PREFATORY NOTE TO F.

THE half-volume of the Dictionary containing the words beginning with F includes 9,339 Main words, 1,419 Subordinate entries, and 2,849 Special combinations explained under the Main words, making a total of 13,607 words, besides 3,459 Obvious combinations recorded and for the most part illustrated by quotations, without separate explanation. Of the Main words, 2,364, or 25¼%, are marked (†) as obsolete, and 215, or 2¼%, are marked (‖) as alien or imperfectly naturalized

Except for the total absence of words directly taken from Greek, the portion of the English vocabulary treated in this half-volume is representative of all the various sources which have contributed to the formation of the language. The words that have come down from Old English are very numerous, and many of them have necessarily occupied an unusually large proportion of space, on account of the great variety of senses and applications which they have acquired in the course of their long history The verb fall and its related substantive, with their derivatives and combinations, occupy nearly ten pages Among other long articles may be mentioned those on fast, father, fear, feel, fetch, field, fill, find, fire, fish, flesh, flow, fly, food, foot, fond, friend, full Under all these words will be found recorded, and authenticated by quotations, many senses hitherto overlooked by lexicographers The articles on the words for, forth, and from, have cost much thought and research, and it is hoped that they will form a substantial contribution to English grammar, and will be found serviceable in elucidating many hitherto obscure passages in our older writers The Scandinavian element in the language is represented by several important words, including fellow (the academic use of which has never before been correctly explained in an English dictionary), flat, and fling. The words of Romanic and Latin derivation are perhaps even more numerous than those of Old-English descent, and are unusually interesting It so happens that while the Romanic and Latin derivatives occurring under the first five letters of the alphabet are for the most part merely literary, or belong to the technical or the scientific vocabulary, those under F include a large number of the familiar words of everyday speech, such as fable, face, fact, fade, fail, faint, fairy, faith, false, fame, family, famine, fancy, fantastic, farce, farm, fashion, fate, fatigue, fault, favour, feast, feat, feature, feign, felon, female, fence, fender, ferment, ferret, festive, fiction, fierce, fig, figure, file, finance, fine, finish, firm, fix, flame, flavour, flounce, flour, flourish, flower, focus, foil, folly, foment, fool, force, foreign, forfeit, forge, fork, form, formal, fort, fortify, fortress, fortune, fossil, foundation, fountain, fraction, frail, franchise, frank, frantic, fray, frenzy, frequent, friction, fringe, fritter, frivolous, frock, front, frontier, frown, frugal, fruit fry, fugitive, fume, function, fund, funeral, fungus, funnel, fur, furnace, furnish, furniture, fury, fuse, fusion, fusty, futile, future, etc. As these words, though of foreign origin, have long been completely established in popular currency, they have in most instances developed many new senses in addition to those which they had already acquired in the languages from which they are taken, and the articles devoted to them are therefore usually of considerable length. A remarkable characteristic of the portion of the vocabulary here treated is the abundance of onomatopœic formations, and of words which, though having a definite etymology, have been felt to have an inherent expressiveness in their sound which has influenced their development of meaning such, for example, as fizz, flab, flap, flash, fleer, flick, flip, flop, flounce, flounder, flump, flurry, flush, flutter, fumble, fuzz.

The almost total absence of terms of purely scientific application beginning with F is partly due to the fact that the great mass of English scientific terms are either formed from Greek elements, or contain Latin prefixes As has been already stated, no word of immediate Greek derivation begins in modern English orthography with F. If a phonetic system of spelling had been adopted in English, the proportion of scientific terms under the letter would have been very large, as it would have included the many Greek derivatives which are now spelt with initial PH- The letter F is also remarkable in containing no words beginning with Latin prefixes, which in all the earlier letters occur in considerable numbers Most of the scientific terms which are found in this portion of the Dictionary are special applications of words which are popularly current in non-technical senses. In the explanation of these the assistance of eminent specialists has been obtained. Although much of the 'encyclopædic' matter which it has been the custom to insert in English dictionaries is of set purpose excluded from this work as being alien to its scope, the current senses of scientific terms are often given with greater precision than in previous dictionaries, and many interesting facts with regard to their origin and history have for the first time been brought to light.

