yet I will suspend it for an hour, until you can communicate my answer to the insurgents. If they please to disperse their followers, lay down their arms, and send a peaceful deputation to me, I will consider myself bound in honour to do all I can to procure redress of their grievances; if not, let them stand on their guard, and expect the consequences. — I think, gentlemen," he added, turning to his two colleagues, "this is the utmost length to which I can stretch my instructions in favour of these misguided persons?"

"By my faith," answered Dalzell, suddenly, "and it is a length to which my poor judgment durst not have stretched them, considering I had both the king and my conscience to answer to! But doubtless your Grace knows more of the king's private mind than we, who have only the letter of our instructions to look to."

Monmouth blushed deeply. "You hear," he said, addressing Morton, "General Dalzell blames me for the length which I am disposed to go in your favour."

"General Dalzell's sentiments, my lord," replied Morton, "are such as we expected from him; your Grace's such as we were prepared to hope you might please to entertain. Indeed, I cannot help adding that, in the case of the absolute submission upon which you are pleased to insist, it might still remain something less than doubtful how far, with such counsellors around the king, even your Grace's intercession might procure us effectual relief. But I will communicate to our leaders your Grace's answer to our supplication; and since we cannot obtain peace, we must bid war welcome as well as we may."

"Good morning, sir," said the duke; "I suspend the movements of attack for one hour, and for one hour only. If you have an answer to return within that space of time, I will receive it here, and earnestly entreat it may be such as to save the effusion of blood."

At this moment another smile of deep meaning passed between Dalzell and Claverhouse. The duke observed it, and repeated his words with great dignity.

"Yes, gentlemen, I said I trusted the answer might be such as would save the effusion of blood.

I hope the sentiment neither needs your scorn, nor incurs your displeasure."

Dalzell returned the duke's frown with a stern glance, but made no answer. Claverhouse, his lip just curled with an ironical smile, bowed, and said, "It was not for him to judge the propriety of his Grace's sentiments."

The duke made a signal to Morton to withdraw. He obeyed; and, accompanied by his former escort, rode slowly through the army to return to the camp of the nonconformists. As he passed the fine corps of Life Guards, he found Claverhouse was already at their head. That officer no sooner saw Morton than he advanced, and addressed him with perfect politeness of manner.

"I think this is not the first time I have seen Mr. Morton of Milnwood?"

"It is not Colonel Grahame's fault," said Morton, smiling sternly, "that he or any one else should be now incommoded by my presence."

¹¹ Allow me at least to say," replied Claverhouse, "that Mr. Morton's present situation authorises the opinion I have entertained of him, and that my proceedings at our last meeting only squared to my duty."

"To reconcile your actions to your duty, and your duty to your conscience, is your business, Colonel Grahame, not mine," said Morton, justly offended at being thus, in a manner, required to approve of the sentence under which he had so nearly suffered.

"Nay, but stay an instant," said Claverhouse; "Evandale insists that I have some wrongs to acquit myself of in your instance. I trust I shall always make some difference between a high-minded gentleman, who, though misguided, acts upon generous principles, and the crazy fanatical clowns yonder, with the bloodthirsty assassins who head them. Therefore, if they do not disperse upon your return, let me pray you instantly come over to our army and surrender yourself, for, be assured, they cannot stand our assault for half an hour. If you will be ruled and do this, be sure to inquire for me. Monmouth, strange as it may seem, cannot protect you; Dalzell will not; I both can and will; and I have promised to Evaidale to do so if you will give me an opportunity."

"I should owe Lord Evandale my thanks," answered Morton, coldly, "did not his scheme imply an opinion that I might be prevailed on to desert those with whom I am engaged. For you, Colonel Grahame, if you will honour me with a different species of satisfaction, it is probable that, in an hour's time, you will find me at the west end of Bothwell Bridge with my sword in my hand."

"I shall be happy to meet you there," said Claverhouse, "but still more so should you think better on my first proposal."

They then saluted and parted.

"That is a pretty lad, Lumley," said Claverhouse, addressing himself to the other officer, "but he is a lost man, — his blood be upon his head."

So saying, he addressed himself to the task of preparation for instant battle.

CHAPTER XXXI.

But hark ' the tent has changed its voice,
There 'a peace and rest nae langer.

BURNS

The Lowdien Mallisha they Came with their coats of blew ;
Five hundred men from London came,
Claid in a reddish hue.

Bothwell Lines.

WHEN Morton had left the well-ordered outposts of the regular army, and arrived at those which were maintained by his own party, he could not but be peculiarly sensible of the difference of discipline, and entertain a proportional degree of fear for the consequences. The same discords which agitated the councils of the insurgents raged even among their meanest followers; and their pickets and patrols were more interested and occupied in disputing the true occasion and caused of wrath, and defining the limits of Erastian heresy, than in looking out for and observing the motions of their enemies, though within hearing of the royal drums and trumpets.

There was a guard, however, of the insurgent army posted at the long and narrow bridge of Bothwell, over which the enemy must necessarily advance to the attack; but, like the others, they were divided and disheartened; and, entertaining the idea that they were posted on a desperate service, they even meditated withdrawing themselves to the main body. This would have been utter ruin ; for on the defence or loss of this pass the fortune of the day was most likely to depend. All beyond the bridge was a plain open field, excepting a few thickets of no great depth, and consequently was ground on which the undisciplined forces of the insurgents, deficient as they were in cavalry, and totally unprovided with artillery, were altogether unlikely to withstand the shock of regular troops.

Morton, therefore, viewed the pass carefully, and formed the hope that by occupying two or three houses on the left bank of the river with the copse and thickets of alders and hazels that lined its side, and by blockading the passage itself, and shutting the gates of a portal, which, according to the old fashion, was built on the central arch of the bridge of Bothwell, it might be easily defended against a very superior force. He issued directions accordingly, and commanded the parapets of the bridge, on the farther side of the portal, to be thrown down, that they might afford no protection to the enemy when they should attempt the passage. Morton then conjured the party at this important post to be watchful and upon their guard, and promised them a speedy and strong reinforcement. He caused them to advance videttes beyond the river to watch the progress of the enemy, which outposts he directed should be withdrawn to the left bank as soon as they approached. Finally he charged them to send regular information to the main body of all that they should observe. Men under arms, and in a situation of danger, are usually sufficiently alert in appreciating the merit of their officers. Morton's intelligence and activity gained the confidence of these men, and with better hope and heart than before, they began to fortify their position in the manner he recommended, and saw him depart with three loud cheers.

Morton now galloped hastily towards the main body of the insurgents, but was surprised and shocked at the scene of confusion and clamour which it exhibited, at the moment when good order and concord were of such essential consequence. Instead of being drawn up in line of battle, and listening to the commands of their officers, they were crowding together in a confused mass that rolled and agitated itself like the waves of the sea, while a thousand tongues spoke, or rather vociferated, and not a single ear was found to listen. Scandalised at a scene so extraordinary, Morton endeavoured to make his way through the press to learn, and, if possible, to remove, the cause of this so untimely disorder. While he is thus engaged, we shall make the reader acquainted with that which he was some time in discovering.

The insurgents had proceeded to hold their day of humiliation, which, agreeably to the practice of the Puritans during the earlier civil war, they considered as the most effectual mode of solving all difficulties and waiving all discussions. It was usual to name an ordinary week-day for this purpose, but on this occasion the Sabbath itself was adopted, owing to the pressure of the time and the vicinity of the enemy. A temporary pulpit, or tent, was erected in the middle of the encampment, which, according to the fixed arrangement, was first to be occupied by the Reverend Peter Poundtext, to whom the post of honour was assigned, as the eldest clergyman present. But as the worthy divine, with slow and stately steps, was advancing towards the rostrum which had been prepared for him, he was prevented by the unexpected apparition of Habakkuk Mucklewrath, the insane preacher, whose appearance had so much startled Morton at the first council of the insurgents after their victory at Loudon-hill. It is not known whether he was acting under the influence and instigation of the Cameroiiiians, or whether he was merely compelled by his own agitated imagination, and the temptation of a vacant pulpit before him, to seize the opportunity of exhorting so respectable a congregation. It is only certain that he took occasion by the forelock, sprung mt,o the pulpit, cast his eyes wildly round him, and, undismayed by the murmurs of many of the audience, opened the Bible, read forth as his text from the thirteenth chapter of Deuteronomy, " Certain men, the children of Belial, are gone out from among you, and have withdrawn the inhabitants of their city, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, which ye have not known ; " and then rushed at once into the midst of his subject.

The harangue of Mucklewrath was as wild and extravagant as his intrusion was unauthorised and untimely; but it was provokingly coherent, in BO far as it turned entirely upon the very subjects of discord, of which it had been agreed to adjourn the consideration until some more suitable opportunity. Not a single topic did he omit which had offence in it; and after charging the moderate party with heresy, with crouching to tyranny, with seeking to be at peace with God's enemies, he applied to Morton, by name, the charge that he had been one of those men of Belial who, in the words of his text, had gone out from amongst them, to withdraw the inhabitants of his city, and to go astray after false gods. To him and all who followed him or approved of his conduct, Mucklewrath denounced fury and vengeance, and exhorted those who would hold themselves pure and undefiled to come up from the midst of them.

"Fear not," he said, "because of the neighing of horses or the glittering of breastplates. Seek not aid of the Egyptians because of the enemy, though they may be numerous as locusts, and fierce as dragons. Their trust is not as our trust, nor their rock as our rock; how else shall a thousand fly before one, and two put ten thousand to the flight? I dreamed it in the visions of the night, and the voice said: ¹Habakkuk, take thy fan and purge the wheat from the chaff, that they be not both consumed with the fire of indignation and the lightning of fury,' Wherefore, I say, take this Henry Morton, — this wretched Achan, who hath brought the accursed thing among ye, and made himself brethren in the camp of the enemy, — take him and stone him with stones, and thereafter burn him with fire, that the wrath may depart from the children of the Covenant. He hath not taken a Babylonish garment, but he hath sold the garment of righteousness to the woman of Babylon; he hath not taken two hundred shekels of fine silver, but he hath bartered the truth, which is more precious than shekels of silver or wedges of gold."

At this furious charge, brought so unexpectedly against one of their most active commanders, the audience broke out into open tumult, some demanding that there should instantly be a new election of officers, into which office none should hereafter be admitted who had, in their phrase, touched of that which was accursed, or temporised more or less with the heresies and corruptions of the times. While such was the demand of the Cameronians, they vociferated loudly that those who were not with them were against them; that it was no time to relinquish the substantial part of the covenanted testimony of the Church, if they expected a blessing on their arms and their cause; and that, in their eyes, a lukewarm Presbyterian was little better than a Prelatist, an Anti-Covenanter, and a Nullifidian.

The parties accused repelled the charge of criminal compliance and defection from the truth, with scorn and indignation, and charged their accusers with breach of faith, as well as with wrong-headed and extravagant zeal in introducing such divisions into an army, the joint strength of which could not, by the most sanguine, be judged more than sufficient to face their enemies. Poundtext and one or two others made some faint efforts to stem the increasing fury of the factious, exclaiming to those of the other party, in the words of the patriarch: "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between thy herdsmen and my herdsmen, for we be brethren." No pacific overture could possibly obtain audience. It was in vain that even Burley himself, when he saw the dissension proceed to such ruinous lengths, exerted his stern and deep voice, commanding silence and obedience to discipline. The spirit of insubordination had gone forth, and it seemed as if the exhortation of Habakkuk Mucklewrath had communicated a part of his frenzy to all who heard him. The wiser or more timid part of the assembly were already withdrawing themselves from the field, and giving up their cause as lost. Others were moderating a harmonious call, as they somewhat improperly termed it, to new officers, and dismissing those formerly chosen, and that with a tumult and clamour worthy of the deficiency of good sense and good order implied in the whole transaction. It was at this moment when Morton arrived in the field and pined the army, in total confusion, and on the point of dissolving itself. His arrival occasioned loud exclamations of applause on the one side, and of imprecation on the other.

"What means this ruinous disorder at such a moment ? " he exclaimed to Burley, who, exhausted with his vain exertions to restore order, was now leaning on his sword and regarding the confusion with an eye of resolute despair.

"It means," he replied, "that God has delivered us into the hands of our enemies"

"Not so," answered Morton, with a voice and gesture which compelled many to listen; "it is not God who deserts us, it is we who desert him, and dishonour ourselves by disgracing and betraying the cause of freedom and religion. —Hear me," he exclaimed, springing to the pulpit which Mucklewrath had been compelled to evacuate by actual exhaustion, — "I bring from the enemy an offer to treat, if you incline to lay down your arms. I can assure you the means of making an honourable defence, if you are of more manly tempers. The time flies fast on. Let us resolve either for peace or war; and let it not be said of us in future days that six thousand Scottish men in arms had neither courage to stand their ground and fight it out, nor prudence to treat for peace, nor even the coward's wisdom, to retreat in good time and with safety. What signifies quarrelling on minute points of church-discipline, when the whole edifice is threatened with total destruction ? Oh, remember, my brethren, that the last and worst evil which God brought upon the people whom he had once chosen, — the last and worst punishment of their blindness and hardness of heart, — was the bloody dissensions which rent asunder their city, even when the enemy were thundering at its gates !"

Some of the audience testified their feeling of this exhortation by loud exclamations of applause ; others by hooting, and exclaiming, " To your tents, O Israel ' "

Morton, who beheld the columns of the enemy already beginning to appear on the right bank, and directing their march upon the bridge, raised his voice to its utmost pitch, and, pointing at the same time with his hand, exclaimed, " Silence your senseless clamours ; yonder is the enemy ! On maintaining the bridge against him depend our lives, as well as our hope to reclaim our laws and liberties. There shall at least one Scottishman die in their defence. Let any one who loves his country follow me !"

The multitude had turned their heads in the direction to which he pointed. The sight of the glittering files of the English Foot Guards, supported by several squadrons of horse, of the cannon which the artillerymen were busily engaged in planting against the bridge, of the plaided clans who seemed to search for a ford, and of the long succession of troops which were destined to support the attack, silenced at once their clamorous uproar, and struck them with as much consternation as if it were an unexpected apparition, and not the very thing which they ought to have been looking out for. They gazed on each other, and on their leaders, with looks resembling those that indicate the weakness of a patient when exhausted by a fit of frenzy. Yet when Morton, springing from the rostrum, directed his steps towards the bridge, he was followed by about an hundred of the young men who were particularly attached to his command.

Burley turned to Macbriar. "Ephraim," he said, "it is Providence points us the way, through the worldly wisdom of this latitudinarian youth. He that loves the light, let him follow Burley!"

"Tarry," replied Macbriar; "it is not by Henry Morton, or such as he, that our goings-out and our comings-in are to be meted ; therefore tarry with us. I fear treachery to the host from this Nullifidicm Achan,— thou shalt not go with him; thou art our chariots and our horsemen."

"Hinder me not," replied Burley; "he hath well said that all is lost if the enemy win the bridge, therefore let me not. Shall the children of this generation be called wiser or braver than the children of the sanctuary ? — Array yourselves under your leaders; let us not lack supplies of men and ammunition; and accursed be he who turneth back from the work on this great day!"

Having thus spoken, he hastily marched towards the bridge, and was followed by about two hundred of the most gallant and zealous of his party. There was a deep and disheartened pause when Morton and Burley departed. The commanders availed themselves of it to display their lines in some sort of order, and exhorted those who were most exposed to throw themselves upon their faces to avoid the cannonade which they might presently expect. The insurgents ceased to resist or to remonstrate ; but the awe which had silenced their discords had dismayed their courage. They suffered themselves to be formed into ranks with the docility of a flock of sheep, but without possessing, for the time, more resolution or energy; for they experienced a sinking of the heart, imposed by the sudden and imminent approach of the danger which they had neglected to provide against while it was yet distant. They were, however, drawn out with some regularity; and as they still possessed the appearance of an army, their leaders had only to hope that some favourable circumstance would restore their spirits and courage.

Kettledrummle, Poundtext, Macbriar, and other preachers busied themselves in their ranks, and prevailed on them to raise a psalm. But the superstitious among them observed, as an ill omen, that their song of praise and triumph sunk into "a quaver of consternation," and resembled rather a penitentiary stave sung on the scaffold of a condemned criminal, than the bold strain which had resounded along the wild heath of Loudon-hill, in anticipation of that day's victory. The melancholy melody soon received a rough accompaniment; the royal soldiers shouted, the Highlanders yelled, the cannon began to fire on one side, and the musketry on both, and the bridge of Bothwell, with the banks adjacent, were involved in wreaths of smoke.

CHAPTER XXXII.

As e'er ye saw the rain douu f",
Or yet the arrow from the how,
Sae our Suots lads fell eveu duwii,
And they lay plain on every knowe.

Old Jiallad.

ERE Morton or Burley had reached the post to be defended, the enemy had commenced an attack upon it with great spirit. The two regiments of Foot Guards, formed into a close column, rushed forward to the river; one corps, deploying along the right bank, commenced a galling lire on the defenders of the pass, while the other pressed on to occupy the bridge. The insurgents sustained the attack with great constancy and courage; and while part of their number returned the fire across the river, the rest maintained a discharge of musketry upon the further end of the bridge itself, and every avenue by which the soldiers endeavoured to approach it. The latter suffered severely, but still gained ground, and the head of their column was already upon the bridge, when the arrival of Morton changed the scene; and his marksmen, commencing upon the pass a fire as well aimed as it was sustained and regular, compelled the assailants to retire with much loss. They were a second time brought up to the charge, and a second time repulsed with still greater loss, as Burley had now brought his party into action. The fire was continued with the utmost vehemence on both sidea, and the issue of the action seemed very dubious.

Monmouth, mounted on a superb white charger, might be discovered on the top of the right bank of the river, urging, entreating, and animating the exertions of his soldiers. By his orders the cannon, which had hitherto been employed in annoying the distant main body of the Presbyterians, were now turned upon the defenders of the bridge. But these tremendous engines, being wrought much more slowly than in modern times, did not produce the effect of annoying or terrifying the enemy to the extent proposed. The insurgents, sheltered by copsewood along the bank of the river, or stationed in the houses already mentioned, fought under cover, while the royalists, owing to the precautions of Morton, were entirely exposed. The defence was so protracted and obstinate that the royal generals began to fear it might be ultimately successful. While Moimouth threw himself from, his horse, and, rallying the Foot Guards, brought them on to another close and desperate attack, he was warmly seconded by Dalzell, who, putting himself at the head of a body of Lennox Highlanders, rushed forward with their tremendous war-cry of Loch-sloy.¹ The ammunition of the defenders of the bridge began to fail at this important crisis. Messages, commanding and imploring succours and supplies, were in vain despatched, one after the other, to the main body of the Presbyterian army, which remained inactively drawn up on the open fields in the rear; fear, consternation, and misrule had gone abroad among them, and while the post on which their safety depended required to be instantly and powerfully reinforced, there remained none either to command or to obey.

¹Thia was the slogan, DT war-cry, of the MncFarlanes, taken from a lake near the head of Loch Lomond, in the centre of their ancient possessions on the western banks of that beautiful inland sea.

As the fire of the defenders of the bridge began to slacken, that of the assailants increased, and in its turn became more fatal. Animated by the example and exhortations of their generals, they obtained a footing upon the bridge itself, and began to remove the obstacles by which it was blockaded. The portal-gate was broke open, the beams, trunks of trees, and other materials of the barricade pulled down and thrown into the river. This was not accomplished without opposition. Morton and Burley fought in the very front of their followers, and encouraged them, with their pikes, halberds, and partisans, to encounter the bayonets of the Guards and the broadswords of the Highlanders. But those behind the leaders began to shrink from the unequal combat, and fly singly, or in parties of two or three, towards the main body, until the remainder were, by the mere weight of the hostile column as much as by their weapons, fairly forced from the bridge. The passage being now open, the enemy began to pour over. But the bridge was long and narrow, which rendered the manoeuvre slow as well as dangerous; and those who first passed had still to force the houses, from the windows of which the Covenanters continued to fire. Burley and Morton were near each other at this critical moment.

"There is yet time," said the former, "to bring down horse to attack them, ere they can get into order; and, with the aid of God, we may thus regain the bridge. Hasten thou to bring them down, while I make the defence good with this old and wearied body."

Morton saw the importance of the advice, and, throwing himself on the horse which Cuddie held in readiness for him behind the thicket, galloped towards a body of cavalry, which chanced to be composed entirely of Cameronians. Ere he could speak his errand or utter his orders, he was saluted by the execrations of the whole body.

"He flies!" they exclaimed, — "the cowardly traitor flies like a hart from the hunters, and hath left valiant Burley in the midst of the slaughter."

"I do not fly," said Morton. "I come to lead you to the attack. Advance boldly, and we shall yet do well."

"Follow him not! Follow him not!"—such were the tumultuous exclamations which resounded from the ranks;—"he hath sold you to the sword of the enemy!"

And while Morton argued, entreated, and commanded in vain, the moment was lost in which the advance might have been useful; and the outlet from the bridge, with all its defences, being in complete possession of the enemy, Burley and his remaining followers were driven back upon the main body, to whom the spectacle of their hurried and harassed retreat was far from restoring the confidence which they so much wanted.

In the mean while the forces of the king crossed the bridge at their leisure, and, securing the pass, formed in line of battle; while Claverhouse, who, like a hawk perched on a rock, and eying the time to pounce on its prey, had watched the event of the action from the opposite bank, now passed the bridge at the head of his cavalry at full trot, and.

leading them in squadrons through the intervals and round the flanks of the royal infantry, formed them in line on the moor, and led them to the charge, advancing in front with one large body, while other two divisions threatened the flanks of the Covenanters. Their devoted army was now in that situation when the slightest demonstration towards an attack was certain to inspire panic. Their broken spirits and disheartened courage were unable to endure the charge of the cavalry, attended with all its terrible accompaniments of sight and sound, — the rush of the horses at full speed, the shaking of the earth under their feet, the glancing of the swords, the waving of the plumes, mid the fierce shouts of the cavaliers. The front ranks hardly attempted one ill-directed and disorderly fire, and their rear were broken and flying in confusion, ere the charge had been completed ; and in less than five minutes the horsemen were mixed with them, cutting and hewing without mercy. The voice of Claverhouse was heard, even above the din of conflict, exclaiming to his soldiers, " Kill, kill; no quarter, — think on Richard Grahame!" The dragoons, many of whom had shared the disgrace of Loudon-hill, required no exhortations to vengeance as easy as it was complete. Their swords drank deep of slaughter among the unresisting fugitives. Screams for quarter were only answered by the shouts with which the pursuers accompanied their blows, and the whole field presented one general scene of confused slaughter, flight, and pursuit.

About, twelve hundred of the insurgents, who remained in a body a little apart from the rest, and out of the line of the charge of cavalry, threw down their arms and surrendered at discretion, upon the approach of the Duke of Monmouth at the head of the infantry. That mild-tempered nobleman instantly allowed them the quarter which they prayed for; and, galloping about through the field, exerted himself as much to stop the slaughter as he had done to obtain the victory. While busied in this humane task he met with General Ualzell, who was encouraging the fierce Highlanders and royal volunteers to show their zeal for king and country, by quenching the flame of the rebellion with the blood of the rebels.

"Sheathe your sword. I command you, General!" exclaimed the duke, "and sound the retreat. Enough of blood has been shed; give quarter to the king's misguided subjects."

"I obey your Grace," said the old man, wiping his bloody sword and returning it to the scabbard; "but I warn you, at the same time, that enough has not been done to intimidate these desperate rebels. Has not your Grace heard that Basil Olifant has collected several gentlemen and men of substance in the West, and is in the act of marching to join them?"

"Basil Olifant?" said the duke, — "who or what is he?"

"The next male heir to the last Earl of Torwood. He is disaffected to Government from his claim to the estate being set aside in favour of Lady Margaret Bellenden; and I suppose the hope of getting the inheritance has set him in motion."

"Be his motives what they will," replied Monmouth, "he must soon disperse his followers, for this army is too much broken to rally again. Therefore, once more. I command that the pursuit be stopped."

"It is your Grace's province to command, and to be responsible for your commands," answered Dalzell, as he gave reluctant orders for checking the pursuit.

But the fiery and vindictive Grahame was already far out of hearing of the signal of retreat, and continued with his cavalry an unwearied and bloody pursuit, breaking, dispersing, and cutting to pieces all the insurgents whom they could come up with.

Burley and Morton were both hurried off the field by the confused tide of fugitives. They made some attempt to defend the streets of the town of Hamilton ; but while labouring to induce the fliers to face about and stand to their weapons, Burley received a bullet which broke his sword-arm.

"May the hand be withered that shot the shot!" he exclaimed, as the sword which he was waving over his head fell powerless to his side. "I can fight no longer."¹

Then, turning his horse's head, he retreated out of the confusion. Morton also now saw that the continuing his unavailing efforts to rally the fliers could only end in his own death or captivity, and, followed by the faithful Cuddie, he extricated himself from the press, and, being well mounted, leaped his horse over one or two enclosures, and got into the open country.

From the first hill which they gained in their flight they looked back, and beheld the whole country covered with their fugitive companions, and with the pursuing dragoons, whose wild shouts and halloo, as they did execution on the groups whom they overtook, mingled with the groans and screams of their victims, rose shrilly up the hill.

¹ This incident, and Barley's exclamation, are taken from the records.

"It is impossible they can ever make head again," said Morton.

"The head 's taen aff them as clean aa I wad bite it aff a sybo !" rejoined Cuddie. "Eh, Lord ! see how the broadswords are flashing! War's a fearsome thing. They '1 be cunning that catches me at this wark again. — But for God's sake, sir, let us mak for some strength ! "

Morton saw the necessity of following the advice of his trusty squire. They resumed a rapid pace, and continued it without intermission, directing their course towards the wild and mountainous country, where they thought it likely some part of the fugitives might draw together, for the sake either of making defence or of obtaining terms.

CHAPTER XXXTII.

They require
Of Heaven the hearts of lions, breath of tigers, Yea, and the fiercene&s too

FLETCHER.

EVENING hail fallen, and for the last two hours they had seen none of their ill-fated companions, when Morton and his faithful attendant gained the moorland, and approached a large and solitary farmhouse situated in the entrance of a wild glen far remote from any other habitation.

"Our horses," said Morton, "will carry us no farther without rest or food, and we must try to obtain them here, if possible."

So speaking, he led the way to the house. The place had every appearance of being inhabited. There was smoke issuing from the chimney in a considerable volume, and the marks of recent hoofs were visible around the door. They could even hear the murmuring of human voices within the house. But all the lower windows were closely secured; and when they knocked at the door, no answer was returned. After vainly calling and entreating admittance, they withdrew to the stable, or shed, in order to accommodate their horses, ere they used farther means of gaining admission. In this place they found ten or twelve horses, whose state of fatigue, as well as the military yet disordered appearance of their saddles and accoutrements, plainly indicated that their owners were fugitive insurgents in their own circumstances.

"This meeting bodes luck," said Cuddie; "and they hae walth o' beef, that's ae thing certain, for here's a raw hide that has been about the hurdies o' a stot not half an hour syne, —it's warm yet"

Encouraged by these appearances, they returned again to the house, and, announcing themselves as men in the same predicament with the inmates, clamoured loudly for admittance.

"Whoever ye be," answered a stern voice from the window, after a long and obdurate silence, "disturb not those who mourn for the desolation and captivity of the land, and search out the causes of wratli ami of defection, that the stumbling-blocks may be removed over which we have stumbled."

"They are wild Western Whigs," said Cuddie, in a whisper to his master, "I ken by their language. Fiend hae me, if I like to venture on them!"

Morton, however, again called to the party within, and insisted on admittance; but finding his entreaties still disregarded, he opened one of the lower windows, and pushing asunder the shutters, which were but slightly secured, stepped into the large kitchen from which the voice had issued, Uuddie followed him, muttering betwixt his teeth, as he put his head within the window, "That he hoped there was nae scalding brose on the fire;" and master and servant both found themselves in the company of ten or twelve armed men, seated around the fire, on which refreshments were preparing, and busied apparently in their devotions.

In the gloomy countenances, illuminated by the fire-light, Morton had no difficulty in recognizing several of those zealots who had most distinguished themselves by their intemperate opposition to all moderate measures, together with their noted pastor, the fanatical Ephraim Macbriar, and the maniac Habakkuk Mucklewrath. The Cameronians neither stirred tongue nor hand to welcome their brethren in misfortune, but continued to listen to the low murmured exercise of Macbriar, as he prayed that the Almighty would lift up his hand from his people, and not make an end in the day of his anger. That they were conscious of the presence of the intruders only appeared from the sullen and indignant glances which they shot at them, from time to time, as their eyes encountered.

Morton, finding into what unfriendly society he had unwittingly intruded, began to think of retreating ; but on turning his head, observed with some alarm that two strong men had silently placed themselves beside the window through which they had entered. One of these ominous sentinels whispered to Cuddie, " Son of that precious woman, Mause Headrigg, do not cast thy lot farther with this child of treachery and perdition. Pass on thy way, and tarry not, for the avenger of blood is behind thee."

With this he pointed to the window, out of which Cuddie jumped without hesitation ; for the intimation he had received plainly implied the personal danger he would otherwise incur.

"Winnocks are no lucky wi' me," was his first reflection when he was in the open air; his next was upon the probable fate of his master. " They "I kill him, the murdering loons, and think they're doing a gude turn ! but I 'se tak the back road for Hamilton, and see if I canna get some u' our ail) folk to bring help in time of needcessity."

So saying, Cuddle hastened to the stable, and taking the best horse he could find instead of his own tired animal, he galloped off in the direction he proposed.

The noise of his horse's tread alarmed for an instant the devotion of the fanatics. As it died in the distance, Macbriar brought his exercise to a conclusion, and his audience raised themselves from the stooping posture, and lowering downward look with which they had listened to it, and all fixed their eyes sternly on Henry Morton.

"You bend strange countenances on me, gentlemen," said he, addressing them. "I am totally ignorant in what manner I can have deserved them."

"Out upon thee! out upon thee!" exclaimed Mucklewrath, starting up. "The word that thou hast spurned shall become a rock to crush and to bruise thee; the spear which thou wouldst have broken shall pierce thy side; we have prayed and wrestled and petitioned for an offering to atone the sins of the congregation, and lo! the very head of the offence is delivered into our hand. He hath burst in like a thief through the window; he is a ram caught in the thicket, whose blood shall be a drink-offering to redeem vengeance from the Church, and the place shall from henceforth be called Jehovah-Jireh, for the sacrifice is provided, Up, then, and bind the victim with cords to the horns of the altar!"

There was a movement among the party; and deeply did Morton regret at that moment the incautious haste with which he had ventured into their company. He was armed only with his sword, for he had left his pistols at the bow of his saddle; and as the Whigs were all provided with firearms, there was little or no chance of escaping from them by resistance. The interposition, however, of Macbriar protected him for the moment.

"Tarry yet a while, brethren ; let us not use the sword rashly, lest the load of innocent blood lie heavy on us. — Come," he said, addressing himself to Morton, "we will reckon with thee ere we avenge the cause thou hast betrayed. Hast thou not," he continued, "made thy face as hard as flint against the truth in all the assemblies of the host ?"

"He has, he has," murmured the deep voices of the assistants.

"He hath ever urged peace with the malignants," said one.

"And pleaded for the dark and dismal guilt of the Indulgence," said another.

"And would have surrendered the host into the hands of Monmouth," echoed a third; "and was the first to desert the honest and manly Burley while he yet resisted at the pass. I saw him on the moor, with his horse bloody with spurring, long ere the firing had ceased at the bridge."

"Gentlemen," said Morton, "if you mean to bear me down by clamour, and take my life without hearing me, it is perhaps a thing in your power; but you will sin before God and man by the commission of such a murder."

"I say, hear the youth," said Macbriar; "for Heaven knows our bowels have yearned for him, that he might be brought to see the truth, and exert his gifts in its defence. But he is blinded by his carnal knowledge, and has spurned the light when it blazed before him."

Silence being obtained, Morton proceeded to assert the good faith which he had displayed in the treaty with Monmouth, and the active part he had borne in the subsequent action.

"I may not, gentlemen," he said, "be fully able to go the lengths you desire, in assigning to those of my own religion the means of tyrannizing over others; but none shall go farther in asserting our own lawful freedom. And I must needs aver that had others been of my mind in council, or disposed to stand by my side in battle, we should this evening, instead of being a defeated and discordant remnant, have sheathed our weapons in an useful and honourable peace, or brandished them triumphantly after a decisive victory."

"He hath spoken the word," said one of the assembly, ^{Cf} he hath avowed his carnal self-seeking and Erastianism; let him die the death."

"Peace yet again," said Macbriar, "for I will try him further. — Was it not by thy means that the malignant Evamlale twice escaped from death and captivity? Was it not through thee that Miles Bellenden and his garrison of cut-throats were saved from the edge of the sword?"

"I am proud to say that you have spoken the truth in both instances," replied Morton.

"Lo! you see," said Macbriar, "again hath his mouth spoken it. — And didst thou not do this for the sake of a Midianitish woman, one of the spawn of prelacy, a toy with which the arch-enemy's trap is baited? Didst thou not do all this for the sake of Edith Bellenden?"

"You are incapable," answered Morton, boldly, "of appreciating my feelings towards that young lady; but all that I have done I would have done had she never existed."

"Thou art a hardy rebel to the truth," said another dark-browed man ; "and didst thou not so act that, by conveying away the aged woman, Margaret Bellenden, and her granddaughter, thou mightest thwart the wise and godly project of John Balfour of Burley for bringing forth to battle Basil Olifant, who had agreed to take the field if he were insured possession of these women's worldly endowments?"

"I never heard of such a scheme," said Morton, "and therefore I could not thwart it. But does your religion permit you to take such uncreditable and immoral modes of recruiting?"

"Peace," said Macbriar, somewhat disconcerted ; "it is not for thee to instruct tender professors, or to construe Covenant obligations. For the rest, you have acknowledged enough of sin and sorrowful defection to draw down defeat on a host, were it as numerous as the sands on the sea-shore. And it is our judgment that we are not free to let you pass from us safe and in life, since Providence hath given you into our hands at the moment that we prayed with godly Joshua, saying, 'What shall we say when Israel turneth their backs before their enemies? Then earnest thou, delivered to us as it were by lot, that thou mightest sustain the punishment of one that hath wrought folly in Israel. Therefore, mark my words. This is the Sabbath, and our hand shall not be on thee to spill thy blood upon this day; but when the twelfth hour shall strike, it is a token that thy time on earth hath run! Wherefore improve thy span, for it flitteth fast away. —Seize on the prisoner, brethren, and take his weapon."

The command was so unexpectedly given, and BO suddenly executed by those of the party who had gradually closed behind and around Morton, that he was overpowered, disarmed, and a horse-girth passed round his arms, before he could offer any effectual resistance. When this was accomplished, a dead and stern silence took place. The fanatics ranged themselves around a large oaken table, placing Morton amongst them bound and helpless, in such a manner as to be opposite to the clock which was to strike his knell. Food was placed before them, of which they offered their intended victim a share ; but, it will readily be believed, he had little appetite. When this was removed, the party resumed their devotions. Macbriar, whose fierce zeal did not perhaps exclude some feelings of doubt and compunction, began to expostulate in prayer, as if to wring from the Deity a signal that the bloody sacrifice they proposed was an acceptable service. The eyes and ears of his hearers were anxiously strained, as if to gain some sight or sound which might be converted or wrested into a type of approbation, and ever and anon dark looks were turned on the dial-plate of the timepiece, to watch its progress towards the moment of execution.

Morton's eye frequently took the same course, with the sad reflection that there appeared no possibility of his life being expanded beyond the narrow segment which the index had yet to travel on the circle until it arrived at the fatal hour. Faith in his religion, with a constant unyielding principle of honour, and the sense of conscious innocence, enabled him to pass through this dreadful interval with less agitation than he himself could have expected, had the situation been prophesied to him. Yet there was a want of that eager and animating sense of right which supported him in similar circumstances, when in the power of Claverhouse. Then he was conscious that amid the spectators were many who were lamenting his condition, and some who applauded his conduct. But now, among these pale-eyed and ferocious zealots, whose hardened brows were soon to be bent, not merely with indifference, but with triumph, upon his execution; without a friend to speak a kindly word, or give a look either of sympathy or encouragement; awaiting till the sword destined to slay him crept out of the scabbard gradually, and as it were by strawbreadths, and condemned to drink the bitterness of death drop by drop,—it is no wonder that his feelings were less composed than they had been on any former occasion of danger. His destined executioners, as he gazed around them, seemed to alter their forms and features, like spectres in a feverish dream; their figures became larger, and their faces more disturbed; and as an excited imagination predominated over the realities which his eyes received, he could have thought himself surrounded rather by a band of demons than of human beings; the walls seemed to drop with blood, and the light tick of the clock thrilled on his ear with such loud, painful distinctness, as if each sound were the prick of a bodkin inflicted on the nerve of the naked organ.

It was with pain that he felt his mind wavering, while on the brink between this and the future world. He made a strong effort to compose himself to devotional exercises, and unequal, during that fearful strife of nature, to arrange his own thoughts into suitable expressions, he had, instinctively, recourse to the petition for deliverance and for composure of spirit which is to be found in the Book of Common Prayer of the Church of England. Macbriar, whose family were of that persuasion, instantly recognised the words, which the unfortunate prisoner pronounced half aloud.

"There lacked but this," he said, his pale cheek kindling with resentment, "to root out my carnal reluctance to see his blood spilt. He is a prelatist, who has sought the camp under the disguise of an Erastian, and all, and more than all, that has been said of him must needs be verity. His blood be on his head, the deceiver ! Let him go down to Tophet with the ill-mumbled mass which he calls a praye'r-book in his right hand !"

"I take up my song against him !" exclaimed the maniac. "As the sun went back on the dial ten degrees for intimating the recovery of holy Hezekiah, so shall it now go forward, that the wicked may be taken away from among the people, and the Covenant established in its purity."

He sprang to a chair with an attitude of frenzy, in order to anticipate the fatal moment by putting the index forward; and several of the party began to make ready their slaughter-weapons for immediate execution, when Mucklewrath's hand was arrested by one of his companions.

"Hist! " he said; ^f"I hear a distant noise."

"It is the rushing of the brook over the pebbles," said one.

"It is the sough of the wind among the bracken," said another.

"It is the galloping of horse," said Morton to himself, his sense of hearing rendered acute by the dreadful situation in which he stood; "God grant they may come as my deliverers I"

The noise approached rapidly, and became more and more distinct.

"It is horse," cried Macbriar. "Look out and descry who they are."

"The enemy are upon us!" cried one who had opened the window, in obedience to his order.

A thick trampling and loud voices were heard immediately round the house. Some rose to resist, and some to escape; the doors and windows were forced at once, and the red coats of the troopers appeared in the apartment.

"Have at the bloody rebels ! Remember Cornet Grahame I" was shouted on every side.

The lights were struck down, but the dubious glare of the fire enabled them to continue the fray. Several pistol shots were fired; the Whig who stood next to Morton received a shot as he was rising, stumbled against the prisoner, whom he bore down with his weight, and lay stretched above him, a dying man. This accident probably saved Morton from the damage he might otherwise have received in so close a struggle, where fire-arms were discharged and sword-blows given for upwards of five minutes.

"Is the prisoner safe?" exclaimed the well-known voice of Claverhouse. "Look about for him, and despatch the Whig dog who is groaning there."

Both orders were executed. The groans of the wounded man were silenced by a thrust with a rapier, and Morton, disencumbered of his weight, was speedily raised and in the arms of the faithful Cuddie, who blubbered for joy when he found that the blood with which his master was covered had not flowed from his own veins. A whisper in Morton's ear, while his trusty follower relieved him from his bonds, explained the secret of the very timely appearance of the soldiers.

"I fell into Claverhouse's party when I was seeking for some o' our ain folk to help ye out o' the hands of the Whigs; sae being atween the deil and the deep sea, I e'en thought it best to bring him on wi⁷ me, for he "I be wearied wi' felling folk the night, and the morn's a new day, and Lord Evandale awes ye a day in ha'arst; and Monmouth gies quarter, the dragoons tell me, for the asking. Sae haud up your heart, an' I'se warrant we'll do a' weel eneugh yet."¹

i Note XVI.

CHATTER XXXIV.

Sound, sound the clarion, fill the fife!
To all the sensual world proclaim,
One crowded hour of glorious life
Is worth an age without a name.

ANONYMOUS.

WHEN the desperate affray had ceased, Claverhouse commanded his soldiers to remove the dead bodies, to refresh themselves and their horses, and prepare for passing the night at the farm-house, and for marching early in the ensuing morning. He then turned his attention to Morton; and there was politeness, and even kindness, in the manner in which he addressed him: —

"You would have saved yourself risk from both sides, Mr. Morton, if you had honoured my counsel yesterday morning with some attention; but I respect your motives. You are a prisoner-of-war at the disposal of the king and council, but you shall be treated with no incivility; and I will be satisfied with your parole that you will not attempt an escape."

When Morton had passed his word to that effect, Claverhouse bowed civilly, and, turning away from him, called for his sergeant-major,

"How many prisoners, Halliday, and how many killed?"

"Three killed in the house, sir, two cut down in the court, and one in the garden, — six in all; four prisoners."

"Armed or unarmed?" said Claverhouse.

"Three of them armed to the teeth," answered Halliday; "one without arms,—he seems to be a preacher."

"Ay, the trumpeter to the long-eared rout, I suppose," replied Claverhouse, glancing slightly round upon his victims; "I will talk with him to-morrow. Take the other three down to the yard, draw out two tiles, and fire upon them; and d'ye hear, make a memorandum in the orderly book of three rebels taken in arms and shot, with the date and name of the place,—Drumshinnel, I think they call it. Look after the preacher till to-morrow; as he was not armed, he must undergo a short examination. Or better, perhaps, take him before the Privy Council; I think they should relieve me of a share of this disgusting drudgery., Let Mr. Morton be civilly used, and see that the men look well after their horses; and let my groom wash Wililbloot's shoulder with some vinegar,—the saddle has touched him a little."

All these various orders—for life and death, the securing of his prisoners, and the washing his charger's shoulder—were given in the same unmoved and equable voice, of which no accent or tone intimated that the speaker considered one direction as of more importance than another.

The Cameronians, so lately about to be the willing agents of a bloody execution, were now themselves to undergo it. They seemed prepared alike for either extremity, nor did any of them show the least sign of fear, when ordered to leave the room for the purpose of meeting instant death. Their severe enthusiasm sustained them in that dreadful moment, and they departed with a firm look and in silence, excepting that one of them, as he left the apartment, looked Claverhouse full in the face, and pronounced, with a stern and steady voice, "Mischief shall haunt the violent man!" to which Grahame only answered by a smile of contempt.

They had no sooner left the room than Claverhouse applied himself to some food, which one or two of his party had hastily "provided, and invited Morton to follow his example, observing, it had been a busy day for them both. Morton declined eating; for the sudden change of circumstances — the transition from the verge of the grave to a prospect of life — had occasioned a dizzy revulsion in his whole system. But the same confused sensation was accompanied by a burning thirst, and he expressed his wish to drink.

"I will pledge you, with all my heart," said Claverhouse; "for here is a black jack full of ale; and good it must be, if there be good in the country, for the Whigs never miss to find it out. — My service to you, Mr. Morton," he said, filling one horn of ale for himself, and handing another to his prisoner,

Morton raised it to his head, and was just about to drink, when the discharge of carabines beneath the window, followed by a deep and hollow groan, repeated twice or thrice, and more faint at each interval, announced the fate of the three men who had just left them. Morton shuddered, and set down the untasted cup.

"You are but young in these matters, Mr. Morton," said Claverhouse, after he had very composedly finished his draught; "and I do not think the worse of you as a young soldier for appearing to feel them acutely. But habit, duty, and necessity reconcile men to everything."

"I trust," said Morton, "they will never reconcile me to such scenes as these."

"You would hardly believe," said Claverhouse, in reply, "that, in the beginning of my military career, I had as much aversion to seeing blood spilt as ever man felt,—it seemed to me to be wrung from my own heart; and yet, if you trust one of those Whig fellows, he will tell you I drink a warm cup of it every morning before I breakfast.¹ But in truth, Mr. Morton, why should we care so much for death, light upon us or around us whenever it may? Men die daily,—not a bell tolls the hour but it is the death-note of some one or other; and why hesitate to shorten the span of others, or take over-anxious care to prolong our own? It is all a lottery. When the hour of midnight came, you were to die: it has struck; you are alive and safe, and the lot has fallen on those fellows who were to murder you. It is not the expiring pang that is worth thinking of in an event that must happen one day, and may befall us on any given moment,—it is the memory which the soldier leaves behind him, like the long train of light that follows the sunken sun, (15)—that is all which is worth caring for, which distinguishes the death of the brave or the ignoble. When I think of death, Mr. Morton, as a thing worth thinking of, it is in the hope of pressing one day some well-fought and hard-won field of battle, and dying with the shout of victory in my ear: that would be worth dying for,—and more, it would be worth having lived for!"

¹ The Author is uncertain whether this was ever said of Claverhouse. But it was currently reported of Sir Robert Grierson of Lagg, another of the persecutors, that a cup of wine placed in his hand turned to clotted blood.

At the moment when Grahame delivered these sentiments, his eye glancing with the martial enthusiasm which formed such a prominent feature in his character, a gory figure, which seemed to rise out of the floor of the apartment, stood upright before him, and presented the wild person and hideous features of the maniac so often mentioned. His face, where it was not covered with blood-streaks, was ghastly pale, for the hand of death was on him. He bent upon Claverhouse eyes in which the grey light of insanity still twinkled, though just about to flit for ever, and exclaimed, with his usual wildness of ejaculation, "Wilt thou trust in thy bow and in thy spear, in thy steed and in thy banner? 4.nd shall not God visit thee for innocent blood? Wilt thou glory in thy wisdom, and in thy courage, and in thy might? And shall not the Lord judge thee? — Behold, the princes for whom thou hast sold thy soul to the destroyer shall be removed from their place, and banished to other lands, and their names shall be a desolation and an astonishment and a hissing and a curse. And thou, who hast partaken of the wine-cup of fury, and hast been drunken and mad because thereof, the wish of thy heart shall be granted to thy loss, and the hope of thine own pride shall destroy thee. I summon thee, John Grahame, to appear before the tribunal of God to ans'wer for this innocent blood, and the seas besides which thou hast shed."

He drew his right hand across his bleeding face, and held it up to heaven as he uttered these words, which he spoke very loud, and then added more faintly, "How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge the blood of thy saints!"

As he uttered the last word, he fell backwards without an attempt to save himself, and was a dead man ere his head touched the floor.

Morton was much shocked at this extraordinary scene, and the prophecy of the dying man, which tallied so strangely with the wish which Claverhouse had just expressed; and he often thought of it afterwards, when that wish seemed to be accomplished. Two of the dragoons who were in the apartment, hardened as they were, and accustomed to such scenes, showed great consternation at the sudden apparition, the event, and the words which preceded it. Claverhouse alone was unmoved. At the first instance of Mucklewrath's appearance, he had put his hand to his pistol; but on seeing the situation of the wounded wretch, he immediately withdrew it, and listened with great composure to his dying exclamation.

When he dropped, Claverhouse asked, in an unconcerned tone of voice, "How came the fellow here?—Speak, you staring fool!" he added, addressing the nearest dragoon, "unless you would have me think you such a poltroon as to fear a dying man."

The dragoon crossed himself, and replied, with a faltering voice, "That the dead fellow had escaped their notice when they removed the other bodies, as he chanced to have fallen where a cloak or two had been flung aside and covered him."

"Take him away now, then, you gaping idiot, and see that he does not bite you, to put an old proverb to shame.—This is a new incident, Mr. Morton, that dead men should rise and push us from our stools. I must see that my blackguards grind their swords sharper; they used not to do their work so slovenly. But we have had a busy day, • they are tired, and their blades blunted with their bloody work; and I suppose you, Mr. Morton, as well as I, are well disposed for a few hours' repose."

So saying, he yawned, and taking a candle which a soldier had placed ready, saluted Morton courteously, and walked to the apartment which had been prepared for him.

Morton was also accommodated, for the evening, with a separate room. Being left alone, his first occupation was the returning thanks to Heaven for redeeming him from danger, even through the instrumentality of those who seemed his most dangerous enemies; he also prayed sincerely for the Divine assistance in guiding his course through times which held out so many dangers and so many errors. And having thus poured out his spirit in prayer before the Great Being who gave it, he betook himself to the repose which he so much required.

CHAPTER XXXV.

The charge is prepared, the lawyers are met,
The judges all ranged, — a terrible show '

Beggar's Opera.

So deep was the slumber which succeeded the agitation and embarrassment of the preceding day that Morton hardly knew where he was when it was broken by the tramp of horses, the hoarse voice of men, and the wild sound of the trumpets blowing the reveille'. The sergeant-major immediately afterwards came to summon him, which he did in a very respectful manner, saying the general (for Claverhouse now held that rank) hoped for the pleasure of his company upon the road. In some situations an intimation is a command, and Morton considered that the present occasion was one of these. He waited upon Claverhouse as speedily as he could, found his own horse saddled for his use, and Cuddie in attendance. Both were deprived of their fire-arms, though they seemed, otherwise, rather to make part of the troop than of the prisoners ; and Morton was permitted to retain his sword, the wearing which was, in those days, the distinguishing mark of a gentleman. Claverhouse seemed also to take pleasure in riding beside him, in conversing with him, and in confounding his ideas when he attempted to appreciate his real character. The gentleness and urbanity of that officer's general manners, the high and chivalrous sentiments of military devotion which he occasionally expressed, his deep and accurate insight into the human bosom, demanded at once the approbation and the wonder of those who conversed with him; while, on the other hand, his cold indifference to military violence and cruelty seemed altogether inconsistent with the social, and even admirable qualities which he displayed. Morton could not help, in his heart, contrasting him with Balfour of Buiey; and so deeply did the idea impress him that he dropped a hint of it as they rode together at some distance from the troop.

"You are right," said Claverhouse, with a smile; "you are very right, — we are both fanatics; but there is some distinction between the fanaticism of honour and that of dark and sullen superstition."

"Yet you both shed blood without mercy or remorse," said Morton, who could not suppress his feelings.

"Surely," said Claverhouse, with the same composure; "but of what kind? There is a difference, I trust, between the blood of learned and reverend prelates and scholars, of gallant soldiers and noble gentlemen, and the red puddle that stagnates in the veins of psalm-singing mechanics, crack-brained demagogues, and sullen boors,—some distinction, in short, between spilling a flask of generous wine, and dashing down a can full of base muddy ale?"

"Your distinction is too nice for my comprehension," replied Morton. "God gives every spark of life, — that of the peasant as well as of the prince; and those who destroy his work recklessly or causelessly, must answer in either case. What right, for example, have I to General Grahame's protection now, more than when I first met him?"

"And narrowly escaped the consequences, you would say?" answered Claverhouse,—"why, I will answer you frankly. Then I thought I had to do with the son of an old Roundheaded rebel, and the nephew of a sordid Presbyterian laird; now I know your points better, and there is that about you which I respect in an enemy as much as I like in a friend. I have learned a good deal concerning you since our first meeting, and I trust that you have found that my construction of the information has not been unfavourable to you."

"But yet—" said Morton.

"But yet," interrupted Grahame, taking up the word, "you would say you were the same when I first met you that you are now 1 True; but then, how could I know that?—though, by the by, even my reluctance to suspend your execution may show you how high your abilities stood in my estimation."

"Do you expect, General," said Morton, "that I ought to be particularly grateful for such a mark of your esteem?"

"Poh! poh! you are critical," returned Claverhouse, "I tell you I thought you a different sort of person. Did you ever read Froissart?"

"No," was Morton's answer.

"I have half a mind," said Claverhouse, "to contrive you should have six months¹ imprisonment, in order to procure you that pleasure. His chapters inspire me with more enthusiasm than even poetry itself. And the noble canon, with what true chivalrous feeling he confines his beautiful expressions of sorrow to the death of the gallant and high-bred knight, of whom it was a pity to see the fall, such was his loyalty to his king, pure faith to his religion, hardihood towards his enemy, and fidelity to his lady-love ! Ah, benedicite ! how he will mourn over the fall of such a pearl of knighthood, be it on the side he happens to favour, or on the other. But, truly, for sweeping from the face of the earth some few hundreds of villain churls, who are born but to plough it, the high-born and inquisitive historian has marvellous little sympathy, — as little, or less, perhaps, than John Grahame of Clavorhouse."

"There is one ploughman in your possession, General, for whom," said Morton, "in despite of the contempt in which you hold a profession which some philosophers have considered as useful as that of a soldier, I would humbly request your favour."

"You mean," said Claverhouse, looking at a memorandum-book, "one Hathenck — Hedderick — or — or — Headrigg. Ay, Cutlibert, or Cuddie Headrigg, — here I have him. Oh, never fear him, if he will be but tractable. The ladies of Tillietudlem made interest with me on his account some time ago. He is to marry their waiting-maid, I think. He will be allowed to glip off easy, unless his obstinacy spoils his good fortune."

"He has no ambition to be a martyr, I believe," said Morton.

"'Tis the better for him," said Claverhouse. "But, besides, although the fellow had more to answer for, I should stand his friend, for the sake of the blundering gallantry which threw him into the midst of our ranks last night, when seeking assistance for you, I never desert any man who trusts me with such implicit confidence. But, to deal sincerely with you, he has been long in our eye.— Here, Hallyday; bring me up the black book,"

The sergeant, having committed to his commander this ominous record of the disaffected, which was arranged in alphabetical order, Glaverhouse, turning over the leaves as he rode on, began to read names as they occurred : —

" Gumblegumption, a minister, aged fifty, indulged, close, sly, and so forth — Pooh! pooh! He — He — I have him here, — Heathercat; outlawed — a preacher — a zealous Cameronian — keeps a conventicle among the Campsie hills — Tush! — Oh, here is Headrigg — Cuthbert; his mother a bitter Puritan, — himself a simple fellow; like to be forward in action, but of no genius for plots; more for the hand than the head, and might be drawn to the right side, but for his attachment to — " Here Claverhouse looked at Morton, and then shut the book and changed his tone. "Faithful and true are words never thrown away upon me, Mr. Morton. You may depend on the young man's safety."

"Does it not revolt a mind like yours," said Morton, "to follow a system which is to be supported by such minute inquiries after obscure individuals ?"

" You do not suppose we take the trouble ? " said the general, haughtily. " The curates, for their own sakes, willingly collect all these materials for their own regulation in each parish; they know best the black sheep of the flock. I have had your picture for three years,"

" Indeed ? " replied Morton. " Will you favour me by imparting it ? "

"Willingly," said Claverhouse; "it can signify little, for you cannot avenge yourself on the curate, as you will probably leave Scotland for some time,"

This was spoken in an indifferent tone. Morton felt an involuntary shudder at hearing words which implied a banishment from his native land; but ere he answered, Claverhouse proceeded to read: "'Henry Morton, son of Silas Morton, colonel of horse for the Scottish Parliament, nephew and apparent heir of Morton of Milnwood; imperfectly educated, but with spirit beyond his years; excellent at all exercises; indifferbiit to forms of religion, but seems to incline to the Presbyterian; has high-flown and dangerous notions about liberty of thought and speech, and hovers between a latitudinarian and an enthusiast. Much admired and followed by the youth of his own age; modest, quiet, and unassuming in manner, but in his heart J>eculiarly bold and intractable. He is —' Here follow three red crosses, Mr. Morton, which signify triply dangerous. You see how important a person you are. —But what does this fellow want?"

A horseman rode up as he spoke, and gave a letter. Claverhouse glanced it over, laughed scornfully, bade him tell his master to send his prisoners to Edinburgh, for there was 110 answer, and, as the man turned back, said contemptuously to Morton: "Here is an ally of yours deserted from you, or rather, I should say, an ally of your good friend Burley. Hear how he sets forth: 'Dear Sir' (I wonder when we were such intimates), 'may it please your Excellency to accept my humble congratulations on the victory' — hum, hum —' blessed his Majesty's army. I pray you to understand I have my people under arms to take and intercept all fugitives, and have already several prisoners,' and so forth. Subscribed, Basil Olifant You know the fellow by name, I suppose?"

"A relative of Lady Margaret Bellenden," replied Morton, "is he not?"

"Ay" replied Grahame, "and heir-male of her father's family, though a distant one, and moreover a suitor to the fair Edith, though discarded as an unworthy one; but above all, a devoted admirer of the estate of Tillietudlem and all thereunto belonging."

"He takes an ill mode of recommending himself," said Morton, suppressing his feelings, "to the family at Tillietudlem, by corresponding with our unhappy party."

"Oh, this precious Basil will turn cat in pan with any man!" replied Claverhouse. "He was displeased with the Government because they would not overturn in his favour a settlement of the late Earl of Torwood, by which his lordship gave his own estate to his own daughter; he was displeased with Lady Margaret because she avowed no desire for his alliance, and with the pretty Edith because she did not like his tall, ungainly person. So he held a close correspondence with Burley, and raised his followers with the purpose of helping him, providing always he needed no help, that is, if you had beat us yesterday. And now the rascal pretends he was all the while proposing the king's service, and, for aught I know, the council will receive his pretext for current coin, for he knows how to make friends among them, — and a dozen scores of poor vagabond fanatics will be shot or hanged, while this cunning scoundrel lies hid under the double cloak of loyalty, well-lined with the fox-fur of hypocrisy."

