1. OE Mythol The designation of a class of goddesses or female dæmons supposed to hover in or ride through the air over battle-fields and decide who should be slain corresponding to the Scandinavian Valkyrie.
The OE word (apart from the transferred sense 2) is found only in the glossarial use of L Bellona, the goddess of war, or of names of the Furies and Gorgons of classical mythology Possibly the conception may have been less definite in Old English than in the Scandinavian belief of later times, according to which these 'war maidens' were twelve in number (The Gee Walkiria, widely known from Wagner's drama, is from ON, not from OE.)

Wall, *v.*1 Obs. exc. dial. Forms: 1 weallan, 2–5 walle-n, 7– wall. Pa. t. 1 weól(l, 3 weol, wul, 4 weel; weak 4 walleđe, 7– walled. [OE. weallan redupl. str. vb. The transitive uses do not occur in OE., and as they are found only with the weak conjugation, it is possible that they descend not from OE. weallan, but from wallan var. of wiellan, wellan WELL v.; cf. mod. Sc. wall (WELL sb.) repr. OE. wælla var. of wiella. The transitive senses below are closely paralleled by those of WELL v. and its equivalents in other Teut. langs.

The Teut. wallanan* (= walla-) redupl. vb. with the sense ‘to boil, bubble up’ is confined to W.Ger.; but a cogn. and synonymous wellan str. vb. exists in ON. vella (Sw. välla), MSw. vælla str. vb. For other Teut. derivatives of the root in the same specific sense see WALM, WELL sb.; cf. also Goth. wulan to be fervent. It is probable that the sense ‘to boil, bubble, well up’ is developed from the sense ‘to roll’, which belongs to the root wel-* in Teut. and Indogermanic (see WALLOW *v.1) for the form welle-cf. OHG. wella roller, axle (MHG., mod.G. welle), wellen str. vb. trans. to roll.

Wall-eyed (wɔ̄l,aid), a. Forms : α. 5 wawil-, waugle-, 6 whaule-, 7 whale-, 6– wall-eyed ; β. 5 wald-eyed. [The surviving form descends from ME. wæwil-eyed, a., ON. vagl-eygr-r, occurring only once, and explained in the context as 'one having speckled eyes'. The second element, -eygr, is regularly f. augn Eye 3b. The first element, vagl, is of obscure origin ; it coincides in form with vagl beam of wood, roost, perch (Da., Norw. vagl, Sw. vagel) which is used in the Icel. New Testament of 1540 for the 'beam' in the eye spoken of in Matt. vii. 3–4 ; it is, however, prob. a distinct word, not recorded separately in ON., but surviving in mod. Icel. vagl film over the eye, Sw. vagel sty in the eye.

Beside wawil-eyed ME. had a synonymous wald-eyed. This is commonly believed to be a. ON. vald-eygr-r ; but that word is only a conjectural reading for valdeygðr, occurring in a series of adjs. designating certain defects which in men may have ; the context does not show whether a physical blemish or a fault of temper is referred to, and if -ygðr be correct it must app. mean 'eyeing', a participial point in favour of the correction to valdeygðr is the coincidence with the ME. form ; but the meaning of vald- remains obscure. Cf. mod. Slovnig dial. valodast having a squinting look in the eye (quoted by Molbech from Outzen's MS. collections), which Outzen would derive from vælde dial. var. of Da. valle wavy.

The rare ME. Wolverhampton terms are synonymous with wawil-eyed, wald-eyed, and if so is prob. an alteration of the latter form due to the influence of ME. walden, OE. gewealden small (preserved, with different sense, in Sc. Waldin a.). See also Wald a. Cf. Waldneir, prob. a similar variant of Wall-eyed.]

1. Having one or both eyes of an excessively light colour, so that the iris is hardly distinguishable from the white. In ME. and in modern dialects (see Eng. Dial. Dict.), in other senses : Having eyes of differing colour ; having eyes or an eye streaked or particoloured. Also, having a divergent squint, which exposes an excessive proportion of the white of the eye.

In many examples the sense cannot be determined.

The Provençal form galaupar has suggested Lett ?a klaupsu (O pekliapsau, f pr V prefix + klaupsu to Lean), but the evidence for original w precludes the comparison of the initial element

In English the onomatopoeic suggestion of the word has lent itself to varied extension of meaning in Sc and Ir (usually colloq and humorous) application to violent noisy movements, more especially since the form GALLOP existed from the more elevated meaning in the course of the 16th c.]

