Brown Colour Book

Drenched Book

UNIVERSAL LIBRARY
OU_168542
UNIVERSAL
LIBRARY

OSMANIA UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

Call No. 816-27/W37W Accession No. 4740

Author Webster, D.

Title Works of. . . 1857

This book should be returned on or before the date last marked below.

THE

WORKS

OF

DANIEL WEBSTER.

VOLUME VI.

TENTH EDITION.

BOSTON:
LITTLE, BROWN AND COMPANY.
1857.

CONTENTS

OF THE SIXTH VOLUME.

LEGAL ARGUMENTS AND SPEECHES TO THE JURY.

PAGE

THE CASE OF GIBBONS AND OGDEN 3

An Argument made in the Case of Gibbons and Ogden, in the Supreme Court of the United States, February Term, 1824.

THE CASE OF OGDEN AND SAUNDERS 24

An Argument made in the Case of Ogden and Saunders, in the Supreme Court of the United States, January Term, 1827.

THE MURDER OF CAPTAIN JOSEPH WHITE 41

An Argument on the Trial of John Francis Knapp, for the Murder of Joseph White, Esq., of Salem, in Essex County, Massachusetts, on the Night of the 6th of April, 1830.

THE BANK OF THE UNITED STATES AGAINST WILLIAM D. PRIMROSE 106

An Argument made in the Supreme Court of the United States, on the 9th of February, 1839.

THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY AND THE RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION OF THE YOUNG 133

A Speech delivered in the Supreme Court at Washington, on the 20th of February, 1844, in the Case of François Fénelon Vidal, John F. Girard, and others, Complainants and Appellants, against the Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens of Philadelphia, the Executors of Stephen Girard, and others, Defendants.

THE PROVIDENCE RAILROAD COMPANY AGAINST THE CITY OF BOSTON 185

An Argument before the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, sitting at Boston as a Court of Equity, on the 3d of April, 1844.

THE RHODE ISLAND GOVERNMENT 217

An Argument made in the Supreme Court of the United States, on the 27th of January, 1848, in the Case of Martin Luther against Luther M. Borden and others.

DIPLOMATIC AND OFFICIAL PAPERS

THE CASE OF ALEXANDER McLEOD 247

Mr. Fox to Mr. Webster. March 12, 1841.
Mr. Webster to Mr. Fox. April 24, 1841.
Mr. Webster to the Attorney-General of the United States. March 15, 1841.
An Act to provide further remedial Justice in the Courts of the United States. Passed August 29, 1842.

TREATY OF WASHINGTON OF 1842 270

THE NORTHEASTERN BOUNDARY.

Mr. Webster to Mr. Everett. January 29, 1842.
Mr. Webster to Governor Fairfield. April 11, 1842.
Mr. Webster to the Maine Commissioners. July 15, 1842.
Lord Ashburton to Mr. Webster. July 16, 1842.
Mr. Webster to Lord Ashburton. July 27, 1842.
Lord Ashburton to Mr. Webster. July 29, 1842.
Lord Ashburton to Mr. Webster. August 9, 1842.
Mr. Webster to Lord Ashburton. August 9, 1842.

SUPPRESSION OF THE SLAVE-TRADE.

Mr. Webster to Captains Bell and Paine. April 30, 1842.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH LORD ASHBURTON 292

INVIOLABILITY OF NATIONAL TERRITORY. — CASE OF THE "CAROLINE."

Mr. Webster to Lord Ashburton. July 27, 1842.
Extract from the Message of the President at the Commencement of the Second Session of the 27th Congress.
Lord Ashburton to Mr. Webster. July 28, 1842.
Mr. Webster to Lord Ashburton. August 6, 1842.

MARITIME RIGHTS. — CASE OF THE "CREOLE."

Mr. Webster to Lord Ashburton. August 1, 1842.
Lord Ashburton to Mr. Webster. August 6, 1842.
Mr. Webster to Lord Ashburton. August 8, 1842.

IMPRESSMENT.

Mr. Webster to Lord Ashburton. August 8, 1842.
Lord Ashburton to Mr. Webster. August 9, 1842.

THE RIGHT OF SEARCH 329

Mr. Webster to the President of the United States. February 26, 1843.
Mr. Webster to Mr. Everett. March 28, 1843.
Mr. Webster to General Cass. April 5, 1842.

THE TREATY OF WASHINGTON 347

President's Message transmitting the Treaty of Washington to the Senate.
Vote of the Senate on the Final Question of Ratification, &c.

LETTERS TO GENERAL CASS ON THE TREATY OF WASHINGTON 367

Mr. Webster to General Cass. August 29, 1842.
Mr. F. Webster to General Cass. October 11, 1842.
Mr. Webster to General Cass. November 14, 1842.
Mr. Webster to General Cass. December 20, 1842.

RELATIONS WITH SPAIN. — SCHOONER "AMISTAD" . . 391

The Chevalier d'Argaïz to Mr. Webster. April 5, 1841.
The Chevalier d'Argaïz to Mr. Webster. April 11, 1841.
Mr. F. Webster to the Chevalier d'Argaïz. May 3, 1841.
The Chevalier d'Argaïz to Mr. Webster. May 29, 1841.
Mr. Webster to the Chevalier d'Argaïz. September 1, 1841.
Mr. Webster to the Chevalier d'Argaïz. June 21, 1842.

SOUND DUES AT ELSINORE, AND THE GERMAN ZOLL-VEREIN . 406

Mr. Webster to the President of the United States. May 24, 1841.

TREATY WITH PORTUGAL 415

Mr. Webster to M. de Figaniere e Morao. February 9, 1842.

RELATIONS WITH MEXICO 422

AMERICAN CITIZENS CAPTURED AT SANTA FÉ.

Mr. Webster to Mr. Ellis. January 3, 1842.
Mr. Webster to Mr. Ellis. January 6, 1842.
Mr Webster to Mr. Peyton. January 6, 1842.
Mr Webster to Mr. Thompson. April 15, 1842

INDEPENDENCE OF TEXAS.

Message from the President of the United States, transmitting Copies of Papers upon the Subject of the Relations between the United States and the Mexican Republic, July 14, 1842.
Mr. Webster to the President of the United States. July 13, 1842.
M. Velazquez de Leon to Mr. Webster. June 24, 1842.
Mr. Webster to M. Velazquez de Leon. June 29, 1842.
M. de Bocanegra to Mr. Webster. May 12, 1842.

Mr. Webster to Mr. Thompson. July 8, 1842.
M. de Bocanegra to Mr. Webster. May 31, 1842.
Mr. Webster to Mr. Thompson. July 13, 1842.

CAPTURE OF MONTEREY.

Mr. Webster to Mr. Thompson. January 17, 1843.
Mr. Webster to General Almonte. January 21, 1843.
Mr. Webster to General Almonte. January 30, 1843.

CHINA AND THE SANDWICH ISLANDS 463

Message from the President of the United States, on the Subject of the Trade and Commerce of the United States with the Sandwich Islands, and of Diplomatic Intercourse with their Government; also, in Relation to the new Position of Affairs in China, growing out of the late War between Great Britain and China, and recommending Provision for a Diplomatic Agent, December 31, 1842.

INTERCOURSE WITH CHINA.

Mr. Webster to Mr. Cushing. May 8, 1843.
Mr. Webster to Mr. Cushing. May 8, 1843.
Letter to the Emperor. July 12, 1843.

INDEPENDENCE OF THE SANDWICH ISLANDS

The Secretary of State to the Agents of the Sandwich Islands. December 19, 1842.

BOUNDARIES OF TEXAS 479

Mr. Webster to his Excellency P. H. Bell, Governor of Texas. August 5, 1850.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH THE CHEVALIER HÜLSEMANN . . 488

Chevalier J. G. Hülsemann to the Secretary of State. September 30, 1850.
The Secretary of State to the Chevalier Hülsemann. December 21, 1850.
The Chevalier Hülsemann to Mr. Webster. March 11, 1851.
Mr. Webster to the Chevalier Hülsemann. March 15, 1851.

EXCESSES COMMITTED AT NEW ORLEANS 507

Mr. Webster to Don A. Calderon de la Barca, Minister of Spain to the United States. November 13, 1851.

THE LOPEZ EXPEDITION 513

Mr. Webster to Mr. Barringer, Minister of the United States to Spain. November 26, 1851.

THE CASE OF THRASHER 518

Mr. Webster to Mr. Barringer. December 13, 1851.
Mr. Webster to the President of the United States. December 23, 1851.

MISCELLANEOUS LETTERS.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT 533

To the Rev. Louis Dwight, Secretary of the Prison Discipline Society. May 2, 1830.

SLAVERY 536

To John Bolton, Esq., of Georgia. May 17, 1833.

POWER OF THE STATES TO CONTRACT LOANS 537

To Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co. October 16, 1839.

INTERCOURSE WITH ENGLAND 540

To the Duke of Rutland. November 16, 1839.

LABORERS ON THE PUBLIC WORKS 542

To M. St. Clair Clarke, Wm. S. Murphy, and Hudson M. Garland. March 27, 1841.

TO HIS POLITICAL FRIENDS IN NEW HAMPSHIRE . . . 543

To Messrs. John Haven and others. January 3, 1844.

REPLY TO THE BOSTON ADDRESS 546

To the Hon. Thomas H. Perkins and others, Citizens of Boston. April 9, 1850.

SLAVERY IN NEW MEXICO 548

To the Hon. Hugh N. Smith, Delegate from New Mexico. April 8, 1850.
Hon. Hugh N. Smith to the Hon. Daniel Webster. April 9, 1850.

TO A FORMER POLITICAL OPPONENT 550

To Hon. Isaac Hill. April 20, 1850.

TO CITIZENS OF NEWBURYPORT, MASS. 551

To Edward S. Rand and others, Citizens of Newburyport, Mass. May 15, 1850.

TO CITIZENS OF MEDFORD, MASS. 563

To Dudley C. Hall, Esq., and others, Citizens of Medford, Mass. June 3, 1850.

CELEBRATION OF THE SEVENTEENTH OF JUNE . . . 565

To G. W. Warren, Esq., Chairman of the Bunker Hill Committee. June 13, 1850.

To Citizens on the Kennebec River 566

To R. H. Gardiner, Esq., and others, Inhabitants of the Cities and Towns on the Kennebec River. June 17, 1850.

To his New Hampshire Neighbors 575

To the Rev. Ebenezer Price and others, Neighbors of Mr. Webster in New Hampshire. September 21, 1850.

Union Meeting at Castle Garden 577

To Messrs. F. S. Lathrop and others, New York. October 28, 1850.

To Citizens of Staunton, Virginia 579

To Messrs. William Kinney and others, of Staunton, Virginia. November 23, 1850.

To Citizens of Westchester, New York 582

To J. A. Hamilton, Esq., and others, Westchester, New York. January 27, 1851.

The Birthday of Washington 586

To the New York Committee for the Celebration of the Birthday of Washington. February 20, 1851.

Release of the Hungarian Refugees 591

To George P. Marsh, Esq., &c., Constantinople. February 28, 1851.

Invitation to New York 595

To George Griswold, Esq., and others, in Reply to a Letter transmitting an Invitation signed by more than five thousand Citizens of New York, "Friends of the Union, without Distinction of Party." May 9, 1851.

To his Cape Cod Friends 596

To a Number of Friends at West Dennis, Mass. July 14, 1851.

Invitation to Georgia 599

To Mark A. Cooper, Esq., Macon, Georgia. October 6, 1851.

Monument to Isaac Davis 601

To Mr. J. T. Woodbury, Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements for the Celebration at Acton, Mass. October 15, 1851.

Index 603

LEGAL ARGUMENTS

AND

SPEECHES TO THE JURY.

(CONTINUED.)

THE CASE OF GIBBONS AND OGDEN.*

This was an appeal from the Court for the Trial of Impeachments and Correction of Errors of the State of New York. Aaron Ogden filed his bill in the Court of Chancery of that State, against Thomas Gibbons, setting forth the several acts of the legislature thereof, enacted for the purpose of securing to Robert R. Livingston and Robert Fulton the exclusive navigation of all the waters within the jurisdiction of that State, with boats moved by fire or steam, for a term of years which had not then expired; and authorizing the Chancellor to award an injunction, restraining any person whatever from navigating those waters with boats of that description. The bill stated an assignment from Livingston and Fulton to one John R. Livingston, and from him to the complainant, Ogden, of the right to navigate the waters between Elizabethtown, and other places in New Jersey, and the city of New York; and that Gibbons, the defendant below, was in possession of two steamboats, called the Stoudinger and the Bellona, which were actually employed in running between New York and Elizabethtown, in violation of the exclusive privilege conferred on the complainant, and praying an injunction to restrain the said Gibbons from using the said boats, or any other propelled by fire or steam, in navigating the waters within the territory of New York.

The injunction having been awarded, the answer of Gibbons was filed, in which he stated, that the boats employed by him were duly enrolled and licensed to be employed in carrying on the coasting trade, under the act of Congress, passed the 18th of February, 1793, ch. 8, entitled, "An Act for enrolling and licensing ships and vessels to be employed in the coasting trade and fisheries, and for regulating the same." And the defendant insisted on his right, in virtue of such licenses, to navigate the waters between Elizabethtown and the city of New York, the said acts of the legislature of the State of New York to the contrary notwithstanding. At the hearing, the Chancellor perpetuated the injunction, being of the opinion that the said acts were not repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States, and were valid. This decree was affirmed in the Court for the Trial of Impeachments and Correction of Errors, which is the highest court of law and equity in the State of New York before which the cause could be carried, and it was thereupon carried up to the Supreme Court of the United States by appeal.

* Argument made in the Case of Gibbons and Ogden, in the Supreme Court of the United States, February Term, 1824.

The following argument was made by Mr. Webster, for the plaintiff in error.

It is admitted, that there is a very respectable weight of authority in favor of the decision which is sought to be reversed. The laws in question, I am aware, have been deliberately reenacted by the legislature of New York; and they have also received the sanction, at different times, of all her judicial tribunals, than which there are few, if any, in the country, more justly entitled to respect and deference. The disposition of the court will be, undoubtedly, to support, if it can, laws so passed and so sanctioned. I admit, therefore, that it is justly expected of us that we should make out a clear case; and unless we do so, we cannot hope for a reversal. It should be remembered, however, that the whole of this branch of power, as exercised by this court, is a power of revision. The question must be decided by the State courts, and decided in a particular manner, before it can be brought here at all. Such decisions alone give this court jurisdiction; and therefore, while they are to be respected as the judgments of learned judges, they are yet in the condition of all decisions from which the law allows an appeal.

It will not be a waste of time to advert to the existing state of the facts connected with the subject of this litigation. The use of steamboats on the coasts and in the bays and rivers of the country, has become very general. The intercourse of its different parts essentially depends upon this mode of conveyance and transportation. Rivers and bays, in many cases, form the divisions between States; and thence it is obvious, that, if the States should make regulations for the navigation of these waters, and such regulations should be repugnant and hostile, embarrassment would necessarily be caused to the general intercourse of the community. Such events have actually occurred, and have created the existing state of things.

By the law of New York, no one can navigate the bay of New York, the North River, the Sound, the lakes, or any of the waters of that State, by steam-vessels, without a license from the grantees of New York, under penalty of forfeiture of the vessel.

By the law of the neighboring State of Connecticut, no one can enter her waters with a steam-vessel having such license.

By the law of New Jersey, if any citizen of that State shall be restrained, under the New York law, from using steamboats between the ancient shores of New Jersey and New York, he shall be entitled to an action for damages, in New Jersey, with treble costs against the party who thus restrains or impedes him under the law of New York! This act of New Jersey is called an act of retortion against the illegal and oppressive legislation of New York; and seems to be defended on those grounds of public law which justify reprisals between independent States.

It will hardly be contended, that all these acts are consistent with the laws and Constitution of the United States. If there is no power in the general government to control this extreme belligerent legislation of the States, the powers of the government are essentially deficient in a most important and interesting particular. The present controversy respects the earliest of these State laws, those of New York. On these, this court is now to pronounce; and if they should be declared to be valid and operative, I hope somebody will point out where the State right stops, and on what grounds the acts of other States are to be held inoperative and void.

It will be necessary to advert more particularly to the laws of New York, as they are stated in the record. The first was passed March 19th, 1787. By this act, a sole and exclusive right was granted to John Fitch, of making and using every kind of boat or vessel impelled by steam, in all creeks, rivers, bays, and waters within the territory and jurisdiction of New York, for fourteen years.

On the 27th of March, 1798, an act was passed, on the suggestion that Fitch was dead, or had withdrawn from the State, without having made any attempt to use his privilege, repealing the grant to him, and conferring similar privileges on Robert R. Livingston, for the term of twenty years, on a suggestion, made by him, that he was possessor of a mode of applying the steam-engine to propel a boat, on new and advantageous principles. On the 5th of April, 1803, another act was passed, by which it was declared, that the rights and privileges granted to Robert R. Livingston by the last act should be extended to him and Robert Fulton, for twenty years from the passing of the act. Then there is the act of April 11, 1808, purporting to extend the monopoly, in point of time, five years for every additional boat, the whole duration, however, not to exceed thirty years; and forbidding any and all persons to navigate the waters of the State with any steam boat or vessel, without the license of Livingston and Fulton, under penalty of forfeiture of the boat or vessel. And lastly comes the act of April 9, 1811, for enforcing the provisions of the last-mentioned act, and declaring, that the forfeiture of the boat or vessel found navigating against the provisions of the previous acts shall be deemed to accrue on the day on which such boat or vessel should navigate the waters of the State; and that Livingston and Fulton might immediately have an action for such boat or vessel, in like manner as if they themselves had been dispossessed thereof by force; and that on bringing any such suit, the defendant therein should be prohibited, by injunction, from removing the boat or vessel out of the State, or using it within the State. There are one or two other acts mentioned in the pleadings, which principally respect the time allowed for complying with the condition of the grant, and are not material to the discussion of the case.

By these acts, then, an exclusive right is given to Livingston and Fulton to use steam navigation on all the waters of New York, for thirty years from 1808.

It is not necessary to recite the several conveyances and agreements, stated in the record, by which Ogden, the plaintiff below, derives title under Livingston and Fulton to the exclusive use of part of these waters for steam navigation.

The appellant being owner of a steamboat, and being found navigating the waters between New Jersey and the city of New York, over which waters Ogden, the plaintiff below, claims an exclusive right, under Livingston and Fulton, this bill was filed against him by Ogden, in October, 1818, and an injunction granted, restraining him from such use of his boat. This injunction was made perpetual, on the final hearing of the cause, in the Court of Chancery; and the decree of the Chancellor has been duly affirmed in the Court of Errors. The right, therefore, which the plaintiff below asserts, to have and maintain his injunction, depends obviously on the general validity of the New York laws, and especially on their force and operation as against the right set up by the defendant. This right he states in his answer to be, that he is a citizen of New Jersey, and owner of the steamboat in question; that the boat is a vessel of more than twenty tons burden, duly enrolled and licensed for carrying on the coasting trade, and intended to be employed by him in that trade, between Elizabethtown, in New Jersey, and the city of New York; and that it was actually employed in navigating between those places at the time of, and until notice of, the injunction from the Court of Chancery was served on him.

On these pleadings the substantial question is raised, Are these laws such as the legislature of New York has a right to pass? If, so, do they, secondly, in their operation, interfere with any right enjoyed under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and are they therefore void, as far as such interference extends?

It may be well to state again their general purport and effect, and the purport and effect of the other State laws which have been enacted by way of retaliation.

A steam-vessel, of any description, going to New York, is forfeited to the representatives of Livingston and Fulton, unless she have their license. Going from New York or elsewhere to Connecticut, she is prohibited from entering the waters of that State if she have such license.

If the representatives of Livingston and Fulton in New York carry into effect, by judicial process, the provision of the New York laws, against any citizen of New Jersey, they expose themselves to a statute action in New Jersey for all damages, and treble costs.

The New York laws extend to all steam-vessels; to steam frigates, steam ferry-boats, and all intermediate classes. They extend to public as well as private ships; and to vessels employed in foreign commerce, as well as to those employed in the coasting trade.

The remedy is as summary as the grant itself is ample; for immediate confiscation, without seizure, trial, or judgment, is the penalty of infringement.

In regard to these acts, I shall contend, in the first place, that they exceed the power of the legislature; and, secondly, that, if they could be considered valid for any purpose, they are void still, as against any right enjoyed under the laws of the United States with which they come in collision; and that in this case they are found interfering with such rights.

I shall contend that the power of Congress to regulate commerce is complete and entire, and, to a certain extent, necessarily exclusive; that the acts in question are regulations of commerce, in a most important particular, affecting it in those respects in which it is under the exclusive authority of Congress. I state this first proposition guardedly. I do not mean to say, that all regulations which may, in their operation, affect commerce, are exclusively in the power of Congress; but that such power as has been exercised in this case does not remain with the States. Nothing is more complex than commerce; and in such an age as this, no words embrace a wider field than commercial regulation. Almost all the business and intercourse of life may be connected incidentally, more or less, with commercial regulations. But it is only necessary to apply to this part of the Constitution the well-settled rules of construction. Some powers are held to be exclusive in Congress, from the use of exclusive words in the grant; others, from the prohibitions on the States to exercise similar powers; and others, again, from the nature of the powers themselves. It has been by this mode of reasoning that the court has adjudicated many important questions; and the same mode is proper here. And, as some powers have been held to be exclusive, and others not so, under the same form of expression, from the nature of the different powers respectively; so where the power, on any one subject, is given in general words, like the power to regulate commerce, the true method of construction will be to consider of what parts the grant is composed, and which of those, from the nature of the thing, ought to be considered exclusive. The right set up in this case, under the laws of New York, is a monopoly. Now I think it very reasonable to say, that the Constitution never intended to leave with the States the power of granting monopolies either of trade or of navigation; and therefore, that as to this, the commercial power is exclusive in Congress.

It is in vain to look for a precise and exact definition of the powers of Congress on several subjects. The Constitution does not undertake the task of making such exact definitions. In conferring powers, it proceeds by the way of enumeration, stating the powers conferred, one after another, in few words; and where the power is general or complex in its nature, the extent of the grant must necessarily be judged of, and limited, by its object, and by the nature of the power.

Few things are better known than the immediate causes which led to the adoption of the present Constitution; and there is nothing, as I think, clearer, than that the prevailing motive was to regulate commerce; to rescue it from the embarrassing and destructive consequences resulting from the legislation of so many different States, and to place it under the protection of a uniform law. The great objects were commerce and revenue; and they were objects indissolubly connected. By the Confederation, divers restrictions had been imposed on the States; but these had not been found sufficient. No State, it is true, could send or receive an embassy; nor make any treaty; nor enter into any compact with another State, or with a foreign power; nor lay duties interfering with treaties which had been entered into by Congress. But all these were found to be far short of what the actual condition of the country required. The States could still, each for itself, regulate commerce, and the consequence was a perpetual jarring and hostility of commercial regulation.

In the history of the times, it is accordingly found, that the great topic, urged on all occasions, as showing the necessity of a new and different government, was the state of trade and commerce. To benefit and improve these was a great object in itself; and it became greater when it was regarded as the only means of enabling the country to pay the public debt, and to do justice to those who had most effectually labored for its independence. The leading state papers of the time are full of this topic. The New Jersey resolutions* complain that the regulation of trade was in the power of the several States, within their separate jurisdiction, to such a degree as to involve many difficulties and embarrassments; and they express an earnest opinion, that the sole and exclusive power of regulating trade with foreign states ought to be in Congress. Mr. Witherspoon's motion in Congress, in 1781, is of the same general character; and the report of a committee of that body, in 1785, is still more emphatic. It declares that Congress ought to possess the sole and exclusive power of regulating trade, as well with foreign nations as between the States.* The resolutions of Virginia, in January, 1786, which were the immediate cause of the Convention, put forth this same great object. Indeed, it is the only object stated in those resolutions. There is not another idea in the whole document. The sole purpose for which the delegates assembled at Annapolis was to devise means for the uniform regulation of trade. They found no means but in a general government; and they recommended a convention to accomplish that purpose. Over whatever other interests of the country this government may diffuse its benefits and its blessings, it will always be true, as matter of historical fact, that it had its immediate origin in the necessities of commerce; and for its immediate object, the relief of those necessities, by removing their causes, and by establishing a uniform and steady system. It will be easy to show, by reference to the discussions in the several State conventions, the prevalence of the same general topics; and if any one would look to the proceedings of several of the States, especially to those of Massachusetts and New York, he would see very plainly, by the recorded lists of votes, that wherever this commercial necessity was most strongly felt, there the proposed new Constitution had most friends. In the New York convention, the argument arising from this consideration was strongly pressed, by the distinguished person† whose name is connected with the present question.

* 1 Laws U. S. p. 28, Bioren and Duane's ed.

We do not find, in the history of the formation and adoption of the Constitution, that any man speaks of a general concurrent power, in the regulation of foreign and domestic trade, as still residing in the States. The very object intended, more than any other, was to take away such power. If it had not so provided, the Constitution would not have been worth accepting.

* 1 Laws U. S., p. 50. † Chancellor Livingston.

I contend, therefore, that the people intended, in establishing the Constitution, to transfer from the several States to a general government those high and important powers over commerce, which, in their exercise, were to maintain a uniform and general system. From the very nature of the case, these powers must be exclusive; that is, the higher branches of commercial regulation must be exclusively committed to a single hand. What is it that is to be regulated? Not the commerce of the several States, respectively, but the commerce of the United States. Henceforth, the commerce of the States was to be a unit; and the system by which it was to exist and be governed must necessarily be complete, entire, and uniform. Its character was to be described in the flag which waved over it, E PLURIBUS UNUM. Now, how could individual States assert a right of concurrent legislation, in a case of this sort, without manifest encroachment and confusion? It should be repeated, that the words used in the Constitution, "to regulate commerce," are so very general and extensive, that they may be construed to cover a vast field of legislation, part of which has always been occupied by State laws; and therefore the words must have a reasonable construction, and the power should be considered as exclusively vested in Congress so far, and so far only, as the nature of the power requires. And I insist, that the nature of the case, and of the power, did imperiously require, that such important authority as that of granting monopolies of trade and navigation should not be considered as still retained by the States.

It is apparent, from the prohibitions on the power of the States, that the general concurrent power was not supposed to be left with them. And the exception out of these prohibitions of the inspection laws proves this still more clearly. Which most concerns the commerce of this country, that New York and Virginia should have an uncontrolled power to establish their inspection of flour and tobacco, or that they should have an uncontrolled power of granting either a monopoly of trade in their own ports, or a monopoly of navigation over all the waters leading to those ports? Yet the argument on the other side must be, that, although the Constitution has sedulously guarded and limited the first of these powers, it has left the last wholly unlimited and uncontrolled.

But although much has been said, in the discussion on former occasions, about this supposed concurrent power in the States, I find great difficulty in understanding what is meant by it. It is generally qualified by saying, that it is a power by which the States could pass laws on subjects of commercial regulation, which would be valid until Congress should pass other laws controlling them, or inconsistent with them, and that then the State laws must yield. What sort of concurrent powers are these, which cannot exist together? Indeed, the very reading of the clause in the Constitution must put to flight this notion of a general concurrent power. The Constitution was formed for all the States; and Congress was to have power to regulate commerce. Now, what is the import of this, but that Congress is to give the rule, to establish the system, to exercise the control over the subject? And can more than one power, in cases of this sort, give the rule, establish the system, or exercise the control? As it is not contended that the power of Congress is to be exercised by a supervision of State legislation, and as it is clear that Congress is to give the general rule, I contend that this power of giving the general rule is transferred, by the Constitution, from the States to Congress, to be exercised as that body may see fit; and consequently, that all those high exercises of power, which might be considered as giving the rule, or establishing the system, in regard to great commercial interests, are necessarily left with Congress alone. Of this character I consider monopolies of trade or navigation; embargoes; the system of navigation laws; the countervailing laws, as against foreign states; and other important enactments respecting our connection with such states. It appears to me a most reasonable construction to say, that in these respects the power of Congress is exclusive, from the nature of the power. If it be not so, where is the limit, or who shall fix a boundary for the exercise of the power of the States? Can a State grant a monopoly of trade? Can New York shut her ports to all but her own citizens? Can she refuse admission to ships of particular nations? The argument on the other side is, and must be, that she might do all these things, until Congress should revoke her enactments. And this is called concurrent legislation! What confusion such notions lead to is obvious enough. A power in the States to do any thing, and every thing, in regard to commerce, till Congress shall undo it, would suppose a state of things at least as bad as that which existed before the present Constitution. It is the true wisdom of these governments to keep their action as distinct as possible. The general government should not seek to operate where the States can operate with more advantage to the community; nor should the States encroach on ground which the public good, as well as the Constitution, refers to the exclusive control of Congress.

If the present state of things, these laws of New York, the laws of Connecticut, and the laws of New Jersey, had been all presented, in the convention of New York, to the eminent person whose name is on this record, and who acted on that occasion so important a part; if he had been told, that, after all he had said in favor of the new government, and of its salutary effects on commercial regulations, the time would yet come when the North River would be shut up by a monopoly from New York, the Sound interdicted by a penal law of Connecticut, reprisals authorized by New Jersey against citizens of New York, and when one could not cross a ferry without transshipment, does any one suppose he would have admitted all this as compatible with the government which he was recommending?

This doctrine of a general concurrent power in the States is insidious and dangerous. If it be admitted, no one can say where it will stop. The States may legislate, it is said, wherever Congress has not made a plenary exercise of its power. But who is to judge whether Congress has made this plenary exercise of power? Congress has acted on this power; it has done all that it deemed wise; and are the States now to do whatever Congress has left undone? Congress makes such rules as, in its judgment, the case requires; and those rules, whatever they are, constitute the system.

All useful regulation does not consist in restraint; and that which Congress sees fit to leave free is a part of its regulation, as much as the rest.

The practice under the Constitution sufficiently evinces, that this portion of the commercial power is exclusive in Congress. When, before this instance, have the States granted monopolies? When, until now, have they interfered with the navigation of the country? The pilot laws, the health laws, or quarantine laws, and various regulations of that class, which have been recognized by Congress, are no arguments to prove, even if they are to be called commercial regulations (which they are not), that other regulations, more directly and strictly commercial, are not solely within the power of Congress. There is a singular fallacy, as I venture to think, in the argument of very learned and most respectable persons on this subject. That argument alleges, that the States have a concurrent power with Congress of regulating commerce; and the proof of this position is, that the States have, without any question of their right, passed acts respecting turnpike-roads, toll-bridges, and ferries. These are declared to be acts of commercial regulation, affecting not only the interior commerce of the State itself, but also commerce between different States. Therefore, as all these are commercial regulations, and are yet acknowledged to be rightfully established by the States, it follows, as is supposed, that the States must have a concurrent power to regulate commerce.

Now, what is the inevitable consequence of this mode of reasoning? Does it not admit the power of Congress, at once, upon all these minor objects of legislation? If all these be regulations of commerce, within the meaning of the Constitution, then certainly Congress, having a concurrent power to regulate commerce, may establish ferries, turnpike-roads, and bridges, and provide for all this detail of interior legislation. To sustain the interference of the State in a high concern of maritime commerce, the argument adopts a principle which acknowledges the right of Congress over a vast scope of internal legislation, which no one has heretofore supposed to be within its powers. But this is not all; for it is admitted that, when Congress and the States have power to legislate over the same subject, the power of Congress, when exercised, controls or extinguishes the State power; and therefore the consequence would seem to follow, from the argument, that all State legislation over such subjects as have been mentioned is, at all times, liable to the superior power of Congress; a consequence which no one would admit for a moment. The truth is, in my judgment, that all these things are, in their general character, rather regulations of police than of commerce, in the constitutional understanding of that term. A road, indeed, may be a matter of great commercial concern. In many cases it is so; and when it is so, there is no doubt of the power of Congress to make it. But, generally speaking, roads, and bridges, and ferries, though of course they affect commerce and intercourse, do not possess such importance and elevation as to be deemed commercial regulations. A reasonable construction must be given to the Constitution; and such construction is as necessary to the just power of the States, as to the authority of Congress. Quarantine laws, for example, may be considered as affecting commerce; yet they are, in their nature, health laws. In England, we speak of the power of regulating commerce as in Parliament, or the king, as arbiter of commerce; yet the city of London enacts health laws. Would any one infer from that circumstance, that the city of London had concurrent power with Parliament or the crown to regulate commerce? or that it might grant a monopoly of the navigation of the Thames? While a health law is reasonable, it is a health law; but if, under color of it, enactments should be made for other purposes, such enactments might be void.

In the discussion in the New York courts, no small reliance was placed on the law of that State prohibiting the importation of slaves, as an example of a commercial regulation enacted by State authority. That law may or may not be constitutional and valid. It has been referred to generally, but its particular provisions have not been stated. When they are more clearly seen, its character may be better determined.

It might further be argued, that the power of Congress over these high branches of commerce is exclusive, from the consideration that Congress possesses an exclusive admiralty jurisdiction. That it does possess such exclusive jurisdiction will hardly be contested. No State pretends to exercise any jurisdiction of that kind. The States abolished their courts of admiralty, when the Constitution went into operation. Over these waters, therefore, or at least some of them, which are the subject of this monopoly, New York has no jurisdiction whatever. They are a part of the high seas, and not within the body of any county. The authorities of that State could not punish for a murder, committed on board one of these boats, in some places within the range of this exclusive grant. This restraining of the States from all jurisdiction out of the body of their own counties, shows plainly enough that navigation on the high seas was understood to be a matter to be regulated only by Congress. It is not unreasonable to say, that what are called the waters of New York are, for purposes of navigation and commercial regulation, the waters of the United States. There is no cession, indeed, of the waters themselves, but their use for those purposes seems to be intrusted to the exclusive power of Congress. Several States have enacted laws which would appear to imply their conviction of the power of Congress over navigable waters to a greater extent.

If there be a concurrent power of regulating commerce on the high seas, there must be a concurrent admiralty jurisdiction, and a concurrent control of the waters. It is a common principle, that arms of the sea, including navigable rivers, belong to the sovereign, so far as navigation is concerned. Their use is navigation. The United States possess the general power over navigation, and, of course, ought to control, in general, the use of navigable waters. If it be admitted that, for purposes of trade and navigation, the North River and its bay are the river and bay of New York, and the Chesapeake the bay of Virginia, very great inconveniences and much confusion might be the result.

It may now be well to take a nearer view of these laws, to see more exactly what their provisions are, what consequences have followed from them, and what would and might follow from other similar laws.

The first grant to John Fitch gave him the sole and exclusive right of making, employing, and navigating all boats impelled by fire or steam, "in all creeks, rivers, bays, and waters within the territory and jurisdiction of the State." Any other person navigating such boat was to forfeit it, and to pay a penalty of a hundred pounds. The subsequent acts repeal this, and grant similar privileges to Livingston and Fulton; and the act of 1811 provides the extraordinary and summary remedy which has been already stated. The river, the bay, and the marine league along the shore, are all within the scope of this grant. Any vessel, therefore, of this description, coming into any of those waters, without a license, whether from another State or from abroad, whether it be a public or private vessel, is instantly forfeited to the grantees of the monopoly.

Now it must be remembered that this grant is made as an exercise of sovereign political power. It is not an inspection law, nor a health law, nor passed by any derivative authority; it is professedly an act of sovereign power. Of course, there is no limit to the power, to be derived from the purpose for which it is exercised. If exercised for one purpose, it may be also for another. No one can inquire into the motives which influence sovereign authority. It is enough that such power manifests its will. The motive alleged in this case is, to remunerate the grantees for a benefit conferred by them on the public. But there is no necessary connection between that benefit and this mode of rewarding it; and if the State could grant this monopoly for that purpose, it could also grant it for any other purpose. It could make the grant for money; and so make the monopoly of navigation over those waters a direct source of revenue. When this monopoly shall expire, in 1838, the State may continue it, for any pecuniary consideration which the holders may see fit to offer, and the State to receive.

If the State may grant this monopoly, it may also grant another, for other descriptions of vessels; for instance, for all sloops.

If it can grant these exclusive privileges to a few, it may grant them to many; that is, it may grant them to all its own citizens, to the exclusion of every body else.

But the waters of New York are no more the subject of exclusive grants by that State, than the waters of other States are subjects of such grants by those other States. Virginia may well exercise, over the entrance of the Chesapeake, all the power that New York can exercise over the bay of New York, and the waters on her shores. The Chesapeake, therefore, upon the principle of these laws, may be the subject of State monopoly; and so may the bay of Massachusetts. But this is not all. It requires no greater power to grant a monopoly of trade, than a monopoly of navigation. Of course, New York, if these acts can be maintained, may give an exclusive right of entry of vessels into her ports; and the other States may do the same. These are not extreme cases. We have only to suppose that other States should do what New York has already done, and that the power should be carried to its full extent.

To all this, no answer is to be given but one, that the concurrent power of the States, concurrent though it be, is yet subordinate to the legislation of Congress; and that therefore Congress may, whenever it pleases, annul the State legislation; but until it does so annul it, the State legislation is valid and effectual. What is there to recommend a construction which leads to a result like this? Here would be a perpetual hostility; one legislature enacting laws, till another legislature should repeal them; one sovereign power giving the rule, till another sovereign power should abrogate it; and all this under the idea of concurrent legislation!

But, further, under this concurrent power, the State does that which Congress cannot do; that is, it gives preferences to the citizens of some States over those of others. I do not mean here the advantages conferred by the grant on the grantees; but the disadvantages to which it subjects all the other citizens of New York. To impose an extraordinary tax on steam navigation visiting the ports of New York, and leaving it free everywhere else, is giving a preference to the citizens of other States over those of New York. This Congress could not do; and yet the State does it; so that this power, at first subordinate, then concurrent, now becomes paramount.

The people of New York have a right to be protected against this monopoly. It is one of the objects for which they agreed to this Constitution, that they should stand on an equality in commercial regulations; and if the government should not insure them that, the promises made to them in its behalf would not be performed.

I contend, therefore, in conclusion on this point, that the power of Congress over these high branches of commercial regulation is shown to be exclusive, by considering what was wished and intended to be done, when the convention for forming the Constitution was called; by what was understood, in the State conventions, to have been accomplished by the instrument; by the prohibitions on the States, and the express exception relative to inspection laws; by the nature of the power itself; by the terms used, as connected with the nature of the power; by the subsequent understanding and practice, both of Congress and the States; by the grant of exclusive admiralty jurisdiction to the federal government; by the manifest danger of the opposite doctrine, and the ruinous consequences to which it directly leads.

Little is now required to be said, to prove that this exclusive grant is a law regulating commerce; although, in some of the discussions elsewhere, it has been called a law of police. If it be not a regulation of commerce, then it follows, against the constant admission on the other side, that Congress, even by an express act, cannot annul or control it. For if it be not a regulation of commerce, Congress has no concern with it. But the granting of monopolies of this kind is always referred to the power over commerce. It was as arbiter of commerce that the king formerly granted such monopolies.* This is a law regulating commerce, inasmuch as it imposes new conditions and terms on the coasting trade, on foreign trade generally, and on foreign trade as regulated by treaties; and inasmuch as it interferes with the free navigation of navigable waters.

If, then, the power of commercial regulation possessed by Congress be, in regard to the great branches of it, exclusive; and if this grant of New York be a commercial regulation, affecting commerce in respect to these great branches, then the grant is void, whether any case of actual collision has happened or not.

But I contend, in the second place, that whether the grant were to be regarded as wholly void or not, it must, at least, be inoperative, when the rights claimed under it come in collision with other rights, enjoyed and secured under the laws of the United States; and such collision, I maintain, clearly exists in this case. It will not be denied that the law of Congress is paramount. The Constitution has expressly provided for that. So that the only question in this part of the case is, whether the two rights be inconsistent with each other. The appellant has a right to go from New Jersey to New York, in a vessel owned by himself, of the proper legal description, and enrolled and licensed according to law. This right belongs to him as a citizen of the United States. It is derived under the laws of the United States, and no act of the legislature of New York can deprive him of it, any more than such act could deprive him of the right of holding lands in that State, or of suing in its courts. It appears from the record, that the boat in question was regularly enrolled at Perth Amboy, and properly licensed for carrying on the coasting trade. Under this enrolment, and with this license, she was proceeding to New York, when she was stopped by the injunction of the Chancellor, on the application of the New York grantees. There can be no doubt that here is a collision, in fact; that which the appellant claimed as a right, the respondent resisted; and there remains nothing now but to determine whether the appellant had, as he contends, a right to navigate these waters; because, if he had such right, it must prevail.

* 1 Black. Com. 273; 4 Black. Com. 160.

Now, this right is expressly conferred by the laws of the United States. The first section of the act of February, 1793, ch. 8, regulating the coasting trade and fisheries, declares, that all ships and vessels, enrolled and licensed as that act provides, "and no others, shall be deemed ships or vessels of the United States, entitled to the privileges of ships or vessels employed in the coasting trade or fisheries." The fourth section of the same act declares, "that, in order to the licensing of any ship or vessel, for carrying on the coasting trade or fisheries," bond shall be given, according to the provisions of the act. And the same section declares, that, the owner having complied with the requisites of the law, "it shall be the duty of the collector to grant a license for carrying on the coasting trade"; and the act proceeds to give the form and words of the license, which is, therefore, of course, to be received as a part of the act; and the words of the license, after the necessary recitals, are, "License is hereby granted for the said vessel to be employed in carrying on the coasting trade." Words could not make this authority more express.

The court below seems to me, with great deference, to have mistaken the object and nature of the license. It seems to have been of opinion, that the license has no other intent or effect than to ascertain the ownership and character of the vessel. But this is the peculiar office and object of the enrolment. That document ascertains that the regular proof of ownership and character has been given; and the license is given to confer the right to which the party has shown himself entitled. It is the authority which the master carries with him, to prove his right to navigate freely the waters of the United States, and to carry on the coasting trade.

In some of the discussions which have been had on this question, it has been said, that Congress has only provided for ascertaining the ownership and property of vessels, but has not prescribed to what use they may be applied. But this is an obvious error. The whole object of the act regulating the coasting trade is to declare what vessels shall enjoy the benefit of being employed in that trade. To secure this use to certain vessels, and to deny it to others, is precisely the purpose for which the act was passed. The error, or what I humbly suppose to be the error, in the judgment of the court below, consists in that court's having thought, that, although Congress might act, it had not yet acted, in such a way as to confer a right on the appellant; whereas, if a right was not given by this law, it never could be given. No law can be more express. It has been admitted, that, supposing there is a provision in the act of Congress, that all vessels duly licensed shall be at liberty to navigate, for the purpose of trade and commerce, all the navigable harbors, bays, rivers, and lakes within the several States, any law of the States creating particular privileges as to any particular class of vessels to the contrary notwithstanding, the only question that could arise, in such a case, would be, whether the law was constitutional; and that, if that was to be granted or decided, it would certainly, in all courts and places, overrule and set aside the State grant.

Now, I do not see that such supposed case could be distinguished from the present. We show a provision in an act of Congress, that all vessels, duly licensed, may carry on the coasting trade; nobody doubts the constitutional validity of that law; and we show that this vessel was duly licensed according to its provisions. This is all that is essential in the case supposed. The presence or absence of a non obstante clause cannot affect the extent or operation of the act of Congress. Congress has no power of revoking State laws, as a distinct power. It legislates over subjects; and over those subjects which are within its power, its legislation is supreme, and necessarily overrules all inconsistent or repugnant State legislation. If Congress were to pass an act expressly revoking or annulling, in whole or in part, this New York grant, such an act would be wholly useless and inoperative. If the New York grant be opposed to, or inconsistent with, any constitutional power which Congress has exercised, then, so far as the incompatibility exists, the grant is nugatory and void, necessarily, and by reason of the supremacy of the law of Congress. But if the grant be not inconsistent with any exercise of the powers of Congress, then, certainly, Congress has no authority to revoke or annul it. Such an act of Congress, therefore, would be either unconstitutional or supererogatory. The laws of Congress need no non obstante clause. The Constitution makes them supreme, when State laws come into opposition to them. So that in these cases there is no question except this; whether there be, or be not, a repugnancy or hostility between the law of Congress and the law of the State. Nor is it at all material, in this view, whether the law of the State be a law regulating commerce, or a law of police, nor by what other name or character it may be designated. If its provisions be inconsistent with an act of Congress, they are void, so far as that inconsistency extends. The whole argument, therefore, is substantially and effectually given up, when it is admitted that Congress might, by express terms, abrogate the State grant, or declare that it should not stand in the way of its own legislation; because such express terms would add nothing to the effect and operation of an act of Congress.

I contend, therefore, upon the whole of this point, that a case of actual collision has been made out between the State grant and the act of Congress; and as the act of Congress is entirely unexceptionable, and clearly in pursuance of its constitutional powers, the State grant must yield.

There are other provisions of the Constitution of the United States, which have more or less bearing on this question. "No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty of tonnage." Under color of grants like this, that prohibition might be wholly evaded. This grant authorizes Messrs. Livingston and Fulton to license navigation in the waters of New York. They, of course, license it on their own terms. They may require a pecuniary consideration, ascertained by the tonnage of the vessel, or in any other manner. Probably, in fact, they govern themselves, in this respect, by the size or tonnage of the vessels to which they grant licenses. Now, what is this but substantially a tonnage duty, under the law of the State? Or does it make any difference, whether the receipts go directly into her own treasury, or into the hands of those to whom she has made the grant?

There is, lastly, that provision of the Constitution which gives Congress power to promote the progress of science and the useful arts, by securing to authors and inventors, for a limited time, an exclusive right to their own writings and discoveries. Congress has exercised this power, and made all the provisions which it deemed useful or necessary. The States may, indeed, like munificent individuals, exercise their own bounty towards authors and inventors, at their own discretion. But to confer reward by exclusive grants, even if it were but a part of the use of the writing or invention, is not supposed to be a power properly to be exercised by the States. Much less can they, under the notion of conferring rewards in such cases, grant monopolies, the enjoyment of which is essentially incompatible with the exercise of rights possessed under the laws of the United States. I shall insist, however, the less on these points, as they are open to counsel who will come after me on the same side, and as I have said so much upon what appears to me the more important and interesting part of the argument.

THE CASE OF OGDEN AND SAUNDERS.*

THIS was an action of assumpsit, brought originally in the Circui Court of Louisiana, by Saunders, a citizen of Kentucky, against Ogden a citizen of Louisiana. The plaintiff below declared upon certain bill of exchange, drawn on the 30th of September, 1806, by one Jordan, a Lexington, in the State of Kentucky, upon the defendant below, Ogden in the city of New York, (the defendant then being a citizen and resi dent of the State of New York,) accepted by him at the city of New York, and protested for non-payment.

The defendant below pleaded several pleas, among which was a cer tificate of discharge under the act of the legislature of the State of New York, of April 3d, 1801, for the relief of insolvent debtors, commonly called the Three-Fourths Act.

The jury found the facts in the form of a special verdict, on which the court rendered a judgment for the plaintiff below, and the cause was brought by writ of error before this court. The question which arose under this plea, as to the validity of the law of New York as being repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, was argued at Feb ruary term, 1824, by Mr. Clay, Mr. D. B. Ogden, and Mr. Haines, for the plaintiff in error, and by Mr. Webster and Mr. Wheaton, for the defendant in error, and the cause was continued for advisement until the present term. It was again argued at the present term, by Mr. Webster and Mr. Wheaton, against the validity, and by the Attorney-General, Mr. E. Livingston, Mr. D. B. Ogden, Mr. Jones, and Mr. Sampson, for the validity.

Mr. Wheaton opened the argument for the defendant in error; he was followed by the counsel for the plaintiff in error; and Mr. Webster replied as follows.

* An Argument made in the Case of Ogden and Saunders, in the Supreme Court of the United States, January Term, 1827.

THE question arising in this case is not more important, nor so important even, in its bearing on individual cases of private right, as in its character of a public political question. The Constitution was intended to accomplish a great political object. Its design was not so much to prevent injustice or injury in one case, or in successive single cases, as it was to make general salutary provisions, which, in their operation, should give security to all contracts, stability to credit, uniformity among all the States in those things which materially concern the foreign commerce of the country, and their own credit, trade, and intercourse with each other. The real question is, therefore, a much broader one than has been argued. It is this: Whether the Constitution has not, for general political purposes, ordained that bankrupt laws should be established only by national authority? We contend that such was the intention of the Constitution; an intention, as we think, plainly manifested in several of its provisions.

The act of New York, under which this question arises, provides that a debtor may be discharged from all his debts, upon assigning his property to trustees for the use of his creditors. When applied to the discharge of debts contracted before the date of the law, this court has decided that the act is invalid.* The act itself makes no distinction between past and future debts, but provides for the discharge of both in the same manner. In the case, then, of a debt already existing, it is admitted that the act does impair the obligation of contracts. We wish the full extent of this decision to be well considered. It is not merely that the legislature of the State cannot interfere by law, in the particular case of A or B, to injure or impair rights which have become vested under contracts; but it is, that they have no power by general law to regulate the manner in which all debtors may be discharged from subsisting contracts; in other words, they cannot pass general bankrupt laws to be applied in presenti. Now, it is not contended that such laws are unjust, and ought not to be passed by any legislature. It is not said that they are unwise or impolitic. On the contrary, we know the general practice to be, that, when bankrupt laws are established, they make no distinction between present and future debts. While all agree that special acts, made for individual cases, are unjust, all admit that a general law, made for all cases, may be both just and politic. The question, then, which meets us on the threshold is this: If the Constitution meant to leave the States the power of establishing systems of bankruptcy to act upon future debts, what great or important object of a political nature is answered by denying the power of making such systems applicable to existing debts?

* Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. Rep. 122.

The argument used in Sturges v. Crowninshield was, at least, a plausible and consistent argument. It maintained that the prohibition of the Constitution was levelled only against interferences in individual cases, and did not apply to general laws, whether those laws were retrospective or prospective in their operation. But the court rejected that conclusion. It decided that the Constitution was intended to apply to general laws or systems of bankruptcy; that an act providing that all debtors might be discharged from all creditors, upon certain conditions, was of no more validity than an act providing that a particular debtor, A, should be discharged on the same conditions from his particular creditor, B.

It being thus decided that general laws are within the prohibition of the Constitution, it is for the plaintiff in error now to show on what ground, consistent with the general objects of the Constitution, he can establish a distinction which can give effect to those general laws in their application to future debts, while it denies them effect in their application to subsisting debts. The words are, that "no State shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts." The general operation of all such laws is to impair that obligation; that is, to discharge the obligation without fulfilling it. This is admitted; and the only ground taken for the distinction to stand on is, that, when the law was in existence at the time of the making of the contract, the parties must be supposed to have reference to it, or, as it is usually expressed, the law is made a part of the contract. Before considering what foundation there is for this argument, it may be well to inquire what is that obligation of contracts of which the Constitution speaks, and whence is it derived.

The definition given by the court in Sturges v. Crowninshield is sufficient for our present purpose. "A contract," say the court, "is an agreement to do some particular thing; the law binds the party to perform this agreement, and this is the obligation of the contract."

It is indeed probable that the Constitution used the words in a somewhat more popular sense. We speak, for example, familiarly of a usurious contract, and yet we say, speaking technically, that a usurious agreement is no contract.

By the obligation of a contract, we should understand the Constitution to mean, the duty of performing a legal agreement. If the contract be lawful, the party is bound to perform it. But bound by what? What is it that binds him? And this leads us to what we regard as a principal fallacy in the argument on the other side. That argument supposes, and insists, that the whole obligation of a contract has its origin in the municipal law. This position we controvert. We do not say that it is that obligation which springs from conscience merely; but we deny that it is only such as springs from the particular law of the place where the contract is made. It must be a lawful contract, doubtless; that is, permitted and allowed; because society has a right to prohibit all such contracts, as well as all such actions, as it deems to be mischievous or injurious. But if the contract be such as the law of society tolerates, in other words, if it be lawful, then we say, the duty of performing it springs from universal law. And this is the concurrent sense of all the writers of authority.

The duty of performing promises is thus shown to rest on universal law; and if, departing from this well-established principle, we now follow the teachers who instruct us that the obligation of a contract has its origin in the law of a particular State, and is in all cases what that law makes it, and no more, and no less, we shall probably find ourselves involved in inextricable difficulties. A man promises, for a valuable consideration, to pay money in New York. Is the obligation of that contract created by the laws of that State, or does it subsist independent of those laws? We contend that the obligation of a contract, that is, the duty of performing it, is not created by the law of the particular place where it is made, and dependent on that law for its existence; but that it may subsist, and does subsist, without that law, and independent of it. The obligation is in the contract itself, in the assent of the parties, and in the sanction of universal law. This is the doctrine of Grotius, Vattel, Burlamaqui, Pothier, and Rutherforth. The contract, doubtless, is necessarily to be enforced by the municipal law of the place where performance is demanded. The municipal law acts on the contract after it is made, to compel its execution, or give damages for its violation. But this is a very different thing from the same law being the origin or fountain of the contract.

Let us illustrate this matter by an example. Two persons contract together in New York for the delivery, by one to the other, of a domestic animal, a utensil of husbandry, or a weapon of war. This is a lawful contract, and, while the parties remain in New York, it is to be enforced by the laws of that State. But if they remove with the article to Pennsylvania or Maryland, there a new law comes to act upon the contract, and to apply other remedies if it be broken. Thus far the remedies are furnished by the laws of society. But suppose the same parties to go together to a savage wilderness, or a desert island, beyond the reach of the laws of any society. The obligation of the contract still subsists, and is as perfect as ever, and is now to be enforced by another law, that is, the law of nature; and the party to whom the promise was made has a right to take by force the animal, the utensil, or the weapon that was promised him. The right is as perfect here as it was in Pennsylvania, or even in New York; but this could not be so if the obligation were created by the law of New York, or were dependent on that law for its existence, because the laws of that State can have no operation beyond its territory. Let us reverse this example. Suppose a contract to be made between two persons cast ashore on an uninhabited territory, or in a place over which no law of society extends. There are such places, and contracts have been made by individuals casually there, and these contracts have been enforced in courts of law in civilized communities. Whence do such contracts derive their obligation, if not from universal law?

If these considerations show us that the obligation of a lawful contract does not derive its force from the particular law of the place where made, but may exist where that law does not exist, and be enforced where that law has no validity, then it follows, we contend, that any statute which diminishes or lessens its obligation does impair it, whether it precedes or succeeds the contract in date. The contract having an independent origin, whenever the law comes to exist together with it, and interferes with it, it lessens, we say, and impairs, its own original and independent obligation. In the case before the court, the contract did not owe its existence to the particular law of New York; it did not depend on that law, but could be enforced without the territory of that State, as well as within it. Nevertheless, though legal, though thus independently existing, though thus binding the party everywhere, and capable of being enforced everywhere, yet the statute of New York says that it shall be discharged without payment. This, we say, impairs the obligation of that contract. It is admitted to have been legal in its inception, legal in its full extent, and capable of being enforced by other tribunals according to its terms. An act, then, purporting to discharge it without payment, is, as we contend, an act impairing its obligation.

Here, however, we meet the opposite argument, stated on different occasions in different terms, but usually summed up in this, that the law itself is a part of the contract, and therefore cannot impair it. What does this mean? Let us seek for clear ideas. It does not mean that the law gives any particular construction to the terms of the contract, or that it makes the promise, or the consideration, or the time of performance, other than is expressed in the instrument itself. It can only mean, that it is to be taken as a part of the contract, or understanding of the parties, that the contract itself shall be enforced by such laws and regulations, respecting remedy and for the enforcement of contracts, as are in being in the State where it is made at the time of entering into it. This is meant, or nothing very clearly intelligible is meant, by saying the law is part of the contract.

There is no authority in adjudged cases for the plaintiff in error but the State decisions which have been cited, and, as has already been stated, they all rest on this reason, that the law is part of the contract.

Against this we contend, —

1st. That, if the proposition were true, the consequence would not follow.

2d. That the proposition itself cannot be maintained.

1. If it were true that the law is to be considered as part of the contract, the consequence contended for would not follow; because, if this statute be part of the contract, so is every other legal or constitutional provision existing at the time which affects the contract, or which is capable of affecting it; and especially this very article of the Constitution of the United States is part of the contract. The plaintiff in error argues in a complete circle. He supposes the parties to have had reference to it because it was a binding law, and yet he proves it to be a binding law only upon the ground that such reference was made to it. We come before the court alleging the law to be void, as unconstitutional; they stop the inquiry by opposing to us the law itself. Is this logical? Is it not precisely objectio ejus, cujus dissolutio petitur? If one bring a bill to set aside a judgment, is that judgment itself a good plea in bar to the bill? We propose to inquire if this law is of force to control our contract, or whether, by the Constitution of the United States, such force be not denied to it. The plaintiff in error stops us by saying that it does control the contract, and so arrives shortly at the end of the debate. Is it not obvious, that, supposing the act of New York to be a part of the contract, the question still remains as undecided as ever. What is that act? Is it a law, or is it a nullity? a thing of force, or a thing of no force? Suppose the parties to have contemplated this act, what did they contemplate? its words only, or its legal effect? its words, or the force which the Constitution of the United States allows to it? If the parties contemplated any law, they contemplated all the law that bore on their contract, the aggregate of all the statute and constitutional provisions. To suppose that they had in view one statute without regarding others, or that they contemplated a statute without considering that paramount constitutional provisions might control or qualify that statute, or abrogate it altogether, is unreasonable and inadmissible. "This contract," says one of the authorities relied on, "is to be construed as if the law were specially recited in it." Let it be so for the sake of argument. But it is also to be construed as if the prohibitory clause of the Constitution were recited in it, and this brings us back again to the precise point from which we departed.

The Constitution always accompanies the law, and the latter can have no force which the former does not allow to it. If the reasoning were thrown into the form of special pleading, it would stand thus: the plaintiff declares on his debt; the defendant pleads his discharge under the law; the plaintiff alleges the law unconstitutional; but the defendant says, You knew of its existence; to which the answer is obvious and irresistible, I knew its existence on the statute-book of New York, but I knew, at the same time, it was null and void under the Constitution of the United States.

The language of another leading decision is, "A law in force at the time of making the contract does not violate that contract"; but the very question is, whether there be any such law "in force"; for if the States have no authority to pass such laws, then no such law can be in force. The Constitution is a part of the contract as much as the law, and was as much in the contemplation of the parties. So that the proposition, if it be admitted that the law is part of the contract, leaves us just where it found us; that is to say, under the necessity of comparing the law with the Constitution, and of deciding by such comparison whether it be valid or invalid. If the law be unconstitutional, it is void, and no party can be supposed to have had reference to a void law. If it be constitutional, no reference to it need be supposed.

2. But the proposition itself cannot be maintained. The law is no part of the contract. What part is it? the promise? the consideration? the condition? Clearly, it is neither of these. It is no term of the contract. It acts upon the contract only when it is broken, or to discharge the party from its obligation after it is broken. The municipal law is the force of society employed to compel the performance of contracts. In every judgment in a suit on contract, the damages are given, and the imprisonment of the person or sale of goods awarded, not in performance of the contract, or as part of the contract, but as an indemnity for the breach of the contract. Even interest, which is a strong case, where it is not expressed in the contract itself, can only be given as damages. It is all but absurd to say that a man's goods are sold on a fieri facias, or that he himself goes to jail, in pursuance of his contract. These are the penalties which the law inflicts for the breach of his contract. Doubtless, parties, when they enter into contracts, may well consider both what their rights and what their liabilities will be by the law, if such contracts be broken; but this contemplation of consequences which can ensue only when the contract is broken, is no part of the contract itself. The law has nothing to do with the contract till it be broken; how, then, can it be said to form a part of the contract itself?

But there are other cogent and more specific reasons against considering the law as part of the contract. (1.) If the law be part of the contract, it cannot be repealed or altered; because, in such case, the repealing or modifying law itself would impair the obligation of the contract. The insolvent law of New York, for example, authorizes the discharge of a debtor on the consent of two thirds of his creditors. A subsequent act requires the consent of three fourths; but if the existing law be part of the contract, this latter law would be void. In short, nothing which is part of the contract can be varied but by consent of the parties; therefore the argument runs in absurdum; for it proves that no laws for enforcing the contract, or giving remedies upon it, or any way affecting it, can be changed or modified between its creation and its end. If the law in question binds one party on the ground of assent to it, it binds both, and binds them until they agree to terminate its operation. (2.) If the party be bound by an implied assent to the law, as thereby making the law a part of the contract, how would it be if the parties had expressly dissented, and agreed that the law should make no part of the contract? Suppose the promise to have been, that that the promiser would pay at all events, and not take advantage of the statute; still, would not the statute operate on the whole; on this particular agreement and all? and does not this show that the law is no part of the contract, but something above it? (3.) If the law of the place be part of the contract, one of its terms and conditions, how could it be enforced, as we all know it might be, in another jurisdiction, which should have no regard to the law of the place? Suppose the parties, after the contract, to remove to another State, do they carry the law with them as part of their contract? We all know they do not. Or take a common case. Some States have laws abolishing imprisonment for debt; these laws, according to the argument, are all parts of the contract; how, then, can the party, when sued in another State, be imprisoned contrary to the terms of his contract? (4.) The argument proves too much, inasmuch as it applies as strongly to prior as to subsequent contracts. It is founded on a supposed assent to the exercise of legislative authority, without considering whether that exercise be legal or illegal. But it is equally fair to found the argument on an implied assent to the potential exercise of that authority. The implied reference to the control of legislative power is as reasonable and as strong when that power is dormant, as while it is in exercise. In one case, the argument is, "The law existed, you knew it, and acquiesced." In the other it is, "The power to pass the law existed, you knew it, and took your chance." There is as clear an assent in one instance as in the other. Indeed, it is more reasonable and more sensible to imply a general assent to all the laws of society, present and to come, from the fact of living in it, than it is to imply a particular assent to a particular existing enactment. The true view of the matter is, that every man is presumed to submit to all power which may be lawfully exercised over him or his right, and no one should be presumed to submit to illegal acts of power, whether actual or contingent. (5.) But a main objection to this argument is, that it would render the whole constitutional provision idle and inoperative; and no explanatory words, if such words had been added in the Constitution, could have prevented this consequence. The law, it is said, is part of the contract; it cannot, therefore, impair the contract, because a contract cannot impair itself. Now, if this argument be sound, the case would have been the same, whatever words the Constitution had used. If, for example, it had declared that no State should pass any law impairing contracts prospectively or retrospectively; or any law impairing contracts, whether existing or future; or, whatever terms it had used to prohibit precisely such a law as is now before the court, the prohibition would be totally nugatory if the law is to be taken as part of the contract; and the result would be, that, whatever may be the laws which the States by this clause of the Constitution are prohibited from passing, yet, if they in fact do pass such laws, those laws are valid, and bind parties by a supposed assent.

But further, this idea, if well founded, would enable the States to defeat the whole constitutional provision by a general enactment. Suppose a State should declare, by law, that all contracts entered into therein should be subject to such laws as the legislature, at any time, or from time to time, might see fit to pass. This law, according to the argument, would enter into the contract, become a part of it, and authorize the interference of the legislative power with it, for any and all purposes, wholly uncontrolled by the Constitution of the United States.

So much for the argument that the law is a part of the contract. We think it is shown to be not so; and if it were, the expected consequence would not follow.

The inquiry, then, recurs, whether the law in question be such a law as the legislature of New York had authority to pass. The question is general. We differ from our learned adversaries on general principles. We differ as to the main scope and end of this constitutional provision. They think it entirely remedial; we regard it as preventive. They think it adopted to secure redress for violated private rights; to us, it seems intended to guard against great public mischiefs. They argue it as if it were designed as an indemnity or protection for injured private rights, in individual cases of meum and tuum; we look upon it as a great political provision, favorable to the commerce and credit of the whole country. Certainly we do not deny its application to cases of violated private right. Such cases are clearly and unquestionably within its operation. Still, we think its main scope to be general and political. And this, we think, is proved by reference to the history of the country, and to the great objects which were sought to be attained by the establishment of the present government. Commerce, credit, and confidence were the principal things which did not exist under the old Confederation, and which it was a main object of the present Constitution to create and establish. A vicious system of legislation, a system of paper money and tender laws, had completely paralyzed industry, threatened to beggar every man of property, and ultimately to ruin the country. The relation between debtor and creditor, always delicate, and always dangerous whenever it divides society, and draws out the respective parties into different ranks and classes, was in such a condition in the years 1787, 1788, and 1789, as to threaten the overthrow of all government; and a revolution was menaced, much more critical and alarming than that through which the country had recently passed. The object of the new Constitution was to arrest these evils; to awaken industry by giving security to property; to establish confidence, credit, and commerce, by salutary laws, to be enforced by the power of the whole community. The Revolutionary War was over, the country had peace, but little domestic tranquillity; it had liberty, but few of its enjoyments, and none of its security. The States had struggled together, but their union was imperfect. They had freedom, but not an established course of justice. The Constitution was therefore framed, as it professes, "to form a more perfect union, to establish justice, to secure the blessings of liberty, and to insure domestic tranquillity."

It is not pertinent to this occasion to advert to all the means by which these desirable ends were to be obtained. Some of them, closely connected with the subject now under consideration, are obvious and prominent. The objects were commerce, credit, and mutual confidence in matters of property; and these required, among other things, a uniform standard of value or medium of payments. One of the first powers given to Congress, therefore, is that of coining money and fixing the value of foreign coins; and one of the first restraints imposed on the States is the total prohibition to coin money. These two provisions are industriously followed up and completed by denying to the States all power to emit bills of credit, or to make any thing but gold and silver a tender in the payment of debts. The whole control, therefore, over the standard of value and medium of payments is vested in the general government. And here the question instantly suggests itself, Why should such pains be taken to confide to Congress alone this exclusive power of fixing on a standard of value, and of prescribing the medium in which debts shall be paid, if it is, after all, to be left to every State to declare that debts may be discharged, and to prescribe how they may be discharged, without any payment at all? Why say that no man shall be obliged to take, in discharge of a debt, paper money issued by the authority of a State, and yet say, that by the same authority the debt may be discharged without any payment whatever?

We contend, that the Constitution has not left its work thus unfinished. We contend, that, taking its provisions together, it is apparent it was intended to provide for two things, intimately connected with each other. These are, —

1. A medium for the payment of debts; and

2. A uniform manner of discharging debts, when they are to be discharged without payment.

The arrangement of the grants and prohibitions contained in the Constitution is fit to be regarded on this occasion. The grant to Congress and the prohibition on the States, though they are certainly to be construed together, are not contained in the same clauses. The powers granted to Congress are enumerated one after another in the eighth section; the principal limitations on those powers, in the ninth section; and the prohibitions to the States, in the tenth section. Now, in order to understand whether any particular power be exclusively vested in Congress, it is necessary to read the terms of the grant, together with the terms of the prohibition. Take an example from that power of which we have been speaking, the coinage power. Here the grant to Congress is, "To coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coins." Now, the correlative prohibition on the States, though found in another section, is undoubtedly to be taken in immediate connection with the foregoing, as much as if it had been found in the same clause. The only just reading of these provisions, therefore, is this: "Congress shall have power to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin; but no State shall coin money, emit bills of credit, or make any thing but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts."

These provisions respect the medium of payment, or standard of value, and, thus collated, their joint result is clear and decisive. We think the result clear, also, of those provisions which respect the discharge of debts without payment. Collated in like manner, they stand thus: "Congress shall have power to establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States; but no State shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts." This collocation cannot be objected to, if they refer to the same subject-matter; and that they do refer to the same subject-matter we have the authority of this court for saying, because this court solemnly determined, in Sturges v. Crowninshield, that this prohibition on the States did apply to systems of bankruptcy. It must be now taken, therefore, that State bankrupt laws were in the mind of the convention when the prohibition was adopted, and therefore the grant to Congress on the subject of bankrupt laws, and the prohibition to the States on the same subject, are properly to be taken and read together; and being thus read together, is not the intention clear to take away from the States the power of passing bankrupt laws, since, while enacted by them, such laws would not be uniform, and to confer the power exclusively on Congress, by whom uniform laws could be established?

Suppose the order of arrangement in the Constitution had been otherwise than it is, and that the prohibitions to the States had preceded the grants of power to Congress, the two powers, when collated, would then have read thus: "No State shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts; but Congress may establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies." Could any man have doubted, in that case, that the meaning was, that the States should not pass laws discharging debts without payment, but that Congress might establish uniform bankrupt acts? And yet this inversion of the order of the clauses does not alter their sense. We contend, that Congress alone possesses the power of establishing bankrupt laws; and although we are aware that, in Sturges v. Crowninshield, the court decided that such an exclusive power could not be inferred from the words of the grant in the seventh section, we yet would respectfully request the bench to reconsider this point. We think it could not have been intended that both the States and general government should exercise this power; and therefore, that a grant to one implies a prohibition on the other. But not to press a topic which the court has already had under its consideration, we contend, that, even without reading the clauses of the Constitution in the connection which we have suggested, and which is believed to be the true one, the prohibition in the tenth section, taken by itself, does forbid the enactment of State bankrupt laws, as applied to future as well as present debts. We argue this from the words of the prohibition, from the association they are found in, and from the objects intended.

1. The words are general. The States can pass no law impairing contracts; that is, any contract. In the nature of things a law may impair a future contract, and therefore such contract is within the protection of the Constitution. The words being general, it is for the other side to show a limitation; and this, it is submitted, they have wholly failed to do, unless they shall have established the doctrine that the law itself is part of the contract. It may be added, that the particular expression of the Constitution is worth regarding. The thing prohibited is called a law, not an act. A law, in its general acceptation, is a rule prescribed for future conduct, not a legislative interference with existing rights. The framers of the Constitution would hardly have given the appellation of law to violent invasions of individual right, or individual property, by acts of legislative power. Although, doubtless, such acts fall within this prohibition, yet they are prohibited also by general principles, and by the constitutions of the States, and therefore further provision against such acts was not so necessary as against other mischiefs.

2. The most conclusive argument, perhaps, arises from the connection in which the clause stands. The words of the prohibition, so far as it applies to civil rights, or rights of property, are, that "no State shall coin money, emit bills of credit, make any thing but gold and silver coin a tender in the payment of debts, or pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts." The prohibition of attainders, and ex post facto laws, refers entirely to criminal proceedings, and therefore should be considered as standing by itself; but the other parts of the prohibition are connected by the subject-matter, and ought, therefore, to be construed together. Taking the words thus together, according to their natural connection, how is it possible to give a more limited construction to the term "contracts," in the last branch of the sentence, than to the word "debts," in that immediately preceding? Can a State make any thing but gold and silver a tender in payment of future debts? This nobody pretends. But what ground is there for a distinction? No State shall make any thing but gold and silver a tender in the payment of debts, nor pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts. Now, by what reasoning is it made out that the debts here spoken of are any debts, either existing or future, but that the contracts spoken of are subsisting contracts only? Such a distinction seems to us wholly arbitrary. We see no ground for it. Suppose the article, where it uses the word debts, had used the word contracts. The sense would have been the same then that it now is; but the identity of terms would have made the nature of the distinction now contended for somewhat more obvious. Thus altered, the clause would read, that no State should make any thing but gold and silver a tender in discharge of contracts, nor pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts; yet the first of these expressions would have been held to apply to all contracts, and the last to subsisting contracts only. This shows the consequence of what is now contended for in a strong light. It is certain that the substitution of the word contracts for debts would not alter the sense; and an argument that could not be sustained, if such substitution were made, cannot be sustained now. We maintain, therefore, that, if tender laws may not be made for future debts, neither can bankrupt laws be made for future contracts. All the arguments used here may be applied with equal force to tender laws for future debts. It may be said, for instance, that, when it speaks of debts, the Constitution means existing debts, and not mere possibilities of future debt; that the object was to preserve vested rights; and that if a man, after a tender law had passed, had contracted a debt, the manner in which that tender law authorized that debt to be discharged became part of the contract, and that the whole debt, or whole obligation, was thus qualified by the preëxisting law, and was no more than a contract to deliver so much paper money, or whatever other article might be made a tender, as the original bargain expressed. Arguments of this sort will not be found wanting in favor of tender laws, if the court yield to similar arguments in favor of bankrupt laws.

These several prohibitions of the Constitution stand in the same paragraph; they have the same purpose, and were introduced for the same object; they are expressed in words of similar import, in grammar, and in sense; they are subject to the same construction, and we think no reason has yet been given for imposing an important restriction on one part of them, which does not equally show that the same restriction might be imposed also on the other part.

We have already endeavored to maintain, that one great political object intended by the Constitution would be defeated, if this construction were allowed to prevail. As an object of political regulation, it was not important to prevent the States from passing bankrupt laws applicable to present debts, while the power was left to them in regard to future debts; nor was it at all important, in a political point of view, to prohibit tender laws as to future debts, while it was yet left to the States to pass laws for the discharge of such debts, which, after all, are little different in principle from tender laws. Look at the law before the court in this view. It provides, that, if the debtor will surrender, offer, or tender to trustees, for the benefit of his creditors, all his estate and effects, he shall be discharged from all his debts. If it had authorized a tender of any thing but money to any one creditor, though it were of a value equal to the debt, and thereupon provided for a discharge, it would have been clearly invalid. Yet it is maintained to be good, merely because it is made for all creditors, and seeks a discharge from all debts; although the thing tendered may not be equivalent to a shilling in the pound of those debts. This shows, again, very clearly, how the Constitution has failed of its purpose, if, having in terms prohibited all tender laws, and taken so much pains to establish a uniform medium of payment, it has yet left the States the power of discharging debts, as they may see fit, without any payment at all.

To recapitulate what has been said, we maintain, first, that the Constitution, by its grants to Congress and its prohibitions on the States, has sought to establish one uniform standard of value, or medium of payment. Second, that, by like means, it has endeavored to provide for one uniform mode of discharging debts, when they are to be discharged without payment. Third, that these objects are connected, and that the first loses much of its importance, if the last, also, be not accomplished. Fourth, that, reading the grant to Congress and the prohibition on the States together, the inference is strong that the Constitution intended to confer an exclusive power to pass bankrupt laws on Congress. Fifth, that the prohibition in the tenth section reaches to all contracts, existing or future, in the same way that the other prohibition in the same section extends to all debts existing or future. Sixthly, that, upon any other construction, one great political object of the Constitution will fail of its accomplishment.

THE MURDER OF CAPTAIN JOSEPH WHITE.*

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.†

THE following argument was addressed to the jury at a trial for a remarkable murder. A more extraordinary case never occurred in this country, nor is it equalled in strange interest by any trial in the French Causes Célèbres or the English State Trials. Deep sensation and intense curiosity were excited through the whole country, at the time of the occurrence of the event, not only by the atrocity of the crime, but by the position of the victim, and the romantic incidents in the detection and fate of the assassin and his accomplices.

The following outline of the facts will assist the reader to understand the bearings of the argument.

Joseph White, Esq., was found murdered in his bed, in his mansion-house, on the morning of the 7th of April, 1830. He was a wealthy merchant of Salem, eighty-two years of age, and had for many years given up active business. His servant-man rose that morning at six o'clock, and on going down into the kitchen, and opening the shutters of the window, saw that the back window of the east parlor was open, and that a plank was raised to the window from the back yard; he then went into the parlor, but saw no trace of any person having been there. He went to the apartment of the maid-servant, and told her, and then into Mr. White's chamber by its back door, and saw that the door of his chamber, leading into the front entry, was open. On approaching the bed he found the bed-clothes turned down, and Mr. White dead, his countenance pallid, and his night-clothes and bed drenched in blood. He hastened to the neighboring houses to make known the event. He and the maid-servant were the only persons who slept in the house that night, except Mr. White himself, whose niece Mrs. Beckford, his housekeeper, was then absent on a visit to her daughter, at Wenham.

* Argument on the Trial of John Francis Knapp, for the Murder of Joseph White, Esq., of Salem, in Essex County, Massachusetts, on the Night of the 6th of April, 1830.

† This interesting and valuable account of the crime which led to the following speech to the jury was written by the late Honorable Benjamin Merrill of Salem.

The physicians and the coroner's jury, who were called to examine the body, found on it thirteen deep stabs, made as if by a sharp dirk or poniard, and the appearance of a heavy blow on the left temple, which had fractured the skull, but not broken the skin. The body was cold, and appeared to have been lifeless many hours.

On examining the apartments of the house, it did not appear that any valuable articles had been taken, or the house ransacked for them; there was a roulcau of doubloons in an iron chest in his chamber, and costly plate in other apartments, none of which was missing.

The perpetration of such an atrocious crime, in the most populous and central part of the town and in the most compactly built street, and under circumstances indicating the utmost coolness, deliberation, and audacity, deeply agitated and aroused the whole community; ingenuity was baffled in attempting even to conjecture a motive for the deed; and all the citizens were led to fear that the same fate might await them in the defenceless and helpless hours of slumber. For several days, persons passing through the streets might hear the continual sound of the hammer, while carpenters and smiths were fixing bolts to doors and fastenings to windows. Many, for defence, furnished themselves with cutlasses, fire-arms, and watch-dogs. Large rewards for the detection of the author or authors of the murder were offered by the heirs of the deceased, by the selectmen of the town, and by the Governor of the State. The citizens held a public meeting, and appointed a Committee of Vigilance, of twenty-seven members, to make all possible exertions to ferret out the offenders.

While the public mind was thus excited and anxious, it was announced that a bold attempt at highway robbery was made in Wenham by three footpads, on Joseph J. Knapp, Jr. and John Francis Knapp, on the evening of the 27th of April, while they were returning in a chaise from Salem to their residence in Wenham. They appeared before the investigating committee, and testified that, after nine o'clock, near the Wenham Pond, they discovered three men approaching. One came near, seized the bridle, and stopped the horse, while the other two came, one on each side, and seized a trunk in the bottom of the chaise. Frank Knapp drew a sword from his cane and made a thrust at one, and Joseph with the but-end of his whip gave the other a heavy blow across the face. This bold resistance made them fall back. Joseph sprung from the chaise to assail the robbers. One of them then gave a shrill whistle, when they fled, and, leaping over the wall, were soon lost in the darkness. One had a weapon like an ivory dirk-handle, was clad in a sailor's short jacket, cap, and had whiskers; another wore a long coat, with bright buttons; all three were good-sized men. Frank, too, sprung from the chaise, and pursued with vigor, but all in vain.

The account of this unusual and bold attempt at robbery, thus given by the Knapps, was immediately published in the Salem newspapers, with the editorial remark, that "these gentlemen are well known in this town, and their respectability and veracity are not questioned by any of our citizens."

Not the slightest clew to the murder could be found for several weeks, and the mystery seemed to be impenetrable. At length a rumor reached the ear of the committee that a prisoner in the jail at New Bedford, seventy miles from Salem, confined there on a charge of shoplifting, had intimated that he could make important disclosures. A confidential messenger was immediately sent, to ascertain what he knew on the subject. The prisoner's name was Hatch; he had been committed before the murder. He stated that, some months before the murder, while he was at large, he had associated in Salem with Richard Crowninshield, Jr., of Danvers, and had often heard Crowninshield express his intention to destroy the life of Mr. White. Crowninshield was a young man, of bad reputation; though he had never been convicted of any offence, he was strongly suspected of several heinous robberies. He was of dark and reserved deportment, temperate and wicked, daring and wary, subtle and obdurate, of great adroitness, boldness, and self-command. He had for several years frequented the haunts of vice in Salem; and though he was often spoken of as a dangerous man, his person was known to few, for he never walked the streets by daylight. Among his few associates he was a leader and a despot.

The disclosures of Hatch received credit. When the Supreme Court met at Ipswich, the Attorney-General, Morton, moved for a writ of habeas corpus ad testif., and Hatch was carried in chains from New Bedford before the grand jury, and on his testimony an indictment was found against Crowninshield. Other witnesses testified that, on the night of the murder, his brother, George Crowninshield, Colonel Benjamin Selman, of Marblehead, and Daniel Chase, of Lynn, were together in Salem, at a gambling-house usually frequented by Richard; these were indicted as accomplices in the crime. They were all arrested on the 2d of May, arraigned on the indictment, and committed to prison to await the sitting of a court that should have jurisdiction of the offence.

The Committee of Vigilance, however, continued to hold frequent meetings in order to discover further proof, for it was doubted by many whether the evidence already obtained would be sufficient to convict the accused.

A fortnight afterwards, on the 15th of May, Captain Joseph J. Knapp, a shipmaster and merchant, a man of good character, received by mail the following letter: —

CHARLES GRANT, JR., TO JOSEPH J. KNAPP.

"Belfast, May 12, 1830.

"DEAR SIR, — I have taken the pen at this time to address an utter stranger, and, strange as it may seem to you, it is for the purpose of requesting the loan of three hundred and fifty dollars, for which I can give you no security but my word, and in this case consider this to be sufficient. My call for money at this time is pressing, or I would not trouble you; but with that sum, I have the prospect of turning it to so much advantage, as to be able to refund it with interest in the course of six months. At all events, I think it will be for your interest to comply with my request, and that immediately — that is, not to put off any longer than you receive this. Then set down and inclose me the money with as much despatch as possible, for your own interest. This, Sir, is my advice; and if you do not comply with it, the short period between now and November will convince you that you have denied a request, the granting of which will never injure you, the refusal of which will ruin you. Are you surprised at this assertion — rest assured that I make it, reserving to myself the reasons and a series of facts, which are founded on such a bottom as will bid defiance to property or quality. It is useless for me to enter into a discussion of facts which must inevitably harrow up your soul. No, I will merely tell you that I am acquainted with your brother Franklin, and also the business that he was transacting for you on the 2d of April last; and that I think that you was very extravagant in giving one thousand dollars to the person that would execute the business for you. But you know best about that, you see that such things will leak out. To conclude, Sir, I will inform you that there is a gentleman of my acquaintance in Salem, that will observe that you do not leave town before the first of June, giving you sufficient time between now and then to comply with my request; and if I do not receive a line from you, together with the above sum, before the 22d of this month, I shall wait upon you with an assistant. I have said enough to convince you of my knowledge, and merely inform you that you can, when you answer, be as brief as possible.

"Direct yours to

"CHARLES GRANT, JR., of Prospect, Maine.

This letter was an unintelligible enigma to Captain Knapp; he knew no man of the name of Charles Grant, Jr., and had no acquaintance at Belfast, a town in Maine, two hundred miles distant from Salem. After poring over it in vain, he handed it to his son, Nathaniel Phippen Knapp, a young lawyer; to him also the letter was an inexplicable riddle. The receiving of such a threatening letter, at a time when so many felt insecure, and were apprehensive of danger, demanded their attention.

Captain Knapp and his son Phippen, therefore, concluded to ride to Wenham, seven miles distant, and show the letter to Captain Knapp's other two sons, Joseph J. Knapp, Jr., and John Francis Knapp, who were then residing at Wenham with Mrs. Beckford, the niece and late housekeeper of Mr. White, and the mother of the wife of J. J. Knapp, Jr. The latter perused the letter, told his father it "contained a devilish lot of trash," and requested him to hand it to the Committee of Vigilance. Captain Knapp, on his return to Salem that evening, accordingly delivered the letter to the chairman of the committee.

The next day J. J. Knapp, Jr. went to Salem, and requested one of his friends to drop into the Salem post-office the two following pseudonymous letters.

"May 13, 1830.

"GENTLEMEN OF THE COMMITTEE OF VIGILANCE,—Hearing that you have taken up four young men on suspicion of being concerned in the murder of Mr. White, I think it time to inform you that Steven White came to me one night and told me, if I would remove the old gentleman, he would give me five thousand dollars; he said he was afraid he would alter his will if he lived any longer. I told him I would do it, but I was afeared to go into the house, so he said he would go with me, that he would try to get into the house in the evening and open the window, would then go home and go to bed and meet me again about eleven. I found him, and we both went into his chamber. I struck him on the head with a heavy piece of lead, and then stabbed him with a dirk; he made the finishing strokes with another. He promised to send me the money next evening, and has not sent it yet, which is the reason that I mention this. Yours, &c.,

"GRANT."

This letter was directed on the outside to the "Hon. Gideon Barstow, Salem," and put into the post-office on Sunday evening, May 16, 1830.

"Lynn, May 12, 1830.

"Mr. White will send the $5,000, or a part of it, before to-morrow night, or suffer the painful consequences.

"N. CLAXTON, 4TH."

This letter was addressed to the "Hon. Stephen White, Salem, Mass.," and was also put into the post-office in Salem on Sunday evening.

When Knapp delivered these letters to his friend, he said his father had received an anonymous letter, and "What I want you for is to put these in the post-office in order to nip this silly affair in the bud."

The Hon. Stephen White, mentioned in these letters, was a nephew of Joseph White, and the legatee of the principal part of his large property.

When the Committee of Vigilance read and considered the letter, purporting to be signed by Charles Grant, Jr., which had been delivered to them by Captain Knapp, they were impressed with the belief that it contained a clew which might lead to important disclosures. As they had spared no pains or expense in their investigations, they immediately despatched a discreet messenger to Prospect, in Maine; he explained his business confidentially to the postmaster there, deposited a letter addressed to Charles Grant, Jr., and awaited the call of Grant to receive it. He soon called for it, when an officer, stationed in the house, stepped forward and arrested Grant. On examining him, it appeared that his true name was Palmer, a young man of genteel appearance, resident in the adjoining town of Belfast. He had been a convict in Maine, and had served a term in the State's prison in that State. Conscious that the circumstances justified the belief that he had had a hand in the murder, he readily made known, while he protested his own innocence, that he could unfold the whole mystery. He then disclosed that he had been an associate of R. Crowninshield, Jr., and George Crowninshield; had spent part of the winter at Danvers and Salem, under the name of Carr; part of the time he had been their inmate, concealed in their father's house in Danvers; that on the 2d of April he saw from the windows of the house Frank Knapp and a young man named Allen ride up to the house; that George walked away with Frank, and Richard with Allen; that on their return, George told Richard that Frank wished them to undertake to kill Mr. White, and that J. J. Knapp, Jr. would pay one thousand dollars for the job. They proposed various modes of executing it, and asked Palmer to be concerned, which he declined. George said the housekeeper would be away at the time; that the object of Joseph J. Knapp, Jr. was to destroy the will, because it gave most of the property to Stephen White; that Joseph J. Knapp, Jr. was first to destroy the will; that he could get from the housekeeper the keys of the iron chest in which it was kept; that Frank called again the same day, in a chaise, and rode away with Richard; and that on the night of the murder Palmer staid at the Half-way House, in Lynn.

The messenger, on obtaining this disclosure from Palmer, without delay communicated it by mail to the Committee, and on the 26th of May, a warrant was issued against Joseph J. Knapp, Jr. and John Francis Knapp, and they were taken into custody at Wenham, where they were residing in the family of Mrs. Beckford, mother of the wife of Joseph J. Knapp, Jr. They were then imprisoned to await the arrival of Palmer, for their examination.

The two Knapps were young shipmasters, of a respectable family.

Joseph J. Knapp, Jr., on the third day of his imprisonment, made a full confession that he projected the murder. He knew that Mr. White had made his will, and given to Mrs. Beckford a legacy of fifteen thousand dol-nearly two hundred thousand dollars. In February he made known to his brother his desire to make way with Mr. White, intending first to abstract and destroy the will. Frank agreed to employ an assassin, and negotiated with R. Crowninshield, Jr., who agreed to do the deed for a reward of one thousand dollars; Joseph agreed to pay that sum, and as he had access to the house at his pleasure, he was to unbar and unfasten the back window, so that Crowninshield might gain easy entrance. Four days before the murder, while they were deliberating on the mode of compassing it, he went into Mr. White's chamber, and, finding the key in the iron chest, unlocked it, took the will, put it in his chaise-box, covered it with hay, carried it to Wenham, kept it till after the murder, and then burned it. After securing the will, he gave notice to Crowninshield that all was ready. In the evening of that day he had a meeting with Crowninshield at the centre of the common, who showed him a bludgeon and dagger, with which the murder was to be committed. Knapp asked him if he meant to do it that night; Crowninshield said he thought not, he did not feel like it; Knapp then went to Wenham. Knapp ascertained on Sunday, the 4th of April, that Mr. White had gone to take tea with a relative in Chestnut Street. Crowninshield intended to dirk him on his way home in the evening, but Mr. White returned before dark. It was next arranged for the night of the 6th, and Knapp was on some pretext to prevail on Mrs. Beckford to visit her daughters at Wenham, and to spend the night there. He said that, all preparations being thus complete, Crowninshield and Frank met about ten o'clock in the evening of the 6th, in Brown Street, which passes the rear of the garden of Mr. White, and stood some time in a spot from which they could observe the movements in the house, and perceive when Mr. White and his two servants retired to bed. Crowninshield requested Frank to go home; he did so, but soon returned to the same spot. Crowninshield, in the mean time, had started and passed round through Newbury Street and Essex Street to the front of the house, entered the postern gate, passed to the rear of the house, placed a plank against the house, climbed to the window, opened it, entered the house alone, passed up the staircase, opened the door of the sleeping-chamber, approached the bedside, gave Mr. White a heavy and mortal blow on the head with a bludgeon, and then with a dirk gave him many stabs in his body. Crowninshield said, that after he had "done for the old man," he put his fingers on his pulse to make certain he was dead. He then retired from the house, hurried back through Brown Street, where he met Frank, waiting to learn the event. Crowninshield ran down Howard Street, a solitary place, and hid the club under the steps of a meeting-house. He then went home to Danvers.

Joseph confessed further that the account of the Wenham robbery on the 27th of April, was a sheer fabrication. After the murder Crowninshield went to Wenham in company with Frank to call for the one thousand dollars. He was not able to pay the whole, but gave him one hundred five-franc pieces. Crowninshield related to him the particulars of the murder, told him where the club was hid, and said he was sorry Joseph had not got the right will, for if he had known there was another, he would have got it. Joseph sent Frank afterwards to find and destroy the club, but he said he could not find it. When Joseph made the confession, he told the place where the club was concealed, and it was there found; it was heavy, made of hickory, twenty-two and a half inches long, of a smooth surface and large oval head, loaded with lead, and of a form adapted to give a mortal blow on the skull without breaking the skin; the handle was suited for a firm grasp. Crowninshield said he turned it in a lathe. Joseph admitted he wrote the two anonymous letters.

Crowninshield had hitherto maintained a stoical composure of feeling; but when he was informed of Knapp's arrest, his knees smote beneath him, the sweat started out on his stern and pallid face, and he subsided upon his bunk.

Palmer was brought to Salem in irons on the 3d of June, and committed to prison. Crowninshield saw him taken from the carriage. He was put in the cell directly under that in which Crowninshield was kept. Several members of the Committee entered Palmer's cell to talk with him; while they were talking, they heard a loud whistle, and, on looking up, saw that Crowninshield had picked away the mortar from the crevice between the blocks of the granite floor of his cell. After the loud whistle, he cried out, "Palmer! Palmer!" and soon let down a string, to which were tied a pencil and a slip of paper. Two lines of poetry were written on the paper, in order that, if Palmer was really there, he should make it known by capping the verses. Palmer shrunk away into a corner, and was soon transferred to another cell. He seemed to stand in awe of Crowninshield.

On the 12th of June a quantity of stolen goods was found concealed in the barn of Crowninshield, in consequence of information from Palmer.

Crowninshield, thus finding the proofs of his guilt and depravity thicken, on the 15th of June committed suicide by hanging himself to the bars of his cell with a handkerchief. He left letters to his father and brother, expressing in general terms the viciousness of his life, and his hopelessness of escape from punishment. When his associates in guilt heard his fate, they said it was not unexpected by them, for they had often heard him say he would never live to submit to an ignominious punishment.

A special term of the Supreme Court was held at Salem on the 20th of July, for the trial of the prisoners charged with the murder; it continued in session till the 20th of August, with a few days' intermission. An indictment for the murder was found against John Francis Knapp, as principal, and Joseph J. Knapp, Jr. and George Crowninshield, as accessories. Selman and Chase were discharged by the Attorney-General.

The principal, John Francis Knapp, was first put on trial. As the law then stood, an accessory in a murder could not be tried until a principal had been convicted. He was defended by Messrs. Franklin Dexter and William H. Gardiner, advocates of high reputation for ability and eloquence; the trial was long and arduous, and the witnesses numerous. His brother Joseph, who had made a full confession, on the government's promise of impunity if he would in good faith testify the truth, was brought into court, called to the stand as a witness, but declined to testify. To convict the prisoner, it was necessary for the government to prove that he was present, actually or constructively, as an aider or abettor in the murder. The evidence was strong that there was a conspiracy to commit the murder, that the prisoner was one of the conspirators, that at the time of the murder he was in Brown Street at the rear of Mr. White's garden, and the jury were satisfied that he was in that place to aid and abet in the murder, ready to afford assistance, if necessary. He was convicted.

Joseph J. Knapp, Jr., was afterwards tried as an accessory before the fact, and convicted.

George Crowninshield proved an alibi, and was discharged.

The execution of John Francis Knapp and Joseph J. Knapp, Jr. closed the tragedy.

If Joseph, after turning state's evidence, had not changed his mind, neither he nor his brother, nor any of the conspirators, could have been convicted; if he had testified, and disclosed the whole truth, it would have appeared that John Francis Knapp was in Brown Street, not to render assistance to the assassin; but that Crowninshield, when he started to commit the murder, requested Frank to go home and go to bed; that Frank did go home, retire to bed, soon after arose, secretly left his father's house, and hastened to Brown Street, to await the coming out of the assassin, in order to learn whether the deed was accomplished, and all the particulars. If Frank had not been convicted as principal, none of the accessories could by law have been convicted. Joseph would not have been even tried, for the government stipulated that, if he would be a witness for the State, he should go clear.

The whole history of this occurrence is of romantic interest. The murder itself, the corpus delicti, was strange; planned with deliberation and sagacity, and executed with firmness and vigor. While conjecture was baffled in ascertaining either the motive or the perpetrator, it was certain that the assassin had acted upon design, and not at random. He must have had knowledge of the house, for the window had been unfastened from within. He had entered stealthily, threaded his way in silence through the apartments, corridors, and staircases, and coolly given the mortal blow. To make assurance doubly sure, he inflicted many fatal stabs, "the least a death to nature," and staid not his hand till he had deliberately felt the pulse of his victim, to make certain that life was extinct.

It was strange that Crowninshield, the real assassin, should have been indicted and arrested on the testimony of Hatch, who was himself in prison, in a distant part of the State, at the time of the murder, and had no actual knowledge on the subject.

It was very strange that J. J. Knapp, Jr. should have been the instrument of bringing to light the mystery of the whole murderous conspiracy; for when he received from the hand of his father the threatening letter of Palmer, consciousness of guilt so confounded his faculties, that, instead of destroying it, he stupidly handed it back, and requested his father to deliver it to the Committee of Vigilance.

It was strange that the murder should have been committed on a mistake in law. Joseph, some time previous to the murder, had made inquiry how Mr. White's estate would be distributed in case he died without a will, and had been erroneously told that Mrs. Beckford, his mother-in-law, the sole issue and representative of a deceased sister of Mr. White, would inherit half of the estate, and that the four children and representatives of a deceased brother of Mr. White, of whom the Hon. Stephen White was one, would inherit the other half. Joseph had privately read the will, and knew that Mr. White had bequeathed to Mrs. Beckford much less than half.

It was strange that the murder should have been committed on a mistake in fact also. Joseph furtively abstracted a will, and expected Mr. White would die intestate; but after the decease, the will, the last will, was found by his heirs in its proper place; and it could never have been known or conjectured, without the aid of Joseph's confession, that he had made either of those blunders.

Finally, it was a strange fact that Knapp should, on the night following the murder, have watched with the mangled corpse, and at the funeral followed the hearse as one of the chief mourners, without betraying on either occasion the slightest emotion which could awaken a suspicion of his guilt.

The following note was prefixed to this argument in the former edition.

Mr. White, a highly respectable and wealthy citizen of Salem, about eighty years of age, was found, on the morning of the 7th of April, 1830, in his bed murdered, under such circumstances as to create a strong sensation in that town and throughout the community.

Richard Crowninshield, George Crowninshield, Joseph J. Knapp, and John F. Knapp were, a few weeks after, arrested on a charge of having perpetrated the murder, and committed for trial. Joseph J. Knapp soon after, under the promise of favor from government, made a full confession of the crime and the circumstances attending it. In a few days after this disclosure was made, Richard Crowninshield, who was supposed to have been the principal assassin, committed suicide.

A special session of the Supreme Court was ordered by the legislature, for the trial of the prisoners, at Salem, in July. At that time, John F. Knapp was indicted as principal in the murder, and George Crowninshield and Joseph J. Knapp as accessories.

On account of the death of Chief Justice Parker, which occurred on the 26th of July, the court adjourned to Tuesday, the 3d day of August, when it proceeded in the trial of John F. Knapp. Joseph J. Knapp, being called upon, refused to testify, and the pledge of the government was withdrawn.

At the request of the prosecuting officers of the government, Mr. Webster appeared as counsel, and assisted in the trial.

Mr. Franklin Dexter addressed the jury on behalf of the prisoner, and was succeeded by Mr. Webster in the following speech.

I AM little accustomed, Gentlemen, to the part which I am now attempting to perform. Hardly more than once or twice has it happened to me to be concerned on the side of the government in any criminal prosecution whatever; and never, until the present occasion, in any case affecting life.

But I very much regret that it should have been thought necessary to suggest to you that I am brought here to "hurry you against the law and beyond the evidence." I hope I have too much regard for justice, and too much respect for my own character, to attempt either; and were I to make such attempt, I am sure that in this court nothing can be carried against the law, and that gentlemen, intelligent and just as you are, are not, by any power, to be hurried beyond the evidence. Though I could well have wished to shun this occasion, I have not felt at liberty to withhold my professional assistance, when it is supposed that I may be in some degree useful in investigating and discovering the truth respecting this most extraordinary murder. It has seemed to be a duty incumbent on me, as on every other citizen, to do my best and my utmost to bring to light the perpetrators of this crime. Against the prisoner at the bar, as an individual, I cannot have the slightest prejudice. I would not do him the smallest injury or injustice. But I do not affect to be indifferent to the discovery and the punishment of this deep guilt. I cheerfully share in the opprobrium, how great soever it may be, which is cast on those who feel and manifest an anxious concern that all who had a part in planning, or a hand in executing, this deed of midnight assassination, may be brought to answer for their enormous crime at the bar of public justice.

Gentlemen, it is a most extraordinary case. In some respects, it has hardly a precedent anywhere; certainly none in our New England history. This bloody drama exhibited no suddenly excited, ungovernable rage. The actors in it were not surprised by any lion-like temptation springing upon their virtue, and overcoming it, before resistance could begin. Nor did they do the deed to glut savage vengeance, or satiate long-settled and deadly hate. It was a cool, calculating, money-making murder. It was all "hire and salary, not revenge." It was the weighing of money against life; the counting out of so many pieces of silver against so many ounces of blood.

An aged man, without an enemy in the world, in his own house, and in his own bed, is made the victim of a butcherly murder, for mere pay. Truly, here is a new lesson for painters and poets. Whoever shall hereafter draw the portrait of murder, if he will show it as it has been exhibited, where such example was last to have been looked for, in the very bosom of our New England society, let him not give it the grim visage of Moloch, the brow knitted by revenge, the face black with settled hate, and the blood-shot eye emitting livid fires of malice. Let him draw, rather, a decorous, smooth-faced, bloodless demon; a picture in repose, rather than in action; not so much an example of human nature in its depravity, and in its paròxysms of crime, as an infernal being, a fiend, in the ordinary display and development of his character.

The deed was executed with a degree of self-possession and steadiness equal to the wickedness with which it was planned. The circumstances now clearly in evidence spread out the whole scene before us. Deep sleep had fallen on the destined victim, and on all beneath his roof. A healthful old man, to whom sleep was sweet, the first sound slumbers of the night held him in their soft but strong embrace. The assassin enters, through the window already prepared, into an unoccupied apartment. With noiseless foot he paces the lonely hall, half lighted by the moon; he winds up the ascent of the stairs, and reaches the door of the chamber. Of this, he moves the lock, by soft and continued pressure, till it turns on its hinges without noise; and he enters, and beholds his victim before him. The room is uncommonly open to the admission of light. The face of the innocent sleeper is turned from the murderer, and the beams of the moon, resting on the gray locks of his aged temple, show him where to strike. The fatal blow is given! and the victim passes, without a struggle or a motion, from the repose of sleep to the repose of death! It is the assassin's purpose to make sure work; and he plies the dagger, though it is obvious that life has been destroyed by the blow of the bludgeon. He even raises the aged arm, that he may not fail in his aim at the heart, and replaces it again over the wounds of the poniard! To finish the picture, he explores the wrist for the pulse! He feels for it, and ascertains that it beats no longer! It is accomplished. The deed is done. He retreats, retraces his steps to the window, passes out through it as he came in, and escapes. He has done the murder. No eye has seen him, no ear has heard him. The secret is his own, and it is safe!

Ah! Gentlemen, that was a dreadful mistake. Such a secret can be safe nowhere. The whole creation of God has neither nook nor corner where the guilty can bestow it, and say it is safe. Not to speak of that eye which pierces through all disguises, and beholds every thing as in the splendor of noon, such secrets of guilt are never safe from detection, even by men. True it is, generally speaking, that "murder will out." True it is, that Providence hath so ordained, and doth so govern things, that those who break the great law of Heaven by shedding man's blood seldom succeed in avoiding discovery. Especially, in a case exciting so much attention as this, discovery must come, and will come, sooner or later. A thousand eyes turn at once to explore every man, every thing, every circumstance, connected with the time and place; a thousand ears catch every whisper; a thousand excited minds intensely dwell on the scene, shedding all their light, and ready to kindle the slightest circumstance into a blaze of discovery. Meantime the guilty soul cannot keep its own secret. It is false to itself; or rather it feels an irresistible impulse of conscience to be true to itself. It labors under its guilty possession, and knows not what to do with it. The human heart was not made for the residence of such an inhabitant. It finds itself preyed on by a torment, which it dares not acknowledge to God or man. A vulture is devouring it, and it can ask no sympathy or assistance, either from heaven or earth. The secret which the murderer possesses soon comes to possess him; and, like the evil spirits of which we read, it overcomes him, and leads him whithersoever it will. He feels it beating at his heart, rising to his throat, and demanding disclosure. He thinks the whole world sees it in his face, reads it in his eyes, and almost hears its workings in the very silence of his thoughts. It has become his master. It betrays his discretion, it breaks down his courage, it conquers his prudence. When suspicions from without begin to embarrass him, and the net of circumstance to entangle him, the fatal secret struggles with still greater violence to burst forth. It must be confessed, it will be confessed; there is no refuge from confession but suicide, and suicide is confession.

Much has been said, on this occasion, of the excitement which has existed, and still exists, and of the extraordinary measures taken to discover and punish the guilty. No doubt there has been, and is, much excitement, and strange indeed it would be had it been otherwise. Should not all the peaceable and well-disposed naturally feel concerned, and naturally exert themselves to bring to punishment the authors of this secret assassination? Was it a thing to be slept upon or forgotten? Did you, Gentlemen, sleep quite as quietly in your beds after this murder as before? Was it not a case for rewards, for meetings, for committees, for the united efforts of all the good, to find out a band of murderous conspirators, of midnight ruffians, and to bring them to the bar of justice and law? If this be excitement, is it an unnatural or an improper excitement?

It seems to me, Gentlemen, that there are appearances of another feeling, of a very different nature and character; not very extensive, I would hope, but still there is too much evidence of its existence. Such is human nature, that some persons lose their abhorrence of crime in their admiration of its magnificent exhibitions. Ordinary vice is reprobated by them, but extraordinary guilt, exquisite wickedness, the high flights and poetry of crime, seize on the imagination, and lead them to forget the depths of the guilt, in admiration of the excellence of the performance, or the unequalled atrocity of the purpose. There are those in our day who have made great use of this infirmity of our nature, and by means of it done infinite injury to the cause of good morals. They have affected not only the taste, but I fear also the principles, of the young, the heedless, and the imaginative, by the exhibition of interesting and beautiful monsters. They render depravity attractive, sometimes by the polish of its manners, and sometimes by its very extravagance; and study to show off crime under all the advantages of cleverness and dexterity. Gentlemen, this is an extraordinary murder, but it is still a murder. We are not to lose ourselves in wonder at its origin, or in gazing on its cool and skilful execution. We are to detect and to punish it; and while we proceed with caution against the prisoner, and are to be sure that we do not visit on his head the offences of others, we are yet to consider that we are dealing with a case of most atrocious crime, which has not the slightest circumstance about it to soften its enormity. It is murder; deliberate, concerted, malicious murder.

Although the interest of this case may have diminished by the repeated investigation of the facts; still, the additional labor which it imposes upon all concerned is not to be regretted, if it should result in removing all doubts of the guilt of the prisoner.

The learned counsel for the prisoner has said truly, that it is your individual duty to judge the prisoner; that it is your individual duty to determine his guilt or innocence; and that you are to weigh the testimony with candor and fairness. But much at the same time has been said, which, although it would seem to have no distinct bearing on the trial, cannot be passed over without some notice.

A tone of complaint so peculiar has been indulged, as would almost lead us to doubt whether the prisoner at the bar, or the managers of this prosecution, are now on trial. Great pains have been taken to complain of the manner of the prosecution. We hear of getting up a case; of setting in motion trains of machinery; of foul testimony; of combinations to overwhelm the prisoner; of private prosecutors; that the prisoner is hunted, persecuted, driven to his trial; that every body is against him; and various other complaints, as if those who would bring to punishment the authors of this murder were almost as bad as they who committed it.

In the course of my whole life, I have never heard before so much said about the particular counsel who happen to be employed; as if it were extraordinary that other counsel than the usual officers of the government should assist in the management of a case on the part of the government. In one of the last criminal trials in this county, that of Jackman for the "Goodridge robbery" (so called), I remember that the learned head of the Suffolk Bar, Mr. Prescott, came down in aid of the officers of the government. This was regarded as neither strange nor improper. The counsel for the prisoner, in that case, contented themselves with answering his arguments, as far as they were able, instead of carping at his presence.

Complaint is made that rewards were offered, in this case, and temptations held out to obtain testimony. Are not rewards always offered, when great and secret offences are committed? Rewards were offered in the case to which I have alluded; and every other means taken to discover the offenders, that ingenuity or the most persevering vigilance could suggest. The learned counsel have suffered their zeal to lead them into a strain of complaint at the manner in which the perpetrators of this crime were detected, almost indicating that they regard it as a positive injury to them to have found out their guilt. Since no man witnessed it, since they do not now confess it, attempts to discover it are half esteemed as officious intermeddling and impertinent inquiry.

It is said, that here even a Committee of Vigilance was appointed. This is a subject of reiterated remark. This committee are pointed at, as though they had been officiously intermeddling with the administration of justice. They are said to have been "laboring for months" against the prisoner. Gentlemen, what must we do in such a case? Are people to be dumb and still, through fear of over-doing? Is it come to this, that an effort cannot be made, a hand cannot be lifted, to discover the guilty, without its being said there is a combination to overwhelm innocence? Has the community lost all moral sense? Certainly, a community that would not be roused to action upon an occasion such as this was, a community which should not deny sleep to their eyes, and slumber to their eyelids, till they had exhausted all the means of discovery and detection, must indeed be lost to all moral sense, and would scarcely deserve protection from the laws. The learned counsel have endeavored to persuade you, that there exists a prejudice against the persons accused of this murder. They would have you understand that it is not confined to this vicinity alone; but that even the legislature have caught this spirit. That through the procurement of the gentleman here styled private prosecutor, who is a member of the Senate, a special session of this court was appointed for the trial of these offenders. That the ordinary movements of the wheels of justice were too slow for the purposes devised. But does not every body see and know, that it was matter of absolute necessity to have a special session of the court? When or how could the prisoners have been tried without a special session? In the ordinary arrangement of the courts, but one week in a year is allotted for the whole court to sit in this county. In the trial of all capital offences a majority of the court, at least, is required to be present. In the trial of the present case alone, three weeks have already been taken up. Without such special session, then, three years would not have been sufficient for the purpose. It is answer sufficient to all complaints on this subject to say, that the law was drawn by the late Chief Justice himself,* to enable the court to accomplish its duties, and to afford the persons accused an opportunity for trial without delay.

Again, it is said that it was not thought of making Francis Knapp, the prisoner at the bar, a PRINCIPAL till after the death of Richard Crowninshield, Jr.; that the present indictment is an afterthought; that "testimony was got up" for the occasion. It is not so. There is no authority for this suggestion. The case of the Knapps had not then been before the grand jury. The officers of the government did not know what the testimony would be against them. They could not, therefore, have determined what course they should pursue. They intended to arraign all as principals who should appear to have been principals, and all as accessories who should appear to have been accessories. All this could be known only when the evidence should be produced.

* Chief Justice Parker.

But the learned counsel for the defendant take a somewhat loftier flight still. They are more concerned, they assure us, for the law itself, than even for their client. Your decision in this case, they say, will stand as a precedent. Gentlemen, we hope it will. We hope it will be a precedent both of candor and intelligence, of fairness and of firmness; a precedent of good sense and honest purpose pursuing their investigation discreetly, rejecting loose generalities, exploring all the circumstances, weighing each, in search of truth, and embracing and declaring the truth when found.

It is said, that "laws are made, not for the punishment of the guilty, but for the protection of the innocent." This is not quite accurate, perhaps, but if so, we hope they will be so administered as to give that protection. But who are the innocent whom the law would protect? Gentlemen, Joseph White was innocent. They are innocent who, having lived in the fear of God through the day, wish to sleep in his peace through the night, in their own beds. The law is established that those who live quietly may sleep quietly; that they who do no harm may feel none. The gentleman can think of none that are innocent except the prisoner at the bar, not yet convicted. Is a proved conspirator to murder innocent? Are the Crowninshields and the Knapps innocent? What is innocence? How deep stained with blood, how reckless in crime, how deep in depravity may it be, and yet retain innocence? The law is made, if we would speak with entire accuracy, to protect the innocent by punishing the guilty. But there are those innocent out of a court, as well as in; innocent citizens not suspected of crime, as well as innocent prisoners at the bar.

The criminal law is not founded in a principle of vengeance. It does not punish that it may inflict suffering. The humanity of the law feels and regrets every pain it causes, every hour of restraint it imposes, and more deeply still every life it forfeits. But it uses evil as the means of preventing greater evil. It seeks to deter from crime by the example of punishment. This is its true, and only true main object. It restrains the liberty of the few offenders, that the many who do not offend may enjoy their liberty. It takes the life of the murderer, that other murders may not be committed. The law might open the jails, and at once set free all persons accused of offences, and it ought to do so if it could be made certain that no other offences would hereafter be committed; because it punishes, not to satisfy any desire to inflict pain, but simply to prevent the repetition of crimes. When the guilty, therefore, are not punished, the law has so far failed of its purpose; the safety of the innocent is so far endangered. Every unpunished murder takes away something from the security of every man's life. Whenever a jury, through whimsical and ill-founded scruples, suffer the guilty to escape, they make themselves answerable for the augmented danger of the innocent.

We wish nothing to be strained against this defendant. Why, then, all this alarm? Why all this complaint against the manner in which the crime is discovered? The prisoner's counsel catch at supposed flaws of evidence, or bad character of witnesses, without meeting the case. Do they mean to deny the conspiracy? Do they mean to deny that the two Crowninshields and the two Knapps were conspirators? Why do they rail against Palmer, while they do not disprove, and hardly dispute, the truth of any one fact sworn to by him? Instead of this, it is made matter of sentimentality that Palmer has been prevailed upon to betray his bosom companions and to violate the sanctity of friendship. Again I ask, Why do they not meet the case? If the fact is out, why not meet it? Do they mean to deny that Captain White is dead? One would have almost supposed even that, from some remarks that have been made. Do they mean to deny the conspiracy? Or, admitting a conspiracy, do they mean to deny only that Frank Knapp, the prisoner at the bar, was abetting in the murder, being present, and so deny that he was a principal? If a conspiracy is proved, it bears closely upon every subsequent subject of inquiry. Why do they not come to the fact?