With conversation on this and other matters they beguiled the way, Claverhouse all the while speaking with great frankness to Morton, and treating him rather as a friend and companion than as a prisoner ; so that, however uncertain of his fate, the hours he passed in the company of this remarkable man were so much lightened by the varied play of his imagination, and the depth of his knowledge of human nature, that since the period of his becoming a prisoner of war, which relieved him at once from the cares of his doubtful and dangerous station among the insurgents, and from the consequences of their suspicious resentment, his hours flowed off less anxiously than at any time since his having commenced actor in public life. He was now, with respect to his fortune, like a rider who has flung his reins on the horse's neck, and, while he abandoned himself to circumstances, was at least relieved from the task of attempting to direct them. In this mood he journeyed on, the number of his companions being continually augmented by detached parties of horse who came in from every quarter of the country, bringing with them, for the most part, the unfortunate persons who had fallen into their power. At length they approached Edinburgh.

" Our council," said Claverhouse, " being resolved, I suppose, to testify by their present exultation the extent of their former terror, have decreed a kind of triumphal entry to us victors and our captives; but as I do not quite approve the taste of it, I am willing to avoid my own part in the show, and, at the same time, to save you from yours."

So saying, he gave up the command of the forces to Allan (now a lieutenant-colonel), and, turning his horse into a by-lane, rode into the city privately, accompanied by Morton and two or three servants. When Claverhouse arrived at the quarters which he usually occupied in the Canongate, he assigned to his prisoner a small apartment, with an intimation that his parole confined him to it for the present.

After about a quarter of an hour spent in solitary musing on the strange vicissitudes of his late life, the attention of Morton was summoned to the window by a great noise in the street beneath. Trumpets, drums, and kettle-drums contended in noise with the shouts of a numerous rabble, and apprised him that the royal cavalry were passing in the triumphal attitude which Claverhouse had mentioned. The magistrates of the city, attended by their guard of halberds, had met the victors with their welcome at the gate of the city, and now preceded them as a part of the procession. The next object was two heads borne upon pikes ; and before each bloody head were carried the hands of the dismembered sufferers, which were, by the brutal mockery of those who bore them, often approached towards each other, as if in the attitude of exhortation or prayer. These bloody trophies belonged to two preachers who had fallen at Bothwell Bridge. After them came a cart led by the executioner's assistant, in which were placed Macbriar and other two prisoners who seemed of the same profession. They were bareheaded and strongly bound, yet looked around them with an air rather of triumph than dismay, and appeared in no respect moved either by the fate of their companions, of which the bloody evidences were carried before them, or by dread of their own approaching execution, which these preliminaries so plainly indicated.

Behind these prisoners, thus held up to public infamy and derision, came a body of horse, brandishing their broadswords, and filling the wide street with acclamations, which were answered by the tumultuous outcries and shouts of the rabble, who, in every considerable town, are too happy in being permitted to huzza for anything whatever which calls them together. In the rear of these troopers came the main body of the prisoners, at the head of whom were some of their leaders, who were treated with every circumstance of inventive mockery and insult. Several were placed on horseback with their faces to the animal's tail; others were chained to long bars of iron, which they were obliged to support in their hands, like the galley-slaves in Spain when travelling to the port where they are to be put on shipboard. The heads of others who had fallen were borne in triumph before the survivors, some on pikes and halberds, some in sacks bearing the names of the slaughtered persons labelled on the outside. Such were the objects who headed the ghastly procession, who seemed as effectually doomed to death as if they wore the saribentos of the condemned heretics in an auto-da-fe.¹

Behind them came on the nameless crowd to the number of several hundreds, some retaining under their misfortunes a sense of confidence in the cause for which they suffered captivity, and were about to give a still more bloody testimony; others seemed pale, dispirited, dejected, questioning in their own minds their prudence in espousing a cause which Providence seemed to have disowned, and looking about for some avenue through which they might i David Hackston of Rathillet, who was wounded and made prisoner in the skirmish of Air's Moss, in which the celebrated Cameron fell, was, on entering Edinburgh, " by order of the Council, received by the magistrates at the Watergate, and set on a horse's bare back with his face to the tail, and the other three laid on a goad of iron and carried up the street, Mr. Cameron's head being on a halberd before them." (16) escape from the consequences of their rashness. Others there were who seemed incapable of forming an opinion on the subject, or of entertaining either hope, confidence, or fear, but who, foaming with thirst and fatigue, stumbled along like over-driven oxen, lost to everything but their present sense of wretchedness, and without having any distinct idea whether they were led to the shambles or to the pasture. These unfortunate men were guarded on each hand by troopers, and behind them came the main body of the cavalry, whose military music resounded back from the high houses on each side of the street, and mingled with their own songs of jubilee and triumph, and the wild shouts of the rabble.

Morton felt himself heart-sick while he gazed on the dismal spectacle, and recognised in the bloody heads, and still more miserable and agonised features of the living sufferers, faces which had been familiar to him during the brief insurrection. He sunk down in a chair in a bewildered and stupefied state, from which he was awakened by the voice of Cuddie.

"Lord forgie us, sir!" said the poor fellow, his teeth chattering like a pair of nut-crackers, his hair erect like boar's bristles, and his face as pale as that of a corpse, — "Lord forgie us, sir! we maun instantly gang before the Council! O Lord, what made them send for a puir bodie like me, sae inony braw lords and gentles! — And there 's my mither come on the lang tramp frae Glasgow to see to gar me testify, as she ca's it, that is to say, confess and be hanged; but deil tak me if they mak sic a guse o' Cuddie, if I can do better. But here 's Claverhouse himsell, — the Lord preserve and forgie us, I say tines mail!"

" You must immediately attend the Council, Mr. Morton," said Claverhouse, who entered while Cuddie spoke, "and your servant must go with you. You need be under no apprehension for the consequences to yourself personally; but I warn you that you will see something that will give you much pain, and from which I would willingly have saved you, if I had possessed the power. My carriage waits us, — shall we go ? "

It will be readily supposed that Morton did not venture to dispute this invitation, however unpleasant. He rose and accompanied Claverhouse.

"I must apprise you," said the latter, as he led the way downstairs, " that you will get off cheap ; and so will your servant, provided he can keep his tongue quiet."

Cuddle caught these last words to his exceeding joy

"Deil a fear o' me," said he, " an my mither disna pit her finger in the pie."

At that moment his shoulder was seized by old Mause, who had contrived to thrust herself forward into the lobby of the apartment.

" Oh, hinny, hinny J " said she to Cuddie, hanging upon his neck, "glad and proud, and sorry and humbled, am I, a' in ane and the same instant, to see my bairn ganging to testify for the truth gloriously with his mouth in council, as he did with his weapon in the field I "

" Whisht, whisht, Mither ! " cried Cuddie, impatiently. " Odd, ye daft wife, is this a time to speak " thae things ? I tell ye I 'll testify naething either ae gate or another. I hae spoken to Mr. Poundtext, and I 'll tak the declaration, or whate'er they c" it, and we're a' to win free off if we do that; he's gotten life for himsell and a' his folk, — and that's a minister for my siller; I like nane o' your sermons that end in a psalm at the Grassmarket."¹

"Oh, Cuddie, man, laith wad I be they suld hurt ye," said old Mause, divided grievously between the safety of her son's soul and that of his body; "but mind, my bonny bairn, ye hae battled for the faith, and dinna let the dread o' losing creature-comforts withdraw ye frae the gude fight."

"Hout tout, Mither," replied Cuddie; "I hae fought e'en ower muckle already, and, to speak plain, I'm wearied o' the trade. I hae swaggered " a' thae arms and muskets and pistols, boffcoats and bandoliers, lang eneugh, and I like the pleugh-paidle a hantle better. I ken naething suld gar a man fight (that's to say when he's no angry), by and out-taken the dread o' being hanged or killed if he turns back."

"But, my dear Cuddie," continued the persevering Mause, "your bridal garment! Oh, hmny, dinna sully the marriage garment!"

"Awa, awa, Mither," replied Cuddie; "dinna ye see the folks waiting for me? Never fear me, — I ken how to turn this far better than ye do; for ye're bleezing awa about marriage, and the job is how we are to win by hanging."

So saying, he extricated himself out of his mother's embraces, and requested the soldiers who took him in charge to conduct him to the place of examination without delay. He had been already preceded by Claverhouse and Morton.

¹ Then the place of public execution.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

My native land, good night !
BYRON.

THE Privy Council of Scotland—in whom the practice since the union of the crowns vested great judicial powers, as well as the general superintendence of the executive department—was met in the ancient dark Gothic room, adjoining to the House of Parliament in Edinburgh, when General Grahame entered, and took his place amongst the members at the council table.

"You have brought us a leash of game to-day, General," said a nobleman of high place amongst them. "Here is a craven to confess; a cock of the game to stand at bay; and what shall I call the third, General?"

"Without further metaphor, I will entreat your Grace to call him a person in whom I am specially interested," replied Claverhouse.

"And a Whig into the bargain?" said the nobleman, lolling out a tongue which was at all times too big for his mouth, and accommodating his coarse features to a sneer, to which they seemed to be familiar.

¹¹ "Yes, please your Grace, a Whig,—as your Grace was in 1641," replied Claverhouse, with his usual appearance of imperturbable civility.

"He has you there, I think, my Lord Duke," said one of the privy councillors.

"Ay, ay," returned the duke, laughing, "there's no speaking to him since Drumclog. But come, bring in the prisoners, — and do you, Mr. Clerk, read the record."

The clerk read forth a bond, in which General Grahame of Claverhouse and Lord Evandale entered themselves securities that Henry Morton, younger of Milnwood, should go abroad and remain in foreign parts until his Majesty's pleasure was further known, in respect of the said Henry Morton's accession to the late rebellion, and that under penalty of life and limb to the said Henry Morton, and of ten thousand marks to each of his securities.

"Do you accept of the king's mercy upon these terms, Mr. Morton?" said the Duke of Lauderdale (17), who presided in the council.

"I have no other choice, my lord," replied Morton.

"Then subscribe your name in the record."

Morton did so without reply, conscious that, in the circumstances of his case, it was impossible for him to have escaped more easily. Macbriar, who was at the same instant brought to the foot of the council-table, bound upon a chair, for his weakness prevented him from standing, beheld Morton in the act of what he accounted apostasy.

"He hath summed his defection by owning the carnal power of the tyrant!" he exclaimed, with a deep groan. "A fallen star! a fallen star!"

"Hold your peace, sir," said the duke, "and keep your ain breath to cool your ain porridge, — ye '1 find them scalding hot, I promise you. — Call in the other fellow, who has some common sense. One sheep will leap the ditch when another goes first"

Cuddle was introduced unbound, but under the guard of two halberdiers, and placed beside Macbriar at the foot of the table. The poor fellow cast a piteous look around him, in which were mingled awe for the great men in whose presence he stood, and compassion for his fellow-sofferers, with no small fear of the personal consequences which impended over himself. He made his clownish obeisances with a double portion of reverence, and then awaited the opening of the awful scene.

"Were you at the battle of Bothwell Brigg?" was the first question which was thundered in his ears.

Cuddle meditated a denial, but had sense enough, upon reflection, to discover that the truth would be too strong for him; so he replied, with true Caledonian indirectness of response, "I'll no say but it may be possible that I might hae been there."

"Answer directly, you knave, — yes, or no? You know you were there."

"It's no for me to contradict your Lordship's Grace's honour," said Cuddie.

"Once more, sir, were you there? — Yes, or no?" said the Duke, impatiently.

"Dear stir," again replied Cuddie, "how can ane mind preceesely where they hae been a' the days o' their life?"

"Speak out, you scoundrel," said General Daltzell, "or I'll dash your teeth out with my dudgeon-haft! Do you think we can stand here all day to be turning and dodging with you, like greyhounds after a hare?"¹

¹The general is said to have struck one of the captive Whigs, when under examination, with the hilt of his sabre, so that the blood gushed out. The provocation for this unmanly violence

"Aweel, then," said Cuddle, "since naething else will please ye, write down that I cannot deny but I was there "

" Well, sir," said the duke, " and do you think that the rising upon that occasion was rebellion, or not?"

"I'm no just free to gie my opinion, stir," said the cautious captive, " on what might cost my neck but I doubt it will be very little better."

" Better than what ? "

" Just than rebellion, as your honour ca's it," replied Cuddle.

"Well, sir, that's speaking to the purpose," replied his Q-race. "And are you content to accept of the king's pardon for your guilt as a rebel, and to keep the Church, and pray for the king ? "

" Blithely, stir," answered the unscrupulous Cuddie ; " and drink his health into the bargain, when the ale 's guile."

" Egad," said the duke, " this is a hearty cock.—What brought you into such a scrape, mine honest friend?"

"Just ill example, stir," replied the prisoner, " and a daft auld jaud of a mither, wi' reverence to your Grace's honour."

"Why, God-a-mercy, my friend," replied the duke, " take care of bad advice another time; I think you are not likely to commit treason on your own score.—Make out his free pardon, and bring forward the rogue in the chair."

Macbriar was then moved forward to the post of examination.

was that the prisoner had called the fierce veteran "a Muscovy beast, who used to roast men." Dalzell had been long in the Russian service, which-in those days was no school of humanity.

"Were you at the battle of Bothwell Bridge ? " was, in like manner, demanded of him.

"I was," answered the prisoner, in a bold and resolute tone.

"Were you armed ?"

"I was not; I went in my calling as a preacher of God's word, to encourage them that drew the sword in His cause."

"In other words, to aid and abet the rebels ?" said the duke.

"Thou hast spoken it," replied the prisoner.

"Well, then," continued the interrogator, "let us know if you saw John Balfour of Burley among the party ? I presume you know him ?"

"I bless God that I do know him," replied Macbriar; "he is a zealous and a sincere Christian."

"And when and where did you last see this pious personage ?" was the query which immediately followed.

"I am here to answer for myself," said Macbriar, in the same dauntless manner, "and not to endanger others."

"We shall know," said Dalzell, "how to make you find your tongue."

"If you can make him fancy himself in a conventicle," answered Lauderdale, "he will find it without you.—Come, laddie, speak while the play is good; you're too young to bear the burden will be laid on you else."

"I defy you," retorted Macbriar. "This has not been the first of my imprisonments or of my sufferings ; and, young as I may be, I have lived long enough to know how to die when I am called upon."

"Ay, but there are some things which must go before an easy death, if you continue obstinate," said Lauderdale, and rung a small silver bell which was placed before him on the table.

A dark crimson curtain, which covered a sort of niche or Gothic recess in the wall, rose at the signal, and displayed the public executioner, — a tall, grim, and hideous man, having an oaken table before him, on which lay thumb-screws and an iron case called the Scottish boot, used in those tyrannical days to torture accused persons. Morton, who was unprepared for this ghastly apparition, started when the curtain arose, but Macbriar's nerves were more firm. He gazed upon the horrible apparatus with much composure; and if a touch of nature called the blood from his cheek for a second, resolution sent it back to his brow with greater energy.

"Do you know who that man is?" said Lauderdale, in a low, stern voice, almost sinking into a whisper.

"He is, I suppose," replied Macbriar, "the infamous executioner of your bloodthirsty commands upon the persons of God's people. He and you are equally beneath my regard; and, I bless God, I no more fear what he can inflict than what you can command. Flesh and blood may shrink under the sufferings you can doom me to, and poor frail nature may shed tears or send forth cries; but I trust my soul is anchored firmly on the rock of ages."

"Do your duty," said the duke to the executioner.

The fellow advanced, and asked, with a harsh and discordant voice, upon which of the prisoner's limbs he should first employ his engine.

"Let him choose for himself," said the duke;

"I should like to oblige him in anything that is reasonable."

"Since you leave it to me," said the prisoner, stretching forth his right leg, "take the best, — I willingly bestow it in the cause for which I suffer."¹

The executioner, with the help of his assistants, enclosed the leg and knee within the tight iron boot, or case, and then, placing a wedge of the same metal between the knee and the edge of the machine, took a mallet in his hand, and stood waiting for farther orders. A well-dressed man, by profession a surgeon, placed himself by the other side of the prisoner's chair, bared the prisoner's arm, and applied his thumb to the pulse in order to regulate the torture according to the strength of the patient. When these preparations were made, the President of the Council repeated with the same stern voice the question, "When and where did you last see John Balfour of Burley?"

The prisoner, instead of replying to him, turned his eyes to heaven, as if imploring Divine strength, and muttered a few words, of which the last were distinctly audible, "Thou hast said Thy people shall be willing in the day of Thy power!"

The Duke of Lauderdale glanced his eye around the Council as if to collect their suffrages, and, judging from their mute signs, gave on his own part a nod to the executioner, whose mallet instantly descended on the wedge, and, forcing it between the knee and the iron boot, occasioned the most exquisite pain, as was evident from the flush which instantly took place on the brow and on the cheeks of the sufferer. The fellow then again raised his weapon, and stood prepared to give a second blow.

¹ This was the reply actually made by James Mitchell when subjected to the torture of the boot, for an attempt to assassinate Archbishop Sharpe.

"Will you yet say," repeated the Duke of Lauderdale, "where and when you last parted from Balfour of Burley?"

"You have my answer," said the sufferer resolutely, and the second blow fell. The third and fourth succeeded; but at the fifth, when a larger wedge had been introduced, the prisoner set up a scream of agony.

Mortimer, whose blood boiled within him at witnessing such cruelty, could bear no longer, and, although unarmed and himself in great danger, was springing forward, when Claverhouse, who observed his emotion, withheld him by force, laying one hand on his arm and the other on his mouth, while he whispered, "For God's sake, think where you are!"

This movement, fortunately for him, was observed by no other of the councillors, whose attention was engaged with the dreadful scene before them.

"He is gone," said the surgeon, — "he has fainted, my Lords; and human nature can endure no more."

"Eelease him," said the duke; and added, turning to Dalzell, "He will make an old proverb good, for he'll scarce ride to-day, though he has had his boots on. I suppose we must finish with him?"

"Ay, despatch his sentence, and have done with him; we have plenty of drudgery behind."

Strong waters and essences were busily employed to recall the senses of the unfortunate captive; and when his first faint gasps intimated a return of sensation, the duke pronounced sentence of death upon him as a traitor taken in the act of open rebellion, and adjudged him to be carried from the bar to the common place of execution, and there hanged by the neck; his head and hands to be stricken off after death, and disposed of according to the pleasure of the Council,¹ and all and sundry his movable goods and gear escheat and inbrought to his Majesty's use.

"Doomster," he continued, "repeat the sentence to the prisoner."

The office of Doomster was in those days, and till a much later period, held by the executioner in conimendam, with his ordinary functions.² (18) The duty consisted in reciting to the unhappy criminal the sentence of the law as pronounced by the judge, which acquired an additional and horrid emphasis from the recollection that the hateful personage by whom it was uttered was to be the agent of the cruelties he denounced. Macbriar had scarce understood the purport of the words as first pronounced by the Lord President of the Council; but he was sufficiently recovered to listen and to reply to the sentence when uttered by the harsh and odious voice of the roffian who was to execute it, arid at the last awful words, "And this I pronounce for doom," he answered boldly: "My Lords, I thank you for the only favour I looked for, or would accept at your hands, namely, that you have sent the crushed and maimed carcass, which has this day sustained your cruelty, to this hasty end. It were indeed little to me whether I perish on the gallows or in the prison-

¹ The pleasure of the Council respecting the relics of their victims was often as savage as the rest of their conduct. The heads of the preachers were frequently exposed on pikes between their two hands, the palms displayed as in the attitude of prayer. When the celebrated Richard Cameron's head was exposed in this manner, a spectator bore testimony to it as that of one who lived praying and preaching, and died praying and fighting.

² See a note on the subject of this office in "The Heart of Mid-Lothian" house; but if death, following close on what I have this day suffered, had found me in my cell of darkness and bondage, many might have lost the sight how a Christian man can suffer in the good cause. For the rest, I forgive you, my Lords, for what you have appointed and I have sustained. And why should I not? — Ye send me to a happy exchange, — to the company of angels and the spirits of the just, for that of frail dust and ashes; ye send me from darkness into clay, from mortality to immortality, and, in a word, from earth to heaven ! If the thanks, therefore, and pardon of a dying man can do you good, take them at my hand, and may your last moments be as happy as mine !"

As he spoke thus, with a countenance radiant with joy and triumph, he was withdrawn by those who had brought him into the apartment, and executed within half an hour, dying with the same enthusiastic firmness which his whole life had evinced.

The Council broke up, and Morton found himself again in the carriage with General Grahame.

"Marvellous firmness and gallantry !" said Morton, as he reflected upon Macbriar's conduct. "What a pity it is that with such self-devotion and heroism should have been mingled the fiercer features of his sect!"

"You mean," said Claverhouse, "his resolution to condemn you to death? To that he would have reconciled himself by a single text; for example, 'And Phinehas arose and executed judgment,' or something to the same purpose. — But wot ye where you are now bound, Mr. Morton?"

"We are on the road to Leith, I observe," answered Morton. "Can I not be permitted to gee my friends ere I leave my native land 1"

"Your uncle," replied Grahame, "has been spoken to, and declines visiting you. The good gentleman is terrified, and not without some reason, that the crime of your treason may extend itself over his lands and tenements; he sends you, however, his blessing, and a small sum of money. Lord Evandale continues extremely indisposed. Major Bellen-den is at Tillietudlem putting matters in order. The scoundrels have made great havoc there with Lady Margaret's muniments of antiquity, and have desecrated and destroyed what the good lady called the Throne of his most sacred Majesty. Is there any one else whom you would wish to see,?"

Morton sighed deeply as he answered, "No, — it would avail nothing. But my preparations, — small as they are, some must be necessary."

"They are all ready for you," said the general. "Lord Evandale has anticipated all you wish. Here is a packet from him, with letters of recommendation for the court of the Stadtholder Prince of Orange, to which I have added one or two. I made my first campaigns under him, and first saw fire at the battle of Seneff.¹ There are also bills of exchange for your immediate wants, and more will be sent when you require it."

Morton heard all this and received the parcel with an astounded and confused look, so sudden was the execution of the sentence of banishment.

"And my servant?" he said.

"He shall be taken care of, and replaced, if it be practicable, in the service of Lady Margaret Bellen-den; I think he will hardly neglect the parade of the feudal retainers, or go a-whigging a second time. But here we are upon the quay, and the boat waits you."

¹ August, 1674, Claverhouse greatly distinguished himself in this action, and was made captain.

It was even as Claverhouse said. A boat waited for Captain Morton, with the trunks and baggage belonging to his rank. Claverhouse shook him by the hand, and wished him good fortune and a happy return to Scotland in quieter times.

"I shall never forget," he said, "the gallantry of your behaviour to my friend Evandale, in circumstances when many men would have sought to rid him out of their way."

Another friendly pressure, and they parted. As Morton descended the pier to get into the boat, a hand placed in his a letter folded up in very small space. He looked round. The person who gave it seemed much muffled up; he pressed his finger upon his lip, and then disappeared among the crowd. The incident awakened Morton's curiosity; and when he found himself on board of a vessel bound for Eotterdam, and saw all his companions of the voyage busy making their own arrangements, he took an opportunity to open the billet thus mysteriously thrust upon him. It ran thus:

"Thy courage on the fatal day when Israel fled before his enemies hath, in some measure, atoned for thy unhappy owning of the Erastian interest. These are not days for Ephraim to strive with Israel.—I know thy heart is with the daughter of the stranger. But turn from that folly; for in exile and inflight, and even in death itself, shall my hand be heavy against that bloody and malignant house, and Providence hath given me the means of meting unto them with their own measure of ruin and confiscation. The resistance of their stronghold was the main cause of our being scattered at Both well Bridge, and I have bound it upon my soul to visit it upon them. Wherefore, think of her no more, but join with our brethren in banishment, whose hearts are still towards this miserable land to save and to relieve her. There is an honest remnant in Holland whose eyes are looking out for deliverance. Join thyself unto them like the true son of the stout and worthy Silas Morton, and thou wilt have good acceptance among them for his sake and for thine own working. Shouldst thou be found worthy again to labour in the vineyard, thou wilt at all times hear of my iii-comings and out-goings, by inquiring after Quintin Mackell of Trongray, at the house of that singular Christian woman, Bessie Mac-lure, near to the place called the Howff, where Niel Elane entertaineth guests. So much from him who hopes to hear again from thee in brotherhood, resisting unto blood, and striving against sin. Meanwhile, possess thyself in patience. Keep thy sword girded, and thy lamp burning, as one that wakes in the night; for He who shall judge the Mount of Esau, and shall make false professors as straw, and malignaunts as stubble, will come in the fourth watch with garments dyed in blood, and the house of Jacob shall be for spoil, and the house of Joseph for fire. I am he that hath written it, whose hand hath been on the mighty in the waste field."

■

This extraordinary letter was subscribed J. B. of B.; but the signature of these initials was not necessary for pointing out to Morton that it could come from no other than Burley. It gave him new occasion to admire the indomitable spirit of this man, who, with art equal to his courage and obstinacy, was even now endeavouring to re-establish the web of conspiracy which had been so lately torn to pieces. But he felt no sort of desire, in the present moment, to sustain a correspondence which must be perilous, or to renew an association, which, in so many ways, had been nearly fatal to him. The threats which Burley held out against the family of Bellenden he considered as a mere expression of his spleen on account of their defence of Tillietudlem; and nothing seemed less likely than that, at the very moment of their party being victorious, their fugitive and distressed adversary could exercise the least influence over their fortunes.

Morton, however, hesitated for an instant whether he should not send the major or Lord Evandale intimation of Burley's threats. Upon consideration, he thought he could not do so without betraying his confidential correspondence; for to warn them of his menaces would have served little purpose, unless he had given them a clue to prevent them, by apprehending his person; while, by doing so, he deemed he should commit an ungenerous breach of trust to remedy an evil which seemed almost imaginary. Upon mature consideration, therefore, he tore the letter, having first made a memorandum of the name and place where the writer was to be heard of, and threw the fragments into the sea.

While Morton was thus employed, the vessel was unmoored, and the white sails swelled out before a favourable north-west wind. The ship leaned her side to the gale, and went roaring through the waves, leaving a long and rippling furrow to track her course. The city and port from which he had sailed became undistinguishable in the distance; the hills by which they were surrounded melted finally into the blue sky, and Morton was separated for several years from the land of his nativity.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Whom does time gallup withal '

As You Like It.

IT is fortunate for tale-tellers that they are not tied down like theatrical writers to the unities of time and place, but may conduct their personages to Athens and Thebes at their pleasure, and bring them back at their convenience. Time, to use Rosalind's simile, has hitherto paced with the hero of our tale ; for betwixt Morton's first appearance as a competitor for the popinjay and his final departure for Holland hardly two months elapsed. Years, however, glided away ere we find it possible to resume the thread of our narrative, and Time must be held to have galloped over the interval. Craving, therefore, the privilege of my cast, I entreat the reader's attention to the continuation of the narrative, as it starts from a new era, being the year immediately subsequent to the British [Revolution.

Scotland had just begun to repose from the convulsion occasioned by a change of dynasty, and, through the prudent tolerance of King William, had narrowly escaped the horrors of a protracted civil war. Agriculture began to revive, and men, whose minds had been disturbed by the violent political concussions, and the general change of government in Church and State, had begun to recover their ordinary temper, and to give the usual attention to their own private affairs, in lieu of discussing those of the public. The Highlanders alone resisted the newly established order of things, and were in arms in a considerable body under the Viscount of Dundee, whom our readers have hitherto known by the name of Grahame of Claverhouse. But the usual state of the Highlands was so unruly that their being more or less disturbed was not supposed greatly to affect the general tranquillity of the country, so long as their disorders were confined within their own frontiers. In the Lowlands, the Jacobites, now the undermost party, had ceased to expect any immediate advantage by open resistance, and were, in their turn, driven to hold private meetings, and form associations for mutual defence, which the government termed treason, while they cried out persecution.

The triumphant Whigs, while they re-established Presbytery as the national religion, and assigned to the General Assemblies of the Kirk their natural influence, were very far from going the lengths which the Gameronians and more extravagant portion of the nonconformists under Charles and James loudly demanded. They would listen to no proposal for re-establishing the Solemn League and Covenant; and those who had expected to find in King William a zealous Covenanted Monarch, were grievously disappointed when he intimated, with the phlegm peculiar to his country, his intention to tolerate all forms of religion which were consistent with the safety of the State. The principles of indulgence thus espoused and gloried in by the Government gave great offence to the more violent party, who condemned them as diametrically contrary to Scripture,—for which narrow-spirited doctrine they cited various texts, all, as it may well be supposed, detached from their context, and most of them derived from the charges given to the Jews in the Old Testament dispensation to extirpate idolaters out of the Promised Land. They also murmured highly against the influence assumed by secular persons in exercising the rights of patronage, which they termed a rape upon the chastity of the Church. They censured and condemned as Erastian many of the measures by which Government after the Revolution showed an inclination to interfere with the management of the Church, and they positively refused to take the oath of allegiance to King William and Queen Mary until they should, on their part, have sworn to the Solemn League and Covenant, the Magna Charta, as they termed it, of the Presbyterian Church.

This party, therefore, remained grumbling and dissatisfied, and made repeated declarations against defections and causes of wrath, which, had they been prosecuted as in the two former reigns, would have led to the same consequence of open rebellion. But as the murmurers were allowed to hold their meetings uninterrupted, and to testify as much as they pleased against Socinianism, Erastianism, and all the compliances and defections of the time, their zeal, unfanned by persecution, died gradually away, their numbers became diminished, and they sunk into the scattered remnant of serious, scrupulous, and harmless enthusiasts, of whom Old Mortality, whose legends have afforded the groundwork of my tale, may be taken as no bad representative. But in the years which immediately succeeded the Revolution, the Cameronians continued a sect strong in numbers and vehement in their political opinions, whom Government wished to discourage, while they prudently temporised with them. These men formed one violent party in the State; and the Episcopalian and Jacobite interest, notwithstanding their ancient and national animosity, yet repeatedly endeavoured to intrigue among them, and avail themselves of their discontents, to obtain their assistance in recalling the Stewart family. The Revolutionary Government in the mean while was supported by the great bulk of the Lowland interest, who were chiefly disposed to a moderate Presbytery, and formed in a great measure the party who in the former oppressive reigns were stigmatized by the Cameronians for having exercised that form of worship under the declaration of Indulgence issued by Charles II. Such was the state of parties in Scotland immediately subsequent to the Revolution.

It was on a delightful summer evening that a stranger, well mounted, and having the appearance of a military man of rank, rode down a winding descent which terminated in view of the romantic ruins of Bothwell Castle and the river Clyde, which winds so beautifully between rocks and woods to sweep around the towers formerly built by Aymer de Valence. Bothwell Bridge was at a little distance, and also in sight. The opposite field, once the scene of slaughter and conflict, now lay as placid and quiet as the surface of a summer lake. The trees and bushes which grew around in romantic variety of shade, were hardly seen to stir under the influence of the evening breeze. The very murmur of the river seemed to soften itself into unison with the stillness of the scene around.

The path through which the traveller descended was occasionally shaded by detached trees of great size, and elsewhere by the hedges and boughs of flourishing orchards, now laden with summer fruits.

The nearest object of consequence was a farmhouse, or, it might be, the abode of a small proprietor situated on the side of a sunny bank which was covered by apple and pear trees. At the foot of the path which led up to this modest mansion was a small cottage, pretty much in the situation of a porter's lodge, though obviously not designed for such a purpose. The hut seemed comfortable, and more neatly arranged than is usual in Scotland. It had its little garden, where some fruit-trees and bushes were mingled with kitchen herbs; a cow and six sheep fed in a paddock hard by; the cock strutted and crowed, and summoned his family around him before the door; a heap of brushwood and turf, neatly made up, indicated that the winter fuel was provided; and the thin blue smoke which ascended from the straw-bound chimney, and winded slowly out from among the great trees, showed that the evening meal was in the act of being made ready. To complete the little scene of rural peace and comfort, a girl of about five years old was fetching water in a pitcher from a beautiful fountain of the purest transparency, which bubbled up at the root of a decayed old oak-tree about twenty yards from the end of the cottage.

The stranger reined up his horse and called to the little nymph, desiring to know the way to Fairy Knowe. The child set down her water-pitcher, hardly understanding what was said to her, put her fair flaxen hair apart on her brows, and opened her round blue eyes with the wondering "What's your wull?" which is usually a peasant's first answer, if it can be called one, to all questions whatever.

" I wish to know the way to Fairy Knowe."

"Mammie, mammie," exclaimed the little rustic, running towards the door of the hut, " come out and speak to the gentleman."

Her mother appeared, — a handsome young country-woman, to whose features, originally sly and espiegle in expression, matrimony had given that decent matronly air which peculiarly marks the peasant's wife of Scotland. She had an infant in one arm, and with the other she smoothed down her apron, to which hung a chubby child of two years old. The elder girl, whom the traveller had first seen, fell back behind her mother as soon as she appeared, and kept that station, occasionally peeping out to look at the stranger.

"What was your pleasure, sir ?" said the woman, with an air of respectful breeding not quite common in her rank of life, but without anything resembling forwardness.

The stranger looked at her with great earnestness for a moment, and then replied, " I am seeking a place called Fairy Knowe, and a man called Cuthbert Headrigg. You can probably direct me to him ?"

" It 's my gudeman, sir," said the young woman, with a smile of welcome. " Will you alight, sir, and come into ourpuir dwelling?—Cuddie, Cuddie,"—a white-headed rogue of four years appeared at the door of the hut—"rin awa, my bonny man, and tell your father a gentleman wants him. Or, stay,—Jenny, ye'I hae mair sense: rin ye awa and tell him; he's down at the Four-acres Park. — Winna ye light down and bide a blink, sir ? Or would ye take a mouthfu' o' bread and cheese, or a drink p' ale, till our gudeman comes. It's gude ale, though

■*

I shuuldna say sae that brews it; but ploughman-lads work hard, and maim has something to keep their hearts abune by ordinal, sae I aye pit a gude gowpin " maut to the browst."

As the stranger declined her courteous offers, Cuddie, the, reader's old acquaintance, made his appearance in person. His countenance still presented the same mixture of apparent dulness with occasional sparkles, which indicated the craft so often found in the clouted shoe. He looked on the rider as on one whom he never had before seen, and, like his daughter and wife, opened the conversation with the regular query, "What's your wall wi' me, sir?"

"I have a curiosity to ask some questions about Jhis country," said the traveller, "and I was directed to you as an intelligent man who can answer them."

"Nae doubt, sir," said Cuddie, after a moment's hesitation. "But I would first like to ken what sort of questions they are. I hae had sae inony questions speered at me in my day, and in sic queer ways, that if ye kend ", ye wadna wonder at my jalousing a' thing about them. My mother gar 'd me learn the Single Carritch, whilk was a great vex; then I behoved to leam about my godfathers and godmothers to please the auld leddy; and whiles I jumbled them thegeather and pleased nane " them; and when I cam to man's yestate, cam another kind o' questioning in fashion that I liked waur than Effectual Calling; and the 'did promise and vow' of the tane were yokit to the end o' the tother. Sae ye see, sir, I aye like to hear questions asked before I answer them."

"Tou have nothing to apprehend from mine, my good friend; they only relate to the state of the country."

"Country?" replied Cuddie; "ou, the country's weel eneugh, an it werena that dour deevil, Claver'se (they c" him Dundee now), that 'a stirring about yet in the Highlands, they say, wi' a' the Donalds and Duncans and Dugalds, that ever wore bottomless breeks, driving about " him, to set things asteer again, now we hae gotten them " reasonably weel settled. But Mackay will pit him down, there's little doubt o' that; he'll gie him his fairing, I'll be caution for it."

"What makes you so positive of that, my friend?" asked the horseman.

"I heard it " my am lugs," answered Cuddie, "foretauld to him by a man that had been three hours stane dead, and came back to this earth again just to tell him his mind. It was at a place they c" Drumshinnel."

"Indeed?" said the stranger. "I can hardly believe you, my friend."

"Ye might ask my mither, then, if she were in life," said Cuddie; "it was her explained it a' to me, for I thought the man had only been wounded. At ony rate, he spake of the casting out of the Stewarts by their very names, and the vengeance that was brewing for Claver'se and his dragoons. They ca'd the man Habakkuk Mucklewrath; his brain was a wee ajee, but he was a braw preacher for a' that."

¹¹ You seem," said the stranger, "to live in a rich and peaceful country."

"It's no to compleen o', sir, an we get the crap weel in," quoth Cuddie; "but if ye had seen the blude rinnin' as fast on the tap o' that brigg yonder as ever the water ran below it, ye wadna hae thought it sae bonnie a spectacle."

"You mean the battle some years since? I was waiting upon Monmouth that morning, my good friend, and did see some part of the action," said the stranger.

"Then ye saw a bonny stour," said Cuddie, "that sail serve me for fighting a^l the days " my life. I judged ye wad be a trooper, by your red scarlet lace-coat and your looped hat"

"And which side were you upon, my friend?" continued the inquisitive stranger.

"Aha, lad?" retorted Cuddie, with a knowing look, or what he designed for such, — "there's nae use in telling that, unless I kend wha was asking me."

"I commend your prudence, but it is unnecessary; I know you acted on that occasion as servant to Henry Morton."

"Ay!" said Cuddie, in surprise, "how came ye by that secret? No that I need care a bodle about it, for the sun 's on our side o' the hedge now. I wish my master were living to get a blink o' t."

"And what became of him?" said the rider.

"He was lost in the vessel gaun to that weary Holland, — clean lost; and " body perished, and my poor master amang them. Neither man nor mouse was ever heard o' mair." Then Cuddie uttered a groan.

"You had some regard for him, then?" continued the stranger.

"How could I help it? His face was made of a fiddle, as they say, for a' body that looked on him liked him. And a braw soldier he was. Oh, an ye had but seen him down at the brigg there, fleeing about like a fleeing dragon to gar folk fight that had unco little will till't! There was he and that sour Whigamore they ca'd Burley: if twa men could hae won a field, we wadna hae gotten our skins paid that day."

"You mention Burley: do you know if he yet lives?"

"I kenna muckle about him. Folk say he was abroad, and our sofferers wad hold no communion wi' him, because o' his having murdered the archbishop. Sae lie earn hame ten times dourer than ever, and broke aff wi' mony o' the Presbyterians; and at this last coming of the Prince of Orange h? could get nae countenance nor command for fear of his deevilish temper, and he hasna been heard of since; only some folk say that pride and anger haa driven him clean wud."

"And — and," said the traveller, after considerable hesitation, — "do you know anything of Lord Evandale?"

"Div I ken anything o' Lord Evandale? Div I no? Is not my young leddy up by yonder at the house, that's as gude as married to him?"

"And are they not married, then?" said the rider, hastily.

"No, only what they c" betrothed,— me and my wife were witnesses. It's no mony months bypast; it was a lang courtship, — few folk kend the reason by Jenny and mysell. But will ye no light down? I downa bide to see ye sitting up there, and the clouds are casting up thick in the west ower Glasgow-ward, and maist skeily folk think that bodes rain."

In fact, a deep black cloud had already surmounted the Betting sun; a few large drops of rain fell, and the murmurs of distant thunder were heard.

"The deil 's in this man," said Cuddie to himself; " I wish he would either light aff or ride on, that he may quarter himsell in Hamilton or the shower begin."

But the rider sate motionless on his horse for two or three moments after his last question, like one exhausted by some uncommon effort. At length, recovering himself as if with a sudden and painful effort, he asked Cuddie " if Lady Margaret Bellenden still lived."

" She does," replied Cuddie, " but in a very sma' way. They hae been a sad changed family since thae rough times began ; they hae soffered eneugh first and last,—and to lose the auld Tower and a' the bonny barony and the holms that I hae pleughed sae often, and the Mains, and my kale-yard, that I suld hae gotten back again, and " for naething, as a body may say, but just the want o' some bits of sheep-skin that were lost in the confusion of the taking of Tillietudlem."

" I have heard something of this," said the stranger, deepening his voice and averting his head. " I have some interest in the family, and would willingly help them if I could. Can you give me a bed in your house to-night, my friend ?"

" It's but a corner of a place, sir," said Cuddie, " but we'se try, rather than ye suld ride on in the rain and thunner; for, to be free wi' ye, sir, I think ye seem no that ower weel,"

" I am liable to a dizziness," said the stranger, " but it will soon wear off."

" I ken we can gie ye a decent supper, sir," said Cuddie ; " and we'll see about a bed as weel as we can. We wad be laith a stranger suld lack what we have, though we are jimpily provided for in beds rather; for Jenny has sae mony bairns (God bless them and her) that troth I maun speak to Lord Evandale to gie us a bit eik, or outshot o' some sort, to the onstead."

"I shall be easily accommodated," said the stranger, as he entered the house,

"And ye may rely on your naig being weel sorted," said Cuddie; "I ken weel what belongs to suppering a horse, and this is a very glide ane."

Guddie took the horse to the little cow-house, and called to his wife to attend in the mean while to the stranger's accommodation. The officer entered, and threw himself on a settle at some distance from the fire, and carefully turning his back to the little lattice window. Jenny, or Mrs. Headrigg, if the reader pleases, requested him to lay aside the cloak, belt, and flapped hat which he wore upon his journey, but he excused himself under pretence of feeling cold, and, to divert the time till Cuddie's return, he Entered into some chat with the children, carefully avoiding, during the interval, the inquisitive glances of his landlady.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

What tragic tears bedim the eye I
What death' we suffer ere we ihe!
Our broken friendships we deplore,
And loves of youth that &ie no more.

LOGAN.

CUDDIE soon returned, assuring the stranger, with a cheerful voice, "that the horse was properly suppered up, and that the gudewife should make a bed up for him at the house, mair purpose-like and comfortable than the like o' them could gie him."

"Are the family at the house?" said the stranger, with an interrupted and broken voice.

"No, atir, they're awa wi' a' the servants, —they keep only twa nowadays, and my gudewife there has the keys and the charge, though she's no a fee'd servant. She has been born and bred in the family, and has a' trust and management. If they were there, we behovedna to take sic freedom without their order; but when they are awa, they will be weel pleased we serve a stranger gentleman. Miss Bellenden wad help a' the haill warld, an her power were as gude as her will; and her grandmother, Leddy Margaret, has an unco respect for the gentry, and she's no ill to the poor bodies neither. — And now, wife, what for are ye no getting forrit wi' the sowens?"

"Never mind, lad," rejoined Jenny, "ye sail hae them in gude time; I ken weel that ye like your brose het."

Cuddle fidgeted and laughed with a peculiar expression of intelligence at this repartee, which was followed by a dialogue of little consequence betwixt his wife and him, in which the stranger took no share. At length he suddenly interrupted them by the question: "Can you tell me when Lord Evandale's marriage takes place?"

"Very soon, we expect," answered Jenny, before it was possible for her husband to reply; "it wad hae been ower afore now, but fnr the death o' auld Major Bellenden."

"The excellent old man!" said the stranger; "I heard at Edinburgh he was no more. Was he loilg ill?"

"He couldna be said to haud up his head after his brother's wife and his niece were turned out o' their ain house; and he had himsell sair borrowing siller to stand the law,—but it was in the latter end o' King James's days; and Basil Olifant, who claimed the estate, turned a papist to please the managers, and then naethiug was to be refused him. Sae the lawgaed again the leddies at last, after they had fought a weary sort " years about it; and, as I said before, the major ne'er held up his head again. And then cam the pitting awa o' the Stewart line; and, though he had but little reason to like them, he couldna brook that, and it clean broke the heart " him; and creditors cam to Charnwood and cleaned out a' that was there,—he was never rich, the gude auld man, for he dow'd na see onybody want."

"He was indeed," said the stranger, with a faltering voice, "an admirable man,—that is, I have heard that he was so. So the ladies were left without fortune, as well as without a protector?"

"They will neither want the tane nor the tother while Lord Evandale lives," said Jenny; "he has been a true friend in their griefs. E'en to the house they live in is his lordship's; and never man, as my auld gudemother used to say, since the days of the Patriarch Jacob, served sae lang and sae sair for a wife as gude Lord Evandale has dune,"

"And why," said the stranger, with a voice that quivered with emotion, "why was he not sooner rewarded by the object of his attachment?"

"There was the lawsuit to be ended," said Jenny readily, "forby many other family arrangements."

¹ "Na, but," said Cuddie, "there was another reason forby; for the young leddy—"

"Whisht, haud your tongue, and sup your sowens," said his wife; "I see the gentleman's far frae weel, and downa eat our coarse supper. I wad kill him a chicken in an instant."

"There is no occasion," said the stranger; "I shall want only a glass of water and to be left alone."

"You'll gie yoursell the trouble then to follow me," said Jenny, lighting a small lantern, "and I'll show you the way."

Cuddie also proffered his assistance; but his wife reminded him, "That the bairns would be left to fight thegither, and coup ane anither into the fire," so that he remained to take charge of the menage.

His wife led the way up a little winding path, which, after threading some thickets of sweetbrier and honeysuckle, conducted him to the back-door of a small garden. Jenny undid the latch, and they passed through an old-fashioned flower-garden, with its clipped yew hedges and formal parterres, t'5 4 glass-sashed door, which she opened with a master-key, and lighting a candle, which she placed upon a small work-table, asked pardon for leaving him there for a few minutes, until she prepared his apartment. She did not exceed five minutes in these preparations; but when she returned, was startled to find that the stranger had sunk forward with his head upon the table, in what she at first apprehended to be a swoon. As she advanced to him, however, she could discover by his short-drawn sobs that it was a paroxysm of mental agony. She prudently drew back until he raised his head, and then showing herself, without seeming to have observed his agitation, informed him that his bed was prepared. The stranger gazed at her a moment, as if to collect the sense of her words. She repeated them; and only bending his head, as an indication that he understood her, he entered the apartment, the door of which she pointed out to him. It was a small bedchamber, used, as she informed him, by Lord Evandale when a guest at Fairy Knowe, connecting, on one side, with a little china-cabinet which opened to the garden, and on the other, with a saloon, from which it was only separated by a thin wainscot partition. Having wished the stranger better health and good rest, Jenny descended as speedily as she could to her own mansion.

" Oh, Cuddie ! " she exclaimed to her helpmate as she entered, " I doubt we're ruined folk ! "

" How can that be ? What's the matter wi' ye ? " returned the imperturbed Cuddie, who was one of those persons who do not easily take alarm at any thing.

" Wha d'ye think yon gentleman is ? Oh that ever ye suld hae asked him to light here!" exclaimed Jenny,

"Why, wha the muckle deil d'ye say he is? There'snae law against harbouring and intercommunicating now," said Cuddie; "sae, Whig or Tory, what need we care wha he be?"

"Ay, but it's ane will ding Lord Evandale's marriage ajee yet, if it's no the better looked to,"¹ said Jenny; "it's Miss Edith's first joe, your ain auld maister, Cuddie."

"The deil, woman!" exclaimed Cuddie, starting up, "trow ye that I am blind? I wad hae kend Mr. Harry Morton amang a hunder."

"Ay, but, Cuddie lad," replied Jenny, "though ye are no blind, ye are no sae notice-taking as I am,"

"Weel, what for needs ye cast that up to me just now; or what did ye see about the man that was like our Maister Harry?"

"I will tell ye," said Jenny. "I jaloused his keeping his face frae us, and speaking wi' a made-like voice, sae I e'en tried him wi' some tales o' lang syne; and when I spake o' the brose, ye ken, he didna just laugh,—he's ower grave for that nowadays,—but he gae a gledge wi' his ee that I kend he took up what I said. And a' his distress is about Miss Edith's marriage; and I ne'er saw a man mair taen down wi' true love in my days,—I might say man or woman, only I mind how ill Miss Edith was when she first gat word that him and you (ye muckle graceless loon) were coming against Tillietudlem wi' the rebels.—But what's the matter wi' the man now?"

"What's the matter wi' me indeed!" said Cuddie, who was again hastily putting on some of the garments he had stripped himself of; "am I no gaim up this instant to see my maister?"

"Atweel, Cuddie, ye are gaun nae sic gate," said Jenny, coolly and resolutely.

"The deil's in the wife!" said Cuddie. "D'ye think I am to be John Tarnson's man, and mastered by women " the days " my life ?"

"And whase man wad ye be ? And wha wad ye hae to maister ye but me, Cuddie, lad ?" answered Jenny. "I'll gar ye comprehend in the making of a hay-band. Naebody kens that this young gentleman is living but oursells; and frae that he keeps himsell up sae close, I am judging that he's purposing, if he fand Miss Edith either married, or just gaun to be married, he wad just slide awa easy, and gie them nae mair trouble. But if Miss Edith kend that he was living, and if she were standing before the very minister wi' Lord Evandale when it was tauld to her, I'se warrant she wad say No when she suld say Yes."

"Weel," replied Cuddie, "and what's my business wi' that? If Miss Edith likes her auld joe better than her new ane, what for suld she no be free to change her mind like other folk ? Ye ken, Jenny, Halhday aye threeps he had a promise frae yoursell."

"Halliday 's a liar, and ye're naething but a gomeril to hearken till him, Cuddie. And then for this leddy's choice, lack-a-day ! ye may be sure a' the gowd Mr. Morton has is on the outside of his coat; and how can he keep Leddy Margaret and the young leddy ?"

"Isna there Milnwood?" said Cuddie. "Nae doubt the auld laird left his housekeeper the life-rent, as he heard nought o' his nephew; but it's but speaking the auld wife fair, and they may'a live brawly thegither, Leddy Margaret and a'."

"Hout tout, lad," replied Jenny; "ye ken them little to think leddies o' their rank wad set up house wi' auld Ailie Wilson, when they're maist ower proud to take favours frae Lord Evandale himsell. Na, na, they maun follow the camp, if she tak Morton."

"That wad sort ill " the auld leddy, to be sure," said Cuddie; " she wad hardly win ower a lang day in the baggage wain."

"Then sic a flyting as there wad be between them, " about Whig and Tory," continued Jenny.

," To be sure," said Cuddie, "the auld leddy's unco kittle in thae points."

"And then, Cuddie," continued his helpmate, who had reserved her strongest argument to the last, "if this marriage wi' Lord Evandale is broken off, what comes o' our ain bit free house, and the kale-yard, and the cow's grass? I trow that baith us and thae bonny bairns will be turned on the wide world!"

Here Jenny began to whimper; Cuddie writhed himself this way and that way, the very picture of indecision. At length he broke out, "Weel, woman, canna ye tell us what we suld do, without " this din about it?"

"Just do naething at "," said Jenny. "Never seem to ken onything about this gentleman, and for your life say a word that he suld hae been here, or up at the house! An I had kend, I wad hae gien him my ain bed, and sleepit in the byre or he had gane up by; but it canna be helpit now. The neist thing's to get him cannily awa the morn, and I judge he'll be in nae hurry to come back again."

"My puir maister!" said Cuddie; "and maun I no speak to him, then?"

"For your life, no," said Jenny. "Ye're no obliged to ken him; and I wadna hae tauld ye, only I feared ye wad ken him in the morning."

"Aweel," said Cuddie, sighing heavily, "I 'se awa to pleugh the outfield then ; for if I am no to speak to him, I wad rather be out " the gate."

"Very right, my dear hinny," replied Jenny. "Naebody has better sense than you when ye crack a bit " me ower your affairs ; but ye suld ne'er do onything aff hand out o' your ain head."

"Ane wad think it's true," quoth Cuddie; "for I hae aye had some carline or quean or another to gar me gang their gate instead " my ain. There was first my mither," he continued, as he undressed and tumbled himself into bed; "then there was Leddy Margaret didna let me ca' my soul my ain; then my mither and her quarrelled, and pu'ed me twa ways at anes, as if ilk ane had an end o' me, like Punch and the Deevil rugging about the Baker at the fair; and now I hae gotten a wife," he murmured in continuation, as he stowed the blankets around his person, "and she's like to tak the guiding o' me a' thegither."

"And amna I the best guide ye ever had in a' your life ?" said Jenny, as she closed the conversation by assuming her place beside her husband and extinguishing the candle.

Leaving this couple to their repose, we have next to inform the reader that, early on the next morning, two ladies on horseback, attended by their servants, arrived at the house of Fairy Knowe, whom, to Jenny's utter confusion, she instantly recognised as Miss Bellenden and Lady Emily Hamilton, a sister of Lord Evandale.

" Had I no better gang to the house to put things to rights ?" said Jenny, confounded with this unexpected apparition.

"We want nothing but the pass-key," said Miss Bellenden; "Gudyill will open the windows of the little parlour."

"The little parlour's locked, and the lock's spoiled," answered Jenny, who recollected the local sympathy between that apartment and the bed-chamber of her guest.

"In the red parlour, then," said Miss Bellenden, and rode up to the front of the house, but by an approach different from that through which Morton had been conducted.

"All will be out," thought Jenny, "unless I can get him smuggled out of the house the back way."

So saying, she sped up the bank in great tribulation and uncertainty.

"I had better hae said at ance there was a stranger there," was her next natural reflection. "But then they wad hae been for asking him to breakfast. Oh, safe us i what will I do ?—And there's Gudyill walking in the garden too !" she exclaimed internally on approaching the wicket; "and I daurna gang in the back way till he's aff the coast. Oh, sirs! what will become of us ?"

In this state of perplexity she approached the cicdevant butler, with the purpose of decoying him out of the garden. But John Gudyill's temper was not improved by his decline in rank and increase in years. Like many peevish people, too, he seemed to have an intuitive perception as to what was most likely to tease those whom he conversed with; and, on the present occasion, all Jenny's efforts to remove him from the garden served only to root him in it as fast as if he had been one of the shrubs.

Unluckily, also, he had commenced florist during his residence at Fairy Knowe ; and, leaving all other things to the charge of Lady Emily's servant, his first care was dedicated to the flowers, which he had taken under his special protection, and which he propped, dug, and watered, prosing all the while upon their respective merits to poor Jenny, who stood by him trembling and almost crying with anxiety, fear, and impatience.

Fate seemed determined to win a match against Jenny this unfortunate morning. As soon as the ladies entered the house, they observed that the door of the little parlour — the very apartment out of which she was desirous of excluding them on account of its contiguity to the room in which Morton slept — was not only unlocked, but absolutely ajar. Miss Bellenden was too much engaged with her own immediate subjects of reflection to take much notice of the circumstance, but, desiring the servant to open the window-shutters, walked into the room along with her friend.

"He is not yet come," she said. "What can your brother possibly mean? Why express so anxious a wish that we should meet him here? And why not come to Castle Dinnan, as he proposed? I own, my dear Emily, that, even engaged as we are to each other, and with the sanction of your presence, I do not feel that I have done quite right in indulging him."

"Evandale was never capricious," answered his sister; "I am sure he will satisfy us with his reasons, and if he does not, I will help you to scold him,"

"What I chiefly fear," said Edith, "is his having engaged in some of the plots of this fluctuating and unhappy time. I know his heart is with that dreadful Claverhouse and his army, and I believe he would have joined them ere now but for my uncle's death, which gave him so much additional trouble on our account. How singular that one so rational and so deeply sensible of the errors of the exiled family should be ready to risk all for their restoration!"

"What can I say?" answered Lady Emily,— "it is a point of honour with Evandale. Our family have always been loyal; he served long in the Guards; the Viscount of Dundee was his commander and his friend for years; he is looked on with an evil eye by many of his own relations, who set down his inactivity to the score of want of spirit. You must be aware, my dear Edith, how often family connections and early predilections influence our actions more than abstract arguments. But I trust Evandale will continue quiet, —though, to tell you truth, I believe you are the only one who can keep him so."

"And how is it in my power?" said Miss Belenden.

"You can furnish him with the Scriptural apology for not going forth with the host, —' he has married a wife, and therefore cannot come.'"

"I have promised," said Edith, in a faint voice; "but I trust I shall not be urged on the score of time."

"Nay," said Lady Emily, "I will leave Evandale (and here he comes) to plead his own cause."

"Stay, stay, for God's sake !" said Edith, endeavouring t' detain her.

"Not I, not I," said the young lady, making her escape; "the third person makes a silly figure on such occasions. When you want me for breakfast, I will be found in the willow-walk by the river."

As she tripped out of the room, Lord Evandale entered. "Good-morrow, Brother, and good-by till breakfast-time," said the lively young lady; "I trust you will give Miss Bellenden some good reasons for disturbing her rest so early in the morning."

And so saying, she left them together, without waiting a reply.

"And now, my lord," said Edith, "may I desire to know the meaning of your singular request to meet you here at so early an hour?"

She was about to add that she hardly felt herself excusable in having complied with it; but upon looking at the person whom she addressed, she was struck dumb by the singular and agitated expression of his countenance, and interrupted herself to exclaim, "For God's sake, what is the matter?"

"His Majesty's faithful subjects have gained a great and most decisive victory near Blair of Athole; but, alas! my gallant friend Lord Dundee —" •

"Has fallen?" said Edith, anticipating the rest of his tidings.