I The sense 'to boil rapidly' is probably derived directly by transference from sense 1 (cf GALLOP v. 3 to boil) in spite of the close resemblance of the word to LEAP, both in form (see sb) and in sprudlen) The relation of POTWALLOPER to POTWALKER indicates that some such association was active

The sense 'to beat' may be ultimately due to the causative (see sense 2, and cf F galoper a cheval), or may be entirely due to onomatopoeic extension]

Forms: 1 walh-, weal-, wal-, wælwyrt, vealyrt, 3, 6 walwurt, 4-7 walwort (5 -wourte), 6 wallwote, -woort, (wolwort, wallworth), 5 wellsenort, wallewort, 6 wallwort. [OE. wealhwyrt, f. wealh, a (Celtic or Roman) foreigner, a 'Welshman' (see WELSH a.) + wyrt herb, plant, WORT *sb.*1

It is very unlikely that wealh in this word has the same import as in wealh-hnutu WALNUT, where it is equivalent to 'exotic'; no reason can be shown why the Dwarf Elder should have been called 'the foreign herb'. More probably the name, like its later synonyms DANEWORT, DANES'-BLOOD, DANEWEED, expresses the popular belief that this plant was a product of soil fertilized by the carnage of battle. When the 'Welshman' was succeeded by the Dane as the foe on English soil, the plant supposed to be a native of battlefields received a new name. It is possible, though not certain, that the occasional OE. form wælwyrt is not a variant of wealhwyrt, but a separate word, 'wæl-slaughter, the slain in battle (see WAL). Cf. LIGHTWORT (literally 'corpse-plant'), which in the earliest known example (c 1450) denotes the Dwarf Elder, though it was soon afterwards misapplied (through misinterpretation of its synonym wallwort: cf. 2 below) to the Pellitory of the Wall. It is very remarkable that in Swedish the Dwarf Elder is locally called Danskablod (Danes' blood), wanaskatt (enemy's blood), wanaört (ört = WORT *sb.*1) and valört; in the last name the first element may correspond either to OE. wealh 'Welshman' or to OE. wæl slaughter; the latter is the more probable supposition, as the early battles of the Swedes were not fought against Celts or Romans. Kilian's alleged obsolete Flemish walewurte is suspicious, because Kilian cites the Englisch wort.

¶ 2. Erroneous uses. Through misunderstanding of the first element (as if WALL *sb.*1) the name has been applied in Herbals, Dictionaries, etc. to the Pellitory of the Wall, and other plants growing on walls. As the word PELLITORY has a double origin, partly repr. L. paritāria (f. paries wall) and partly repr. L. pyrethrum, the mistaken identification of wallwort with the Pellitory of the wall led to the further error of applying the name to the Pellitory of Spain (Anacyclus Pyrethrum). The application of the name to the Comfrey (Symphyton) in quot. 1567 is due to confusion with G. wallwurz (said to be from wallen to heal wounds), whence Du. waalwortel, Sw. vallört, vallgras.

Wampumpeag (wɒ'mpĕmpēg). Now rare. Forms: a. 7 wampaupag, -peage, -peague, -peak(e), wampaun pieg, wampumpeage, -peak, wampompeag(e, -peke, wampumpeage, -peak, wauompeg, wompampeag, wompompeag. 7–8 wampumpeak, 8 wampomeag, wampompag, wampumpeg, 9 wampumpeag. β. 7 wampompeal. [Adopted (in 16–17th c.) from the northerly dials. of the Algonkin language. At the time of the earliest colonization these were spoken in the East of the continent from Nova Scotia to Virginia. The ultimate forms indicated are wampanpiak, *wampampial, signifying 'string of (white) beads'. Cf. Rasles, Abnaki Dict. (1691), wambambi, pl. -ak, 'grain blan de porcelaine', wambanbiar 'chapelet'; Delaware (Zeisberger) wapapi white wampum (waopaschapiali white beads).

The word is in form a compound of two elements meaning respectively 'white' and (probably) 'bead' with the ordinary Algonkin plural endings -ak (-aq), or -al (-ar) added. For the first element cf. Natick wompi, Delaware wapi, Abnaki waanbi, etc. white. An ending -wampi occurs in Rasles' Abnaki Dict. in a large number of descriptive adjectives of strings, etc. See Rasles s.v. chatter, collier, corde, tresse.

The variations between -k, -g, and between wompe, wompi, are probably due to native dialectical differences, but the remaining variations are due to fluctuating orthography and pronunciation after the word had been adopted into English.

The division into Wampum and Peag appears to be a false analysis due to Europeans.

The specific words for 'black bead-money' were never adopted into English, and perh. the tendency to generalize the name of the commoner white variety was already present in the native languages.]

Not found in any of the other Teut. languages. Its original sense appears to have been 'dark in hue', with especially frequent application to things of gloomy unpleasant associations.