Here the defence is wholly indistinct. The counsel neither take the ground, nor abandon it. They neither fly, nor light. They hover. But they must come to a closer mode of contest. They must meet the facts, and either deny or admit them. Had the prisoner at the bar, then, a knowledge of this conspiracy or not? This is the question. Instead of laying out their strength in complaining of the manner in which the deed is discovered, of the extraordinary pains taken to bring the prisoner's guilt to light, would it not be better to show there was no guilt? Would it not be better to show his innocence? They say, and they complain, that the community feel a great desire that he should be punished for his crimes. Would it not be better to convince you that he has committed no crime?

Gentlemen, let us now come to the case. Your first inquiry, on the evidence, will be, Was Captain White murdered in pursuance of a conspiracy, and was the defendant one of this conspiracy? If so, the second inquiry is, Was he so connected with the murder itself as that he is liable to be convicted as a principal? The defendant is indicted as a principal. If not guilty as such, you cannot convict him. The indictment contains three distinct classes of counts. In the first, he is charged as having done the deed with his own hand; in the second, as an aider and abettor to Richard Crowninshield, Jr., who did the deed; in the third, as an aider and abettor to some person unknown. If you believe him guilty on either of these counts, or in either of these ways, you must convict him.

It may be proper to say, as a preliminary remark, that there are two extraordinary circumstances attending this trial. One is, that Richard Crowninshield, Jr., the supposed immediate perpetrator of the murder, since his arrest, has committed suicide. He has gone to answer before a tribunal of perfect infallibility. The other is, that Joseph Knapp, the supposed originator and planner of the murder, having once made a full disclosure of the facts, under a promise of indemnity, is, nevertheless, not now a witness. Notwithstanding his disclosure and his promise of indemnity, he now refuses to testify. He chooses to return to his original state, and now stands answerable himself, when the time shall come for his trial. These circumstances it is fit you should remember, in your investigation of the case.

Your decision may affect more than the life of this defendant.

If he be not convicted as principal, no one can be. Nor can any one be convicted of a participation in the crime as accessory. The Knapps and George Crowninshield will be again on the community. This shows the importance of the duty you have to perform, and serves to remind you of the care and wisdom necessary to be exercised in its performance. But certainly these considerations do not render the prisoner's guilt any clearer, nor enhance the weight of the evidence against him. No one desires you to regard consequences in that light. No one wishes any thing to be strained, or too far pressed against the prisoner. Still, it is fit you should see the full importance of the duty which devolves upon you.

And now, Gentlemen, in examining this evidence, let us begin at the beginning, and see first what we know independent of the disputed testimony. This is a case of circumstantial evidence. And these circumstances, we think, are full and satisfactory. The case mainly depends upon them, and it is common that offences of this kind must be proved in this way. Midnight assassins take no witnesses. The evidence of the facts relied on has been somewhat sneeringly denominated by the learned counsel, "circumstantial stuff," but it is not such stuff as dreams are made of. Why does he not rend this stuff? Why does he not scatter it to the winds? He dismisses it a little too summarily. It shall be my business to examine this stuff, and try its cohesion.

The letter from Palmer at Belfast, is that no more than flimsy stuff?

The fabricated letters from Knapp to the committee and to Mr. White, are they nothing but stuff?

The circumstance, that the housekeeper was away at the time the murder was committed, as it was agreed she would be, is that, too, a useless piece of the same stuff?

The facts, that the key of the chamber door was taken out and secreted; that the window was unbarred and unbolted; are these to be so slightly and so easily disposed of?

It is necessary, Gentlemen, to settle now, at the commencement, the great question of a conspiracy. If there was none, or the defendant was not a party, then there is no evidence here to convict him. If there was a conspiracy, and he is proved to have been a party, then these two facts have a strong bearing on others, and all the great points of inquiry. The defendant's counsel take no distinct ground, as I have already said, on this point, either to admit or to deny. They choose to confine themselves to a hypothetical mode of speech. They say, supposing there was a conspiracy, non sequitur that the prisoner is guilty as principal. Be it so. But still, if there was a conspiracy, and if he was a conspirator, and helped to plan the murder, this may shed much light on the evidence which goes to charge him with the execution of that plan.

We mean to make out the conspiracy; and that the defendant was a party to it; and then to draw all just inferences from these facts.

Let me ask your attention, then, in the first place, to those appearances, on the morning after the murder, which have a tendency to show that it was done in pursuance of a preconcerted plan of operation. What are they? A man was found murdered in his bed. No stranger had done the deed, no one unacquainted with the house had done it. It was apparent that somebody within had opened, and that somebody without had entered. There had obviously and certainly been concert and coöperation. The inmates of the house were not alarmed when the murder was perpetrated. The assassin had entered without any riot or any violence. He had found the way prepared before him. The house had been previously opened. The window was unbarred from within, and its fastening unscrewed. There was a lock on the door of the chamber in which Mr. White slept, but the key was gone. It had been taken away and secreted. The footsteps of the murderer were visible, out doors, tending toward the window. The plank by which he entered the window still remained. The road he pursued had been thus prepared for him. The victim was slain, and the murderer had escaped. Every thing indicated that somebody within had coöperated with somebody without. Every thing proclaimed that some of the inmates, or somebody having access to the house, had had a hand in the murder. On the face of the circumstances, it was apparent, therefore, that this was a premeditated, concerted murder; that there had been a conspiracy to commit it. Who, then, were the conspirators? If not now found out, we are still groping in the dark, and the whole tragedy is still a mystery.

If the Knapps and the Crowninshields were not the conspirators in this murder, then there is a whole set of conspirators not yet discovered. Because, independent of the testimony of Palmer and Leighton, independent of all disputed evidence, we know, from uncontroverted facts, that this murder was, and must have been, the result of concert and coöperation between two or more. We know it was not done without plan and deliberation; we see, that whoever entered the house, to strike the blow, was favored and aided by some one who had been previously in the house, without suspicion, and who had prepared the way. This is concert, this is coöperation, this is conspiracy. If the Knapps and the Crowninshields, then, were not the conspirators, who were? Joseph Knapp had a motive to desire the death of Mr. White, and that motive has been shown.

He was connected by marriage with the family of Mr. White. His wife was the daughter of Mrs. Beckford, who was the only child of a sister of the deceased. The deceased was more than eighty years old, and had no children. His only heirs were nephews and nieces. He was supposed to be possessed of a very large fortune, which would have descended, by law, to his several nephews and nieces in equal shares; or, if there was a will, then according to the will. But as he had but two branches of heirs, the children of his brother, Henry White, and of Mrs. Beckford, each of these branches, according to the common idea, would have shared one half of his property.

This popular idea is not legally correct. But it is common, and very probably was entertained by the parties. According to this idea, Mrs. Beckford, on Mr. White's death without a will, would have been entitled to one half of his ample fortune; and Joseph Knapp had married one of her three children. There was a will, and this will gave the bulk of the property to others; and we learn from Palmer that one part of the design was to destroy the will before the murder was committed. There had been a previous will, and that previous will was known or believed to have been more favorable than the other to the Beckford family. So that, by destroying the last will, and destroying the life of the testator at the same time, either the first and more favorable will would be set up, or the deceased would have no will, which would be, as was supposed, still more favorable. But the conspirators not having succeeded in obtaining and destroying the last will, though they accomplished the murder, that will being found in existence and safe, and that will bequeathing the mass of the property to others, it seemed at the time impossible for Joseph Knapp, as for any one else, indeed, but the principal devisee, to have any motive which should lead to the murder. The key which unlocks the whole mystery is the knowledge of the intention of the conspirators to steal the will. This is derived from Palmer, and it explains all. It solves the whole marvel. It shows the motive which actuated those, against whom there is much evidence, but who, without the knowledge of this intention, were not seen to have had a motive. This intention is proved, as I have said, by Palmer; and it is so congruous with all the rest of the case, it agrees so well with all facts and circumstances, that no man could well withhold his belief, though the facts were stated by a still less credible witness. If one desirous of opening a lock turns over and tries a bunch of keys till he finds one that will open it, he naturally supposes he has found the key of that lock. So, in explaining circumstances of evidence which are apparently irreconcilable or unaccountable, if a fact be suggested which at once accounts for all, and reconciles all, by whomsoever it may be stated, it is still difficult not to believe that such fact is the true fact belonging to the case. In this respect, Palmer's testimony is singularly confirmed. If it were false, his ingenuity could not furnish us such clear exposition of strange appearing circumstances. Some truth not before known can alone do that.

When we look back, then, to the state of things immediately on the discovery of the murder, we see that suspicion would naturally turn at once, not to the heirs at law, but to those principally benefited by the will. They, and they alone, would be supposed or seem to have a direct object for wishing Mr. White's life to be terminated. And, strange as it may seem, we find counsel now insisting, that, if no apology, it is yet mitigation of the atrocity of the Knapps' conduct in attempting to charge this foul murder on Mr. White, the nephew and principal devisee, that public suspicion was already so directed! As if assassination of character were excusable in proportion as circumstances may render it easy. Their endeavors, when they knew they were suspected themselves, to fix the charge on others, by foul means and by falsehood, are fair and strong proof of their own guilt. But more of that hereafter.

The counsel say that they might safely admit that Richard Crowninshield, Jr. was the perpetrator of this murder.

But how could they safely admit that? If that were admitted, every thing else would follow. For why should Richard Crowninshield, Jr. kill Mr. White? He was not his heir, nor his devisee; nor was he his enemy. What could be his motive? If Richard Crowninshield, Jr. killed Mr. White, he did it at some one's procurement who himself had a motive. And who, having any motive, is shown to have had any intercourse with Richard Crowninshield, Jr., but Joseph Knapp, and this principally through the agency of the prisoner at the bar? It is the infirmity, the distressing difficulty of the prisoner's case, that his counsel cannot and dare not admit what they yet cannot disprove, and what all must believe. He who believes, on this evidence, that Richard Crowninshield, Jr. was the immediate murderer, cannot doubt that both the Knapps were conspirators in that murder. The counsel, therefore, are wrong, I think, in saying they might safely admit this. The admission of so important and so connected a fact would render it impossible to contend further against the proof of the entire conspiracy, as we state it.

What, then, was this conspiracy? J. J. Knapp, Jr., desirous of destroying the will, and of taking the life of the deceased, hired a ruffian, who, with the aid of other ruffians, was to enter the house, and murder him in his bed.

As far back as January this conspiracy began. Endicott testifies to a conversation with J. J. Knapp at that time, in which Knapp told him that Captain White had made a will, and given the principal part of his property to Stephen White. When asked how he knew, he said, "Black and white don't lie." When asked if the will was not locked up, he said, "There is such a thing as two keys to the same lock." And speaking of the then late illness of Captain White, he said, that Stephen White would not have been sent for if he had been there.

Hence it appears, that as early as January Knapp had a knowledge of the will, and that he had access to it by means of false keys. This knowledge of the will, and an intent to destroy it, appear also from Palmer's testimony, a fact disclosed to him by the other conspirators. He says that he was informed of this by the Crowninshields on the 2d of April. But then it is said that Palmer is not to be credited; that by his own confession he is a felon; that he has been in the State prison in Maine; and, above all, that he was intimately associated with these conspirators themselves. Let us admit these facts. Let us admit him to be as bad as they would represent him to be; still, in law, he is a competent witness. How else are the secret designs of the wicked to be proved, but by their wicked companions, to whom they have disclosed them? The government does not select its witnesses. The conspirators themselves have chosen Palmer. He was the confidant of the prisoners. The fact, however, does not depend on his testimony alone. It is corroborated by other proof; and, taken in connection with the other circumstances, it has strong probability. In regard to the testimony of Palmer, generally, it may be said that it is less contradicted, in all parts of it, either by himself or others, than that of any other material witness, and that every thing he has told is corroborated by other evidence, so far as it is susceptible of confirmation. An attempt has been made to impair his testimony, as to his being at the Half-way House on the night of the murder; you have seen with what success. Mr. Babb is called to contradict him. You have seen how little he knows, and even that not certainly; for he himself is proved to have been in an error by supposing Palmer to have been at the Half-way House on the evening of the 9th of April. At that time he is proved to have been at Dustin's, in Danvers. If, then, Palmer, bad as he is, has disclosed the secrets of the conspiracy, and has told the truth, there is no reason why it should not be believed. Truth is truth, come whence it may.

The facts show that this murder had been long in agitation; that it was not a new proposition on the 2d of April; that it had been contemplated for five or six weeks. Richard Crowninshield was at Wenham in the latter part of March, as testified by Starrett. Frank Knapp was at Danvers in the latter part of February, as testified by Allen. Richard Crowninshield inquired whether Captain Knapp was about home, when at Wenham. The probability is, that they would open the case to Palmer as a new project. There are other circumstances that show it to have been some weeks in agitation. Palmer's testimony as to the transactions on the 2d of April is corroborated by Allen, and by Osborn's books. He says that Frank Knapp came there in the afternoon, and again in the evening. So the book shows. He says that Captain White had gone out to his farm on that day. So others prove. How could this fact, or these facts, have been known to Palmer, unless Frank Knapp had brought the knowledge? And was it not the special object of this visit to give information of this fact, that they might meet him and execute their purpose on his return from his farm? The letter of Palmer, written at Belfast, bears intrinsic marks of genuineness. It was mailed at Belfast, May 13th. It states facts that he could not have known, unless his testimony be true. This letter was not an afterthought; it is a genuine narrative. In fact, it says, "I know the business your brother Frank was transacting on the 2d of April." How could he have possibly known this, unless he had been there? The "one thousand dollars that was to be paid"; where could he have obtained this knowledge? The testimony of Endicott, of Palmer, and these facts, are to be taken together; and they most clearly show that the death of Captain White was caused by somebody interested in putting an end to his life.

As to the testimony of Leighton, as far as manner of testifying goes, he is a bad witness; but it does not follow from this that he is not to be believed. There are some strange things about him. It is strange, that he should make up a story against Captain Knapp, the person with whom he lived; that he never voluntarily told any thing: all that he has said was screwed out of him. But the story could not have been invented by him; his character for truth is unimpeached; and he intimated to another witness, soon after the murder happened, that he knew something he should not tell. There is not the least contradiction in his testimony, though he gives a poor account of withholding it. He says that he was extremely bothered by those who questioned him. In the main story that he relates he is entirely consistent with himself. Some things are for him, and some against him. Examine the intrinsic probability of what he says. See if some allowance is not to be made for him, on account of his ignorance of things of this kind. It is said to be extraordinary, that he should have heard just so much of the conversation, and no more; that he should have heard just what was necessary to be proved, and nothing else. Admit that this is extraordinary; still, this does not prove it untrue. It is extraordinary that you twelve gentlemen should be called upon, out of all the men in the county, to decide this case; no one could have foretold this three weeks since. It is extraordinary that the first clew to this conspiracy should have been derived from information given by the father of the prisoner at the bar. And in every case that comes to trial there are many things extraordinary. The murder itself is a most extraordinary one; but still we do not doubt its reality.

It is argued, that this conversation between Joseph and Frank could not have been as Leighton has testified, because they had been together for several hours before; this subject must have been uppermost in their minds, whereas this appears to have been the commencement of their conversation upon it. Now this depends altogether upon the tone and manner of the expression; upon the particular word in the sentence which was emphatically spoken. If he had said, "When did you see Dick, Frank?" this would not seem to be the beginning of the conversation. With what emphasis it was uttered, it is not possible to learn; and therefore nothing can be made of this argument. If this boy's testimony stood alone, it should be received with caution. And the same may be said of the testimony of Palmer. But they do not stand alone. They furnish a clew to numerous other circumstances, which, when known, mutually confirm what would have been received with caution without such corroboration. How could Leighton have made up this conversation? "When did you see Dick?" "I saw him this morning." "When is he going to kill the old man?" "I don't know." "Tell him, if he don't do it soon, I won't pay him." Here is a vast amount in few words. Had he wit enough to invent this? There is nothing so powerful as truth; and often nothing so strange. It is not even suggested that the story was made for him. There is nothing so extraordinary in the whole matter, as it would have been for this ignorant country boy to invent this story.

The acts of the parties themselves furnish strong presumption of their guilt. What was done on the receipt of the letter from Maine? This letter was signed by Charles Grant, Jr.

a person not known to either of the Knapps, nor was it known to them that any other person beside the Crowninshields knew of the conspiracy. This letter, by the accidental omission of the word Jr., fell into the hands of the father, when intended for the son. The father carried it to Wenham where both the sons were. They both read it. Fix your eye steadily on this part of the circumstantial stuff which is in the case, and see what can be made of it. This was shown to the two brothers on Saturday, the 15th of May. Neither of them knew Palmer. And if they had known him, they could not have known him to have been the writer of this letter. It was mysterious to them how any one at Belfast could have had knowledge of this affair. Their conscious guilt prevented due circumspection. They did not see the bearing of its publication. They advised their father to carry it to the Committee of Vigilance, and it was so carried. On the Sunday following, Joseph began to think there might be something in it. Perhaps, in the mean time, he had seen one of the Crowninshields. He was apprehensive that they might be suspected; he was anxious to turn attention from their family. What course did he adopt to effect this? He addressed one letter, with a false name, to Mr. White, and another to the committee; and to complete the climax of his folly, he signed the letter addressed to the committee, "Grant," the same name as that which was signed to the letter received from Belfast. It was in the knowledge of the committee, that no person but the Knapps had seen this letter from Belfast; and that no other person knew its signature. It therefore must have been irresistibly plain to them that one of the Knapps was the writer of the letter received by the committee, charging the murder on Mr. White. Add to this the fact of its having been dated at Lynn, and mailed at Salem four days after it was dated, and who could doubt respecting it? Have you ever read or known of folly equal to this? Can you conceive of crime more odious and abominable? Merely to explain the apparent mysteries of the letter from Palmer, they excite the basest suspicions against a man, whom, if they were innocent, they had no reason to believe guilty; and whom, if they were guilty, they most certainly knew to be innocent. Could they have adopted a more direct method of exposing their own infamy? The letter to the committee has intrinsic marks of a knowledge of this transaction. It tells the time and the manner in which the murder was committed. Every line speaks the writer's condemnation. In attempting to divert attention from his family, and to charge the guilt upon another, he indelibly fixes it upon himself.

Joseph Knapp requested Allen to put these letters into the post-office, because, said he, "I wish to nip this silly affair in the bud." If this were not the order of an overruling Providence, I should say that it was the silliest piece of folly that was ever practised. Mark the destiny of crime. It is ever obliged to resort to such subterfuges; it trembles in the broad light; it betrays itself in seeking concealment. He alone walks safely who walks uprightly. Who for a moment can read these letters and doubt of Joseph Knapp's guilt? The constitution of nature is made to inform against him. There is no corner dark enough to conceal him. There is no turnpike-road broad enough or smooth enough for a man so guilty to walk in without stumbling. Every step proclaims his secret to every passenger. His own acts come out to fix his guilt. In attempting to charge another with his own crime, he writes his own confession. To do away the effect of Palmer's letter, signed Grant, he writes a letter himself and affixes to it the name of Grant. He writes in a disguised hand; but how could it happen that the same Grant should be in Salem that was at Belfast? This has brought the whole thing out. Evidently he did it, because he has adopted the same style. Evidently he did it, because he speaks of the price of blood, and of other circumstances connected with the murder, that no one but a conspirator could have known.

Palmer says he made a visit to the Crowninshields, on the 9th of April. George then asked him whether he had heard of the murder. Richard inquired whether he had heard the music at Salem. They said that they were suspected, that a committee had been appointed to search houses; and that they had melted up the dagger, the day after the murder, because it would be a suspicious circumstance to have it found in their possession. Now this committee was not appointed, in fact, until Friday evening. But this proves nothing against Palmer; it does not prove that George did not tell him so; it only proves that he gave a false reason for a fact. They had heard that they were suspected; how could they have heard this, unless it were from the whisperings of their own consciences? Surely this rumor was not then public.

About the 27th of April, another attempt was made by the Knapps to give a direction to public suspicion. They reported themselves to have been robbed, in passing from Salem to Wenham, near Wenham Pond. They came to Salem and stated the particulars of the adventure. They described persons, their dress, size, and appearance, who had been suspected of the murder. They would have it understood that the community was infested by a band of ruffians, and that they themselves were the particular objects of their vengeance. Now this turns out to be all fictitious, all false. Can you conceive of any thing more enormous, any wickedness greater, than the circulation of such reports? than the allegation of crimes, if committed, capital? If no such crime had been committed, then it reacts with double force upon themselves, and goes very far to show their guilt. How did they conduct themselves on this occasion? Did they make hue and cry? Did they give information that they had been assaulted that night at Wenham? No such thing. They rested quietly that night; they waited to be called on for the particulars of their adventure; they made no attempt to arrest the offenders; this was not their object. They were content to fill the thousand mouths of rumor, to spread abroad false reports, to divert the attention of the public from themselves; for they thought every man suspected them, because they knew they ought to be suspected.

The manner in which the compensation for this murder was paid is a circumstance worthy of consideration. By examining the facts and dates, it will satisfactorily appear that Joseph Knapp paid a sum of money to Richard Crowninshield, in five-franc pieces, on the 24th of April. On the 21st of April, Joseph Knapp received five hundred five-franc pieces, as the proceeds of an adventure at sea. The remainder of this species of currency that came home in the vessel was deposited in a bank at Salem. On Saturday, the 24th of April, Frank and Richard rode to Wenham. They were there with Joseph an hour or more, and appeared to be negotiating private business. Richard continued in the chaise; Joseph came to the chaise and conversed with him. These facts are proved by Hart and Leighton, and by Osborn's books. On Saturday evening, about this time, Richard Crowninshield is proved, by Lummus, to have been at Wenham, with another person whose appearance corresponds with Frank's. Can any one doubt this being the same evening? What had Richard Crowninshield to do at Wenham, with Joseph, unless it were this business? He was there before the murder; he was there after the murder; he was there clandestinely, unwilling to be seen. If it were not upon this business, let it be told what it was for. Joseph Knapp could explain it; Frank Knapp might explain it. But they do not explain it; and the inference is against them.

Immediately after this, Richard passes five-franc pieces; on the same evening, one to Lummus, five to Palmer; and near this time George passes three or four in Salem. Here are nine of these pieces passed by them in four days; this is extraordinary. It is an unusual currency; in ordinary business, few men would pass nine such pieces in the course of a year. If they were not received in this way, why not explain how they came by them? Money was not so flush in their pockets that they could not tell whence it came, if it honestly came there. It is extremely important to them to explain whence this money came, and they would do it if they could. If, then, the price of blood was paid at this time, in the presence and with the knowledge of this defendant, does not this prove him to have been connected with this conspiracy?

Observe, also, the effect on the mind of Richard, of Palmer's being arrested and committed to prison; the various efforts he makes to discover the fact; the lowering, through the crevices of the rock, the pencil and paper for him to write upon; the sending two lines of poetry, with the request that he would return the corresponding lines; the shrill and peculiar whistle; the inimitable exclamations of "Palmer! Palmer! Palmer!" All these things prove how great was his alarm; they corroborate Palmer's story, and tend to establish the conspiracy.

Joseph Knapp had a part to act in this matter. He must have opened the window, and secreted the key; he had free access to every part of the house; he was accustomed to visit there; he went in and out at his pleasure; he could do this without being suspected. He is proved to have been there the Saturday preceding.

If all these things, taken in connection, do not prove that Captain White was murdered in pursuance of a conspiracy, then the case is at an end.

Savary's testimony is wholly unexpected. He was called for a different purpose. When asked who the person was that he saw come out of Captain White's yard between three and four o'clock in the morning, he answered, Frank Knapp. It is not clear that this is not true. There may be many circumstances of importance connected with this, though we believe the murder to have been committed between ten and eleven o'clock. The letter to Dr. Barstow states it to have been done about eleven o'clock; it states it to have been done with a blow on the head, from a weapon loaded with lead. Here is too great a correspondence with the reality not to have some meaning in it. Dr. Peirson was always of the opinion, that the two classes of wounds were made with different instruments, and by different hands. It is possible that one class was inflicted at one time, and the other at another. It is possible that on the last visit the pulse might not have entirely ceased to beat; and then the finishing stroke was given. It is said, that, when the body was discovered, some of the wounds wept, while the others did not. They may have been inflicted from mere wantonness. It was known that Captain White was accustomed to keep specie by him in his chamber; this perhaps may explain the last visit. It is proved, that this defendant was in the habit of retiring to bed, and leaving it afterwards, without the knowledge of his family; perhaps he did so on this occasion. We see no reason to doubt the fact; and it does not shake our belief that the murder was committed early in the night.

What are the probabilities as to the time of the murder? Mr. White was an aged man; he usually retired to bed at about half past nine. He slept soundest in the early part of the night; usually awoke in the middle and latter part; and his habits were perfectly well known. When would persons, with a knowledge of these facts, be most likely to approach him? Most certainly, in the first hour of his sleep. This would be the safest time. If seen then going to or from the house, the appearance would be least suspicious. The earlier hour would then have been most probably selected.

Gentlemen, I shall dwell no longer on the evidence which tends to prove that there was a conspiracy, and that the prisoner was a conspirator. All the circumstances concur to make out this point. Not only Palmer swears to it, in effect, and Leighton, but Allen mainly supports Palmer, and Osborn's books lend confirmation, so far as possible, from such a source. Palmer is contradicted in nothing, either by any other witness, or any proved circumstance or occurrence. Whatever could be expected to support him does support him. All the evidence clearly manifests, I think, that there was a conspiracy; that it originated with Joseph Knapp; that defendant became a party to it, and was one of its conductors, from first to last. One of the most powerful circumstances is Palmer's letter from Belfast. The amount of this is a direct charge on the Knapps of the authorship of this murder. How did they treat this charge; like honest men, or like guilty men? We have seen how it was treated. Joseph Knapp fabricated letters, charging another person, and caused them to be put into the post-office.

I shall now proceed on the supposition, that it is proved that there was a conspiracy to murder Mr. White, and that the prisoner was party to it.

The second and the material inquiry is, Was the prisoner present at the murder, aiding and abetting therein?

This leads to the legal question in the case. What does the law mean, when it says, that, in order to charge him as a principal, "he must be present aiding and abetting in the murder"?

In the language of the late Chief Justice, "It is not required that the abettor shall be actually upon the spot when the murder is committed, or even in sight of the more immediate perpetrator of the victim, to make him a principal. If he be at a distance, coöperating in the act, by watching to prevent relief, or to give an alarm, or to assist his confederate in escape, having knowledge of the purpose and object of the assassin, this in the eye of the law is being present, aiding and abetting, so as to make him a principal in the murder."

"If he be at a distance coöperating." This is not a distance to be measured by feet or rods; if the intent to lend aid combine with a knowledge that the murder is to be committed, and the person so intending be so situate that he can by any possibility end this aid in any manner, then he is present in legal contemplation. He need not lend any actual aid; to be ready to assist is assisting.

There are two sorts of murder; the distinction between them it is of essential importance to bear in mind: 1. Murder in an affray, or upon sudden and unexpected provocation. 2. Murder secretly, with a deliberate, predetermined intention to commit the crime. Under the first class, the question usually is, whether the offence be murder or manslaughter, in the person who commits the deed. Under the second class, it is often a question whether others than he who actually did the deed were present, aiding and assisting therein. Offences of this kind ordinarily happen when there is nobody present except those who go on the same design. If a riot should happen in the court-house, and one should kill another, this may be murder, or it may not, according to the intention with which it was done; which is always matter of fact, to be collected from the circumstances at the time. But in secret murders, premeditated and determined on, there can be no doubt of the murderous intention; there can be no doubt if a person be present, knowing a murder is to be done, of his concurring in the act. His being there is a proof of his intent to aid and abet; else, why is he there?

It has been contended, that proof must be given that the person accused did actually afford aid, did lend a hand in the murder itself; and without this proof, although he may be near by, he may be presumed to be there for an innocent purpose; he may have crept silently there to hear the news, or from mere curiosity to see what was going on. Preposterous, absurd! Such an idea shocks all common sense. A man is found to be a conspirator to commit a murder; he has planned it; he has assisted in arranging the time, the place, and the means; and he is found in the place, and at the time, and yet it is suggested that he might have been there, not for coöperation and concurrence, but from curiosity! Such an argument deserves no answer. It would be difficult to give it one, in decorous terms. Is it not to be taken for granted, that a man seeks to accomplish his own purposes? When he has planned a murder, and is present at its execution, is he there to forward or to thwart his own design? is he there to assist, or there to prevent? But "Curiosity"! He may be there from mere "curiosity"! Curiosity to witness the success of the execution of his own plan of murder! The very walls of a court-house ought not to stand, the ploughshare should run through the ground it stands on, where such an argument could find toleration.

It is not necessary that the abettor should actually lend a hand, that he should take a part in the act itself; if he be present ready to assist, that is assisting. Some of the doctrines advanced would acquit the defendant, though he had gone to the bedchamber of the deceased, though he had been standing by when the assassin gave the blow. This is the argument we have heard to-day.

The court here said, they did not so understand the argument of the counsel for defendant. Mr. Dexter said, "The intent and power alone must coöperate."

No doubt the law is, that being ready to assist is assisting, if the party has the power to assist, in case of need. It is so stated by Foster, who is a high authority. "If A happeneth to be present at a murder, for instance, and taketh no part in it, nor endeavoreth to prevent it, nor apprehendeth the murderer, nor levyeth hue and cry after him, this strange behavior of his, though highly criminal, will not of itself render him either principal or accessory." "But if a fact amounting to murder should be committed in prosecution of some unlawful purpose, though it were but a bare trespass, to which A in the case last stated had consented, and he had gone in order to give assistance, if need were, for carrying it into execution, this would have amounted to murder in him, and in every person present and joining with him." "If the fact was committed in prosecution of the original purpose which was unlawful, the whole party will be involved in the guilt of him who gave the blow. For in combinations of this kind, the mortal stroke, though given by one of the party, is considered in the eye of the law, and of sound reason too, as given by every individual present and abetting. The person actually giving the stroke is no more than the hand or instrument by which the others strike." The author, in speaking of being present, means actual presence; not actual in opposition to constructive, for the law knows no such distinction. There is but one presence, and this is the situation from which aid, or supposed aid, may be rendered. The law does not say where the person is to go, or how near he is to go, but that he must be where he may give assistance, or where the perpetrator may believe that he may be assisted by him. Suppose that he is acquainted with the design of the murderer, and has a knowledge of the time when it is to be carried into effect, and goes out with a view to render assistance, if need be; why, then, even though the murderer does not know of this, the person so going out will be an abettor in the murder.

It is contended that the prisoner at the bar could not be a principal, he being in Brown Street, because he could not there render assistance; and you are called upon to determine this case, according as you may be of opinion whether Brown Street was, or was not, a suitable, convenient, well-chosen place to aid in this murder. This is not the true question. The inquiry is not whether you would have selected this place in preference to all others, or whether you would have selected it at all. If the parties chose it, why should we doubt about it? How do we know the use they intended to make of it, or the kind of aid that he was to afford by being there? The question for you to consider is, Did the defendant go into Brown Street in aid of this murder? Did he go there by agreement, by appointment with the perpetrator? If so, every thing else follows. The main thing, indeed the only thing, is to inquire whether he was in Brown Street by appointment with Richard Crowninshield. It might be to keep general watch; to observe the lights, and advise as to time of access; to meet the murderer on his return, to advise him as to his escape; to examine his clothes, to see if any marks of blood were upon them; to furnish exchange of clothes, or new disguise, if necessary; to tell him through what streets he could safely retreat, or whether he could deposit the club in the place designed; or it might be without any distinct object, but merely to afford that encouragement which would proceed from Richard Crowninshield's consciousness that he was near. It is of no consequence whether, in your opinion, the place was well chosen or not, to afford aid; if it was so chosen, if it was by appointment that he was there, it is enough. Suppose Richard Crowninshield, when applied to to commit the murder, had said, "I won't do it unless there can be some one near by to favor my escape; I won't go unless you will stay in Brown Street." Upon the gentleman's argument, he would not be an aider and abettor in the murder, because the place was not well chosen; though it is apparent that the being in the place chosen was a condition, without which the murder would never have happened.

You are to consider the defendant as one in the league, in the combination to commit the murder. If he was there by appointment with the perpetrator, he is an abettor. The concurrence of the perpetrator in his being there is proved by the previous evidence of the conspiracy. If Richard Crowninshield, for any purpose whatsoever, made it a condition of the agreement, that Frank Knapp should stand as backer, then Frank Knapp was an aider and abettor; no matter what the aid was, or what sort it was, or degree, be it ever so little; even if it were to judge of the hour when it was best to go, or to see when the lights were extinguished, or to give an alarm if any one approached. Who better calculated to judge of these things than the murderer himself? and if he so determined them, that is sufficient.

Now as to the facts. Frank Knapp knew that the murder was that night to be committed; he was one of the conspirators, he knew the object, he knew the time. He had that day been to Wenham to see Joseph, and probably to Danvers to see Richard Crowninshield, for he kept his motions secret. He had that day hired a horse and chaise of Osborn, and attempted to conceal the purpose for which it was used; he had intentionally left the place and the price blank on Osborn's books. He went to Wenham by the way of Danvers; he had been told the week before to hasten Dick; he had seen the Crowninshields several times within a few days; he had a saddle-horse the Saturday night before; he had seen Mrs. Beckford at Wenham, and knew she would not return that night. She had not been away before for six weeks, and probably would not soon be again. He had just come from Wenham. Every day, for the week previous, he had visited one or another of these conspirators, save Sunday, and then probably he saw them in town. When he saw Joseph on the 6th, Joseph had prepared the house, and would naturally tell him of it; there were constant communications between them; daily and nightly visitation; too much knowledge of these parties and this transaction, to leave a particle of doubt on the mind of any one, that Frank Knapp knew the murder was to be committed this night. The hour was come, and he knew it; if so, and he was in Brown Street, without explaining why he was there, can the jury for a moment doubt whether he was there to countenance, aid, or support; or for curiosity alone; or to learn how the wages of sin and death were earned by the perpetrator?

Here Mr. Webster read the law from Hawkins. 1 Hawk. 204, Lib. 1, ch. 32, sec. 7.

The perpetrator would derive courage, and strength, and confidence from the knowledge that one of his associates was near by. If he was in Brown Street, he could have been there for no other purpose. If there for this purpose, then he was, in the language of the law, present, aiding and abetting in the murder.

His interest lay in being somewhere else. If he had nothing to do with the murder, no part to act, why not stay at home? Why should he jeopard his own life, if it was not agreed that he should be there? He would not voluntarily go where the very place would cause him to swing if detected. He would not voluntarily assume the place of danger. His taking this place proves that he went to give aid. His staying away would have made an alibi. If he had nothing to do with the murder, he would be at home, where he could prove his alibi. He knew he was in danger, because he was guilty of the conspiracy, and, if he had nothing to do, would not expose himself to suspicion or detection.

Did the prisoner at the bar countenance this murder? Did he concur, or did he non-concur, in what the perpetrator was about to do? Would he have tried to shield him? Would he have furnished his cloak for protection? Would he have pointed out a safe way of retreat? As you would answer these questions, so you should answer the general question, whether he was there consenting to the murder, or whether he was there as a spectator only.

One word more on this presence, called constructive presence. What aid is to be rendered? Where is the line to be drawn, between acting, and omitting to act? Suppose he had been in the house, suppose he had followed the perpetrator to the chamber, what could he have done? This was to be a murder by stealth; it was to be a secret assassination. It was not their purpose to have an open combat; they were to approach their victim unawares, and silently give the fatal blow. But if he had been in the chamber, no one can doubt that he would have been an abettor; because of his presence, and ability to render services, if needed. What service could he have rendered, if there? Could he have helped him to fly? Could he have aided the silence of his movements? Could he have facilitated his retreat, on the first alarm? Surely, this was a case where there was more of safety in going alone than with another; where company would only embarrass. Richard Crowninshield would prefer to go alone. He knew his errand too well. His nerves needed no collateral support. He was not the man to take with him a trembling companion. He would prefer to have his aid at a distance. He would not wish to be encumbered by his presence. He would prefer to have him out of the house. He would prefer that he should be in Brown Street. But whether in the chamber, in the house, in the garden, or in the street, whatsoever is aiding in actual presence is aiding in constructive presence; any thing that is aid in one case is aid in the other.*

If, then, the aid be anywhere, so as to embolden the perpetrator, to afford him hope or confidence in his enterprise, it is the same as though the person stood at his elbow with his sword drawn. His being there ready to act, with the power to act, is what makes him an abettor.

Here Mr. Webster referred to the cases of Kelly, of Hyde, and others, cited by counsel for the defendant, and showed that they did not militate with the doctrine for which he contended. The difference is, in those cases there was open violence; this was a case of secret assassination. The aid must meet the occasion. Here no acting was necessary, but watching, concealment of escape, management.

What are the facts in relation to this presence? Frank Knapp is proved to have been a conspirator, proved to have known that the deed was now to be done. Is it not probable that he was in Brown Street to concur in the murder? There were four conspirators. It was natural that some one of them should go with the perpetrator. Richard Crowninshield was to be the perpetrator; he was to give the blow. There is no evidence of any casting of the parts for the others. The defendant would probably be the man to take the second part. He was fond of exploits, he was accustomed to the use of sword-canes and dirks. If any aid was required, he was the man to give it. At least, there is no evidence to the contrary of this.

* 4 Hawk. 201, Lib. 4, ch. 29, sec. 8.

Aid could not have been received from Joseph Knapp, or from George Crowninshield. Joseph Knapp was at Wenham, and took good care to prove that he was there. George Crowninshield has proved satisfactorily where he was; that he was in other company, such as it was, until eleven o'clock. This narrows the inquiry. This demands of the prisoner to show, if he was not in this place, where he was. It calls on him loudly to show this, and to show it truly. If he could show it, he would do it. If he does not tell, and that truly, it is against him. The defence of an alibi is a double-edged sword. He knew that he was in a situation where he might be called upon to account for himself. If he had had no particular appointment or business to attend to, he would have taken care to be able so to account. He would have been out of town, or in some good company. Has he accounted for himself on that night to your satisfaction?

The prisoner has attempted to prove an alibi, in two ways. In the first place, by four young men with whom he says he was in company, on the evening of the murder, from seven o'clock till near ten o'clock. This depends upon the certainty of the night. In the second place, by his family, from ten o'clock afterwards. This depends upon the certainty of the time of the night. These two classes of proof have no connection with each other. One may be true, and the other false; or they may both be true, or both be false. I shall examine this testimony with some attention, because, on a former trial, it made more impression on the minds of the court than on my own mind. I think, when carefully sifted and compared, it will be found to have in it more of plausibility than reality.

Mr. Page testifies, that on the evening of the 6th of April he was in company with Burchmore, Balch, and Forrester, and that he met the defendant about seven o'clock, near the Salem Hotel; that he afterwards met him at Remond's, about nine o'clock, and that he was in company with him a considerable part of the evening. This young gentleman is a member of college, and says that he came to town the Saturday evening previous; that he is now able to say that it was the night of the murder when he walked with Frank Knapp, from the recollection of the fact, that he called himself to an account, on the morning after the murder, as it is natural for men to do when an extraordinary occurrence happens. Gentlemen, this kind of evidence is not satisfactory; general impressions as to time are not to be relied on. If I were called on to state the particular day on which any witness testified in this cause, I could not do it. Every man will notice the same thing in his own mind. There is no one of these young men that could give an account of himself for any other day in the month of April. They are made to remember the fact, and then they think they remember the time. The witness has no means of knowing it was Tuesday rather than any other time. He did not know it at first; he could not know it afterwards. He says he called himself to an account. This has no more to do with the murder than with the man in the moon. Such testimony is not worthy to be relied on in any forty-shilling cause. What occasion had he to call himself to an account? Did he suppose that he should be suspected? Had he any intimation of this conspiracy?

Suppose, Gentlemen, you were either of you asked where you were, or what you were doing, on the fifteenth day of June; you could not answer this question without calling to mind some events to make it certain. Just as well may you remember on what you dined each day of the year past. Time is identical. Its subdivisions are all alike. No man knows one day from another, or one hour from another, but by some fact connected with it. Days and hours are not visible to the senses, nor to be apprehended and distinguished by the understanding. The flow of time is known only by something which marks it; and he who speaks of the date of occurrences with nothing to guide his recollection speaks at random, and is not to be relied on. This young gentleman remembers the facts and occurrences; he knows nothing why they should not have happened on the evening of the 6th; but he knows no more. All the rest is evidently conjecture or impression.

Mr. White informs you, that he told him he could not tell what night it was. The first thoughts are all that are valuable in such case. They miss the mark by taking second aim.

Mr. Balch believes, but is not sure, that he was with Frank Knapp on the evening of the murder. He has given different accounts of the time. He has no means of making it certain. All he knows is, that it was some evening before Fast-day But whether Monday, Tuesday, or Saturday, he cannot tell.

Mr. Burchmore says, to the best of his belief, it was the evening of the murder. Afterwards he attempts to speak positively, from recollecting that he mentioned the circumstance to William Peirce, as he went to the Mineral Spring on Fast-day. Last Monday morning he told Colonel Putnam he could not fix the time. This witness stands in a much worse plight than either of the others. It is difficult to reconcile all he has said with any belief in the accuracy of his recollections.

Mr. Forrester does not speak with any certainty as to the night; and it is very certain that he told Mr. Loring and others, that he did not know what night it was.

Now, what does the testimony of these four young men amount to? The only circumstance by which they approximate to an identifying of the night is, that three of them say it was cloudy; they think their walk was either on Monday or Tuesday evening, and it is admitted that Monday evening was clear, whence they draw the inference that it must have been Tuesday.

But, fortunately, there is one fact disclosed in their testimony that settles the question. Balch says, that on the evening, whenever it was, he saw the prisoner; the prisoner told him he was going out of town on horseback, for a distance of about twenty minutes' drive, and that he was going to get a horse at Osborn's. This was about seven o'clock. At about nine, Balch says he saw the prisoner again, and was then told by him that he had had his ride, and had returned. Now it appears by Osborn's books, that the prisoner had a saddle-horse from his stable, not on Tuesday evening, the night of the murder, but on the Saturday evening previous. This fixes the time about which these young men testify, and is a complete answer and refutation of the attempted alibi on Tuesday evening.

I come now to speak of the testimony adduced by the defendant to explain where he was after ten o'clock on the night of the murder. This comes chiefly from members of the family; from his father and brothers.

It is agreed that the affidavit of the prisoner should be received as evidence of what his brother, Samuel H. Knapp, would testify if present. Samuel H. Knapp says, that, about ten minutes past ten o'clock, his brother, Frank Knapp, on his way to bed, opened his chamber door, made some remarks, closed the door, and went to his chamber; and that he did not hear him leave it afterwards. How is this witness able to fix the time at ten minutes past ten? There is no circumstance mentioned by which he fixes it. He had been in bed, probably asleep, and was aroused from his sleep by the opening of the door. Was he in a situation to speak of time with precision? Could he know, under such circumstances, whether it was ten minutes past ten, or ten minutes before eleven, when his brother spoke to him? What would be the natural result in such a case? But we are not left to conjecture this result. We have positive testimony on this point. Mr. Webb tells you that Samuel told him, on the 8th of June, "that he did not know what time his brother Frank came home, and that he was not at home when he went to bed." You will consider this testimony of Mr. Webb as indorsed upon this affidavit; and with this indorsement upon it, you will give it its due weight. This statement was made to him after Frank was arrested.

I come to the testimony of the father. I find myself incapable of speaking of him or his testimony with severity. Unfortunate old man! Another Lear, in the conduct of his children; another Lear, I apprehend, in the effect of his distress upon his mind and understanding. He is brought here to testify, under circumstances that disarm severity, and call loudly for sympathy. Though it is impossible not to see that his story cannot be credited, yet I am unable to speak of him otherwise than in sorrow and grief. Unhappy father! he strives to remember, perhaps persuades himself that he does remember, that on the evening of the murder he was himself at home at ten o'clock. He thinks, or seems to think, that his son came in at about five minutes past ten. He fancies that he remembers his conversation; he thinks he spoke of bolting the door; he thinks he asked the time of night; he seems to remember his then going to his bed. Alas! these are but the swimming fancies of an agitated and distressed mind. Alas! they are but the dreams of hope, its uncertain lights, flickering on the thick darkness of parental distress. Alas! the miserable father knows nothing, in reality, of all these things.

Mr. Shepard says that the first conversation he had with Mr. Knapp was soon after the murder, and before the arrest of his sons. Mr. Knapp says it was after the arrest of his sons. His own fears led him to say to Mr. Shepard, that his "son Frank was at home that night; and so Phippen told him," or "as Phippen told him." Mr. Shepard says that he was struck with the remark at the time; that it made an unfavorable impression on his mind; he does not tell you what that impression was, but when you connect it with the previous inquiry he had made, whether Frank had continued to associate with the Crowninshields, and recollect that the Crowninshields were then known to be suspected of this crime, can you doubt what this impression was? can you doubt as to the fears he then had?

This poor old man tells you, that he was greatly perplexed at the time; that he found himself in embarrassed circumstances; that on this very night he was engaged in making an assignment of his property to his friend, Mr. Shepard. If ever charity should furnish a mantle for error, it should be here. Imagination cannot picture a more deplorable, distressed condition.

The same general remarks may be applied to his conversation with Mr. Treadwell, as have been made upon that with Mr. Shepard. He told him, that he believed Frank was at home about the usual time. In his conversations with either of these persons, he did not pretend to know, of his own knowledge, the time that he came home. He now tells you positively that he recollects the time, and that he so told Mr. Shepard. He is directly contradicted by both these witnesses, as respectable men as Salem affords.

This idea of an alibi is of recent origin. Would Samuel Knapp have gone to sea if it were then thought of? His testimony, if true, was too important to be lost. If there be any truth in this part of the alibi, it is so near in point of time that it cannot be relied on. The mere variation of half an hour would avoid it. The mere variations of different time-pieces would explain it.

Has the defendant proved where he was on that night? If you doubt about it, there is an end of it. The burden is upon him to satisfy you beyond all reasonable doubt. Osborn's books in connection with what the young men state, are conclusive, I think, on this point. He has not, then, accounted for himself; he has attempted it, and has failed. I pray you to remember, Gentlemen, that this is a case in which the prisoner would, more than any other, be rationally able to account for himself on the night of the murder, if he could do so. He was in the conspiracy, he knew the murder was then to be committed, and if he himself was to have no hand in its actual execution, he would of course, as a matter of safety and precaution, be somewhere else, and be able to prove afterwards that he had been somewhere else. Having this motive to prove himself elsewhere, and the power to do it if he were elsewhere, his failing in such proof must necessarily leave a very strong inference against him.

But, Gentlemen, let us now consider what is the evidence produced on the part of the government to prove that John Francis Knapp, the prisoner at the bar, was in Brown Street on the night of the murder. This is a point of vital importance in this cause. Unless this be made out, beyond reasonable doubt, the law of presence does not apply to the case. The government undertake to prove that he was present aiding in the murder, by proving that he was in Brown Street for this purpose. Now, what are the undoubted facts? They are, that two persons were seen in that street, several times during that evening, under suspicious circumstances; under such circumstances as induced those who saw them to watch their movements. Of this there can be no doubt. Mirick saw a man standing at the post opposite his store from fifteen minutes before nine until twenty minutes after, dressed in a full frock-coat, glazed cap, and so forth, in size and general appearance answering to the prisoner at the bar. This person was waiting there; and whenever any one approached him, he moved to and from the corner, as though he would avoid being suspected or recognized. Afterwards, two persons were seen by Webster walking in Howard Street, with a slow, deliberate movement that attracted his attention. This was about half past nine. One of these he took to be the prisoner at the bar, the other he did not know.

About half past ten a person is seen sitting on the ropewalk steps, wrapped in a cloak. He drops his head when passed, to avoid being known. Shortly after, two persons are seen to meet in this street, without ceremony or salutation, and in a hurried manner to converse for a short time; then to separate, and run off with great speed. Now, on this same night a gentleman is slain, murdered in his bed, his house being entered by stealth from without; and his house situated within three hundred feet of this street. The windows of his chamber were in plain sight from this street; a weapon of death is afterwards found in a place where these persons were seen to pass, in a retired place, around which they had been seen lingering. It is now known that this murder was committed by four persons, conspiring together for this purpose. No account is given who these suspected persons thus seen in Brown Street and its neighborhood were. Now, I ask, Gentlemen, whether you or any man can doubt that this murder was committed by the persons who were thus in and about Brown Street. Can any person doubt that they were there for purposes connected with this murder? If not for this purpose, what were they there for? When there is a cause so near at hand, why wander into conjecture for an explanation? Common sense requires you to take the nearest adequate cause for a known effect. Who were these suspicious persons in Brown Street? There was something extraordinary about them; something noticeable, and noticed at the time; something in their appearance that aroused suspicion. And a man is found the next morning murdered in the near vicinity.

Now, so long as no other account shall be given of those suspicious persons, so long the inference must remain irresistible that they were the murderers. Let it be remembered, that it is already shown that this murder was the result of conspiracy and of concert; let it be remembered, that the house, having been opened from within, was entered by stealth from without. Let it be remembered that Brown Street, where these persons were repeatedly seen under such suspicious circumstances, was a place from which every occupied room in Mr. White's house is clearly seen; let it be remembered, that the place, though thus very near to Mr. White's house, is a retired and lonely place; and let it be remembered that the instrument of death was afterwards found concealed very near the same spot.

Must not every man come to the conclusion, that these persons thus seen in Brown Street were the murderers? Every man's own judgment, I think, must satisfy him that this must be so. It is a plain deduction of common sense. It is a point on which each one of you may reason like a Hale or a Mansfield. The two occurrences explain each other. The murder shows why these persons were thus lurking, at that hour, in Brown Street; and their lurking in Brown Street shows who committed the murder.

If, then, the persons in and about Brown Street were the plotters and executers of the murder of Captain White, we know who they were, and you know that there is one of them.

This fearful concatenation of circumstances puts him to an account. He was a conspirator. He had entered into this plan of murder. The murder is committed, and he is known to have been within three minutes' walk of the place. He must account for himself. He has attempted this, and failed. Then, with all these general reasons to show he was actually in Brown Street, and his failures in his alibi, let us see what is the direct proof of his being there. But first, let me ask, is it not very remarkable that there is no attempt to show where Richard Crowninshield, Jr. was on that night? We hear nothing of him. He was seen in none of his usual haunts about the town. Yet, if he was the actual perpetrator of the murder, which nobody doubts, he was in the town somewhere. Can you, therefore, entertain a doubt that he was one of the persons seen in Brown Street? And as to the prisoner, you will recollect, that, since the testimony of the young men has failed to show where he was on that evening, the last we hear or know of him, on the day preceding the murder, is, that at four o'clock, P. M., he was at his brother's in Wenham. He had left home, after dinner, in a manner doubtless designed to avoid observation, and had gone to Wenham, probably by way of Danvers. As we hear nothing of him after four o'clock, P. M., for the remainder of the day and evening; as he was one of the conspirators; as Richard Crowninshield, Jr. was another; as Richard Crowninshield, Jr. was in town in the evening, and yet seen in no usual place of resort; the inference is very fair, that Richard Crowninshield, Jr. and the prisoner were together, acting in execution of their conspiracy. Of the four conspirators, J. J. Knapp, Jr. was at Wenham, and George Crowninshield has been accounted for; so that if the persons seen in Brown Street were the murderers, one of them must have been Richard Crowninshield, Jr., and the other must have been the prisoner at the bar.

Now, as to the proof of his identity with one of the persons seen in Brown Street. Mr. Mirick, a cautious witness, examined the person he saw, closely, in a light night, and says that he thinks the prisoner at the bar is the person; and that he should not hesitate at all, if he were seen in the same dress. His opinion is formed partly from his own observation, and partly from the description of others. But this description turns out to be only in regard to the dress. It is said, that he is now more confident than on the former trial. If he has varied in his testimony, make such allowance as you may think proper. I do not perceive any material variance. He thought him the same person, when he was first brought to court, and as he saw him get out of the chaise. This is one of the cases in which a witness is permitted to give an opinion. This witness is as honest as yourselves, neither willing nor swift; but he says, he believes it was the man. His words are, "This is my opinion"; and this opinion it is proper for him to give. If partly founded on what he has heard, then this opinion is not to be taken; but if on what he saw, then you can have no better evidence. I lay no stress on similarity of dress. No man will ever lose his life by my voice on such evidence. But then it is proper to notice, that no inferences drawn from any dissimilarity of dress can be given in the prisoner's favor; because, in fact, the person seen by Mirick was dressed like the prisoner.

The description of the person seen by Mirick answers to that of the prisoner at the bar. In regard to the supposed discrepancy of statements, before and now, there would be no end to such minute inquiries. It would not be strange if witnesses should vary. I do not think much of slight shades of variation. If I believe the witness is honest, that is enough. If he has expressed himself more strongly now than then, this does not prove him false.

Peter E. Webster saw the prisoner at the bar, as he then thought, and still thinks, walking in Howard Street at half past nine o'clock. He then thought it was Frank Knapp, and has not altered his opinion since. He knew him well; he had long known him. If he then thought it was he, this goes far to prove it. He observed him the more, as it was unusual to see gentlemen walk there at that hour. It was a retired, lonely street. Now, is there reasonable doubt that Mr. Webster did see him there that night? How can you have more proof than this? He judged by his walk, by his general appearance, by his deportment. We all judge in this manner. If you believe he is right, it goes a great way in this case. But then this person, it is said, had a cloak on, and that he could not, therefore, be the same person that Mirick saw. If we were treating of men that had no occasion to disguise themselves or their conduct, there might be something in this argument. But as it is, there is little in it. It may be presumed that they would change their dress. This would help their disguise. What is easier than to throw off a cloak, and again put it on? Perhaps he was less fearful of being known when alone, than when with the perpetrator.

Mr. Southwick swears all that a man can swear. He has the best means of judging that could be had at the time. He tells you that he left his father's house at half past ten o'clock, and as he passed to his own house in Brown Street, he saw a man sitting on the steps of the ropewalk; that he passed him three times, and each time he held down his head, so that he did not see his face. That the man had on a cloak, which was not wrapped around him, and a glazed cap. That he took the man to be Frank Knapp at the time; that, when he went into his house, he told his wife that he thought it was Frank Knapp; that he knew him well, having known him from a boy. And his wife swears that he did so tell her when he came home. What could mislead this witness at the time? He was not then suspecting Frank Knapp of any thing. He could not then be influenced by any prejudice. If you believe that the witness saw Frank Knapp in this position at this time, it proves the case. Whether you believe it or not depends upon the credit of the witness. He swears it. If true, it is solid evidence. Mrs Southwick supports her husband. Are they true? Are they worthy of belief? If he deserves the epithets applied to him, then he ought not to be believed. In this fact they cannot be mistaken; they are right, or they are perjured. As to his not speaking to Frank Knapp, that depends upon their intimacy. But a very good reason is, Frank chose to disguise himself,

This makes nothing against his credit. But it is said that he should not be believed. And why? Because, it is said, he himself now tells you, that, when he testified before the grand jury at Ipswich, he did not then say that he thought the person he saw in Brown Street was Frank Knapp, but that "the person was about the size of Selman." The means of attacking him, therefore, come from himself. If he is a false man, why should he tell truths against himself? They rely on his veracity to prove that he is a liar. Before you can come to this conclusion, you will consider whether all the circumstances are now known, that should have a bearing on this point. Suppose that, when he was before the grand jury, he was asked by the attorney this question, "Was the person you saw in Brown Street about the size of Selman?" and he answered, Yes. This was all true. Suppose, also, that he expected to be inquired of further, and no further questions were put to him? Would it not be extremely hard to impute to him perjury for this? It is not uncommon for witnesses to think that they have done all their duty, when they have answered the questions put to them. But suppose that we admit that he did not then tell all he knew, this does not affect the fact at all; because he did tell, at the time, in the hearing of others, that the person he saw was Frank Knapp. There is not the slightest suggestion against the veracity or accuracy of Mrs. Southwick. Now she swears positively, that her husband came into the house and told her that he had seen a person on the ropewalk steps, and believed it was Frank Knapp.

It is said that Mr. Southwick is contradicted, also, by Mr. Shillaber. I do not so understand Mr. Shillaber's testimony. I think what they both testify is reconcilable, and consistent. My learned brother said, on a similar occasion, that there is more probability, in such cases, that the persons hearing should misunderstand, than that the person speaking should contradict himself. I think the same remark applicable here.

You have all witnessed the uncertainty of testimony, when witnesses are called to testify what other witnesses said. Several respectable counsellors have been summoned, on this occasion, to give testimony of that sort. They have, every one of them, given different versions. They all took minutes at the time, and without doubt intend to state the truth. But still they differ. Mr. Shillaber's version is different from every thing that Southwick has stated elsewhere. But little reliance is to be placed on slight variations in testimony, unless they are manifestly intentional. I think that Mr. Shillaber must be satisfied that he did not rightly understand Mr. Southwick. I confess I misunderstood Mr. Shillaber on the former trial, if I now rightly understand him. I, therefore, did not then recall Mr. Southwick to the stand. Mr. Southwick, as I read it, understood Mr. Shillaber as asking him about a person coming out of Newbury Street, and whether, for aught he knew, it might not be Richard Crowninshield, Jr. He answered, that he could not tell. He did not understand Mr. Shillaber as questioning him as to the person whom he saw sitting on the steps of the ropewalk. Southwick, on this trial, having heard Mr. Shillaber, has been recalled to the stand, and states that Mr. Shillaber entirely misunderstood him. This is certainly most probable, because the controlling fact in the case is not controverted; that is, that Southwick did tell his wife, at the very moment he entered his house, that he had seen a person on the ropewalk steps, whom he believed to be Frank Knapp. Nothing can prove with more certainty than this, that Southwick, at the time, thought the person whom he thus saw to be the prisoner at the bar.

Mr. Bray is an acknowledged accurate and intelligent witness. He was highly complimented by my brother on the former trial, although he now charges him with varying his testimony. What could be his motive? You will be slow in imputing to him any design of this kind. I deny altogether that there is any contradiction. There may be differences, but not contradiction. These arise from the difference in the questions put; the difference between believing and knowing. On the first trial, he said he did not know the person, and now says the same. Then, we did not do all we had a right to do. We did not ask him who he thought it was. Now, when so asked, he says he believes it was the prisoner at the bar. If he had then been asked this question, he would have given the same answer. That he has expressed himself more strongly, I admit; but he has not contradicted himself. He is more confident now; and that is all. A man may not assert a thing, and still may have no doubt upon it. Cannot every man see this distinction to be consistent? I leave him in that attitude; that only is the difference. On questions of identity, opinion is evidence. We may ask the witness, either if he knew who the person seen was, or who he thinks he was. And he may well answer, as Captain Bray has answered, that he does not know who it was, but that he thinks it was the prisoner.

We have offered to produce witnesses to prove, that, as soon as Bray saw the prisoner, he pronounced him the same person. We are not at liberty to call them to corroborate our own witness. How, then, could this fact of the prisoner's being in Brown Street be better proved? If ten witnesses had testified to it, it would be no better. Two men, who knew him well, took it to be Frank Knapp, and one of them so said, when there was nothing to mislead them. Two others, who examined him closely, now swear to their opinion that he is the man.

Miss Jaqueth saw three persons pass by the ropewalk, several evenings before the murder. She saw one of them pointing towards Mr. White's house. She noticed that another had something which appeared to be like an instrument of music; that he put it behind him and attempted to conceal it. Who were these persons? This was but a few steps from the place where this apparent instrument of music (of music such as Richard Crowninshield, Jr. spoke of to Palmer) was afterwards found. These facts prove this a point of rendezvous for these parties. They show Brown Street to have been the place for consultation and observation; and to this purpose it was well suited.

Mr. Burns's testimony is also important. What was the defendant's object in his private conversation with Burns? He knew that Burns was out that night; that he lived near Brown Street, and that he had probably seen him; and he wished him to say nothing. He said to Burns, "If you saw any of your friends out that night, say nothing about it; my brother Joe and I are your friends." This is plain proof that he wished to say to him, if you saw me in Brown Street that night, say nothing about it.

But it is said that Burns ought not to be believed, because he mistook the color of the dagger, and because he has varied in his description of it. These are slight circumstances, if his general character be good. To my mind they are of no importance. It is for you to make what deduction you may think proper, on this account, from the weight of his evidence. His conversation with Burns, if Burns is believed, shows two things; first, that he desired Burns not to mention it, if he had seen him on the night of the murder; second, that he wished to fix the charge of murder on Mr. Stephen White. Both of these prove his own guilt.

I think you will be of opinion, that Brown Street was a probable place for the conspirators to assemble, and for an aid to be stationed. If we knew their whole plan, and if we were skilled to judge in such a case, then we could perhaps determine on this point better. But it is a retired place, and still commands a full view of the house; a lonely place, but still a place of observation. Not so lonely that a person would excite suspicion to be seen walking there in an ordinary manner; not so public as to be noticed by many. It is near enough to the scene of action in point of law. It was their point of centrality. The club was found near the spot, in a place provided for it, in a place that had been previously hunted out, in a concerted place of concealment. Here was their point of rendezvous. Here might the lights be seen. Here might an aid be secreted. Here was he within call. Here might he be aroused by the sound of the whistle. Here might he carry the weapon. Here might he receive the murderer after the murder.

Then, Gentlemen, the general question occurs, Is it satisfactorily proved, by all these facts and circumstances, that the defendant was in and about Brown Street on the night of the murder? Considering that the murder was effected by a conspiracy; considering that he was one of the four conspirators; considering that two of the conspirators have accounted for themselves on the night of the murder, and were not in Brown Street; considering that the prisoner does not account for himself, nor show where he was; considering that Richard Crowninshield, the other conspirator and the perpetrator, is not accounted for, nor shown to be elsewhere; considering that it is now past all doubt that two persons were seen lurking in and about Brown Street at different times, avoiding observation, and exciting so much suspicion that the neighbors actually watched them; considering that, if these persons thus lurking in Brown Street at that hour were not the murderers, it remains to this day wholly unknown who they were or what their business was; considering the testimony of Miss Jaqueth, and that the club was afterwards found near this place; considering, finally, that Webster and Southwick saw these persons, and then took one of them for the defendant, and that Southwick then told his wife so, and that Bray and Mirick examined them closely, and now swear to their belief that the prisoner was one of them; it is for you to say, putting these considerations together, whether you believe the prisoner was actually in Brown Street at the time of the murder.

By the counsel for the prisoner, much stress has been laid upon the question, whether Brown Street was a place in which aid could be given, a place in which actual assistance could be rendered in this transaction. This must be mainly decided by their own opinion who selected the place; by what they thought at the time, according to their plan of operation.

If it was agreed that the prisoner should be there to assist, it is enough. If they thought the place proper for their purpose, according to their plan, it is sufficient. Suppose we could prove expressly that they agreed that Frank should be there, and he was there, and you should think it not a well-chosen place for aiding and abetting, must he be acquitted? No! It is not what I think or you think of the appropriateness of the place; it is what they thought at the time. If the prisoner was in Brown Street by appointment and agreement with the perpetrator, for the purpose of giving assistance if assistance should be needed, it may safely be presumed that the place was suited to such assistance as it was supposed by the parties might chance to become requisite.

If in Brown Street, was he there by appointment? was he there to aid, if aid were necessary? was he there for, or against, the murderer? to concur, or to oppose? to favor, or to thwart? Did the perpetrator know he was there, there waiting? If so, then it follows that he was there by appointment. He was at the post half an hour; he was waiting for somebody. This proves appointment, arrangement, previous agreement; then it follows that he was there to aid, to encourage, to embolden the perpetrator; and that is enough. If he were in such a situation as to afford aid, or that he was relied upon for aid, then he was aiding and abetting. It is enough that the conspirator desired to have him there. Besides, it may be well said, that he could afford just as much aid there as if he had been in Essex Street, as if he had been standing even at the gate, or at the window. It was not an act of power against power that was to be done; it was a secret act, to be done by stealth. The aid was to be placed in a position secure from observation. It was important to the security of both that he should be in a lonely place. Now it is obvious that there are many purposes for which he might be in Brown Street.

1. Richard Crowninshield might have been secreted in the garden, and waiting for a signal;

2 Or he might be in Brown Street to advise him as to the time of making his entry into the house;

3. Or to favor his escape;

4. Or to see if the street was clear when he came out;

5. Or to conceal the weapon or the clothes;

6. To be ready for any unforeseen contingency.

Richard Crowninshield lived in Danvers. He would retire by the most secret way. Brown Street is that way. If you find him there, can you doubt why he was there?

If, Gentlemen, the prisoner went into Brown Street, by appointment with the perpetrator, to render aid or encouragement in any of these ways, he was present, in legal contemplation, aiding and abetting in this murder. It is not necessary that he should have done any thing; it is enough that he was ready to act, and in a place to act. If his being in Brown Street, by appointment, at the time of the murder, emboldened the purpose and encouraged the heart of the murderer, by the hope of instant aid, if aid should become necessary, then, without doubt, he was present, aiding and abetting, and was a principal in the murder.

I now proceed, Gentlemen, to the consideration of the testimony of Mr. Colman. Although this evidence bears on every material part of the cause, I have purposely avoided every comment on it till the present moment, when I have done with the other evidence in the case. As to the admission of this evidence, there has been a great struggle, and its importance demanded it. The general rule of law is, that confessions are to be received as evidence. They are entitled to great or to little consideration, according to the circumstances under which they are made. Voluntary, deliberate confessions are the most important and satisfactory evidence, but confessions hastily made, or improperly obtained, are entitled to little or no consideration. It is always to be inquired, whether they were purely voluntary, or were made under any undue influence of hope or fear; for, in general, if any influence were exerted on the mind of the person confessing, such confessions are not to be submitted to a jury.

Who is Mr. Colman? He is an intelligent, accurate, and cautious witness; a gentleman of high and well-known character, and of unquestionable veracity; as a clergyman, highly respectable; as a man, of fair name and fame.

Why was Mr. Colman with the prisoner? Joseph J. Knapp was his parishioner; he was the head of a family, and had been married by Mr. Colman. The interests of that family were dear to him. He felt for their afflictions, and was anxious to alleviate their sufferings. He went from the purest and best of motives to visit Joseph Knapp. He came to save, not to destroy; to rescue, not to take away life. In this family, he thought there might be a chance to save one. It is a misconstruction of Mr. Colman's motives, at once the most strange and the most uncharitable, a perversion of all just views of his conduct and intentions the most unaccountable, to represent him as acting, on this occasion, in hostility to any one, or as desirous of injuring or endangering any one. He has stated his own motives, and his own conduct, in a manner to command universal belief and universal respect. For intelligence, for consistency, for accuracy, for caution, for candor, never did witness acquit himself better, or stand fairer. In all that he did as a man, and all he has said as a witness, he has shown himself worthy of entire regard.

Now, Gentlemen, very important confessions made by the prisoner are sworn to by Mr. Colman. They were made in the prisoner's cell, where Mr. Colman had gone with the prisoner's brother, N. Phippen Knapp. Whatever conversation took place was in the presence of N. P. Knapp. Now, on the part of the prisoner, two things are asserted; first, that such inducements were suggested to the prisoner, in this interview, that no confessions made by him ought to be received; second, that, in point of fact, he made no such confessions as Mr. Colman testifies to, nor, indeed, any confessions at all. These two propositions are attempted to be supported by the testimony of N. P. Knapp. These two witnesses, Mr. Colman and N. P Knapp, differ entirely. There is no possibility of reconciling them. No charity can cover both. One or the other has sworn falsely. If N. P. Knapp be believed, Mr. Colman's testimony must be wholly disregarded. It is, then, a question of credit, a question of belief between the two witnesses. As you decide between these, so you will decide on all this part of the case.

Mr. Colman has given you a plain narrative, a consistent account, and has uniformly stated the same things. He is not contradicted, except by the testimony of Phippen Knapp. He is influenced, as far as we can see, by no bias, or prejudice, any more than other men, except so far as his character is now at stake. He has feelings on this point, doubtless, and ought to have. If what he has stated be not true, I cannot see any ground for his escape. If he be a true man, he must have heard what he testifies. No treachery of memory brings to memory things that never took place. There is no reconciling his evidence with good intention, if the facts are not as he states them. He is on trial as to his veracity.

The relation in which the other witness stands deserves your careful consideration. He is a member of the family. He has the lives of two brothers depending, as he may think, on the effect of his evidence; depending on every word he speaks. I hope he has not another responsibility resting upon him. By the advice of a friend, and that friend Mr. Colman, J. Knapp made a full and free confession, and obtained a promise of pardon. He has since, as you know, probably by the advice of other friends, retracted that confession, and rejected the offered pardon. Events will show who of these friends and advisers advised him best, and befriended him most. In the mean time, if this brother, the witness, be one of these advisers, and advised the retraction he has, most emphatically, the lives of his brothers resting upon his evidence and upon his conduct. Compare the situation of these two witnesses. Do you not see mighty motive enough on the one side, and want of all motive on the other? I would gladly find an apology for that witness, in his agonized feelings, in his distressed situation; in the agitation of that hour, or of this. I would gladly impute it to error, or to want of recollection, to confusion of mind, or disturbance of feeling. I would gladly impute to any pardonable source that which cannot be reconciled to facts and to truth; but, even in a case calling for so much sympathy, justice must yet prevail, and we must come to the conclusion, however reluctantly, which that demands from us.

It is said, Phippen Knapp was probably correct, because he knew he should probably be called as a witness. Witness to what? When he says there was no confession, what could he expect to bear witness of? But I do not put it on the ground that he did not hear; I am compelled to put it on the other ground, that he did hear, and does not now truly tell what he heard.

If Mr. Colman were out of the case, there are other reasons why the story of Phippen Knapp should not be believed. It has in it inherent improbabilities. It is unnatural, and inconsistent with the accompanying circumstances. He tells you that they went "to the cell of Frank, to see if he had any objection to taking a trial, and suffering his brother to accept the offer of pardon"; in other words, to obtain Frank's consent to Joseph's making a confession; and in case this consent was not obtained, that the pardon would be offered to Frank. Did they bandy about the chance of life, between these two, in this way? Did Mr. Colman, after having given this pledge to Joseph, and after having received a disclosure from Joseph, go to the cell of Frank for such a purpose as this? It is impossible; it cannot be so.

Again, we know that Mr. Colman found the club the next day; that he went directly to the place of deposit, and found it at the first attempt, exactly where he says he had been informed it was. Now Phippen Knapp says, that Frank had stated nothing respecting the club; that it was not mentioned in that conversation. He says, also, that he was present in the cell of Joseph all the time that Mr. Colman was there; that he believes he heard all that was said in Joseph's cell; and that he did not himself know where the club was, and never had known where it was, until he heard it stated in court. Now it is certain that Mr Colman says he did not learn the particular place of deposit of the club from Joseph; that he only learned from him that it was deposited under the steps of the Howard Street meeting-house, without defining the particular steps. It is certain, also, that he had more knowledge of the position of the club than this; else how could he have placed his hand on it so readily? and where else could he have obtained this knowledge, except from Frank?

Here Mr. Dexter said that Mr. Colman had had other interviews with Joseph, and might have derived the information from him at previous visits. Mr. Webster replied, that Mr. Colman had testified that he learned nothing in relation to the club until this visit. Mr. Dexter denied there being any such testimony. Mr. Colman's evidence was read, from the notes of the judges, and several other persons, and Mr Webster then proceeded.

My point is to show that Phippen Knapp's story is not true, is not consistent with itself; that, taking it for granted, as he says, that he heard all that was said to Mr. Colman in both cells, by Joseph and by Frank; and that Joseph did not state particularly where the club was deposited; and that he knew as much about the place of deposit of the club as Mr. Colman knew; why, then Mr. Colman must either have been miraculously informed respecting the club, or Phippen Knapp has not told you the whole truth. There is no reconciling this, without supposing that Mr. Colman has misrepresented what took place in Joseph's cell, as well as what took place in Frank's cell.

Again, Phippen Knapp is directly contradicted by Mr. Wheatland. Mr. Wheatland tells the same story, as coming from Phippen Knapp, that Colman now tells. Here there are two against one. Phippen Knapp says that Frank made no confessions, and that he said he had none to make. In this he is contradicted by Wheatland. He, Phippen Knapp, told Wheatland, that Mr. Colman did ask Frank some questions, and that Frank answered them. He told him also what these answers were. Wheatland does not recollect the questions or answers, but recollects his reply; which was, "Is not this premature? I think this answer is sufficient to make Frank a principal." Here Phippen Knapp opposes himself to Wheatland, as well as to Mr. Colman. Do you believe Phippen Knapp against these two respectable witnesses, or them against him?

Is not Mr. Colman's testimony credible, natural, and proper? To judge of this, you must go back to that scene.

The murder had been committed; the two Knapps were now arrested; four persons were already in jail supposed to be concerned in it, the Crowninshields, and Selman, and Chase. Another person at the Eastward was supposed to be in the plot; it was important to learn the facts. To do this, some one of those suspected must be admitted to turn state's witness. The contest was, Who should have this privilege? It was understood that it was about to be offered to Palmer, then in Maine; there was no good reason why he should have the preference. Mr. Colman felt interested for the family of the Knapps, and particularly for Joseph. He was a young man who had hitherto maintained a fair standing in society; he was a husband. Mr. Colman was particularly intimate with his family. With these views he went to the prison. He believed that he might safely converse with the prisoner, because he thought confessions made to a clergyman were sacred, and that he could not be called upon to disclose them. He went, the first time, in the morning, and was requested to come again. He went again at three o'clock; and was requested to call again at five o'clock. In the mean time he saw the father and Phippen, and they wished he would not go again, because it would be said the prisoners were making confession. He said he had engaged to go again at five o'clock; but would not, if Phippen would excuse him to Joseph. Phippen engaged to do this, and to meet him at his office at five o'clock. Mr. Colman went to the office at the time, and waited; but, as Phippen was not there, he walked down street, and saw him coming from the jail. He met him, and while in conversation, near the church, he saw Mrs. Beckford and Mrs. Knapp going in a chaise towards the jail. He hastened to meet them, as he thought it not proper for them to go in at that time. While conversing with them near the jail, he received two distinct messages from Joseph, that he wished to see him. He thought it proper to go; and accordingly went to Joseph's cell, and it was while there that the disclosures were made. Before Joseph had finished his statement, Phippen came to the door; he was soon after admitted. A short interval ensued, and they went together to the cell of Frank. Mr. Colman went in by invitation of Phippen; he had come directly from the cell of Joseph, where he had for the first time learned the incidents of the tragedy. He was incredulous as to some of the facts which he had learned, they were so different from his previous impressions. He was desirous of knowing whether he could place confidence in what Joseph had told him. He, therefore, put the questions to Frank, as he has testified before you; in answer to which Frank Knapp informed him,—

1. "That the murder took place between ten and eleven o'clock."

2. "That Richard Crowninshield was alone in the house."

3. "That he, Frank Knapp, went home afterwards."

4. "That the club was deposited under the steps of the Howard Street meeting-house, and under the part nearest the burying-ground, in a rat hole."

5. "That the dagger or daggers had been worked up at the factory."

It is said that these five answers just fit the case; that they are just what was wanted, and neither more nor less. True, they are; but the reason is, because truth always fits. Truth is always congruous, and agrees with itself; every truth in the universe agrees with every other truth in the universe; whereas falsehoods not only disagree with truths, but usually quarrel among themselves. Surely Mr. Colman is influenced by no bias, no prejudice; he has no feelings to warp him, except, now that he is contradicted, he may feel an interest to be believed.

If you believe Mr. Colman, then the evidence is fairly in the case.

I shall now proceed on the ground that you do believe Mr. Colman.

When told that Joseph had determined to confess, the defendant said, "It is hard, or unfair, that Joseph should have the benefit of confessing, since the thing was done for his benefit." What thing was done for his benefit? Does not this carry an implication of the guilt of the defendant? Does it not show that he had a knowledge of the object and history of the murder?

The defendant said, "I told Joseph, when he proposed it, that it was a silly business, and would get us into trouble." He knew, then, what this business was; he knew that Joseph proposed it, and that he agreed to it, else he could not get us into trouble; he understood its bearing and its consequences. Thus much was said, under circumstances that make it clearly evidence against him, before there is any pretence of an inducement held out. And does not this prove him to have had a knowledge of the conspiracy?

He knew the daggers had been destroyed, and he knew who committed the murder. How could he have innocently known these facts? Why, if by Richard's story, this shows him guilty of a knowledge of the murder, and of the conspiracy. More than all, he knew when the deed was done, and that he went home afterwards. This shows his participation in that deed. "Went home afterwards!" Home, from what scene? home, from what fact? home, from what transaction? home, from what place? This confirms the supposition that the prisoner was in Brown Street for the purposes ascribed to him. These questions were directly put, and directly answered. He does not intimate that he received the information from another. Now, if he knows the time, and went home afterwards, and does not excuse himself, is not this an admission that he had a hand in this murder? Already proved to be a conspirator in the murder, he now confesses that he knew who did it, at what time it was done, that he was himself out of his own house at the time, and went home afterwards. Is not this conclusive, if not explained? Then comes the club. He told where it was. This is like possession of stolen goods. He is charged with the guilty knowledge of this concealment. He must show, not say, how he came by this knowledge. If a man be found with stolen goods, he must prove how he came by them. The place of deposit of the club was premeditated and selected, and he knew where it was.

Joseph Knapp was an accessory, and an accessory only; he knew only what was told him. But the prisoner knew the particular spot in which the club might be found. This shows his knowledge something more than that of an accessory. This presumption must be rebutted by evidence, or it stands strong against him. He has too much knowledge of this transaction to have come innocently by it. It must stand against him until he explains it.

This testimony of Mr. Colman is represented as new matter, and therefore an attempt has been made to excite a prejudice against it. It is not so. How little is there in it, after all, that did not appear from other sources? It is mainly confirmatory. Compare what you learn from this confession with what you before knew.

As to its being proposed by Joseph, was not that known?

As to Richard's being alone in the house, was not that known?
As to the daggers, was not that known?
As to the time of the murder, was not that known?
As to his being out that night, was not that known?
As to his returning afterwards, was not that known?
As to the club, was not that known?

So this information confirms what was known before, and fully confirms it.

One word as to the interview between Mr. Colman and Phippen Knapp on the turnpike. It is said that Mr. Colman's conduct in this matter is inconsistent with his testimony. There does not appear to me to be any inconsistency. He tells you that his object was to save Joseph, and to hurt no one, and least of all the prisoner at the bar. He had probably told Mr. White the substance of what he heard at the prison. He had probably told him that Frank confirmed what Joseph had confessed. He was unwilling to be the instrument of harm to Frank. He therefore, at the request of Phippen Knapp, wrote a note to Mr. White, requesting him to consider Joseph as authority for the information he had received. He tells you that this is the only thing he has to regret; as it may seem to be an evasion, as he doubts whether it was entirely correct. If it was an evasion, if it was a deviation, if it was an error, it was an error of mercy, an error of kindness; an error that proves he had no hostility to the prisoner at the bar. It does not in the least vary his testimony, or affect its correctness. Gentlemen, I look on the evidence of Mr. Colman as highly important; not as bringing into the cause new facts, but as confirming, in a very satisfactory manner, other evidence. It is incredible that he can be false, and that he is seeking the prisoner's life through false swearing. If he is true, it is incredible that the prisoner can be innocent.

Gentlemen, I have gone through with the evidence in this case, and have endeavored to state it plainly and fairly before you. I think there are conclusions to be drawn from it, the accuracy of which you cannot doubt. I think you cannot doubt that there was a conspiracy formed for the purpose of committing this murder, and who the conspirators were:

That you cannot doubt that the Crowninshields and the Knapps were the parties in this conspiracy:

That you cannot doubt that the prisoner at the bar knew that the murder was to be done on the night of the 6th of April:

That you cannot doubt that the murderers of Captain White were the suspicious persons seen in and about Brown Street on that night:

That you cannot doubt that Richard Crowninshield was the perpetrator of that crime:

That you cannot doubt that the prisoner at the bar was in Brown Street on that night.

If there, then it must be by agreement, to countenance, to aid the perpetrator. And if so, then he is guilty as PRINCIPAL.

Gentlemen, your whole concern should be to do your duty, and leave consequences to take care of themselves. You will receive the law from the court. Your verdict, it is true, may endanger the prisoner's life, but then it is to save other lives. If the prisoner's guilt has been shown and proved beyond all reasonable doubt, you will convict him. If such reasonable doubts of guilt still remain, you will acquit him. You are the judges of the whole case. You owe a duty to the public, as well as to the prisoner at the bar. You cannot presume to be wiser than the law. Your duty is a plain, straight-forward one. Doubtless we would all judge him in mercy. Towards him, as an individual, the law inculcates no hostility; but towards him, if proved to be a murderer, the law, and the oaths you have taken, and public justice, demand that you do your duty.

With consciences satisfied with the discharge of duty, no consequences can harm you. There is no evil that we cannot either face or fly from, but the consciousness of duty disregarded. A sense of duty pursues us ever. It is omnipresent, like the Deity. If we take to ourselves the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, duty performed, or duty violated, is still with us, for our happiness or our misery. If we say the darkness shall cover us, in the darkness as in the light our obligations are yet with us. We cannot escape their power, nor fly from their presence. They are with us in this life, will be with us at its close; and in that scene of inconceivable solemnity, which lies yet farther onward, we shall still find ourselves surrounded by the consciousness of duty, to pain us wherever it has been violated, and to console us so far as God may have given us grace to perform it.

THE BANK OF THE UNITED STATES AGAINST WILLIAM D. PRIMROSE.*

The case of The Bank of the United States against William D. Primrose was brought up by appeal from the Circuit Court of Alabama, together with the cases of The Bank of Augusta against Joseph B. Earle, and The New Orleans and Carrollton Railroad Company also against Joseph B. Earle. The same principle was at issue in the three cases.

The facts in the case of The Bank of the United States against William D. Primrose were as follows.

"The Bank of The United States, incorporated by the legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, as the holders of a bill of exchange, protested for non-payment, for five thousand three hundred and fifty dollars, drawn by Charles Gascoigne, at Mobile, on the 14th of January, 1837, at four months, on J. and C. Gascoigne of New York, in favor of William D. Primrose, and by him indorsed, instituted, in October, 1837, an action against the indorser of the bill, in the Circuit Court of the Southern District of Alabama. The agreed facts of the case which were submitted to the Circuit Court were as follows.

"The plaintiffs are a body corporate existing under and by virtue of a law of the State of Pennsylvania, authorized by its charter to sue and be sued by the name of the President, Directors, and Company of the Bank of the United States, and to deal in bills of exchange; and composed of citizens of Pennsylvania, and of States of the United States other than the State of Alabama. The defendant is a citizen of the State of Alabama. George Poe, Jr. was the agent of the plaintiffs, resident in Mobile, and in the possession of funds belonging to the plaintiffs, intrusted to him for the sole purpose of purchasing bills of exchange. The said George Poe, Jr., as such agent, on the 14th day of January, 1837, purchased at Mobile the bill declared upon, and paid for the same in notes of the branch of the Bank of the State of Alabama at

* An argument made in the Supreme Court of the United States, on the 9th of February, 1839.

Mobile. The defendant is the payee of the bill, and indorsed it to plaintiffs, the present holders. The bill was presented at maturity to the acceptors, and duly protested for non-payment, and due and legal notice given to the defendant.

"The question for the opinion of the court on the foregoing statement of facts is, whether the purchase of the said bill of exchange by the plaintiffs as aforesaid was a valid contract under the laws of Alabama. If the court be of opinion that the said contract was valid, and that the said plaintiffs, as holders of the said bill, acquired the legal title thereto by the said purchase, then judgment to be rendered for the plaintiffs for the sum of five thousand three hundred and fifty dollars, with interest at eight per cent. since the 30th of May, 1837, and ten per cent. damages. But if the court be of opinion that the said purchase was prohibited by the laws of Alabama, and the contract was therefore invalid and void, judgment is to be rendered for the defendant.

"The Circuit Court of Alabama gave judgment for the defendant."

The cause was transferred by writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States, and was tried in connection with the two others above named, in which the same question was raised.

The case of The Bank of the United States against Primrose was argued by Mr. Sergeant and Mr. Webster for the plaintiffs in error. The cause was one of high importance, covering a vast variety of contracts entered into in the several States of the Union by the agents of corporations established in other States. It was calledat the time the "Great Appeal Case from Alabama."

The opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, reversing the decision of the court below, was delivered by Chief Justice Taney, Mr. Justice Baldwin concurring in the judgment of the court, for reasons stated in an opinion of his own, and Mr. Justice McKinley dissenting.

Mr. Webster's argument was as follows.

The record presents this case.

The Bank of the United States is a corporation created by a law of the State of Pennsylvania. By that act the bank, among other functions, possesses that of dealing in bills of exchange. In the month of January, 1837, having funds in Mobile, this bank, through the instrumentality of its agent, Mr. Poe, purchased a bill of exchange to remit to New York. This bill, drawn at Mobile upon New York, and indorsed by William D. Primrose, the defendant in this case, not having been paid either at New York or by the drawer, the Bank of the United States instituted this suit in the Circuit Court of Alabama, to recover the money due on the bill.

In the court below, it was decided that the contract by Poe in behalf of the bank was void, on two grounds: First, because it was a contract made by the Bank of the United States, in the State of Alabama; whereas a bank incorporated by the State of Pennsylvania can do no act out of the limits of Pennsylvania. Secondly, because Alabama has a bank of her own, the capital of which is owned by the State herself, which is authorized to buy and sell exchange, and from the profits of which she derives her revenue; and the purchase of bills of exchange being a banking operation, the purchase of such bills by others, at least by any corporation, although there is no express law forbidding it, is against the policy of the State of Alabama, as it may be inferred from the provisions of the constitution of that State, and the law made in conformity thereto.

It is admitted that the parties are rightfully in court. It is admitted, also, that the defendant is a citizen of Alabama, and that all the citizens who compose the corporation of the Bank of the United States are citizens of the State of Pennsylvania, or of some other State than Alabama. The question is, Can they, as a corporation, do any act within the State of Alabama? In other words, is there any thing in the constitution or laws of the State of Alabama which prohibits, or rightfully can prohibit, citizens of other States, or corporations created by other States, from buying and selling bills of exchange in the State of Alabama?

In his argument, yesterday, for the defendant in this case, my learned friend* asked certain questions which I propose to answer.

Can this bank, said he, transfer itself into the State of Alabama? Certainly not. Can it establish a branch in the State of Alabama, there to perform the same duties, and transact the same business, in all respects, as in the State of Pennsylvania? Certainly not. Can it exercise in the State of Alabama any of its corporate functions? Certainly it can. For my learned friend admits its right to sue in that State, which is a right that it possesses solely by the authority of the Pennsylvania law by which the bank is incorporated.

We thus clear the case of some difficulty by arriving at this point, the admission on both sides that there are certain powers which the bank can exercise within the State of Alabama, and certain others which it cannot exercise.

* Mr. Vande Gruff.

The question is, then, whether the bank can exercise, within the State of Alabama, this very power of buying a bill of exchange.

Our proposition is, that she can buy a bill of exchange within the State of Alabama; because there are no corporate functions necessary to the act of buying a bill of exchange; because buying and selling exchange is a thing open to all the world, in Alabama as well as everywhere else; because, although the power to buy and sell bills of exchange be conferred upon this bank by its charter, and it could not buy or sell a bill of exchange without that provision in its charter, yet this power was conferred upon it, as were other powers conferred by its charter, to place the bank upon the same footing as an individual; to give it, not a monopoly, not an exclusive privilege, in this respect, but simply the same power which the members of the corporation, as individuals, have an unquestionable right to exercise. The banker, the broker, the merchant, the manufacturer, all buy bills of exchange as individuals; the individuals who compose a corporation may do it; and we say that they may do it, though they do it in the name of, and for, the corporation. We say, undoubtedly, that they cannot acquire power, under the Pennsylvania charter, to do acts in Alabama which they cannot do as individuals; but we say that the corporation may do, in their corporate character, in Alabama, all such acts, authorized by their charter, as the members thereof would have a right to perform as individuals.

The learned counsel on the other side was certainly not disposed to concede, gratuitously, any thing in this case. Yet he did admit that there might be a case in which the acts of a corporation created by one State, done in another State, would be valid. He supposed the case of a railroad company in one State sending an agent into another State to buy iron for the construction of the road. Without conceding expressly the point of law in that case, he admitted that it would be a case very different from the present; and he gave as a reason for this admission, that it would be a single special act, necessary to enable the corporation to execute its functions within the State to which it belonged, and in this respect differing from the case now under consideration. In what circumstance, it may well be asked, do the cases differ? One act only of the corporation of the Bank of the United States is set forth in this record, and that act stands singly and by itself. There is no proof before the court, that the corporation ever bought another bill of exchange than that which is the subject of this suit. Transactions of this nature must necessarily come one by one before this court, when they come at all, and must stand or fall on their individual merits, and not upon the supposition of any policy which would recognize the legality of a single act, and deny the validity of the dealings or transactions generally, of which that act is a part.

Then, as to the other reason stated by my learned friend in support of the idea that such a purchase of iron might be admitted, he says it is because that, in that case, the purchase, being made abroad solely to enable the corporation to perform its functions at home, might be considered legal, under the law of comity of one State toward another.

Now, that supposed case is precisely the case before the court. Here is the case of a corporation established in Philadelphia, one of whose lawful functions is to deal in exchange. A Philadelphia merchant, having complied with the order of his correspondent in Alabama, draws a bill upon him for the amount due in consequence, goes to the Bank of the United States, and sells the bill. The funds thus realized by the bank from the purchase of bills of exchange accumulate in Alabama. How are those funds to be brought back by the Philadelphia corporation within its control? The bank has unquestioned power to deal in bills of exchange. Can there be such a thing as dealing in exchange, with a power to act only at one end of the line? Certainly not. How, then, is the bank in Philadelphia to get its funds back from Alabama? Suppose that it were to send an agent there and buy specie. Can the bank ship the specie? Can it sign an agreement for the freight, insurance, and charges of bringing it round? To do that would be an act of commerce, of navigation, not of exchange. A power conferred upon a bank to deal in exchange would be perfectly nugatory, unless accompanied by a power also to direct its funds to be remitted. The practical result of a contrary construction would be, that this Pennsylvania bank may carry on exchange between Philadelphia and Reading, or Philadelphia and Lancaster, but not by possibility with Mobile, or any other city or place in the South, or even with New York, Trenton, or Baltimore. Out of Pennsylvania it could only buy and remit. It could get no return. An exchange that runs but one way! What sort of an exchange is that?

Having cleared the case of some of these generalities, Mr. Webster proceeded to the exposition of what he considered a constitutional, American view of the question.

The record of this case finds that these plaintiffs, the members of the corporation of the Bank of the United States, are citizens of other States, and that the defendant is a citizen of Alabama. Now, in the first place, (to begin at the beginning of this part of the question,) what are the relations which the individual citizens of one State bear to the individual citizens of any other State of this Union?

How did the matter stand before the Revolution? When these States were Colonies, what was the relation between the inhabitants of the different Colonies? Certainly it was not one of aliens. They were not, indeed, all citizens of the same Colony; but certainly they were fellow-subjects, and owed a common allegiance; and it was not competent for the legislative power to say that the citizens of any one of the Colonies should be alien to the others. This was the state of the case until the 4th of July, 1776, when this common allegiance was thrown off. After a short interval of two years, and the renunciation of that allegiance, the Articles of Confederation were adopted; and now let us see what was the relation between the citizens of the different States by those articles. The government had become a confederation. But it was something more, much more. It was not merely an alliance between distinct governments for the common defence and general welfare, but it recognized and confirmed a community of interest, of character, and of privileges, between the citizens of the several States. "The better to secure and perpetuate mutual friendship and intercourse among the people of the different States in this Union," said the fourth of the Articles of Confederation, "the free inhabitants of each of these States shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of free citizens in the several States; and the people of each State shall have free ingress and egress to and from any other State, and shall enjoy therein all the privileges of trade and commerce." This placed the inhabitants of each State on equal ground as to the rights and privileges which they might exercise in every other State.

So things stood at the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. The article of the present Constitution, in fewer words and more general and comprehensive terms, confirms this community of rights and privileges in the following form: "The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States." However obvious and general this provision may be, it will be found to have some particular application to the case now before the court; the article in the Confederation serving as the expounder of this article in the Constitution.

That this article in the Constitution does not confer on the citizens of each State political rights in every other State is admitted. A citizen of Pennsylvania cannot go into Virginia and vote at an election in that State; though when he has acquired a residence in Virginia, and is otherwise qualified as required by her constitution, he becomes, without formal adoption as a citizen of Virginia, a citizen of that State politically. But for the purposes of trade, commerce, buying and selling, it is evidently not in the power of any State to impose any hinderance or embarrassment, or lay any excise, toll, duty, or exclusion, upon citizens of other States, or to place them, coming there, upon a different footing from her own citizens. There is one provision, then, in the Constitution, by which citizens of one State may trade in another without hinderance or embarrassment.

There is another provision of the Constitution, by which citizens of one State are entitled to sue citizens of any other State in the courts of the United States. This is a very plain and clear right under the Constitution; but it is not more clear than the preceding.

Here, then, are two distinct constitutional provisions conferring power upon citizens of Pennsylvania and every other State, as to what they may do in Alabama or any other State. Citizens of other States may trade in Alabama, in whatsoever is lawful to citizens of Alabama; and if, in the course of their dealings, they have claims on citizens of Alabama, they may sue in Alabama in the courts of the United States. This is American constitutional law, independent of all comity whatever.

By the decisions of this court, it has been settled that this right to sue is a right which may be exercised in the name of a corporation. Here is one of the rights, then, which may be exercised in Alabama by citizens of another State in the name of a corporation. If citizens of Pennsylvania can exercise in Alabama the right to sue, in the name of a corporation, what hinders them from exercising in the same manner this other constitutional right, the right to trade? If it be the established right of persons in Pennsylvania to sue in Alabama, in the name of a corporation, why may they not do any other lawful act in the name of a corporation? If no reason to the contrary can be given, then the law in the one case is the law also in the other case.

My learned friend says, indeed, that suing and making a contract are different things. True; but this argument, so far as it has any force, makes against his cause; for it is a much more distinct exercise of corporate power to bring a suit, than to make a purchase by an agent. What does the law take to be true, when it says that a corporation of one State may sue in another? Why, that the corporation is there, in court, ready to submit to the court's decree, a party on its record. But in the case of the purchase of the bill of exchange which is the subject of this suit, what is assumed? No more than that George Poe bought a bill of exchange, and paid the value for it on account of his employers in Philadelphia. So far from its being a more natural right for a corporation to be allowed to sue, it is a more natural right to be allowed to trade, in a State in which the corporation does not exist. What is the distinction? Buying a bill of exchange is said to be an act, and therefore the corporation could not do it in Alabama. Is not a suit an act? Is it not doing? Does it not, in truth, involve many acts?

The truth is, that this argument against the power of a corporation to do acts beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the authority by which it is created, is refuted by all history as well as by plain reason.

What have all the great corporations in England been doing for centuries back? The English East India Company, as far back as the reign of Elizabeth, has been trading all over the Eastern world. That company traded in Asia before Great Britain had established any territorial government there, and in other parts of the world where England never pretended to any territorial authority. The Bank of England, established in 1694, has been always trading and dealing in exchanges and bullion with Hamburg, Amsterdam, and other marts of Europe. Numerous other corporations have been created in England for the purpose of exercising power over matters and things in territories wherein the power of England has never been exerted. The whole commercial world is full of such corporations, exercising similar powers beyond the territorial jurisdiction within which they have legal existence.

I say, then, that the right secured to the people of Pennsylvania, to sue in any other State in the name of a corporation, is no more clear than this other right of such a corporation to trade in any other State; nor even so clear. It is a more violent legal presumption, or a much greater extent of national courtesy or comity, to suppose a foreign corporation actually in court, in its legal existence, with its legal attributes, and acting in its own name, than it is to allow an ordinary act of trade, done by its agent, on its own account, to be a valid transaction.

There is an opinion of this court directly bearing on this question. It was in the case of the Bank of the United States v. Deveaux, decided in 1809. The bank here mentioned was the first Bank of the United States, which had not, like the last, express authority given in its charter to sue in the courts of the United States. It sued, therefore, as this plaintiff sues, in its name as a corporation; but with an averment, as here, that its members were citizens of Pennsylvania, the action being brought against a citizen of Georgia. The only question was, whether the plaintiffs might not exercise their constitutional right to sue in the courts of the United States, although they appeared in the name of their Pennsylvania corporation; and the court decided that they might. "Substantially and essentially," said Chief Justice Marshall, "the parties in such a case, where the members of the corporation are aliens, or citizens of a different State from the opposite party, come within the spirit and terms of the jurisdiction conferred by the Constitution on the national tribunals. . . . . That corporations composed of citizens are considered by the legislature as citizens, under certain circumstances, is to be strongly inferred from the registering acts. It never could be intended that an American registered vessel, abandoned to an insurance company composed of citizens, should lose her character as an American vessel; and yet this would be the consequence of declaring that the members of the corporation were, to every intent and purpose, out of view, and merged in the corporation."

The argument here is, that citizens of a State may exercise their rights of suing, as such citizens, in the name of their corporation; because in such a name the law recognizes them as competent to engage in transactions, hold property, and enjoy rights proper for them as citizens.

If the court concur in this language of its own opinion as far back as the year 1809, it must be admitted that the rights of the people of Pennsylvania, as citizens of the United States, are not merged in the act of incorporation by which they are associated, and under which they are parties to this suit. If there ever was a human being that did not argue to the obscure from the more obscure, it was certainly the late Chief Justice of the United States. And what is his argument to prove that the citizens of one State may sue in another by a corporate name? It is, as I have said, that they may sue by a corporate name, because they can do acts out of court by a corporate name; whilst, directly reversing this conclusion, it has been held in this case, in the court below, that, whilst a corporation of one State may rightfully sue in another State, it cannot do any other act therein.

In this view of the case, I see no occasion to call to our aid the law of comity or international courtesy. Here our case stands, independently of that law, on American ground, as an American question.

Now, as to the reason of the case. What possible difference can it make, if these citizens of Pennsylvania can trade, or buy and sell bills in Alabama, whether the trading, or buying and selling, be under one agency or another? That Poe (the agent of the Bank of the United States at Mobile) could, under a power of attorney from a citizen of Philadelphia, buy and sell bills of exchange in Alabama, will not be denied. If, without an act of incorporation, several citizens of Philadelphia should form an association to buy and sell bills of exchange, with five directors or managers of its concerns, those five directors may send as many agents as they please into other States to buy bills of exchange, and transact other business of this description. Having thus formed themselves into this associated company, and appointed agents for the purpose of transacting their business, if they should go one step further, and obtain a charter from Pennsylvania, that their meetings and proceedings may be more regular, and the acts of the association more methodical, what would be the difference, in the eye of reason, between the acts of the members of such a corporation, and the acts of the same individuals associated for the same purposes without incorporation, and acting by common agents, correspondents, or attorneys? The officers of a bank are but the agents of the proprietors; and their purchases and sales are founded upon their property, and directed by their will, in the same manner as the acts of agents of unincorporated associations or partnerships. The Girard Bank, we all know, was never incorporated until after Mr. Girard's death; yet its proprietor, during a considerable part of his life, and until his death, acted as a banker. Could he not, during his life, send an agent into Alabama, and there purchase bills of exchange? And if his neighbors over the way chose to ask for an act of incorporation from the State of Pennsylvania, are they thereby any less entitled to the privileges common to all other citizens than Stephen Girard was?

I agree, certainly, in general, that a State law cannot operate ex-territorially, as the phrase is. But it is a rule of law, that a State authority may create an artificial being, giving it legal existence; and that that being, thus created, may legally sue in other States than that by which it is created. It follows, of course, as a consequence of the right of suit in another State, that it may obtain judgment there. If it obtain judgment, it may accept satisfaction of that judgment. If a judgment be obtained in Alabama by the Bank of the United States, would not an acknowledgment of satisfaction by an agent of the bank be a satisfaction of the decree of the court? How is the fruit of a suit to be gathered, if the bank, by its agent, cannot do this act? What benefit can it be to this bank to be allowed to sue in Alabama, if it cannot take the money sued for? But it is said by the court below, that it cannot recover money in Alabama, because it cannot do an act there! According to this argument, although the power to appeal to law and the power to recover judgment exist, yet the fructus legis is all dust and ashes.

On the commercial branch of this question I shall say but little. But thus much I will say. The State of Alabama cannot make any commercial regulation for her own emolument or benefit such as shall create any difference between her own citizens and citizens of other States. I do not say that the State of Alabama may not make corporations, and give to them privileges which she does not give to her citizens. But I do say, that she cannot create a monopoly to the prejudice of citizens of other States, or to the disparagement or prejudice of any common commercial right. Suppose that a person having occasion to purchase bills of exchange should not like the credit of bills sold by the Bank of Alabama; or suppose (what is within the reach of possibility) that the Bank of Alabama should fail; may not a citizen buy bills elsewhere? Or is it supposed that the State of Alabama can give such a preference to any institution of her own in the buying and selling of exchange, that no exchange can be bought and sold within her limits but by that institution? It would be, doubtless, doing the State great injustice to suppose that she could entertain any such purpose.

In conclusion of the argument upon this point, I maintain that the plaintiffs in this case had a right to purchase this bill, and to recover judgment upon it. For the same reason that they had a right to bring this suit, they had the right to do the act upon which the suit was brought.

But if the rights of the plaintiffs, under this constitutional view of the case, be doubted, then what has been called the comity of nations obliges the court to sustain the plaintiffs in this cause.

The term "comity" is taken from the civil law. Vattel has no distinct chapter upon that head. But the doctrine is laid down by other authorities with sufficient distinctness, and in effect by him. It is, in general terms, that there are, between nations at peace with one another, rights, both national and individual, resulting from the comity or courtesy due from one friendly nation to another. Among these is the right to sue in their courts respectively; the right to travel in each other's dominions; the right to pursue one's vocation in trade; the right to do all things, generally, which belong to the citizens proper of each country, and which they are not precluded from doing by some positive law of the state. Among these rights, one of the clearest is the right of a citizen of one nation to take away his property from the territory of any other friendly nation, without molestation or objection. This is what we call the comity of nations. It is the usage of nations, and has become a positive obligation on all nations. I know that it is but customary or voluntary law; that it is a law existing by the common understanding and consent of nations, and not established for the government of nations by any common superior. For this reason, every nation, to a certain extent, judges for itself of the extent of the obligation of this law, and puts its own construction upon it. Every other nation, however, has a right to do the same; and if, therefore, any two nations differ irreconcilably in their construction of this law, there is no resort for settling that difference but the ultima ratio regum.

The right of a foreigner to sue in the courts of any country may be regulated by particular laws or ordinances of that country. He may be required to give security for the costs of suit in any case, or not to leave the country until the end of the controversy. He may possibly be required to give security that he will not carry his property out of the country till his debts are paid. But if, under pretence of such regulation, any nation shall impose unreasonable restrictions or penalties on the citizens of any other nation, the power of judging that matter for itself lies with that other nation. Suppose that the government of the United States, for example, should say that every foreigner should pay into the public treasury ten, twenty, or fifty per cent. of any amount which he might recover by suit in our courts of law, would such a regulation be perfectly just and right? Or would not the practice of such extortion upon the citizens of other nations be a just ground of complaint; and, if unredressed, a ground of war much more reasonable than most of the causes which put nations in arms against one another? What is, in fact, now the question which has assumed so serious an aspect between the governments of France and Mexico? One of the leading causes of difference between the two countries, so far as I understand it, is, not that the courts of Mexico are not open to the citizens or subjects of France, but that the courts do not do justice between them and the citizens of Mexico; in other words, that French subjects are not treated in Mexico according to the comity of the law of nations. I do not speak of the merits of this quarrel. Into that question I do not enter; I speak only of things alleged between the parties. Look into Vattel, and you will find that this very right to carry away property, the proceeds of trade, from a foreign friendly country, by exchange, is a well-understood and positive principle of the law of nations. Suppose that there existed no treaties between the United States and France or England guarantying these rights to each other's citizens, these rights would yet exist by tacit consent and permission. Suppose this government, in the absence of treaties, were to shut its courts against the citizens of either nation, (to do so would be only a violation of the comity of nations,) and should grant them no redress upon complaint being made, it would, unquestionably, be ground of war against the United States by that nation.

There are in London several incorporated insurance companies. Suppose a ship, insured by one of these companies, should be wrecked in the Chesapeake Bay. Being abandoned, she became the property of the corporation by which she was insured. I demand whether the insurers may not come and take this property, and bring an action for it, if necessary, in any court in this country, State or Federal. They may recover by an action of tort against the wrongdoer. They may replevy their property, if necessary, or sell it, or refit it, or send it back. Unquestionably, if any country were to debar the citizens of another country from the enjoyment of these common rights within its territorial jurisdiction, it would be cause of war. I do not mean that a single act of that sort would or should bring on a war; but it would be an act of that nature, so plain and manifest a violation of our duty, under the law of nations, as to justify war. According to the judgment of the court below, in the present case, however, these insurance companies would be deprived of their rightful remedy. You let them sue, indeed; but that is all.

I may here refer to a case tried some time ago in the Circuit Court of the Massachusetts District, in which I was of counsel.

A vessel insured in Boston was wrecked in Nova Scotia, and was abandoned to the insurers. The insurance office sent out an agent, who did that which the owner of the vessel said was an acceptance of the abandonment. On the question whether the agent of the Boston office accepted the abandonment, the court decided the case. If we had said that we sent him down, indeed, but that his agency ceased when he got to the boundary line of the State, and he could do no act when he got beyond it, and the court had agreed with us, we might, perhaps, have gained our cause. But it never occurred to me, nor probably to the court, that the functions of our agent ended the moment that he passed the limits of the State.

The law of comity is a part of the law of nations; and it authorizes a corporation of any State to make contracts beyond the limits of that State.

How does a State contract? How many of the States of this Union have made contracts for loans in England! A State is sovereign, in a certain sense. But when a State sues, it sues as a corporation. When it enters into contracts with the citizens of foreign nations, it does so in its corporate character. I now say, that it is the adjudged and admitted law of the world, that corporations have the same right to contract and to sue in foreign countries that individuals have. By the law of nations, individuals of other countries are allowed in this country to contract and sue; and we make no distinction, in the case of individuals, between the right to sue and the right to contract. Nor can any such distinction be sustained in law in the case of corporations. Where, in history, in the books, is any law or dictum to be found, (except the disputed case from Virginia,) in which a distinction is drawn between the rights of individuals and of corporations to contract and sue in foreign countries in regard to things generally free and open to every body? In the whole civilized world, at home and abroad, in England, Holland, and other countries of Europe, the equal rights of corporations and individuals, in this respect, have been undisputed until now, and in this case; and if a distinction is to be set up between them at this day, it lies with the counsel on the other side to produce some semblance of authority or show of reason for it.

But it is argued, that, though this law of comity exists as between independent nations, it does not exist between the States of this Union. That argument appears to have been the foundation of the judgment in the court below.

In respect to this law of comity, it is said, States are not nations; they have no national sovereignty; a sort of residuum of sovereignty is all that remains to them. The national sovereignty, it is said, is conferred on this government, and part of the municipal sovereignty. The rest of the municipal sovereignty belongs to the States. Notwithstanding the respect which I entertain for the learned judge who presided in that court, I cannot follow in the train of his argument. I can make no diagram, such as this, of the partition of national character between the State and the general governments. I cannot map it out, and say, "So far is national, and so far municipal; and here is the exact line where the one begins and the other ends." We have no second Laplace, and we never shall have, with his Mécanique Politique, able to define and describe the orbit of each sphere in our political system with such exact mathematical precision. There is no such thing as arranging these governments of ours by the laws of gravitation, so that they will be sure to go on for ever without impinging. These institutions are practical, admirable, glorious, blessed creations. Still they were, when created, experimental institutions; and if the convention which framed the Constitution of the United States had set down in it certain general definitions of power, such as have been alleged in the argument of this case, and stopped there, I verily believe that, in the course of the fifty years which have since elapsed, this government would have never gone into operation.

Suppose that this Constitution had said, in terms, after the language of the court below, "All national sovereignty shall belong to the United States; all municipal sovereignty to the several States." I will say that, however clear, however distinct, such a definition may appear to those who use it, the employment of it in the Constitution could only have led to utter confusion and uncertainty. I am not prepared to say that the States have no national sovereignty. The laws of some of the States, Maryland and Virginia, for instance, provide punishment for treason. The power thus exercised is certainly not municipal. Virginia has a law of alienage; that is, a power exercised against a foreign nation. Does not the question necessarily arise, when a power is exercised concerning an alien enemy, "Enemy to whom?" The law of escheat, which exists in many States, is also the exercise of a great sovereign power.

The term "sovereignty" does not occur in the Constitution at all. The Constitution treats States as States, and the United States as the United States; and, by a careful enumeration, declares all the powers that are granted to the United States, and all the rest are reserved to the States. If we pursue to the extreme point the powers granted and the powers reserved, the powers of the general and State governments will be found, it is to be feared, impinging and in conflict. Our hope is, that the prudence and patriotism of the States, and the wisdom of this government, will prevent that catastrophe. For myself, I will pursue the advice of the court in Deveaux's case; I will avoid nice metaphysical subtilties, and all useless theories; I will keep my feet out of the traps of general definition; I will keep my feet out of all traps; I will keep to things as they are, and go no farther to inquire what they might be, if they were not what they are. The States of this Union, as States, are subject to all the voluntary and customary law of nations.*

If, for the decision of any question, the proper rule is to be found in the law of nations, that law adheres to the subject. It follows the subject through, no matter into what place, high or low. You cannot escape the law of nations in a case where it is applicable. The air of every judicature is full of it. It pervades the courts of law of the highest character, and the court of pie poudre; ay, even the constable's court. It is part of the universal law. It may share the glorious eulogy pronounced by Hooker upon law itself, that there is nothing so high as to be beyond the reach of its power, nothing so low as to be beneath its care. If any question be within the influence of the law of nations, the law of nations is there. If the law of comity does not exist between the States of this Union, how can it exist between a State and the subjects of any foreign sovereignty?

Upon all the consideration that I have given to the case, the conclusion seems to me inevitable, that, if the law of comity do not exist between the States of this Union, it cannot exist between the States individually and foreign powers. It is true, a State cannot make a treaty; she cannot be a party to a new chapter on the law of nations; but the law which prevails among nations, the customary rule of judicature recognized by all nations, binds her in all her courts.

* Vattel, p. 61.

I have heard no answer to another argument. If a contract be made in New York, with the expectation that it is to be there executed, and suit is brought upon it in Alabama, it is to be decided by the law of the State in which the contract was made. In a case now before this court, there has been a decision by the court of Alabama, in which that court has undertaken to learn the law of the State of New York, and administer it in Alabama. Why take notice in Alabama of the law of New York? Simply because there are cases in which the courts in Alabama feel it to be their duty to administer that law, and to enforce rights accordingly. That is the very point for which we contend; namely, the court in Alabama should have given effect to rights exercised in that State by the plaintiff in the present cause, under the authority of Pennsylvania, without prejudice to the State of Alabama.

After all that has been said in argument about corporations, they are but forms of special partnership, in some of which the partners are severally liable. The whole end and aim of most of them, as with us, is to concentrate the means of small capitalists in a form in which they can be used to advantage.

In the Eastern States, manufactures too extensive for individual capital are carried on in this way. A large quantity of goods is manufactured and sold to the South, out of cotton bought in the South, to the amount of many millions in every year. Upon the principle of the decision in the court below, the manufacturers of the goods and the growers of the cotton would be equally precluded from recovering their dues. What will our fellow-citizens of the South say to this? If, after we have got their cotton, they cannot get their money for it, they will be in no great love, I think, with these new doctrines about the comity of States and nations.