"True, most true: he has fallen in the arms of victory, and not a man remains of talents and influence sufficient to fill up his loss in King James's service. This, Edith, is no time for temporising with our duty. I have given directions to raise my followers, and I must take leave of you this evening."

"Do not think of it, my lord," answered Edith; "your life is essential to your friends, — do not throw it away in an adventure so rash. What can your single arm, and the few tenants or servants who might follow you, do against the force of almost all Scotland, the Highland clans only excepted?"

"Listen to me, Edith," said Lord Evandale. "I am not so rash as you may suppose me, nor are my present motives of such light importance as to affect only those personally dependent on myself. The Life Guards, with whom I served so long, although new-modelled and new-officered by the Prince of Orange, retain a predilection for the cause of their rightful master; and" — and here he whispered as if he feared even the walls of the apartment had ears — "when my foot is known to be in the stirrup, two regiments of cavalry have sworn to renounce the usurper's service, and fight under my orders. They delayed only till Dundee should descend into the Lowlands; but since he is no more, which of his successors dare take that decisive step, unless encouraged by the troops declaring themselves! Meantime, the zeal of the soldiers will die away. I must bring them to a decision while their hearts are glowing with the victory their old leader has obtained, and burning to avenge his untimely death."

"And will you, on the faith of such men as you know these soldiers to be," said Edith, "take a part of such dreadful moment?"

"I will," said Lord Evandale, — "I must; my honour and loyalty are both pledged for it."

"And all for the sake," continued Miss Bellen-den, "of a prince whose measures, while he was on the throne, no one could condemn more than Lord Evandale?"

"Most true," replied Lord Evandale; "and as I recreated' even dating the plenitude of his power, his innovations on Church and State, like a freeborn subject, I am determined I will assert his real rights, when he is in adversity, like a loyal one. Let courtiers and sycophants flatter power and desert misfortune; I will neither do the one nor the other."

"And if you are determined to act what my feeble judgment must still term rashly, why give yourself the pain of this untimely meeting ? "

"Were it not enough to answer," said Lord Evandale, " that, ere rushing on battle, I wished to bid adieu to my betrothed bride ? Surely it is judging coldly of my feelings, and showing too plainly the indifference of your own, to question my motive for a request so natural."

"But why in this place, my lord,¹ said Edith; " and why with such peculiar circumstances oi mystery ?"

" Because," he replied, putting a letter into heT hand, " I have yet another request, which I daro hardly proffer, even when prefaced by these credentials."

In haste and terror, Edith glanced over the letter, which was from her grandmother.

"My dearest childe," such was its tenor in style and spelling, " I never more deeply regretted the reumatism, which disqualified me from riding on horseback, than at tins present writing, when I would most have wished to be where this paper will soon be, that IB at Fairy Knows, with my poor dear Willie's only child. But it is the will of God I should not be with her, which I conclude to be the case, as much for the pain I now soffer, as because it hath now not given way either to cammomile poultices or to decoxion of wild mustard, wherewith I have often relieved others. Therefore, I must tell you, by writing instead of word of mouth, that, as my young Lord Evandale is called to the present campaign, both by his honour and his duty, he hath earnestly solicited me that the bonds of holy matrimony be knitted before his departure to the wars between you and him, in implement of the indenture formerly entered into for that effect, whereuntil, as I see no raisunable objection, so I trust that you, who have been always a good and obedient child, will not devise any which has less than reason. It is true that the contract of our house have heretofore been celebrated in a manner more befitting our Rank, and not in private, and with few witnesses, as a thing done in a corner. But it has been Heaven's own free will, as well as those of the kingdom where we live, to take away from us our estate, and from the King his throne. Yet I trust He will yet restore the rightful heir to the throne, and turn his heart to the true Protestant Episcopal faith, which I have the better right to expect to see even with my old eyes, as I have beheld the royal family when they were struggling as sorely with masterful usurpers and rebels as they are now; that is to say, when his most sacred Majesty, Charles the Second of happy memory, honoured our poor house of Tillietudlem by taking his disjunct therein," etc., etc., etc.

We will not abuse the reader's patience by quoting more of Lady Margaret's prolix epistle. Suffice it to say that it closed by laying her commands on her grandchild to consent to the solemnisation of her marriage without loss of time.

"I never thought till this instant," said Edith, dropping the letter from her hand, "that Lord Evandale would have acted ungenerously."

"Ungenerously, Edith!" replied her lover. "And how can you apply such a term to my desire to call you mine, ere I part from you, perhaps for ever?"

" Lord Evandale ought to have remembered," said Edith, "that when his perseverance, and, I must add, a due sense of his merit and of the obligations we owed him, wrung from me a slow consent that I would one day comply with his wishes, I made it my condition that I should not be pressed to a hasty accomplishment of my promise ; and now he avails himself of his interest with my only remaining relative to hurry me with precipitate and even indelicate importunity. There is more selfishness than generosity, my lord, in such eager and urgent solicitation."

Lord Evandale, evidently much hurt, took two or three turns through the apartment ere he replied to this accusation; at length he spoke : "I should have escaped this painful charge, durst I at once have mentioned to Miss Bellenden my principal reason for urging this request. It is one which she will probably despise on her own account, but which ought to weigh with her for the sake of Lady Margaret. My death in battle must give my whole estate to my heirs of entail; my forfeiture as a traitor, by the usurping Government, may vest it in the Prince of Orange or some Dutch favourite. In either case, my venerable friend and betrothed bride must remain unprotected and in poverty. Vested with the rights and provisions of Lady Evandale, Edith will find, in the power of supporting her aged parent, some consolation for having condescended to share the titles and fortunes of one who does not pretend to be worthy of her."

Edith was struck dumb by an argument which she had not expected, and was compelled to acknowledge that Lord Evandale's suit was urged with delicacy as well as with consideration.

"And yet," she said, "such is the waywardness with which my heart reverts to former times that I cannot," she burst into tears, "suppress a degree of ominous reluctance at fulfilling my engagement upon such a brief summons."

"We have already fully considered this painful subject," said Lord Evaidale; "and I hoped, my dear Edith, your own inquiries, as well as mine, had fully convinced you that these regrets were fruitless."

"Fruitless indeed " said Edith, with a deep sigh, winch, as if by an unexpected echo, was repeated from the adjoining apartment. Miss Belenden started at the sound, and scarcely composed herself upon Lord Evandale's assurances that she had heard but the echo of her own respiration.

"It sounded strangely distinct," she said, "and almost ominous; but my feelings are so harassed that the slightest trifle agitates them."

Lord Evandale eagerly attempted to soothe her alarm, and reconcile her to a measure which, however hasty, appeared to him the only means by which he could secure her independence. He urged his claim in virtue of the contract, her grandmother's wish and command, the propriety of insuring her comfort and independence, and touched lightly on his own long attachment, which he had evinced by so many and such various services. These Edith felt the more, the less they were insisted upon; and at length, as she had nothing to oppose to his ardour, excepting a causeless reluctance which she herself was ashamed to oppose against BO much generosity, she was compelled to rest upon the impossibility of having the ceremony performed upon such hasty notice, at such a time and place. But for all this Lord Evandale was prepared, and he explained, with joyful alacrity, that the former chaplain of his regiment was in attendance at the Lodge with a faithful domestic, once a non-commissioned officer in the same corps; that his sister was also possessed of the secret; and that Headrigg and his wife might be added to the list of witnesses, if agreeable to Miss Bellenden. As to the place, he had chosen it on very purpose. The marriage was to remain a secret, since Lord Evandale was to depart in disguise very soon after it was solemnised, — a circumstance which, had their union been public, must have drawn upon him the attention of the Government, as being altogether unaccountable, unless from his being engaged in some dangerous design. Having hastily urged these motives and explained his arrangements, he ran, without waiting for an answer, to summon his sister to attend his bride, while he went in search of the other persons whose presence was necessary.

When Lady Emily arrived, she found her friend in an agony of tears, of which she was at some loss to comprehend the reason, being one of those damsels who think there is nothing either wonderful or terrible in matrimony, and joining with most who knew him in thinking that it could not be rendered peculiarly alarming by Lord Evandale being the bridegroom. Influenced by these feelings, she exhausted in succession all the usual arguments for courage, and all the expressions of sympathy and condolence ordinarily employed on such occasions. But when Lady Emily beheld her future sister-in-law deaf to all those ordinary topics of consolation; when she beheld tears follow fast and without intermission down cheeks as pale as marble; when she felt that the hand which she pressed in order to enforce her arguments turned cold within her grasp, and lay, like that of a corpse, insensarole and unresponsive to her caresses, her feelings of sympathy gave way to those of hurt pride and pettish displeasure.

"I must own," she said, "that I am something at a loss to understand all this, Miss Bellenden. Months have passed since you agreed to marry my brother, and you have postponed the fulfilment of your engagement from one period to another, as if you had to avoid some dishonourable or highly disagreeable connection. I think I can answer for Lord Evandale that he will seek no woman's hand against her inclination; and, though his sister, I may boldly say that he does not need to urge any lady further than her inclinations carry her. You will forgive me, Miss Bellenden; but your present distress augurs ill for my brother's future happiness, and I must needs say that he does not merit all these expressions of dislike and dolour, and that they seem an odd return for an attachment which he has manifested so long, and in so many ways.¹"

"You are right, Lady Emily," said Edith, drying her eyes and endeavouring to resume her natural manner, though still betrayed by her faltering voice and the paleness of her cheeks, — "you are quite right; Lord Evandale merits such usage from no one, least of all from her whom he has honoured with his regard. But if I have given way, for the last time, to a sudden and irresistible burst of feeling, it is my consolation, Lady Emily, that your brother knows the cause, that I have hid nothing from him, and that he at least is not apprehensive of finding in Edith Bellenden a wife undeserving of his affection. But still you are right, and I merit your censure for indulging for a moment fruitless regret and painful remembrances. It shall be so no longer, my lot is cast with Evandale, and with him I am resolved to bear it. Nothing shall in future occur to excite his complaints or the resentment of his relations; no idle recollections of other days shall intervene to prevent the zealous and affectionate discharge of my duty; no vain illusions recall the memory of other days —"

As she spoke these words, she slowly raised her eyes, which had before been hidden by her hand, to the latticed window of her apartment, which was partly open, uttered a dismal shriek, and fainted. Lady Emily turned her eyes in the same direction, but saw only the shadow of a man, which seemed to disappear from the window, and, terrified more by the state of Edith than by the apparition she had herself witnessed, she uttered shriek upon shriek for assistance. Her brother soon arrived, with the chaplain and Jenny Dennison; but strong and vigorous remedies were necessary ere they could recall Miss Bellenden to sense and motion. Even then her language was wild and incoherent.

"Press me no farther," she said to Lord Evandale,— "it cannot be; Heaven and earth, the living and the dead, have leagued themselves against this ill-omened union. Take all I can give, — my sisterly regard, my devoted friendship. I will love you as a sister and serve you as a bondswoman, but never speak to me more of marriage."

The astonishment of Lord Evandale may easily be conceived.

"Emily," he said to his sister, "this is your doing. I was accursed when I thought of bringing you here; some of your confounded folly has driven her mad! "

"On my word, Brother," answered Lady Emily, "you're sofficient to drive all the women in Scotland mad. Because your mistress seems much disposed to jilt you, you quarrel with your sister, who has Leen arguing in your cause, and had brought her to a quiet hearing, when, all of a sudden, a man looked in at a window, whom her crazed sensibility mistook either for you or some one else, and has treated us gratis with an excellent tragic scene."

"What man? What window?" said Lord Evandale, in impatient displeasure. "Miss Bellenden is incapable of trifling with me; and yet what else could have —"

"Hush! hush!" said Jenny, whose interest lay particularly in shifting further inquiry; "for Heaven's sake, my lord, speak low, for my lady begins to recover."

Edith was no sooner somewhat restored to herself than she begged, in a feeble voice, to be left alone with Lord Evandale. All retreated,—Jenny with her usual air of officious simplicity, Lady Emily and the chaplain with that of awakened curiosity. No sooner had they left the apartment than Edith beckoned Lord Evandale to sit beside her on the couch; her next motion was to take his hand, in spite of his surprised resistance, to her lips; her last was to sink from her seat and to clasp his knees.

"Forgive me, my lord!" she exclaimed, "forgive me! I must deal most untruly by you, and break a solemn engagement. You have my friendship, my highest regard, my most sincere gratitude; you have more, — you have my word and my faith; but — oh, forgive me, for the fault is not mine — you have not my love, and I cannot marry you without a sini"

"You dream, my dearest Edith ! " said Evandale, perplexed in the utmost degree, "you let your imagination beguile you; this is but some delusion of an over-sensitive mind. The person whom you preferred to me has been long in a better world, where your unavailing regret cannot follow him, or, if it could, would only diminish his happiness."

"You are mistaken, Lord Evandale," said Edith, solemnly; "I am not a sleep-walker or a mad-woman. No, I could not have believed from any one what I have seen. But, having seen him, I must believe mine own eyes."

"Seen him, — seen whom?" asked Lord Evandale, in great anxiety.

"Henry Morton," replied Edith, uttering these two words as if they were her last, and very nearly fainting when she had done so.

"Miss Bellenden," said Lord Evandale, "you treat me like a fool or a child. If you repent your engagement to me," he continued, indignantly, "I am not a man to enforce it against your inclination; but deal with me as a man, and forbear this trifling."

He was about to go on, when he perceived, from her quivering eye and pallid cheek, that nothing less than imposture was intended, and that by whatever means her imagination had been so impressed, it was really disturbed by unaffected awe and terror. He changed his tone, and exerted all his eloquence in endeavouring to soothe and extract from her the secret cause of such terror.

"T saw him!" she repeated, — "I saw Henry Morton stand at that window, and look into the apartment at the moment I was on the point of abjuring him for ever. His face was darker, thinner, and paler than it was wont to be; his dress was a horseman's cloak, and hat looped down over his face; his expression was like that he wore on that dreadful morning when he was examined by Claverhouse at Tillietudlem. Ask your sister, ask Lady Emily, if she did not see him as well as I. I know what has called him up, — he came to upbraid me, that, while my heart was with him in the deep and dead sea, I was about to give my hand to another. My lord, it is ended between you and me; be the consequences what they will, she cannot marry whose union disturbs the repose of the dead."

"Good Heaven!" said Evandale, as he paced the room, half mad himself with surprise and vexation, "her fine understanding must be totally overthrown, and that by the effort which she has made to comply with my ill-timed, though well-mean' request. Without rest and attention her health is ruined for ever."

At this moment the door opened, and Halliday who had been Lord Evandale's principal personal attendant since they both left the Guards on the Revolution, stumbled into the room with a countenance as pale and ghastly as terror could paint it.

"What is the matter next, Halliday?" cried his master, starting up. "Any discovery of the—"

He had just recollection sufficient to stop short in the midst of the dangerous sentence.

"No, sir," said Halliday, "it is not that, nor anything like that; but I have seen a ghost!"

¹ Note XVII.—Supposed Apparition of Morton,

"A ghost, you eternal idiot !" said Lord Evandale, forced altogether out of his patience. "Has all mankind sworn to go mad in order to drive me so ? What ghost, you simpleton ?"

"The ghost of Henry Morton, the Whig captain at Lothwell Bridge," replied Halliday. "He passed by me like a fire-flaught when I was in the garden!"

"This is midsummer madness," said Lord Evandale, "or there is some strange villainy afloat — Jenny, attend your lady to her chamber, while I endeavour to find a clue to all this."

But Lord Evandale's inquiries were in vain. Jenny, who might have given (had she chosen) a very satisfactory explanation, had an interest to leave the matter in darkness ; and interest was a matter which now weighed principally with Jenny, since the possession of an active and affectionate husband in her own proper right had altogether allayed her spirit of coquetry. She had made the best use of the first moments of confusion hastily to remove all traces of any one having slept in the apartment adjoining to the parlour, and even to erase the mark of footsteps beneath the window, through which she conjectured Morton's face had been seen, while attempting, ere he left the garden, to gain one look at her whom he had so long loved, and was now on the point of losing for ever. That he had passed Halliday in the garden was equally clear ; and she learned from her elder boy, whom she had employed to have the stranger's horse saddled and ready for his departure, that he had rushed into the stable, thrown the child a broad gold piece, and, mounting his horse, had ridden with fearful rapidity down towards the Clyde. The secret was, therefore, in their own family, and Jenny was resolved it should remain so.
T

"For, to be sure," she said, "although her lady and Halliday kend Mr. Morton by broad daylight, that was nae reason I suld own to kenning him in the gloaming and by candlelight, and him keeping his face frae Cuddie and me a' the time."

So she stood resolutely upon the negative when examined by Lord Evandale. As for Halliday, he could only say that as he entered the garden-door, the supposed apparition met him, walking swiftly, and with a visage on which anger and grief appeared to be contending.

"He knew him well," he said, "having been repeatedly guard upon him, and obliged to write down his marks of stature and visage in case of escape. And there were few faces like Mr. Morton's." But what should make him haunt the country where he was neither hanged nor shot, he, the said Halliday, did not pretend to conceive.

Lady Emily confessed she had seen the face of a man at the window, but her evidence went no farther. John Gudyill deponed nil novit in causa. He had left his gardening to get his morning dram just at the time when the apparition had taken place. Lady Emily's servant was waiting orders in the kitchen, and there was not another being within a quarter of a mile of the house.

Lord Evandale returned perplexed and dissatisfied in the highest degree at beholding a plan which he thought necessary not less for the protection of Edith in contingent circumstances, than for the assurance of his own happiness, and which he had brought so very near perfection, thus broken off without any apparent or rational cause. His knowledge of Edith's character set her beyond the suspicion of covering any capricious change of determination by a pretended vision. But he would have set the apparition down to the influence of an overstrained imagination, agitated by the circumstances in which she had so suddenly been placed, had it not been for the coinciding testimony of Halliday, who had no reason for thinking of Morton more than any other person, and knew nothing of Miss Bellenden's vision when he promulgated his own. On the other hand, it seemed in the highest degree improbable that Morton, so long and so vainly sought after, and who was, with such good reason, supposed to be lost when the "Vryheid" of Rotterdam went down with crew and passengers, should be alive and lurking in this country, where there was no longer any reason why he should not openly show himself, since the present Government favoured his party in politics. When Lord Evandale reluctantly brought himself to communicate these doubts to the chaplain, in order to obtain his opinion, he could only obtain a long lecture on demonology, in which, after quoting Delrio and Burthoog and De L' An ere (19) on the subject of apparitions, together with sundry civilians and common lawyers on the nature of testimony, the learned gentleman expressed his definite and determined opinion to be, either that there had been an actual apparition of the deceased Henry Morton's spirit, the possibility of which he was, as a divine and a philosopher, neither fully prepared to admit or to deny; or else that the said Henry Morton, being still in rerum natura, had appeared in his proper person that morning; or, finally, that some strong deceptio visus, or striking similitude of person, had deceived the eyes of Miss Belleiiden aiid of Thomas Halliday. Which of these was the most probable hypothesis, the doctor declined to pronounce, but expressed himself ready to die in the opinion that one or other of them had occasioned that morning's disturbance.

Lord Evandale soon had additional cause for distressful anxiety. Miss Bellenden was declared to be dangerously ill.

"I will not leave this place," he exclaimed, "till she is pronounced to be in safety, I neither can nor ought to do so; for whatever may have been th'e immediate occasion of her illness, I gave the first cause for it by my unhappy solicitation."

He established himself, therefore, as a guest in the family, which the presence of his sister, as well as of Lady Margaret Eellenden (who, in despite of her rheumatism, caused herself to be transported thither when she heard of her granddaughter's illness), rendered a step equally natural and delicate. And thus he anxiously awaited until, without injury to her health, Edith could sustain a final explanation ere his departure on his expedition.

"She shall never," said the generous young man, "look on her engagement with me as the means of fettering her to a union the idea of which seems almost to unhinge her understanding,"

CHAPTER XXXIX.

Ah, happy hills ' ah, pleasing shades¹
Ah, fields hriovBil in vain !
Where onre my careless childhood strayed,
A stranger yet to paiu.

Ode an a Distant Piospect of Eton College.

IT is not by corporal wants and infirmities orily that men of the most distinguished talents are levelled, during their lifetime, with the common mass of mankind. There are periods of mental agitation when the firmest of mortals must be ranked with the weakest of his brethren, and when, in paying the general tax of humanity, his distresses are even aggravated by feeling that he transgresses, in the indulgence of his grief, the rules of religion and philosophy by which he endeavours in general to regulate his passions and his actions. It was during such a paroxysm that the unfortunate Morton left Fairy Knowe. To know that his long-loved and still-beloved Edith, whose image had filled his mind for so many years, was on the point of marriage to his early rival, who had laid claim to her heart by so many services as hardly left her a title to refuse his addresses, bitter as the intelligence was, yet came not as an unexpected blow.

During his residence abroad he had once written to Edith. It was to bid her farewell for ever, and to conjure her to forget him. He had requested her not to answer his letter; yet he half hoped, for many a day, that she might transgress his injunction. The letter never reached her to whom it was addressed, and Morton, ignorant of its miscarriage, could only conclude himself laid aside and forgotten, according to his own self-denying request. All that he had heard of their mutual relations since his return to Scotland prepared him to expect that he could only look upon Miss Bellenden as the betrothed bride of Lord Evandale; and even if freed from the burden of obligation to the latter, it would still have been inconsistent with Morton's generosity of disposition to disturb their arrangements, by attempting the assertion of a claim proscribed by absence, never sanctioned by the consent of friends, and barred by a thousand circumstances of difficulty. Why then did he seek the cottage which their broken fortunes had now rendered the retreat of Lady Margaret Bellenden and her granddaughter? He yielded, we are under the necessity of acknowledging, to the impulse of an inconsistent wish which many might have felt in his situation.

Accident apprised him, while travelling toward his native district, that the ladies near whose mansion he must necessarily pass, were absent; and learning that Cuddie and his wife acted as their principal domestics, he could not resist pausing at their cottage to learn, if possible, the real progress which Lord Evandale had made in the affections of Miss Bellenden — alas ! no longer his Edith. This rash experiment ended as we have related, and he parted from the house of Fairy Knowe, conscious that he was still beloved by Edith, yet compelled, by faith and honour, to relinquish her for ever. With what feelings he must have listened to the dialogue between Lord Evandale and Edith, the greater part of which he involuntarily overheard, the reader must conceive, for we dare not attempt to describe them. An hundred times he was tempted to burst upon their interview, or to exclaim aloud, "Edith, I yet live!" and as often the recollection of her plighted troth, and of the debt of gratitude which he owed Lord Evandale (to whose influence with Claverhouse he justly ascribed his escape from torture and from death), withheld him from a rashness which might indeed have involved all in further distress, but gave little prospect of forwarding his own happiness. He repressed forcibly these selfish emotions, though with an agony which thrilled his every nerve.

"No, Edith!" was his internal oath, "never will I add a thorn to thy pillow. That which Heaven has ordained, let it be; and let me not add, by my selfish sorrows, one atom's weight to the burden thou hast to bear. I was dead to thee when thy resolution was adopted; and never, never shalt thou know that Henry Morton still lives!"

As he formed this resolution, diffident of his own power to keep it, and seeking that firmness in flight which was every moment shaken by his continuing within hearing of Edith's voice, he hastily rushed from his apartment by the little closet and the sashed door which led to the garden.

But firmly as he thought his resolution was fixed, he could not leave the spot where the last tones of a voice so beloved still vibrated on his ear, without endeavouring to avail himself of the opportunity which the parlour window afforded to steal one last glance at the lovely speaker. It was in this attempt, made while Edith seemed to have her eyes unalterably bent upon the ground, that Morton's presence was detected by her raising them suddenly. So soon as her wild scream made this known to the unfortunate object of a passion BO constant, and which seemed so ill-fated, he hurried from the place as if pursued by the furies. He passed Halliday in the garden without recognising or even being sensible that he had seen him, threw himself on his horse, and by a sort of instinct rather than recollection, took the first by-road in preference to the public route to Hamilton.

In all probability this prevented Lord Evandale from learning that he was actually in existence ; for the news that the Highlanders had obtained a decisive victory at Killiecrankie had occasioned an accurate look-out to be kept, by order of the Government, on all the passes, for fear of some commotion among the Lowland Jacobites. They did not omit to post sentinels on Bothwell Bridge; and as these men had not seen any traveller pass westward in that direction, and as, besides, their comrades stationed in the village of Bothwell were equally positive that none had gone eastward, the apparition, in the existence of which Edith and Halliday were equally positive, became yet more mysterious in the judgment of Lord Evandale, who was finally inclined to settle in the belief that the heated and disturbed imagination of Edith had summoned up the phantom she stated herself to have seen, and that Halliday had, in some unaccountable manner, been infected by the same superstition.

Meanwhile, the by-path which Morton pursued, with all the speed which his vigorous horse could exert, brought him in a very few seconds to the brink of the Clyde, at a spot marked with the feet of horses, who were conducted to it as a watering-place. The steed, urged as he was to the gallop, did not pause a single instant, but, throwing himself into the river, was soon beyond his depth. The plunge which the animal made as his feet quitted the ground, with the feeling that the cold water rose above his sword-belt, were the first incidents which recalled Morton, whose movements had been hitherto mechanical, to the necessity of taking measures for preserving himself and the noble animal which he bestrode. A perfect master of all manly exercises, the management of a horse in water was as familiar to him as when upon a meadow. He directed the animal's course somewhat down the stream towards a low plain, or holm, which seemed to promise an easy egress from the river. In the first and second attempt to get on shore, the horse was frustrated by the nature of the ground, and nearly fell backwards on his rider. The instinct of self-preservation seldom fails, even in the most desperate circumstances, to recall the human mind to some degree of equipoise, unless when altogether distracted by terror, and Morton was obliged to the danger in which he was placed for complete recovery of his self-possession. A third attempt, at a spot more carefully and judiciously selected, succeeded better than the former, and placed the horse and his rider in safety upon the farther and left-hand bank of the Clyde.

" But whither," said Morton, in the bitterness of his heart, " am I now to direct my course ? or rather, what does it signify to which point of the compass a wretch so forlorn betakes himself ? I would to God, could the wish be without a sin, that these dark waters had flowed over me, and drowned my recollection of that which was, and that which is !"

The sense of impatience, which the disturbed state of his feelings had occasioned, scarcely had vented itself in these violent expressions, ere he was struck with shame at having given way to such a paroxysm. He remembered how signally the life which he now held so lightly in the bitterness of his disappointment had been preserved through the almost incessant perils which had beset him since he entered upon his public career.

"I am a fool!" he said, "and worse than a fool, to set light by that existence which Heaven has so often preserved in the most marvellous manner. Something there yet remains for me in this world, were it only to bear my sorrows like a man, and to aid those who need my assistance. What have I seen, what have I heard, but the very conclusion of that which I knew was to happen? They" — he durst not utter their names even in soliloquy — "they are embarrassed and in difficulties. She is stripped of her inheritance, and he seems rushing on some dangerous career, with which, but for the low voice in which he spoke, I might have become acquainted. Are there no means to aid or to warn them?"

As he pondered upon this topic, forcibly withdrawing his mind from his own disappointment, and compelling his attention to the affairs of Edith and her betrothed husband, the letter of Burley, long forgotten, suddenly flashed on his memory, like a ray of light darting through a mist.

"Their ruin must have been his work," was his internal conclusion. "If it can be repaired, it must be through his means, or by information obtained from him. I will search him out. Stern, crafty, and enthusiastic as he is, my plain and downright rectitude of purpose has more than once prevailed with him. I will seek him out, at least; and who knows what influence the information I may acquire from him may have on the fortunes of those whom I shall never see more, and who will probably never learn that I am now suppressing my own grief, to add, if possible, to their happiness."

Animated by these hopes, though the foundation was but slight, he sought the nearest way to the high-road; and as all the tracks through the valley were known to him since he hunted through them in youth, he had no other difficulty than that of surmounting one or two enclosures, ere he found himself on the road to the small burgh where the feast of the popinjay had been celebrated. He journeyed in a state of mind sad indeed and dejected, yet relieved from its earlier and more intolerable state of anguish; for virtuous resolution and manly disinterestedness seldom fail to restore tranquillity even where they cannot create happiness. He turned his thoughts with strong effort upon the means of discovering Burley, and the chance there was of extracting from him any knowledge which he might possess favourable to her in whose cause he interested himself; and at length formed the resolution of guiding himself by the circumstances in which he might discover the object of his quest, trusting that, from Cuddie's account of a schism betwixt Burley and his brethren of the Presbyterian persuasion, he might find him less rancorously disposed against Miss Bellenden, and inclined to exert the power which he asserted himself to possess over her fortunes, more favourably than heretofore.

Noontide had passed away when our traveller found himself in the neighbourhood of his deceased uncle's habitation of Milnwood. It rose among glades and groves that were chequered with a thousand early recollections of joy and sorrow, and made upon Morton that mournful impression, soft and affecting, yet, withal, soothing, which the sensitive mind usually receives from a return to the haunts of childhood and early youth, after having experienced the vicissitudes and tempests of public life. A strong desire came upon him to visit the house itself.

"Old Alison," he thought, "will not know me, more than the honest couple whom I saw yesterday. I may indulge in my curiosity, and proceed on my journey, without her having any knowledge of my existence. I think they said my uncle had bequeathed to her my family mansion, — well, be it so. I have enough to sorrow for, to enable me to dispense with lamenting such a disappointment as that; and yet methinks he has chosen an odd successor in my grumbling old dame, to a line of respectable, if not distinguished, ancestry. Let it be as it may, I will visit the old mansion at least once more."

The house of Milnwood, even in its best days, had nothing cheerful about it; but its gloom appeared to be doubled under the auspices of the old house-keeper. Everything, indeed, was in repair; there were no slates deficient upon the steep grey roof, and no panes broken in the narrow windows. But the grass in the court-yard looked as if the foot of man had not been there for years; the doors were carefully locked, and that which admitted to the hall seemed to have been shut for a length of time, since the spiders had fairly drawn their webs over the door-way and the staples. Living sight or sound there was none, until, after much knocking, Morton heard the little window, through which it was usual to reconnoitre visitors, open with much caution. The face of Alison, puckered with some score of wrinkles in addition to those with which it was furrowed when Morton left Scotland, now presented itself, enveloped in a toy, from under the protection of which some of her grey tresses had escaped in a manner more picturesque than beautiful, while her shrill, tremulous voice demanded the cause of the knocking.

"I wish to speak an instant with one Alison Wilson, who resides here," said Henry.

"She's no at name the day," answered Mrs. Wilson, in propwa persona, the state of whose head-dress, perhaps, inspired her with this direct mode of denying herself; "and ye are but a mislear'd person to speer for her in sic a manner. Ye might hae had an M under your belt for Mistress Wilson of Milnwood."

"I beg pardon," said Morton, internally smiling at finding in old Ailie the same jealousy of disrespect which she used to exhibit upon former occasions, — "I beg pardon; I am but a stranger in this country, and have been so long abroad that I have almost forgotten my own language."

"Did ye come frae foreign parts?" said Ailie; "then maybe ye may hae heard of a young gentleman of this country that they ca' Henry Morton?"

"I have heard," said Morton, "of such a name in Germany."

"Then bide a wee bit where ye are, friend; or stay, — gang round by the back o' the house, and ye'll find a laigh door; it's on the latch, for it's never barred till sunset. Ye'll open 't, — and tak care ye dinna fa' ower the tub, for the entry's dark, — and then ye'll turn to the right, and then ye'll haud straught forward, and then ye'll turn to the right again, and ye'll tak heed o' the cellar-stairs, and then ye'll be at the door o' the little kitchen,—it's a' the kitchen that's at Milnwood now, — and I'll come down t'ye, and whate'er yo wad say to Mistress Wilson ye may very safety tell it to me."

A stranger might have had some difficulty, notwithstanding the minuteness of the directions supplied by Aihe, to pilot himself in safety through the dark Labyrinth of passages that led from the back-door to the little kitchen ; but Henry was too well acquainted with the navigation of these straits to experience danger, either from the Scylla which lurked on one side in shape of a bucking tub, or the Charybdis which yawned on the other in the profundity of a winding cellar-stair. His only impediment arose from the snarling and vehement barking of a small cocking spaniel, once his own property, but which, unlike to the faithful Argus, saw his master return from his wanderings without any symptom of recognition.

"The little dogs and all!" said Morton to himself, on being disowned by his former favourite. "I am so changed that no breathing creature that I have known and loved will now acknowledge me!"

At this moment he had reached the kitchen; and soon after, the tread of Alison's high heels, and the pat of the crutch-handled cane which served at once to prop and to guide her footsteps, were heard upon the stairs, — an annunciation which continued for some time ere she fairly reached the kitchen.

Morton had, therefore, time to survey the slender preparations for housekeeping which were now sofficient in the house of his ancestors, The fire, though coals are plenty in that neighbourhood, was husbanded with the closest attention to economy of fuel, and the small pipkin, in which was preparing the dinner of the old woman and her maid-of-all-work, a girl of twelve years old, intimated, by its thin and watery vapour, that Ailie had not mended her cheer with her improved fortune.

When she entered, the head, which nodded with self-importance ; the features, in which an irritable peevishness, acquired by habit and indulgence, strove with a temper naturally affectionate and good-natured ; the coif; the apron; the blue-checked gown,—were all those of old Ailie: but laced pinnars, hastily put on to meet the stranger, with some other trifling articles of decoration, marked the difference between Mrs. Wilson, life-rentrix of Milnwood, and the housekeeper of the late proprietor.

"What were ye pleased to want wi' Mrs. Wilson, sir? I am Mrs. Wilson," was her first address ; for the five minutes time which she had gained for the business of the toilet entitled her, she conceived, to assume the full merit of her illustrious name, and shine forth on her guest in unchastened splendour. Morton's sensations, confounded between the past and present, fairly confused him so much that he would have had difficulty in answering her, even if he had known well what to say. But as he had not determined what character he was to adopt while concealing that which was properly his own, he had an additional reason for remaining silent. Mrs. Wilson, in perplexity, and with some apprehension, repeated her question.

"What were ye pleased to want wi' me, sir? Ye said ye kend Mr. Harry Morton?"

"Pardon me, madam," answered Henry, "it was of one Silas Morton I spoke."

The old woman's countenance fell.

"It was his father, then, ye kent", the brother o' the late Milnwood? Ye canna mind him abroad, I wad think,—he was come name afore ye were horn. I thought ye had brought ine news of poor Maister Harry."

"It was from my father I learned to know Colonel Morton," said Henry; "of the son I know little or nothing,—rumour says he died abroad on his passage to Holland."

"That 's ower like to be true," said the old woman with a sigh, "and mony a tear it's cost my auld eei. His uncle, poor gentleman, just sough'd awa wi' it in his mouth. He had been gieing me preceenze directions anent the bread and the wine and the brandy at his burial, and how often it was to be handed round the company (for dead or alive, he was a prudent, frugal, painstaking man), and then he said, said he, 'Ailie' (he aye ca'd me Ailie; we were auld acquaintance), 'Ailie, take ye care and hand the gear weel thegither; for the name of Morton of Milnwood 's gane out like the last sough of an auld sang.' And sae he fell out " ae dwani into another, and ne'er spak a word mair, unless it were something we cou'dna mak out, about a dipped candle being gude eneugh to see to dee wi'. He cou'd ne'er bide to see a moulded ane, and there was ane, by ill luck, on the table."

While Mrs. Wilson was thus detailing the last moments of the old miser, Morton was pressingly engaged in diverting the assiduous curiosity of the dog, which, recovered from his first surprise, and combining former recollections, had, after much snoffing and examination, begun a course of capering and jumping upon the stranger which threatened every instant to betray him. At length, in the urgency of his impatience, Morton could not forbear exclaiming, in a tone of hasty impatience, "Down, Elphin ! down, sir!"

"Ye ken our dog's name," said the old lady, struck with great and sudden surprise, — "ye ken our dog's name, and it's 'O a common ane. And the creature kens you too," she continued, in a more agitated and shriller tone, — "God guide us! it's my ain bairn !"

So saying, the poor old woman threw herself around Morton's neck, clung to him, kissed him as if he had been actually her child, and wept for joy. There was no parrying the discovery, if he could have had the heart to attempt any further disguise. He returned the embrace with the most grateful warmth, and answered, —

"I do indeed live, dear Ailie, to thank you for all your kindness, past and present, and to rejoice that there is at least one friend to welcome me to my native country."

"Friends!" exclaimed Ailie, "ye"1 hae mony friends, — ye"1 hae mony friends ; for ye will hae gear, hmny, — ye will hae gear. Heaven mak ye a gude guide o't! But eh, sirs!" she continued, pushing him back from her with her trembling hand and shrivelled arm, and gazing in his face as if to read, at more convenient distance, the ravages which sorrow rather than time had made on his face, — "Eh, sirs ! ye 're sair altered, hinny; your face is turned pale, and your een are sunken, and your bonny red-and-white cheeks are turned a' dark and sun-burnt, Oh, weary on the wars! mony's the comely face they destroy. — And when cam ye here, hinny ? And where hae ye been ? And what hae ye been doing ? And what for did ye na write to us ? And how cam ye to pass yoursell for dead ? And what for did ye come creepin¹ to your ain house as if ye had been an unco body to gie poor auld Ailie sic a start ? " she concluded, smiling through her tears.

It was some time ere Morton could overcome his own emotion so as to give the kind old woman the information which we shall communicate to our readers in the next chapter.

CHAPTER XL.

Aumerle that was,
But that is gone for being Kit-hard's friend;
And, mailani, you must call him Rutland now.

Richard II.

THE scene of explanation was hastily removed from the little kitchen to Mrs. Wilson's own matted room, — the very same which she had occupied as house-keeper, and which she continued to retain. "It was," she said, "better secured against sifting winds than the hall, which she had found dangerous to her rheumatisms, and it was more fitting for her use than the late Milnwood's apartment, honest man, which gave her sad thoughts;" and as for the great oak parlour, it was never opened but to be aired, washed, and dusted, according to the invariable practice of the family, unless upon their most solemn festivals. In the matted room, therefore, they were settled, surrounded by pickle-pots and conserves of all kinds, which the ci-devant house-keeper continued to compound, out of mere habit, although neither she herself, nor any one else, ever partook of the comfits which she so regularly prepared.

Morton, adapting his narrative to the comprehension of his auditor, informed her briefly of the wreck of the vessel and the loss of all hands, excepting two or three common seamen who had early secured the skiff, and were just putting off from the vessel when he leaped from the deck into their boat, and unexpectedly, as well as contrary to their inclination, made himself partner of their voyage and of their safety. Landed at Flushing, he was fortunate enough to meet with an old officer who had been in service with his father. By his advice, he shunned going immediately to the Hague, but forwarded his letters to the court of the Stadtholder.

"Our prince," said the veteran, "must as yet keep terms with his father-in-law and with your King Charles; and to approach him in the character of a Scottish malticonteut would render it imprudent for him to distinguish you by his favour. Wait, therefore, his orders, without forcing yourself on his notice; observe the strictest prudence and retirement; assume for the present a different name; shun the company of the British exiles; and, depend upon it, you will not repent your prudence,"

The old friend of Silas Morton argued justly. After a considerable time had elapsed, the Prince of Orange, in a progress through the United States, came to the town where Morton, impatient at his situation and the incognito which he was obliged to observe, still continued, nevertheless, to be a resident. He had an hour of private interview assigned, in which the prince expressed himself highly pleased with his intelligence, his prudence, and the liberal view which he seemed to take of the factions of his native country, their motives and their purposes.

"I would gladly," said William, "attach you to my own person; but that cannot be without giving offence in England. But I will do as much for you, as well out of respect for the sentiments you have expressed, as for the recommendations you have brought me. Here is a commission in a Swiss regiment at present in garrison in a distant province, where you will meet few or none of your countrymen. Continue to be Captain Melville, and let the name of Morton sleep till hotter days."

⁴¹ Thus began my fortune," continued Morton; "and my services have, on various occasions, been distinguished by his Eoyal Highness, until the moment that brought him to Britain as our political deliverer. His commands must excuse my silence to my few friends in Scotland; and I wonder not at the report of my death, considering the wreck of the vessel, and that I found no occasion to use the letters of exchange with which I was furnished by the liberality of some of them, — a circumstance which must have confirmed the belief that I had perished."

"But, dear hinny," asked Mrs. Wilson, "did ye find nae Scotch body at the Prince of Granger's court that kend ye? I wad hae thought Morton o^f Milnwood was keud a^f through the country."

"I was purposely engaged in distant service," said Morton, "until a period when few, without as deep and kind a motive of interest as yours, Ailie, would have known the stripling Morton in Major-General Melville."

"Malville was your mother's name," said Mrs. Wilson; "but Morton sounds far bonnier in my auld lugs. And when ye tak up the lairdship, ye maun tak the auld name and designation again."

"I am like to be in no haste to do either the one or the other, Ailie, for I have some reasons for the present to conceal my being alive from every one but you; and as for the lairdship of Milnwood, it is in as good hands."

" As gude hands, hinny !" re-echoed Ailie ; " I 'm hopefu' ye are no meaning mine ? The rents and the lands are but a sair fash to me. And I'm ower failed to tak a helpmate, though Wylie Mactrickit the writer was very pressing, and spak very civilly; but I 'm ower auld a cat to draw that strae before me. He canna whilliwhaw me as he's dune mony a ane. And then I thought aye ye wad come back, and I wad get my pickle meal and my soup milk, and keep a' things right about ye as I used to do in your puir uncle's time, and it wad be just pleasure eneugh for me to see ye thrive and guide the gear canny. Ye¹ hae learned that in Holland, I'se warrant, for they're thrifty folk there, as I hear tell. — But ye " be for keeping rather a mair house than puir auld Milnwood that's gane; and, indeed, I would approve o' your eating butcher-meat maybe as often as three times a-week, — it keeps the wind out " the stamack."

" We will talk of all this another time," said Morton, surprised at the generosity upon a large scale which mingled in Ailie's thoughts and actions with habitual and sordid parsimony, and at the odd contrast between her love of saving and indifference to self-acquisition. " You must know," he continued, " that I am in this country only for a few days on some special business of importance to the Government, and therefore, Ailie, not a word of having seen me. At some other time I will acquaint you fully with my motives and intentions"

" E'en be it sae, my jo," replied Ailie, " I can keep a secret like my neighbours; and weel auld Milnwood kend it, honest man, for he tauld me where he keepit his gear, and that's what maist folk like to hae as private as possibly may be. —

But come awa wi' me, hinny, till I show ye the oak-parlour how grandly it's keepit, just as if ye had been expected hanie every day, — I loot nae-body sort it but my am hands. It was a kind o' divertisement to me, though whiles the tear wan into my ee, and I said to mysell, What needs I fash wi' grates and carpets and cushions arid the muckle brass candlesticks ony mair ? for they " ne'er come hame that aught it rightfully."

With these words she hauled him away to this sanctum sanctorum, the scrubbing and cleaning whereof was her daily employment, as its high state of good order constituted the very pride of her heart. Morton, as he followed her into the room, underwent a rebuke for not " dighting his shune," which showed that Ailie had not relinquished her habits of authority. On entering the oak-parlour he could not but recollect the feelings of solemn awe with which, when a boy, he had been affected at his occasional and rare admission to an apartment which he then supposed had not its equal save in the halls of princes. It may be readily supposed that the worked-worsted chairs, with their short ebony legs and long upright backs, had lost much of their influence over his rnind ; that the large brass andirons seemed diminished in splendour ; that the green worsted tapestry appeared no masterpiece of the Arras loom ; and that the room looked, on the whole, dark, gloomy, and disconsolate. Yet there were two objects, " The counterfeit presentment of two brothers," which, dissimilar as those described by Hamlet, affected his mind with a variety of sensations. One full-length portrait represented his father in complete armour, with a countenance indicating his masculine and determined character ; and the other set forth his uncle, in velvet and brocade, looking as if he were ashamed of his own finery, though entirely indebted for it to the liberality of the painter.

"It was an idle fancy," Ailie said, "to dress the honest auld man in thae expensive fal-lalls that he ne'er wore "I his life, instead o' his douce Kaploch grey, and his band " the narrow edging"

In private, Morton could not help being much of her opinion; for anything approaching to the dress of a gentleman sate as ill on the ungainly person of his relative as an open or generous expression would have done on his mean and money-making features. He now extricated himself from Ailie to visit some of his haunts in the neighbouring wood, while her own hands made an addition to the dinner she was preparing, — an incident "O otherwise remarkable than as it cost the life of a fowl, which, for any event of less importance than the arrival of Henry Morton, might have cackled on to a good old age ere Ailie could have been guilty of the extravagance of killing and dressing it. The meal was seasoned by talk of old times and by the plans which Ailie laid out for futurity, in which she assigned her young master all the prudential habits of her old one, and planned out the dexterity with which she was to exercise her duty as governante, Morton let the old woman enjoy her day-dreams and castle-building during moments of such pleasure, and deferred till some fitter occasion the communication of his purpose again to return and spend his life upon the Continent.

His next care was to lay aside his military dress, which he considered likely to render more difficult his researches after Burley. He exchanged it for a grey doublet and cloak, formerly his usual attire at Milnwood, and which Mrs. Wilson produced from a chest of walnut-tree, wherein she had laid them aside, without forgetting carefully to hrush and air them from time to time. Morton retained his sword and fire-arms, without which few persons travelled in those unsettled tunes. When he appeared in his new attire, Mrs. Wilson was first thankful "that they fitted him sae decently, since, though he was nae fatter, yet he looked inair manly than when he was taen frae Milnwood."

Next she enlarged on the advantage of saving old clothes to be what she called "beet-masters to the new," and was far advanced in the history of a velvet cloak belonging to the late Milnwood, which had first been converted to a velvet doublet, and then into a pair of breeches, and appeared each time as good as new, when Morton interrupted her account of its transmigration to bid her good-by.

He gave, indeed, a sofficient shock to her feelings, by expressing the necessity he was under of proceeding on his journey that evening.

"And where are ye gaun? And what wad ye do that for? And whar wad ye sleep but in your ain house, after ye hae been sae mony years frae hame?"

"I feel all the imkindness of it, Ailie, but it must be so; and that was the reason that I attempted to conceal myself from you, as I suspected you would not let me part from you so easily."

"But whar are ye gaun, then 1" said Ailie, once more. "Saw e'er mortal een the like o' you, just to come ae moment, and flee awa like an arrow out of a bow the neist?"

"I must go down," replied Morton, "to Niel Blane the Piper's Howff; he can give me a bed, I suppose?"

"A bed? I'se warrant can he," replied Ailie, "and gar ye pay weel for't into the bargain. Laddie, I daresay ye hae lost your wits in thae foreign parts, to gang and gie siller for a supper and a bed, and might hae baith for naething, and thanks t' ye for accepting them."

"I assure you, Ailie," said Morton, desirous to silence her remonstrances, "that this is a business of great importance, in which I may be a great gainer, and cannot possibly be a loser."

"I dinna see how that can be, if ye begin by gieing maybe the feck o' twal shillings Scots for your supper; but young folks are aye venturesome, and think to get siller that way. My puir auld master took a surer gate, and never parted " it when he had anes gotten 't"

Persevering in his desperate resolution, Morton took leave of Ailie, and mounted his horse to proceed to the little town, after exacting a solemn promise that she would conceal his return until she again saw or heard from him.

"I am not very extravagant," was his natural reflection, as he trotted slowly towards the town; "but were Ailie and I to set up house together, as she proposes, I think my profusion would break the good old creature's heart before a week were out."

CHAPTER XL1.

Where's the jolly host
You told me of ' 'Thas been my custom ever
To parley with mine host.

Lover's Progress.

MORTON reached the borough town without meeting with any remarkable adventure, and alighted at the little inn. It had occurred to him more than once, while upon his journey, that his resumption of the dress which he had worn while a youth, although favourable to his views in other respects, might render it more difficult for him to remain incognito. But a few years of campaigns and wandering had so changed his appearance that he had great confidence that in the grown man, whose brows exhibited the traces of resolution and considerate thought, none would recognise the raw and bashful stripling who won the game of the popinjay. The only chance was that here and there some Whig, whom he had led to battle, might remember the Captain of the Milnwood Marksmen; but the risk, if there was any, could not be guarded against.

The Howff seemed full and frequented as if possessed of all its old celebrity. The person and demeanour of Niel Blane, more fat and less civil than of yore, intimated that he had increased as well in purse as in corpulence ; for in Scotland a landlord's complaisance for his guests decreases in exact proportion to his rise in the world. His daughter had acquired the air of a dexterous barmaid, undisturbed by the circumstances of love and war, so apt to perplex her in the exercise of her vocation. Both showed Morton the degree of attention which could have been expected by a stranger travelling without attendants, at a time when they were particularly the badges of distinction. He took upon himself exactly the character his appearance presented, went to the stable and saw his horse accommodated, then returned to the house, and seating himself in the public room (for to request one to himself would, in those days, have been thought an overweening degree of conceit), he found himself in the very apartment in which he had some years before celebrated his victory at the game of the popinjay, — a jocular preferment which led to so many serious consequences.

He felt himself, as may well be supposed, a much changed man since that festivity; and yet, to look around him, the groups assembled in the Howff seemed not dissimilar to those which the same scene had formerly presented. Two or three burghers husbanded their "dribbles" brandy; "two or three dragoons lounged over their muddy ale, and cursed the inactive times that allowed them no better cheer. Their cornet did not, indeed, play at backgammon with the curate in his cassock, but he drank a little modicum of aqua mirabilis with the grey-cloaked Presbyterian minister. The scene was another, and yet the same, differing only in persons, but corresponding in general character.

Let the tide of the world wax or wane as it will, Morton thought as he looked around him, enough will be found to fill the places which chance renders vacant; and in the usual occupations and amusements of life, human beings will succeed each other as leaves upon the same tree, with the same individual difference and the same general resemblance.

After pausing a few minutes, Morton, whose experience had taught him the readiest mode of securing attention, ordered a pint of claret; and as the smiling landlord appeared with the pewter measure foaming fresh from the tap (fur bottling wine was not then in fashion), he asked him to sit down and take a share of the good cheer. This invitation was peculiarly acceptable to Kiel Blaiie, who, if he did not positively expect it from every guest not provided with better company, yet received it from many, and was not a whit abashed or surprised at the summons. He sat down, along with his guest, in a secluded nook near the chimney; and while he received encouragement to drink by far the greater share of the liquor before them, he entered at length, as a part of his expected functions, upon the news of the country,—the births, deaths, and marriages; the change of property; the downfall of old families, and the rise of new. But politics, now the fertile source of eloquence, mine host did not care to mingle in his theme; and it was only in answer to a question of Morton that he replied, with an air of indifference, "Um! ay! we aye hue sodgers amang us, mair or less. There's a wheen German horse down at Glasgow yonder; they ca' their commander Wittybody, or some sic name, though he's as grave and grewsome an auld Dutchman as e'er I saw."

"Wittenbold, perhaps?" said Morton, — "an old man, with grey hair and short black moustaches; speaks seldom?"

"And smokes for ever," replied Niel Blane, "I see your honour kens the man. He maybe a very gude man too, for aught I see,—that is, considering he is a sodger and a Dutchman; but if he were ten generals, and as mony Wittybodies, he has nae skill in the pipes; he gar'd me stop in the middle of Torphichen's Kant,—the best piece o' music that ever bag gae wind to."

"But these fellows," said Morton, glancing his eye towards the soldiers that were in the apartment, "are not of his corps?"

"Na, na, these are Scotch dragoons," said mine host,— "our ain auld caterpillars, these were Claver's lads a while syne, and wad be again, maybe, if he had the lang ten in his hand."

"Is there not a report of his death?" inquired Morton.

"Troth is there," said the landlord; "your honour is right,—there is sic a fleeing rumour; but, in my puir opinion, it's lang or the deil die. I wad hae the folks here look to themsells. If he makes an outbreak, he'll be doun frae the Hielands or I could drink this glass,—and whare are they then?" "thae hell-rakers" dragoons wad be at his whistle in a moment. Nae doubt they're Willie's men e'en now, as they were James's a while syne; and reason good,—they fight for their pay; what else hae they to fight for? They hae neither lands nor houses, I trow. There's ae gude thing o' the change, or the Revolution, as they ca' it,—folks may speak out afore thae birkies now, and nae fear o' being hauled awa to the guard-house, or having the thumikins screwed on your finger-ends, just as I wad drive the screw through a cork."

There was a little pause, when Morton, feeling confident in the progress he had made in mine host's familiarity, asked, though with the hesitation proper to one who puts a question on the answer to which rests something of importance, "Whether Blaiie knew a woman in that neighbourhood called Elizabeth Maclure ?"

"Whether I ken Bessie Maclure ?" answered the landlord, with a landlord's laugh,— "How can I but ken my ain wife's (haly be her rest!), — my ain wife's first gudeman's sister, Bessie Maclure ? An honest wife she is, but sair she's been trysted " misfortunes, — the loss o' twa decent lads o' sons, in the time o' the persecution, as they c" it nowadays ; and doucely and decently she has borne her burden, blaming nane and condemning nane. If there's an honest woman in the world, it's Bessie Maclure. And to lose her twa sons, as I was saying, and to hae dragoons clinked down on her for a month bypast, — for, be Whig or Tory uppermost, they aye quarter thae loons on victuallers, — to lose, as I was saying — "

"This woman keeps an inn, then ?" interrupted Morton.

"A public, in a puir way," replied Blane, looking round at his own superior accommodations, — "a sour browst o' sm" ale that she sells to folk that are ower drouthy wi' travel to be nice; but naething to c" a stirring trade or a thriving change-house."

"Can you get me a guide there ?" said Morton.

"Your honour will rest here a' the night ? Ye'I hardly get accommodation at Bessie's," said Niel, whose regard for his deceased wife's relative by no means extended to sending company from his own house to hers.

"There is a friend," answered Morton, "wbom I am to meet with there, and I only called here to take a stirrup-cup arid inquire the way."

"Your honour had better," answered the landlord, with the perseverance of his calling, "send some ane to warn your Mend to come on here."

"I tell you, landlord," answered Morton, impatiently, "that will not serve my purpose; I must go straight to this woman Maclure's house, and I desire you to find me a guide."

"Aweel, sir, ye"I choose for yoursell, to he sure," said Niel Blane, somewhat disconcerted; "but deil a guide ye"I need if ye gae doun the water for twa mile or sae, as gin ye were bound for Milnwood-house, and then tak the first broken disjasked-looking road that makes for the hills, — ye"I ken't by a broken ash-tree that stands at the side o' a burn just where the roads meet; and then travel out the path, — ye canna miss Widow Maulure's public, for deil another house or hauld is on the road for ten lang Scots miles, and that's worth twenty English. I am sorry your honour would think o' gaun out " my house the night. But my wife's gude-sister is a decent woman, and it's no lost that a friend gets."

Morton accordingly paid his reckoning and departed. The sunset of the summer day placed him at the ash-tree, where the path led up towards the moors.

"Here," he said to himself, "my misfortunes commenced; for just here, when Burley and I were about to separate on the first night we ever met, he was alarmed by the intelligence that the passes were secured by soldiers lying in wait for him. Beneath that very ash sate the old woman who apprised him of his danger. How strange that my whole fortunes should have become inseparably interwoven with that man's, without anything more on my part than the discharge of an ordinary duty of humanity ! Would to Heaven it were possible I could find my humble quiet and tranquillity of mind upon the spot where I lost them !"

Thus arranging his reflections betwixt speech and thought, he turned his horse's head up the path.

Evening lowered around him as he advanced up the narrow dell which had once been a wood, but was now a ravine divested of trees, unless where a few, from their inaccessible situation on the edge of precipitous banks, or clinging among rocks and huge stones, defied the invasion of men and of cattle, like the scattered tribes of a conquered country, driven to take refuge in the barren strength of its mountains. These too, wasted and decayed, seemed rather to exist than to flourish, and only served to indicate what the landscape had once been. But the stream brawled down among them in all its freshness and vivacity, giving the life and animation which a mountain rivulet alone can confer on the barest and most savage scenes, and which the inhabitants of such a country miss when gazing even upon the tranquil winding of a majestic stream through plains of fertility, and beside palaces of splendour. The track of the road followed the course of the brook, which was now visible, and now only to be distinguished by its brawling heard among th'e stones or in the clefts of the rock that occasionally interrupted its course.

"Murmurer that thou art," said Morton, in the enthusiasm of his reverie, "why chafe with the Tocks that stop thy course for a moment? There is a sea to receive thee in its bosom; and there is an eternity for man when his fretful and hasty course through the vale of time shall be ceased and over. What thy petty fuming is to the deep and vast billows of a shoreless ocean, are our cares, hopes, fears, joys, and sorrows to the objects which must occupy us through the awful and boundless succession of ages I"

,Thus moralizing, our traveller passed on till the dell opened, and the banks, receding from the brook, left a little green vale, exhibiting a croft, or small field, on which some corn was growing, and a cottage, whose walls were not above five feet high, and whose thatched roof, green with moisture, age, house-leek, and grass, had in some places suffered damage from the encroachment of two cows, whose appetite this appearance of verdure had diverted from their more legitimate pasture. An ill-spelt and worse-written inscription intimated to the traveller that he might here find refreshment for man and horse, — no unacceptable intimation, rude as the hut appeared to be, considering the wild path he had trod in approaching it, and the high and waste mountains which rose in desolate dignity behind this humble asylum.