Among the articles which contain material of value to students of legal history may be mentioned those on farm, fee, felony, feoffee, feu, feud, fine, franchise, frankpledge, frithborh In most of the Law

Dictionaries, and hence in some dictionaries of the English language, there appear many alleged terms of early English law which have no real existence, having been evolved from misreadings or misunderstandings of the texts It has not always been thought worth while to occupy space in recording these figments; but in a few cases (as under fierding-court), where the error has obtained some general currency, its origin has been briefly pointed out

In the etymologies, the conclusions reached by earlier investigators have been carefully considered in the light of the new evidence afforded by the quotations, and of the general results of recent philological research. Among the articles containing etymological facts or suggestions not found in earlier dictionaries may be mentioned those on the words factotum fade, failure, fake, fall, fallow, faller, far, farther, farce, farm, fathom, favel, favella, fee, feese, felon, feud, flamfew, flamingo, flannel, flask, flavour, flee, fleech, flippant, flounder, focile, fog, and foggy, fogger (with which compare the later articles fooker, fowker, fulker), forst vb, follow, frantic, free, fresh, fret, frill frith sb.[4], frizzle, frock, froe, frog, frough, fudge, full v.[1] (to baptize), funnel, fur, further, fuss, fylfot In this department I have received continued help from Prof Sievers, now of Leipzig, Prof Napier, Oxford, and Monsieur Paul Meyer, and on particular questions from other scholars, among whom are the Principal of Jesus College, Oxford, the Rev Canon D. Silvan Evans, Dr H. Sweet, Oxford, Prof J. H Gallée, Utrecht and Monsieur A Hatzfeld

The material for the letter F, so far as it existed in 1875, was sub-edited, according to the original plan of the Dictionary, by the Rev G Wheelwright, who printed a specimen (8 pages 4to) containing Fa—face The earlier portion was afterwards taken in hand by the Rev G B R Bousfield, B.A, and Mr J Peto the former of whom sub-edited F—Fi, and the latter Fl- to Floun I have to record, with great regret, the removal by death of both these valued helpers in the work of the Dictionary. Owing to this and to other circumstances it was not found possible to obtain outside help in the preliminary arrangement of the material from Flu- onwards

I have to acknowledge with gratitude the continued and unremitting labour of Mr Fitzedward Hall, D.C L, who has enriched every page with new and valuable quotations Lord Aldenham, the Rev. Dr J. T Fowler of Durham and Mr W H Stevenson, M A, Exeter College Oxford, have also read all the first proofs, and have often suggested important improvements

Occasional assistance in special departments has been received from most of those whose names are mentioned in the Prefatory Note to the letter F, especially from Mr A Beazeley, C.E, Sir F Pollock, Bart, Mr R B Prosser, Mr W Sykes, M R.C S (now of Gosport) The constant (almost daily) help rendered by Dr Furnivall it would be impossible adequately to acknowledge Thanks for information or advice on the treatment of particular words are also due to Mr A. Caland, Wageningen, Holland, Mr W T Thiselton-Dyer, Royal Gardens Kew, Mr H T Gerrans, M A., Oxford, Mr James Hammond, M A, Mr George Heppel, M A., Mr A F Leach, M A, Prof Maitland, Cambridge, the Rev H Rashdall, M A, Mr J M Rigg, and Mr. R J. Whitwell

My assistants in the preparation of this half-volume (to whom I owe most cordial thanks for their painstaking and zealous co-operation) are Mr G F H Sykes, B A. Mr Walter Worrall, B A, Mr W J Lewis, Mr H J Bayliss, and (latterly) Miss E S. Bradley In the proof-reading I have, as before, been ably assisted by Mr A Erlebach, B A My removal to Oxford, which took place in the middle of 1896, has, by enabling me to confer with my assistants personally instead of by correspondence, materially facilitated my work, and the results are already visible in the greatly increased rapidity with which the copy has been produced

PREFATORY NOTE TO G.

THE second half of Vol. IV, which is occupied with the words beginning with G, contains 7,551 Main words, 2,513 Special Combinations explained and illustrated under these, 2,791 Subordinate entries, and 2,687 Obvious Combinations; in all 15,542 words Of the 7,551 Main words, 1,601, or 21¼ per cent, are marked (†) as obsolete, and 238, or 3¼ per cent, are marked (‖) as alien or not completely naturalized *