Again, look at the question as it regards the insurance offices. How are all marine insurances, fire insurances, and life insurances effected in this country, but by the agency of companies incorporated by the several States? And the insurances made by these companies beyond the limits of their particular States, are they all void? I suppose that the insurances against fire effected for companies at Hartford, in Connecticut, alone, by agents all over the Northern States, may amount to an aggregate of some millions of dollars. I remember a case occurring in New Hampshire, of a suit against one of those companies for the amount of an insurance, in which a recovery was had against the company, and nothing was said, nor probably thought, of such a contract of insurance being illegal, on the ground that a corporation of Connecticut could not do an act or make a contract in New Hampshire. Are those insurances all to be held void, upon the principle of the decision from Alabama?

And as to notes issued by banks; if one in Alabama hold the notes of a bank incorporated by Pennsylvania, are they void? If one be robbed there of such notes, is it no theft? If one counterfeit those notes there, is it no crime? Are all such notes mere nullities, when out of the State where issued?

Reference has been made to statute-books to show cases in which the States have forbidden foreign insurance companies from making insurances within their limits. But no such prohibition has been shown against insurances by citizens of, or companies created in, the different States. Is not this an exact case for the application of the rule, Exceptio probat regulam? The fact of such prohibitory legislation shows that citizens of other States have, and that citizens of foreign powers had, before they were excluded by law, the right to make insurances in any and every one of the States.

I will next call the attention of the court to the deposit law, passed by Congress on the 23d of June, 1836. It is one of the conditions upon which, under that act, any State bank might become a depository of the public money, that it should enter into obligations "to render to the government all the duties and services heretofore required by law to be performed by the late Bank of the United States, and its several branches or offices"; that is, to remit money to any part of the United States, transfer it from one State to another, and perform other financial services of this kind. But that act required, also, something more; and it shows how little versed we in Congress were (and I take to myself my full share of the shame) in the legal obstacles to the doing of acts in one State by corporations of other States. The first section of that act provides, that, "in those States, Territories, or Districts, in which there are no banks," the Secretary of the Treasury "may make arrangement with a bank or banks in some other State, Territory, or District, to establish an agency or agencies in the States, Territories, or Districts so destitute of banks, as banks of deposit." Here is an express recognition by Congress of the power of a State bank to create an agent for the purpose of dealing as a bank in another State or Territory.

It has been said, that, as there is no obligation of comity, under the law of nations, between the States, it remains for the legislatures of the several States to adopt, in their conduct towards each other, as much of the principle of comity as they please. Here, then, there is to be negotiation between the States, to determine how far they will observe this law of comity. They are thus required to do precisely what they cannot do. States cannot make treaties nor compacts. A State cannot negotiate. It cannot even hold an Indian talk! And now, I would ask how it happens, at this time of the day, that this court is called upon to make a decision contrary to the spirit of the Constitution, and against the whole course of decisions in this country and in Europe, and the undisputed practice under this government for fifty years, overturning the law of comity, and leaving it to the States each to establish a comity of nations for itself.

I shall now take leave of the question of the power of a corporation created by one of the States to make contracts in another, and proceed to consider whether there be any thing in the laws or constitution of the State of Alabama which prevents the agent of the Bank of the United States in that State from making such a contract as that which is the foundation of this suit.

It is said that the buying of a bill of exchange by such agent is contrary to the policy of the State of Alabama; and this is inferred from the law establishing the Bank of Alabama; that bank being authorized to deal in bills of exchange, and the constitution of the State authorizing the establishment of no more than one bank in the State.

This, however, is a violent inference from the premises. How does the buying or selling bills of exchange in Alabama, by another purchaser than the Bank of Alabama, infringe her policy? Because, it is said, it diminishes the profits which she derives from the dealings of the bank. Profit is her policy, it is argued; gain, her end. Is it against her policy for Mr. Biddle to buy bills, because his bank is incorporated; and not against her policy for Mr. Girard to buy bills, because his is not incorporated? Or how far does she carry this policy imputed to her? Is no one to be allowed to buy or sell bills of exchange in Alabama but a bank of her own, which may or may not be in credit, and may or may not be solvent? It would be strange indeed, were any State in this Union to adopt such a policy as this. But if the argument founded on this inferred policy of Alabama amounts to any thing, it proves, not that incorporated citizens of other States cannot buy or sell bills there, but that it is the policy of Alabama to prevent other citizens from buying bills at all in Alabama.

I think that there is no just foundation for the inference of any such policy on the part of the State of Alabama. By referring to Aikin's Digest of the laws of that State, it will be found that she has carried her policy but little further than merely establishing a bank. Her public officers are authorized to receive the notes of banks of other States in payment of dues to her; and she has enacted laws to punish the forgery of notes of other banks. Now, taking her acts together, considering them as a whole, the inference which has been drawn from her establishment of a State bank under her constitution is certainly not sustained.

To consider this argument, however, more closely. It is assumed by it, first, that the State meant, by her legislation, to take to herself all the profits of banking within her territorial limits; and secondly, that the act of buying and selling a bill of exchange belongs to banking.

The profits of banking are derived more from circulation than from exchange. If the State meant, through her bank policy, to take all the profits of banking, why has she not taken all the profits of circulation? Not only she has done no such thing, but she protects the circulation of the notes of banks of other States.

I now beg to ask the particular attention of the court to this question: WHAT IS BANKING?

Alabama, in reference to banking, has done nothing but establish a bank, and give it the usual banking powers. And when the learned counsel on the other side speak of banking, what do they mean by it? A bank deals in exchange, and it buys or builds houses also; so do individuals. If there be any thing peculiar in these acts by a bank, it must be, not in the nature of the acts individually, but in the aggregate of the whole. What constitutes banking must be something peculiar. There are various acts of legislation by different States in this country, for granting or preventing the exercise of banking privileges. But has any law ever been passed to authorize or to prevent the buying by an individual of a bill of exchange? No one has ever heard of such a thing. The laws to restrain banking have all been directed to one end; that is, to repress the unauthorized circulation of paper money. There are various other functions performed by banks; but, in discharging all these, they only do what unincorporated individuals do.

What is that, then, without which any institution is not a bank, and with which it is a bank? It is a power to issue promissory notes with a view to their circulation as money.

Our ideas of banking have been derived principally from the act constituting the first Bank of the United States, the organization and powers of which were imitated from the Bank of England.*

The project of the Bank of England was conceived by Mr. Paterson, a Scotch gentleman, who had travelled much abroad, and had seen somewhere (I believe in Lombardy) a small bank which issued tickets or promises of payment of money. From this he took the idea of a bank of circulation. That was in 1694. At that time, neither inland bills nor promissory notes were negotiable or transferable, so as to enable the holder to bring suit thereon in his own name. There was no negotiable paper, except foreign bills of exchange. Mr. Paterson's conception was, that the notes of the Bank of England should be negotiable toties quoties, or transferable from hand to hand, payable at the bank in specie, either on demand, or at very short sight. This conception had complete success, because there was then no other inland paper, either bills or notes, which was negotiable. The whole field was occupied by Bank of England notes.

* To ascertain the character and peculiar functions of the Bank of England, Mr. Webster here referred, and referred the court, to various authorities; to McCulloch's Commercial Dictionary; to Smollett's Continuation of Hume's England; to Godfrey's History of the Bank of England, in Lord Somers's Tracts, Vol. XI. art. 1; to Anderson's History of Commerce, and some other authorities.

In 1698, inland bills were made negotiable by act of Parliament; and in the fourth year of Queen Anne's reign, promissory notes were made negotiable. Of course, after this, every body might issue promissory notes; and where they had credit enough, these might circulate as money. There is not much of novelty in the inventions of mankind. Under this state of things, that took place in England which we have seen so often take place among us, and which we have put to the account of modern contrivance. Large companies were formed, with heavy amounts of capital, for purposes not professedly banking; one, especially, to carry on the mining business on a large scale. These companies issued promissory notes, payable on demand, and these notes readily got into circulation as cash, to the prejudice of the circulation of the Bank of England. But, Parliament being at this time in great want of ready money for the expenditures of the war on the Continent, the bank proposed to double its capital, and to lend this new half of it to government, if the government would secure to the bank an exclusive circulation of its notes. The statute of the 6th of Anne, chapter 22, was accordingly passed; which recites that other persons and divers corporations have presumed to borrow money, and to deal as a bank, contrary to former acts; and thereupon it is enacted, that "no corporation, or more than six persons in partnership, shall borrow, owe, or take up any money on their bills and notes, payable at demand, or at less than six months from the borrowing." This provision has been often reënacted, and constitutes the banking privilege of the Bank of England. Competition was not feared from the circulation of individual notes. Hence individuals, or partnerships of not more than six persons, have been at liberty to issue small notes, payable on demand; in other words, notes for circulation. And we know that, in the country, such notes have extensively circulated; but private bankers in London, in the neighborhood of the bank, though it was lawful, have not found it useful to issue their own notes. The banking privilege of the Bank of England accordingly consisted simply in the privilege of issuing notes for circulation while that privilege was forbidden by law to all other corporations and all large partnerships and associations.

This privilege was restrained in 1826, so as not to prohibit banking companies except within the distance of sixty-five miles of London; and, at the same time, notes of the bank were made a tender in payment of all debts, except by the bank itself. This provision may be considered as a new privilege; but it does not belong to the original and essential idea of banking. Mr. McCulloch remarks, and truly, that all that government has properly to do with banks is only so far as they are banks of issue. Upon the same principle, the banks of other countries of Europe are incorporated, with the privilege to issue and circulate notes as their distinctive character.*

Now, how is it in our own country? When our State legislatures have undertaken to restrain banking, the great end in view has been to prevent the circulation of notes. I may on this point refer to the statute-books of Massachusetts, Maine, Rhode Island, and New Hampshire, for restraining unauthorized companies from issuing notes of circulation. Not unlike is the statute of Ohio, imposing a punishment for unauthorized banking. Her law defines, in the first place, what constitutes a bank, namely, the issuing of notes which pass by delivery, and which are intended for circulation as cash. That is the true definition of a bank, as we understand it in this country. I would also refer to the laws of other States, Maryland, New Jersey, Missouri, Pennsylvania, Delaware, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Georgia, all to the same effect. The law of the State of Alabama herself is much more important, in this view of the case, than that of any other State. The constitution of the State of Alabama was established in 1819; the law creating the Bank of Alabama was passed in 1823. The constitution and this law are all the authorities from which the inference has been drawn as to the policy of the State of Alabama. Did she suppose that, by this law, she was establishing such a monopoly of the purchase of bills of exchange as has been contended for in this case? Certainly not. For, by a law passed afterwards, she restrained the circulation of unauthorized bank-notes; that is, notes not issued by some authorized bank. But did she also restrain dealings in exchange? She did no such thing. Nor is there any thing either in the constitution or the laws of the State of Alabama which shows that by banking she ever meant more than the circulation of bills as currency. There is nothing, therefore, in any law or any policy of Alabama against the purchase of bills of exchange by others as well as by the Bank of Alabama. She has prohibited by law other transactions, which are clearly banking transactions; but she has not touched this. If even her banking policy includes as well buying exchange as circulation, and she guards against competition in the one and leaves the other open, who can say, in the face of such evidence, that it is her policy to guard against what she leaves free and unrestrained?

* Here Mr. Webster explained the character of the banks of France, Belgium, and some other countries.

Is there any thing in the constitution, or any ground in the legislation of Alabama, to sustain the allegation which has been made of her policy? If not, is the existence of such a policy to be established here by construction, and that construction far-fetched?

And here I rest my argument on this case, which has been discussed by others so ably, as not to justify my occupying the time of the court by going further into it.

The learned counsel on the other side, in the course of his argument of yesterday, alluded to the newspapers, which, he said, had treated the decision of the court below scornfully. I was sorry to hear it; for the learned judge has acted, in his decision, I have no doubt, under a high sense of duty. I have been told, but I have not seen it, that a press in this city, since this case has been under consideration in this court, has undertaken to speak, in a tone somewhat approaching to that of command, of the decision upon it to be expected from this court. Such conduct is certainly highly discreditable to the character of the country, as well as disrespectful and injurious to the court.

A learned gentleman on the other side said, the other day, that he thought he might regard himself, in this cause, as having the country for his client. He only meant, doubtless, to express a strong opinion, that the welfare of the country required the case to be decided in his favor. I agree with the learned gentleman, and I go, indeed, far beyond him in my estimate of the importance of this case to the country. He did not take pains to show the extent of the evil which would result from undoing the vast number of contracts which would be affected by the affirmation here of the judgment rendered in the court below, because his object did not require that; his object was to diminish the prospect of mischief, not to enlarge it. For myself, I see neither limit nor end to the calamitous consequences of such a decision. I do not know where it would not reach, what interests it would not disturb, or how any part of the commercial system of the country would be free from its influences, direct or remote. And for what end is all this to be done? What practical evil calls for so harsh, not to say so rash, a remedy? And why now, when existing systems and established opinions, when both the law and the public sentiment, have concurred in what has been found, practically, so safe and so useful; why now, and why here, seek to introduce new and portentous doctrines? If I were called upon to say what has struck me as most remarkable and wonderful in this whole case, I would, instead of indulging in expletives, exaggerations, or exclamations, put it down as the most extraordinary circumstance, that now, within a short month of the expiration of the first half-century of our existence under this Constitution, such a question should be made; that now, for the first time, and here, the last place on earth where they might be expected, such doctrines as have been heard in its support should be brought forward. With all the respect which I really entertain for the court below, and for the arguments which have been delivered here, I must say that, in my judgment, the decision now under revision by this court is, in its principle, anti-commercial and anti-social, new and unheard of in our system, and calculated to break up the harmony which has so long prevailed among the States and people of this Union.

It is not, however, for the learned gentlemen nor for myself to say here that we speak for the country. We advance our sentiments and our arguments, but they are without authority. It is for you, Messrs. Chief Justice and Judges, on this as on other occasions of high importance, to speak and decide for the country. The guardianship of her commercial interests; the preservation of the harmonious intercourse of all her citizens; the fulfilling in this respect of the great object of the Constitution, are in your hands; and I am not to doubt that the trust will be so performed as to sustain at once high national objects and the character of this tribunal.

THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY AND THE RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION OF THE YOUNG.*

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

THE heirs at law of the late Stephen Girard, of Philadelphia, instituted a suit in October, 1836, in the Circuit Court of the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, sitting as a court of equity, to try the question of the validity of his will. In April, 1841, the cause came on for hearing in the Circuit Court, and was decided in favor of the will. The case was carried by appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, at Washington, where it was argued by General Jones and Mr. Webster for the complainants and appellants, and by Messrs Binney and Sergeant for the validity of the will.

The following speech was made by Mr. Webster in the course of the trial at Washington. A deep impression was produced upon the public mind by those portions of it which enforced the intimate connection of the Christian ministry with the business of instruction, and the necessity of founding education on a religious basis.

This impression resulted in the following correspondence: —

"WASHINGTON, February 13, 1844.

"SIR: Inclosed is a copy of certain proceedings of a meeting held in reference to your argument in the Supreme Court of the case arising out of the late Mr. Girard's will. In communicating to you the request contained in the second resolution, we take leave to express our earnest hope that you may find it convenient to comply with that request.

"We are, Sir, with high consideration, yours, very respectfully,

P. R. FENDALL,
HORACE STRINGFELLOW,
JOSHUA N. DANFORTH,
R. R. GURLEY,
WILLIAM RUGGLES,
JOEL S. BACON,
THOMAS SEWALL,
WILLIAM B. EDWARDS, } Committee.

"HON. DANIEL WEBSTER."

* A Speech delivered in the Supreme Court at Washington, on the 20th of February, 1844, in the case of François Fénelon Vidal, John F. Girard, and others, Complainants and Appellants, against The Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens of Philadelphia, the Executors of Stephen Girard, and others, Defendants.

"At a meeting of a number of citizens, belonging to different religious denominations, of Washington and its vicinity, convened to consider the expediency of procuring the publication of so much of Mr. Webster's argument before the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of François F. Vidal et al., Appellants, v. The Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens of Philadelphia, and Stephen Girard's Executors, as relates to that part of Mr. Girard's will which excludes ministers of religion from any station or duty in the college directed by the testator to be founded, and denies to them the right of visiting said college; the object of the meeting having been stated by Professor Sewall in a few appropriate remarks, the Hon. Henry L. Ellsworth was elected chairman, and the Rev. Isaac S. Tinsley secretary.

"Whereupon it was, on motion, unanimously resolved,

"1st. That, in the opinion of this meeting, the powerful and eloquent argument of Mr. Webster, on the before-mentioned clause of Mr. Girard's will, demonstrates the vital importance of Christianity to the success of our free institutions, and its necessity as the basis of all useful moral education; and that the general diffusion of that argument among the people of the United States is a matter of deep public interest.

"2d. That a committee of eight persons, of the several Christian denominations represented in this meeting, be appointed to wait on Mr. Webster, and, in the name and on behalf of this meeting, to request him to prepare for the press the portion referred to of his argument in the Girard case; and, should he consent to do so, to cause it to be speedily published and extensively disseminated.

"The following gentlemen were appointed the committee under the second resolution: Philip R. Fendall, Esq., Rev. Horace Stringfellow, Rev. Joshua N. Danforth, Rev. R. Randolph Gurley, Professor William Ruggles, Rev. President J. S. Bacon, Doctor Thomas Sewall, Rev. William B. Edwards.

"The meeting then adjourned.

"H. L. Ellsworth, Chairman.

"Isaac S. Tinsley, Secretary."

"Washington, February 13, 1844.

"Gentlemen: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication. Gentlemen connected with the public press have, I believe, reported my speech in the case arising under Mr. Girard's will. I will look over the report of that part of it to which you refer, so far as to see that it is free from material errors, but I have not leisure so to revise it as to give it the form of a careful or regular composition.

"I am, Gentlemen, with very true regard, your obedient servant,

"Daniel Webster.

"To Messrs. P. R. Fendall,
Horace Stringfellow,
Joshua N. Danforth,
R. R. Gurley,
William Ruggles,
Joel S. Bacon,
Thomas Sewall.

The following mottoes were prefixed to this speech, in the original pamphlet edition.

"Socrates. If, then, you wish public measures to be right and noble, virtue must be given by you to the citizens.

"Alcibiades. How could any one deny that?

"Socrates. Virtue, therefore, is that which is to be first possessed, both by you and by every other person who would have direction and care, not only for himself and things dear to himself, but for the state and things dear to the state.

"Alcibiades. You speak truly.

"Socrates. To act justly and wisely (both you and the state), YOU MUST ACT ACCORDING TO THE WILL OF GOD.

"Alcibiades. It is so." Plato.

"Sic igitur hoc a principio persuasum civibus, dominos esse omnium rerum ac moderatores, deos." — Cicero de Legibus.

"We shall never be such fools as to call in an enemy to the substance of any system, to supply its defects, or to perfect its construction."

"If our religious tenets should ever want a further elucidation, we shall not call on atheism to explain them. We shall not light up our temple from that unhallowed fire."

"We know, and it is our pride to know, that man is, by his constitution, a religious animal." — Burke.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR HONORS:

IT is not necessary for me to narrate, in detail, the numerous provisions of Mr. Girard's will. This has already been repeatedly done by other counsel, and I shall content myself with stating and considering those parts only which are immediately involved in the decision of this cause.

The will is drawn with apparent care and method, and is regularly divided into clauses. The first nineteen clauses contain various devises and legacies to relatives, to other private individuals, and to public bodies. By the twentieth clause the whole residue of his estate, real and personal, is devised and bequeathed to the "mayor, aldermen, and citizens of Philadelphia," in trust for the several uses to be after mentioned and declared.

The twenty-first clause contains the devise or bequest to the college, in these words: —

"And so far as regards the residue of my personal estate in trust, as to two millions of dollars, part thereof, to apply and expend so much of that sum as may be necessary in erecting, as soon as practicably may be, in the centre of my square of ground, between High and Chestnut Streets, and Eleventh and Twelfth Streets, in the city of Philadelphia, (which square of ground I hereby devote for the purpose hereinafter stated, and for no other, for ever,) a permanent college, with suitable out-buildings sufficiently spacious for the residence and accommodation of at least three hundred scholars, and the requisite teachers and other persons necessary in such an institution as I direct to be established, and in supplying the said college and out-buildings with decent and suitable furniture, as well as books, and all things needful to carry into effect my general design."

The testator then proceeds to direct that the college shall be constructed of the most durable materials, avoiding needless ornament, and attending chiefly to the strength, convenience, and neatness of the whole; and gives directions, very much in detail, respecting the form of the building, and the size and fashion of the rooms. The whole square, he directs, shall be inclosed with a solid wall, at least fourteen inches thick and ten feet high, capped with marble, and guarded with irons on the top, so as to prevent persons from getting over; and there are to be two places of entrance into the square, with two gates at each, one opening inward and the other outward, those opening inward to be of iron, and those opening outward to be of wood-work, lined with sheet-iron.

The testator then proceeds to give his directions respecting the institution, laying down his plan and objects in several articles. The third article is in these words: —

"3. As many poor white male orphans, between the ages of six and ten years, as the said income shall be adequate to maintain, shall be introduced into the college as soon as possible; and from time to time, as there may be vacancies, or as increased ability from income may warrant, others shall be introduced."

The fifth direction is as follows: —

"5. No orphan should be admitted until the guardians, or directors of the poor, or a proper guardian or other competent authority, shall have given, by indenture, relinquishment, or otherwise, adequate power to the mayor, aldermen, and citizens of Philadelphia, or to directors or others by them appointed, to enforce, in relation to each orphan, every proper restraint, and to prevent relations or others from interfering with or withdrawing such orphan from the institution."

By the sixth article, or direction, preference is to be given, first, to orphans born in Philadelphia; second, to those born in other parts of Pennsylvania; third, to those born in the city of New York; and, lastly, to those born in the city of New Orleans.

By the seventh article, it is declared, that the orphans shall be lodged, fed, and clothed in the college; that they shall be instructed in the various branches of a sound education, comprehending reading, writing, grammar, arithmetic, geography, navigation, surveying, practical mathematics, astronomy, natural, chemical, and experimental philosophy, and the French and Spanish languages, and such other learning and science as the capacities of the scholars may merit or want. The Greek and Latin languages are not forbidden, but are not recommended.

By the ninth article it is declared, that the boys shall remain in the college till they arrive at between fourteen and eighteen years of age, when they shall be bound out by the city government to suitable occupations, such as agriculture, navigation, and the mechanical trades.

The testator proceeds to say, that he necessarily leaves many details to the city government; and then adds, "There are, however, some restrictions which I consider it my duty to prescribe, and to be, amongst others, conditions on which my bequest for said college is made, and to be enjoyed."

The second of these restrictions is in the following words: —

"Secondly. I enjoin and require that no ecclesiastic, missionary, or minister, of any sect whatever, shall ever hold or exercise any station or duty whatever in the said college; nor shall any such person ever be admitted for any purpose, or as a visitor, within the premises appropriated to the purposes of the said college.

"In making this restriction, I do not mean to cast any reflection upon any sect or person whatsoever; but, as there is such a diversity of opinion amongst them, I desire to keep the tender minds of the orphans who are to derive advantage from this bequest free from the excitement which clashing doctrines and sectarian controversy are so apt to produce; my desire is, that all the instructors and teachers in the college shall take pains to instil into the minds of the scholars the purest principles of morality, so that on their entrance into active life they may, from inclination and habit, evince benevolence towards their fellow-creatures, and a love of truth, sobriety, and industry, adopting at the same time such religious tenets as their matured reason may enable them to prefer."

The testator having, after the date of his will, bought a house in Penn Township, with forty-five acres of land, he made a codicil, by which he directed the college to be built on this estate, instead of the square mentioned in the will, and the whole establishment to be made thereon, just as if he had in his will devoted the estate to that purpose. The city government has accordingly been advised that the whole forty-five acres must be inclosed with the same high wall, as was provided in the will for the square in the city.

I have now stated, I believe, all the provisions of the will which are material to the discussion of that part of the case which respects the character of the institution.

The first question is, whether this devise can be sustained, otherwise than as a charity, and by that special aid and assistance by which courts of equity support gifts to charitable uses.

If the devise be a good limitation at law, if it require no exercise of the favor which is bestowed on privileged testaments, then there is already an end to the question. But I take it that this point is conceded. The devise is void, according to the general rules of law, on account of the uncertainty in the description of those who are intended to receive its benefits.

"Poor white male orphan children" is so loose a description, that no one can bring himself within the terms of the bequest, so as to say that it was made in his favor. No individual can acquire any right or interest; nobody, therefore, can come forward as a party, in a court of law, to claim participation in the gift. The bequest must stand, if it stand at all, on the peculiar rules which equitable jurisprudence applies to charities. This is clear.

I proceed, therefore, to submit, and most conscientiously to argue, a question, certainly one of the highest which this court has ever been called upon to consider, and one of the highest, and most important, in my opinion, ever likely to come before it. That question is, whether, in the eye of equitable jurisprudence, this devise be a charity at all. I deny that it is so. I maintain, that neither by judicial decisions nor by correct reasoning on general principles can this devise or bequest be regarded as a charity. This part of the argument is not affected by the particular judicial system of Pennsylvania, or the question of the power of her courts to uphold and administer charitable gifts. The question which I now propose respects the inherent, essential, and manifest character of the devise itself. In this respect, I wish to express myself clearly, and to be correctly and distinctly understood. What I have said I shall stand by, and endeavor to maintain; namely, that in the view of a court of equity this devise is no charity at all. It is no charity, because the plan of education proposed by Mr. Girard is derogatory to the Christian religion; tends to weaken men's reverence for that religion, and their conviction of its authority and importance; and therefore, in its general character, tends to mischievous, and not to useful ends.

The proposed school is to be founded on plain and clear principles, and for plain and clear objects, of infidelity. This cannot well be doubted; and a gift, or devise, for such objects is not a charity, and as such entitled to the well-known favor with which charities are received and upheld by the courts of Christian countries.

In the next place, the object of this bequest is against the public policy of the State of Pennsylvania, in which State Christianity is declared to be the law of the land. For that reason, therefore, as well as the other, the devise ought not to be allowed to take effect.

These are the two propositions which it is my purpose to maintain, on this part of the case.

This scheme of instruction begins by attempting to attach reproach and odium to the whole clergy of the country. It places a brand, a stigma, on every individual member of the profession, without an exception. No minister of the Gospel, of any denomination, is to be allowed to come within the grounds belonging to this school, on any occasion, or for any purpose whatever. They are all rigorously excluded, as if their mere presence might cause pestilence. We have heard it said that Mr. Girard, by this will, distributed his charity without distinction of sect or party. However that may be, Sir, he certainly has dealt out opprobrium to the whole profession of the clergy, without regard to sect or party.

By this will, no minister of the Gospel of any sect or denomination whatever can be authorized or allowed to hold any office within the college; and not only that, but no minister or clergyman of any sect can, for any purpose whatever, enter within the walls that are to surround this college. If a clergyman has a sick nephew, or a sick grandson, he cannot, upon any pretext, be allowed to visit him within the walls of the college. The provision of the will is express and decisive. Still less may a clergyman enter to offer consolation to the sick, or to unite in prayer with the dying.

Now, I will not arraign Mr. Girard or his motives for this. I will not inquire into Mr. Girard's opinions upon religion. But I feel bound to say, the occasion demands that I should say that this is the most opprobrious, the most insulting and unmerited stigma, that ever was cast, or attempted to be cast, upon the preachers of Christianity, from north to south, from east to west, through the length and breadth of the land, in the history of the country. When have they deserved it? Where have they deserved it? How have they deserved it? They are not to be allowed even the ordinary rights of hospitality; not even to be permitted to put their foot over the threshold of this college!

Sir, I take it upon myself to say, that in no country in the world, upon either continent, can there be found a body of ministers of the Gospel who perform so much service to man, in such a full spirit of self-denial, under so little encouragement from government of any kind, and under circumstances almost always much straitened and often distressed, as the ministers of the Gospel in the United States, of all denominations. They form no part of any established order of religion; they constitute no hierarchy; they enjoy no peculiar privileges. In some of the States they are even shut out from all participation in the political rights and privileges enjoyed by their fellow-citizens. They enjoy no tithes, no public provision of any kind. Except here and there, in large cities, where a wealthy individual occasionally makes a donation for the support of public worship, what have they to depend upon? They have to depend entirely on the voluntary contributions of those who hear them.

And this body of clergymen has shown, to the honor of their own country and to the astonishment of the hierarchies of the Old World, that it is practicable in free governments to raise and sustain by voluntary contributions alone a body of clergymen, which, for devotedness to their sacred calling, for purity of life and character, for learning, intelligence, piety, and that wisdom which cometh from above, is inferior to none, and superior to most others.

I hope that our learned men have done something for the honor of our literature abroad. I hope that the courts of justice and members of the bar of this country have done something to elevate the character of the profession of the law. I hope that the discussions above (in Congress) have done something to meliorate the condition of the human race, to secure and extend the great charter of human rights, and to strengthen and advance the great principles of human liberty. But I contend that no literary efforts, no adjudications, no constitutional discussions, nothing that has been done or said in favor of the great interests of universal man, has done this country more credit, at home and abroad, than the establishment of our body of clergymen, their support by voluntary contributions, and the general excellence of their character for piety and learning.

The great truth has thus been proclaimed and proved, a truth which I believe will in time to come shake all the hierarchies of Europe, that the voluntary support of such a ministry, under free institutions, is a practicable idea.

And yet every one of these, the Christian ministers of the United States, is by this devise denied the privileges which are at the same time open to the vilest of our race; every one is shut out from this, I had almost said, sanctum, but I will not profane that word by such a use of it.

Did a man ever live that had a respect for the Christian religion, and yet had no regard for any one of its ministers? Did that system of instruction ever exist, which denounced the whole body of Christian teachers, and yet called itself a system of Christianity?

The learned counsel on the other side see the weak points of this case. They are not blind. They have, with the aid of their great learning, industry, and research, gone back to the time of Constantine, they have searched the history of the Roman emperors, the Dark Ages, and the intervening period, down to the settlement of these colonies; they have explored every nook and corner of religious and Christian history, to find out the various meanings and uses of Christian charity; and yet, with all their skill and all their research, they have not been able to discover any thing which has ever been regarded as a Christian charity, that sets such an opprobrium upon the forehead of all its ministers. If, with all their endeavors, they can find any one thing which has been so regarded, they may have their college, and make the most of it. But the thing does not exist; it never had a being; history does not record it, common sense revolts at it. It certainly is not necessary for me to make an ecclesiastical argument in favor of this proposition. The thing is so plain, that it must instantly commend itself to your honors.

It has been said that Mr. Girard was charitable. I am not now going to controvert this. I hope he was. I hope he has found his reward. It has also been asked, "Cannot Mr. Girard be allowed to have his own will, to devise his property according to his own desire?" Certainly he can, in any legal devise, and the law will sustain him therein. But it is not for him to overturn the law of the land. The law cannot be altered to please Mr. Girard. He found that out, I believe, in two or three instances in his lifetime. Nor can the law be altered on account of the magnitude and munificence of the bounty. What is the value of that bounty, however great or munificent, which touches the very foundations of human society, which touches the very foundations of Christian charity, which touches the very foundations of public law, and the Constitution, and the whole welfare of the state?

And now, let me ask, What is, in contemplation of law, "a charity"? The word has various significations. In the larger and broader sense, it means the kindly exercise of the social affections, all the good feelings which man entertains towards man. Charity is love. This is that charity of which St. Paul speaks, that charity which covereth the sins of men, "that suffereth all things, hopeth all things." In a more popular sense, charity is alms-giving or active benevolence.

But the question for your honors to decide here is, What is a charity, or a charitable use, in contemplation of law? To answer this inquiry, we are generally referred to the objects enumerated in the 43d of Elizabeth. The objects enumerated in that statute, and others analogous to them, are charities in the sense of equitable jurisprudence.

There is no doubt that a school of learning is a charity. It is one of those mentioned in the statutes. Such a school of learning as was contemplated by the statutes of Elizabeth is a charity; and all such have borne that name and character to this day. I mean to confine myself to that description of charity, the statute charity, and to apply it to this case alone.

The devise before us proposes to establish, as its main object, a school of learning, a college. There are provisions, of course, for lodging, clothing, and feeding the pupils, but all this is subsidiary. The great object is the instruction of the young; although it proposes to give the children better food and clothes and lodging, and proposes that the system of education shall be somewhat better than that which is usually provided for the poor and destitute in our public institutions generally.

The main object, then, is to establish a school of learning for children, beginning with them at a very tender age, and retaining them (namely, from six years to eighteen) till they are on the verge of manhood, when they will have expended more than one third part of the average duration of human life. For if the college takes them at six, and keeps them till they are eighteen, a period of twelve years will be passed within its walls; more than a third part of the average of human life. These children, then, are to be taken almost before they learn their alphabet, and be discharged about the time that men enter on the active business of life. At six, many do not know their alphabet. John Wesley did not know a letter till after he was six years old, and his mother then took him on her lap, and taught him his alphabet at a single lesson. There are many parents who think that any attempt to instil the rudiments of education into the mind of a child at an earlier age, is little better than labor thrown away.

The great object, then, which Mr. Girard seemed to have in view, was to take these orphans at this very tender age, and to keep them within his walls until they were entering manhood. And this object I pray your honors steadily to bear in mind.

I never, in the whole course of my life, listened to any thing with more sincere delight, than to the remarks of my learned friend who opened this cause, on the nature and character of true charity. I agree with every word he said on that subject. I almost envy him his power of expressing so happily what his mind conceives so clearly and correctly. He is right when he speaks of it as an emanation from the Christian religion. He is right when he says that it has its origin in the word of God. He is right when he says that it was unknown throughout all the world till the first dawn of Christianity. He is right, pre-eminently right, in all this, as he was preëminently happy in his power of clothing his thoughts and feelings in appropriate forms of speech. And I maintain, that, in any institution for the instruction of youth, where the authority of God is disowned, and the duties of Christianity derided and despised, and its ministers shut out from all participation in its proceedings, there can no more be charity, true charity, found to exist, than evil can spring out of the Bible, error out of truth, or hatred and animosity come forth from the bosom of perfect love. No, Sir! No, Sir! If charity denies its birth and parentage, if it turns infidel to the great doctrines of the Christian religion, if it turns unbeliever, it is no longer charity! There is no longer charity, either in a Christian sense or in the sense of jurisprudence; for it separates itself from the fountain of its own creation.

There is nothing in the history of the Christian religion; there is nothing in the history of English law, either before or after the Conquest; there can be found no such thing as a school of instruction in a Christian land, from which the Christian religion has been, of intent and purpose, rigorously and opprobriously excluded, and yet such school regarded as a charitable trust or foundation. This is the first instance on record. I do not say that there may not be charity schools in which religious instruction is not provided. I need not go that length, although I take that to be the rule of the English law. But what I do say, and repeat, is, that a school for the instruction of the young, which sedulously and reproachfully excludes Christian knowledge, is no charity, either on principle or authority, and is not, therefore, entitled to the character of a charity in a court of equity. I have considered this proposition, and am ready to stand by it.

I will not say that there may not be a charity for instruction, in which there is no positive provision for the Christian religion. But I do say, and do insist, that there is no such thing in the history of religion, no such thing in the history of human law, as a charity, a school of instruction for children, from which the Christian religion and Christian teachers are excluded, as unsafe and unworthy intruders. Such a scheme is deprived of that which enters into the very essence of human benevolence, when that benevolence contemplates instruction, that is to say, religious knowledge, connected with human knowledge. It is this which causes it to be regarded as a charity; and by reason of this it is entitled to the special favor of the courts of law. This is the vital question which must be decided by this court. It is vital to the understanding of what the law is, it is vital to the validity of this devise.

If this be true, if there can be no charity in that plan of education which opposes Christianity, then that goes far to decide this case. I take it that this court, in looking at this subject, will see the important bearing of this point upon it. The learned counsel said that the State of Pennsylvania was not an infidel State. It is true that she is not an infidel State. She has a Christian origin, a Christian code of laws, a system of legislation founded on nothing else, in many of its important bearings upon human society, than the belief of the people of Pennsylvania, their firm and sincere belief, in the divine authority and great importance of the truths of the Christian religion. And she should the more carefully seek to preserve them pure.

Now, let us look at the condition and prospects of these tender children, who are to be submitted to this experiment of instruction without Christianity. In the first place, they are orphans, have no parents to guide or instruct them in the way in which they should go, no father, no religious mother, to lead them to the pure fount of Christianity; they are orphans. If they were only poor, there might be somebody bound by ties of human affection to look after their spiritual welfare; to see that they imbibed no erroneous opinions on the subject of religion; that they run into no excessive improprieties of belief as well as conduct. The child would have its father or mother to teach it to lisp the name of its Creator in prayer, or hymn His praise. But in this experimental school of instruction, if the orphans have any friends or connections able to look after their welfare, it shuts them out. It is made the duty of the governors of the institution, on taking the child, so to make out the indentures of apprenticeship as to keep him from any after interference in his welfare on the part of guardians or relatives; to keep them from withdrawing him from the school, or interfering with his instruction whilst he is in the school, in any manner whatever.

The school or college is to be surrounded by high walls; there are to be two gates in these walls, and no more; they are to be of iron within, and iron bound or covered without; thus answering more to the description of a castle than a school-house. The children are to be thus guarded for twelve years in this, I do not mean to say a prison, nor do I mean to say that this is exactly close confinement; but it is much closer confinement than ordinarily is met with, under the rules of any institution at present, and has a resemblance to the monastic institutions of past ages, rather than to any school for instruction at this period, at least in this country.

All is to be within one great inclosure; all that is done for the bodily or mental welfare of the child is to be done within this great wall. It has been said that the children could attend public worship elsewhere. Where is the proof of this? There is no such provision in the devise; there is nothing said about it in any part of Mr. Girard's will; and I shall show presently that any such thing would be just as adverse to Mr. Girard's whole scheme, as it would be that the doctrines of Christianity should be preached within the walls of the college.

These children, then, are taken before they know the alphabet. They are kept till the period of early manhood, and then sent out into the world to enter upon its business and affairs. By this time, the character will have been stamped. For if there is any truth in the Bible, if there is any truth in those oracles which soar above all human authority, or if any thing be established as a general fact, by the experience of mankind, in this first third of human life the character is formed. And what sort of a character is likely to be made by this process, this experimental system of instruction?

I have read the two provisions of Mr. Girard's will in relation to this feature of his school. The first excludes the Christian religion and all its ministers from its walls. The second explains the whole principles upon which he purposes to conduct his school. It was to try an experiment in education, never before known to the Christian world. It had been recommended often enough among those who did not belong to the Christian world. But it was never known to exist, never adopted by any body even professing a connection with Christianity. And I cannot do better, in order to show the tendency and object of this institution, than to read from a paper by Bishop White, which has been referred to by the other side.*

In order to a right understanding of what was Mr. Girard's real intention and original design, we have only to read carefully the words of the clause I have referred to. He njoins that no ministers of religion, of any sects, shall be allowed to enter his college, on any pretence whatever. Now, it is obvious, that by sects he means Christian sects. Any of the followers of Voltaire or D'Alembert may have admission into this school whenever they please, because they are not usually spoken of as "sects." The doors are to be opened to the opposers and revilers of Christianity, in every form and shape, and shut to its supporters. While the voice of the upholders of Christianity is never to be heard within the walls, the voices of those who impugn Christianity may be raised high and loud, till they shake the marble roof of the building. It is no less derogatory thus to exclude the one, and admit the other, than it would be to make a positive provision and all the necessary arrangements for lectures and lessons and teachers, for all the details of the doctrines of infidelity. It is equally derogatory, it is the same in principle, thus to shut the door to one party, and open the door to the other.

* See Appendix, No. I.

We must reason as to the probable results of such a system according to natural consequences. They say, on the other side, that infidel teachers will not be admitted in this school. How do they know that? What is the inevitable tendency of such an education as is here prescribed? What is likely to occur? The court cannot suppose that the trustees will act in opposition to the directions of the will. If they accept the trust, they must fulfil it, and carry out the details of Mr. Girard's plan.

Now, what is likely to be the effect of this system on the minds of these children, thus left solely to its pernicious influence, with no one to care for their spiritual welfare in this world or the next? They are to be left entirely to the tender mercies of those who will try upon them this experiment of moral philosophy or philosophical morality. Morality without sentiment; benevolence towards man, without a sense of responsibility towards God; the duties of this life performed, without any reference to the life which is to come; this is Mr. Girard's theory of useful education.

Half of these poor children may die before the term of their education expires. Still, those who survive must be brought up imbued fully with the inevitable tendencies of the system.

It has been said that there may be lay preachers among them. Lay preachers! This is ridiculous enough in a country of Christianity and religion. [Here some one handed Mr. Webster a note.] A friend informs me that four of the principal religious sects in this country, the Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Methodists, and Baptists, allow no lay preachers; and these four constitute a large majority of the religious and Christian portion of the people of the United States. And, besides, lay preaching would be just as adverse to Mr. Girard's original object and whole plan as professional preaching, provided it should be Christianity which should be preached.

It is plain, as plain as language can be made, that he did not intend to allow the minds of these children to be troubled about religion of any kind, whilst they were within the college. And why? He himself assigns the reason. Because of the difficulty and trouble, he says, that might arise from the multitude of sects, and creeds, and teachers, and the various clashing doctrines and tenets advanced by the different preachers of Christianity. Therefore his desire as to these orphans is, that their minds should be kept free from all bias of any kind in favor of any description of Christian creed, till they arrived at manhood, and should have left the walls of his school.

Now, are not laymen equally sectarian in their views with clergymen? And would it not be just as easy to prevent sectarian doctrines from being preached by a clergyman as from being taught by a layman? It is idle, therefore, to speak of lay preaching.

Mr. Sergeant here rose, and said that they on their side had not uttered one word about lay preaching. It was lay teaching they spoke of.

Well, I would just as soon take it that way as the other, teaching as preaching. Is not the teaching of laymen as sectarian as the preaching of clergymen? What is the difference between unlettered laymen and lettered clergymen in this respect? Every one knows that laymen are as violent controversialists as clergymen, and the less informed the more violent. So this, while it is a little more ridiculous, is equally obnoxious. According to my experience, a layman is just as likely to launch out into sectarian views, and to advance clashing doctrines and violent, bigoted prejudices, as a professional preacher, and even more so. Every objection to professional religious instruction applies with still greater force to lay teaching. As in other cases, so in this, the greatest degree of candor is usually found accompanying the greatest degree of knowledge. Nothing is more apt to be positive and dogmatical than ignorance.

But there is no provision in any part of Mr. Girard's will for the introduction of any lay teaching on religious matters whatever. The children are to get their religion when they leave his school, and they are to have nothing to do with religion before they do leave it. They are then to choose their religious opinions, and not before.

MR. BINNEY. "Choose their tenets" is the expression.

Tenets are opinions, I believe. The mass of one's religious tenets makes up one's religion.

Now, it is evident that Mr. Girard meant to found a school of morals, without any reference to, or connection with, religion. But, after all, there is nothing original in this plan of his. It has its origin in a deistical source, but not from the highest school of infidelity. Not from Bolingbroke, or Shaftesbury, or Gibbon; not even from Voltaire or D'Alembert. It is from two persons who were probably known to Mr. Girard in the early part of his life; it is from Mr. Thomas Paine and Mr. Volney. Mr. Thomas Paine, in his Age of Reason, says: 'Let us devise means to establish schools of instruction, that we may banish the ignorance that the ancient régime of kings and priests has spread among the people. Let us propagate morality, unfettered by superstition."

MR. BINNEY. What do you get that from?

The same place that Mr. Girard got this provision of his will from, Paine's Age of Reason. The same phraseology in effect is here. Paine disguised his real meaning, it is true. He said: "Let us devise means to establish schools to propagate morality, unfettered by superstition." Mr. Girard, who had no disguise about him, uses plain language to express the same meaning. In Mr. Girard's view, religion is just that thing which Mr. Paine calls superstition. "Let us establish schools of morality," said he, "unfettered by religious tenets. Let us give these children a system of pure morals before they adopt any religion." The ancient régime of which Paine spoke as obnoxious was that of kings and priests. That was the popular way he had of making any thing obnoxious that he wished to destroy. Now, if he had merely wished to get rid of the dogmas which he says were established by kings and priests, if he had no desire to abolish the Christian religion itself, he could have thus expressed himself: "Let us rid ourselves of the errors of kings and priests, and plant morality on the plain text of the Christian religion, with the simplest forms of religious worship."

I do not intend to leave this part of the cause, however, without a still more distinct statement of the objections to this scheme of instruction. This is due, I think, to the subject and to the occasion; and I trust I shall not be considered presumptuous, or as trenching upon the duties which properly belong to another profession. But I deem it due to the cause of Christianity to take up the notions of this scheme of Mr. Girard, and show how mistaken is the idea of calling it a charity. In the first place, then, I say, this scheme is derogatory to Christianity, because it rejects Christianity from the education of youth, by rejecting its teachers, by rejecting the ordinary agencies of instilling the Christian religion into the minds of the young. I do not say that, in order to make this a charity, there should be a positive provision for the teaching of Christianity, although, as I have already observed, I take that to be the rule in an English court of equity. But I need not, in this case, claim the whole benefit of that rule. I say it is derogatory, because there is a positive rejection of Christianity; because it rejects the ordinary means and agencies of Christianity. He who rejects the ordinary means of accomplishing an end, means to defeat that end itself, or else he has no meaning. And this is true, although the means originally be means of human appointment, and not attaching to or resting on any higher authority.

For example, if the New Testament had contained a set of principles of morality and religion, without reference to the means by which those principles were to be established, and if in the course of time a system of means had sprung up, become identified with the history of the world, become general, sanctioned by continued use and custom, then he who should reject those means would design to reject, and would reject, that morality and religion themselves.

This would be true in a case where the end rested on divine authority, and human agency devised and used the means. But if the means themselves be of divine authority also, then the rejection of them is a direct rejection of that authority.

Now, I suppose there is nothing in the New Testament more clearly established by the Author of Christianity, than the appointment of a Christian ministry. The world was to be evan-gelized, was to be brought out of darkness into light, by the influences of the Christian religion, spread and propagated by the instrumentality of man. A Christian ministry was therefore appointed by the Author of the Christian religion himself, and it stands on the same authority as any other part of his religion. When the lost sheep of the house of Israel were to be brought to the knowledge of Christianity, the disciples were commanded to go forth into all the cities, and to preach "that the kingdom of heaven is at hand." It was added, that whosoever would not receive them, nor hear their words, it should be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrha than for them. And after his resurrection, in the appointment of the great mission to the whole human race, the Author of Christianity commanded his disciples that they should "go into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." This was one of his last commands; and one of his last promises was the assurance, "Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world!" I say, therefore, there is nothing set forth more authentically in the New Testament than the appointment of a Christian ministry; and he who does not believe this does not and cannot believe the rest.

It is true that Christian ministers, in this age of the world, are selected in different ways and different modes by different sects and denominations. But there are, still, ministers of all sects and denominations. Why should we shut our eyes to the whole history of Christianity? Is it not the preaching of ministers of the Gospel that has evangelized the more civilized part of the world? Why do we at this day enjoy the lights and benefits of Christianity ourselves? Do we not owe it to the instrumentality of the Christian ministry? The ministers of Christianity, departing from Asia Minor, traversing Asia, Africa, and Europe, to Iceland, Greenland, and the poles of the earth, suffering all things, enduring all things, hoping all things, raising men everywhere from the ignorance of idol worship to the knowledge of the true God, and everywhere bringing life and immortality to light through the Gospel, have only been acting in obedience to the Divine instruction; they were commanded to go forth, and they have gone forth, and they still go forth. They have sought, and they still seek, to be able to preach the Gospel to every creature under the whole heaven.

And where was Christianity ever received, where were its truths ever poured into the human heart, where did its waters, springing up into everlasting life, ever burst forth, except in the track of a Christian ministry? Did we ever hear of an instance, does history record an instance, of any part of the globe Christianized by lay preachers or "lay teachers"? And, descending from kingdoms and empires to cities and countries, to parishes and villages, do we not all know, that wherever Christianity has been carried, and wherever it has been taught, by human agency, that agency was the agency of ministers of the Gospel? It is all idle, and a mockery, to pretend that any man has respect for the Christian religion who yet derides, reproaches, and stigmatizes all its ministers and teachers. It is all idle, it is a mockery, and an insult to common sense, to maintain that a school for the instruction of youth, from which Christian instruction by Christian teachers is sedulously and rigorously shut out, is not deistical and infidel both in its purpose and in its tendency. I insist, therefore, that this plan of education is, in this respect, derogatory to Christianity, in opposition to it, and calculated either to subvert or to supersede it.

In the next place, this scheme of education is derogatory to Christianity, because it proceeds upon the presumption that the Christian religion is not the only true foundation, or any necessary foundation, of morals. The ground taken is, that religion is not necessary to morality; that benevolence may be insured by habit, and that all the virtues may flourish, and be safely left to the chance of flourishing, without touching the waters of the living spring of religious responsibility. With him who thinks thus, what can be the value of the Christian revelation? So the Christian world has not thought; for by that Christian world, throughout its broadest extent, it has been, and is, held as a fundamental truth, that religion is the only solid basis of morals, and that moral instruction not resting on this basis is only a building upon sand. And at what age of the Christian era have those who professed to teach the Christian religion, or to believe in its authority and importance, not insisted on the absolute necessity of inculcating its principles and its precepts upon the minds of the young? In what age, by what sect, where, when, by whom, has religious truth been excluded from the education of youth? Nowhere; never.

Everywhere, and at all times, it has been, and is, regarded as essential. It is of the essence, the vitality, of useful instruction. From all this Mr. Girard dissents. His plan denies the necessity and the propriety of religious instruction as a part of the education of youth. He dissents, not only from all the sentiments of Christian mankind, from all common conviction, and from the results of all experience, but he dissents also from still higher authority, the word of God itself. My learned friend has referred, with propriety, to one of the commands of the Decalogue; but there is another, a first commandment, and that is a precept of religion, and it is in subordination to this that the moral precepts of the Decalogue are proclaimed. This first great commandment teaches man that there is one, and only one, great First Cause, one, and only one, proper object of human worship. This is the great, the ever fresh, the overflowing fountain of all revealed truth. Without it, human life is a desert, of no known termination on any side, but shut in on all sides by a dark and impenetrable horizon. Without the light of this truth, man knows nothing of his origin, and nothing of his end. And when the Decalogue was delivered to the Jews, with this great announcement and command at its head, what said the inspired lawgiver? that it should be kept from children? that it should be reserved as a communication fit only for mature age? Far, far otherwise. "And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thy heart. And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shall talk of them when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up."

There is an authority still more imposing and awful. When little children were brought into the presence of the Son of God, his disciples proposed to send them away; but he said, "Suffer little children to come unto me." Unto me; he did not send them first for lessons in morals to the schools of the Pharisees or to the unbelieving Sadducees, nor to read the precepts and lessons phylacteried on the garments of the Jewish priesthood, he said nothing of different creeds or clashing doctrines; but he opened at once to the youthful mind the everlasting fountain of living waters, the only source of eternal truths: "Suffer little children to come unto me." And that injunction is of perpetual obligation. It addresses itself to-day with the same earnestness and the same authority which attended its first utterance to the Christian world. It is of force everywhere, and at all times. It extends to the ends of the earth, it will reach to the end of time, always and everywhere sounding in the ears of men, with an emphasis which no repetition can weaken, and with an authority which nothing can supersede: "Suffer little children to come unto me."

And not only my heart, and my judgment, my belief, and my conscience, instruct me that this great precept should be obeyed, but the idea is so sacred, the solemn thoughts connected with it so crowd upon me, it is so utterly at variance with this system of philosophical morality which we have heard advocated, that I stand and speak here in fear of being influenced by my feelings to exceed the proper line of my professional duty. Go thy way at this time, is the language of philosophical morality, and I will send for thee at a more convenient season. This is the language of Mr. Girard in his will. In this there is neither religion nor reason.

The earliest and the most urgent intellectual want of human nature is the knowledge of its origin, its duty, and its destiny. "Whence am I, what am I, and what is before me?" This is the cry of the human soul, so soon as it raises its contemplation above visible, material things.

When an intellectual being finds himself on this earth, as soon as the faculties of reason operate, one of the first inquiries of his mind is, "Shall I be here always?" "Shall I live here for ever?" And reasoning from what he sees daily occuring to others, he learns to a certainty that his state of being must one day be changed. I do not mean to deny, that it may be true that he is created with this consciousness; but whether it be consciousness, or the result of his reasoning faculties, man soon learns that he must die. And of all sentient beings, he alone, so far as we can judge, attains to this knowledge. His Maker has made him capable of learning this. Before he knows his origin and destiny, he knows that he is to die. Then comes that most urgent and solemn demand for light that ever proceeded, or can proceed, from the profound and anxious broodings of the human soul. It is stated, with wonderful force and beauty, in that incomparable composition, the book of Job: "For there is hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease; that, through the scent of water, it will bud, and bring forth boughs like a plant. But if a man die, shall he live again?" And that question nothing but God, and the religion of God, can solve. Religion does solve it, and teaches every man that he is to live again, and that the duties of this life have reference to the life which is to come. And hence, since the introduction of Christianity, it has been the duty, as it has been the effort, of the great and the good, to sanctify human knowledge, to bring it to the fount, and to baptize learning into Christianity; to gather up all its productions, its earliest and its latest, its blossoms and its fruits, and lay them all upon the altar of religion and virtue.

Another important point involved in this question is, What becomes of the Christian Sabbath, in a school thus established? I do not mean to say that this stands exactly on the same authority as the Christian religion, but I mean to say that the observance of the Sabbath is a part of Christianity in all its forms. All Christians admit the observance of the Sabbath. All admit that there is a Lord's day, although there may be a difference in the belief as to which is the right day to be observed. Now, I say that in this institution, under Mr. Girard's scheme, the ordinary observance of the Sabbath could not take place, because the ordinary means of observing it are excluded. I know that I shall be told here, also, that lay teachers would come in again; and I say again, in reply, that, where the ordinary means of attaining an end are excluded, the intention is to exclude the end itself. There can be no Sabbath in this college, there can be no religious observance of the Lord's day; for there are no means for attaining that end. It will be said, that the children would be permitted to go out. There is nothing seen of this permission in Mr. Girard's will. And I say again, that it would be just as much opposed to Mr. Girard's whole scheme to allow these children to go out and attend places of public worship on the Sabbath day, as it would be to have ministers of religion to preach to them within the walls; because, if they go out to hear preaching, they will hear just as much about religious controversies, and clashing doctrines, and more, than if appointed preachers officiated in the college. His object, as he states, was to keep their minds free from all religious doctrines and sects, and he would just as much defeat his ends by sending them out as by having religious instruction within. Where, then, are these little children to go? Where can they go to learn the truth, to reverence the Sabbath? They are far from their friends, they have no one to accompany them to any place of worship, no one to show them the right from the wrong course; their minds must be kept clear from all bias on the subject, and they are just as far from the ordinary observance of the Sabbath as if there were no Sabbath day at all. And where there is no observance of the Christian Sabbath, there will of course be no public worship of God.

In connection with this subject I will observe, that there has been recently held a large convention of clergymen and laymen in Columbus, Ohio, to lead the minds of the Christian public to the importance of a more particular observance of the Christian Sabbath; and I will read, as part of my argument, an extract from their address, which bears with peculiar force upon this case.

"It is alike obvious that the Sabbath exerts its salutary power by making the population acquainted with the being, perfections, and laws of God; with our relations to him as his creatures, and our obligations to him as rational, accountable subjects, and with our character as sinners, for whom his mercy has provided a Saviour; under whose government we live to be restrained from sin and reconciled to God, and fitted by his word and spirit for the inheritance above.

"It is by the reiterated instruction and impression which the Sabbath imparts to the population of a nation, by the moral principle which it forms, by the conscience which it maintains, by the habits of method, cleanliness, and industry it creates, by the rest and renovated vigor it bestows on exhausted human nature, by the lengthened life and higher health it affords, by the holiness it inspires, and cheering hopes of heaven, and the protection and favor of God, which its observance insures, that the Sabbath is rendered the moral conservator of nations.

"The omnipresent influence the Sabbath exerts, however, by no secret charm or compendious action, upon masses of unthinking minds; but by arresting the stream of worldly thoughts, interests, and affections, stopping the din of business, unlading the mind of its cares and responsibilities, and the body of its burdens, while God speaks to men, and they attend, and hear, and fear, and learn to do his will.

"You might as well put out the sun, and think to enlighten the world with tapers, destroy the attraction of gravity, and think to wield the universe by human powers, as to extinguish the moral illumination of the Sabbath, and break this glorious main-spring of the moral government of God."

And I would ask, Would any Christian man consider it desirable for his orphan children, after his death, to find refuge within this asylum, under all the circumstances and influences which will necessarily surround its inmates? Are there, or will there be, any Christian parents who would desire that their children should be placed in this school, to be for twelve years exposed to the pernicious influences which must be brought to bear on their minds? I very much doubt if there is any Christian father who hears me this day, and I am quite sure that there is no Christian mother, who, if called upon to lie down on the bed of death, although sure to leave her children as poor as children can be left, who would not rather trust them, nevertheless, to the Christian charity of the world, however uncertain it has been said to be, than place them where their physical wants and comforts would be abundantly attended to, but away from the solaces and consolations, the hopes and the grace, of the Christian religion. She would rather trust them to the mercy and kindness of that spirit, which, when it has nothing else left, gives a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple; to that spirit which has its origin in the fountain of all good, and of which we have on record an example the most beautiful, the most touching, the most intensely affecting, that the world's history contains, I mean the offering of the poor widow, who threw her two mites into the treasury. "And he looked up, and saw the rich men casting their gifts into the treasury; and he saw also a certain poor widow casting in thither two mites. And he said, Of a truth I say unto you, that this poor widow hath cast in more than they all; for all these have, of their abundance, cast in unto the offerings of God: but she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had." What more tender, more solemnly affecting, more profoundly pathetic, than this charity, this offering to God, of a farthing! We know nothing of her name, her family, or her tribe. We only know that she was a poor woman, and a widow, of whom there is nothing left upon record but this sublimely simple story, that when the rich came to cast their proud offerings into the treasury, this poor woman came also, and cast in her two mites, which made a farthing! And that example, thus made the subject of divine commendation, has been read, and told, and gone abroad everywhere, and sunk deep into a hundred millions of hearts, since the commencement of the Christian era, and has done more good than could be accomplished by a thousand marble palaces, because it was charity mingled with true benevolence, given in the fear, the love, the service, and honor of God; because it was charity, that had its origin in religious feeling; because it was a gift to the honor of God!

Cases have come before the courts, of bequests, in last wills, made or given to God, without any more specific direction; and these bequests have been regarded as creating charitable uses. But can that be truly called a charity which flies in the face of all the laws of God and all the usages of Christian man? I arraign no man for mixing up a love of distinction and notoriety with his charities. I blame not Mr. Girard because he desired to raise a splendid marble palace in the neighborhood of a beautiful city, that should endure for ages, and transmit his name and fame to posterity. But his school of learning is not to be valued, because it has not the chastening influences of true religion; because it has no fragrance of the spirit of Christianity. It is not a charity, for it has not that which gives to a charity for education its chief value. It will, therefore, soothe the heart of no Christian parent, dying in poverty and distress, that those who owe to him their being may be led, and fed, and clothed by Mr. Girard's bounty, at the expense of being excluded from all the means of religious instruction afforded to other children, and shut up through the most interesting period of their lives in a seminary without religion, and with moral sentiments as cold as its own marble walls.

I now come to the consideration of the second part of this clause in the will, that is to say, the reasons assigned by Mr. Girard for making these restrictions with regard to the ministers of religion; and I say that these are much more derogatory to Christianity than the main provision itself, excluding them. He says that there are such a multitude of sects and such diversity of opinion, that he will exclude all religion and all its ministers, in order to keep the minds of the children free from clashing controversies. Now, does not this tend to subvert all belief in the utility of teaching the Christian religion to youth at all? Certainly, it is a broad and bold denial of such utility. To say that the evil resulting to youth from the differences of sects and creeds overbalances all the benefits which the best education can give them, what is this but to say that the branches of the tree of religious knowledge are so twisted, and twined, and commingled, and all run so much into and over each other, that there is therefore no remedy but to lay the axe at the root of the tree itself? It means that, and nothing less! Now, if there be any thing more derogatory to the Christian religion than this, I should like to know what it is. In all this we see the attack upon religion itself, made on its ministers, its institutions, and its diversities. And that is the objection urged by all the lower and more vulgar schools of infidelity throughout the world. In all these schools, called schools of Rationalism in Germany, Socialism in England, and by various other names in various countries which they infest, this is the universal cant. The first step of all these philosophical moralists and regenerators of the human race is to attack the agency through which religion and Christianity are administered to man. But in this there is nothing new or original. We find the same mode of attack and remark in Paine's "Age of Reason." At page 336 he says: "The Bramin, the follower of Zoroaster, the Jew, the Mahometan, the Church of Rome, the Greek Church, the Protestant Church, split into several hundred contradictory sectaries, preaching, in some instances, damnation against each other, all cry out, 'Our holy religion!'"

We find the same view in Volney's "Ruins of Empires." Mr. Volney arrays in a sort of semicircle the different and conflicting religions of the world. "And first," says he, "surrounded by a group in various fantastic dresses, that confused mixture of violet, red, white, black, and speckled garments, with heads shaved, with tonsures, or with short hairs, with red hats, square bonnets, pointed mitres, or long beards, is the standard of the Roman Pontiff. On his right you see the Greek Pontiff, and on the left are the standards of two recent chiefs (Luther and Calvin), who, shaking off a yoke that had become tyrannical, had raised altar against altar in their reform, and wrested half of Europe from the Pope. Behind these are the subaltern sects, subdivided from the principal divisions. The Nestorians, Eutychians, Jacobites, Iconoclasts, Anabaptists, Presbyterians, Wickliffites, Osiandrians, Manicheans, Pietists, Adamites, the Contemplatives, the Quakers, the Weepers, and a hundred others, all of distinct parties, persecuting when strong, tolerant when weak, hating each other in the name of the God of peace, forming such an exclusive heaven in a religion of universal charity, damning each other to pains without end in a future state, and realizing in this world the imaginary hell of the other."

Can it be doubted for an instant that sentiments like these are derogatory to the Christian religion? And yet on grounds and reasons exactly these, not like these, but EXACTLY these, Mr. Girard founds his excuse for excluding Christianity and its ministers from his school. He is a tame copyist, and has only raised marble walls to perpetuate and disseminate the principles of Paine and of Volney. It has been said that Mr. Girard was in a difficulty; that he was the judge and disposer of his own property. We have nothing to do with his difficulties. It has been said that he must have done as he did do, because there could be no agreement otherwise. Agreement? among whom? about what? He was at liberty to do what he pleased with his own. He had to consult no one as to what he should do in the matter. And if he had wished to establish such a charity as might obtain the especial favor of the courts of law, he had only to frame it on principles not hostile to the religion of the country.

But the learned gentleman went even further than this, and to an extent that I regretted; he said that there was as much dispute about the Bible as about any thing else in the world. No, thank God, that is not the case!

MR. BINNEY. The disputes about the meaning of words and passages; you will admit that?

Well, there is a dispute about the translation of certain words; but if this be true, there is just as much dispute about it out of Mr. Girard's institution as there would be in it. And if this plan is to be advocated and sustained, why does not every man keep his children from attending all places of public worship until they are over eighteen years of age? He says that a prudent parent keeps his child from the influence of sectarian doctrines, by which I suppose him to mean those tenets that are opposed to his own. Well, I do not know but what that plan is as likely to make bigots as it is to make any thing else. I grant that the mind of youth should be kept pliant, and free from all undue and erroneous influences; that it should have as much play as is consistent with prudence; but put it where it can obtain the elementary principles of religious truth; at any rate, those broad and general precepts and principles which are admitted by all Christians. But here in this scheme of Mr. Girard, all sects and all creeds are denounced. And would not a prudent father rather send his child where he could get instruction under any form of the Christian religion, than where he could get none at all? There are many instances of institutions, professing one leading creed, educating youths of different sects. The Baptist college in Rhode Island receives and educates youths of all religious sects and all beliefs. The colleges all over New England differ in certain minor points of belief, and yet that is held to be no ground for excluding youth with other forms of belief, and other religious views and sentiments.

But this objection to the multitude and differences of sects is but the old story, the old infidel argument. It is notorious that there are certain great religious truths which are admitted and believed by all Christians. All believe in the existence of a God. All believe in the immortality of the soul. All believe in the responsibility, in another world, for our conduct in this. All believe in the divine authority of the New Testament. Dr. Paley says that a single word from the New Testament shuts up the mouth of human questioning, and excludes all human reasoning. And cannot all these great truths be taught to children without their minds being perplexed with clashing doctrines and sectarian controversies? Most certainly they can.

And, to compare secular with religious matters, what would become of the organization of society, what would become of man as a social being, in connection with the social system, if we applied this mode of reasoning to him in his social relations? We have a constitutional government, about the powers, and limitations, and uses of which there is a vast amount of differences of belief. Your honors have a body of laws, now before you, in relation to which differences of opinion, almost innumerable, are daily spread before the courts; in all these we see clashing doctrines and opinions advanced daily, to as great an extent as in the religious world.

Apply the reasoning advanced by Mr. Girard to human institutions, and you will tear them all up by the root; as you would inevitably tear all divine institutions up by the root, if such reasoning is to prevail. At the meeting of the first Congress there was a doubt in the minds of many of the propriety of opening the session with prayer; and the reason assigned was, as here, the great diversity of opinion and religious belief. At length Mr. Samuel Adams, with his gray hairs hanging about his shoulders, and with an impressive venerableness now seldom to be met with (I suppose owing to the difference of habits), rose in that assembly, and, with the air of a perfect Puritan, said that it did not become men, professing to be Christian men, who had come together for solemn deliberation in the hour of their extremity, to say that there was so wide a difference in their religious belief, that they could not, as one man, bow the knee in prayer to the Almighty, whose advice and assistance they hoped to obtain. Independent as he was, and an enemy to all prelacy as he was known to be, he moved that the Rev. Mr. Duché, of the Episcopal Church, should address the Throne of Grace in prayer. And John Adams, in a letter to his wife, says that he never saw a more moving spectacle. Mr. Duché read the Episcopal service of the Church of England, and then, as if moved by the occasion, he broke out into extemporaneous prayer. And those men, who were then about to resort to force to obtain their rights, were moved to tears; and floods of tears, Mr. Adams says, ran down the cheeks of the pacific Quakers who formed part of that most interesting assembly. Depend upon it, where there is a spirit of Christianity, there is a spirit which rises above forms, above ceremonies, independent of sect or creed, and the controversies of clashing doctrines.

The consolations of religion can never be administered to any of these sick and dying children in this college. It is said, indeed, that a poor, dying child can be carried out beyond the walls of the school. He can be carried out to a hostelry, or hovel, and there receive those rites of the Christian religion which cannot be performed within those walls, even in his dying hour! Is not all this shocking? What a stricture is it upon this whole scheme! What an utter condemnation! A dying youth cannot receive religious solace within this seminary of learning!

But, it is asked, what could Mr. Girard have done? He could have done, as has been done in Lombardy by the Emperor of Austria, as my learned friend has informed us, where, on a large scale, the principle is established of teaching the elementary principles of the Christian religion, of enforcing human duties by divine obligations, and carefully abstaining in all cases from interfering with sects or the inculcation of sectarian doctrines. How have they done in the schools of New England? There, as far as I am acquainted with them, the great elements of Christian truth are taught in every school. The Scriptures are read, their authority taught and enforced, their evidences explained, and prayers usually offered.

The truth is, that those who really value Christianity, and believe in its importance, not only to the spiritual welfare of man, but to the safety and prosperity of human society, rejoice that in its revelations and its teachings there is so much which mounts above controversy, and stands on universal acknowledgment. While many things about it are disputed or are dark, they still plainly see its foundation, and its main pillars; and they behold in it a sacred structure, rising up to the heavens. They wish its general principles, and all its great truths, to be spread over the whole earth. But those who do not value Christianity, nor believe in its importance to society or individuals, cavil about sects and schisms, and ring monotonous changes upon the shallow and so often refuted objections founded on alleged variety of discordant creeds and clashing doctrines.

I shall close this part of my argument by reading extracts from an English writer, one of the most profound thinkers of the age, a friend of reformation in the government and laws, John Foster, the friend and associate of Robert Hall. Looking forward to the abolition of the present dynasties of the Old World, and desirous to see how the order and welfare of society is to be preserved in the absence of present conservative principles, he says: —

"Undoubtedly the zealous friends of popular education account knowledge valuable absolutely, as being the apprehension of things as they are; a prevention of delusions; and so far a fitness for right volitions. But they consider religion (besides being itself the primary and infinitely the most important part of knowledge) as a principle indispensable for securing the full benefit of all the rest. It is desired, and endeavored, that the understandings of these opening minds may be taken possession of by just and solemn ideas of their relation to the Eternal Almighty Being; that they may be taught to apprehend it as an awful reality, that they are perpetually under his inspection; and, as a certainty, that they must at length appear before him in judgment, and find in another life the consequences of what they are in spirit and conduct here. It is to be impressed on them, that his will is the supreme law, that his declarations are the most momentous truth known on earth, and his favor and condemnation the greatest good and evil. Under an ascendency of this divine wisdom it is, that their discipline in any other knowledge is designed to be conducted; so that nothing in the mode of their instruction may have a tendency contrary to it, and every thing be taught in a manner recognizing the relation with it, as far as shall consist with a natural, unforced way of keeping the relation in view. Thus it is sought to be secured, that, as the pupil's mind grows stronger, and multiplies its resources, and he therefore has necessarily more power and means for what is wrong, there may be luminously presented to him, as if celestial eyes visibly beamed upon him, the most solemn ideas that can enforce what is right.

"Such is the discipline meditated for preparing the subordinate classes to pursue their individual welfare, and act their part as members of the community. . . . . .

"All this is to be taught, in many instances directly, in others by reference for confirmation, from the Holy Scriptures, from which authority will also be impressed, all the while, the principles of religion. And religion, while its grand concern is with the state of the soul towards God and eternal interests, yet takes every principle and rule of morals under its peremptory sanction; making the primary obligation and responsibility be towards God, of every thing that is a duty with respect to men. So that, with the subjects of this education, the sense of propriety shall be conscience; the consideration of how they ought to be regulated in their conduct as a part of the community shall be the recollection that their Master in heaven dictates the laws of that conduct, and will judicially hold them amenable for every part of it.

"And is not a discipline thus addressed to the purpose of fixing religious principles in ascendency, as far as that difficult object is within the power of discipline, and of infusing a salutary tincture of them into whatever else is taught, the right way to bring up citizens faithful to all that deserves fidelity in the social compact? . . . . .

"Lay hold on the myriads of juvenile spirits before they have time to grow up, through ignorance, into a reckless hostility to social order; train them to sense and good morals; inculcate the principles of religion, simply and solemnly, as religion, as a thing directly of divine dictation, and not as if its authority were chiefly in virtue of human institutions; let the higher orders, generally, make it evident to the multitude that they are desirous to raise them in value, and promote their happiness; and then, whatever the demands of the people as a body, thus improving in understanding and sense of justice, shall come to be, and whatever modification their preponderance may ultimately enforce on the great social arrangements, it will be infallibly certain that there never can be a love of disorder, an insolent anarchy, a prevailing spirit of revenge and devastation. Such a conduct of the ascendant ranks would, in this nation at least, secure that, as long as the world lasts, there never would be any formidable commotion, or violent sudden changes. All those modifications of the national economy to which an improving people would aspire, and would deserve to obtain, would be gradually accomplished, in a manner by which no party would be wronged, and all would be the happier." *

I not only read this for the excellence of its sentiments and their application to the subject, but because they are the results of the profound meditations of a man who is dealing with popular ignorance. Desirous of, and expecting, a great change in the social system of the Old World, he is anxious to discover that conservative principle by which society can be kept together when crowns and mitres shall have no more influence. And he says that the only conservative principle must be, and is, RELIGION! the authority of God! his revealed will! and the influence of the teaching of the ministers of Christianity!

Mr. Webster here stated that he would, on Monday, bring forward certain references and legal points bearing on this view of the case.

The court then adjourned.

SECOND DAY.

The seven judges all took their seats at eleven o'clock, and the court was opened.

Mr. Binney observed to the court, that he had omitted to notice, in his argument, that, in regard to the statutes of Uniformity and Tolera tion in England, whilst the Jewish Talmuds for the propagation of Judaism alone were not sustained by those statutes, yet the Jewish Talmuds for the maintenance of the poor were sustained thereby. And the decisions show that, where a gift had for its object the maintenance and education of poor Jewish children, the statutes sustained the devise. In proof of this he quoted 1 Ambler, by Blunt, p. 228, case of De Costa, &c. Also, the case of Jacobs v. Gomperte, in the notes. Also, in the notes, 2 Swanston, p. 487, same case of De Costa, &c. Also, 7 Vesey, p. 423, case of Mo Catto v. Lucardo. Also, Sheppard, p. 107, and Boyle, p. 43.

* Foster's Essay on the Evils of Popular Ignorance, Section IV.

Another case was that of a bequest given to an object abroad, and in the decision the Master of the Rolls considered that religious instruction was not a necessary part of education. See, also, the case of The Attorney-General v. The Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Jacobs, p. 485.

Mr. Binney then quoted from Noah Webster the definition of the word "tenets," to show that Mr. Webster did not give the right definition when he said that "tenets" meant "religion."

Mr. Webster then rose and said: —

The arguments of my learned friend, may it please your honors, in relation to the Jewish laws as tolerated by the statutes, go to maintain my very proposition; that is, that no school for the instruction of youth in any system which is in any way derogatory to the Christian religion, or for the teaching of doctrines that are in any way contrary to the Christian religion, is, or ever was, regarded as a charity by the courts. It is true that the statutes of Toleration regarded a devise for the maintenance of poor Jewish children, to give them food and raiment and lodging, as a charity. But a devise for the teaching of the Jewish religion to poor children, that should come into the Court of Chancery, would not be regarded as a charity, or entitled to any peculiar privileges from the court.

When I stated to your honors, in the course of my argument on Saturday, that all denominations of Christians had some mode or provision for the appointment of teachers of Christianity amongst them, I meant to have said something about the Quakers. Although we know that the teachers among them come into their office in a somewhat peculiar manner, yet there are preachers and teachers of Christianity provided in that peculiar body, notwithstanding its objection to the mode of appointing teachers and preachers by other Christian sects. The place or character of a Quaker preacher is an office and appointment as well known as that of a preacher among any other denomination of Christians.

I have heretofore argued to show that the Christian religion, its general principles, must ever be regarded among us as the foundation of civil society; and I have thus far confined my remarks to the tendency and effect of the scheme of Mr. Girard (if carried out) upon the Christian religion. But I will go farther, and say that this school, this scheme or system, in its tendencies and effects, is opposed to all religions, of every kind. I will not now enter into a controversy with my learned friend about the word "tenets," whether it signify opinions or dogmas, or whatever you please. Religious tenets, I take it, and I suppose it will be generally conceded, mean religious opinions; and if a youth has arrived at the age of eighteen, and has no religious tenets, it is very plain that he has no religion. I do not care whether you call them dogmas, tenets, or opinions. If the youth does not entertain dogmas, tenets, or opinions, or opinions, tenets, or dogmas, on religious subjects, then he has no religion at all. And this strikes at a broader principle than when you merely look at this school in its effect upon Christianity alone. We will suppose the case of a youth of eighteen, who has just left this school, and has gone through an education of philosophical morality, precisely in accordance with the views and expressed wishes of the donor. He comes then into the world to choose his religious tenets. The very next day, perhaps, after leaving school, he comes into a court of law to give testimony as a witness. Sir, I protest that by such a system he would be disfranchised. He is asked, "What is your religion?" His reply is, "O, I have not yet chosen any; I am going to look round, and see which suits me best." He is asked, "Are you a Christian?" He replies, "That involves religious tenets, and as yet I have not been allowed to entertain any." Again, "Do you believe in a future state of rewards and punishments?" And he answers, "That involves sectarian controversies, which have carefully been kept from me." "Do you believe in the existence of a God?" He answers, that there are clashing doctrines involved in these things, which he has been taught to have nothing to do with; that the belief in the existence of a God, being one of the first questions in religion, he is shortly about to think of that proposition. Why, Sir, it is vain to talk about the destructive tendency of such a system; to argue upon it is to insult the understanding of every man; it is mere, sheer. low, ribald, vulgar *deism and infidelity! It opposes all that is in heaven, and all on earth that is worth being on earth. It destroys the connecting link between the creature and the Creator; it opposes that great system of universal benevolence and goodness that binds man to his Maker. No religion till he is eighteen! What would be the condition of all our families, of all our children, if religious fathers and religious mothers were to teach their sons and daughters no religious tenets till they were eighteen? What would become of their morals, their character, their purity of heart and life, their hope for time and eternity? What would become of all those thousand ties of sweetness, benevolence, love, and Christian feeling, that now render our young men and young maidens like comely plants growing up by a streamlet's side; the graces and the grace of opening manhood, of blossoming womanhood? What would become of all that now renders the social circle lovely and beloved? What would become of society itself? How could it exist? And is that to be considered a charity which strikes at the root of all this; which subverts all the excellence and the charms of social life; which tends to destroy the very foundation and framework of society, both in its practices and in its opinions; which subverts the whole decency, the whole morality, as well as the whole Christianity and government, of society? No, Sir! no, Sir!

And here let me turn to the consideration of the question, What is an oath? I do not mean in the variety of definitions that may be given to it as it existed and was practised in the time of the Romans, but an oath as it exists at present in our courts of law; as it is founded on a degree of consciousness that there is a Power above us that will reward our virtues and punish our vices. We all know that the doctrine of the English law is, that in the case of every person who enters court as a witness, be he Christian or Hindoo, there must be a firm conviction on his mind that falsehood or perjury will be punished, either in this world or the next, or he cannot be admitted as a witness. If he has not this belief, he is disfranchised. In proof of this, I refer your honors to the great case of Ormichund against Barker, in Lord Chief Justice Wills's report.

* The effect of this remark was almost electric, and some one in the court-room broke out in applause.

There this doctrine is clearly laid down. But in no case is a man allowed to be a witness that has no belief in future rewards and punishments for virtues or vices, nor ought he to be. We hold life, liberty, and property in this country upon a system of oaths; oaths founded on a religious belief of some sort. And that system which would strike away the great substratum, destroy the safe possession of life, liberty, and property, destroy all the institutions of civil society, cannot and will not be considered as entitled to the protection of a court of equity. It has been said, on the other side, that there was no teaching against religion or Christianity in this system. I deny it. The whole testament is one bold proclamation against Christianity and religion of every creed. The children are to be brought up in the principles declared in that testament. They are to learn to be suspicious of Christianity and religion; to keep clear of it, that their youthful heart may not become susceptible of the influences of Christianity or religion in the slightest degree. They are to be told and taught that religion is not a matter for the heart or conscience, but for the decision of the cool judgment of mature years; that at that period when the whole Christian world deem it most desirable to instil the chastening influences of Christianity into the tender and comparatively pure mind and heart of the child, ere the cares and corruptions of the world have reached and seared it, at that period the child in this college is to be carefully excluded therefrom, and to be told that its influence is pernicious and dangerous in the extreme. Why, the whole system is a constant preaching against Christianity and against religion, and I insist that there is no charity, and can be no charity, in that system of instruction from which Christianity is excluded. I perfectly agree with what my learned friend says in regard to the monasteries of the Old World, as seats of learning to which we are all indebted at the present day. Much of our learning, almost all of our early histories, and a vast amount of literary treasure, were preserved therein and emanated therefrom. But we all know, that although these were emphatically receptacles for literature of the highest order, yet they were always connected with Christianity, and were always regarded and conducted as religious establishments.

Going back as far as the statutes of Henry the Fourth, as early as 1402,* in the act respecting charities, we find that one hundred years before the Reformation, in Catholic times, in the establishment of every charitable institution, there was to be proper provision for religious instruction. Again, after the time of the Reformation, when those monastic institutions were abolished, in the 1st Edw. VI. ch. 14, we find certain chantries abolished, and their funds appropriated to the instruction of youth in the grammar schools founded in that reign, which Lord Eldon says extended all over the kingdom. In all these we find provision for religious instruction, the dispensation of the same being by a teacher or preacher. In 2 Swanston, p. 529, the case of the Bedford Charity, Lord Eldon gives a long opinion, in the course of which he says, that in these schools care is taken to educate youth in the Christian religion, and in all of them the New Testament is taught, both in Latin and Greek. Here, then, we find that the great and leading provision, both before and after the Reformation, was to connect the knowledge of Christianity with human letters. And it will be always found that a school for instruction of youth, to possess the privileges of a charity, must be provided with religious instruction.

For the decision, that the essentials of Christianity are part of the common law of the land, I refer your honors to 1 Vernon, p. 293, where Lord Hale, who cannot be suspected of any bigotry on this subject, says, that to decry religion, and call it a cheat, tends to destroy all religion; and he also declares Christianity to be part of the common law of the land. Mr. N. Dane, in his Abridgment, ch. 219, recognizes the same principle. In 2 Strange, p. 834, case of The King v. Wilson, the judges would not suffer it to be debated that writing against religion generally is an offence at common law. They laid stress upon the word "generally," because there might arise differences of opinion between religious writers on points of doctrine, and so forth. So in Taylor's case, 3 Merivale, p. 405, by the High Court of Chancery, these doctrines were recognized and maintained. The same doctrine is laid down in 2 Burn's Ecclesiastical Law, p. 95, Evans v. The Chamberlain of London; and in 2 Russell, p. 501, The Attorney-General v. The Earl of Mansfield.

* 2 Pickering, p. 435.

There is a case of recent date, which, if the English law is to prevail, would seem conclusive as to the character of this devise. It is the case of The Attorney-General v. Cullum, 1 Younge and Collyer's Reports, p. 411. The case was heard and decided in 1842, by Sir Knight Bruce, Vice-Chancellor. The reporter's abstract, or summary, of the decision is this: "COURTS OF EQUITY, IN THIS COUNTRY, WILL NOT SANCTION ANY SYSTEM OF EDUCATION IN WHICH RELIGION IS NOT INCLUDED."

The charity in question in that case was established in the reign of Edward the Fourth, for the benefit of the community and poor inhabitants of the town of Bury St. Edmunds. The objects of the charity were various: for relief of prisoners, educating and instructing poor people, for food and raiment for the aged and impotent, and others of the same kind. There were uses, also, now deemed superstitious, such as praying for the souls of the dead. In this, and in other respects, the charity required revision, to suit it to the habits and requirements of modern times; and a scheme was accordingly set forth for such revision by the master, under the direction of the court. By this scheme there were to be schools, and these schools were to be closed on Sundays, although the Scriptures were to be read daily on other days. This was objected to, and it was insisted, on the other hand, that the masters and mistresses of the schools should be members of the Church of England; that they should, on every Lord's day, give instruction in the doctrines of the Church to those children whose parents might so desire; but that all the scholars should be required to attend public worship every Lord's day in the parish church, or other place of worship, according to their respective creeds.

The Vice-Chancellor said, that the term "education" was properly understood, by all the parties, to comprehend religious instruction; that the objection to the scheme proposed by the master was not that it did not provide for religious instruction according to the doctrines of the Church of England, but that it did not provide for religious instruction at all. In the course of the hearing, the Vice-Chancellor said, that any scheme of education, without religion, would be worse than a mockery. The parties afterwards agreed, that the masters and mistresses should be members of the Church of England; that every school day the master should give religious instruction, during one hour, to all the scholars, such religious instruction to be confined to the reading and explanation of the Scriptures; that on every Lord's day he should give instruction in the liturgy, catechism, and articles of the Church of England, and that the scholars should attend church every Lord's day, unless they were children of persons not in communion with the Church of England. In giving the sanction of the court to this arrangement, the Vice-Chancellor said, that he wished to have it distinctly understood that the ground on which he had proceeded was not a preference of one form of religion to another, but the necessity, if the matter was left to him judicially, to adopt the course of requiring the teachers to be members of the Church of England.

This case clearly shows, that, at the present day, a school, founded by a charity, for the instruction of children, cannot be sanctioned by the courts as a charity, unless the scheme of education includes religious instruction. It shows, too, that this general requisition of the law is independent of a church establishment, and that it is not religion in any particular form, but religion, religious and Christian instruction in some form, which is held to be indispensable. It cannot be doubted how a charity for the instruction of children would fare in an English court, the scheme of which should carefully and sedulously exclude all religious or Christian instruction, and profess to establish morals on principles no higher than those of enlightened Paganism.

Enough, then, your honors, has been said on this point; and I am willing that inquiry should be prosecuted to any extent of research to controvert this position, that a school of education for the young, which rejects the Christian religion, cannot be sustained as a charity, so as to entitle it to come before the courts of equity for the privileges which they have power to confer on charitable bequests.

Mr. Webster then replied to the remarks of Mr. Binney, in relation to the Liverpool Blue Coat School, and read from the report of Mr. Bache on education in Europe, Mr. Bache having been sent abroad by the city of Philadelphia to investigate this whole matter of education.

If Mr. Girard had established such a school as that, it would have been free from all those objections that have been raised against it. This Liverpool Blue Coat School, though too much of a religious party character, is strictly a church establishment. It is a school established on a peculiar foundation, that of the Madras system of Dr. Bell. It is a monitorial school; those who are advanced in learning are to teach the others in religion, as well as secular knowledge. It is strictly a religious school, and the only objection is, that in its instruction it is too much confined to a particular sect.

Mr. Binney observed that there was no provision made for clergymen.

That is true, because the scheme of the school is monitorial, in which the more advanced scholars instruct the others. But religious instruction is amply and particularly provided for.

Mr. Webster then referred to Shelford, p. 105, and onward, under the head "Jews," in the fourth paragraph, where, he stated, the whole matter, and all the cases, as regarded the condition and position of the Jews respecting various charities, were given in full.

He then referred to the Smithsonian legacy, which had been mentioned, and which he said was no charity at all, nor any thing like a charity. It was a gift to Congress, to be disposed of as Congress saw fit, for scientific purposes.

He then replied, in a few words, to the arguments of Mr. Binney in relation to the University of Virginia; and said that, although there was no provision for religious instruction in that University, yet he supposed it would not be contended for a moment that the University of Virginia was a charity, or that it came before the courts claiming of the law of that State protection as such. It stood on its charter.

I repeat again, before closing this part of my argument, the proposition, important as I believe it to be, for your honors' consideration, that the proposed school, in its true character, objects, and tendencies, is derogatory to Christianity and religion. If it be so, then I maintain that it cannot be considered a charity, and as such entitled to the just protection and support of a court of equity. I consider this the great question for the consideration of this court. I may be excused for pressing it on the attention of your honors. It is one which, in its decision, is to influence the happiness, the temporal and the eternal welfare, of one hundred millions of human beings, alive and to be born, in this land. Its decision will give a hue to the apparent character of our institutions; it will be a comment on their spirit to the whole Christian world. I again press the question to your honors: Is a clear, plain, positive system for the instruction of children, founded on clear and plain objects of infidelity, a charity in the eye of the law, and as such entitled to the privileges awarded to charities in a court of equity? And with this, I leave this part of the case.

THIRD DAY.

I shall now, may it please your honors, proceed to inquire whether there is, in the State of Pennsylvania, any settled public policy to which this school, as planned by Mr. Girard in his will, is in opposition; for it follows, that, if there be any settled public policy in the laws of Pennsylvania on this subject, then any school, or scheme, or system, which tends to subvert this public policy, cannot be entitled to the protection of a court of equity. It will not be denied that there is a general public policy in that, as in all States, drawn from its history and its laws. And it will not be denied that any scheme or school of education which directly opposes this is not to be favored by the courts. Pennsylvania is a free and independent State. She has a popular government, a system of trial by jury, of free suffrage, of vote by ballot, of alienability of property. All these form part of the general public policy of Pennsylvania. Any man who shall go into that State can speak and write as much as he pleases against a popular form of government, freedom of suffrage, trial by jury, and against any or all of the institutions just named; he may decry civil liberty, and assert the divine right of kings, and still he does nothing criminal; but if, to give success to such efforts, special power from a court of justice is required, it will not be granted to him. There is not one of these features of the general public policy of Pennsylvania against which a school might not be established and preachers and teachers employed to teach. That might in a certain sense be considered a school of education, but it would not be a charity. And if Mr. Girard, in his lifetime, had founded schools and employed teachers to preach and teach in favor of infidelity, or against popular government, free suffrage, trial by jury, or the alienability of property, there was nothing to stop him or prevent him from so doing. But where any one or all of these come to be provided for a school or system as a charity, and come before the courts for favor, then in neither one, nor all, nor any, can they be favored, because they are opposed to the general public policy and public law of the State.

These great principles have always been recognized; and they are no more part and parcel of the public law of Pennsylvania than is the Christian religion. We have in the charter of Pennsylvania, as prepared by its great founder, William Penn, we have in his "great law," as it was called, the declaration, that the preservation of Christianity is one of the great and leading ends of government. This is declared in the charter of the State. Then the laws of Pennsylvania, the statutes against blasphemy, the violation of the Lord's day, and others to the same effect, proceed on this great, broad principle, that the preservation of Christianity is one of the main ends of government. This is the general public policy of Pennsylvania. On this head we have the case of Updegraph v. The Commonwealth,* in which a decision in accordance with this whole doctrine was given by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. The solemn opinion pronounced by that tribunal begins by a general declaration that Christianity is, and has always been, part of the common law of Pennsylvania.†

I have said, your honors, that our system of oaths in all our courts, by which we hold liberty and property, and all our rights, is founded on or rests on Christianity and a religious belief. In like manner the affirmation of Quakers rests on religious scruples drawn from the same source, the same feeling of religious responsibility.

The courts of Pennsylvania have themselves decided that a charitable bequest, which counteracts the public policy of the State, cannot be sustained. This was so ruled in the often cited case of the Methodist Church v. Remington. There, the devise was to the Methodist Church generally, extending through the States and into Canada, and the trust was declared void on this account alone; namely, that it was inconsistent with the public policy of the State, inconsistent with the general spirit of the laws of Pennsylvania. But is there any comparison to be made between that ground on which a devise to a church is declared void, namely, as inconsistent with the public policy of the State, and the case of a devise which undermines and opposes the whole Christian religion, and derides all its ministers; the one tending to destroy all religion, and the other being merely against the spirit of the legislation and laws of the State, and the general public policy of government, in a very subordinate matter? Can it be shown that this devise of a piece of ground to the Methodist Church can be properly set aside, and declared void on general grounds, and not be shown that such a devise as that of Mr. Girard, which tends to overturn as well as oppose the public policy and laws of Pennsylvania, can also be set aside?

* 11 Sergeant & Rawle, p. 394. † See Appendix, No. II.

Sir, there are many other American cases which I could cite to the court in support of this point of the case. I will now only refer to 8 Johnson, page 291.

It is the same in Pennsylvania as elsewhere, the general principles and public policy are sometimes established by constitutional provisions, sometimes by legislative enactments, sometimes by judicial decisions, and sometimes by general consent. But however they may be established, there is nothing that we look for with more certainty than this general principle, that Christianity is part of the law of the land. This was the case among the Puritans of New England, the Episcopalians of the Southern States, the Pennsylvania Quakers, the Baptists, the mass of the followers of Whitefield and Wesley, and the Presbyterians; all brought and all adopted this great truth, and all have sustained it. And where there is any religious sentiment amongst men at all, this sentiment incorporates itself with the law. Every thing declares it. The massive cathedral of the Catholic; the Episcopalian church, with its lofty spire pointing heavenward; the plain temple of the Quaker; the log church of the hardy pioneer of the wilderness; the mementoes and memorials around and about us; the consecrated graveyards, their tombstones and epitaphs, their silent vaults, their mouldering contents; all attest it. The dead prove it as well as the living. The generation that are gone before speak to it, and pronounce it from the tomb. We feel it. All, all, proclaim that Christianity, general, tolerant Christianity, Christianity independent of sects and parties, that Christianity to which the sword and the fagot are unknown, general, tolerant Christianity, is the law of the land.

Mr. Webster, having gone over the other points in the case, which were of a more technical character, in conclusion, said: —

I now take leave of this cause. I look for no good whatever from the establishment of this school, this college, this scheme, this experiment of an education in "practical morality," unblessed by the influences of religion. It sometimes happens to man to attain by accident that which he could not achieve by long-continued exercise of industry and ability. And it is said even of the man of genius, that by chance he will sometimes "snatch a grace beyond the reach of art." And I believe that men sometimes do mischief, not only beyond their intent, but beyond the ordinary scope of their talents and ability. In my opinion, if Mr. Girard had given years to the study of a mode by which he could dispose of his vast fortune so that no good could arise to the general cause of charity, no good to the general cause of learning, no good to human society, and which should be most productive of protracted struggles, troubles, and difficulties in the popular counsels of a great city, he could not so effectually have attained that result as he has by this devise now before the court. It is not the result of good fortunes, but of bad fortunes, which have overridden and cast down whatever of good might have been accomplished by a different disposition. I believe that this plan, this scheme, was unblessed in all its purposes, and in all its original plans. Unwise in all its frame and theory, while it lives it will lead an annoyed and troubled life, and leave an unblessed memory when it dies. If I could persuade myself that this court would come to such a decision as, in my opinion, the public good and the law require, and if I could believe that any humble efforts of my own had contributed in the least to lead to such a result, I should deem it the crowning mercy of my professional life.

APPENDIX

No. I. — Page 146.

Extract from the Writings of Bishop White.

The will goes to the extent of the abandonment of religion, as prescribing the rules of human conduct. If a collection of youth may have their attention exclusively directed to other motives, no reason can be given why they may not be surrendered to the same through life. If the instructors are forbidden to call the attention of their pupils to the Author of all the wonders which open on their senses, and to a state succeeding that which, as they must soon discover, will be ended by the grave (and certainly silence on these and on the like subjects is exacted by the terms of the bequest); and if the prescribed rule of life be sufficient until the age of fourteen or fifteen, or even of eighteen, long before which there will be felt the struggles between inclination and the sense of duty; the sufficiency of the same rule for the remainder of life is an obvious consequence.

The error of Mr. Girard's restrictions is evident in the principle on which it is founded, the diversity of sentiment on subjects of religion. Let the principle be tested in application to the relations of domestic life. No wise head of a family withholds instruction from his children on the reciprocal duties of parent and child, and of the parties to a marriage contract. Yet how many shades of difference of opinion are there as to the proper extent of parental power, and as to that of the correspondent obedience of the child? Similar diversities prevail as to the other relations. Is sage instruction to be delayed on these accounts?

The like remark may be made on the subject of civil rulers, and of the allegiance due from the citizen or subject. What a wide field is open by the claims of power in the hands of a single person, or in those of a few, or in an aristocracy, or in a popular assembly, or in some one of the many mixed forms which have been either adopted or imagined! According to the reasoning of the will, all determination should be deferred to the ages of fourteen or fifteen, or perhaps eighteen; yet, in disregard of such laxity, every good citizen instils into the minds of his offspring sentiments which sustain the rights of those who govern, and exact obedience within the limits of the laws.

The present writer has a very limited acquaintance with the gentlemen who compose the respectable bodies of our city councils. He supposes of the most, and thinks it probable of all of them, that they confess the claims of religion, by denominating themselves as belonging, each of them, to one or to another of the religious societies within the bounds of the city. He therefore, with great respect, submits to their understandings how far they can, with clear consciences, undertake the government of a seminary which discharges its pupils from all regard to religious obligation, and from all subjection to religious discipline. They cannot but be aware of the contrariety of so ungodly a regimen to those Holy Scriptures which they make the foundation of their several creeds. In the Old Testament they read, "Bring up a child in the way in which he should go." They cannot be ignorant of what the Jewish lawgiver says concerning the laws of God: "Thou shalt diligently teach them to thy children, and thou shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." And, if moral cultivation be a part of the plan of any literary institution, it cannot be beyond the reach of the caution, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." The calls of the New Testament are in unison with those of the Old: "Ye parents, bring up your children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord"; "Children, obey your parents in the Lord"; and, "I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father." Very different are these and the like provisions from the delay of even the mention of such sanctions of duty to young men under the ages of fourteen or fifteen, or towards eighteen, whatever need there may be seen of them in the increasing strength of their passions and of their appetites.

Let there be attention to the operation of the bequest in its occasional violation of the tenderest feelings of the parental breast. We will suppose four religious men, an Episcopalian, a Presbyterian, a Baptist, and a Methodist, in circumstances barely competent to the subsistence of their families. Let them perceive themselves departing this life, without provision for the support and the education of their children; and no other guardianship over them to be relied on, besides that of certain functionaries of the city, wisely provided for the object. These guardians may judge the binding of them to reputable tradesmen to have less prospect of advantage than the entering of them into the contemplated receptacle of orphans. According to the character of the supposed dying men, notwithstanding the diversities of their opinions on various points, they would be the same in the design, had their lives been spared, of giving a religious education to their children; whose deaths they would deem a less calamity than their being thrown on a world of temptation at the age of fourteen, or fifteen, or eighteen, without the knowledge of God or of a future state, or of those Scriptures which, in the parental estimate, are necessary to their being made "wise unto salvation." A great proportion of the children of the poor are disposed of under a guardianship created by the laws. This will probably be the principal source of supply to a seminary in which the sound of the voice of religion is never to reach the ears of the juvenile inmates.

It would be unjust to the memory of Mr. Girard not to notice his remarking it as a privilege of his orphans, on their arrival at the age for the leaving of the seminary, to adopt such tenets as their matured reason may enable them to prefer. It is not to the purpose to inquire how far this privilege which his protégés will derive from the laws of the land may be supposed to add to or enforce the moral education which they may have brought with them from the seminary. Whatever may have been, or may not have been, the wishes of the testator on this point, and whatever effect our favorable construing of his views may have on our estimate of his own character, it is all foreign to the present argument, which tends to the two positions, that it is irreligious and unchristian to accept of the public responsibility of an institution, to the pupils of which there shall be denied all instruction in religion; and that, if other motives are sufficient for their government until their arrival at the ages of fourteen and fifteen and eighteen, no reason can be given why they may not be sufficient through the remainder of life.

Perhaps there may seem an interference of the argument with a prejudice not uncommon, that the minds of the secluded orphans would be sensible of impressions made on them by nature of the being of God, and of their responsibility to his tribunal. This is the exploded doctrine of innate ideas. If there be any not yet reached by what has been written on the subject by John Locke, they may be referred to the observations lately made on those born deaf and dumb; who know nothing of the primary truths of religion, until taught through the medium of the expedients brought into operation for that unfortunate class of the human family. Whether the design of Mr. Girard can be strictly executed, may be considered as a problem. Should this be the case, his orphans will leave the seat of their juvenile residence as void of any trace of a knowledge of the Deity, as some who might be shown to him in an institution which in his will he has properly distinguished by a munificent donation.

It is required that for admission the orphan shall be between six and ten years of age. Doubtless, within those terms, there are sometimes salutary impressions on infant minds. Where this has been the case, it is not probable that a single trace of them will remain through years, in a sphere so unfavorable to their cultivation.

It may be anticipated as very unlikely, that for the intended seminary there will be obtained, even if it should be thought desirable, instructors who are believers in the Christian religion, and who have its interests at heart. Were this possible, it is easy to perceive the painful circumstances in which such instructors must sometimes find themselves. Let an instructor be supposed taking a walk with one of the pupils, on some fine morning during the renewal of the herbage of the year. Let there arise in the mind of the former some such passage as the address to the Deity, in Adam's Morning Hymn, in Milton: "These are thy wondrous works, Parent of good!" The instructor, warmed by the theme and the surrounding scene, might be tempted to break out in such an act of adoration. But it would be unfaithfulness to his trust, and he must keep it a secret from his pupil that he believes in the existence of such a being. The supposition might be diversified by a great variety of cases, sufficient to show that, under the provisions of the will, there will be an interdict of Christian instructors, whether designed or not, as well as of Christian teaching, within the walls.

That there will be a supply of teachers of a very different description, may be counted on; and modern times have multiplied those pests of society who, under the profession of schoolmasters, lose no opportunities of infusing their poison of infidelity into unsuspicious minds. Such instructors have no authority, under the will, to go beyond the lessons of mere morality, so as to teach any doctrine of absolute irreligion, from the highest point of atheism to the most specious of all the expedients for the misrepresentation of any of the contents of Holy Scripture. But no one, acquainted with human nature, will believe that such instructors, in teaching, will find reluctance to the guarding of their pupils against the religious truths which will be addressed to them on their entrance into social life, resolving what they will hear into popular fable and superstition, which it is now high time to lay aside.

From the tenor of the argument, there will have been anticipated the opinion of what should be expected from city councils. It is, that there should be a respectful, but determined, rejection of the trust intended to be instituted by the will of Stephen Girard, Esq., for the maintaining and educating of orphans.

It is a great sacrifice, but it cannot be too great, when the acceptance of it would be an acknowledgment that religion, even in its simplest forms, is unnecessary to the binding of men to their various duties. As yet, no such theory has shown its face in the proceedings of any of the constituted authorities of the United States. If the breaking of this unholy ground should be a corporate act of our city councils, there will be apprehended from it the most disastrous consequences, by

A CITIZEN OF PHILADELPHIA.

No. II. — p. 175.

Extract from the Judgment of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in the Case of Updegraph v. The Commonwealth.

Christianity, general Christianity, is, and always has been, a part of the common law of Pennsylvania; Christianity, without the spiritual artillery of European countries; for this Christianity was one of the considerations of the royal charter, and the very basis of its great founder, William Penn; not Christianity founded on any particular religious tenets; not Christianity with an established church, and tithes, and spiritual courts; but Christianity with liberty of conscience to all men. William Penn and Lord Baltimore were the first legislators who passed laws in favor of liberty of conscience; for before that period the principle of liberty of conscience appeared in the laws of no people, the axiom of no government, the institutes of no society, and scarcely in the temper of any man. Even the Reformers were as furious against contumacious errors, as they were loud in asserting the liberty of conscience. And to the wilds of America, peopled by a stock cut off by persecution from a Christian society, does Christianity owe true freedom of religious opinion and religious worship. . . . . .

From the time of Bracton, Christianity has been received as a part of the common law of England. I will not go back to remote periods, but state a series of prominent decisions, in which the doctrine is to be found. . . . . .

In the case of the King v. Woolaston, (2 Stra., 844; Fitzg., 64; Raymond, 162,) the defendant had been convicted of publishing five libels, ridiculing the miracles of Jesus Christ, his life and conversation, and it was moved in arrest of judgment, that this offence was not punishable in the temporal courts; but the court said they would not suffer it to be debated "whether to write against Christianity generally was not an offence of temporal cognizance." It was further contended, that it was merely to show that those miracles were not to be taken in a literal, but allegorical sense, and therefore the book could not be aimed at Christianity in general, but merely attacking one proof of the Divine mission. But the court said the main design of the book, though professing to establish Christianity upon a true bottom, considers the narrations of Scripture as explanative and prophetical, yet that these professions could not be credited, and the rule is, allegatio contra factum non est admittendum. In that case the court laid great stress on the term general, and did not intend to include disputes between learned men on particular and controverted points; and Lord Chief Justice Raymond (Fitzg., 66) said: "I would have it taken notice of, that we do not meddle with the difference of opinion, and that we interfere only where the root of Christianity is struck at." . . . . .

In the justly admired speech of Lord Mansfield, in a case which made much noise at the time (Evens v. Chamberlain of London, Furneaux's Letters to Sir W. Blackstone, App. to Black. Com., and 2 Burn's Eccles. Law, p. 95), conscience, he observed, is not controllable by human laws, nor amenable to human tribunals; persecution, or attempts to force conscience, will never produce conviction, and are only calculated to make hypocrites or martyrs. There never was a single instance, from the Saxon times down to our own, in which a man was punished for erroneous opinions. For atheism, blasphemy, and reviling the Christian religion, there have been instances of prosecution at the common law; but bare non-conformity is no sin by the common law, and all pains and penalties for non-conformity to the established rites and modes are repealed by the acts of toleration, and Dissenters exempted from ecclesiastical censures. What bloodshed and confusion have been occasioned, from the reign of Henry the Fourth, when the first penal statutes were enacted, down to the Revolution, by laws made to force conscience! There is certainly nothing more unreasonable, nor inconsistent with the rights of human nature, more contrary to the spirit and precepts of the Christian religion, more iniquitous and unjust, more impolitic, than persecution against natural religion, revealed religion, and sound policy. The great, and wise, and learned judge observes: "The true principles of natural religion are part of the common law; the essential principles of revealed religion are part of the common law; so that a person vilifying, subverting, or ridiculing them may be prosecuted at common law; but temporal punishments ought not to be inflicted for mere opinions." Long before this, much suffering, and a mind of strong and liberal cast, had taught this sound doctrine and this Christian precept to William Penn. The charter of Charles the Second recites, that "Whereas our trusty and beloved William Penn, out of a commendable desire to enlarge our English empire, as also to reduce the savages, by gentle and just measures, to the love of civil society and the Christian religion, hath humbly besought our leave to translate a colony," &c. The first legislative act in the colony was the recognition of the Christian religion and establishment of liberty of conscience. Before this, in 1646, Lord Baltimore passed a law in Maryland in favor of religious freedom; and it is a memorable fact, that of the first legislators who established religious freedom one was a Roman Catholic and the other a Friend. It is called the great law, of the body of laws in the Province of Pennsylvania, passed at an assembly at Chester, the 7th of the 12th month, December. After the following preamble and declaration, viz.: "Whereas the glory of Almighty God and the good of mankind is the reason and end of government, and therefore government in itself is a venerable ordinance of God, and forasmuch as it is principally desired and intended by the proprietary and Governor and the freemen of the Province of Pennsylvania, and territories thereunto belonging, to make and establish such laws as shall best preserve true Christian and civil liberty, in opposition to all unchristian, licentious, and unjust practices, whereby God may have his due, Cæsar his due, and the people their due, from tyranny and oppression on the one side, and insolency and licentiousness on the other, so that the best and firmest foundation may be laid for the present and future happiness both of the Governor and people of this Province and territories aforesaid, and their posterity ——" (Then follow enactments against profanity, blasphemy, and violation of the Lord's day.) . . . . .

Amidst the concurrent testimony of political and philosophical writers among the Pagans, in the most absolute state of democratic freedom, the sentiments of Plutarch on this subject are too remarkable to be omitted. After reciting that the first and greatest care of the legislators of Rome, Athens, Lacedæmon, and Greece in general, was, by instituting solemn supplications and forms of oaths, to inspire them with a sense of the favor or displeasure of Heaven, that learned historian declares, that we have met with towns unfortified, illiterate, and without the conveniences of habitations, but a people wholly without religion no traveller hath yet seen; and a city might as well be erected in the air, as a state be made to unite where no divine worship is attended. Religion he terms the cement of civil union and the essential support of legislation. No free government now exists in the world, unless where Christianity is acknowledged and is the religion of the country. So far from Christianity, as the counsel contends, being part of the machinery necessary to despotism, the reverse is the fact. Christianity is part of the common law of this State. It is not proclaimed by the commanding voice of any human superior, but expressed in the calm and mild accents of customary law. Its foundations are broad, and strong, and deep; they are laid in the authority, the interest, the affections of the people. Waiving all questions of hereafter, it is the purest system of morality, the firmest auxiliary, and only stable support, of all human laws. It is impossible to administer the laws without taking the religion which the defendant in error has scoffed at, that Scripture which he has reviled, as their basis. To lay aside these is at least to weaken the confidence in human veracity so essential to the purposes of society, and without which no question of property could be decided and no criminal brought to justice; an oath in the common form on a discredited book would be a most idle ceremony.

THE PROVIDENCE RAILROAD COMPANY AGAINST THE CITY OF BOSTON.*

THIS case was a bill in equity filed by the Boston and Providence Railroad Company against the City of Boston, praying the court to enjoin the city from making sale of a strip of land adjoining the land northerly on which the complainants' dépôt and passenger station, and other buildings, had been erected. The city officers advertised this strip of land, with other lots, for sale at public auction. The railroad company claimed to be entitled to the use of said strip of land, as a public street or highway, and contended that it had either been laid out as a street by the proper authorities of the town, in 1794, or was such by dedication at some period subsequent. The city of Boston denied both these propositions, and maintained that the land in question was not subject to the encumbrance claimed to have been impressed on it, and was free to be sold or disposed of at the pleasure of the city.

The court ruled that the premises had been appropriated to the purposes of a street, and could not be sold without a violation of the rights of the complainants. The following argument was delivered by Mr. Webster, as counsel for the city of Boston.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR HONORS:

There are two or three points which, in the multitude of questions to be considered in this case, I shall leave where the counsel for the complainants has placed them, without further discussion. One of these is that which arises upon the alleged encroachment of the railroad upon the land in question,

* An Argument before the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, sitting at Boston as a Court of Equity, on the 3d of April, 1844.

Of the very numerous arguments of Mr. Webster, in the ordinary practice of the profession, on questions of local interest, not involving political and constitutional principles, few have been reported, nor if reported would it have been expedient to introduce them into a collection of this kind. It has been deemed proper to make an exception in the present case, for the sake of presenting a single specimen of Mr. Webster's mode of arguing causes of this kind.

whether that be a street or land belonging to the city, by which encroachment it is averred by the city that the northern line of the railroad property is pushed farther north. This is a matter of detail, depending upon an examination of evidence, and I leave it to the judgment of the court without discussion.

Another question is that respecting the averment that the land in controversy is a part of the Common. This is also to be ascertained by an examination of evidence, by the original deeds and plans describing the Common, and by the votes and proceedings of the town, which have been fully laid before you. But I take occasion to say, as that is a question which has caused some interest and excitement, that, in my opinion, this land is not, and never was, a part of the Common.

If this street, or land, or whatever it may be, has become and now is a public highway, it must have become so in one of three ways, and to these points I particularly call your honors' attention.

1st. It must either have become a highway by having been regularly laid out according to usage and law; or

2d. By dedication as such by those having the power to dedicate it, and acceptance and adoption so far as they are required; or

3d. As a highway by long user, without the existence of proof of any original laying out, or dedication.

It is not pretended by any one that the land in question is a highway, upon the last of these grounds. I shall therefore confine myself to the consideration of the other two questions; namely, Was there ever a formal and regular laying out of a street here? or was there ever a regular and sufficient dedication and acceptance?

The general history of this strip of land, so far as this controversy is concerned, is well known, and the facts are all fully narrated and exhibited in the evidence which has been laid before you. In the year 1794, there existed in the town of Boston six ropewalks, all in the central part of the town, on Atkinson and Pearl Streets; but they were all burnt down in July of that year, much other valuable property being destroyed by the same fire. It immediately became an object of public interest to take measures to transfer the site of these ropewalks, and to come to an understanding with their proprietors that they should not rebuild upon the old locality. A town-meeting was accordingly called; and a committee was raised, with instructions to confer with the ropewalk proprietors and come to some agreement with them to place their buildings upon the marshes "at the bottom of the Common," as it was expressed. This was considered a very important matter. The committee appointed consisted of some of the most distinguished inhabitants of the town, among whom I may mention Judge Minot and the late Governor Sullivan, names eminent in our history.

The history of this piece of land, from the date of this meeting down to the present day, divides itself into three eras or periods: the first, from the votes and grants of the town in 1794 till 1824, when all property in these lands was reconveyed to the city, a period of thirty years; then from that time until the location of the track of the Providence Railroad in 1833–4, a period of ten years; and then to the laying out of the land into lots, about a year ago. These three periods cover about fifty years.

The general question is, whether this land became a public road or way, either by a formal laying out or by actual dedication, in either of these periods.