It must indeed have been, thought Morton, in some such spot as this that Burley was likely to find a congenial confidant.

As he approached, he observed the good dame of the house herself, seated by the door; she had hitherto been concealed from him by a huge alder-bush.

"Good evening, Mother," said the traveller.
"Your name is Mistress Maclure?"

"Elizabeth Maclure, sir, a poor widow," was the reply.

"Can you lodge a stranger for a night?"

"I can, sir, if he will be pleased with the widow's cake and the widow's cruse."

"I have been a soldier, good dame," answered Morton, "and nothing can come amiss to me in the way of entertainment."

"A sodger, sir?" said the old woman, with a sigh, — "God send ye a better trade!"

"It is believed to be an honourable profession, my good dame; I hope you do not think the worse of me for having belonged to it?"

"I judge no one, sir," replied the woman, "and your voice sounds like that of a civil gentleman; but I hae witnessed sae muckle ill wi' sodgering in this puir land that I am e'en content that I can see nae mair o' t' these sightless organs."

As she spoke thus, Morton observed that she was blind.

"Shall I not be troublesome to you, my good dame?" said he, compassionately; "your infirmity seems ill calculated for your profession."

"Na, sir," answered the old woman, "I can gang about the house readily eneugh; and I hae a bit lassie to help me, and the dragoon lads will look after your horse when they come name frae their patrol, for a sma' matter; they are civiller now than lang syne."

Upon these assurances, Morton alighted.

"Peggy, my bonny bird," continued the hostess, addressing a little girl of twelve years old, who had by this time appeared, "tak the gentleman's horse to the stable, and slack his girths, and tak aff the bridle, and shake down a lock " hay before him, till the dragoons come back. — Come this way, sir," she continued; " ye" I find my house clean, though it's a puir ane."

Morton followed her into the cottage accordingly.

CHAFTEK XLII.

Then out and spake the auld mother.
And fast her tears did fa—
"Ye wadua be Marn'd, my son Juhuie, Frae the hmitiug to bide awa' "

Old Ballad.

WHEN he entered the cottage, Morton perceived that the old hostess had spoken truth. The inside of the hut belied its outward appearance, and was neat, and even comfortable, especially the inner apartment, in which the hostess informed her guest that he was to sup and sleep. Refreshments were placed before him such as the little inn afforded; and though he had small occasion for them, he accepted the offer, as the means of maintaining some discourse with the landlady. Notwithstanding her blindness, she. was assiduous in her attendance, and seemed, by a. sort of instinct, to find her way to what she wanted.

"Have you no one but this pretty little girl to assist you in waiting on your guests ? " was the natural question.

"None, sir," replied his old hostess; "I dwell alone, like the widow of Zarephath. Few guests come to this puir place, and I haena custom eneugh to hire servants. I had anes twa fine sons that lookit after " thing.—But God gives and takes away, —His name be praised !" she continued, turn ing her clouded eyes towards Heaven. — "I was anes better off, that is, warldly speaking, even since I lost them; but that was before this last change."

"Indeed!" said Morton; "and yet you are a Presbyterian, my good mother?"

"I am, sir; praised be the light that showed me the right way," replied the landlady.

"Then I should have thought," continued the guest, "the Eevolution would have brought you nothing but good."

"If," said the old woman, "it has brought the land gude, and freedom of worship to tender consciences, it's little matter what it has brought to a puir blind worm like me."

"Still," replied Morton, "I cannot see how it could possibly injure you."

"It 's a lang story, sir," answered his hostess, with a sigh. "But ae night, sax weeks or thereby afore Bothwell Brigg, a young gentleman stopped at this puir cottage, stiff and bloody with wounds, pale and dune out wi' riding, and his horse sae weary he couldna drag ae foot after the other, and his foes were close ahint him, and he was ane 'o' our enemies. What could I do, sir? You that's a sodger will think me but a silly auld wife; but I fed him, and relieved him, and keepit him hidden till the pursuit was ower."

"And who," said Morton, "dares disapprove of your having done so?"

"I kenna," answered the blind woman; "I gat ill-will about it amang some " our ain folk. They said I should hae been to him what Jael was to Sisera. But weel I wot I had nae divine command to shed blood, and to save it was baith like a woman and a Christian. And then they said I wanted natural affection, to relieve ane that belanged to the band that murdered my twa sons."

"That murdered your two sons?"

"Ay, sir; though maybe ye'I gie their deaths another name. The tane fell " sword in hand, fighting for a broken national Covenant; the tether, — oh, they took him and shot him dead on the green before his mother's face! My auld een dazzled when the shots were looten off, and, to my thought, they waxed weaker and weaker ever since that weary day; and sorrow, and heart-break, and tears that would not be dried, might help on the disorder. But, alas! betraying Lord Evandafe's young blood to his enemies' sword wad ne'er hae brought my Ninian and Johnie alive again."

"Lord Evandale?" said Morton, in surprise. "Was it Lord Evandale whose life you saved?"

"In troth, even his," she replied. "And kind he was to me after, and gae me a cow and calf, malt, meal, and siller, and nane durst steer me when he was in power. But we live on an outside bit of Tillietudlem land, and the estate was sair plea'd between Leddy Margaret Bellenden and the present laird, Basil Olifant, and Lord Evandale backed the auld leddy for love o' her daughter Miss Edith, as the country said, ane o' the best and bonniest lassies in Scotland. But they behaved to gie way, and Basil gat the Castle and land, and on the back o' that came the Eevolution, and wha to turn coat faster than the laird? for he said he had been a true Whig a' the time, and turned papist only for fashion's sake. And then he got favour, and Lord Evandale's head was under water; for he was ower proud and manfu' to bend to every blast " wind, though mony a ane may ken as weel as me that be his ain principles as they might, he was nae ill friend to our folk when he could protect us, and far kinder than Basil Olifaut, that aye keepit the cobble head do'cin the stream. But he was set by and ill looked on, and his word ne'er asked; and then Basil, wha's a revengefu' man, set himsell to vex him in a' shapes, and especially by oppressing and despoiling the auld blind widow, Bessie Maclure, that saved Lord Evandale's life, and that he was sae kind to. But he^J's mistaen if that's his end; for it will be lang or Lord Evandale hears a woid frae me about the selling my kye for rent or e'er it was due, or the putting the dragoons on me when the country's quiet, or anything else that will vex him, — I can bear my ain burden patiently, and warld's loss is the least part o't."

Astonished and interested at this picture of patient, grateful, and high-minded resignation, Morton could not help bestowing an execration upon the poor-spirited rascal who had taken such a dastardly course of vengeance.

"Dinna curse him, sir," said the old woman; "I have heard a good man say that a curse was like a stone flung up to the heavens, and maist like to return on the head that sent it. But if ye ken Lord Evandale, bid him look to himsell, for I hear strange words pass atween the sodgers that are lying here, and his name is often mentioned; and the tane " them has been twice up at Tillietudlem. He's a kind of favourite wi' the laird, though he was in former times ane " the maist cruel oppressors ever rade through a country (out-taken Sergeant Bothwell), — they ca' him Inglis."¹

¹ The deeds of a man, or rather a monster, of this name are recorded upon the tombstone of one of those martyrs which it was

"I have the deepest interest in Lord Evandale's safety," said Morton, "and you may depend on my finding some mode to apprise him of these suspicious circumstances. And, in return, my good friend, will you indulge me with another question? Do you know anything of Quintin Mackell of Irongray?"

"Do I know ivhom?" echoed the blind woman, in a tone of great surprise and alarm.

"Quintin Mackell of Irongray," repeated Morton. "Is there anything so alarming in the sound of that name?"

"NX na," answered the woman, with hesitation; "but to hear him asked after by a stranger and a sodger,—G-ude protect us, what mischief is to come next?"

"None by my means, I assure you," said Morton; "the subject of my inquiry has nothing to fear from me, if, as I suppose, this Quintin Mackell is the same witli John Bal—"

"Do not mention his name," said the widow, pressing his lips with her fingers. ^{ff} "I see you have his secret and his pass-word, and I'll be free of you. But, for God's sake, speak loud and low. In Old Mortality's delight to repair. I do not remember the name of the murdered person, lint the circumstances of the crime were so teriible to my childish imagination that I am confident the following copy of the Epitaph will be found nearly correct, although I have not seen the original for forty years at least.

"This martyre was by Peter Inglis shot,—
By birth a tiger rathej than a Scot,
Who, that his hellish offspring might be seen,
Cut off his head, then kick'd it o'er tha green,
Thus was the head which was to wear the croun,
A foot-ball made by a profane dragoon "

In Dundee's Letters, Captain English, or Inglis, is repeatedly mentioned KB commanding a troop of horse.

the name of Heaven, I trust ye seek him not to his hurt! Ye said ye were a sodger?"

"I said truly; but one he has nothing to fear from. I commanded a party at Bothwell Bridge."

"Indeed?" said the woman. "And verily there is something in your voice I can trust. Ye speak prompt and readily, and like an honest man."

"I trust I am so," said Morton.

"But nae displeasure to you, sir, in thae waefu¹ times," continued Mrs. Maclure, "the hand of brother is against brother, and he fears as mickle almaist frae this Government as e'er he did frae thv³ auld persecutors."

"Indeed?" said Morton, in a tone of inquiry; "I was not aware of that. But I am only just now returned from abroad."

"I'll tell ye," said the blind woman, first assuming an attitude of listening that showed how effectually her powers of collecting intelligence had been transferred from the eye to the ear; for, instead of casting a glance of circumspection around, she stooped her face, and turned her head slowly around, in such a manner as to insure that there was not the slightest sound stirring in the neighbourhood, and then continued, — "I'll tell ye. Ye ken how he has laboured to raise up again the Covenant, burned, broken, and buried in the hard hearts and selfish devices of this stubborn people. Now, when he went to Holland, far from the countenance and thanks of the great, and the comfortable fellowship of the godly, both whilk he was in right to expect, the Prince of Orange wad show him no favour, and the ministers no godly communion. This was hard to bide for ane that had soffered and done mickle,—ower mickle, it may be; but why suld I be a judge 1 He came back to me and to the auld place o' refuge that had often received him in his distresses, mair especially before the great day of victory at Drumclog, for I sail ne'er forget how he was bending hither of " nights in the year on that e'ening after the play when young Milnwood wan the popinjay; but I warned him off for that time."

"What!" exclaimed Morton, "it was you that sat in your red cloak by the high-road, and told him there was a lion in the path?"

"In the name of Heaven! wha are ye?" said the old woman, breaking off her narrative in astonishment. "But be wha ye may," she continued, resuming it with tranquillity, " ye can ken naething waur " me than that I hae been willing to save the life " friend and foe."

"I know no ill of you, Mrs. Maclure, and I mean no ill by you; I only wished to show you that I know so much of this person's affairs that I might be safely intrusted with the rest. Proceed, if you please, in your narrative."

"There is a strange command in your voice," said the blind woman, "though its tones are sweet. I have little mair to say. The Stewarts hae been dethroned, and William and Mary reign in their stead; but nae mair word of the Covenant than if it were a dead letter. They hae taen the indulged clergy, and an Erastian General Assembly of the ance pure and triumphant Kirk of Scotland, even into their very arms and bosoms. Our faithfu' champions o' the testimony agree e'en waur " this than " the open tyranny and apostasy of the persecuting times, for souls are hardened and deadened, and the mouths of fasting multitudes are crammed wi' fizenlesa bran instead of the sweet word in season; and mony an hungry, starving creature, when he sits down on a Sunday forenoon to get something that might warm him to the great work, has a dry clatter o' morality driven about his lugs, and —"

"In short," said Morton, desirous to stop a discussion which the good old woman, as enthusiastically attached to her religious profession as to the duties of humanity, might probably have indulged longer, — "In short, you are not disposed to acquiesce in this new government, and Burley is of the same opinion?"

"Many of our brethren, sir, are of belief we fought for the Covenant, and fasted and prayed and suffered for that grand national league, and now we are like neither to see nor hear tell of that which we suffered and fought and fasted and prayed for. And anes it was thought something might be made by bringing back the auld family on a new bargain and a new bottom, as, after a', when King James went awa, I understand the great quarrel of the English against him was in behalf of seven unhalloved prelates; and sae, though ae part of our people were free to join " the present model, and levied an armed regiment under the Yerl of Angus, yet our honest friend, and others that stude up for purity of doctrine and freedom of conscience, were determined to hear the breath " the Jacobites before they took part again them, fearing to fa' to the ground like a wall built with unslaked mortar, or from sitting between twa stools."

"They chose an odd quarter," said Morton, "from which to expect freedom of conscience and purity of doctrine."

" Oh, dear sir! " said the landlady, " the natural day-spring rises in the east, but the spiritual day-spring may rise in the north, for what we blinded mortals ken."

" And Burley went to the north to seek it ?" replied the guest.

" Truly ay, sir; and he saw Claver'se himsell, that they ca' Dundee now."

" What! " exclaimed Morton, in amazement; " I would have sworn that meeting would have been the last of one of their lives."

" Na, na, sir; in troubled times, as I understand," said Mrs. Maclure, " there's sudden changes,—Montgomery and Ferguson and mony ane mair that were King James's greatest faes are on his side now. Claver'se spake our friend fair, and sent him to consult with Lord Evandale. But then there was a break-off, for Lord Evandale wadna look at, hear, or speak wi' him; and now he's anes wud and aye waur, and roars for revenge again Lord Evandale, and will hear nought of onything but burn and slay. And oh, thae starts " passion ! they unsettle his mind, and gie the Enemy sair advantages."

" The enemy ?" said Morton. " What enemy ?"

" What enemy? Are ye acquainted familiarly " John Balfour " Burley, and dinna ken that he has had sair and frequent combats to sustain against the Evil One ? Did ye ever see him alone but the Bible was in his hand, and the drawn sword on his knee ? Did ye never sleep in the same room " him, and hear him strive in his dreams with the delusions of Satan ? Oh, ye ken little o' him if ye have seen him only in fair daylight; for nae man can put the face upon his doleful visits and strifes that he can do. I hae seen him, after sic a strife of agony, tremble that an infant might hae held him, while the hair on his brow was drapping as fast as ever my puir thatched roof did in a heavy rain,"

As she spoke, Morton began to recollect the appearance of Burley during his sleep in the hay-loft at Milnwood, the report of Cuddie that his senses had become impaired, and some whispers current among the Cameronians, who boasted frequently of Burley's soul-exercises and his strifes with the foul fiend, — which several circumstances led him to conclude that this man himself was a victim to those delusions, though his mind, naturally acute and forcible, not only disguised his superstition from those in whose opinion it might have discredited his judgment, but by exerting such a force as is said to be proper to those afflicted with epilepsy, could postpone the fits which it occasioned until he was either freed from superintendence, or surrounded by such as held him more highly on account of these visitations. It was natural to suppose, and could easily be inferred from the narrative of Mrs. Macclure, that disappointed ambition, wrecked hopes, and the downfall of the party which he had served with such desperate fidelity, were likely to aggravate enthusiasm into temporary insanity. It was, indeed, no uncommon circumstance in those singular times that men like Sir Harry Vane, Harrison, Overton, and others, themselves slaves to the wildest and most enthusiastic dreams, could, when mingling with the world, conduct themselves not only with good sense in difficulties, and courage in dangers, but with the most acute sagacity and determined valour. The subsequent part of Mrs. Macclure's information confirmed Morton in these impressions.

"In the grey of the morning," she said, "my little Peggy sail show ye the gate to him, before the sodgers are up. But ye maun let his hour of danger, as he ca's it, be ower, afore ye venture on him in his place of refuge. Peggy will tell ye when to venture in. She kens his ways weel, for whiles she carries him some little helps that he canna do without to sustain life."

"And in what retreat, then," said Morton, "has this unfortunate person found refuge?"

"An awsome place," answered the blind woman, "as ever living creature took refuge in; they ca' it the Black Linn of Linklater. It's a doleful place, but he loves it abune " others, because he has sae often been in safe hiding there; and it's my belief he prefers it to a tapestried chamber and a down bed. But ye'I see't. I hae seen it mysell mony a day syne. I was a daft heinpie lassie then, and little thought what was to come o't. —Wad ye choose ony thing, sir, ere ye betake yoursell to your rest, for ye maun stir wi' the first dawn " the grey light?"

"Nothing more, my good mother," said Morton; and they parted for the evening.

Morton recommended himself to Heaven, threw himself on the bed, heard, between sleeping and waking, the trampling of the dragoon horses at the riders' return from their patrol, and then slept soundly after such painful agitation.

CHAPTER XLII.

The darksome cave they enter, where they found
The accursed man low sitting on the ground,
Musing full sadly in his sullen mind

SPENSER.

As the morning began to appear on the mountains, a gentle knock was heard at the door of the humble apartment in which Morton slept, and a girlish treble voice asked him, from without, "If he wad please gang to the Linn or the folk raise?"

He arose upon the invitation, and, dressing himself hastily, went forth and joined his little guide. The mountain maid tript lightly before him, through the grey haze, over hill and moor. It was a wild and varied walk, unmarked by any regular or distinguishable track, and keeping, upon the whole, the direction of the ascent of the brook, though without tracing its windings. The landscape, as they advanced, became waster and more wild, until nothing but heath and rock encumbered the side of the valley.

"Is the place still distant?" said Morton.

"Nearly a mile off," answered the girl. "We'll be there belive."

"And do you often go this wild journey, my little maid?"

"When grannie sends me wi' milk and meal to the Linn," answered the child.

"And are you not afraid to travel so wild a road alone?"

"Hout na, sir," replied the guide; "nae living creature wad touch sic a bit thing as I am, and grannie says we need never fear onything else when we are doing a gude turn."

"Strong in innocence as in triple mail!" said Morton to himself, and followed her steps in silence.

They soon came to a decayed thicket, where brambles and thorns supplied the room of the oak and birches of which it had once consisted. Here the guide turned short off the open heath, and, by a sheep-track, conducted Morton to the brook. "A hoarse and sullen roar had in part prepared him for the scene which presented itself, yet it was not to be viewed without surprise and even terror. When he emerged from the devious path which conducted him through the thicket, he found himself placed on a ledge of flat rock projecting over one side of a chasm not less than a hundred feet deep, where the dark mountain-stream made a decided and rapid shoot over the precipice, and was swallowed, up by a deep, black, yawning gulf. The eye in vain strove to see the bottom of the fall; it could catch but one sheet of foaming uproar and sheer descent, until the view was obstructed by the projecting crags which enclosed the bottom of the waterfall, and hid from sight the dark pool which received its tortured waters; far-beneath, at the distance of perhaps a quarter of a mile, the eye caught the winding of the stream as it emerged into a more open course. But, for that distance, they were lost to sight as much as if a cavern had been arched over them; and indeed the steep and projecting ledges of rock through which they wound their way in darkness were very nearly closing and over-roofing their course.

While Morton gazed at this scene of tumult, which seemed, by the surrounding thickets and the clefts into which the waters descended, to seek to hide itself from every eye, his little attendant as she stood beside him on the platform of rock which commanded the best view of the fall, pulled him by the sleeve, and said, in a tone which he could not hear without stooping his ear near the speaker, "Hear till him ! Eh! hear till him !"

Morton listened more attentively; and out of the very abyss into which the brook fell, and amidst the tumultuary sounds of the cataract, thought he could distinguish shouts, screams, and even articulate words, as if the tortured demon of the stream had been mingling his complaints with the roar of his broken waters.

"This is the way," said the little girl; "follow me, gin ye please, sir, but tak tent to your feet;" and, with the daring agility which custom had rendered easy, she vanished from the platform on which she stood, and, by notches and slight projections in the rock, scrambled down its face into the chasm which it overhung. Steady, bold, and active, Morton hesitated not to follow her; but the necessary attention to secure his hold and footing in a descent where both foot and hand were needful for security, prevented him from looking around him, till, having descended nigh twenty feet, and being sixty or seventy above the pool which received the fall, his guide made a pause, and he again found himself by her side in a situation that appeared equally romantic and precarious. They were nearly opposite to the waterfall, and in point of level situated at about one-quarter's depth from the point of the cliff over which it thundered, and three-fourths of the height above the dark, deep, and restless pool which received its fall. Both these tremendous points — the first shoot, namely, of the yet unbroken stream, and the deep and sombre abyss into which it was emptied — were full before him, as well as the whole continuous stream of billowy froth, which, dashing from the one, was eddying and boiling in the other. They were so near this grand phenomenon that they were covered with its spray, and wellnigh deafened by the incessant roar. But crossing 'in the very front of the fall, and at scarce three yards distance from the cataract, an old oak-tree, flung across the chasm in a manner that seemed accidental, formed a bridge of fearfully narrow dimensions and uncertain footing. The upper end of the tree rested on the platform on which they stood ; the lower or uprooted extremity extended behind a projection on the opposite side, and was secured, Morton's eye could not discover where. From behind the same projection glimmered a strong red light, which, glancing in the waves of the falling water, and tinging them partially with crimson, had a strange preternatural and sinister effect when contrasted with the beams of the rising sun, which glanced on the first broken waves of the fall, though even its meridian splendour could not gain the third of its full depth. When he had looked around him for a moment, the girl again pulled his sleeve, and, pointing to the oak and the projecting point beyond it (for hearing speech was now out of the question), indicated that there lay his farther passage.

Morton gazed at her with surprise; for although he well knew that the persecuted Presbyterians had in the preceding reigns sought refuge among dells and thickets, caves and cataracts, in spots the most extraordinary and secluded ; although he had heard of the champions of the Covenant, who had long abidden beside Dobs-linn on the wild heights of Polmoodie, and others who had been concealed in the yet more terrific cavern called Creehope-linn, in the parish of Closeburii,¹ — yet his imagination had never exactly figured out the horrors of such a residence, and he was surprised how the strange and romantic scene which he now saw had remained concealed from him, while a curious investigator of such natural phenomena. But he readily conceived that, lying in a remote and wild district, and being destined as a place of concealment to the persecuted preachers and professors of nonconformity, the secret of its existence was carefully preserved by the few shepherds to whom it might be known.

As, breaking from these meditations, he began to consider how he should traverse the doubtful and terrific bridge, which, skirted by the cascade, and rendered wet and slippery by its constant drizzle, traversed the chasm above sixty feet from the bottom of the fall, his guide, as if to give him courage, tript over and back without the least hesitation. Envyng for a moment the little bare feet which caught a safer hold of the rugged side of the oak than he could pretend to with his heavy boots, Morton nevertheless resolved to attempt the passage, and, fixing his eye firm on a stationary object on the other side, without allowing his head to become giddy, or his attention to be distracted by the flash, the foam, and the roar of the waters around him, he strode steadily and safely along the uncertain bridge, and reached the mouth of a small cavern on the farther side of the torrent. Here he paused ; for a light, proceeding from a fire of red-hot charcoal, permitted him to SGB the interior of the cave, and enabled him to contemplate the appearance of its inhabitant, by whom he himself could not be so readily distinguished, being concealed by the shadow of the rock. What he observed would by no means have encouraged a less determined man to proceed with the task which he had undertaken.

¹ Note XVIII.—The Retreats of the Covenanters.

Burley, only altered from what he had been formerly by the addition of a grisly beard, stood in the midst of the cave, with his clasped Bible in one hand, and his drawn sword in the other. His figure, dimly ruddied by the light of the red charcoal, seemed that of a fiend in the lurid atmosphere of Pandemonium, and his gestures and words, as far as they could be heard, seemed equally violent and irregular. All alone, and in a place of almost unapproachable seclusion, his demeanour was that of a man who strives for life and death with a mortal enemy. " Ha ! ha ! — there — there ! " he exclaimed, accompanying each word with a thrust, urged with his whole force against the impassible and empty air, " Did I not tell thee so ? — I have resisted, and thou fleest from me ! — Coward as thou art, come in all thy terrors ; come with mine own evil deeds, which render thee most terrible of all, — there is enough betwixt the boards of this book to rescue me ' — What mutterest thou of grey hairs ? It was well done to slay him, — 'the more ripe the corn, the readier for the sickle. — Art gone ? Art gone ? — I have ever known thee but a coward—ha J ha ! ha ! "

With these wild exclamations he sunk the point of his sword, and remained standing still in the same posture, like a maniac whose fit is over.

"The dangerous time is by now," said the little girl who had followed; "it seldom lasts beyond the time that the sun 's ower the hill; ye may gang in and speak wi' him now. I'll wait for you at the other side of the linn; he canna bide t'o see twa folk at anes "

Slowly and cautiously, and keeping constantly upon his guard, Morton presented himself to the view of his old associate in command.

"What! comest thou again when thine hour is over?" was his first exclamation; and flourishing his sword aloft, his countenance assumed an expression in which ghastly terror seemed mingled with the rage of a demoniac.

"I am come, Mr. Balfour," said Morton, in a steady and composed tone, "to renew an acquaintance which has been broken off since the fight of Bothwell Bridge."

As soon as Burley became aware that Morton was before him in person, — an idea which he caught with marvellous celerity, — he at once exerted that mastership over his heated and enthusiastic imagination, the power of enforcing which was a most striking part of his extraordinary character. He sunk his sword-point at once, and as he stole it composedly into the scabbard, he muttered something of the damp and cold which sent an old soldier to his fencing exercise, to prevent his blood from chilling. This done, he proceeded in the cold, determined manner which was peculiar to his ordinary discourse: —

"Thou hast tarried lung, Henry Morton, and hast not come to the vintage before the twelfth hour has struck. Art thou yet willing to take the right hand of fellowship, and be one with those who look not to thrones or dynasties, but to the rule of Scripture, for their directions ? "

"I am surprised," said Morton, evading the direct answer to his question, "that you should have known me after so many years."

"The features of those who ought to act with me are engraved on my heart," answered Burley; "and few but Silas Morton's son durst have followed me into this my castle of retreat. Seest thou that drawbridge of Nature's own construction ?" lie added, pointing to the prostrate oak-tree, — "one spurn of my foot, and it is overwhelmed in the abyss below, bidding foeman on the farther side stand at defiance, and leaving enemies on this at the mercy of one who never yet met his equal in single fight."

"Of such defences," said Morton, "I should have thought you would now have had little need."

"Little need I " said Burley impatiently. "What little need, when incarnate fiends are combined against me on earth, and Sathan himself — But it matters not," added he, checking himself. "Enough that I like my place of refuge, my cave of Adullam, and would nob change its rude ribs of limestone rock for the fair chambers of the castle of the earls of Torwood, with their broad bounds and barony. Thou, unless the foolish fever-fit be over, mayst think differently."

"It was of those very possessions T came to speak," said Morton; "and I doubt not to find Mr. Balfour the same rational and reflecting person which I knew him to be in times when zeal dis-united brethren,"

"Ay?" said Burley; "indeed? Is such truly your hope? Wilt thou express it more plainly?"

"In a word, then," said Morton, "you have exercised, by means at which I can guess, a secret, but most prejudicial, influence over the fortunes of Lady Margaret Bellenden and her granddaughter, and in favour of that base, oppressive apostate, Basil Olifant, whom the law, deceived by thy operations, has placed in possession of their lawful property."

"Sayest thou?" said Balfour.

"I do say so," replied Morton; "and face to face you will not deny what you have vouched by your handwriting."

"And suppose I deny it not," said Balfour; "and suppose that thy eloquence were found equal to persuade me to retrace the steps I have taken on matured resolve, — what will be thy meed? Dost thou still hope to possess the fair-haired girl, with her wide and rich inheritance?"

"I have no such hope," answered Morton, calmly.

"And for whom, then, hast thou ventured to do this great thing, — to seek to rend the prey from the valiant, to bring forth food from the den of the lion, and to extract sweetness from the maw of the devourer? For whose sake hast thou undertaken to read this riddle, more hard than Samson's?"

"For Lord Evandale's and that of his bride,"¹ replied Morton, firmly. "Think better of mankind, Mr. Balfour, and believe there are some who are willing to sacrifice their happiness to that of others."

"Then, as my soul liveth," replied Balfour, "thou art, to wear beard and back a horse and draw a sword, the tamest and most gall-less puppet that ever sustained injury unavenged. What! thou wouldst help that accursed Evandale to the arms of the woman that thou lovest; thou wouldst endow them with wealth and with heritages, and thou think'st that there lives another man, offended even more deeply than thou, yet equally cold-livered and mean-spirited, crawling upon the face of the earth, and hast dared to suppose that one other to be John Balfour 1"

"For my own feelings," said Morton, composedly, "I am answerable to none but Heaven ; to you, Mr. Balfour, I should suppose it of little consequence whether Basil Olifant or Lord Evaudale possess these estates."

"Thou art deceived," said Burley; "both are indeed in outer darkness, and strangers to the light, as he whose eyes have never been opened to the day. But this Basil Olifant is a Nabal, a Demas, a base churl whose wealth and power are at the disposal of him who can threaten to deprive him of them. He became a professor because he was deprived of these lands of Tillietudlem; he turned a papist to obtain possession of them ; he called himself an Erastian, that he might not again lose them ; and he will become what I list while I have in my power the document that may deprive him of them. These lands are a bit between his jaws and a hook in his nostrils, and the rein and the line are in my handa to guide them as I think meet; and his they shall therefore be, unless I had assurance of bestowing them on a sure and sincere friend. But Lord Evandale is a malignant, of heart like flint, and brow like adamant; the goods of the world fall on him like leaves on the frost-bound earth, and unmoved he will see them whirled off by the first wind.

The heathen virtues of such as he are more dangerous to us than the sordid cupidity of those who, governed by their interest, must follow where it leads, and who, therefore, themselves the slaves of avarice, may be compelled to work in the vineyard, were it but to earn the wages of sin."

"This might have been all well some years since," replied Morton, "and I could understand your argument, although I could never acquiesce in its justice. But at this crisis it seems useless to you to persevere in keeping up an influence which can no longer be directed to an useful purpose. The land has peace, liberty, and freedom of conscience, — and what would you more ? "

"More!" exclaimed Burley, again unsheathing his sword, with a vivacity which nearly made Morton start. "Look at the notches upon that weapon : they are three in number, are they not ? "

"It seems so," answered Morton; "but what of that?"

"The fragment of steel that parted from this first gap rested on the skull of the perjured traitor who first introduced Episcopacy into Scotland; this second notch was made in the rib-bone of an impious villain, the boldest and best soldier that upheld the prelatie cause at Drumclog; this third was broken on the steel head-piece of the captain who defended the Chapel of Holyrood when the people rose at the Eevolution. I cleft him to the teeth, through steel and bone. It has done great deeds, this little weapon, and each of these blows was a deliverance to the Church. This sword," he said, again sheathing it, "has yet more to do, — to weed out this base and pestilential heresy of Erastianism; to vindicate the true liberty of the Kirk in her purity; to restore the Covenant in its glory, — then let it moulder and rust beside the bones of its master."¹

"You have neither men nor means, Mr. Balfour, to disturb the Government as now settled," argued Morton ; " the people are in general satisfied, excepting only the gentlemen of the Jacobite interest; and surely you would not join with those who would only use you for their own purposes 1 "

"It is they," answered Burley, "that should serve ours. I went to the camp of the malignant Claver'se, as the future King of Israel sought the land of the Philistines; I arranged with him • a rising; and but for the villain Evandale, the Erastians ere now had been driven from the West. — I could slay him," he added, with a vindictive scowl, " were he grasping the horns of the altar i" He then proceeded in a calmer tone: " If thou, son of mine ancient comrade, were suitor for thyself to this Edith Bellenden, and wert willing to put thy hand to the great work with zeal equal to thy courage, think not I would prefer the friendship of Basil Olifant to thine ; thou shouldst then have the means that this document [he produced a parchment] affords to place her in possession of the lands of her fathers. This have I longed to say to thee ever since I saw thee fight the good fight so strongly at the fatal Bridge. The maiden loved thee, and thou her."

Morton replied firmly, "I will not dissemble with you, Mr. Balfour, even to gain a good end. I came in hopes to persuade you to do a deed of justice to others, not to gain any selfish end of my own. I have failed; I grieve for your sake more than for the loss which others will sustain by your injustice "

¹ Note XIX.—Predictions of the Covenanters, (20)

" You refuse my proffer, then ?" said Burley, with kindling eyes.

" I do," said Morton. " Would you be really, as you are desirous to be thought, a man of honour and conscience, you would, regardless of all other considerations, restore that parchment to Lord Evandale, to be used for the advantage of the lawful heir."

" Sooner shall it perish!¹" said Balfour; and, casting the deed into the heap of red charcoal beside hi'm, pressed it down with the heel of his boot.

While it smoked, shrivelled, and crackled in the flames, Morton sprung forward to snatch it, and Burley catching hold of him, a struggle ensued, Both were strong men; but although Morton was much the more active and younger of the two, yet Balfour was the most powerful, and effectually prevented him from rescuing the deed until it was fairly reduced to a cinder, They then quitted hold of each other, and the enthusiast, rendered fiercer by the contest, glared on Morton with an eye expressive of frantic revenge.

" Thou hast my secret," he exclaimed; " thou must be mine, or die I"

" I contemn your threats," said Morton ; " I pity you, and leave you."

But as he turned to retire, Burley stept before him, pushed the oak-trunk from its resting place, and as it fell thundering and crashing into the abyss beneath, drew his sword, and cried out, with a voice that rivalled the roar of the cataract and the thunder of the falling oak, " Now thou art at bay ! Fight, — yield, or die !" and standing in the mouth of the cavern, he flourished his naked sword.

"I will not fight with the man that preserved my father's life," said Morton. "I have not yet learned to say the words, 'I yield';¹ and my life I will rescue as I best can."

So speaking, and ere Balfour was aware of his purpose, he sprung past him, and exerting that youthful agility of which he possessed an uncommon share, leaped clear across the fearful chasm which divided the mouth of the cave from the projecting rock on the opposite side, and stood there safe and free from his incensed enemy. He immediately ascended the ravine, and, as he turned, saw Burley stand for an instant aghast with astonishment, and then, with the frenzy of disappointed rage, rush into the interior of his cavern.

It was not difficult for him to perceive that this unhappy man's mind had been so long agitated by desperate schemes and sudden disappointments that it had lost its equipoise, and that there was now in his conduct a shade of lunacy, not the less striking, from the vigour and craft with which he pursued his wild designs. Morton soon joined his guide, who had been terrified by the fall of the oak. This he represented as accidental; and she assured him, in return, that the inhabitant of the cave would experience no inconvenience from it, being always provided with materials to construct another bridge.

The adventures of the morning were not yet ended. As they approached the hut, the little girl made an exclamation of surprise at seeing her grandmother groping her way towards them, at a greater distance from her home than she could have been supposed capable of travelling.

"Oh, sir, sir!" said the old woman, when she heard them approach, "gin e'er ye loved Lord Evandale, help now, or never! God be praised that left my hearing when he took my poor eyesight! Come this way, — this way. And oh, tread lightly. Peggy, hinny, gang saddle the gentleman's horse, and lead him cannily ahint the thorny shaw, and bide him there."

She conducted him to a small window, through which, himself unobserved, he could see two dragons seated at their morning draught of ale, and conversing earnestly together.

"The more I think of it," said the one, "the less I like it, Inglis; Evandale was a good officer, and the soldier's friend; and though we were punished for the mutiny at Tillietudlem, yet, by——, Frank, you must own we deserved it."

"D——n seize me if I forgive him for it, though!" replied the other; "and I think I can sit in his skirts now."

"Why, man, you should forget and forgive. Better take the start with him along with the rest, and join the ranting Highlanders. We have all eat King James's bread."

"Thou art an ass; the start, as you call it, will never happen, — the day's put off. Halliday's seen a ghost, or Miss Bellenden's fallen sick of the pip, or some blasted nonsense or another; the thing will never keep two days longer, and the first bird that sings out will get the reward."

"That's true too," answered his comrade; "and will this fellow — this Basil Olifant — pay handsomely?"

"Like a prince, man," said Inglis. "Evandale is the man on earth whom he hates worst, and h& fears him, besides, about some law business; and were he once rubbed out of the way, all, he thinks, will be his own."

"But shall we have warrants and force enough?" said the other fellow. "Few people here will stir against my lord, and we may find him with some of our own fellows at his back."

"Thou 'rt a cowardly fool, Dick," returned Inglis; "he is living quietly down at Fairy Knowe to avoid suspicion. Olifant is a magistrate, and will have some of his own people that he can trust along with him. There are us two, and the laird says he can get a desperate fighting Whig fellow, called Quintin Mackell, that has an old grudge at Evandale."

"Well, well, you are my officer, you know," said the private, with true military conscience, "and if anything is wrong —"

"I'll take the blame," said Inglis. "Come, another pot of ale, and let us to Tillietudlem. — Here, blind Bess! — Why, where the devil has the old hag crept to?"

"Delay them as long as you can," whispered Morton, as he thrust his purse into the hostess's hand; "all depends on gaining time."

Then, walking swiftly to the place where the girl held his horse ready, "To Fairy Knowe? No; alone I could not protect them. I must instantly to Glasgow. Wittenbold, the commandant there, will readily give me the support of a troop, and procure me the countenance of the civil power. I must drop a caution as I pass. — Come, Moorkopf," he said, addressing his horse as he mounted him, — "this day must try your breath and speed."

CHAPTER XLIV.

Yet could he not his closing eyes withdraw,
Though less and less of Emily he saw;
So, speechless for a little space he lay,
Then grasp'd the hand he held, and sigh'd his soul away.

Palamon and Arcite.

THE indisposition of Edith confined her to bed during the eventful day on which she had received such an unexpected shock from the sudden apparition of Morton. Next morning, however, she was reported to be so much better that Lord Evandale resumed his purpose of leaving Fairy Knowe. At a late hour in the forenoon Lady Emily entered the apartment of Edith with a peculiar gravity of manner. Having received and paid the compliments of the day, she observed it would be a sad one for her, though it would relieve Miss Bellenden of an encumbrance: "My brother leaves us to-day, Miss Bellenden."

"Leaves us !" exclaimed Edith, in surprise ; "for his own house, I trust ?"

"I have reason to think he meditates a more distant journey," answered Lady Emily; "he has little to detain him in this country."

"Good Heaven !" exclaimed Edith, "why was I born to become the wreck of all that is manly and noble ? What can be done to stop him from running headlong on ruin ? I will come down instantly. — Say that I implore he will not depart until I speak with him."

"It will be in vain, Miss Bellenden; but I will execute your commission;" and she left the room as formally as she had entered it, and informed her brother Miss Bellenden was so much recovered as to propose coming downstairs ere he went away.

"I suppose," she added pettishly, "the prospect of being speedily released from our company has wrought a cure on her shattered nerves."

"Sister," said Lord Evandale, "you are unjust, if not envious."¹ "Unjust I may be, Evandale, but I should not have dreamt," glancing her eye at a mirror, "of being thought envious without better cause. But let us go to the old lady; she is making a feast in the other room which might have dined all your troop when you had one."

Lord Evandale accompanied her in silence to the parlour, for he knew it was in vain to contend with her prepossessions and offended pride. They found the table covered with refreshments, arranged under the careful inspection of Lady Margaret.

"Ye could hardly weel be said to breakfast this morning, my Lord Evandale, and ye maun e'en partake of a small collation before ye ride, such as this poor house, whose inmates are so much indebted to you, can provide in their present circumstances. For my ain part, I like to see young folk take some refection before they ride out upon their sports or their affairs, and I said as much to his most sacred Majesty when he breakfasted at Tillietudlem in the year of grace sixteen hundred and fifty-one; and his most sacred Majesty was pleased to reply, drinking to my health at the same time in a flagon of Rhenish wine, 'Lady Margaret, ye speak like & Highland oracle,' These were his Majesty's very words; so that your lordship may judge whether I have not good authority to press young folk to partake of their vivers.¹

It may be well supposed that much of the good lady's speech failed Lord Evandale's ears, which were then employed in listening for the light step of Edith. His absence of mind on this occasion, however natural, cost him very dear. While Lady Margaret was playing the kind hostess, — a part she delighted and excelled in, — she was interrupted by John Gudyill, who, in the natural phrase for announcing an inferior to the mistress of a family, said, "There was ane wanting to speak to her leddyship."

"Ane ! what ane ? Has he nae name ? Ye speak as if I kept a shop, and was to come at everybody's whistle."

"Yes, he has a name," answered John, "but your leddyship likes ill to hear't."

"What is it, you fool ?"

"It's Calf-Gibbie, my leddy," said John, in a tone rather above the pitch of decorous respect, on which he occasionally trespassed, confiding in his merit as an ancient servant of the family and a faithful follower of their humble fortunes, — "It's Calf-Gibbie, an your leddyship will hae't, that keeps Edie Henshaw's kye down yonder at the Brigg-end, — that's him that was Guse-Gibbie at Tillietudlem, and gaed to the wappinshaw, and that —"

"Hold your peace, John," said the old lady, rising in dignity ; "you are very insolent to think I wad speak wi' a person like that. Let him tell his business to you or Mrs. Headrigg."

"He'I no hear o' that, my leddy; he says them that sent him bade him gie the thing to your led-dyship's ain hand direct, or to Lord Evandale's, he wots na whilk. But, to say the truth, he 's far frae fresh, and he's but an idiot an he were."

"Then turn him out," said Lady Margaret, "and tell him to come back to-morrow when he is sober. I suppose he comes to crave some benevolence, as an ancient follower o' the house."

"Like enough, my leddy, for he's a' in rags, poor creature."

Gudyill made another attempt to get at Gibbie's commission, which was indeed of the last importance, being a few lines from Morton to Lord Evandale, acquainting him with the danger in which he stood from the practices of Olifant, and exhorting him either to instant flight, or else to come to Glasgow and surrender himself, where he could assure him of protection. This billet, hastily written, he intrusted to Gibbie, whom he saw feeding his herd beside the bridge, and backed with a couple of dollars his desire that it might instantly be delivered into the hand to which it was addressed.

But it was decreed that Goose-Gibbie's intermediation, whether as an emissary or as a man-at-arms, should be unfortunate to the family of Tillietudlem. He unluckily tarried so long at the ale-house to prove if his employer's coin was good that, when he appeared at Fairy Kiiowe, the little sense which nature had given him was effectually drowned in ale and brandy; and instead of asking for Lord Evandale, he demanded to speak with Lady Margaret, whose name was more familiar to his ear. Being refused admittance to her presence, he staggered away with the letter undelivered, perversely faithful to Morton's instructions in the only point in which it would have been well had he departed from them.

A few minutes after he was gone, Edith entered the apartment. Lord Evandale and she met with mutual embarrassment, which Lady Margaret, who only knew in general that their union had been postponed by her granddaughter's indisposition, set down to the bashfulness of a bride and bridegroom, and, to place them at ease, began to talk to Lady Emily on indifferent topics. At this moment Edith, with a countenance as pale as death, muttered, rather than whispered, to Lord Evandale a request to speak with him. He offered his arm, and supported her into the small ante-room, which, as we have noticed before, opened from the parlour. He placed her in a chair, and, taking one himself, awaited the opening of the conversation.

"I am distressed, my lord," were the first words she was able to articulate, and those with difficulty; "I scarce know what I would say, nor how to speak it."

"If I have any share in occasioning your uneasiness," said Lord Evandale, mildly, "you will soon, Edith, be released from it."

"You are determined then, my lord," she replied, "to run this desperate course with desperate men, in spite of your own better reason, in spite of your friends' entreaties, in spite of the almost inevitable ruin which yawns before you?"

"Forgive me, Miss Bellenden; even your solicitude on my account must not detain me when my honour calls. My horses stand ready saddled, my servants are prepared, the signal for rising will be given so soon as I reach Kilsyth. If it is my fate that calls me, I will not shun meeting it. It will be something," he said, taking her hand, "to die deserving your compassion, since I cannot gain your love."

" Oh, my lord, remain ! " said Edith, in a tone which went to his heart; " time may explain the strange circumstance which has shocked me so much ; my agitated nerves may recover their tranquillity. On, do not rush on death and ruin ! remain to be our prop and stay, and hope everything from time !"

"It is too late, Edith," answered Lord Evandale ; " and I were most ungenerous could I practise on the warmth and kindness of your feelings towards me. I know you cannot love me ; nervous distress, so strong as to conjure up the appearance of the dead or absent, indicates a predilection too powerful to give way to friendship and gratitude alone. But were it otherwise, the die is now cast."

As he spoke thus, Cuddie burst into the room, terror and haste in his countenance. " Oh, my lord, hide yourself ! they hae beset the outlets " the house," was his first exclamation.

" They ? Who ? " said Lord Evandale.

" A party of horse, headed by Basil Olifant," answered Cuddie.

" Oh, hide yourself, my lord ! " echoed Edith, in an agony of terror.

" I will not, by Heaven !" answered Lord Evandale. "What right has the villain to assail me or stop my passage ? I will make my way, were he backed by a regiment; tell Halliday and Hunter to get out the horses. — And now, farewell, Edith !" He clasped her in his arms, and kissed her tenderly; then, bursting from his sister, who, with Lady

Margaret, endeavoured to detain him, rushed out and mounted his horse.

All was ill confusion; the women shrieked and hurried in consternation to the front windows of the house, from which they could see a small party of horsemen, of whom two only seemed soldiers. They were on the open ground before Cuddie's cottage, at the bottom of the descent from the house, and showed caution in approaching it, as if uncertain of the strength within.

"He may escape, he may escape !" said Edith; " oh, would he but take the by-road ! "

!But Lord Evandale, determined to face a danger which his high spirit undervalued, commanded his servants to follow him, and rode composedly down the avenue. Old Gudyill ran to arm himself, and Cuddie snatched down a gun which was kept for the protection of the house, and, although on foot, followed Lord Evandale. It was "I vain his wife, who had hurried up on the alarm, hung by his skirts, threatening him with death by the sword or halter for meddling with other folk's matters.

" Hand your peace, ye b——," said Cuddie ; " and that's braid Scotch, or I wotna what is. Is it ither folk's matters to see Lord Evandale murdered before my face ?" and down the avenue he marched. But considering on the way that he composed the whole infantry, as John Gudyill had not appeared, he took his vantage ground behind the hedge, hammered his flint, cocked his piece, and, taking a long aim at Laird Basil, as he was called, stood prompt for action.

As soon as Lord Evandale appeared, Olifant's party spread themselves a little, as if preparing to enclose him. Their leader stood fast, supported by three men, two of whom were dragoons, the third in dress and appearance a countryman, all well armed. But the strong figure, stern features, and resolved manner of the third attendant made him seem the most formidable of the party; and whoever had before seen him could have no difficulty in recognising Balfour of Burley.

"Follow me," said Lord Evandale to his servants, "and if we are forcibly opposed, do as I do." He advanced at a hand gallop towards Olifant, and was in the act of demanding why he had thus beset the road, when Olifant called out, "Shoot the traitor !" and the whole four fired their carabines upon the unfortunate nobleman. He reeled in the saddle, advanced his hand to the holster, and drew a pistol, but, unable to discharge it, fell from his horse mortally wounded. His servants had presented their carabines. Hunter fired at random; but Halliday, who was an intrepid fellow, took aim at Inglis, and shot him dead on the spot. At the same instant a shot from behind the hedge still more effectually avenged Lord Evandale, for the ball took place in the very midst of Basil Olifant's forehead, and stretched him lifeless on the ground. His followers, astonished at the execution done in so short a time, seemed rather disposed to stand inactive, when Burley, whose blood was up with the contest, exclaimed, "Down with the Midianites !" and attacked Halliday sword in hand. At this instant the clatter of horses' hoofs was heard, and a party of horse, rapidly advancing on the road from Glasgow, appeared on the fatal field. They were foreign dragoons, led by the Dutch commandant Wittenbold, accompanied by Morton and a civil magistrate.

A hasty call to surrender, in the name of God and King William, was obeyed by all except Burley, who turned his horse and attempted to escape. Several soldiers pursued him by command of their officer, but, being well mounted, only the two headmost seemed likely to gain on him. He turned deliberately twice, and discharging first one of his pistols, and then the other, rid himself of the one pursuer by mortally wounding him, and of the other by shooting his horse, and then continued his flight to Bothwell Bridge, where, for his misfortune, he found the gates shut and guarded. Turning from thence, he made for a place where the river seemed passable, and plunged into the stream, the bullets from the pistols and carabines of his pursuers whizzing around him. Two balls took effect when he was past the middle of the stream, and he felt himself dangerously wounded. He reined his horse round in the midst of the river, and returned towards the bank he had left, waving his hand, as if with the purpose of intimating that he surrendered. The troopers ceased firing at him accordingly, and awaited his return, two of them riding a little way into the river to seize and disarm him. But it presently appeared that his purpose was revenge, not safety. As he approached the two soldiers, he collected his remaining strength, and discharged a blow on the head of one, which tumbled him from his horse. The other dragoon, a strong, muscular man, had in the mean while laid hands on him. Burley, in requital, grasped his throat, as a dying tiger seizes his prey, and both, losing the saddle in the struggle, came headlong into the river, and were swept down the stream. Their course might be traced by the blood which bubbled up to the surface. They were twice seen to rise, the Dutchman striving to swim, and Burley clinging to him in a manner that showed his desire that both should perish. Their corpses were taken out about a quarter of a mile down the river. As Balfour's grasp could not have been unclenched without cutting off his hands, both were thrown into a hasty grave, still marked by a rude stone and a ruder epitaph.¹

While the soul of this stern enthusiast flitted to its account, that of the brave and generous Lord Evandale was also released. Morton had flung himself from his horse upon perceiving his situation, to render his dying friend all the aid in his power. He knew him, for he pressed his hand, and, being unable to speak, intimated by signs his wish to be conveyed to the house. This was done with all the care possible, and he was soon surrounded by his lamenting friends. But the clamorous grief of Lady Emily was far exceeded in intensity by the silent agony of Edith. Unconscious even of the presence of Morton, she hung

¹ Gentle reader, I did request of mine honest friend Peter Proudfoot, travelling merchant, known to many of this land for his faithful and just dealings, as well in muslins and cambrics as in small wares, to procure me on his next peregrinations to that vicinage, a copy of the Epitaphion alluded to. And, according to his report, which I see no ground to discredit, it runneth thus : —

Here lyes ane saint to prelates surly,
Being John Balfour, sometime of Burley,
Who stirred up to vengeance take,
For Solemn League and Covenant's sake,
Upon the Magns-Moor in Fife,
Did tak James Sharpe the apostate's life ;
By Dutchman's hands was hacked and shot,
Then drowned in Clyde near this saam spot.

¹ Note XX.'John Balfour, called Burley.

over the dying man; nor was she aware that Fate, who was removing one faithful lover, had restored another as if from the grave, until Lord Evandale, taking their hands in his, pressed them both affectionately, united them together, raised his face as if to pray for a "blessing on them, and sunk back and expired in the next moment

CONCLUSION.

I HAD determined to waive the task of a concluding chapter, leaving to the reader's imagination the arrangements which must necessarily take place after Lord Evandale's death. But as I was aware that precedents are wanting for a practice which might be found convenient both to readers and compilers, I confess myself to have been in a considerable dilemma, when fortunately I was honoured with an invitation to drink tea with Miss Martha Buskbody, a young lady who has carried on the profession of mantua-making at Ganderscleugh and in the neighbourhood, with great success, for about forty years. Knowing her taste for narratives of this description, I requested her to look over the loose sheets the morning before I waited on her, and enlighten me by the experience which she must have acquired in reading through the whole stock of three circulating libraries, in Ganderscleugh and the two next market-towns. When, with a palpitating heart, I appeared before her in the evening, I found her much disposed to be complimentary.

"I have not been more affected," said she, wiping the glasses of her spectacles, "by any novel, excepting the 'Tale of Jemmy and Jenny Jessamy' (21), which is indeed pathos itself; but your plan of omitting a formal conclusion will never do. You may be as harrowing to our nerves as you will in the course of your story, but, unless you had the genius of the author of 'Julia de Koubign6' (zz) never let the end be altogether overclouded. Let us see a glimpse of sunshine in the last chapter; it is quite essential."

"Nothing would be more easy for me, madam, than to comply with your injunctions; for, in truth, the parties in whom you have had the goodness to be interested, did live long and happily, and begot sons and daughters."

"It is unnecessary, sir," she said, with a slight nod of reprimand, "to be particular concerning their matrimonial comforts. But what is your objection to let us have, in a general way, a glimpse of their future felicity?"

"Eeally, madam," said I, "you must be aware that every volume of a narrative turns less and less interesting as the author draws to a conclusion,—just like your tea, which, though excellent hyson, is necessarily weaker and more insipid in the last cup. Now, as I think the one is by no means improved by the luscious lump of half-dissolved sugar usually found at the bottom of it, so I am of opinion that a history, growing already vapid, is but dully crutched up by a detail of circumstances which every reader must have anticipated, even though the author exhaust on them every flowery emthet in the language."

"This will not do, Mr. Pattieson," continued the lady; "you have, as I may say, basted up your first story very hastily and clumsily at the conclusion; and, in my trade, I would have coffered the youngest apprentice who had put such a horrid and bungled spot of work out of her hand. And if you do not redeem this gross error by telling us all about the marriage of Morton and Edith, and what became of the other personages of the story, from Lady Margaret down to Goose-Gibbie, I apprise you that you will not be held to have accomplished your task handsomely."

"Well, madam," I replied, "my materials are so ample that I think I can satisfy your curiosity, unless it descend to very minute circumstances indeed"

"First, then," said she, "for that is most essential,—Did Lady Margaret get back her fortune and her castle?"

"She did, madam, and in the easiest way imaginable, as heir, namely, to her worthy cousin, Ba'sil Olifant, who died without a will; and thus, by his death, not only restored, but even augmented, the fortune of her whom, during his life, he had pursued with the most inveterate malice. John Gudyill, reinstated in his dignity, was more important than ever; and Cuddie, with rapturous delight, entered upon the cultivation of the mains of Tillietudlem, and the occupation of his original cottage. But, with the shrewd caution of his character, he was never heard to boast of having fired the lucky shot which repossessed his lady and himself in their original habitations. 'After a' he said to Jenny, who was his only confidant, 'auld Basil Olifant was my leddy's cousin and a grand gentleman; and though he waa acting again the law, as I understand, for he ne'er showed ony warrant, or required Lord Evandale to surrender, and though I mind killing him nae mair than I wad do a muir-cock, yet it 's just as weel to keep a calm sough about it.¹ He not only did so, but ingeniously enough countenanced a report that old Gudyill had done the deed,—which was worth many a gill of brandy to him from the old butler, who, far different in disposition from Cuddie, was much more inclined to exaggerate than suppress his exploits of manhood. The blind widow was provided for in the most comfortable manner, as well as the little guide to the Linn ; and — "

" But what is all this to the marriage, — the marriage of the principal personages ?" interrupted Miss Buskbody, impatiently tapping her snuff-box.

" The marriage of Morton and Miss Bcllenden was delayed for several months, as both went into deep mourning on account of Lord Evandale's death. They were then wedded."

" I hope not without Lady Margaret's consent, sir?" said my fair critic. " I love books which teach a proper deference in young persons to their parents. In a novel the young people may fall in love without their countenance, because it is essential to the necessary intricacy of the story ; but they must always have the benefit of their consent at last. Even old Delville received Cecilia, though the daughter of a man of low birth."

" And even so, madam," replied I, " Lady Margaret was prevailed on to countenance Morton, although the old Covenantan, his father, stuck sorely with her for some time. Edith was her only hope, and she wished to see her happy; Morton, or Melville Morton, as he was more generally called, stood so high in the reputation of the world, and was in every other respect such an eligible match, that she put her prejudice aside, and consoled herself with the recollection that marriage went by destiny, as was observed to her, she said, by his most sacred Majesty, Charles the Second of happy memory, when she showed him the portrait of her grandfather Fergus, third Earl of Torwood, the handsomest man of his time, and that of Countess Jane, his second lady, who had a hump-back and only one eye. This was his Majesty's observation, she said, on one remarkable morning when he deigned to take his disjune — "

"Nay," said Miss Luskbody, again interrupting me, "if she brought such authority to countenance her acquiescing in a misalliance, there was no more to be said. — And what became of old Mrs. What's her name, the housekeeper? "

"Mrs. Wilson, madam? " answered I. " She was perhaps the happiest of the party; for once a year, and not oftener, Mr. and Mrs. Melville Morton dined in the great wainscotted chamber in solemn state, the hangings being all displayed, the carpet laid down, and the huge brass candlestick set on the table, stuck round with leaves of laurel. The preparing the room for this yearly festival employed her miud for six months before it came about, and the putting matters to rights occupied old Alison the other six, so that a single day of rejoicing found her business for all the year round."

"And Niel Blane?" said Miss Buskbody.