Relationships to Wen a. (OIcel. veinnr* to strive, toil, suffer, etc.) and to Wood a., sb., or Wode, possess difficulties of sense-development or form. Relationship to Wane etc. is possible (cf. Celtic manno*-, Olr. fann, Welsh gwan faint, weak, feeble), but the isolation of the word in later (ME. and ModE.) periods is more probable than ultimate connexion.

In addition to this association the application to heavenly bodies, when obscured, or when compared to others more bright, possibly aided the general application to pale things. The original application to human face, etc., when of unwholesome or unusual colour (through various emotions, disease, or death), also provided a possible occasion of sense-change. The senses 'dull' 'sallow', and 'pale, sickly' are often indistinguishable.]

Wan : see One, Wand sb., When, Whenne, Whom, Win v., Wone sb.

Wan- (wɒn), a prefix expressing privation or negation (approximately equivalent to Un-[1] or Mis-); repr. OE. wan-, won-, corresponding to OFris. wan-, won-, OS. wan- (only in wandâdi misfortune = OE. wanuscaft), MLG., MDu. wan- (mod.Du. in many new formations, esp. in the sense 'wrong', 'mis-'), as in wanbestuur misgovernment, wanlnid discordant sound), OHG. wan-, wana (only in wanwâfan unarmed, wanaheil unhealthy, infirm, wanawisi lacking wit, insane), MHG. wan- (only in wanwitze inherited from OHG.), mod.G. wahn- (in wahnwitz, wahnsinn insanity, commonly apprehended as compounds of wahn sb., delusion; also in some dialect words, chiefly adopted from LG.); ON., Sw., Da. van- (in many old formations, to which mod.Sw. and Da. have added many more, chiefly adopted from LG.). The prefix is in origin identical with Wane a.

In OE. the number of words formed with the prefix is considerable, but none of them has survived into modern English, and only one (wansceld, ill-success) into ME. Of the many new formations that arose in ME., only wanleyen, undisciplined, Wanton, still survives in use (with no consciousness of its etymological meaning); wanhope and wanstreat may have been suggested by the equivalent MDu. forms. It was in the north that the prefix was most prolific, and it probably continued to be productive far into the modern period. The following words, peculiar to the Scottish and northern dialects, are recorded in the Eng. Dial. Dict., mostly with examples for references to glossaries etc.) from the 18th c., but few if any of them are now in current use:—wancanny adj., Wanchancy a., wancheer grief, sadness, wancraith adj., = uncouth, wandelely adj., mischievous, Wandought a. and sb., wanearthly adj., Wanease, Wanfortune, wanfortunate, adj., Wanhap, Wanlieum, wanlit adj., wanluck, wanowen's adj. = unowned, wanreck 'mischance, ruin', Wanrest, Wantwhyne sb., wanwax mildew, waste, Wanwird, Wanworth adj. and sb.

The word has little colloquial currency exc. in Sc. and northern dialects, in which it suggests the notion of suppleness; as a literary word it is usually apprehended (by southern readers) as denoting something rigid. In the Bible of 1611 it occurs only once (Ecclus. xxxiii. 24); the Revised Version (1894) substitutes stick.

a. A straight slender stick. Now Sc. and dial. In Scottish use, chiefly a slender pliant stick cut from a stem or branch of a shrub or young tree.

The early examples occur chiefly in biblical references, where mod. usage follows the Bible of 1611 in substituting rod; applied, e.g., to the 'rod' carried by Moses, to Aaron's rod 'that budded', etc.

While the Plowman neer at hand, Whistles ore the furrow'd land, And the Milkmaid singeth blithe, And the Mower whets his sithe, And every Shepherd tells his tale Under the Hawthorn in the dale. Straight mine eye hath caught new pleasures Whilst the landskip round it measures, Russet Lawns, and Fallowes grey, Where the nibling flocks do stray, Mountains on whose barren brest The labouring Clouds do often rest, Meadows trim with Daisies pide, Shallow Brooks, and Rivers wide. Towers and Battlements it sees Bosom'd high in tufted Trees, Where perhaps some beauty lies, The Cynosure of neighbouring eyes. Hard by, a Cottage chimney smokes From betwixt two aged Oakes, Where Corydon and Thyrsis met Are at their savory dinner set Of Hearbs, and other Country Messes, Which the neat-handed Phillis dresses; And then in haste her Bowre she leaves, With Thestylis to bind the Sheaves; Or if the earlier season lead To the tann'd Haycock in the Mead. Sometimes with secure delight The upland Hamlets will invite, When the merry Bells ring round, And the jocund Rebecks sound To many a youth, and many a maid Dancing in the Chequer'd shade, And young and old come forth to play On a Sunshine Holyday, Till the live-long Daylight fail: Then to the Spicy Nut-brown Ale, With stories told of many a feat, How Faery Mab the junkets eat. She was pinch't and pull'd, she said, And he by Friars Lanthorn led Tells how the drudging Goblin sweat To earn his Cream-bowle duly set, When in one night, ere glimpse of morn, His shadowy Flail hath thresh'd the Corn That ten day-labourers could not end; Then lies him down the Lubber Fiend, And stretch'd out all the Chimney's length, Basks at the fire his hairy strength, And Crop-full out of doores he flings, Ere the first Cock his Matin rings. Thus don the Tales, to bed they creep, By whispering Winds soon lull'd asleep. Towred Cities please us then, And the busie humming Cries Of Cities, and the busie humming Cries Of many People, and the busie humming Cries Of many People, and the busie humming Cries Of many People