The plaintiffs' bill alleges that there was a public way laid out, either by the votes of the town in 1794, or by other acts subsequently accepted by the town. These acts we suppose to mean the grants made by the selectmen in compliance with the authority conferred by these votes. The first subject of inquiry, therefore, is into the true character and effect of the grant of 1794, and the conveyances made in pursuance of it; and into the acts of the parties under that grant and conveyance. Do either or all of these show that a road or way was laid out upon this land in 1794 or 1795?

Now I will first pause for a moment to recall your honors' attention to these proceedings in 1794. At the town-meeting, after the general object for which it had been called had been stated, the record says that they proceeded "to the second article of the warrant," which was, "Whether the town will appropriate the marsh at the bottom of the Common, or any other of the town's lands, for ropewalks for the accommodation of the sufferers by the late fire"; and subsequently they appointed a committee to confer with the ropewalk proprietors, and "cause a survey to be made of the marsh at the bottom of the Common; also, part of the land on Boston Neck, that may be sufficient for erecting the like number of ropewalks as were owned and consumed."

At a subsequent meeting, on the 1st of September of the same year (1794), the committee made their report, in the form of votes, which they recommended the town to adopt. They were clearly and distinctly drawn up, doubtless by one of the eminent professional gentlemen who were on the committee.

These votes first grant to the owners of the late ropewalks "a piece of marsh land and flats at the bottom of the Common," and then proceed to direct the manner in which it is to be held, and the restrictions upon its use. Thus it was provided that the land should be divided into six parts or lots, one for each sufferer by the fire; the whole land was sufficiently and particularly described; and there are then several provisions with regard to the manner of the use. First, it is provided that, in consideration of this grant, neither of the grantees shall erect ropewalks on the land in Pearl Street occupied by their late ropewalks; secondly, that there shall never be any buildings but ropewalks, nor more than six of them, erected upon the granted land; then that the heads of the ropewalks shall be placed upon the southerly ends of the respective lots; then that the grantees shall erect, within two years, a sufficient sea-wall along the whole westerly side of these lands.

The votes further provide, that "nothing in the foregoing grants shall be considered as conveying to the said grantees, or either of them, any right of passage in any direction across the Common, to or from the said granted lands."

The selectmen are then instructed to execute deeds to the grantees embodying these conditions, and they are also directed by the last vote to "lay out a road sixty feet wide, from Pleasant Street along the easterly side of the lands hereby granted, over the marsh, towards Beacon Street, in order to meet a road that may be opened from West Boston Bridge."

These votes were all passed, and the grants were all made, subject to a reservation expressed in the following terms: —

"Reserving, however, sixty feet in width across the southerly end of said piece of land, for a road from Pleasant Street to the channel."

The word used in making this reservation is simply "road" not "way" or "public way." Now I understand these two words, "road" and "way," to be synonymous. There may be a "public way" or a "public road," a "private way" or a "private road"; and when either word is used without a qualifying epithet, evidence of the whole transaction must be looked into to show whether a public or private way was intended. It may be either; and in every case where either of these words is used without any qualifying word, it must be judged by the context, and by other known circumstances, what is its meaning in that particular case.

What, then, was the meaning of these votes? What did they accomplish? What was it intended that they should accomplish?

Now, whatever was the meaning and intent of this reservation, it is clear that by this vote the town could not lay out a highway. It could not do this at all without the action of the selectmen. To lay out a street is one of the functions delegated by the statutes to the town officers, who are the selectmen; a function which must be performed by the legally delegated body. It is sometimes the course for the town to request the selectmen to lay out the road. The practice shows that it is not in the power of the town to lay out a road, but in that of the selectmen. The town accepts the road after it is laid out. The selectmen may lay out a road without its being accepted; or the town may request the selectmen to lay out a road, and be refused. Neither possesses the power of the other.

Then the question is, In what capacity was the town acting in passing these votes? Was it engaged in a municipal capacity, performing its public trust, or was it managing its private affairs, acting just as any other corporation or individual owning property would do when about to transfer that property? There was no municipal act at all, except that it was the act of a municipal corporation. The town was doing only what every proprietor about to dispose of his soil usually does.

Allow me to say here, that some confusion arises from calling this land belonging to the city "public lands." It is private land, private property; just as much as that of the Providence

Railroad Company; not devoted, to be sure, to private use, but private property which the city happens to own, and which it may dispose of at any time as such.

The town, then, was acting as a mere proprietor; selling a part of its land, and granting an easement over the rest, so that the purchaser might use the part he had obtained. This is the obvious character of the transaction. The land lay in the bosom of the marsh; and unless there was access to it given over the other lands of the grantor, the lands granted would have been of little or no value. If they had been granted without provision for any right of way, what would have been the rights of the parties? The grantee would have been entitled to a "way of necessity," as it is called; the right to pass over other lands of the grantor in order to get upon his own lands. And where he has this private way of necessity, then, unless it be made matter of agreement, the grantee is to select his own way wherever he chooses. Each of several grantees, also, is entitled to take the way most convenient to himself, unless a certain way has been provided for him by agreement.

Now in this case there was done exactly what was most convenient and proper. It was agreed that the grantees should have a certain access to their lands over lands of the grantor, and one that was most convenient to them; and this arrangement secured the efficacy of the provision that the grantees should have no right of passage in any direction across the Common, to or from their lands. This seems distinct, proper, and in accordance with the rights of the parties.

Now I do not deny that the town, or other grantor, in making the grant, may provide access over its remaining lands to the granted lands, by means of a public highway, or land granted for use as a highway. The town did so at this very time with regard to Charles Street, and I now proceed to explain the meaning of the reservation in question by that act, in regard to Charles Street. Every thing in the warrant calling the town-meeting whose acts we are considering (with one exception, unimportant in itself) related to this matter of the ropewalks. Nobody had petitioned for any way or road, and it is evident that when they made the private way, and when they made the public way, Charles Street, they were doing two separate acts necessary to carry out the project of transferring the site of the ropewalks.

Now, although, in the two cases, the same language is used in one respect, namely, the word road, it is to be remarked that they lay out this Charles Street. They do it by the same phraseology, by the same term "road," but by what else? They say there should be a road sixty feet wide from Pleasant Street along the eastern edge of the lands, to be joined by a road expected to be made from West Boston Bridge. And they direct the selectmen to lay it out. I presume the selectmen did lay it out, and that, when it was laid out, it was accepted by the town, for it is now upon the list of the streets.

But the proceedings of the town in the two cases were very different, each being suited to the objects to be obtained. The one was to be a public street, an open and general thoroughfare, a line of passage from the north to the south end of the town. This they directed the selectmen to lay out; they did not merely reserve the land. They directed the selectmen to lay out the road, and they did it. But the proceedings about this strip southeast of the ropewalk lands were wholly different. It was a road which, as was said by one of the witnesses, "ran overboard." The reservation on paper went down to the channel; for it was intended to build the ropewalks over tide-water; and they were actually built with their heads standing on solid land and the rest upon piles, and, until the Mill dam was constructed, the water flowed in under the ropewalks at every tide.

I submit, therefore, that nothing but an easement was intended, coupled, perhaps, from the language used, from the breadth reserved, and from its being extended down to the channel, with the idea, and the contemplation, that a road might at some future time be laid out for the use of the town. I have already observed, that the town could not lay out a street by its own authority, but that it was not unusual for the town to request the selectmen to lay out the street, and for the selectmen to comply, not to obey, for the action of the town has not the effect of a command. Now I submit, that if, by this reservation in the vote of the town, it was intended to lay out the street, it was not legal. If it was intended as a direction to the selectmen to lay out the street, why was not the proper language used? If it was intended to lay out a street by the mere action of the town, why did they not say so? If it was intended to direct the selectmen to lay it out, why did they not say so? For at the very same meeting, in directing the selectmen to lay out Charles Street, the town knew what language to use, and used it. If, at the same time, treating upon two similar subjects, in written and deliberate votes, it used dissimilar language and a dissimilar form of proceeding, who shall say that it had not a dissimilar meaning? Who shall thus confound things, and confuse the meaning, and the results of one of the most discreet and deliberate proceedings of a public body?

I have said that nobody at that meeting spoke of making a public street; that this way led down into the sea; that no one had petitioned for a street in this direction; but the whole of this proceeding was the result of an agreement, and a bargain. The ropewalk proprietors joined in a conference with the committee of the town, and the result was a bargain, an agreement, a compact, a series of covenants in relation to these lands. The town, on its part, entered into covenant; the ropewalk proprietors entered into covenant; so that the bargain was prepared by previous consultation and conference, and the terms were reduced to precise and stated form. In this form the contract was agreed to by the town, and in this form it was agreed to by the proprietors of the ropewalks.

I cannot imagine any argument to be drawn from the votes or records of this meeting, to maintain that this was a grant or dedication for a public road. It is to be considered as the result of the agreement on which it was founded, and which it was intended to carry into effect. It is worthy of remark, that access to the ropewalk lands was not provided by passage and right of passage generally granted merely, but by a specified, distinct way. It is obvious, also, that the reservation reaches beyond the ropewalks, and extends down to the sea. It may have been one object of this to give approach and access to the ropewalk lands from the water, because there was a wharf near.

But further, if this was a laying out of a street, by the selectmen, or any body else, where is the record of it? Although such an act may be done, it could hardly be done sub silentio, and without a record.

We have no reason, then, to suppose that the votes of the town laid out this road for a public street; and this brings me to the deeds of conveyance made in pursuance of those votes.

I suppose that these deeds, assuming the rest to be like that to McNeil, are relied upon to prove that the selectmen did lay out this road, or that they contain a recital that estops the city from denying that the road was so laid out. Now is this recital any proof of the fact that the selectmen did lay out the road? Let me call the attention of your honors to what they had been directed to do in 1794, not in their official capacity as selectmen, but only as agents of a corporation. The vote might as well have directed the town-clerk, or town-crier, or any other official, to make these deeds, and the conveyance would have been as valid and effectual. It is further important to observe, that this authority, these votes, under which the selectmen acted when making these conveyances, were all precise, definite, and full; that their limitations and provisions were as particularly drawn as those of a power of attorney.

Now let me remark, that early in 1794, before the date of this conveyance, difficulties had arisen about the location of these ropewalks, after the grant of the land, and before the execution of these deeds. Your honors will please to refer to the proceedings of the town-meeting in 1795. These proceedings will be found to contain a charge against the ropewalk proprietors, that they had encroached upon Pleasant Street, by extending the heads of their ropewalks too far south. These deeds were not executed until 1796. Before the execution of this deed to McNeil, a sea-wall had been built. This we know, because the wall and the building of it are referred to in the proceedings of the town-meeting in 1795. After the wall was built, the water came up to it, and even overflowed it at high tides. The facts that the wall was already built, and that the ropewalks were built, were both recognized by the proceedings of the meeting in 1795. The selectmen (it appears that they were an entirely new set) were about to execute the deeds; and in this state of the affair the draughtsman committed a sheer blunder, by bounding the land on the south "by a street lately laid out by our selectmen, leading from Pleasant Street to the salt water." This is a description, and not a recital; and but an imperfect description, for the salt water was found at the wharf, and the street, if it were a street, extended to the channel.

This was all a mistake. There was no street laid out by the selectmen. For, first, there is no record of it on the books of the city, nor any reason, from any evidence in the case, to suppose that any such thing took place. If it had taken place, it would have been the duty of the selectmen to report it to the town; but there is no report, nor any action of the town on such report, in the records of either. Then, many persons are still living, fully conversant with the events of that day, and in full memory of all the proceedings in this matter. One of the ropewalk proprietors is still living, Mr. Howe, who, though not an original proprietor, soon became one by the death of his father, working there daily from the time he came to man's estate. Many other persons, connected with the town government, and living in the neighborhood, are familiar with the land there, and its changes; and yet not one of them knew any thing about this laying out, or pretends to say that the selectmen laid out this street. If the selectmen did lay it out, as they did Charles Street, or as they did a dozen others, why did they not also record it, and report it? In point of fact, I suppose there was no street laid out.

The deed itself purports to be made after the votes of the town in 1794. It founds itself upon them, and refers to them, as to another deed, for more particular descriptions. It refers to no particular powers of the selectmen, and is in this respect quite remarkable. I will read the deed: —

"Whereas, at a legal town-meeting of us, begun on the 28th of August, 1794, and continued by adjournment to the 1st of September next following, it was voted that there be granted to the owners of the ropewalks in this town lately consumed by fire, a piece of marsh land and flats at the bottom of the Common in said town, upon certain terms and conditions in the said votes expressed; now know ye, that we the said inhabitants, for and in consideration of the conditions, restrictions, and limitations hereinafter mentioned, but more particularly mentioned in our votes before referred to, do hereby give, grant," &c.

Such is the recital of the terms of the grant, and here comes the description: —

"A certain piece or parcel of land situate at the southerly part of said town, at the bottom of the Common, there so called, fifty feet in width and extending from a line drawn parallel to Beacon Street five hundred feet from the same street to a street lately laid out by our selectmen, sixty feet wide, leading from Pleasant Street to the salt water, bounding northerly on the said line, easterly on land granted to Samuel Emmons, southerly on said new street, and westerly on land granted to John Codman."

The mention of this street is not by way of recital, it will be seen, but in the description of boundary. By a mistake in such a description no one is barred. It is simply a description. My learned friends say that it is a declaration, an averment by the town of Boston, that there is a public street along the southern line of the ground described. To cover their ground, they must not only say that there is a street, but take the whole statement as an estoppel. They make this to be a statement that this land is an open public street, laid out by the selectmen; and this they say is an estoppel that keeps us from holding that this street was never so laid out.

How can this be? The selectmen were mere agents, I might say they were mere instruments to perform what must be performed by some agents. But the limitations and all the acts of the parties were fully defined and fairly set down and expressed. They did not act in this matter in their official capacity, but as mere agents, and if they have transcended the limits set for them, the town is not bound by it. Their authority was a public, clear, written, indisputable record, known to every body, simply to execute grants founded on a transaction publicly understood, and it expressed the terms of a bargain to which these grantees were themselves parties. No one will say that the selectmen could extend the meaning of this agreement, and enter upon a covenant for which it did not provide; and further, since in the other covenants of the deed they follow the provisions of the votes from which their authority was derived, it is to be presumed that they intended to do so here. Expressio unius exclusio est alterius.

Agents not only cannot bind themselves by an act transcending their authority, but such an act is not evidence against their principal in any case arising out of it. No saying or declaration of such an agent is more evidence against his principals than that of any other man. This declaration of the deed is not evidence against the town, because the selectmen had no power to enter into a covenant which was to make that land a street, but were simply to convey certain lands as they were described in their power of attorney. Nor does it amount to any thing that the ropewalk proprietors used the same words of description in after conveyances, because we all know that one deed is copied from another, that the object often is to make them cheap and short, and that in this country, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, a man conveying the same thing that he has previously purchased, copies from the deed he received, or refers to it for the description in the new deed. If the selectmen had been acting for themselves, as individuals conveying their own property, there is nothing in this deed which would estop them from denying the existence of a road laid out upon the south line of the premises. The words in which such a road is spoken of are words of description only, and not of recital, and this makes the distinction of the cases where parties are held to be estopped by their own deeds and where they are not. I shall not cite cases to this point, but will refer your honors to the first volume of Greenleaf's Evidence, pp. 30 to 32, where the cases which are collected show the distinction between terms of description and terms of averment.

But suppose we are to take it for granted that the selectmen did lay out a street here, what kind of a way was it? Was it a public way? If your honors are to presume they laid out any thing, it is to be supposed to have been in conformity with the authority under which they acted; and if that authority was for a private way merely, the presumption is that they conformed to it, and laid out merely a private way.

There is another point or two with regard to this.

Recitals in deeds, when they estop any body, estop only in favor of those claiming under the grantee; they confer no rights upon strangers. The Providence Railroad Company does not claim under the ropewalk proprietors. It has no privity with them, and it cannot therefore avail itself of any estoppel in the deeds to those proprietors, if such there be.

I know very well that a court of law, looking back at a transaction now no recent one, will be glad to find any plausible explanation of any act, fact, or transaction, which does not appear to agree with the rest of the history. It is glad to make the whole train of events consistent; and I think it is not hard to suggest at least a probable reason of this discrepancy in this deed. Let us suppose that something had been done on this piece of land by these public authorities, between the dates of the votes in town-meeting and of the execution of the deeds. To persons not consulted about the matter, it might appear that this something was the laying out of a road, and they might have been led into this mistake even by the conduct of the selectmen whom they saw on the land "reserved for a road," doing something apparently in an official capacity. Now it is in evidence that these selectmen did do something on this land within this time. It is in evidence that they went upon these lands, measured the encroachments which had been made, and gave a marked limit to the ropewalk proprietors; that in the interval between the votes in town-meeting and the date of this deed, the public authorities went down upon this land and marked out a boundary upon it. Your honors will see that this proceeding limited itself to a very small line of boundary; but it is extremely probable that they went further, and marked out the whole of the southern boundary of the ropewalks. We know from the records of the town-meeting that they did establish the point as far as the ropewalk proprietors were concerned, and compelled them to retire from the town's land upon which they had encroached, and marked a stated limit by staking it out at the time. This was done by authority from the town, and might have been done, doubtless, by the selectmen without such authority. But it was just such a proceeding as would require no record, report, or after proceeding, and this accounts, and this is the only thing that can account, for there being no report or record of it. There is nothing more probable than that the new selectmen or the draughtsman, yes, the draughtsman of this deed, may have mistaken in his description the nature of this act of the former selectmen, and that thus this apparent incongruity may have got into the case.

The ropewalk proprietors reconveyed these lands to the city in 1824, and this terminated the first period in the history of the strip in dispute. This reconveyance was entire and absolute; and of course under it, by force of law, this particular strip of land, unless it had in the mean time become a public highway, returned to the city, and the easement became extinguished by the unity of possession.

We have now seen the origin of the title of the ropewalk proprietors so far as it was written. It rested in the votes of the town and the deeds, with their somewhat restricted declarations and covenants. Now if from these we can obtain a clear and distinct meaning, it is the true and correct one; but if it is in any degree doubtful, we can enter upon the evidence of what was done under these deeds and votes, to elucidate and explain their meaning. All law-writers recognize, common sense recognizes, this principle of interpretation, but the doctrine is expressed so accurately, tersely, and completely by Sir Edward Sugden, that I will quote his words.

"One of the most settled rules of law for the construction of ambiguities in ancient instruments is, that you may resort to contemporaneous usage to ascertain the meaning of the deed; tell me what you have done under such a deed, and I will tell you what that deed means." *

I propose now to call the attention of your honors to what was done under these covenants. What was the conduct of the respective parties to them during this first epoch of thirty years?

We are met, succored, relieved here from all doubt or apprehension which the greatest ingenuity could suggest, by the fact, that, during all this period, neither the city nor the town, neither the ropewalk proprietors, the selectmen, nor any subordinate officer, not one of them, has ever performed one act which, under any fair construction, could be considered as recognizing the existence of any public way over this land. The town never built the road; there was at that time no beaten path there; it was never entered on the list or in the books of the town; it was never reported as needing repairs; it was never repaired, built, touched, by the town of Boston, during this whole space of thirty years, or by any agent or functionary of the town.

Here is the conduct of the grantor; let us look at that of the other party. Long engaged in a controversy in regard to their encroachments, with which the town of Boston was energetically plying them, did they ever set up the claim that it was the duty of the town to build this road? Not in the least! But they went on, at great loss and labor and sacrifice, to make the road themselves. They constructed the long sea-wall along the western margin of their land, a work of such magnitude, that it was ten years before immense labor and unwearying industry completed it, and made a practicable road down to the edge of the sea. In the face of these difficulties, if there had been any thing in the deeds to compel the town to adopt the street, how can we account for this acquiescent conduct, so directly adverse to their interests? Does any one suppose that, if the deeds gave them any ground to consider this a public road, Mr. Howe and the rest of those concerned would have remained there day after day, and year after year, toiling in the mud to make the road themselves? Then we have living witnesses, the town and city officers for many years, none of whom looked upon this as a street.

* Attorney-General v. Drummond, 1 Drury & Warren (Irish Chancery Reports), 353.

But I will state it in the briefest manner. Every body at all conversant with the matter for those thirty years, from the beginning, knows that the town was doing that, through the whole of that time, which it could not have done had the land been a public way; it omitted all care and attention. On the other hand, the grantees did what no duty required them to do, but what every interest and the proper enjoyment of their property made it necessary for them to do for themselves. And if we go over the evidence ever so carefully, or ever so slightly, we find this to be the result, and we see that every body thought that the town took the land back to itself, just as it parted with it.

I will cite 5 Pickering, 485, the case of Jones v. Percival, to the point that a private way is to be repaired by the grantee of the way: and e converso, I suppose, a public way is to be repaired by the public.

It is to be remembered that at this time these were all waste lands. About 1801 or 1804, a carpenter's shop was built, facing Pleasant Street. Mr. Vose's house was built in 1807. The carpenter's shop was moved back, and another house built, before the year 1824. It is not to be doubted that Mr. Vose went, that the inhabitants of all these houses went to and from them by this way; Mr. Vose, indeed, having his own sidewalk on his own land.

When a man has a right to a practicable way over his neighbor's land, he is not called upon to make the road for his own use. If the way is not practicable, the grant of it carries with it the right of building a road, and keeping it in repair. Let us suppose that here the road was necessarily a built or constructed road; how does this affect the city of Boston? The owner is undoubtedly obliged to keep a private way in repair for his own purposes, and it is well settled that the owner of a private way, finding people breaking up his way, may maintain "case" against them, although not "trespass." While this road continued its character of a private way, even if a thousand years should elapse, and a hundred people should pass over it every day, no rights against the public could be obtained. In a case where, under a lease of ninety-nine years, a private way, made so by the lease, was allowed by the lessee to be used by the public after the expiration of the lease, the lessor set up that the land reverted to him; and this was held to be right, because, before the expiration of the lease, the public use was of no injury to his property.* Nobody here asserted a right to the use of this road; only the persons interested, Mr. Vose and his tenants, used it.

Then there are the dealings between Mr. Vose and the selectmen in 1824. The latter proposed that his doorsteps should be abated, because they encroached upon the public lands. It would have been equally an encroachment, whether they were obtruded upon a street, or upon lands which were the property of the city; but Mr. Williams said that they, the selectmen, spoke of the encroachment upon the lands of the city. Because their predecessors had been complained of for neglecting the public land, he was induced to keep a sharp eye upon the interests of the town in this respect. He went to look at the alleged encroachments upon the public lands. He took some of the other selectmen with him, and they conversed upon the matter with Mr. Vose. The whole conversation turned upon this fact, that the steps were an encroachment on the lands of the city. Mr. Vose replied, that these were all waste lands, that nobody used them, and asked why, in these circumstances, they should put him to an expense of one hundred dollars to withdraw his steps. Mr. Williams says, that upon these grounds they allowed him some indulgence, and that the matter was to be settled at a future time. He has no recollection that he called again; but if he recollects rightly, all that was said by the parties to that conversation was of an encroachment upon the public lands.

* 5 Barnwell & Alderson, 450.

This brings me toward the last period of the history of this matter.

About 1820, the mill-dam was built, and this shut out the water from the flats below these lands. The sea-wall was not removed till 1830, as appears from the depositions of Fuller and Dexter. Below the wall, Mr. Vose permitted others to erect some shops; but there was no access down this way till after 1830, because the wall was still there. I refer your honors to Mr. Kidder's deposition, cross-examination, first answer; Fuller's cross-examination, question fourth; and direct examination, questions seventeenth and eighteenth.

On the other side, what acts are there which show the sense of the city with regard to these lands, from 1820 forward? In the first place, we have the report of Mr. Apthorp at the time the reconveyance of these lands was made. In this report, all these lands are treated as public lands, which might be offered for sale by the city. This was in 1824. Secondly, there is another fact; namely, the building of the new street from Pleasant Street to Charles Street, a street parallel to this supposed street. This was built in 1821, as a continuation of Boylston Street. It was built and used for access into Church Street. There could have been no object in building it, and it would not have been built, if there had been already a way in existence convenient and open a little farther south. If the town had supposed that there was any such way in existence, it would have availed itself of that, and not have gone to this further trouble and expense.* Thirdly, I refer your honors, with emphasis and brevity, to the transactions of 1828; to the votes of the city in 1828, as they appear in the exhibit of Eliphalet Williams.† On the 28th of January, 1828, an order passed by the mayor and aldermen, upon which, on the following March 3d, a committee reported that there were certain lands, which it was expedient for the city to sell, marked numerically upon a plan, and this piece of land at the southerly part of the town, embracing that now in dispute, was described under this head.‡

Now, Mr. Williams § asserts positively that this land, the lot marked 5, embraced all the land covered by the alleged street; and the report says: —

* Kidder, cross-examination, first answer.
† Kidder, 5.
‡ See report and plan, land marked "E."
§ Answers 9th and 10th.

"5th. A piece of land situated west of Boylston Street and of the northerly part of Pleasant Street, and southerly of a line drawn parallel to the Mill-dam, 1350 feet distant therefrom. This piece of land contains 126,000 square feet, and is capable of being laid out into streets and lots advantageously; and although after it is thus laid out it may not be expedient to offer the whole for sale immediately, yet it is expedient, in the opinion of the committee, to lay the same out and commence sales of it under the direction of a committee. It may be proper here to observe, that the space proposed thus to be put in a state for sale does not interfere with the Common, but is that portion of the public lands which have always been deemed proper and within the power of the city council to sell, as not being within the north and south lines of the Common extended. Read and accepted, and ordered that the Mayor, Aldermen Loring, Upham, and Armstrong, with such as the Common Council may join, be a committee to carry the same into effect. Sent down for concurrence; came up concurred, and E. Williams and others joined on the part of the Common Council."

Mr. Francis Jackson has verified the plan of the land, and has testified that that plan embraces the land under dispute, and that the report accompanying it was accepted; and Kidder testifies, that, in view of the sale, coarse fences were built, and that they covered the whole way, as it is called, up to Vose's house. This was the report and plan which we have here. It was accepted by the city government; the rough fences were built to mark out the land into lots, and these actually covered the supposed way, and this without complaint. Where was Mr. Vose then? Where were his tenants, that he and they made no complaint that this road was thus shut up, and they shut out from their own front door? These fences remained there without objection, till they were gradually carried away for firewood. Did this look like any admission on the part of the city, that this was an open and public street? For where ownership has been asserted by the erection of a slight fence, and then the fence has been taken away by the party claiming adversely, it has been held that this rebuts the presumption arising from the user of that party. I ask your honors' particular attention to this point.

Let us then proceed to the transactions of May, 1832, for there were two transactions in 1832. Now what was the first of these? It was the application by Purkitt and Vose to ascertain the line of their property. Vose's property was bounded upon this land, and he chose to call it a "street" in that application. The city assented to the proposal to run the line, but in no way bound itself by this use of the word "street." Mr. Fuller reported the result of his survey to the city, and stated, that "it does not appear that a street was ever laid out," but says, this, and this, and this, is the line between Vose and the city. This report was accepted and placed on the records; and on whose request? On that of these two persons; entirely, I suppose, on that of Mr. Vose and Mr. Purkitt. Being so recorded, this is completely binding. They got up the application. They desired to have an established line for the boundary of their land; and the authentic document describing that line says that it separates them, not from a street, but from certain lands belonging to the city of Boston. Did they protest against this description? In no degree.*

As an equal proof of the view then taken of these lands, I may refer your honors to another proceeding in August, 1832. An application was made by the Worcester Railroad for leave to take certain lands for the erection of a dépôt. Let us look at the nature of that application. Was it a request to the city to repair or put in order a street? to build, work, or repair a highway? By no means. The Worcester Railroad came as a purchaser, and wished to purchase that which it was not doubted was land of the city. The government feeling doubtful whether this was not a part of the Common, a question raised at the time, referred this question to the people, to be decided by a vote in Faneuil Hall. The people negatived the vote, and refused to sell the land at all. Remark that this was a proposition to purchase, and a refusal to sell. It was a design of the city government to make manifest in the plainest way what it was that the Worcester Railroad wished to buy. I am sure that no man can doubt the railroad wished to buy this land. Here is a plan, proved by Mr. Jackson to have been made on this occasion, and put up along the streets, that the citizens might see upon what they were called to decide. It is worth while to know that on this plan, the strip in red being what the railroad wished to buy, the strip between that and Elisha Vose is marked "Lands of the City of Boston, containing —— feet." This matter was made a subject of full discussion at the time; but none of those who talked of it, none of the orators at Faneuil Hall, nobody noticed, or appeared to think, that this was a street. Could they have done so, they would have urged it strenuously. It was a most natural idea to strengthen the notion that this was a part of the Common, by saying that a part of it had already devolved to the public as a public highway. If this had occurred to any body, we may be sure it would have been stated.

* Defendant's exhibit, No. 35.

It must be perfectly plain, then, that up to August, 1832, one short year before the Providence Railroad was laid out, the whole town of Boston and every one of its inhabitants supposed that this was land of the city, and not a street open to every body. About this time the directors of the Providence Railroad made their report upon the location of their dépôt, and, nothing further occurring, this state of things existed up to 1833. And thus, by all these acts, by its surveys, fencing, records, and offers to sell, through all this period, the city was asserting its right to this land, and nobody was objecting to it; and in this we have the best evidence that this was the view that every body took of this property till 1833, when these gentlemen located and fixed their dépôt.

And now we come to the last ground of the complainants, and that which, if I may judge from the earnestness and ability with which it was urged, is considered the strongest ground of their case. Let us look at the occurrences from 1833 to the time of the filing of this bill. What acts were done during that time, or were suffered to be done, by either party to this matter, on which the plaintiffs can rest their great hypothesis of the dedication of this land by the city to a public use?

But before proceeding to these facts, allow me one word upon the law of dedication.

Certainly it is not for me to controvert any thing that this court has decided and established. I am perfectly willing to admit that a dedication of land by the owner of the soil, clearly and fully proved, and assented to by the county and town authorities, is competent to make a public street. I do not mean at all, indeed, to controvert the opinion of this court upon this subject, in the case of Hobbs v. Lowell.* But it would seem to be necessary that there should be a clear dedication, and an adoption by all the authorities, county and municipal. But if any assent or adoption, and if any, whose, is necessary, in case of an opening of a public highway by a town over its own land, is not decided. This is an open question, and it is my purpose to say something upon it.

* 19 Pickering's Reports, 405.

First, as to the act of dedication. The first element of law in regard to this is well laid down in the Lowell case. It must be the act of the owner of the soil himself, done with the intent to dedicate the soil.

I do not understand the counsel of the complainants to rely upon the votes of the town in 1794, or upon any thing that occurred before 1832, as making out a dedication of this land to the public. This is a wholly different ground from the others, and no writings are relied upon to support it; and I have suggested all that I have to say with regard to those previous transactions. Their argument, as I understand it, is this. For more than nine years this land has been used as a common way, every day, by many persons, wholly undisturbed, in full view of the city government, and of all other persons, and has thus become a public highway, if it is not a way otherwise laid out.

What idea can a lawyer form of a dedication of land? Can he form any that is not in some sort a grant? Has he any notion of a proceeding of this sort, not amounting to the passing of the land from the grantor to somebody else? If there be any thing else which will fulfil the idea of a dedication, I should like to be instructed. It is not a present grant of the fee, but of the usufruct; it is not a grant of the real property. This is either given to the present grantee, or in expectation of the coming of a grantee in whom the fee may vest. It is a sort of grant by parole, conveying a property like that held by a livery of seisin, a "grant without fee," as the Supreme Court have expressed it; and where a man has made an open dedication by parole, he is estopped afterwards from saying that he granted only the use. He is estopped not by deed or writing, but in pais.

The dedication is of the use, the naked fee remaining to the dedicator. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided in all cases, or in three most important cases, that the use passes at present, but that the fee remains in abeyance till a regular grantee appears. I will presently take an occasion to review these cases.

The dedication is to be by the owner of the soil. Certainly the city government was not the owner of the soil in this case. The city owns the soil. They will say, on the other side, that the government are the agents of the city, and that the city must act by agents, and that the land could be dedicated only by government. I admit that the city councils are agents. But how? Are they unlimited and unrestricted agents? What act can they do beyond the charter? They are agents created by statute law. Although, when they act in an official character, they are not under the control of the town, and ought not to be, yet in a general sense, so far as they are agents, their powers are all set down by statute law. And the moment they step out of that power, they are no more the agents of the city than I am.

Every body says there must be an intent to dedicate, in order to make a dedication, but in these cases who is to entertain the intent? The selectmen may lay out a road, because the statute gives them authority so to do, but I deny that the selectmen can dedicate lands of the town to public uses, because no law gives them that power. There is no recognized mode of exercising that power, as there is in the other case. It would be sufficient to say that no such proceeding as a dedication has ever been made by the town officers of this State. And it is, I will not say bordering on the ridiculous, but inconsistent and incredible, to suppose that, where the act depends upon consent and intent, and where there is so simple a method for them to carry out that intent in a legal way, they should leave that to risk it upon this new and cumbrous proceeding that they never heard of in their lives.

They have no such power. Where would there be any limit to it, if they had? Why should the law prescribe the manner in which the selectmen of towns may lay out highways, if it was intended that they might thus create roads without its restrictions? I deny that they can lay out a road in any way but that prescribed by the statute. I deny that there is any authority, under any court in the country, to that effect.

Where an individual, may it please your honors, wishes that a highway should be established on his own land, there is a just and rational meaning in his doing it by dedication, and laying it open to the public. He cannot make a road on his own land in any other way; if it is accepted by the proper authorities, county and municipal, it will become a public road. But what object can there be for the selectmen of a town to undertake to lay out a road in this manner, when there is a simple and effective way authorized by law, and daily exercised?

Your honors will perceive, that the very hypothesis of the complainants requires that they should show an intention to give up the land on the part of the city government. If they had such an intention, they had a regular way to accomplish it; why did they not adopt it? I submit that their neglect to lay out a road in this regular way is evidence to every reasonable man that they had no such intention. That could only arise from the public convenience and necessity. And if such necessity existed, their duty required them to accommodate it in the common and legal manner; and we are not to presume that they adopted any other.

I have already alluded to the absence of any such intent. How is it attempted to be proved? Each individual of the government denies that he had any such intent, but it is imposed upon them in the aggregate. It reminds me of the statement of Mr. Justice Blackstone, in his Commentaries, where he says that he cannot deny that witchcraft has existed, but that no one can say that it has been proved in any particular case. The intention imputed to the city government they individually deny; how then could there have been an aggregate intent to part with these lands?

Nothing is alleged with regard to the city government but forbearance for nine years; forbearance to prosecute, forbearance to shut up waste lands which were not wanted for present use. The inhabitants were indisposed to sell them for the present; they were waste lands, of no use to any body but the Providence Railroad; and was not this a just case for forbearance and indulgence? I refer your honors to a decision of this court.* A neighbor of mine had been in the habit of pasturing his cattle upon waste lands in the town of Marshfield, and, the town having inclosed this land, he brought an action, claiming the right of such use of the land from long user. It was decided that the property was still in the town; that his use had not been inconsistent with the owner's use, with any use of the property which the town originally had in the land, and that consequently no adverse possession had been obtained; that his occupancy must be presumed to have been a mere license. This is just this case. The acts and the use of the Providence Railroad did not interfere with any use the proprietors wished to put it to. In the case cited, the lands were public lands, used by the inhabitants of Marshfield for depasturing their cattle. Just so here: so long as the city had no use for these lands not inconsistent with the use made of them by the Providence Railroad, the occupancy by that company must be considered the result of mere license. Was it not an act of friendliness and forbearance, and not to be now set up as a giving away the land? It ought to be kept in mind, that throughout the whole of this time the city officers manifested a desire to sell the land, and did no act of dedication on the premises themselves.

* 13 Pickering, 240.

In all the cases decided in England upon this subject, there was some original act of dedication. I know of no exception to this, save in a case which did not require any such act, because the road had been in public use for twenty-five years. There are, however, two cases in which there is so much discrepancy in the decisions upon this point, that they cannot be reduced to the same principle. One of these is that of the King v. St. Benedict, 4 B. & A. 447, tried before Lord Chief Justice Abbott, and Justices Holroyd, Bayley, and Best; the other, in which the opinions are just the reverse, before Justices Park and Littledale. The two cases are very different with regard to the law as to the assent of corporations to assume the charge of a highway; and I can only ask your honors to compare the reasoning in the reported cases, that of Mr. Justice Bayley in the one and Mr. Justice Littledale in the other, and to see which commends itself the most to your good judgment.

I wish to present this case under another and different aspect. Let us suppose that this land had been dedicated to the city for a street by an individual, and in the most unequivocal and notorious manner; take it to have been as good a dedication as could be made; has any thing been done in this case that proves that such a street has been accepted by the proper authority? This point, as to who must accept the dedication, is left undecided in the case of Hobbs v. Lowell, and is one which must now be decided, and on which I shall therefore make some remarks. I leave it as settled that the public must give its assent, and assume the expense of the way; but what is the public? I have said that I look upon a dedication as being a grant, to which there must be two parties, a grantor and a grantee. And what is this public, whose concurrence in the dedication is to make it the second party to this grant, and is to charge the citizens with making, paving, repairing, and lighting the road? Is it any indefinite number of men, unorganized and unassociated, who may happen to be passers over a way that an individual has laid open through his own land?. I submit that this is not the public whose voices or whose feet are to settle the question of acceptance or adoption. I think that it must be an organized public; the public authorities, those who are the authorized officials of the citizens, and intrusted with the power and the duty of providing proper, convenient, and sufficient highways. I think this is the public, and that none but this is the public whose assent is necessary. If this be not admitted, all the provisions of the statutes with regard to the laying out of roads become entirely useless.

This assent and acceptance is properly a matter of political and municipal authority; it is an exercise of a public power in a regular manner, for a legitimate purpose, by the authorized body; and I deny that the people of any town or city in this Commonwealth can be charged with the expense of maintaining a public road, without such regular action of the body upon whom this duty has devolved. I deny that any individual choosing to throw open his land, or the people passing over it, how many soever they may be, or however frequently or however long they may pass over it, can make such a charge upon the town. This seems to me to be wholly inconsistent with the principles of the law upon the subject of highways. The laying out of roads has always been made a matter of judicature; and a distinct and well-known tribunal passes judgment upon what roads are necessary or convenient for the public. Is it not well settled, that, before the selectmen can lay out a road, it must be adjudged necessary or convenient? And have not the proceedings in laying out roads been quashed on certiorari, in more than a hundred instances, for want of an averment that the proposed road was convenient or necessary? But no competent tribunal has passed upon the convenience or necessity of this street. It may be mentioned further, that, when ways have been laid out by the selectmen according to the statute, they are to be reported to the town, and so formally entered among its highways. I therefore submit that there is no power, by an irregular proceeding, to put upon the city of Boston the charge of making, paving, and repairing a street that has not been adjudged by some competent tribunal to be necessary or convenient. The power of such a tribunal is not to be transferred to any individual who may choose to open a way through his land and dedicate it to the public, nor to those who make use of the way so opened.

I say nothing here, and I mean to say nothing here, to attack the soundness of the decision in the case of Hobbs v. Lowell. For I do admit that, where an individual has made a dedication of land to a town, and the town, even informally, has accepted that dedication, (and a liberal construction should doubtless be given to its acts in this respect,) the town will remain charged with the expense arising from the public use of the land; but without a judgment, in some form, from a competent tribunal, that the way so obtained is necessary, I cannot see that there is any power so to accept it.

In the old laws, before the revision of the statutes, not essentially changed in this respect, the statute of 1786, ch. 67,* gives to the Court of Sessions the power to lay out roads between town and town. The first requisite for the selectmen in laying out a road is made its common necessity and convenience; then it instructs them how to lay it out; then it gives an appeal to the Court of Sessions (now to the County Commissioners). When the selectmen laid out a road, it was as a court of judicature. And could any thing be more proper than this? Have not the men in the towns interested, the tax-payers, a right to be heard and considered, before they are charged with such an expense? Here we have a judicial examination, proceeding upon hearing, and proof of the necessity of the case; and is not this wholly inconsistent with the doctrine of making streets by dedication, without any hearing, or proof, or pronunciation of judgment? The Revised Statutes adhere to the same principle as the former law, and declare that the streets of a city are to be regarded as public highways.

* 1 Laws, 295.

The practice of the city of Boston is also wholly opposed to the idea, that any person can impose upon it the charge of maintaining any land that he chooses to lay out as a public highway. By the city ordinance,* and in accordance with an act of the legislature, passed March 16th, 1833, it is provided, with regard to sidewalks in the city, that the city surveyor may adopt them as public property, if they are relinquished to the city, in writing, by the owner. Now, even if a gentleman builds his house back six feet from the street, and makes a sidewalk between it and the street, and every body walks upon it in passing to and fro; yet, until he makes a written relinquishment of the land, the city is not charged with its maintenance and repairs. There must be a written relinquishment. This is the Boston mode of dedication; and any amount of expense, ten thousand people running over it every day, does not make it public property, until he has made such written dedication. It would not make public property of a sidewalk, of a little strip six feet by twenty; but what is contended in this case? Why, that, without any writing at all, the city may not only so dedicate property, but may also in silence accept the dedication, and charge itself with the expense of maintaining a road. If there is any meaning in this law about a little strip of bricks, it indicates the principle which ought to govern this whole subject.

By an act passed † in the year 1816, a power was conferred on the selectmen, now transferred to the city government, to keep a record of all streets and ways laid out, and in all acts and proceedings relating thereto it provides that certified copies of this record shall be evidence. We have a right to call for the record of this street. No record is produced, and the presumption is, that there is no street. There is no record, and the presumption must be, that they made such a record in all cases without neglect. It was their duty to record any street made in any way. The law is, that all streets shall be recorded. These are broad directions. I use them in evidence, and argue directly from them, that, since there is no record, there is no street. But it is also to be remembered, that an intention to make a street is necessary to the case of the complainants, and if the city government had such intention, it must be presumed that they would have attended to their duty, and recorded it. What would be the consequence of admitting that any individual might throw open his land, and that, by the concurrence of a few others, a street might be made, and the expense of maintaining it thrown upon the corporation? Such an admission takes away this whole subject from the legitimate tribunal provided for the protection of the public. When would there ever be any want of persons to travel over streets, however numerous they might be? There is some convenience in having parallel streets. Suppose that a street should be laid out through the whole length of the town, parallel to Washington Street, at thirty feet distance from it; does any one doubt that it would be filled? Or another, and another, thirty feet apart? There is travel enough to fill all. Does any body say that, in that case, any indefinite number of persons, passing over these new thoroughfares, would make them streets or highways, for the support of which the city would be charged? I hold that this would be inconsistent with our whole system of legislation and jurisprudence on the subject.

* Ordinances, p. 258. † Ibid., p. 257.

I take the clear result of the American cases, with regard to dedication, to be, that dedications are grants made to the corporation for the use of the public; that is to say, in this case, if there were a dedication, it must have been a dedication to the city of Boston, for the use of the people of Boston. The city government is then the party whose assent is necessary to make the dedication good.

There are three cases decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, which I will allude to, without turning to the books. They are those of Cincinnati v. Simms, 6 Peters; Barclay v. Howell, 6 Peters; United States v. New Orleans, 10 Peters.

These decisions sufficiently establish it, that the American law upon the subject of dedication makes the property enure to the corporation for the use of the public.

I have been speaking of the grantor, and I now recur to the question, What acts are necessary to prove an acceptance by the grantee? And in this case, the grantor and grantee being the same, the acts are of course to be taken together. But I have endeavored to show, that, if the dedication had been made by an individual, the city has done nothing which can be construed into an acceptance, and that, if it has been accepted at all, it has only been by this indefinite mass of people who have passed over it. But I may go further. If this was a sufficient act of acceptance, it would not be sufficient to charge the city. If they had thus accepted it, they would only take the charge of maintaining a road and keeping it in repair; but for a dedication, and a performance of the singular act of dedicating to themselves, certainly some formal act, some declaration of intention, would be necessary.

Let us inquire then, first, what acts there are that are relied upon to show a dedication and acceptance by the city; and, secondly, what evidence there is of any understanding or opinion of the Providence Railroad Company, touching the existence of a way.

In the first place, the city has done no act which looks like acceptance. It has made no record, it has undertaken no repairs, it has not touched it in any way. It has treated it exactly like its own property, like waste lands that it had no occasion to use, and not at all like a highway that it was bound to support. It would not be tolerated that I should go over all the evidence upon this point, but there are a few things to which I will allude. They say that there was a fence built upon the north line of this land, and intended to mark it out as a street. This was a slight circumstance, which was hardly recollected by Mr. Winslow Lewis, who testified to it, and which was satisfactorily explained by Mr. Fuller and others. There was an inclosure of a nuisance, on the lands to the north of this, and part of the fence came nearly upon this line. Mr. Lee (the agent of the railroad) is mistaken, surely, with regard to there having been any fence on the south side. The exhibit shows, that Mr. Lewis was authorized to see if the plaintiffs' fence was an encroachment, and on the 10th of October, 1836, he reported that it was an encroachment on the public lands, not on the street; and in December, 1836, we find that the Mayor is authorized to notify the railroad company to remove its encumbrance from the city lands, — from the city lands. The company not having done this, an order was passed, in 1838, that the city marshal should remove this encroachment on the city lands. Here we find that this encroachment of nineteen feet on one end of the line, and not so much on the other, was repeatedly called and denominated an encroachment on the public land. Why did these parties not then remonstrate against this claim of the city? I admit that the city might have removed an encumbrance from the street, but it did not come to the matter in that way.

In 1838, the possession of the railroad company was interrupted, disturbed, denounced, resisted, and repelled by the entry upon it of the city marshal, and all this upon the ground, that the land upon which the fence stood was city property; and this they did not deny.

Then there was the drain, built to drain Pleasant Street, constructed by the railroad corporation, at its own expense, to keep the water from this land. If this was a street, why had not the railroad corporation, so much interested in the matter in every way, demanded that the city should put it in repair?

At the time of the extension of Eliot Street in 1839, this is spoken of as a street laid out. Every witness, Mr. Patrick T. Jackson and the others, goes back to the supposed original laying out by the vote of the town in 1794. Whenever they speak of it as a street laid out, they evidently refer to that occurrence. Not a single witness goes on the ground that this is a street made so by dedication. The whole idea of dedication had its origin in the chambers of counsel; we hear nothing of it out of doors.

There is other testimony to this point, from Messrs. Ellis and Dunham, that they considered this a part of the salable lands of the city at the time of the application made by Purkitt and others, in relation to the extension of Eliot Street.

The complainants put in as a part of their case the receipt by the city of the plan of the location of the Providence Railroad. That plan was only a sort of project, which could bind nobody. Church Street was laid down upon it, although it was then not a street. There are, indeed, no names upon the plan, which was only a project or proposal. It is agreed even by their own evidence, that there was no street there. The object of the plan was only to show the course of the Providence Railroad in entering the city.

Then as to the view taken by the Providence Railroad Company. The first act is the report of the directors upon the location of the road, set forth in the plaintiffs' exhibit. On the 5th of March, 1833, a committee was appointed to purchase such lands as the company might require, and to fix the location of the road in the city. They reported on the 7th of September following, and this location is described as being "along the southern line of the city lands at the southwest corner of the Common." They here speak of their boundary as being the city land. If there were any other evidence to control this declaration, it might be made out that there was a street between; but when so important a matter as the laying out of a railroad is spoken of, and the street is not mentioned, it is difficult to believe that they thought it existed.

They filled up, built, and made the road-way themselves. They had before called it the "city land" in their report. They now made the road over it for their own use, built a sidewalk, and removed a drain that interfered with their use. In short, every thing, every word and act of all parties, from 1833 down to the time of filing this bill, is consistent in support of the idea that the land was city property, used by the Providence Railroad Company under a revocable license, to be withdrawn whenever the great object constantly kept in mind by the city government (a sale of the land) could be effected. And there is not a single act which looks as if either party supposed that the city was bound to keep a passable way over these lands.

That it was understood that this use of the land by the corporation was matter of license, I refer your honors to the testimony of Messrs. Gurney, Hunting, Eliot,† and Armstrong.‡ Mr. Gurney testifies that somebody came to speak to him upon this subject, whom he supposed to represent the railroad company, and he said that he had no objection to their use of the land for the present. There is no necessity of proving that this person came from the railroad company. These gentlemen thought that he asked for a license, and they gave what they thought was necessary; and this is totally inconsistent with the idea of a dedication of the land. But still more, after the land was offered for sale, they offered to buy it. Mr. Grennell, the president of the company, offered to buy it at any fair price, and this in the presence of Mr. Sturgis and Mr. Dalton. Mr. Grennell admits that he offered to buy it, but says that just before the bargain was concluded this suggestion arose, that perhaps the land might be considered as a public street. He said he wished to buy it if it was to be used for other purposes, but if it was to remain a street, it would answer their purposes as well as if it were their own. It might be said that Mr. Grennell made this proposition from a want of local knowledge; but how is it with Mr. Sturgis and Mr. Dalton? Do they know any thing about Boston? Does any body know more? There was an opinion, probably, that this might be a street; but when they considered it as a street they referred to the acts of the town in 1794, and if your honors should decide to make this injunction perpetual, on the ground of a dedication, you would surprise the directors of the railroad company as much as you would any one. The city government of Boston, and all the citizens of Boston, would wonder what act or proceeding of theirs had given this land away; and the railroad company would wonder most of all, how, if there was no old street there laid out in 1794, they had gained their cause; and that while floating on a sea of doubt and uncertainty, after drifting away from that anchorage, they should now be picked up and saved by this doctrine of dedication.

* Revere, cross-examination, thirteenth answer.
† Fourth cross-interrogatory.
‡ Fifth direct and fourth cross interrogatory.

THE RHODE ISLAND GOVERNMENT.*

THE facts necessary to the understanding of these cases are sufficiently set forth in the commencement of Mr. Webster's argument. The event out of which the cases arose is known in popular language as the Dorr Rebellion. The first case came up by writ of error from the Circuit Court of Rhode Island, in which the jury, under the rulings of the court (Mr. Justice Story), found a verdict for the defendants; the second case came up by a certificate of a division of opinion. The allegations, evidence, and arguments were the same in both cases.

The first case was argued by Mr. Hallet and Mr. Clifford (Attorney-General) for the plaintiffs in error, and by Mr. Whipple and Mr. Webster for the defendants in error. Mr. Justice Catron, Mr. Justice Daniel, and Mr. Justice McKinley were absent from the court, in consequence of ill health. Chief Justice Taney delivered the opinion of the court, affirming the judgment of the court below in the first case, and dismissing the second for want of jurisdiction. Mr. Justice Woodbury dissented, and delivered a very elaborate opinion in support of his view of the subject.

THERE is something novel and extraordinary in the case now before the court. All will admit that it is not such a one as is usually presented for judicial consideration.

It is well known, that in the years 1841 and 1842 political agitation existed in Rhode Island. Some of the citizens of that State undertook to form a new constitution of government, beginning their proceedings towards that end by meetings of the people, held without authority of law, and conducting those proceedings through such forms as led them, in 1842, to say that they had established a new constitution and form of government, and placed Mr. Thomas W. Dorr at its head. The previously existing, and then existing, government of Rhode Island treated these proceedings as nugatory, so far as they went to establish a new constitution; and criminal, so far as they proposed to confer authority upon any persons to interfere with the acts of the existing government, or to exercise powers of legislation, or administration of the laws. All will remember that the state of things approached, if not actual conflict between men in arms, at least the "perilous edge of battle." Arms were resorted to, force was used, and greater force threatened. In June, 1842, this agitation subsided. The new government, as it called itself, disappeared from the scene of action. The former government, the Charter government, as it was sometimes styled, resumed undisputed control, went on in its ordinary course, and the peace of the State was restored.

* An Argument made in the Supreme Court of the United States, on the 27th of January, 1848, in the case of Martin Luther against Luther M. Borden and others. The case of Rachel Luther against the same defendants was before the court at the same time.

But the past had been too serious to be forgotten. The legislature of the State had, at an early stage of the troubles, found it necessary to pass special laws for the punishment of the persons concerned in these proceedings. It defined the crime of treason, as well as smaller offences, and authorized the declaration of martial law. Governor King, under this authority, proclaimed the existence of treason and rebellion in the State, and declared the State under martial law. This having been done, and the ephemeral government of Mr. Dorr having disappeared, the grand juries of the State found indictments against several persons for having disturbed the peace of the State, and one against Dorr himself for treason. This indictment came on in the Supreme Court of Rhode Island in 1844, before a tribunal admitted on all hands to be the legal judicature of the State. He was tried by a jury of Rhode Island, above all objection, and after all challenge. By that jury, under the instructions of the court, he was convicted of treason, and sentenced to imprisonment for life.

Now an action is brought in the courts of the United States, and before your honors, by appeal, in which it is attempted to prove that the characters of this drama have been oddly and wrongly cast; that there has been a great mistake in the courts of Rhode Island. It is alleged, that Mr. Dorr, instead of being a traitor or an insurrectionist, was the real governor of the State at the time; that the force used by him was exercised in defence of the constitution and laws, and not against them; that he who opposed the constituted authorities was not Mr. Dorr, but Governor King; and that it was he who should have been indicted, and tried, and sentenced. This is rather an important mistake, to be sure, if it be a mistake. "Change places," cries poor Lear, "change places, and handy-dandy, which is the justice and which the thief?" So our learned opponents say, "Change places, and, handy-dandy, which is the governor and which the rebel?" The aspect of the case is, as I have said, novel. It may perhaps give vivacity and variety to judicial investigations. It may relieve the drudgery of perusing briefs, demurrers, and pleas in bar, bills in equity and answers, and introduce topics which give sprightliness, freshness, and something of an uncommon public interest to proceedings in courts of law.

However difficult it may be, and I suppose it to be wholly impossible, that this court should take judicial cognizance of the questions which the plaintiff has presented to the court below, yet I do not think it a matter of regret that the cause has come hither. It is said, and truly said, that the case involves the consideration and discussion of what are the true principles of government in our American system of public liberty. This is very right. The case does involve these questions, and harm can never come from their discussion, especially when such discussion is addressed to reason and not to passion; when it is had before magistrates and lawyers, and not before excited masses out of doors. I agree entirely that the case does raise considerations, somewhat extensive, of the true character of our American system of popular liberty; and although I am constrained to differ from the learned counsel who opened the cause for the plaintiff in error, on the principles and character of that American liberty, and upon the true characteristics of that American system on which changes of the government and constitution, if they become necessary, are to be made, yet I agree with him that this case does present them for consideration.

Now, there are certain principles of public liberty, which, though they do not exist in all forms of government, exist, nevertheless, to some extent in different forms of government. The protection of life and property, the habeas corpus, trial by jury, the right of open trial, these are principles of public liberty existing in their best form in the republican institutions of this country, but, to the extent mentioned, existing also in the constitution of England. Our American liberty, allow me to say, therefore, has an ancestry, a pedigree, a history. Our ancestors brought to this continent all that was valuable, in their judgment in the political institutions of England, and left behind them all that was without value, or that was objectionable. During the colonial period they were closely connected of course with the colonial system; but they were Englishmen, as well as colonists, and took an interest in whatever concerned the mother country, especially in all great questions of public liberty in that country. They accordingly took a deep concern in the revolution of 1688. The American colonists had suffered from the tyranny of James the Second. Their charters had been wrested from them by mockeries of law, and by the corruption of judges in the city of London; and in no part of England was there more gratification, or a more resolute feeling, when James abdicated and William came over, than in the American colonies. All know that Massachusetts immediately overthrew what had been done under the reign of James, and took possession of the colonial fort in the harbor of Boston in the name of the new king.

When the United States separated from England, by the Declaration of 1776, they departed from the political maxims and examples of the mother country, and entered upon a course more exclusively American. From that day down, our institutions and our history relate to ourselves. Through the period of the Declaration of Independence, of the Confederation, of the Convention, and the adoption of the Constitution, all our public acts are records out of which a knowledge of our system of American liberty is to be drawn.

From the Declaration of Independence, the governments of what had been colonies before were adapted to their new condition. They no longer owed allegiance to crowned heads. No tie bound them to England. The whole system became entirely popular, and all legislative and constitutional provisions had regard to this new, peculiar, American character, which they had assumed. Where the form of government was already well enough, they let it alone. Where reform was necessary, they reformed it. What was valuable, they retained; what was essential, they added; and no more. Through the whole proceeding, from 1776 to the latest period, the whole course of American public acts, the whole progress of this American system, was marked by a peculiar conservatism. The object was to do what was necessary, and no more; and to do that with the utmost temperance and prudence.

Now, without going into historical details at length, let me state what I understand the American principles to be, on which this system rests.

First and chief, no man makes a question, that the people are the source of all political power. Government is instituted for their good, and its members are their agents and servants. He who would argue against this must argue without an adversary. And who thinks there is any peculiar merit in asserting a doctrine like this, in the midst of twenty millions of people, when nineteen millions nine hundred and ninety-nine thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine of them hold it, as well as himself? There is no other doctrine of government here; and no man imputes to another, and no man should claim for himself, any peculiar merit for asserting what every body knows to be true, and nobody denies. Why, where else can we look but to the people for political power, in a popular government? We have no hereditary executive, no hereditary branch of the legislature, no inherited masses of property, no system of entails, no long trusts, no long family settlements, no primogeniture. Every estate in the country, from the richest to the poorest, is divided among sons and daughters alike. Alienation is made as easy as possible; everywhere the transmissibility of property is perfectly free. The whole system is arranged so as to produce, as far as unequal industry and enterprise render it possible, a universal equality among men; an equality of rights absolutely, and an equality of condition, so far as the different characters of individuals will allow such equality to be produced. He who considers that there may be, is, or ever has been, since the Declaration of Independence, any person who looks to any other source of power in this country than the people, so as to give peculiar merit to those who clamor loudest in its assertion, must be out of his mind, even more than Don Quixote. His imagination was only perverted. He saw things not as they were, though what he saw were things. He saw windmills, and took them to be giants, knights on horseback. This was bad enough; but whoever says, or speaks as if he thought, that any body looks to any other source of political power in this country than the people, must have a stronger and wilder imagination, for he sees nothing but the creations of his own fancy. He stares at phantoms.

Well, then, let all admit, what none deny, that the only source of political power in this country is the people. Let us admit that they are sovereign, for they are so; that is to say, the aggregate community, the collected will of the people, is sovereign. I confess that I think Chief Justice Jay spoke rather paradoxically than philosophically, when he said that this country exhibited the extraordinary spectacle of many sovereigns and no subjects. The people, he said, are all sovereigns; and the peculiarity of the case is that they have no subjects, except a few colored persons. This must be rather fanciful. The aggregate community is sovereign, but that is not the sovereignty which acts in the daily exercise of sovereign power. The people cannot act daily as the people. They must establish a government, and invest it with so much of the sovereign power as the case requires; and this sovereign power being delegated and placed in the hands of the government, that government becomes what is popularly called THE STATE. I like the old-fashioned way of stating things as they are; and this is the true idea of a state. It is an organized government, representing the collected will of the people, as far as they see fit to invest that government with power. And in that respect it is true, that, though this government possesses sovereign power, it does not possess all sovereign power; and so the State governments, though sovereign in some respects, are not so in all. Nor could it be shown that the powers of both, as delegated, embrace the whole range of what might be called sovereign power. We usually speak of the States as sovereign States. I do not object to this. But the Constitution never so styles them, nor does the Constitution speak of the government here as the general or the federal government. It calls this government the United States; and it calls the State governments State governments. Still the fact is undeniably so; legislation is a sovereign power, and is exercised by the United States government to a certain extent, and also by the States, according to the forms which they themselves have established, and subject to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

Well, then, having agreed that all power is originally from the people, and that they can confer as much of it as they please, the next principle is, that, as the exercise of legislative power and the other powers of government immediately by the people themselves is impracticable, they must be exercised by REPRESENTATIVES of the people; and what distinguishes American governments as much as any thing else from any governments of ancient or of modern times, is the marvellous felicity of their representative system. It has with us, allow me to say, a somewhat different origin from the representation of the commons in England, though that has been worked up to some resemblance of our own. The representative system in England had its origin, not in any supposed rights of the people themselves, but in the necessities and commands of the crown. At first, knights and burgesses were summoned, often against their will, to a Parliament called by the king. Many remonstrances were presented against sending up these representatives; the charge of paying them was, not unfrequently, felt to be burdensome by the people. But the king wished their counsel and advice, and perhaps the presence of a popular body, to enable him to make greater headway against the feudal barons in the aristocratic and hereditary branch of the legislature. In process of time these knights and burgesses assumed more and more a popular character, and became, by degrees, the guardians of popular rights. The people through them obtained protection against the encroachments of the crown and the aristocracy, till in our day they are understood to be the representatives of the people, charged with the protection of their rights. With us it was always just so. Representation has always been of this character. The power is with the people; but they cannot exercise it in masses or per capita; they can only exercise it by their representatives. The whole system with us has been popular from the beginning.

Now, the basis of this representation is suffrage. The right to choose representatives is every man's part in the exercise of sovereign power; to have a voice in it, if he has the proper qualifications, is the portion of political power belonging to every elector. That is the beginning. That is the mode in which power emanates from its source, and gets into the hands of conventions, legislatures, courts of law, and the chair of the executive. It begins in suffrage. Suffrage is the delegation of the power of an individual to some agent.

This being so, then follow two other great principles of the American system.

1. The first is, that the right of suffrage shall be guarded, protected, and secured against force and against fraud; and,

2. The second is, that its exercise shall be prescribed by previous law; its qualifications shall be prescribed by previous law; the time and place of its exercise shall be prescribed by previous law; the manner of its exercise, under whose supervision (always sworn officers of the law), is to be prescribed. And then, again, the results are to be certified to the central power by some certain rule, by some known public officers, in some clear and definite form, to the end that two things may be done: first, that every man entitled to vote may vote; second, that his vote may be sent forward and counted, and so he may exercise his part of sovereignty, in common with his fellow-citizens.

In the exercise of political power through representatives we know nothing, we never have known any thing, but such an exercise as should take place through the prescribed forms of law. When we depart from that, we shall wander as widely from the American track as the pole is from the track of the sun.

I have said that it is one principle of the American system, that the people limit their governments, National and State. They do so; but it is another principle, equally true and certain, and, according to my judgment of things, equally important, that the people often limit themselves. They set bounds to their own power. They have chosen to secure the institutions which they establish against the sudden impulses of mere majorities. All our institutions teem with instances of this. It was their great conservative principle, in constituting forms of government, that they should secure what they had established against hasty changes by simple majorities. By the fifth article of the Constitution of the United States, Congress, two thirds of both houses concurring, may propose amendments of the Constitution; or, on the application of the legislatures of two thirds of the States, may call a convention; and amendments proposed in either of these forms must be ratified by the legislatures or conventions of three fourths of the States. The fifth article of the Constitution, if it was made a topic for those who framed the "people's constitution" of Rhode Island, could only have been a matter of reproach. It gives no countenance to any of their proceedings, or to any thing like them. On the contrary, it is one remarkable instance of the enactment and application of that great American principle, that the constitution of government should be cautiously and prudently interfered with, and that changes should not ordinarily be begun and carried through by bare majorities.

But the people limit themselves also in other ways. They limit themselves in the first exercise of their political rights. They limit themselves, by all their constitutions, in two important respects; that is to say, in regard to the qualifications of electors, and in regard to the qualifications of the elected. In every State, and in all the States, the people have precluded themselves from voting for every body they might wish to vote for; they have limited their own right of choosing. They have said, We will elect no man who has not such and such qualifications. We will not vote ourselves, unless we have such and such qualifications. They have also limited themselves to certain prescribed forms for the conduct of elections. They must vote at a particular place, at a particular time, and under particular conditions, or not at all. It is in these modes that we are to ascertain the will of the American people; and our Constitution and laws know no other mode. We are not to take the will of the people from public meetings, nor from tumultuous assemblies, by which the timid are terrified, the prudent are alarmed, and by which society is disturbed. These are not American modes of signifying the will of the people, and they never were. If any thing in the country, not ascertained by a regular vote, by regular returns, and by regular representation, has been established, it is an exception, and not the rule; it is an anomaly which, I believe, can scarcely be found.

It is true that at the Revolution, when all government was immediately dissolved, the people got together, and what did they do? Did they exercise sovereign power? They began an inceptive organization, the object of which was to bring together representatives of the people, who should form a government. This was the mode of proceeding in those States where their legislatures were dissolved. It was much like that had in England upon the abdication of James the Second. He ran away, he abdicated. He threw the great seal into the Thames. I am not aware that, on the 4th of May, 1842, any great seal was thrown into Providence River! But James abdicated, and King William took the government; and how did he proceed? Why, he at once requested all who had been members of the old Parliament, of any regular Parliament in the time of Charles the Second, to assemble. The Peers, being a standing body, could of course assemble; and all they did was to recommend the calling of a convention, to be chosen by the same electors, and composed of the same numbers, as composed a Parliament. The convention assembled, and, as all know, was turned into a Parliament. This was a case of necessity, a revolution. Don't we call it so? And why? Not merely because a new sovereign then ascended the throne of the Stuarts, but because there was a change in the organization of the government. The legal and established succession was broken. The convention did not assemble under any preceding law. There was a hiatus, a syncope, in the action of the body politic. This was revolution, and the Parliaments that assembled afterwards referred their legal origin to that revolution.

Is it not obvious enough, that men cannot get together and count themselves, and say they are so many hundreds and so many thousands, and judge of their own qualifications, and call themselves the people, and set up a government? Why, another set of men, forty miles off, on the same day, with the same propriety, with as good qualifications, and in as large numbers, may meet and set up another government; one may meet at Newport and another at Chepachet, and both may call themselves the people. What is this but anarchy? What liberty is there here but a tumultuary, tempestuous, violent, stormy liberty, a sort of South American liberty, without power except in its spasms, a liberty supported by arms to-day, crushed by arms to-morrow? Is that our liberty?

The regular action of popular power, on the other hand, places upon public liberty the most beautiful face that ever adorned that angel form. All is regular and harmonious in its features, and gentle in its operation. The stream of public authority, under American liberty, running in this channel, has the strength of the Missouri, while its waters are as transparent as those of a crystal lake. It is powerful for good. It produces no tumult, no violence, and no wrong;

> "Though deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull; > Strong, without rage; without o'erflowing, full."

Another American principle growing out of this, and just as important and well settled as is the truth that the people are the source of power, is, that, when in the course of events it becomes necessary to ascertain the will of the people on a new exigency, or a new state of things or of opinion, the legislative power provides for that ascertainment by an ordinary act of legislation. Has not that been our whole history? It would take me from now till the sun shall go down to advert to all the instances of it, and I shall only refer to the most prominent, and especially to the establishment of the Constitution under which you sit. The old Congress, upon the suggestion of the delegates who assembled at Annapolis in May, 1786, recommended to the States that they should send delegates to a convention to be holden at Philadelphia to form a Constitution. No article of the old Confederation gave them power to do this; but they did it, and the States did appoint delegates, who assembled at Philadelphia, and formed the Constitution. It was communicated to the old Congress, and that body recommended to the States to make provision for calling the people together to act upon its adoption. Was not that exactly the case of passing a law to ascertain the will of the people in a new exigency? And this method was adopted without opposition, nobody suggesting that there could be any other mode of ascertaining the will of the people.

My learned friend went through the constitutions of several of the States. It is enough to say, that, of the old thirteen States, the constitutions, with but one exception, contained no provision for their own amendment. In New Hampshire there was a provision for taking the sense of the people once in seven years. Yet there is hardly one that has not altered its constitution, and it has been done by conventions called by the legislature, as an ordinary exercise of legislative power. Now what State ever altered its constitution in any other mode?

What alteration has ever been brought in, put in, forced in, or got in any how, by resolutions of mass meetings, and then by applying force? In what State has an assembly, calling itself the people, convened without law, without authority, without qualifications, without certain officers, with no oaths, securities, or sanctions of any kind, met and made a constitution, and called it the constitution of the STATE? There must be some authentic mode of ascertaining the will of the people, else all is anarchy. It resolves itself into the law of the strongest, or, what is the same thing, of the most numerous for the moment, and all constitutions and all legislative rights are prostrated and disregarded.

But my learned adversary says, that, if we maintain that the people (for he speaks in the name and on behalf of the people, to which I do not object) cannot commence changes in their government but by some previous act of legislation, and if the legislature will not grant such an act, we do in fact follow the example of the Holy Alliance, "the doctors of Laybach," where the assembled sovereigns said that all changes of government must proceed from sovereigns; and it is said that we mark out the same rule for the people of Rhode Island.

Now, will any man, will my adversary here, on a moment's reflection, undertake to show the least resemblance on earth between what I have called the American doctrine, and the doctrine of the sovereigns at Laybach? What do I contend for? I say that the will of the people must prevail, when it is ascertained; but there must be some legal and authentic mode of ascertaining that will; and then the people may make what government they please. Was that the doctrine of Laybach? Was not the doctrine there held this, that the sovereigns should say what changes shall be made? Changes must proceed from them; new constitutions and new laws emanate from them; and all the people had to do was to submit. That is what they maintained. All changes began with the sovereigns, and ended with the sovereigns. Pray, at about the time that the Congress of Laybach was in session, did the allied powers put it to the people of Italy to say what sort of change they would have? And at a more recent date, did they ask the citizens of Cracow what change they would have in their constitution? Or did they take away their constitution, laws, and liberties, by their own sovereign act? All that is necessary here is, that the will of the people should be ascertained, by some regular rule of proceeding, prescribed by previous law. But when ascertained, that will is as sovereign as the will of a despotic prince, of the Czar of Muscovy, or the Emperor of Austria himself, though not quite so easily made known. A ukase or an edict signifies at once the will of a despotic prince; but that will of the people, which is here as sovereign as the will of such a prince, is not so quickly ascertained or known; and thence arises the necessity for suffrage, which is the mode whereby each man's power is made to tell upon the constitution of the government, and in the enactment of laws.

One of the most recent laws for taking the will of the people in any State is the law of 1845, of the State of New York. It begins by recommending to the people to assemble in their several election districts, and proceed to vote for delegates to a convention. If you will take the pains to read that act, it will be seen that New York regarded it as an ordinary exercise of legislative power. It applies all the penalties for fraudulent voting, as in other elections. It punishes false oaths, as in other cases. Certificates of the proper officers were to be held conclusive, and the will of the people was, in this respect, collected essentially in the same manner, supervised by the same officers, under the same guards against force and fraud, collusion and misrepresentation, as are usual in voting for State or United States officers.

We see, therefore, from the commencement of the government under which we live, down to this late act of the State of New York, one uniform current of law, of precedent, and of practice, all going to establish the point that changes in government are to be brought about by the will of the people, assembled under such legislative provisions as may be necessary to ascertain that will, truly and authentically.

In the next place, may it please your honors, it becomes very important to consider what bearing the Constitution and laws of the United States have upon this Rhode Island question. Of course the Constitution of the United States recognizes the existence of States. One branch of the legislature of the United States is composed of Senators, appointed by the States, in their State capacities. The Constitution of the United States* says that "the United States shall guaranty to each State a republican form of government, and shall protect the several States against invasion; and on application of the legislature, or of the executive, when the legislature cannot be convened, against domestic violence." Now, I cannot but think this a very stringent article, drawing after it the most important consequences, and all of them good consequences. The Constitution, in the section cited, speaks of States as having existing legislatures and existing executives; and it speaks of cases in which violence is practised or threatened against the State, in other words, "domestic violence"; and it says the State shall be protected. It says, then, does it not? that the existing government of a State shall be protected. My adversary says, if so, and if the legislature would not call a convention, and if, when the people rise to make a constitution, the United States step in and prohibit them, why, the rights and privileges of the people are checked, controlled. Undoubtedly. The Constitution does not proceed on the ground of revolution; it does not proceed on any right of revolution; but it does go on the idea, that, within and under the Constitution, no new form of government can be established in any State, without the authority of the existing government.

Admitting the legitimacy of the argument of my learned adversary, it would not authorize the inference he draws from it, because his own case falls within the same range. He has proved, he thinks, that there was an existing government, a paper government, at least; a rightful government, as he alleges. Suppose it to be rightful, in his sense of right. Suppose three fourths of the people of Rhode Island to have been engaged in it, and ready to sustain it. What then? How is it to be done without the consent of the previous government? How is the fact, that three fourths of the people are in favor of the new government, to be legally ascertained? And if the existng government deny that fact, and if that government hold on, and will not surrender till displaced by force, and if it is threatened by force, then the case of the Constitution arises, and the United States must aid the government that is in, because an attempt to displace a government by force is "domestic violence."

It is the exigency provided for by the Constitution. If the existing government maintain its post, though three fourths of the State have adopted the new constitution, is it not evident enough that the exigency arises in which the constitutional power here must go to the aid of the existing government? Look at the law of 28th February, 1795.* Its words are, "And in case of an insurrection in any State, against the government thereof, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, on application of the legislature of such State, or of the executive (when the legislature cannot be convened), to call forth such number of the militia of any other State or States, as may be applied for, as he may judge sufficient to suppress such insurrection." Insurrection against the existing government is, then, the thing to be suppressed.

But the law and the Constitution, the whole system of American institutions, do not contemplate a case in which a resort will be necessary to proceedings aliunde, or outside of the law and the Constitution, for the purpose of amending the frame of government. They go on the idea that the States are all republican, that they are all representative in their forms, and that these popular governments in each State, the annually created creatures of the people, will give all proper facilities and necessary aids to bring about changes which the people may judge necessary in their constitutions. They take that ground and act on no other supposition. They assume that the popular will in all particulars will be accomplished. And history has proved that the presumption is well founded.

This, may it please your honors, is the view I take of what I have called the American system. These are the methods of bringing about changes in government.

Now, it is proper to look into this record, and see what the questions are that are presented by it, and consider, —

1. Whether the case is one for judicial investigation at all; that is, whether this court can try the matters which the plaintiff has offered to prove in the court below; and

2. In the second place, whether many things which he did offer to prove, if they could have been and had been proved, were not acts of criminality, and therefore no justification; and

3. Whether all that was offered to be proved would show that, in point of fact, there had been established and put in operation any new constitution, displacing the old charter government of Rhode Island.

* Statutes at Large, Vol. I. p. 424.

The declaration is in trespass. The writ was issued on the 8th of October, 1842, in which Martin Luther complains that Luther M. Borden and others broke into his house in Warren, Rhode Island, on the 29th of June, 1842, and disturbed his family and committed other illegal acts.

The defendant answers, that large numbers of men were in arms, in Rhode Island, for the purpose of overthrowing the government of the State, and making war upon it; and that, for the preservation of the government and people, martial law had been proclaimed by the Governor, under an act of the legislature, on the 25th of June, 1842. The plea goes on to aver, that the plaintiff was aiding and abetting this attempt to overthrow the government, and that the defendant was under the military authority of John T. Child, and was ordered by him to arrest the plaintiff; for which purpose he applied at the door of his house, and being refused entrance he forced the door.

The action is thus for an alleged trespass, and the plea is justification under the law of Rhode Island. The plea and replications are as usual in such cases in point of form. The plea was filed at the November term of 1842, and the case was tried at the November term of 1843, in the Circuit Court in Rhode Island. In order to make out a defence, the defendant offered the charter of Rhode Island, the participation of the State in the Declaration of Independence, its uniting with the Confederation in 1778, its admission into the Union in 1790, its continuance in the Union and its recognition as a State down to May, 1843, when the constitution now in force was adopted. Here let it be particularly remarked, that Congress admitted Rhode Island into the Constitution under this identical old charter government, thereby giving sanction to it as a republican form of government. The defendant then refers to all the laws and proceedings of the Assembly, till the adoption of the present constitution of Rhode Island. To repel the case of the defendant, the plaintiff read the proceedings of the old legislature, and documents to show that the idea of changing the government had been entertained as long ago as 1790. He read also certain resolutions of the Assembly in 1841, memorials praying changes in the constitution, and other documents to the same effect. He next offered to prove that suffrage associations were formed throughout the State in 1840 and 1841, and that steps were taken by them for holding public meetings; and to show the proceedings had at those meetings. In the next place, he offered to prove that a mass convention was held at Newport, attended by over four thousand persons, and another at Providence, at which over six thousand attended, at which resolutions were passed in favor of the change. Then he offered to prove the election of delegates; the meeting of the convention in October, 1841, and the draughting of the Dorr constitution; the reassembling in 1841, the completion of the draught, its submission to the people, their voting upon it, its adoption, and the proclamation on the 13th of January, 1842, that the constitution so adopted was the law of the land.

That is the substance of what was averred as to the formation of the Dorr constitution. The plaintiff next offered to prove that the constitution was adopted by a large majority of the qualified voters of the State; that officers were elected under it in April, 1842; that this new government assembled on the 3d of May; and he offered a copy of its proceedings. He sets forth that the court refused to admit testimony upon these subjects, and to these points; and ruled that the old government and laws of the State were in full force and power, and then existing, when the alleged trespass was made, and that they justified the acts of the defendants, according to their plea.

I will give a few references to other proceedings of this new government. The new constitution was proclaimed on the 13th of January, 1842, by some of the officers of the convention. On the 13th of April, officers were appointed under it, and Mr. Dorr was chosen governor. On Tuesday, the 3d of May, the new legislature met, was organized, and then, it is insisted, the new constitution became the law of the land. The legislature sat through that whole day, morning and evening; adjourned; met the next day, and sat through all that day, morning and evening, and did a great deal of paper business. It went through the forms of choosing a Supreme Court, and transacting other business of a similar kind, and on the evening of the 4th of May it adjourned, to meet again on the first Monday of July, in Providence,

"And word spake never more."

It never reassembled. This government, then, whatever it was, came into existence on the third day of May, and went out of existence on the fourth day of May.

I will now give some references concerning the new constitution authorized by the government, the old government, and which is now the constitution of Rhode Island. It was framed in November, 1842. It was voted upon by the people on the 21st, 22d, and 23d days of November, was then by them accepted, and became by its own provisions the constitution of Rhode Island on the first Tuesday of May, 1843.

Now, what, in the mean time, had become of Mr. Dorr's government? According to the principle of its friends, they are forced to admit that it was superseded by the new, that is to say, the present government, because the people accepted the new government. But there was no new government till May, 1843. According to them, then, there was an interregnum of a whole year. If Mr. Dorr had had a government, what became of it? If it ever came in, what put it out of existence? Why did it not meet on the day to which it had adjourned? It was not displaced by the new constitution, because that had not been agreed upon in convention till November. It was not adopted by the people till the last of November, and it did not go into operation till May. What then had become of Mr. Dorr's government?

I think it is important to note that the new constitution, established according to the prescribed forms, came thus into operation in May, 1843, and was admitted by all to be the constitution of the State. What then happened in the State of Rhode Island? I do not mean to go through all the trials that were had after this ideal government of Mr. Dorr ceased to exist; but I will ask attention to the report of the trial of Dorr for treason, which took place in 1844, before all the judges of the Supreme Court of the State. He was indicted in August, 1842, and the trial came on in March, 1844. The indictment was found while the charter government was in force, and the trial was had under the new constitution. He was found guilty of treason. And I turn to the report of the trial now, to call attention to the language of the court in its charge, as delivered by Chief Justice Durfee. I present the following extract from that charge: —

"It may be, Gentlemen, that he really believed himself to be the governor of the State, and that he acted throughout under this delusion. However this may go to extenuate the offence, it does not take from it its legal guilt. It is no defence to an indictment for the violation of any law for the defendant to come into court and say, 'I thought that I was but exercising a constitutional right, and I claim an acquittal on the ground of mistake.' Were it so, there would be an end to all law and all government. Courts and juries would have nothing to do but to sit in judgment upon indictments, in order to acquit or excuse. The accused has only to prove that he has been systematic in committing crime, and that he thought that he had a right to commit it; and, according to this doctrine, you must acquit. The main ground upon which the prisoner sought for a justification was, that a constitution had been adopted by a majority of the male adult population of this State, voting in their primary or natural capacity or condition, and that he was subsequently elected, and did the acts charged, as governor under it. He offered the votes themselves to prove its adoption, which were also to be followed by proof of his election. This evidence we have ruled out. Courts and juries, Gentlemen, do not count votes to determine whether a constitution has been adopted or a governor elected, or not. Courts take notice, without proof offered from the bar, what the constitution is or was, and who is or was the governor of their own State. It belongs to the legislature to exercise this high duty. It is the legislature which, in the exercise of its delegated sovereignty, counts the votes and declares whether a constitution be adopted or a governor elected, or not; and we cannot revise and reverse their acts in this particular, without usurping their power. Were the votes on the adoption of our present constitution now offered here to prove that it was or was not adopted; or those given for the governor under it, to prove that he was or was not elected; we could not receive the evidence ourselves; we could not permit it to pass to the jury. And why not? Because, if we did so, we should cease to be a mere judicial, and become a political tribunal, with the whole sovereignty in our hands. Neither the people nor the legislature would be sovereign. We should be sovereign, or you would be sovereign; and we should deal out to parties litigant, here at our bar, sovereignty to this or that, according to rules or laws of our own making, and heretofore unknown in courts.

"In what condition would this country be, if appeals could be thus taken to courts and juries? This jury might decide one way, and that another, and the sovereignty might be found here to-day, and there to-morrow. Sovereignty is above courts or juries, and the creature cannot sit in judgment upon its creator. Were this instrument offered as the constitution of a foreign state, we might, perhaps, under some circumstances, require proof of its existence; but, even in that case, the fact would not be ascertained by counting the votes given at its adoption, but by the certificate of the secretary of state, under the broad seal of the state. This instrument is not offered as a foreign constitution, and this court is bound to know what the constitution of the government is under which it acts, without any proof even of that high character. We know nothing of the existence of the so-called 'people's constitution' as law, and there is no proof before you of its adoption, and of the election of the prisoner as governor under it; and you can return a verdict only on the evidence that has passed to you."

Having thus, may it please your honors, attempted to state the questions as they arise, and having referred to what has taken place in Rhode Island, I shall present what further I have to say in three propositions: —

1st. I say, first, that the matters offered to be proved by the plaintiff in the court below are not of judicial cognizance; and proof of them, therefore, was properly rejected by the court.

2d. If all these matters could be, and had been, legally proved, they would have constituted no defence, because they show nothing but an illegal attempt to overthrow the government of Rhode Island.

3d. No proof was offered by the plaintiff to show that, in fact, another government had gone into operation, by which the Charter government had become displaced.

And first, these matters are not of judicial cognizance. Does this need arguing? Are the various matters of fact alleged, the meetings, the appointment of committees, the qualifications of voters, is there any one of all these matters of which a court of law can take cognizance in a case in which it is to decide on sovereignty? Are fundamental changes in the frame of a government to be thus proved? The thing to be proved is a change of the sovereign power. Two legislatures existed at the same time, both claiming power to pass laws. Both could not have a legal existence. What, then, is the attempt of our adversaries? To put down one sovereign government, and to put another up, by facts and proceedings in regard to elections out of doors, unauthorized by any law whatever. Regular proceedings for a change of government may in some cases, perhaps, be taken notice of by a court; but this court must look elsewhere than out of doors, and to public meetings, irregular and unauthorized, for the decision of such a question as this. It naturally looks to that authority under which it sits here, to the provisions of the Constitution which have created this tribunal, and to the laws by which its proceedings are regulated. It must look to the acts of the government of the United States, in its various branches.

This Rhode Island disturbance, as every body knows, was brought to the knowledge of the President of the United States* by the public authorities of Rhode Island; and how did he treat it? The United States have guarantied to each State a republican form of government. And a law of Congress has directed the President, in a constitutional case requiring the adoption of such a proceeding, to call out the militia to put down domestic violence, and suppress insurrection. Well, then, application was made to the President of the United States, to the executive power of the United States. For, according to our system, it devolves upon the executive to determine, in the first instance, what are and what are not governments. The President recognizes governments, foreign governments, as they appear from time to time in the occurrences of this changeful world. And the Constitution and the laws, if an insurrection exists against the government of any State, rendering it necessary to appear with an armed force, make it his duty to call out the militia and suppress it.

Two things may here be properly considered. The first is, that the Constitution declares that the United States shall protect every State against domestic violence; and the law of 1795, making provision for carrying this constitutional duty into effect in all proper cases, declares, that, "in case of an insurrection in any State against the government thereof, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to call out the militia of other States to suppress such insurrection." These constitutional and legal provisions make it the indispensable duty of the President to decide, in cases of commotion, what is the rightful government of the State. He cannot avoid such decision. And in this case he decided, of course, that the existing government, the charter government, was the rightful government. He could not possibly have decided otherwise.

In the next place, if events had made it necessary to call out the militia, and the officers and soldiers of such militia, in protecting the existing government, had done precisely what the defendants in this case did, could an action have been maintained against them? No one would assert so absurd a proposition.

* Mr. Tyler.

In reply to the requisition of the Governor, the President stated that he did not think it was yet time for the application of force; but he wrote a letter to the Secretary of War, in which he directed him to confer with the Governor of Rhode Island; and, whenever it should appear to them to be necessary, to call out from Massachusetts and Connecticut a militia force sufficient to terminate at once this insurrection, by the authority of the government of the United States. We are at no loss, therefore, to know how the executive government of the United States treated this insurrection. It was regarded as fit to be suppressed. That is manifest from the President's letters to the Secretary of War and to Governor King.

Now, the eye of this court must be directed to the proceedings of the general government, which had its attention called to the subject, and which did institute proceedings respecting it. And the court will learn from the proceedings of the executive branch of the government, and of the two chambers above us, how the disturbances in Rhode Island were regarded; whether they were looked upon as the establishment of any government, or as a mere pure, unauthorized, unqualified insurrection against the authority of the existing government of the State.

I say, therefore, that, upon that ground, these facts are not facts which this court can inquire into, or which the court below could try; because they are facts going to prove (if they prove any thing) the establishment of a new sovereignty; and that is a question to be settled elsewhere and otherwise. From the very nature of the case, it is not a question to be decided by judicial inquiry. Take, for example, one of the points which it involves. My adversary offered to prove that the constitution was adopted by a majority of the people of Rhode Island; by a large majority, as he alleges. What does this offer call on your honors to do? Why, to ascertain, by proof, what is the number of citizens of Rhode Island, and how many attended the meetings at which the delegates to the convention were elected; and then you have to add them all up, and prove by testimony the qualifications of every one of them to be an elector. It is enough to state such a proposition to show its absurdity. As none such ever was sustained in a court of law, so none can be or ought to be sustained. Observe that minutes of proceedings can be no proof, for they were made by no authentic persons; registers were kept by no warranted officers; chairmen and moderators were chosen without authority. In short, there are no official records; there is no testimony in the case but parol. Chief Justice Durfee has stated this so plainly, that I need not dwell upon it.

But, again, I say you cannot look into the facts attempted to be proved, because of the certainty of the continuance of the old government till the new and legal constitution went into effect on the 3d of May, 1843. To prove that there was another constitution of two days' duration would be ridiculous. And I say that the decision of Rhode Island herself, by her legislature, by her executive, by the adjudication of her highest court of law, on the trial of Dorr, has shut up the whole case. Do you propose, (I will not put it in that form,) but would it be proper for this court to reverse that adjudication? That declares that the judges of Rhode Island know nothing of the "People's Constitution." Is it possible, then, for this court, or for the court below, to know any thing of it?

It appears to me that, if there were nothing else in the case, the proceedings of Rhode Island herself must close every body's mouth, in the court and out of it. Rhode Island is competent to decide the question herself, and every body else ought to be bound by her decision. And she has decided it.

And it is but a branch of this to say, according to my second proposition, —

2. That if every thing offered had been proved, if in the nature of the case these facts and proceedings could have been received as proof, the court could not have listened to them, because every one of them is regarded by the State in which they took place as a criminal act. Who can derive any authority from acts declared to be criminal? The very proceedings which are now set up here show that this pretended constitution was founded upon acts which the legislature of the State had provided punishment for, and which the courts of the State have punished. All, therefore, which the plaintiff has attempted to prove, are acts which he was not allowed to prove, because they were criminal in themselves, and have been so treated and punished, so far as the State government, in its discretion, has thought proper to punish them.

3. Thirdly, and lastly, I say that there is no evidence offered, nor has any distinct allegation been made, that there was an actual government established and put in operation to displace the Charter government, even for a single day. That is evident enough. You find the whole embraced in those two days, the 3d and 4th of May. The French revolution was thought to be somewhat rapid. That took three days. But this work was accomplished in two. It is all there, and what is it? Its birth, its whole life, and its death were accomplished in forty-eight hours. What does it appear that the members of this government did? Why, they voted that A should be treasurer, and C, secretary, and Mr. Dorr, governor; and chose officers of the Supreme Court. But did ever any man under that authority attempt to exercise a particle of official power? Did any man ever bring a suit? Did ever an officer make an arrest? Did any act proceed from any member of this government, or from any agent of it, to touch a citizen of Rhode Island in his person, his safety, or his property, so as to make the party answerable upon an indictment or in a civil suit? Never. It never performed one single act of government. It never did a thing in the world! All was patriotism, and all was paper; and with patriotism and with paper it went out on the 4th of May, admitting itself to be, as all must regard it, a contemptible sham!

I have now done with the principles involved in this case, and the questions presented on this record.

In regard to the other case, I have but few words to say. And, first, I think it is to be regretted that the court below sent up such a list of points on which it was divided. I shall not go through them, and shall leave it to the court to say whether, after they shall have disposed of the first cause, there is any thing left. I shall only draw attention to the subject of martial law; and in respect to that, instead of going back to martial law as it existed in England at the time the charter of Rhode Island was granted, I shall merely observe that martial law confers power of arrest, of summary trial, and prompt execution; and that when it has been proclaimed, the land becomes a camp, and the law of the camp is the law of the land. Mr. Justice Story defines martial law to be the law of war, a resort to military authority in cases where the civil law is not sufficient; and it confers summary power, not to be used arbitrarily or for the gratification of personal feelings of hatred or revenge, but for the preservation of order and of the public peace. The officer clothed with it is to judge of the degree of force that the necessity of the case may demand; and there is no limit to this, except such as is to be found in the nature and character of the exigency.

I now take leave of this whole case. That it is an interesting incident in the history of our institutions, I freely admit. That it has come hither is a subject of no regret to me. I might have said, that I see nothing to complain of in the proceedings of what is called the Charter government of Rhode Island, except that it might perhaps have discreetly taken measures at an earlier period for revising the constitution. If in that delay it erred, it was the error into which prudent and cautious men would fall. As to the enormity of freehold suffrage, how long is it since Virginia, the parent of States, gave up her freehold suffrage? How long is it since nobody voted for governor in New York without a freehold qualification? There are now States in which no man can vote for members of the upper branch of the legislature who does not own fifty acres of land. Every State requires more or less of a property qualification in its officers and electors; and it is for discreet legislation, or constitutional provisions, to determine what its amount shall be. Even the Dorr constitution had a property qualification. According to its provisions, for officers of the State, to be sure, any body could vote; but its authors remembered that taxation and representation go together, and therefore they declared that no man, in any town, should vote to lay a tax for town purposes who had not the means to pay his portion. It said to him, You cannot vote in the town of Providence to levy a tax for repairing the streets of Providence; but you may vote for governor, and for thirteen representatives from the town of Providence, and send them to the legislature, and there they may tax the people of Rhode Island at their sovereign will and pleasure.

I believe that no harm can come of the Rhode Island agitation in 1841, but rather good. It will purify the political atmosphere from some of its noxious mists, and I hope it will clear men's minds from unfounded notions and dangerous delusions. I hope it will bring them to look at the regularity, the order, with which we carry on what, if the word were not so much abused, I would call our glorious representative system of popular government. Its principles will stand the test of this crisis, as they have stood the test and torture of others. They are exposed always, and they always will be exposed, to dangers. There are dangers from the extremes of too much and of too little popular liberty; from monarchy, or military despotism, on one side, and from licentiousness and anarchy on the other. This always will be the case. The classical navigator had been told that he must pass a narrow and dangerous strait:

> "Dextrum Scylla latus, lævum implacata Charybdis, > Obsidet."

Forewarned, he was alive to his danger, and knew, by signs not doubtful, where he was, when he approached its scene:

> "Et gemitum ingentem pelagi, pulsataque saxa, > Audimus longe, fractasque ad litora voces;
> Exsultantque vada, atque æstu miscentur arenæ.
> . . . . . Nimirum hæc illa Charybdis!"

The long-seeing sagacity of our fathers enables us to know equally well where we are, when we hear the voices of tumultuary assemblies, and see the turbulence created by numbers meeting and acting without the restraints of law; and has most wisely provided constitutional means of escape and security. When the established authority of government is openly contemned; when no deference is paid to the regular and authentic declarations of the public will; when assembled masses put themselves above the law, and, calling themselves the people, attempt by force to seize on the government; when the social and political order of the state is thus threatened with overthrow, and the spray of the waves of violent popular commotion lashes the stars, our political pilots may well cry out:

> "Nimirum hæc illa Charybdis!"

The prudence of the country, the sober wisdom of the people, has thus far enabled us to carry this Constitution, and all our constitutions, through the perils which have surrounded them, without running upon the rocks on one side, or being swallowed up in the eddying whirlpools of the other. And I fervently hope that this signal happiness and good fortune will continue, and that our children after us will exercise a similar prudence, and wisdom, and justice; and that, under the Divine blessing, our system of free government may continue to go on, with equal prosperity, to the end of time.

DIPLOMATIC AND OFFICIAL PAPERS.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

The greater part of the contents of this division of the work is derived from the separate volume, which appeared in 1848, under the title of the "Diplomatic and Official Papers" of Mr. Webster. Such official letters as have been published since Mr. Webster returned to the Department of State in 1850 have been added in this collection. Among these is the letter to the Chevalier Hülsemann, of the 21st of December, 1850.

The volume published in 1848 contained, besides the letters of Mr. Webster, numerous letters from the American Minister in London, from the Commissioners of Massachusetts and Maine relative to the northeastern boundary, from the British Minister, and from General Cass. Of these such only have been retained in the present work as seemed necessary to the full understanding of Mr. Webster's letters, and the subjects treated in them.

THE CASE OF ALEXANDER McLEOD.*

Mr. Fox to Mr. Webster.

Washington, March 12, 1841.

The undersigned, her Britannic Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, is instructed by his government to make the following official communication to the government of the United States.

Her Majesty's government have had under their consideration the correspondence which took place in Washington in December last, between the United States Secretary of State, Mr. Forsyth, and the undersigned, comprising two official letters from Mr. Forsyth to the undersigned, dated the 26th and 30th of the same month, upon the subject of the arrest and imprisonment of Mr. Alexander McLeod, of Upper Canada, by the authorities of the State of New York, upon a pretended charge of arson and murder, as having been engaged in the capture and destruction of the steamboat "Caroline," on the 29th of December, 1837.

The undersigned is directed, in the first place, to make known to the government of the United States that her Majesty's government entirely approve of the course pursued by the undersigned in that correspondence, and of the language adopted by him in the official letters above mentioned.

And the undersigned is now instructed again to demand from the government of the United States, formally, in the name of the British government, the immediate release of Mr. Alexander McLeod.

* The history of this case will be found in the fifth volume of this collection, in Mr. Webster's speech of the 6th and 7th of April, 1846, in vindication of the treaty of Washington.

The grounds upon which the British government make this demand upon the government of the United States are these: that the transaction on account of which Mr. McLeod has been arrested, and is to be put upon his trial, was a transaction of a public character, planned and executed by persons duly empowered by her Majesty's colonial authorities to take any steps and to do any acts which might be necessary for the defence of her Majesty's territories and for the protection of her Majesty's subjects; and that, consequently, those subjects of her Majesty who engaged in that transaction were performing an act of public duty, for which they cannot be made personally and individually answerable to the laws and tribunals of any foreign country.

The transaction in question may have been, as her Majesty's government are of opinion that it was, a justifiable employment of force for the purpose of defending the British territory from the unprovoked attack of a band of British rebels and American pirates, who, having been permitted to arm and organize themselves within the territory of the United States, had actually invaded and occupied a portion of the territory of her Majesty; or it may have been, as alleged by Mr. Forsyth, in his note to the undersigned of the 26th of December, "a most unjustifiable invasion, in time of peace, of the territory of the United States." But this is a question especially of a political and international kind, which can be discussed and settled only between the two governments, and which the courts of justice of the State of New York cannot by possibility have any means of judging or any right of deciding.

It would be contrary to the universal practice of civilized nations to fix individual responsibility upon persons who, with the sanction or by the orders of the constituted authorities of a State, engaged in military or naval enterprises in their country's cause; and it is obvious that the introduction of such a principle would aggravate beyond measure the miseries, and would frightfully increase the demoralizing effects of war, by mixing up with national exasperation the ferocity of personal passions, and the cruelty and bitterness of individual revenge.

Her Majesty's government cannot believe that the government of the United States can really intend to set an example so fraught with evil to the community of nations, and the direct tendency of which must be to bring back into the practice of modern war atrocities which civilization and Christianity have long since banished.

Neither can her Majesty's government admit for a moment the validity of the doctrine advanced by Mr. Forsyth, that the Federal government of the United States has no power to interfere in the matter in question, and that the decision thereof must rest solely and entirely with the State of New York.

With the particulars of the internal compact which may exist between the several States that compose this Union, foreign powers have nothing to do; the relations of foreign powers are with the aggregate Union; that Union is to them represented by the Federal government; and of that Union the Federal government is to them the only organ. Therefore, when a foreign power has redress to demand for a wrong done to it by any State of the Union, it is to the Federal government, and not to the separate State, that such power must look for redress for that wrong. And such foreign power cannot admit the plea that the separate State is an independent body, over which the Federal government has no control. It is obvious that such a doctrine, if admitted, would at once go to a dissolution of the Union as far as its relations with foreign powers are concerned; and that foreign powers in such case, instead of accrediting diplomatic agents to the Federal government, would send such agents, not to that government, but to the government of each separate State, and would make their relations of peace and war with each State depend upon the result of their separate intercourse with such State, without reference to the relations they might have with the rest.

Her Majesty's government apprehend that the above is not the conclusion at which the government of the United States intend to arrive; yet such is the conclusion to which the arguments that have been advanced by Mr. Forsyth necessarily lead.

But be that as it may, her Majesty's government formally demand, upon the grounds already stated, the immediate release of Mr. McLeod; and her Majesty's government entreat the President of the United States to take into his most deliberate consideration the serious nature of the consequences which must ensue from a rejection of this demand.

The United States government will perceive that, in demanding Mr. McLeod's release, her Majesty's government argue upon the assumption that he was one of the persons engaged in the capture of the steamboat "Caroline"; but her Majesty's government have the strongest reasons for being convinced that Mr. McLeod was not, in fact, engaged in that transaction; and the undersigned is hereupon instructed to say, that, although the circumstance itself makes no difference in the political and international question at issue, and although her Majesty's government do not demand Mr. McLeod's release upon the ground that he was not concerned in the capture of the "Caroline," but upon the ground that the capture of the "Caroline" was a transaction of a public character, for which the persons engaged in it cannot incur private and personal responsibility; yet the government of the United States must not disguise from themselves that the fact that Mr. McLeod was not engaged in the transaction must necessarily tend greatly to inflame that national resentment which any harm that shall be suffered by Mr. McLeod at the hands of the authorities of the State of New York will infallibly excite throughout the whole of the British empire.

The undersigned, in addressing the present official communication, by order of his government, to Mr. Webster, Secretary of State of the United States, has the honor to offer him the assurance of his distinguished consideration.

H. S. Fox.

THE HON. DANIEL WEBSTER, Secretary of State.

Mr. Webster to Mr. Fox.

Department of State, Washington, April 24, 1841.

The undersigned, Secretary of State of the United States, has the honor to inform Mr. Fox, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of her Britannic Majesty, that his note of the 12th of March was received and laid before the President.

Circumstances well known to Mr. Fox have necessarily delayed for some days the consideration of that note.

The undersigned has the honor now to say, that it has been fully considered, and that he has been directed by the President to address to Mr. Fox the following reply.

Mr. Fox informs the government of the United States, that he is instructed to make known to it that the government of her Majesty entirely approve the course pursued by him in his correspondence with Mr. Forsyth in December last, and the language adopted by him on that occasion; and that that government have instructed him "again to demand from the government of the United States, formally, in the name of the British government, the immediate release of Mr. Alexander McLeod"; that "the grounds upon which the British government make this demand upon the government of the United States are these: that the transaction on account of which Mr. McLeod has been arrested, and is to be put upon his trial, was a transaction of a public character, planned and executed by persons duly empowered by her Majesty's colonial authorities to take any steps and to do any acts which might be necessary for the defence of her Majesty's territories, and for the protection of her Majesty's subjects; and that, consequently, those subjects of her Majesty who engaged in that transaction were performing an act of public duty, for which they cannot be made personally and individually answerable to the laws and tribunals of any foreign country."

The President is not certain that he understands precisely the meaning intended by her Majesty's government to be conveyed by the foregoing instruction.

This doubt has occasioned with the President some hesitation; but he inclines to take it for granted that the main purpose of the instruction was, to cause it to be signified to the government of the United States that the attack on the steamboat "Caroline" was an act of public force, done by the British colonial authorities, and fully recognized by the Queen's government at home; and that, consequently, no individual concerned in that transaction can, according to the just principles of the laws of nations, be held personally answerable in the ordinary courts of law, as for a private offence; and that upon this avowal of her Majesty's government, Alexander McLeod, now imprisoned on an indictment for murder alleged to have been committed in that attack, ought to be released by such proceedings as are usual and are suitable to the case.

The President adopts the conclusion, that nothing more than this could have been intended to be expressed, from the consideration that her Majesty's government must be fully aware that in the United States, as in England, persons confined under judicial process can be released from that confinement only by judicial process. In neither country, as the undersigned supposes, can the arm of the executive power interfere, directly or forcibly, to release or deliver the prisoner. His discharge must be sought in a manner conformable to the principles of law, and the proceedings of courts of judicature. If an indictment, like that which has been found against Alexander McLeod, and under circumstances like those which belong to his case, were pending against an individual in one of the courts of England, there is no doubt that the law officer of the crown might enter a nolle prosequi; or that the prisoner might cause himself to be brought up on habeas corpus, and discharged, if his ground of discharge should be adjudged sufficient; or that he might prove the same facts and insist on the same defence or exemption on his trial.

All these are legal modes of proceeding, well known to the laws and practice of both countries. But the undersigned does not suppose that, if such a case were to arise in England, the power of the executive government could be exerted in any more direct manner. Even in the case of ambassadors, and other public ministers whose right of exemption from arrest is personal, requiring no fact to be ascertained but the mere fact of diplomatic character, and to arrest whom is sometimes made a highly penal offence, if the arrest be actually made, it can only be discharged by application to the courts of law.

It is understood that Alexander McLeod is holden as well on civil as on criminal process, for acts alleged to have been done by him in the attack on the "Caroline"; and his defence, or ground of acquittal, must be the same in both cases. And this strongly illustrates, as the undersigned conceives, the propriety of the foregoing observations; since it is quite clear that the executive government cannot interfere to arrest a civil suit between private parties in any stage of its progress; but that such suit must go on to its regular judicial termination. If, therefore, any course different from such as have been now mentioned was in contemplation of her Majesty's government, something would seem to have been expected from the government of the United States as little conformable to the laws and usages of the English government as to those of the United States, and to which this government cannot accede.

The government of the United States, therefore, acting upon the presumption, which it readily adopted, that nothing extraordinary or unusual was expected or requested of it, decided, on the reception of Mr. Fox's note, to take such measures as the occasion and its own duty appeared to require.

In his note to Mr. Fox of the 26th of December last, Mr. Forsyth, the Secretary of State of the United States, observes, that, "if the destruction of the 'Caroline' was a public act of persons in her Majesty's service, obeying the order of their superior authorities, this fact has not been before communicated to the government of the United States by a person authorized to make the admission; and it will be for the court which has taken cognizance of the offence with which Mr. McLeod is charged to decide upon its validity when legally established before it." And he adds: "The President deems this to be a proper occasion to remind the government of her Britannic Majesty, that the case of the 'Caroline' has been long since brought to the attention of her Majesty's principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, who up to this day has not communicated its decision thereupon. It is hoped that the government of her Majesty will perceive the importance of no longer leaving the government of the United States uninformed of its views and intentions upon a subject which has naturally produced much exasperation, and which has led to such grave consequences."

The communication of the fact, that the destruction of the "Caroline" was an act of public force by the British authorities, being formally made to the government of the United States by Mr. Fox's note, the case assumes a decided aspect.

The government of the United States entertains no doubt, that, after this avowal of the transaction as a public transaction, authorized and undertaken by the British authorities, individuals concerned in it ought not, by the principles of public law and the general usage of civilized states, to be holden personally responsible in the ordinary tribunals of law for their participation in it. And the President presumes that it can hardly be necessary to say that the American people, not distrustful of their ability to redress public wrongs by public means, cannot desire the punishment of individuals when the act complained of is declared to have been an act of the government itself.

Soon after the date of Mr. Fox's note, an instruction was given to the Attorney-General of the United States from this department, by direction of the President, which fully sets forth the opinions of this government on the subject of McLeod's imprisonment, a copy of which instruction the undersigned has the honor herewith to inclose.

The indictment against McLeod is pending in a State court; but his rights, whatever they may be, are no less safe, it is to be presumed, than if he were holden to answer in one of the courts of this government.

He demands immunity from personal responsibility by virtue of the law of nations, and that law in civilized states is to be respected in all courts. None is either so high or so low as to escape from its authority in cases to which its rules and principles apply.

This department has been regularly informed by his Excellency, the Governor of the State of New York, that the Chief Justice of that State was assigned to preside at the hearing and trial of McLeod's case, but that, owing to some error or mistake in the process of summoning the jury, the hearing was necessarily deferred. The President regrets this occurrence, as he has a desire for a speedy disposition of the subject. The counsel for McLeod have requested authentic evidence of the avowal by the British government of the attack on and the destruction of the "Caroline," as acts done under its authority, and such evidence will be furnished to them by this department.

It is understood that the indictment has been removed into the Supreme Court of the State by the proper proceeding for that purpose, and that it is now competent for McLeod, by the ordinary process of habeas corpus, to bring his case for hearing before that tribunal.

The undersigned hardly needs to assure Mr. Fox, that a tribunal so eminently distinguished for ability and learning as the Supreme Court of the State of New York may be safely relied upon for the just and impartial administration of the law in this as well as in other cases; and the undersigned repeats the expression of the desire of this government, that no delay may be suffered to take place in these proceedings which can be avoided. Of this desire Mr. Fox will see evidence in the instructions above referred to.

The undersigned has now to signify to Mr. Fox, that the government of the United States has not changed the opinion which it has heretofore expressed to her Majesty's government of the character of the act of destroying the "Caroline."

It does not think that that transaction can be justified by any reasonable application or construction of the right of self-defence under the laws of nations. It is admitted that a just right of self-defence attaches always to nations as well as to individuals, and is equally necessary for the preservation of both. But the extent of this right is a question to be judged of by the circumstances of each particular case; and when its alleged exercise has led to the commission of hostile acts within the territory of a power at peace, nothing less than a clear and absolute necessity can afford ground of justification. Not having up to this time been made acquainted with the views and reasons at length which have led her Majesty's government to think the destruction of the "Caroline" justifiable as an act of self-defence, the undersigned, earnestly renewing the remonstrance of this government against the transaction, abstains for the present from any extended discussion of the question. But it is deemed proper, nevertheless, not to omit to take some notice of the general grounds of justification stated by her Majesty's government in their instruction to Mr. Fox.

Her Majesty's government have instructed Mr. Fox to say, that they are of opinion that the transaction which terminated in the destruction of the "Caroline" was a justifiable employment of force for the purpose of defending the British territory from the unprovoked attack of a band of British rebels and American pirates, who, having been "permitted" to arm and organize themselves within the territory of the United States, had actually invaded a portion of the territory of her Majesty.

The President cannot suppose that her Majesty's government, by the use of these terms, meant to be understood as intimating that those acts, violating the laws of the United States and disturbing the peace of the British territories, were done under any degree of countenance from this government, or were regarded by it with indifference, or that, under the circumstances of the case, they could have been prevented by the ordinary course of proceeding. Although he regrets that, by using the term "permitted," a possible inference of that kind might be raised; yet such an inference, the President is willing to believe, would be quite unjust to the intentions of the British government.

That on a line of frontier such as separates the United States from her Britannic Majesty's North American Provinces, a line long enough to divide the whole of Europe into halves, irregularities, violences, and conflicts should sometimes occur, equally against the will of both governments, is certainly easily to be supposed. This may be more possible, perhaps, in regard to the United States, without any reproach to their government, since their institutions entirely discourage the keeping up of large standing armies in time of peace, and their situation happily exempts them from the necessity of maintaining such expensive and dangerous establishments. All that can be expected from either government, in these cases, is good faith, a sincere desire to preserve peace and do justice, the use of all proper means of prevention, and that, if offences cannot, nevertheless, be always prevented, the offenders shall still be justly punished. In all these respects, this government acknowledges no delinquency in the performance of its duties.

Her Majesty's government are pleased, also, to speak of those American citizens who took part with persons in Canada, engaged in an insurrection against the British government, as "American pirates." The undersigned does not admit the propriety or justice of this designation. If citizens of the United States fitted out, or were engaged in fitting out, a military expedition from the United States, intended to act against the British government in Canada, they were clearly violating the laws of their own country, and exposing themselves to the just consequences which might be inflicted on them, if taken within the British dominions. But, notwithstanding this, they were certainly not pirates, nor does the undersigned think that it can advance the purpose of fair and friendly discussion, or hasten the accommodation of national difficulties, so to denominate them. Their offence, whatever it was, had no analogy to cases of piracy. Supposing all that is alleged against them to be true, they were taking a part in what they regarded as a civil war, and they were taking a part on the side of the rebels. Surely England herself has not regarded persons thus engaged as deserving the appellation which her Majesty's government bestows on these citizens of the United States.

It is quite notorious, that, for the greater part of the last two centuries, subjects of the British crown have been permitted to engage in foreign wars, both national and civil, and in the latter in every stage of their progress; and yet it has not been imagined that England has at any time allowed her subjects to turn pirates. Indeed, in our own times, not only have individual subjects of that crown gone abroad to engage in civil wars, but we have seen whole regiments openly recruited, embodied, armed, and disciplined in England, with the avowed purpose of aiding a rebellion against a nation with which England was at peace; although it is true that, subsequently, an act of Parliament was passed to prevent transactions so nearly approaching to public war, without license from the crown.

It may be said that there is a difference between the case of a civil war arising from a disputed succession, or a protracted revolt of a colony against the mother country, and the case of a fresh outbreak, or commencement of a rebellion. The undersigned does not deny that such distinction may, for certain purposes, be deemed well founded. He admits that a government, called upon to consider its own rights, interests, and duties, when civil wars break out in other countries, may decide on all the circumstances of the particular case upon its own existing stipulations, on probable results, on what its own security requires, and on many other considerations. It may be already bound to assist one party, or it may become bound, if it so chooses, to assist the other, and to meet the consequences of such assistance.

But whether the revolt be recent or long continued, they who join those concerned in it, whatever may be their offence against their own country, or however they may be treated, if taken with arms in their hands in the territory of the government against which the standard of revolt is raised, cannot be denominated pirates without departing from all ordinary use of language in the definition of offences. A cause which has so foul an origin as piracy cannot, in its progress or by its success, obtain a claim to any degree of respectability or tolerance among nations; and civil wars, therefore, are not understood to have such a commencement.

It is well known to Mr. Fox, that authorities of the highest eminence in England, living and dead, have maintained that the general law of nations does not forbid the citizens or subjects of one government from taking part in the civil commotions of another. There is some reason, indeed, to think that such may be the opinion of her Majesty's government at the present moment.