"Lived to a good old age, drank ale and brandy with guests of all persuasions, played Whig or Jacobite tunes as best pleased his customers, and died worth as much money as married Jenny to a cock laird. I hope, ma'am, you have no other inquiries to make, for really—"

"Goose-Gibbie, sir?" said my persevering friend, —"Goose-Gibbie, whose ministry was fraught with such consequences to the personages of the narrative? "

"Consider, my dear Miss Buskbody, (I beg pardon for the familiarity), — but pray consider, even the memory of the renowned Scheherazade, that Empress of Tale-tellers, could not preserve every circumstance. I am not quite positive as to the fate of Goose-Gibbie, but am inclined to think him the same with one Gilbert Dudden, alias Calf-Gibbie, who was whipped through Hamilton for stealing poultry,"

Miss Buskbody now placed her left foot on the fender, crossed her right leg over her knee, lay back on the chair, and looked towards the ceiling. When I observed her assume this contemplative mood, I concluded she was studying some farther cross-examination, and therefore took my hat and wished her a hasty good-night, ere the Demon of Criticism had supplied her with any more queries. In like manner, gentle Eader, returning you my thanks for the patience which has conducted you thus far, I take the liberty to withdraw myself from you for the present.

PERORATION.

IT was mine earnest wish, most courteous Reader, that the "Tales of my Landlord" should have reached thine hands in one entire succession of tomes, or volumes. But as I sent some few more manuscript quires, containing the continuation of these most pleasing narratives, I was apprised, somewhat unceremoniously, by my publisher that he did not approve of novels (as he injuriously called these real histories) extending beyond four volumes, and if I did not agree to the first four being published separately, he threatened to decline the article. (Oh, ignorance ! as if the vernacular article of our mother English were capable of declension!) Whereupon, somewhat moved by his remonstrances, and more by heavy charges for print and paper, which he stated to have been already incurred, I have resolved that these four volumes shall be the heralds or avant-couriers of the Tales which are yet in my possession, nothing doubting that they will be eagerly devoured, and the remainder anxiously demanded, by the unanimous voice of a discerning public. I rest, esteemed Reader, thine as thou shalt construe me,

JEDEDIAH CLEISHBOTHAM,

AUTHOR'S NOTES.

Note I. p. 20. — FESTIVAL OF THE POPINJAY.

The Festival of the Popinjay is still, I believe, practised at Maybole, in Ayrshire. The following passage in the history of the Somerville family, suggested the scenes in the text. The author of that curious manuscript thus celebrates his father's demeanour at such an assembly ; —

" Having now passed his infancie, in the tenth year of his age he was by his grandfather putt to the grammar school, ther being then att the toun of Delserf a very able master that taught the grammar, and fitted boyes for the colledge. Dura, ing his educating in this place, they had then a customs every year to solemnize the first Sunday of May with dancing about a May-pole, fyreing of pieces, and all manner of ravelling then in use. Ther being at that tyme feu or noe merchants in this pettie village, to furnish necessities tor the schollars sports, this youth resolves to provide himself elsewhere, so that he may appear with the braveat. In order to this, by break of day he rydes and goes to Hamiltoune, and there bestowes all the money that for a long tyme before he had gotten from his freinds, or had otherwayes purchased, upon ribbones of diverse coloures, a new hatt and gloves. But in nothing he bestowed his money more liberallie than upon gunpowder, a great quantitie whereof he buyes for his owne use, and to supplie the wantea of his comerades ; thus furnished, with these commodities, but une empty purse, he returnee to Delserf by seven a clock (haveing travelled that Sabbath morning above eight mylea), puttes on his cloathes and new hatt, flying with ribbones of all culloures ; and in this equipage, with his little phizie (fusee) upon his shoulder, he marches to the church yairdj where the May-pole was sett up, and the solennritie of that day was to be kept. There first at the foot-ball he equalled any one that played; but in handling hia piece, in chargeing and dischargeing, he was so ready, and shott so near the marke, that he farre surpassed all Ins fellow schollars, and became a teacher of that art to them before the thretteenth year of his oune age. And really, I have often admired hia dexterity in this, both at the exercizeing of his soulders, and when for recreatione. I have gone to the gunning with him when I was but a stripellng myself ; and albeit that passetyme was the exercize I delighted most in, yet could I never attaine to any perfectione comparable to him, This dayea sport being over, he had the applause of all the. spectatores, the kyndnesse of his fellow-condnciples, and the favour of the whole inhabitants of that little village."

Note II. p. 42. — SERGEANT BOTHWELL.

The history of the restless and ambitious Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell, makes a considerable figure in the reign of James VI. of Scotland, and First of England. After being repeatedly pardoned for acts of treason, he was at length obliged to retire abroad, where he died in great misery. Great part of his forfeited estate was bestowed on Walter Scott, first Lord of Buccleuch, and on the first Earl of Roxburghe.

Francis Stewart, son of the forfeited earl, obtained from the favour of Charles I. a decreet-arbitral, appointing the two noblemen, grantees of his father's estate, to restore the same, or make some compensation for retaining it. The barony of Crichton, with its beautiful castle, was surrendered by the curators of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch, but he retained the far more extensive property in Liddesdale. James Stewart also, as appears from writings in the Author's possession, made an advantageous composition with the Earl of Roxburghe. "But," says the satirical Scotstarvet, "male parta pejus dilabuntur; for he never brooked them [enjoyed them], nor was anything the richer, since they accrued to his creditors, and are now in the possession of Dr. Seaton. His eldest son Francis became a trooper in the late war ; as for the other brother, John, who was Abbot of Coldingham, he also disposed all that estate, and now has nothing, but lives on the charity of his friends."¹

¹ The Staggering Stnte of the Scots Statesmen for one hundred Tears, by Sir John Scot of Scots turret. Edinburgh, 1754. Pag' 154,

Francis Stewart, who had been a trooper during the great Civil War, seems to have received no preferment, after the Restoration, suited to his high birth, though, in fact, third cousin to Charles II. Captain Crichton, the friend of Dean Swift, who published his Memoirs, found him a private gentleman in the King's Life Guards. At the same time this was no degrading condition ; for Fountainhall records a duel fought between a Life Guardsman and an officer in the militia, because the latter had taken upon him to assume superior rank as an officer, to a gentleman private in the Life Guards. The Life Guardsman was killed in the rencontre, and his antagonist was executed for murder.

The character of Bothwell, except in relation to the name, is entirely ideal.

Note III. p. 50. — MUHDEREHS OF ARCHBISHOP SHARPB.

The leader of this party was David Hackston, of Rathillet, a gentleman of ancient birth and good estate. He had been profligate in his younger days, but having been led from curiosity to attend the conventicles of the nonconforming clergy, he adopted thpir principles in the fullest extent. It appears that Hackston had some personal quarrel with Archbishop Sharpe, which induced him to decline the command of the party when the slaughter was determined upon, fearing his acceptance might be ascribed to motives of personal enmity. He felt himself free in conscience, however, to be present; and when the archbishop, dragged from his carriage, crawled towards him on his knees for protection, he replied coldly, "Sir, I will never lay a finger on you." It is remarkable that Hackston, as well as a shepherd who was also present, but passive, on the occasion, were the only two of the party of assassins who suffered death by the hands of the executioner.

On Hackston refusing the command, it was by universal suffrage conferred on John Balfour of Kinloch, called Hurley, who was Hackston's brother-in-law. He is described "as a little man, squint-eyed, and of a very fierce aspect."—"He was," adds the same author, "by some reckoned none of the most religious ; yet he was always reckoned zealous and honest-hearted, courageous in every enterprise, and a brave soldier, seldom any escaping that came into his hands. He was the principal actor in killing that arch-traitor to the Lord and his Church, James Sharps."¹

Note IV. p. 98. — LOCKING THE DOOR DURING DINNER.

The custom of keeping the door of a house or chateau locked during the time of dinner, probably arose from the family being anciently assembled in the hall at that meal, and liable to surprise. But it was in many instances continued as a point of high etiquette, of which the following is an example :—

A considerable landed proprietor in Dumfries-shire, being a bachelor, without near relations, and determined to make his will, resolved previously to visit his two nearest kinsmen, and decide which should be his heir, according to the degree of kindness with which he should be received. Like a good clansman, he first visited his own chief, a baronet in rank, descendant and representative of one of the oldest families in Scotland. Unhappily the dinner-bell had rung, and the door of the castle had been locked before his arrival. The visitor in vain announced his name and requested admittance ; but his chief adhered to the ancient etiquette, and would on no account suffer the doors to be unbarred. Irritated at this cold reception, the old laird rode on to Sanquhar Castle, then the residence of the Duke of Queensberry, who no sooner heard his name than, knowing well he had a will to make, the draw-bridge dropped, and the gates flew open, the table was covered anew, his Grace's bachelor and intestate kinsman was received with the utmost attention and respect; and it is scarcely necessary to add, that upon his death, some years after, the visitor's considerable landed property went to augment the domains of the Ducal House of Queensberry. This happened about the end of the seventeenth century.

Note V. p. 123 — WOODEN MARE.

The punishment of riding the wooden mare was, in the days of Charles and long after, one of the various and cruel modes of enforcing military discipline. In front of the old guard-house in the High Street of Edinburgh a large horse of this kind was placed, on which now and then, in the more ancient times, a veteran might be seen mounted, with a firelock tied to each foot, atoning for some, small offence.

¹ See Scottish Worthies, Svo. Leith, 1816, Page 522.

There is a singular work, entitled "Memoirs of Prince William Henry, Duke of Gloucester" (23) (son of Queen Anne), from his birth to his ninth year, in which Jenkin Lewis, an honest Welshman in attendance on the royal infant's person, is pleased to record that his Royal Highness laughed, cried, crowed, and said Gig and Dy, very like a babe of plebeian descent. He had also a premature taste for the discipline as well as the show of war, and had a corps of twenty-two boys, arrayed with paper caps and wooden faworda. For the maintenance of discipline in this juvenile corps, a wooden horse was established in the Presence-chamber, and was sometimes employed in the punishment of offences not strictly military. Hughes, the duke's tailor, having made him a suit of clothes which were too tight, was appointed, in an order of the day issued by the young prince, to be placed on this penal steed. The man of remnants, by dint of supplication and mediation, escaped from the penance, which was likely to equal the inconveniences of his brother artist's equestrian trip to Brentford. But an attendant named Weatherly, who had presumed to bring the young prince a toy (alter he had discarded the use of them), was actually mounted on the wooden horse without a saildip, with his face to the tail, while he was plied by four servants of the household with syringes and squirts, till he had a thorough wetting. "He was a waggish fellow," Buys Lewis, "and would not lose anything for the joke's sake when he was putting his tricks upon others, so he was obliged to submit cheerfully to what was inflicted upon him, being at our mercy to play him off well, which we did accordingly." Amid much such nonsense, Lewis's book shows that this poor child, the heir of the British monarchy, who died when he was eleven years old, was, in truth, of promising parts and of a good disposition. The volume, which rarely occurs, is an octavo, published in 1789, the editor being Dr. Philip Hayes of Oxford.

Vote VI. p. 157,—ROMANCES OF THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.

As few, in the present age, are acquainted with the ponderous folios to which this age of Louis XIV. gave rise, we need only say that they combine the dulness of the metaphysical courtship with all the improbabilities of the ancient Romance of Chivalry. Their character will be most easily learned from Boileau's "Dramatic Satire," or Mrs. Lennox's "Female Quixote."

Note VII. p. 157. — SIR JAMES TURNER.

Sir James Turner was a soldier of fortune, bred in the civil wars. He was intrusted with a commission to levy the fines imposed by the Privy Council for nonconformity! in the district of Dumfries and Galloway. In this capacity he vexed the country so much by his exactions that the people rose and made him prisoner, and then proceeded in arms towards Mid-Lothian, where they were defeated at Pentland Hills, in 1666. Besides his treatise on the Military Art, Sir James Turner wrote several other works, the most curious of which is his Memoirs of his own Life and Times, which has just been printed, under the charge of the Bannatyne Club. (24)

Note VIII. p. 161. — JOHN GRAHAME DP CLAVERHDUSE.

This remarkable person united the seemingly inconsistent qualities of courage and cruelty, a disinterested and devoted loyalty to his prince, with a disregard of the rights of his fellow-subjects. He was the unscrupulous agent of the Scottish Privy Council in executing the merciless severities of the Government in Scotland during the reigns of Charles II. and James II. ; but he redeemed his character by the zeal with which he asserted the cause of the latter monarch after the Revolution, the military skill with which he supported it at the battle of Killiecrankie, and by his own death in the arms of victory.

It is said by tradition that he was very desirous to see and be introduced to a certain Lady Elphinstoun, who had reached the advanced age of one hundred years and upwards. The noble matron, being a stanch Whig, was rather unwilling to receive Claver's (as he was called from his title), but at length consented. After the usual compliments, the officer observed to the lady that having lived so much beyond the usual term of humanity, she must in her time have been many strange changes. "Hout na, sir," said Lady Elphin-

Btoun, "the world is just to end with me aa it began. When I was entering life, there was ane Knox deaving us a' wi' his clavers, and now I am ganging out, there is ane Claver'ae deaving ns " wi' his knocks"

"Clavers" signifying, in common parlance, idle chat, the double pun does credit to the ingenuity of a lady of a hundred years old.

Note IX. p. 222 — CORNET GRAHAMB.

There was "dually a young cornet of the Life Guards named Grahame, and probably some relation of Claverhouse, slain in the skirmish of Drumclog. In the old ballad on the battle of Bothwell Bridge, Claverhouse is said to have continued the slaughter of the fugitives in revenge of this gentleman's death.

" ' Haud up your hand,' then Mo urn oath said ;

¹ Gie quarters to those men for me ;'

But bloody Clavei'se swore an oath,

His kinsman's death avenged should be."

The body of this young man was found shockingly mangled after the battle, his eyes pulled out, and his features so much defaced that it was impossible to recognise him. The Tory writers say that this was done by the Whigs, because, finding the name Qrahame wrought in the young gentleman's neck-cloth, they took the corpse for that of Claver'se himself. The Whig authorities give a different account, from tradition, of the cause of Cornet Grahame's body being thus mangled. He had, say they, refused his own dog any food on the morning of the battle, affirming, with an oath, that he should have no breakfast but upon the flesh of the Whigs. The ravenous animal, it is said, flew at his master as soon as he fell, and lacerated his face and throat.

These two stories are presented to the reader, leaving it to him to judge whether it is most likely that a party of persecuted and insurgent fanatics should mangle a body supposed to be that of their chief enemy, in the same manner as several persons present at Drumclog had shortly before treated the person of Archbishop Sharpe, or that a domestic dog should, for want of a single breakfast, become so ferocious as to feed on his own master, selecting his body from scores that were lying around, equally accessible to his ravenous appetite.

Y'

NOTE X. p. 236. — PROOF AGAINST SHOT GIVEN BY SATAN.

The belief of the Covenanters that their principal enemies, and Claverhouse in particular, had obtained from the Devil a charm which rendered them proof against leaden bullets, led them to pervert even the circumstances of his death. Howie of Lochgoin, after giving some account of the battle of Killicraiki, adds:—

"The battle was very bloody, and by Mackay's third fire, Claverhouse fell, of whom historians give little account; but it has been said for certain that his own waiting-servant, taking a resolution to rid the world of this truculent bloody monster, and knowing he had proof of lead, shot him with a silver button, he had before taken off his own coat for that purpose. However, he fell, and with him popery and King James's interest in Scotland." ("God's Judgment on Persecutors," p xxxix)

Original note.—"Perhaps some may think this anent proof of a shot a paradox, and be ready to object here, as formerly, concerning Bishop Sharps and Dnlziel,—'How can the Devil have or give a power to save life?' etc Without entering upon the thing in its reality, I shall only observe, 1st, That it is neither in his power or of his nature to be a avaiour of men's lives; he is called Apoilyon the destroyer. 3d, That even in this case he is paid only to give enchantment against one kind of metal, and this does not save life; for the lead would not take Sharpe or Claverhouse's lives, yet etcel and silver would do it; and for Dnlziel, though he died not on the field, he did not escape the arrows of the Almighty." (Ibidem.)

Note XI. p. 239. — CLAVERHOUSE'S CHARGER.

It appears, from the letter of Claverhouee afterwards quoted, that the horse on which he rode at Drumclog was not black, but sorrel. The Author has been misled as to the colour by the many extraordinary traditions current in Scotland concerning Claverhouse's famous black charger, which waj generally believed to have been a gift to its rider from the Author of Evil, who is said to have performed the Cesarean operation upon its dam. This hone was BO fleet, and its rider BO expert, that they are said to have outstripped and coted, or turned, a bare upon the Bran-Law, near the head of Moffat Water, where the descent is so precipitous that no merely earthly horse could keep its ieet, or merely mortal -rider could keep the saddle.

There is a curious passage in the testimony of John Dick, one of the suffering Presbyterians, in which the author, by describing each of the persecutors by their predominant qualities or passions, shows how little their best-loved attributes would avail them in the great Day of Judgment. When he introduces Claverhouse, it is to reproach him with his passion for horses in general, and for that steed in particular which was killed at Dnimclug, in the manner described in the text :—

"As for that bloodthirsty wretch, Claverhouse, how thinks he to shelter himself that day 1 Is it possible the pitiful thing can be so mad as to think to secure himself by the fleetness of his horse (a creature he has SD much respect for, that he regarded more the loss of his horse at Drumming than all the men that fell there, and sure there fell prettier men on either aide than himself?) No, sure, could he fall upon a chemist that could extract the spirit out of all the horses in the world, and infuse them into his one, though he were on that horse never so well mounted, he need not dream of escaping " ("The Testimony to the Doctrine, Worship, Discipline, and Government of the Church of Scotland, &c., as it was left in write by that truly pious and eminently faithful, and now glorified Martyr, Mr. John Dick. To which is added, his last Speech and Behaviour on the Scaffold, on 5th March, 1634, which day he sealed this testimony." 57 pp. 4to. No year or place of publication).

The reader may perhaps receive some farther information on the subject of Comet Grahame's death and the flight of Claverhouse, from the following Latin lines, a part of a poem entitled, "Bellum Bothuellianum," by Andrew Guild, which exists in manuscript in the Advocates' Library:—

"Mona est occiduus, surgit ijui celsus in orifl, (Nomine Laudanum) fosais putBisque profundis
Quot acatet hie tellus, et aprico gramina tectus :
Hue collects (ait), numeroao milite cincta,
Turba farox, matres, pueri, innuptæque paella,
Quam parat egregia Gramua dispersere turma,

Venit et primo campo discedere cogit;
 Post hos et allos, CIEDO provolvit inert!;
 At numerusa cohors, campum dispersa per omnem,
 Circuinfusa, imt; turmasque, iudagine captu,
 Aggreditur; virtus non hie, neu profuit ensis;
 Cnmpueru fugam, viridi sed grammetectia,
 Precipitata pent, fuasis, pars ultima, quorum
 Cornipedes hssere luto, seaaore rejecto :
 Turn rabiosa cohors, miseren nescia, stratoa invadit laceratine viros : hie signifer, eheu I Trajectus glubulo, Grsmus, quo fortior alter,
 Inter Scotigenas fuerat, nee justiuur ullua :
 Hunc manibus rapuere feris, faciemque virilem
 Fnedarunt, lingua, auriculig, manibusque resectis,
 Aspera diffuse spargentes saxa, cerebro :
 Vix dnx ipse fuga salvo, namqvia exta trahebat
 Vulnere tardatus sonipes generosua hinute '
 Insequitur clamors cohort fanatica, namque
 Crudehs semper timidus, sl vicent untiuam."

MS. Bellum BothuellitMum.

Note XII. p. 250. — SKIRMISH AT DRUMOLOG,

This affair, the only one in which Claverhouse was defeated or the insurgent Cameronians successful, was fought pretty much in the manner mentioned in the text. The Realists lost about thirty or forty men. The commander of the Presbyterian, or rather Covenanting party, was Mr. Robert Hamilton, of the honourable house of Preston, brother of Sir William Hamilton, to whose title and estate he afterwards succeeded; but, according to his biographer, Howie of Lochgoin, he never took possession nf either, as he could not do BO without acknowledging the right of King William (an uncovenanted monarch) to the crown. Hamilton had been bred by Bishop Eurnet while the latter lived at Glasgow; his brother, Sir Thomas, having married a sister of that historian. "He was then," says the Bishop, "a lively, hopeful young man; but getting into that company and intoHheir notions, he became a crack-brained enthusiast."

Several well-meaning persons have been much scandalized at the manner in which the victors are said to have conducted themselves towards the prisoners at Drumclog. But the principle of these poor fanatics (I mean the high-flying, or Cameronian party), was to obtain not merely toleration for their Church, but the same supremacy which Presbytery had acquired in Scotland after the treaty of Rippon, betwixt Charles I. and his Scottish subjects, in 1640.

The fact is that they conceived themselves a chosen people, sent forth to extirpate the heathen, like the Jews- of old, and under a similar charge to show no quarter.

The historian of the Insurrection of Eothwell makes the following explicit avowal of the principles on which their general acted :—

" Mr. Hamilton discovered a great deal of bravery and valour both in the conflict with, and pursuit of, the enemy ; but when he and some other were pursuing the enemy, others flew too greedily upon the spoil, small as it was, instead of pursuing the victory; and some, without Mr. Hamilton's knowledge, and directly contrary to his express command, gave five of those bloody enemies quarter, and then let them go; this greatly grieved Mr. Hamilton when he saw some of Babel's brats spared, after that the Lord had delivered them into their hands, that they might dash them against the stones. Psalm cxxxvii. 9. In his own account of this, he reckons the sparing of these enemies, and letting them go, to be among their first steppiugs aside, for which he feared that the Lord would not honour them to do much more for him. ; and says that he was neither for taking favours from, nor giving favours to, the Lord's enemies." See "A true and impartial Account of the persecuted Presbyterians in Scotland, their being in arms, and defeat at Bnthwell Brigg, in 1679, by William Wilson, late Schoolmaster in the parish of Duuglaa." The reader who would authenticate the quotation, must not consult any other edition than that of 1697 ; for somehow or other the publisher of the last edition has omitted this remarkable part of the narrative.

Sir Robert Hamilton himself felt neither remorse nor shame for having put to death one of the prisoners after the battle with his own hand, — which appears to have been a charge against him by some whose fanaticism was less exalted than his own.

" As for that accusation they bring against me of killing that poor man (as they call him) at Drumclog, I may easily guess that my accusers can be no other but some of the house of Saul or Shimei, or some such risen again to espouse that poor gentleman (Saul) his quarrel against honest Samuel, for his offering to kill that poor man Agag, after the king's giving him quarter. But I, being to command that day, gave out the word that no quarter should be given ; and returning from pursuing Claverhouse, one or two of these fellows were standing in the midst of a company of our friends, and Rome were debating for quarter, others against it. None could blame me to decide the controversy, and I bless the Lord for it to this day. There were five more that without my knowledge got quarter, who were brought to me after we were a mile from the place as having got quarter, which I reckoned among the first atappings aside; and seeing that spirit amongst us at that time, I then told it to some that were with me (to my best remembrance, it was honest old John Nisbet), that I feared the Lord would not honour us to do much more for him. I shall only say this, — I desire to bless his holy name that since ever he helped me to set my face to his work, I never had, nor would take, a favour from enemies, either on right or left hand, and desired to give as few."

The preceding passage is extracted from a long vindication of his own conduct, sent by Sir Robert Hamilton, 7th December, 1685, addressed to the anti-Popish, anti-Prelatic, anti-Erastian, anti-sectarian, true Presbyterian remnant of the Church of Scotland; and the substance is to be found in the work or collection called, "Faithful Contendings displayed, collected, and transcribed by John Howie."

As the skirmish of Drumclog has been of late the subject of some inquiry, the reader may be curious to see Claverhouse's own account of the affair, in a letter to the Earl of Linlithgow, written immediately after the action. This gazette, as it may be called, occurs in the volume called "Dundee's Letters," printed by Mr. Smythe of Methven, as a contribution to the Bannatyne Club. The original is in the library of the Duke of Buckingham. Claverhouae, it may be observed, spells like a chambermaid.

FOR THE EARLK OF LINLITHBOW.

[OOMMANDER-IN-CHIEF of KINO CHARLES II.'S FORCES IN SCOTLAND.]

GLASKOW, Jun. the 1, 1879.

MY LORD, —Upon Saturday's night, when my Lord Rosse came into this place, I marched out, and because of the inao-lency that had been done tue nights before at Ruglen, I went thither and inquired for the names. So aoun as I got them, I sent OUT partya to sease on them, and found not only three of those rogues, but also ane intercomend minister called King. We had them at Strevan about six in the morning yesterday, and resolving to convey them to this, I thought that'we might make a little tour to see if we could fall upon a conventicle ; which we did, little to our advantage ; lor when we came in sight of them, we found them drawn up in batell, upon a most advantageous ground, to which there was no coining but through mosses and lakes. They wer not preaching, and had got away all there women and shildring. They consisted of four battaillons of foot, and all well armed with fusils and pitchforks, and three squadrons of horse. We sent both partys to skirmish, they of foot and we of dragoons ; they run for it, and sent down a battaillon of foot against them ; we sent threescore of dragoons, who made them run again shamtully ; but in end they perceiving that we had the better of them in skirmish, they resolved a generall engadgment, and imediatly advanced with there foot, the horse folowing; they came throught the lotche ; the greatest body of all made up against my troupe ; we kepted nur fyre till they wer within ten pace of us: they recaived our fyr, and advanced to shok; the first they gave us broght down the Coronet Mr. Crafford and Captain Bleith, besides that with a pitchfork they made such an openeing in my rone horse's belly that his guts hung out half an elle, and yet he caryed me af an myl ; which so rliacoraged our men that they sustained not the ahok, but fell into disorder. There horse took the occasion of this, and purseued us so hotly that we had no tym to rayly. I saved the atandarta, but lost on the place about night or ten men, besides wounded; but the dragoons lost many mof They ar not com esily af on the other side, for I sawe severall of them fall befor we cam to the shok. I mad the best retraite the confusion of our people would suffer, and I am now laying with my Lord Rosse. The toun of Streven drew up as we was making our retrait, and thocht of a pass to cut us off, but we took courage and fell to them, made them run, leaving a dousain on the place. What these rogues will dou yet I know not, but the contry was nocking to them from all hands. This may be counted the begining of the rebellion, in my opinion.

—I am, my lord, your lordship's most humble servant,

J. GRAHAME.

My lord, I am so wearied and so sleapy, that I have wryton this very confusedly.

Note XIII., p. 396 —ROYAL ARMY AT BOTHWELL BRIDGE.

A Cameronian muse was awakened from slumber o' this dole-ful occasion, and gave the following account of the muster of the royal forces, in poetry nearly as melancholy as the subject:—

They marched east through Lithgow-tuwn

For to enlarge their forces ;

And sent for all the north-country

To come, both foot and horses.

Montrose did come and Athole both,

And with them many mnre ;

And all the Highland Amorites

That bad been there before.

The Lowdien Mallisha ¹ they Came with their coats of blew ;

Five hundred men from London came,

Claid in a reddish hue.

When they were assembled one and all,

A full brigade were they,—

Like to a pack of hellish hounds,

Roremg after their prey.

When they were all provided well,

In armour and amonition,

Then thither wester did they cume,

Most cruel of intention.

The royalists celebrated their victory in stanzas of equal merit. Specimens of both may be found in the curious collection of "Fugitive Scottish Poetry, principally of the Seventeenth Century," printed for the Messrs. Laing, Edinburgh.

¹ Lothian Militia.

Note XIV., p. 403.—MODERATE PRESBYTERIANS.

The Author does not, by any means, desire that Found-text should be regarded as a just representation of the moderate Presbyterians, among whom were many ministers whose courage was equal to their good sense and sound views of religion. Were he to write the tale anew, he would probably endeavour to give the character a higher turn. It is certain, however, that the Cameronians imputed to their opponents in opinion concerning the Indulgence, or others of their strained and fanatical notions, a disposition not only to seek their own safety, but to enjoy themselves. Hamilton speaks of three clergymen of this description as follows :—

"They pretended great zeal against the Indulgence ; but alas I that was all their practice, otherwise being but Very gross, which I shall but hint at, in short. When great Cameron and those with him were taking many a cold blast and storm in the fields and among the cot-houses in Scotland, these three had for the most part their residence in Glasgow, where they found good quarter and a full table, which I doubt not but some bestowed upon them from real affection to the Lord's cause; and when these three were together, their greatest work was who should make the finest and sharpest roundel, and breathe the quickest jests upon one another, and to tell what valiant acts they were to do, and who could laugh loudest and most heartily among them ; and when at any time they came out to the country, whatever other things they had, they were careful each of them to have a great flask of brandy with them, which was very heavy to some, particularly to Mr. Cameron, Mr. Cargill, and Henry Hall. — I shall name no more" ("Faithful Contendings," p. 198).

Note XV., p. 412.—GENERAL DALZELL, USUALLY CALLED TOM DALZELL.

In " Crichton's Memoirs," edited by Swift, where a particular account of this remarkable person's dress and habits is given, he is said never to have worn boots. The following account of his rencounter with John Paton of Meadowhead showed that in action, at least, he wore pretty stout ones, unless the reader be inclined to believe in the truth of his having a charm which made him proof against lead. ^

"Dalzell," says Paton's biographer, "advanced the whole left wing of his army on Colonel Wallace's right. Here Captain Paton behaved with great courage and gallantry. Dalzell, knowing him in the former wars, advanced upon him himself, thinking to take him prisoner. Upon his approach, each presented his pistol. On their first discharge, Captain Paton, perceiving his pistol-ball to hop upon Dalzell's boots, and knowing what was the cause (he having proof), put his hand in his pocket for some small pieces of silver he had there for the purpose, and put one of them into his other pistol. But Dalzell, having his eye upon him in the mean while, retired behind his own man, who by that means was slain."

Note XVI., p. 447.

The principal incident of the foregoing chapter was suggested by an occurrence of a similar kind, told me by a gentleman, now deceased, who held an important situation in the Excise, to which he had been raised by active and resolute exertions in an inferior department. When employed as a supervisor on the coast of Galloway, at a time when the immunities of the Isle of Man rendered smuggling almost universal in that district, this gentleman had the fortune to offend highly several of the leaders in the contraband trade, by his zeal in serving the revenue.

This rendered his situation a dangerous one, and on more than one occasion placed his life in jeopardy. At one time in particular, as he was riding after sunset on a summer evening, he came suddenly upon a gang of the most desperate smugglers in that part of the country. They surrounded him, without violence, but in such a manner as to show that it would be resorted to if he offered resistance, and gave him to understand he must spend the evening with them, since they had met so happily. The officer did not attempt opposition, but only asked leave to send a country lad to tell his wife and family that he should be detained later than he expected. As he had to charge the boy with this message in the presence of the smugglers, he could find no hope of deliverance from it, save what might arise from the sharpness of the lad's observation, and the natural anxiety and affection of his wife. But if his errand should be delivered and received literally, as he was conscious the smugglers expected, it was likely that it might, by suspending alarm about his absence from home, postpone all search after him till it might be useless. Making a merit of necessity, therefore, he instructed and despatched his messenger, and went with the contraband traders, with seeming willingness, to one of their ordinary haunts. He sat down at table with them, and they began to drink and indulge themselves in gross jokes, while, like Mirabel in the "Inconstant,"¹ their prisoner had the heavy task of receiving their insolence as wit, answering their insults with good-humour, and withholding from them the opportunity which they bought of engaging him in a quarrel, that they might have EL pretence for imsuHiiig him. He succeeded for some time, but soon became satisfied it was their purpose to murder him outright, or else to beat him in such a manner as scarce to leave him with hie. A regard for the sanctity of the Sabbath evening, which still oddly subsisted among these ferocious men, amidst their habitual violation of divine and social law, prevented their commencing their intended cruelty until the Sabbath should be terminated. They were sitting around their anxious prisoner, muttering to each other words of terrible import, and watching the index of a clock, which was shortly to strike the hour at which, in their apprehension, murder would become lawful, when their intended victim heard a distant rustling like the wind among withered leaves. It came nearer, and resembled the Bound of a brook in flood chafing within its banks; it came nearer yet, and was plainly distinguished as the galloping of a party of horse. The absence of her husband, and the account given by the boy of the suspicious appearance of those with whom he had remained, had induced Mrs.——to apply to the neighbouring town for a party of dragoons, who thus providentially arrived in time to save him from extreme violence, if not from actual destruction.

Note XVII., p. 516.—SUPPOSED APPARITION DP MORTON.

This incident is taken from a story in the "History of Apparitions," written by Daniel Defoe, under the assumed name of Morton. To abridge the narrative, we are under the necessity of omitting many of those particular circumstances which give the fictions of this most ingenious author such a lively air of truth.

A gentleman married a lady of family and fortune, and had one son by her, after which the lady died. The widower afterwards united himself in a second marriage ; and his wife proved such a very stepmother to the heir of the first marriage that, discontented with his situation, he left his father's house and set out on distant travels. His father heard from him occasionally, and the young man for some time drew regularly for certain allowances which were settled upon him. At length, owing to the instigation of his mother-in-law, one of his draughts was refused, and the bill returned dishonoured.

After receiving this affront, the youth drew no bills and wrote no more letters, nor did his father know in what part of the world he was. The stepmother seized the opportunity to represent the young man as deceased, and to urge her husband to settle his estate anew upon her children, of whom she had several. The father for a length of time positively refused to disinherit his son, convinced as he was, in his own mind, that he was still alive.

At length, worn out by his wife's importunities, he agreed to execute the new deeds if his son did not return within a year.

During the interval there were many violent disputes between the husband and wife upon the subject of the family settlements. In the midst of one of these altercations, the lady was startled by seeing a hand at a casement of the window ; but as the iron hasps, according to the ancient fashion, fastened in the inside, the hand seemed to essay the fastenings, and being unable to undo them, was immediately withdrawn. The lady, forgetting the quarrel with her husband, exclaimed that there was some one in the garden. The husband rushed out, but could find no trace of any intruder, while the walls of the garden seemed to render it impossible for any such to have made his escape. He therefore taxed his wife with having fancied that which she supposed she saw. She maintained the accuracy of her sight; on which her husband observed that it must have been the devil, who was apt to haunt those who had evil consciences. This tart remark brought back the matrimonial dialogue to its original current. "It was no devil," said the lady, "but the ghost of your son come to tell you he is dead, and that you may give your estate to your bastards, since you will not settle it on the lawful heirs." "It was my son," said he, "come to tell me that he is alive, and ask you how you can be such a devil as to urge me to disinherit him ;" with that he started up and exclaimed, "Alexander, Alexander! if you are alive, show yourself, and do not let me be insulted every day with being told you are dead."

At these words the casement which the hand had been seen at, opened of itself, and his son Alexander looked in with a full face, and, staring directly on the mother with an angry countenance, cried, "Here !" and then vanished in a moment.

The lady, though much frightened at the apparition, had wit enough to make it serve her own purpose; for, as the spectre appeared at her husband's summons, she made affidavit that he had a familiar spirit who appeared when he called it. To escape from this discreditable charge, the poor husband agreed to make the new settlement of the estate in the terms demanded by the unreasonable lady

A meeting of friends was held for that purpose, the new deed was executed, and the wife was about to cancel the former settlement by tearing the seal, when on a sudden they heard a rushing noise in the parlour in which they sat, as if something had come in at the door of the room which opened from the hall, and then had gone through the room towards the garden-door, which was shut; they were all surprised at it, for the sound was very distinct, but they saw nothing

This rather interrupted the business of the meeting ; but the persevering lady brought them back to it. " I am not frightened," said she, "nut 1.—Come," said she to her husband, haughtily, "I'll cancel the old writings if forty devils were in the room ;" with that she took up one of the deeds, and was about to tear off the seal. But the double-ganger, or Eidolon, of Alexander was as pertinacious in guarding the rights of his principal, as his stepmother in invading them.

The same moment she raised the paper to destroy it, the casement flew open, though it was fast in the inside just as it was before, and the shadow of a body was seen as standing in the garden without, the face looking into the room, and staring directly at the woman with a stern and angry countenance. "HOLD !" said the spectre, as if speaking to the lady, and immediately closed the window and vanished. After this second interruption, the new settlement was cancelled by the consent of all concerned, and Alexander, in about four or five months after, arrived from the East Indies, to which he had gone four years before from London in a Portuguese ship

He could give no explanation of what had happened, excepting that he dreamed his father had written him an angry letter, threatening to disinherit him. ("The History and Reality of Apparitions," chap viii.)

Note XVIII., p. 568.—THE RETREATS OF THE COVENANTERS.

The severity of persecution often drove the sufferers to hide themselves in dens and caves of the earth, where they had not only to struggle with the real dangers of damp, darkness, and famine, but were called upon, in their disordered imaginations, to oppose the infernal powers by whom such caverns were believed to be haunted. A very romantic scene of rocks, thickets, and cascades, called Creehope Linn, on the estate of Mr. Menteath of Closeburn, is said to have been the retreat of some of these enthusiasts, who judged it safer to face the apparitions by which the place was thought to be haunted, than to expose themselves to the rage of their mortal enemies.

Another remarkable encounter betwixt the Foul Fiend and the champions of the Covenant is preserved in certain rude rhymes not yet forgotten in Ettrick Forest. Two men, it is said, by name Halbert Dobson and David Dun, constructed for themselves a place of refuge in a hidden ravine of a very savage character, by the side of a considerable waterfall, near the head of Moffat water. Here, concealed from human foes, they were assailed by Satan himself, who came upon them grinning and making mouths, as if trying to frighten them and disturb their devotions. The wanderers, more incensed than astonished at this supernatural visitation, assailed their ghostly visitor, boffeted him soundly with their Bibles, and compelled him at length to change himself into the resemblance of a pack of dried hides, in which shape he rolled down the cascade. The shape which he assumed was probably designed to excite the cupidity of the assailants, who, as Souters of Selkirk, might have been disposed to attempt something to save a package of good leather. Thus,

" Hab Dab and David Din, Dang the Deil ower Dabson's Linn."

The popular verses recording this feat, to which Burns seems to have been indebted for some hints in his "Address to the Deil," may be found in the "Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border," vol. ii

It cannot be matter of wonder to any one at all acquainted with human nature, that superstition should have aggravated, by its horrors, the apprehensions to which men of enthusiastic character were disposed by the gloomy haunts to which they had fled for refuge.

Note XIX, J). 575 --PREDICTIONS OF THE COVENANTERS.

The sword of Captain John Paton of Meadowhead, a Cameronian famous for his personal prowess, bore testimony to his exertions in the cause of the Covenant, and was typical of the oppressions of the times. "This sword, or short Bhabble" (sclabla, Italian) "yet remains," says Mr. Howie of Loch Goin. "It was then by hia progenitors" (meaning descendants,—a rather unusual use of the word) "counted to have twenty-eight gaps in its edge, — which made them afterwards observe that there were just as many years in the time of the persecution as there were steps or broken pieces in the edge thereof" ("Scottish Worthies," edit. 1797, p. 419).

The persecuted paity, as then- circumstances led to their placing a due and sincere reliance on Heaven, when earth was scarce permitted to bear them, fell naturally into enthusiastic credulity, and, as they imagined, direct contention with the powers of darkness, so they conceived some amongst them to be possessed of a power of prediction, which, though they did not exactly call it inspired prophecy, seems to have approached, in their opinion, very nearly to it. The subject of these predictions was generally of a melancholy nature ; for it is during such times of blood and confusion that—

"Pale-eyed prophets whisper fearful change."

The celebrated Alexander Peden was haunted by the terrors of a French invasion, and was often heard to exclaim, "Oh, the Monzies, the French Monzies" (for Monsieurs, doubtless), "how they run I How long will they run I O Lord i cut their houghs, and stay their running." He afterwards declared that French blood would run thicker in the waters of Ayr and Clyde than ever did that of the Highlandmen. Upon, another occasion he said he had been made to see the French inarching with their armies thiohgh the length and breadth of the land in the blood of all ranks, up to the bridle-reins, and that for a burned, broken, and buried covenant.

Gabriel Semple also prophesied. In passing by the house of Kenmure, to which workmen were making some additions, he said, "Lads, you are very busy enlarging and repairing that house ; but it will be burned like a crow's neat in a misty May morning," — which accordingly came to pass, the house being burned by the English forces in a cloudy May morning. Other instances might be added, but these are enough to show the character of the people and times.

Note XX, p. 589.—JOHN BALFOUR, CALLED BURLEY.

The return of John Balfour of Kinloch, called Burley, to Scotland, as well as his violent death in the manner described, is entirely fictitious. He was wounded at Bothwell Bridge, when he uttered the execration transferred to the text,—not much in unison with his religious pretensions. He afterwards escaped to Holland, where he found refuge, with other fugitives of that disturbed period. His biographer seems simple enough to believe that he rose high in the Prince of Orange's favour, and observes, "That having still a desire to be avenged upon those who persecuted the Lord's cause and people in Scotland, it is said he obtained liberty from the Prince for that purpose, but died at sea before his arrival in Scotland ; whereby that design was never accomplished, and so the land was never cleansed by the blood of them who had shed innocent blood, according to the law of the Lord, Gen. ix. 6, WTioso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed" ("Scottish Worthies," p. 522).

It was reserved for this historian to discover that the moderation of King William, and his prudent anxiety to prevent that perpetuating of factious quarrels which is called in modern times Reaction, were only adopted in consequence of the death of John Balfour, called Burley.

The late Mr. Wemyss of Wemyss Hall, in Fifeshire, succeeded to Balfour's property in late times, and had several accounts, papers, articles of dress, etc., which belonged to the old homicide.

His name seems still to exist in Holland or Flanders ; for in the Brussels papers of 28th July, 1829, Lieutenant-Colonel Balfour da Burleigh is named commandant of the troops of the King of the Netherlands in the West Indies.

MR. ANDREW LANG'S NOTES.

MR. ANDREW LANG'S NOTES.

1'3) p. 5. "Pentlani Hills." This affair was fought, in 1666, by "an honest, zealous handful." Mr. Peden accompanied them from Clydesdale, but "had a melancholy view of their end," and, very judiciously, "parted with them there." On being praised for his common-sense, he said, "Glory, glory to Goil that He sent me not to hell immediately, for I should have stayed with them, tho I should have been cut all to pieces" ("Biographia Presbyteriana," 1. 41, 42).

(4) p. ". "The Highlandmen did m 1677." "The Highland host," called in to dominate the Western shires, was commissioned on December 26, 1677, and invaded the West in 167B. The Highlanders lived at free quarters, and committed many robberies, but caused no armed rising, as perhaps had been expected. See Wodrow's "History of the Sufferings of the Church of Scotland," book ii. ch. xiii.

(5) p. 15. "Earl's Hall" Bruce of Earl's Hall, an ancient chateau on the spit of land on the northern side of St. Andrew's Bay. See "Proceedings of Scots Society of Antiquaries," iv. 387.

(6) p. 20. "The popinjay." A series of studies on the "Chevaliers du Papegai," of the Continent, by M. Plantadis, may be read in "La Tradition," 1891. Destroyed at the Revolution, the Archers of the Popinjay have renewed their youth, and in 1856 had a journal of their own. A charming account of a meeting is in the "Sylvie" of Gerard de Nerval. Most of these companies have now adopted firearms, but a few still practise with bow and arrow.

(7) p. 48. "Cornet Grahams, a kinsman of Claverhouse." There was no such kinsman. Claverhouse did not avenge him at Bothwell Brig, nor was Claverhouse married yet childless at the time, as he declares in the novel. The story of Cornet Grahame is derived from a legendary ballad in the "Border Minstrelsy."

(B) p. 50. "Archbishop Sharpe." According to a scurrilous biography of this prelate, apparently written by Hamilton of Kinkell, and published (according to the title-page of the reprint) in 167B, he was the grandson of a piper. It is suggested that he might give the ancestral pipes to some church to save the expense of an organ. His father was a notary, or writer, and sheriff-clerk in Banff.¹ He himself was educated at Aberdeen—"a very corrupt nursery." He was a regent in St. Andrews University, where he is said (but what do they not say ?) to have beaten a certain Mr. Sinclair at the high table in hall. He consorted with Mr. Blair, the same who believed that the Devil had given a sermon to a young divine (Wodrow). A woman declared that Sharpe was the father of her illegitimate child, which charge the Covenanters never tired of pressing. But savoury Mr. Peden had suffered from a similar accusation. In spite of this slander, Sharpe became minister of Crail, and received a harmonious call to Edinburgh, but was carried prisoner io London by the Cromwelhans. On the Restoration he was sent to town to represent the Kirk, returned to Edinburgh, went back to town, was won over to the re-establishment of episcopal government, and was made Archbishop of St. Andrews. Hence he was spoken of as "that unclean beast." A fanatic named Mitchell attempted to shoot him, and at length he was barbarously hacked to pieces, on Magus Moor, before the eyes of his daughter, who was wounded in trying to shield him. Wodrow revels in stories about the archbishop, telling how his wraith was seen in St. Andrews when he was in Edinburgh, how a witch accused him of converse with "the muckle black divel," and so forth. He was not a particularly scrupulous time-server, being more of a politician than a devotee. His conduct in the trial of his would-be murderer, Mitchell, who was induced to confess under promise of his life, and was then tried again, put in the boot, and hanged, enables us at least to understand the sentiments of Burley and Rathillet. His monument in the town church of St. Andrews has a curious marble relief representing his assassination. It may seem odd that this has not been destroyed, but a not inconsiderable sum of money was left on condition that the tomb should be preserved. A defence of Sharpe's memory may be read in Lyon's "History of Saint Andrews." "Sharpe" is more usually and correctly written "Sharp," but Scott prefers to spell it with the final "e."

¹ Lyon, in "History of Saint Andrews."

(9) p. 92. "An old woman, wrapped in her tartan plaid." There was a dispute among Scotch antiquaries as to the date of tartans as marks of clans, and as to the region where they were used. The Messrs. Hay Allan, who later called themselves Stuart, and claimed descent from Charles Edward, asserted that an old manuscript in vellum, the "Vestiarmm Scoticum," assigning clan tartans to the Scotts and other Lowland clans, was in their father's possession. In 1829 Scott was shown a modern copy of the manuscript, with comic illustrations by an amateur. There also existed a copy on paper of which the water-mark was earlier than the Union, and this was inspected by Sir Thomas Dick Lauder, who believed it to be genuine. The oldest copy, however, on vellum, was in the hands of the father of the Hay Allans (Thomas Allen, or J. J. Stuart Hay), who declined to submit it to inspection, in spite of his sons' wish. The manuscript was said to have been given to Charles Edward by the Fathers at the Scots College in Paris. To the Editor it seems probable that Robert Watson, an adventurer who was placed by Napoleon at the head of the Scots College in 1600, and who afterwards trafficked in Stuart relics and other antiquities, could have thrown light on the mystery of the manuscript. It was later published in a sumptuous volume by the two Stuarts, Allans, or Aliens. Scott's incredulity was fixed; he said, "The general proposition that the Lowlanders ever wore plaids is Difficult to swallow." There is an article on the subject in the "Quarterly Review," vol. lxxxi.; but the author of the article is not quite correctly informed. Sir Thomas Dick Lauder produced a good deal of lore in favour of ancient Border tartans, but could not shake Sir Walter's opinion. "'Tartan' itself," he Bays, "is unquestionably a Lowland word"—which, however, does not alter the case in either way. Old prints show both Highlanders and Lowlanders in tartan plaids ; but how far the colours of the tartan denoted certain clans at an early period is a matter much in dispute,

(10) p. 120. "The Scotch French guards." The history of this body of men, which has been written by Father Forbes Leith, S.J., will be more appropriately noticed in "Quentin Durward."

(11) p. 189. "Mr. Justice Overdo." In Ben Jonson's "Bartholomew Fair."

(12) p. 264. "Alford, Inverlochy, Auld Earn and Brig "Dee." Battles of Montroae, in 1643-1645. Inverlochy is described in "A Legend of Montrose."

(13) p. 4". "Whate'er he did was done with so much ease." From Dryden's "Absalom and Ahitophel."

(14) p. 412. "Dalzell's boots." A pair of ancient riding-boots, said to have been those of Dalzell, are preserved at his family's house of Lingo, near St. Andrews. Dr. McCrie had disputed his wearing of boots, on the evidence of Captain Creighton.

(15) p. 451. "It is the memory which the soldier leaves behind him, like the long train of light that follows the sunken sun." This beautiful phrase of Claverhouse's recurs in Lord Tennyson's lines "To J. S."

Hia memory long will live alone
In all our hearts, as mournful light
That broods above the fallen BUD,
And dwells in heaven half the night.

(16) p. 464. "Execution of Hackston of Rathillet" This was accompanied, according to Patrick Walker, with the most abominable circumstances of cruelty, not fit to be told. In fact, Scott's letter to his friend Richardson does not overstate the case : "As to Covenanters and Malignants, they were both, a Bet of cruel and bloody bigots, and had, notwithstanding, those virtues with which bigotry is sometimes allied. Their characters were of a kind much more picturesque than beautiful; neither had the least idea either of toleration or humanity ; so that it happens that, so far as they can be distinguished from each other, one is tempted to hate most the party which chances to be uppermost for the time " (Note to "Journal," ii. 404), In "The Tales of a Grandfather" may be found his matured and moderate ideas about the Covenant and its opponents. A Hackston of Rathillet fought on the Jacobite side in 1745. Thia hero's family name was really Halkerstoun. Rathillet, his family estate, till quite recently belonged to his descendants, or rather collaterals, on the distaff side.

(17) p. 469. "The Duke of Lauderdale." This nobleman is minutely described by his contemporary, Thomas Earl of Ailesbury, in his "Memoirs" (i. 14, 18), printed for the Roxburghe Club, 1890. As the volumes of the club are not easily procured, the sketch of Lauderdale may be reproduced; "The Lord Lauderdale, from the very beginning of the rebellion, was one of the most zealous in that bad and horrid cause. I cannot well tell the time of his conversion. . . . This lord was of a most extraordinary composition; he had learning, and was endowed with a great memory; as disagreeable in his conversation as was his person; his head was towards that of a Saracen fiery face, and his tongue too big for his mouth, and his pronunciation high Scotch—no Highlander like him; uttering bald jests for wit, and repeating good ones of others and ever spoiled them in relating them—which delighted the good king much. . . . I am sorry to say it, but he was of a most abject spirit when kept down." Lord Ailesbury then tells a story of a practical joke played by Charles on Lauderdale—a jest worthy of Panurge, and adds, "What were his counsels? Most pernicious to the king and kingdom, and to his native country in a most special manner."

Scott has not left the big tongue out of the portrait, and Claverhouse refers to Lauderdale's share in the rebellion.

(IB) p. 476. "Doomster." The office of "Bishop's Doomster" at St. Andrews lasted long, though all its functions but the wardenship of Gard Bridge were changed, and it remained in the same family till early in the nineteenth century.

(19) p. 519. "Delrio, Burthoog, and De l'Ancre." "Delni (Martini) Disquisitionum Magicarum libri VI.," 4^{to}, Mogunt. 1617. Pierre de l'Ancre, "L'Incredulits et Meacreance du Burtilege plainement convaincue." Paris, 1622. 4^{to}. Burthogge "Of the soul of the world, and of particular souls." London, 1699. Bvo.

(20) p. 575. "Burning of Kenmure House." Kenmura

Castle, the ancient seat of the Gorilons at the head of Loch Ken, in Gallowjiy, was burned by the forces of Cromwell in 1652-1633. If this is the burning referred to, Mr. Sempili began to prophesy early. Kenmure was not burned after the"5.

(21) p. 591. "Jemmy and Jenny Jessamy" This refers to "Jenny and Jemmy Jessamy," a novel by Eliza Haywood, which survived most of her tales.

(22) p. 592. "Julia de Roubigne." By Henry Mackenzie.

(23) p. 603. "Memoirs of Prince William Henry." These have been edited and reprinted by Mr. W. J. Loftie.

(24) p. 604. "Sir James Turner." The Bannatyne Club published his Memoirs in 1829. Being captured by the Covenanters, they told him that it was just to put him to death on the Sabbath-day—a thing generally opposed to their principles—because he had forced them "to goe to Church to hcare dumb dogs." However, he was let off with "a tedious discourse on the Covenant" from Mr. Welsh. "I called for a cup of ale, purposely that I might hear him say grace," saya this humorous Malignant. Over another cup of ale Mr. Robbison preached a very "bombastical" grace; "and if," he said to the Deity, "Thou wilt not be our secondarie, wa will not fight for Thee at all, for it is not our cause, but Thy cause." Sir James was present, as a prisoner of the Covenanters, at the battle of the Feutlands.

ANDREW LANa.

January 1893.

EDITOR'S NOTES.

PRELIMINARY CHAPTER.

P. 2. the Eclogues of Virgil Publius Vergilius Maro (70-19 B.C.) was a Roman poet of the Augustan age. Besides the Eclogues or Bucolics, he wrote also the Aeneid and Georgics.

the Odes of Horace. Quintus Horatius Flaccus (65-8 B.C.) was contemporary of Vergilius; besides Odes, he wrote Epodes, Satires, Epistles, and the Art of Poetry.

Gandercleoffh, an imaginary town, tho residence of Jedediah Clcishbotham (the protended editor of Tales of my Landlord)' situated on the rivnr Gander, in "the central part—the navel (sifan sit dicerc) of this our native realm of Scotland."

P. .1. doff (contraction of do, off), to put off, taku off.

bonnet, ace p. 43 note, and ooniparc Shakespeare's fiichnrddl, I. iv. 31 "Off gors his bonnet to an oyster-wench." To vail (or vale) the bonnet is also a common expiession "to take it off with respect." Cooper • "All to whom they be shewed, do vail their bonnets." Raleigh: "It would make nations to vail the bonnet to England," etc. [See Murray.]

P. 5. battle of Fentland Hills, see p. 222 note.

H amp den. John Hampdcn, a gentleman of Buckinghamshire, refused to pay ship-money in rpsert of twenty shillings due from land in the parish of Stoke Mandcville. Hi' was brought to tnal "I 1638 before twelve judges. He lost his case by seven votes against five. He was a member of the long Parliament, and distinguished himself by his activity in the first weeks of the civil war, but was killed at Chalgrov' in Oxfordshire when trying to prevent the retrpat of a body of Parliamentarian cavalry after a skirmish with the Royalists on 18th June, 1643. Cf. Gray's Eleyy .

" Some village Hampdtm, that, with dauntless breast,
The little tyrant of his firds withstood,
Some mutis inglorious Milton here may rest,
Somo Cromwrl guiltless of his country's blood."

Hooper, John (b. 1475, d. 1554), bishop of Gloucester and Worcester, was bondemnod for heresy, and burned at Gloucester. [See Foxo's Martyrs, etc.]

Latimer, Hugh (b. 1470, d. 1555), adopted at Cambridge the views ot the New Learning, was made Bishop nf Worcester in 1535, was cast into prison for contumacy in 1541, and remained thuro during the last few years of Henry VIII.'s reign (1541-1547) ; was set at liberty by Edward VI ; but on the accession of Maiy was again thrown into prison and was released only to soffer martyrdom with Ridley at Oxford (16th October, 1555). [See Foxe's Martyr', etc.]

P. 6. weather-side, the windward sidu of a ship.

march-dike, a boundary wall. (A.S. mearc, mark, sign, limit, boundary); the plural marches is often used for borders; cf. the marches of Wales; the great Anglican kingdom of Marcia means the land of marchmen, the people on the frontier , . . Dikt is used not only for a ditch, but also for a, wall or mound thrown up ; cf. fauld-dike, p. 122 note.

P. 7. gramochea, gramaahea, (1) gaiters reaching to the knees; (2) a kind of stockings used instead of boots (Fr. yamachea).

'cranks, a sort of bridle often used by country people in riding. It has on each side a piece of wood joined to a halter, to which a bit is sometimes added; but more frequently a kind of wooden noose resembling a muzzle [Jamieson].

sunk, (1) such a seat as may be used as a couch; (2) a grassy seat; (3) a wreath of straw used as a cushion, or a load saddle.

P. ". staw, to surfeit. Bolg. het terjen me stoat: I am disgusted at it [Jamieson].

dree, dre, drey, to endure.

monzies, corruption of French monneur, messieura.

the glens of Ayr, and the kenna of Galloway. At one time Kirkcudbright and Wigton, and parts of Ayr and Dumfries, were joined into one kingdom of Galloway. The glens of Ayr and kcnns of Galloway in this passage correspond to the Glcnkuns in the Introduction. See p. xlv and note.

1677, this probably refers to "the Highland Host," of whom Wodrow writes that there were assembled at Stilling "such a number of Highlandeis—a barbarous, savage people, accustomed to rapine and spoil—as might overrun and depopulate the Western Shires "

Cleishbotham. See note on Gandercleugh, p. 2, and also Editor's Introduction Publication p xll.

P. 13. deer-hair, deer's hair, heath clubrush, or bull-rush.

P. 16. our only Scottish tragedy. Uvitglax, written by John Home, a minister of the Church of Scotland (1724-1808), and first played in Edinburgh in 1756. Its production offended the Presbytery so much that the author found it expedient to resign his living and become a layman. The bpst'known lines in it are :

" My name is Norval; on the Grampian hills
My father feeds his flocks : a frugal swam,
Whose constant cares were to increase his store,
And keep his only son, myself, at home."

CHAPTER II.