The G section of the English vocabulary has one curious difference from all the preceding sections Under each of the letters from A to F a very large proportion of the words recorded in the Dictionary are compounds of prepositional or adverbial prefixes, English, Greek, Latin, or French, such as a-, ab-, ad-, an-, ana-, ante-, anti-, apo-, at-; be-, bi-, cata-, circum- com-, de-, di-, dia-, dis-, dys-, en-, epi-, eu-, ex-, for-, fore-, forth-. Under G compounds of this kind are entirely wanting, and, as the words containing prefixes, with few exceptions, have little variety of sense and form, and no great length of history, their absence is one of the circumstances which explain why the space occupied by G in this work is proportionately larger than in ordinary English dictionaries, in which illustration by examples is a less important feature Another cause which has contributed to the same result is that G is unusually rich in those words of the primitive Teutonic vocabulary, which express conceptions of the widest possible generality, and have developed an enormous number of specific applications. Such verbs as get, give, go, grow, such adjs. as good, great, and such substantives as ground, have necessarily required articles of abnormal length to exhibit their diversities of usage Long as these articles are, it is probable that they are far from being exhaustive in such words the multitude of special meanings and of idiomatic collocations seems to be endless

The various linguistic elements of which the English vocabulary is composed are all fairly well represented among the words with initial G The Teutonic (i. e. native English and Scandinavian) element is the most considerable, not indeed numerically, but with regard to the importance and interest of the words, and to the space which they occupy in the Dictionary Among the words from this source which are interesting on account of sense-development may be mentioned (in addition to those referred to in the foregoing paragraph), gall, game, gear, ghost, glass, gloom, glow, God, gold, green, grey, grim The words of early adoption from French are very numerous, and include many that are in everyday use, as gain, gallant, garment, garnish, gay, gender, gentle, ginger, glory, glutton, gorge, govern, gown, grace, grain, grammar, grand, grant, grape, grave adj., gravel, grief, grieve, gross, grudge, guard, guardian, guide, guile, guise The Latin derivatives, either taken directly from that language or through learned adoptions in French, include such important words as gem, general, generation, genial, genius, gesture, globe, gravitation, gravity The Greek element is copiously represented by words beginning with gen-, geo-, gloss-, glott-, gly-, gon-, gonio-, gram-, graph-, gymn-, gyn-, gyro-. The Celtic words are not numerous, but probably not less so than in any other letter of the alphabet they include gabbock, Gaelic, galloglass, galnes, galore, garran, gelt sb.[1], gillie, glack, glamour, glen, ghb sb.[1], glossan, gneeve, goryd, graddan, gralloch. Words from Oriental and African languages are more than usually abundant, though most of these are marked (‖) as not fully naturalized, of those which are in familiar use the most noteworthy are garble vb., gingham, and gong[2] From South American and West Indian languages we have a large group of words beginning with gua-, introduced through Spanish and Portuguese There is also a considerable number of onomatopœic formations, such as gabble, gibber, gobble, goggle, gurl, gurr, and several with the initial combinations gl-, gn-, and gr-.

Among the articles containing etymological facts or suggestions not found in former English Dictionaries are those on gaberdine, gain (vb.[1] and vb.[2], and the related sbs.), gallipot, gander, garble, gas, gavelkind, gear, gherkin, ghost, giddy, gimcrack, gingerbread gingerly, girl, glade, glance, glean, gloaming, gloom, gnome, go, goal, God, goodyear, gospel, gossamer, gouge, gown, gradient, grampus, gravy, grist, groats, groom, grozer, guarantee, guess, guest, guild, guinea-pig, gun, gyve

The material for the letter G was twice sub-edited by Mr J Bartlett, M A, first in 1888 and the following years, and again in 1897–9, an enormous mass of additional quotations having accumulated in the interval The portion from Gem to Groundsel had previously been sub-edited by the late Rev G B R Bousfield, and that from Group to the end of the letter by the Rev. T D Morris The articles Get, Ground, and Gun, before being taken in hand by my assistants, were prepared by Mr. E L. Brandreth. In the treatment of the difficult word Great, valuable help was rendered by Dr H. Sweet.