The undersigned has made these remarks from the conviction that it is important to regard established distinctions, and to view the acts and offences of individuals in the exactly proper light. But it is not to be inferred that there is, on the part of this government, any purpose of extenuating in the slightest degree the crimes of those persons, citizens of the United States, who have joined in military expeditions against the British government in Canada. On the contrary, the President directs the undersigned to say, that it is his fixed resolution that all such disturbers of the national peace, and violators of the laws of their country, shall be brought to exemplary punishment. Nor will the fact that they are instigated and led on to these excesses by British subjects, refugees from the Provinces, be deemed any excuse or palliation; although it is well worthy of being remembered that the prime movers of these disturbances on the borders are subjects of the Queen, who come within the territories of the United States, seeking to enlist the sympathies of their citizens by all the motives which they are able to address to them on account of grievances, real or imaginary. There is no reason to believe that the design of any hostile movement from the United States against Canada has commenced with citizens of the United States. The true origin of such purposes and such enterprises is on the other side of the line. But the President's resolution to prevent these transgressions of the law is not, on that account, the less strong. It is taken, not only in conformity to his duty under the provisions of existing laws, but in full consonance with the established principles and practice of this government.

The government of the United States has not, from the first, fallen into the doubts, elsewhere entertained, of the true extent of the duties of neutrality. It has held, that, however it may have been in less enlightened ages, the just interpretation of the modern law of nations is, that neutral states are bound to be strictly neutral; and that it is a manifest and gross impropriety for individuals to engage in the civil conflicts of other states, and thus to be at war while their government is at peace. War and peace are high national relations, which can properly be established or changed only by nations themselves.

The United States have thought, also, that the salutary doctrine of non-intervention by one nation in the affairs of others is liable to be essentially impaired, if, while government refrains from interference, interference is still allowed to its subjects, individually or in masses. It may happen, indeed, that persons choose to leave their country, emigrate to other regions, and settle themselves on uncultivated lands, in territories belonging to other states. This cannot be prevented by governments which allow the emigration of their subjects and citizens; and such persons, having voluntarily abandoned their own country, have no longer claim to its protection, nor is it longer responsible for their acts. Such cases, therefore, if they occur, show no abandonment of the duty of neutrality.

The government of the United States has not considered it as sufficient to confine the duties of neutrality and non-interference to the case of governments whose territories lie adjacent to each other. The application of the principle may be more necessary in such cases, but the principle itself they regard as being the same, if those territories be divided by half the globe. The rule is founded in the impropriety and danger of allowing individuals to make war on their own authority, or, by mingling themselves in the belligerent operations of other nations, to run the hazard of counteracting the policy, or embroiling the relations, of their own government. And the United States have been the first among civilized states to enforce the observance of this just rule of neutrality and peace, by special and adequate legal enactments. In the infancy of this government, on the breaking out of the European wars which had their origin in the French Revolution, Congress passed laws, with severe penalties, for preventing the citizens of the United States from taking part in those hostilities.

By these laws, it prescribed to the citizens of the United States what it understood to be their duty as neutrals, by the law of nations, and the duty, also, which they owed to the interest and honor of their own country.

At a subsequent period, when the American colonies of a European power took up arms against their sovereign, Congress, not diverted from the established system of the government by any temporary considerations, not swerved from its sense of justice and of duty by any sympathies which it might naturally feel for one of the parties, did not hesitate also to pass acts applicable to the case of colonial insurrection and civil war. And these provisions of law have been continued, revised, amended, and are in full force at the present moment. Nor have they been a dead letter, as it is well known that exemplary punishments have been inflicted on those who have transgressed them. It is known, indeed, that heavy penalties have fallen on individuals (citizens of the United States) engaged in this very disturbance in Canada with which the destruction of the "Caroline" was connected. And it is in Mr. Fox's knowledge, also, that the act of Congress of the 10th of March, 1838, was passed for the precise purpose of more effectually restraining military enterprises from the United States into the British Provinces, by authorizing the use of the most sure and decisive preventive means. The undersigned may add, that it stands on the admission of very high British authority, that during the recent Canadian troubles, although bodies of adventurers appeared on the border, making it necessary for the people of Canada to keep themselves in a state prepared for self-defence, yet that these adventurers were acting by no means in accordance with the feeling of the great mass of the American people, or of the government of the United States.

This government, therefore, not only holds itself above reproach in every thing respecting the preservation of neutrality, the observance of the principle of non-intervention, and the strictest conformity, in these respects, to the rules of international law, but it doubts not that the world will do it the justice to acknowledge that it has set an example not unfit to be followed by others; and that, by its steady legislation on this most important subject, it has done something to promote peace and good neighborhood among nations, and to advance the civilization of mankind.

The undersigned trusts that, when her Britannic Majesty's government shall present the grounds at length on which they justify the local authorities of Canada in attacking and destroying the "Caroline," they will consider that the laws of the United States are such as the undersigned has now represented them, and that the government of the United States has always manifested a sincere disposition to see those laws effectually and impartially administered. If there have been cases in which individuals, justly obnoxious to punishment, have escaped, this is no more than happens in regard to other laws.

Under these circumstances, and under those immediately connected with the transaction itself, it will be for her Majesty's government to show upon what state of facts and what rules of national law the destruction of the "Caroline" is to be defended. It will be for that government to show a necessity of self-defence, instant, overwhelming, leaving no choice of means, and no moment for deliberation. It will be for it to show, also, that the local authorities of Canada, even supposing the necessity of the moment authorized them to enter the territories of the United States at all, did nothing unreasonable or excessive; since the act, justified by the necessity of self-defence, must be limited by that necessity, and kept clearly within it. It must be shown that admonition or remonstrance to the persons on board the "Caroline" was impracticable, or would have been unavailing. It must be shown that daylight could not be waited for; that there could be no attempt at discrimination between the innocent and the guilty; that it would not have been enough to seize and detain the vessel; but that there was a necessity, present and inevitable, for attacking her in the darkness of the night, while moored to the shore, and while unarmed men were asleep on board, killing some and wounding others, and then drawing her into the current above the cataract, setting her on fire, and, careless to know whether there might not be in her the innocent with the guilty, or the living with the dead, committing her to a fate which fills the imagination with horror. A necessity for all this the government of the United States cannot believe to have existed.

All will see that, if such things be allowed to occur, they must lead to bloody and exasperated war. And when an individual comes into the United States from Canada, and to the very place on which this drama was performed, and there chooses to make public and vainglorious boast of the part he acted in it, it is hardly wonderful that great excitement should be created, and some degree of commotion arise.

This republic does not wish to disturb the tranquillity of the world. Its object is peace, its policy peace. It seeks no aggrandizement by foreign conquest, because it knows that no foreign acquisitions could augment its power and importance so rapidly as they are already advancing by its own natural growth, under the propitious circumstances of its situation. But it cannot admit that its government has not both the will and the power to preserve its own neutrality, and to enforce the observance of its own laws upon its own citizens. It is jealous of its rights, and among others, and most especially, of the right of the absolute immunity of its territory against aggression from abroad; and these rights it is the duty and determination of this government fully and at all times to maintain, while it will at the same time as scrupulously refrain from infringing on the rights of others.

The President instructs the undersigned to say, in conclusion, that he confidently trusts that this and all other questions of difference between the two governments will be treated by both in the full exercise of such a spirit of candor, justice, and mutual respect as shall give assurance of the long continuance of peace between the two countries.

The undersigned avails himself of this opportunity to assure Mr. Fox of his high consideration.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

HENRY S. FOX, ESQ., Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary.

[INCLOSURE.]

Mr. Webster to the Attorney-General of the United States.

Department of State, Washington, March 15, 1841.

SIR, — Alexander McLeod, a Canadian subject of her Britannic Majesty, is now imprisoned at Lockport, in the State of New York, under an indictment for murder alleged to have been committed by him in the attack on, and the destruction of, the steamboat "Caroline," at Schlosser, in that State, on the night of the 29th of December, 1837; and his trial is expected to take place at Lockport on the 22d instant.

You are apprised of the correspondence which took place between Mr. Forsyth, late Secretary of State, and Mr. Fox, her Britannic Majesty's minister here, on this subject, in December last. In his note to Mr. Fox, of the 26th of that month, Mr. Forsyth says: —

"If the destruction of the 'Caroline' was a public act of persons in her Majesty's service, obeying the order of their superior authorities, this fact has not been before communicated to the government of the United States by a person authorized to make the admission; and it will be for the court which has taken cognizance of the offence with which Mr. McLeod is charged to decide upon its validity when legally established before it.

"The President deems this to be a proper occasion to remind the government of her Britannic Majesty that the case of the 'Caroline' has been long since brought to the attention of her Majesty's principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, who, up to this day, has not communicated its decision thereupon. It is hoped that the government of her Majesty will perceive the importance of no longer leaving the government of the United States uninformed of its views and intentions upon a subject which has naturally produced much exasperation, and which has led to such grave consequences."

I have now to inform you that Mr. Fox has addressed a note to this department, under date of the 12th instant, in which, by the immediate instruction and direction of his government, he demands, formally and officially, McLeod's immediate release, on the ground that this transaction, on account of which he has been arrested and is to be put upon his trial, was of a public character, planned and executed by persons duly empowered by her Majesty's colonial authorities to take any steps, and to do any acts, which might be necessary for the defence of her Majesty's territories, and for the protection of her Majesty's subjects; and that, consequently, those subjects of her Majesty who engaged in that transaction were performing an act of public duty, for which they cannot be made, personally and individually, answerable to the laws and tribunals of any foreign country; and that her Majesty's government has further directed Mr. Fox to make known to the government of the United States that her Majesty's government entirely approved of the course pursued by Mr. Fox, and the language adopted by him in the correspondence above mentioned.

There is, therefore, now an authentic declaration on the part of the British government that the attack on the "Caroline" was an act of public force, done by military men under the orders of their superiors, and is recognized as such by the Queen's government. The importance of this declaration is not to be doubted, and the President is of opinion that it calls upon him for the performance of a high duty. That an individual, forming part of a public force, and acting under the authority of his government, is not to be held answerable as a private trespasser or malefactor, is a principle of public law sanctioned by the usages of all civilized nations, and which the government of the United States has no inclination to dispute. This has no connection whatever with the question, whether, in this case, the attack on the "Caroline" was, as the British government think it, a justifiable employment of force for the purpose of defending the British territory from unprovoked attack, or whether it was a most unjustifiable invasion, in time of peace, of the territory of the United States, as this government has regarded it. The two questions are essentially distinct and different; and, while acknowledging that an individual may claim immunity from the consequences of acts done by him, by showing that he acted under national authority, this government is not to be understood as changing the opinions which it has heretofore expressed in regard to the real nature of the transaction which resulted in the destruction of the "Caroline." That subject it is not necessary for any purpose connected with this communication now to discuss. The views of this government in relation to it are known to that of England; and we are expecting the answer of that government to the communication which has been made to it.

All that is intended to be said at present is, that, since the attack on the "Caroline" is avowed as a national act, which may justify reprisals, or even general war, if the government of the United States, in the judgment which it shall form of the transaction and of its own duty, should see fit so to decide, yet that it raises a question entirely public and political, a question between independent nations; and that individuals concerned in it cannot be arrested and tried before the ordinary tribunals, as for the violation of municipal law. If the attack on the "Caroline" was unjustifiable, as this government has asserted, the law which has been violated is the law of nations; and the redress which is to be sought is the redress authorized, in such cases, by the provisions of that code.

You are well aware that the President has no power to arrest the proceeding in the civil and criminal courts of the State of New York. If this indictment were pending in one of the courts of the United States, I am directed to say that the President, upon the receipt of Mr. Fox's last communication, would have immediately directed a nolle prosequi to be entered.

Whether, in this case, the Governor of New York have that power, or, if he have, whether he would feel it his duty to exercise it, are points upon which we are not informed.

It is understood that McLeod is holden also on a civil process, sued out against him by the owner of the "Caroline." We suppose it very clear that the executive of the State cannot interfere with such process; and, indeed, if such process were pending in the courts of the United States, the President could not arrest it. In such and many analogous cases, the party prosecuted or sued must avail himself of his exemption or defence by judicial proceedings, either in the court into which he is called, or in some other court. But whether the process be criminal or civil, the fact of having acted under public authority, and in obedience to the orders of lawful superiors, must be regarded as a valid defence; otherwise individuals would be holden responsible for injuries resulting from the acts of government, and even from the operations of public war.

You will be furnished with a copy of this instruction, for the use of the executive of New York and the Attorney-General of that State. You will carry with you, also, authentic evidence of the recognition by the British government of the destruction of the Caroline as an act of public force, done by national authority.

The President is impressed with the propriety of transferring the trial from the scene of the principal excitement to some other and distant county. You will take care that this be suggested to the prisoner's counsel. The President is gratified to learn that the Governor of New York has already directed that the trial take place before the Chief Justice of the State.

Having consulted with the Governor, you will proceed to Lockport, or wherever else the trial may be holden, and furnish the prisoner's counsel with the evidence of which you will be in possession material to his defence. You will see that he have skilful and eminent counsel, if such be not already retained; and although you are not desired to act as counsel yourself, you will cause it to be signified to him, and to the gentleman who may conduct his defence, that it is the wish of this government that, in case his defence be overruled by the court in which he shall be tried, proper steps be taken immediately for removing the cause, by writ of error, to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The President hopes that you will use such despatch as to make your arrival at the place of trial sure before the trial comes on; and he trusts you will keep him informed of whatever occurs by means of a correspondence through this department.

I have the honor to be, Mr. Attorney-General, your obedient servant.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

HON. JOHN J. CRITTENDEN, Attorney-General of the United States.

It is known that McLeod was brought before the Supreme Court of the State of New York by writ of habeas corpus, and his discharge from imprisonment insisted on, upon the ground that, if he had had any concern in the destruction of the "Caroline," he had acted therein as a soldier, under the order of his superiors, in a military expedition planned and authorized by the British colonial government of Canada, and afterward avowed and sanctioned by the Queen's government in England.

The court on that occasion, however, took a different view of the law from that which had been expressed by Mr. Webster in his letters to Mr. Fox and Mr Crittenden. The case is reported in Wendell's Reports, Vol. XXV., page 483.

This decision does not appear to have given satisfaction either to the profession or to the public men of the country. It was ably reviewed in a pamphlet by the late D. B. Talmadge, formerly one of the judges of the Superior Court of the City of New York. That Review will also be found in Wendell's Reports, Vol. XXVI., in the Appendix.

Chancellor Kent, Chief Justice Spencer, and other eminent jurists, have expressed their approbation of Mr. Talmadge's "Review," and their entire concurrence in his judgment upon the legal question.

It was justly apprehended, that, if the tribunals of individual States possessed the power of acting on questions of this kind, without revision or control, dangerous consequences might arise to the peace of the country. How could the government of the United States be responsible for the fulfilment of its obligations to other governments, their citizens and subjects, if, in cases of so much importance and delicacy as McLeod's, a State court might take final judgment into its own hands? An ultimate reference, in some way, to the judicial authorities of the United States, of questions connected with the foreign relations of the country, and which may involve its peace, would seem to be quite essential. Under the influence of such a conviction, and with this decision of the Supreme Court of New York before it, Congress, on the 29th of August, 1842, passed the following act: —

"An Act to provide further remedial Justice in the Courts of the United States.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That either of the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, or judge of any District Court of the United States in which a prisoner is confined, in addition to the authority already conferred by law, shall have power to grant writs of habeas corpus in all cases of any prisoner or prisoners in jail or confinement, where he, she, or they, being subjects or citizens of a foreign state, and domiciled therein, shall be committed or confined, or in custody, under or by any authority or law, or process founded thereon, of the United States, or of any one of them, for or on account of any act done or omitted under any alleged right, title, authority, privilege, protection, or exemption, set up or claimed under the commission, or order, or sanction of any foreign state or sovereignty, the validity and effect whereof depend upon the law of nations, or under color thereof. And upon the return of the said writ, and due proof of the service of notice of the said proceeding to the Attorney-General, or other officer prosecuting the pleas of the State under whose authority the petitioner has been arrested, committed, or is held in custody, to be prescribed by the said justice or judge at the time of granting said writ, the said justice or judge shall proceed to hear the said cause; and if, upon hearing the same, it shall appear that the prisoner or prisoners is or are entitled to be discharged from such confinement, commitment, custody, or arrest, for or by reason of such alleged right, title, authority, privileges, protection, or exemption so set up and claimed, and the law of nations applicable thereto, and that the same exists in fact, and has been duly proved to the said justice or judge, then it shall be the duty of the said justice or judge forthwith to discharge such prisoner or prisoners accordingly. And if it shall appear to the said justice or judge that such judgment or discharge ought not to be rendered, then the said prisoner or prisoners shall be forthwith remanded: Provided always, That from any decision of such justice or judge an appeal may be taken to the Circuit Court of the United States for the district in which the said cause is heard; and from the judgment of the said Circuit Court to the Supreme Court of the United States, on such terms and under such regulations and orders, as well for the custody and appearance of the prisoner or prisoners as for sending up to the appellate tribunal a transcript of the petition, writ of habeas corpus returned thereto, and other proceedings, as the judge hearing the said cause may prescribe; and pending such proceedings or appeal, and until final judgment be rendered therein, and after final judgment of discharge in the same, any proceeding against said prisoner or prisoners in any State court, or by or under the authority of any State, for any matter or thing so heard and determined, or in process of being heard and determined, under and by virtue of such writ of habeas corpus, shall be deemed null and void."

The authorities of public law would appear to be under no doubt of McLeod's right to be exempted from personal responsibility for any act he might have committed as a member of a military force acting under the authority of its government.

The following citations may be sufficient to establish this, and to maintain the principles stated in Mr. Webster's letter to the Attorney-General.

"On all occasions susceptible of doubt, the whole nation, the individuals, and especially the military, are to submit their judgment to those who hold the reins of government, to the sovereign. This they are bound to do, by the essential principles of political society and of government. What would be the consequence if, at every step of the sovereign, the subjects were at liberty to weigh the justice of his reasons, and refuse to march to a war which might to them appear unjust? It often happens that prudence will not permit a sovereign to disclose all his reasons. It is the duty of subjects to suppose them just and wise, until clear and absolute evidence tells them the contrary. When, therefore, under the impression of such an idea, they have lent their assistance in a war which is afterward found to be unjust, the sovereign alone is guilty; he alone is bound to repair the injuries. The subjects, and in particular the military, are innocent; they have acted only from a necessary obedience." *

"Indeed, in solemn war, the individual members of a nation which has declared war are not punishable by the adverse nation for what they do, because the guilt of their actions is chargeable upon the nation which directs and authorizes them to act. But even this effect may be produced, though not in the respect of all the members of the nation, yet in respect of some of them, without a declaration of war. For, in the less solemn kinds of war, what the members do who act under the particular direction and authority of their nation is by the law of nations no personal crime in them; they cannot, therefore, be punished, consistently with this law, for any act in which it considers them only as the instruments, and the nation as the agent." †

"A mere presumption of the will of the sovereign would not be sufficient to excuse a governor or any other officer who should undertake a war, except in case of necessity, without either a general or particular order. For it is not sufficient to know what part the sovereign would probably act, if he were consulted in such a particular posture of affairs; but it should rather be considered, in general, what it is probable a prince would desire should be done, without consulting him, when the matter will bear no delay and the affair is dubious. Now, certainly, sovereigns will never consent that their ministers should, whenever they think proper, undertake without their order a thing of such importance as an offensive war, which is the proper subject of the present inquiry.

"In these circumstances, whatever part the sovereign would have thought proper to act if he had been consulted, and whatever success the war undertaken without his order may have had, it is left to the sovereign whether he will ratify or condemn the act of his ministers. If he ratify it, this approbation renders the war solemn, by reflecting back, as it were, an authority upon it; so that it obliges the whole commonwealth." ‡

* Vattel, Book III. Ch. II. § 187.
† Rutherford, Book II. Ch. IX. § 18.
‡ Burlamaqui, Part IV. Ch. III. §§ 18, 19.

TREATY OF WASHINGTON OF 1842.

THE NORTHEASTERN BOUNDARY.

A LEADING object sought to be accomplished, and which was accomplished, by the treaty of Washington, was the settlement of the controversy between the United States and England relative to the northern and northeastern boundary of the United States.

The history of this controversy, from the treaty of peace in 1783, to its final adjustment in 1842, is given in Mr. Webster's speech in the Senate, of the 6th and 7th of April, 1846.* In the summer of 1841, Mr. Webster signified to Mr. Fox, the British Minister at Washington, that, having received the President's authority for so doing, he was then willing to make an attempt to settle the boundary dispute, by agreeing on a conventional line, or line by compromise. In September of that year the ministry of Sir Robert Peel came into power; and in December following, Lord Aberdeen, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, informed Mr. Edward Everett, at that time Minister of the United States at the Court of London, that the Queen's government had determined to send Lord Ashburton as a special minister to the United States, with full powers to settle the boundary and all other questions in controversy between the two governments. This information was immediately communicated by Mr. Everett to Mr. Webster, in a letter dated the 31st of December, 1841, to which Mr. Webster replied as follows: —

Mr. Webster to Mr. Everett.

[EXTRACT.]

Department of State, Washington, January 29, 1842.

By the "Britannia," arrived at Boston, I have received your despatch of the 28th of December (No. 4), and your other despatch of the 31st of the same month (No. 5), with a postscript of the 3d of January.

* Vol. V. p. 78.

The necessity of returning an early answer to these communications (as the "Britannia" is expected to leave Boston on the 1st of February) obliges me to postpone a reply to those parts of them which are not of considerable and immediate importance.

. . . . .

The President has read Lord Aberdeen's note to you of the 20th of December, in reply to Mr. Stevenson's note to Lord Palmerston of the 21st of October, and thinks you were quite right in acknowledging the dispassionate tone of that paper. It is only by the exercise of calm reason, that truth can be arrived at in questions of a complicated nature; and between states, each of which understands and respects the intelligence and the power of the other, there ought to be no unwillingness to follow its guidance. At the present day, no state is so high as that the principles of its intercourse with other nations are above question, or its conduct above scrutiny. On the contrary, the whole civilized world, now vastly better informed on such subjects than in former ages, and alive and sensible to the principles adopted, and the purposes avowed, by the leading states, necessarily constitutes a tribunal august in character and formidable in its decisions. And it is before this tribunal, and upon the rules of natural justice, moral propriety, the usages of modern times, and the prescriptions of public law, that governments, which respect themselves and respect their neighbors, must be prepared to discuss with candor and with dignity any topics which may have caused differences to spring up between them.

Your despatch of the 31st of December announces the important intelligence of an intention of despatching a special minister from England to the United States, with full powers to settle every matter in dispute between the two governments; and the President directs me to say, that he regards this proceeding as originating in an entirely amicable spirit, and that it will be met, on his part, with perfectly corresponding sentiments. The high character of Lord Ashburton is well known to this government; and it is not doubted that he will enter on the duties assigned to him, not only with the advantages of much knowledge and experience in public affairs, but with a true desire to signalize his mission by assisting to place the peace of the two countries on a permanent basis. He will be received with the respect due to his own character, the character of the government which sends him, and the high importance to both countries of the subjects intrusted to his negotiation.

The President approves your conduct in not pursuing in England the discussion of questions which are now to become the subjects of negotiation here.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

Lord Ashburton arrived in Washington on the 4th of April, 1842; and shortly after, Mr. Webster addressed the following letter to the Governor of the State of Maine: —

Mr. Webster to Governor Fairfield.

Department of State, Washington, April 11, 1842.

Your Excellency is aware that, previous to March, 1841, a negotiation had been going on for some time between the Secretary of State of the United States, under the direction of the President, and the British minister accredited to this government, having for its object the creation of a joint commission for settling the controversy respecting the northeastern boundary of the United States, with a provision for an ultimate reference to arbitrators, to be appointed by some one of the sovereigns of Europe, in case an arbitration should become necessary. On the leading features of a convention for this purpose the two governments had become agreed; but on several matters of detail the parties differed, and appear to have been interchanging their respective views and opinions, projects and counter-projects, without coming to any final arrangement, down to August, 1840. Various causes, not now necessary to be explained, arrested the progress of the negotiation at that time, and no considerable advance has since been made in it.

It seems to have been understood on both sides, that, one arbitration having failed, it was the duty of the two parties to proceed to institute another, according to the spirit of the treaty of Ghent and other treaties; and the President has felt it to be his duty, unless some new course should be proposed, to cause the negotiation to be resumed, and pressed to its conclusion. But I have now to inform your Excellency that Lord Ashburton, a minister plenipotentiary and special, has arrived at the seat of the government of the United States, charged with full powers from his sovereign to negotiate and settle the different matters in discussion between the two governments. I have further to state to you, that he has officially announced to this department, that, in regard to the boundary question, he has authority to treat for a conventional line, or line by agreement, on such terms and conditions, and with such mutual considerations and equivalents, as may be thought just and equitable, and that he is ready to enter upon a negotiation for such conventional line so soon as this government shall say it is authorized and ready, on its part, to commence such negotiation.

Under these circumstances, the President has felt it to be his duty to call the serious attention of the governments of Maine and Massachusetts to the subject, and to submit to those governments the propriety of their coöperation, to a certain extent, and in a certain form, in an endeavor to terminate a controversy already of so long duration, and which seems very likely to be still considerably further protracted before the desired end of a final adjustment shall be attained, unless a shorter course of arriving at that end be adopted than such as has heretofore been pursued, and as the two governments are still pursuing.

Yet, without the concurrence of the two States whose rights are more immediately concerned, both having an interest in the soil, and one of them in the jurisdiction and government, the duty of this government will be to adopt no new course, but, in compliance with treaty stipulations, and in furtherance of what has already been done, to hasten the pending negotiations as fast as possible, in the course hitherto adopted.

But the President thinks it a highly desirable object to prevent the delays necessarily incident to any settlement of the question by these means. Such delays are great and unavoidable. It has been found that an exploration and examination of the several lines constitute a work of three years. The existing commission for making such exploration, under the authority of the United States, has been occupied two summers, and a very considerable portion of the work remains still to be done. If a joint commission should be appointed, and should go through the same work, and the commissioners should disagree, as is very possible, and an arbitration on that account become indispensable, the arbitrators might find it necessary to make an exploration and survey themselves, or cause the same to be done by others, of their own appointment. If to these causes, operating to postpone the final decision, be added the time necessary to appoint arbitrators, and for their preparation to leave Europe for the service, and the various retarding incidents always attending such operations, seven or eight years constitute, perhaps, the shortest period within which we can look for a final result. In the mean time, great expenses have been incurred, and further expenses cannot be avoided. It is well known that the controversy has brought heavy charges upon Maine herself, to the remuneration or proper settlement of which she cannot be expected to be indifferent. The exploration by the government of the United States has already cost a hundred thousand dollars, and the charge of another summer's work is in prospect. These facts may be sufficient to enable us to form a probable estimate of the whole expense likely to be incurred before the controversy can be settled by arbitration; and our experience admonishes us that even another arbitration might possibly fail.

The opinion of this government upon the justice and validity of the American claim has been expressed at so many times, and in so many forms, that a repetition of that opinion is not necessary. But the subject is a subject in dispute. The government has agreed to make it matter of reference and arbitration; and it must fulfil that agreement, unless another mode for settling the controversy should be resorted to, with the hope of producing a speedier decision. The President proposes, then, that the governments of Maine and Massachusetts should severally appoint a commissioner or commissioners, empowered to confer with the authorities of this government upon a conventional line, or line by agreement, with its terms, conditions, considerations, and equivalents; with an understanding, that no such line will be agreed upon without the assent of such commissioners.

This mode of proceeding, or some other which shall express assent beforehand, seems indispensable, if any negotiation for a conventional line is to be attempted; since, if happily a treaty should be the result of the negotiation, it can only be submitted to the Senate of the United States for ratification.

It is a subject of deep and sincere regret to the President, that the British plenipotentiary did not arrive in the country and make known his powers in time to have made this communication before the annual session of the legislatures of the two States had been brought to a close. He perceives and laments the inconvenience which may be experienced from reassembling those legislatures. But the British mission is a special one; it does not supersede the resident mission of the British government at Washington, and its stay in the United States is not expected to be long. In addition to these considerations, it is to be suggested that more than four months of the session of Congress have already passed, and it is highly desirable, if any treaty for a conventional line should be agreed on, that it should be concluded before the session shall terminate, not only because of the necessity of the ratification of the Senate, but also because it is not impossible that measures may be thought advisable, or become important, which can only be accomplished by the authority of both houses.

These considerations, in addition to the importance of the subject, and a firm conviction in the mind of the President that the interests of both countries, as well as the interests of the two States more immediately concerned, require a prompt effort to bring this dispute to an end, constrain him to express an earnest hope that your Excellency will convene the legislature of Maine, and submit the subject to its grave and candid deliberations.

I am, &c.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

HIS EXCELLENCY JOHN FAIRFIELD, Governor of Maine.

In pursuance of this invitation and a similar one addressed to the Governor of Massachusetts, commissioners on the part of those two States repaired to Washington, where they arrived in the early part of June.

After some preliminary correspondence, the following letter was addressed by Mr. Webster to the Maine commissioners: —

Mr. Webster to the Maine Commissioners.

Department of State, Washington, July 15, 1842.

GENTLEMEN, — You have had an opportunity of reading Lord Ashburton's note to me of the 11th of July. Since that date I have had full and frequent conferences with him respecting the eastern boundary, and believe I understand what is practicable to be done on that subject, so far as he is concerned. In these conferences he has made no positive or binding proposition, thinking, perhaps, it would be more desirable, under present circumstances, that such proposition should proceed from the side of the United States. I have reason to believe, however, that he would agree to a line of boundary between the United States and the British Provinces of Canada and New Brunswick, such as is described in a paper accompanying this (marked B), and identified by my signature.

In establishing the line between the monument and the St. John, it is thought necessary to adhere to that run and marked by the surveyors of the two governments in 1817 and 1818. There is no doubt that the line recently run by Major Graham is more entirely accurate; but, being an ex parte line, there would be objections to agreeing to it without examination, and thus another survey would become necessary. Grants and settlements, also, have been made in conformity with the former line, and its errors are so inconsiderable that it is not thought that their correction is a sufficient object to disturb these settlements. Similar considerations have had great weight in adjusting the line in other parts of it.

The territory in dispute between the two countries contains twelve thousand and twenty-seven square miles, equal to seven million six hundred ninety-seven thousand two hundred eighty acres.

By the line prescribed in the accompanying paper, there will be assigned to the United States seven thousand and fifteen square miles, equal to four million four hundred eighty-nine thousand six hundred acres; and to England five thousand and twelve square miles, equal to three million two hundred seven thousand six hundred eighty acres.

By the award of the King of the Netherlands, there was assigned to the United States seven thousand nine hundred eight square miles, or five million sixty-one thousand one hundred twenty acres; to England, four thousand one hundred nineteen square miles, or two million six hundred thirty-six thousand one hundred sixty acres.

The territory proposed to be relinquished to England south of the line of the King of the Netherlands is, as you will see, the mountain range from the upper part of the St. Francis River to the meeting of the two contested lines of boundary, at the Metjarmette Portage, in the highlands, near the source of the St. John. This mountain tract contains eight hundred ninety-three square miles, equal to five hundred seventy-one thousand five hundred twenty acres. It is supposed to be of no value for cultivation or settlement. On this point you will see herewith a letter from Captain Talcott, who has been occupied two summers in exploring the line of the highlands, and is intimately acquainted with the territory. The line leaves to the United States, between the base of the hills and the left bank of the St. John, and lying along upon the river, a territory of six hundred fifty-seven thousand two hundred eighty acres, embracing, without doubt, all the valuable land south of the St. Francis and west of the St. John. Of the general division of the territory, it is believed it may be safely said, that, while the portion remaining with the United States is, in quantity, seven twelfths, in value it is at least four fifths of the whole.

Nor is it supposed that the possession of the mountain region is of any importance in connection with the defence of the country, or any military operations. It lies below all the accustomed practicable passages for troops into and out of Lower Canada; that is to say, the Chaudière, Lake Champlain and the Richelieu, and the St. Lawrence. If an army, with its materiel, could possibly pass into Canada over these mountains, it would only find itself on the banks of the St. Lawrence below Quebec; and, on the other hand, it is not conceivable that an invading enemy from Lower Canada would attempt a passage in this direction, leaving the Chaudière on the one hand and the route by the Madawaska on the other.

If this line should be agreed to on the part of the United States, I suppose that the British minister would, as an equivalent, stipulate, first, for the use of the River St. John, for the conveyance of the timber growing on any of its branches, to tide-water, free from all discriminating tolls, impositions, or inabilities of any kind, the timber enjoying all the privileges of British colonial timber. All opinions concur that this privilege of navigation must greatly enhance the value of the territory and the timber growing thereon, and prove exceedingly useful to the people of Maine. Second, that Rouse's Point, in Lake Champlain, and the lands heretofore supposed to be within the limits of New Hampshire, Vermont, and New York, but which a correct ascertainment of the forty-fifth parallel of latitude shows to be in Canada, should be surrendered to the United States.

It is probable, also, that the disputed line of boundary in Lake Superior might be so adjusted as to leave a disputed island within the United States.

These cessions on the part of England would enure partly to the benefit of the States of New Hampshire, Vermont, and New York, but principally to the United States. The consideration on the part of England, for making them, would be the manner agreed upon for adjusting the eastern boundary. The price of the cession, therefore, whatever it might be, would in fairness belong to the two States interested in the manner of that adjustment.

Under the influence of these considerations, I am authorized to say, that, if the commissioners of the two States assent to the line as described in the accompanying paper, the United States will undertake to pay to these States the sum of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, to be divided between them in equal moieties; and also to undertake for the settlement and payment of the expenses incurred by those States for the maintenance of the civil posse, and also for a survey which it was found necessary to make.

The line suggested, with the compensations and equivalents which have been stated, is now submitted for your consideration. That it is all which might have been hoped for, looking to the strength of the American claim, can hardly be said. But, as the settlement of a controversy of such duration is a matter of high importance, as equivalents of undoubted value are offered, as longer postponement and delay would lead to further inconvenience, and to the incurring of further expenses, and as no better occasion, nor, perhaps, any other occasion, for settling the boundary by agreement, and on the principle of equivalents, is ever likely to present itself, the government of the United States hopes that the commissioners of the two States will find it to be consistent with their duty to assent to the line proposed, and to the terms and conditions attending the proposition.

The President has felt the deepest anxiety for an amicable settlement of the question, in a manner honorable to the country, and such as should preserve the rights and interests of the States concerned. From the moment of the announcement of Lord Ashburton's mission, he has sedulously endeavored to pursue a course the most respectful toward the States, and the most useful to their interests, as well as the most becoming to the character and dignity of the government. He will be happy if the result shall be such as shall satisfy Maine and Massachusetts, as well as the rest of the country. With these sentiments on the part of the President, and with the conviction that no more advantageous arrangement can be made, the subject is now referred to the grave deliberation of the commissioners.

I have the honor to be, with great respect,

Your obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

THE HON. THE COMMISSIONERS OF MAINE.

Lord Ashburton to Mr. Webster.

Washington, July 16, 1842.

SIR, — There is a further question of disputed boundary between Great Britain and the United States, called the northwest boundary, about which we have had some conferences; and I now proceed to state the terms which I am ready to agree to for the settlement of this difference. As the principal object in dispute is to be given up by Great Britain, I trust, Sir, that you will here again recognize the spirit of friendly conciliation which has guided my government in disposing of these questions.

I have already sufficiently discussed with you the boundaries between her Majesty's Provinces and the United States, from the monument at the head of the River St. Croix to the monument on the River St. Lawrence, near the village of St. Regis.

The commissioners under the sixth article of the treaty of Ghent succeeded in continuing this boundary from St. Regis through the St. Lawrence and the great northern lakes, up to a point in the channel between Lake Huron and Lake Superior.

A further continuation of this boundary, from this point through Lake Superior to the Lake of the Woods, was confided to the same commissioners under the seventh article of the treaty of Ghent, but they were, unfortunately, unable to agree, and have consequently left this portion of the boundary undetermined. Its final settlement has been much desired by both governments, and urgently pressed by communications from Mr. Secretary Forsyth to Mr. Fox, in 1839 and 1840.

What I have now to propose cannot, I feel assured, be otherwise than satisfactory for this purpose.

The commissioners who failed in their endeavors to make this settlement differed on two points: —

First. As to the appropriation of an island called St. George's Island, lying in the water communication between Lake Huron and Lake Superior; and, Secondly. As to the boundary through the water communications from Lake Superior to the Lake of the Woods.

The first point I am ready to give up to you, and you are no doubt aware that it is the only object of any real value in this controversy. The island of St. George is reported to contain twenty-five thousand nine hundred and twenty acres of very fertile land; but, the other things connected with these boundaries being satisfactorily arranged, a line shall be drawn so as to throw this island within the limits of the United States.

In considering the second point, it really appears of little importance to either party how the line be determined through the wild country between Lake Superior and the Lake of the Woods, but it is important that some line should be fixed and known.

The American commissioner asked for the line from Lake Superior up the River Kamanastiguia to the lake called Dog Lake, which he supposed to be the same as that called Long Lake in the treaties, thence through Sturgeon Lake to the Lac la Pluie, to that point where the two lines assumed by the commissioners again meet.

The British commissioner, on the other hand, contended for a line from the southwestern extremity, at a point called Le Fond du Lac, to the middle of the mouth of the estuary, or lake, of St. Louis River, thence up that river through Vermilion River to Lac la Pluie.

Attempts were made to compromise these differences, but they failed, apparently more from neither party being willing to give up the island of St. George, than from much importance being attached to any other part of the case.

Upon the line from Lake Superior to the Lake of the Woods, both commissioners agreed to abandon their respective claims, and to adopt a middle course, for which the American commissioner admitted that there was some ground of preference. This was from Pigeon River, a point between Kamanastiguia and Le Fond du Lac; and although there were differences as to the precise point near the mouth of Pigeon River where the line should begin, neither party seemed to have attached much importance to this part of the subject.

I would propose that the line be taken from a point about six miles south of Pigeon River, where the Grand Portage commences on the lake, and continued along the line of said portage, alternately by land and water, to Lac la Pluie, the existing route by land and by water remaining common to both parties. This line has the advantage of being known, and attended with no doubt or uncertainty in running it.

In making the important concession on this boundary of the island of St. George, I must attach a condition to it of accommodation, which experience has proved to be necessary in the navigation of the great waters which bound the two countries; an accommodation which can, I apprehend, be no possible inconvenience to either. This was asked by the British commissioner in the course of the attempts of compromise above alluded to; but nothing was done, because he was not then prepared, as I am now, to yield the property and sovereignty of St. George's Island.

The first of these two cases is at the head of Lake St. Clair, where the river of that name empties into it from Lake Huron. It is represented that the channel bordering the United States coast in this part is not only the best for navigation, but, with some winds, is the only serviceable passage. I do not know that, under such circumstances, the passage of a British vessel would be refused; but, on a final settlement of boundaries, it is desirable to stipulate for what the commissioners would probably have settled, had the facts been known to them.

The other case, of nearly the same description, occurs on the St. Lawrence, some miles above the boundary at St. Regis. In distributing the islands of the river by the commissioners, Barnhart's Island and the Long Sault Islands were assigned to America. This part of the river has very formidable rapids, and the only safe passage is on the southern or American side, between those islands and the mainland. We want a clause in our present treaty to say that, for a short distance, namely, from the upper end of Upper Long Sault Island to the lower end of Barnhart's Island, the several channels of the river shall be used in common by the boatmen of the two countries.

I am not aware that these very reasonable demands are likely to meet with any objection, especially where the United States will have surrendered to them all that is essential in the boundary I have now to propose to you.

I beg you will be assured, Sir, of my unfeigned and distinguished consideration.

ASHBURTON.

HON. DANIEL WEBSTER, &c., &c., &c.

Mr. Webster to Lord Ashburton.

Department of State, Washington, July 27, 1842.

MY LORD, — I have now to propose to your Lordship a line of division embracing the disputed portions of the boundary between the United States and the British Provinces of New Brunswick and the Canadas, with its considerations and equivalents, such as conforms, I believe, in substance, to the result of the many conferences and discussions which have taken place between us.

The acknowledged territories of the United States and England join upon each other from the Atlantic Ocean to the eastern foot of the Rocky Mountains, a distance of more than three thousand miles. From the ocean to the source of the St. Croix the line of division has been ascertained and fixed by agreement; from the source of the St. Croix to a point near St. Regis, on the River St. Lawrence, it may be considered as unsettled or controverted; from this last-mentioned point, along the St. Lawrence and through the lakes, it is settled, until it reaches the water communication between Lake Huron and Lake Superior. At this point the commissioners, under the seventh article of the treaty of Ghent, found a subject of disagreement which they could not overcome, in deciding up which branch or channel the line should proceed, till it should reach a point in the middle of St. Mary's River, about one mile above St. George's or Sugar Island.

From the middle of the water communication between the two lakes, at the point last mentioned, the commissioners extended the line through the remaining part of that water communication, and across Lake Superior, to a point north of Ile Royale; but they could not agree in what direction the line should run from this last-mentioned point, nor where it should leave Lake Superior, nor how it should be extended to the Rainy Lake, or Lac la Pluie. From this last-mentioned lake they agreed on the line to the northwesternmost point of the Lake of the Woods, which they found to be in latitude forty-nine degrees twenty-three minutes fifty-five seconds. The line extends, according to existing treaties, due south from this point to the forty-ninth parallel of north latitude, and by that parallel to the Rocky Mountains.

Not being able to agree upon the whole line, the commissioners, under the seventh article, did not make any joint report to their respective governments. So far as they agreed on any part of the line, that part has been considered settled; but it may be well to give validity to these portions of the line by a treaty.

To complete the boundary line, therefore, and to remove all doubts and disputes, it is necessary for the two governments to come to an agreement on three points:—

1st. What shall be the line on the northeastern and northern limits of the United States, from the St. Croix to the St. Lawrence? This is by far the most important and difficult of the subjects, and involves the principal questions of equivalents and compensations.

2d. What shall be the course of the boundary from the point where the commissioners, under the sixth article of the treaty of Ghent, terminated their labors, to wit, a point in the Neebish

Channel, near Muddy Lake, in the water communication between Lake Huron and Lake Superior, to a point in the middle of St. Mary's River, one mile above Sugar Island? This question is important, as it involves the ownership of that island.

3d. What shall be the line from the point north of Ile Royale, in Lake Superior, to which the commissioners of the two governments arrived by agreement, to the Rainy Lake? And also to confirm those parts of the line to which the said commissioners agreed.

Besides agreeing upon the line of division through which these controverted portions of the boundary pass, you have suggested also, as the proposed settlement proceeds upon the ground of compromise and equivalents, that boats belonging to her Majesty's subjects may pass the falls of the Long Sault, in the St. Lawrence, on either side of the Long Sault Islands, and that the passages between the islands lying at or near the junction of the River St. Clair with the lake of that name shall be severally free and open to the vessels of both countries. There appears no reasonable objection to what is requested in these particulars; and on the part of the United States it is desirable that their vessels, in proceeding from Lake Erie into the Detroit River, should have the privilege of passing between Bois Blanc, an island belonging to England, and the Canadian shore, the deeper and better channel being on that side.

The line, then, now proposed to be agreed to may be thus described:—

Beginning at the monument at the source of the River St. Croix, as designated and agreed to by the commissioners under the fifth article of the treaty of 1791, between the governments of the United States and Great Britain; thence north, following the exploring line run and marked by the surveyors of the two governments in the years 1817 and 1818, under the fifth article of the treaty of Ghent, to its intersection with the River St. John, and to the middle of the channel thereof; thence up the middle of the main channel of the said River St. John to the mouth of the River St. Francis; thence up the middle of the channel of the said River St. Francis, and of the lakes through which it flows, to the outlet of the Lake Pohenagamook; thence southwesterly, in a straight line, to a point on the northwest branch of the River St. John, which point shall be ten miles distant from the main branch of the St. John, in a straight line, and in the nearest direction; but if the said point shall be found to be less than seven miles from the nearest point of the summit or crest of the highlands that divide those rivers which empty themselves into the River St. Lawrence from those which fall into the River St. John, then the said point shall be made to recede down the said river to a point seven miles, in a straight line, from the said summit or crest; thence, in a straight line, in a course about south eight degrees west, to the point where the parallel of latitude of forty-six degrees twenty-five minutes north intersects the southwest branch of the St. John; thence southerly, by the said branch, to the source thereof in the highlands at the Metjarnette Portage; thence down along the said highlands which divide the waters which empty themselves into the River St. Lawrence from those which fall into the Atlantic Ocean, to the head of Hall's Stream; thence down the middle of said stream, till the line thus run intersects the old line of boundary surveyed and marked by Valentine and Collins, previously to the year 1774, as the forty-fifth degree of north latitude, and which has been known and understood to be the line of actual division between the States of New York and Vermont on one side, and the British Province of Canada on the other; and from said point of intersection, west, along the said dividing line, as heretofore known and understood, to the Iroquois or St. Lawrence River; and from the place where the joint commissioners terminated their labors under the sixth article of the treaty of Ghent, to wit, at a point in the Neebish Channel, near Muddy Lake, the line shall run into and along the ship-channel between St. Joseph's and St. Tammany Islands, to the division of the channel at or near the head of St. Joseph's island; thence, turning eastwardly and northwardly, around the lower end of St. George's or Sugar Island, and following the middle of the channel which divides St. George's from St. Joseph's Island; thence up the east Neebish Channel nearest to St. George's Island, through the middle of Lake George; thence west of Jonas Island, into St. Mary's River, to a point in the middle of that river about one mile above St. George's or Sugar Island, so as to appropriate and assign the said island to the United States; thence, adopting the line traced on the maps by the commissioners, through the River St. Mary and Lake Superior, to a point north of Ile Royale, in said lake, one hundred yards to the north and east of Ile Chapeau, which last-mentioned island lies near the northeastern point of Ile Royale, where the line marked by the commissioners terminates; and from the last-mentioned point, southwesterly, through the middle of the sound, between Ile Royale and the northwestern mainland, to the mouth of Pigeon River, and up the said river to and through the North and South Fowl Lakes, to the lakes of the height of land between Lake Superior and the Lake of the Woods; thence along the water communication to Lake Saisaginaga, and through that lake; thence to and through Cypress Lake, Lac du Bois Blanc, Lac la Croix, Little Vermilion Lake, and Lake Namecan, and through the several smaller lakes, straits, or streams connecting the lakes here mentioned, to that point in Lac la Pluie, or Rainy Lake, at the Chaudière Falls, from which the commissioners traced the line to the most northwestern point of the Lake of the Woods; thence along the said line, to the said most northwestern point, being in latitude forty-nine degrees twenty-three minutes fifty-five seconds north, and in longitude ninety-five degrees fourteen minutes thirty-eight seconds west from the observatory at Greenwich; thence, according to existing treaties, the line extends due south to its intersection with the forty-ninth parallel of north latitude, and along that parallel to the Rocky Mountains. It being understood that all the water communications, and all the usual portages, along the line from Lake Superior to the Lake of the Woods, and also Grand Portage from the shore of Lake Superior to the Pigeon River, as now actually used, shall be free and open to the use of the subjects and citizens of both countries.

It is desirable to follow the description and the exact line of the original treaty as far as practicable. There is reason to think that "Long Lake," mentioned in the treaty of 1783, meant merely the estuary of the Pigeon River, as no lake called "Long Lake," or any other water strictly conforming to the idea of a lake, is found in that quarter. This opinion is strengthened by the fact, that the words of the treaty would seem to imply that the water intended as "Long Lake" was immediately joining Lake Superior. In one respect, an exact compliance with the words of the treaty is not practicable.

There is no continuous water communication between Lake Superior and the Lake of the Woods, as the Lake of the Woods is known to discharge its waters, through the Red River of the North, into Hudson's Bay. The dividing height or ridge between the eastern sources of the tributaries of the Lake of the Woods and the western sources of Pigeon River appears, by authentic maps, to be distant about forty miles from the mouth of Pigeon River, on the shore of Lake Superior.

It is not improbable that, in the imperfection of knowledge which then existed of those remote countries, and perhaps misled by Mitchell's map, the negotiators of the treaty of 1783 supposed the Lake of the Woods to discharge its waters into Lake Superior. The broken and difficult nature of the water communication from Lake Superior to the Lake of the Woods renders numerous portages necessary; and it is right that these water communications and these portages should make a common highway, where necessary, for the use of the subjects and citizens of both governments.

When the proposed line shall be properly described in the treaty, the grant by England of the right to use the waters of the River St. John for the purpose of transporting to the mouth of that river all the timber and agricultural products raised in Maine on the waters of the St. John or any of its tributaries, without subjection to any discriminating toll, duty, or disability, is to be inserted. Provision should also be made for quieting and confirming the titles of all persons having claims to lands on either side of the line, whether such titles be perfect or inchoate only, and to the same extent in which they would have been confirmed by their respective governments had no change taken place. What has been agreed to, also, in respect to the common use of certain passages in the rivers and lakes, as already stated, must be made matter of regular stipulation.

Your Lordship is also informed, by the correspondence which formerly took place between the two governments, that there is a fund arising from the sale of timber, concerning which fund an understanding was had some years ago. It will be expedient to provide, by the treaty, that this arrangement shall be carried into effect.

A proper article will be necessary to provide for the creation of a commission to run and mark some parts of the line between Maine and the British Provinces.

These several objects appear to me to embrace all respecting the boundary line, and its equivalents, which the treaty needs to contain as matters of stipulation between the United States and England.

I have the honor to be, with high consideration, your Lordship's most obedient servant.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

LORD ASHBURTON, &c., &c., &c.

Lord Ashburton to Mr. Webster.

Washington, July 29, 1842.

SIR, — I have attentively considered the statements contained in the letter you did me the honor of addressing me on the 27th of this month, of the terms agreed to for the settlement of boundaries between her Majesty's Provinces and the United States, being the final result of the many conferences we have had on this subject. This settlement appears substantially correct in all its parts, and we may now proceed, without further delay, to draw up the treaty. Several of the articles for this purpose are already prepared and agreed, and our most convenient course will be to take and consider them singly. I would beg leave to recommend, that, as we have excellent charts of the country through which the boundary which failed of being settled by the commissioners under the seventh article of the treaty of Ghent is partially marked, it would be advisable to make good the delineation on those charts, which would spare to both parties the unnecessary expense of new commissioners and a new survey. In this case, the only commission required would be to run the line on the boundary of Maine.

The stipulations for the greater facility of the navigation of the River St. Lawrence, and of two passages between the Upper Lakes, appear evidently desirable for general accommodation; and I cannot refuse the reciprocal claim made by you to render common the passage from Lake Erie into the Detroit River. This must be done by declaring the several passages in those parts free to both parties.

I should remark, also, that the free use of the navigation of the Long Sault passage on the St. Lawrence must be extended to below Barnhart's Island, for the purpose of clearing those rapids.

I beg leave to repeat to you, Sir, the assurances of my most distinguished consideration.

ASHBURTON.

HON. DANIEL WEBSTER, &c., &c., &c.

Lord Ashburton to Mr. Webster.

Washington, August 9, 1842.

SIR, — It appears desirable that some explanation between us should be recorded by correspondence respecting the fifth article of the treaty signed by us this day for the settlement of boundaries between Great Britain and the United States.

By that article of the treaty it is stipulated that certain payments shall be made by the government of the United States to the States of Maine and Massachusetts. It has, of course, been understood that my negotiations have been with the government of the United States, and the introduction of terms of agreement between the general government and the States would have been irregular and inadmissible, if it had not been deemed expedient to bring the whole of these transactions within the purview of the treaty. There may not be wanting analogous cases to justify this proceeding; but it seems proper that I should have confirmed by you that my government incurs no responsibility for these engagements, of the precise nature and object of which I am uninformed, nor have I considered it necessary to make inquiry concerning them.

I beg, Sir, to renew to you the assurances of my high consideration.

ASHBURTON.

HON. DANIEL WEBSTER, &c., &c., &c.

Mr. Webster to Lord Ashburton.

Department of State, Washington, August 9, 1842.

MY LORD, — I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of this day, with respect to the object and intention of the fifth article of the treaty. What you say in regard to that subject is quite correct. It purports to contain no stipulation on the part of Great Britain, nor is any responsibility supposed to be incurred by it on the part of your government.

I renew, my Lord, the assurances of my distinguished consideration.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

LORD ASHBURTON, &c., &c., &c.

SUPPRESSION OF THE SLAVE-TRADE.

Mr. Webster to Captains Bell and Paine.

Department of State, Washington, April 30, 1842.

GENTLEMEN, — Your experience in the service on the coast of Africa has probably enabled you to give information to the government on some points connected with the slave-trade on that coast, in respect to which it is desirable that the most accurate knowledge attainable should be possessed. These particulars are, —

1. The extent of the western coast of Africa along which the slave-trade is supposed to be carried on, with the rivers, creeks, inlets, bays, harbors, or parts of the coast to which it is understood slave-ships most frequently resort.

2. The space or belt along the shore within which cruisers may be usefully employed for the purpose of detecting vessels engaged in the traffic.

3. The general course of proceeding of a slave-ship after leaving Brazil or the West Indies on a voyage to the coast of Africa for slaves, including her manner of approach to the shore, her previous bargain or arrangement for the purchase of slaves, the time of her usual stay on or near the coast, and the means by which she has communication with persons on land.

4. The nature of the stations, or barracoons, in which slaves are collected on shore to be sold to the traders, whether usually in rivers, creeks, or inlets, or on or near the open shore.

5. The usual articles of equipment and preparation, and the manner of fitting up, by which a vessel is known to be a slaver, though not caught with slaves on board.

6. The utility of employing vessels of different nations to cruise together, so that one or the other might have a right to visit and search every vessel which might be met with under suspicious circumstances, either as belonging to the country of the vessel visiting and searching, or to some other country which has, by treaty, conceded such right of visitation and search.

7. To what places slaves from slave-ships could be most conveniently taken.

8. Finally, what number of vessels, and of what size and description, it would be necessary to employ on the western coast of Africa, in order to put an entire end to the traffic in slaves, and for what number of years it would probably be necessary to maintain such force to accomplish that purpose.

You will please to add such observations as the state of your knowledge may allow relative to the slave-trade on the eastern coast of Africa.

I have the honor to be, &c.,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

CAPTAINS BELL AND PAINE, United States Navy.

A detailed answer was returned by Commanders Bell and Paine to these inquiries, and upon the information which it contained, as to the nature of the slave-trade on the coast of Africa and the best means of suppressing it, the eighth article of the treaty of Washington was drawn up.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH LORD ASHBURTON.

INVIOLABILITY OF NATIONAL TERRITORY.

CASE OF THE "CAROLINE."

Mr. Webster to Lord Ashburton.

Department of State, Washington, July 27, 1842.

My Lord, — In relation to the case of the "Caroline," which we have heretofore made the subject of conference, I have thought it right to place in your hands an extract of a letter from this department to Mr. Fox, of the 24th of April, 1841, and an extract from the message of the President of the United States to Congress at the commencement of its present session. These papers you have, no doubt, already seen; but they are, nevertheless, now communicated, as such communication is considered a ready mode of presenting the view which this government entertains of the destruction of that vessel.

The act of which the government of the United States complains is not to be considered as justifiable or unjustifiable, as the question of the lawfulness or unlawfulness of the employment in which the "Caroline" was engaged may be decided the one way or the other. That act is of itself a wrong, and an offence to the sovereignty and the dignity of the United States, being a violation of their soil and territory; a wrong for which, to this day, no atonement, or even apology, has been made by her Majesty's government. Your Lordship cannot but be aware that self-respect, the consciousness of independence and national equality, and a sensitiveness to whatever may touch the honor of the country, a sensitiveness which this government will ever feel and ever cultivate, make this a matter of high importance, and I must be allowed to ask for it your Lordship's grave consideration.

I have the honor to be, my Lord, your Lordship's most obedient servant.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

LORD ASHBURTON, &c., &c., &c.

This letter was accompanied with an extract from Mr. Webster's letter to Mr. Fox of the 24th of April, 1841, containing the passage which will be found on pp. 255–262 of this volume, and commencing, "The undersigned has now to signify to Mr. Fox." It is deemed unnecessary to repeat the passage here.

Extract from the Message of the President to Congress at the Commencement of the Second Session of the 27th Congress.

I regret that it is not in my power to make known to you an equally satisfactory conclusion in the case of the "Caroline" steamer, with the circumstances connected with the destruction of which, in December, 1837, by an armed force fitted out in the Province of Upper Canada, you are already made acquainted. No such atonement as was due for the public wrong done to the United States by this invasion of her territory, so wholly irreconcilable with her rights as an independent power, has yet been made. In the view taken by this government, the inquiry whether the vessel was in the employment of those who were prosecuting an unauthorized war against that Province, or was engaged by the owner in the business of transporting passengers to and from Navy Island, in hopes of private gain, which was most probably the case, in no degree alters the real question at issue between the two governments. This government can never concede to any foreign government the power, except in a case of the most urgent and extreme necessity, of invading its territory, either to arrest the persons or destroy the property of those who may have violated the municipal laws of such foreign government, or have disregarded their obligations arising under the law of nations. The territory of the United States must be regarded as sacredly secure against all such invasions, until they shall voluntarily acknowledge inability to acquit themselves of their duties to others; and in announcing this sentiment, I do but affirm a principle which no nation on earth would be more ready to vindicate, at all hazards, than the people and government of Great Britain. If, upon a full investigation of all the facts, it shall appear that the owner of the "Caroline" was governed by a hostile intent, or had made common cause with those who were in the occupancy of Navy Island, then, so far as he is concerned, there can be no claim to indemnity for the destruction of his boat which this government would feel itself bound to prosecute, since he would have acted not only in derogation of the rights of Great Britain, but in clear violation of the laws of the United States. But that is a question which, however settled, in no manner involves the higher consideration of the violation of territorial sovereignty and jurisdiction. To recognize it as an admissible practice, that each government, in its turn, upon any sudden and unauthorized outbreak on a frontier the extent of which renders it impossible for either to have an efficient force on every mile of it, and which outbreak, therefore, neither may be able to suppress in a day, may take vengeance into its own hands, and without even a remonstrance, and in the absence of any pressing or overruling necessity, may invade the territory of the other, would inevitably lead to results equally to be deplored by both. When border collisions come to receive the sanction, or to be made on the authority, of either government, general war must be the inevitable result. While it is the ardent desire of the United States to cultivate the relations of peace with all nations, and to fulfil all the duties of good neighborhood toward those who possess territories adjoining their own, that very desire would lead them to deny the right of any foreign power to invade their boundary with an armed force. The correspondence between the two governments on this subject will, at a future day of your session, be submitted to your consideration; and in the mean time I cannot but indulge the hope, that the British government will see the propriety of renouncing, as a rule of future action, the precedent which has been set in the affair at Schlosser.

Lord Ashburton to Mr. Webster.

Washington, July 28, 1842.

Sir, — In the course of our conferences on the several subjects of difference which it was the object of my mission to endeavor to settle, the unfortunate case of the "Caroline," with its attendant consequences, could not escape our attention; for although it is not of a description to be susceptible of any settlement by a convention or treaty, yet, being connected with the highest considerations of national honor and dignity, it has given rise at times to deep excitements, so as more than once to endanger the maintenance of peace.

The note you did me the honor of addressing me on the 27th instant reminds me that, however disposed your government might be to be satisfied with the explanations which it has been my duty to offer, the natural anxiety of the public mind requires that these explanations should be more durably recorded in our correspondence; and you send me a copy of your note to Mr. Fox, her Britannic Majesty's minister here, and an extract from the speech of the President of the United States to Congress at the opening of the present session, as a ready mode of presenting the view entertained on this subject by the government of the United States.

It is so far satisfactory to perceive that we are perfectly agreed as to the general principles of international law applicable to this unfortunate case. Respect for the inviolable character of the territory of independent nations is the most essential foundation of civilization. It is useless to strengthen a principle so generally acknowledged by any appeal to authorities on international law, and you may be assured, Sir, that her Majesty's government set the highest possible value on this principle, and are sensible of their duty to support it by their conduct and example, for the maintenance of peace and order in the world. If a sense of moral responsibility were not a sufficient security for their observance of this duty toward all nations, it will be readily believed that the most common dictates of interest and policy would lead to it in the case of a long conterminous boundary of some thousand miles, with a country of such great and growing power as the United States of America, inhabited by a kindred race, gifted with all its activity, and all its susceptibility on points of national honor.

Every consideration, therefore, leads us to set as highly as your government can possibly do this paramount obligation of reciprocal respect for the independent territory of each. But however strong this duty may be, it is admitted by all writers, by all jurists, by the occasional practice of all nations, not excepting your own, that a strong, overpowering necessity may arise when this great principle may and must be suspended. It must be so for the shortest possible period, during the continuance of an admitted overruling necessity, and strictly confined within the narrowest limits imposed by that necessity. Self-defence is the first law of our nature, and it must be recognized by every code which professes to regulate the condition and relations of man. Upon this modification, if I may so call it, of the great general principle, we seem also to be agreed; and on this part of the subject I have done little more than repeat the sentiments, though in less forcible language, admitted and maintained by you in the letter to which you refer me.

Agreeing, therefore, on the general principle, and on the possible exception to which it is liable, the only question between us is, whether this occurrence came within the limits fairly to be assigned to such exception; whether, to use your words, there was "that necessity of self-defence, instant, overwhelming, leaving no choice of means," which preceded the destruction of the "Caroline" while moored to the shore of the United States. Give me leave to say, Sir, with all possible admiration of your very ingenious discussion of the general principles which are supposed to govern the right and practice of interference by the people of one country in the wars and quarrels of others, that this part of your argument is little applicable to our immediate case. If Great Britain, America, or any other country, suffer their people to fit out expeditions to take part in distant quarrels, such conduct may, according to the circumstances of each case, be justly matter of complaint; and perhaps these transactions have generally been in late times too much overlooked or connived at. But the case we are considering is of a wholly different description, and may be best determined by answering the following question: Supposing a man standing on ground where you have no legal right to follow him has a weapon long enough to reach you, and is striking you down and endangering your life; how long are you bound to wait for the assistance of the authority having the legal power to relieve you? Or, to bring the facts more immediately home to the case, if cannon are moving and setting up in a battery which can reach you, and are actually destroying life and property by their fire, if you have remonstrated for some time without effect, and see no prospect of relief, when begins your right to defend yourself, should you have no other means of doing so than by seizing your assailant on the verge of a neutral territory?

I am unwilling to recall to your recollection the particulars of this case, but I am obliged very shortly to do so, to show what was, at the time, the extent of the existing justification; for upon this entirely depends the question whether a gross insult has or has not been offered to the government and people of the United States.

After some tumultuous proceedings in Upper Canada, which were of short duration, and were suppressed by the militia of the country, the persons criminally concerned in them took refuge in the neighboring State of New York, and, with a very large addition to their numbers openly collected, invaded the Canadian territory, taking possession of Navy Island.

This invasion took place on the 16th of December, 1837; a gradual accession of numbers and of military ammunition continued openly, and, though under the sanction of no public authority, at least with no public hinderance, until the 29th of the same month, when several hundred men were collected, and twelve pieces of ordnance, which could only have been procured from some public store or arsenal, were actually mounted on Navy Island, and were used to fire within easy range upon the unoffending inhabitants of the opposite shore. Remonstrances, wholly ineffectual, were made; so ineffectual, indeed, that a militia regiment, stationed on the neighboring American island, looked on without any attempt at interference, while shots were fired from the American island itself. This important fact stands on the best American authority, being stated in a letter to Mr. Forsyth, of the 6th of February, 1838, of Mr. Benton, attorney of the United States, the gentleman sent by your government to inquire into the facts of the case, who adds, very properly, that he makes the statement "with deep regret and mortification."

This force, formed of all the reckless and mischievous people of the border, formidable from their numbers and from their armament, had in their pay, and as part of their establishment, this steamboat "Caroline," the important means and instrument by which numbers and arms were hourly increasing. I might safely put it to any candid man acquainted with the existing state of things, to say whether the military commander in Canada had the remotest reason, on the 29th of December, to expect to be relieved from this state of suffering by the protective intervention of any American authority. How long could a government having the paramount duty of protecting its own people be reasonably expected to wait for what they had then no reason to expect? What would have been the conduct of American officers? What has been their conduct under circumstances much less aggravated? I would appeal to you, Sir, to say whether the facts which you say would alone justify this act, namely, "a necessity of self-defence, instant, overwhelming, leaving no choice of means and no moment for deliberation," were not applicable to this case in as high a degree as they ever were to any case of a similar description in the history of nations.

Nearly five years are now past since this occurrence; there has been time for the public to deliberate upon it calmly, and I believe I may take it to be the opinion of candid and honorable men, that the British officers who executed this transaction, and their government who approved it, intended no slight or disrespect to the sovereign authority of the United States. That they intended no such disrespect I can most solemnly affirm, and I trust it will be admitted that no inference to the contrary can fairly be drawn, even by the most susceptible on points of national honor.

Notwithstanding my wish that the explanation I had to make might not revive in any degree any feelings of irritation, I do not see how I could treat this subject without this short recital of facts, because the proof that no disrespect was intended is mainly to be looked for in the extent of the justification.

There remains only a point or two which I should wish to notice, to remove in some degree the impression which your rather highly-colored description of this transaction is calculated to make. The mode of telling a story often tends to distort facts, and in this case more than in any other it is important to arrive at plain, unvarnished truth.

It appears from every account, that the expedition was sent to capture the "Caroline" when she was expected to be found on the British ground of Navy Island, and that it was only owing to the orders of the rebel leader being disobeyed that she was not so found. When the British officer came round the point of the island in the night, he first discovered that the vessel was moored to the other shore. He was not by this deterred from making the capture, and his conduct was approved. But you will perceive that there was here, most decidedly, the case of justification mentioned in your note, that there should be "no moment left for deliberation." I mention this circumstance to show, also, that the expedition was not planned with a premeditated purpose of attacking the enemy within the jurisdiction of the United States, but that the necessity of so doing arose from altered circumstances at the moment of execution.

I have only further to notice the highly-colored picture drawn in your note of the facts attending the execution of this service. Some importance is attached to the attack having been made in the night, and the vessel having been set on fire and floated down the falls of the river; and it is insinuated rather than asserted, that there was carelessness as to the lives of the persons on board. The account given by the distinguished officer who commanded the expedition distinctly refutes, or satisfactorily explains, these assertions. The time of night was purposely selected as most likely to insure the execution with the least loss of life; and it is expressly stated that, the strength of the current not permitting the vessel to be carried off, and it being necessary to destroy her by fire, she was drawn into the stream for the express purpose of preventing injury to persons or property of the inhabitants at Schlosser.

I would willingly have abstained from a return to the facts of this transaction, my duty being to offer those explanations and assurances which may lead to satisfy the public mind, and to the cessation of all angry feeling, but it appeared to me that some explanation of parts of the case, apparently misunderstood, might be of service for this purpose.

Although it is believed that a candid and impartial consideration of the whole history of this unfortunate event will lead to the conclusion that there were grounds of justification as strong as were ever presented in such cases, and, above all, that no slight of the authority of the United States was ever intended, yet it must be admitted that there was, in the hurried execution of this necessary service, a violation of territory; and I am instructed to assure you that her Majesty's government consider this as a most serious fact, and that, far from thinking that an event of this kind should be lightly risked, they would unfeignedly deprecate its recurrence. Looking back to what passed at this distance of time, what is, perhaps, most to be regretted is, that some explanation and apology for this occurrence was not immediately made; this, with a frank explanation of the necessity of the case, might, and probably would, have prevented much of the exasperation, and of the subsequent complaints and recriminations to which it gave rise.

There are possible cases in the relations of nations, as of individuals, where necessity, which controls all other laws, may be pleaded; but it is neither easy nor safe to attempt to define the rights or limits properly assignable to such a plea. This must always be a subject of much delicacy, and should be considered by friendly nations with great candor and forbearance. The intentions of the parties must mainly be looked to; and can it for a moment be supposed that Great Britain would intentionally and wantonly provoke a great and powerful neighbor?

Her Majesty's government earnestly desire that a reciprocal respect for the independent jurisdiction and authority of neighboring states may be considered among the first duties of all governments; and I have to repeat the assurance of regret they feel that the event of which I am treating should have disturbed the harmony they so anxiously wish to maintain with the American people and government.

Connected with these transactions there have also been circumstances, of which, I believe, it is generally admitted that Great Britain has had just ground to complain. Individuals have been made personally liable for acts done under the avowed authority of their government; and there are now many brave men exposed to personal consequences for no other cause than having served their country. That this is contrary to every principle of international law it is useless for me to insist. Indeed, it has been admitted by every authority of your government; but, owing to a conflict of laws, difficulties have intervened, much to the regret of those authorities, in giving practical effect to these principles; and for these difficulties some remedy has been by all desired. It is no business of mine to enter upon the consideration of them, nor have I sufficient information for the purpose; but I trust you will excuse my addressing to you the inquiry, whether the government of the United States is now in a condition to secure, in effect and in practice, the principle, which has never been denied in argument, that individuals acting under legitimate authority are not personally responsible for executing the orders of their government? That the power, when it exists, will be used on every fit occasion, I am well assured; and I am bound to admit that, looking through the voluminous correspondence concerning these transactions, there appears no indisposition with any of the authorities of the Federal government, under its several administrations, to do justice in this respect in as far as their means and powers would allow.

I trust, Sir, I may now be permitted to hope that all feelings of resentment and ill-will resulting from these truly unfortunate events may be buried in oblivion, and that they may be succeeded by those of harmony and friendship, which it is certainly the interest, and, I also believe, the inclination, of all to promote.

I beg, Sir, you will be assured of my high and unfeigned consideration.

ASHBURTON.

HON. DANIEL WEBSTER, &c., &c., &c.

Mr. Webster to Lord Ashburton.

Department of State, Washington, August 6, 1842.

Your Lordship's note of the 28th of July, in answer to mine of the 27th, respecting the case of the "Caroline," has been received and laid before the President.

The President sees with pleasure that your Lordship fully admits those great principles of public law, applicable to cases of this kind, which this government has expressed; and that on your part, as on ours, respect for the inviolable character of the territory of independent states is the most essential foundation of civilization. And while it is admitted on both sides that there are exceptions to this rule, he is gratified to find that your Lordship admits that such exceptions must come within the limitations stated and the terms used in a former communication from this department to the British plenipotentiary here. Undoubtedly it is just, that, while it is admitted that exceptions growing out of the great law of self-defence do exist, those exceptions should be confined to cases in which the "necessity of that self-defence is instant, overwhelming, and leaving no choice of means, and no moment for deliberation."

Understanding these principles alike, the difference between the two governments is only whether the facts in the case of the "Caroline" make out a case of such necessity for the purpose of self-defence. Seeing that the transaction is not recent, having happened in the time of one of his predecessors, seeing that your Lordship, in the name of your government, solemnly declares that no slight or disrespect was intended to the sovereign authority of the United States; seeing that it is acknowledged that, whether justifiable or not, there was yet a violation of the territory of the United States, and that you are instructed to say that your government consider that as a most serious occurrence; seeing, finally, that it is now admitted that an explanation and apology for this violation was due at the time; the President is content to receive these acknowledgments and assurances in the conciliatory spirit which marks your Lordship's letter, and will make this subject, as a complaint of violation of territory, the topic of no further discussion between the two governments.

As to that part of your Lordship's note which relates to other occurrences springing out of the case of the "Caroline," with which occurrences the name of Alexander McLeod has become connected, I have to say that the government of the United States entirely adheres to the sentiments and opinions expressed in the communications from this department to Mr. Fox. This government has admitted that, for an act committed by the command of his sovereign, jure belli, an individual cannot be responsible in the ordinary courts of another state. It would regard it as a high indignity if a citizen of its own, acting under its authority and by its special command, in such cases were held to answer in a municipal tribunal, and to undergo punishment, as if the behest of his government were no defence or protection to him.

But your Lordship is aware that, in regular constitutional governments, persons arrested on charges of high crimes can only be discharged by some judicial proceeding. It is so in England; it is so in the colonies and provinces of England. The forms of judicial proceeding differ in different countries, being more rapid in some and more dilatory in others; and, it may be added, generally more dilatory, or at least more cautious, in cases affecting life, in governments of a strictly limited than in those of a more unlimited character. It was a subject of regret that the release of McLeod was so long delayed. A State court, and that not of the highest jurisdiction, decided that, on summary application, embarrassed, as it would appear, by technical difficulties, he could not be released by that court. His discharge shortly afterward by a jury, to whom he preferred to submit his case, rendered unnecessary the further prosecution of the legal question. It is for the Congress of the United States, whose attention has been called to the subject, to say what further provision ought to be made to expedite proceedings in such cases; and, in answer to your Lordship's question toward the close of your note, I have to say that the government of the United States holds itself, not only fully disposed, but fully competent, to carry into practice every principle which it avows or acknowledges, and to fulfil every duty and obligation which it owes to foreign governments, their citizens or subjects.

I have the honor to be, my Lord, with great consideration, your obedient servant.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

LORD ASHBURTON, &c., &c., &c.

MARITIME RIGHTS.

CASE OF THE "CREOLE."

Mr. Webster to Lord Ashburton.

Department of State, Washington, August 1, 1842.

MY LORD, — The President has learned with much regret, that you are not empowered by your government to enter into a formal stipulation for the better security of vessels of the United States when meeting with disasters in passing between the United States and the Bahama Islands, and driven by such disasters into British ports. This is a subject which is deemed to be of great importance, and which cannot, on the present occasion, be overlooked.

Your Lordship is aware that several cases have occurred, within the last few years, which have caused much complaint. In some of these cases compensation has been made by the English government for the interference of the local authorities with American vessels having slaves on board, by which interference these slaves were set free. In other cases, such compensation has been refused. It appears to the President to be for the interest of both countries that the recurrence of similar cases in future should be prevented as far as possible.

Your Lordship has been acquainted with the case of the "Creole," a vessel carried into the port of Nassau last winter by persons who had risen upon the lawful authority of the vessel, and, in the accomplishment of their purpose, had committed murder on a person on board.

The opinions which that occurrence gave occasion for this government to express, in regard to the rights and duties of friendly and civilized maritime states placed by Providence near to each other, were well considered, and are entertained with entire confidence. The facts in the particular case of the "Creole" are controverted; positive and officious interference by the colonial authorities to set the slaves free being alleged on the one side, and denied on the other.

It is not my present purpose to discuss this difference of opinion as to the evidence in the case, as it at present exists, because, the rights of individuals having rendered necessary a more thorough and a judicial investigation of facts and circumstances attending the transaction, such investigation is understood to be now in progress, and its result, when known, will render me more able than at this moment to present to the British government a full and accurate view of the whole case. But it is my purpose and my duty to invite your Lordship's attention to the general subject, and your serious consideration of some practical means of giving security to the coasting trade of the United States against unlawful annoyance and interruption along this part of their shore. The Bahama Islands approach the coast of Florida within a few leagues, and, with the coast, form a long and narrow channel, filled with innumerable small islands and banks of sand, and the navigation is difficult and dangerous, not only on these accounts, but from the violence of the winds and the variable nature of the currents. Accidents are, of course, frequent, and necessity often compels vessels of the United States, in attempting to double Cape Florida, to seek shelter in the ports of these islands. Along this passage the Atlantic States hold intercourse with the States on the Gulf and the Mississippi, and through it the products of the valley of that river (a region of vast extent and boundless fertility) find a main outlet to the sea in their destination to the markets of the world.

No particular ground of complaint exists as to the treatment which American vessels usually receive in these ports, unless they happen to have slaves on board; but, in cases of that kind, complaints have been made, as already stated, of officious interference of the colonial authorities with the vessel, for the purpose of changing the condition in which these persons are, by the laws of their own country, and of setting them free.

In the Southern States of this Union slavery exists by the laws of the States and under the guaranty of the Constitution of the United States; and it has existed in them from a period long antecedent to the time when they ceased to be British colonies. In this state of things, it will happen that slaves will be often on board coasting vessels, as hands, as servants attending the families of their owners, or for the purpose of being carried from port to port. For the security of the rights of their citizens, when vessels having persons of this description on board are driven by stress of weather, or carried by unlawful force, into British ports, the United States propose the introduction of no new principle into the law of nations. They require only a faithful and exact observance of the injunctions of that code, as understood and practised in modern times.

Your Lordship observes that I have spoken only of American vessels driven into British ports by the disasters of the seas, or carried in by unlawful force. I confine my remarks to these cases, because they are the common cases, and because they are the cases which the law of nations most emphatically exempts from interference. The maritime law is full of instances of the application of that great and practical rule which declares that that which is the clear result of necessity ought to draw after it no penalty and no hazard. If a ship be driven by stress of weather into a prohibited port, or into an open port with prohibited articles on board, in neither case is any forfeiture incurred. And what may be considered a still stronger case, it has been decided by eminent English authority, and that decision has received general approbation, that, if a vessel be driven by necessity into a port strictly blockaded, this necessity is a good defence, and exempts her from penalty.

A vessel on the high seas, beyond the distance of a marine league from the shore, is regarded as part of the territory of the nation to which she belongs, and subjected exclusively to the jurisdiction of that nation. If, against the will of her master or owner, she be driven or carried nearer to the land, or even into port, those who have, or who ought to have, control over her struggling all the while to keep her upon the high seas, and so within the exclusive jurisdiction of her own government, what reason or justice is there in creating a distinction between her rights and immunities in a position thus the result of absolute necessity, and the same rights and immunities before superior power had forced her out of her voluntary course?

But, my Lord, the rule of law, and the comity and practice of nations, go much further than these cases of necessity, and allow even to a merchant-vessel, coming into any open port of another country voluntarily, for the purposes of lawful trade, to bring with her and keep over her, to a very considerable extent, the jurisdiction and authority of the laws of her own country, excluding to this extent, by consequence, the jurisdiction of the local law. A ship, says the publicists, though at anchor in a foreign harbor, preserves its jurisdiction and its laws. It is natural to consider the vessels of a nation as parts of its territory, though at sea, as the state retains its jurisdiction over them; and, according to the commonly received custom, this jurisdiction is preserved over the vessels, even in parts of the sea subject to a foreign dominion.

This s the doctrine of the law of nations, clearly laid down by writers of received authority, and entirely conformable, as it is supposed, with the practice of modern nations.

If a murder be committed on board of an American vessel by one of the crew upon another or upon a passenger, or by a passenger on one of the crew or another passenger, while such vessel is lying in a port within the jurisdiction of a foreign state or sovereignty, the offence is cognizable and punishable by the proper court of the United States, in the same manner as if such offence had been committed on board the vessel on the high seas. The law of England is supposed to be the same.

It is true that the jurisdiction of a nation over a vessel belonging to it, while lying in the port of another, is not necessarily wholly exclusive. We do not so consider or so assert it. For any unlawful acts done by her while thus lying in port, and for all contracts entered into while there, by her master or owners, she and they must, doubtless, be answerable to the laws of the place. Nor, if her master or crew, while on board in such port, break the peace of the community by the commission of crimes, can exemption be claimed for them. But, nevertheless, the law of nations, as I have stated it, and the statutes of governments founded on that law, as I have referred to them, show that enlightened nations, in modern times, do clearly hold that the jurisdiction and laws of a nation accompany her ships not only over the high seas, but into ports and harbors, or wheresoever else they may be water-borne, for the general purpose of governing and regulating the rights, duties, and obligations of those on board thereof, and that, to the extent of the exercise of this jurisdiction, they are considered as parts of the territory of the nation herself.

If a vessel be driven by weather into the ports of another nation, it would hardly be alleged by any one, that, by the mere force of such arrival within the waters of the state, the law of that state would so attach to the vessel as to affect existing rights of property between persons on board, whether arising from contract or otherwise. The local law would not operate to make the goods of one man to become the goods of another man. Nor ought it to affect their personal obligations, or existing relations between themselves; nor was it ever supposed to have such effect, until the delicate and exciting question which has caused these interferences in the British islands arose. The local law in these cases dissolves no obligations or relation lawfully entered into or lawfully existing according to the laws of the ship's country. If it did, intercourse of civilized men between nation and nation must cease. Marriages are frequently celebrated in one country in a manner not lawful or valid in another; but did any body ever doubt that marriages are valid all over the civilized world, if valid in the country in which they took place? Did any one ever imagine that local law acted upon such marriages to annihilate their obligation, if the party should visit a country in which marriages must be celebrated in another form?

It may be said, that, in such instances, personal relations are founded in contract, and therefore to be respected; but that the relation of master and slave is not founded in contract, and therefore is to be respected only by the law of the place which recognizes it. Whoever so reasons encounters the authority of the whole body of public law from Grotius down; because there are numerous instances in which the law itself presumes or implies contracts; and prominent among those instances is the very relation which we are now considering, and which relation is holden by law to draw after it mutuality of obligation.

Is not the relation between a father and his minor children acknowledged when they go abroad? And on what contract is this founded, but a contract raised by general principles of law, from the relation of the parties?

Your Lordship will please to bear in mind that the proposition which I am endeavoring to support is, that, by the comity of the law of nations and the practice of modern times, merchant-vessels entering open ports of other nations, for the purpose of trade, are presumed to be allowed to bring with them, and to retain, for their protection and government, the jurisdiction and laws of their own country. All this, I repeat, is presumed to be allowed; because the ports are open, because trade is invited, and because, under these circumstances, such permission or allowance is according to general usage. It is not denied that all this may be refused; and this suggests a distinction, the disregard of which may, perhaps, account for most of the difficulties arising in cases of this sort; that is to say, the distinction between what a state may do, if it pleases, and what it is presumed to do, or not to do, in the absence of any positive declaration of its will. A state might declare that all foreign marriages should be regarded as null and void within its territory; that a foreign father, arriving with an infant son, should no longer have authority or control over him; that, on the arrival of a foreign vessel in its ports, all shipping articles, and all indentures of apprenticeship between her crew and her owners or masters, should cease to be binding. These, and many other things equally irrational and absurd, a sovereign state has doubtless the power to do; but they are not to be presumed. It is not to be taken for granted, ab ante, that it is the will of the sovereign state thus to withdraw itself from the circle of civilized nations. It will be time enough to believe this to be its intention when it formally announces that intention by appropriate enactments, edicts, or other declarations.

In regard to slavery within the British territories, there is a well-known and clear promulgation of the will of the sovereign authority; that is to say, there is a well-known rule of her law. As to England herself, that law has long existed; and recent acts of Parliament establish the same law for the colonies. The usual mode of stating the rule of English law is, that no sooner does a slave reach the shore of England than he is free. This is true; but it means no more than that, when a slave comes within the exclusive jurisdiction of England, he ceases to be a slave, because the law of England positively and notoriously prohibits and forbids the existence of such a relation between man and man. But it does not mean that English authorities, with this rule of English law in their hands, may enter where the jurisdiction of another nation is acknowledged to exist, and there destroy rights, obligations, and interests lawfully existing under the authority of such other nation. No such construction, and no such effect, can be rightfully given to the British law. It is true that it is competent to the British Parliament, by express statute provision, to declare that no foreign jurisdiction of any kind should exist in or over a vessel after its arrival voluntarily in her ports. And so she might close all her ports to the ships of all nations. A state may also declare, in the absence of treaty stipulations, that foreigners shall not sue in her courts, nor travel in her territories, nor carry away funds or goods received for debts. We need not inquire what would be the condition of a country that should establish such laws, nor in what relation they would leave her toward the states of the civilized world. Her power to make such laws is unquestionable; but, in the absence of direct and positive enactments to that effect, the presumption is that the opposites of these things exist. While her ports are open to foreign trade, it is to be presumed that she expects foreign ships to enter them, bringing with them the jurisdiction of their own government, and the protection of its laws, to the same extent that her ships and the ships of other commercial states carry with them the jurisdiction of their respective governments into the open ports of the world; just as it is presumed, while the contrary is not avowed, that strangers may travel in a civilized country in a time of peace, sue in its courts, and bring away their property.

A merchant-vessel enters the port of a friendly state, and enjoys while there the protection of her own laws, and is under the jurisdiction of her own government, not in derogation of the sovereignty of the place, but by the presumed allowance or permission of that sovereignty. This permission or allowance is founded on the comity of nations, like the other cases which have been mentioned; and this comity is part, and a most important and valuable part, of the law of nations, to which all nations are presumed to assent until they make their dissent known. In the silence of any positive rule affirming, or denying, or restraining the operation of foreign laws, their tacit adoption is presumed, to the usual extent. It is upon this ground that the courts of law expound contracts according to the law of the place in which they are made; and instances almost innumerable exist in which, by the general practice of civilized countries, the laws of one will be recognized and often executed in another. This is the comity of nations; and it is upon this, as its solid basis, that the intercourse of civilized states is maintained.

But while that which has now been said is understood to be the voluntary and adopted law of nations, in cases of the voluntary entry of merchant-vessels into the ports of other countries, it is nevertheless true that vessels in such ports only through an overruling necessity may place their claim for exemption from interference on still higher principles; that is to say, principles held in more sacred regard by the comity, the courtesy, or, indeed, the common sense of justice of all civilized states.

Even in regard to cases of necessity, however, there are things of an unfriendly and offensive character, which yet it may not be easy to say that a nation might not do. For example, a nation might declare her will to be, and make it the law of her dominions, that foreign vessels cast away on her shores should be lost to their owners, and subject to the ancient law of wreck. Or a neutral state, while shutting her ports to the armed vessels of belligerents, as she has a right to do, might resolve on seizing and confiscating vessels of that description which should be driven to take shelter in her harbors by the violence of the storms of the ocean. But laws of this character, however within the absolute competence of governments, could only be passed, if passed at all, under willingness to meet the last responsibility to which nations are subjected.

The presumption is stronger, therefore, in regard to vessels driven into foreign ports by necessity, and seeking only temporary refuge, than in regard to those which enter them voluntarily, and for purposes of trade, that they will not be interfered with; and that, unless they commit, while in port, some act against the laws of the place, they will be permitted to receive supplies, to repair damages, and to depart unmolested.

If, therefore, vessels of the United States, pursuing lawful voyages from port to port along their own shore, are driven by stress of weather, or carried by unlawful force, into English ports, the government of the United States cannot consent that the local authorities in those ports shall take advantage of such misfortunes, and enter them for the purpose of interfering with the condition of persons or things on board, as established by their own laws. If slaves, the property of citizens of the United States, escape into the British territories, it is not expected that they will be restored. In that case, the territorial jurisdiction of England will have become exclusive over them, and must decide their condition. But slaves on board of American vessels lying in British waters are not within the exclusive jurisdiction of England, or under the exclusive operation of English law; and this founds the broad distinction between the cases. If persons guilty of crimes in the United States seek an asylum in the British dominions, they will not be demanded until provision for such cases be made by treaty; because the giving up of criminals, fugitive from justice, is agreed and understood to be a matter in which every nation regulates its conduct according to its own discretion. It is no breach of comity to refuse such surrender.

On the other hand, vessels of the United States, driven by necessity into British ports, and staying there no longer than such necessity exists, violating no law, and having no intent to violate any law, will claim, and there will be claimed for them, protection and security, freedom from molestation, and from all interference with the character or condition of persons or things on board. In the opinion of the government of the United States, such vessels, so driven and so detained by necessity in a friendly port, ought to be regarded as still pursuing their original voyage, and turned out of their direct course only by disaster, or by wrongful violence; that they ought to receive all assistance necessary to enable them to resume that direct course; and that interference and molestation by the local authorities, where the whole voyage is lawful, both in act and intent, is ground for just and grave complaint.

Your Lordship's discernment and large experience in affairs cannot fail to suggest to you how important it is to merchants and navigators engaged in the coasting trade of a country so large in extent as the United States, that they should feel secure against all but the ordinary causes of maritime loss. The possessions of the two governments closely approach each other. This proximity, which ought to make us friends and good neighbors, may, without proper care and regulation, itself prove a ceaseless cause of vexation, irritation, and disquiet.

If your Lordship has no authority to enter into a stipulation by treaty for the prevention of such occurrences hereafter as have already happened, occurrences so likely to disturb that peace between the two countries which it is the object of your Lordship's mission to establish and confirm, you may still be so far acquainted with the sentiments of your government as to be able to engage that instructions shall be given to the local authorities in the islands, which shall lead them to regulate their conduct in conformity with the rights of citizens of the United States, and the just expectations of their government, and in such manner as shall, in future, take away all reasonable ground of complaint. It would be with the most profound regret that the President should see that, while it is now hoped so many other subjects of difference may be harmoniously adjusted, nothing should be done in regard to this dangerous source of future collisions.

I avail myself of this occasion to renew to your Lordship the assurances of my distinguished consideration.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

LORD ASHBURTON, &c., &c., &c.

Lord Ashburton to Mr. Webster.

Washington, August 6, 1842.

SIR, — You may well be assured that I am duly sensible of the great importance of the subject to which you call my attention in the note which you did me the honor of addressing me the 1st instant, in which you inform me that the President had been pleased to express his regret that I was not empowered by my government to enter into a formal stipulation for the better security of vessels of the United States when meeting with disasters in passing between the United States and the Bahama Islands, and driven by such disasters into British ports.

It is, I believe, unnecessary that I should tell you that the case of the "Creole" was known in London a few days only before my departure. No complaint had at that time been made by Mr. Everett. The subject was not, therefore, among those which it was the immediate object of my mission to discuss. But at the same time I must admit that, from the moment I was acquainted with the facts of this case, I was sensible of all its importance, and I should not think myself without power to consider of some adjustment of, and remedy for, a great acknowledged difficulty, if I could see my way clearly to any satisfactory course, and if I had not arrived at the conclusion, after very anxious consideration, that, for the reasons which I will state, this question had better be treated in London, where it will have a much increased chance of settlement on terms likely to satisfy the interests of the United States.

The immediate case of the "Creole" would be easily disposed of, but it involves a class and description of cases which, for the purpose of affording that security you seek for the trade of America through the Bahama Channel, brings into consideration questions of law, both national and international, of the highest importance; and, to increase the delicacy and difficulty of the subject, public feeling is sensitively alive to every thing connected with it. These circumstances bring me to the conviction, that, although I really believe that much may be done to meet the wishes of your government, the means of doing so would be best considered in London, where immediate reference may be had to the highest authorities on every point of delicacy and difficulty that may arise. Whatever I might attempt would be more or less under the disadvantage of being fettered by apprehensions of responsibility, and I might thereby be kept within limits which my government at home might disregard. In other words, I believe you would have a better chance in this settlement with them than with me. I state this after some imperfect endeavors, by correspondence, to come at satisfactory explanations. If I were in this instance treating of ordinary material interests, I should proceed with more confidence; but, anxious as I unfeignedly am that all questions likely to disturb the future understanding between us should be averted, I strongly recommend this question of the security of the Bahama Channel being referred for discussion in London.

This opinion is more decidedly confirmed by your very elaborate and important argument on the application of the general principles of the law of nations to these subjects, an argument to which your authority necessarily gives great weight, but in which I would not presume to follow you with my own imperfect means. Great Britain and the United States, covering all the seas of the world with their commerce, have the greatest possible interest in maintaining sound and pure principles of international law, as well as the practice of reciprocal aid and good offices in all their harbors and possessions. With respect to the latter, it is satisfactory to know that the disposition of the respective governments and people leaves little to be desired, with the single exception of those very delicate and perplexing questions which have recently arisen from the state of slavery, and even these seem confined, and likely to continue to be confined, to the narrow passage of the Bahama Channel. At no other part of the British possessions are American vessels with slaves ever likely to touch, nor are they likely to touch there otherwise than from the pressure of very urgent necessity. The difficulty, therefore, as well as the desired remedy, is apparently confined within narrow limits.

Upon the great general principles affecting this case we do not differ. You admit that if slaves, the property of American citizens, escape into British territories, it is not expected that they will be restored; and you may be well assured that there is no wish on our part that they should reach our shores, or that British possessions should be used as decoys for the violators of the laws of a friendly neighbor.

When these slaves do reach us, by whatever means, there is no alternative. The present state of British law is in this respect too well known to require repetition; nor need I remind you that it is exactly the same with the laws of every part of the United States where a state of slavery is not recognized; and that the slave put on shore at Nassau would be dealt with exactly as would a foreign slave landed, under any circumstances whatever, at Boston.

But what constitutes the being within British dominion, from which these consequences are to follow? Is a vessel passing through the Bahama Channel, and forced involuntarily, either from storm or mutiny, into British waters, to be so considered? What power have the authorities of those islands to take cognizance of persons or property in such vessels? These are questions which you, Sir, have discussed at great length, and with evident ability. Although you have advanced some propositions which rather surprise and startle me, I do not pretend to judge them; but what is very clear is, that great principles are involved in a discussion which it would ill become me lightly to enter upon; and I am confirmed by this consideration in wishing that the subject be referred to where it will be perfectly weighed and examined.

It behooves the authorities of our two governments well to guard themselves against establishing by their diplomatic intercourse false precedents and principles, and that they do not, for the purpose of meeting a passing difficulty, set examples which may hereafter mislead the world.

It is not intended on this occasion to consider in detail the particular instances which have given rise to these discussions. They have already been stated and explained. Our object is rather to look to the means of future prevention of such occurrences. That this may be obtained I have little doubt, although we may not be able immediately to agree on the precise stipulations of a treaty. On the part of Great Britain, there are certain great principles too deeply rooted in the consciences and sympathies of the people for any minister to be able to overlook; and any engagement I might make in opposition to them would be instantly disavowed; but, at the same time that we maintain our own laws within our own territories, we are bound to respect those of our neighbors, and to listen to every possible suggestion of means of averting from them every annoyance and injury. I have great confidence that this may be effectually done in the present instance; but the case to be met and remedied is new, and must not be too hastily dealt with. You may, however, be assured that measures so important for the preservation of friendly intercourse between the two countries shall not be neglected.

In the mean time, I can engage that instructions shall be given to the governors of her Majesty's colonies on the southern borders of the United States to execute their own laws with careful attention to the wish of their government to maintain good neighborhood, and that there shall be no officious interference with American vessels driven by accident or by violence into those ports. The laws and duties of hospitality shall be executed; and these seem neither to require nor to justify any further inquisition into the state of persons or things on board of vessels so situated than may be indispensable to enforce the observance of the municipal law of the colony, and the proper regulation of its harbors and waters.

A strict and careful attention to these rules, applied in good faith to all transactions as they arise, will, I hope and believe, without any abandonment of great and general principles, lead to the avoidance of any excitement or agitation on this very sensitive subject of slavery, and consequently of those irritating feelings which may have a tendency to bring into peril all the great interests connected with the maintenance of peace.

I further trust that friendly sentiments, and a conviction of the importance of cherishing them, will on all occasions lead the two countries to consider favorably any further arrangements which may be judged necessary for the reciprocal protection of their interests.

I hope, Sir, that this explanation on this very important subject will be satisfactory to the President, and that he will see in it no diminution of that earnest desire, which you have been pleased to recognize in me, to perform my work of reconciliation and friendship; but that he will rather perceive in my suggestion, in this particular instance, that it is made with a well-founded hope of thereby better obtaining the object we have in view.

I beg to renew to you, Sir, the assurances of my high consideration.

ASHBURTON.

HON. DANIEL WEBSTER, &c., &c., &c.

Mr. Webster to Lord Ashburton.

Department of State, Washington, August 8, 1842.

MY LORD, — I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's note of the 6th instant, in answer to mine of the 1st, upon the subject of a stipulation for the better security of American vessels driven by accident or carried by force into the British West India ports.

The President would have been gratified if you had felt yourself at liberty to proceed at once to consider of some proper arrangement, by formal treaty, for this object; but there may be weight in the reasons which you urge for referring such mode of stipulation for consideration in London.

The President places his reliance on those principles of public law which were stated in my note to your Lordship, and which are regarded as equally well founded and important; and on your Lordship's engagement that instructions shall be given to the governors of her Majesty's colonies to execute their own laws with careful attention to the wish of their government to maintain good neighborhood, and that there shall be no officious interference with American vessels driven by accident or by violence into those ports; that the laws and duties of hospitality shall be executed, and that these seem neither to require nor to justify any further inquisition into the state of persons or things on board of vessels so situated than may be indispensable to enforce the observance of the municipal law of the colony, and the proper regulation of its harbors and waters. He indulges the hope, nevertheless, that, actuated by a just sense of what is due to the mutual interests of the two countries, and the maintenance of a permanent peace between them, her Majesty's government will not fail to see the importance of removing, by such further stipulations, by treaty or otherwise, as may be found to be necessary, all cause of complaint connected with this subject.

I have the honor to be, with high consideration, your Lordship's obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

LORD ASHBURTON, &c., &c., &c.

IMPRESSMENT.

Mr. Webster to Lord Ashburton.

Department of State, Washington, August 8, 1842.

MY LORD, — We have had several conversations on the subject of impressment, but I do not understand that your Lordship has instructions from your government to negotiate upon it, nor does the government of the United States see any utility in opening such negotiation, unless the British government is prepared to renounce the practice in all future wars.

No cause has produced to so great an extent, and for so long a period, disturbing and irritating influences on the political relations of the United States and England, as the impressment of seamen by British cruisers from American merchant-vessels.

From the commencement of the French Revolution to the breaking out of the war between the two countries in 1812, hardly a year elapsed without loud complaint and earnest remonstrance. A deep feeling of opposition to the right claimed, and to the practice exercised under it, and not unfrequently exercised without the least regard to what justice and humanity would have dictated, even if the right itself had been admitted, took possession of the public mind of America, and this feeling, it is well known, coöperated most powerfully with other causes to produce the state of hostilities which ensued.

At different periods, both before and since the war, negotiations have taken place between the two governments, with the hope of finding some means of quieting these complaints. At some times, the effectual abolition of the practice has been requested and treated of; at other times, its temporary suspension; and at other times, again, the limitation of its exercise, and some security against its enormous abuses.

A common destiny has attended these efforts; they have all failed. The question stands at this moment where it stood fifty years ago. The nearest approach to a settlement was a convention proposed in 1803, and which had come to the point of signature, when it was broken off in consequence of the British government insisting that the narrow seas should be expressly excepted out of the sphere over which the contemplated stipulation against impressment should extend. The American minister, Mr. King, regarded this exception as quite inadmissible, and chose rather to abandon the negotiation than to acquiesce in the doctrine which it proposed to establish.

England asserts the right of impressing British subjects, in time of war, out of neutral merchant-vessels, and of deciding by her visiting officers who, among the crews of such merchant-vessels, are British subjects. She asserts this as a legal exercise of the prerogative of the crown; which prerogative is alleged to be founded on the English law of the perpetual and indissoluble allegiance of the subject, and his obligation under all circumstances, and for his whole life, to render military service to the crown whenever required.

This statement, made in the words of eminent British jurists, shows at once that the English claim is far broader than the basis or platform on which it is raised. The law relied on is English law; the obligations insisted on are obligations existing between the crown of England and its subjects. This law and these obligations, it is admitted, may be such as England may choose they shall be. But then they must be confined to the parties. Impressment of seamen out of and beyond English territory, and from on board the ships of other nations, is an interference with the rights of other nations; is further, therefore, than English prerogative can legally extend; and is nothing but an attempt to enforce the peculiar law of England beyond the dominions and jurisdiction of the crown. The claim asserts an extra-territorial authority for the law of British prerogative, and assumes to exercise this extra-territorial authority, to the manifest injury and annoyance of the citizens and subjects of other states, on board their own vessels, on the high seas.

Every merchant-vessel on the seas is rightfully considered as part of the territory of the country to which it belongs. The entry, therefore, into such vessel, being neutral, by a belligerent, is an act of force, and is, prima facie, a wrong, a trespass, which can be justified only when done for some purpose allowed to form a sufficient justification by the law of nations. But a British cruiser enters an American merchant-vessel in order to take therefrom supposed British subjects; offering no justification, therefore, under the law of nations, but claiming the right under the law of England respecting the king's prerogative. This cannot be defended. English soil, English territory, English jurisdiction, is the appropriate sphere for the operation of English law. The ocean is the sphere of the law of nations; and any merchant-vessel on the seas is by that law under the protection of the laws of her own nation, and may claim immunity, unless in cases in which that law allows her to be entered or visited.

If this notion of perpetual allegiance, and the consequent power of the prerogative, was the law of the world; if it formed part of the conventional code of nations, and was usually practised, like the right of visiting neutral ships, for the purpose of discovering and seizing enemy's property, then impressment might be defended as a common right, and there would be no remedy for the evil till the national code should be altered. But this is by no means the case. There is no such principle incorporated into the code of nations. The doctrine stands only as English law, not as a national law; and English law cannot be of force beyond English dominion. Whatever duties or relations that law creates between the sovereign and his subjects can be enforced and maintained only within the realm, or proper possessions or territory of the sovereign. There may be quite as just a prerogative right to the property of subjects as to their personal services, in an exigency of the state; but no government thinks of controlling by its own laws property of its subjects situated abroad; much less does any government think of entering the territory of another power for the purpose of seizing such property and applying it to its own uses. As laws, the prerogatives of the crown of England have no obligation on persons or property domiciled or situated abroad.

"When, therefore," says an authority not unknown or unregarded on either side of the Atlantic, "we speak of the right of a state to bind its own native subjects everywhere, we speak only of its own claim and exercise of sovereignty over them when they return within its own territorial jurisdiction, and not of its right to compel or require obedience to such laws, on the part of other nations, within their own territorial sovereignty. On the contrary, every nation has an exclusive right to regulate persons and things within its own territory, according to its sovereign will and public polity."

The good sense of these principles, their remarkable pertinency to the subject now under consideration, and the extraordinary consequences resulting from the British doctrine, are signally manifested by that which we see taking place every day. England acknowledges herself overburdened with population of the poorer classes. Every instance of the emigration of persons of those classes is regarded by her as a benefit. England, therefore, encourages emigration; means are notoriously supplied to emigrants, to assist their conveyance, from public funds; and the New World, and most especially these United States, receive the many thousands of her subjects thus ejected from the bosom of their native land by the necessities of their condition. They come away from poverty and distress in over-crowded cities, to seek employment, comfort, and new homes in a country of free institutions, possessed by a kindred race, speaking their own language, and having laws and usages in many respects like those to which they have been accustomed; and a country which, upon the whole, is found to possess more attractions for persons of their character and condition than any other on the face of the globe. It is stated that, in the quarter of the year ending with June last, more than twenty-six thousand emigrants left the single port of Liverpool for the United States, being four or five times as many as left the same port within the same period for the British colonies and all other parts of the world. Of these crowds of emigrants, many arrive in our cities in circumstances of great destitution, and the charities of the country, both public and private, are severely taxed to relieve their immediate wants. In time they mingle with the new community in which they find themselves, and seek means of living. Some find employment in the cities, others go to the frontiers, to cultivate lands reclaimed from the forest; and a greater or less number of the residue, becoming in time naturalized citizens, enter into the merchant service under the flag of their adopted country.

Now, my Lord, if war should break out between England and a European power, can any thing be more unjust, any thing more irreconcilable to the general sentiments of mankind, than that England should seek out these persons, thus encouraged by her and compelled by their own condition to leave their native homes, tear them away from their new employments, their new political relations, and their domestic connections, and force them to undergo the dangers and hardships of military service for a country which has thus ceased to be their own country? Certainly, certainly, my Lord, there can be but one answer to this question. Is it not far more reasonable that England should either prevent such emigration of her subjects, or that, if she encourage and promote it, she should leave them, not to the embroilment of a double and contradictory allegiance, but to their own voluntary choice, to form such relations, political or social, as they see fit in the country where they are to find their bread, and to the laws and institutions of which they are to look for defence and protection?

A question of such serious importance ought now to be put at rest. If the United States give shelter and protection to those whom the policy of England annually casts upon their shores; if, by the benign influences of their government and institutions, and by the happy condition of the country, those emigrants become raised from poverty to comfort, finding it easy even to become land-holders, and being allowed to partake in the enjoyment of all civil rights; if all this may be done, (and all this is done, under the countenance and encouragement of England herself,) is it not high time that, yielding that which had its origin in feudal ideas as inconsistent with the present state of society, and especially with the intercourse and relations subsisting between the Old World and the New, England should at length formally disclaim all right to the services of such persons, and renounce all control over their conduct?

But impressment is subject to objections of a much wider range. If it could be justified in its application to those who are declared to be its only objects, it still remains true that, in its exercise, it touches the political rights of other governments, and endangers the security of their own native subjects and citizens. The sovereignty of the state is concerned in maintaining its exclusive jurisdiction and possession over its merchant-ships on the seas, except so far as the law of nations justifies intrusion upon that possession for special purposes; and all experience has shown, that no member of a crew, wherever born, is safe against impressment when a ship is visited.

The evils and injuries resulting from the actual practice can hardly be overstated, and have ever proved themselves to be such as should lead to its relinquishment, even if it were founded in any defensible principle. The difficulty of discriminating between English subjects and American citizens has always been found to be great, even when an honest purpose of discrimination has existed. But the lieutenant of a man-of-war, having necessity for men, is apt to be a summary judge, and his decisions will be quite as significant of his own wants and his own power as of the truth and justice of the case. An extract from a letter of Mr. King, of the 13th of April, 1797, to the American Secretary of State, shows something of the enormous extent of these wrongful seizures.

"Instead of a few, and these in many instances equivocal cases, I have," says he, "since the month of July past, made application for the discharge from British men-of-war of two hundred and seventy-one seamen, who, stating themselves to be Americans, have claimed my interference. Of this number, eighty-six have been ordered by the Admiralty to be discharged, thirty-seven more have been detained as British subjects or as American volunteers, or for want of proof that they are Americans, and to my applications for the discharge of the remaining one hundred and forty-eight I have received no answer; the ships on board of which these seamen were detained having, in many instances, sailed before an examination was made in consequence of my application.

"It is certain that some of those who have applied to me are not American citizens, but the exceptions are, in my opinion, few, and the evidence, exclusive of certificates, has been such as, in most cases, to satisfy me that the applicants were real Americans, who have been forced into the British service, and who, with singular constancy, have generally persevered in refusing pay or bounty, though in some instances they have been in service more than two years."

But the injuries of impressment are by no means confined to its immediate subjects, or the individuals on whom it is practised. Vessels suffer from the weakening of their crews, and voyages are often delayed, and not unfrequently broken up, by subtraction from the number of necessary hands by impressment. And what is of still greater and more general moment, the fear of impressment has been found to create great difficulty in obtaining sailors for the American merchant service in times of European war. Seafaring men, otherwise inclined to enter into that service, are, as experience has shown, deterred by the fear of finding themselves ere long in compulsory military service in British ships of war. Many instances have occurred, fully established by proof, in which raw seamen, natives of the United States, fresh from the fields of agriculture, entering for the first time on shipboard, have been impressed before they made the land, placed on the decks of British men-of-war, and compelled to serve for years before they could obtain their release, or revisit their country and their homes. Such instances become known, and their effect in discouraging young men from engaging in the merchant service of their country can neither be doubted nor wondered at. More than all, my Lord, the practice of impressment, whenever it has existed, has produced, not conciliation and good feeling, but resentment, exasperation, and animosity between the two great commercial countries of the world.

In the calm and quiet which have succeeded the late war, a condition so favorable for dispassionate consideration, England herself has evidently seen the harshness of impressment, even when exercised on seamen in her own merchant service, and she has adopted measures calculated, if not to renounce the power or to abolish the practice, yet at least to supersede its necessity by other means of manning the royal navy more compatible with justice and the rights of individuals, and far more conformable to the spirit and sentiments of the age.

Under these circumstances, the government of the United States has used the occasion of your Lordship's pacific mission to review this whole subject, and to bring it to your notice and that of your government. It has reflected on the past, pondered the condition of the present, and endeavored to anticipate, so far as might be in its power, the probable future; and I am now to communicate to your Lordship the result of these deliberations.

The American government, then, is prepared to say that the practice of impressing seamen from American vessels cannot hereafter be allowed to take place. That practice is founded on principles which it does not recognize, and is invariably attended by consequences so unjust, so injurious, and of such formidable magnitude, as cannot be submitted to.

In the early disputes between the two governments on this so long contested topic, the distinguished person to whose hands were first intrusted the seals of this department * declared, that "the simplest rule will be, that the vessel being American shall be evidence that the seamen on board are such."

Fifty years' experience, the utter failure of many negotiations, and a careful reconsideration, now had, of the whole subject, at a moment when the passions are laid, and no present interest or emergency exists to bias the judgment, have fully convinced this government that this is not only the simplest and best, but the only rule, which can be adopted and observed, consistently with the rights and honor of the United States and the security of their citizens. That rule announces, therefore, what will hereafter be the principle maintained by their government. In every regularly-documented American merchant-vessel the crew who navigate it will find their protection in the flag which is over them.

This announcement is not made, my Lord, to revive useless recollections of the past, nor to stir the embers from fires which have been, in a great degree, smothered by many years of peace. Far otherwise. Its purpose is to extinguish those fires effectually, before new incidents arise to fan them into flame. The communication is in the spirit of peace, and for the sake of peace, and springs from a deep and conscientious conviction that high interests of both nations require this so long contested and controverted subject now to be finally put to rest. I persuade myself that you will do justice to this frank and sincere avowal of motives, and that you will communicate your sentiments in this respect to your government.

* Mr. Jefferson.

This letter closes, my Lord, on my part, our official correspondence; and I gladly use the occasion to offer you the assurance of my high and sincere regard.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

LORD ASHBURTON, &c., &c., &c.

Lord Ashburton to Mr. Webster.

Washington, August 9, 1842.

SIR, — The note you did me the honor of addressing me the 8th instant, on the subject of impressment, shall be transmitted without delay to my government, and will, you may be assured, receive from them the deliberate attention which its importance deserves.

The object of my mission was mainly the settlement of existing subjects of difference; and no differences have or could have arisen of late years with respect to impressment, because the practice has, since the peace, wholly ceased, and cannot, consistently with existing laws and regulations for manning her Majesty's navy, be, under the present circumstances, renewed.

Desirous, however, of looking far forward into futurity to anticipate even possible causes of disagreement, and sensible of the anxiety of the American people on this grave subject of past irritation, I should be sorry in any way to discourage the attempt at some settlement of it; and, although without authority to enter upon it here during the limited continuance of my mission, I entertain a confident hope that this task may be accomplished, when undertaken with the spirit of candor and conciliation which has marked all our late negotiations.

It not being our intention to endeavor now to come to any agreement on this subject, I may be permitted to abstain from noticing at length your very ingenious arguments relating to it, and from discussing the graver matters of constitutional and international law growing out of them. These sufficiently show that the question is one requiring calm consideration; though I must, at the same time, admit that they prove a strong necessity of some settlement for the preservation of that good understanding which, I trust, we may flatter ourselves that our joint labors have now succeeded in establishing

I am well aware that the laws of our two countries maintain opposite principles respecting allegiance to the sovereign.

America, receiving every year by thousands the emigrants of Europe, maintains the doctrine suitable to her condition, of the right of transferring allegiance at will. The laws of Great Britain have maintained from all time the opposite doctrine. The duties of allegiance are held to be indefeasible; and it is believed that this doctrine, under various modifications, prevails in most, if not in all, the civilized states of Europe.

Emigration, the modern mode by which the population of the world peaceably finds its level, is for the benefit of all, and eminently for the benefit of humanity The fertile deserts of America are gradually advancing to the highest state of cultivation and production, while the emigrant acquires comfort which his own confined home could not afford him.

If there were any thing in our laws or our practice on either side tending to impede this march of providential humanity, we could not be too eager to provide a remedy; but as this does not appear to be the case, we may safely leave this part of the subject without indulging in abstract speculations having no material practical application to matters in discussion between us.

But it must be admitted that a serious practical question does arise, or, rather, has existed, from practices formerly attending the mode of manning the British navy in times of war. The principle is, that all subjects of the crown are, in case of necessity, bound to serve their country, and the seafaring man is naturally taken for the naval service. This is not, as is sometimes supposed, any arbitrary principle of monarchical government, but one founded on the natural duty of every man to defend the life of his country; and all the analogy of your laws would lead to the conclusion, that the same principle would hold good in the United States if their geographical position did not make its application unnecessary.