As the word does not occur in continental Fr., it is not unlikely that it may be a Norman mispronunciation of some native English word. In the 16th c. wanlace was superseded by Windlass *sb.*1, but it is not clear whether this was a survival of the native form or an etymologizing alteration of the AF. word. Latinized forms of the word, in the original hunting sense, are wenelacia and wanlassium (in Da Cange erroneously wantlatrius). The phrase figure wanlassium was used for 'to draw back the game'.]

[a. ON. vápntak, f. vápna gen. pl. of vápn Weapon + tak act of taking (related to taka to Take).

vápngentake shows assimilation of form to native words. The recorded senses of the word in ON. are: (1) a vote of consent expressed by waving or brandishing weapons; (2) a vote or resolution of a deliberative assembly; (3) in Iceland, the breaking up of the meeting of the Althing, when the members resumed their weapons that had been laid aside during the sittings. In English there is no trace of these senses, and the development of its actual usage can only be explained conjecturally. It is noteworthy that 'wapentakes', like 'hundreds', often received their names from some natural or artificial object, e. g. a barrow or a tree, which afforded a suitable rallying-place for open-air meetings. Assuming that in England wapentake originally meant the act of signifying assent at a public assembly, it seems not improbable that the men of the district whose place of meeting was (e.g.) at Osgod's Cross might be said to belong to 'the wapentake of Osgodcross'. In Lincolnshire the use of the word to denote a territorial division would thus be sufficiently accounted for.]

A subdivision of certain English shires, corresponding to the 'hundred' (Hundred 5) of other counties.

The shires which have divisions so termed are Yorkshire, Derbyshire, Notts, Lincolnshire, Northamptonshire, and Leicestershire; in all which the Danish element in the population was large. In Derbyshire there is now only one wapentake (that of Wirksworth), the other divisions of the shire being termed 'hundreds'. In Lincolnshire most of the county divisions are 'wapentakes', but a few are called 'hundreds' and 'sokes'. There are traces of the existence of the term in popular use in other counties, as Cheshire and Cumberland.

It is a curious fact that no Germanic nation in early historic times had in living use any word properly meaning 'war', though several words with that meaning survived in poetry, in proverbial phrases, and in compound personal names. The Romanic-speaking peoples, who were obliged to avoid the L. bellum on account of its homonymy with bellus beautiful, found no nearer equivalent in Teut. than werra. In OE. the usual translation of bellum was gewin, struggle, strife. The continental Teut. langs. late developed negen as words for 'war' : G. krieg Du. oorlog Da. krig. Du. oorlog ; Icelandic uses ófriðr 'un-peace'.]

(M)Du. wervel harp, ON. hvirfill circle, ring, crown of the head, f. hverfa turn, root hwerb-* to revolve : see WHERL and cf. WHARVE.

The Fr. vb seems to have primarily referred to the manipulation of the strings of a musical instrument (cf 5 a below), but was also used for the production of delicate trilling effects in singing. The OF. werbler has only an example in Godefr, where it may mean ‘modulation or ‘melody’. It is not possible to determine with certainty in which of its senses the Gaer vb was adopted in OF ; perh in that of ‘plectrum’ perh. in that of ‘turning peg’ (so MHG. wirbel). Mod.G. has a verb werbeln to warble.

In the 16th century existence of the vb. werble is doubtful (see the remark under 1 below), though there are several examples of the ab in the 14th.)

Ward, obs. pa. t. of Warp v.[2], Worth v.