In the treatment of etymology frequent help has been received from Prof. Sievers, of Leipzig, Prof Napier, of Oxford, and M Paul Meyer, of Paris On the meaning and history of terms belonging to various departments of science, art, and industry, much valuable aid has been generously contributed by specialists of eminence To the lists of occasional helpers given in the Prefatory Notes to E and F, the following names are now to be added Mr W. G Boswell-Stone, Mr H. L Bowman, M A, University Museum, Oxford; the Rev T S Cooper, Mr W. J Craig, M.A, the Rev. T L. O. Davies, M.A; Sir Howard W. Elphinstone, Bart, Mr W W. Fisher, M A, Oxford, Mr. A G Vernon Harcourt, M.A, Oxford, Mr. A. Harston, architect, London, Mr. Barclay V. Head, British Museum, Mr. W. H. Hills, Ambleside; Mr. W. J. Hocking, Royal Mint, Mr. E W Hulme, H M Patent Office, Prof. Axel Kock, Lund; the late Prof E. Kolbing, Breslau, Prof J K Laughton; Prof A. E H. Love, Oxford, Mr. H. F. Lowe, M.A, H.M Patent Office, Mr R W Macan, M A, Oxford, Mr. E. J Muybridge, Mr. J. Platt, jun., Mr. P. Z. Round, M A, Sir John Stainer, late Professor of Music, Oxford, Mr J Stephenson, Whitby. I have again to render especial thanks to Dr Furnivall for constant help of various kinds, often involving much laborious research

The proofs have been regularly read by Dr. Fitzedward Hall (who, as in former parts of the Dictionary, has enriched every page with valuable additional quotations), by Lord Aldenham, the Rev. Canon J. T. Fowler, of Durham, the Rev. W. B. R Wilson, M A, Mr. W H. Stevenson, M.A., Mr. A. Caland, Wageningen, Holland, Dr. W. Sykes, F S A., Torquay, and the Rev. Prof. Skeat. All these gentlemen have supplied valuable additions and corrections For the early pages the same service was rendered by the late Mr. Russell Martineau, M A, who continued to work for the Dictionary until a few days before his lamented death.

The editorial assistants who have worked with me in the preparation of this half-volume are Mr G. F. H. Sykes, B A, Mr. Walter Worrall, B.A, Mr. C T Onions, M.A, Mr W. J. Lewis, Mr. H. J Bayliss, Miss E. S Bradley; and (in the earlier pages) Miss A. M. Turner. Mr. W A. Craigie, M A., has also co-operated in the preparation of many of the articles

F.

F (ef), the sixth letter of the Roman alphabet, representing historically the 6th letter (digamma) of the Semitic alphabet, which expressed the sounds of w (approximately) and the related vowel u. In early Greek writing the letter had at first the same twofold power, but subsequently its accidental varieties of form came to be differentiated in function, the form F (retaining the 6th place in the alphabet) being appropriated to the consonantal use, while V or Y served for the vowel, and is the source of the Roman U, V, Y, as explained under those letters. As the sound w was lost in the chief literary Greek dialects of the classical period, its sign f (called by the grammarians from its form the DIGAMMA) is not included in the later Gr alphabet. In the Roman adoption of the Gr alphabet the sound given to the 6th letter was the voiceless labiodental spirant (f). In OE the letter retained the sound (f) unless it stood between two vowels, when it was pronounced as the corresponding voiced spirant (v). In the S W, according to some scholars, the voiced sound was used also initially. In mod Eng F is always sounded (f), exc in the word of, where it is voiced to (v) through absence of stress.

In MSS a capital F was often written as ff. A misunderstanding of this practice has caused the writing of F or ff at the beginning of certain family names, e.g. Fbennes, Ffoulkes.

c 1000 ÆLFRIC Gram 10. (Z) 6 Semivocales syndon seofan f, l, m, n, r, s, x. 1580 BARET Alv F, If ye drawe in length and therewithall put your under lippe to your ouer teeth, ye shall heare the verie sound of FF.

b attrib (see quots)

1836 DUBOURG Violin (1878) 274 The parallel holes on each side were straighter than what are called the f holes. 1880 GROVE Dict Music II. 130 The holes in the belly of the violin are called the f holes from their shape.

II Used as a symbol, with reference to its place (6th) in the alphabet.

1 F, f, is used to denote anything occupying the sixth place in a series (Cf A, B, C, etc.)

2 In Music F is the name of the 4th note of the diatonic scale of C major, called F in Germany, fa in France and Italy. Also the scale or key which has that note for its tonic. F clef: the bass clef (see CLEF 1), placed on the line in the stave appropriated to the note F, its form or is said to be a corruption of that of the letter

1848 RUDDALL First Bk Piano 33 Place the first finger on every black key except F sharp. 1854 Mrs. BROWNING Aur Leigh v 214 Boldinacci when her F in alt Had touched the silver tops of Heaven itself. 1880 GROVE Dict Mus I 181 The bonata in C contained when completed a long Andante in F.