P. 17. tabor, a drum ; this word is of the same origin (perhaps onomatopoeitic) as tambuor, tambourine, timbrel.

P. 18. Calvinists, named after John Calvin (or Chauvin) who was born at Noyon in Picardy in 1509. Adopting the reformed doctrines he fled to Angoulême where he composed his Institutio Christianas Religionis in 1533 ; he afterwards settled in Geneva where he died 27 May, 1564. The chief distinguishing features of Calvinism are (1) Predestination, or particular election, (2) Irresistible Grace, (3) Original sin, or the total depravity of the natural man. (4) Particular redemption. (5) Final perseverance of the Saints. (6) The Spiritual presence alone in the Eucharist. (7) The independence of the Church.

wappen-scnaw, literally a show of weapons, is explained in the next few lines of the text For the etymology of the word compare wapentake, a division of Yorkshire, similar to that known elsewhere as a hundred • wapen, arms, tacan, to touch ; it was the custom of each vassal when attending the assemblies of the distinct "to touch the spear of his over-lord in token of homage."

crown-vassal, a tenant-in-chief, holding fief or allotment of land direct from the king esprit de curpa, pride in maintaining the reputation of the society to which yuu belong.

P. 19. sheriff is an officer of great antiquity, his name being derived from Saxon scire, ycrffa, the reeve, bailiff, or officer of the shire. He was the Chief County Magistrate; and in the time of the Norman Kings the Magistrate assisted by his subordinate officers, the Constables and Bailiffs, wielded his powers with equal disregard for the King's authority and for the liberties and rights of the common people.

P. 20. popinjay (Ital. papagatfo, O Fr. papergan, popeyay, Sp. papagnyo, etymologically a talking cock, a parrot) is explained in the text.

fusse, a small light musket, often written fusil (Fr. fusil; Ital. fucite, focile, from Ital Joco, fuoco, fire, Lat. focus).

carabine, a kind of fire arm, often written carbine, intermediate between a musket and a pistol in length and weight, carried by mounted troops (corrupted from O. Fr. colabrien, culabrin, a sort of light-armed soldier, connected with O. Fr. calabre, a war-engine used for besieging towns; L. Lat. chadabula, a war engine for throwing stones ; Gr. καταβολή, καταβάλλειν).

change-house, a Scotch public-house. "When the Lowlanders want to drink a cheerupping cup, they go to the public-house called the change-house and call for a chopin of two-penny" (Smollett).

Landau, a four-wheeled carriage, the top of which may be thrown back, invented at Landau in Germany.

barouche, a four-wheeled carriage with a falling top, a seat on the outside for the driver, two seats on the inside arranged for four persons to sit facing each other, and a seat at back for footmen. (Ital. barovcio, beroccio ; Ger. barutache ; L. Lat. birotun, from bis, twice, rota, wheel, originally two-wheeled.)

tilbury (probably from Tilbury-fort in the county of Essex), a kind of gig or two-wheeled carriage, without a top or cover.'

P. 21. tie-wig, a wig having a tie or ties, or one having eoma of the curls tied up ; also a wig tied upon the bond.

blunderbuss, a short gun with a largo bore. Skeat Hays that it is a singular corruption of Du. Donderbua, which should rather have been turned into iktuidsrbms. Gcr. donnebusche.

weeds (A.8. waed), clothing, was by Chaucer anil others usI'd of the attiru of cither men or woman : nowadays it is restricted to the phrase "widows' weeds."

P. 22. palfrey, a saddle-horse Brachet quotes the various forms parauredus, purafredus, putlafredua. O. Fr. palefried.

quota, the part or share assigned to each. Ital. quota, a share; Lat. quota, (pais) how much.

Jack-boots, large boots coming above the knees, such as aro worn by fishermen nowadays.

Episcopalian, an upholder of that form of Ecclesiastical government in winch diocesan bishops are established as distinct from and superior to priests or presbyters.

recusants, literally one obstinate in refusal, one that stands stubbornly out against general practice or opinion: then especially one that refuses to acknowledge the supremacy of the king in matters of religion, e, g. a popish recusant: or one that reuses communion with the Church of England, a non-conformist.

commination (Fr. comminution; Lat. zomminitio, from con and minan to threaten), literally a threatening, then a denunciation of punishment, especially of divine vengeance.

carles, ceorls, churls, country people, then rough riulo clowns.

gear (A S. geariua, clothing; geareman, to prepare) includes all sorts of instruments, tools, furniture and apparel, in short any kind of movable property.

Candlemas, the 2nd of February, is so-called because on that day in the Papal Church a mass was celebrated and candles were consecrated fur the Church processions.

fowler and falconer, the former is a sportsman that pursues wild fowl; the latter breeds and trains hawks for the same purpose.

P. 23 Montrose, the Royalist leader of the Scotch, who defeated the Covenanters under the Marquess of Argylo at Tippiarmuir, Inverlochy and Kilsyth.

latitudinarian, in tha time of Charles II. a member of the Church of England who adopted more liberal (or, as his opponents thought, more lax) notions with regard to Church Government and Church Doctrines than generally prevailed at that tune.

troupe doree, gilded troop, brilliant band, used ironically here ; of. "jeunease duree."

tuff, properly leather prepared from the akin of the buffalo ; also the skins of oxen, elka, and other animals dressed in the same manner.

colic, an acute pain in the stomach (κώλη).

Hair straits a¹ mcht, sore trouble in the night.

ffanff, go.

nae sic, no such.

P. 24 braw callant, bravo lad ; braw is applied to anything fine ; cf. "a braw timo D' night and a bonny," p. 37.

lackey. Fr. laquaw, Sp. lacaio, a livery servant in immediate attendance on the person of his master. In O. Sp. it was written alticayo and .signified one going on foot, a groom, a soldier of light infantry.

the unfortunate field of Worcester; the Scots army which came to England to re-instate Charles II. was defeated by Cromwell at Worcester on 3rd September, 1651. Cromwell called it his "crowning mercy." Milton speaks of this victory as "Worcester's laureate wreath."

P. 25 buxom (A.S. buyan to bow) originally meant yielding, pliable, obedient; hence it came to mean lithe, comely, vigorous, healthy; and also, gay, jolly, frolicsome.

should their scale once more kick the beam, if their opponents should have the greater weight and influence in public affairs; cf. Milton, Par. Lost, iv, 1004.

"The latter quick up flew, and kickt the beam,"

P. 26. for the nonce (A.S. for than CMICE), for the once, for the occasion.

Calprenede. Qautier de Costes, Seigneur de la Calprenede (1610-1663), was by birth a Gascon and educated at Toulouse: he wrote romances, Cldopatre, Cassandre, Pharamand, and also tragedies, la mort de Mithridate, le Comte d'Essex, Bradrimante, etc.

Cleopatra was published 111 parts, of which the earliest appeared in 1646, and when completed the whole was printed in twelve volumes 8vo. The unmerciful length of this work need not be wondered at, for it comprehends three immense and in a great measure unconnected romances with about half a dozen minor stories or episodes which have little relation to the three main histories or to each other [Dunlop]. An English translation of Cldopatrt by Robert Loveday was published in London in 1663.

Madeleine de Scuderi was born in 1607 at Havre ; she spent most of her life at Paris and died there in 1701 ; she wrote numerous poems, also romances; the best known of her romances are Ibrahim, ou l'illustre Bawa (published in 1635) and Artamne ou le Grand Cyrus (1649); this is the longest of all French heroic romances and reaches ten octavo volumes and 6,679 pages [Dunlup], An English translation of le Grand Cyrus was published in London in 1653. Scudern wrote also Clelie on l'Histoire, Romaine, and Mathilde d'Agmlar.

CHAPTER III.

P. 28. Ewhow, an interjection.

thae fearless follies, these follies lacking all fear of God.

Presbyterian, one that maintains the validity of ordination and government by presbyters. (See Green's Snort History of the English people, p. 454, etc.)

P, 29. chasseur, strictly huntsman, here equivalent to marksman or sportsman (i.e. chasseur nu tir) and synonymous with tirailleur on p. 31.

P. 31. with the obedient start which poor Malvolio ascribes to his imaginary retinue, the allusion is to the passage in Twelfth Night, where Malvolio, the Steward, imagines himself to be Count Malvolio and married to Olivia; he describes how he will "ask for my kinsman Toby," and then continues "seven of my people, with an obedient stait, make out for him" (Act II. sc. v. 64).

P 32. Dunbar lies on the shore between Berwick and Edinburgh; here Cromwell won a signal victory against the Scots on 3rd Sep., 1650.

Inverkeithing, in Fifeshire; in 1317 a battle was fought here between the Scots, under the Earl of Fife, and the English. Fife was at first driven back, but his men being rallied, by William Sinclair, Bishop of Dunkeld, at last drove the English back to their ships.

Marston Moor, between York and Knaresborough: here the Cavaliers under Newcastle and Rupert were completely routed by Manchester and Cromwell on 2nd July, 1644.

At Phylliphaugh Montrose was defeated by the Covenanters in 1645, about three months after the battle of Naseby.

P. 33. nomenclator, a person that calls persons or things by their names. In Rome candidates for office were attended each by a nomenclator, to inform them of the names of the persons they met.

umquhile, (1) sometimes, at times; (2) used distributively "I the sense of now as contrasted with then"; (3) some time ago, formerly. Connected with A.S. whilum, whilome, etc.

hypochondriac, pertaining to hypochondria, low spirited; hypochondria is a medical term for a mental disorder arising generally from digestive derangement, and producing melancholy and depression in the person affected.

disjune, corruption of dejeuner, breakfast.

P. 34. Montrose, BCD p. 23 note.

P. 35. casque (akin to cask and casket), a helmet: the Spanish casco signifies a skull, crown of a hat, helmet, cask or wood vessel for holding liquids, hull of a ship, shell or carcase of a house. It seems generally to signify case or hollow receptacle; and perhaps is derived from Lat. capio to hold.

full tilt; to lilt, is to joust, or ride at each other with blunt lances; hence to run full tilt against anyone is to run against him with the entire force of the body. A S. teallian, tealtrian, tilt, to totter, vacillate.

Orlando: the hero of Ariosto's play, Orlando Furioso, described as "the model of a true knight, high-minded, generous, compassionate and valiant."

P. 36. "her diminutive man-at-arms stripped of his lion's hide," is this a reminiscence of Shakespeare's King John, HI. l. 128?

gens d'aimeris, generally spelled gendarmerie, constabulary, grace-cup, properly a large cup in a monastery or college passed round the table after Grace is said.

CHAPTER IV.

P. 37. galtbed, to prepare, to make ready, to dress (A.S.). Still in use in the North, and explained in the provincial glossaries, "preparation: readiness; to bring a horse up with great care; the trapping of a horse; to clothe or furnish, to repair, condition, riches." Oraithing, clothing, equipment [HalliwellJ].

gear, see p. 22 note.

ony, any; wha, who; sail, shall; sic, such.

weir, wer, war; weir-men and we,ir-hore, are often written as one word.

galloway, a small but hardy species of horse originally bred in Galloway in Scotland.

dirk, a dagger; Sc. durk; G. dolch; Sw. dolk.

chanter, strictly the tenor or treble pipe in a bagpipe; here it is used for the bagpipe itself.

mark, an old Scotch coin worth 13s. 4d.; English mark.

modicum (Lat. modinw), a small quantity.

P. 3B. change-house, see p. 20 note.

Howff, the name of Blane's public house. Halliwell gives a word Howfe meaning a hood or coif; this may perhaps be the same word; other public houses called after head-dresses are the Crown, the Mitre (Oxford), the Hat and Fuathor (Durham), the Old Hat (Ealing). For another explanation see p 542 note ktrkyard, churchyard.

douce, douse, (1) sedate ; (2) modest, opposed to wantonness ; (3) of a respectable character. Fr. doux, douce, mild, gentle.

Whig, one of a political party which originated in England in the 17th century, and advocated the rights of the people in opposition to the royal prerogatives claimed by the court party of Chailea I and II. The term is derived from whig, whey, the drink of the Scottish Covenanters, or from whiggtn, to drive hoiscs (iphtt, yamorBf one who drives horses, being contracted to whig), according to others from the initial letters of " we hope "I God " as a motto of the club from which this party took its rise.

Tory, an Irish word denoting a robber, or from toraë, give me (qc your money), a term of reproach appliöd by the country to the nourt party in the latter part of the reign of Charles II ; the word first occurs in English history in 1679 during the struggle occasioned by the Exclusion Bill.

baith up the street and down the street, both up and down the stiei-t; a pruvoibial expression meaning throughout tho village or town, among all the neighbours.

Huang, crowded, busy.

P. 39. lawing, the reckoning, account

Cornet was the lowest commissioned officer of cavalry : the title is obsolete now.

eident, attentive, diligent fash, trouble, care; also a verb ; used in the North and in Lincolnshire.

chields, lads, young fellows.

they pay ane some gate or other, they pay one somehow or other.

htunle or hummel, wanting horns.

byre, a cow-house.

reiving, plundering.

loons, fellows. Halliwell gives loon an idle fellow; a rascal; a country clown ; a low dirty person.

gaed, went, perf. of gae, to go.

tawpie, a foolish woman; generally implying the idea of inaction and slovenliness.

bestial, beasts, cattle.

dour, doure, (1) hard, (2) bold, intrepid, (3) hardy, (4) inflexible, obstinate, (5) stern, (6) severe, applied to the weather. Lat. durus.

Stour-looldng, severe, fierce.

ingle (Lat. igniculus, diminutive of ignis, fire), fire or fire-place.

jalouse, suspect.

was ower sair travailed, was overworked.

cannily, shrewdly, cleverly.

Bpeering, asking, inquiring. Spere, apeir, spyre, (1) to search out, (2) to investigate, (3) to ask, inquire. A. S. Bpyrian, to inquire.

daffing, fully and fun. Daffin is still used in Northumberland for merriment.

P. 40. hostler, ostler, is used correctly here to denote the keeper of an inn, but is now applied to the servant at an inn who looks after the horses; it is connected etymologically with Lat hoyws, Fr. hostel, and hotel, Eng. hospital, hostel, hotel, etc.

when the malt begins to get aboon the meal, when the fumes of the beer begin to gut above their food and so into their heads.

drouthy, thirsty.

browst, brewing ; *sma*¹ browst, small beer.

lounder ilk ither, to beat, strike, belabour each other. Haliwell gives "lown, to beat, thrash. (North.) It is also pronounced founder "

the redder gets aye the warst lick in the fray, the peace-maker gets most blows. Red means to put in order, to clear or put to rights, to clean (North.), and also to assuage or appease (Cumb.), [Hulliwel]. Redder may be a substantive from the above verb ; or perhaps it means an adviser, connected with rede, advice, counsel, A.S. itied doudling-the bag- o' wind a' day, pressing the distended bag of the bagpipe with his arm all day.

spence. A pantry, buttery, or cellar; this word denominates any convenient place for keeping provisions, sometimes only a safe or cupboard at others a pantry, or an eating-room in a farm-house, or even the refectory of a monastery : cf. Tennyson, " The Talking Oak "—

" Ere yet, in scorn of Peter's pence,
And number'd bead and shrift,
Bloff Harry broke into the spence
And turned the cowls adrift."

Laird, a proprietor of land ; properly the lord of the manor.

round into his lug, whisper into his ear. Rmind means to counsel secretly; to roume, Dr whisper (A.S. runian) ; cf. " rounded in the ear, with that same purpose-changer." Shakespeare, Kvny John, II. ii. 267.

blate, shy, bashful, timid. North. [Halliwel].

waught (A.S. weaht), a large draught of any liquid. Of.

"Tak' a right gude willy waught For auld lang syne."

bannock, a thick round cake of bread, not a loaf. At Worsley, Co. Lane., it is thus made—oatmeal and water two parts, treacle one part, baked about one fourth of an inch thick and a few inches in diameter. Kay explains it "an oat cake kneaded with water only, and baked in the embers" [Halliwell] ninny, a term of endearment; a corruption of honey.

F. 41. two chapplna "yill, two quarts of ale. Ohappin is a liquid measure about a quart. See p. 20, note on change-house.

mutchMn stoup. Mutchkin, a Scottish liquid measure, containing four gills, and forming one-fourth of the Scottish pint. Stoup) in Scotland a pitcher for carrying water, narrower at the top than at the bottom, and hence applied to any deep narrow vessel, as a gill stoup, a pint stoup, and a mutchkin stoup, etc.

ci-devant, former, late.

the celebrated John Grahame of Claverhouse's regiment of Life Guards, etc. See Scott's own note on Claverhouae, p. 604.

P. 43. bumpkin, a clumsy awkward clown (perhaps connected with bump), a swelling, or the same word as bumkin, a nautical term, a loff-block.

kail-worm, kail or kale is the generic name for colewort, and is applied to all kinds of cabbage. Kail worm is perhaps synonymous with Caterpillar, used contemptuously of a green lad.

the colt foaled of an acorn, etc. See Scott's Note on Wooden Mare, p. 602.

Blue Bonnet, a head-dress like our Tarn o' Shanter cap, made of very thick blue wool. All Lowlanders wore this cap; the Highlanders had a plaid worked round the head-piece. The Glengarry is a modern introduction; cf.

"March, march, Etnck and Teviotdale;
March, march, Eskdale and Liddlesdale,
All the Blue Bonnets are bound for the Border."⁹ ingle-nook, chimney corner, corner by the fireside. (F. 39, note.)

hill-folk or refractory Presbyterians. See Scott's Intro., p. xlii, etc.

P. 45. birdlng-placea, fowling pieces, guns.

broadsword, as its name implies, is a sword with a broad blade and a cutting edge.

backsword is a sword with one sharp edge as opposed to the two-edged sword.

rapier (Fr. rapide, akin to L. Ger. rapen; H. Oer raffen, to snateh, pluck, fight), a light sword with very narrow blade, used only in thrusting, introduced from Spain and formerly worn by gentlemen on all occasions.

noble, a gold com, value 6s. 8d. sterling.

zounds, an oath ; corruption of " God's wounds."

pitch the bar; put the atone; throw the axle-tree—Various kinds of pastimes i squiring strength and skill.

Casting of the bar is frequently mentioni-d by the romance writers as one part of a hero's education, and a poet of the sixteenth century thinks it highly ctmimendable for kings and pnnces, by way of exercise, to throw " the stone, the barre, or the plummet." Henry VIII., after his accession to the throne, according to Hall and Holinshed, retained "the casting of the barre" amng his favourite amusements. The sledge hammer was also used for the same purpose as the bar and the stone ; and among the rustics, if Barclay be correct, an axle-Lree [Strutt's Sports and Pastimes].

P. 46. Rabshakeh (prince of the cup-bearers) was sent with Tartan and Rabsaris and a great host by the King of Assyria against Jerusalem in the days of Hezekiah (2 Kings, xviii. 17, etc.) • used here to denominate any boastful oppressor, close, a grapple in wrestling.

P. 47. bilbo, a sword : strictly a blade from Bilboa.

Provost of the Borough, the chief magistrate of the Borough; the Provost of Edinburgh or Glasgow corresponds to the Mayor of other cities or towns. (O. Fr. pruvoat, prsvost; Ger. probst ; Lat. prwpoaituu, set over.)

P. 48. Halbert, a long-handled axe (from Swiss halm, the helve or handle of an axe, and O.H.G. fxirten; G. barte, a broad axe).

P. 49. Merk or Mark, an old com worth about 13s. 4d. sterling.

The test, the teat and the qualification, etc. . this refers to the cup drunk to the Archbishop, when the stranger added the words "May each prelate in Scotland soon be as the Right Reverend James Sharpe." (Pp, 44 and 45.)

Skellies. Halliwell gives skelly to squint, to look awry. (North.)

CHAPTER V.

P. 51. Mummery (akin to Ger. mummen, to mask or moffle), a masking, sport, diversion, generally used contemptuously of some low Doffoonery.

P. 52. wot, know; A.S. witan, to know; whence, wit, to wit, witty, etc. In Chaucer we have wite and wyte, in Spenser weet.

The present tense was conjugated thus 1st wot, wool ; 2nd wosl ; 3rd wot, wool • pi. tin fai, wyten ; and the preterite was wwtK.

Sectaries, membeis of a .serf.

P. 53. the golden calf of Bethel, etc , set up by Jeroboam (1 Kings, xll. 28-33) ganglia, go not

P. 54. gate, 'iay fended wi' victual, provided with food Halliwrll gives "fend to ptnvidii, to endeavour, to make shift, to wairl ofl"¹ (North).

Bomegate, somehow Gofc means not only way, path, etc , but also manlier, fashion.

men of Belial. In the Bible we have the phrases children of Belial, soih of Belial, daughter of Behal, and man of Belial, in all of -which Belial means' worthlessness thowless, spiritless. Seep " land note.

fissenless, tasteless

P. 55 Intercommuned, prohibited fium eommunion. Cf. the use of dis-communed at the Univeisity.

justifiable, where we aliouhl now say justified.

LongmarB ton-Moor. SLM' p. 32 note.

P. 5G Resolutioners, the supporters of Charles II. as explained here.

Protesters, those that utter a solemn declaration, especially of dissont. Useil here of the opponents of the Court party.

P 57 the court of offices, the stable-yard.

P. 59 maiat three hours syne, alxmt three hours ago, literally the most part of three hours sinuo the rheumatize, rheumatism; "the theumatics" of the English vernacular.

for as sair a boast as I hae, in spite of thr narl nough I have. HalliWDll gives hoast, a cougli : also hoarse (North).

sae fair-fashioned as we are, what fine airs we give ourselves ! Rebuking him for addressing her so familiarly (Janneson gives a word fairfassint, having greatsemblance of discretion.)

swael or swale, to gutter. Halliwell gives " swale or gutter in a candle ; also to sival or gutter, to meal away (var. dial) " haud, hold, keep

My certie, assniedly ; certes and cert are used for certainly atween and Candlemas, iMitween now and Candlemas ; thin took place on the 5th May, 1679 (see p. 19), and Candlemas would be the 2nd February of the next year (see page 22 and note).

majoring, strutting with a consequential air ; swaggering.

billing (A S. byrl), pouring out, giving to drink, " standing drinks "

P. 60 scaff and raff, equivalent to our riff-ruff, the sweepings of society blawing in a woman's lug, telling into a woman's ear.

whilly-wha, wheedling; also used of a person that deals in ambiguous promises.

quean (O.E. queyue, A S. curene, woman, harlot, akin to Gr. γυνή), a young woman, a gnl.

gilpyi a boisteious poison lassock, a young gnl. for the diminutive ending -ock, compare bulluuk, hillock, etc.

the Duke of Handlton, who led the Scotch nobles reinforced by 3,000 Royalists of the North as far as Preston, in 1648, where he was met and defeated by Cromwell; the Duke was taken prisoner and kept in the Tolveit till the next year, when he was executed along with Lords Holland and Capell by the order of the Commonwealth.

tent, attention, regai d, heed.

chancy, foreboding good fortune Any person or thing viewed as mauspieious is said to be " 110 chaney " . here "not very chancy " means dangerous.

P 61. apophthegm (Or. ἀπόδος, from φθῆμι, voice), a remarkable saying nr maxim maundering (akin to wputdcafe, Lat. meiicare, to beg, inendicia, a beggar, etc), a giumbering complaint.

skirl-in-the-pan, anything made hastily in a frying pan, a pancake or what not. skirl means to scream with a shrill voice (sec p. 77 and note); can it be applied to the hissing and sputtering of fat in a pan' cochernony, the gatheiing of a young woman's hair when it is wrapt up in a band or fillet, commonly called a snood.

busked, made ready, piepared, arrayed. In Scotland to buxk means to dress, piobably from the Old Fr. brisque, part of the female attire. "A bonny bride is soon buskit " (Scotch proverb).

'Draws, fine clothes, one's best apparel.

clow-gillie-flower water. Tied carnations called "cloves" are cultivated in Cumberland and on the Border • and wine and syrup are made from the flowers in much the same way as cow-slip, dandelion, and other wines are made in other parts of the country. These flowers bloom in July: clow-gillie-flower is therefore equivalent to ulove-July-flower.

CHAPTER VI.

P. 67. Halcaiali, etc. See Jcreminh, xxxviii. 6, "Malcaiah the son of Hammelech," etc.

P. 68. the Solemn League and Covenant was signed in 1643, whereby the Commona pledged themselves to "bring tho Churches of God in tho three kingdoms to tho nearest conjunction and uniformity in religion, confession of faith, form of Chmoh government, direction for worship and catechizing; to extirpate Popery, prelacy, superstition, schism, and profancncsh; to preserve the rights and privileges of the Parliamt and the liberties of the kingdom; to punish malignants and opponents of reformation in Church and State; and to unite the two kingdoms in a firm peace and union to all posterity." After the Restoration this League and Covenant was ordered in 1661 to be solemnly burned by the common hangman in Palace Yard.

caterans, cateranes, or katheranes, bands of robbers, especially such as came down from the Highlands to the low country and carried off cattle, corn, or whatever pleased them, from those who were not able to make resistance.

Westport of Edinburgh, led inland; cf.

"Unhoop the West Port and let us go free,
For it's up with the bonnets of bonnic Dundee."

We looked for peace, etc. Jeremiah, vii. 15, 16.

P. 70. a prieat of Baal ... the brook Hishon. The Kishon flows from the E. and W. slopes of the mountains about the Plain of Esrlraelon into the Mediterranean at the lower part of the Bay of Acre. This river is memorable for the overthrow of the worship of Baal by Elijah, 1 Kings, xviii, 40, etc.

P. 72. papa-prelatlfta must mean followers of prelates that preach papal doctrines.

P. 74. BiutavuB Adalphas became King of Sweden in 1611, when only in the 17th year of his age. He distinguished himself in a war with Denmark, Russia, and Poland; and he rendered his name immortal by his illustrious achievements as the leader of the German Protestants against the House of Austria. He penetrated from the Vistula to the Danube and twice defeated the celebrated Tilly, but fell at the battle of Lutzen in 1632.

P. 75. thrapple, or thropill, the windpipe, used impioperly, 'or the throat.

causewayed, paved like a street. (Lat. calx; L. Lat. colciata via.)

P. 76. Bomlng; obtruding one's self on another for bed and board; equivalent to our phrase "Sponging on another."

dud, in the singular a rag, in the plural clothing.
ca'ing, driving. To call, ca' caa, caw, means to drive, to impel in any direction.

owsen, used as plural of ox.

stilt of a plough, the handle of it (Akin to stale, stalk. etc.)

I'll be your caution, I'll be your surety ; I'll go bail for you.
For this sense of caution, cf. raofion money at Cambridge.

coulter, the fore-iron of a plough which cuts the sod. (Lat. cutter, a knife.)

P. 77. denty. Perhaps this is equivalent to our word dainty, or is it an adjective from dent, meaning affection, and used in the same way as lovely ?

Weans, children : perhaps a, contracted form for wee anes, little ones.

skirling, crying with a shrill voice.

P. 78. Lutzen. See note on Ghistavus Adolphus, p. 74.

P. 79. in a creel, in a state of mental stupefaction or confusion.
rigs o' Milnwood. When a field is ploughed it is called in Scotland "rig and fur" (English, ridge and furrow) ; cf. "When corn rigs are bonny," "Meet me on the lea rig." This phrase therefore means—the ploughed lands of Milnwood. Ribbed stockings are sometimes called "rig and fur."

lawing, lawin, lauch, a tavern-bill.

clachan, claucnanne, a small village bordering on the Highlands in which there is a parish church, lave, the remainder.

Beta, becomes one as to manners, rank, merit, etc.

raploch, raplach, raplack, raplock, roploch, coarse woollen cloth, homespun, and not dyed.

menfifu', menseful, mensful, manly, dignified, respectful, and respectable.

slops, any kind of outer garments, a contemptuous term.

P. 80. dow, dove, a term of endearment.

CHAPTER VII.

P. 81. recusancy, nonconformity.

P. 83. abulylements, abuliements, dress, habit ; Fr. habillement.

Malcolm Canmore, Malcolm III., King of Scotland (1058-1093). Lady Margaret Bays "since the days of Malcolm Canmore," just as we should say "since the time of William the Conqueror."

P. 84. batts, bats, the disease in horses called in English the bots, or butts, small worms found in the intestines.

broo, seems to mean kinship, So sympathy : it is used in the North to mean a brother; and broochip is a person of the same trade or likeness.

hosting, giving entertainment to.

kale-yard, a kitchen-garden.

P 85 Dura, this open plain near to the city of Babylon in which Nebuchadnezzar set up his golden idol (Danrel, III. 1) haiigh, hawch, hauch, halche, low-lying flat ground, pioperly on the border of a river, and such as is sometimes overflowed.

forby, used both as pieposition and adverb, meaning past, over and above, besides.

P. 86. miirgeon, a murmur, a muttering, in reference to the Mass.

Jenny-flections, Mause's pronunciation of genoflections, the act of bending the knee, especially in worship.

the year sixteen hundred and forty-twa, the year of the outbreak of the civil war in England.

chimley-neuck, chimney comer.

knapping doctrine. Knap means to break off short, to snap ; also to talk short; so knapping doctrine probably means discussing doctimes with none too liberal a mind.

dighting-, sifting, used in this sense in Cumberland. (A S. dihntan to set in order, arrange.

P. 87. sheeling-hill, the hill on which they thrashed : to shed or sheat is to take the husks oif seed (shell, scale.)

windle-Btrae, wmdel-atray, smooth-crested grass.

lavrock, laverok, lark.

benison, blessing, benediction.

wae, sorry.

P. 88. perdu, lost, hidden.

claveiing-, chattering • to darer, to talk idly or in a non-sensical manner; Ger. klaffer gomerall, gomrell, gumphrell, a stupid fellow; Fr. goimpre, one who minds nothing but his belly, akin to our vernacular gump.

hurcheon, a hedgehog.

baff, beff, a stroke, blow.

P. 89. my Joe, my sweetheart,

I'm clean dung ower, I am quite done for and ruined. To ding outer means to overthrow, also to overcome. (Dan. daenye' Swed. danga, to bang.)

dirdmn, uproar, also damage : " to dree the dirdum," to do penance.

gar, ger, to cause, to force.

Yule-eve, Christmas EVE. Yule is from A.S. geol, meaning feast, then restricted to the feast of the festival of the Nativity, sowens, the paste employer! by weavers for stiffening their yarn in working: sowens-porridge was a potage made of Dold soirena by mixing meal with them while on the fire.

claea, clothes.

spanged, leapt, sprung.

kale, kail. See p. 43 note. (A.S. caul; Lat. cubulis.)

gleg, quick of perception by means of any one of the senses.

uptake, uptaking, apprehension.

P. 90, fended, to defend, to support, also to provide for one's self.

the ilka days, literally the every days, i.e. the week days, the days on which it is lawful to work, as distinguished from that which is appropriated to Christian "worship,- compare the distinction among the Romans between dies fastus and dies nefastus; ilka-days claise, everyday clothes, clothes worn by the working classes on ordinary days, as distinguished from those reserved for the Sabbath brickie, brukyl, brokyl, broklie, buttle, easily broken, then used metaphoiically in relation to the unsettled state of political matters.

mains, maines, the farm attached to a mansion-house.

heritor, a landholder in a polish.

mawkin, a hare.

Saint Johnstone's tippet, a hangman's rope: this phrase originated in Perth, of which St. John is the patron saint.

hause, hawse, throat. (Ieel. hals, Dan. hals, neck.)

P. 91. douce. See p. 38 note.

there's whiles convenience, etc., there is at times an advantage.

gay, very.

fore-hand, chief, used here, apparently, of the leader in a team of oxen.

penny-fee, pay, wages in money.

Nipple probably means niggardly: nippit has this meaning, and Cuddio invents this nickname for Milnwood.

theeking, thatch, covering: to theik, thek, is to give a roof of whatever kind.

by the lug and the horn, by the oar and horn, i.e. by main force; cf. 1828, Moir, Manse Wauch, xx. 291. 'We earned them by the lug and the horn before a justice of peace' (from Murray's Dictionary).

CHAPTER VIII.

P. 92. tartan, cloth checkered with stripes of various colours.

hoddin grey, applied to cloth worn by the peasantry, which has the natural colour of the wool: allied to English hoiden, rustic, clownish.

pickle, (1) a gram of corn, (2) a single seed, (3) any minuto particle, (4) a small quantity; "the wee pickle sense" therefore means his very small supply of sense. Of. "pickle meal," p. 538.

crack, talk boastmgly, freely, and fandliarily.

breer, brere, braard, to germinate, shoot forth from the earth; applied especially to grain.

P. 93, beild, bleld, (1) shelter, refuge, protection; (2) support, stay, means of sustenance; (3) a place of shelter; hence applied to a house, a habitation.

plenishing, plenniaaing, plenising, household furniture.

cast, an opportunity, a chance, a turn.

gay, very. See p. 91.

gleg, keen. See p. 89.

P. 94. arlea, erlis, arlis, arils-penny, airID-penny, (1) an earnest of whatever kind, a pledge of full possession; (3) a piece of money given for confirming a bargain; (3) a piece of money put into the hands of a seller when one begins to cheapen any commodity—as a pledge that the seller shall not strike a bargain, or even enter into terms with another while he retains the arlea.

Wen, belli, beyne, bens, (1) wealthy, well-provided, possessing abundance; (2) warm, genial—in this sense applied to a fire; (3) pleasant; (4) happy, blissful; (5) splendid, showy; (6) good, excellent in its kind; (7) eager, new-fangled.

P. 95. court of the Gentiles. The Temple of Solomon was surrounded and approached by three Courts. The outermost was that of the Gentiles, the second the Court of the Israelites, the third the Court of the Priests.

Grassmarket, at one time the place of execution in Edinburgh.

Indulgence to Scottish Ministers, 1668, whereby ejected ministers were re-admitted to their livings if they accepted collation from the Bishop and would attend the Presbyteries and Synods. This was the Earl of Tweeddale's Act. In 1670 Lauderdale offered indulgence to all ministers who would take the oath of supremacy and acknowledge the bishops. In 1673 Lauderdale named so ejected ministers, and ordered them to officiate in their own churches, but nowhere else: but one fourth of them refused the offer.

Eraatianism, the doctrines of Erasing, a German heretic of the 16th century : they referred the punishment of all offences in the Church to the civil magistrate.

moss-hags, moss ground, where peats may be digged [Jamieson].

at a yoking seems to mean joined together in succession.

hickery-pickery, a popular medicine or drug sold by chemists in the North of England and across the Border.

mairby token, and more, a reason can be shown.

P. 96. Laird in Scotland does not always mean a lord. It is generally a landholder, without a title, inferior to a knight or squire.

P. 97- black jack, a pitcher of leather for beer.

bannocks, cakes made of oat, rye, pease, or barley meal, baked on an iron plate over the fire. Although bannocks in Worcestershire, Yorkshire, and other parts of England may be sweetened with treacle, etc., they are never sweet in Scotland. They measure ten or twelve inches across and are about an inch thick.

kebbock, kebbuck, kebuck, cabback, a cheese of a larger size, explained in this passage.

beneath the salt. Formerly the saler (salt-cellar) was of massive silver, and placed in the middle of the table. Persons of distinction sat "above the salt," i e. between it and the head of the table : dependents and inferior guests sat below it.

drab (A.S. drabbe, dregs, lees) means (1) a dirty woman of low character ; (2) a slut.

P. 99. throwing, opposition, resistance. To thraw means (1) to wreath, twist; (2) to wrench, sprain; (3) to wrest; (4) to oppose, resist.

harried, stripped, pillaged, ruined (A.S. herian).

herglan, to act as an army (A.S. here), to ravage, plunder.

carllne, carlin, (1) an old woman; (2) a contemptuous term for a woman although not far advanced in life ; (3) witch.

raxed, stretched.

Jack-boots, large boots reaching above the knee, and serving to protect the leg, worn by soldiers, p. 22.

P. 100. sack (Fr. sec; Sp. secs; Ital. saco; Lat. siccus, dry), a Spanish wine of the dry kind; sherry : Canary sack, a dry wine from the Canary Islands.

P. 101. John Barleycorn, a personification of malt liquor, immortalised by Burns—

" Inspiring, bold John Barleycorn, What dangers canst thou make us scorn."

can, know; contains the sumo root as ken, cunning, canny, etc.

curmuning, grumbling: that motion of the intestines produced by slight indigestion. It is probably of onomatopoeic origin.

gauntree, gauntry, a frame for supporting barrels in a cellar or elsewhere: in Lincolnshire called a the alf, in Kent, a stalder.

P. 102 quaiigh, quaich, queych, quegh, queff, a small and shallow drinking cup with two ears, generally of wood, sometimes of silver.

bicker, biquour, a bowl or dish for containing liquor; a beaker.

P. 103. Corra linn. Lin, hinn, lyn, means a cataract; Corra-hnn is the name of one of the falls of the Clyde.

door means dark; "day nor door" means day nor night; dark and door is a common expression in Scotland.

Jilt, a coquette, a flirt; then a name of contempt for a woman: "the dirty jilt" here is "the dirty drab" of p. 98. (Diminutive of jill.)

Covenant of Works or the Covenant of Grace, Oudilir's subtle distinction had probably been suggested to him by the gospel doctrines expounded by Richard Rumbleberry and others; but to Bothwell all covenants are alike, and all covenanters are whigs and rebels against the king.

P. 105. cockade, the badge which Bothwell wore as a sergeant of the Life Guards.

Old Nol, a term of contempt for Oliver Cromwell.

Roundheads, the name given to the Puritans by the Cavaliers of Charles I, because the Puritans cropped their hair.

John Balfour of Burley, one of the murderers of the archbishop. See Tales of a Grandfather, ch. li., also Burton's History of Scotland, vii, '207, etc.

P. 106 callant, callan, calland, a stripling lad.

intercommuned, used here in the sense of outlawed, a few lines below, intercommune, means to have dealings with.

reset, to harbour or secrete, to hide (sc. stolen goods, or a criminal). "We shall see if an English hound is to harbour and reset the Southrons here" (W. 'Sfcø«).

attainted, as a legal term, means found guilty of treason or felony; under such circumstances the pure and inheritable blood of the person convicted was held to be attainted or corrupted.

barking and fleeing, a phrase used to denote one who, especially from prodigality, is believed to be on the eve of bankruptcy.

outfield, arable land, which is not manured but constantly cropped.

infield, land receiving manure and continually cropped.

Laugh, see note, p. 85

holme, the level low ground on the banks of a river, synonymous with haugh. Milnwood perhaps cites the repetitions of the legal documents by which he held his c&tates.

P. 107- spark, a high-spirited young man ; a young gallant.

Whigamore, the uncontracted form of Whig, p. 38 and note. Green (in his shorter History of the English People, p. 552) writes "Fresh from its Victory (over Duke of Hamilton in 1648) the New Model pushed over the Borrlie, while the peasants of Ayrshire and the West rose in 'the WhiggamoiT raid' (notable as the first uvrnt in which we find the name 'Whig,' which is possibly the same as nui 'Whey,' and conveys a taunt against the 'snurmilk' faces of the fanatical Aytshnemen), and marching upon Edinburgh, dispersed the Royalist Party, and agpin installeil Argyll in power."

P. 108. dour, (1) hard; (2) bold, intrepid; (3) hardy; (4) inflexible, obstinate; (5) stem; (6) severe.

teat-oath, an oath and declaration to uphold the Government. Rome of the formula thereof is quoted below.

angel, an ancient gold coin of England, worth about ten shillings, and impressed with an angel in memory of Pope Gregory's observation that "the pagan Angh were so beautiful that if they were Christians they would be angeli." Cf.

" Shake the bags
Of hoarding abbots : their imprisoned angels
Set thou at liberty."

Shakespeare, King John, II. li. 590.

P. 109. Tolbooth, the prison at Edinburgh. The word originally denominated a place -where goods were weighed to ascertain the duties or toll; a custom-house; subsequently a prison.

div, do.

P. "I. ducking-stool, a stool or chair in which common scolds were formerly tied and plunged into water as a punishment; a cucking-stool.

whirry, to whirl, to hurry away.

nash-gab, (1) wide mouth; (2) insolent talk.

loon, loun, lown, a worthless person, male or female.

wite, wyte, blame.

thowless, the wless, thieveless, (1) unprofitable (A.S. theow, a servant, or theow-ian, to serve); (2) inactive, remiss; (3) not serving the purpose; (4) cold, forbidding; (5) shy, reserved;

(6) applied to weather in an intermediate or uncertain state; (7) feeble; (8) insipid, destitute of taste.

harle, (1) to trail; (2) to drag with force.

P. "2. delation (Lat. delatio; Fr. delation; Ital. delazione), accusation; the act of charging with a crime.

feckless, (1) weak, applied to the body; (2) feeble in mind; (3) spiritless.

fash, fasch, (1) trouble; (2) pains taken about a thing; (3) a troublesome person

P. "3. locality (in Scots law) in the adjustment or apportionment of the aggregate stipend of a minister of a pansh amongst the several heritors (landholder) liable to pay it.

cess (0. Fr. cens • Lat. census), a rate or tax kylevine, or keelivine, a pencil of black or red lead.

P.114. Jaud, another form of jade.

randy, randie-beggar, (1) a beggar that exacts alms by threatening language; (2) a scold.

P. 115. wheen, small, or few.

horning-, or letter of horning, a letter issued from His Majesty's signet, and directed to a messenger, who is required to chaige a debtor to pay the debt for which he is prosecuted, or perform the obligation wiLlun a limited time, under the pain of rebellion.

moss-flow, flow, flows, flow-moss, (1) a watery moss or morass; (2) a low-lying piece of rough watery land not broken up.

paat-hag, hag, moss ground formerly broken up.

round, a vessel filled with liquor, as for drinking; EL bumper; a toast at a drinking revel; a health to pass round.

roof-tree, (1) the beam which forms the angle of a roof, (2) a toast expressive of a wish for prosperity to one's fandly.

P. "6. granlng corse, groaning body: graning is used proleptically, may ill luck fall on your body, which shall be made to groan with its sufferings.

The OrassmarkBt, see p 95 note.

P. "7. Doeg the Edomite, the chief of Saul's herdsmen, informed the king that Abimelech had given provisions and the sword of Goliath to David; and then, by Saul's command, Doeg murdered the priests at Nob (1 Sam., xxi. 7, xxii. 9-22).

Ziphites inhabited a city in the highlands of Judah. David hid in a wood adjoining this town, and the Ziphites informed Saul thereof and offered to deliver David into the king's hand,

It may be pointed out that in their "Apologetical Declaration" issued in 1684 by the Sanquharians (known to later times as Cameronians), the following sentence occurs: "We are sorry at our very hearts that any of you should choose such courses, either with bloody Doeg to shed our blood, or with the flattering Ziphites to inform persecutors where we are to be found," etc., etc.

antinomian(ἀντινομος, exempt from the law), one who believes that Christians are not bound to observe the "law of God," but "may continue in sin that grace may abound" The term was first applied to John Agricola by Martin Luther.

Erastianism, see p. 95 and note.

Lapaarian. Those Christians who, to avoid persecution, made a compromise with the heathen governors, were called "the lapsed." This title was perhaps revived in a new form to denominate some of the Puritans and Presbyterians that had appeared lukewarm to some of their more fanatical brethren.

deaVB, deve, deafen.

canny has very many different shades of meaning. Applied to animate beings it means cautious, artful, wary, frugal, good, handy, etc., etc. Applied to inanimate things it means useful, soft, easy, not difficult, snug, convenient, etc.

hafted. Literally set in a haft or handle, here fixed or established in a house or situation.

tow, a rope of any kind, a halter.

gowk, a fool.

P. 118. wizen, wizen, to become dry.

CHAPTER IX.

P. 119. pretty, (1) small, (2) neat, compact, (3) moon, contemptible, (4) handsome, well-made, (5) polite, accomplished.

P. 120. Port Royals, a harbour of Jamaica on which is built Kingston, the capital, and chief trading port of the island.

wassail, revelry (A.S. waw hæl, be in health, whiuh was the form of drinking a health).

Louis le Grand, Louis XIV., who was king of France from 1643 to 1715.

Huguenots, a name given to the French Protestants of the 16th century. Many derivations of the name have been suggested ; most probably it is a diminutive of Hugon or Hugo, and they are so-called from a heretic and conspirator of this name.

P. 121, cutter's law. Cutter was the name for a robber, a ruffian, a bravo; this phrase, therefore, means a custom among robbers or desperados.

P. 122. fimld-dike, a dike (or wall) round a sheep-fold.

P. 123. none of wood, explained by Scott's note on Wooden Mare.

Monk, his full name was George Monk, Duke of Albemarle. At the outbreak of the Civil War he served as a colonel under Charles I. He was eventually taken prisoner by the Parliamentary forces at Nantwich; he was afterwards set free on condition of taking command of the army at the Parliament, and was raised by Cromwell to the rank of lieutenant-general, and received the chief command of the army in Scotland.

flanker, a fort projecting so as to command the side of an assailing body

P. 124. budget, a bag or sack with its contents; here used of a gun-case.

pearling¹, pearl, a kind of thread lace

P. 127 Lord Rochester and the Duke of Buckingham were two profligate men of fashion at the time of the Restoration (See Green's Shorter History, p. 589). "Rochester was also a poet (b. 1647, d. 1680); he wrote a tragedy entitled Valentinian. His poems were first published collectively in 1680.

Buckingham's character is sketched by Dryden in his Absalom and Achitophel, under the name of Zennari, thus "In the first rank of these did Zennari stand,

A man so various that he seemed to be
Not one, but all mankind's epitome •
Stiff in opinions, always in the wrong,
Was everything by starts and nothing long;
But in the course of one revolving moon
Was chymist, fiddler, statesman, and buffoon;
Then all for women, painting, rhyming, drinking,
Besides ten thousand freaks that died in thinking.
Blest madman, who could every hour employ With something new to 'wish or to enjoy."

main. is a throw at dice.

Tangiers was ceded to England by the Portuguese in 1662, as the dowry of Catherine of Braganza on her marriage with Charles II.; it was held with some difficulty by the English till 1683, when it was evacuated on account of the badness of the climate and the expense of the wars with the Mussulmans.

Wilmot and Villiers were the family names of the Earl of Rochester and the Duke of Buckingham respectively.

P. 129. At Kilsyth, on 15th August, 1645, the Marquis of Montrose, commander of the royal forces in Scotland, defeated the Scots under Baillie.

'Doots, an instrument of torture made of wood or iron. The leg was placed in a cylinder, and wedges were hammered in till the sufferer confessed or fainted.

thumbikin or thumbin, an instrument of torture which held the thumb tight, while thin screws were run into the joint.

P. 130. Davy, etc. See .Shakespeare, Henry IV., pt. II., Act v., Sc III, catacomb (Gr. κατά, down, κύβη, cavity), a cave, grotto, or subterraneous place, anciently used for the burial of the dead ; applied here to a chamber in a cellar.

The Duke of Hamilton. See p. 60 and note,

Jaloused, sec p. 39 note.

lippen, to expect, to rely, to trust to, or place confidence in.

That auld Duke James, etc. This is James, Marquis of Hamilton (b. 1606, d 1649) In 1643 he was raised to the rank of Duke, but was subsequently imprisoned on the charge of disloyalty. In August, 1648, he was defeated by Cromwell at Preston, and taken prisoner ; he was beheaded in the following March, after a summary mock trial before Bradshaw. Sec p. GO note.

the Worcester man. In describing the battle of Worcester, Lingard writes: "Leading out the whole of his disposable infantry, with the Duke of Hamilton's troop of horse and the English Volunteers, he (Charles II.) marched to attack the enemy in their position, and fought at the head of the Highlanders with a spirit worthy of a prince who staked his life for the acquisition of a crown, etc., etc. . . . The Duke of Hamilton had been mortally wounded on the field of battle." This battle took place in 1651, two years after the execution of "the auld Duke James"; the Hamilton that perished at Worcester is "the Duke" named at the beginning of Gudyill's speech, of whom he speaks afterwards as the " Worcester man."

wersh, without salt, tasteless.

P. 131. binn, bin (A.S. bum, manger, crib), a box or enclosed place used as a repository of any commodity, as a corn-bin, a wiiiB-bm, a coal-biu.

CHAPTER X.

P. 133. BUBB, once.

flille-dB-chambre, lady's maid.

head-mark, observation of the features of man or any other animal.

Slower, glowr, glow, to stare.

P, 134. resetting-, see p. 106 note.

P. 135. whiles, at times.

plaid, a loose mantle of striped and variegated cloth worn by the Highlanders, explained below in the text.

P. 137. minnie, mlnny, mother : a fondling term.

bang, to beat, thump, cudgel; also to surpass, excel .

bandoleer, little wooden cases covered with leather, each of them containing the charge of powder for a musket, and fastened to a broad leather band, which the person who was to use them put round his neck. The band itself IB also frequently termed a bandoleer [Harlliwell] To bang the soldier with his bandoleers seems to be equivalent to "beat the soldier with his own weapons."

havings, behaviour.

whisk, to move nimbly and with velocity.

P. 138. Keek, (1) to look with a prying eye; (2) to look by stealth, to peep.

joe, jo, (1) sweetheart; (2) expressing affection and some degree of fandliarity.

die, toy, gew-gaw.

My certy, upon my word.

P. 139. muir, a heath, etc. : talc the muir is equivalent here to turning rebel.

driving ower, boasting of his former doings, "fighting his battles o'er again."

Birle, birl, (1) to pour out or furnish drink for guests; (2) to ply with drink; (3) to drink plentifully. See p. 59.

mask, to infuse, to mash.

P. 140. build me a hone, etc. See p. 123 note.

P. 144. truckling (L. Ger. truggein, to flatter,) to yield obsequiously to the will of another.

hocus-pocus (according to Turner in his History of the Anglo-Saxons, from Ochus-Bochus, a magician and demon of the Northern mythology; according to Tillotson, a corruption of hoc eat corpus, uttered by Romish priests on the elevation of the host), a juggler, a juggler's trick, a cheat used by conjurors [Webster].

ruth, pity; not often used now except in the compound form, ruthless.

P. 145. canny, safe, not dangerous; for other meanings of canny, see p. 117.

P. 146. tight, implies the idea of prompt, smart, and swift; cf. a tight tunding, a tight bowler, etc., at Winchester.

skelp, to beat with the open hand. It expresses the same action as our word "spank." A tight skelping therefore means a sound thrashing.

chit as a substantive denominates a forward child; here it is used as an adjective, and piobably implies both small and impertinent.

P. 147. the puir Whig bodies that they catch in the muirs. See p. 139.

bittock, properly a little bit or piece, a misnomer in Scotland, for "the bittock as usual amounted to four miles." See p. 150.

forty is a preposition here meaning besides; see p. 85 and note, and again below, "forby the Whigs." ill-faux-d, ill-favoured.

cuttle, a bad woman, or slut.

epeel, spell, spele, to climb.

fraim, framed, fraimt, stranger.

lane, alone.

P. 148. Cappsrcleugh means the robber's ravine, This seems to be a disguised name of a place near Moffat.

Whomlekirn-pule means a pool shaped like a kiln turned wrong side up; this again seems to be a fanciful name for a place near Moffat.

scaur, akair, Bear, (1) a bare place on the side of a steep hill, from which the sward has been washed down by rains; (2) a cliff.

Loaning, loan, lone, (1) an opening between fields of corn, for driving the cattle homewards; (2) a narrow inclosed way.

kittle, (1) easily tickled; (2) attended with difficulty, as "a kittle gait" a road that one is apt to lose, or in which one is in danger of falling.

hen-wife, a woman that takes care of the poultry.

P. 149. paduasoy, a silk dress from Padua the Grand Cyrus, or Artamenes, written by Madeleine de Scuderi. See p. 26 and note.

CHAPTER XI.

P. 151. express, a messenger sent on a special errand, a courier.
old Kilsythe, the Major seems to have named his charger after that engement.

P. 152. arm-gaunt, lean, thin; see Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra, I., v., 47:

"And so he nodded,

And soberly did mount an arm-gaunt steed."

The above is the reading of the first folio, changed by gome to arrogant, by others to termayaunt. Arm-gaunt seems to mean as thin as an arm; similarly Chaucer writes arm-yret, as thick as a man's arm—"a wreth of gold arm-gret."

peddling (akin to paddling, paddle, diminutive of pad, to go), going about to sell goods; then doing a small business; busy about trifles.

P. 153. reading Geneva print Gudyill has been up all night drinking and driving ower " : in the morning his eyes are red, as if he had been poring over a small pocket Geneva Bible ; or at any rate, that is the explanation which the Major jokingly suggests for the butler's appearance.

Bkinker, a tapster, a drawer ; to skiuk means (1) to pour out liquor for drinking ; (2) to make a tribute to the gods ; (3) to serve drink ; (4) to dunk.

P. 154. Bin' syne, since then; sometimes it means long since.

black-a-Yiaed, blackaviced, dark of the complexion; a hybrid word from black, and Fr. ns, the visage.

P. 156. Holyrood House was made a royal residence by James V. in 1528, and was henceforth the ordinary official dwelling-place of the kings of Scotland Charles I. was crowned there in 1633.

1642, the year of the outbreak of the Civil War.

for one while, for a time.

News-latter. The first English journalists were the writers of "news-letters," originally the dependents of great men, each employed in keeping his own master or patron well informed, during his absence from court, of all that transpired there. The duty grew at length into a calling. The writer had his periodical subscription list, and instead of writing a single letter wrote as many letters as he had customers. Then one more enterprising than the rest established an intelligence office with a staff of clerks. (See Bun Jonson's The Maple of News, acted in 1625.) Of the earlier news-letters good examples may be seen in Sir John Fenn's collection of Patron Letters, and in Arthur Collins's Letters and Memorials of state (better known, perhaps, as The Sydney Papers). Of those of later date specimens will be found in Knowler's Letters and Despatches of Strafford, and in other well-known books. . . . The MS. news-letters held their ground, although within narrowing limits, until nearly the middle of the last century. . . . Although no genuine newspaper of the 16th century can be produced, English pamphlets, as well as French, Italian, and German, occur with such titles as News from and the like. In the early years of the 17th century they became very numerous. In 1614 we find Burton (the author of the Anatomy of Melancholy), pointing a sarcasm against the non-reading habits of "the major part" by adding, "if they read a book at any time . . . 'tis an English chronicle, etc., a play book, or some pamphlet of news." The most eminent purveyors of this sort were Nathaniel Burton, Nicholas Browne, and Thomas Archer ; and there was issued in May, 1622, the first authentic English periodical newspaper now known to exist. [Extracts from Encyclopedia Kntannica.]

bartizan, a small over-hanging turret which projects from the angles on the top of a tower, or from the parapet, or from other parts of a building,

P. 157. picket, same as piquet, a punishment which consists in making the offender stand with one foot on a pointed stake.

leasng-making, the making of lies. letiaing is A.S. fadaung, from leasian, to lie, from leds, loose, false, deceitful; Ger. 16s.

Monsieur Scudéri is a soldier. This must refer to Madeleine's brother, Georges de Scuden. "At first Madeleine aided her brother in his writing, and perhaps in this way acquired some of the mere formal art of composition, but subsequently these relations were inverted. Madeleine was in every case the inventor; she conceived the plan. Both, then, worked out the particulars in conversation. Madeleine penned the narrative while Georges contributed occasional ideas or military descriptions. His name appeared on the title of Ibrahim, Cyrus, and Clehe" [Dunlop] See also p. 26 note.

Sieur d'Urfe was born at Marseilles in 1568, and died 1625. He distinguished himself in the wars of the League both as a soldier and diplomatist; he wrote a pastoral romance entitled Antrée; a pastoral poem, Sirene; a pastoral play, Sylvanire, and also Epitres Morales.

The Whole Duty of Man, "laid down in a Plain and Familiar Way"; a once popular work, published in 1659, and attributed at various times to three archbishops, two bishops, several clergymen, and a lady, its authorship remaining a secret still.

P. 158. fortalice, a small out-work of a fortification, a fortification; called also a, 'orte, 'ace.

Cairngorm, pebbles or stones; a yellow or smoky brown variety of rock crystal, or crystallized quartz, found in the mountain of Cairngorm in Scotland. These pebbles are much used by the Highlanders for brooches, etc.

P. 160. misfiricorde, have pity.

P. 161. fanfare (prob. onomatopoeic), a flourish of trumpets.

P. 162. marvedie, a very small Spanish coin, thirty-four to a sixpence.

CHAPTER XII.

P. 163. the priestly ham, the knightly sirloin, the noble baron of beef, the princely venison pasty. Notice the respective epithets. Sirloin should be strictly surloin, from sur, and hinge, loin. It has been erroneously supposed by some to have received its name from the story of its having been sportively knighted by Henry VIII. This would suggest the epithet knightly. Joive goes naturally with baron; perhaps princely is applied to the venison pasty because of "the unco hole" (see p. 154) left in it by his most sacred Majesty. In some parts of Scotland they were too Calvinistic, too Mosiac (if one may say so) to eat pork; Scott, therefore, with a sly jest, calls the ham priestly.

piddling¹, Halliwell gives the following meanings of piddle: (1) to pick straws or do any light work (Gloucestershire); (2) to go about pretending to work, but doing little or nothing, as after illness, a man is said to go piddhny about, though as yet unable to do much (Suffolk); (3) to eat mmcingly or daintily.

acates (O Eng. acates; O. Fr. acat, provisions purchased), food, provisions, viands, especially luxurious food, dainties.

pelne forte et dure, heavy and severe punishment. In old English law the term was used for the barbarous practice of przasiny (with heavy weights) prisoners that refuse to plead and last employed in the time of Elizabeth, when this cruelty was put in force against the recusant Catholics.