-ward, suffix, OE. -weard, primarily forming adjs , with the sense 'having a specified direction', corresponds to OFris -ward, OS. -ward, -werd, OHG , MHG. wart (as in hemwart adj., homeward):—O Teut -wardo-*, f. * wad- abl -vat. of werþ-* :—pre-Teut. * wert- to turn (= L vertere); in the suffix the primary sense of the root is preserved, though the existing verb werþan* has only the derived sense 'to become' (see Worth v.) cf. the L. -versus (a ppl. formation from the same root), which in sense coincides with O Teut. -wardo-*. Two other suffixes precisely identical in function with * wardo-, but representing different grades of the root, are : OTeut. -werþo-*, in Goth. -wairþs, ON. -verðr, OHG. -wert (MHG. and mod G. only in the adverbial -warts: cf Wards), OFris. -wirth ; and OTeut. -wurðo-*, ON. -urðr, OHG. -wrt; neither of these types is found in OE.

The pronunciation of the suffix when attached to a monosyllable is (wəd); for the occasional colloquial shortening see W (the letter) Following one or more unstressed syllables it is usually sounded (wəd) or (wəd).

Down to the 16th c. the suffix occasionally appears with irregular spellings, as -ouard, -uerd, -uard, -uhard, the form -want in Sc and northern dialects represents a pronunciation still heard

1. The suffix was originally appended only to local advs., and in OE. was still confined to this use. The adjs. in -ward usually denoted direction of movement, but many of them could also be used to designate aspect or relative position , in this function they often occur in partitive concord : e.g. forewearde must often be translated 'front or first part of'. (With regard to the adjs originating in mod.E. from advs. in -ward, see 5 below.)

2. The OE. adjs. in -weard, like the corresponding words in the other Teut. langs., admitted of being used adverbially in the accus. (OE. -weard) or in the genitive (OE. -wardes) of the neut. sing. (For the history of the genitival advs. see -wards.) The advs in -weard found in OE. are all (exc. hámweard homeward) advb. forms of adjs. actually recorded in the language, and the first element is always a local adv. (hámweard being not really an exception). On the analogy of the older advs. with this suffix, there were formed in ME. several compounds in which -weard was added to advs., esp. to compound advs. of phrasal origin, as in abakweard, adounweard, awayweard, aboutweard, ageinweard, aforeweard; the first three of these were soon displaced by the aphetic forms backward, downward, awayward.

3. In OE. the adv. tóweard was used also as a prep., with the sense 'in the direction leading to'. In early ME. + frowward acquired a similar prepositional use, and later there are isolated examples of this development of function in some other advs in -ward (e.g. inward, onward) of which the first element is an adverb-preposition expressing movement.

4. The type of expression represented by the (now obsolete or archaic) forms to heavenward(s)', 'to the city ward(s)', 'to ne-ward', and the (wholly obsolete) forms 'from . . ward(s)', is commonly spoken of as a 'tmesis' of the preps. toward(s), + fromward(s). This is convenient as a description of its function, but is not historically correct.

In reality, the practice of attaching the suffix to such theretofore unsuffixed words as the nouns of a separate adv.) to a phrase consisting of a sb. or pronoun governed by a prep. must be older than the development of the advs. towards and fromwards into preps. In OE., though no prep. weard* is known to have existed (cf. wiðerweard adj., adverse), there are many examples in which wiþ weard is virtually a prep. governing the interposed word in the genitive (this being the case governed by wiþ) Although in OE. tó and wið are the only preps. that are recorded in this use, it is significant that in ME. and in early mod. Ger., while no compound prepa. with -ward, -wärts existed, the suffixes were added to phrases consisting of a sb. or pronoun governed by a prep. (chiefly as, nach, gegen) also by a prep corresponding to ME. from or from . . ward). In this use, however, they were commonly treated not as suffixes but as advs., and written as separate words. In English the tendency to this construction is now arrested is sometimes apprehended as a separate adv., and so written. But it is usually felt as forming a compound with the governed sb. When the sb. is qualified by a definite article, as in 'to the heavenward', there is a tendency to interpret the compound as a sb. or an adj used absol , because of the apparent analogy of expressions like 'to the eastward'. Where the definite article was absent, the compound came to be regarded as an adv., the prefixed to therefore became otiose, and therefore went out of use.

5. On the analogy of the advb compounds originating from the omission of to (e.g. heavenward adv. from to heaven ward), the suffix has in the mod. Eng. period been added freely to sbs. (including proper names) to form adjs. expressing direction, aspect, or tendency. From the 16th c. onwards there has been a growing disposition to use the advs. in -ward as adjs ; in the 19th c. or the last years of the 18th c. several new adjs. of this formation appear for the first time : e.g. earthward, heavenward, Godward, manward, skyward, these, however, have been confined to literary use.