The great difficulty is the anomalous representation of L v by f; the apparent parallel in OF feir (mod foie) — vicem is questionable, the g in that case being prob due to sentence-combination. The ordinary view that fade descends from L. fatuum foolish, also insipid (whence Pr. fats fem fade, in same senses), is inadmissible on phonological grounds; but it is possible that early confusion with this word may have given rise to the change of v into f. No OF. vade has been found if it existed it would explain the Eng. vade, var of FADE v, which is otherwise difficult to account for, as the Eng dialects that have v for f usually retain f in Romanic words. Fair-trade.
1. a. Trade carried on legally as opposed to dealing in contraband goods. b In the 18th c. also applied (in popular language) in the precisely opposite sense, a euphemistic synonym for smuggling.
1774 Burke Amer. Pap. (1775) 49 The contraband will always keep pace in some measure with the fair trade
2. In recent use The fiscal system advocated by those who consider that 'one-sided free trade' is injurious to the nation adopting such a policy, and that the principle of free trade should be applied only in dealing with nations that admit our products free
1881 Gladstone in Times 8 Oct. 6/5 This he says he wants, not as protection, but in the name of fair trade. 1891 Spectator 21 Feb. 263/2 An excellent speech against 'Fair trade'.

I. Belief, trust, confidence

1. Confidence, reliance, trust (in the ability, goodness, etc, of a person; in the efficacy or worth of a thing, or in the truth of a statement or doctrine) Const in, of In early use, only with reference to religious objects, this is still the prevalent application, and often colours the wider use.

Fake (fēk), v[2] slang [Of obscure origin There appears to be some ground for regarding it as a variant of the older Feak, Feague, which are prob ad Ger fegen (or the equivalent Du or LG) to furbish up, clean, sweep

In Rowland's Martin Mark all 1610, a feager of lopes is explained as meaning 'one who begs with false documents' (cf to fake a screen), and the phrase fake away appears to correspond to the earlier feague it away The colloquial and peculiar uses of the Ger fegen closely resemble the senses mentioned in 1801 and those given by Grimm are 'to clear out, plunder' (a chest, purse' cf to fake a fob, 'to torment, ill treat]

1 trans In thieves' and vagrants' language To perform any operation upon, to 'do', 'do for'; to plunder, wound, kill; to do up, put into shape; to tamper with, for the purpose of deception In the last-mentioned application it has latterly come into wider colloquial use, esp with reference to the 'cooking' or dressing-up of news, reports, etc, for the press Also, To fake up

1812 J H Vaux Flash Dict s v, To fake any person or place, to rob them, e g a screever may also imply to shoot, wound, or cut, to fake a man out and out, as to kill him, a man who inflicts wounds upon, or otherwise disfigures, himself, for any sinister purpose, is said to have faked himself, if a man's shoe happens to pinch or gall his foot, he will complain that his shoe fakes his foot sadly to fake your slangs, is to cut your irons in order to escape from custody, to fake your pin, is to create a sore leg, or to cut it, as if accidentally in hopes to get into the doctor's list, &c; to fake a screeve is to write any letter or other paper; to fake a screen, is to be cut a skeleton or false key, for the purpose of screwing a particular place, to fake a cly is to pick a pocket 1851 Mayhew Lond Labour 352 The ring is made out of brass gilt buttons it is faked up to rights 1874 Punch 7 Mar 98/1 Preps he'd come to you with him [a horse] faked up for sale 1885 Sporting Times 31 May 1 The shower fair Faked herself up 1885 H P Grattan in The Stage 10 July, A pair of shoes to fake the patches (Anglice play the harlequin) 1885 Spectator 24 Jan 119/2 Nine pictures out of ten in modern galleries are simply studies—faked up 1887 Times 30 July 5/5 He now knew that these diamonds were 'faked' 1888 Phonetic Trnl 7 Jan 4/1 'Faking' in news paper frame means the suppression of important details which may serve an excellent purpose in the embellishment ov a despatch 1888 Bodleywood' Robbery under Arms I xvii, The horse brand had been 'faked' or cleverly altered