The very anomalous condition of the two countries with relation to each other here creates a serious difficulty. Our people are not distinguishable; and, owing to the peculiar habits of sailors, our vessels are very generally manned from a common stock. It is difficult, under these circumstances, to execute laws which at times have been thought to be essential for the existence of the country, without risk of injury to others. The extent and importance of those injuries, however, are so formida ble, that it is admitted that some remedy should, if possible, be applied; at all events, it must be fairly and honestly attempted. It is true, that during the continuance of peace no practical grievance can arise; but it is also true, that it is for that reason the proper season for the calm and deliberate consideration of an important subject. I have much reason to hope that a satisfactory arrangement respecting it may be made, so as to set at rest all apprehension and anxiety; and I will only further repeat the assurance of the sincere disposition of my government favorably to consider all matters having for their object the promoting and maintaining undisturbed kind and friendly feelings with the United States.

I beg, Sir, on this occasion of closing the correspondence with you connected with my mission, to express the satisfaction I feel at its successful termination, and to assure you of my high consideration and personal esteem and regard.

ASHBURTON.

HON. DANIEL WEBSTER, &c., &c., &c.

THE RIGHT OF SEARCH.

Mr. Webster to the President of the United States.

Department of State, Washington, February 26, 1843.

The Secretary of State, to whom has been referred a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 22d instant, requesting that the President of the United States "communicate to that house, if not in his opinion improper, whatever correspondence or communication may have been received from the British government respecting the President's construction of the late treaty concluded at Washington, as it concerns an alleged right to visit American vessels," has the honor to report to the President that Mr. Fox, her Britannic Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, came to the Department of State on the 24th instant, and informed the Secretary that he had received from Lord Aberdeen, her Majesty's principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, a despatch, under date of the 18th of January, which he was directed to read to the Secretary of State of the United States.

The substance of the despatch was, that there was a statement in a paragraph of the President's message to Congress, at the opening of the present session, of serious import, because, to persons unacquainted with the facts, it would tend to convey the supposition, not only that the question of the right of search had been disavowed by the plenipotentiary at Washington, but that Great Britain had made concessions on that point.

That the President knew that the right of search never formed the subject of discussion during the late negotiation, and that neither was any concession required by the United States government, nor made by Great Britain.

That the engagement entered into by the parties to the treaty of Washington for suppressing the African slave-trade was unconditionally proposed and agreed to.

That the British government saw in it an attempt, on the part of the government of the United States, to give a practical effect to their repeated declarations against that trade, and recognized with satisfaction an advance toward the humane and enlightened policy of all Christian states, from which they anticipated much good. That Great Britain would scrupulously fulfil the conditions of this engagement, but that from the principles which she has constantly asserted, and which are recorded in the correspondence between the ministers of the United States in England and herself in 1841, England had not receded, and would not recede. That he had no intention to renew, at present, the discussion upon the subject. That his last note was yet unanswered. That the President might be assured that Great Britain would always respect the just claims of the United States. That the British government made no pretension to interfere in any manner whatever, either by detention, visit, or search, with vessels of the United States, known or believed to be such; but that it still maintained, and would exercise when necessary, its own right to ascertain the genuineness of any flag which a suspected vessel might bear; that if, in the exercise of this right, either from involuntary error, or in spite of every precaution, loss or injury should be sustained, a prompt reparation would be afforded; but that it should entertain, for a single instant, the notion of abandoning the right itself, would be quite impossible.

That these observations had been rendered necessary by the message to Congress. That the President is undoubtedly at liberty to address that assembly in any terms which he may think proper; but if the Queen's servants should not deem it expedient to advise her Majesty also to advert to these topics in her speech from the throne, they desired, nevertheless, to hold themselves perfectly free, when questioned in Parliament, to give all such explanations as they might feel to be consistent with their duty and necessary for the elucidation of the truth.

The paper having been read, and its contents understood, Mr. Fox was told, in reply, that the subject would be taken into consideration, and that a despatch relative to it would be sent at an early day to the American minister in London, who would have instructions to read it to her Majesty's principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. Webster to Mr. Everett.

Department of State, Washington, March 28, 1843.

SIR, — I transmit to you with this despatch a message from the President of the United States to Congress, communicated on the 27th of February, and accompanied by a report made from this department to the President, of the substance of a despatch from Lord Aberdeen to Mr. Fox, which was by him read to me on the 24th ultimo.

Lord Aberdeen's despatch, as you will perceive, was occasioned by a passage in the President's message to Congress at the opening of its late session. The particular passage is not stated by his Lordship; but no mistake will be committed, it is presumed, in considering it to be that which was quoted by Sir Robert Peel and other gentlemen in the debate in the House of Commons, on the answer to the Queen's speech, on the 3d of February.

The President regrets that it should have become necessary to hold a diplomatic correspondence upon the subject of a communication from the head of the executive government to the legislature, drawing after it, as in this case, the further necessity of referring to observations made by persons in high and responsible stations, in debates of public bodies. Such a necessity, however, seems to be unavoidably incurred in consequence of Lord Aberdeen's despatch; for, although the President's recent message may be regarded as a clear exposition of his opinions on the subject, yet a just respect for her Majesty's government, and a disposition to meet all questions with promptness, as well as with frankness and candor, require that a formal answer should be made to that despatch.

The words in the message at the opening of the session which are complained of, it is supposed, are the following: "Although Lord Aberdeen, in his correspondence with the American envoys at London, expressly disclaimed all right to detain an American ship on the high seas, even if found with a cargo of slaves on board, and restricted the British pretension to a mere claim to visit and inquire, yet it could not well be discerned by the executive of the United States how such visit and inquiry could be made without detention on the voyage, and consequent interruption to the trade. It was regarded as the right of search, presented only in a new form and expressed in different words; and I therefore felt it to be my duty distinctly to declare, in my annual message to Congress, that no such concession could be made, and that the United States had both the will and the ability to enforce their own laws, and to protect their flag from being used for purposes wholly forbidden by those laws, and obnoxious to the moral censure of the world."

This statement would tend, as Lord Aberdeen thinks, to convey the supposition, not only that the question of the right of search had been disavowed by the British plenipotentiary at Washington, but that Great Britain had made concessions on that point.

Lord Aberdeen is entirely correct in saying that the claim of a right of search was not discussed during the late negotiation, and that neither was any concession required by this government, nor made by that of her Britannic Majesty.

The eighth and ninth articles of the treaty of Washington constitute a mutual stipulation for concerted efforts to abolish the African slave-trade. The stipulation, it may be admitted, has no other effects on the pretensions of either party than this: Great Britain had claimed as a right that which this government could not admit to be a right, and, in the exercise of a just and proper spirit of amity, a mode was resorted to which might render unnecessary both the assertion and the denial of such claim.

There probably are those who think that what Lord Aberdeen calls a right of visit, and which he attempts to distinguish from the right of search, ought to have been expressly acknowledged by the government of the United States. At the same time, there are those on the other side who think that the formal surrender of such right of visit should have been demanded by the United States as a precedent condition to the negotiation for treaty stipulations on the subject of the African slave-trade. But the treaty neither asserts the claim in terms, nor denies the claim in terms; it neither formally insists upon it, nor formally renounces it. Still, the whole proceeding shows that the object of the stipulation was to avoid such differences and disputes as had already arisen, and the serious practical evils and inconveniences which, it cannot be denied, are always liable to result from the practice which Great Britain had asserted to be lawful. These evils and inconveniences had been acknowledged by both governments. They had been such as to cause much irritation, and to threaten to disturb the amicable sentiments which prevailed between them. Both governments were sincerely desirous of abolishing the slave-trade; both governments were equally desirous of avoiding occasion of complaint by their respective citizens and subjects; and both governments regarded the eighth and ninth articles as effectual for their avowed purpose, and likely, at the same time, to preserve all friendly relations, and to take away causes of future individual complaints. The treaty of Washington was intended to fulfil the obligations entered into by the treaty of Ghent. It stands by itself; is clear and intelligible. It speaks its own language, and manifests its own purpose. It needs no interpretation, and requires no comment. As a fact, as an important occurrence in national intercourse, it may have important bearings on existing questions respecting the public law; and individuals, or perhaps governments, may not agree as to what these bearings really are. Great Britain has discussions, if not controversies, with other great European states upon the subject of visit or search. These states will naturally make their own commentary on the treaty of Washington, and draw their own inferences from the fact that such a treaty has been entered into. Its stipulations, in the mean time, are plain, explicit, and satisfactory to both parties, and will be fulfilled on the part of the United States, and, it is not doubted, on the part of Great Britain also, with the utmost good faith.

Holding this to be the true character of the treaty, I might, perhaps, excuse myself from entering into the consideration of the grounds of that claim of a right to visit merchant-ships for certain purposes, in time of peace, which Lord Aberdeen asserts for the British government, and declares that it can never surrender. But I deem it right, nevertheless, and no more than justly respectful toward the British government, not to leave the point without remark.

In his recent message to Congress, the President, referring to the language of Lord Aberdeen in his note to Mr. Everett of the 20th of December, 1841, and in his late despatch to Mr. Fox, says: "These declarations may well lead us to doubt whether the apparent difference between the two governments is not rather one of definition than of principle."

Lord Aberdeen, in his note to you of the 20th of December, says: "The undersigned again renounces, as he has already done in the most explicit terms, any right on the part of the British government to search American vessels in time of peace. The right of search, except when specially conceded by treaty, is a pure belligerent right, and can have no existence on the high seas during peace. The undersigned apprehends, however, that the right of search is not confined to the verification of the nationality of the vessel, but also extends to the object of the voyage and the nature of the cargo. The sole purpose of the British cruisers is to ascertain whether the vessels they meet with are really American or not. The right asserted has, in truth, no resemblance to the right of search, either in principle or practice. It is simply a right to satisfy the party who has a legitimate interest in knowing the truth, that the vessel actually is what her colors announce. This right we concede as freely as we exercise. The British cruisers are not instructed to detain American vessels under any circumstances whatever; on the contrary, they are ordered to abstain from all interference with them, be they slavers or otherwise. But where reasonable suspicion exists that the American flag has been abused for the purpose of covering the vessel of another nation, it would appear scarcely credible, had it not been made manifest by the repeated protestations of their representative, that the government of the United States, which has stigmatized and abolished the trade itself, should object to the adoption of such means as are indispensably necessary for ascertaining the truth."

And in his recent despatch to Mr. Fox his Lordship further says: "That the President might be assured that Great Britain would always respect the just claims of the United States. That the British government made no pretension to interfere in any manner whatever, either by detention, visit, or search, with vessels of the United States, known or believed to be such; but that it still maintained, and would exercise when necessary, its own right to ascertain the genuineness of any flag which a suspected vessel might bear; that if, in the exercise of this right, either from involuntary error, or in spite of every precaution, loss or injury should be sustained, a prompt reparation would be afforded; but that it should entertain, for a single instant, the notion of abandoning the right itself, would be quite impossible."

This, then, is the British claim, as asserted by her Majesty's government.

In his remarks in the speech already referred to, in the House of Commons, the first minister of the crown said: "There is nothing more distinct than the right of visit is from the right of search. Search is a belligerent right, and not to be exercised in time of peace, except when it has been conceded by treaty. The right of search extends not only to the vessel, but to the cargo also. The right of visit is quite distinct from this, though the two are often confounded. The right of search, with respect to American vessels, we entirely and utterly disclaim; nay, more, if we knew that an American vessel were furnished with all the materials requisite for the slave-trade, if we knew that the decks were prepared to receive hundreds of human beings within a space in which life is almost impossible, still we should be bound to let that American vessel pass on. But the right we claim is to know whether a vessel pretending to be American, and hoisting the American flag, be bonâ fide American."

The President's message is regarded as holding opinions in opposition to these.

The British government, then, supposes that the right of visit and the right of search are essentially distinct in their nature, and that this difference is well known and generally acknowledged; that the difference between them consists in their different objects and purposes: one, the visit, having for its object nothing but to ascertain the nationality of the vessel; the other, the search, by an inquisition, not only into the nationality of the vessel, but the nature and object of her voyage, and the true ownership of her cargo.

The government of the United States, on the other hand, maintains that there is no such well-known and acknowledged, nor, indeed, any broad and generic difference between what has been usually called visit, and what has been usually called search; that the right of visit, to be effectual, must come, in the end, to include search; and thus to exercise, in peace, an authority which the law of nations only allows in times of war. If such well-known distinction exists, where are the proofs of it? What writers of authority on public law, what adjudications in courts of admiralty, what public treaties, recognize it? No such recognition has presented itself to the government of the United States; but, on the contrary, it understands that public writers, courts of law, and solemn treaties have, for two centuries, used the words "visit" and "search" in the same sense. What Great Britain and the United States mean by the "right of search," in its broadest sense, is called by Continental writers and jurists by no other name than the "right of visit." Visit, therefore, as it has been understood, implies not only a right to inquire into the national character, but to detain the vessel, to stop the progress of the voyage, to examine papers, to decide on their regularity and authenticity, and to make inquisition on board for enemy's property, and into the business which the vessel is engaged in. In other words, it describes the entire right of belligerent visitation and search. Such a right is justly disclaimed by the British government in time of peace. They, nevertheless, insist on a right which they denominate a right of visit, and by that word describe the claim which they assert. It is proper, and due to the importance and delicacy of the questions involved, to take care that, in discussing them, both governments understand the terms which may be used in the same sense. If, indeed, it should be manifest that the difference between the parties is only verbal, it might be hoped that no harm would be done; but the government of the United States thinks itself not justly chargeable with excessive jealousy, or with too great scrupulosity in the use of words, in insisting on its opinion that there is no such distinction as the British government maintains between visit and search; and that there is no right to visit in time of peace, except in the execution of revenue laws or other municipal regulations, in which cases the right is usually exercised near the coast, or within the marine league, or where the vessel is justly suspected of violating the law of nations by piratical aggression; but, wherever exercised, it is a right of search.

Nor can the United States government agree that the term "right" is justly applied to such exercise of power as the British government thinks it indispensable to maintain in certain cases. The right asserted is a right to ascertain whether a merchant-vessel is justly entitled to the protection of the flag which she may happen to have hoisted, such vessel being in circumstances which render her liable to the suspicion, first, that she is not entitled to the protection of the flag; and secondly, that, if not entitled to it, she is, either by the law of England, as an English vessel, or under the provisions of treaties with certain European powers, subject to the supervision and search of British cruisers. And yet Lord Aberdeen says, "that if, in the exercise of this right, either from involuntary error, or in spite of every precaution, loss or injury should be sustained, a prompt reparation would be afforded."

It is not easy to perceive how these consequences can be admitted justly to flow from the fair exercise of a clear right. If injury be produced by the exercise of a right, it would seem strange that it should be repaired, as if it had been the effect of a wrongful act. The general rule of law certainly is, that, in the proper and prudent exercise of his own right, no one is answerable for undesigned injuries. It may be said that the right is a qualified right; that it is a right to do certain acts of force at the risk of turning out to be wrongdoers, and of being made answerable for all damages. But such an argument would prove every trespass to be matter of right, subject only to just responsibility. If force were allowed to such reasoning in other cases, it would follow that an individual's right in his own property was hardly more than a well-founded claim for compensation if he should be deprived of it. But compensation is that which is rendered for injury, and is not commutation, or forced equivalent, for acknowledged rights. It implies, at least in its general interpretation, the commission of some wrongful act.

But, without pressing further these inquiries into the accuracy and propriety of definitions and the use of words, I proceed to draw your attention to the thing itself, and to consider what these acts are which the British government insists its cruisers have a right to perform, and to what consequences they naturally and necessarily tend. An eminent member of the House of Commons* thus states the British claim, and his statement is acquiesced in and adopted by the first minister of the crown: —

"The claim of this country is for the right of our cruisers to ascertain whether a merchant-vessel is justly entitled to the protection of the flag which she may happen to have hoisted, such vessel being in circumstances which rendered her liable to the suspicion, first, that she was not entitled to the protection of the flag; and, secondly, if not entitled to it, she was, either under the law of nations or the provisions of treaties, subject to the supervision and control of our cruisers."

Now the question is, By what means is this ascertainment to be effected?

As we understand the general and settled rules of public law, in respect to ships of war sailing under the authority of their government, "to arrest pirates and other public offenders," there is no reason why they may not approach any vessels descried at sea for the purpose of ascertaining their real characters. Such a right of approach seems indispensable for the fair and discreet exercise of their authority; and the use of it cannot be justly deemed indicative of any design to insult or injure those they approach, or to impede them in their lawful commerce. On the other hand, it is as clear that no ship is, under such circumstances, bound to lie by or wait the approach of any other ship. She is at full liberty to pursue her voyage in her own way, and to use all necessary precautions to avoid any suspected sinister enterprise or hostile attack. Her right to the free use of the ocean is as perfect as that of any other ship. An entire equality is presumed to exist. She has a right to consult her own safety, but at the same time she must take care not to violate the rights of others. She may use any precautions dictated by the prudence or fears of her officers, either as to delay, or the progress or course of her voyage; but she is not at liberty to inflict injuries upon other innocent parties simply because of conjectural dangers.

But if the vessel thus approached attempts to avoid the vessel approaching, or does not comply with her commander's order to send him her papers for his inspection, nor consent to be visited or detained, what is next to be done? Is force to be used? And if force be used, may that force be lawfully repelled? These questions lead at once to the elemental principle, the essence of the British claim. Suppose the merchant-vessel be in truth an American vessel engaged in lawful commerce, and that she does not choose to be detained. Suppose she resists the visit. What is the consequence? In all cases in which the belligerent right of visit exists, resistance to the exercise of that right is regarded as just cause of condemnation, both of vessel and cargo. Is that penalty, or what other penalty, to be incurred by resistance to visit in time of peace? Or suppose that force be met by force, gun returned for gun, and the commander of the cruiser, or some of his seamen, be killed; what description of offence will have been committed? It would be said, in behalf of the commander of the cruiser, that he mistook the vessel for a vessel of England, Brazil, or Portugal; but does this mistake of his take away from the American vessel the right of self-defence? The writers of authority declare it to be a principle of natural law, that the privilege of self-defence exists against an assailant who mistakes the object of his attack for another whom he had a right to assail.

* Mr. Wood, now Sir Charles Wood, Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Lord Aberdeen cannot fail to see, therefore, what serious consequences might ensue, if it were to be admitted that this claim to visit, in time of peace, however limited or defined, should be permitted to exist as a strict matter of right; for if it exist as a right, it must be followed by corresponding duties and obligations, and the failure to fulfil those duties would naturally draw penal consequences after it, till ere long it would become, in truth, little less, or little other, than the belligerent right of search.

If visit or visitation be not accompanied by search, it will be in most cases merely idle. A sight of papers may be demanded, and papers may be produced. But it is known that slave-traders carry false papers, and different sets of papers. A search for other papers, then, must be made where suspicion justifies it, or else the whole proceeding would be nugatory. In suspicious cases, the language and general appearance of the crew are among the means of ascertaining the national character of the vessel. The cargo on board, also, often indicates the country from which she comes. Her log-books, showing the previous course and events of her voyage, her internal fitting up and equipment, are all evidences for her, or against her, on her allegation of character. These matters, it is obvious, can only be ascertained by rigorous search.

It may be asked, If a vessel may not be called on to show her papers, why does she carry papers? No doubt she may be called on to show her papers; but the question is, Where, when, and by whom? Not in time of peace, on the high seas, where her rights are equal to the rights of any other vessel, and where none has a right to molest her. The use of her papers is, in time of war, to prove her neutrality when visited by belligerent cruisers; and in both peace and war, to show her national character, and the lawfulness of her voyage, in those ports of other countries to which she may proceed for purposes of trade.

It appears to the government of the United States, that the view of this whole subject which is the most naturally taken is also the most legal, and most in analogy with other cases. British cruisers have a right to detain British merchantmen for certain purposes; and they have a right, acquired by treaty, to detain merchant-vessels of several other nations for the same purposes. But they have no right at all to detain an American merchant-vessel. This Lord Aberdeen admits in the fullest manner. Any detention of an American vessel by a British cruiser is therefore a wrong, a trespass; although it may be done under the belief that she was a British vessel, or that she belonged to a nation which had conceded the right of such detention to the British cruisers, and the trespass therefore an involuntary trespass. If a ship of war, in thick weather, or in the darkness of the night, fire upon and sink a neutral vessel, under the belief that she is an enemy's vessel, this is a trespass, a mere wrong; and cannot be said to be an act done under any right, accompanied by responsibility for damages. So if a civil officer on land have process against one individual, and through mistake arrest another, this arrest is wholly tortious; no one would think of saying that it was done under any lawful exercise of authority, subject only to responsibility, or that it was any thing but a mere trespass, though an unintentional trespass. The municipal law does not undertake to lay down beforehand any rule for the government of such cases; and as little, in the opinion of the government of the United States, does the public law of the world lay down beforehand any rule for the government of cases of involuntary trespasses, detentions, and injuries at sea; except that in both classes of cases law and reason make a distinction between injuries committed through mistake and injuries committed by design; the former being entitled to fair and just compensation, the latter demanding exemplary damages, and sometimes personal punishment. The government of the United States has frequently made known its opinion, which it now repeats, that the practice of detaining American vessels, though subject to just compensation if such detention afterward turn out to have been without good cause, however guarded by instructions, or however cautiously exercised, necessarily leads to serious inconvenience and injury. The amount of loss cannot be always well ascertained. Compensation, if it be adequate in the amount, may still necessarily be long delayed; and the pendency of such claims always proves troublesome to the governments of both countries. These detentions, too, frequently irritate individuals, cause warm blood, and produce nothing but ill effects on the amicable relations existing between the countries. We wish, therefore, to put an end to them, and to avoid all occasions for their recurrence.

On the whole, the government of the United States, while it has not conceded a mutual right of visit or search, as has been done by the parties to the quintuple treaty of December, 1841, does not admit that, by the law and practice of nations, there is any such thing as a right of visit, distinguished by well-known rules and definitions from the right of search.

It does not admit that visit of American merchant-vessels by British cruisers is founded on any right, notwithstanding the cruiser may suppose such vessel to be British, Brazilian, or Portuguese. We cannot but see that the detention and examination of American vessels by British cruisers has already led to consequences, and fear that, if continued, it would still lead to further consequences, highly injurious to the lawful commerce of the United States.

At the same time, the government of the United States fully admits that its flag can give no immunity to pirates, nor to any other than to regularly documented American vessels. It was upon this view of the whole case, and with a firm conviction of the truth of these sentiments, that it cheerfully assumed the duties contained in the treaty of Washington; in the hope that thereby causes of difficulty and difference might be altogether removed, and that the two powers might be enabled to act concurrently, cordially, and effectually for the suppression of a traffic which both regard as a reproach upon the civilization of the age, and at war with every principle of humanity and every Christian sentiment.

The government of the United States has no interest, nor is it under the influence of any opinions, which should lead it to desire any derogation of the just authority and rights of maritime power. But in the convictions which it entertains, and in the measures which it has adopted, it has been governed solely by a sincere desire to support those principles and those practices which it believes to be conformable to public law, and favorable to the peace and harmony of nations.

Both houses of Congress, with a remarkable degree of unanimity, have made express provisions for carrying into effect the eighth article of the treaty. An American squadron will immediately proceed to the coast of Africa. Instructions for its commander are in the course of preparation, and copies will be furnished to the British government; and the President confidently believes, that the cordial concurrence of the two governments in the mode agreed on will be more effectual than any efforts yet made for the suppression of the slave-trade.

You will read this despatch to Lord Aberdeen, and, if he desire it, give him a copy.

I am, Sir, &c., &c.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

EDWARD EVERETT, ESQ., &c., &c., &c.

As soon as it became known that the treaty of the 20th of December, 1841 (commonly called the quintuple treaty), had been signed by the five leading European powers, General Cass, at that time United States Minister in France, addressed a letter to M. Guizot, the French Minister for Foreign Affairs, which was of the nature of a protest against the said treaty. A copy of this letter, bearing date the 13th of February, 1842, was transmitted by General Cass to Mr. Webster, in a despatch of the 15th of the same month. To this communication the following reply was returned by Mr. Webster.

Mr. Webster to General Cass.

Department of State, Washington, April 5, 1842.

Sir, — By the arrival of the steam-packet at Boston, on the 27th day of last month, I had the honor to receive your several despatches down to the 26th of February. That vessel had been so long delayed on the passage to America, that, after the receipt here of the communications brought by her, there was not time to prepare answers in season to reach Boston before the time fixed for her departure on her return. The most I was able to do was to write a short note to Mr. Everett, to signify that the mail from London had come safe to hand.

The President has been closely attentive to recent occurrences in Europe connected with the treaty of the five powers, of which we received a copy soon after its signature in December. He has witnessed with especial interest the sentiments to which that treaty appears to have given rise in France, as manifested by the debates in the Chambers and the publications of the Parisian press; and he is now officially informed of the course which you felt it to be your duty to take, by the receipt of a copy of the letter addressed by you to M. Guizot, on the 13th of February.

When the President entered upon the duties of his present office in April of last year, a correspondence, as you know, had been long pending, and was still pending, in London, between the minister of the United States and her Britannic Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, respecting certain seizures and detentions of American vessels on the coast of Africa by armed British cruisers, and, generally, respecting the visitation and search of American vessels by such cruisers in those seas. A general approbation of Mr. Stevenson's note to the British minister in regard to this subject was soon after communicated to that gentleman, by the President's order, from this department. The state of things in England in the early part of last summer did not appear to favor a very active continuance or prosecution of this correspondence; and, as Mr. Stevenson had already received permission to return home, no new instructions were addressed to him.

Circumstances occurred, as you are aware, which delayed Mr. Everett's arrival at the post assigned to him as Minister to London; and, in the mean time, in the latter part of August the correspondence between Lord Palmerston and Mr. Stevenson was, somewhat unexpectedly, resumed, not only on the subject of the African seizures, but on other subjects.

Mr. Everett arrived in London only in the latter part of November; and, in fact, was not presented to the Queen until the 16th day of December. While we were waiting to hear of his appearance at his post, the session of Congress was fast approaching; and, under these circumstances, the President felt it to be his duty to announce, publicly and solemnly, the principles by which the government would be conducted in regard to the visitation and search of ships at sea. As one of the most considerable, commercial, and maritime states of the world, as interested in whatever may in any degree endanger or threaten the common independence of nations upon the seas, it was fit that this government should avow the sentiments which it has heretofore always maintained, and from which it cannot under any circumstances depart. You are quite too well acquainted with the language of the message, on which your letter is bottomed, to need its recital here. It expresses what we consider the true American doctrine, and that which will, therefore, govern us in all future negotiations on the subject.

While instructions for Mr. Everett were in the course of preparation, signifying to him in what manner it might be practicable to preserve the peace of the country consistently with the principles of the message, and yet so as to enable the government to fulfil all its duties, and meet its own wishes, and the wishes of the people of the United States, in regard to the suppression of the African slave-trade, it was announced that the English government had appointed Lord Ashburton as special minister to this country, fully authorized to treat of and definitely settle all matters in difference between the two countries. Of course, no instructions were forwarded to Mr. Everett respecting any of those matters. You perceive, then, that up to the present moment we rest upon the sentiments of the message; beyond the fair scope and purport of that document we are not committed on the one hand or on the other. We reserve to ourselves the undiminished right to receive or to offer propositions on the delicate subjects embraced in the treaty of the five powers, to negotiate thereupon as we may be advised, never departing from our principles, but desirous, while we carefully maintain all our rights to the fullest extent, of fulfilling our duties also as one of the maritime states of the world.

The President considers your letter to M. Guizot to have been founded, as it purports, upon the message delivered by him at the opening of the present session of Congress; as intending to give assurance to the French government that the principles of that message would be adhered to, and that the government of the United States would regret to see other nations, especially France, an old ally of the United States and a distinguished champion of the liberty of the seas, agree to any arrangement between other states which might in its influences produce effects unfavorable to this country, and to which arrangement, therefore, this country itself might not be able to accede.

The President directs me to say, that he approves your letter, and warmly commends the motives which animated you in presenting it. The whole subject is now before us here, or will be shortly, as Lord Ashburton arrived last evening; and, without intending to intimate at present what modes of settling this point of difference with England will be proposed, you may receive two proposition as certain:—

1st. That, in the absence of treaty stipulations, the United States will maintain the immunity of merchant-vessels on the seas to the fullest extent which the law of nations authorizes.

2d. That, if the government of the United States, animated by a sincere desire to put an end to the African slave-trade, shall be induced to enter into treaty stipulations for that purpose with any foreign power, those stipulations will be such as shall be strictly limited to their true and single object, such as shall not be embarrassing to innocent commerce, and such, especially, as shall neither imply any inequality, nor can tend in any way to establish such inequality, in their practical operations.

You are requested to communicate these sentiments to M. Guizot, at the same time that you signify to him the President's approbation of your letter; and are requested to add an expression of the sincere pleasure which it gives the President to see the constant sensibility of the French government to the maintenance of the great principles of national equality upon the ocean. Truly sympathizing with that government in abhor-rence of the African slave-trade, he appreciates the high motives and the comprehensive views of the true, permanent interest of mankind, which induces it to act with great caution in giving its sanction to a measure susceptible of interpretations, or of modes of execution, which might be in opposition to the independence of nations and the freedom of the seas.

I am, &c.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

LEWIS CASS, ESQ., &c., &c., &c.

THE TREATY OF WASHINGTON.

*President's Message, transmitting the Treaty of Washington to the Senate.

To the Senate of the United States:

I have the satisfaction to communicate to the Senate the results of the negotiations recently had in this city with the British minister special and extraordinary.

These results comprise, —

1st. A treaty to settle and define the boundaries between the territories of the United States and the possessions of her Britannic Majesty in North America, for the suppression of the African slave-trade, and the surrender of criminals, fugitive from justice, in certain cases.

2d. A correspondence on the subject of the interference of the colonial authorities of the British West Indies with American merchant-vessels driven by stress of weather, or carried by violence, into the ports of those colonies.

3d. A correspondence upon the subject of the attack and destruction of the steamboat "Caroline."

4th. A correspondence on the subject of impressment.

If this treaty shall receive the approbation of the Senate, it will terminate a difference respecting boundary, which has long subsisted between the two governments, has been the subject of several ineffectual attempts at settlement, and has sometimes led to great irritation, not without danger of disturbing the existing peace. Both the United States and the States more immediately concerned have entertained no doubt of the validity of the American title to all the territory which has been in dispute; but that title was controverted, and the government of the United States had agreed to make the dispute a subject of arbitration. One arbitration had been actually had, but had failed to settle the controversy; and it was found, at the commencement of last year, that a correspondence had been in progress between the two governments for a joint commission, with an ultimate reference to an umpire or arbitrator, with authority to make a final decision. That correspondence, however, had been retarded by various occurrences, and had come to no definite result when the special mission of Lord Ashburton was announced. This movement on the part of England afforded, in the judgment of the executive, a favorable opportunity for making an attempt to settle this long-existing controversy by some agreement or treaty, without further reference to arbitration. It seemed entirely proper, that, if this purpose were entertained, consultation should be had with the authorities of the States of Maine and Massachusetts. Letters, therefore, of which copies are herewith communicated, were addressed to the governors of those States, suggesting that commissioners should be appointed by each of them, respectively, to repair to this city and confer with the authorities of this government on a line by agreement or compromise, with its equivalents and compensations. This suggestion was met by both States in a spirit of candor and patriotism, and promptly complied with. Four commissioners on the part of Maine, and three on the part of Massachusetts, all persons of distinction and high character, were duly appointed and commissioned, and lost no time in presenting themselves at the seat of the government of the United States. These commissioners have been in correspondence with this government, during the period of the discussions; have enjoyed its confidence and freest communications; have aided the general object with their counsel and advice; and, in the end, have unanimously signified their assent to the line proposed in the treaty.

* This Message was written by Mr. Webster.

Ordinarily, it would be no easy task to reconcile and bring together such a variety of interests in a matter in itself difficult and perplexed; but the efforts of the government, in attempting to accomplish this desirable object, have been seconded and sustained by a spirit of accommodation and conciliation on the part of the States concerned, to which much of the success of these efforts is to be ascribed.

Connected with the settlement of the line of the northeastern boundary, so far as it respects the States of Maine and Massachusetts, is the continuation of that line along the Highlands to the northwesternmost head of Connecticut River. Which of the sources of that stream is entitled to this character has been matter of controversy, and is of some interest to the State of New Hampshire. The King of the Netherlands decided the main branch to be the northwesternmost head of the Connecticut. This did not satisfy the claim of New Hampshire. The line agreed to in the present treaty follows the Highlands to the head of Hall's Stream, and thence down that river, embracing the whole claim of New Hampshire, and establishing her title to one hundred thousand acres of territory more than she would have had by the decision of the King of the Netherlands.

By the treaty of 1783, the line is to proceed down the Connecticut River to the forty-fifth degree of north latitude, and thence west by that parallel till it strikes the St. Lawrence. Recent examinations having ascertained that the line heretofore received as the true line of latitude between those points was erroneous, and that the correction of this error would not only leave on the British side a considerable tract of territory heretofore supposed to belong to the States of Vermont and New York, but also Rouse's Point, the site of a military work of the United States, it has been regarded as an object of importance, not only to establish the rights and jurisdiction of those States up to the line to which they have been considered to extend, but also to comprehend Rouse's Point within the territory of the United States. The relinquishment by the British government of all the territory south of the line heretofore considered to be the true line, has been obtained; and the consideration for this relinquishment is to enure, by the provisions of the treaty, to the States of Maine and Massachusetts.

The line of boundary, then, from the source of the St. Croix to the St. Lawrence, as far as Maine and Massachusetts are concerned, is fixed by their own consent, and for considerations satisfactory to them; the chief of these considerations being the privilege of transporting the lumber and agricultural products grown and raised in Maine on the waters of the St. John and its tributaries down that river to the ocean, free from imposition or disability. The importance of this privilege, perpetual in its terms, to a country covered at present by pine forests of great value, and much of it capable hereafter of agricultural improvement, is not a matter upon which the opinion of intelligent men is likely to be divided.

So far as New Hampshire is concerned, the treaty secures all that she requires; and New York and Vermont are quieted to the extent of their claim and occupation. The difference which would be made in the northern boundary of these two States, by correcting the parallel of latitude, may be seen on Tanner's maps (1836), new atlas, maps Nos. 6 and 9.

From the intersection of the forty-fifth degree of north latitude with the St. Lawrence, and along that river and the lakes to the water communication between Lake Huron and Lake Superior, the line was definitely agreed on, by the commissioners of the two governments, under the sixth article of the treaty of Ghent. But between this last-mentioned point and the Lake of the Woods, the commissioners acting under the seventh article of that treaty found several matters of disagreement, and therefore made no joint report to their respective governments. The first of these was Sugar Island, or St. George's Island, lying in St. Mary's River, or the water communication between Lakes Huron and Superior. By the present treaty, this island is embraced in the territories of the United States. Both from soil and position, it is regarded as of much value.

Another matter of difference was the manner of extending the line from the point at which the commissioners arrived, north of Ile Royale, in Lake Superior, to the Lake of the Woods. The British commissioner insisted upon proceeding to Fond du Lac, at the southwest angle of the lake, and thence by the River St. Louis to the Rainy Lake. The American commissioner supposed the true course to be, to proceed by way of the Dog River. Attempts were made to compromise this difference, but without success. The details of these proceedings are found at length in the printed separate reports of the commissioners.

From the imperfect knowledge of this remote country at the date of the treaty of peace, some of the descriptions in that treaty do not harmonize with its natural features, as now ascertained. "Long Lake" is nowhere to be found under that name. There is reason for supposing, however, that the sheet of water intended by that name is the estuary at the mouth of Pigeon River. The present treaty, therefore, adopts that estuary and river, and afterward pursues the usual route across the height of land, by the various portages and small lakes, till the line reaches Rainy Lake; from which the commissioners agreed on the extension of it to its termination, in the northwest angle of the Lake of the Woods. The region of country on and near the shore of the lake, between Pigeon River on the north and Fond du Lac and the River St. Louis on the south and west, considered valuable as a mineral region, is thus included within the United States. It embraces a territory of four millions of acres, northward of the claim set up by the British commissioner under the treaty of Ghent. From the height of land at the head of Pigeon River, westerly to the Rainy Lake, the country is understood to be of little value, being described by surveyors, and marked on the map, as a region of rock and water.

From the northwest angle of the Lake of the Woods, which is found to be in latitude 45° 23′ 55″ north, existing treaties require the line to run due south to its intersection with the forty-fifth parallel, and thence along that parallel to the Rocky Mountains.

After sundry informal communications with the British minister upon the subject of the claims of the two countries to territory west of the Rocky Mountains, so little probability was found to exist of coming to any agreement on that subject at present, that it was not thought expedient to make it one of the subjects of formal negotiation, to be entered upon between this government and the British minister, as part of his duties under his special mission.

By the treaty of 1783, the line of division along the rivers and lakes, from the place where the forty-fifth parallel of north latitude strikes the St. Lawrence, to the outlet of Lake Superior, is invariably to be drawn through the middle of such waters, and not through the middle of their main channels. Such a line, if extended according to the literal terms of the treaty, would, it is obvious, occasionally intersect islands. The manner in which the commissioners of the two governments dealt with this difficult subject may be seen in their reports. But where the line, thus following the middle of the river or watercourse, did not meet with islands, yet it was liable sometimes to leave the only practicable navigable channel altogether on one side. The treaty made no provision for the common use of the waters by the citizens and subjects of both countries.

It has happened, therefore, in a few instances, that the use of the river in particular places would be greatly diminished to one party or the other, if, in fact, there was not a choice in the use of channels and passages. Thus, at the Long Sault in the St. Lawrence, a dangerous passage, practicable only for boats, the only safe run is between the Long Sault Islands and Barnhart's Island, all which belong to the United States on one side, and the American shore on the other. On the other hand, by far the best passage for vessels of any depth of water from Lake Erie into the Detroit River is between Bois Blanc, a British island, and the Canadian shore. So, again, there are several channels or passages, of different degrees of facility and usefulness, between several islands in the River St. Clair, at or near its entry into the lake of that name. In these three cases, the treaty provides that all the several passages and channels shall be free and open to the use of the citizens and subjects of both parties.

The treaty obligations subsisting between the two countries for the suppression of the African slave-trade, and the complaints made to this government within the last three or four years, many of them but too well founded, of the visitation, seizure, and detention of American vessels on that coast by British cruisers, could not but form a delicate and highly important part of the negotiations which have now been held.

The early and prominent part which the government of the United States has taken for the abolition of this unlawful and inhuman traffic is well known. By the tenth article of the treaty of Ghent, it is declared that the traffic in slaves is irreconcilable with the principles of humanity and justice, and that both his Majesty and the United States are desirous of continuing their efforts to promote its entire abolition; and it is thereby agreed that both the contracting parties shall use their best endeavors to accomplish so desirable an object. The government of the United States has, by law, declared the African slave-trade piracy; and at its suggestion other nations have made similar enactments. It has not been wanting in honest and zealous efforts, made in conformity with the wishes of the whole country, to accomplish the entire abolition of the traffic in slaves upon the African coast; but these efforts, and those of other countries directed to the same end, have proved, to a considerable degree, unsuccessful. Treaties are known to have been entered into some years ago between England and France, by which the former power, which usually maintains a large naval force on the African station, was authorized to seize, and bring in for adjudication, vessels found engaged in the slave-trade under the French flag.

It is known that, in December last, a treaty was signed in London by the representatives of England, France, Russia, Prussia, and Austria, having for its professed object a strong and united effort of the five powers to put an end to the traffic. This treaty was not officially communicated to the government of the United States, but its provisions and stipulations are supposed to be accurately known to the public. It is understood to be not yet ratified on the part of France.

No application or request has been made to this government to become party to this treaty; but the course it might take in regard to it has excited no small degree of attention and discussion in Europe, as the principle upon which it is founded, and the stipulations which it contains, have caused warm animadversions and great political excitement.

In my message at the commencement of the present session of Congress, I endeavored to state the principles which this government supports respecting the right of search and the immunity of flags. Desirous of maintaining those principles fully, at the same time that existing obligations should be fulfilled, I have thought it most consistent with the honor and dignity of the country, that it should execute its own laws, and perform its own obligations, by its own means and its own power. The examination or visitation of the merchant-vessels of one nation by the cruisers of another, for any purpose except those known and acknowledged by the law of nations, under whatever restraints or regulations it may take place, may lead to dangerous results. It is far better, by other means, to supersede any supposed necessity, or any motive, for such examination or visit. Interference with a merchant-vessel by an armed cruiser is always a delicate proceeding, apt to touch the point of national honor, as well as to affect the interests of individuals. It has been thought, therefore, expedient, not only in accordance with the stipulations of the treaty of Ghent, but at the same time as removing all pretext on the part of others for violating the immunities of the American flag upon the seas, as they exist and are defined by the law of nations, to enter into the articles now submitted to the Senate.

The treaty which I now submit to you proposes no alteration, mitigation, or modification of the rules of the law of nations. It provides simply that each of the two governments shall maintain on the coast of Africa a sufficient squadron to enforce, separately and respectively, the laws, rights, and obligations of the two countries for the suppression of the slave-trade.

Another consideration of great importance has recommended this mode of fulfilling the duties and obligations of the country. Our commerce along the western coast of Africa is extensive, and supposed to be increasing. There is reason to think that, in many cases, those engaged in it have met with interruptions and annoyances, caused by the jealousy and instigation of rivals engaged in the same trade. Many complaints on this subject have reached the government. A respectable naval force on the coast is the natural resort and security against further occurrences of this kind.

The surrender to justice of persons who, having committed high crimes, seek an asylum in the territories of a neighboring nation, would seem to be an act due to the cause of general justice, and properly belonging to the present state of civilization and intercourse. The British Provinces of North America are separated from the States of the Union by a line of several thousand miles; and along portions of this line the amount of population on either side is quite considerable, while the passage of the boundary is always easy.

Offenders against the law, on the one side, transfer themselves to the other. Sometimes, with great difficulty, they are brought to justice, but very often they wholly escape. A consciousness of immunity, from the power of avoiding justice in this way, instigates the unprincipled and reckless to the commission of offences; and the peace and good neighborhood of the border are consequently often disturbed.

In the case of offenders fleeing from Canada into the United States, the governors of States are often applied to for their surrender; and questions of a very embarrassing nature arise from these applications. It has been thought highly important, therefore, to provide for the whole case by a proper treaty stipulation. The article on the subject in the proposed treaty is carefully confined to such offences as all mankind agree to regard as heinous, and destructive of the security of life and property. In this careful and specific enumeration of crimes the object has been to exclude all political offences, or criminal charges arising from wars or intestine commotions. Treason, misprision of treason, libels, desertion from military service, and other offences of similar character, are excluded.

And, lest some unforeseen inconvenience or unexpected abuse should arise from the stipulation, rendering its continuance, in the opinion of one or both of the parties, not longer desirable, it is left in the power of either to put an end to it at will.

The destruction of the steamboat "Caroline" at Schlosser, four or five years ago, occasioned no small degree of excitement at the time, and became the subject of correspondence between the two governments. That correspondence, having been suspended for a considerable period, was renewed in the spring of the last year, but no satisfactory result having been arrived at, it was thought proper, though the occurrence had ceased to be fresh and recent, not to omit attention to it on the present occasion. It has only been so far discussed, in the correspondence now submitted, as it was accomplished by a violation of the territory of the United States. The letter of the British minister, while attempting to justify that violation upon the ground of a pressing and overruling necessity, admitting, nevertheless, that, even if justifiable, an apology was due for it, and accompanying this acknowledgment with assurances of the sacred regard of his government for the inviolability of national territory, has seemed to me sufficient to warrant forbearance from any further remonstrance against what took place, as an aggression on the soil and territory of the country.

On the subject of the interference of the British authorities in the West Indies, a confident hope is entertained that the correspondence which has taken place, showing the grounds taken by this government, and the engagements entered into by the British minister, will be found such as to satisfy the just expectation of the people of the United States.

The impressment of seamen from merchant vessels of this country by British cruisers, although not practised in time of peace, and therefore not at present a productive cause of difference and irritation, has, nevertheless, hitherto been so prominent a topic of controversy, and is so likely to bring on renewed contentions at the first breaking out of a European war, that it has been thought the part of wisdom now to take it into serious and earnest consideration. The letter from the Secretary of State to the British minister explains the grounds which the government has assumed, and the principles which it means to uphold. For the defence of these grounds, and the maintenance of these principles, the most perfect reliance is placed on the intelligence of the American people, and on their firmness and patriotism, in whatever touches the honor of the country, or its great and essential interest.

JOHN TYLER.

Washington, August 11, 1842.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

[A PROCLAMATION.]

Whereas, a treaty between the United States of America and her Majesty, the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, was concluded and signed by their plenipotentiaries, at Washington, on the ninth day of August, one thousand eight hundred and forty-two, which treaty is, word for word, as follows: —

A Treaty to settle and define the Boundaries between the Territories of the United States and the Possessions of her Britannic Majesty in North America; for the final Suppression of the African Slave-trade; and for the giving up of Criminals, fugitive from Justice, in certain Cases.

Whereas certain portions of the line of boundary between the United States of America and the British dominions in North America, described in the second article of the treaty of peace of 1783, have not yet been ascertained and determined, notwithstanding the repeated attempts which have been heretofore made for that purpose; and whereas it is now thought to be for the interest of both parties, that, avoiding further discussion of their respective rights arising in this respect under the said treaty, they should agree on a conventional line in said portions of the said boundary, such as may be convenient to both parties, with such equivalents and compensations as are deemed just and reasonable; and whereas, by the treaty concluded at Ghent, on the 24th day of December, 1814, between the United States and his Britannic Majesty, an article was agreed to and inserted, of the following tenor, viz.: "ARTICLE 10. Whereas the traffic in slaves is irreconcilable with the principles of humanity and justice; and whereas both his Majesty and the United States are desirous of continuing their efforts to promote its entire abolition, it is hereby agreed that both the contracting parties shall use their best endeavors to accomplish so desirable an object"; and whereas, notwithstanding the laws which have at various times been passed by the two governments, and the efforts made to suppress it, that criminal traffic is still prosecuted and carried on; and whereas the United States of America and her Majesty, the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, are determined that, so far as may be in their power, it shall be effectually abolished; and whereas it is found expedient for the better administration of justice and the prevention of crime within the territories and jurisdiction of the two parties, respectively, that persons committing the crimes hereinafter enumerated, and being fugitives from justice, should, under certain circumstances, be reciprocally delivered up: the United States of America and her Britannic Majesty, having resolved to treat on these several subjects, have for that purpose appointed their respective plenipotentiaries to negotiate and conclude a treaty; that is to say, the President of the United States has, on his part, furnished with full powers Daniel Webster, Secretary of State of the United States, and her Majesty, the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, has, on her part, appointed the Right Honorable Alexander Lord Ashburton, a peer of the said United Kingdom, a member of her Majesty's most honorable Privy Council, and her Majesty's Minister Plenipotentiary on a special mission to the United States, who, after a reciprocal communication of their respective full powers, have agreed to and signed the following articles: —

ARTICLE I.

It is hereby agreed and declared that the line of boundary shall be as follows: Beginning at the monument at the source of the River St. Croix, as designated and agreed to by the commissioners under the fifth article of the treaty of 1794, between the governments of the United States and Great Britain; thence north, following the exploring line run and marked by the surveyors of the two governments in the years 1817 and 1818, under the fifth article of the treaty of Ghent, to its intersection with the River St. John, and to the middle of the channel thereof; thence up the middle of the main channel of the said River St. John to the mouth of the River St. Francis; thence up the middle of the channel of the said River St. Francis, and of the lakes through which it flows, to the outlet of the Lake Pohenagamook: thence, southwesterly, in a straight line, to a point on the northwest branch of the River St. John, which point shall be ten miles distant from the main branch of the St. John, in a straight line, and in the nearest direction; but if the said point shall be found to be less than seven miles from the nearest point of the summit or crest of the highlands that divide those rivers which empty themselves into the River St. Lawrence from those which fall into the River St. John, then the said point shall be made to recede down the said northwest branch of the River St. John, to a point seven miles in a straight line from the said summit or crest; thence, in a straight line, in a course about south eight degrees west, to the point where the parallel of latitude of forty-six degrees twenty-five minutes north intersects the southwest branch of the St. John; thence, southerly, by the said branch, to the source thereof in the highlands, at the Metjarmette Portage; thence down along the said highlands which divide the waters which empty themselves into the River St. Lawrence from those which fall into the Atlantic Ocean, to the head of Hall's Stream; thence down the middle of said stream, till the line thus run intersects the only line of boundary surveyed and marked by Valentine and Collins, previously to the year 1774, as the forty-fifth degree of north latitude, and which has been known and understood to be the line of actual division between the States of New York and Vermont on one side, and the British Province of Canada on the other; and from said point of intersection, west, along the said dividing line, as heretofore known and understood, to the Iroquois or St. Lawrence River.

ARTICLE II.

It is moreover agreed, that from the place where the joint commissioners terminated their labors under the sixth article of the treaty of Ghent, to wit, at a point in the Neebish Channel, near Muddy Lake, the line shall run into and along the ship-channel between St. Joseph's and St. Tammany Islands, to the division of the channel at or near the head of St. Joseph's Island; thence, turning eastwardly and northwardly, around the lower end of St. George's or Sugar Island, and following the middle of the channel which divides St. George's from St. Joseph's Island; thence up the east Neebish Channel, nearest to St. George's Island, through the middle of Lake George; thence, west of Jonas's Island, into St. Mary's River, to a point in the middle of that river, about one mile above St. George's or Sugar Island, so as to appropriate and assign the said island to the United States; thence, adopting the line traced on the maps by the commissioners, through the River St. Mary and Lake Superior, to a point north of Ile Royale, in said lake, one hundred yards to the north and east of Ile Chapeau, which last-mentioned island lies near the northeastern point of Ile Royale, where the line marked by the commissioners terminates; and from the last-mentioned point, southwesterly, through the middle of the sound between Ile Royale and the northwestern mainland, to the mouth of Pigeon River, and up the said river to and through the North and South Fowl Lakes, to the lakes of the height of land between Lake Superior and the Lake of the Woods; thence along the water communication to Lake Saisaginaga, and through that lake; thence to and through Cypress Lake, Lac du Bois Blanc, Lac la Croix, Little Vermilion Lake, and Lake Namecan, and through the several smaller lakes, straits, or streams connecting the lakes here mentioned, to that point in Lac la Pluie, or Rainy Lake, at the Chaudière Falls, from which the commissioners traced the line to the most northwestern point of the Lake of the Woods; thence along the said line to the said most northwestern point, being in latitude forty-nine degrees twenty-three minutes fifty-five seconds north, and in longitude ninety-five degrees fourteen minutes thirty-eight seconds west from the observatory at Greenwich; thence, according to existing treaties, due south, to its intersection with the forty-ninth parallel of north latitude, and along that parallel to the Rocky Mountains; it being understood that all the water communications and all the usual portages along the line from Lake Superior to the Lake of the Woods, and also Grand Portage, from the shore of Lake Superior to the Pigeon River, as now actually used, shall be free and open to the use of the citizens and subjects of both countries.

ARTICLE III.

In order to promote the interests and encourage the industry of all the inhabitants of the countries watered by the River St. John and its tributaries, whether living within the State of Maine or the Province of New Brunswick, it is agreed that where, by the provisions of the present treaty, the River St. John is declared to be the line of boundary, the navigation of the said river shall be free and open to both parties, and shall in no way be obstructed by either; that all the produce of the forest, in logs, lumber, timber, boards, staves, or shingles, or of agriculture, not being manufactured, grown on any of those parts of the State of Maine watered by the River St. John, or by its tributaries, of which fact reasonable evidence shall, if required, be produced, shall have free access into and through the said river, and its said tributaries having their source within the State of Maine, to and from the seaport at the mouth of the said River St. John, and to and round the falls of the said river, either by boats, rafts, or other conveyance; that when within the Province of New Brunswick, the said produce shall be dealt with as if it were the produce of the said Province; that, in like manner, the inhabitants of the territory of the Upper St. John, determined by this treaty to belong to her Britannic Majesty, shall have free access to and through the river for their produce, in those parts where the said river runs wholly through the State of Maine: Provided always, That this agreement shall give no right to either party to interfere with any regulations not inconsistent with the terms of this treaty which the governments, respectively, of Maine or of New Brunswick may make respecting the navigation of the said river, where both banks thereof shall belong to the same party.

ARTICLE IV.

All grants of lands heretofore made by either party, within the limits of the territory which by this treaty falls within the dominions of the other party, shall be held valid, ratified, and confirmed to the persons in possession under such grants, to the same extent as if such territory had by this treaty fallen within the dominions of the party by whom such grants were made; and all equitable possessory claims, arising from a possession and improvement of any lot or parcel of land by the person actually in possession, or by those under whom such person claims, for more than six years before the date of this treaty, shall, in like manner, be deemed valid, and be confirmed and quieted by a release to the person entitled thereto of the title to such lot or parcel of land, so described as best to include the improvements made thereon; and in all other respects the two contracting parties agree to deal upon the most liberal principles of equity with the settlers actually dwelling upon the territory falling to them, respectively, which has hitherto been in dispute between them.

ARTICLE V.

Whereas, in the course of the controversy respecting the disputed territory on the northeastern boundary, some moneys have been received by the authorities of her Britannic Majesty's Province of New Brunswick, with the intention of preventing depredations on the forests of the said territory, which moneys were to be carried to a fund, called the "Disputed Territory Fund," the proceeds whereof, it was agreed, should be hereafter paid over to the parties interested, in the proportions to be determined by a final settlement of boundaries: it is hereby agreed, that a correct account of all receipts and payments on the said fund shall be delivered to the government of the United States, within six months after the ratification of this treaty; and the proportion of the amount due thereon to the States of Maine and Massachusetts, and any bonds or securities appertaining thereto, shall be paid and delivered over to the government of the United States; and the government of the United States agrees to receive for the use of, and pay over to, the States of Maine and Massachusetts, their respective portions of said fund; and further, to pay and satisfy said States, respectively, for all claims for expenses incurred by them in protecting the said heretofore disputed territory, and making a survey thereof in 1838; the government of the United States agreeing with the States of Maine and Massachusetts to pay them the further sum of three hundred thousand dollars, in equal moieties, on account of their assent to the line of boundary described in this treaty, and in consideration of the conditions and equivalents received therefor from the government of her Britannic Majesty.

ARTICLE VI.

It is furthermore understood and agreed, that for the purpose of running and tracing those parts of the line between the source of the St. Croix and the St. Lawrence River which will require to be run and ascertained, and for marking the residue of said line by proper monuments on the land, two commissioners shall be appointed, one by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and one by her Britannic Majesty; and the said commissioners shall meet at Bangor, in the State of Maine, on the first day of May next, or as soon thereafter as may be, and shall proceed to mark the line above described, from the source of the St. Croix to the River St. John; and shall trace on proper maps the dividing line along said river, and along the River St. Francis, to the outlet of the Lake Pohenagamook; and from the outlet of the said lake they shall ascertain, fix, and mark, by proper and durable monuments on the land, the line described in the first article of this treaty; and the said commissioners shall make to each of their respective governments a joint report or declaration, under their hands and seals, designating such line of boundary, and shall accompany such report or declaration with maps certified by them to be true maps of the new boundary.

ARTICLE VII.

It is further agreed, that the channels in the River St. Lawrence, on both sides of the Long Sault Islands, and of Barnhart Island; the channels in the River Detroit, on both sides of the island Bois Blanc, and between that island and both the American and Canadian shores; and all the several channels and passages between the various islands lying near the junction of the River St. Clair with the lake of that name, shall be equally free and open to the ships, vessels, and boats of both parties.

ARTICLE VIII.

The parties mutually stipulate that each shall prepare, equip, and maintain in service, on the coast of Africa, a sufficient and adequate squadron, or naval force of vessels, of suitable numbers and descriptions, to carry in all not less than eighty guns, to enforce, separately and respectively, the laws, rights, and obligations of each of the two countries, for the suppression of the slave-trade; the said squadrons to be independent of each other, but the two governments stipulating, nevertheless, to give such orders to the officers commanding their respective forces, as shall enable them most effectually to act in concert and coöperation, upon mutual consultation, as exigencies may arise, for the attainment of the true object of this article; copies of all such orders to be communicated by each government to the other, respectively.

ARTICLE IX.

Whereas, notwithstanding all efforts which may be made on the coast of Africa for suppressing the slave-trade, the facilities for carrying on that traffic and avoiding the vigilance of cruisers by the fraudulent use of flags, and other means, are so great, and the temptations for pursuing it, while a market can be found for slaves, so strong, as that the desired result may be long delayed, unless all markets be shut against the purchase of African negroes, the parties to this treaty agree that they will unite in all becoming representations and remonstrances with any and all powers within whose dominions such markets are allowed to exist; and that they will urge upon all such powers the propriety and duty of closing such markets effectually, at once and for ever.

ARTICLE X.

It is agreed that the United States and her Britannic Majesty shall, upon mutual requisitions by them, or their ministers, officers, or authorities, respectively made, deliver up to justice all persons who, being charged with the crime of murder, or assault with intent to commit murder, or piracy, or arson, or robbery, or forgery, or the utterance of forged papers, committed within the jurisdiction of either, shall seek an asylum, or shall be found, within the territories of the other: provided that this shall only be done upon such evidence of criminality as, according to the laws of the place where the fugitive or person so charged shall be found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial, if the crime or offence had there been committed; and the respective judges and other magistrates of the two governments shall have power, jurisdiction, and authority, upon complaint made under oath, to issue a warrant for the apprehension of the fugitive or person so charged, that he may be brought before such judges or other magistrates, respectively, to the end that the evidence of criminality may be heard and considered; and if, on such hearing, the evidence be deemed sufficient to sustain the charge, it shall be the duty of the examining judge or magistrate to certify the same to the proper executive authority, that a warrant may issue for the surrender of such fugitive. The expense of such apprehension and delivery shall be borne and defrayed by the party who makes the requisition and receives the fugitive.

Article XI.

The eighth article of this treaty shall be in force for five years from the date of the exchange of the ratifications, and afterward until one or the other party shall signify a wish to terminate it. The tenth article shall continue in force until one or the other of the parties shall signify its wish to terminate it, and no longer.

Article XII.

The present treaty shall be duly ratified, and the mutual exchange of ratifications shall take place in London, within six months from the date hereof, or earlier, if possible.

In faith whereof, we, the respective plenipotentiaries, have signed this treaty, and have hereunto affixed our seals.

Done, in duplicate, at Washington, the ninth day of August, anno Domini one thousand eight hundred and forty-two.

Daniel Webster. [seal.]

Ashburton. [seal.]

And whereas the said treaty has been duly ratified on both parts, and the respective ratifications of the same having been exchanged, to wit, at London, on the thirteenth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and forty-two, by Edward Everett, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States, and the Right Honorable the Earl of Aberdeen, her Britannic Majesty's principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, on the part of their respective governments:

Now, therefore, be it known, that I, John Tyler, President of the United States of America, have caused the said treaty to be made public, to the end that the same, and every clause and article thereof, may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof. In witness [L. S.] whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this tenth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-two, and of the independence of the United States the sixty-seventh.

JOHN TYLER.

By the President:
DANIEL WEBSTER, Secretary of State.

Vote of the Senate on the Final Question of Ratification, &c.

The treaty, having been communicated to the Senate by the President of the United States, by message of the 11th of August, 1842, was referred, on motion of Mr. Rives, to the Committee on Foreign Relations, of which committee Mr. Rives was chairman; it was reported from the committee without amendment on Monday, the 15th of August, and made the order of the day for Wednesday, the 17th, on which last day it was called up and discussed, as well as on the 19th and 20th. Several propositions to amend having been made and rejected, Mr. Rives, on the day last mentioned, submitted the following resolution: —

"Resolved (two thirds of the Senators present concurring), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty to settle and define the boundaries between the territories of the United States and the possessions of her Britannic Majesty in North America; for the final suppression of the African slave-trade; and for the giving up of criminals, fugitive from justice, in certain cases."

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the said resolution. On the question to agree thereto, it was determined in the affirmative, yeas 39, nays 9.

Those who voted in the affirmative were Messrs. Archer, Barrow, Bates, Bayard, Berrien, Calhoun, Choate, Clayton, Crafts, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Dayton, Evans, Fulton, Graham, Henderson, Huntington, Kerr, King, Mangum, Merrick, Miller, Morehead, Phelps, Porter, Preston, Rives, Sevier, Simmons, Smith of Indiana, Sprague, Tallmadge, Tappan, Walker, White, Woodbridge, Woodbury, Wright, Young.

Those who voted in the negative were Messrs. Allen, Bagby, Benton, Buchanan, Conrad, Linn, Smith of Connecticut, Sturgeon, Williams.

So the said resolution was agreed to.

Ordered, That the Secretary lay the said resolution before the President of the United States.

The bill for carrying into effect the treaty of Washington passed the House of Representatives on the 28th of February, 1843, by a vote of 137 yeas to 40 nays, and the Senate on the 2d of March, without a division, having been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations by Mr. Archer, then chairman of that committee, without amendment.

LETTERS TO GENERAL CASS ON THE TREATY OF WASHINGTON.*

Mr. Webster to General Cass.

Department of State, Washington, August 29, 1842.

Sir, — You will see by the inclosed the result of the negotiations lately had in this city between this department and Lord Ashburton. The treaty has been ratified by the President and Senate.

In communicating to you this treaty, I am directed by the President to draw your particular attention to those articles which relate to the suppression of the African slave-trade.

After full and anxious consideration of this very delicate subject, the government of the United States has come to the conclusion which you will see expressed in the President's message to the Senate accompanying the treaty.

Without intending or desiring to influence the policy of other governments on this important subject, this government has reflected on what was due to its own character and position, as the leading maritime power on the American continent, left free to make choice of such means for the fulfilment of its duties as it should deem best suited to its dignity. The result of its reflections has been, that it does not concur in measures which, for whatever benevolent purpose they may be adopted, or with whatever care and moderation they may be exercised, have yet a tendency to place the police of the seas in the hands of a single power. It chooses rather to follow its own laws with its own sanction, and to carry them into execution by its own authority. Disposed to act in the spirit of the most cordial concurrence with other nations for the suppression of the African slave-trade, that great reproach of our times, it deems it to be right, nevertheless, that this action, though concurrent, should be independent; and it believes that from this independence it will derive a greater degree of efficiency.

* These letters are subsequent in date to some of those which follow in this volume, but they are inserted here as pertaining to the treaty of Washington.

You will perceive, however, that, in the opinion of this government, cruising against slave-dealers on the coast of Africa is not all which is necessary to be done in order to put an end to the traffic. There are markets for slaves, or the unhappy natives of Africa would not be seized, chained, and carried over the ocean into slavery. These markets ought to be shut. And, in the treaty now communicated to you, the high contracting parties have stipulated "that they will unite, in all becoming representations and remonstrances, with any and all powers within whose dominions such markets are allowed to exist; and that they will urge upon all such powers the propriety and duty of closing such markets effectually, at once and for ever."

You are furnished, then, with the American policy in regard to this interesting subject. First, independent but cordially concurrent efforts of maritime states to suppress, as far as possible, the trade on the coast, by means of competent and well-appointed squadrons, to watch the shores and scour the neighboring seas. Secondly, concurrent, becoming remonstrance with all governments who tolerate within their territories markets for the purchase of African negroes. There is much reason to believe that, if other states, professing equal hostility to this nefarious traffic, would give their own powerful concurrence and coöperation to these remonstrances, the general effect would be satisfactory, and that the cupidity and crimes of individuals would at length cease to find both their temptation and their reward in the bosom of Christian states, and in the permission of Christian governments.

It will still remain for each government to revise, execute, and make more effectual its own municipal laws against its subjects or citizens who shall be concerned in, or in any way give aid or countenance to others concerned in this traffic.

You are at liberty to make the contents of this despatch known to the French government.

I have, &c.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

LEWIS CASS, ESQ., &c., &c., &c.

Mr. F. Webster to General Cass.

Department of State, Washington, October 11, 1842.

Sir, — I have to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 17th of September last, requesting permission to return home.

I have submitted the despatch to the President, and am by him directed to say, that although he much regrets that your own wishes should, at this time, terminate your mission to the court of France, where for a long period you have rendered your country distinguished service, in all instances to its honor and to the satisfaction of the government, and where you occupy so favorable a position, from the more than ordinary good intelligence which is understood to subsist between you, personally, and the members of the French government, and from the esteem entertained for you by its illustrious head; yet he cannot refuse your request to return once more to your home and your country, so that you can pay that attention to your personal and private affairs which your long absence and constant employment in the service of your government may now render most necessary.

I have, Sir, to tender you, on behalf of the President, his most cordial good wishes, and am, &c.

Fletcher Webster, Acting Secretary of State.

Lewis Cass, Esq., &c., &c., &c.

Mr. Webster to General Cass.

Department of State, Washington, November 14, 1842.

Sir, — I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 3d of October, brought by the "Great Western," which arrived at New York on the 6th instant.

It is probable you will have embarked for the United States before my communication can now reach you; but as it is thought proper that your letter should be answered, and as circumstances may possibly have occurred to delay your departure, this will be transmitted to Paris in the ordinary way.

Your letter has caused the President considerable concern. Entertaining a lively sense of the respectable and useful manner in which you have discharged, for several years, the duties of an important foreign mission, it occasions him real regret and pain, that your last official communication should be of such a character as that he cannot give to it his entire and cordial approbation.

It appears to be intended as a sort of protest, a remonstrance, in the form of an official despatch, against a transaction of the government to which you were not a party, in which you had no agency whatever, and for the results of which you were no way answerable. This would seem an unusual and extraordinary proceeding. In common with every other citizen of the republic, you have an unquestionable right to form opinions upon public transactions, and the conduct of public men; but it will hardly be thought to be among either the duties or the privileges of a minister abroad to make formal remonstrances and protests against proceedings of the various branches of the government at home, upon subjects in relation to which he himself has not been charged with any duty or partaken any responsibility.

The negotiation and conclusion of the treaty of Washington were in the hands of the President and Senate. They had acted upon this important subject according to their convictions of duty and of the public interest, and had ratified the treaty. It was a thing done; and although your opinion might be at variance with that of the President and Senate, it is not perceived that you had any cause of complaint, remonstrance, or protest, more than any other citizen who might entertain the same opinion.

In your letter of the 17th of September, requesting your recall, you observe: "The mail by the steam-packet which left Boston the 1st instant has just arrived, and has brought intelligence of the ratification of the treaties recently concluded with Great Britain. All apprehensions, therefore, of any immediate difficulties with that country are at an end, and I do not see that any public interest demands my further residence in Europe. I can no longer be useful here, and the state of my private affairs requires my presence at home. Under these circumstances, I beg you to submit to the President my wish for permission to retire from this mission, and to return to the United States without delay."

As you appeared at that time not to be acquainted with the provisions of the treaty, it was inferred that your desire to return home proceeded from the conviction that, inasmuch as all apprehensions of immediate differences with Great Britain were at an end, you would no longer be useful at Paris. Placing this interpretation on your letter, and believing, as you yourself allege, that your long absence abroad rendered it desirable for you to give some attention to your private affairs in this country, the President lost no time in yielding to your request, and, in doing so, signified to you the sentiments of approbation which he entertained for your conduct abroad. You may, then, well imagine the great astonishment which the declaration contained in your despatch of the 3d of October, that you could no longer remain in France honorably to yourself or advantageously to the country, and that the proceedings of this government had placed you in a false position, from which you could escape only by returning home, created in his mind.

The President perceives not the slightest foundation for these opinions. He cannot see how your usefulness as minister to France should be terminated by the settlement of difficulties and disputes between the United States and Great Britain. You have been charged with no duties connected with the settlement of these questions, or in any way relating to them, beyond the communication to the French government of the President's approbation of your letter of the 13th of February, written without previous instructions from this department. This government is not informed of any other act or proceeding of yours connected with any part of the subject, nor does it know that your official conduct and character have become in any other way connected with the question of the right of search; and that letter having been approved, and the French government having been so informed, the President is altogether at a loss to understand how you can regard yourself as placed in a false position. If the character or conduct of any one was to be affected, it could only be the character and conduct of the President himself. The government has done nothing, most assuredly, to place you in a false position. Representing your country at a foreign court, you saw a transaction about to take place between the government to which you were accredited and another power, which you thought might have a prejudicial effect on the interest of your own country. Thinking, as it is to be presumed, that the case was too pressing to wait for instructions, you presented a protest against that transaction, and our government approved your proceeding. This is your only official connection with the whole subject. If after this the President had sanctioned the negotiation of a treaty, and the Senate had ratified it, containing provisions in the highest degree objectionable, however the government might be discredited, your exemption from all blame and censure would have been complete. Having delivered your letter of the 13th of February to the French government, and having received the President's approbation of that proceeding, it is most manifest that you could be in no degree responsible for what should be done afterward, and done by others. The President, therefore, cannot conceive what particular or personal interest of yours was affected by the subsequent negotiation here, or how the treaty, the result of that negotiation, should put an end to your usefulness as a public minister at the court of France, or in any way affect your official character or conduct.

It is impossible not to see that such a proceeding as you have seen fit to adopt might produce much inconvenience, and even serious prejudice, to the public interests. Your opinion is against the treaty, a treaty concluded and formally ratified; and, to support that opinion, while yet in the service of the government, you put a construction on its provisions such as your own government does not put upon them, such as you must be aware the enlightened public of Europe does not put upon them, and such as England herself has not put upon them as yet, so far as we know.

It may become necessary hereafter to publish your letter, in connection with other correspondence of the mission; and although it is not to be presumed that you looked to such publication, because such a presumption would impute to you a claim to put forth your private opinions upon the conduct of the President and Senate, in a transaction finished and concluded, through the imposing form of a public despatch, yet, if published, it cannot be foreseen how far England might hereafter rely on your authority for a construction favorable to her own pretensions, and inconsistent with the interest and honor of the United States. It is certain that you would most sedulously desire to avoid any such attitude. You would be slow to express opinions, in a solemn and official form, favorable to another government, and on the authority of which opinions that other government might hereafter found new claims or set up new pretensions. It is for this reason, as well as others, that the President feels so much regret at your desire of placing your construction of the provisions of the treaty, and your objections to those provisions, according to your construction, upon the records of the government.

Before examining the several objections suggested by you, it may be proper to take notice of what you say upon the course of the negotiation. In regard to this, having observed that the national dignity of the United States had not been compromised down to the time of the President's message to the last session of Congress, you proceed to say: "But England then urged the United States to enter into a conventional arrangement, by which we might be pledged to concur with her in measures for the suppression of the slave-trade. Till then we had executed our own laws in our own way. But, yielding to this application, and departing from our former principle of avoiding European combinations upon subjects not American, we stipulated in a solemn treaty, that we would carry into effect our own laws, and fixed the minimum force we would employ for that purpose."

The President cannot conceive how you should have been led to adventure upon such a statement as this. It is but a tissue of mistakes. England did not urge the United States to enter into this conventional arrangement. The United States yielded to no application from England. The proposition for abolishing the slave-trade, as it stands in the treaty, was an American proposition; it originated with the executive government of the United States, which cheerfully assumes all its responsibility. It stands upon it as its own mode of fulfilling its duties, and accomplishing its objects. Nor have the United States departed, in this treaty, in the slightest degree, from their former principles of avoiding European combinations upon subjects not American, because the abolition of the African slave-trade is an American subject as emphatically as it is a European subject; and indeed more so, inasmuch as the government of the United States took the first great steps in declaring that trade unlawful, and in attempting its extinction. The abolition of this traffic is an object of the highest interest to the American people and the American government; and you seem strangely to have overlooked altogether the important fact, that nearly thirty years ago, by the treaty of Ghent, the United States bound themselves, by solemn compact with England, to continue "their efforts to promote its entire abolition," both parties pledging themselves by that treaty to use their best endeavors to accomplish so desirable an object.

Again, you speak of an important concession made to the renewed application of England. But the treaty, let it be repeated, makes no concession to England whatever. It complies with no demand, grants no application, conforms to no request. All these statements, thus by you made, and which are so exceedingly erroneous, seem calculated to hold up the idea, that in this treaty your government has been acting a subordinate, or even a complying part.

The President is not a little startled that you should make such totally groundless assumptions of fact, and then leave a discreditable inference to be drawn from them. He directs me not only to repel this inference as it ought to be repelled, but also to bring to your serious consideration and reflection the propriety of such an assumed narration of facts as your despatch, in this respect, puts forth.

Having informed the department that a copy of the letter of the 24th of August, addressed by me to you, had been delivered to M. Guizot, you proceed to say: "In executing this duty, I felt too well what was due to my government and country to intimate my regret to a foreign power that some declaration had not preceded the treaty, or some stipulation accompanied it, by which the extraordinary pretension of Great Britain to search our ships at all times and in all places, first put forth to the world by Lord Palmerston on the 27th of August, 1841, and on the 13th of October following again peremptorily claimed as a right by Lord Aberdeen, would have been abrogated, as equally incompatible with the laws of nations and with the independence of the United States. I confined myself, therefore, to a simple communication of your letter." It may be true that the British pretension leads necessarily to consequences as broad and general as your statement. But it is no more than fair to state that pretension in the words of the British government itself, and then it becomes matter of consideration and argument how broad and extensive it really is.

The last statement of this pretension, or claim, by the British government, is contained in Lord Aberdeen's note to Mr. Stevenson of the 13th of October, 1841. It is in these words: —

"The undersigned readily admits, that to visit and search American vessels in time of peace, when that right of search is not granted by treaty, would be an infraction of public law, and a violation of national dignity and independence. But no such right is asserted. We sincerely desire to respect the vessels of the United States, but we may reasonably expect to know what it really is that we respect. Doubtless the flag is primâ facie evidence of the nationality of the vessel; and, if this evidence were in its nature conclusive and irrefragable, it ought to preclude all further inquiry. But it is sufficiently notorious that the flags of all nations are liable to be assumed by those who have no right or title to bear them. Mr. Stevenson himself fully admits the extent to which the American flag has been employed for the purpose of covering this infamous traffic. The undersigned joins with Mr. Stevenson in deeply lamenting the evil; and he agrees with him in thinking that the United States ought not to be considered responsible for this abuse of their flag. But if all inquiry be resisted, even when carried no further than to ascertain the nationality of the vessel, and impunity be claimed for the most lawless and desperate of mankind in the commission of this fraud, the undersigned greatly fears that it may be regarded as something like an assumption of that responsibility which has been deprecated by Mr. Stevenson. . . . . .

"The undersigned renounces all pretension on the part of the British government to visit and search American vessels in time of peace. Nor is it as American that such vessels are ever visited; but it has been the invariable practice of the British navy, and, as the undersigned believes, of all navies in the world, to ascertain by visit the real nationality of merchant-vessels met with on the high seas, if there be good reason to apprehend their illegal character. . . . . .

"The undersigned admits, that, if the British cruiser should possess a knowledge of the American character of any vessel, his visitation of such vessel would be entirely unjustifiable. He further admits, that so much respect and honor are due to the American flag, that no vessel bearing it ought to be visited by a British cruiser, except under the most grave suspicions and well-founded doubts of the genuineness of its character.

"The undersigned, although with pain, must add, that if such visit should lead to the proof of the American origin of the vessel, and that she was avowedly engaged in the slave-trade, exhibiting to view the manacles, fetters, and other usual implements of torture, or had even a number of these unfortunate beings on board, no British officer could interfere further. He might give information to the cruisers of the United States, but it could not be in his own power to arrest or impede the prosecution of the voyage and the success of the undertaking.

"It is obvious, therefore, that the utmost caution is necessary in the exercise of this right claimed by Great Britain. While we have recourse to the necessary, and, indeed, the only means for detecting imposture, the practice will be carefully guarded and limited to cases of strong suspicion. The undersigned begs to assure Mr. Stevenson that the most precise and positive instructions have been issued to her Majesty's officers on this subject.

Such are the words of the British claim or pretension; and it stood in this form at the delivery of the President's message to Congress in December last; a message in which you are pleased to say that the British pretension was promptly met and firmly resisted.

I may now proceed to a more particular examination of the objections which you make to the treaty.

You observe that you think a just self-respect required of the government of the United States to demand of Lord Ashburton a distinct renunciation of the British claim to search our vessels previous to entering into any negotiation. The government has thought otherwise; and this appears to be your main objection to the treaty, if, indeed, it be not the only one which is clearly and distinctly stated. The government of the United States supposed that, in this respect, it stood in a position in which it had no occasion to demand any thing, or ask for any thing, of England. The British pretension, whatever it was, or however extensive, was well known to the President at the date of his message to Congress at the opening of the last session. And I must be allowed to remind you how the President treated this subject in that communication.

"However desirous the United States may be," said he, "for the suppression of the slave-trade, they cannot consent to interpolations into the maritime code at the mere will and pleasure of other governments. We deny the right of any such interpolation to any one, or all the nations of the earth, without our consent. We claim to have a voice in all amendments or alterations of that code; and when we are given to understand, as in this instance, by a foreign government, that its treaties with other nations cannot be executed without the establishment and enforcement of new principles of maritime police, to be applied without our consent, we must employ a language neither of equivocal import nor susceptible of misconstruction. American citizens prosecuting a lawful commerce in the African seas, under the flag of their country, are not responsible for the abuse or unlawful use of that flag by others; nor can they rightfully, on account of any such alleged abuses, be interrupted, molested, or detained while on the ocean; and if thus molested and detained while pursuing honest voyages in the usual way, and violating no law themselves, they are unquestionably entitled to indemnity."

This declaration of the President stands: not a syllable of it has been, or will be, retracted. The principles which it announces rest on their inherent justice and propriety, on their conformity to public law, and, so far as we are concerned, on the determination and ability of the country to maintain them. To these principles the government is pledged, and that pledge it will be at all times ready to redeem.

But what is your own language on this point? You say, "This claim (the British claim), thus asserted and supported, was promptly met and firmly repelled by the President in his message at the commencement of the last session of Congress; and in your letter to me approving the course I had adopted in relation to the question of the ratification by France of the quintuple treaty, you consider the principles of that message as the established policy of the government." And you add, "So far, our national dignity was uncompromitted." If this be so, what is there which has since occurred to compromit this dignity? You shall yourself be judge of this; because you say, in a subsequent part of your letter, that "the mutual rights of the parties are in this respect wholly untouched." If, then, the British pretension had been promptly met and firmly repelled by the President's message; if, so far, our national dignity had not been compromitted; and if, as you further say, our rights remain wholly untouched by any subsequent act or proceeding, what ground is there on which to found complaint against the treaty?

But your sentiments on this point do not concur with the opinions of your government. That government is of opinion that the sentiments of the message, which you so highly approve, are reaffirmed and corroborated by the treaty, and the correspondence accompanying it. The very object sought to be obtained, in proposing the mode adopted for abolishing the slave-trade, was to take away all pretence whatever for interrupting lawful commerce by the visitation of American vessels. Allow me to refer you, on this point, to the following passage in the message of the President to the Senate, accompanying the treaty: —

"In my message at the commencement of the present session of Congress, I endeavored to state the principles which this government supports respecting the right of search and the immunity of flags. Desirous of maintaining those principles fully, at the same time that existing obligations should be fulfilled, I have thought it most consistent with the dignity and honor of the country that it should execute its own laws and perform its own obligations by its own means and its own power. The examination or visitation of the merchant-vessels of one nation by the cruisers of another, for any purposes except those known and acknowledged by the law of nations, under whatever restraints or regulations it may take place, may lead to dangerous results. It is far better by other means to supersede any supposed necessity, or any motive, for such examination or visit. Interference with a merchant-vessel by an armed cruiser is always a delicate proceeding, apt to touch the point of national honor, as well as to affect the interests of individuals. It has been thought, therefore, expedient, not only in accordance with the stipulations of the treaty of Ghent, but at the same time as removing all pretext on the part of others for violating the immunities of the American flag upon the seas, as they exist and are defined by the law of nations, to enter into the articles now submitted to the Senate.

"The treaty which I now submit to you proposes no alteration, mitigation, or modification of the rules of the law of nations. It provides simply, that each of the two governments shall maintain on the coast of Africa a sufficient squadron to enforce, separately and respectively, the laws, rights, and obligations of the two countries for the suppression of the slave-trade."

In the actual posture of things, the President thought that the government of the United States, standing on its own rights and its own solemn declarations, would only weaken its position by making such a demand as appears to you to have been expedient. We maintain the public law of the world as we receive it and understand it to be established. We defend our own rights and our own honor, meeting all aggression at the boundary. Here we may well stop.

You are pleased to observe, that "under the circumstances of the assertion of the British claim, in the correspondence of the British secretaries, and of its denial by the President of the United States, the eyes of Europe were upon these two great naval powers; one of which had advanced a pretension, and avowed her determination to enforce it, which might at any moment bring them into collision."

It is certainly true that the attention of Europe has been very much awakened, of late years, to the general subject, and quite alive, also, to whatever might take place in regard to it between the United States and Great Britain. And it is highly satisfactory to find, that, so far as we can learn, the opinion is universal that the government of the United States has fully sustained its rights and its dignity by the treaty which has been concluded. Europe, we believe, is happy to see that a collision, which might have disturbed the peace of the whole civilized world, has been avoided in a manner which reconciles the performance of a high national duty, and the fulfilment of positive stipulations, with the perfect immunity of flags and the equality of nations upon the ocean. I must be permitted to add, that, from every agent of the government abroad who has been heard from on the subject, with the single exception of your own letter, (an exception most deeply regretted,) as well as from every part of Europe where maritime rights have advocates and defenders, we have received nothing but congratulation. And at this moment, if the general sources of information may be trusted, our example has recommended itself already to the regard of states the most jealous of British ascendency at sea; and the treaty against which you remonstrate may soon come to be esteemed by them as a fit model for imitation.

Toward the close of your despatch, you are pleased to say: "By the recent treaty we are to keep a squadron upon the coast of Africa. We have kept one there for years; during the whole term, indeed, of these efforts to put a stop to this most iniquitous commerce. The effect of the treaty is, therefore, to render it obligatory upon us, by a convention, to do what we have long done voluntarily; to place our municipal laws, in some measure, beyond the reach of Congress." Should the effect of the treaty be to place our municipal laws, in some measure, beyond the reach of Congress, it is sufficient to say that all treaties containing obligations necessarily do this. All treaties of commerce do it; and, indeed, there is hardly a treaty existing, to which the United States are party, which does not, to some extent, or in some way, restrain the legislative power. Treaties could not be made without producing this effect.

But your remark would seem to imply, that, in your judgment, there is something derogatory to the character and dignity of the country in thus stipulating with a foreign power for a concurrent effort to execute the laws of each. It would be a sufficient refutation of this objection to say, that, if in this arrangement there be any thing derogatory to the character and dignity of one party, it must be equally derogatory, since the stipulation is perfectly mutual, to the character and dignity of both. But it is derogatory to the character and dignity of neither. The objection seems to proceed still upon the implied ground that the abolition of the slave-trade is more a duty of Great Britain, or a more leading object with her, than it is or should be with us; as if, in this great effort of civilized nations to do away the most cruel traffic that ever scourged or disgraced the world, we had not as high and honorable, as just and merciful, a part to act, as any other nation upon the face of the earth. Let it be for ever remembered, that in this great work of humanity and justice the United States took the lead themselves. This government declared the slave-trade unlawful; and in this declaration it has been followed by the great powers of Europe. This government declared the slave-trade to be piracy; and in this, too, its example has been followed by other states. This government, this young government, springing up in this new world within half a century, founded on the broadest principles of civil liberty, and sustained by the moral sense and intelligence of the people, has gone in advance of all other nations in summoning the civilized world to a common effort to put down and destroy a nefarious traffic reproachful to human nature. It has not deemed, and it does not deem, that it suffers any derogation from its character or its dignity, if, in seeking to fulfil this sacred duty, it act, as far as necessary, on fair and equal terms of concert with other powers having in view the same praiseworthy object. Such were its sentiments when it entered into the solemn stipulations of the treaty of Ghent; such were its sentiments when it requested England to concur with us in declaring the slave-trade to be piracy; and such are the sentiments which it has manifested on all other proper occasions.

In conclusion, I have to repeat the expression of the President's deep regret at the general tone and character of your letter, and to assure you of the great happiness it would have afforded him if, concurring with the judgment of the President and Senate, concurring with what appears to be the general sense of the country, concurring in all the manifestations of enlightened public opinion in Europe, you had seen nothing in the treaty of the 9th of August to which you could not give your cordial approbation.

I have, &c.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

LEWIS CASS, ESQ., &c., &c., &c.

Mr. Webster to General Cass.

Department of State, Washington, December 20, 1842.

SIR, — Your letter of the 11th instant has been submitted to the President. He directs me to say, in reply, that he continues to regard your correspondence, of which this letter is part, as being quite irregular from the beginning. You had asked leave to retire from your mission; the leave was granted by the President, with kind and friendly remarks upon the manner in which you had discharged its duties. Having asked for this honorable recall, which was promptly given, you afterward addressed to this department your letter of the 3d of October, which, however it may appear to you, the President cannot but consider as a remonstrance, a protest, against the treaty of the 9th of August; in other words, an attack upon his administration for the negotiation and conclusion of that treaty. He certainly was not prepared for this. It came upon him with no small surprise, and he still feels that you must have been, at the moment, under the influence of temporary impressions, which he cannot but hope have ere now worn away.

A few remarks upon some of the points of your last letter must now close the correspondence.

In the first place, you object to my having called your letter of October 3d a "protest or remonstrance" against a transaction of the government, and observe that you must have been unhappy in the mode of expressing yourself, if you were liable to this charge.

What other construction your letter will bear, I cannot perceive. The transaction was finished. No letter or remarks of yourself, or any one else, could undo it, if desirable. Your opinions were unsolicited. If given as a citizen, then it was altogether unusual to address them to this department in an official despatch; if as a public functionary, the whole subject-matter was quite aside from the duties of your particular station. In your letter you did not propose any thing to be done, but objected to what had been done. You did not suggest any method of remedying what you were pleased to consider a defect, but stated what you thought to be reasons for fearing its consequences. You declared that there had been, in your opinion, an omission to assert American rights; to which omission you gave the department to understand that you would never have consented.

In all this there is nothing but protest and remonstrance; and, though your letter be not formally entitled such, I cannot see that it can be construed, in effect, as any thing else; and I must continue to think, therefore, that the terms used are entirely applicable and proper.

In the next place, you say: "You give me to understand that the communications which have passed between us on this subject are to be published, and submitted to the great tribunal of public opinion."

It would have been better if you had quoted my remark with entire correctness. What I said was, not that the communications which have passed between us are to be published, or must be published, but that "it may become necessary hereafter to publish your letter, in connection with other correspondence of the mission; and, although it is not to be presumed that you looked to such publication, because such a presumption would impute to you a claim to put forth your private opinions upon the conduct of the President and Senate, in a transaction finished and concluded, through the imposing form of a public despatch; yet, if published, it cannot be foreseen how far England might hereafter rely on your authority for a construction favorable to her own pretensions, and inconsistent with the interest and honor of the United States."

In another part of your letter you observe: "The publication of my letter, which is to produce this result, is to be the act of the government, and not my act. But if the President should think that the slightest injury to the public interest would ensue from the disclosure of my views, the letter may be buried in the archives of the department, and thus forgotten and rendered harmless."

To this I have to remark, in the first place, that instances have occurred in other times, not unknown to you, in which highly important letters from ministers of the United States, in Europe, to their own government, have found their way into the newspapers of Europe, when that government itself held it to be inconsistent with the interest of the United States to make such letters public.

But it is hardly worth while to pursue a topic like this.

You are pleased to ask: "Is it the duty of a diplomatic agent to receive all the communications of his government, and to carry into effect their instructions sub silentio, whatever may be his own sentiments in relation to them; or is he not bound, as a faithful representative, to communicate freely, but respectfully, his own views, that these may be considered, and receive their due weight, in that particular case, or in other circumstances involving similar considerations? It seems to me that the bare enunciation of the principle is all that is necessary for my justification. I am speaking now of the propriety of my action, not of the manner in which it was performed. I may have executed the task well or ill. I may have introduced topics unadvisedly, and urged them indiscreetly. All this I leave without remark. I am only endeavoring here to free myself from the serious charge which you bring against me. If I have misapprehended the duties of an American diplomatic agent upon this subject, I am well satisfied to have withdrawn, by a timely resignation, from a position in which my own self-respect would not permit me to remain. And I may express the conviction, that there is no government, certainly none this side of Constantinople, which would not encourage rather than rebuke the free expression of the views of their representatives in foreign countries."

I answer, certainly not. In the letter to which you were replying it was fully stated, that, "in common with every other citizen of the republic, you have an unquestionable right to form opinions upon public transactions and the conduct of public men. But it will hardly be thought to be among either the duties or the privileges of a minister abroad to make formal remonstrances and protests against proceedings of the various branches of the government at home, upon subjects in relation to which he himself has not been charged with any duty, or partaken any responsibility."

You have not been requested to bestow your approbation upon the treaty, however gratifying it would have been to the President to see that, in that respect, you united with other distinguished public agents abroad. Like all citizens of the republic, you are quite at liberty to exercise your own judgment upon that as upon other transactions. But neither your observations nor this concession cover the case. They do not show, that, as a public minister abroad, it is a part of your official functions, in a public despatch, to remonstrate against the conduct of the government at home in relation to a transaction in which you bore no part, and for which you were in no way answerable. The President and Senate must be permitted to judge for themselves in a matter solely within their control. Nor do I know that, in complaining of your protest against their proceedings in a case of this kind, any thing has been done to warrant, on your part, an invidious and unjust reference to Constantinople. If you could show, by the general practice of diplomatic functionaries in the civilized part of the world, and more especially, if you could show by any precedent drawn from the conduct of the many distinguished men who have represented the government of the United States abroad, that your letter of the 3d of October was, in its general object, tone, and character, within the usual limits of diplomatic correspondence, you may be quite assured that the President would not have recourse to the code of Turkey in order to find precedents the other way.

You complain that, in the letter from this department of the 14th of November, a statement contained in yours of the 3d of October is called a tissue of mistakes, and you attempt to show the impropriety of this appellation. Let the point be distinctly stated, and what you say in reply be then considered.

In your letter of October 3d you remark, that "England then urged the United States to enter into a conventional arrangement, by which we might be pledged to concur with her in measures for the suppression of the slave-trade. Until then, we had executed our own laws in our own way; but, yielding to this application, and departing from our former principle of avoiding European combinations upon subjects not American, we stipulated in a solemn treaty that we would carry into effect our own laws, and fixed the minimum force we would employ for that purpose."

The letter of this department of the 14th of November, having quoted this passage, proceeds to observe, that "the President cannot conceive how you should have been led to adventure upon such a statement as this. It is but a tissue of mistakes. England did not urge the United States to enter into this conventional arrangement. The United States yielded to no application from England. The proposition for abolishing the slave-trade, as it stands in the treaty, was an American proposition; it originated with the executive government of the United States, which cheerfully assumes all its responsibility. It stands upon it as its own mode of fulfilling its duties and accomplishing its objects. Nor have the United States departed in the slightest degree from their former principles of avoiding European combinations upon subjects not American; because the abolition of the African slave-trade is an American subject as emphatically as it is a European subject, and, indeed, more so, inasmuch as the government of the United States took the first great step in declaring that trade unlawful, and in attempting its extinction. The abolition of this traffic is an object of the highest interest to the American people and the American government; and you seem strangely to have overlooked altogether the important fact, that nearly thirty years ago, by the treaty of Ghent, the United States bound themselves, by solemn compact with England, to continue their efforts to promote its entire abolition; both parties pledging themselves by that treaty to use their best endeavors to accomplish so desirable an object."

Now, in answer to this, you observe in your last letter: "That the particular mode in which the governments should act in concert, as finally arranged in the treaty, was suggested by yourself, I never doubted. And if this is the construction I am to give to your denial of my correctness, there is no difficulty upon the subject. The question between us is untouched. All

I said was, that England continued to prosecute the matter; that she presented it for negotiation, and that we thereupon consented to its introduction. And if Lord Ashburton did not come out with instructions from his government to endeavor to effect some arrangement upon this subject, the world has strangely misunderstood one of the great objects of his mission, and I have misunderstood that paragraph in your first note, where you say that Lord Ashburton comes with full powers to negotiate and settle all matters in discussion between England and the United States. But the very fact of his coming here, and of his acceding to any stipulations respecting the slave-trade, is conclusive proof that his government were desirous to obtain the coöperation of the United States. I had supposed that our government would scarcely take the initiative in this matter, and urge it upon that of Great Britain, either in Washington or in London. If it did so, I can only express my regret, and confess that I have been led inadvertently into an error."

It would appear from all this, that that which, in your first letter, appeared as a direct statement of facts, of which you would naturally be presumed to have had knowledge, sinks at last into inferences and conjectures. But, in attempting to escape from some of the mistakes of this tissue, you have fallen into others. "All I said was," you observe, "that England continued to prosecute the matter; that she presented it for negotiation, and that we thereupon consented to its introduction." Now the English minister no more presented this subject for negotiation than the government of the United States presented it. Nor can it be said that the United States consented to its introduction in any other sense than it may be said that the British minister consented to it. Will you be good enough to review the series of your own assertions on this subject, and see whether they can possibly be regarded merely as a statement of your own inferences? Your only authentic fact is a general one, that the British minister came clothed with full power to negotiate and settle all matters in discussion. This, you say, is conclusive proof that his government was desirous to obtain the coöperation of the United States respecting the slave-trade; and then you infer that England continued to prosecute this matter, and presented it for negotiation, and that the United States consented to its introduction; and give to this inference the shape of a direct statement of a fact.

You might have made the same remarks, and with the same propriety, in relation to the subject of the "Creole," that of impressment, the extradition of fugitive criminals, or any thing else embraced in the treaty or in the correspondence, and then have converted these inferences of your own into so many facts. And it is upon conjectures like these, it is upon such inferences of your own, that you make the direct and formal statement in your letter of the 3d of October, that "England then urged the United States to enter into a conventional arrangement, by which we might be pledged to concur with her in measures for the suppression of the slave-trade. Until then, we had executed our own laws in our own way; but, yielding to this application, and departing from our former principle of avoiding European combinations upon subjects not American, we stipulated in a solemn treaty that we would carry into effect our own laws, and fixed the minimum force we would employ for that purpose."

The President was well warranted, therefore, in requesting your serious reconsideration and review of that statement.

Suppose your letter to go before the public unanswered and uncontradicted; suppose it to mingle itself with the general political history of the country, as an official letter among the archives of the Department of State, would not the general mass of readers understand you as reciting facts, rather than as drawing your own conclusions? as stating history, rather than as presenting an argument? It is of an incorrect narrative that the President complains. It is that, in your hotel at Paris, you should undertake to write a history of a very delicate part of a negotiation carried on at Washington, with which you had nothing to do, and of the history of which you had no authentic information; and which history, as you narrate it, reflects not a little on the independence, wisdom, and public spirit of the administration.

As of the history of this part of the negotiation you were not well informed, the President cannot but think it would have been more just in you to have refrained from any attempt to give an account of it.

You observe, further: "I never mentioned in my despatch to you, nor in any manner whatever, that our government had conceded to that of England the right to search our ships. That idea, however, pervades your letter, and is very apparent in that part of it which brings to my observation the possible effect of my views upon the English government. But in this you do me, though I am sure unintentionally, great injustice. I repeatedly state that the recent treaty leaves the rights of the parties as it found them. My difficulty is not that we have made a positive concession, but that we have acted unadvisedly in not making the abandonment of this pretension a previous condition to any conventional arrangement upon the general subject."

On this part of your letter I must be allowed to make two remarks.

The first is, inasmuch as the treaty gives no color or pretext whatever to any right of searching our ships, a declaration against such a right would have been no more suitable to this treaty than a declaration against the right of sacking our towns in time of peace, or any other outrage.

The rights of merchant-vessels of the United States on the high seas, as understood by this government, have been clearly and fully asserted. As asserted, they will be maintained; nor would a declaration such as you propose have increased either its resolution or its ability in this respect. The government of the United States relies on its own power, and on the effective support of the people, to assert successfully all the rights of all its citizens, on the sea as well as on the land; and it asks respect for these rights not as a boon or favor from any nation. The President's message, most certainly, is a clear declaration of what the country understands to be its rights, and his determination to maintain them, not a mere promise to negotiate for these rights, or to endeavor to bring other powers into an acknowledgment of them, either express or implied. Whereas, if I understand the meaning of this part of your letter, you would have advised that something should have been offered to England which she might have regarded as a benefit, but coupled with such a declaration or condition as that, if she received the boon, it would have been a recognition by her of a claim which we make as matter of right. The President's view of the proper duty of the government has certainly been quite different. Being convinced that the doctrine asserted by this government is the true doctrine of the law of nations, and feeling the competency of the government to uphold and enforce it for itself, he has not sought, but, on the contrary, has sedulously avoided, to change this ground, and to place the just rights of the country upon the assent, express or implied, of any power whatever.

The government thought no skilfully extorted promises necessary in any such cases. It asks no such pledges of any nation. If its character for ability and readiness to protect and defend its own rights and dignity is not sufficient to preserve them from violation, no interpolation of promise to respect them, ingeniously woven into treaties, would be likely to afford such protection. And, as our rights and liberties depend for existence upon our power to maintain them, general and vague protests are not likely to be more effectual than the Chinese method of defending their towns, by painting grotesque and hideous figures on the walls to fright away assailing foes.

My other remark on this portion of your letter is this:

Suppose a declaration to the effect that this treaty should not be considered as sacrificing any American rights had been appended, and the treaty, thus fortified, had been sent to Great Britain, as you propose; and suppose that that government, with equal ingenuity, had appended an equivalent written declaration that it should not be considered as sacrificing any British right, how much more defined would have been the rights of either party, or how much clearer the meaning and interpretation of the treaty, by these reservations on both sides? Or, in other words, what is the value of a protest on one side, balanced by an exactly equivalent protest on the other?

No nation is presumed to sacrifice its rights, or give up what justly belongs to it, unless it expressly stipulates that, for some good reason or adequate consideration, it does make such relinquishment; and an unnecessary asseveration that it does not intend to sacrifice just rights would seem only calculated to invite aggression. Such proclamations would seem better devised for concealing weakness and apprehension, than for manifesting conscious strength and self-reliance, or for inspiring respect in others.

Toward the end of your letter you are pleased to observe: "The rejection of a treaty, duly negotiated, is a serious question, to be avoided whenever it can be without too great a sacrifice. Though the national faith is not actually committed, still it is more or less engaged. And there were peculiar circumstances, growing out of long-standing difficulties, which rendered an amicable arrangement of the various matters in dispute with England a subject of great national interest. But the negotiation of a treaty is a far different subject. Topics are omitted or introduced at the discretion of the negotiators, and they are responsible, to use the language of an eminent and able Senator, for 'what it contains and what it omits.' This treaty, in my opinion, omits a most important and necessary stipulation; and therefore, as it seems to me, its negotiation, in this particular, was unfortunate for the country."

The President directs me to say, in reply to this, that in the treaty of Washington no topics were omitted, and no topics introduced, at the mere discretion of the negotiator; that the negotiation proceeded from step to step, and from day to day, under his own immediate supervision and direction; that he himself takes the responsibility for what the treaty contains and what it omits, and cheerfully leaves the merits of the whole to the judgment of the country.

I now conclude this letter, and close this correspondence, by repeating once more the expression of the President's reg t that you should have commenced it by your letter of the 3d of October.

It is painful to him to have with you any cause of difference. He has a just appreciation of your character and your public services at home and abroad. He cannot but persuade himself that you must be aware yourself, by this time, that your letter of October was written under erroneous impressions, and that there is no foundation for the opinions respecting the treaty which it expresses; and that it would have been far better on all accounts if no such letter had been written.

I have, &c.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

LEWIS CASS, ESQ., Late Minister of the United States at Paris.

RELATIONS WITH SPAIN.

SCHOONER "AMISTAD."

The Chevalier d'Argaïz to Mr. Webster.

[TRANSLATION.]

Washington, April 5, 1841.

THE Chevalier d'Argaïz had the honor to receive, with the Secretary of State's note of the 3d instant, copies of two letters received at his department relative to the slave Antonio. They contain some inaccuracies, which will not, however, be indicated, as they are of no importance.

The late Secretary of State, on learning the decision of the District Court of Connecticut, informed the Chevalier d'Argaïz that the slave Antonio was at his disposal, and the Chevalier d'Argaïz, in consequence, determined to bring him to his own house, until there should be a proper opportunity to send him to Havana; and when about to carry this determination into effect, Mr. Forsyth informed him that the District Attorney of Connecticut had declared that it would be necessary for the slave Antonio to remain in that State until the cause should be brought by appeal before the Circuit Court, on account of the great value of his evidence. To this the Chevalier d'Argaïz assented, and since that time he has heard nothing of the said negro.

Circumstances have, however, been entirely altered, by the decision of the Supreme Court; and, according to the information received by the Chevalier d'Argaïz, it is very probable that the negro will not reach Havana, if he should take upon himself the charge of sending him there. For which reason, he conceives that the government of the United States will be better able to insure his arrival at that island, where the consul of the Union may deliver him to his master.

The Chevalier d'Argaïz avails himself of this occasion to repeat to the Secretary of State the assurances of his high consideration.

Hon. Daniel Webster, Secretary of State.

The Chevalier d'Argaïz to Mr. Webster.

[translation.]

Washington, April 11, 1841.

Sir, — Her Majesty's vice-consul at Boston writes to me, under the date of the 7th instant, as follows: —

"I have just received from the marshal of Connecticut a letter, of which this is a literal translation. Since my last letter to you, respecting the case of the negro Antonio, my conjectures have been realized, though in a different manner. At that time I supposed and feared that the self-styled friends of the Africans would solicit a writ of habeas corpus for his liberation; but they adopted another method. The jailer allowed the boy to go about the house, and assist in the labors of the kitchen and in waiting at table. The said friends availed themselves of every opportunity to preach to him about liberty, and at length induced him to go away; they placed him on board the steamboat on Monday morning last, and he went to New York. I followed him to that city, where Lewis Tappan, the leader of the Abolitionists, informed me that Antonio was in town, but that he would not be delivered to me, and that arrangements had been made for sending him elsewhere. I could not meet him myself. I regret this occurrence very much, and fear that he is beyond our reach. If, however, I should succeed in finding him anywhere, you shall receive immediate notice."

By the letters from Mr. Baldwin, of the 21st of March last, and from Mr. Andrew Judson, of the 26th of the same, which you were pleased to send me with your note of April 3d, it appeared that the negro Antonio persisted in desiring to return to Havana; from which it may be inferred that, in order to make him change that determination, seduction or deception must have been employed, perhaps by persons whom his declarations might have affected (comprometer); and I do not understand why the marshal of Connecticut, whom Lewis Tappan informed that the said negro was in the city, did not take any measures to engage the authorities of that place, either with the view to recover him or to have him placed on board a vessel for Havana.

In virtue of what is here stated, I have considered it my duty to make this communication to you, Sir, having no doubt that you would take the necessary measures to have the slave Antonio restored to his owner.

I repeat to you, Sir, the assurances of my distinguished consideration.

P. A. D'ARGAÏZ.

HON. DANIEL WEBSTER, Secretary of State.

Mr. F. Webster to the Chevalier d'Argaïz.

Department of State, Washington, May 3, 1841.

SIR, — In the absence of the Secretary of State, I have the honor of replying to your note of the 11th of April last, relating to the negro Antonio. I have laid it before the President, and am directed by him to say, that he regrets very much the occurrence of any event that seems at all likely to defer or delay the final and satisfactory settlement of the affair of the "Amistad."

Inquiry will be immediately directed to be made by the proper officers in order to discover the slave Antonio; and I shall have much pleasure in communicating to you the earliest information received at the department of the success of such investigation.

I avail myself of this occasion to offer you the assurances of my very high consideration.

FLETCHER WEBSTER, Acting Secretary of State.

THE CHEVALIER D'ARGAÏZ.

The Chevalier d'Argaïz to Mr. Webster.

[TRANSLATION.]

Washington, May 29, 1841.

The undersigned, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of her Catholic Majesty, has the honor, in compliance with what was agreed on with the Secretary of State in their last conference, to make known to him the conviction of the undersigned, that the sixth article, as also the eighth, ninth, and tenth, of the treaty of 1795, have not been properly carried into execution (or effect) in the affair of the schooner "Amistad," as he conceives that he has proved in his correspondence. The subjects of her Catholic Majesty have not received the assistance expressed in those articles, nor have their properties been respected, as is stipulated in the said articles; and this must have been understood by the Attorney-General, Mr. Grundy, as appears by the opinion which he gave in November, 1839.

The government of the Union gave to this affair a course forced, illegal, and contrary to the intention of the contracting parties.

The undersigned protested against it in due time, making the government of the United States responsible for consequences. Aware, however, of the embarrassed situation of the actual administration, and that a change of circumstances has rendered it impossible now to effect the fulfilment of that treaty, the undersigned believes he ought to demand, as he now does, —

1. Indemnification for the vessel called the "Amistad."

2. Indemnification for her cargo, including the negroes found on board.

3. Indemnification for the losses and injuries suffered by (or inflicted on) the Spanish subjects, Don Pedro Montes and Don José Ruiz, during their unjust imprisonment.

4. The assurance that the course given to this affair shall never serve as a precedent in analogous cases which may occur.

The undersigned avails himself of this occasion to repeat to the Secretary of State the assurances of his high consideration.

P. A. D'ARGAÏZ.

HON. DANIEL WEBSTER.

Mr. Webster to the Chevalier d'Argaïz.

Department of State, Washington, September 1, 1841.

The undersigned has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the note of M. d'Argaïz, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of her Catholic Majesty, of the 29th of May, in which he makes known to the undersigned his conviction that the sixth, eighth, ninth, and tenth articles of the treaty of 1795, between the two countries, have not been properly carried into execution, in the affair of the "Amistad," as he conceives he has proved in his correspondence, and demands, 1st, indemnification for the vessel called the "Amistad"; 2d, indemnification for the cargo, including the negroes found on board; 3d, indemnification for the losses and injuries suffered by (or inflicted on) the Spanish subjects, Don Pedro Montes and Don José Ruiz, during their unjust imprisonment; and, 4th, the assurance that the course given to this affair shall never serve as a precedent for any analogous cases that may occur.

This note has been laid before the President, and the undersigned has been by him instructed to reply as follows.

The President had supposed, that, after the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States upon this question, there would have been no occasion to renew a correspondence upon it between the two governments, and that M. d'Argaïz was aware that the President had no power to review or alter any of the judgments of that court, it being a tribunal wholly independent of the executive, and one whose decisions must be regarded as final and conclusive upon all questions brought before it. He had hoped, too, that its decree would have proved satisfactory to M. d'Argaïz and the government of Spain, and that the facts proved, and the arguments offered before it, together with the able opinions delivered by its members in rendering the decree, would have prevented all disagreement or dissatisfaction with the result to which they arrived. The court was guided in its deliberations as well by the treaty between the two countries as by the laws of nations and of the United States, and it is not for the executive to question that its decree was in exact conformity with the obligations imposed upon it by that treaty and those laws.

No branch of the government of the United States, whether legislative, executive, or judiciary, can have been influenced by any other motives than those of a sincere desire to perform all the duties, and fulfil all the requirements, exacted of either by the terms of the treaty between this government and Spain, with respect to her national character and sovereignty, and with a view of preserving and strengthening the friendly relations which have so long and so happily subsisted between them and the undersigned hopes that M. d'Argaïz himself will eventually join in approbation of the course adopted, convinced, as he must be, of the friendly disposition of all branches of this government toward his own.

The articles to which M. d'Argaiz refers, as containing stipulations which have not been carried into effect in the case of the "Amistad," relate to the defence and protection of the persons or property of the subjects or citizens of either country which shall come within the jurisdiction of the other, by sea or land.

Of those cited, the ninth article, which provides for the safekeeping and restoration of ships and merchandise rescued from the hands of pirates and robbers, which it declares shall be restored to their true proprietor, after due and sufficient proof shall be made concerning the property thereof, seems the most applicable to the case under consideration.

The undersigned, after a careful consideration of all the arguments offered by M. d'Argaiz, and an examination of the facts which have been made known, is unable to see in what particular this article, or any stipulation contained in it, has been violated or disregarded, or that the course given to this affair has been in any manner contrary to the spirit and intention of any part of the treaty.

Upon the arrival of the schooner "Amistad" near our coast, it was, with all its cargo, according to the provisions of the ninth article, taken into the custody of the officers of the nearest port.

In consequence of a claim preferred for salvage by those who had saved both vessel and cargo, and rescued the subjects of Spain from death, or perhaps imprisonment enduring for life among the savage inhabitants of Africa, the subject of the ownership of the vessel and cargo was brought before the courts. Before those courts also, the subjects of Spain submitted their answer to these claims, and their complaints; with how much magnanimity refusing compliance with a just demand for services rendered them at such a time and in such a situation, the undersigned will not undertake to say. Besides the common articles of merchandise and traffic, there was found on board a number of negroes, claimed as the lawful property of Spanish subjects, and said to form part of the cargo; and on these also, as part of the cargo, salvage was claimed by those who had saved them for their owners, if they had any, and their pretended owners from them.

The whole subject, then, of the ownership of the vessel, and of all the cargo, came properly and legally before the courts, who proceeded, as was their duty under the treaty, on the presentment of such a case, to investigate it carefully, deliberately, and circumspectly.

Thus proceeding, the courts, upon the testimony before them, decided; awarding the vessel to its lawful owner, and the cargo to its respective lawful owners, and a certain amount of salvage to those who had been instrumental in saving both. It was found by the courts that the negroes were not the lawful property of any one, and no part of the cargo, and consequently subject to no claim for salvage; but that they were freemen, captured and sold, and held in bondage, contrary as well to the laws of Spain as of the United States; and the courts, in the just exercise of their power, decided as they were bound to do under existing laws and treaties, and upon the facts as they appeared. M. d'Argaïz demands indemnification for the vessel and cargo, including the negroes found on board. Were this government conscious of having inflicted injury upon any, whether a private individual or a powerful nation, indemnification would be readily granted; but the question of the existence of any such injury must be determined by the government itself. In this case, the undersigned is of opinion that no injury has been done to any one of the subjects of Spain, but, on the contrary, that the government has gone quite as far in granting them protection, and manifesting a favorable disposition toward them, as the circumstances under which they came within its notice could demand of it.

What injury has been inflicted on the subjects of Spain, owners of the vessel and cargo, by saving both from complete destruction, or from entire loss to them, and returning both to them when their legal claims were ascertained? What injury inflicted on those presenting claims to the negroes as slaves, by refusing to allow those claims, proved to be unfounded, and, by all provisions of the code of either country, illegal and criminal? M. d'Argaïz will recollect, besides, that in his note of the 26th of November, 1839, he demands these negroes, not as property, but as criminals, or, in his own language, "not as slaves, but as assassins." Had they been at any time slaves, they would have become, by their killing and escape from lawful bondage, assassins and pirates, whose delivery to the government of Spain is not provided for in any stipulation of the treaty of 1795, and which would have been a matter of comity only, not to be demanded as a right. The one point involves the other, and a refusal to deliver them, certainly, is no violation or neglect of any obligation. But the undersigned does not propose to enter into any argument upon a subject which has already been discussed at length, both before the courts and between the two governments. M. d'Argaïz demands, also, indemnification for injuries suffered by or inflicted on the subjects of Spain, in the persons of Messrs. Ruiz and Montes. For any such losses or injuries inflicted on these persons by any one within the jurisdiction of the United States, this government offers reparation and indemnification through its courts, which stand open to hear their complaints, to ascertain and repair their wrongs, and punish the wrong-doers.

The undersigned, therefore, is instructed to say, that this government does not perceive with what justice any such demands as M. d'Argaïz has presented can be made on it, and confidently expects that all will agree in justifying and approving the course which it has adopted in regard to the affair.