-wards, suffix, OE. -wearde, corresponds to OS., MLG. -wardes, Du. -waarts, OHG., MHG. -wartes, early mod.G. -warts, the ending of the neut. genit. sing. (used substantially) of adjs. in OTeut. -wardo- : see -ward. A parallel formation of identical function, the adverbial neut. genit. sing. of adjs. in OTeut. -wurpo- (ablaut var. of -wardo-), is represented by Goth. -wairþis, OHG. -wertes, early mod.G. -werts, now written -wärts. The adverbial genitives of adjs. in -wardo-, -wurpo- appear to have in early Teut. differed little if at all in sense from the adverb. accusatives.

1. In English the history of -wards as an adv. suffix is identical with that of -ward (see -ward 3 and 4); beside every adv. in -ward there has always existed (at least potentially) a parallel formation in -wards, and vice versa. The two forms are so nearly synonymous (the general sense of the advs. being 'in the direction indicated by the first element of the compound') that the choice between them is mostly determined by some notion of euphony in the particular context; some persons, apparently, have a fixed preference for the one or the other form. Sometimes, however, the difference in the form of the suffix corresponds to a difference in the shade of meaning conveyed, though it would not be possible to give any general rule that would be universally accepted. Where the meaning to be expressed includes the notion of manner as well as direction of movement, -wards is required, as in 'to walk backwards', 'to write backwards'. In other instances the distinction seems to be that -wards is used when the adv. is meant to express a definite direction in contrast with other directions: thus we say 'it is moving forwards if it is moving at all', but 'to come forward', not 'forwards'; (see further the note on Forward adv.); so 'to travel eastward' expresses generally the notion of travelling in the direction of an eastern goal, 'to travel eastwards' implies that the direction is thought of as contrasted with other possible directions. Hence -wards seems to have an air of precision which has caused it to be avoided in poetical use.

There appears to be no appreciable difference in meaning between the prepositions Toward and Towards; the latter is now, at least in British use, more common colloquially. The now obsolete prepositions Fromward and Fromwards appear to have been perfectly synonymous.

2. In OE. the suffix -wearde, like -weard, was added to phrases containing the preps. tō and wiþ (see -ward 5). In the locutions tō..weard(s), from..weard(s (the so-called tmesis of the prep.), the two forms of the suffix were formerly equally common, but -wards now survives only in dialects.

3. Examples of tō..wards.

In the proverb twarling is sometimes substituted for twerling: the form worldling is an obvious perversion.

[OE. wǽr-loga wk. masc. traitor, enemy, devil, etc. = OS. wǽr-loga wk. masc. ?deceiver (once, Hlliand 3817), in pl. wǽrlogun applied to the Christ; OHG. wǽr-lougo, -logo wk. masc. is probably OE. wǽr in fem. covenant = OHG. wâra truth, ON. várar sb. fem. pl. solemn promise, vow (cf. Vǽringi confederate, Varangian); cf. OSlav. věra faith. This is a derivative formation by adj. represented by OE. wǽr true (once, Genesis 681; ?a. OS.) = OS., OHG. wâr true: –OTeut. wǽro-:—Pre-Teut. wēro- = L. vērus. The second element (an agent-n. related to OE. lōgan to LIE, belie, betray) occurs also in the similar compds. dǽ-loga, treów-loga (OS. trewilogo), weed-loga (ME. wedlowe), an oath-breaker, etc.

This seems to have been the original sense of the present word, but the special application to the Devil (either as a rebel, or as a deceiver) is also early in OE. in the laudatory sense. The applications to sorcerers, with especial reference to the power of assuming inhuman shapes, and to monsters (esp. werewolves), are chiefly modern developments, partly due to Scriptural language, of the sense 'devil'.

The modern forms with first -o(a are of obscure origin, for they appear first in Sc. of 16th c., and yet the word is absent to Sc. words, and we cannot represent, as has been assumed, a Southern sound-substitution of (k) for the -ch (x) of some of the rarer North. and Sc. forms. From the first they have been used decisively in the sense 'wizard'. Some other word, lost or not discovered, has perh. influenced both form and sense. ON. varðlokkur wk. fem. pl. (cf. also varðlokkðhrot witch-troop, magical assembly in Johnsen, is too rare (? occurring once), with regard to the late appearance of the -ð forms, to be considered.]

Warm (wɔ̄m), a. (and *sb.*2) Forms : 1 wearm, 2 werm, 3 Orm. warrm, 3–7 warme, 3– warm. [Com. Teut. : OE. wearm = OFris. warm (mod. WFris. waerm, NFris. wārm), MDu., Du. warm, OS. warm (MLG. war(e)m, LG. warm), OHG. war(a)m (MHG., G. warm), ON. varmr (Norw., Sw., Da. varm), Goth. warma- in warmjan to warm, cherish :—OTeut. warmo-, also wurmo- (in ON. verme wk. masc. WARMTH, OHG. wirma, MHG. wirm(e) fem. warmth).