[late OE fals adj and sb., ad L. falsus (neut falsum, used subst in sense fraud, falsehood), orig. pa pple of fallĕre to deceive, of ON falr id. The adj is found in OE only in one doubtful instance (see sense 13), its frequent use begins in the 12th c, and was prob due to a fresh adoption through the OF fals, faus (mod F faux = Pr fals, Sp., Pg., It falso) The continental Teut langs adopted the word in an altered form MLG valsch, mod G falsch (cf OHG gafalsôn to falsify), OFris. falsk, Du valsch, late Icel (15th c) falskr, Da., Sw falsk

The clym'ological sense of I. falsus is 'deceived, mistaken' (of persons), 'erroneous' (of opinions, etc.) The transition to the active sense 'deceitful' is shown in phrases like falsa fides 'breach of trust, faithlessness', where the sb has a subjective and an objective sense In mod. Eng the sense 'mendacious' is so prominent that the word must often be resolved as discourteous in contexts where the etymological equivalent in other Teut langs or in Romance would be quite unobjectionable Some of the uses are adopted from Fr, and represent senses that never became English]

The current view, which connects the word with fault, is untenable, on the ground that falter has always been written with the l, and is so pronounced in the dialects in which it occurs, whereas in fault the l is an etymological insertion, which rarely occurs in spelling before 16th c, and was not pronounced, even by educated speakers, till much later (But it is not unlikely that association with fault may have coloured the recent use of the word) It seems possible that sense 1, 'to stumble', may have been developed from the sense 'to be entangled' (FALTER v. 6) On the other hand it is noteworthy that ME. falde n, FOLD v is used of the limbs and the tongue in the sense 'to give way, fail, falter', perh falter may be a frequentative of fold-en, formed irregularly through the influence of approximately synonymous verbs like halter, totter, walter]

Famuler, obs f of Familiar

†Famulist Obs [f L. famul-us + -IST.

The genuineness of this word is very doubtful. In the Lann registers of Oxford colleges, the designation famulus appended to a name means sometimes one of the college servants (who used to be regularly matriculated) and sometimes a poor student who entered college as a servant to another undergraduate Most probably famulist is merely a blunder for this word, but it may possibly have been jocularly current as an anglicized form of it]

1818 Todd s.v. Famulate. The word Famulist is in use at Queen's College in Oxford for an inferior member of it

1846 in Worcester, and in some later Dicts

The history of the word appears to be as follows In the 13th c. the word in latinized form farsia, farsatus was applied in France and England to the various phrases interpolated in litanies between the words Kyrie and eleison (e g "Kyrie, cuncte angelice, vere et sanctissime Deus, eleison") and to versions of other liturgical formulæ, and to expository or hortatory passages in French (sometimes in rime) which were inserted between the Latin sentences in chanting the epistle (The related vb I farsire, OF farcir to stuff, hence to 'pad out', interlard, was used in the same connexion in the expressions epistolas farcire, ant Anselmus farsit See Du Cange s v farsa, Farsia, and Burney Hist Music II 256) Subsequently the OF farce, with similar notion, occurs in the name for the extemporaneous amplification or 'gag', used in the interludes of impromptu buffoonery, which the actors in the religious dramas were accustomed to interpolate into their text Hence the transition to the modern sense is easy. (The Eccl Lat farsa, farcire, referred to above, have been anglicized by modern writers on liturgical antiquities as Farse sb and v)

The change from the strong to the weak conjugation seems to have been due in part to the influence of the derivative vb FARE, which in Engl. had the sense of the strong in the other Teut langs. its equivalent expressed the transitive sense 'to carry'. In the present stem this vb became obsolete before 1400, but in the pa. t. and pa. pple of the northern dialects also fard(e) continued in use, virtually serving as inflexions of fare The irregular wk vb thus produced (fare, fard) became regular (fare, fared) before the 16th c. The strong pa. t., already comparatively in frequent in ME., seldom appears after 15th c exc in Sc., of the strong pa. pple we have no examples after 16th c.]

Farther (fɑ́ːðəɹ), adv and a Forms 3–6 ferder, ferdre, 4 ferper(e, 4 6 ferthere, 4–8 ferder, 5– farther. [ME ferper (whence by normal phonetic development farther) is in origin a mere variant of Further, due prob to the analogy of the vb ferþren:–OE. fyrþrian to Further The primary sense of further, farther is 'more forward, more onward'; but this sense is practically connected with that of the comparative degree of far, where the latter word refers to real or attributed motion in some particular direction. Hence further, farther came to be used as the comparative of far; first in the special application just mentioned, and ultimately in all senses, displacing the regular comparative farrer. In standard Eng the form farther is usually preferred where the word is intended to be the comparative of far, while further is used where the notion of far is altogether absent; there is a large intermediate class of instances in which the choice between the two forms is arbitrary.]