P. 164. flat, order, command (the Latin fiat, let it be done).

limner (abbreviated from illuminator), (1) one who limns or decorates books with initial pictures; (2) a portrait painter.

P. 165. saloon, used like the Fr. salon, equivalent to our drawing-room.

Machiavel, a celebrated Italian politician and writer, born at Florence 1469, died 1527. His best known work is The Prince, in which he taught the maxim, Divide et impera.

P. 166. conventicle (Lat. conventiculiim, diminutive of conventus), an assembly: then an assembly for religious worship, generally restricted, in a somewhat opprobrious sense, to an assembly of Nonconformists. An Act was passed in Scotland in 1663 against the holding of field-conventicles.

P. 167. rent-mall, rent; mail in Scotland means (1) tribute; (2) rent paid, in whatever way, for a farm; (3) rent paid for a house, garden, etc.; hence house-mail, stable-mail, horse-mail, grassmail, etc.

BUTceae (Fr. suraeoir, eur, over, and aeoir, to sit; Lat. sedere), to cease, stop, etc. See Shakespeare, Coriolaniw, III., ". 121, "I will not do't, lest I surcease to honour mine own truth."

P. 169. disjune, breakfast (Fr. dejeuner). See p. 33.

P. 172. Act of Supremacy. There have been several Acts so called viz., 26 Henry VIII. c. i., whereby the king claimed to be "the only supreme head on earth of the Church of England"; (2) 26 Henry VIII. D. i., declaring it to be treason "to imagine or practise any harm to the king, or deprive him of any of his dignities and title"; (3) Elizabeth's first Act "restored to the crown the ancient jurisdiction over the state ecclesiastical"; (4) in 1563 a more stringent Act of Supremacy was passed, with sterner penalties and further obligations in new classes to take the Oath of Supremacy.

the Act that established Episcopacy probably denotes some one of the Acts of Uniformity, perhaps that of 13,14 Car. II. c. 4.

that for observing¹ the martyrdom of Charles I. After the Restoration, January 30 was observed in the Church of England with a special religious service, "being the day of the Martyrdom of the Blessed King Charles I.," etc. This service, with others equally objectionable, was abolished in 1859.

Loudon-hill, an abrupt eruptive rock in Lanarkshire near the border of Ayrshire.

CHAPTER XIII.

P. 182. Uncle Toby is the hero of Sterne's novel, The Life and Opinion of Tristram Shandy, and is the embodiment of kindness, courage, gallantry, and simplicity.

P. 184. huff (O. Eng. howe, hove, connected with heave), to swell, puff up : then to treat with insolent arrogance, to bully.

Mrs. Quickly, the hostess of the tavern in Eastcheap frequented by Falstaff and his friends. See Shakespeare's Henry IV.

P. 188. the charter of my country, the Magna Charta, and its many confirmations by subsequent enactments, whereby every Englishman is entitled to freedom of person and property.

springuld, aprlngul, spring-all, an active, lithesome, springy young man.

P. 189. Mr. Justice Overdo, a prominent character in Ben Jonson's Bartholomew Fair.

Justiciary, an administrator of justice, a judge, or justice : the Supreme Criminal Court in Scotland is called the Court of Justiciary, and the president thereof the Justiciar-General or Justiciary.

P. 190. feckless (1) weak, applied to the body; (2) feeble in mind ; (3) spiritless.

I leave vengeance to God, who calls it his own. " Vengeance is mine, and I will repay it, saith the Lord "—(Romans, xii. 19), " To me belongeth vengeance "—(Deut., xxxii. 35).

P. 191. stark (A.S. stearc, strong, stiff, rough), (1) stiff, strong, rugged—

" Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff."

(Shakespeare's Henry IV., Pt. I., v. iii., 42.)

See also p. 262 infra—

" Was ever wight so starkly made."

(2) absolute, deep, full—

" Consider the stark security,
The Commonwealth is in now" (Ben Jonson).

(3) more, sheer, pure—

" He pronounces the citation stark nonsense " (Collier).

strove, used as past participle in place of striven,

P. 192. spawn (Ger. span ; Eng. sppiw, a teat; Ger. spanian, spenen, to milk), the eggs of fish or of frogs; then used opprobriously of any product or offspring booby (Fr. bouble, a water-fowl; Sp. froho, booby, pelican; also dimce, idiot), is a fowl allied to pelican (Sula bassana, the solan goose or gannet); then as several fowls of this species are regarded as particularly foolish, booby came to mean a dunce, a stupid fellow. Of. the use of yull, "yond gull Malvulio" (Twelfth Night, III., II, 73), and again, "'tis a gull, a foul, a rogue" (Henry V., III., vi., 70).

P. 194. egad, probably a euphemistic corruption of the oath "By God."

CHAPTER XIV.

P. 198. mains, the farm attached to a mansion-house, corresponding to our word "grange." See p. 90.

harled. See p. III and note.

ava', at all.

P. 199. nelst, next.

hole and bore, hnle and harbour, every place of refuge.

Bteekit, participle of steek, to shut.

kendna, knew not.

water-broo, water-broth.

win to (1) to reach ; (2) to take a seat near a table, or rather to begin to eat of what is set on ".

Whig seems to mean to go, move away, perhaps connected with whigyan, a term used in Scotland in driving horses.

blast (1) to pant, to breathe hard; (2) to smoke tobacco ; (3) to blow with a wind instrument; (4) to boast, to speak in an ostentatious manner ; used here as equivalent to "ranting."

Roman Gilead, Cuddle's misnomer for Ramoth-Gilead, noted as the battlefield where Ahab and Jehoshaphat were defeated by the Syrians, and Ahab was killed (1 A'wj", xxll. 1-30).

screed, skreed (1) the act of rending; (2) the sound made in rending ; (3) any loud shrill sound; (4) the thing that is torn off; (5) a dissertation, harangue; (6) a long list or catalogue. It is in this last sense that the word is used here.

rent, rowt, to bellow.

fremd, strange, foreign.

loaning. See p. 148 and note.

P. 200. or, before.

win there, reach there, see win to supra. To win, ivyn, won, means to have anything in one's power, to arrive at any particular state or drgrnc with some kind of labour or difficulty, to win hame is to got home.

sting and ling (1) to carry sting and ling means to carry with a lonp pole noting on the shoulders of two persons ; (2) to carry off .sting and ling, to do so entirely.

fore-a-hand, same us fore-Juuul. See p. 91 and note.

budge (Fr. bowjur, to stir), to move off, stir.

cleugh, cleuch (1) a precipice, a rugged ascent; (2) a strait hollow between precipitous banks, or a hollow descent on the side of a hill, strait, narrow

Bkelpmg-. See p 146, and note.

whinger, a cutlass or hanger, a whinyard (A.S. wrai, contrntion, Wrir, genrd, gerd, gird, staff, rod).

the tae, ta, the one.

clour, clowr, to cause a lump by a blow or a fall; cloured, battered.

skaith, hurt, damage.

P. 201. kebbie, a hooked stick clink, to strike at another smartly, a term denoting alertness in manual operation.

kent, ,1 lung staff used by shepherds for leaping over ditches and brooks.

win awa, to get off; often to escape, get off with difficulty.

forgather, forgader (1) to convene; (2) meet in a hostile manner; (3) meet acedentiilly.

they sat till the sodgers and I think they g-ae them their kale through the reek. They set on to the soldiers and gave it them hot ; literally gave them their broth through the steam, standng hot.

wame, wambe waim, weam, wayme (1) womb ; (2) stomach.

the kiln was in a bleeze again. In Scotland oats are roasted or well dried before being ground into meal ; each null has a kiln for this purpose. The br.in and husks are used for fuel, and when stined they send up a blaze, m like manner this old woman's words fired the quarrel again.

P. 202. heading, beheading.

lum-head, a uhimncy top.

hellicat, perhaps a variation of ffdl-cat, applied sometimes to a furious vixen or scold. Cuddie purposely chooses a strong epithet for his rival.

loot, let.

touzle her tap-knots, disarrange her hair or head-dress, when trying to steal a kiskg.

stap (1) to stop ; (2) to cram, stuff,

P. 203. bountith, txranteth (1) something given as a reward for service or good offices ; (2) it now generally signifies what is given to servants in addition to their wages, gratuities.

ware, war, wair, wayr (1) to lay out as expense ; (2) to expend, bestow, in whatever sense ; (3) waste, squander.

pinner, a female head-dress, having lappets pinned to the temples reaching down to the breast, and fastened there.

pearling'. See page 124 and note.

P. 204. blythe, glad, happy.

P. 205. blether, blather, bladder, to talk nonsensically.

wally-de-shamble. Cuddie means valet-de-chambre.

flt-ba', football.

for as massy as, etc. Massy, bumptious, over-confident, swaggering ; the phrase means for all the swaggering bumptiousness with which he is ridiny behind its.

P. 206, boddle, bodle, a copper coin of the value of two pennies Scots, or the third part of an English penny, These pieces are said to have taken their name from a mint-master of the name of Bothwell.

tittle, titty, is used as diminutive of sister.

Jack the Giant-killer, this story is fandliar to all, but its origin unknown.

Valentine and Orson, this romance belongs probably to the 15th century. Valentine and Orson were twin brothers, sons of Belisant, the sister of Pepin, and wife of Alexander the Emperor of Constantinople. The twin brothers were born "I a wood near Orleans, and Orson was carried off by a bear, which suckled him with her cubs. In the mean time, while their mother went in search of Orson, Valentine was found by Pepm, who took him under his charge; afterwards Valentine married Clcrimond, niece of the Green Knight. When Orson grew up he was the terror of France, and was called the Wild Man of the Forest. He was reclaimed by Valentine, overthrew the Green Knight, and married Fe'on, the daughter of Duke S a vary of A quit an 10.

stilts. See p. 76 and note.

furs, furrows.

rigs, ridges When a field is ploughed it is called "rig and fur." (Eng., "ridge and furrow.")

"When corn rigs are bonny."

"Meet me on the lea rig" (Burns).

Hence the "rigs of Milnwood" meant the ploughed lands of Milnwood. It might be added that ribbed stockings in Scotland are called rig and fur.

sough, a buzzing ; a hollow murmur, or roaring ; it is used of any rushing, buzzing, or singing-like noise, here of the sing-song drone of psalm-singing fanatic.

apence. See p. 40 and note.

blatant (Prov.-Eng. Mate, to bellow), noisy, bawling, bellowing; cf. "the blatant beast" in Spenser.

cast (1) a twist, contortion, cf. a cast in the eye; (2) opportunity, chance; (3) a turn, an event of any kind; (4) lot, fate, Deil gin, etc., may the devil grant that they would gallop.

P. 208. HolofeniBB, an Assyrian general, an invader of Israel, whose head was cut off at Bethulia by Judith (Judith, ll. 4, etc.).

DiotrephBS, an unknown Christian convert who loved to have pre-eminence in the Church. (III. John, 9. "I wrote unto the Church, but Diotrophes, who loveth to have the pre-eminence among them, receiveth us not.")

Demas, convert and companion of St. Paul, who after a while gave up that companionship, so that the apostle declared that he had deserted him. (II. Tim., iv. 10: "for Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world.") plack, a small copper coin, formerly current in Scotland, equal to the third part of an English penny.

meal-ark, meal-tub, corn-chest; ark is a large chest used especially for holding corn or meal. (Lat. area.)

surcingle (Fr. xiir and cinyle). A belt, band, or girth which passes over a saddle, or over anything laid on a horse's back, to bind it fast.

martingale, a strap fastened to the girth, passing between the horse's forelegs, and ending in two rings through which the reins pass. It is used to keep down the horse's head and prevent him from rearing.

latchet, fastening (akin to lace, latch, etc.).

brogue, brog, a coarse and light kind of shoe, made of horse-leather, much used by the Highlanders, and by those that go to shoot on the hills.

o' his hoast, because of, or on account of his cough.

air, early. (O.E. atr, former, Eng. ere).

P. 209. pelican, etc., from Psalms, cli. 6.

sparrow, etc., from Psalms, cii. 7.

potsherd (pot and sherd or sJiard), a fragment of a broken vessel; the word occurs in Job, ii. 8.

CHAPTER XV.

P. 2". Quantum in nobis, as far as in us lies, to the best of our ability.

P. 213. poach (O. Fr. pocher, to dig or thrust out with the fingers), means (1) to stab, pierce, or spear, as fish; also (2) to tread, as snow or soft ground, making deep tracks.

luppen, leaped.

curch, curshB, a kerchief, in its proper sense of head-dress (Fr. convre chef); it is alst) used to mean a linen dress.

P. 214. well-head is explained in the text.

P. 218. Burley is said to be with them . . . Hackaton of Rathillet, Faton of Meadowhead, Cleland, etc. In his history of Scotland Burton wiitcs " They were peculiarly fortunate in the presence of a few experienced ofliuers. These wore Hall of Haughead, Burley, Robert Fleming, find more valuable still, the cool and resolute Hackston of Ralhillet. A young soldier destined for distinctnm was among them—William Cleland the poet, who gaim*d a lnjjh military repute after the Revolution by the defence of Dunkeld."

P. 219. spawn. See p. 192 and note.

cairn (1) a heap of atones thrown together in a conical form ; (2) a building of any kind 111 a ruined state, a heap of rubbish. (Gael. carn, a heap of stones)

P. 220. cant, to sing in speaking, to repeat after the manner of recitation (Lat canfare).

race of Dunbar, in which Cromwell, Monk, anil Lambert utterly deleati'd the Scotch under Leslie (September 3rd, 1650). Three thousand of the Scotch were slain, and nearly 10,000 were taken prisoners. So complete was the lout of the Royalists that " Dunbar field" is here called " the race of Dunbai " patrol (Fr. palromlle, from patrouiller to paddle about), a guard, whose duty it is to march round a camp, etc., during the night, see to its safety, and give timely notice of the approach of of an enemy.

P. 222. the tattle of Pentland Hills. At Rnllitm Green (a valley dividing the Pentland Hills), the Covenantors under Colonel Wallace were defeated by General Dalziel in 1666.

P. 223. ahaw, show.

CHAPTER XVI.

P. 225. a broken Covenant and a persecuted Kirk, etc. When Charles II. came to Scotland in 1650 he was compelled to sign the Solemn League and Covenant before he was allowed to land, and the signature was repeated at his coronation. Notwithstanding this, after the Restoration, by the king's order, the covenant was burned by the common hangman in London, and an Act adjuring and conrlcming it as an unlawful oath was passed by the Privy Council of Scotland in 1662. This Act re-established Episcopacy, and tho Presbyterian ministers tha' refused to acknowledge the bishops were ejected from their parishes, expulsing, expelling.

foisonless, without strength.

drammock, dramock, drammack, drummock (1) meal and water mixed in a raw state ; (2) anything boiled to the state of pulp.

P. 226. scant, skant, scarcely, generally used as a substantive meaningscarcity.

P. 229. Dagon was the national gud of the Philistines. His must famous temples were at Gaza and Ashdod. He was represented with tho face and hands of a man, and the tail ol a fisli (I. Sfimu?!, v. 6, etc.) The fish-like form was a natural emblem of fruitfulness, and was likely to be adopted by seafaring tribes to represent their god.

P. 237. bout, a contest, a set-to at anything, as a fencing bout, a drinking bunt, He. (Peihaps same as bouyht, a bending; cf, M.L.G. bucht, Eiiig. bight ; akin to adv. ' bout, about.)

CHAPTER XVII.

P. 240. caim, p. 219 and note.

barrow (A.S. beorg, beorh, a hill, mimiid), a hillock or mound of earth intended as a repository of the dead.

brecham, brechame, brechem, the collar of a working horse (by metdthesis for beryJtam, bargham, from A.S. beoryan, to protect, and, 'irtwiG, pi. Iwimes, a kind of collar for a draught horse).

Elihu, the son of Baiachel the liuzitc of the kindred of Ram, whose anger was kindled against Job and his three friends, See Job, xxxii. 2 and 19.

P. 241. Nazarite, or Nazirite, one of LMbher sex bound by vows of a peculiar kind to be set apart from others for the service of God. A Nazarite's oath bound him to abstain from wine, grapes, or any product of the vine ; he was also forbidden to cut the hair of the head, or to approach any dead body, even that of lus nearest relation.

Boanerges, or "sons of thunder," the name given by'H'esus to the sons of Zebedec, James and John. (Luke, ix. 24, Mark, ix. 38, Matt., xx. 20, etc.)

pellet (Fr. pelote, It. pillotta, L. Lat. pelota, pilota, from pila, a ball), a little ball, a bullet.

P. 242. daidling, daidlin, luitennng, trifling.

Odd I a corruption of God.

flyte, to scold.

fleeing, flying.

woodie (same as widdy, withy), applied humorously to the gallows. Cf. Gny MannerinySuli. xxvin., "half the country will See how yo'll grace the woodio," Others explain it thus : (1) two or three willow twigs twisted together for binding the end of a broom ; (2) a halter for hanging criminals, bicker, p. 102 and unto.

brose, a kind of pottage made by pouring water or broth on meal, which is stirred while the liquid is poured; the dinh m often named from the nature of the liquid, as wnter-broae, kail-brose (Mod. So. form of earlier browes, browia, O. Fr. broez).

P. 243. pillar o' cloud and the pillar o' flame, etc. Exodm, xiii. 21, etc.

P. 244. haras, names (1) brains; (2) understanding.

Deborah, a prophetess, who judged Israel (Judges, iv., v.) ; under her direction Barak encamped against and defeated Jandl's army when under the command of " Sisera, which dwelt in Haroshebh of the Gentiles."

Harosheth of the Gentiles, a city in the north of the land of Canaan, supposed to have stood on the west coast of the lake Merom ; it was the residence of Sisera, captain of the host of Jabin, king of Canaan.

P. 245. bacchante, a priestess of Bacchus.

Thessalian witch. The Thessalians were famous for witchcraft. Cf. Horace, Od I, xxvii. 21 :

" Quae saga, quis te solvero Thessalis Magus venenis, quis poterit deua."

and Epod., v. 45 :

" Quae sidera ex Dan tat a VDCO Thessala Lunamque caelo deripit."

Sheugh, an interjection, expressing contempt and disgust.

Rabshakeh. See p. 46 and note.

Bhimei, the son of Gera, a Benjamite of the house of Saul who lived at Bahurim. When David was fleeing from Absalom Shimei cursed and threw stones and dust at the king and his companions. (II. Samuel, xvi. 5-13.)

Doëg, p. "7 and note.

P. 246. Ham was the second of the sons of Noah, the others being Shem and Japheth. The most illustrious of the nations descended from Ham were the Cushites, the Phoenicians, and the Egyptians.

Amalek, etc. This refers to the account in I. Samuel, xv., of Saul being Bent to "smite Amalek and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not," etc., etc.

P. 247. Tuphet, or Topheth, lay somewhere east or south-east of Jerusalem, in " the valley of the son of Hinnom" (Jeremiah, vii. 31), "which is by the entry of the east-gate" (,er., xix. 2). Tophet has been variously translated latitude, garden, drum, place of miming or burying, nbomijiation. It was probably the king's "music-grove" or garden, originally denoting nothing evil or hateful, Afterwards it was defiled by idols, and polluted by the sacrifices of Baal and the fires of Moloch. Then it became the place of abomination, the very gate or pit of hell. (Smith's Dictionary of the Bible.)

Havilah (Gen., ii, ", x. 29, xxv. 18), the exact position of this land is doubtful; some place it east or south of Arabia, others take it to be that part of India watered by the Ganges, and more generally the eastern regions of this earth; others place it in Susiana, in Ava, or in the Ural region; others again in Colchis.

"from Havilah unto Shur that is before Egypt as thou goest towards Assyria" (Jen., xxv. 18). This assigns Shur to the eastern border of Egypt. The wilderness of Shur was entered by the Israelites after they had crossed the Red Sea (Exod., xv. 22, 23). Burley takes the phrase "From Havilah unto Shur" as a comprehensive expression equivalent to the whole of the world.

rode for ridden.

P. 249, flying, p. 242 and note.

Kohathites. Gershon, Kohath, and Merari were the three sons of Levi from whom the three principal divisions of the Levites derived their origin and their name. Kohath was the father of Amram, and he of Moses and Aaron: from him therefore were descended all the priests, and hence these of the Kohathites that were no priests were of the highest rank of the Levites, though not the sons of Levi's first-born. (Smith's Dictionary of the Bible.) This quotation, as Mause tells us, is from Jitdyes, iv. 18,

P. 250. Jehovah-Nissi, i.e. Jehovah my banner, the name given by Moses to the altar which he built in commemoration of the discomfiture of the Amalekites by Joshua and his chosen warriors at Rephidim (Exodus, xxv. 15). (Smith's Dictionary of the Bible.)

CHAPTER XVIII.

P. 254, Erastiana. See p. 95 and note; of. p. 287.

Bociniana, the followers of Faustus Socinus, an Italian (1539-1604), nephew of Laelius Socinus. He taught that God is one person, and denied the divinity of the Word and Holy Ghost, which he called "expressions, not persons"; he also taught that Jesus is no mediator, but only a perfect example of holy life; he furthermore taught that his punishment to himself is eternal (Brewer).

Quakers, a religious sect founded by George Fox (1650). Their great doctrine is that all religion consists in the inward operation of the Holy Ghost. They have no sacraments, no ordained ministers, are very serious in deportment, sober in dress, reject oaths, refuse the payment of tithes, use theu and thou instead of you, and call the days of the week and the months 1st, 2nd, 3rd, etc., instead of Monday, Tuesday, etc., January, February, etc. They call themselves "Friends." The word "Quaker" is used as a term of disrespect; they were perhaps so-called because Fox, after being imprisoned by the Puritans, when brought before (Jervas Bennet, bade his judge "quake and tremble at the judgments of God" (Brewer).

Jeroboam, the son of Nebat who made Israel to sin.

Omri wrought evil in the eyes of the Lord and did worse than all that were before him (I. Knit, B, xvi. 16).

Ahab, the son of Omri, did evil in the sight of the Lord above all that were before him (I. King', xvi. 29).

Shallum conspired against Zechariah, slew him, and reigned in his stead, but after reigning in Samaria only a month was in his turn deposed and killed by Menahem; we may argue therefore that his reign was evil or distasteful to the people (II. *Kiny*a, xv. 10).

Pekah did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord; he departed from the sins of Jeroboam, etc. (II. Kings, xv. 28).

Tophet, etc. (Isaiah, xxx. 33). See p. 247 note.

P. 236 Hagar, the hand-maid of Sarah, and her concubine of Abram, to whom she bore Abram, to whom she bore Ishmael (Gen., xvi), but in consequence of Sarah's displeasure Abraham cast out Hagar and her son into the wilderness of Beersheba; in this "loutamless desert" they were on the point of death from thirst, when the angel of God showed to them a well of water (Gen., xxi 12, etc.)

Judah, etc., cf. Psalms, cxxxvii. and the Lamentations of Jeremiah.

Rachel, St. Matthew, il. 18, Jeremiah, xxxi. 15.

Bozrah, etc. This is a quotation of Isaiah, xxxiv. 6. Bozrah was a city in Edom, i. e. Idumaea.

P. 257. Jacob in the day of his deliverance, etc. Can this refer to the overthrow of the Egyptian host when the Israelites, the descendants of Jacob, were delivered from their bondage?

P. 258. Maccabaeus, "the Maccabee"; Judas Maccabeus is distinguished for his patriotic struggle to recover the independence of the Jews. His chief exploits were the defeat of Apollonius and Seron at Bethon, Apollonius and Seron at Bethon, the rout of Lysias' army at Emmaus (B.C. 166), and the defeat of Lysias himself the next year at Bethsura. After this success Judas occupied Jerusalem (except "the tower") and purified the Temple on the 25th of Chisleu, exactly three years after its profanation by Antiochus Epiphanes.

Samson is distinguished (1) as a judge; (2) as a Nazirite; (3) as one endowed with supernatural power by the Spirit of the Lord. (See Judges, xvi. -xvii.)

Gideon was the fifth recorded judge of Israel, and for some reasons the most distinguished of them all. (See Judges, vi. -viii.)

Meroz, a place mentioned only in the song of Deborah and Barak in Judges, v. 23, and there denounced because its inhabitants had refused to take part in the struggle with Sisera. It must have been somewhere near the Kishon, but its exact position is unknown.

the stars in their courses, etc., Judges, v. 20.

arias, p. 94 and note

CHAPTER XIX.

P. 262. fleech, fleich, fleitch, to wheedle.

till, to.

greeting, weeping.

baillie, bailie (1) a magistrate second in rank, in a royal borough, an alderman; (2) the baron's deputy in a burgh of barony. (It. baha, Late L. bajulia, bajulus, officer.)

P. 263. biggit, built. This word is used in various senses, inhabited, cultivated, erected, built. Cf. Gfny Mvbnutrvng, iii., "bred in biggit wa'a."

biggl't land, land where there are houses or buildings.

weill big-git, well-grown, lusty; a weill biggit body is one that has acquired wealth.

wight (A.S. wiht, wicht, a creature, animal), a being, person; it is used frequently by Chaucer and Spenser, but nowadays only in irony or bulletin', or in humorous passages.

starkly. See Mark, p. 191 and note.

collation, an unceremonious meal, or lunch; nofoften used nowadays except by reporters to local newspapers, "where a cold collation was prepared in lecherche style." When this word was first used of a meal, it was applied to the light repast of monks in lieu of supper on fasting days, after the reading of the collationes or lives of the fathers.

P. 264, reversionary as a legal term means to be enjoyed in succession; reversionary pasties are the pasties that are left and might be served up again, and so might do duty at several meals in succession.

gliff (1) a transient view; (2) a moment; for a, gliff seems to be used here much as we say "for a wink," or "for forty winks."

take a hit at trick-track. Trick-track, or, as it is sometimes spelled, tick-tack, was a kind of backgammon, played with men or pegs, but more complicated. Hit is the technical term for a partial success in backgammon, three hits being equal to one gammon. So to take a hit at trick-track seems to mean, to have a game at backgammon.

KilaythB, p. 129 and note.

Tippermuir. In Sept., 1644, the Marquis of Montruse, commander of the royal forces in Scotland, defeated the Covenanters.

Alford, 2nd July, 1645, Genera' Bailhe, with an army of Covenanters, was defeated by the Marquis of Montrose.

Inverlochry, 2nd Feb., 1645, the Marquis of Montrose defeated Argyll.

Auld Earn, or Auldearn, is a village in the county of Nann ; on 9th May, 1645, Muntrose routed the Covenanters under John Hurry, or Urry.

Brig o' Dee was taken by the Covenanters under Montroae on 19th June, 1639 ; this affair of the bridge of Dee opened Aberdeen to the Covenanters.

Philiphaugh. Sec p. 32 and note.

P. 267. whilk, which.

P. 268. seneschalship, the office or dignity of a Seneschal. A seneschal was a steward, an officer that superintended feasts and all the domestic economy of a large household ; in some instances he was an officer that dispensed justice, e.y., the high senwchnl of England.

appurtenances, a legal term for belongings; it is used of anything annexed to, and taken as part and parcel of another thing more worthy (cf. appertain, Lat. ad per filters).

escalade (akin to Lat. scald, a ladder), an attack on a fortified place when ladders are used to pass a ditch or scale a wall.

culverin (Fr. coulevrine, akin to Lat. coluber, a snake), a long and slender kind of cannon, not in use now ; so-called because it was like a serpent, or was ornamented with serpents.

Baker (Fr. sacre, Lat. sacer, sacred, holy, falco sacer, Ger. saker-falk, Gr. lêpaE), a species of falcon; and afterwards applied to a small piece of artillery; demi-saker (half-saker), a smaller saker.

falcon (Lat. falco, perhaps from 'a,'a', a sickle, because of its curved claws), a bird of prey, characterised by short hooked beak and powerful claws ; it is also the name of an ancient form of cannon seven feet in length, and carrying a ball four pounds in weight.

falconet, a diminutive of the above; a small cannon measuring about six feet in length, and carrying a ball two pounds in weight.

P. 269. fracas, crash, noise, tumult, "fuss."

P. 270. oratory (Fr. oratoire, Lat. oratorium), a place for prayer ; here " a cell adjoining to the chapel."

P. 271. hough, heuch, hewch, huwe, hwe, hew (1) a crag, a ragged steep; (2) a steep hill or bank; (3) a glen with steep overhanging braes or sides ; (4) the shaft of a coal pit; (5) a hollow in a quarry.

CHAPTER XX.

P. 273. rade, rode.

P. 275. the apple of my eye, thu pupil of the eye; so-called because it was supposed to be a globular solid body.

P. 276. let the living . . . fallen. Nil nisi bonum de morluis.

P. 278. provost-marshal, an officer appointed to arrest and secure dusers and other criminals in the army, to hinder the soldiers from pillaging, to indict offenders, and to see sentence passed on them and executed.

P. 279. vidette or vedette (akin to Lat. videre, to see), a sentinel, usually 0" horseback ; a dragoon or horseman sent as an outpost, or on any special errand.

P. 280. tfcir, these.

kittle. See p. 148 and note.

sough, souch, silence ; to keep 8ouch, to be silent.

gimel, glraall, gralnel (1) a granary; (2) a largo chest for holding meal.

bow, a boll; a dry measure, about two bushels.

bear, barley. (O.E. lere).

maBhluM, maahlln, mashlie, maishloch, mixed grain.

bannock. See p. 40 and 97 and note (perhaps akin to L, Lat. panicum, pauis, bread).

drucken, drunk, tipsy.

tana, tassie, a cup.

low, lowe (1) name; (2) rage, desire, or love.

blink (1) a glimpse or glance ; (2) a glimmer ing or intermittent light; (3) a b'ttle while. "For a blink" is very like "for a gliff." See p. 264 and note.

ourney, grainy; curn or burn is a grain or single seed; corn is used in Kent with the same meaning. Meal is said to DQ curny when the grains of it are large, or when it is nofground very small.

pock-puddingy a suet pudding, made with either flour or oatmeal and boiled in a bag. A contemptuous term vulgarly applied to an Englishman from the idea of his being fond of good living.

P, 281. peel-house, literally a house of strength, a fortress, or castle. Ruins of many of these square towers may be seen still.

heritor (1) an heir; (2) landholder in a parish.

CHAPTER XXI.

P 282. a lukewarm Laodicean. Laodicea is a town in the Roman province of A aid, in the valley of the Maeander, on the river Lycus, a few miles east of Colossae and Hierapolis. In Revelation, in. 16, it is written of the church of the Laodiceans, "because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth."

an indifferent Gallio. Junius Annaeus Gallio was the Roman pro-consul of Achaia when St. Paul was at Corinth, B.C. 53. The Jews made insurrection against Paul and brought him to the judgment seat, but Gallio declined to enter into "a question of words and manners and of your (the Jews') law," and dismissed Paul; "then all the Greeks took Sosthenes, the chief ruler of the synagogue, and beat him before the judgment seat, and Gallio cared for none of these things" (Acts, xviii. 12, etc.).

P. 283. the man of Bin, Charles II.

P. 284. fard (1) to paint ; (2) to embellish.

zealous even unto slaying-. Phinehas, son of Eleazar, slew Zimri with a Midianitish woman, and was rewarded because he was zealous for his God, and made an atonement for the children of Israel (Numbers, xxv. 7, etc.).

P. 285. the sons of Zeruiah were Abishai, Joab, and Asahel ; after Joab had slain Abner David exclaimed, "I am this day weak, though anointed king ; and these men, the sons of Zeruiah, be too hard for me" (II. sam., iii. 39).

P 287. Cameronians are so called from Richard Cameron, who was killed at Aird's Moss, Ayrshire, 1680. They hold the perpetual obligation of the Solemn League and Covenant, they consider as enemies to righteousness all Romanists and Episcopalians, and more especially these moderate Presbyterians that accepted the Indulgence of Charles II. They openly disowned Charles II. for having violated the Engagement, which was a secret treaty (1647) between Charles I and the Covenanters to establish Presbyterianism in Scotland and to extirpate the Sectaries; and they continued to preach in the open air in violation of the Act against "Field Conventicles." They were not extinguished by the defeat of Aird's Moss and the death of their leader, but they exist still in small numbers in Ireland and North America.

P, 291, doometer, one that pronounces doom ; cf. p. 476 note on In common dun,

P. 292. the former liberation of Scotland ... the slaughter of Cumming by the hand of Robert Bruce. Robert Bruce became reconciled to Edward I, of England 1304, and resided at his Court till 1306; but on hearing that Edward intended to put him to death owing to some information obtained from Comyn (Gumming), he fled to Scotland, stabbed Comyn at Dumfries, set up his standard as king of Scotland, and was crowned at Soone on 27th March, 1306.

CHAPTER XXII.

P. 297. manifesto, a public declaration, generally by a prince or sovereign, stating his opinions and intentions with regard to some undertaking carried out or contemplated by him.

P. 304. Magor-Missabib, literally, "fear roundabout" This is the name given by Jeremiah to Pashur when "Pashur smote Jeremiah and put him in the stocks" for prophesying against the idolatry of Jerusalem (Jeremiah, xx 1-3).

Tower of the Bass. The Bass Rock, a prison in the Isle of Baas in the Firth of Forth

P. 305 Parliament of 1640, the "Long Parliament" (including the "Rump"), from 3rd November, 1640, to 16th March, 1660.

Anabaptists of Minister. Anabaptists is a title applied indiscriminately to all reimmersions of Christians that deny the validity of infant baptism, but it would be restricted to certain sects which became prominent in Germany at the time of the Reformation. They made a determined attempt to establish a theocracy at Munster, in Westphalia, in the year 1534 : Bockold, a tailor, better known as John of Leyden, was their leader. He pretended to be the successor of David, and claimed royal honours and absolute power in the new "Zion." He legalised polygamy, and consequently Munster was given up to unbridled profligacy. On 24th April, 1535, the town was taken by the besiegers, and John of Leyden and his most prominent followers, after cruel torture, were executed in the Market Place. After this crisis in Minister, the very name of Anabaptist was for a long time proscribed in Europe. Cf. Dryden, "The Hind and the Panther," l. 43, etc. :

"The bristled baptist boar, impure as he,
But whitened with the foam of sanctity,
With fat pollutions filled the sacred place,
And mountains levelled in his furious race :
So first rebellion founded was in grace.
But since the mighty ravage which he made
In German forests had his guilt betrayed
With broken tusks and with a borrowed name,
He shunned the vengeance and concealed the shame,
So lurked in sects unseen."

P. 306. the Midianites dwelt principally in the desert north of the peninsula of Arabia ; their territory stretched along the eastern frontier of Palestine; they were spoiled by Moses (Numbers, xxxi. 1); in the days of Gideon they oppressed the Israelites, but were subdued by that Judge (Judges, vi., vii.).

chastised with scorpions, a reminiscence of Rehoboam's boast, "My father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions (II. Chron., x. 2; I. Kings, xii. ", 14). The arorpions are probably some cruel instrument of scourging, unless the expression is only figurative.

P. 307. James Melvin . . . Cardinal Beaton. David Beaton (b. 1494, d. 1546) was made cardinal in 1538: on the death of his uncle, in 1539, he succeeded to the Archbishopric of St. Andrews; he was distinguished for his cruel persecution of the Protestants: and to avenge their wrongs a plot was formed by the Reformers to assassinate him. OIL May '29, 1546, his castle of St. Andrew's was seized by Norman Leslie, the Master of Ruthes, Kirkaldy of Grange, and others, and he was murdered. In Tales of a Grandfather, Scott mentions Melville as one of the conspirators; this Melville and James Melvm in the text here are, we suppose, the same person.

CHAPTER XXIII.

P. 310. tirl (1) to uncover; (2) to pluck off expeditiously: applied to dress; (3) to strip: applied to property.

bawbee, a baby: the dragoons had been stripped (as we should say) as bare as new-born babies. Bawbee, also means a half-penny; this coin was minted first when Mary was a baby, and hence called a baby, or bawbee; there were no farthings in Scotland: the phrase might therefore be equivalent to "robbed of every farthing." But we prefer the former explanation, for the latter changes the metaphor expressed by tirled and bare.

amaist, almost.

yokit by the lugs, joined by the ears, listening attentively, chleld is often used like our word "fellow," either in a good or bad sense, although more commonly as expressive of disrespect.

syke, syk, sike, syik (1) a rill; (2) a marshy bottom with a small stream in it. ' took up the syke a wee lit, I went a short way up the gully.

leather, to lash, to flog; clean leathering, regular slashing.

busklt, dressed. See p. (51 and note.

pose, pola, poise (1) a secret hoard, generally of money, here of dead bodies.

foumart Halliwell gives fomard, a polecat (North.): this is the same word.

ripe, rype (1) to search; (2) to probe; (3) to investigate, respecting the mind; (4) to poke (perhaps akin to our word rifle).

poaches, pockets.

P. 311, dooms, very, absolutely.

hup nor wind, or haup nor wynd, turn neither to the right nor to the left. Havp as an interjection is used to encourage horses to quicken their speed; as a verb it means to turn to the right. Wynd, to turn to the left, is applied to animals in a yoke, as opposed to haup, to turn to the right. The phrase therefore means "could do nothing with them."

stir is often used by the peasants of Scotland in the place of "sir."

P. 315. gittern, gythorn, a guitar (Fr. giterne, Lat. cithara).

CHAPTER XXIV.

P. 322. ruffle, disturbance, commotion.

P. 324. barber-Burgeon, one that combines the businesses of both haibor and surgeon: such practitioners were not uncommon at one time, of which the barber's pole is a standing testimony up to the present day. "The pole represents the staff held by persons in venesection; and the two spiral ribbons painted round it represent the two bandages, one for twisting round the arm previous to blood-letting, and the other for binding" [Brewer].

"The barber-surgeons" still retain their ancient Hall in Monkwell-street, Cnpplegatu.

chirurgeon, the older spelling of surgeon (Fr. chirurgien, Gr. χειρουργός, from χείρ hand and εργεῖν to work), one that professes to cure diseases by manual operations, instruments, or external applications.

febrifuge (Fr. febrifuge. It. febrifurjo, from Lat. febris, fever, fugare, to put to flight), a drug for allaying fever.

friar'B-cnlicken, some delicate dish, suitable for an invalid. The Friars introduced the mode of fattening chickens by blinding them: so Fnar'n chicken might perhaps be a particularly well-fed and tender bird.

chamber of dais. The canopy-room.

P. 325. man-sworn, perjured, the participle of manaweir, menuweir, to perjure (A.S. maiowerian from man, a crime, and gwerian, to swear).

sune as syne, soon as late.

P. 326. bab (1) a nosegay; (2) a tassel; (3) a cockade.

Bark, shirt.

Beta, p. 79 and note.

CHAPTER XXV.

P. 331. the Low Countries, the Netherlands.

P. 338. parole an a military term means a promise upon one's faith and honour to fulfil certain stated conditions.

P. 339. red flag; the borders of which were edged with blue. The colours of the Covenanters. See below p. 396, end of chapter xxviii.

P. 340. neb (1) a nose, used ludicrously, cf langnebbit, narrownebbit, skarp-nebbit; (2) the beak of a fowl; (3) applied to the snout; (4) any sharp point.

It's no for nought that the hawk whistles. "The allusion of John Gudyill is to a small piece of wall airtight known in these days as a 'falcon' or 'falconet'" (cf. p. 268 and note). In my experience no falcon nor hawk of any sort utters any cry whilst in pursuit but a falcon will scream loudly when attacked, or on being robbed of her quarry; now the rebels were attacking the tower, and for this reason Gurdyll can compare the whistle of his small piece (i.e. the whizz of the shofthrough the an) to the cry of a hawk. There is another point in this allusion to falconry. No old hawk fit for anything in the field screams, except when she is angry, whilst many indifferent hawks keep up a screeching at all times. In the eyes of a falconer a "screamer" of this sort is beneath contempt. Gudyill's "falcon" has been silent for a long time but it now has cause for anger, and the old butler is made to exclaim with the pride both of a soldier and a falconer, "It's no for nought that the hawk whistles" [Lord Lilford].

P. 343. coup-de-main, sudden dash, bold stroke.

Halberd. See p. 47 and note.

P. 344. winnock, windock, window.

daffin, doffing' (1) folly in general; (2) pastime, gaiety, fun. See p. 39 and note.

P. 345. Banchlun, a prop or support of wood or iron.

kail-brow. See brose, p. 242 and note.

CHAPTER XXVI.

P. 352. loaguer, a siege or beleaguering.

Sir John Falstaff, etc. See Shakespeare's Henry IV., Part II. iii. ii.

P. 355. Gallow-gate, perhaps the gate through which criminals were led to the gallows-hill for execution. At Moffat there is a Gallow-hill where the gallows used to stand.

P. 359. Duke of Monmouth who had by Maxlaff, etc. The Duke of Monmouth married the daughter of the Duke of Buccleuch, the niece of Lord Rothes.

CHAPTER XXVII.

P. 362. nunM, the parsonage-house.

P. 364' loup, to leap, spring.

Bit by the chimley when the reek rase, literally, sit by the chimney corner when the smoke arose. When a room was full of smoke (as was often the case in these days) a seat by the chimney was the best place. Now that the country was (so to speak) filled with the smoke of rebellion, Edinburgh was the safest place, the seat by the chimney.

feared, frightened, afraid, timid. Cf. Merchant of Venice, II., l. 9 • "Tina aspect hath feared the valiant," and Henry V., I. ". 155: "More feared than harmed," and Scott's Rob Roy "the townsmen o' Glasgow, they were feared their auld edifice might slip the girths," etc.

P. 365. mart, maite, mairt, a cow or ox fattened, killed, and salted for winter provision.

coup, cowp, to exchange, barter. We have the same word in horse-coper. See Murray's Dictionary.

lift, to carry off by theft.

'stressed, distressed.

ran die, quarrelsome, scolding.

wallie, Cuddled pronunciation of raht.

tighter in thack and rape, literally better tied with thatch and rope. When a good husbandman thatched a stack of corn he roped it down with straw bands and made it tight, neat, and safe against wind and weather. Cuddie boasts that his master looks more trim and better dressed than ever he did before.

P. 366. cast, p. 93 and note.

braws, fine clothes, one's best apparel.

Hainan, the chief minister or vizier of King Ahasuerus (Esther, II 1). After the failure of his attempt to cut off all the Jews in the Persian empire, he was hanged on the gallows which he had ordered for Mordecai (Esther, vii).

P. 369. the law which gave the men of Jericho to the sword of Joshua, the son of Nun. See Jothua, vi.

P. 371. the malignant Evandale, The Covenanters often spoke of the Royalists as "the Malignants." In the Grand Remonstrance this phrase is used by the Parliament to describe the king's evil advisers. "All the fault is laid upon ill ministers, who are therefore called a malignant party" [May]. The term was afterwards applied to all that supported the king against the Parliament.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

P. 375. hash (1) a sloven; (2) a foolish fellow. Ye muckle hash, you great fool!

ye dour crowdy-eater, you sulky porridge eater, dour, see, p. 39 and note, Crowdie (1) meal and water in a cold state, stirred together so as to form a thick gruel; (2) food of the porridge kind in general.

ding, to drive.

posteriors, descendants.

threep, threpe, to aver with pertinacity, in reply to denial.

the Covenant that was burnt, etc. See p. 225 and note.

P. 376. lave, remainder, rest.

mlrligueB, mirlygoes, merllg-oes, one's eyes are said to be in the mirlygoea when one sees objects indistinctly (perhaps merrily-go because objects seem to danco before the eyes) [Jandeaon]. Others suggest that it is derived from mirl, meaning dappled, mixed : hence mirligoes, mixed objects, confused vision, vertigo.

my lane, alone, by myself.

quean, p. 60 and note.

P. 378. took the rue, repented, or took compassion on me. To rue moans (1) to repent; (2) to have compassion for; rew, as a substantive, means repentance.

win at, reach to ; cf. win to win there, on p. 199 and note.

cuiltle, to wheedle, curry, coax. Of. Abbot, xvi. The Protestant . . . cuittles us with the liberty of conscience.

gomerll, gomrell, gamphrell, a stupid fellow. See gomerall, p. 88 and note.

P. 380. Stone walla, etc. This is a verse of Lovelace's poem To Alttiea.

P. 384. House-of-Muir, not far from Rullion Green, in the Pentland Hills.

P. 385. limbo, restraint, confinement, prison. In scholastic theology limbo was a region bordering on hell; it was by some divided into three parts, limbus patrum, a place for the patriarchs and for good men that died before the coming of Christ; limbus infantum, a similar place for unbaptized infants; and limbus fotuomm, the receptacle of all vanity and nonsense ; cf. Milton, Par. Lost, iil. 495:

" Into a limbo large and broad, since called The Paradise of Fools."

Handlton, one of the chief towns of Lanark.

CHAPTER XXIX.

P. 393. spunk, spunke, spank (1) a spark of fire; (2) a very small fire ; (3) a match ; (4) spirit, vivacity.

P. 396. Amorltes or Philistines, The Amorites were one of the chief nations that possessed the land of Canaan before its conquest by the Israelites.

The Philistines were another of these nations with whom the Israelites had to cope on their entry into the promised land ; the Philistines were driven back to a narrow strip of land near the coast of the Mediterranean, of which the chief towns were Gath, Gaza, Ekron, Askelon, and Ashdod : the hatred of this nation against the Jews was inveterate, and was exhibited by acts of hostility even at the time of the Babylonian captivity (Neh., lli. 23, 24). The Covenanters were fond of speaking of their enemies by the names of the enemies of the chosen people.

P. 397. an unfordable river, the Clyde.

a long and narrow bridge, Bothwell Bridge over the Clyde, a little to the north-west of Handlton.

P. 398, trimmers, were a party of politicians that formed a third party in Parliament, between the Wings and Tories, in the reign of Charles II., about 1610. Their leader, Charles Montagu, Earl of Halifax, was a Trimmer on principle, and regarded the title as one of honour. They supported Monarchy, but opposed James, Duke of York. See p. 403 note on Neither fish, flesh, etc.

CHAPTER XXX.

P. 400. the Keep. This is the name given to the strongest and securest part of a castle.

P. 403. neither fish, or flesh, or glide red-herring, a proverbial expression, to which allusion is made in Dryden's Epilogue to the Duke of Guise, ; speaking of Trimmers, Dryden says :

" Damned neuters, in their middle way of steeling,
Are neither fish, nor flesh, nor good red herring -.
Not Whigs nor Tories they ; nor this nor that ;
Nor birds nor beasts : but just a kind of bat ;
A twilight animal, true to neither cause,
With Tory wings, but Whiggish teeth and claws. "

Calvin. See p. 18 and note.

noggin of Inspiring; ale, " a mug or pof of earth with a large belly and narrower mouth" [Halhwell], It is used as a provincialism in some parts of England to denote a measure equivalent to a gill. But of even the most "inspiring ale" our friend "honest Poundtext" would have required more than a gill—the fourth part of a pint.

P. 410. a people, as already mentioned, particularly obnoxious, to the western Whigs, and who, etc, la this a misprint ?

regale (Fr. regal, Lat. regalis), properly a royal or princely entertainment. It is used here as equivalent simply to repast or entertainment.

P. 4". the great High-Priest of all the Nine, John Dryden, made Poet Laureate in 1670. The quotation below is from Absalom and Achitophel (ll. 27, etc.), in which the Duke of Monmouth is portrayed as Absalom.

His dress, etc. This account of Dalziel's dress is not quite in accordance with that given by Captain Crnchton (quoted by Mr. Kirkpatrick Sharpe in his "Notes to Kirkton's History"). "He (Dalziel) was bred up very hardy from his youth, both in diet and clothing. He never wore boots, nor above one coat, which was close to his body, with close sleeves, like those we call Jockey coats. He never wore a peruke nor did he shave his beard since the minder of King Charles I. In my time his head was bald, which he covered only with a beaver hat, the brim of which was not above three inches broad. His beard was white and bushy, and yet reached down almost to his girdle. He usually went to London once or twice a year, and then only to kiss the King's hand, who had a great esteem for his worth and valour. His unusual dress and figure, when he was in London, never failed to draw after him a great crowd of boys and other young people, who constantly attended at his lodgings, and followed him with huzzas as he went to Court or returned from it. As he was a man of humour, he would always thank them for their civilities when he left them at the door to go in to the King, and would let them know exactly at what hour he intended to come out again and return to his lodgings. When the King walked in the park, attended by some of his courtiers, and Dalziel in his company, the same crowds would always be after him, showing their admiration of his beard and dress, so that the King could hardly pass on for the crowd; upon which his Majesty bid the devil take Dalziel for bringing such a rabble of boys together, to have their guts squeezed out, while they gaped at his long beard and antic habit, requesting him at the same time (as Dalziel used to express it) to have and dress like other Christians, to keep the poor bairns out of danger. All this could never prevail on him to part with his beard: but yet, in compliance to his Majesty, he went once to Court in the very height of fashion, but as soon as the King and those about him had laughed sufficiently at the strange figure he made, he resumed his usual habit, to the great joy of the boys, who had not discovered him in his fashionable drees."

CHAPTER XXXI.

P. 418. Lowdlen MalUsha, the Lowdlen Militia. Lowdlen was a district, the militia of which evidently wore a blue uniform.

P. 422. this wretched Achan, Achan (troubler) was an Israelite of the tribe of Judah, who, when Jericho and all that it contained were accursed and devoted to destruction, secreted a portion of the spoil in his tent. For this sin Jehovah punished Israel by their defeat in their attack upon Ai. When Achan confessed his guilt, and the booty was discovered, he was stoned to death with his whole family, and their remains, together with their property, were burned (Joahua' vn.).

among ye. We use you and nofye for this objective case.

P. 423. NuHifldian, an unbeliever.

the patriarch. Abram said unto Lof"let there be no strife," etc. (Jen., xill. 8).

Let is used in the sense of hinder Cf. ffamht, I. iv. 85 :

"I'll make a ghost of him that lets me."

CHAPTER XXXII.

P. 428. Knowe, know, a little hill.

P. 429. Loch-Bloy, a small lake between Loch Long and Loch Lomond, the centre of the possessions of the MacfarTanes. The Lennox and Macfailane clans joined together against the Macgregors ; and both clans seem to have used this war-cry.

P. 430. partisans (Fr. perlinaane, from O.F. pertwver, to pierce), a kind of halberd, a truncheon, a staff. Halliwell describes it as a kind of short pike • it was used in places where the long pike would have been inconvenient. "A partisan, a javelin to skirmish with" (Basset, 1580)

P. 435. sybo, a young onion.

let us make for some strength, let us seek some stronghold, place of refuge.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

P. 437. hurdles, the buttocks, the rump.

Btof(1) a young bull or ox; (2) a bull of any age.

syne, since, ago.

P. 438. neither stirred tongue nor hand: should have been written or printed "stirred neither hand nor tongue." Neither. . . nor should precede the same parts of speech.

P. 439. Jehovah-Jireh, i. e. "Jehovah will see" or "provide." The name given by Abraham to the place where he prepared to offer Isaac, and where Jehovah provided another victim (Gen., xxii. 14).

P. 442. uncreditable: this form has been superseded by discreditable.

Joahua utters this complaint when the Israelites are smitten at Ai (Joshua, vii, 8).

P. 444. the petition for deliverance and composure of spirit, etc. The Collect for Peace : " Defend us Thy humble servants in all assaults of our enemies; that we, surely trusting in Thy defence, may nob four the power of any adversaries, through the might of Jesus Christ our Lord."

P. 445. Aa the sun went back . . . Hezeldah. Soo // Kings, xx. I. II.

P. 447. awes ye a day in ha'arst, literally, owes ynu a day in harvest, i.e. a great debt; for harvest is, of course, tho busiest time of the year, and it would bo more difficult to pay back a debt of a day's work in harvest than at any other time of the year.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

P. 449. Drumshinnel, apparently the name of tho farm-housp.

P. 450. Mischief shall haunt the violent man. This is perhaps the Cameronian's adaptation of Psalm, cxl. I and 2, "Deliver mi¹, O Lord, from the evil man; preserve me from the violent man; which imagine mischiefs in their heart."

P. 453. when that wish (of ClavBrhouse) seemed to be accomplished. Claverhouse fell in the battle of Killiocrankie (1689), shot through the sides as he rose in his stirrups to signal his iuu'ii onwards. "As he dropped From his horse, a soldier named Johnson caught him. The dying man, with the instinct of the enthusiastic commander, asked anxiously how the day went. The supporter said it went well for the Kino, but he was sniry for him. Clavcrhousp answered, it mattered not for himself it the day went well for the King" [Burton].

poltroon (Fr. and Sp. pdtron, It. poltrone, an idle fellow, a coward), a coward, craven, dastard,

CHAPTER XXXV.

P. 455. r6ve*ill6 (Fr. rtve.il, from remitter, to awake, Lat. vigilare), the summons about break of day for soldiera to rise: it is generally given in England by tho beat of drum, nnt by sound of trumpet.

P. 457. Froissart . . . the noble canon, was a native of Valenciennes (1333—1480) and by profession an ecclesiastic. His Chronvjes treat (according to their title) of tho "Murveilleuses Emprises, Nobles Aventures, ct Faits d'Arnica advenus en son temps en France, Angletcrre, Bretagne, Bourgognc, Escosse, Espagne, et es autres parties." They form ono of the most important and authentic sources of tho history of that day; but nevertheless they arc not free from mistakes and inaccuracies,

P. 458. villain churls. Churl is the same as carle, explained p. 22. Villain is an adjective here (Lat. vUlawis), and means working on a farm; it is used contemptuously by Clavorhouse, and phrases like this illustrate the gradual depreciation in meaning of words which originally had no einiater signification.

P. 461. turn cat in pan. Dr. Brewer explains this phrase thus, "to turn traitor, to be a turn-coat." The phrase seems to be the French tounwr cdté en peine (to turn sides ill trouble). I do nofthink it refers to turning pancakes.

"When George in pudding-time came o'er,
And moderate men looked big, sir;
I turned a cat-in-pan once more,
And so became a Whig, sir." (Vicar of Bray.)

P. 462. Canongate is the district in which stood the abbey church of Holyrood. (See Maitland's History of Edinburgh.)

P. 464. san benlto (contracted from saco benito, It. sacco heuedetto, Lat. saccus btndicdtJt), a robe painted with hideous figures, worn by persons condemned by the Inquisition.

auto-da-fe in Portuguese. The Spanish equivalent is Auto dc Ft, meaning "an act of faith." It is a day set apart by the Inquisition for the exandnation of heretics. these nofacquitted wero burnt. Tim reason why the Inquisitors burnt their victims was because they were fnrbirden "to shed blood"; an axiom of the Roman Cathelic Church being "Eccfesia non novit eanguinem" (the Church is untainted with blood) [Brewer].

P. 467. plough-paddle, a small spiulc witli which to clean a plough.

nantle (1) a considerable number; (2) equivalent to much.

by (1) beyond; (2) besides, over and above; (3) away from, witheut, witheut regard to, contrary to; (4) in a way of distinction from.

out-taken, owtakyn, outtak, owtane (1) except; (2) besides, in addition.

win by, to get past.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

P. 468. a leash of game, a brace and a half; tierce; three; three creatures of any kind, especially greyhounds, foxes, bucks, hares, and partridges.

a craven to confess. Cuddie.

a code of the same to stand at bay. We should say a gamecock; he means Maobriur.

P. 469. the Duke of Lauderdale. See Editor's Introduction, Historical Personages, p. xxii.

apofltaay (Grk. dirwrriwfo, a standing off from, a defection, from dir&, from, and vr'vai, tg stand) a total desertion of one's faith, principles, or party.

P. 470. dudgeon-haft, the hilt of a dagger.

P. 471. Jaud, Jad, a jade.

P. 476. escheat and inbroug-ht, forfeited and brought into the treasury of the kin^m. Aocnrdmg to the old feudal tenure, if a tenant died without heirs, the land was liable to escheat or return to the lord. This might occur (1) if the kindred or blood of this tenant failed; (2) if the tenant committed a felony and was hanged and convicted thereof, or fled the country and was outlawed. If the curia WAS treason the land was forfeited not to the lord, but to the king.

in commendam, in trust. The term was applied to benefices held by bishops or other dignitaries to supplement their official income when it was small. Here the duties of both Dean and Rector and executioner are put to moil by one man. Hooper, the Bishop of Gloucester, received this see of Worcester in commendam (1552).

P. 477. Leith, the chief town on the Firth of Forth. It is now the sixth largest town in Scotland.

P. 478. Stadtholder, formerly the chief magistrate of the United Provinces of Holland.

Prince of Orange ... at the battle of Bénéf. At the village of Bénéf, between Charleroi and Mons, the combined Imperialist and Dutch forces under William of Orange were defeated by Prince Condé on 11th August, 1674.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

P. 482. Time, to use Rosalind's simile, etc. The reference is to Shakespeare's As you Like it, III. n. 321, "Time travels in divers paces with divers persons. I'll tell you who Time ambles withal, who Time trots withal, who Time gallops withal, and who he stands still withal," etc., etc. Time has paced (i.e. stepped slowly, walked) with our hero up to the present; all the many events described before have been crowded into two months; now Time has made to gallop over an interval of several years.

