DEATH, CAUSES (International List of).—Based on the Fourth Decennial Revision. (Courtesy of the Bureau of Census, Department of Commerce, 1931.) The physician should enter—(1) The principal cause of death, and related causes of importance, with date of onset of each cause. (2) Contributory causes of importance, with date of onset for each.

The principal cause is the disease or injury causing death The related causes are earlier morbid conditions, if any, related to the principal cause and any important complication or sequela of the principal cause. Under contributory causes of importance, name other important diseases or injuries. In naming the disease causing death it is urgently recommended that the exact names be employed, whenever they are applicable, and that no other terms be used instead. Thus, always write "Typhoid fever"; not sometimes "Typhoid fever," sometimes "Enteric fever," or "Typho-malarial fever," etc. Of course many diseases are not given in the list of titles of the International List, but only the most important ones. For others, any terms recommended by the Standard Nomenclature of Diseases and Pathological Conditions, Injuries, and Poisonings for the United States, Nomenclature of Diseases of the Royal College of Physicians, London, or the Nomenclature of Diseases and Conditions of Bellevue and Allied Hospitals, New York, may be used. Terms which are indefinite or otherwise undesirable, should never be used when a more definite statement can be given. "Heart failure," for example, is simply equivalent to cause of death unknown. "Convulsions," "Debility," "Old age," are terms of this character. Please aid in the improvement of our vital statistics by using only precise and definite terms.

XI.—Diseases of Pregnancy, Childbirth, and the Puerperal State

Note.—The term "puerperal" is intended to include pregnancy, parturition, and lactation. Whenever parturition or miscarriage has occurred within one month before the death of the patient, the fact should be certified, even though childbirth may not have contributed to the fatal issue. Whenever a woman of child-bearing age, especially if married, is reported to have died from a disease which might have been puerperal, the local registrar should require an explicit statement from the reporting physician as to whether the disease was or was not puerperal in character. The following diseases and symptoms are of this class:

Abscess of breast.	Metrorrhagia.
ovary.	Nephritis.
Acute nephritis.	Pelvic abscess.
Albuminuria.	Pelviperitonitis.
Cellulitis.	Peritonitis.

Gastritis.	Salpingitis.
Hemorrhage (uterine or unqualified).	Septicemia.
	Sudden death.
Lymphangitis.	Tetanus.
Metritis.	Thrombosis.
Metroperitonitis.	Uremia.

Physicians are requested always to write "Puerperal" before the above terms and others that might be puerperal in character, or to add in parentheses "(Not puerperal)," so that there may be no possibility of error in the compilation of the mortality statistics; also to respond to the requests of the local registrars for additional information when, inadvertently, the desired data are omitted. The value of such statistics can be greatly improved by cordial cooperation between the medical profession and the registration officials. If a physician will not write the true statement of puerperal character on the certificate, he may privately communicate that fact to the local or State registrar or write the number of the International List under which the death should be compiled, e. g., "Peritonitis (145(a))."

† NOTE —Dry beans are seen to be quite low in Vitamin C the anti-scorbutic vitamin However, sprouted beans contain it The following directions for managing the sprouting of beans are furnished by the Bureau of Home Economics, U S Department of Agriculture In this case Chinese (Mung) beans were used but more common varieties have been found satisfactory Soak the beans to be sprouted overnight The next morning place them in a colander or other container having holes for drainage. Keep them covered and in a warm place Flood with warm water at least four or five times daily They will sprout in from three to five days The outer covering of the beans can then be removed by washing The sprouts are good either raw or cooked and combine well with most vegetables Naturally the sprouts are as perishable as any fresh vegetable and should be grown only as needed.

ear (ēr) [ME., ere]. The organ of hearing, consisting of the external ear, the middle ear or tympanum, and the internal ear or labyrinth. The outer ear is made up of an expanded portion, the pinna, and the external auditory canal. The middle ear consists of the tympanum, with the ear-ossicles, the Eustachian tube, and the mastoid cells The tympanum is lined by mucous membrane, and communicates with the pharynx by means of the Eustachian tube. It is divided into three parts—the atrium, the attic, and the antrum. Its outer end is closed by the tympanic membrane, from which sound is conducted along the ear-ossicles (the malleus, incus, and stapes) to the fenestra ovalis, which communicates with the vestibule of the internal ear. By means of the fenestra rotunda, which is closed by the entotympanic membrane, it communicates with the cochlea of the internal ear. The mastoid cells, which are also part of the tympanum, are air-spaces in the mastoid process of the temporal bone. The internal ear consists of the bony and membranous labyrinths, which are separated from each other by a space containing the perilymph. Each labyrinth consists of three parts: the vestibule, the semicircular canals, and the cochlea. The bony vestibule communicates with the tympanum by the fenestra ovalis, closed by the base of the stapes, and also with the other parts of the internal ear. The semi-circular canals are three in number—the superior, the posterior, and the inferior. The cochlea, so named from its resemblance to a snail-shell, is a cylindrical tube that winds around a central axis, the modiolus, which transmits the cochlear nerves and blood-vessels. The cochlear canal is divided by the spiral lamina into the scala vestibuli, communicating with the vestibule, and the scala tympani, communicating with the fenestra rotunda of the tympanum. The membranous labyrinth is made up of parts corresponding to the bony labyrinth. The vestibule consists of two small sacs, the utricle and the saccule, which communicate through the vestibular aqueduct, and are lined by an epithelium, the maculæ acusticæ, which in places is largely specialized and receives the terminations of the vestibular nerve. The membranous cochlea, or cochlear duct, contains the acoustic organ of the cochlea, or organ of Corti, which consists of a series of epithelial arches formed by the interlocking of the ends of the pillars or rods of Corti. Upon the inner rods of Corti are the inner acoustic hair-cells; in relation with the outer rods are the outer hair-cells. The organ of Corti is covered by the membrana tectoria, or Corti's membrane. e.-ache. See otalgia. e., Blainville's. See Blainville's ear. e.-bones, the auditory ossicles. e.-cough, a reflex cough due to irritation of the ear. e. Elsner's method of diagnosing typhoid [Ottomar Elsner, German pathologist, 1869–]. Cultures are made from the stools, upon a special culture-medium composed of Holz's acid potato-gelatin with 1% of potassium iodide. Only a few forms of bacteria will grow upon this medium, and among these are Bacterium coli and the typhoid bacillus; these latter are of slow growth and in 24 hours are scarcely visible with low power, whereas the coli colonies have attained considerable growth. After 48 hours the typhoid cultures appear in shining aggregations as drops of water with finely molded structure, and the coli colonies are larger, more granular, and brown in color. The presence of the typhoid bacillus can also be detected in food and water by this procedure.