The further relationship of this word is somewhat doubtful. In spite of certain difficulties it is probably to be identified with Indogermanic gʷhormo-, or gʷharmo- found in Skr. gharmá heat, Zend gaṷ-baw- hot, Gk. θερμός heat, L. formus warm, O Prussian gorme heat, Albanian zjarm heat, Armenian jerm warm, derivatives of gʷher-* with a radical sense of heat. For another possible example of initial w in Teut. from gʷh* or gʰw* see WILD a. Compare also the similar phonetic phenomena in Latin whereby volker gʷher-* gives before l and consonants, v before other vowels (e.g. gurgs, gurdus).

Some scholars have referred the word to a root wer-* found in Lith. virti to cook (trans.), OSl. variti to boil, cook (intr.), variti to cook (trans), vrěti to boil. The primary sense of this root, however, seems to be rather 'to well up, bubble' than 'to be hot'; cf. Lith. versmė a spring. The root is confined to the Balto-Slav. languages, and in them has no derivative corresponding in sense and suffix to the Teut. adj., which on the other view represents a widespread Indogermanic formation.]

† Warn, v.[9] Obs. Forms: α. 1 wiernan, wirnan, wyrnan, 3 wearne, 3–4 wirne, 3–5 wern, (3 worne, 5 warnne), weorne, 2–6 warne; β. 1 warnian, 3 warien, 3–5 warny, 3–4 Sc. warn, 4–6 warne. [Two formations: (1) OE. wiernan = OFris. werna, ON. verna (Da. værne):—O Teut. warnjan*; (2) OE. warnian (also warnian, warenian, by confusion with WARY v.[1]) = OFris. warnia, OS. (Hildebr.) warnen, ON. varna (Sw. varna):—OTeut. warnōjan*. The two OTeut. types are f. warnō* fem. (OE. wearn) obstacle, refusal, etc., f. the root wer-* : war-* to obstruct, defend.

It is possible that the ME. and later form warnie may descend partly from the OE. wiernian ; influence from ON. varna is also possible. But the form would be normal as a dial. variant of weornie = OE. wiernan ; on the other hand the ME. worne may partly represent OE. wearnian. The α and β types therefore probably do not accurately correspond to the two original formations.

1. trans. To refuse or deny (a thing to a person); to refuse to grant (a boon, request, etc.).

In OE. and early ME. const. dat. of person and genit. of thing; later, the genitive is sometimes represented by the construction with of, but more usually by the accusative.

II. 2. One whose occupation is warfare; a fighting man, whether soldier, sailor, or (latterly) airman; in eulogistic sense, a valiant or an experienced man of war. Now chiefly poet. and rhetorical, exc. as applied to the fighting men of the ages celebrated in epic and romance and of uncivilized peoples, for whom the designation soldier would be inappropriate.

The word found a memorable application in the designation of 'The Unknown Warrior', who on 11 Nov. 1920 was honoured with a stately funeral in Westminster Abbey as the representative of all who had given their lives for England in the great war. To which of the services he belonged was kept a secret, so that the comprehensive word 'warrior' was both necessary and felicitous.

1. Hist. A kind of siege engine.

A translation of ingins bellt, occurring in the Flores Historiarum (Rolls Series, Westminster) in the account of Edw I's siege of Stirling in 1304, where it is said that the battering-ram (aries) proved almost useless, but that the less costly 'war-wolf' was much more effective. In an AF. document relating to the siege (Cal. Docum. Scot II. 1296), the same machine is mentioned as 'le lup de guerre. The mod L. lupus is found elsewhere as the name of a military engine, but nothing seems to be known of its nature. The conjecture that war-wolf is a perversion of WERWOLF is unfounded.

1810 HOLLAND Camden's Brit. I. 400 Of these Mangonells, Patraries, Trabucks, Bricols, Espringolds, and of that which our ancestors termed the Warwolfe, by which they discharged volies of mighty huge stones. 1814 CAMDEN Rem., Artill. (ed. 2) 230 Some kind of Bricol it seemed which the English & Scots called an Espringold, the shot whereof K. Edward the first escaped faire at the siege of Strueling when he with another Engine named the Warwolfe perilled with one stone, two xnantimores. 1796 SOUTHEY Joan of Arc VIII. 134 The war wolfs there Hurld their huge missive. 1822 JANE PORTER *Sc. The obvious characteristics of the genus are the alternate rings of black and yellow on the abdomen, the narrow stalk or petiole by which the abdomen is attached to the thorax, the fully developed wings, and the formidable sting (which, however, is peculiar to the females and the workers or imperfect females). In scientific language applied generally to two divisions of hymenopterous insects, the Diplopters or true wasps, and the Fossores or digger wasps.