Father (fā·ðəɹ), sb Forms: 1–3 fæder (1 -ɣr), feder, (3 feader), 2–6 fader, (3 Orm. fadorr, (south dial.) vader, veder), 3–4 fader, 4–5 fadir(e, -uɜr(e, -yr, 4 fapes), 6- father. [Com. Teut. and Aryan: OE fæder corresponds to OFris. feder, fader, OS fadar, fader (LG., Du. vader, vaar), OHG. fater (MHG. and mod.G vater), ON faðer, -r (Sw., Da. fader, far), Goth. fadar (found only Gal. IV 6, the ordinary word being atta) —OTeut fader, fadēr*—OAryan pətēr (pəte r-, pətr-) whence Skr. pitṛ, Gr. πατήρ, L. pater, Olr. athir.

The spelling in our quots is uniformly with d until 16th c., exc. that father occurs sporadically in the Cotton and Göttingen MSS. of the Cursor Mundi (a 1300); but the pronunciation (ð) may have been widely current in the 15th c. or even earlier; in 14-15th c. the spelling with -der is very common in words like brother, feather, leather, though this spelling cannot in all cases be supposed to indicate that the writers pronounced the words with d. The spelling Fed-ther (fɛd) for OE. der, -dor in father and mother is often wrongly said to be due to the analogy of brother, or to Scandinavian influence; it is really the result of a phonetic law common to the great majority of Eng. dialects; other examples in standard Eng. are gether, hither, together, tether. At present nearly all dialects pronounce father and mother with (ð) as in standard Eng; in various parts of the north of England and the north Lowlands (id), alveolar or dental, is sometimes heard. The representation of OE. æ, a by (æ) in this word is anomalous; the only parallel case, setting aside the class of instances in which the symbol (a) is used in this Dict., is rather. Among the chief variant pronunciations in dialects are: in Sc. the Northern writers of dialect books often spelt faither, feyther, fī·ðəɹ, Sc fe·ðər, etc.

In OE. the genitive had the two forms fæder (cf. OS. fadar, OHG. fatar, ON föður) and fæderes. The uninflected form survived in occasional use down to the 15th c.]

From the 15th c to the beginning of the 17th c. the word was more or less naturalized, esp in Scotland, it is now used only as foreign, with Fr. pronunciation or (more frequently) semi-anglicized as fō bū r, -būrg

Latté considers faubourg, formerly also spelt faux bourg (= 'false borough') to be a corruption of the earlier recorded synonym forsburgg (f. fors outside + burgg borough), which is the source of some of the Eng forms given above The word faubourg, faux bourg, seems not to be known in F before 15th c., but its existence in 1380 is implied by L. falsi burgesi in a charter cited by Du Cange Its origin may possibly be found in the MHG phalburgere (also spelt falborgere), which according to German scholars originally meant 'burgher of the pale', i.e 'persons living outside the city wall but within the palisade', it afterwards denoted a special class of non-resident burghers, having only partial civic rights The word seems frequently in the imperial charters of 13–14th c., sometimes latinized as phalburgenses, and a charter of 1365, according to a French translation given by Ingulfe (1729) speaks of 'des faux bourgeons dits en allemand Pfalbourgeurs' From these facts it seems not unlikely that faubourg, faux borg, may have been evolved from phalburgenses or its punning translation falsi burgenses or fauxburgeni]

The OF word had all the uses found in Eng, so that there is no clear line of treading sens 3 of the sb. as distinct word, though it is possible that it may have been associated by some ME. writers with OF favele idle talk, tawdery stuff, fabella, dim of fabula FABLE. The phrase 'to curry Favel', OF estrille, torcher Fauvel, comes from the Roman de Fauvel (1310), the hero of which is a counterpart of Reynard the Fox (see P PARIS, Mss Fr de la Bib du Roi V 306) which has been adopted in Ger as den fahlen hengst streichen. It is not clear whether before the date of this poem a 'fallow' horse was proverbial as the symbol of dishonesty, &c., or whether the poem is found to make the fallow horse 'dem fahlen hengst setten—recorded from 1581 as having the sense 'to play an underhand game, act deceitfully'.