M. d'Argaïz demands, lastly, "the assurance that the course given to this affair shall never serve as a precedent in any analogous cases which may occur." While the undersigned hopes that no misfortune of the kind will ever again take place upon our coast or elsewhere, and that no circumstances may ever again give rise to such occurrences as those which mark the affair of the "Amistad" from the commencement of her voyage, he assures M. d'Argaïz that the government of the United States will endeavor to discharge itself of all obligations imposed upon it with strict justice, honorably to itself, and respectfully toward those nations with whom it maintains amicable relations.

The undersigned avails himself of this occasion to offer to M. d'Argaïz the assurance of his very high regard and distinguished consideration.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

THE CHEVALIER D'ARGAÏZ, &c.

An answer to the foregoing letter was returned by the Spanish minister on the 24th of September, 1841. It is necessarily omitted in this place, for want of room. Its purport is sufficiently apparent from the following reply by Mr. Webster.

Mr. Webster to the Chevalier d'Argaïz.

Department of State, Washington, June 21, 1842.

The Secretary of State has to acknowledge the receipt of the note of the 24th of September, which M. d'Argaïz did him the honor to address to him.

Viewing that note as intended mainly for a protest against the proceedings of this government in the case of the "Amistad," the undersigned did not think a reply was desired, or that any advantage would ensue from further prolonging the discussion.

Understanding now, from conversation with M. d'Argaïz, that a reply is expected, the undersigned proceeds to offer some remarks on the subject of M. d'Argaïz's note.

The undersigned did certainly suppose that the communication to M. d'Argaïz of the decision of the Supreme Court would close the correspondence on that subject. The immediate predecessor of the undersigned, whose remarks, as quoted by M. d'Argaïz, the undersigned well remembers, meant, and could have meant, nothing more, by those remarks, than that the decision of the Supreme Court would be the decision of the government. Mr. Forsyth does not use the word executive in this connection. He says "government." "Whatever be, in the end, the disposal of the question, it will be in consequence of a decision emanating from no other source than the government of the United States."

The Supreme Court is a part of that government, as Mr. Forsyth remarks; and its decision, in matters lawfully within its jurisdiction, is the final decision of the government of the United States upon such matters.

M. d'Argaïz seems to think that a treaty stipulation cannot be subjected to the interpretation of the judicial authority, and proceeds to remark, that, "if the courts of the Union possess the right of interpreting, considering, and deciding upon treaties contracted between nation and nation, and the executive power cannot inquire whether their decrees are or are not conformable with justice, it would be as well to declare, that, in order to give to treaties the force of treaties, or, at least, to render them obligatory, they should be concluded with the judicial power, or, in better words, that treaties should be made, for them to be afterward interpreted as the courts might think proper." But the undersigned supposes that nothing is more common, in countries where the judiciary is an independent branch of the government, than for questions arising under treaties to be submitted to its decision. Indeed, in all regular governments, questions of private right, arising under treaty stipulations, are in their nature judicial questions. With us, a treaty is part of the supreme law of the land; as such, it influences and controls the decisions of all tribunals; and many instances might be quoted of decisions made in the Supreme Court of the United States, arising under their several treaties with Spain herself, as well as under treaties between the United States and other nations. Similar instances of judicial decisions on points arising under treaties may be found in the history of France, England, and other nations; and, indeed, the undersigned would take the liberty to remind the Chevalier d'Argaiz, that this very treaty of 1795 has been made the subject of judicial decision by a Spanish tribunal.

The undersigned would call to the recollection of the Chevalier d'Argaïz the case of Mr. D. Hareng, in which the Spanish colonial courts decided according to their sense of the intention of the treaty of 1795, and the intendant confirmed their decree, which was, that nothing in that treaty exempted Mr. Hareng from the payment of certain demands. From this decision this government was inclined to dissent, but never questioned the right and duty of a Spanish court to consider the intent and effect of a treaty.

M. d'Argaïz states: "The enlightened Secretary of State will agree with the undersigned, that one of the things which principally constitute the independence of a country is the jurisdiction of its courts, or, in other words, that no nation, nor its courts, should assume the faculty of pronouncing judicially upon acts committed within the jurisdiction of another. On this principle, the undersigned cannot conceive how the Secretary of State could for a single moment have supposed that the undersigned would have agreed to, and have seen with satisfaction, the decision of a court of the United States, pronounced upon acts appertaining to Spanish subjects, committed on board of a Spanish vessel, and in the waters of a Spanish territory, within the purview of a treaty and of the law of nations.

"The Secretary of State is also pleased to observe, 'that the schooner "Amistad," upon her arrival on this coast, was, with all her cargo, according to the provisions of the ninth article, taken into the custody of the officers of the nearest port, and that, in consequence of a claim for salvage, the subject of the ownership of the vessel and cargo was brought before the courts.' The undersigned will not stop to remark upon the magnanimity of a demand for salvage preferred by officers of a ship of war of the United States. But does the Secretary of State believe that this can justify the intervention of the courts of the United States in this case, contrary to the opinion given by the Attorney-General, Mr. Grundy, and after, moreover, the officers themselves had renounced their claim to salvage, as Lieutenant Gedney, the commander of the Washington, himself declared to the undersigned? The Secretary of State also says, 'that it was found by the courts that the negroes were not the lawful property of any one.' One violation of necessity brought on another, not less unjust; for the judges of the United States, in order to ascertain whether or not the Africans were the lawful property of Spanish subjects, thought proper to examine the papers found on board of the vessel, which had been given by the authorities of her Catholic Majesty in the island of Cuba. This was a recognition of the right of search, which, besides its not being authorized by any nation, has been combated by writers on public law, and most particularly, in the case in question, by the distinguished jurist, Mr. Grundy, Attorney-General of the Union, at the time when the schooner 'Amistad' arrived on the Anglo-American coasts. (See his opinion on the case.)"

The undersigned will make one more attempt to state the general occurrences of this transaction so plainly that he cannot be misunderstood, with a hope of convincing M. d'Argaïz that nothing has been done by the authorities of the United States, or any of them, not in strict accordance with the principles of public law and the practice of nations; nothing which can be complained of with justice as an encroachment upon Spanish territories, or as visiting and searching Spanish vessels. The succinct history of the case is the most complete justification which can be made of all that has been done in regard to it in the United States.

Lieutenant Gedney, of the United States brig Washington, on the 27th of June, 1839, discovered the Spanish schooner "Amistad," then at anchor within half a mile of the shore of the United States. The vessel was then in possession of certain blacks, who had risen upon and killed the captain. Lieutenant Gedney took possession of and brought in the vessel to the United States, and for this service claimed salvage upon the common principles of maritime law. The possession of the vessel had become already lost to her owners; and to save her from entire destruction, and to restore her to those owners, was esteemed a meritorious service. The Chevalier d'Argaïz must certainly understand, that when merchant-vessels are met with at sea so shattered by storms and tempests, or other disasters, or so deprived of their crew, as to be unable to prosecute their voyages, in all such cases other vessels falling in with them and saving them are entitled to reasonable compensation; and, to ascertain the amount of this compensation, the vessel is to be brought in, subjected to judicial proceedings, and justice rendered the claimants and salvors, according to well-established rules and principles.

Spain herself, in the early ages of commerce, was among the first to establish the principles, and lead in the administration, of this part of the maritime law, and these principles now prevail over the whole commercial world; and the highest judicial authority in the United States, acting under the influence of the same rules which must have controlled the decisions of an English tribunal, a French tribunal, or a Spanish tribunal, has decided that the case was a case for salvage, and has decreed to the salvors a just compensation. The undersigned is, therefore, quite at a loss to conceive how this transaction can be deemed an encroachment upon the jurisdiction of Spain, or an unlawful visitation and search of Spanish vessels. At the institution of proceedings in the court, claims were interposed on behalf of Spanish subjects for the vessel and cargo, which were allowed, subject to salvage.

Claims were also interposed for the negroes found on board, who were claimed as slaves, and the property of Spanish subjects. On the other hand, the negroes denied that they were slaves, and the property of Spanish subjects or any other persons. It was impossible for the courts to avoid the decision of the questions thus brought before them; and, in deciding them, it was bound to regard the law of nations, the laws of Spain, the treaty between Spain and the United States, the laws of the United States, and the evidence produced in the case.

Proceeding upon these grounds, after a very patient investigation, and the hearing of elaborate arguments, the court decided that the negroes found on board the "Amistad," with one exception, were not slaves, nor the property of any body, but were free persons, and therefore decreed that they should be set at liberty. All this appears to the undersigned to be in the common course of such affairs. The questions in which Spanish subjects were interested have been heard and tried before competent tribunals, and one of them has been decided against the Spanish subjects; but this can give no possible ground of complaint on the part of Spain, unless Spain can show that the tribunal has acted corruptly, or has decided wrong in a case in no degree doubtful. Nations are bound to maintain respectable tribunals, to which the subjects of states at peace may have recourse for the redress of injuries and the maintenance of their rights. If the character of these tribunals be respectable, impartial, and independent, their decisions are to be regarded as conclusive.

The United States have carried the principle of acquiescence, in such cases, as far as any nation upon earth, and in respect to the decisions of Spanish tribunals quite as frequently, perhaps, as in respect to the tribunals of any other nation.

In almost innumerable cases of reclamations sought by citizens of the United States against Spain for alleged captures, seizures, and other wrongs committed by Spanish subjects, the answer has been, that the question has been fairly tried before an impartial Spanish tribunal, having competent jurisdiction, and decided against the claimant; and in the sufficiency of this answer the government of the United States has acquiesced.

If the tribunal be competent, if it be free from unjust influence, if it be impartial and independent, and if it have heard the case fully and fairly, its judgment is to stand as decisive of the matter before it. This principle governs in regard to the decisions of courts of common law, courts of equity, and especially courts of admiralty, where proceedings so often affect the rights and interests of citizens of foreign states and governments.

M. d'Argaïz complains that the vessel and cargo were sold, and that loss thereby happened to the owners. But all this was inevitable, and no blame attaches on account of it to the tribunal. In cases of an allowance for salvage, if the owner be not present and ready to pay the amount, the property must necessarily be sold, that the proceeds be properly apportioned between owner and salvor. This is a daily occurrence in every court of admiralty in the world. Sufficient notice of the intended sale was given in legal form, in order that the claimants might be present, or might, if they pleased, prevent it, by paying the amount awarded for salvage, and receive their property.

The Chevalier d'Argaïz complains that Messrs. Montes and Ruiz suffered an unjust imprisonment in the United States. The undersigned cannot but think that such an allegation of injury, put forth in behalf of Messrs. Montes and Ruiz, is not a little extraordinary. These persons themselves had held in unjust and cruel confinement certain negroes who, it appeared on trial, were as free as themselves, and these negroes, finding themselves within the protection of equal laws, sought redress, by a regular appeal to those laws, for the injuries which they had suffered. The pursuit of this redress by the injured parties, it appears, subjected Messrs. Ruiz and Montes to a temporary imprisonment. In the judgment of enlightened men, they will probably be thought to have been very fortunate in escaping severer consequences.

M. d'Argaïz's note contains a paragraph of the following tenor: "The undersigned cannot in any way admit the supposition advanced by the Secretary of State, that, 'even had the negroes been at any time slaves, they would have become, by their killing and escape from lawful bondage, assassins and pirates, whose delivery to the government of Spain, not having been provided for in any stipulations of the treaty of 1795, would have been a matter of comity only, not to be demanded as a right.' The treaty of 1795, unquestionably, does not provide for the delivery of pirates or assassins, but only because the contracting parties could never have imagined that a case like the present could have occasioned doubts of any kind, and because the point was so clear that they did not think it necessary to take it into consideration. Who can foresee the horrible consequences which may result, as well in the islands of Cuba and Porto Rico as in the Southern States of the Union, should the slaves come to learn, and there will be no want of persons to inform them, that, on murdering, killing, and flying from lawful captivity whensoever they may be in transportation from one point of the islands to another, and coming to the United States, the delivery of them, on account of their having murdered, killed, or fled, cannot be demanded as a right? The undersigned leaves to the characteristic penetration of the Secretary of State [the task of imagining] the severe, incalculable evils which may be occasioned by realizing this supposition."

The undersigned must beg leave to differ entirely from M. d'Argaïz in regard to the rule of law for delivering up criminals and fugitives from justice. Although such extradition is sometimes made, yet, in the absence of treaty stipulations, it is always matter of comity or courtesy. No government is understood to be bound by the positive law of nations to deliver up criminals, fugitives from justice, who have sought an asylum within its limits. The government of the United States has had occasion to hold intercourse on this question with England, France, Russia, Denmark, and Sweden; and it understands it to be the sentiment of all these governments, as well as the judgment of standard writers on public law, that, in the absence of provisions by treaty, the extradition of fugitive offenders is a matter resting in the option and discretion of every government.

The undersigned has thus once more gone over the circumstances of this case, and stated the view which the government of the United States has of it. He sincerely and confidently hopes that the Chevalier d'Argaïz will perceive that this government has violated none of its obligations to Spain, and done no injustice, in any manner whatever, to any Spanish subject.

The undersigned avails himself of this occasion to renew to the Chevalier d'Argaïz assurances of his high consideration.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

THE CHEVALIER D'ARGAÏZ, &c.

SOUND DUES AT ELSINORE, AND THE GERMAN ZOLL-VEREIN.

Mr. Webster to the President of the United States.

Department of State, Washington, May 24, 1841.

Sir, — There are two subjects connected with the foreign commerce of the United States to which the Secretary of State considers it to be his duty to call the attention of the President at the earliest opportunity.

The first is, the collection of Sound dues, or the tax payable at Elsinore, laid by the Danish government upon the cargoes of vessels passing through the Sound, into and out from the Baltic Sea.

The right of Denmark to levy these dues is asserted on the ground of ancient usage, coming down from the period when that power had possession of both shores of the Belt and Sound. However questionable the right, or uncertain its origin, it has been recognized by European governments in several treaties with Denmark, some of them entered into at as early a period as the fourteenth century; and inasmuch as our treaty with that power contains a clause putting us on the same footing, in this respect, as other the most favored nations, it has been acquiesced in, or, rather, has not been denied, by us.

The treaty of 1645, between Denmark and Holland, to which a tariff of the principal articles then known in commerce, with a rule of measurement and a fixed rate of duty, was appended, together with the subsequent one between the same parties in 1701, amendatory and explanatory of the former, has been generally considered as the basis of all subsequent treaties, and among them of our own, concluded in 1826, and limited to continue ten years from its date, and further until the end of one year after notice by either party of an intention to terminate it, and which is still in force.

Treaties have also been concluded with Denmark by Great Britain, France, Spain, Portugal, Russia, Prussia, and Brazil, by which, with one or two exceptions in their favor, they are placed on the same footing as the United States.

There has recently been a general movement, on the part of the Northern powers of Europe, with regard to the subject of these Sound dues, which seems to afford to this government a favorable opportunity, in conjunction with them, for exerting itself to obtain some such alteration or modification of existing regulations as shall conduce to the freedom and extension of our commerce, or, at least, toward relieving it from some of the burdens now imposed, which, owing to the nature of our trade, operate, in many instances, very unequally and unjustly on it in comparison with that of other nations.

The ancient tariff of 1645, by which the payment of these dues was regulated, has never been revised, and by means of the various changes which have taken place in commerce since that period, and of the alteration in price in many articles therein included, chiefly in consequence of the settlement of America, and the introduction of her products into general commerce, it has become quite inapplicable.

It is presumed to have been the intention of the framers of that tariff to fix a duty of about one per cent. ad valorem upon the articles therein enumerated; but the change in value of many of those commodities, and the absence of any corresponding change in the duty, has, in many instances, increased the ad valorem from one per cent. to three, four, and even seven; and this generally upon those articles which form the chief exports of the United States, of South America, and the West India Islands: such as the articles of cotton, rice, raw sugar, tobacco, rum, Campeachy wood, &c.

On all articles not enumerated in this ancient tariff it is stipulated, by the treaty of 1701, that the "privileged nations," or those who have treaties with Denmark, shall pay an ad valorem of one per cent.; but the value of these articles being fixed by some rules known only to the Danish government, or at least unknown to us, this duty appears uncertain and fluctuating, and its estimate is very much left to the arbitrary discretion of the custom-house officers at Elsinore.

It has been contended by some of the public writers in Denmark, that goods of privileged nations, carried in the vessels of unprivileged nations, should not be entitled to the limitation of one per cent. ad valorem, but should be taxed one and a quarter per cent., the amount levied on the goods of unprivileged nations; and also, that this limitation should be confined to the direct trade; so that vessels coming from or bound to the ports of a nation not in treaty with Denmark should pay on their cargoes the additional quarter per cent.

These questions, although the former is not of so much consequence to us, who are our own carriers, are still, in connection with each other, of sufficient importance to render a decision upon them, and a final understanding, extremely desirable.

These Sound dues are, moreover, in addition to the port charges of light money, pass money, &c., which are quite equal to the rates charged at other places, and the payment of which, together with the Sound dues, often causes to vessels considerable delay at Elsinore.

The port charges, which are usual among all nations to whose ports vessels resort, are unobjectionable, except that, in this case, they are mere consequences of the imposition of the Sound dues, following necessarily upon the compulsory delay at Elsinore of vessels bound up and down the Sound with cargoes, with no intention of making any importation into any port of Denmark, and having no other occasion for delay at Elsinore than that which arises from the necessity of paying the Sound dues, and, in so doing, involuntarily subjecting themselves to these other demands.

These port duties would appear to have some reason in them, because of the equivalent; while, in fact, they are made requisite, with the exception, perhaps, of the expense of lights, by the delay necessary for the payment of the Sound dues.

The amount of our commerce with Denmark, direct, is inconsiderable, compared with that of our transactions with Russia, Sweden, and the ports of Prussia and the Germanic Association on the Baltic; but the sum annually paid to that government in Sound dues, and the consequent port charges, by our vessels alone, is estimated at something over one hundred thousand dollars.

The greater proportion of this amount is paid by the articles of cotton, sugar, tobacco, and rice; the first and last of these paying a duty of about three per cent. ad valorem, reckoning their value at the places whence they come.

By a list published at Elsinore in 1840, it appears that between April and November of that year seventy-two American vessels, comparatively a small number, lowered their topsails before the Castle of Cronberg. These were all bound up the Sound to ports on the Baltic, with cargoes composed, in part, of the above-named products, upon which alone, according to the tariff, was paid a sum exceeding forty thousand dollars for these dues.

Having disposed of these cargoes, they returned laden with the usual productions of the countries on the Baltic, on which, in like manner, were paid duties on going out through the Sound, again acknowledging the tribute by an inconvenient and sometimes hazardous ceremony.

The whole amount thus paid within a period of eight months on inward and outward bound cargoes, by vessels of the United States, none of which were bound for, or intended to stop at, any port in Denmark, except compulsorily at Elsinore, for the purpose of complying with these exactions, must have exceeded the large sum above named.

I have, therefore, thought proper to bring this subject before you at this time, and to go into these general statements in relation to it, which might be carried more into detail, and substantiated by documents now in the department, to the end that, if you should deem it expedient, instructions may be given to the representative of the United States at Denmark, to enter into friendly negotiations with that government, with a view of securing to the commerce of the United States a full participation in any reduction of these duties, or the benefits resulting from any new arrangements respecting them, which may be granted to the commerce of other states.

The other subject which, in the opinion of the Secretary, demands the early consideration of the government, is the Germanic Association, or Customs Union, established in Germany, and now in successful operation under the leading auspices of the government of Prussia. This important association has for its objects the union of many of the German states into one body, for the purpose of establishing uniform regulations of commerce; uniform duties of importation, exportation, and transit; a system of uniform weights and measures, and a uniform coinage, throughout all the members of the association; objects resembling, as will be perceived, important purposes contemplated by the establishment of the general government of the United States.

In all the states of the association the greatest variety and diversity had previously existed. Each had its own circle of custom-houses and its peculiar system of duties, constituting them in these respects foreign countries to one another. The effect of these diversities upon trade and manufactures may easily be supposed to have been highly prejudicial to the general commerce of the country.

To Prussia, who had labored for years to bring about this commercial revolution in Germany, chiefly belongs the credit of its accomplishment. She has united the members of the confederation in a treaty which establishes one tariff for all, the duties to be collected on the frontiers of what now forms one great commercial league. The net revenues arising from the duties are divided among the several states in proportion to their respective amounts of population, every article, salt and playing-cards excepted, having once paid the duties on the frontier, being permitted to circulate freely among all the states of the union without any additional impost.

The treaty was concluded in 1834, and was to continue in force until the 1st of January, 1842; and if during that term, and at latest two years before its expiration, the contrary should not be declared, for twelve years more; and afterward, from twelve years to twelve years. It has recently, under these provisions, been renewed for another term of twelve years. The effect of this confederation has probably been to give to Prussia and Germany a new weight in the political balance of Europe; but it is principally interesting to the United States in its commercial tendencies, and in the hopes which it encourages of furnishing an enlarged consumption of some of the staple articles of our production, such as cotton, tobacco, and rice.

The German Commercial and Customs Association comprises an ample territory, abounding in wealth, industry, population, and resources of every description. The states included in it are, —

The kingdom of Prussia, whose population is . .	14,271,530
The kingdom of Bavaria, ...	4,315,469
The kingdom of Würtemberg, ...	1,649,839
The kingdom of Saxony, ...	1,652,114
The Grand Duchy of Baden, ...	1,277,103
The Electorate of Hesse, ...	701,700
The Grand Duchy of Hesse (with Homburg), . .	807,671
The Duchy of Nassau, ...	386,221
The Thuringian Union, ...	908,478
The free city of Frankfort on the Maine, . . .	54,000
Total, ...	26,027,425

It is understood that Brunswick has exhibited an inclination to separate from the Northwestern Union, of which she is now a member, and to join the association; and the accession of the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg is likely soon to swell still higher the total population of the states thus united, which constitutes already the most industrious, enlightened, and prosperous people of Germany.

Three of the German states have not yet acceded to the association, but have formed a separate Commercial and Customs Union, viz.: —

The kingdom of Hanover, whose population is . .	1,772,107
The Grand Duchy of Oldenburg, ...	266,536
The Duchy of Brunswick, ...	251,000
Total, ...	2,289,643

And a few of the states of Germany have neither acceded to the association, nor formed any special union among themselves; these are, —

The Duchies of Holstein and Lauenburg (belonging to the king of Denmark), whose population is	471,276
The Grand Duchy of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, . . .	482,925
The Grand Duchy of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, ...	89,528
The Hanseatic cities of Lubeck, Hamburg, and Bremen, .	245,500
Total, ...	1,289,229

In the accomplishment of her great political object, Prussia has been compelled to make considerable pecuniary sacrifices, her revenues from the customs being less than before the formation of the association; though this falling off has been gradually lessening, owing to the increased population and prosperity of the kingdom. The attempts made to adjust and compensate this loss have not been successful; but it is believed that the difficulty will be removed by allowing Prussia to levy, for her own exclusive benefit, the transit duties on cotton and other commodities, without any material change in the general system.

The net revenues of the association have increased from about twelve million thalers, collected in 1834, the year of its first establishment, to upward of twenty million, the present amount, exclusive of the expense of collection, amounting to twelve and a half per cent.; a prodigious increase, and mainly owing to the rapidly increasing prosperity, and consequently augmented consumption, of the German states associated in the league.

With Hanover, the United States have recently concluded a treaty of commerce and navigation, through the agency of Mr. Wheaton, Minister of the United States at Berlin, which has been ratified. This treaty differs from our commercial treaties with Prussia, the Hanseatic towns, and Denmark, by confining the indirect trade to the productions of the kingdom of Hanover, and of any other country of the confederation, on the one side; and, on the other, to the productions of the United States, and of the North and South American continent and West India Islands. It gives us the right of carrying to Hanover in our vessels the productions of the United States, and of the North and South American continent and islands, in exchange for their right of bringing in Hanoverian vessels to the United States the productions of Hanover and the countries composing the confederation, and may be regarded as favorable to our navigation.

Several states of the league have manifested a disposition to form treaties with the United States upon a similar basis; but it is not intended, on this occasion, to express any opinion upon the policy of establishing the principle of entire reciprocity in commercial treaties with the minor states of Europe.

One of the advantages already acquired by the negotiations of our minister at Berlin is a considerable reduction of the duties on rice, which, under a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 11th of June, 1838, he was instructed to endeavor to procure. This important object has been gained, and the consequences, as foreseen, were immediately beneficial to all parties. A great increase in the importation of Carolina rice, which took place as soon as the reduction of duty on the article became known, was followed by a correspondent increase of revenue drawn from its increased consumption in Germany. The success of this experiment encourages the belief that a like course in respect to other important staples would be followed by similar results.

The tobacco duties, however, serving as they do the twofold purpose of raising revenue and of protecting the culture of the tobacco of native growth in Germany, still find formidable obstacles in the way of their removal or modification. The state of the negotiations on this subject, up to the session of 1839 and 1840, is sufficiently explained in the correspondence transmitted to the House of Representatives with the President's message of the 14th of April, 1840.

Several of the states of the Germanic Association have no natural outlet to the sea. Their commerce, therefore, is carried on through rivers, the mouths of which open to the ocean in the territories of other powers. This shows the importance of the union to all the states composing it; but as the union itself is not a government, commercial stipulations and conventions must be made with the states of the union in their political capacities. By a paper annexed, marked A,* it will appear that, in March last, Great Britain entered into a convention of commerce and navigation with Prussia, Bavaria, Saxony, Würtemberg, Baden, the Electorate of Hesse, the Grand Duchy of Hesse, the states forming the customs and commercial union of Thuringia, Nassau, and Frankfort; and similar arrangements with these states might probably be accomplished by the government of the United States.

Such being the general nature of the association, and such our commercial intercourse with it, it becomes matter of interest to consider how far our relations with its several members might be beneficially extended; and if it be thought advisable to enter into commercial treaties with them, or any of them, it will remain to be determined whether powers for such a purpose should be conferred upon the Minister of the United States at Berlin, or some other diplomatic agency adopted; the general object being to seek the means of enlarging the consumption of the staples of the United States in Germany, and of securing all practicable benefit to their navigation.

* This convention, and the declaration afterwards alluded to, are omitted as not being necessary to the understanding of Mr. Webster's report to the President.

There is another part of the subject of our connection with Germany, which, though of less consequence than those that have been pointed out, is, nevertheless, one which deeply concerns the numerous German emigrants who are constantly selling their property to proceed to the United States, as well as our naturalized citizens, natives of Germany, inheriting property in that country. Throughout Germany the droit d'aubaine and the droit de détraction exist in the shape of a tax, payable on the withdrawal from the country of personal property which has been inherited by will or succession, or which forms the proceeds of real property inherited in the same manner. In the United States, as all know, no such tax exists.

It is probable that an exemption from this tax might be obtained on the ground of reciprocity. Some of the states have intimated their willingness to enter into arrangements for that purpose. If there should be thought to be no other reason for a formal convention, this particular object might be effected by a simple official declaration, signed by the Secretary of State, under the seal of the department, certifying that the subjects and citizens of Germany enjoy this immunity in the United States; upon which there is reason to believe that an alteration in their own laws would be made by the states, or some of them, so as to make the right reciprocal. The form of a declaration, such as is stated above, has been adopted by the English government, as may be seen by a paper hereunto annexed, marked B.

All which is respectfully submitted.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

TREATY WITH PORTUGAL.

CONSTRUCTION OF THE TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND PORTUGAL RESPECTING THE DUTIES ON PORTUGUESE WINES.

On the 18th of November, 1841, M. de Figaniere e Morao, Minister Resident of Portugal in the United States, addressed a note to Mr. Webster, complaining that, by the provisions of an act of Congress approved the 11th of September preceding, by which the specific duties formerly levied on certain wines imported into the United States were changed to ad valorem duties, a discrimination was introduced unfavorable to the interests of Portugal. To this note Mr. Webster made the following reply: —

Mr. Webster to M. de Figaniere e Morao.

Department of State, Washington, February 9, 1842.

The undersigned, Secretary of State of the United States has the honor to acknowledge M. de Figaniere e Morao's note of the 18th of November, and has given to it the consideration due to its importance, and to the friendly relations happily subsisting between the two governments.

The undersigned regrets that the government of Portugal should suppose that it has reason to complain, in any manner, of a law of the United States as being prejudicial to Portugal, or at variance with the amity and good-will subsisting between the two countries, and especially as inconsistent with the treaty obligations of the United States.

The law complained of was enacted on the 11th day of September, 1841; and its main provision was, to lay a duty of twenty per cent. ad valorem on all such articles as were at that time free, or on which the duty was less than that rate, with certain exceptions. The wines of Portugal not being within the exceptions, and being subject at that time only to a specific duty, may fall under an increased charge or duty by the operation of this law.

The third article of the treaty subsisting between the United States and Portugal is in these words: —

"No higher or other duties shall be imposed on the importation into the kingdom and possessions of Portugal of any article, the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States of America, and no higher or other duties shall be imposed on the importation into the United States of America of any article, the growth, produce, or manufacture of the kingdom and possessions of Portugal, than such as are or shall be payable on the like article, being the growth, produce, or manufacture of any other foreign country.

"Nor shall any prohibition be imposed on the importation or exportation of any article, the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States of America, or of the kingdom and possessions of Portugal, to or from the ports of the said kingdom and possessions of Portugal, or of the said States, which shall not equally extend to all other foreign nations.

"Nor shall any higher or other duties or charges be imposed, in either of the two countries, on the exportation of any articles to the United States of America or to the kingdom of Portugal, respectively, than such as are payable on the exportation of the like articles to any other foreign country.

"Provided, however, that nothing contained in this article shall be understood or intended to interfere with the stipulation entered into by the United States of America, for a special equivalent, in regard to French wines, in the convention made by the said States and France on the fourth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-one, which stipulation will expire and cease to have effect in the month of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-two."

M. de Figaniere e Morao thinks that the provision of this article is interfered with by the above-mentioned act of Congress. He illustrates his own view of the subject by putting a case in the following form: —

"A pipe of wine from the Mediterranean, or Spain, or any other country, reaches a port in the United States at a cost (let it be supposed) of 30 cents the gallon, and a like pipe of wine from Portugal costing 38 cents per gallon. If the duty be specific, say 15 cents, they will both be subject to the same, and neither pay a higher or other duty than the other; for fifteen cents per gallon, and no more, would be levied on both pipes. Not so, however, according to the act of the 11th of September last, which imposes twenty per cent. ad valorem. The Spanish or other wine will pay only six cents per gallon, while from the like wine of Portugal will be exacted $7\frac{60}{100}$ cents per gallon, which, de facto, operates as a discriminating duty against the Portuguese wine, contrary to the stipulations of the treaty between the two countries."

Before proceeding to consider the argument and illustration thus advanced, the undersigned avails himself of the opportunity of stating to M. de Figaniere e Morao, that the language in the third article of the treaty between the United States and his government is of the same import with that used in most other treaties of the United States with foreign powers, and identical with that employed in some of them; and that no complaint has ever been made to this government, by the governments with whom such treaties have existed, of any injury, injustice, or want of strict compliance with treaty stipulations on any such ground as has been now taken by the Portuguese government. It will be at once obvious, therefore, to M. de Figaniere e Morao, that the government of the United States must take such a view of the question as it can maintain, not only in regard to Portugal, but many other powers also.

The interdict of the treaty is, —

"No higher or other duties shall be imposed on the importation into the United States of America of any article, the growth, produce, or manufacture of the kingdom and possessions of Portugal, than such as are or shall be payable on the like article, being the growth, produce, or manufacture of any other foreign country."

The article on which the duty complained of is laid is wine; and the duty laid on Portuguese wine is exactly the same, in terms, as that laid on the like article (except as excepted in the law) coming from other countries. In other words, all wines fall under the same duty of twenty per cent. ad valorem. In terms, therefore, the law is clearly within the treaty.

But M. de Figaniere e Morao thinks it not in conformity with the spirit and intent of the treaty, because, under its operation, a gallon of wine in Portugal may cost more than a gallon of wine in Spain, and therefore twenty per cent. on the cost of the gallon of Portuguese wine will be more than twenty per cent. on that of the Spanish wine; and consequently a gallon of Portuguese wine will pay a higher duty than a gallon of Spanish wine. That this may be the result of the operation of the law, cannot be denied; and this makes it necessary to inquire, What is the true interpretation of this third article of the treaty?

There may sometimes be difficulty, without doubt, in deciding on the just extent of such a provision, and in applying it, in the legislation of states bound to regard it; because, in general, articles identically the same, or in the language of the treaty alike, are seldom imported from different countries. Yet the provision itself is to be observed, and is to receive a reasonable and just construction. This is the leading rule of interpretation in regard to all treaties and other important compacts. Now it is evident, that, if M. de Figaniere e Morao's idea be correct, the government of the United States could impose no ad valorem duty whatever, because, as articles bearing the same general name, and imported from different countries, would of course be of different degrees of value and cost, the country producing those of highest value would always have cause of complaint, if subjected to an ad valorem duty. The result would be, that the government of the United States could not exercise its powers at all, in one of the most ordinary modes of taxation. As this consequence would be unreasonable, and evidently not within the contemplation of the parties, the reasoning which would conduct us to it must be rejected.

We are to consider, then, what is the just meaning of the terms "other or higher duties," and to inquire by what standard it is to be known and ascertained whether duties "other and higher" are laid in a given case. Now, to accomplish this, resort must be had to some measure of comparison, simple or mixed; some rule by which the question is to be decided.

What is that rule? What is the standard of comparison? Is some one single consideration to fix that standard, or may reference be had to various considerations? M. de Figaniere e Morao's idea is, that the only element of calculation, the only datum to be taken into view, is the quantity of the article; that is to say, he is of opinion, that, if one gallon pays more duty than another gallon, the duty is, for that reason alone, higher in the sense of the treaty. But the undersigned thinks, with all respect, that this may well be questioned; he thinks cost and value may be regarded as forming parts of the basis of calculation and comparison, as well as quantity. It is as reasonable, as it seems to him, to understand the treaty as saying that merchandise from Portugal shall pay no higher duties than similar merchandise from other countries, according to its value, as it is to understand it as saying that it shall pay no higher duties in proportion to its quantity. Cost and value are as reasonable a basis as mere measure, weight, or quantity, in deciding on the comparison of duties. Indeed, it appears to the undersigned that ad valorem duties are likely to be the most unexceptionable of all forms of imposts, so far as stipulations in treaties, like that now under consideration, are concerned. When duties are made specific, they are laid on different classes of the same general article at different rates, according to their respective degrees of cost or value. Cheap wines are not taxed so high as dearer wines; nor can it be considered as any purpose of the treaty to abolish such distinctions; so that cost and value ordinarily constitute either the whole or part of the ground upon which rates of duties are fixed. In the case stated by M. de Figaniere e Morao, the Portuguese wine is assumed as the more costly article. But we may well suppose an opposite case, and a case of specific duties of exactly the same nominal amount, and yet a case in which, as it appears to the undersigned, Portugal might complain with far greater appearance of reason than she now complains of the law of September. There are wines of Portugal, of large consumption, which cost much less than certain wines of France. Let us suppose that a wine of Lisbon cost fifty cents a gallon, and a wine of Bordeaux one dollar, and that each was taxed equally one dollar a gallon in the ports of the United States. Here would be an apparent equality, just such as M. de Figaniere e Morao now thinks ought to exist.

But would there be real equality? Might not the Portuguese producer say that he did not enjoy substantially the same advantage as his French competitor, inasmuch as his capital and labor, producing an article in greater quantity, but of lower price, were really subjected to a burden twice as great as that which fell on the labor and capital of the French producer? Might he not say, Suffer my product, according to its cost and value, to be received into the country upon the same terms, and not other or higher, as the products of other countries? The stipulation contained in the third article of the treaty between the United States and Portugal, and in other treaties to which the United States are parties, is just and liberal, and ought to be observed to the fullest practicable extent; but perhaps it may be found that it is necessarily circumscribed within certain limits, and subjected to qualifications. And this results from the fact that, in a commercial sense, and according to the common understanding of men, the generic word "article" is subdivisible, and its subdivisions are as well known, and are regarded in as independent and substantive a sense, as the generic term itself.

Wine is an article of commerce; but wine of Oporto, wine of Bordeaux, wine of Madeira, wine of Sicily, are separate articles; so regarded in transactions of commerce, so regarded in the duty laws of various governments, and especially in those of the United States.

It would, therefore, not be considered as any infraction of the treaty with Portugal, if Oporto wines were subjected to one duty and Sicily wines to another, since they are, in commercial understanding, different articles. And it may be added, that difference in cost or value may, in many cases, very materially contribute to settle the question of identity or difference between two articles; that is to say, in deciding whether two articles are the same, or alike, as the phrase of the treaty is, reference to the cost of each may be very pertinent and important. For example, the teas of China have heretofore been subject to different rates of duties in the United States as separate articles, under separate and specific denominations, as Bohea, Congo, Hyson, &c. Now in a disputed case, whether a particular article of that general kind belonged to one or the other of these classes would be an inquiry, in the prosecution of which one important element of proof and ground of decision would naturally be the cost of the article, the more especially if the classes bore a considerable resemblance to each other, as is the case with some of them. So, if articles bearing the same general name come from different countries, whether they ought to be regarded as the same article is a question for the solution of which one may look not only to the name, but to their cost and value. And this consideration appears to the undersigned to show, he presumes to say, almost conclusively, that if the duty in a given case be ad valorem, it is, of all forms of laying duties, that which is most strictly in accordance with the provisions of treaties such as that between the United States and Portugal.

The article of the treaty under consideration was designed as a stipulation that no unfriendly legislation should be resorted to by one party against the other, nor any preference given to the products of other countries, with intent to injure or prejudice either party to the treaty. The treaty enjoins the spirit and practice of fair and equal legislation; but neither party supposed itself precluded by its stipulations from the ordinary modes of exercising its own power of making laws for raising revenue in its accustomed modes; and if it happen, in any case, that, from the operation of laws thus laid with fair intent and for necessary purposes, inconveniences result to either party, that result must be considered as not intended, but as arising from the nature of the case itself, and therefore as unavoidable.

These are the general views which have presented themselves to the undersigned in answer to M. de Figaniere e Morao's note, and he trusts that the government of Portugal will consider them as satisfactory. Portugal is one of the countries with which the United States, in taking their place in the circle of nations, had early friendly commercial and diplomatic intercourse. Happily, nothing has occurred permanently to disturb that intercourse. The two countries have no rivalries, no opposition of interests, no grounds of mutual distrust; and the undersigned avails himself of this opportunity to express his earnest hope that the harmony now insured by the stipulations of a fair and equal treaty may long continue, and to signify, at the same time, the high consideration with which he has the honor to regard M. de Figaniere e Morao.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

RELATIONS WITH MEXICO.

AMERICAN CITIZENS CAPTURED AT SANTA FÉ.

Mr. Webster to Mr. Ellis.

Department of State, Washington, January 3, 1842.

Sir, — The friends of Mr. Franklin Coombs, son of General Leslie Coombs, of Kentucky, have applied for the interposition of this government in behalf of that young gentleman, who accompanied the late Texan expedition to Santa Fé, in Mexico, and is supposed to have been captured, and, if alive, to be held in bondage in that country, with the other survivors of the expedition. It has been represented to this department that young Coombs has never been a citizen of Texas; that he did not repair to that country with any intention of relinquishing his allegiance to this government, or of remaining in Texas; but that he went thither in the autumn of 1840, upon private business of his father, and for the benefit which he was assured his feeble health would derive from the milder winter climate of that region. He was, however, detained there by both causes, until about the time when the expedition referred to set out. This he determined to accompany, merely for the object of confirming his health, and gratifying a curiosity, both liberal and natural, in regard to the unknown lands through which the course of the expedition lay.

As there is no reason to doubt the correctness of this information, you will, accordingly, forthwith make the necessary representations to the Mexican government upon the subject, with a view to avert from young Coombs, if he should be alive, the dangers to which he may be or may have been exposed. You will state that, from the respectability of his family and for other reasons, there can be no ground for the belief that he would have accompanied the expedition for any other objects than those mentioned; and that, if he had been aware that the views of the Texan government in despatching it had been hostile or predatory, rather than friendly and commercial, as they were understood to have been at the time, he would not have gone in its company. If to this it be objected that the expedition was military in its array, and must, therefore, be presumed to have had warlike designs against the Mexican authorities, it may be answered that the avowed motive of the members of the expedition in bearing arms was to ward off the attacks of hostile Indians, and especially of the Camanches, who, it is well known, roam in great force along and across the track which was to have been pursued. This objection would apply with much less, if with any, force to young Coombs, as he was no soldier, and had never been one; and, if found with arms, there could in his case be no better ground for the opinion that they were to have been used for purposes of attack, and not for those of defence, than if he had accompanied one of the caravans from Missouri to Santa Fé, by means of which, as is well known, an extensive trade is carried on between this country and Mexico, to the mutual advantage of the parties.

Although young Coombs is the only American citizen who accompanied the expedition for whom the interference of this government has been asked, it is understood that there was another who as little deserves to be subjected to any penal proceedings on the part of the Mexican government. This is Mr. George W. Kendall, of New Orleans.

You will press this case with the utmost earnestness on the Mexican government, as the government of the United States feels itself bound to interfere, and to signify its confident expectation that the lives of American citizens will not be sacrificed who have not intentionally done any thing of a hostile character against Mexico. Even if the conduct of young Coombs was indiscreet and ill-judged, yet this government cannot suppose that the government of Mexico would treat him as an armed combatant found among its enemies.

You will spare no pains to impress the Mexican authorities with the feelings which would be excited in this country if any harsh proceeding should be adopted toward this youth.

You will avail yourself of the opportunity of making to that government this communication, to suggest that, while this government is disposed to maintain with strict fidelity amicable relations with the Mexican republic, and will not attempt to screen from merited punishment any of our citizens who may be guilty of an infraction of the laws intended to preserve those relations, yet that summary, sanguinary, or undue punishment of either Texans or citizens of the United States in Mexico inevitably tends to excite and foment in this country an acerbity of feeling against Mexico which will be much more apt to defeat the supposed objects of those punishments than if the offenders were to have a fair trial, and, if then convicted, were to be punished in some proportion to their offences. You will, however, make this suggestion in a conciliatory tone, without allowing it to be supposed that this government has any intention to dictate the policy to be adopted by that of the Mexican republic, upon this or any other subject; but, supposing their disposition toward the United States to be amicable, our wish is merely to point a way by which, it seems to us, that reciprocal disposition, as well as the integrity of the Mexican territory, may be more effectually maintained. Accustomed ourselves to regular judicial proceedings, fair and full trials, and mild punishments, the opposites of these, if exercised by other governments, always serve to check the growth of amity and good-will.

Any reasonable expenses which may be necessary to defray the charge of a special messenger from the Mexican capital to the place of captivity of young Coombs and his American associates, or for any other proper purposes necessary for their safety and liberation, will be borne by this government, and will be defrayed by you, and for them you will draw on this department, specifying in your drafts their purpose, and sending with them such vouchers as you may be able to procure.

The interest which we feel for Coombs, whose case has been particularly presented to us, and for Mr. Kendall also, will lead to the despatching of this communication in the way most likely to carry it soon to your hands.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To POWHATAN ELLIS, ESQ., Envoy Extraordinary, &c., Mexico.

P. S. — Since the above was written, application has been made in behalf of Mr. J. C. Howard, a youth of nineteen years of age, who was also with the expedition, and who, we are informed, was not a citizen of Texas. You will likewise inquire into his case, and do for him any thing else which you can do with propriety. D. W.

Mr. Webster to Mr. Ellis.

Department of State, Washington, January 6, 1842.

Sir, — I addressed you on the 3d instant in behalf of Franklin Coombs and Mr. Kendall, captured by the Mexican army, with the Texan expedition, near Santa Fé. The object of this is only to say (what, perhaps, you would not have failed to understand), that, if it should be found that other American citizens were made captives under like circumstances, and with similar claims to immunity and release, you will exert the same interference in their behalf.

I am, with regard, your obedient servant,

Daniel Webster.

To Powhatan Ellis, Esq., Envoy Extraordinary, &c., Mexico.

Mr. Webster to Mr. Peyton.

[private.]

Washington, January 6, 1842.

Dear Sir, — Your letter to the President, of the 21st of December, has been read by him with great interest and anxiety, although it was not the first communication upon the subject. Letters had been previously received from General Coombs, and information communicated from other quarters, upon which immediate steps were taken. A special messenger has been despatched from this department, with an instruction to our minister at Mexico, of which I inclose a copy. The President will interfere for the life and safety of young Coombs to the full extent of his duty. You must be aware of the delicacy of the question, at least as it presents itself to us, without more knowledge of the facts.

The President wishes the most effectual means taken, consistent with justice and propriety, to secure his safety. . . . . On receipt of this, if you should be of opinion that the object in view would be promoted by sending a private agent from New Orleans to coöperate with the American minister in Mexico, the President is willing that such agent, to be selected by you, should be immediately despatched; and his necessary expenses will be defrayed by this department. He cannot receive any public character, as we have a minister on the spot; but the President's great desire to do all that can be done leads him to say, that, if you think a private agency might be useful, he wishes it to be instituted, and that you would select such person as you deem the fittest for such duty. He the more readily submits this part of the case to your discretion, as, before this communication shall reach New Orleans, you may very probably be in possession of much more information than has as yet reached us; and there are likely also to be many citizens of New Orleans who are acquainted at Mexico.

As this agent will have no public character, he can only act under direction of the American minister, to whom he will report himself on his arrival. And the main advantage to be expected from such agency is this: that a person of respectability and address, well acquainted with Mexico, its manners and language, and perhaps with its present authorities, and acquainted, also, with the character, family, and connections of Coombs, Kendall, and other American citizens who may be in like condition, may, by unofficial means and personal efforts, coöperate usefully with Mr. Ellis. If you think it advisable, on the whole, that such agent be employed, you will give him a copy of this letter as his instructions.

The collector of New Orleans will have instructions to convey Mr. McRae to the fittest port in Mexico, by the revenue cutter or other the most prompt mode; and if you should think it useful that such private agent as is above mentioned should proceed to Mexico, he may use the same conveyance. You will see by the inclosed, that, although not applied to by his friends, Mr. Kendall's case has not been overlooked; and it is the President's wish, that, if any other American citizen, innocently in company with the expedition, should have fallen into the hands of the Mexicans, an equal interference may be made in his behalf.

I am, &c.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

BAILIE PEYTON, ESQ., United States District Attorney, New Orleans.

Mr. Webster to Mr. Thompson.

Department of State, Washington, April 15, 1842.

Sir, — I have to address you upon the subject of those citizens of the United States who were captured with the Texan expedition to Santa Fé, and who, as is believed, were not parties to that expedition, so far as it was military and hostile to Mexico, if, in fact, a hostile invasion of Mexico was among its purposes, but accompanied it only as traders, tourists, travellers, men of letters, or in other characters and capacities showing them to be non-combatants; but who, nevertheless, were taken and held as prisoners, compelled to undergo incredible hardships in a winter's march of two thousand miles, and at its end subjected to almost every conceivable degree of indignity and suffering.

By the law and practice of civilized nations, enemies' subjects taken in arms may be made prisoners of war; but every person found in the train of an army is not to be considered as therefore a belligerent or an enemy. In all wars, and in all countries, multitudes of persons follow the march of armies, for the purpose of traffic or from motives of curiosity, or the influence of other causes, who neither expect to be, nor reasonably can be, considered belligerents. Whoever, in the Texan expedition to Santa Fé, was commissioned or enrolled for the military service of Texas, or, being armed, was in the pay of that government, and engaged in an expedition hostile to Mexico, may be considered as her enemy, and might lawfully, therefore, be detained as prisoner of war. This is not to be doubted; and, by the general practice of modern nations, it is true that the fact of having been found in arms with others admitted to be armed for belligerent purposes raises a presumption of hostile character. In many cases, and especially in regard to European wars in modern times, it might be difficult to repel the force of this presumption. It is still, however, but a presumption; because it is nevertheless true that a man may be found in arms with no hostile intentions. He may have assumed arms for other purposes, and may assert a pacific character, with which the fact of his being more or less armed would be entirely consistent. In former and less civilized ages, cases of this sort existed without number in European society. When the peace of communities was less firmly established by efficient laws, and when, therefore, men often travelled armed for their own defence, or when individuals, being armed according to the fashion of the age, yet often journeyed under the protection of military escorts or bodies of soldiers, the possession of arms was no evidence of hostile character, circumstances of the times sufficiently explaining such appearances consistently with pacific intentions. And circumstances of the country may repel the presumption of hostility, as well as circumstances of the times, or the manners of a particular age. The Texan expedition to Santa Fé, in traversing the vast plains between the place from which it set out and that point, was to pass through a region which no one thinks of entering and crossing without arms, for whatever purpose or with whatever intent he may undertake such enterprise. If he be a hunter, he is armed; if a trader, he is armed; and, usually, traders go in considerable bodies, that they may be the better able to defend themselves against the roaming savage tribes so constantly met with in those extensive plains. It is not uncommon, indeed, that, for their better defence, companies of traders retain the service of men at arms, who maintain military order and array along the line of their march. When such bodies are met with in countries usually traversed by them, no inference arises, from the circumstance of their being armed, of any intention on their part of using such arms for any purpose but that of defence. If tourists, or persons wearing any other similar but equally pacific character, set forth on such a journey, they are still armed; armed for subsistence as well as for defence. The fact therefore, of being found in such a country with arms, does not prove a belligerent or hostile character, since nobody, however peaceable, is found there without arms. If, therefore, individuals armed only according to the custom of the country, but having no hostile purposes of their own, and free from all military authority or employment, fall in with or follow the march of troops proceeding toward a point of attack, these individuals are not combatants, and not subject to be taken and treated as prisoners. These considerations may be applied to those citizens of the United States for whose release from imprisonment the interposition of this government has been requested. One of those citizens is George Wilkins Kendall. Mr. Kendall is a man of letters, a highly respectable citizen of New Orleans, and was the editor of a literary publication carried on at that place. He was fond of travel at those seasons of the year when most persons who are able leave the city; and having, in all previous tours, made himself acquainted with all parts of his own country, and learning, early in the spring of 1841, that a trading expedition would start from Texas to Santa Fé about the 1st of May, he resolved on joining it, as a pleasure excursion of a novel and interesting character. His departure and his intentions were publicly announced in the paper with which he was concerned at the time of his setting forth. His object was declared to be to take a personal glance over this broad expanse of country, and, thus spending the summer, to return either by Missouri or by the way of Lower Mexico, by the usual time when citizens return to New Orleans for the fall business. The expedition, though having a military equipment, was represented to him as entirely commercial in its character, its object being, as was asserted, to turn the rich Chihuahua trade into the Texan channel. Mr. Kendall was no soldier, no revolutionary adventurer, but a man of respectable connections, engaged in prosperous business, and fond of the enjoyments of intellectual and social life. It is hardly possible that such a gentleman should have left such a condition to form part of a military expedition, subjecting himself to all its hazards and all its results, in an attempt to subjugate by force of arms a Mexican province five hundred or a thousand miles from his home and his connections.

Before leaving New Orleans, he obtained a passport from the Mexican vice-consul at that city. This fact, although it appears to have been denied, is proved by the testimony of Mr. Falconer and Mr. Van Ness. They can hardly be mistaken; but further evidence on this point may probably be in your possession before this despatch reaches you. He armed himself before leaving home, as any other person, of however pacific character, would arm himself for such a tour. Such was Mr. Kendall's character, such were his objects, and such the circumstances under which he joined the ill-fated expedition.

Several other prisoners appear, from the circumstances, to have been as little engaged in any hostile design as Mr. Kendall. John Tompkins is represented to be a citizen of the United States, from Greene County, Illinois, where his family, consisting of a wife and five children, still reside. He is a saddler by trade, but left the United States with merchandise for Texas just in time to join the expedition to Santa Fé. His health was delicate, and his object was to improve it, to dispose of his merchandise in order to defray his expenses, and to return to the place of his abode by the way of St. Louis.

David Snively is a man somewhat advanced in life, who belongs to the State of Ohio, where he has a wife and several children. He went with the expedition as a trader, and had a considerable amount of merchandise with him.

H. R. Buchanan, of Tennessee, went also as a trader, and took with him property of value, which was taken from him. He had arrived in Texas only a month before the expedition set out, and accompanied it with his own pack-mules and a servant.

L. B. Sheldon is a member of the Mississippi bar, who accompanied the expedition as a traveller only. He had with him a small amount in merchandise, from the sale of which he expected to defray his travelling expenses. He had gone to Texas in March, 1841, on business which he presumed would not detain him longer than two months; but he subsequently resolved to join the expedition for the purpose above mentioned.

Two persons by the name of Howard were among the captives, natives of and residents in this city or its neighborhood. They are represented as traders, who had with them merchandise to the amount of eight or ten thousand dollars.

Thomas S. Terry, of Hartford, in Connecticut, is believed to have gone to Texas in December, 1840, and, being a trader, joined the expedition for the sake of protection against the Indians or other freebooters. He did not intend to return to Texas, but to trade at Santa Fé, and between that place and St. Louis.

The circumstances of others who have applied for the interposition of this government are less precisely known. Whatever evidence may be in this department, or shall be received hereafter, respecting them, will be forwarded to you.

A demand for Mr. Kendall's release from confinement, as well as that of others under equally innocent circumstances, has been made by the minister of the United States at Mexico, and you will see the correspondence between that minister and the Mexican Secretary of State. That correspondence, as you will observe, is principally confined to the case of Mr. Kendall.

The Mexican Secretary objects to his release from confinement, because he was united with the invading enemies of that country, in whose company he was taken, and under whose protection he was journeying; and because the entrance of foreigners into Mexico by the Texan frontier, being prohibited by a Mexican law, even when such foreigners might be travelling alone, the prohibition ought to be more strict and severe in the case of their entering by the side of soldiers coming to invade the country. Because, also, Mr. Kendall was an agent of the Texans, or, at least, a member of the expedition to New Mexico; in proof of which, a passage, in the following words, is quoted from the New Orleans Picayune of the 21st of December last: "A Captain Lewis was one of the commissioners, and the other was Mr. Kendall, editor of the Picayune."

The Secretary proceeds to assert, that those who join invaders ought to be involved in their fate in respect to such warlike measures as it may be necessary to take to repel such invaders; and that, in affairs of this nature, all the presumptions are against him who associates himself with an enemy, in whose company he is made a prisoner, whatever his intentions may have been. The Secretary states, further, that, if Mr. Kendall was ignorant of the Mexican law referred to, it is well known not to be allowable to plead ignorance of any law which had properly been made public. But, supposing that he was ignorant of the law, the circumstances of his case, he argues, were such that its text could not be literally followed; for the penalty mentioned was intended to apply to one or two persons only, and those without hostile accompaniments, who might present themselves on the frontier; and that the law did not deprive the Mexican government of the right of self-preservation, a right derived from the law of nature and nations. The Secretary then alludes to documents in the possession of his government, which, he says, place Mr. Kendall's conduct in a more serious light; but those documents are neither produced nor described. The Secretary denies that the paragraph quoted from the newspaper was the ground of the proceeding of his government; but says that, proceeding as the paragraph did from Mr. Kendall's partners in business, it might be considered as impartial, and served to strengthen the presumptions against him. He denies that it is the duty of his government to allow Mr. Kendall the benefit of the context of the article from which the paragraph supposed to inculpate him had been quoted, although the extract may be used against him. He endeavors to prove himself correct in calling Mr. Kendall a commissioner of the Texans, and proceeds to define what he understands a commissioner to be. If Mr. Kendall had a passport, that, he admits, would be primâ facie evidence in his favor; and that, if it should be ascertained that he had an unconditional passport, which had been destroyed by an officer of the Mexican army, he should be set at liberty, and that measures had been taken to ascertain these facts.

These reasons appear to be either unfounded in fact, or, if true, to furnish no sufficient ground for regarding Mr. Kendall as a belligerent enemy, or for declining to comply with the demand made by this government in his behalf.

In the first place, it is said that he was united with the invading enemies of the country, in whose company he was taken, and under whose protection he was journeying. That he travelled with the Texans, is true; but, as has been already said, that fact alone does not constitute him a combatant. It may furnish, in the first instance, a presumption that he was so; but such a presumption may be repelled, and is fully repelled, by the circumstances of the case. There would be no meaning in that well-settled principle of the law of nations which exempts men of letters and other classes of non-combatants from the liability of being made prisoners of war, if it were an answer to every claim for such exemption to say that the person making it was united with a military force, or journeying under its protection.

As to the assertion that it is against the law of Mexico for foreigners to pass into it across the line of Texas, it is with no little surprise that the Mexican Secretary of State is found to assign this reason for making Mr. Kendall a prisoner. The direction of that law is only to prohibit the traveller's entrance, or to send him back if he does enter. It has no penalty of chains, dungeons, or condemnation to the public works. And the Mexican Secretary himself sufficiently shows that this law has no application to the case, because, he says, it was intended only for the case of one, two, or a few individuals.

Having quoted this law, and then finding that, in its just import, it furnished no authority for the treatment which these citizens of the United States had received, the Mexican Secretary appears to treat the subject as if this law had been set up to assist their claim for liberation; while, in truth, all that Mr. Ellis did, in this respect, was to say, that, if that law governed the case, then no penalty, no punishment, and no treatment of the prisoners could be justified but such as had been prescribed by that law; and thereupon the Secretary adroitly denied that the law applies to the case at all. In this he is no doubt quite right.

As to the assertion that Mr. Kendall was an agent of the Texans, or a member, properly speaking, of the expedition, and the reference, in proof of this assertion, to the article in the newspaper with which he was connected, all this was founded in misconstruction, as you will see, of the true import of the article itself, even if a newspaper paragraph were fit to be regarded in such a case. In the article, Mr. Kendall had been called an "avant-courier," merely to signify that he went forward, in approaching Santa Fé, in advance of the rest of the party. If others went forward for other purposes, he might still, in pursuance of his own objects, go with them. But Mr. Kendall not being responsible for this article, or shown to have had any knowledge of it, it cannot be of the least force against him, whatever may be its import.

The Secretary says, finally, that being found in company with an enemy raises a presumption against the party; but the Secretary does not say that this presumption may not be rebutted. Why, indeed, does he call it a presumption, unless he means that it is a thing calling for explanation, and which may be explained? It is explained, fully and completely. Mr. Kendall, as we think, brings himself clearly within the exemption of the law of nations, as practised in modern times; and to insist on presumptions, and to give them the force of conclusive proofs, in defiance of all repelling proofs, is to render that law, in its application to cases of this kind, null and void. If it be admitted that, primâ facie, the presumption is against Mr. Kendall, has he not repelled it? He has made an effort to do so; but, instead of meeting this effort by argument, and the proofs which support it by opposite proofs, the Secretary appears to content himself with stating, that such is the legal presumption; thus wholly avoiding the true point of the case. This government thinks that the facts stated and proved show Mr. Kendall to have been no party to the military expedition of Texas; to have had no hostile intention against Mexico; to have entered her territory for no purpose of assisting to make war on her citizens, dismember her provinces, or overturn her government.

It does not very satisfactorily appear, from any correspondence or information now in this department, in what light Mexico looks upon those persons made prisoners at Santa Fé, whom she has a right to consider as engaged in the service of Texas, and therefore as her enemies. We must presume that she means to regard them as prisoners of war. There is a possibility, however, that a different mode of considering them may be adopted, and that they may be thought to be amenable to the municipal laws of Mexico. Any proceeding founded on this idea would undoubtedly be attended with the most serious consequences. It is now several years since the independence of Texas, as a separate government, has been acknowledged by the United States, and she has since been recognized in that character by several of the most considerable powers of Europe. The war between her and Mexico, which has continued so long, and with such success, that for a long time there has been no hostile foot in Texas, is a public war, and as such it has been and will be regarded by this government. It is not now an outbreak of rebellion, a fresh insurrection, the parties to which may be treated as rebels. The contest, supposed, indeed, to have been substantially ended, has at least advanced far beyond that point. It is a public war, and persons captured in the course of it, who are to be detained at all, are to be detained as prisoners of war, and not otherwise.

It is true that the independence of Texas has not been recognized by Mexico. It is equally true that the independence of Mexico has only been recently recognized by Spain; but the United States having acknowledged both the independence of Mexico before Spain acknowledged it, and the independence of Texas although Mexico has not yet acknowledged it, stands in the same relation toward both those governments, and is as much bound to protect its citizens in a proper intercourse with Texas against injuries by the government of Mexico, as it would have been to protect such citizens in a like intercourse with Mexico against injuries by Spain. The period which has elapsed since Texas threw off the authority of Mexico is nearly as long as the whole duration of the Revolutionary war of the United States. No effort for the subjugation of Texas has been made by Mexico, from the time of the battle of San Jacinto, on the 21st day of April, 1836, until the commencement of the present year, and during all this period Texas has maintained an independent government, carried on commerce, and made treaties with nations in both hemispheres, and kept aloof all attempts at invading her territory. If, under these circumstances, any citizen of the United States, in whose behalf this government has a right on any account or to any extent to interfere, should, on a charge of having been found with an armed Texan force acting in hostility to Mexico, be brought to trial and punished as for a violation of the municipal laws of Mexico, or as being her subject engaged in rebellion, after his release has been demanded by this government, consequences of the most serious character would certainly ensue. You will, therefore, not fail, should any indication render it necessary, to point out distinctly to the government of Mexico the dangers, should the war between her and Texas continue, of considering it, so far as citizens of the United States may be concerned, in any other light than that of a public national war, in the events and progress of which prisoners may be made on both sides, and to whose condition the law and usages of nations respecting prisoners of war are justly applicable.

And this makes it proper that I should draw your particular attention to the manner in which the persons taken near Santa Fé have been treated, as we are informed.

Mr. Kendall, and other persons with him, having been carried to Santa Fé from the place of capture, were there deprived of their arms. To this there can be no objection, if we consider them as prisoners of war, because prisoners of war may be lawfully disarmed by the captor; but they were also despoiled, not only of every article of value about their persons, but of their clothing also, their coats, their hats, their shoes, things indispensable to the long march before them. If these facts be not disproved, they constitute an outrage by the local authorities of Mexico for which there can be no apology. The privations and indignities to which they were subjected, during their march of two thousand miles to the city of Mexico, at the most inclement season of the year, were horrible, and, if they were not well authenticated, it would have been incredible that they should have been inflicted in this age, and in a country calling itself Christian and civilized. During many days they had no food, and on others only two ears of corn were distributed to each man. To sustain life, therefore, they were compelled to sell, on the way, the few remnants of clothing which their captors had left them; but by seeking thus to appease their hunger, they increased the misery which they already endured from exposure to the cold. Most dreadful of all, however, several of them, disabled by sickness and suffering from keeping up with the others, were deliberately shot, without any provocation. Those who survived to their journey's end were, many of them, afflicted with loathsome disease; and those whose health was not broken down have been treated, not as the public law requires, but in a manner harsh and vindictive, and with a degree of severity equal, at least, to that usually inflicted by the municipal codes of most civilized and Christian states upon the basest felons. Indeed, they appear to have been ranked with these; being thrust into the same dungeons with Mexican malefactors, chained to them in pairs, and, when allowed to see the light and breathe the air of heaven, required, as a compensation therefor, to labor, beneath the lash of a task-master, upon roads and public works of that country.

The government of the United States has no inclination to interfere in the war between Mexico and Texas, for the benefit or protection of individuals, any further than its clear duties require. But if citizens of the United States who have not renounced, nor intended to renounce, their allegiance to their own government, nor have entered into the military service of any other government, have nevertheless been found so connected with armed enemies of Mexico as that they may be lawfully captured and detained as prisoners of war, it is still the duty of this government to take so far a concern in their welfare, as to see that, as prisoners of war, they are treated according to the usage of modern times and civilized states.

Indeed, although the rights or the safety of none of their own citizens were concerned, yet, if, in a war waged between two neighboring states, the killing, enslaving, or cruelly treating of prisoners should be indulged, the United States would feel it to be their duty, as well as their right, to remonstrate and to interfere against such a departure from the principles of humanity and civilization. These principles are common principles, essential alike to the welfare of all nations, and in the preservation of which all nations have, therefore, rights and interests. But their duty to interfere becomes imperative in cases affecting their own citizens.

It is therefore that the government of the United States protests against the hardships and cruelties to which the Santa Fé prisoners have been subjected. It protests against this treatment in the name of humanity and the law of nations; in the name of all Christian states; in the name of civilization and the spirit of the age; in the name of all republics; in the name of Liberty herself, enfeebled and dishonored by all cruelty and all excess; in the name of, and for the honor of, this whole hemisphere. It protests emphatically and earnestly against practices belonging only to barbarous people in barbarous times.

By the well-established rules of national law, prisoners of war are not to be treated harshly, unless personally guilty toward him who has them in his power; for he should remember that they are men, and unfortunate.

When an enemy is conquered, and submits, a great soul forgets all resentment, and is entirely filled with compassion for him. This is the humane language of the law of nations; and this is the sentiment of high honor among men. The law of war forbids the wounding, killing, impressment into the troops of the country, or the enslaving or otherwise maltreating of prisoners of war, unless they have been guilty of some grave crime; and from the obligation of this law no civilized state can discharge itself.

Every nation, on being received, at her own request, into the circle of civilized governments, must understand that she not only attains rights of sovereignty and the dignity of national character, but that she binds herself also to the strict and faithful observance of all those principles, laws, and usages which have obtained currency among civilized states, and which have for their object the mitigation of the miseries of war.

No community can be allowed to enjoy the benefit of national character, in modern times, without submitting to all the duties which that character imposes. A Christian people, who exercise sovereign power, who make treaties, maintain diplomatic relations with other states, and who should yet refuse to conduct their military operations according to the usages universally observed by such states, would present a character singularly inconsistent and anomalous.

This government will not hastily suppose that the Mexican republic will assume such a character.

There is yet another very important element arising out of the facts of this case.

It is asserted and believed, that the surrender of some of the persons connected with the expedition was made upon specific terms, which were immediately violated by the local Mexican authorities. If there is one rule of the law of war more clear and peremptory than another, it is that compacts between enemies, such as truces and capitulations, shall be faithfully adhered to; and their non-observance is denounced as being manifestly at variance with the true interest and duty, not only of the immediate parties, but of all mankind. Consequently, if the surrender of the expedition, or any part of it, was conditional, the benefit of those conditions must be insisted upon in favor of Mr. Kendall.

According to the statement of Messrs. Falconer and Van Ness, Mr. Kendall proceeded two hundred miles in advance of the main body, and was taken with his companions while they were displaying a flag of truce; and the persons who took them gave assurances that they should not be held as prisoners of war. Here, then, was a special immunity promised, but afterward notoriously withheld, as we are bound to believe in the present state of our information upon the subject. If, therefore, this government were not entitled to demand Mr. Kendall's release on the grounds of his having been a non-combatant and a neutral, it might require the government of Mexico to take care that the stipulation of its authorized agents to that effect be scrupulously fulfilled, and that, on this account, those to whom the promise was made should be immediately released, according to that promise.

In conclusion, I am directed by the President of the United States now to instruct you, that, on the receipt of this despatch, you inquire carefully and minutely into the circumstances of all those persons who, having been taken near Santa Fé, and having claimed the interposition of this government, are still held as prisoners in Mexico; and you will demand of the Mexican government the release of such of them as appear to have been innocent traders, travellers, invalids, men of letters, or for any other reason justly esteemed non-combatants, being citizens of the United States. To this end it may be proper to direct the consul to proceed to the places where any of them may be confined, and to take their statements under oath, as also the statements of other persons to whom they may respectively refer. If the Mexican government deny facts upon which any of the parties claim their release, and desire time for further investigation of their respective cases, or any of them, proper and suitable time must be allowed; but if any of the persons described in the next preceding paragraph, and for whose release you will have made a demand, shall still be detained, for the purpose of further inquiry or otherwise, you will then explicitly demand of the Mexican government that they be treated henceforward with all the lenity which, in the most favorable cases, belongs to the rights of prisoners of war; that they be not confined in loathsome dungeons, with malefactors and persons diseased; that they be not chained or subjected to ignominy, or to any particular rigor in their detention; that they be not obliged to labor on the public works, or put to any other hardship. You will state to the Mexican government that the government of the United States entertains a conviction that these persons ought to be set at liberty without delay; that it will feel great dissatisfaction if it shall still learn that Mr. Kendall, whose case has already been made the subject of an express demand, and others of equal claims to liberation, be not set at liberty at the time when you receive this despatch; but that, if the government of Mexico insists upon detaining any of them for further inquiry, it is due to the government of the United States, to its desire to preserve peace and harmony with Mexico, and to justice and humanity, that, while detained, these persons should enjoy to the fullest extent the rights of prisoners of war; and that it expects that a demand so just and reasonable, a demand respectfully made by one friendly state to another, will meet with immediate compliance. Having made this demand, you will wait for an answer; and if within ten days you shall not receive assurances that all the persons above mentioned, who may still be detained, will be thenceforward treated in the same manner which has now been insisted upon, you will hold no further official intercourse with the government of Mexico until you shall receive further directions from your own government. You will thereupon communicate with this department, detaining for that purpose the messenger who carries this. In your communication you will state, as fully and as accurately as possible, the circumstances of each man's case, as they may appear by all the evidence which at that time may be possessed by the legation. In making your demand for the better treatment of the prisoners, you will take especial care not to abandon or weaken the claim for their release, nothing more being intended in that respect than that proper time should be allowed to the government of Mexico to make such further inquiries as may be necessary.

Your predecessor has already been directed, that, if any of the persons suffer for the want of the common necessaries of life, he should provide for such wants until otherwise supplied; a direction which you will also observe.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

WADDY THOMPSON, ESQ., &c., &c., &c.

INDEPENDENCE OF TEXAS.

Message from the President of the United States, transmitting Copies of Papers upon the Subject of the Relations between the United States and the Mexican Republic, July 14, 1842.

TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES:

In answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 12th instant, requesting copies of papers upon the subject of the relations between the United States and the Mexican Republic, I transmit a report from the Secretary of State, and the documents by which it was accompanied.

JOHN TYLER.

Washington, July 14, 1842.

To the President of the United States:

Sir, — The Secretary of State, to whom was referred the resolution of the House of Representatives of yesterday, requesting the President to cause to be communicated to that House, so far as might be compatible with the public interest, copies of all the correspondence between the governments of the United States and of Mexico since the appointment of the present Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to Mexico, of the instructions given to that minister at and since his departure upon his mission, and of his despatches to this government, and particularly of any complaint of the government of Mexico alleging the toleration by the government of the United States of hostile interference by their citizens in the war between Mexico and Texas, and of any answer on the part of this government to such complaint, has the honor to lay before the President the accompanying papers.

All which is respectfully submitted.

Daniel Webster.

Department of State, Washington, July 13, 1842.

M. Velazquez de Leon to Mr. Webster.

[translation.]

New York, June 24, 1842.

The undersigned, in addressing the Hon. Daniel Webster, Secretary of State, has the honor to inform him that, although he holds in his power the appointment and credentials for presenting himself and acting as Chargé d'Affaires of Mexico in the United States, he has not thought proper to present himself for that purpose, until he had received the answer to the observations which he had addressed to his own government on that subject; but as he has received recently, and during this delay, the two annexed documents for his Excellency the President and the Hon. Daniel Webster, he hastens to send them on, in order that, upon their arriving as soon as possible at their destination, the honorable Secretary of State may give such answer as the government of the United States may judge proper; which answer the undersigned will transmit to the Mexican government, according to his instructions to that effect.

The undersigned avails himself of this occasion to renew to the Hon. Daniel Webster, Secretary of State, the assurances of his high consideration.

JOAQUIN VELAZQUEZ DE LEON.

HON. DANIEL WEBSTER, Secretary of State.

Mr. Webster to M. Velazquez de Leon.

Department of State, Washington, June 29, 1842.

SIR, — Your letter of the 24th of this month, transmitting one addressed to this department by the Secretary of State and Foreign Relations of the Mexican Republic, was duly received.

The President has long desired to see here a representative of that government, the residence of such a functionary being esteemed likely to foster and promote the peace and interests of the two countries. We are happy to hear that an appointment has at length been made; and all just respect will be paid to your credentials, when it shall be your pleasure to present them. Until such presentment be made, however, no regular diplomatic intercourse can be had between this department and yourself. Whatever answer may be judged proper to the letter of M. de Bocanegra to this department will be transmitted through the minister of the United States at Mexico.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

SEÑOR DON JOAQUIN VELAZQUEZ DE LEON.

M. de Bocanegra to Mr. Webster.

[TRANSLATION.]

National Palace, Mexico, May 12, 1842.

The undersigned, Secretary of State and Foreign Relations, enjoys the satisfaction of addressing the honorable Secretary of State of the United States of America, in the name and by the express order of his Excellency the President of the Mexican Republic. The relations of amity and good harmony which have happily subsisted between this and your great nation might have been disturbed in a lamentable manner, since the year 1835, when the revolution of Texas broke out, if the Mexican government had not given so many evidences of its forbearance, and had not made so many and so great sacrifices for the sake of peace, in order that the world might not, with pain and amazement, see the two nations which appear to be destined to establish the policy and the interests of the American continent divided and ravaged by the evils of war.

But from that truly unfortunate period, the Mexican republic has received nothing but severe injuries and inflictions from the citizens of the United States. The Mexican government speaks only of the citizens of the United States, as it still flatters itself with the belief that it is not the government of that country which has promoted the insurrection in Texas, which has favored the usurpation of its territory, and has supplied the rebels with ammunition, arms, vessels, money, and recruits; but that these aggressions have proceeded from private individuals, who have not respected the solemn engagements which bind together the two nations, nor the treaties concluded between them, nor the conduct, ostensibly frank, of the Cabinet of Washington.

It is, however, notorious, that the insurgent colonists of that integral part of the territory of the Mexican republic would have been unable to maintain their prolonged rebellion without the aid and the efficient sympathies of citizens of the United States, who have publicly raised forces in their cities and towns; have fitted out vessels in their ports, and laden them with munitions of war; and have marched to commit hostilities against a friendly nation, under the eyes and with the knowledge of the authorities to whom are intrusted the fulfilment of the law.

The Mexican government entertains so high an opinion of the force of the government of the United States, and of its power to restrain those its subjects from violating the religious faith of treaties, solemnly concluded between it and other nations, and from committing hostilities against such nations in time of peace, that it cannot easily comprehend how those persons have been able to evade the punishment decreed against them by the laws of the United States themselves, and to obtain that quiet impunity which incessantly encourages them to continue their attacks. It is well worthy of remark, that no sooner does the Mexican government, in the exercise of its rights, which it cannot and does not desire to renounce, prepare means to recover a possession usurped from it, than the whole population of the United States, especially in the Southern States, is in commotion; and in the most public manner a large portion of them is turned upon Texas, in order to prevent the rebels from being subjected by the Mexican arms, and brought back to proper obedience.

Could proceedings more hostile, on the part of the United States, have taken place, had that country been at war with the Mexican republic? Could the insurgents of Texas have obtained a coöperation more effective or more favorable to their interests? Certainly not. The civilized world looks on with amazement, and the Mexican government is filled with unspeakable regret, as it did hope, and had a right to hope, that, living in peace with the United States, your government would preserve our territory from the invasions of your own subjects. The vicinity of a friend is an advantage rather than an inconvenience; but if one neighbor oversteps the sacred limits imposed by treaties, and disturbs and harasses another, it cannot be maintained that the friendship of the former is real, and that much confidence should be placed in it.

The government of the Mexican republic, therefore, which regards the faithful fulfilment of treaties as its highest obligation, and anxiously desires to preserve and increase its friendly relations with the people and the government of the United States, finds itself under the necessity of protesting solemnly against the aggressions which the citizens of those States are constantly repeating upon the Mexican territory, and of declaring, in a positive manner, that it considers as a violation of the treaty of amity the toleration of a course of conduct which produces an incomprehensible state of things, — a state neither of peace nor war, — but inflicting upon the Mexican republic the same injuries and inconveniences as if war had been declared between the two nations, which are called by Providence to form with each other relations and bonds of extreme and cordial friendship.

And the undersigned, in complying with this order from the most excellent Provisional President of the Republic of Mexico, assures you, Sir, of the high consideration with which he remains your obedient servant.

J. M. DE BOCANEGRA.

HON. DANIEL WEBSTER, Secretary of State of the United States of America.

Mr. Webster to Mr. Thompson.

Department of State, Washington, July 8, 1842.

Sir, — On the 29th of last month a communication was received at this department from M. de Bocanegra, Secretary of State and Foreign Relations of the government of Mexico, having been forwarded through the agency of M. Velazquez de Leon, at New York, who informed the department, by a letter accompanying that of M. de Bocanegra, that he had been appointed Chargé d'Affaires of the Mexican republic to this government, although he had not yet presented his credentials. M. de Bocanegra's letter is addressed to the Secretary of State of the United States, and bears date the 12th of May. A copy, together with a copy of the communication from M. Velazquez de Leon, transmitting it, and of the answer to M. Velazquez de Leon from this department, you will receive herewith. Upon the receipt of this despatch, you will immediately address a note to M. de Bocanegra, in which you will say, that

The Secretary of State of the United States has received a letter addressed to him by M. de Bocanegra, under date of the 12th of May, and transmitted to the Department of State at Washington through the agency of M. Velazquez de Leon, at New York, who informs the government of the United States that he has been appointed Chargé d'Affaires of the Mexican republic, although he has not presented his letter of credence.

The government of the United States sees with regret the adoption, on this occasion, of a form of communication quite unusual in diplomatic intercourse, and for which no necessity is known. An envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States, fully accredited to the government of Mexico, was at that moment in its capital, in the actual discharge of his functions, and ready to receive on behalf of his government any communication which it might be the pleasure of the President of the Mexican republic to make to it. And it is not improper here to add, that it has been matter of regret with the government of the United States, that, while, being animated by a sincere desire at all times to cultivate the most amicable relations with Mexico, it has not failed to maintain near that government a mission of the highest rank known to its usages, Mexico, for a long time, has had no representative near the government of the United States.

But the manner of the communication from M. de Bocanegra, however novel and extraordinary, is less important than its contents and character, which surprise the government of the United States by a loud complaint of the violation of its neutral duties. M. de Bocanegra, speaking, as he says, by the express order of the President of the Mexican republic, declares that the amicable relations between the two countries might have been lamentably disturbed since the year 1835, when the revolution in Texas broke out, had not Mexico given so many evidences of its forbearance, and made so many and so great sacrifices for the sake of peace, in order that the world might not see, with pain and amazement, two nations which appear destined to establish the policy and interests of the American continent divided and ravaged by the evils of war.

The language implies that such has been the conduct of the United States towards Mexico, that war must have ensued before the present time, had not Mexico made great sacrifices to avoid such a result; a charge which the government of the United States utterly denies and repels. It is wholly ignorant of any sacrifices made by Mexico in order to preserve peace, or of any occasion calling on its government to manifest uncommon forbearance. On the contrary, the government of the United States cannot but be of opinion, that, if the history of the occurrences between the two governments, and the state of things at this moment existing between them, be regarded, both the one and the other will demonstrate that it is the conduct of the government of the United States which has been marked, in an especial manner, by moderation and forbearance. Injuries and wrongs have been sustained by citizens of the United States, not inflicted by individual Mexicans, but by the authority of the government; for which injuries and wrongs, numerous as they are, and outrageous as is the character of some of them, and acknowledged as they are by Mexico herself, redress has been sought only by mild and peaceable means, and no indemnity asked but such as the strictest justice imperatively demanded. A desire not to disturb the peace and harmony of the two countries has led the government of the United States to be content with the lowest measure of remuneration. Mexico herself must admit, that, in all these transactions, the conduct of the United States toward her has been signalized, not by the infliction of injuries, but by the manifestation of a friendly feeling and a conciliatory spirit.

The government of the United States will not be unjust in its sentiments toward Mexico; it will not impute to its government any desire to disturb the peace; it acquits it of any design to spread the ravages and horrors of war over the two countries; and it leaves it to Mexico herself to avow her own motives for her pacific policy, if she have any other motive than those of expediency and justice; provided, however, that such avowal of her motives carry with it no imputation or reflection upon the good faith and honor of the United States.

The revolution in Texas, and the events connected with it and springing out of it, are M. de Bocanegra's principal topic; and it is in relation to these that his complaint is founded. His government, he says, flatters itself that the government of the United States has not promoted the insurrection in Texas, favored the usurpation of its territory, or supplied the rebels with vessels, ammunition, and money. If M. de Bocanegra intends this as a frank admission of the honest and cautious neutrality of the government of the United States in the contest between Mexico and Texas, he does that government justice, and no more than justice; but if the language be intended to intimate an opposite and a reproachful meaning, that meaning is only the more offensive for being insinuated rather than distinctly avowed. M. de Bocanegra would seem to represent that, from 1835 to the present time, citizens of the United States, if not their government, have been aiding rebels in Texas in arms against the lawful authority of Mexico. This is not a little extraordinary. Mexico may have chosen to consider, and may still choose to consider, Texas as having been at all times, since 1835, and as still continuing, a rebellious province; but the world has been obliged to take a very different view of the matter. From the time of the battle of San Jacinto, in April, 1836, to the present moment, Texas has exhibited the same external signs of national independence as Mexico herself, and with quite as much stability of government. Practically free and independent, acknowledged as a political sovereignty by the principal powers of the world, no hostile foot finding rest within her territory for six or seven years, and Mexico herself refraining, for all that period, from any further attempt to reëstablish her own authority over that territory, it cannot but be surprising to find M. de Bocanegra complaining, that, for that whole period, citizens of the United States, or its government, have been favoring the rebels of Texas, and supplying them with vessels, ammunition, and money, as if the war for the reduction of the province of Texas had been constantly prosecuted by Mexico, and her success prevented by these influences from abroad!

The general facts appertaining to the settlement of Texas, and the revolution in its government, cannot but be well known to M. de Bocanegra. By the treaty of the 22d of February, 1819, between the United States and Spain, the Sabine was adopted as the line of boundary between the two powers. Up to that period, no considerable colonization had been effected in Texas; but the territory between the Sabine and the Rio Grande being confirmed to Spain by the treaty, applications were made to that power for grants of land; and such grants, or permissions of settlement, were, in fact, made by the Spanish authorities in favor of citizens of the United States proposing to emigrate to Texas in numerous families, before the declaration of independence by Mexico. And these early grants were confirmed, as is well known, by successive acts of the Mexican government, after its separation from Spain. In January, 1823, a national colonization law was passed, holding out strong inducements to all persons who should incline to undertake the settlement of uncultivated lands; and although the Mexican law prohibited for a time citizens of foreign countries from settling, as colonists, in territories immediately adjoining such foreign countries, yet even this restriction was afterward repealed or suspended; so that, in fact, Mexico, from the commencement of her political existence, held out the most liberal inducements to emigrants into her territories, with full knowledge that these inducements were likely to act, and expecting they would act, with the greatest effect upon citizens of the United States, especially of the Southern States, whose agricultural pursuits naturally rendered the rich lands of Texas, so well suited to their accustomed occupation, objects of desire to them. The early colonists of the United States, introduced by Moses and Stephen Austin under these inducements and invitations, were persons of most respectable character, and their undertaking was attended with very severe hardships, occasioned in no small degree by the successive changes in the government of Mexico. They nevertheless persevered, and accomplished a settlement. And, under the encouragements and allurements thus held out by Mexico, other emigrants followed, and many thousand colonists from the United States and elsewhere had settled in Texas, within ten years from the date of Mexican independence. Having some reason to complain, as they thought, of the government over them, and especially of the aggressions of the Mexican military stationed in Texas, they sought relief by applying to the supreme government for the separation of Texas from Coahuila, and for a local government for Texas itself. Not having succeeded in this object, in the process of time, and in the progress of events, they saw fit to attempt an entire separation from Mexico, to set up a government of their own, and to establish a political sovereignty. War ensued; and the battle of San Jacinto, fought on the 21st of April, 1836, achieved their independence. The war was from that time at an end, and in March following the independence of Texas was formally acknowledged by the government of the United States.

In the events leading to the actual result of these hostilities the United States had no agency, and took no part. Its government had, from the first, abstained from giving aid or succor to either party. It knew its neutral obligations, and fairly endeavored to fulfil them all. It acknowledged the independence of Texas only when that independence was an apparent and an ascertained fact; and its example in this particular has been followed by several of the most considerable powers of Europe.

It has been sometimes stated, as if for the purpose of giving more reason to the complaints of Mexico, that, of the military force which acted against Mexico with efficiency and success in 1836, a large portion consisted of volunteers then fresh from the United States. But this is a great error. It is well ascertained, that, of those who bore arms in the Texan ranks in the battle of San Jacinto, three fourths, at least, were colonists, invited into Texas by the grants and the colonization laws of Mexico, and called to the field by the exigencies of the times, in 1836, from their farms and other objects of private pursuit.

M. de Bocanegra's complaint is twofold. First, that citizens of the United States have supplied the rebels in Texas with ammunition, arms, vessels, money, and recruits; have publicly raised forces in their cities and fitted out vessels in their ports, loaded them with munitions of war, and marched to commit hostilities against a friendly nation, under the eye and with the knowledge of the public authorities of the United States. In all this M. de Bocanegra appears to forget that, while the United States are at peace with Mexico, they are also at peace with Texas; that both stand on the same footing of friendly nations; that, since 1837, the United States have regarded Texas as an independent sovereignty as much as Mexico; and that trade and commerce with citizens of a government at war with Mexico cannot, on that account, be regarded as an intercourse by which assistance and succor are given to Mexican rebels. The whole current of M. de Bocanegra's remarks runs in the same direction, as if the independence of Texas had not been acknowledged. It has been acknowledged; it was acknowledged in 1837, against the remonstrance and protest of Mexico; and most of the acts of any importance of which M. de Bocanegra complains flow necessarily from that recognition. He speaks of Texas as still being "an integral part of the territory of the Mexican republic"; but he cannot but understand that the United States do not so regard it. The real complaint of Mexico, therefore, is, in substance, neither more nor less than a complaint against the recognition of Texan independence. It may be thought rather late to repeat that complaint, and not quite just to confine it to the United States, to the exemption of England, France, and Belgium, unless the United States, having been the first to acknowledge the independence of Mexico herself, are to be blamed for setting an example for the recognition of that of Texas. But it is still true that M. de Bocanegra's specification of his grounds of complaint and remonstrance is mainly confined to such transactions and occurrences as are the natural consequence of the political relations existing between Texas and the United States. Acknowledging Texas to be an independent nation, the government of the United States of course allows and encourages lawful trade and commerce between the two countries. If articles contraband of war be found mingled with this commerce, while Mexico and Texas are belligerent states, Mexico has the right to intercept the transit of such articles to her enemy. This is the common right of all belligerents, and belongs to Mexico in the same extent as to other nations. But M. de Bocanegra is quite well aware that it is not the practice of nations to undertake to prohibit their own subjects, by previous laws, from trafficking in articles contraband of war. Such trade is carried on at the risk of those engaged in it, under the liabilities and penalties prescribed by the law of nations or by particular treaties. If it be true, therefore, that citizens of the United States have been engaged in a commerce by which Texas, an enemy of Mexico, has been supplied with arms and munitions of war, the government of the United States, nevertheless, was not bound to prevent it, could not have prevented it without a manifest departure from the principles of neutrality, and is in no way answerable for the consequences. The treaty of the 5th of April, 1831, between the United States and Mexico itself, shows most clearly how little foundation there is for the complaint of trading with Texas, if Texas is to be regarded as a public enemy of Mexico. The sixteenth article declares: "It shall likewise be lawful for the aforesaid citizens, respectively, to sail with their vessels and merchandise before mentioned, and to trade, with the same liberty and security, from the places, ports, and havens of those who are enemies of both or either party, without any opposition or disturbance whatsoever, not only directly from the places of the enemy before mentioned to neutral places, but also from one place belonging to an enemy to another place belonging to an enemy, whether they be under the jurisdiction of the same government, or under several."

The eighteenth article enumerates those commodities which shall be regarded as contraband of war; but neither that article nor any other imposes on either nation any duty of preventing, by previous regulation, commerce in such articles. Such commerce is left to its ordinary fate, according to the law of nations. It is only, therefore, by insisting, as M. de Bocanegra does insist, that Texas is still a part of Mexico, that he can maintain any complaint. Let it be repeated, therefore, that, if the things against which he remonstrates be wrong, they have their source in the original wrong of the acknowledgment of Texan independence. But that acknowledgment is not likely to be retracted.

There can be no doubt at all, that, for the last six years, the trade in articles contraband of war between the United States and Mexico has been greater than between the United States and Texas. It is probably greater at the present moment. Why has not Texas a right to complain of this? For no reason, certainly, but because the permission to trade, or the actual trading, by the citizens of a government, in articles contraband of war, is not a breach of neutrality.

M. de Bocanegra professes himself unable to comprehend how those persons of whom he complains have been able to evade the punishment decreed against them by the laws of the United States; but he does not appear to have a clear idea of the principles or provisions of those laws. The duties of neutral nations, in time of war, are prescribed by the law of nations, which is imperative and binding upon all governments; and nations not unfrequently establish municipal regulations for the better government of the conduct of their subjects or citizens.

This has been done by the United States, in order to maintain with greater certainty a strict and impartial neutrality pending war between other countries. And wherever a violation of neutral duties, as they exist by the law of nations, or any breach of its own laws, has been brought to the notice of the government, attention has always been paid to it.

At an early period of the Texan revolution, strict orders were given by the President of the United States to all officers on the southern and southwestern frontier, to take care that those laws should be observed; and the attention of the government of the United States has not been called to any specific violation of them since the manifestation on the part of Mexico of an intention to renew hostilities with Texas; and all officers of the government remain charged with the strict and faithful execution of these laws.

On a recent occasion, complaint was made by the representatives of Texas, that an armament was fitted out in the United States for the service of Mexico against Texas. Two vessels of war, it was alleged, built or purchased in the United States for the use of the government of Mexico, and well understood as intended to be employed against Texas, were equipped and ready to sail from the waters of New York. The case was carefully inquired into, official examination was made, and legal counsel invoked. It appeared to be a case of great doubt; but Mexico was allowed the benefit of that doubt, and the vessels left the United States, with the whole or a part of their armament actually on board. The same administration of even-handed justice, the same impartial execution of the laws toward all parties, will continue to be observed.

If forces have been raised in the United States, or vessels fitted out in their ports for Texan service, contrary to law, no instance of which has yet come to the knowledge of the government, prompt attention will be paid to the first case, and to all cases which may be made known to it. As to advances, loans, or donations of money or goods, made by individuals to the government of Texas or its citizens, M. de Bocanegra hardly needs to be informed, that there is nothing unlawful in this, so long as Texas is at peace with the United States, and that these are things which no government undertakes to restrain. Other citizens are equally at liberty, should they be so inclined, to show their good-will toward Mexico by the same means. Still less can the government of the United States be called upon to interfere with opinions uttered in the public assemblages of a free people, accustomed to the independent expression of their sentiments, resulting in no violation of the laws of their country, or of its duties as a neutral state. Toward the United States, Mexico and Texas stand in the same relation, as independent states at war. Of the character of that war mankind will form their own opinions; and in the United States, at least, the utterance of those opinions cannot be suppressed.

The second part of M. de Bocanegra's complaint is thus stated: "No sooner does the Mexican government, in the exercise of its rights, which it cannot and does not desire to renounce, prepare means to recover a possession usurped from it, than the whole population of the United States, especially in the Southern States, is in commotion; and, in the most public manner, a large portion of them is directed upon Texas."

And how does M. de Bocanegra suppose that the government of the United States can prevent, or is bound to undertake to prevent, the people from thus going to Texas? This is emigration, — the same emigration, though not under the same circumstances, which Mexico invited to Texas before the revolution. These persons, so far as is known to the government of the United States, repair to Texas, not as citizens of the United States, but as ceasing to be such citizens, and as changing, at the same time, their allegiance and their domicile. Should they return, after having entered into the service of a foreign state, still claiming to be citizens of the United States, it will be for the authorities of the United States government to determine how far they have violated the municipal laws of the country, and what penalties they have incurred. The government of the United States does not maintain, and never has maintained, the doctrine of the perpetuity of natural allegiance. And surely Mexico maintains no such doctrine; because her actually existing government, like that of the United States, is founded in the principle that men may throw off the obligation of that allegiance to which they are born. The government of the United States, from its origin, has maintained legal provisions for the naturalization of such subjects of foreign states as may choose to come hither, make their home in the country, and, renouncing their former allegiance, and complying with certain stated requisitions, to take upon themselves the character of citizens of this government. Mexico herself has laws granting equal facilities to the naturalization of foreigners. On the other hand, the United States have not passed any law restraining their own citizens, native or naturalized, from leaving the country and forming political relations elsewhere. Nor do other governments, in modern times, attempt any such thing. It is true that there are governments which assert the principle of perpetual allegiance; yet, even in cases where this is not rather a matter of theory than practice, the duties of this supposed continuing allegiance are left to be demanded of the subject himself, when within the reach of the power of his former government, and as exigencies may arise; and are not attempted to be enforced by the imposition of previous restraint, preventing men from leaving their country.

Upon this subject of the emigration of individuals from neutral to belligerent states, in regard to which M. de Bocanegra appears so indignant, we must be allowed to bring Mexico into her own presence, to compare her with herself; and respectfully invite her to judge the matter by her own principles and her own conduct. In her great struggle against Spain for her own independence, did she not open her arms wide to receive all who would come to her from any part of the world? And did not multitudes flock to her new-raised standard of liberty, from the United States, from England, Ireland, France, and Italy, many of whom distinguished themselves in her service, both by sea and land? She does not appear to have supposed that the governments of these persons, thus coming to unite their fate with hers, were, by allowing the emigration, even pending a civil war, furnishing just cause of offence to Spain. Even in her military operations against Texas, Mexico employed many foreign emigrants; and it may be thought remarkable that, in those very operations, not long before the battle of San Jacinto, a native citizen of the United States held high command in her service, and performed feats of no mean significance in Texas. Of that toleration, therefore, as she calls it, and which she now so warmly denounces, Mexico in that hour of emergency embraced the benefits eagerly, and to the full extent of her power. May we not ask, then, how she can reconcile her present complaints with her own practice, as well as how she accounts for so long and unbroken a silence upon a subject on which her remonstrance is now so loud?

Spain chose to regard Mexico only in the light of a rebellious province for near twenty years after she had asserted her own independence. Does Mexico now admit, that, for all that period, notwithstanding her practical emancipation from Spanish power, it was unlawful for the subjects and citizens of other governments to carry on with her the ordinary business of commerce, or to accept her tempting offers to emigrants? Certainly such is not her opinion.

Might it not be asked, then, even if the United States had not already and long ago acknowledged the independence of Texas, how they should be expected to wait for the accomplishment of the object, now existing only in purpose and intention, of the resubjugation of that territory by Mexico? How long, let it be asked, in the judgment of Mexico herself, is the fact of actual independence to be held of no avail against an avowed purpose of future reconquest?

M. de Bocanegra is pleased to say, that, if war actually existed between the two countries, proceedings more hostile, on the part of the United States, could not have taken place, nor could the insurgents of Texas have obtained more effectual cooperation than they have obtained.

This opinion, however hazardous to the discernment and just estimate of things of those who avow it, is yet abstract an theoretical, and, so far, harmless. The efficiency of American hostility to Mexico has never been tried; the government has no desire to try it. It would not disturb the peace for the sake of showing how erroneously M. de Bocanegra has reasoned; while, on the other hand, it trusts that a just hope may be entertained that Mexico will not inconsiderately and needlessly hasten into an experiment by which the truth or fallacy of his sentiments may be brought to an actual ascertainment.

M. de Bocanegra declares, in conclusion, that his government finds itself under the necessity of protesting solemnly against the aggressions which the citizens of the United States are reiterating upon the Mexican territory, and of declaring, in a positive manner, that it will consider as a violation of the treaty of amity the toleration of that course of conduct, which he alleges inflicts on the Mexican republic the injuries and inconveniences of war. The President exceedingly regrets both the sentiment and the manner of this declaration. But it can admit of but one answer. The Mexican government appears to require that which could not be granted, in whatever language or whatever tone requested. The government of the United States is a government of law.

The chief executive magistrate, as well as functionaries in every other department, is restrained and guided by the Constitution and the laws of the land. Neither the Constitution, nor the laws of the land, nor principles known to the usages of modern states, authorize him to interdict lawful trade between the United States and Texas, or to prevent, or attempt to prevent, individuals from leaving the United States for Texas, or any other foreign country.

If such individuals enter into the service of Texas, or any other foreign state, the government of the United States no longer holds over them the shield of its protection. They must stand or fall in their newly assumed character, and according to the fortunes which may betide it. But the government of the United States cannot be called upon to prevent their emigration; and it must be added, that the Constitution, public treaties, and the laws oblige the President to regard Texas as an independent state, and its territory as no part of the territory of Mexico. Every provision of law, every principle of neutral obligation, will be sedulously enforced in relation to Mexico, as in relation to other powers, and to the same extent and with the same integrity of purpose. All this belongs to the constitutional power and duty of the government, and it will all be fulfilled. But the continuance of amity with Mexico cannot be purchased at any higher rate. If the peace of the two countries is to be disturbed, the responsibility will devolve on Mexico. She must be answerable for consequences. The United States, let it be again repeated, desire peace. It would be with infinite pain that they should find themselves in hostile relations with any of the new governments on this continent. But their government is regulated, limited, full of the spirit of liberty, but surrounded, nevertheless, with just restraints; and, greatly and fervently as it desires peace with all states, and especially with its more immediate neighbors, yet no fear of a different state of things can be allowed to interrupt its course of equal and exact justice to all nations, nor to jostle it out of the constitutional orbit in which it revolves.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

WADDY THOMPSON, Esq., &c., &c., &c.

M. de Bocanegra to Mr. Webster.

[TRANSLATION.]

National Palace, Mexico, May 31, 1842.

The undersigned, Minister of Foreign Relations and Government of the Mexican republic, had the honor, a few days since, to address the honorable Secretary of State of the United States, in order to protest formally against the government of that republic, in the name of his Excellency the Provisional President, on account of the continual hostilities and aggressions of citizens of the United States against the Mexican territory; and, although he might hope for a flattering result in the change of proceedings, he finds himself, in consequence of the continuation of those proceedings, under the necessity of again calling the attention of the Secretary of State to the undeniable toleration which has been and is still afforded to the enemies of a nation sincerely friendly, and bound by the solemn compacts of a treaty, which unites the two republics.

In that note the undersigned, after setting before the Secretary the prudence with which the government of Mexico has sought, ever since the commencement of the revolution in Texas, to conduct all its relations with the United States, so as to avoid a rupture between the two nations, which, from their importance and other serious considerations, seem destined to fix the policy and the lot of the vast and rich continent of America, he flattered himself with the idea that the Cabinet of Washington would not protect, either openly or secretly, or in any way, the scandalous usurpation of an acknowledged portion of the national territory. He, however, regrets that he must judge from facts, open to all the world, that the very cabinet of the United States, and the subaltern and local authorities, do observe a conduct openly at variance with the most sacred principles of the law of nations and the solemn compacts of amity existing between the two nations; sufficient proof being afforded by the consent given to the formation of the most tumultuous public assemblies, in various parts of the United States themselves, to the equipment of armaments, and the embarkation of volunteers in large bodies, and to the preparation and disposal of every thing calculated to contribute to aid the Texans, and to the invasion of a neighboring and friendly republic.

The Mexican government cannot understand such conduct; and, being itself frank in its proceedings, and animated at the same time by a sincere desire that the relations now existing between this republic and the United States should not suffer the slightest alteration, it considers itself bound in duty to repeat, with every formality, its former protest against such toleration; the continuance of which it will regard as a positive act of hostility against this republic, which will regulate the conduct to be observed by it agreeably to the dictates of justice and to the interests and dignity of the nation.

The undersigned hopes that the Secretary will be pleased to reply with that promptness which the importance of the subject requires; and he avails himself, with pleasure, of this opportunity to repeat to that gentleman the assurance of his most distinguished consideration, with which he remains, &c.

J. M. DE BOCANEGRA.

HON. DANIEL WEBSTER, Secretary of State of the United States of America.

Mr. Webster to Mr. Thompson.

Department of State, Washington, July 13, 1842.

SIR,— After writing to you on the 8th instant, I received, through the same channel as the former, M. de Bocanegra's second letter, and at the same time your despatch of the 6th of June, and your private letter of the 21st. This last letter of M. de Bocanegra was written, as you will see, before it was possible for him to expect an answer to his first, which answer is now forwarded, and shows the groundless nature of the complaints of Mexico. The letter itself is highly exceptionable and offensive. It imputes violations of honor and good faith to the government of the United States, not only in the most unjust, but in the most indecorous manner. You have not spoken of it in terms too strong, in your circular to the members of the diplomatic corps.

On the receipt of this note, you will write a note to M. de Bocanegra, in which you will say, that the Secretary of State of the United States, on the 9th of July, received his letter of the 31st of May; that the President of the United States considers the language and tone of that letter derogatory to the character of the United States, and highly offensive, as it imputes to their government a direct breach of faith; and that he directs that no other answer be given to it, than the declaration, that the conduct of the government of the United States, in regard to the war between Mexico and Texas, having been always hitherto governed by a strict and impartial regard to its neutral obligations, will not be changed or altered in any respect or in any degree. If for this the government of Mexico shall see fit to change the relations at present existing between the two countries, the responsibility remains with herself.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

WADDY THOMPSON, ESQ., &c., &c., &c.

CAPTURE OF MONTEREY.

Mr. Webster to Mr. Thompson.

Department of State, Washington, January 17, 1843.

Sir, — Your despatches to No. —, inclusive, and your private letter of the 15th ultimo, have been received.

Although the department is without official intelligence of the seizure of Monterey by Commodore Jones, in command of the United States squadron in the Pacific, it is deemed proper that no time should be lost in acquainting the Mexican government that the transaction was entirely unauthorized. If, therefore, the account of that event should prove to be authentic, you will take occasion to inform the Minister for Foreign Affairs, orally, that Commodore Jones had no warrant from this government for the proceeding, and that the President exceedingly regrets its occurrence. I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

Daniel Webster.

Waddy Thompson, Esq., &c., &c., &c.

Mr. Webster to General Almonte.

Department of State, Washington, January 21, 1843.

The undersigned, Secretary of State of the United States, has the honor to communicate to General Almonte, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the Mexican republic, a copy of an instruction which has been addressed by this department to the minister of the United States at Mexico, upon the subject of the reported seizure of Monterey, on the Mexican coast, by Commodore Jones, in command of the United States squadron in the Pacific.

The undersigned avails himself of the occasion to offer General Almonte renewed assurances of his very distinguished consideration.

Daniel Webster.

General Don J. N. Almonte, &c.

To this note an answer was returned by General Almonte on the 24th of January, expressing his regret that nothing was said by Mr. Webster about punishing Commodore Jones, and intimating that compensation ought to be made by the United States for the losses suffered by citizens of Mexico in consequence of the capture of Monterey. To this letter of General Almonte the following reply was returned by Mr. Webster.

Mr. Webster to General Almonte.

Department of State, Washington, January 30, 1843.

The undersigned, Secretary of State of the United States, has had the honor to receive the note of the 24th instant of General Almonte, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the Mexican republic.

General Almonte has already been made acquainted with the instruction addressed from this department, on the 17th instant, to the minister of the United States at Mexico, respecting the transaction at Monterey, in Upper California, in which Commodore Jones was concerned; but General Almonte now expresses his regret that he sees in that instruction no declaration that Commodore Jones will be exemplarily punished for the extraordinary act of excess committed by him, in violation of the faith of treaties, and in abuse of the hospitality with which the peaceable inhabitants of Monterey were prepared to receive him.

The undersigned has the honor to inform General Almonte, that, before the receipt of his note, the President had given directions for the adoption of such a course of proceeding toward Commodore Jones as, in his opinion, was due to the circumstances of the case, to the preservation of the principle and practice of absolute and entire abstinence, on the part of military power, from all aggression in time of peace, and especially due to the friendly relations at the present time happily subsisting between the United States and Mexico.

But General Almonte and his government must see that Commodore Jones intended no indignity to the government of Mexico, nor any thing unlawful toward her citizens. Unfortunately, he supposed, as he asserts, that a state of war actually existed, at the time, between the two countries. If this supposition had been well founded, all that he did would have been justifiable; so that, whatever of imprudence or impropriety he may be chargeable with, there is nothing to show that he intended any affront to the honor of the Mexican government, or to violate the relations of peace.

General Almonte is aware of some of the circumstances in which this belief of the actual existence of a state of hostilities probably might have had its origin. It is not deemed necessary now to advert to those circumstances, nor is it at present known to the government of the United States what other causes may have existed to strengthen this belief, or to make it general along the western shore of this continent. In the clearly manifest absence of all illegal and improper intent, some allowance may be properly extended toward acts of indiscretion in a quarter so very remote, and in which correct information of distant events is not soon or easily obtained.

If, in this transaction, citizens of Mexico have received any injury in their persons or property, the government of the United States will undoubtedly feel itself bound to make ample reparation; and the representations of General Almonte on that subject will receive the most respectful and immediate consideration. Happily, no lives were lost; nor is it understood that any considerable injury was suffered by any one.

The undersigned is directed by the President to assure General Almonte and his government, that the government of the United States will at all times be among the last to authorize or justify any aggression on the territory of a nation with whom it is at peace, or any indignity to its government. Sensibly alive to any indignity, if offered to itself, it is equally resolved to give no such cause of offence to its neighbors. And the undersigned is directed to assure General Almonte and his government of the pain and the surprise which the President experienced on receiving information of this transaction. Under these assurances, the President hopes that it may pass away without leaving in the mind of the government of Mexico any other feeling than that in which the government of the United States entirely partakes; a feeling of deep regret at what has happened, and a conviction that no such unfortunate and unauthorized occurrence ought in any degree to impair the amicable relations subsisting between the two countries, so evidently to the advantage of both.

The undersigned has been made acquainted with the communication addressed by the Mexican Secretary of State to the minister of the United States at Mexico, and with the answer of the latter gentleman to that communication.

The undersigned avails himself of this occasion to offer General Almonte renewed assurances of his most distinguished consideration.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

GENERAL DON J. N. ALMONTE, &c.

CHINA AND THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Message from the President of the United States, on the Subject of the Trade and Commerce of the United States with the Sandwich Islands, and of Diplomatic Intercourse with their Government; also, in Relation to the new Position of Affairs in China, growing out of the late War between Great Britain and China, and recommending Provision for a Diplomatic Agent, December 31, 1842.*

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

I communicate herewith to Congress copies of a correspondence which has recently taken place between certain agents of the government of the Hawaiian or Sandwich Islands, and the Secretary of State.

The condition of those islands has excited a good deal of interest, which is increasing by every successive proof that their inhabitants are making progress in civilization, and becoming more and more competent to maintain regular and orderly civil government. They lie in the Pacific Ocean, much nearer to this continent than the other, and have become an important place for the refitment and provisioning of American and European vessels.

Owing to their locality, and to the course of the winds which prevail in this quarter of the world, the Sandwich Islands are the stopping-place for almost all vessels passing from continent to continent across the Pacific Ocean. They are especially resorted to by the great numbers of vessels of the United States which are engaged in the whale-fishery in those seas. The number of vessels of all sorts, and the amount of property owned by citizens of the United States, which are found in those islands in the course of a year, are stated, probably with sufficient accuracy, in the letter of the agents.

* This Message was written by Mr. Webster.

Just emerging from a state of barbarism, the government of the islands is as yet feeble; but its dispositions appear to be just and pacific, and it seems anxious to improve the condition of its people by the introduction of knowledge, of religious and moral institutions, means of education, and the arts of civilized life.

It cannot but be in conformity with the interest and the wishes of the government and the people of the United States, that this community, thus existing in the midst of a vast expanse of ocean, should be respected, and all its rights strictly and conscientiously regarded. And this must also be the true interest of all other commercial states. Far remote from the dominions of European powers, its growth and prosperity as an independent state may yet be in a high degree useful to all whose trade is extended to those regions, while its nearer approach to this continent, and the intercourse which American vessels have with it, such vessels constituting five sixths of all which annually visit it, could not but create dissatisfaction on the part of the United States at any attempt by another power, should such attempt be threatened or feared, to take possession of the islands, colonize them, and subvert the native government. Considering, therefore, that the United States possess so very large a share of the intercourse with those islands, it is deemed not unfit to make the declaration, that their government seeks nevertheless no peculiar advantages, no exclusive control over the Hawaiian government, but is content with its independent existence, and anxiously wishes for its security and prosperity. Its forbearance in this respect, under the circumstances of the very large intercourse of their citizens with the islands, would justify this government, should events hereafter arise to require it, in making a decided remonstrance against the adoption of an opposite policy by any other power. Under the circumstances, I recommend to Congress to provide for a moderate allowance to be made out of the treasury to the consul residing there, that, in a government so new and a country so remote, American citizens may have respectable authority to which to apply for redress in case of injury to their persons and property, and to whom the government of the country may also make known any acts committed by American citizens, of which it may think it has a right to complain.

Events of considerable importance have recently transpired in China. The military operations carried on against that empire by the English government have been terminated by a treaty, according to the terms of which four important ports, hitherto shut against foreign commerce, are to be open to British merchants, namely, Amoy, Fu-Chow, Ning-po, and Shanghai. It cannot but be important to the mercantile interest of the United States, whose intercourse with China at the single port of Canton has already become so considerable, to ascertain whether these other ports, now open to British commerce, are to remain shut, nevertheless, against the commerce of the United States. The treaty between the Chinese government and the British commissioner provides neither for the admission nor the exclusion of the ships of other nations. It would seem, therefore, that it remains with every other nation, having commercial intercourse with China, to seek to make proper arrangements for itself with the government of that empire in this respect.

The importations into the United States from China are known to be large, having amounted in some years to nine millions of dollars. The exports, too, from the United States to China constitute an interesting and growing part of the commerce of the country. It appears that in the year 1841, in the direct trade between the two countries, the value of the exports from the United States amounted to seven hundred and fifteen thousand dollars in domestic produce, and four hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars in foreign merchandise. But the whole amount of American produce which finally reaches China, and is there consumed, is not comprised in these sums, which include only the direct trade. Many vessels with American products on board sail with a primary destination to other countries, but ultimately dispose of more or less of their cargoes in the port of Canton.

The peculiarities of the Chinese government and the Chinese character are well known. An empire supposed to contain three hundred millions of subjects, fertile in various rich products of the earth, not without the knowledge of letters and of many arts, and with large and expensive accommodations for internal intercourse and traffic, has for ages sought to exclude the visits of strangers and foreigners from its dominions, and has assumed for itself a superiority over all other nations. Events appear likely to break down and soften this spirit of non-intercourse, and to bring China, ere long, into the relations which usually subsist between civilized states. She has agreed in the treaty with England that correspondence between the agents of the two governments shall be on equal terms; a concession which it is hardly probable will hereafter be withheld from other nations.

It is true, that the cheapness of labor among the Chinese, their ingenuity in its application, and the fixed character of their habits and pursuits, may discourage the hope of the opening of any great and sudden demand for the fabrics of other countries; but experience proves that the productions of Western nations find a market, to some extent, among the Chinese; that that market, so far as respects the productions of the United States, although it has considerably varied in successive seasons, has, on the whole, more than doubled within the last ten years; and it can hardly be doubted that the opening of several new and important ports, connected with parts of the empire heretofore seldom visited by Europeans or Americans, would exercise a favorable influence upon the demand for such productions.

It is not understood that the immediate establishment of correspondent embassies and missions, or the permanent residence of diplomatic functionaries, with full powers, of each country, at the court of the other, is contemplated between England and China; although, as has been already observed, it has been stipulated that intercourse between the two countries shall hereafter be on equal terms. An ambassador, or envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, can only be accredited, according to the usages of Western nations, to the head or sovereign of the state; and it may be doubtful whether the court of Pekin is yet prepared to conform to these usages, so far as to receive a minister plenipotentiary to reside near it.

