Messrs. W. H. Smith do wonders for the country bookseller. The work they do is beyond praise; is, indeed, far better than their own advertisements claim. Judging by results, the men and women on the job take a personal pride in finding the most obscure works from the vaguest clues. For speed of service, Messrs. W. H. Smith can give weight to most of the publishers and beat them in a canter.

It really seems ridiculous that ny provincial bookseller, able as he is to send all his day-to-day orders in one list to a single London wholesaler, should prefer to send separate orders, on which he will earn precisely the same profit, to perhaps 400 different publishers. Why does he do this, one may ask? The answer in most cases is that he likes the direct relationship with the publisher and underestimates the cost to himself. Some booksellers just do not seem to realise the service that the wholesaler can give or the saving