The true wasps (Diplopters) are divided into three families : (1) Vespidæ, to which the common wasp belongs ; (2) Eumenidæ ; and (3) Masaridæ.

[ME. wes hæil etc., a. ON. ves (= later ver) heill, corresp. to OE. wes hál lit. 'be in good health' or 'be fortunate': see Be v. A. 3 and Whole a.

As an ordinary salutation (= 'hail' or 'farewell') the phrase, or an approximation to it, occurs both in OE. (hál wes þú, and in pl. wutad hálle: see Be v. A. 3) and in ON. (pl. verið heilir). But neither in OE. nor in ON. nor indeed in any Teut. lang. has any trace been found of the use as drinking formulas, of the phrases represented by wassail and drinkhail. It seems probable that this use arose among the Danish-speaking inhabitants of England, and became more or less common among the native population in the 12th c. It was regarded by the Normans as markedly characteristic of Englishmen. The earliest known occurrence of the phrases is in Geoffrey of Monmouth VI. xii. (c 1140), in the well-known story of Rowena (wes hæil...drinc hæil) v. wes hæil, printed edd. corruptly wacht hail). Geoffrey's attribution of the phrases to the 5th century is an anachronism; the original story as told by Nennius contains nothing corresponding to them. In Wace's Brut (c 1180), which is a metrical version of Geoffrey, various MSS. have werhet, waissell, gasel; drinhet, drincehetil, drechehet. That Wace's acquaintance with the English phrases was not wholly derived from the passage in Geoffrey is shown by his reference to them in the Roman de Rou, where it is said that the night before the battle of Hastings was spent by the English in revelry, with cries of weissel (v.r. wesse heil, wessell, wessil) and drinchehail (v. r. drincesail, dringuehail, drinheil). In the Speculum Stultorum of Nigellus Wireker (c 1190) the English students at the university of Paris are praised for generosity and other virtues, but are said to be too much addicted to wassail and drinkgail. The earliest example of the phrases in an English context is in Layamon's translation of Wace.

In drinkhail the second element is, as in wassail, the ON. adj. heill used as complement. Although the phrase verið heill in not recorded in ON., it has an exact syntactical parallel in sit heill, 'sit in health'. Whether the form of the first element in drinkhail is due to OE. influence or is archaic Scandinavian is doubtful; the phrase drinkhæl in one MS. of Wace is noteworthy from its resemblance to the ON. of the literary period.]

b. The going-part of a clock. † Obs.

1676 W. Derham Artif. Clock-m. i. 3 The parts of a Movement, which I shall consider, are the Watch, and Clock. The Watch-part of a Movement is that which serveth to the measuring of the hours. In which the first thing I shall consider is the Ballance. 1816 J. Smith Panorama Sci. & Art I. 376 The profile of the watch or going part of a clock is shewn by fig. 4, pl. VI.

21. A small time-piece with a spring-driven movement, and of a size to be carried in the pocket.

The occasional occurrence of the term pocket-watch (see quot. 1705 below) suggests that the word was sometimes applied to spring-driven clocks of larger size, from the beginning of the 15th c. ' watches ' (from the context clearly pocket watches) are often spoken of as striking.

[App. a. OF. (north-eastern) wachet, occurring A. D. 1420 (une heuke . . forez de wachet, a cloak lined with 'watchet'; it is not clear whether this means a particular fabric or a colour); an earlier instance, spelt waschet, occurs in quot. 1198 below; the use of the OF. word in an Anglo-Latin context at that date does not prove that it had already been adopted into English. It is possible that watchet, wachet may be a dim. of the word which is found once (spelt wasce) in a Douay document of 1262; Godefr. explains this as 'sorte d'étoffe', but the interpretation is not certain from the context. The Central OF. gascke, recorded once (1448), for some kind of appendage or ornament of a shoe, would correspond formally, but if Godefr. is right in rendering it 'buckle' the connexion is out of the question.

It is tempting to compare Walloon swiret royal blue (which Diez would connect with OF. sweste Wood) 2 a dim. formation on a word of this meaning might have been used to denote a lighter shade of colour. But the phonological possibility of such a derivation of wachet is very doubtful.]

The three highest grades of quality in diamonds were formerly known as the first, second, and third water; the phrase of the first water survives in popular use as a designation of the finest quality, often applied to jewels generally.

[The equivalent use is found in several mod. Rom. and Teut. langs.; it may have come from Arabic, where this sense of ma', water, is a particular application of the sense 'lustre, splendour' [e. g. of a sword].]