P. 483. Jacobites, the partisans of James II., after his abdication in 1688, and also of his son and grandson, the two Pretenders.

undermost, lowest in place, rank, or influence. Addison uses the word in the same connection, "the party that is undermost," Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, was sent by Edward I. to be Governor of Scotland in 1305. He surprised Robert Bruce at Methven, but in 1307 was defeated by the Scots at Loudoun Hill.

P. 487. espiegle, mischievous, roguish.

P. 488. man has something¹ to keep their hearts abune by ordinal, need something a little stronger than usual to keep their hearts up: abunne, almv, up; by, beyond.

clouded, mended, patched; of. Shakespeare, Henry VI., Part II., IV. ii. 105, "Spare not but such as go in clouded shoon."

Again, OymwlIiiiK, IV. ". 214, "And put my clouted brogues from off my feet, whose rudeness answered my steps too hard." Cf. John, III. iv. 51: "Or madly think a babe of clouts were lie."

apeer at, interrogate, ask.

Single Camtch, the vulgar name for a catechism. (Carritehes 13 a corruption of catechize, sb. Fr. cuMchtoe, which has been treated .is a plural with singular ittnttrh. Cf. Hrt. Jlfdf, xvi., "I can say the single carritch and the double carntch and justification and effectual calling" Mod Scotch, "He knows the can-itches thoroughly.") The Church of Scotland teaches two catechisms, the larger and the shorter catechisms, "agreed upon by the assembly of Divines at Westminster, with the assistance of Commissioners from the Church of Scotland, as a part of the covenanted unif01nnty in religion betwixt the Churches of Christ in the kingdoms of Scotland, England and Ireland, and appinved Anno 1648, by the (ienuial Assembly of the Church of Scotland, to be a Directory for catechising such as hare made some prv-Jfciency in the biowledye of the yrowids of Kehyton (the woriKs in iLilies apply to larger catechism, in the case of the smaller catechism the following words are substituted "such as are of weaker capacity ") Cuddle's "single carritch" is the smaller catechism.

Effectual Calling¹ is defined in the Shorter Catechism as "the work ol: God's Spnit, whereby, convincing us of our sin and misery, enlightening our minds in the knowledge of Christ, and renewing our wills, He doth persuade and enable us to embrace Jesus Clinst, freely offered to us "I the Gospel." This was rather a diHiunit answer for these of weaker capacity to learn, and Caddie boasts thmt he had accomplished the task.

F. 489 bottomless breeks, kilts.

fairing is a present from a fair. It is used ironically here, or perhaps in the sense of his reward.

ajee, agea (1) to one side, awry ; (2) ajar, a little open.

P. 491. paid, drubbed, beaten.

wud, wod, woda, vod, mad, frantic ; cf. Henry VI, Part I., IV. vii. 35, "How the young whelp u{ Talbot's, raging wood, did flesh his sword."

bide (1) await, wait for; (2) soffer, endure. , ' downa bide means I cannofendure.

akeily, skeely, skilful, intelligent; sometimes it is written skilly.

P. 492. Jlmply (1) neatly, slenderly ; (2) scantily.

P. 493. Blk, eke, an addition'.

outahot, a projection.

onataod, the building on a farm.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

P. 494. purpose-like, apparently well qualified for any business. sowens, sometimes BOWenB-porridge, potlagu made of cold sowens (paste) by mixing meal with them while un the fire.

P. 495. dowd na, was nofable, could not; duw means to be able.

P. 496. coup, cowp, overturn, upset; sometunes usod intransitively, "the tottering dcevil coupit owro amang his own pigs, and damaged a, score of them" (Fortunes of Nigel).

menage, household, fandly.

parterres, flower beds.

P. 498. pledge, a quick flash of the eye.

P. 499. atwell, very well.

Joan Tamson's man. There is a Scotch proverb "Butter bo Johu Tampson's man than Ring and Ding's or John KIIDX'S." John Tamuson's is he that is complaisant to his wife's humours; Ring and Ding's is he whom his wife scolds; John Knox's is he whom his wjfo beats [Scottish Proverbs, by James Kelly, M.A., 1721].

threep. See p. 375 note.

it's but speaking- the auld wife fair and they may a' live, etc. : he bos only to speak well to (ingratiate himself with) the old woman and they might all live together comfortably enough.

P. 500. maiBt ower proud, almost too proud.

*win ower (1) to get over, literally; (2) to surmount, metaphorically.

flytlnff, scolding.

kittle (1) ticklish; (2) difficult; (3) nofeasily managed, etc.

P. 501. crack (1) to talk boastingly; (2) to talk freely and fandliarly.

carline, carlln. See p. 99 note.

Punch and the Deevil rugging about the Baker, This is a variation from our Punch and Judy Show: it is perhaps a remnant of some old Mystery Play. Ituytjiny means (1) pulling hastily or roughly; (2) tearing; (3) spoiling, plundering.

P. 502. aff the coast, out of the way; cf. our vernacular, till the coast's clear.

P. 505. I will be found is Scotch, nofEnglish idiom.

Blair of Athele. Claverhouse fell at the battle of Killiecrankie, "his body was wrapped in two plaids and conveyed to Blair Castle. Within a short time afterwards he was buried beneath the secluded church of Blair; and never vaulted roof nor marblo monument covered the last abode of a more restless a n d ambitious heart than that which has slept in this quiet place

 "amidst peasant dust" [Barton].

P. 508. implement, fulfillment; in implement of the indenture, in fulfilment of the deed or agreement.

P. 517. nre-flaiiffht, fyinlaught, lightning.

mldBiunner madness, of. Twelfth Niyht, III. iv. 6 :

"This is very midsummer madness."

The idea seemed to exist that the dog days might have the same effect on men as on dogs.

P. 518. nil novit in causa, he knew nothing about the matter.

P. 519. "Vryheid" of Rotterdam, the ship on which Henry Mui ton had sailed from Leith.

Delrio wrote Disquisitiones Magicæ, published in 1720. "While inveighing against those physicians who maintain that all diseases have natural causes, this learned Jesuit admits that men may be dumb, epileptic, or lunatic without being obsessed ; but what the doctors do is that, finding the disposition of epileptics suitable, they insinuate themselves into them : also they attack lunatics, especially at full moon, when their brains are art; full of humours ; or they introduce diseases by staring up the black bile, Bending blacks into the brain and cells of the nerves, and setting obstructions in the ears and eyes to cause deafness and blindness " [Encyclopaedia Britannica].

Burtaog and DB L'Anere appear to have been writers on Demonology, but I cannot find any account of their theories.

on the subject of apparitions, etc. Scott wrote a book on Demonology and Witchcraft; he here pokes fun at the believers in ghosts, etc.

in return natura, in the world, and therefore in no wise supernatural.

deceptio visus, optical delusion.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

P, 529, toy, a head-dress of linen or woollen that hangs down over the shoulders, worn by old women of the lower classes.

in propria persona, in her own character.

mlBlear'd (1) unmannerly ; (2) mischievous, lalfh (1) low; (2) noftall.

P. 530. Bcylla, a rock on the coast of Italy, Charybdis, a whirlpool on corresponding coast of Sicily: hence the -lins' "inctrfw in Seyllam cupiens vitare GharyMiH," and in Merchant of Venice, III. v. 19, Launcelot says, "When I shun Bcylla, your father, I fall into Charybdis, your mother."

bucking' tub, a washing tub. To buck IB to wash ; a buck-basket, the basket in which linen is cam'l'd. Cf. Shakespeare: Merry Wives of Windsor, III. III. 140, "Throw foul linen upon him, as if it were going to bucking."

cocking, looking big, pert, or menacing.

Argus (fyryor, swift-foot), the name of Odysseus' faithful hound, the only creature that recognized him on his return home after the siege of Troy and his long wandering. Cf. Horn. Od., xvll. 292.

P. 531. pipkin, a small earthen boiler.

P. 582. sough, south, soogh, awouch, v. (1) to emit a rushing or whistling sound ; (2) to breathe long as in sleep.

sough, s. (1) a rushing or whistling sound; (2) the sound emitted during deep sleep ; (3) a deep sigh.

dwam, dualm, dwalm, dwaum (1) a swoon; (2) a sudden fit of sickness.

P. 534. unco (1) unknown ; (2) nofacquainted, being in the state of a stranger ; (3) nofdomestic;; (4) so much changed as scarcely to be recognized ; (5) unusual, surprising ; (6) strange, as applied to country; (7) distant, reserved in one's manner.

CHAPTER XL.

P. 535. comfit a, pieserves, pickles, etc.

P. 536. the United States of Holland.

writer, attorney.

P. 533. pickle. Sue p. 93 note.

soup, sup (1) the quantity of spoon-moat taken into the mouth at once; (2) a mouthful of liquor; (3) a considerable quantity of drink, or of any thin food.

P. 539. divertisement, diversion.

ought, possessed. Cf. oi0e, owed in Shakespeare. Tempest, I. ii. 607- "No sound that the earth owes," Tempetf, III. i. 45 : "The noblest grace she owed."

sanctum sanctorum, literally Holy of Holies ; then a private room into which no one enters uninvited.

Dighting¹ his shune, wiping his shoes; dight, dycht (1) prepare ; (2) deck ; (3) dress food; (4) polish ; (5) wipe; (6) dry by nibbing; (7) Rift; (8) treat, handle; (9) handle, applied to the mind; (10) drub ; (11) make an end of.

counterfeit presentment Sue Hamlet, III. iv. 54.

P. 540. fal-lalls, the falling roffs of a woman's drew; any gay ornaments.

P. 541. best-master, beitmister, that which is used in a strait, for supplying any deficiency ; applied either to a person or to a thing. Beit, to help or supply; mister, a necessity or want.

P. 542. Howff. see p. 38 note. Jamieson, however, gives the words hoif, hoff, hove, howff, hyfe, meaning (1) hall; (2) burial-place, the principal place of interment at Dundee is called the noofft (3) a haunt; (4) a plauu where one wishes to be concealed, fek, fek (1) a term denoting both space and quantity or number; (2) the greatest part.

CHAPTER XLI.

P. 544. dribble, drib (1) a drop; (2) drizzling rain.

aqua mtrabilis, wonderful water; brandy is so called from its startling effects: other similar phrases are aquafortis, aqua vita.

P. 545. Wittenbold is a fictitious name for some one of the many Cromwellian generals brought to England by William III.

P. 546. Torpmclibn'B Bant, a strathspey, i. e. daunce music; a rant is very merry dance music.

caterpillar. The soldiers were so called because they were billeted on the people, and devoured their substance.

lang ten is probably a term for gambling; "catch the ten" used to be a favourite game in Scotland: this expression is therefore equivalent to "if he held the trump card."

birky (1) a lively young fellow, a person of mettle; (2) avid birky, "old boy," "old chappie."

P. 547. tryst (1) to engage a person to meet one at a given time and place; (2) to meet with, used in relation to a divine ordination.

clinked down on, clapped down on, imposed on her suddenly.

P. 548. diajnaked-looking (1) exhibiting every appearance of decay in circumstances; (2) having a downcast look.

P. 552. lock, loake, a small quantity.

CHAPTER XLII.

P. 553. widow of Zarephath. See L Kings, xvii. 9-23.

P. 54. what Jael was to Blaers. Judges, iv. 17, etc.

P. 555. steer, store, steir, to stir.

plea'd, tried in a court of law.

P. 556. cobble, coble, kobil (1) a small boat, a yawl; (2) a larger kind of fishing boat.

kye, plural of cow.

P. 557. lound, quietly.

Probable, probably,

P. 560. seven unhallowed prelateo, the seven bishops, viz. Bancroft, Archbishop of Canterbury; Lloyd, bishop of St

Asaph; Ken, bishop of Bath and Wells; Turner, bishop of Ely; Lake, bishop of Chiohester; White, bishop of Peterborough; and Trelawney, oishop of Bristol, who were committed to the Tower by Chief Justice Jeffreys un 10th May, 1688, because they refused to read the Declaration of Indulgence according to the King's command. When brought to trial, the bishops wore acquitted. This tyrannical treatment of the bishops was the last offence leading to the dethronement of James II.

an armed regiment under the Yerl of Angus. This was the celebrated Cafneronian or 26th Regiment, with the youthful Lord Angus as Colonel, and Cleland as his lieutenant.

P. 561. Montgomery. The Earl of Argyle, Sir James Montgomery of Skelmorlie, and Sir John Dalrynpile—one from each of the three Estates, the Peers, the Barons, and the Burgesses, weresenttoLondontoconveywithduceremonytheofferofthecrownofSuotland the crown of Scotland to William III., in 1689. A few months after he was implicated with Annandale and Ross in a Jacoobito plot, and was obliged to flee from the country. He spent the rest of his days chiefly abroad, associating himself with miserable plots and trusted by no one.

Ferguson, the plotter, as he is sometimes called, was, previous to the Revolution, a Presbyterian or an Independent in religion, and a Revolutionist in politics, and was accused by ZacharyBonneo fbeingt h erealdemono ft h eAssassinationP of 1683; but after the Revolution he became a High Episcopalian and a Jacobite, and seems to have been a kind of London agent or spy in connection with "The Montgomery Plot."

Sir Harry Vane advocated unlimited religious liberty. In t h elongParliament h ebecameo n eo ft h e leaderso ft h eR and Branch party, and assisted in the conviction of Strafford. In 1643 he was made one of the Commissioners to negotiate the alliance with Scotland, and was responsible for the clause "according to the word of God" being inserted in the Solemn League and Covenant. He was one of the ablest leaders of the Independents; his character in given by Milton thus :

"Vane, young in years, but in sage counsel old,
Than whom a better Senator ne'er held
The helm of Rome, when gowns, no farms, repelled
The fierce Epirofe and the African bold
Whether to settle peace or to unfold
The drift of hollow states hard to be spelled;
Then to advise how war may best, upheld,
Move by her two main nerves, iron and gold
In all her equipage; besides to know
Both spiritual power and civil, what each moans,
What severs each, thou hast learned, which few have done.
The bounds of either sword to thee wo owe:
Therefore on thy firm hand Religion leans
In peace, and reckons thee her eldest son."

His uncompromising support of Liberty led Charles II. to say of him that he was too dangerous a man to live if he could honestly be put out of the way. He was executed on June 14th, 1662.

themas Harrison (b. 1606, at Newcastle-under-Lyne) entered Essex's body-guard, was one of Charles I.'s judges, and signed the death-warrant. He withstood Charles II. in the North, and took part in the battle of Worcester. In the "Barebones" Parliament he was one of the leaders of the advance party. Roger Williams describes him as the head of "the fifty-six party," who, "were of the vote against priests and tithes," "the second in the nation of late," "a very gallant, most deserving heavenly man, but most high-flown for the kingdom of the saints and the Fifth Monarchy." He took part in Overton's plot (1654); and after the Restoration he was tried, condemned, and executed in 1660.

Orarton. "In January, 1655, Major General Overton, one of the first generals of the English Army, a zealous Republican, and a friend of Milton, was arrested in Scotland, on a charge of having formed the design of making himself master of a few fortified places, and then pressing forward into England, and overthrowing the Government. It is certain that his plan included also the assassination of Cromwell, Lambert, and a number of other important personages" [Ranke].

P. 563. Black Linn of Linklater: it is difficult to identify this Linn. Scott has in all probability described one of the falls of the Clyde under a fictitious name, hemple, a rogue; one for whom the hemp grows.

CHAPTER XLIII.

P. 564. raise, rise, used intransitively.

P. 571. cave of Adullam, the refuge of David when pursued by Saul (I. Sam., xxii. 1).

P. 573. Nabal, the churlish shipmaster who disclaimed all knowledge of David (I. Sam., xxv. 10).

Demas, the companion of St. Paul during his first imprisonment at Rome: at a later period (II. Tim., iv. 10) he is mentioned as having deserted the apostle through love of this present world.

P. 574. the perjured traitor who first introduced Episcopacy into Scotland, Archbishop Sharp.

the boldest and best soldier ... at Drumclo?, Bothwell.

the captain who defended the Chapel of Holyrood. Is this Captain Wallace, who defended Holyrood against a Presbyterian mob in 1688? If so, it is no quod in accordance with the story in Tales of a Grandfather, chapter Iv.

P. 578. shaw, thicket.

P. 579. Moorkopf means black head.

CHAPTER XLIV.

P. 583. far frae fresh, drunk.

P. 591. mantua-making, dress-making.

"Tale of Jemmy and Jenny JeBBaxny." In his autobiography Scott wrote, "The whole Jemmy and Jenny Jessamy tribe I abhorred, and it required the art of Burney, or tha feeling of Mackenzie, to fix my attention upon a domestic tale. But all that was adventurous and romantic . . . that touched upon knight-errantry, I devoured."

P. 592. the author of "Julia de Roubigne." Henry Mackenzie, who wrote also The Man of Frding, The Man of the World, a Life of Blacklock, and a Life of John Home.

Mr. Pattieson. Peter Pattieson was the name assumed by Sir Walter Scott as the author of the Tales of Mi,' Landlord, which were supposed to be published posthumously by Jedediah Cleishbotham. Pattieson was described as assistant teacher to Cleishbotham at Uandercleugh.

P. 593. sough, silence.

P. 594. Delville received Cecilia. Mr. Delville was one of the guardians, and also the lover of Cecilia, the heroine of a novel bearing her name, written by Madame d'Arblay (Mias Burney). This novel, Cecilia, was published in 1782, the proof-sheets being revised by Dr. Johnson.

P. 596. Scheherazade, the fictitious teller of the stories in The Arabian Nights' Entertainment.

INDEX.

[The figures refer to pages of this book.]

A

Abulyiements, 645.
 Achan, 682.
 Act of Supremacy, 660.
 Aff the coaat, 688.
 Anal), 670.
 Air, 665.
 Aje, 687.
 Alford, 625, 672.
 Ainaist, 676.
 Amalek, 668.
 Amontiis, 680.
 Anabaptists of Munster, 675.
 Aries, 655.
 Angel, 651.
 Antmonuan, 653.
 Apostasy, 685.
 Apotheqm, 643.
 Apparitions, 615, 689.
 Apple of my eye, 673.
 Appurtenance, 672.
Aqua mirabilis, 691.
 Argus, 690.
 Aries, 648.
 Arm-gaunt, 657.
 Attainted, 650.
 Atwell, 688.
 Aught, 690.
 Auld Earn, 625, 672.
Auto da Fe, 685.
 AWBB ye a day in ha'arst, 684.
 Aymer de Valence, 686.

B

Bah, 677.
 Bacchante, 668.

Backsword, 640.
 Baff, 646.
 Baillie, 671.
 Balfour of Burley, 620, 650.
 Bandoleer, 656.
 Bang, 655.
 Bannock, 640, 649, 673.
 Barbel-surgeon, 677.
 Barking and fleeing, 650.
 Baileycorn, John, 649.
 Barouche, 633.
 Barrow, 667.
 Baitizan, 658.
 Bass, Tower of the, 675.
 Batts, 645.
 Bawbee, 676.
 Bear, 673.
 Beaton, Cardinal, 675.
 Beet-master, 690.
 Beild, 648.
 Behal, 642.
 Bcmson, 646.
 Bestial, 638.
 Bicker, 102, 630, 650.
 Bide, 687.
 Bien, 648.
 Biggit, 671.
 Bilbo, 641.
 Bin, 655.
 Birding-piece, 640.
 Birky, 691.
 Birl, 643, 656.
 Birling, 23.
 Bittook, 657.
 Black-a-vised, 658.
 Black jack, 649.
 Black Linn of Linklater, 693.

Blair of A thole, 688.
 Blast, 662.
 Blatant, 665.
 Blate, 639.
 Blink, 673.
 Blether, 664.
 Blue bonnet, 640.
 Blunderbuss, 634.
 Blythe, 664.
 Boanerges, 667.
 Boddle, 664.
 Bonnet, 631.
 Booby, 662.
 Boots, 654.
 Bothwell, Sergeant, 600.
 Bottomless breaks, 687.
 Bounteth, 664.
 Bout, 667.
 Bow, 673.
 Bowie, 630.
 Bozrah, 670.
 Branks, 632.
 Braw Gallant, 635.
 Braws, 643, 679.
 Brig o' Dee, 625, 672.
 Brecham, 667.
 Breer, 648.
 Brickie, 647.
 Broadsword, 640.
 Brogue, 665.
 Broo, 646.
 Brose, 668.
 Browst, 639.
 Bucking tub, 690.
 Budge, 663.
 Budget, 654.
 Buff, 635.
 Bumpkin, 640.
 Bunyan, John, 629.
 Burtheog, 626, 689.
 Busk, 643.
 Buskit, 676.
 Buxom, 635.
 By, 685.
 Byre, 638.

C

Cairn, 666.
 Cairn-gorm, 659.
 Ca'ing, 645.

Gallant, 650.
 Calprencde, 635.
 Calvimst, 632.
Cameron, 621.
 Cameronian, 630, 674.
 Can, 650.
 Candlemas, 634, 642.
 Canongate, 685.
 Cannily, 639.
 Canny, 653, 656.
 Cant, 666.
 Cappercleugh, 657.
 Captain Hodgson's Memoirs,
 622.
 Carabine, 633.
 Carle, 634.
 Carlme, 649, 688.
 Carritch, 687.
 Casque, 637.
 Cast, 648, 665.
 Catacomb, 655.
 Cateran, 644.
 Caterpillar, 691.
 Cates, 660.
 Causewayed, 644.
 Caup, 630.
 Caution, 645.
 Cave of Adullam, 693.
 Cecilia, 694.
 Cess, 652.
 Chamber of dais, 677.
 Chancy, 643.
 Change-house, 633.
 Chanter, 637.
 Chappin, 640.
 Charter of my country, 661.
 Chasseur, 636.
 Chield, 638, 676.
 Chimley-neuk, 646.
 Chirurgeon, 677.
 Chit, 656.
Ci-devant, 640.
 Claohan, 645.
 Claverhouae, 604, 684.
 Claverhouse's charger, 606.
 Claverhouse's death, 684.
 Clavering, 646.
 Cleishbotham, 632.
 Cleland, 666.
 Cleopatra, 635.

Cleugh, 663.
 Clink, 663.
 Clinked down on, 691.
 Close, 641.
 Clour, 663.
 Clouted, 686.
 Clow-gillie-flower, 643.
 Cobble, 691.
 Cockade, 650.
 Cockernony, 643.
 Cocking, 690.
 Cogue, 630.
 Collation, 671.
 Colt foal'd of an acum, 640.
 Comfits, 690.
 Commutation, 634.
 Conventicle, 660.
 Cornet, 638.
 Corra Linn, 650.
 Coulter, 645.
 Counterfeit presentment, 690.
 Coup, 630, 679, 688.
Coup de main, 678.
 Court of Gentiles, 648.
 Court of Offices, 642.
 Covenant of Grace, 650.
 Covenant of Works, 650.
 Covenanters, Predictions of the, 619.
 Covenanters, Retreats of the,
 618.
 Crack, 648, 688.
 Cruel, 645.
 Crowdie-eater, 679.
 Crown-vassal, 633.
 Cuittle, 680.
 Culvenn, 672.
 Gumming, 674.
 Curch, 666.
 Curmurring, 650.
 Curny, 673.
 Cutter's law, 653.
 Cuttia, 657.
 Cutty spoon, 630.
 Cyrus the Grand, 657

D

Daffing, 639, 678.
 Dagon, 667.

Daidling, 667.
 Dalziel, 623.
 Dalziel's boots, 625.
 Dalziel's dress, 682.
 Dargue, 629.
 Davy, 655.
 Deave, 653.
 Deborae, 668.
Deceptio visus, 689.
 Deer-hair, 632.
 De l'Ancre, 626, 689.
 Delation, 652.
 Delrio, 626, 689.
 Delville, 694.
 Demas, 665, 683.
 Dcnty, 645.
 Die, 656.
 Dighting, 646, 690.
 Ding, 646, 680.
 Diotrephe, 665.
 Dirdum, 646.
 Dirk, 637.
 Dis-jasked-looking, 691.
 Disjune, 637, 660.
 Div, 651.
 Divertisement, 690.
 Doeg, 652, 668.
 Doff, 631.
 Dooms, 676.
 Doomster, 626, 674.
 Door, 650.
 Douce, 638.
 Doudling, etc., 639.
 Dour, 638, 651.
 Dour croudie-eater, 679.
 Dow, 645.
 Dow'd na, 688.
 Drab, 649.
 Drammock, 667.
 Dree, 632.
 Dribble, 691.
 Driving ower, 656.
 Drouthy, 639.
 Drucken, 673.
 Drumclog, 608, 693.
 Drumshinnel, 684.
 Ducking-stool, 651.
 Dud, 645.
 Dudgeon haft, 685.
 Duke James, 655.

Dunbar, 636, 666.
 Dung, 646.
 Dunnottar, 629
 Dura, 646.
 Dwam, 690.

E

Eail's Hall, 622.
 Eclogues of Virgil, 630.
 Effectual calling, 687.
 Egad, 662.
 Eident, 638.
 Eik, 687.
 Ehhii, 667.
 Episcopalian, 634.
 Eistianism, 649.
 Escalade, 672.
 Escheat, 686.
Espiegle, 686.
Esprit-de-corps, 623.
 Evandale, the Malignant, 629.
 Ewhow, 636.
 Express, 657.

F

Fair-fashioned, 642.
 Fairing, 687.
 Falcon, 672.
 FalconBr, 634.
 Falconet, 672.
 Fal-lalls, 690.
 Falstaff, Sir John, 678.
 Fanfare, 659.
 Fard, 674.
 Far frae fresh, 694.
 Fash, 638, 652.
 Fauld-dike, 653.
 Feared, 679.
 Febrifuge, 677.
 Feck, 691.
 Feckless, 652, 661.
 Fended, 642, 647.
 Fended in victual, 642.
 Ferguson, 692.
 Fiat, 660.
Fille-de-chambrn, 655.
 Fire-naught, 689.
 Fish, flesh, nor glide red herring, 681.

Fissenless, 642.
 Flanker, 654.
 Fleech, 671.
 Fleeing, 667.
 Flybe, 667, 688
 Foisonless, 666.
 Forby, 646, 657.
 Forehand, 647, 663.
 Forgather, 663.
 ForLahce, 659.
 Foumart, 676.
 Fowler, 634.
 Fracas, 672.
 Fraim, 657.
 Fremd, 662
 Friar's chicken, 677.
 Froissart, 684.
 Furs, 664.
 Fusee, 633.

G

Gallic, an indifferent, 674.
 Galloway, 637
 Gallow-gate, 628.
 Gandercleugh, 631.
 Gang, 635.
 Gar, 647.
 Gauntrec, 650.
 Gay, 648.
 Gear, 634.
 Geneva print, 657.
Gens d'armene, 637.
 Gey, 647.
 Ghoule, 630.
 Gideon, 670.
 Gilpy, 643.
 Girmel, 673.
 Gittern, 677.
 Gledge, 688.
 Gleg, 647, 648.
 Glenkens, 629.
 Glens of Ayr and Kunns of Galloway, 632.
 Gliff, 671.
 Glower, 655.
 Golden calf of Bethel, 642.
 Gomerall, 646, 680.
 Gowk, 653.
 Grace cup, 637.

Grnhame, Cornet, 605, 623.
 Oraithe, 637.
 Gramoches, 631.
 Graning corse, 652.
 Grassmarket, 648.
 Greet, 671.
 Gustavus Adolphus, 644.

H

Hackston of Rathillet, 625, 666.
 Hafted, 653.
 Hagar, 670.
 Halberd, 641, 678.
 Ham, 668.
 Hainan, 679.
 Handlton, 680.
 Handlton, Duke of, 643.
 Hampden, 631.
 Hantlc, 685.
 Haile, 652.
 Hams, 668.
 Haroshcth, 668.
 Harried, 649.
 Harrison, themas, 693.
 Hash, 679.
 Haugh, 646.
 Hause, 647.
 Havilah, 669.
 Havings, 656.
 Hawk whistles, 678.
 Head-mark, 655.
 Helhcat, 663.
 Humpie, 693.
 Hergian, 649.
 Heritour, 647, 673.
 Hough, 672.
 Hickery-piekery, 649.
 Highlanders in 1677, 622.
 High-priest of all the nine,
 681.
 Hinnny, 640.
 Hit at trick-track, 671.
 Hoast, 642, 665.
 Hocus-pocus, 656.
 Hodden grey, 648.
 Hole and bore, 662.
 Holme, 651.
 Hoi nfernes, 665.
 Holyrood House, 658.

Hooper, 631.
 Horning, 652.
 Horse of wood, 653.
 Hosting, 646.
 Hostler, 639.
 Howff, 637, 691.
 Huff, 661.
 Huguenot, 653.
 Humle, 638.
 Hup nor wind, 677.
 Huroheon, 646.
 HurdiL-s, 683.
 Hypochondriac, 636.

I

Ilka, 647.
 Ill-faur'd, 657.
 Implement, 689.
 Inbrought, 686.
In lommzndam, 686.
 Indulgence, 648.
 Infold, 651.
 Ingle, 639, 649.
In propma, persona, 689.
In rvnim Jiafura, 6B9.
 Intercunimune, 642, 650.
 Inverkeithing, 636.
 Inverlochry, 625, 672.

J

Jack-hoots, 634, 649.
 Jacobite, 685.
 Jalouse, 639.
 Jaud, 652, 685.
 Juhovah-Jireh, 683.
 Jehovah-Niasi, 669.
 Jemmy and Jenny Jessamy,
 627, 694.
 JennyflectiDn, 646.
 Jeroboam, 670.
 Jilt, 650.
 Jimpley, 687.
 Joe, 646, 656.
 John Tamson's man, 688.
Julia de Roubigjtti, Author of,
 627, 694.
 Justiciary, 661.
 Justifiable, 642.

K

Kail, 647.
 Kail-brosB, 678.
 Kail worm, 640.
 Kale through the reek, 663.
 Kale yard, 646.
 Kebbie, 663.
 Kebbock, 649.
 Keek, 656.
 Keep, 681.
 Kenmure, 626.
 Kent, 663.
 Kiln was in a bleeze again, 663.
 Kilsythe, 654, 657.
 Kirk-yard, 638.
 Kishun, 644.
 Kittle, 657, 688.
 Knapping doctrine, 646.
 Know, 683.
 Kohathites, 669.
 Kye, 691.
 Kyle vine, 652.

L

Lackey, 635.
 Laigh, 689.
 Laird, 639, 649.
 Landau, 633.
 Lang ten, 691.
 Laodicean, A lukewarm, 674.
 Lapsarian, 653.
 Lassock, 643.
Latchet, 665.
 Latimer, 631.
 Latitudinal-tan, 634.
 Lauderdale, 626.
 Lave, 645, 680.
 Lavrook, 646.
 Lawing, 638, 645.
 Leaguer, 678.
 Leash of game, 685.
 Leasing making, 659.
 Leather, 676.
 Leith, 686.
 Let, 683.
 Lift, 679.
 Limbo, 680.
 Limner, 660.
 Lippen, 655

Loaning, 657.
 Locality, 652.
 Loch-slay, 683.
 Lock, 691.
 Locking of the door during dinner, 602.
 Longmarston Moor, 642.
 Loon, 638, 651.
 Loot, 663.
 Loudon Hill, 661.
 Louis IB Grand, 653.
 Lound, 691.
 Lounder, 639.
 Loup, 678.
 Low, 673.
 Low Countries, 677.
 Lowdien Mallisha, 682.
 Lug, 639.
 Lug and horn, 647.
 Lum-head, 663.
 Luppen, 666.
 Lutzen, 645.

M

Maccabaeus, 670.
 Machiavel, 660.
 Magor-Missabib, 675.
 Mam, 654.
 Mains, 647, 662.
 Mair by token, 649.
 Majoring, 642.
 Malcaiah, 644.
 Malcolm Canmore, 645.
 Malignant, 101.
 Malvolio, 636.
 Manifesto, 675.
 Man of sin, 674.
 Manse, 678.
 Man-sworn, 677.
 Mantua-making, 694.
 March-dike, 631.
 Marston Moor, 636.
 Mart, 679.
 Martingale, 665.
 Martyrdum of Charles I, 661.
 Ma-vedie, 659.
 Mashlum, 673.
 Mask, 656.
 Massy, 664.

Maundering, 643.
 Mawkm, 047.
 Meal-ark, 665.
 Mearns, 629.
 Melvm, James, 676.
 Memoirs of Prinoe William
 Henry, 627.
 Menage, 688.
 Mensful, 645.
 Merk, 637, 641.
 Meroz, 671.
 Midiamtes, 675.
 Midsummer madness, 689.
 Minnie, 655.
 Mirligo, 680.
 Mischief shall haunt the violent man, 684,
Miatricorde, 659.
 MifflorBd, 689.
 Modicum, 637.
 Monk, 654.
 Monmouth, 678.
 Montgomery, 692.
 Monfcrose, 634.
 Munziss, 632.
 Moorkopf, 693.
 Moss-flow, 652.
 Moss-hag, 649.
 Muir, 656.
 Muir, House of, 680.
 Mummery, 641.
 Minister, Anabaptists of, 675.
 Murgeon, 646.
 Mutchkm, 640.
 My certie, 656.
 My lane, 680.

N

Nabal, 693.
 Nosh-gab, 651.
 Nazarite, 667.
 Neb, 678.
 News-letter, 658.
Nil novit in causa, 689.
 Nippio, 647.
 Noble, 641.
 Noggin of inspiring ale, 681.
 Nol, old, 650.
 Nomenclator, 636.

Nonce, for the, 635.
 Nullifidian, 683.

O

Odd, 667.
 Odes of Horace, 630.
 Omn, 670.
 Onstead, 687.
 Or, 662.
 Oratory, 672.
 Orlando, 637.
 Outfield, 651.
 Outahot, 637.
 Out-taken, 685.
 Overdo, Mr. Justice, 625, 661.
 Overton, 693.
Owsen, 645.

P

Paduasoy, 657.
 Paid, 687.
 Palfrey, 634.
 Palmer, 629.
 Papa-prelatist, 644.
 Parliament of 1640, 675.
 Parole, 677.
 Parterre, 688.
 Partisan, 683.
 Patriarch, 683.
 Patrol, 666.
 Pattieson, 694.
 Pearling, 654.
 Peat-hag, 652.
 Peddling, 657.
 Peel-house, 673.
Printforte et dure, 660.
 Pokah, 670.
 Pellet, 667.
 Penny fee, 647.
 Pentland Hills, battle of, 622, 631, 666.
Perdu, 646.
 Petulant, 630.
 Philiphaugh, 636.
 Philistines, 680.
 Picket, 659.
 Pickle, 648.
 Piddling, 660.

Pinner, 664.
 Pipkin, 690.
 Pniuct, 659.
 Pitch the bar, 641.
 Plack, 665.
 Plaid, 655.
 Plua'd, 691.
 Plemsh, 648.
 Pleug-paiilc, 685.
 Poach, 665.
 Pock-pudding, 673.
 Poltronn, 6H4.
 Popinjay, 599, 622, 633.
 Port Royale, 653.
 Pose, 676.
 Posterior, 680.
 Potsherd, 665.
 Presbyterian, 613, 636.
 Pretti, 653.
 Priestly ham, etc., 659.
 PiotDstor, 642.
 Proof against shot, 606.
 Provost, 641.
 Provost-marshal, 673.
 Punch and the Du'il rugging about the baker, 688.
 Purposelick, 688.
 Putt the stone, 641.

Q

Quaigh, 650.
 Quaker, 669.
Quantum in nobiti, 665.
 Quean, ", 643, 680.
 Quickly, Mrs., 661.
 Quota, 634.

R

Rabshakeh, 641.
 Rae of Dunbar, 666.
 Rad&, 673.
 Raise, 693.
 Randy, 652, 679.
 Rapier, 641.
 Raplooh, 645.
 Raxed, 649.
 Recusant, 634.
 Recusancy, 645.

Redder, etc., 639.
 Red flag bordered with blue,
 678.
 Regale, 681.
 Reiving, 638.
 Rent-mail, 660.
 Reset, 650, 655.
 Resolutioner, 642.
 Reveille, 684.
 Revciaionary, 671.
 Rheumatize, 642.
 Rig, 645, 664.
 Ripe, 676.
 Rochester, 654.
 Roman Gilead, 662.
 Romances of 17th century, 603.
 Roof-tree, 652.
 Round, 652.
 Round, etc., 639.
 Roundheads, 650.
 Rout, 662.
 Rue, took the, 680.
 Ruffle, 677.
 Ruth, 656.

S

Sack, 649.
 Saint Johnston's tippet, 647-
 Sair straita a' mcht, 635.
 Saker, 672.
 Saloon, 660.
 Salt, beneath the, 649.
 Samson, 670.
San benito, 685.
Sanctum ftaiictonim, 690.
 Sark, 677.
 Scaff and raff, 643.
 Scale kick the beam, 635.
 Scant, 667.
 Scaur, 657.
 Scheherazade, 694.
 Scorpions, chastised with, 676.
 Scotch French Guards, 625.
 Scotch tragedy, the only, 632.
 Screed, 662.
 Scuden, Monsieur, 059.
 Scuddri, Madeleine de, 635.
 Scylla, 689.
 Sectary, 642.

Seneff, 686.
 Seneschalship, 672.
 Set, 645.
 Seven prelates, 691,
 Shallum, H70.
 Sharps, 623.
 Sliarpai, murderers of Archbishop, 601.
 Shaw, 666, 693.
 Shilling-hill, 646.
 Sheriff, 633.
 Sheugh, 668.
 Shimoi, 668.
 Shur, 669.
 Sieur d'Urfe", 659
 Single carritch, 687.
 Sih'iiuu, Master, 630.
 Sin' syne, 658.
 Skaibh, 663.
 Skeily, 687.
 Rkelly, 641.
 Skelp, 656.
 Skmkcr, 658.
 Skirl, 645.
 Skirl-in-tlie-pan, 643.
 Slops, 645.
 Slot, 683.
 Socmian, 669.
 Solemn League and Covenant,
 642.
 Somegate, 642
 Sornmg, 644.
 Sough, 664, 673, 690.
 Soup, 690.
 Snwuns, 647, 688.
 Spang, 647.
 Spark, 651.
 Spawn, 662.
 Speel, 657.
 Speenng, 639.
 Speer at, 687.
 Spenoe, 639, 665.
 Springald, 661.
 Spunk, 680.
 Stadthelder, 686.
 Stanchion, 678.
 Stap, 663.
 Stark, 661.
 Starkly, 671.
 Staw, 632.

Steekit, 662.
 Steer, 691.
 Stilt, 664, 645.
 Stmg and ling, 663.
 Stir, 677
 Rtoup, 640
 Stour-lookmg, 638.
 'Stressed, 679.
 SUIB as syne, 677.
 Sunk, 632
 Surcease, 660.
 Surcingle, 665.
 Swale, 642.
 Sweal, 642.
 Syho, 683.
 Sykc, 676.
 Syne, 642, 683.

T

Tcabor, 632.
 Tangiers, 654.
 Tartan, 624, 648.
 Tass, 673.
 Tawpie, 638.
 Tent, 643
 Test-oath, 651.
 Test and qualification, 641.
 Theeking, 647.
 Thrssahan witch, 668.
 Thirty-nine, 655.
 thewleaf, 642, 651.
 Thrang, C38
 Tin apple, 644.
 Thrawmg, 649.
 Threep, 680, 688.
 Throw the axle-tree, 641.
 Thumlnkm, 654.
 Tie-wig, 634.
 Tight, 656.
 Tighter in thack and rope, 679.
 Tilbury, 633.
 Tilt, 637.
 Tippermuir, 672.
 Tirl, 676.
 Tittie, 664.
 Tolbooth, 651.
 Tophet, 668, 670.
 Torpi chen's Rant, 691.
 Tory, 638,

Touze her tap-knots, 663.
 Tow, 653.
 Toy, 689.
 Trick-track, hit at, 671.
 Trimmer, 681.
Troupe dorte, 634.
 Truckling, 656.
 Tryst, 091.
 Turn cap in pan, 685.
 Turner, Sir James, 604, 627.

U

Umquhild, 636.
 Uncle Toby, B61.
 Unco, 690.
 Uncreditable, 683,
 Undermost, 686.
 United States, 690.
 Uptak, 647.

V

Valentine and Orson, 664.
 Vane, Sir Henry, 692.
 Vidette, 673.
 Villain churls, 684.
 Villiers, 654.
 Vryheid of Rotterdam, 689.

W

Wae, 646.
 Wallie-de-shamble, 664.
 Wame, 663.
 Wappenschaw, 633.
 Ware, 664.
 Wassail, 653.
 Water-broo, 662.
 Waught, 640.
 Wean, 645.
 Weather-side, 631.
 Weeds, 634.
 Weir, 637.
 Wersh, 655.

West Fort, 644.
 Wheen, 652.
 Whig, 638, 662.
 Whigamore, 651.
 Whiles, 647, 655.
 Whilly wha, 643.
 Whinger, 663.
 Whirry, 651.
 Whisk, 656.
 Whole Duty of Man, 659.
 Whomlekirn-pule, 657.
 Wight, 671.
 Wilmot, 654.
 Win at, 680.
 Win awa, 663.
 Win by, 685.
 Win ower, 688.
 Win to, 662.
 WindleB-strae, 646.
 Winnock, 678.
 Wite, 651.
 Wittenbold, 691.
 Wizen, 653.
 Wooden Mare, 602, 655.
 Woodie, 667.
 Worcester, unfortunate field of, 635.
 Worcester man, 655.
 Wot, 641.
 Writer, 690.
 Wud, 687.

Y

Yerl of Angus, 692.
 Yoking, 649.
 Yokit by the lugs, 676,
 Yule-eve, 647.

Z

Zealous even unto slaying, 674.
 Zeruiah, Sons of, 674.
 Ziphites, 652.
 Zounds, 641.

MAGMILLAN'S ENGLISH CLASSICS:

EDITED WITH INTRODUCTIONS AND NOTES. Globs 8vo.

ADDISON AND STEELE—SELECTIONS FROM THE SPECTATOR, By K. DEIGHTON. 3s.

—THE SPECTATOR. Essays I.-Li. By Rev. J. MORRISUN,
M.A.D.D. 3s.

COVERLEY PAPERS FROM THE SPECTATOR. Edited by K. DEIGHTON. 2s.

ARNOLD—SELECTIONS. By G. C. MACATTLAY. 3s.

ATTOUN'S LAYS. By H. B. COTTKRILL, M A 6d.

BACON—ESSAYS By F. G. SELBY, M A 4s

—SELECTIONS FROM BADDN'S ES3AYS. By R O. PLATT, First Series 6d. Second Series. 1s. 3d.

—THK ADVANCEMENT OF LEARNINB. By F. G. SELBY, M.A., Book I., 2s. 6d. ; Book II., fis.

—THE NEW ATLANTIS. By A T. FLUX. Sewed, 1a. 3d.

BOSWELL—JOURNAL OF A TOUR TO THE HEBRIDES. By H. R.
CDTTERILL, M.A., D D. 3s.

BUNYAN—THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS By Rev. J. MORRISON,
M.A..DD. 2s.

BURKE—REFLECTIONS ON THE FRENUH REVOLUTION. By F. G.
SELBY, M.A. 6a.

—SPEECHES ON AMERICAN TAXATION ; ON CONCILIATION WITH AMKRICA; LETTER TO THE SHERIFFS OF BRISTOL. By F. G. SFI/BY, M.A. 4a.

—SPEECH ON CONCILIATION WITH AMERICA. By F. G. SKLBV, M.A. 1a. 9d

—THOUGHTS ON THE CAUSK OF THK PRKSICNT DISDDNTKNTS. By F. G. SELBY, M.A. 3a.

BTRON—CHILDE HAROLD's PILGRIMARK. By KUWAKHE. MOKICIS,
M.A.' Cantos I and II. 2s Cantos III autl IV. 2s.

CAMPBELL—SELECTIONS. By W. T WKUB, M A. 2p Kd.

CHAUCER—SELECTIONS FRDM CANTERBURY TALE.S. By H.
CUKSON. 5s.

—THE SQUIRE'S TALE. By A. W. POLLARD, M A. 1a 9d

—THE PROLOGUE. By A W. POLLARD, M.A. 2s.

—THE KNIGHT'S TALK. By A W. POLLARD, M.A. 2s.

—THE NUN'S PRIEST'S TALE. By A. W. POLLARD, M.A. 1a. 9d

CHOSEN ENGLISH—Selections from Wordsworth, Byron, Shelley, Lamb, and Scott. By A. ELMS, B.A. 3s.

COLERIDGE—RIME OF THE ANCIENT MARINKH. By P. T. ORES-
WELL, M.A. IB. 3'l.

COWPER—THE TASK. Books IV. and V. By W. T. WEBB. M. A.
Sewed, IB. 3d. each.

—THE TASK, BookV. Sewed, 6d.

—LETTERS, SELFCTICINR FROM. By W. T. WEBB M A. 3s.

—SHORTER POEMS. Edited by W. T. WEBB, M.A. 3s.

—THE EXPOSTULATION. Sewed, IB. 3d.

DRTDEN—SELECT SATIRES—ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL; THE MEDAL; MACFLEDKNOE. By J. CHURTON COLLINS, M.A. 2s.

—THE HIND AND THE PANTHER Edited by Prof. W. H.
WILLIAMS, University of Tasmania. 3a.

ENGLISH IDEALS—SELECTIONS FROM ENGLISH PROSE AND VERSB.
By M. P. HANSKN, M.A., and A. HART, M.A. 3s.

MAOMILLAN AND CO., LIMITED, LONDON,

- ENGLISH POETRY—FROM BLAKE TO ARNOLD. (1783-1853)
 With Introduction by C. J. BKENNAN, M A Edited by J. P. PICKBURN and J. LE GAY BKERETDN. 3s.
- GOLDSMITH—THK TRAVELLER and THE DESERTED VILLAGE. By ARTHUR BARRETT, 13 A. 2s. THE TRAVELLER (separately), sewed, 1b. 3d. THE DESERTED VILLAGE (separately), sewed, 1a. 3d.
- THE TRAVELLER and THE DESERTED Vn LAGE. By Prof. J. W HALES. 6d.
- VICAQ OF WAKEFIELP. By MICHAEL MACMILLAN, D.Litt. 3s.
- GRAY—POEMS. By JOHV BRDASHAW, LL D. 2a.
- DDK ON SPRING and THK BARD. Sew Ed, 6d.
- ELEGY IN A COUNTRY OHURCHYARD. Sewed, Bd.
- SELECT ODES. Sewed, 6d
- LIFE. By MATTHKW ARNOLD. Sewed, 6d.
- HELPS—ESSAYS WRITTEN IN THE INTKRVALS DF BUSINESS
 By F. J. KOWE, M.A., and W. T. WEBB, M.A 2s
- HOLMES—THE AUTOCRAT OF THE BRKAKFAST TABLE. By JDHJS DOWNIE, M.A. 3a.
- JOHNSON—LIFE OF MILTON. By K. DEIBHTON. 2s.
- LIFE OF DRYDEN. By P PETKKSON 3a.
- LIFE OF POPE. By P PKTERSON. 3s.
- KINGSLEY—WESTWARD Ho ! 3a.
- HEREWARD THE WAKK 3s.
- LAMB—THE ESSAYS OF ELIA. First Series. By N. L. HALL-
 WARD, M A , and S C. HILL, B.A 3s. 6d. Second Series.
 By the same. 3s 6d.
- TALÉS FROM SHAKESPEARE. Selections. By C. D PUNCHARIJ First Series The Tempest, As You Like It, The Merchant of Venice, King Lear, Macbeth, Twelfth Night, Hamlet, Othello, 1a. yd. Second Series. A Midsumuiei-Night's Dream, The Winter's Tale, Much Ado about Nothing, Macbeth, The Tandng of the Shrew, The Comedy of Errors, Othello. 1b. 9d.
- LONGFELLOW—COURTSHIP OF MILES STANDISH. By W. ELLIOT,
 M.A. 1s. 3d.
- THE SONG OF HIAWATHA. By H. B. COTTEIULL, M.A. 1s. 9d.
- EVANOELINE. By H. B. COTTERILL, M A 2s.
- MACAULAY—LAYS OF ANCIENT ROME. By W. T. WEBB, M.A.
 2s. HORATIUS, separately, 6d.
- LIFE OF SAMUEL JOHNSON. By H. B. CDTTERHIL, MA 2s 6d.
- LIFE OF OLIVER GOLDSMITH. By the same. 2s. 6d.
- LIFE OF WILLIAM PITT. By R.F. WINCH, M.A. 2s 6d.
- ESSAYOV ADDISDN. By R. F. WINCH, M.A. 3s.
- ESSAY ON WARRKN HASTINGS. By K. DEIUHTON. 3s.
- ESSAY ON LORD CLIVK. By K. DEIGHTON. 2s 6d.
- ESSATON Boswi-LL'sLiFE OF JOHNSON. By R. F. WINDH, M.A. 3s.
- EMBAY ON WILLIAM PITT, E AHL OF CHATHAM. By K. F.
 WINCH, M.A. 3s.
- ESSAY ON MILTON. By H. B. COTTERILL, M.A 3a.
- ESSAY ON FREDERICK THE GRKAT. By A. T. FLUX. 2a.
- MALOET—MORTE D'ARTHUR, By A. T. MARTIN, M.A, SB.
- MARLOWE—DOCTOR FAUSTUS. By W. MODLKN, M.A. 2s.
- MILTON—PARADISE LOST, Books I. and II. By MICHAEL MAC-MILLAN, D.Litt. 2s. Books I.-IV. separately, 1a. 6d, each.
 Book III., sewed, 1s. 3d.

MILTON—LYCIDAS, L'ALLEGRO, IL PIENSEROSO, SONNETS, & c.

By WM. BELL, M.A. 2s.

—COMUR. By the same. 1a. 6d.

—LYCIDAS. By the same. Sewed, Bd.

—LYCIDAS AND COMUS. By the same. It. 9d.

—PAKADIAH LOST, Bk. VI. By H. B. COTTERILL, M.A. 1a. 3d.

—ABEDPAGITICA. By the same, 2s. 6d.

—SAMSON AGOMSTKS. By H. M. PERCIVAL, M.A. 2a. 6d.

—TRACTATE OF EDUCATION. By E. E. MORRIS, M.A. 2a.

MORE—THE UTOPIA OF SIR the MAS MORE. By H. B. COTTKRILL, M.A. 3a.

PALGRAVE—GOLDEN TREASURY ofSDNGS AND LYRICS. Book

I. By J. H. FOWLER, M.A. 2s. Book II. By W.

BELL, M.A. 2s. Book III. By J. H. FOWLER, M.A.

2s. Book IV. By J. H. FOWLER, M.A. 2a.

—Notes to Books I. to IV. 3a.

POEMS OF ENGLAND. A Selection of English Patriotic Poetry.

By H. B. GEORGE, M.A., and A. SIDQWICK, M.A. 3a.

POPE—ESSAY ON MAN. Epistles I.-IV. By EDWARD E. MORRIS, M.A. 1s. 6d.

—ESSAY ON MAN. Epistle I. Sewed, Bd.

—ESSAY ON CRITICISM. Edited by J. C. COLLINS, M.A. 2a.

REPRESENTATIVE ENGLISH POEMS. Selected and Edited by G. S. BRETT. 4s.

SCOTT—THE LADY OF THE LAKE. By G. H. STUART, M.A. 3s. Canto I, sewed, 9d.

—THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL. By G. H. STUART, M.A., and E. H. ELLIOT, B.A. 2s. 6d. Canto I, sewed, 9d. Cantos I -III, 1s. 6d., sewed, 1s. 3d.

—MARMION. By MICHAEL MACMILLAN, D.Litt. 3s. 6d. Canto I and VI. 1a. 3d. Canto VI. 1s. 3d.

—ROKEBY. By the same. 3s. 6d.

—THE LORD OF THE ISLES. By H. B. CUTTERILL, M.A. 3s.

—QUENTIN DURWARD. 3fl.

—K. KNILWORTH. 3s.

—WOODSTOCK. 3s.

—THE TALISMAN. 3a.

—FORTUNES OF NIOEL. 3a.

—IVANHOE. 3s.

—OLD MORTALITY. 3s.

—GUY MANNERINO. By R. F. WINCH, M.A. 3s.

SELECTED POEMS from GRAY, BURNS, COWPER, MOORH, LuNft-FELLOW. By H. B. COTTERILL, M.A. 1a. 3d.

SHAKESPEARE—THE TEMPEST. By K. DEIGHTON. 2s.

—MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING. By the same. 2s. 6d.

—A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM. By the same. 2s.

—THE MERCHANT OF VENICE. By the same. 2s.

—As You LIKE IT. By the same. 2s.

—TWELFTH NIGHT. By the same. 2s.

—THE WINTER'S TALE. By the same. 2a. 6d.

—RING JOHN. By the same. 2s.

—RICHARD II. By the same. 2s.

—HENRY IV., Part I. By the same. 3a.

—HENRY IV., Part II. By the same. 3s.

—HENRY V. By the same. 2s. 6d.

—RICHARD III. By E. H. TAWNEY, M.A. 3a.

- SHAKESPEARE—HENRY VIII. By K. DEIGHTON. 2s.
 —COKIOLANUS. By the same. 3s.
 —RUMEO AND JULIET By the same. 3s.
 —JULIUS CAESAR. By the same. 2s.
 —MACBETH, By the same. 2s.
 —HAMLET. By the same. 3s ; sewed, 2s. 6d.
 —KING LEAR. By the same. 2s.
 —OTHELLO. By the same. 2s. 6d.
 —ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA. By the same. 3s.
 —CYMBELINE. By the same. 5s.
 —Two GENTLEMEN OF VERONA. By the same. 2s.
 SOUTHET—LIFE OF NELSON. By MICHAEL MACMILLAN, D.Litt. 3s. 6d.
 SPENSEK—THE FAERIE QUEENS. Book I. By H. M. FEKCIVAL, M.A. 3s. 6d.
 —THK SHKFFHARD'S CALENDAR. By C. H. HKRFORD, Litt.D. 3s.
 3TEELE—SELBUTIONB. By L. F. STICKLE, M.A. 2s. 6d.
 TENNTSON—SELECTIONS. By F. J. HOWE, M.A., and W. T. WEBB, M.A. 3s. Also in two Parts, 2s. each. Part I. Recollections of the Arabian Nights, The Lady of Shalott, The Lotos-Eaters, Dora., Ulysses, Tithonus, The Lord of Burleigh, The Brook, Ode on the Death of the Duke of Wellington, The Revenge.—Part II. Oenone, The Palace of Art, A Dream of Fair Women, Morfe d'Arthur, Sir Galahad, The Voyage, and Demeter and Persephone.
 —THE LOTOS-EATERS, ULYSSES, ODE ON THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON, MAUD, COMING OF ARTHUR AND PASSING OF ARTHUR By the same. 2s.
 —A DREAM OF FAIR WOMEN, etc. By the same. 3s.
 —MORFE D'ARTHUR. By the same. Sewed, 1s. 3d.
 —THE COMING OF ARTHUR ; THE PASSING OF ARTHUR. By F. J. ROWE, M.A. 2s.
 —ENOCH ARDEN. By W. T. WEBB, M.A. 2s.
 —AYLMER'S FIELD. By W. T. WEBB, M.A. 2s.
 —THE PRINCESS. By P. M. WALLACE, M.A. 3s.
 —GARETH AND LYNETTE. By G. C. MACAULAY, M.A. 2s.
 —THE MARRIAGE OF GKRAINT ; GERAINT AND ENID. By G. C. MACAULAY, M.A. 2s.
 —THE HOLY GRAIL. By G. C. MACAULAY, M.A. 2s.
 —LANCLOT AND ELAINE. By F. J. ROWE, M.A. 2s.
 —GUINEVERE. By G. C. MACAULAY, M.A. 2s.
 —SELECT POEMS. By H. B. GEORGE and W. H. HADOW. 3s.
 —THE CUP. By H. B. COTTKRILL, M.A. 3s.
 —TIRESIAS AND OTHER POEMS. By F. J. ROWE, M.A., and W. T. WEBB, M.A. 3s.
 —IK MEMORIAM. By H. M. PERCIVAL, M.A. 3s.
 —ENGLISH IDYLLS AND OTHER POEMS. By J. H. FOWLER, M.A. 2s.
 —THE LADY OF SHALOTT AND OTHER POEMS. By the same. 2s.
 —OENONE AND OTHER POEMS. By F. J. ROWE, M.A., and W. T. WEBB, M.A. 2s.
 THACKERAY—ESMOND. 3s.
 WOODSWORTH—SELECTIONS. By W. T. WEBB, M.A. 5s.
 Also in two parts, 2s. each.
 —POEMS AND SONNETS. By H. B. COTTKRILL, M.A. 5s. 6d.

MACMILLAN AND CO., LIMITED, LONDON