Being of opinion, however, that the commercial interests of the United States connected with China require, at the present moment, a degree of attention and vigilance such as there is no agent of this government on the spot to bestow, I recommend to Congress to make appropriation for the compensation of a commissioner to reside in China, to exercise a watchful care over the concerns of American citizens, and for the protection of their persons and property; empowered to hold intercourse with the local authorities, and ready, under instructions from his government, should such instructions become necessary and proper hereafter, to address himself to the high functionaries of the empire, or, through them, to the Emperor himself.

It will not escape the observation of Congress, that, in order to secure the important objects of any such measure, a citizen of much intelligence and weight of character should be employed on such agency; and that, to secure the services of such an individual, a compensation should be made corresponding with the magnitude and importance of the mission.

JOHN TYLER.

Washington, December 30, 1842.

INTERCOURSE WITH CHINA.

Mr. Webster to Mr. Cushing.

Department of State, Washington, May 8, 1843.

SIR, — You have been appointed by the President Commissioner to China, and Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to the court of that empire. The ordinary general or circular letter of instructions will be placed in your hands, and another letter stating the composition or organization of the mission, your own allowances, the allowance of the secretary, and other matters connected with the expenditures about to be incurred under the authority of Congress.

It now remains for this department to say something of the political objects of the mission, and the manner in which it is hoped these objects may be accomplished. It is less necessary than it might otherwise be to enter into a detailed statement of the considerations which have led to the institution of the mission, not only as you will be furnished with a copy of the President's communication to Congress recommending provision to be made for the measure, but also as your connection with Congress has necessarily brought these considerations to your notice and contemplation.

Occurrences happening in China within the last two years have resulted in events which are likely to be of much importance as well to the United States as to the rest of the civilized world. Of their still more important consequences to China herself it is not necessary here to speak. The hostilities which have been carried on between that empire and England have resulted, among other consequences, in opening four important ports to English commerce; namely, Amoy, Ning-po, Shanghai, and Fu-chow.

These ports belong to some of the richest, most productive, and most populous provinces of the empire, and are likely to become very important marts of commerce. A leading object of the mission in which you are now to be engaged is, to secure the entry of American ships and cargoes into these ports on terms as favorable as those which are enjoyed by English merchants. It is not necessary to dwell here on the great and well-known amount of imports of the productions of China into the United States. These imports, especially in the great article of tea, are not likely to be diminished. Heretofore they have been paid for in the precious metals, or, more recently, by bills drawn on London. At one time, indeed, American paper of certain descriptions was found to be an available remittance. Latterly, a considerable trade has sprung up in the export of certain American manufactures to China. To augment these exports, by obtaining the most favorable commercial facilities, and cultivating, to the greatest extent practicable, friendly commercial intercourse with China in all its accessible ports, is matter of moment to the commercial and manufacturing, as well as the agricultural and mining interests of the United States. It cannot be foreseen how rapidly or how slowly a people of such peculiar habits as the Chinese, and apparently so tenaciously attached to those habits, may adopt the sentiments, ideas, and customs of other nations. But if prejudiced, and strongly wedded to their own usages, the Chinese are still understood to be ingenious, acute, and inquisitive. Experience thus far, if it does not strongly animate and encourage efforts to introduce some of the arts and the products of other countries into China, is not, nevertheless, of a character such as should entirely repress those efforts. You will be furnished with accounts, as accurate as can be obtained, of the history and present state of the export trade of the United States to China.

As your mission has in view only friendly and commercial objects, (objects, it is supposed, equally useful to both countries,) the natural jealousy of the Chinese, and their repulsive feeling toward foreigners, it is hoped, may be in some degree removed or mitigated by prudence and address on your part. Your constant aim must be, to produce a full conviction on the minds of the government and the people that your mission is entirely pacific; that you come with no purposes of hostility or annoyance; that you are a messenger of peace, sent from the greatest power in America to the greatest empire in Asia, to offer respect and good-will, and to establish the means of friendly intercourse. It will be expedient, on all occasions, to cultivate the friendly dispositions of the government and people, by manifesting a proper respect for their institutions and manners, and avoiding, as far as possible, the giving of offence either to their pride or their prejudices. You will use the earliest and all succeeding occasions to signify that the government which sends you has no disposition to encourage, and will not encourage, any violation of the commercial regulations of China by citizens of the United States. You will state in the fullest manner the acknowledgment of this government, that the commercial regulations of the empire, having become fairly and fully known, ought to be respected by all ships and all persons visiting its ports; and if citizens of the United States, under these circumstances, are found violating well-known laws of trade, their government will not interfere to protect them from the consequences of their own illegal conduct. You will at the same time assert and maintain, on all occasions, the equality and independence of your own country. The Chinese are apt to speak of persons coming into the empire from other nations as tribute-bearers to the Emperor. This idea has been fostered, perhaps, by the costly parade of embassies from England. All ideas of this kind respecting your mission must, should they arise, be immediately met by a declaration, not made ostentatiously, or in a manner reproachful toward others, that you are no tribute-bearer; that your government pays tribute to none, and expects tribute from none; and that, even as to presents, your government neither makes nor accepts presents. You will signify to all Chinese authorities, and others, that it is deemed to be quite below the dignity of the Emperor of China and the President of the United States of America to be concerning themselves with such unimportant matters as presents from one to the other; that the intercourse between the heads of two such governments should be made to embrace only great political questions, the tender of mutual regard, and the establishment of useful relations.

It is, of course, desirable that you should be able to reach Pekin, and the court and person of the Emperor, if practicable. You will, accordingly, at all times signify this as being your purpose and the object of your mission; and perhaps it may be well to advance as near to the capital as shall be found practicable, without waiting to announce your arrival in the country. The purpose of seeing the Emperor in person must be persisted in as long as may be becoming and proper. You will inform the officers of the government, that you have a letter of friendship from the President of the United States to the Emperor, signed by the President's own hand, which you cannot deliver except to the Emperor himself, or some high officer of the court in his presence. You will say, also, that you have a commission conferring on you the highest rank among representatives of your government; and that this, also, can only be exhibited to the Emperor, or his chief officer. You may expect to encounter, of course, if you get to Pekin, the old question of the Ko-tou. In regard to the mode of managing this matter, much must be left to your discretion, as circumstances may occur. All pains should be taken to avoid the giving of offence, or the wounding of the national pride; but, at the same time, you will be careful to do nothing which may seem, even to the Chinese themselves, to imply any inferiority on the part of your government, or any thing less than perfect independence of all nations. You will say that the government of the United States is always controlled by a sense of religion and of honor; hat nations differ in their religious opinions and observances; that you cannot do any thing which the religion of your own country or its sentiments of honor forbid; that you have the most profound respect for his Majesty the Emperor; that you are ready to make to him all manifestations of homage which are consistent with your own sense of propriety, and that you are sure his Majesty is too just to desire you to violate your duty; that you should deem yourself quite unworthy to appear before his Majesty, as peace-bearer from a great and powerful nation, if you should do any thing against religion or against honor, as understood by the government and people of the country you come from. Taking care thus in no way to allow the government or people of China to consider you as tribute-bearer from your government, or as acknowledging its inferiority, in any respect, to that of China, or any other nation, you will bear in mind, at the same time, what is due to your own personal dignity and the character which you bear. You will represent to the Chinese authorities, nevertheless, that you are directed to pay to his Majesty the Emperor the same marks of respect and homage as are paid by your government to his Majesty the Emperor of Russia, or any other of the great powers of the world.

A letter signed by the President, as above intimated, and addressed to the Emperor, will be placed in your hands. As has been already stated, you will say that this letter can only be delivered to the Emperor, or to some one of the great officers of state in his presence. Nevertheless, if this cannot be done, and the Emperor should still manifest a desire to receive the letter, you may consider the propriety of sending it to him, upon an assurance that a friendly answer to it shall be sent, signed by the hand of the Emperor himself.

It will be no part of your duty to enter into controversies which may exist between China and any European state; nor will you, in your communications, fail to abstain altogether from any sentiment or any expression which might give to other governments just cause of offence. It will be quite proper, however, that you should, in a proper manner, always keep before the eyes of the Chinese the high character, importance, and power of the United States. You may speak of the extent of their territory, their great commerce spread over all seas, their powerful navy everywhere giving protection to that commerce, and the numerous schools and institutions established in them to teach men knowledge and wisdom. It cannot be wrong for you to make known, where not known, that the United States, once a country subject to England, threw off that subjection years ago, asserted their independence, sword in hand, established that independence after a seven years' war, and now meet England upon equal terms upon the ocean and upon the land. The remoteness of the United States from China, and still more, the fact that they have no colonial possessions in her neighborhood, will naturally lead to the indulgence of a less suspicious and more friendly feeling than may have been entertained toward England, even before the late war between England and China. It cannot be doubted that the immense power of England in India must be regarded by the Chinese government with dissatisfaction, if not with some degree of alarm. You will take care to show strongly how free the Chinese government may well be from all jealousy arising from such causes toward the United States. Finally, you will signify, in decided terms and a positive manner, that the government of the United States would find it impossible to remain on terms of friendship and regard with the Emperor, if greater privileges or commercial facilities should be allowed to the subjects of any other government than should be granted to citizens of the United States.

It is hoped and trusted that you will succeed in making a treaty such as has been concluded between England and China; and if one containing fuller and more regular stipulations could be entered into, it would be conducting Chinese intercourse one step farther toward the principles which regulate the public relations of the European and American states.

I am, Sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

CALEB CUSHING, ESQ.

Mr. Webster to Mr. Cushing.

Department of State, Washington, May 8, 1843.

SIR, — The President having appointed you Commissioner to China in the place of Mr. Everett, who has declined to accept that appointment, this department is now to give you the necessary instructions for your mission.

You will receive herewith two commissions: one as Commissioner, under which you will be authorized to treat with the governors of provinces or cities, or other local authorities of China; and one as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, to be presented at Pekin, if you should reach the Emperor's court.

You will likewise be furnished with, —

1. A full power, authorizing you to sign any treaty which may be concluded between you and any person duly authorized for that purpose by the Emperor of China.

2. A letter of credence to the Emperor, with an office copy thereof; the original to be communicated or delivered to the sovereign in such manner as may be most convenient or agreeable to his Majesty to receive it.

3. A special passport for yourself and suite.

4. A letter of credit on Baring, Brothers, & Co., bankers of the United States at London, authorizing them to pay your drafts, from time to time, for an amount not exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars.

5. A printed list of the ministers and other diplomatic and consular agents of the United States abroad.

6. Laws of the United States, 9 vols., and pamphlet copies of the Acts of the Twenty-sixth and Twenty-seventh Congresses.

7. Congressional Debates (Gales and Seaton's), 8vo, 31 vols.

8. Gales and Seaton's American State Papers, folio, 21 vols.

9. Waite's State Papers, 12mo, 12 vols.

10. Diplomatic Correspondence (Sparks's), 12mo, 19 vols.

11. Diplomatic Code (Elliott's), 8vo, 2 vols.

12. American Almanac for 1843, 12mo, 1 vol.

13. Blue Book for 1811, 1 vol.

14. Commercial Regulations, 8vo, 3 vols.

15. American Archives (Force's), folio, 3 vols.

16. Secret Journals of Congress, 4 vols.

17. Journal of Federal Convention, 1 vol.

18. Sixth Census of the United States, 4 vols.

19. Congressional Documents of the Second Session of the Twenty-sixth Congress.

20. Congressional Documents of the First Session of the Twenty-seventh Congress.

21. Senate Documents of the Second Session of the Twenty-seventh Congress.

22. Printed Documents connected with the "Northeastern Boundary" Negotiation.

All the printed books are for the use of the mission; and, at the termination of your service, are to pass to your successor, or to be left with the archives in the hands of the chargé d'affaires, in case one should be named, or of such other person as may be designated by this department to take charge of them.

The act of Congress places at the disposition of the President the sum of forty thousand dollars, as an appropriation for the special expenses of this mission. But this does not include such payments out of the general fund for the contingent expenses of all the missions abroad as are usually made in the case of other missions. The President directs that you be allowed an outfit of nine thousand dollars, and a salary of nine thousand dollars. In missions to Europe, the government allows for the expenses of the minister's return a sum equal to one quarter's salary. Considering the distance from the United States at which diplomatic services are performed in Asia, it has been thought reasonable to allow in missions in that quarter of the world the minister's expenses in returning at the rate of half a year's salary. This has been done in previous cases. The return allowance is usually made out of the fund for the contingent expenses of the missions abroad; and, in case no sufficient surplus should remain of the fund specially appropriated by Congress after the necessary expenditures in China, you are authorized to draw on this department for your return allowance, as above stated. The secretary of the mission, Mr. Fletcher Webster, already appointed, will be allowed a salary at the rate of four thousand five hundred dollars a year. An advance has been made to him, partly toward his own compensation, and partly to enable him to make some necessary preparations for the objects of the mission, as you will see by his instructions, a copy of which you will herewith receive.

The necessary travelling expenses of yourself and suite from place to place while in China, when you cannot be conveniently conveyed by the squadron, will be allowed. Your salary will commence from the date of your commission, if you proceed on your mission within ninety days from that time. It is difficult to give you any rule respecting contingencies in a service so new, and in a country so remote. It may be necessary, or at least highly useful, that a draughtsman should accompany you, and also some young gentleman in the character of physician. It is desired that you make such inquiries as may show whether the services of such persons can be obtained at small expense.

A number of young gentlemen have applied to be unpaid attachés to the mission. It will add to its dignity and importance, if your suite could be made respectable in number, by accepting such offers of attendance without expense to the government.

Of course, you will need the service of one or more interpreters. These you may engage either in Europe or in China, or wherever, in your own judgment, you can find persons most competent. The squadron destined for service in the Asiatic seas, and which, it is understood, will carry you out to China, will consist of the frigate Brandywine, the sloop of war St. Louis, and the steam-frigate Missouri. These vessels will be ready to proceed immediately from Norfolk, and will have instructions to take up the mission at Bombay.

The Secretary of the Navy will give the proper directions for the accommodation on board the vessels of such gentlemen attached to the mission as may be ready to go with the squadron.

The Navy Department will also cause proper instructions to be given to Commodore Parker, commanding the squadron, for carrying into effect the objects of government in this important mission.

In another paper of this date you will receive further instructions respecting the great political objects of the mission, and the means supposed to be most likely to accomplish them.

I am, Sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

CALEB CUSHING, ESQ., appointed Commissioner of the United States to China.

The President's Letter to the Emperor.

I, John Tyler, President of the United States of America, which States are Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Vermont, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Ohio, Louisiana, Indiana, Mississippi, Illinois, Alabama, Missouri, Arkansas, and Michigan, send you this letter of peace and friendship, signed by my own hand.

I hope your health is good. China is a great empire, extending over a great part of the world. The Chinese are numerous. You have millions and millions of subjects. The twenty-six United States are as large as China, though our people are not so numerous. The rising sun looks upon the great mountains and great rivers of China. When he sets, he looks upon rivers and mountains equally large in the United States. Our territories extend from one great ocean to the other; and on the west we are divided from your dominions only by the sea. Leaving the mouth of one of our great rivers, and going constantly toward the setting sun, we sail to Japan and to the Yellow Sea.

Now my words are, that the governments of two such great countries should be at peace. It is proper, and according to the will of Heaven, that they should respect each other, and act wisely. I therefore send to your court Caleb Cushing, one of the wise and learned men of this country. On his first arrival in China, he will inquire for your health. He has then strict orders to go to your great city of Pekin, and there to deliver this letter. He will have with him secretaries and interpreters.

The Chinese love to trade with our people, and to sell them tea and silk, for which our people pay silver, and sometimes other articles. But if the Chinese and the Americans will trade, there should be rules, so that they shall not break your laws nor our laws. Our minister, Caleb Cushing, is authorized to make a treaty to regulate trade. Let it be just. Let there be no unfair advantage on either side. Let the people trade not only at Canton, but also at Amoy, Ning-po, Shang-hai, Fu-chow, and all such other places as may offer profitable exchanges both to China and the United States, provided they do not break your laws nor our laws. We shall not take the part of evil-doers. We shall not uphold them that break your laws. Therefore, we doubt not that you will be pleased that our messenger of peace, with this letter in his hand, shall come to Pekin, and there deliver it; and that your great officers will, by your order, make a treaty with him to regulate affairs of trade, so that nothing may happen to disturb the peace between China and America. Let the treaty be signed by your own imperial hand. It shall be signed by mine, by the authority of our great council, the Senate.

And so may your health be good, and may peace reign.

Written at Washington, this twelfth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-three.

Your good friend,

JOHN TYLER.*

By the President:
A. P. UPSHUR; Secretary of State.

INDEPENDENCE OF THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

ON the 14th of December, 1842, a letter was addressed to Mr. Webster, by Messrs. Timoteo Haalilio and William Richards, Commissioners on behalf of the King of all the Hawaiian Islands, expressing the wish of their government that its independence should be recognized by the United States, and a convention entered into for the regulation of their mutual interests and concerns. To this letter the following answer was returned by Mr. Webster.

The Secretary of State to the Agents of the Sandwich Islands.

Department of State, Washington, December 19, 1842.

GENTLEMEN, — I have received the letter which you did me the honor to address to me, under date of the 14th instant, stating that you had been commissioned to represent, in the United States, the government of the Hawaiian Islands, inviting the attention of this government to the relations between the two countries, and intimating a desire for the recognition of the Hawaiian government by that of the United States.

Your communication has been laid before the President, and by him considered.

The advantages of your country to navigators in the Pacific, and in particular to the numerous vessels and vast tonnage of the United States frequenting that sea, are fully estimated; and just acknowledgments are due to the government and inhabitants of the islands for their numerous acts of hospitality to the citizens of the United States.

* This letter, dated July 12th, 1843, and countersigned by Mr. Upshur, was written by Mr. Webster before his retirement from the Department.

The United States have regarded the existing authorities in the Sandwich Islands as a government suited to the condition of the people, and resting on their own choice; and the President is of opinion that the interests of all commercial nations require that that government should not be interfered with by foreign powers. Of the vessels which visit the islands, it is known that a great majority belong to the United States. The United States, therefore, are more interested in the fate of the islands and of their government than any other nation can be; and this consideration induces the President to be quite willing to declare, as the sense of the government of the United States, that the government of the Sandwich Islands ought to be respected; that no power ought either to take possession of the islands as a conquest, or for the purpose of colonization; and that no power ought to seek for any undue control over the existing government, or any exclusive privileges or preferences with it in matters of commerce.

Entertaining these sentiments, the President does not see any present necessity for the negotiation of a formal treaty, or the appointment or reception of diplomatic characters. A consul, or agent, from this government will continue to reside in the islands. He will receive particular instructions to pay just and careful attention to any claims or complaints which may be brought against the government or people of the islands by citizens of the United States, and he will also be instructed to receive any complaint which may be made by that government, for acts of individuals (citizens of the United States), on account of which the interference of this government may be requested, and to transmit such complaint to this department.

It is not improbable that this correspondence may be made the subject of a communication to Congress; and it will be officially made known to the governments of the principal commercial powers of Europe.

I have the honor to be, Gentlemen, your obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

MESSRS. TIMOTEO HAALILIO AND WILLIAM RICHARDS, Washington

BOUNDARIES OF TEXAS.

Mr Webster to his Excellency P. H. Bell, Governor of Texas.

Department of State, Washington, August 5, 1850.

Sir, — A letter addressed by you to the late President of the United States, and dated on the 14th of June last, has, since his lamented decease, been transferred to the hands of his successor, by whom I am directed to address to you the following answer.

In that letter you say that, by the authority of the legislature of Texas, the executive of that State, in February last, despatched a special commissioner, with full power and instructions to extend the civil jurisdiction of that State over the unorganized counties of El Paso, Worth, Presidio, and Santa Fé, situated upon its northwestern limits; and that the commissioner has reported to you, in an official form, that the military officers employed in the service of the United States, stationed at Santa Fé, interposed adversely with the inhabitants to the fulfilment of his object, by employing their influence in favor of the establishment of a separate State government east of the Rio Grande, and within the rightful limits of the State of Texas. You also transmit a copy of the proclamation of Colonel John Monroe, acting under the orders of the government of the United States, under the designation of Civil and Military Governor of the Territory of New Mexico, and respectfully request the President to cause you to be informed whether or not this officer has acted in this matter under the orders of his government, and whether his proclamation meets with the approval of the President of the United States.

In the events which have occurred, the President hardly knows whether your Excellency would naturally expect an answer to this letter from him. His predecessor in office, to whom it was addressed, and under whose authority and direction the proclamation of Colonel Monroe was issued, is no more; and at this time that proclamation, whatever may be regarded as its true character, has ceased to have influence or effect. The meeting of the people of New Mexico, by their representatives, which it invited, is understood to have taken place, although this government has as yet received no official information of it.

Partaking, however, in the fullest degree, of that high respect which the executive government of the United States always entertains towards the governors and governments of the States, the President thinks it his duty to manifest that feeling of respect by acknowledging and answering your letter. And this duty, let me assure your Excellency, has been so long delayed only by uncontrollable circumstances, and is now performed at the earliest practicable moment after the appointment of those heads of departments, and their acceptance of office, with whom it is usual, on important occasions, for the President of the United States to advise.

In answer, therefore, to your first interrogatory, namely, whether Colonel Monroe, in issuing the proclamation referred to, acted under the orders of this government, the President directs me to state, that Colonel Monroe's proclamation appears to have been issued in pursuance or in consequence of an order or letter of instructions given by the late Secretary of War, under the authority of the late President, to Lieutenant-Colonel McCall. Of this order, which bears date on the 19th of November, 1849, your Excellency was undoubtedly informed at the date of your letter. A full and accurate copy, however, is attached to this communication. Colonel McCall is therein instructed, that if the people of New Mexico, for whom Congress had provided no government, should manifest a wish to take any steps to establish a government for themselves, and apply for admission into the Union, it will be his duty, and the duty of others with whom he is associated, not to thwart, but to advance, their wishes. This order does not appear to authorize any exercise of military authority, or of any official or even personal interference to control or affect in any way the primary action of the people in the formation of a government, nor to permit any such interference by subordinate officers. Colonel

McCall and his associates were not called upon to take a lead in any measures, or even to recommend any thing as fit to be adopted by the people. Their whole duty was confined to what they might be able to perform, subordinate to the wishes of the people. In this matter it was evidently contemplated that they were to act as the agents of the inhabitants, and not as officers of this government.

It must be recollected that the only government then existing in the territory was a quasi military government; and as Congress had made no provision for the establishment of any form of civil government, and as the President doubtless believed that, under these circumstances, the people had a right to frame a government for themselves, and submit it to Congress for its approval, the order was a direction that the then existing military government should not stand in the way of the accomplishment of the wishes of the people, nor thwart those wishes, if the people entertained them, for the establishment of a free, popular, republican, civil government, for their own protection and benefit. This is evidently the whole purpose and object of the order. The military officer in command and his associates were American citizens, acquainted with the forms of civil and popular proceedings, and it was expected that they would aid the inhabitants of the territory, by their advice and assistance, in their proceedings for establishing a government of their own. There is no reason to suppose that Colonel Monroe, an officer as much distinguished for prudence and discretion as for gallant conduct in arms, meant to act, or did act, otherwise than in entire subordination and subserviency to the will of the people among whom he was placed. He was not authorized to do so, nor does the President understand him as intending to do any thing whatever in his military character, nor to represent in any way the wishes of the executive government of the United States.

To judge intelligently and fairly of these transactions, we must recall to our recollection the circumstances of the case as they then existed.

Previously to the war with Mexico, which commenced in May, 1846, and received the sanction of Congress on the 13th of that month, the territory of New Mexico formed a department or state of the Mexican republic, and was governed by her laws.

General Kearney, acting under orders from this government, invaded this department with an armed force; the Governor fled at his approach, the troops under his command dispersed, and General Kearney entered Santa Fé, the capital, on the 18th of August, 1846, and took possession of the territory in the name of the United States.

On the 22d of that month he issued a proclamation to the inhabitants, stating the fact that he had taken possession of Santa Fé, at the head of his troops, and announcing his intention to hold the department, with its original boundaries (on both sides of the Del Norte) and under the name of New Mexico. By that proclamation he promised to protect the inhabitants of New Mexico in their persons and property, against their Indian enemies and all others; and assured them that the United States intended to provide for them a free government, when the people would be called upon to exercise the rights of freemen in electing their own representatives to the territorial legislature. On the same day he established a territorial constitution by an organic law, which provided for executive, legislative, and judicial departments of the government, defined the right of suffrage, and provided for trial by jury; and at the same time established a code of laws. This constitution declared that "the country heretofore known as New Mexico shall be known hereafter and designated as the Territory of New Mexico, in the United States of America"; and the members of the lower house of the legislature were apportioned among the counties established by the decree of the department of New Mexico, of June 17, 1844, which counties, it is understood, included all the territory over which Texas has lately attempted to establish her own jurisdiction.

On the 23d of December, 1846, a copy of this constitution and code was transmitted by President Polk to the House of Representatives, in pursuance of a call on him by that body. In the message transmitting the constitution, he says that "portions of it purport to establish and organize a permanent territorial government over the territory, and to impart to its inhabitants political rights which, under the Constitution of the United States, can be enjoyed permanently only by citizens of the United States. These have not been approved and recognized by me. Such organized regulations as have been established in any of the conquered territories for the security of our conquest, for the preservation of order, for the protection of the rights of the inhabitants, and for depriving the enemy of the advantages of these territories while the military possession of them by the forces of the United States continue, will be recognized and approved."

Nearly four years have now elapsed since the quasi military government was established by military authority, and received, with the exceptions mentioned, the approval of President Polk. In the mean time a treaty of peace has been concluded with Mexico, by which a boundary line was established that left this territory within the United States, thereby confirming to the United States, by treaty, what they had before acquired by conquest. The treaty, in perfect accordance with the proclamation of General Kearney, declared that the Mexicans remaining in this territory should be incorporated into the Union of the United States, and be admitted at the proper time (to be judged of by the Congress of the United States) to an enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States, according to the principles of the Constitution; "and, in the mean time, should be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property, and secured in the free exercise of their religion without restriction."

Thus it will be perceived that the authority of the United States over New Mexico was the result of conquest; and the possession held of it, in the first place, was of course a military possession. The treaty added the title by cession to the already existing title by successful achievements in arms. With the peace, there arose a natural expectation, that, as early as possible, there would come a civil government to supersede the military. But until some such form of government should come into existence, it was matter of absolute necessity that the military government should continue, as otherwise the country must fall into absolute anarchy. And this has been the course generally, in the practice of civilized nations, when colonies or territories have been acquired by war, and their acquisition confirmed by treaty.

The military government, therefore, existing in New Mexico at the date of the order, existed there of inevitable necessity. It existed as much against the will of the executive government of the United States, as against the will of the people. The late President had adopted the opinion, that it was justifiable in the people of the territory, under the circumstances, to form a constitution of government, without any previous authority conferred by Congress, and thereupon to apply for admission into the Union. It was under this state of things, and under the influence of these opinions, that the order of the 19th of November last was given, and executed in the manner we have seen. The order indicates no boundary, and defines no territory, except by the name of New Mexico; and so far as that indicated any thing, it referred to a known territory, which had been organized under military authority, approved by the executive, and left without remonstrance or alteration by Congress for more than three years. It appears to the President, that such an order could not have been intended to invade the rights of Texas.

Secondly, you ask whether the proclamation of Colonel Monroe meets with the approval of the President of the United States.

To determine this question, it is necessary to look at the object of the proclamation, and the effect of the proceedings had under it. If the object was to assume the authority to settle the disputed boundary with Texas, then the President has no hesitation in saying such object does not meet his approbation, because he does not believe that the executive branch of this government, or the inhabitants of New Mexico, or both combined, have any constitutional authority to settle that question. That belongs either to the judicial department of the federal government, or to the concurrent action by agreement of the legislative departments of the governments of the United States and Texas. But it has been sufficiently shown that Colonel Monroe could have had no such object, and that his intention was merely to act in aid of the people in forming a State constitution to be submitted to Congress. Assuming, then, that such a constitution has been formed, what is its effect upon the disputed boundary? If it compromits the right of either party to that question, then it does not meet the President's approbation, for he deems it his duty to leave the settlement of that question to the tribunal to which it constitutionally belongs. It is sufficient for him, that this boundary is in dispute; that the territory east of the Rio del Norte seems to be claimed in good faith both by Texas and New Mexico, or rather by the United States. Whatever might be his judgment in regard to their respective rights, he has no power to decide upon them, or even to negotiate in regard to them; and therefore it would be improper for him to express any opinion.

The subject-matter of dispute is between the United States and Texas, and not between New Mexico and Texas. If those people should voluntarily consent to come under the jurisdiction of Texas, such consent would not bind the United States to take away their title to the territory. So, on the other hand, if they should voluntarily claim the title for the United States, it would not deprive Texas of her rights, whatever those rights might be. They can only be affected by her own acts, or a judicial decision. The State constitution formed by New Mexico can have no legal validity until it is recognized and adopted by the law-making power of the United States. Until that is done, it has no sanction, and can have no effect upon the right of Texas, or of the United States, to the territory in dispute. And it is not to be presumed that Congress will ever give its sanction to that constitution, without first providing for the settlement of this boundary. Indeed no government, either Territorial or State, can be formed for New Mexico, without providing for the settling of this boundary. Hence, the President regards the formation of this State constitution as a mere nullity. It may be regarded, indeed, as a petition to Congress to be admitted as a State; but until Congress shall grant the prayer of such petition, by legal enactments, it affects the rights of neither party. But as it is the right of all to petition Congress for any law which it may constitutionally pass, this people were in the exercise of a common right when they formed their constitution, with a view of applying to Congress for admission as a State; and as he thinks the act can prejudice no one, he feels bound to approve of the conduct of Colonel Monroe in issuing the proclamation.

I am directed also to state, that, in the President's opinion, it would not be just to suppose that the late President desired to manifest any unfriendly attitude or aspect towards Texas or the claims of Texas. The boundary between Texas and New Mexico was known to be disputed; and it was equally well known, that the executive government of the United States had no power to settle that dispute. It is believed that the executive power has not wished, it certainly does not now wish, to interfere with that question, in any manner whatever, as a question of title.

In one of his last communications to Congress, that of the 16th of June last, the late President repeated the declaration, that he had no power to decide the question of boundary, and no desire to interfere with it; and that the authority to settle that question resided elsewhere. The object of the executive government has been, as I believe, and as I am authorized to say it certainly now is, to secure the peace of the country; to maintain as far as practicable the state of things that existed at the date of the treaty; and to uphold and preserve the rights of the respective parties as they were under the solemn guaranty of the treaty, until the highly interesting question of boundary should be finally settled by competent authority. This treaty, which is now a supreme law of the land, declares, as before stated, that the inhabitants shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property, and secured in the free exercise of their religion. It will, of course, be the President's duty to see that this law is sustained, and the protection which it guaranties made effectual, and this is the plain and open path of executive duty in which he proposes to tread.

Other transactions of a very grave character are alluded to, and recited in your Excellency's letter. To these transactions I am now directed not more particularly to advert in replying to the questions propounded by you respecting the authority under which Colonel Monroe acted, and the approval or disapproval of his proclamation. Your Excellency's communication and answer will be immediately laid before Congress, and the President will take that occasion to bring to its notice the transactions alluded to above.

It is known to your Excellency, that the questions growing out of the acquisition of California and New Mexico, and among them the highly important one of the boundary of Texas, have steadily engaged the attention of both houses of Congress for many months, and still engage it, with intense interest. It is understood that the legislature of Texas will be shortly in session, and will have the boundary question also before it. It is a delicate crisis in our public affairs, and not free certainly from possible dangers; but let us confidently trust that justice, moderation, patriotism, and the love of the Union, may inspire such counsels, both in the government of the United States and that of Texas, as shall carry the country through these dangers, and bring it safely out of them all, and with renewed assurances of the continuance of mutual respect and harmony in the great family of States.

I have the honor to be, with entire regard, your Excellency's most obedient servant.

DANIEL WEBSTER, Secretary of State.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH THE CHEVALIER HÜLSEMANN.

Chevalier J. G. Hülsemann to the Secretary of State.

[TRANSLATION.]

Austrian Legation, Washington, September 30, 1850.

The undersigned, Chargé d'Affaires of his Majesty the Emperor of Austria, has been instructed to make the following communication to the Secretary of State.

As soon as the Imperial government became aware of the fact that a United States agent had been despatched to Vienna, with orders to watch for a favorable moment to recognize the Hungarian republic, and to conclude a treaty of commerce with the same, the undersigned was directed to address some confidential but pressing representations to the Cabinet of Washington against that proceeding, which is so much at variance with those principles of international law, so scrupulously adhered to by Austria, at all times and under all circumstances, towards the United States. In fact, how is it possible to reconcile such a mission with the principle of non-intervention, so formally announced by the United States as the basis of American policy, and which had just been sanctioned with so much solemnity by the President, in his inaugural address of March 5, 1849? Was it in return for the friendship and confidence which Austria had never ceased to manifest towards them, that the United States became so impatient for the downfall of the Austrian monarchy, and even sought to accelerate that event by the utterance of their wishes to that effect? Those who did not hesitate to assume the responsibility of sending Mr. Dudley Mann on such an errand, should, independent of considerations of propriety, have borne in mind that they were exposing their emissary to be treated as a spy. It is to be regretted that the American government was not better informed as to the actual resources of Austria, and her historical perseverance in defending her just rights. A knowledge of those resources would have led to the conclusion that a contest of a few months' duration could neither have exhausted the energies of that power, nor turned aside its purpose to put down the insurrection. Austria has struggled against the French Revolution for twenty-five years; the courage and perseverance which she exhibited in that memorable contest have been appreciated by the whole world.

To the urgent representations of the undersigned, Mr. Clayton answered that Mr. Mann's mission had no other object in view than to obtain reliable information as to the true state of affairs in Hungary, by personal observation. This explanation can hardly be admitted, for it says very little as to the cause of the anxiety which was felt to ascertain the chances of the revolutionists. Unfortunately, the language in which Mr. Mann's instructions were drawn gives us a very correct idea of their scope. This language was offensive to the Imperial Cabinet, for it designates the Austrian government as an iron rule, and represents the rebel chief, Kossuth, as an illustrious man; while improper expressions are introduced in regard to Russia, the intimate and faithful ally of Austria. Notwithstanding these hostile demonstrations, the Imperial Cabinet has deemed it proper to preserve a conciliatory deportment, making ample allowance for the ignorance of the Cabinet of Washington on the subject of Hungarian affairs, and its disposition to give credence to the mendacious rumors which are propagated by the American press. This extremely painful incident, therefore, might have been passed over without any written evidence being left, on our part, in the archives of the United States, had not General Taylor thought proper to revive the whole subject by communicating to the Senate, in his message of the 18th of last March, the instructions with which Mr. Mann had been furnished on the occasion of his mission to Vienna. The publicity which has been given to that document has placed the Imperial government under the necessity of entering a formal protest, through its official representative, against the proceedings of the American government, lest that government should construe our silence into approbation, or toleration even, of the principles which appear to have guided its action and the means it has adopted.

In view of all these circumstances, the undersigned has been instructed to declare that the Imperial government totally disapproves, and will always continue to disapprove, of those proceedings, so offensive to the laws of propriety; and that it protests against all interference in the internal affairs of its government. Having thus fulfilled his duty, the undersigned considers it a fortunate circumstance that he has it in his power to assure the Secretary of State that the Imperial government is disposed to cultivate relations of friendship and good understanding with the United States, relations which may have been momentarily weakened, but which could not again be seriously disturbed without placing the cardinal interests of the two countries in jeopardy.

The instructions for addressing this communication to Mr. Clayton reached Washington at the time of General Taylor's death. In compliance with the requisitions of propriety, the undersigned deemed it his duty to defer the task until the new administration had been completely organized; a delay which he now rejoices at, as it has given him the opportunity of ascertaining from the new President himself, on the occasion of the reception of the diplomatic corps, that the fundamental policy of the United States, so frequently proclaimed, would guide the relations of the American government with the other powers. Even if the government of the United States were to think it proper to take an indirect part in the political movements of Europe, American policy would be exposed to acts of retaliation, and to certain inconveniences, which could not fail to affect the commerce and the industry of the two hemispheres. All countries are obliged, at some period or other, to struggle against internal difficulties; all forms of government are exposed to such disagreeable episodes; the United States have had some experience in this very recently. Civil war is a possible occurrence everywhere, and the encouragement which is given to the spirit of insurrection and of disorder most frequently falls back upon those who seek to aid it in its developments, in spite of justice and wise policy.

The undersigned avails himself of this occasion to renew to the Secretary of State the assurance of his distinguished consideration.

HULSEMANN.

To the Hon. Daniel Webster, Secretary of State of the United States.

The Secretary of State to Mr. Hülsemann.

Department of State, Washington, December 21, 1850.

The undersigned, Secretary of State of the United States, had the honor to receive, some time ago, the note of Mr. Hülsemann, Chargé d'Affaires of his Majesty, the Emperor of Austria, of the 30th of September. Causes, not arising from any want of personal regard for Mr. Hülsemann, or of proper respect for his government, have delayed an answer until the present moment. Having submitted Mr. Hülsemann's letter to the President, the undersigned is now directed by him to return the following reply.

The objects of Mr. Hülsemann's note are, first, to protest, by order of his government, against the steps taken by the late President of the United States to ascertain the progress and probable result of the revolutionary movements in Hungary; and, secondly, to complain of some expressions in the instructions of the late Secretary of State to Mr. A. Dudley Mann, a confidential agent of the United States, as communicated by President Taylor to the Senate on the 28th of March last.

The principal ground of protest is founded on the idea, or in the allegation, that the government of the United States, by the mission of Mr. Mann and his instructions, has interfered in the domestic affairs of Austria in a manner unjust or disrespectful toward that power. The President's message was a communication made by him to the Senate, transmitting a correspondence between the executive government and a confidential agent of its own. This would seem to be itself a domestic transaction, a mere instance of intercourse between the President and the Senate, in the manner which is usual and indispensable in communications between the different branches of the government. It was not addressed either to Austria or Hungary; nor was it a public manifesto, to which any foreign state was called on to reply. It was an account of its transactions communicated by the executive government to the Senate, at the request of that body; made public, indeed, but made public only because such is the common and usual course of proceeding. It may be regarded as somewhat strange, therefore, that the Austrian Cabinet did not perceive that, by the instructions given to Mr. Hülsemann, it was itself interfering with the domestic concerns of a foreign state, the very thing which is the ground of its complaint against the United States.

This department has, on former occasions, informed the ministers of foreign powers, that a communication from the President to either house of Congress is regarded as a domestic communication, of which, ordinarily, no foreign state has cognizance; and in more recent instances, the great inconvenience of making such communications the subject of diplomatic correspondence and discussion has been fully shown. If it had been the pleasure of his Majesty, the Emperor of Austria, during the struggles in Hungary, to have admonished the provisional government or the people of that country against involving themselves in disaster, by following the evil and dangerous example of the United States of America in making efforts for the establishment of independent governments, such an admonition from that sovereign to his Hungarian subjects would not have originated here a diplomatic correspondence. The President might, perhaps, on this ground, have declined to direct any particular reply to Mr. Hülsemann's note; but, out of proper respect for the Austrian government, it has been thought better to answer that note at length; and the more especially, as the occasion is not unfavorable for the expression of the general sentiments of the government of the United States upon the topics which that note discusses.

A leading subject in Mr. Hülsemann's note is that of the correspondence between Mr. Hülsemann and the predecessor of the undersigned, in which Mr. Clayton, by direction of the President, informed Mr. Hülsemann "that Mr. Mann's mission had no other object in view than to obtain reliable information as to the true state of affairs in Hungary, by personal observation." Mr. Hülsemann remarks, that "this explanation can hardly be admitted, for it says very little as to the cause of the anxiety which was felt to ascertain the chances of the revolutionists." As this, however, is the only purpose which can, with any appearance of truth, be attributed to the agency; as nothing whatever is alleged by Mr. Hülsemann to have been either done or said by the agent inconsistent with such an object, the undersigned conceives that Mr. Clayton's explanation ought to be deemed, not only admissible, but quite satisfactory.

Mr. Hülsemann states, in the course of his note, that his instructions to address his present communication to Mr. Clayton reached Washington about the time of the lamented death of the late President, and that he delayed from a sense of propriety the execution of his task until the new administration should be fully organized; "a delay which he now rejoices at, as it has given him the opportunity of ascertaining from the new President himself, on the occasion of the reception of the diplomatic corps, that the fundamental policy of the United States, so frequently proclaimed, would guide the relations of the American government with other powers." Mr. Hülsemann also observes, that it is in his power to assure the undersigned "that the Imperial government is disposed to cultivate relations of friendship and good understanding with the United States."

The President receives this assurance of the disposition of the Imperial government with great satisfaction; and, in consideration of the friendly relations of the two governments thus mutually recognized, and of the peculiar nature of the incidents by which their good understanding is supposed by Mr. Hülsemann to have been for a moment disturbed or endangered, the President regrets that Mr. Hülsemann did not feel himself at liberty wholly to forbear from the execution of instructions, which were of course transmitted from Vienna without any foresight of the state of things under which they would reach Washington. If Mr. Hülsemann saw, in the address of the President to the diplomatic corps, satisfactory pledges of the sentiments and the policy of this government in regard to neutral rights and neutral duties, it might, perhaps, have been better not to bring on a discussion of past transactions. But the undersigned readily admits that this was a question fit only for the consideration and decision of Mr. Hülsemann himself; and although the President does not see that any good purpose can be answered by reopening the inquiry into the propriety of the steps taken by President Taylor to ascertain the probable issue of the late civil war in Hungary, justice to his memory requires the undersigned briefly to restate the history of those steps, and to show their consistency with the neutral policy which has invariably guided the government of the United States in its foreign relations, as well as with the established and well-settled principles of national intercourse, and the doctrines of public law.

The undersigned will first observe, that the President is persuaded his Majesty the Emperor of Austria does not think that the government of the United States ought to view with unconcern the extraordinary events which have occurred, not only in his dominions, but in many other parts of Europe, since February, 1848. The government and people of the United States, like other intelligent governments and communities, tak a lively interest in the movements and the events of this remarkable age, in whatever part of the world they may be exhibited. But the interest taken by the United States in those events has not proceeded from any disposition to depart from that neutrality toward foreign powers, which is among the deepest principles and the most cherished traditions of the political history of the Union. It has been the necessary effect of the unexampled character of the events themselves, which could not fail to arrest the attention of the contemporary world, as they will doubtless fill a memorable page in history.

But the undersigned goes further, and freely admits that, in proportion as these extraordinary events appeared to have their origin in those great ideas of responsible and popular government, on which the American constitutions themselves are wholly founded, they could not but command the warm sympathy of the people of this country. Well-known circumstances in their history, indeed their whole history, have made them the representatives of purely popular principles of government. In this light they now stand before the world. They could not, if they would, conceal their character, their condition, or their destiny. They could not, if they so desired, shut out from the view of mankind the causes which have placed them, in so short a national career, in the station which they now hold among the civilized states of the world. They could not, if they desired it, suppress either the thoughts or the hopes which arise in men's minds, in other countries, from contemplating their successful example of free government. That very intelligent and distinguished personage, the Emperor Joseph the Second, was among the first to discern this necessary consequence of the American Revolution on the sentiments and opinions of the people of Europe. In a letter to his minister in the Netherlands in 1787, he observes, that "it is remarkable that France, by the assistance which she afforded to the Americans, gave birth to reflections on freedom." This fact, which the sagacity of that monarch perceived at so early a day, is now known and admitted by intelligent powers all over the world. True, indeed, it is, that the prevalence on the other continent of sentiments favorable to republican liberty is the result of the reaction of America upon Europe; and the source and centre of this reaction has doubtless been, and now is, in these United States.

The position thus belonging to the United States is a fact as inseparable from their history, their constitutional organization, and their character, as the opposite position of the powers composing the European alliance is from the history and constitutional organization of the government of those powers. The sovereigns who form that alliance have not unfrequently felt it their right to interfere with the political movements of foreign states; and have, in their manifestoes and declarations, denounced the popular ideas of the age in terms so comprehensive as of necessity to include the United States, and their forms of government. It is well known that one of the leading principles announced by the allied sovereigns, after the restoration of the Bourbons, is, that all popular or constitutional rights are holden no otherwise than as grants and indulgences from crowned heads. "Useful and necessary changes in legislation and administration," says the Laybach Circular of May, 1821, "ought only to emanate from the free will and intelligent conviction of those whom God has rendered responsible for power; all that deviates from this line necessarily leads to disorder, commotions, and evils far more insufferable than those which they pretend to remedy." And his late Austrian Majesty, Francis the First, is reported to have declared, in an address to the Hungarian Diet, in 1820, that "the whole world had become foolish, and, leaving their ancient laws, were in search of imaginary constitutions." These declarations amount to nothing less than a denial of the lawfulness of the origin of the government of the United States, since it is certain that that government was established in consequence of a change which did not proceed from thrones, or the permission of crowned heads. But the government of the United States heard these denunciations of its fundamental principles without remonstrance, or the disturbance of its equanimity. This was thirty years ago.

The power of this republic, at the present moment, is spread over a region one of the richest and most fertile on the globe, and of an extent in comparison with which the possessions of the house of Hapsburg are but as a patch on the earth's surface. Its population, already twenty-five millions, will exceed that of the Austrian empire within the period during which it may be hoped that Mr. Hülsemann may yet remain in the honorable discharge of his duties to his government. Its navigation and commerce are hardly exceeded by the oldest and most commercial nations; its maritime means and its maritime power may be seen by Austria herself, in all seas where she has ports, as well as they may be seen, also, in all other quarters of the globe. Life, liberty, property, and all personal rights, are amply secured to all citizens, and protected by just and stable laws; and credit, public and private, is as well established as in any government of Continental Europe; and the country, in all its interests and concerns, partakes most largely in all the improvements and progress which distinguish the age. Certainly, the United States may be pardoned, even by those who profess adherence to the principles of absolute government, if they entertain an ardent affection for those popular forms of political organization which have so rapidly advanced their own prosperity and happiness, and enabled them, in so short a period, to bring their country, and the hemisphere to which it belongs, to the notice and respectful regard, not to say the admiration, of the civilized world. Nevertheless, the United States have abstained, at all times, from acts of interference with the political changes of Europe. They cannot, however, fail to cherish always a lively interest in the fortunes of nations struggling for institutions like their own. But this sympathy, so far from being necessarily a hostile feeling toward any of the parties to these great national struggles, is quite consistent with amicable relations with them all. The Hungarian people are three or four times as numerous as the inhabitants of these United States were when the American Revolution broke out. They possess, in a distinct language, and in other respects, important elements of a separate nationality, which the Anglo-Saxon race in this country did not possess; and if the United States wish success to countries contending for popular constitutions and national independence, it is only because they regard such constitutions and such national independence, not as imaginary, but as real blessings. They claim no right, however, to take part in the struggles of foreign powers in order to promote these ends. It is only in defence of his own government, and its principles and character, that the undersigned has now expressed himself on this subject. But when the people of the United States behold the people of foreign countries, without any such interference, spontaneously moving toward the adoption of institutions like their own, it surely cannot be expected of them to remain wholly indifferent spectators.

In regard to the recent very important occurrences in the Austrian empire, the undersigned freely admits the difficulty which exists in this country, and is alluded to by Mr. Hülsemann, of obtaining accurate information. But this difficulty is by no means to be ascribed to what Mr. Hülsemann calls, with little justice, as it seems to the undersigned, "the mendacious rumors propagated by the American press." For information on this subject, and others of the same kind, the American press is, of necessity, almost wholly dependent upon that of Europe; and if "mendacious rumors" respecting Austrian and Hungarian affairs have been anywhere propagated, that propagation of falsehoods has been most prolific on the European continent, and in countries immediately bordering on the Austrian empire. But, wherever these errors may have originated, they certainly justified the late President in seeking true information through authentic channels.

His attention was first particularly drawn to the state of things in Hungary by the correspondence of Mr. Stiles, Chargé d'Affaires of the United States at Vienna. In the autumn of 1848, an application was made to this gentleman, on behalf of Mr. Kossuth, formerly Minister of Finance for the Kingdom of Hungary by Imperial appointment, but, at the time the application was made, chief of the revolutionary government. The object of this application was to obtain the good offices of Mr. Stiles with the Imperial government, with a view to the suspension of hostilities. This application became the subject of a conference between Prince Schwarzenberg, the Imperial Minister for Foreign Affairs, and Mr. Stiles. The Prince commended the considerateness and propriety with which Mr. Stiles had acted; and, so far from disapproving his interference, advised him, in case he received a further communication from the revolutionary government in Hungary, to have an interview with Prince Windischgrätz, who was charged by the Emperor with the proceedings determined on in relation to that kingdom. A week after these occurrences, Mr. Stiles received, through a secret channel, a communication signed by L. Kossuth, President of the Committee of Defence, and countersigned by Francis Pulszky, Secretary of State. On the receipt of this communication, Mr. Stiles had an interview with Prince Windischgrätz, "who received him with the utmost kindness, and thanked him for his efforts toward reconciling the existing difficulties." Such were the incidents which first drew the attention of the government of the United States particularly to the affairs of Hungary, and the conduct of Mr Stiles, though acting without instructions in a matter of much delicacy, having been viewed with satisfaction by the Imperial government, was approved by that of the United States.

In the course of the year 1848, and in the early part of 1849, a considerable number of Hungarians came to the United States. Among them were individuals representing themselves to be in the confidence of the revolutionary government, and by these persons the President was strongly urged to recognize the existence of that government. In these applications, and in the manner in which they were viewed by the President, there was nothing unusual; still less was there any thing unauthorized by the law of nations. It is the right of every independent state to enter into friendly relations with every other independent state. Of course, questions of prudence naturally arise in reference to new states, brought by successful revolutions into the family of nations; but it is not to be required of neutral powers that they should await the recognition of the new government by the parent state. No principle of public law has been more frequently acted upon, within the last thirty years, by the great powers of the world, than this. Within that period, eight or ten new states have established independent governments, within the limits of the colonial dominions of Spain, on this continent; and in Europe the same thing has been done by Belgium and Greece. The existence of all these governments was recognized by some of the leading powers of Europe, as well as by the United States, before it was acknowledged by the states from which they had separated themselves. If, therefore, the United States had gone so far as formally to acknowledge the independence of Hungary, although, as the result has proved, it would have been a precipitate step, and one from which no benefit would have resulted to either party; it would not, nevertheless, have been an act against the law of nations, provided they took no part in her contest with Austria. But the United States did no such thing. Not only did they not yield to Hungary any actual countenance or succor, not only did they not show their ships of war in the Adriatic with any menacing or hostile aspect, but they studiously abstained from every thing which had not been done in other cases in times past, and contented themselves with instituting an inquiry into the truth and reality of alleged political occurrences. Mr. Hülsemann incorrectly states, unintentionally certainly, the nature of the mission of this agent, when he says that "a United States agent had been despatched to Vienna with orders to watch for a favorable moment to recognize the Hungarian republic, and to conclude a treaty of commerce with the same." This, indeed, would have been a lawful object, but Mr. Mann's errand was, in the first instance, purely one of inquiry. He had no power to act, unless he had first come to the conviction that a firm and stable Hungarian government existed. "The principal object the President has in view," according to his instructions, "is to obtain minute and reliable information in regard to Hungary, in connection with the affairs of adjoining countries, the probable issue of the present revolutionary movements, and the chances we may have of forming commercial arrangements with that power favorable to the United States." Again, in the same paper, it is said: "The object of the President is to obtain information in regard to Hungary, and her resources and prospects, with a view to an early recognition of her independence and the formation of commercial relations with her." It was only in the event that the new government should appear, in the opinion of the agent, to be firm and stable, that the President proposed to recommend its recognition.

Mr. Hülsemann, in qualifying these steps of President Taylor with the epithet of "hostile," seems to take for granted that the inquiry could, in the expectation of the President, have but one result, and that favorable to Hungary. If this were so, it would not change the case. But the American government sought for nothing but truth; it desired to learn the facts through a reliable channel. It so happened, in the chances and vicissitudes of human affairs, that the result was adverse to the Hungarian revolution. The American agent, as was stated in his instructions to be not unlikely, found the condition of Hungarian affairs less prosperous than it had been, or had been believed to be. He did not enter Hungary, nor hold any direct communication with her revolutionary leaders. He reported against the recognition of her independence, because he found she had been unable to set up a firm and stable government. He carefully forbore, as his instructions required, to give publicity to his mission, and the undersigned supposes that the Austrian government first learned its existence from the communications of the President to the Senate.

Mr. Hülsemann will observe from this statement, that Mr. Mann's mission was wholly unobjectionable, and strictly within the rule of the law of nations and the duty of the United States as a neutral power. He will accordingly feel how little foundation there is for his remark, that "those who did not hesitate to assume the responsibility of sending Mr. Dudley Mann on such an errand, should, independent of considerations of propriety, have borne in mind that they were exposing their emissary to be treated as a spy." A spy is a person sent by one belligerent to gain secret information of the forces and defences of the other, to be used for hostile purposes. According to practice, he may use deception, under the penalty of being lawfully hanged if detected. To give this odious name and character to a confidential agent of a neutral power, bearing the commission of his country, and sent for a purpose fully warranted by the law of nations, is not only to abuse language, but also to confound all just ideas, and to announce the wildest and most extravagant notions, such as certainly were not to have been expected in a grave diplomatic paper; and the President directs the undersigned to say to Mr. Hülsemann, that the American government would regard such an imputation upon it by the Cabinet of Austria as that it employs spies, and that in a quarrel none of its own, as distinctly offensive, if it did not presume, as it is willing to presume, that the word used in the original German was not of equivalent meaning with "spy" in the English language, or that in some other way the employment of such an opprobrious term may be explained. Had the Imperial government of Austria subjected Mr. Mann to the treatment of a spy, it would have placed itself without the pale of civilized nations; and the Cabinet of Vienna may be assured, that if it had carried, or attempted to carry, any such lawless purpose into effect, in the case of an authorized agent of this government, the spirit of the people of this country would have demanded immediate hostilities to be waged by the utmost exertion of the power of the republic, military and naval.

Mr. Hülsemann proceeds to remark, that "this extremely painful incident, therefore, might have been passed over, without any written evidence being left on our part in the archives of the United States, had not General Taylor thought proper to revive the whole subject by communicating to the Senate, in his message of the 18th [28th] of last March, the instructions with which Mr. Mann had been furnished on the occasion of his mission to Vienna. The publicity which has been given to that document has placed the Imperial government under the necessity of entering a formal protest, through its official representative, against the proceedings of the American government, lest that government should construe our silence into approbation, or toleration even, of the principles which appear to have guided its action and the means it has adopted." The undersigned reasserts to Mr. Hülsemann, and to the Cabinet of Vienna, and in the presence of the world, that the steps taken by President Taylor, now protested against by the Austrian government, were warranted by the law of nations and agreeable to the usages of civilized states. With respect to the communication of Mr. Mann's instructions to the Senate, and the language in which they are couched, it has already been said, and Mr. Hülsemann must feel the justice of the remark, that these are domestic affairs, in reference to which the government of the United States cannot admit the slightest responsibility to the government of his Imperial Majesty. No state, deserving the appellation of independent, can permit the language in which it may instruct its own officers in the discharge of their duties to itself to be called in question under any pretext by a foreign power.

But even if this were not so, Mr. Hülsemann is in an error in stating that the Austrian government is called an "iron rule" in Mr. Mann's instructions. That phrase is not found in the paper; and in respect to the honorary epithet bestowed in Mr. Mann's instructions on the late chief of the revolutionary government of Hungary, Mr. Hülsemann will bear in mind that the government of the United States cannot justly be expected, in a confidential communication to its own agent, to withhold from an individual an epithet of distinction of which a great part of the world thinks him worthy, merely on the ground that his own government regards him as a rebel. At an early stage of the American Revolution, while Washington was considered by the English government as a rebel chief, he was regarded on the Continent of Europe as an illustrious hero. But the undersigned will take the liberty of bringing the Cabinet of Vienna into the presence of its own predecessors, and of citing for its consideration the conduct of the Imperial government itself. In the year 1777 the war of the American Revolution was raging all over these United States. England was prosecuting that war with a most resolute determination, and by the exertion of all her military means to the fullest extent. Germany was at that time at peace with England; and yet an agent of that Congress, which was looked upon by England in no other light than that of a body in open rebellion, was not only received with great respect by the ambassador of the Empress Queen at Paris, and by the minister of the Grand Duke of Tuscany (who afterwards mounted the Imperial throne), but resided in Vienna for a considerable time; not, indeed, officially acknowledged, but treated with courtesy and respect; and the Emperor suffered himself to be persuaded by that agent to exert himself to prevent the German powers from furnishing troops to England to enable her to suppress the rebellion in America. Neither Mr. Hülsemann nor the Cabinet of Vienna, it is presumed, will undertake to say that any thing said or done by this government in regard to the recent war between Austria and Hungary is not borne out, and much more than borne out, by this example of the Imperial Court. It is believed that the Emperor Joseph the Second habitually spoke in terms of respect and admiration of the character of Washington, as he is known to have done of that of Franklin; and he deemed it no infraction of neutrality to inform himself of the progress of the revolutionary struggle in America, or to express his deep sense of the merits and the talents of those illustrious men who were then leading their country to independence and renown. The undersigned may add, that in 1781 the courts of Russia and Austria proposed a diplomatic congress of the belligerent powers, to which the commissioners of the United States should be admitted.

Mr. Hülsemann thinks that in Mr. Mann's instructions improper expressions are introduced in regard to Russia; but the undersigned has no reason to suppose that Russia herself is of that opinion. The only observation made in those instructions about Russia is, that she "has chosen to assume an attitude of interference, and her immense preparations for invading and reducing the Hungarians to the rule of Austria, from which they desire to be released, gave so serious a character to the contest as to awaken the most painful solicitude in the minds of Americans." The undersigned cannot but consider the Austrian Cabinet as unnecessarily susceptible in looking upon language like this as a "hostile demonstration." If we remember that it was addressed by the government to its own agent, and has received publicity only through a communication from one department of the American government to another, the language quoted must be deemed moderate and inoffensive. The comity of nations would hardly forbid its being addressed to the two imperial powers themselves. It is scarcely necessary for the undersigned to say, that the relations of the United States with Russia have always been of the most friendly kind, and have never been deemed by either party to require any compromise of their peculiar views upon subjects of domestic or foreign polity, or the true origin of governments. At any rate, the fact that Austria, in her contest with Hungary, had an intimate and faithful ally in Russia, cannot alter the real nature of the question between Austria and Hungary, nor in any way affect the neutral rights and duties of the government of the United States, or the justifiable sympathies of the American people. It is, indeed, easy to conceive, that favor toward struggling Hungary would be not diminished, but increased, when it was seen that the arm of Austria was strengthened and upheld by a power whose assistance threatened to be, and which in the end proved to be, overwhelmingly destructive of all her hopes.

Toward the conclusion of his note Mr. Hülsemann remarks, that "if the government of the United States were to think it proper to take an indirect part in the political movements of Europe, American policy would be exposed to acts of retaliation, and to certain inconveniences which would not fail to affect the commerce and industry of the two hemispheres." As to this possible fortune, this hypothetical retaliation, the government and people of the United States are quite willing to take their chances and abide their destiny. Taking neither a direct nor an indirect part in the domestic or intestine movements of Europe, they have no fear of events of the nature alluded to by Mr. Hülsemann. It would be idle now to discuss with Mr. Hülsemann those acts of retaliation which he imagines may possibly take place at some indefinite time hereafter. Those questions will be discussed when they arise; and Mr. Hülsemann and the Cabinet at Vienna may rest assured, that, in the mean time, while performing with strict and exact fidelity all their neutral duties, nothing will deter either the government or the people of the United States from exercising, at their own discretion, the rights belonging to them as an independent nation, and of forming and expressing their own opinions, freely and at all times, upon the great political events which may transpire among the civilized nations of the earth. Their own institutions stand upon the broadest principles of civil liberty; and believing those principles and the fundamental laws in which they are embodied to be eminently favorable to the prosperity of states, to be, in fact, the only principles of government which meet the demands of the present enlightened age, the President has perceived, with great satisfaction, that, in the constitution recently introduced into the Austrian empire, many of these great principles are recognized and applied, and he cherishes a sincere wish that they may produce the same happy effects throughout his Austrian Majesty's extensive dominions that they have done in the United States.

The undersigned has the honor to repeat to Mr. Hülsemann the assurance of his high consideration.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

THE CHEVALIER J. G. HÜLSEMANN, Chargé d'Affaires of Austria, Washington.

The Chevalier Hülsemann to Mr. Webster.

Austrian Legation at Washington, March 11, 1851.

Mr. Secretary of State, — I have received an answer to the despatches with which I had sent to Vienna the note that you did me the honor to address to me on the 21st of December last; and I hasten to inform you, Mr. Secretary of State, that the arguments contained in your note have not had power to change the judgment which the Imperial Cabinet had formed respecting the mission of Mr. Dudley Mann, as well as respecting the tenor and the terms of the instructions with which he was furnished. The Imperial government does not cease to entertain the opinions contained in my note of the 30th of September; and it declines all ulterior discussion of that annoying incident, unwilling to expose the kind and friendly relations which it desires to preserve with the government of the United States to the danger of being seriously disturbed by discussions which could have no practical result.

President Fillmore declared, in his message of the 2d of December last, that he was determined to act towards other nations as the United States desired that other nations should act towards them; and that he had adopted as a rule for his policy good-will towards foreign powers, and the abstaining from interference in their internal affairs. Austria has not demanded, and will never demand, any thing but the putting into practice of these principles; and the Imperial government is sincerely disposed to remain in friendly relations with the government of the United States, so long as the United States shall not deviate from these principles.

Please to accept, Mr. Secretary of State, the assurances of my high consideration.

Hülsemann.

The Hon. Daniel Webster, Secretary of State of the United States.

Mr. Webster to the Chevalier Hülsemann.

Department of State, Washington, March 15, 1851.

The undersigned has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the Chevalier Hülsemann's note of the 11th of this month, which has been submitted to the President.

The President regrets that the note of the undersigned, addressed to the Chevalier Hülsemann on the 21st of December last, was not satisfactory to the Imperial government, and that its opinion remains unchanged respecting the mission of Mr. A. Dudley Mann, and the instructions with which he was furnished. He is gratified, however, to learn that the Imperial government desires to continue the friendly relations now so happily subsisting between the two governments, a desire in which he cordially concurs.

The President is also gratified to learn that the sentiments respecting the international relations between the United States and foreign powers, contained in his last annual message, meet the approbation of the Imperial government; and he directs the undersigned to assure the Chevalier Hülsemann that he intends to act steadily in accordance with those sentiments.

The government of the United States is as little inclined as the Cabinet at Vienna to prolong the discussion of the topics to which the Chevalier Hülsemann's note of the 30th of September of last year gave rise.

In his reply to that note, the undersigned stated the grounds upon which this government held itself justified in every thing which it had done connected with the mission of Mr. A. Dudley Mann, and the instructions which were given to him; and he took the occasion also of declaring the principles and the policy which the United States maintain, as appropriate to their condition, and as being, indeed, fixed and fastened upon them by their character, their history, and their position among the nations of the world; and it may be regarded as certain that these principles and this policy will not be abandoned or departed from until some extraordinary change shall take place in the general current of human affairs.

The undersigned renews to the Chevalier Hülsemann the expression of his sentiments of regard.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

THE CHEVALIER J. G. HÜLSEMANN, Chargé d'Affaires of Austria, Washington.

EXCESSES COMMITTED AT NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. Webster to Don A. Calderon de la Barca, Minister of Spain to the United States.

Department of State, Washington, November 13, 1851.

The undersigned, Secretary of State of the United States, has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the note of Señor Don A. Calderon de la Barca, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of her Catholic Majesty, of the 14th of last month, upon the subject of the excesses committed at New Orleans upon the house of the Spanish consul, and also on the property of certain individuals, subjects of her Catholic Majesty.

Mr. Calderon has written and acted on this occasion, as well as on others growing out of similar occurrences, with his accustomed zeal, as well as with fidelity to his government; and he has met, and will meet, on the part of that of the United States, an entire readiness to listen most respectfully to his representations, and to do all that honor, good faith, and the friendly relations subsisting between the United States and Spain may appear to demand.

The first rumor of the outrage at New Orleans induced the government of the United States to take immediate steps to become acquainted with the particulars. It was regarded as a case in which the honor of the country was involved; and, as Mr. Calderon has already been informed by this department, the Attorney of the United States for the District of Louisiana was instructed to cause inquiry to be made into the circumstances attending the occurrences, and to report the same to this department. The report of the District Attorney has been received, and a copy of it is now communicated to Mr. Calderon for his information. It is accompanied, as will be perceived, by a statement of the Mayor of the city of New Orleans, whose duty, as well as whose inclination, led him to make himself acquainted with every thing which took place.

From these authentic sources of information, it appears that, on the morning of the 21st of August, the steamer "Crescent City" arrived at New Orleans from Havana, with intelligence of the execution of the fifty persons who were captured near the coast of Cuba. Mr. Brincio, the secretary of the Spanish consul, was a passenger in the steamer, and was understood to have been intrusted by the Captain-General with letters written by the persons who were afterwards executed to their friends in the United States. Instead of putting these letters into the post-office at once, on his arrival, he retained them, as was alleged. This occasioned an impression that he acted with great impropriety, and a report became current that the consul had refused to deliver the letters when requested. Written placards were accordingly posted up in the city, threatening an attack on the office of the Spanish newspaper called "La Union" during the ensuing night. This attack was probably precipitated by an extra sheet, issued from the office of that paper at half past two o'clock in the afternoon, giving an account of the execution of the fifty persons at Havana; as the attack was made between three and four o'clock the same afternoon, and before the public authorities were, or could be, prepared to prevent it. During the attack, however, no personal injury was offered to any one. Afterwards, attacks were made upon coffee-houses and cigar-shops kept by Spaniards. Between five and six o'clock, the same afternoon, Mr. Genois, the Recorder of the First Municipality, hearing that an assault was threatened on the consul's office, situated in that municipality, repaired thither, accompanied by some of the police. He found the streets filled with people, the doors of the office broken open, and seven or eight persons in the act of breaking and destroying the furniture. He commanded the rioters to desist, and they withdrew, after obtaining possession of the consul's sign, which they took to a public square, and there burnt. After the departure of the mob, the doors of the consul's office were fastened up by the officers, and the police retired, not apprehending that the attack would be renewed. Within an hour, however, the rioters returned, forced their way into the office, destroyed all the remaining furniture, threw the archives into the street, defaced the portraits of the Queen of Spain and of the Captain-General of Cuba, and tore in pieces the flag which they found in the office. This is believed to be a true account of every thing material which took place.

The undersigned has now to say, that the executive government of the United States regards these outrages not only as unjustifiable, but as disgraceful acts, and a flagrant breach of duty and propriety; and that it disapproves them as seriously, and regrets them as deeply, as either Mr. Calderon or his government can possibly do. The Spanish consul was in this country discharging official duties, and protected not only by the principles of public and national law, but also by the express stipulations of treaties; and the undersigned is directed to give to Mr. Calderon, to be communicated to his government, the President's assurance that these events have caused him great pain, and that he thinks a proper acknowledgment is due to her Catholic Majesty's government. But the outrage, nevertheless, was one perpetrated by a mob, composed of irresponsible persons, the names of none of whom are known to this government; nor, so far as the government is informed, to its officers or agents in New Orleans. And the undersigned is happy to assure Mr. Calderon, that neither any officer or agent of the government of the United States, high or low, nor any officer of the State of Louisiana, high or low, or of the municipal government of the city of New Orleans, took any part in the proceeding, so far as appears, or gave it any degree of countenance whatever. On the contrary, all these officers and agents, according to the authentic accounts of the Mayor and District Attorney, did all which the suddenness of the occasion would allow to prevent it.

The assembling of mobs happens in all countries; popular violences occasionally break out everywhere, setting law at defiance, trampling on the rights of citizens and private men, and sometimes on those of public officers, and the agents of foreign governments, especially entitled to protection. In these cases the public faith and national honor require, not only that such outrages should be disavowed, but also that the perpetrators of them should be punished wherever it is possible to bring them to justice; and, further, that full satisfaction should be made, in cases in which a duty to that effect rests with the government, according to the general principles of law, public faith, and the obligation of treaties.

Mr. Calderon thinks that the enormity of this act of popular violence is heightened by its insult to the flag of Spain. The government of the United States would earnestly deprecate any indignity offered in this country, in time of peace, to the flag of a nation so ancient, so respectable, so renowned, as Spain. No wonder that Mr. Calderon should be proud, and that all patriotic Spaniards of this generation should be proud, of that Castilian ensign, which, in times past, has been reared so high, and waved so often over fields of acknowledged and distinguished valor; and which has floated also, without stain, on all seas, and especially, in early days, on those seas which wash the shores of all the Indies. Mr. Calderon may be assured that the government of the United States does not and cannot desire to witness the desecration or degradation of the national banner of his country.

It appears, however, that in point of fact no flag was actually flying, or publicly exhibited, when the outrage took place; but this can make no difference in regard to the real nature of the offence, or its enormity. The persons composing the mob knew that they were offering insult and injury to an officer of her Catholic Majesty, residing in the United States under the sanction of laws and treaties, and therefore their conduct admits of no justification. Nevertheless, Mr. Calderon and his government are aware that recent intelligence had then been received from Havana, not a little calculated to excite popular feeling in a great city, and to lead to popular excesses. If this be no justification, as it certainly is none, it may still be taken into view and regarded as showing that the outrage, however flagrant, was committed in the heat of blood, and not in pursuance of any predetermined plan or purpose of injury or insult.

The people of the United States are accustomed, in all cases of alleged crime, to slow and cautious investigation and deliberate trial before sentence of condemnation is passed, however apparent or however enormous the imputed offence may be. No wonder, therefore, that the information of the execution, so soon after their arrest, of the persons above referred to, most of whom were known in New Orleans, and who were taken, not in Cuba, but at sea endeavoring to escape from the island, should have produced a belief, however erroneous, that they had been executed without any trial whatever, and caused an excitement in the city the outbreak of which the public authorities were unable for the moment to prevent or control.

Mr. Calderon expresses the opinion, that not only ought indemnification to be made to Mr. Laborde, her Catholic Majesty's consul, for injury and loss of property, but that reparation is due also from the government of the United States to those Spaniards residing in New Orleans whose property was injured or destroyed by the mob, and intimates that such reparation had been verbally promised to him. The undersigned sincerely regrets that any misapprehension should have grown up out of any conversation between Mr. Calderon and officers of this government on this unfortunate and unpleasant affair; but, while this government has manifested a willingness and determination to perform every duty which one friendly nation has a right to expect from another in cases of this kind, it supposes that the rights of the Spanish consul, a public officer residing here under the protection of the United States government, are quite different from those of the Spanish subjects who have come into the country to mingle with our own citizens, and here to pursue their private business and objects. The former may claim special indemnity; the latter are entitled to such protection as is afforded to our own citizens. While, therefore, the losses of individuals, private Spanish subjects, are greatly to be regretted, yet it is understood that many American citizens suffered equal losses from the same cause; and these private individuals, subjects of her Catholic Majesty, coming voluntarily to reside in the United States, have certainly no cause of complaint, if they are protected by the same laws, and the same administration of law, as native-born citizens of this country. They have, in fact, some advantages over citizens of the State in which they happen to be, inasmuch as they are enabled, until they become citizens themselves, to prosecute for any injuries done to their persons or property in the courts of the United States, or the State courts, at their election.

The President is of opinion, as already stated, that, for obvious reasons, the case of the consul is different, and that the government of the United States should provide for Mr. Laborde a just indemnity; and a recommendation to that effect will be laid before Congress at an early period of its approaching session. This is all which it is in his power to do. The case may be a new one, but the President, being of opinion that Mr. Laborde ought to be indemnified, has not thought it necessary to search for precedents.

In conclusion, the undersigned has to say, that if Mr. Laborde shall return to his post, or any other consul for New Orleans shall be appointed by her Catholic Majesty's government, the officers of this government resident in that city will be instructed to receive and treat him with courtesy, and with a national salute to the flag of his ship, if he shall arrive in a Spanish vessel, as a demonstration of respect, such as may signify to him, and to his government, the sense entertained by the government of the United States of the gross injustice done to his predecessor by a lawless mob, as well as the indignity and insult offered by it to a foreign state with which the United States are, and wish ever to remain, on terms of the most respectful and pacific intercourse.

The undersigned avails himself of this occasion to offer to Mr. Calderon renewed assurances of his distinguished consideration.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

DON A. CALDERON DE LA BARCA, Minister of Spain to the United States.

THE LOPEZ EXPEDITION.

Mr. Webster to Mr. Barringer, Minister of the United States to Spain.

Department of State, Washington, November 26, 1851.

Sir, — Your despatches to No. 61, inclusive, have been received. I am happy to inform you that the complaints of her Catholic Majesty's government, respecting insults to the Spanish consul and flag by a mob at New Orleans, and other acts of violence against the property of her subjects in this country, all occasioned by the excitement growing out of the late invasion of Cuba and its incidents and consequences, have been made the subject of a correspondence between this Department and Mr. Calderon, her Majesty's minister here. A copy of this correspondence is herewith transmitted to you, by which you will perceive that those complaints have been met by the government of the United States in a manner satisfactory to the representative of Spain. Her Catholic Majesty's government must be too just to suppose for a moment, either that the government of the United States has connived at the several invasions of Cuba by persons proceeding from our ports, or that any thing within the power of the government has been omitted for preventing those invasions, and for punishing those concerned in them. It has now been many months that these hostile designs against Cuba have occupied the attention of the government of the United States, from week to week and from day to day. The most zealous efforts have been made to bring to condign punishment all who have been disposed to violate the laws of their own country, by making war upon a Spanish possession. Her Catholic Majesty's government is quite well aware that the principal instigator of this criminal invasion of Cuba, and the leader of the expedition, was one of her Majesty's subjects, who came to this country and abused its hospitality by inducing American citizens, mostly young and ill-informed persons, to embark in his cause and follow his standard. There is good reason to believe, that but for this agency, and that of other Spaniards who had come to the country, no expedition against Cuba would ever have been set on foot. The policy of the United States is the policy of peace, until there shall arise just cause of war. The colonies of Spain are near to our own shores. Our commerce with them is large and important, and the records of the diplomatic intercourse between the two countries will show to her Catholic Majesty's government how sincerely and how steadily the United States have manifested the hope that no political changes might lead to a transfer of these colonies from her Majesty's crown. If there is one among the existing governments of the civilized world which for a long course of years has diligently sought to maintain amicable relations with Spain, it is the government of the United States.

Not only does the correspondence between the two governments show this, but the same truth is established by the history of the legislation of the country, and the general course of the executive government. In this recent invasion, Lopez and his fellow-subjects in the United States succeeded in deluding a few hundred men, by a long-continued and systematic misrepresentation of the political condition of the island, and of the wishes of its inhabitants. And it is not for the purpose of reviving unpleasant recollections that her Majesty's government is reminded, that it is not many years since the commerce of the United States suffered severely from armed boats and vessels which found refuge and shelter in the ports of the Spanish islands. These violations of the law, these authors of gross violence towards the citizens of this republic, were finally suppressed, not by any effort of the Spanish authorities, but by the activity and vigilance of our navy. This, however, was not accomplished but by the efforts of several years, nor until many valuable lives, as well as a vast amount of property, had been lost. Among others, Lieutenant Allen, a very valuable and distinguished officer in the naval service of the United States, was killed in an action with these banditti.

All this is not said for the purpose of making or renewing complaints, either of the violation of treaty obligations or of unjustifiable remissness, against the government of Spain or the authorities of the islands. But it may be brought to the notice of the Spanish government as one of the consequences which may sometimes flow from the conduct of men disposed to carry on criminal enterprises, and favored, in the execution of such enterprises, by the contiguity of the possessions of the two governments. The Spanish islands lie near the coast of America, and the use of steam has rendered the passage from one to the other short; but while this facilitates the accomplishment of the purposes of wrongdoers, on the other hand it augments the means of government to pursue, overtake, and disperse them, or bring them to proper trial and punishment. In truth, steam has greatly increased the proximity of Cuba to the United States. We have become much nearer neighbors than formerly, and the duty which this new state of things devolves on both governments is to keep a closer and stricter watch on their subjects and citizens respectively, in order that no violation of treaty obligations, and no interruption of the peace and amity existing between the two governments, may take place. And this duty will be performed on the part of the United States diligently and faithfully, in the true spirit of treaties, as well as in the proper execution of the laws. You are at liberty to communicate these observations to the government of her Catholic Majesty.

I have now to call your attention to another subject of much interest. We have learned that a hundred and sixty-two of the persons captured on the island of Cuba, as having constituted a part of Lopez's forces, have been sent to Spain. We have no official information respecting their trial or sentence, or of their subsequent destination, but it is generally reported that they have been or are to be sent to the mines. The government of the United States has admitted that these violators both of the law of nations and of the laws of their own country have no legal claim for its protection. Yet they are men, and most of them ignorant or deluded men. It cannot be denied that they are, as such, objects of compassion; and I think I may say, that severe punishment inflicted on so many persons for an attempt which has ended in a failure so signal, and for an offence which, however grave, has already been expiated by the lives of a majority of those who participated in it, might be regarded as inconsistent with feelings of humanity and that generosity of sentiment which may not unreasonably be looked for from the sovereign of a great nation. This seems to have been the sentiment entertained by the Captain-General of Cuba, under the influence of which he pardoned several of the captives; and her Majesty's government may be assured, that this wise and well-considered exercise of clemency and mercy has produced the best effects in this country. He has said, that in the executions ordered by him he acted under a conviction of the absolute necessity of setting an example which might deter others from the performance of acts of similar criminality. That example has been set by the infliction of a punishment as prompt as it was awful, by the execution of fifty persons. The knowledge of their miserable fate has been carried to every man in this country, and spread all over the world.

Is not this enough? Can example be made more terrific? Certainly an act of clemency on the part of the Spanish government could not now be thought a symptom of weakness. May not the sword of justice be now sheathed without danger, and the voice of Christian humanity be allowed to be heard? And even if the Spanish government can entertain no great feeling of compassion for these deluded and offending men themselves, is it not highly just and proper to consider that they have friends and families, distressed fathers and mothers, weeping brothers and sisters, all of them unoffending, and some of them most respectable persons? Application has been made for the interposition of the kind offices of this government from fathers, whose sons (thoughtless young men, seduced by the efforts of Lopez and his associates) eloped from their own homes and joined the expedition without the knowledge of their friends. I am aware, that, in regard to the results of the Cuban invasion, all cause for sympathy and compassion is not on one side. I am aware that a general officer in her Majesty's service was slain, and that many Spanish soldiers and Spanish subjects lost their lives in defence of their government and of their own homes. But the President thinks that it is wise to suffer oblivion to cover the past. He is anxious for the removal of every cause which might tend to keep alive ill-will between the citizens and subjects of the two countries. So long as these prisoners shall continue to be suffering a severe and lingering punishment in a foreign land, so long will efforts be constantly made by their friends to procure their release, by appeals to the good offices of their government. The tendency of these applications can only be to keep alive a very considerable irritation. It is in consideration of this, and from a strong wish for the extinguishment of all feelings of that kind, that, in the judgment of the President, nothing would be more useful than the granting of her Majesty's pardon to the residue of these prisoners, and suffering them to return to their own homes.

Those who were pardoned by the Captain-General of Cuba appear to have been among the most prominent and well-informed members of the expedition. The friendless are left to their fate, although less culpable, as being less informed of their duties and obligations. It seems invidious and unjust to make distinctions of this kind. You say that the existing belief in Spain is, that the result of the expedition has strengthened the hands of the Spanish government, and given new security to its possession of the island. A similar sentiment prevails, to some extent, here.

We are not apprised of the disposition which may have been made of the prisoners, who, as you state in your No. 62, have arrived at Vigo. In answer to your inquiry as to whether, in any event, and to what extent, assistance in clothing, or other necessaries, might be furnished to such as might need and apply for the same on account of the United States, I have to remark, that it is expected that none of the needy among the prisoners will be allowed to suffer for want of the necessaries of life. You will accordingly take care that their wants are provided for.

An application will be made to Congress for an appropriation towards defraying any expenses which may thereby be occasioned.

I am, Sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To D. M. BARRINGER, ESQ., &c.

THE CASE OF THRASHER.

Mr. Webster to Mr. Barringer.

Department of State, Washington, December 13, 1851.

Sir, — The object of this despatch is to call your attention particularly to the case of John S. Thrasher, a native-born citizen of the United States, but for some years past a resident in Havana, and there lately tried for high treason or conspiracy, convicted, sentenced to eight years' confinement to hard labor, and sent to Spain in execution of that sentence. He has respectable friends and connections in the United States who feel much interest for him, and who have pressed his case upon the consideration of this department, earnestly invoking the interposition of the government in his behalf.

It is much to be regretted that Mr. Thrasher has made no communication whatever to this department respecting the circumstances of his case, so as to enable us to see what are the precise grounds of his complaint.

We have used all the means in our power to learn the particulars, as you will perceive by copies of two letters addressed by this department to the American consul at Havana. To these letters we have received as yet no answer. A despatch on this subject was prepared for you some days ago, but before it was delivered to the messenger a communication was received from Mr. Calderon, her Majesty's plenipotentiary here, communicating a copy of a letter of the Governor-General of Cuba to him, and also an opinion of the Real Audiencia Pretorial (Royal Court of Judicature) upon the construction of the seventh article of the treaty between the United States and Spain. The translation of these documents has necessarily caused some delay. You will perceive that the Spanish authorities of the island represent that Mr. Thrasher had been long a resident in Havana; had become domiciled there, and had taken the oath of allegiance to the Spanish crown; and therefore, as they suppose, was answerable to the ordinary tribunals of the country for any criminal act committed by him.

This causes it to be the more regretted that he has made no communication to the government of his own case, as he understands it. He has indeed, through the press, addressed a general letter of remonstrance to the government and people of the United States, and this is all we hear from him personally. Nevertheless, his case has been thought deserving of attention, and there is a wish on the part of government to do all which may be proper in his behalf. If the official account of the Spanish authorities be correct, Mr. Thrasher appears to have expatriated himself, and to have become, at least for the time, a subject of the Crown of Spain. He had chosen a new government and a new home; and so long as he chose to remain under the authority and protection of that government, he would seem to have little right to set up against it any immunity founded on his original and native character as a citizen of the United States. There is no doubt that any one who chooses to reside in a country is bound to conform to its laws, and is amenable to its tribunals for their violation; the more especially if he has promised subjection and obedience to those laws, and taken an oath of allegiance to the sovereign power.

Mr. Thrasher's friends insist, nevertheless, that on his trial he was deprived of certain privileges secured to citizens of the United States by the seventh article of our treaty with Spain of 1795. But it may be doubtful whether, after having sworn allegiance to the Spanish government, he can longer claim the privileges and immunities of an American citizen. In the United States, as you know, the oath of allegiance is the consummation of the proceedings by which a foreigner becomes a citizen of this country, and renounces all allegiance to every foreign government. It may be doubtful, also, whether, if he were to be regarded in all respects as an American citizen, the provisions of the seventh article of the treaty of 1795 have been violated in his case.

Probably, under existing circumstances, the most useful course for the government of the United States to pursue in his behalf, and in order to obtain his release, is to make the same application for him which has been made in favor of the persons connected with the expedition of Lopez, who have, in like manner, been sent to Spain. His case, however, is certainly less flagrant than theirs. They were violent invaders, proceeding to Cuba with arms in their hands to make war upon the Spanish government and people. He at most could be only guilty of some connivance, or secret countenance, of these unlawful proceedings. You will perceive, therefore, that his case is one more fit for a lenient consideration than that of those with whom the project of invasion originated, and who were made prisoners in attempting its forcible execution. You will present this point as fully as may be to the consideration of the Queen's government, and urge it with earnestness.

In the instruction of this department, No. 48, considerations were presented which it was hoped would prevail on that government to release those persons who had been taken prisoners in the expedition of Lopez. The expectation that such a release would be ordered is now a good deal strengthened by information which the department has received, that those of the prisoners who were British subjects have already been liberated.

Mr. Thrasher is represented as an amiable and intelligent man, and, as his friends represent the matter, his conduct was principally instigated, not so much by sympathy with the invaders in their general objects, as by a desire to minister to their necessities. We cannot judge of this, because we have neither any proof nor any statement of the particular acts in which the alleged treason or conspiracy consisted. But, however this may be, you will present to her Catholic Majesty's government, in as strong a manner as may be consistent with propriety, the expediency of pardoning him with the rest, so that nothing may remain in the form of lingering punishment of an individual to keep alive the recollection of occurrences equally lamented by both governments. The unthinking and imprudent have been most severely admonished by events; those who violated the law have seen that punishment always awaits such violation; and we may be allowed to hope that the exercise on the part of her Majesty's government of forbearance and clemency will not tend to encourage criminal enterprises in future.

Her Majesty's government cannot doubt the motives which have actuated that of the United States in preventing and repressing, to the utmost of its power, these invasions of Spanish territory. It cannot doubt its full and perfect disposition to fulfil all its obligations, and to maintain with Spain the most friendly relations. And the President directs me to say, that he hopes that her Majesty's government, being thus fully assured of the entire good faith of that of the United States, will readily listen to the suggestions which I have been directed to make in behalf of all the prisoners; and I repeat, with a still more strengthened conviction, the sentiment which I expressed in my despatch No. 48, that the restoration of perfect harmony and solid and durable peace between the two countries will be aided and promoted by the release of all these miserable men from further imprisonment.

With a view to its safety and despatch, this instruction is sent to you by a special bearer.

I am, Sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

TO DANIEL M. BARRINGER, ESQ., &c., &c., Madrid.

Mr. Webster to the President of the United States.

Department of State, Washington, December 23, 1851.

The Secretary of State, to whom has been referred a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 15th instant, in the following words: "Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, so far as in his judgment may be compatible with the public interest, to communicate to this House any information in possession of the executive respecting the imprisonment, trial, and sentence of John S. Thrasher, in the island of Cuba, and his right to claim the protection of the government as a native-born citizen of the United States"; has the honor to report to the President, that all the official information in possession of this department respecting the imprisonment, trial, and sentence of Mr. John S. Thrasher, is contained in the despatches of Allen F. Owen, Esquire, late United States Consul at Havana, together with a correspondence between him and the Governor-General of the island of Cuba, and in a letter addressed by the Governor-General to Don A. Calderon de la Barca, her Catholic Majesty's Minister in the United States; copies of all of which are herewith transmitted.

There is no doubt that John S. Thrasher is a citizen of the United States by birth, nor is there any doubt that he has resided in the island of Cuba for a considerable number of years, engaged in business transactions, sometimes as a merchant, and sometimes as the conductor of a newspaper press; although the precise period and duration of such residence are not known. On this point, the department has sought in vain for exact information. Mr. Thrasher himself has made no communication to this department, although he has, through the press, addressed a general letter of remonstrance to the government and people of the United States.

In the letter from the Governor of Cuba to her Catholic Majesty's Minister in the United States, already mentioned, it is stated that he has been, not only a resident in Havana for a considerable time, but domiciled there by regular proceedings; and that he has, in solemn form, sworn allegiance to the Spanish crown. There is no evidence in the possession of the government to show what was his purpose with regard to returning to his native country, at any fixed or definite time. Other members of his family are understood to be, like himself, residents in Cuba, his father having gone to that island some years ago.

These are all the known general facts respecting the nature of his residence in Havana, which have come to the knowledge of this department.

It appears that soon after the failure and breaking up of the late expedition of Narcisso Lopez, in the invasion of Cuba by him and the troops under his command, Mr. Thrasher was arrested and tried for high treason or conspiracy against the crown of Spain, condemned to eight years' imprisonment to hard labor, and sent to Spain in execution of that sentence. There is no evidence in the department to show what were the particular acts of treason or conspiracy alleged, or proved, against him. We have only the general statement, although pains has been taken to ascertain particulars.

The first general question, then, is, as to his right to exemption from Spanish law and Spanish authority, on the ground of his being a native-born citizen of the United States.

The general rule of the public law is, that every person of full age has a right to change his domicile; and it follows, that when he removes to another place, with an intention to make that place his permanent residence, or his residence for an indefinite period, it becomes instantly his place of domicile; and this is so, notwithstanding he may entertain a floating intention of returning to his original residence or citizenship at some future period. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided, "that a person who removes to a foreign country, settles himself there, and engages in the trade of the country, furnishes by these acts such evidences of an intention permanently to reside in that country, as to stamp him with its national character"; and this undoubtedly is in full accordance with the sentiments of the most eminent writers, as well as with those of other high judicial tribunals, on the subject. No government has carried this general presumption farther than that of the United States, since it is well known that hundreds of thousands of persons are now living in this country who have not been naturalized according to the provisions of law, nor sworn any allegiance to this government, nor been domiciled amongst us by any regular course of proceedings. What degree of alarm would it not give to this vastly numerous class of men, actually living amongst us as inhabitants of the United States, to learn that, by removing to this country, they had not transferred their allegiance from the governments of which they were originally subjects to this government? And, on the other hand, what would be the condition of this country and its government, if the sovereigns of Europe, from whose dominions they have emigrated, were supposed to have still a right to interpose to protect such inhabitants against the penalties which might be justly incurred by them in consequence of their violation of the laws of the United States? In questions on this subject, the chief point to be considered is the animus manendi, or intention of continued residence; and this must be decided by reasonable rules and the general principles of evidence. If it sufficiently appear that the intention of removing was to make a permanent settlement, or a settlement for an indefinite time, the right of domicile is acquired by a residence even of a few days.

It is undoubtedly true that an American citizen who goes into a foreign country, although he owes local and temporary allegiance to that country, is yet, if he performs no other act changing his condition, entitled to the protection of his own government; and if, without the violation of any municipal law, he should be treated unjustly, he would have a right to claim that protection; and the interposition of the American government in his favor would be considered as a justifiable interposition. But his situation is completely changed, when, by his own act, he has made himself the subject of a foreign power. And a person found residing in a foreign country is presumed to be there animo manendi, or with the purpose of remaining; and to relieve himself of the character which this presumption fixes upon him, he must show that his residence was only temporary, and accompanied all the while with a fixed and definite intention of returning. If in that country he engages in trade and business, he is considered by the law of nations as a merchant of that country; nor is the presumption rebutted by the residence of his wife and family in the country from which he came. This is the doctrine as laid down by the United States courts. And it has been decided that a Spanish merchant, who came to the United States and continued to reside here and carry on trade after the breaking out of war between Spain and Great Britain, is to be considered an American merchant, although the trade could be lawfully carried on by a Spanish subject only. But the necessity of any presumption in Mr. Thrasher's case is entirely removed, if, in fact, he actually took out letters of domiciliation, in order to enable him to transact business such as a Spanish subject or a domiciliated foreigner can alone transact, and actually swore allegiance to the Spanish crown. For the purpose of showing the mode by which foreigners are domiciled in the island of Cuba, and the duties thereby imposed upon them, and also by what means they obtain the ultimate right of naturalization, I have thought it worth while to quote at length a translation of the royal decree of January 17, 1815, and also the royal colonization decree of October 21, 1817. It is understood that no change has been made, by royal decrees, in the requirements of the Spanish law of domicile and naturalization since the last of those periods.

"All foreigners belonging to powers and countries that are friendly to me, who may wish to establish themselves, or who may already be established, in the island of Cuba, must produce suitable evidence before the government of said island that they profess the Roman Catholic religion, and without this indispensable qualification they will not be allowed to become domiciled there; but my vassals in these dominions, and those inhabiting the Indies, need not be compelled to certify to this effect, inasmuch as, in regard to them, there can be no doubt upon this point.

"Those foreigners who shall be admitted conformably to the provisions of the foregoing article, shall take the oath of allegiance and vassalage before the governor, by which they shall promise to obey the general laws and ordinances of the Indies, to which all Spaniards are amenable.

"At the expiration of the first five years of residence in the island, on the part of foreign colonists, and on their contracting then the obligation to remain there perpetually, they shall be allowed all the rights and privileges of naturalization, equally with such children as they may have brought with them, or who may have been born to them in the aforesaid island, in order that the same may consequently be allowed to hold honorable offices, both civil and military, according to the talents of each individual."

The same decree also provides that "a foreigner may reside in Cuba for the period of three months without letters of domicile," but that on his remaining there without such letters beyond the time specified, "he becomes guilty of disobedience to the laws, and amenable to such just punishment as, after a close examination of the cause, may be imposed on him."

Upon the same subject, and in corroboration of the above, the royal colonization decree of October 21, 1817, says:—

"Letters of domicile shall be issued to any foreign colonist who professes the Roman Catholic religion, and takes the oath of allegiance, by means of which, during five years of residence, it shall be optional with him either to return to his own country, or to present himself before the superior magistrate at the expiration of those five years, for the purpose of obtaining his naturalization papers, which will be granted to him without any great formality, in order that, on being thus naturalized, he may enjoy all the rights and privileges appertaining to Spaniards, as well as his sons and legitimate descendants."

On the 6th of March, 1818, the Governor-General, in view of the above-mentioned royal decree of October 21, 1817, issued a Bando Real, in which it is provided, that,

"In the absence of the requisite qualifications in regard to the profession of the Catholic faith, the fact shall be noted down in the letters of domicile, which will then be issued on probation for the term of two years. If, at the expiration of those two years, the applicant cannot produce satisfactory evidence of his professing our sacred religion, the letter of domicile shall be taken away from him, and he will then be considered in the light of merely a transient foreigner, and, as such, be compelled to leave this island at the expiration of three months, in pursuance of the twenty-eighth article of the royal decree."

But, independently of a residence with intention to continue such residence, independently of any domiciliation, independently of the taking of an oath of allegiance or of renouncing any former allegiance, it is well known that by the public law an alien, or a stranger born, for so long a time as he continues within the dominions of a foreign government, owes obedience to the laws of that government, and may be punished for treason, or other crimes, as a native-born subject might be, unless his case is varied by some treaty stipulations; but this duty of obedience to the laws, arising from local and temporary allegiance, ceases, of course, the moment he transfers himself back to his original country.

An American citizen by birth, owing of course a native allegiance to the United States, going abroad and obtaining no residence under a foreign government, and professing to such government no allegiance, and who should yet commit acts of hostility or war against this country, would seem to bring himself within the act of Congress which declares that, if any person or persons owing allegiance to the United States of America shall levy war against them, or shall adhere to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort, within the United States or elsewhere, he or they shall be adjudged guilty of treason. And the reason is plain, since his allegiance in such a case is original and native, and has not been transferred, nor lost in any other local allegiance arising from residence elsewhere, but continues to be the primitive tie which binds him to his country.

But, as has been already said, every foreigner born, residing in a country, owes to that country allegiance and obedience to its laws so long as he remains in it, as a duty imposed upon him by the mere fact of his residence, and the temporary protection which he enjoys, and is as much bound to obey its laws as native subjects or citizens. This is the universal understanding in all civilized states, and nowhere a more established doctrine than in this country.

Mr. Jefferson, when Secretary of State, in his letter to Gouverneur Morris of the 16th of August, 1793, speaking of the right of private citizens to make war upon a country with which the government of the United States is at peace, says: —

"If one citizen has a right to go to war of his own authority, every citizen has the same. If every citizen has that right, then the nation (which is composed of all its citizens) has a right to go to war by the authority of its individual citizens. But this is not true, either on the general principles of society, or by our Constitution, which gives that power to Congress alone, and not to the citizens individually. Then the first position was not true; and no citizen has a right to go to war of his own authority; and for what he does without right, he ought to be punished. Indeed, nothing can be more obviously absurd, than to say that all the citizens may be at war, and yet the nation at peace.

"It has been pretended, indeed, that the engagement of a citizen in an enterprise of this nature was a divestment of the character of citizen, and a transfer of jurisdiction over him to another sovereign. Our citizens are certainly free to divest themselves of that character by emigration, and other acts manifesting their intention, and may then become the subjects of another power, and free to do whatever the subjects of that power may do. But the laws do not admit that the bare commission of a crime amounts of itself to a divestment of the character of citizen, and withdraws the criminal from their coercion. They would never prescribe an illegal act among the legal modes by which a citizen might disfranchise himself; nor render treason, for instance, innocent, by giving it the force of a dissolution of the obligation of the criminal to his country."

This is in accordance with the opinion of the Circuit Court of the United States for Pennsylvania, by whom it was stated, in 1793, that, "if one citizen of the United States may take part in the present war, ten thousand may. If they may take part on one side, they may take part on the other; and thus thousands of our fellow-citizens may associate themselves with different belligerent powers, destroying not only those with whom we have no hostility, but destroying each other. In such a case, can we expect peace among their friends who stay behind? And will not a civil war, with all its lamentable train of evils, be the natural effect?"

Our citizens, who resort to countries where the trial by jury is not known, and who may there be charged with crime, frequently imagine, when the laws of those countries are administered in the forms customary therein, that they are deprived of rights to which they are entitled, and therefore may expect the interference of their own government. But it must be remembered, in all such cases, that they have of their own free will elected a residence out of their native land, and preferred to live elsewhere, and under another government, and in a country in which different laws prevail.

They have chosen to settle themselves in a country where jury trials are not known; where representative government does not exist; where the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus is unheard of; and where judicial proceedings in criminal cases are brief and summary. Having made this election, they must necessarily abide its consequences. No man can carry the ægis of his national American liberty into a foreign country, and expect to hold it up for his exemption from the dominion and authority of the laws and the sovereign power of that country, unless he be authorized to do so by virtue of treaty stipulations.

The definition of crimes, the denouncement of penalties for their commission, and the forms of proceeding by which guilt is to be ascertained, are high prerogatives of sovereignty, and one nation cannot dictate them to another without being liable to the same dictation herself.

The friends of Mr. Thrasher interpose in his behalf the seventh article of the treaty of 1795, which declares that, in all cases of offences committed by any citizen or subject of the one party within the jurisdiction of the other, the same shall be prosecuted by order and authority of law only, and according to the regular course of proceeding in such cases. They shall also be allowed to employ such advocates as they may judge proper before the tribunals of the other party, who shall have free access to be present at the proceedings in such causes, and at the taking of all examinations and evidence which may be exhibited in the said trials.

As the public law, however, does in no case impart to foreigners residing in any country privileges which are denied to its own citizens or subjects, except, perhaps, that of leaving the country, it may be thought doubtful whether, by the article of the treaty referred to, the parties could have contemplated any thing more than to place citizens of the United States within Spanish jurisdiction on an equality with Spanish subjects, and Spanish subjects in the United States on an equality with our own citizens, in criminal proceedings. A citizen of Spain in this country might complain, perhaps, of a trial by jury here, because of the supposed partialities and prejudices of juries; while an American in Spain complains of condemnation, in summary form, by judges, without the intervention of a jury to ascertain his guilt. The question arising on the latter clause of this seventh article of the treaty with Spain may not be entirely clear or free from difficulty, especially when it is known that the minister who negotiated this treaty on the part of the United States appears to have attached considerable importance to this right of selecting and employing counsel. Mr. Thomas Pinckney, the American negotiator, says, in a letter on the subject of the treaty, that the first part of this seventh article was taken from the sixteenth article of our treaty with Prussia, and that he added the latter part because he considered it a good stipulation in all situations, but particularly in Spain.

We can readily imagine why it should have been stipulated in the treaty, that the trial of an American citizen in Spain should be open and public, because we know that, as late as the year 1795, there existed in Spain an ecclesiastical jurisdiction, having power over life and death, whose proceedings were always secret. Whether it was intended by the parties that this right of selecting counsel in the case of the arrest or the trial of an American citizen, for treason, or other crime against the civil law, should extend further, or be broader, than in the case of a Spanish subject prosecuted for a similar offence, may be matter of doubt and controversy. The view which the Spanish courts of the highest jurisdiction take of it, may be seen by the communication of the Royal Court of Judicature accompanying the letter of the Governor-General to Mr. Calderon. But, however all this may be, the general question still returns, whether this right secured by treaty, whatever it is, be not justly limited to such persons as are at the time in all respects American citizens, having never voluntarily changed their domicile or taken upon themselves a new allegiance.

In this view of the case, it might therefore be asked whether, if Mr. Thrasher had been a native-born subject of her Catholic Majesty, his trial and its result would have been different from what they actually were.

If indeed Mr. Thrasher, in his arrest and trial, did not enjoy the benefits which native-born Spanish subjects enjoy in like cases, but was more harshly treated, or more severely punished, for the reason that he was a native-born citizen of the United States, it would be a clear case of the violation of treaty obligations, and would demand the interposition of the government. There exists in this department no proof of any such extraordinary treatment of Mr. Thrasher. It may have taken place. In the absence of all other information, reference is made on that point, as well as on all the rest of the case, to the letter of the Governor-General of Cuba to Mr. Calderon, her Catholic Majesty's Minister Plenipotentiary to this government.

For the further information of the House of Representatives, I also transmit herewith a copy of the despatch of the 13th instant, from this department to the Minister of the United States at Madrid, and of despatches to the acting consul at Havana of the 12th and 28th of November last.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

TO THE PRESIDENT.

MISCELLANEOUS LETTERS.

MISCELLANEOUS LETTERS.

To the Rev. Louis Dwight, Secretary of the Prison Discipline Society.

Washington, May 2, 1830.

Sir, — I have received your letter of the 19th of April, asking my opinion upon several questions, all relative to the subject of imprisonment for debt. I am quite willing to express my general opinions on that interesting subject, although they are not so matured as to be entitled to influence other men's judgments. The existing laws, I think, call loudly for revision and amendment. Your first four questions seek to know what I think of imprisonment for small sums. I am decidedly against it; I would carry the exemption to debts of thirty or forty dollars, at least. Individual instances of evil or hardship might, I am aware, follow from such a change; but I am persuaded the general result would be favorable, in a high degree, to industry, sobriety, and good morals, as well as to personal liberty.

You ask, in the next place, what I think of imprisonment for debt in any case, where there is no evidence of fraud. Certainly I am of opinion that there should be no imprisonment for debt, where it appears that no fraud has been practised, or intended, either in contracting the debt or in omitting to pay it. But then it seems to me, that, when a man does not fulfil a lawful promise, he ought to show his inability, and to show also that his own conduct has been fair and honest. He ought not to be allowed merely to say he cannot pay, and then to call on the creditor to prove that his inability is pretended or fraudulent. He ought to show why he does not and cannot fulfil his contract, and to give reasonable evidence that he has not acted fraudulently; and, this being done, his person ought to be held no longer. In the first place, the creditor is entitled to the oath of his debtor, and, in the next place, to satisfactory explanation of any suspicious circumstances.

There are two sorts of fraud, either of which, when proved, ought to prevent a liberation of the person; namely, fraud in contracting the debt, and fraud in concealing, or making way with, the means of payment. And the usual provisions of the bankrupt act ought to be added, that no one should be discharged who is proved to have lost money in any species of gaming; and I should include in this class all adventurers in lotteries. Having tendered his own oath, and made just explanation of any circumstances of suspicion, if there be such, and not having lost money by gaming, the debtor ought to be discharged at once; which answers another of your questions; for the detention of thirty days before the oath can be taken appears to me wholly useless.

You are pleased to ask, whether, in my judgment, Christians can, with a good conscience, imprison, either other Christians, or infidels. He would be very little of a Christian, I think, who should make a difference, in such a case, and be willing to use a degree of severity towards Jew or Greek which he would not use towards one of his own faith. Whether conscientious men can imprison any body for debt, whom they do not believe dishonest or fraudulent, is a question which every man, while the law allows such imprisonment, must decide for himself. In answer to your inquiry, whether I have found it necessary to use such coercion in regard to debts of my own, I have to say, that I never imprisoned any man for my own debt, under any circumstances; nor have I, in five-and-twenty years' professional practice, ever recommended it to others, except in cases where there was manifest proof, or violent and unexplained suspicion, of intentional fraud.

Imprisonment for debt, my dear Sir, as it is now practised, is, in my judgment, a great evil; and, it seems to me, an effectual remedy for the larger part of the evil is obvious. Nineteen twentieths of the whole of it would be relieved, in my opinion, if imprisonment for small debts were to be abolished. That object I believe to be attainable; and to its attainment, I think, the main attention of those who take an interest in the subject should be directed. Small credits are often given, on the confidence of being able to collect the debt by the terrors of the jail; great ones, seldom or never.

Three simple provisions would accomplish all, in my opinion, that may be considered as absolutely required to a just state of the law respecting imprisonment for debt in Massachusetts: —

1. That no imprisonment should be allowed, when the debt, exclusive of costs, did not amount to thirty dollars.

2. That there should be no necessity of imprisonment for thirty days, as preliminary to taking the poor debtor's oath; nor any longer detention than such as is necessary to give parties notice, and time to prepare for examination; and that a convenient number of magistrates in every county should, for the purpose of administering the oath, be appointed by the government; and that such magistrates should be clothed with such further powers as might be thought expedient, in order to enable them to make a thorough investigation of the fairness or fraud of the debtor's conduct.

3. That, in cases where the debtor had been discharged, if the creditor would make oath to newly discovered evidence, proving original fraud, or to his belief that the debtor had subsequently received property, and concealed or withheld the same from his creditors, it should be competent to such creditor to have investigation of such charge, and, if made out, to have execution against the person, and if not made out, that the creditor should pay the cost of the proceeding.

Other provisions might doubtless be useful; but if these three alone could be obtained, they would, in a great measure, clear the jails of debtors, and give general satisfaction, I have no doubt, to creditors.

I ought to add, that the imprisonment of females in the common jails, for mere debt, is a barbarism which ought not to be tolerated. Instances of such imprisonment, though rare, do yet sometimes occur, under circumstances that shock every humane mind. In this respect, the law ought, in my judgment, to be altogether reformed.

To John Bolton, Esq., of Georgia.

New York, May 17, 1833.

My dear Sir, — I have received your letter of last evening, requesting me to state my opinion of the powers of Congress on the subject of slaves and slavery; and of the existence of any wish or design, on the part of Northern men, to interfere with the security or regulation of that species of property.

My sentiments on this subject, my dear Sir, have been often publicly expressed; but I can have no objection to repeat the declaration of them, if it be thought by you that such a declaration might, in the smallest degree, aid the friends of the Union and the Constitution, in the South, in dispelling prejudices which are so industriously fostered, and in quieting agitations so unnecessarily kept alive.

In my opinion, the domestic slavery of the Southern States is a subject within the exclusive control of the States themselves; and this, I am sure, is the opinion of the whole North. Congress has no authority to interfere in the emancipation of slaves, or in the treatment of them in any of the States. This was so resolved in the House of Representatives, when Congress sat in this city in 1790, on the report of a committee consisting almost entirely of Northern members; and I do not know an instance of the expression of a different opinion, in either house of Congress, since. I cannot say that particular individuals might not possibly be found who suppose that Congress may possess some power over the subject, but I do not know any such persons, and if there be any, I am sure they are few. The servitude of so great a portion of the population of the South is undoubtedly regarded at the North as a great evil, moral and political; and the discussions upon it which have recently taken place in the legislatures of several of the slaveholding States have been read with very deep interest. But it is regarded, nevertheless, as an evil, the remedy for which lies with those legislatures themselves, to be provided and applied according to their own sense of policy and duty. The imputations which you say, and say truly, are constantly made against the North, are, in my opinion, entirely destitute of any just foundation. I have endeavored to repel them, so far as has been in my power, on all proper occasions; and for a fuller expression of my own opinions, both on the power of Congress and on the groundless charges against Northern men, I beg leave to refer you to my remarks in the debate on Mr. Foot's resolutions, in 1830.

I am, my dear Sir, with much true regard, your obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co.

London, October 16, 1839.

GENTLEMEN, — I have received your letter, and lose no time in giving you my opinion on the question which you have submitted for my consideration. The assertion and suggestions to which you refer, as having appeared in some of the public prints, had not escaped my notice.

Your first inquiry is, "whether the legislature of one of the States had legal and constitutional power to contract loans at home and abroad." To this I answer, that the legislature of a State has such power; and how any doubt could have arisen on this point it is difficult for me to conceive.

Every State is an independent, sovereign, political community, except in so far as certain powers, which it might otherwise have exercised, have been conferred on a general government, established under a written constitution, and exercising its authority over the people of all the States. This general government is a limited government. Its powers are specific and enumerated. All powers not conferred on it still remain with the States or with the people. The State legislatures, on the other hand, possess all usual and ordinary powers of government, subject to any limitations which may be imposed by their own constitutions, and with the exception, as I have said, of the operation on those powers of the Constitution of the United States.

The powers conferred on the general government cannot, of course, be exercised by any individual State; nor can any State pass any law which is prohibited by the Constitution of the United States.

Thus no State can by itself make war, or conclude peace, or enter into alliances or treaties with foreign nations. In these, and in other important particulars, the powers which would have otherwise belonged to the State can now be exercised only by the general government, or the government of the United States. Nor can a State pass a law which is prohibited by its own constitution. But there is no provision in the Constitution of the United States, nor, so far as I know or have understood, in any State constitution, prohibiting the legislature of a State from contracting debts, or making loans either at home or abroad. Every State has the power of levying and collecting taxes, direct and indirect, of all kinds, except that no State can impose duties on goods and merchandise imported, that power belonging exclusively to Congress by the Constitution. That power of taxation is exercised by every State, habitually and constantly, according to its own discretion and the exigencies of its own government.

This is the general theory of that mixed system of government which prevails in America. And as the Constitution of the United States contains no prohibition or restraint on State legislatures in regard to making loans, and as no State constitution, so far as known to me, contains any such prohibition, it is clear that, in this respect, those legislatures are left in the full possession of this power, as an ordinary and usual power of government. I have seen a suggestion, that State loans must be regarded as unconstitutional and illegal, inasmuch as the Constitution of the United States has declared that no State shall emit bills of credit. It is certain that the Constitution of the United States does contain this salutary prohibition; but what is a bill of credit? It has no resemblance whatever to a bond, or other security given for the payment of money borrowed. The term bill of credit is familiar in our political history, and its meaning is well ascertained and settled, not only by that history, but by judicial interpretations and decisions from the highest sources.

For the purpose of this opinion, it may be sufficient to say, that bills of credit, the subject of the prohibition in the Constitution of the United States, were essentially paper money. They were paper issues, intended for circulation and for receipt into the treasury as cash, and were sometimes made a tender in payment for debts. To put an end at once and for ever to evils of this sort, and to dangers from this source, the Constitution of the United States has declared, that no State shall emit bills of credit, nor make any thing but gold and silver a tender in payment of debts, nor pass any law which shall impair the obligation of contracts. All this, however, proves, not that States cannot contract debts, but that, when contracted, they must pay them in coin, according to their stipulation. The several States possess the power of borrowing money for their own internal occasions of expenditure, as fully as Congress possesses the power to borrow in behalf of the United States, for the purpose of raising armies, equipping navies, or performing any other of its constitutional duties. It may be added, that Congress itself fully recognizes this power in the States, as it has authorized the investment of large funds, which it held in trust for very important purposes, in certificates of State stocks. The security for State loans is the plighted faith of the State, as a political community. It rests on the same basis as other contracts with established governments, the same basis, for example, as loans made by the United States, under the authority of Congress; that is to say, the good faith of the government making the loan, and its ability to fulfil its engagements. The State loans, it is known, have been contracted principally for the purpose of making railroads and canals; and in some cases, although I know not how generally, the income or revenue expected to be derived from these works is directly and specifically pledged, and in others very valuable tracts of land. It cannot be doubted that the general result of these works of internal improvement has been, and will be, to enhance the wealth and ability of the States.

It has been said, that the States cannot be sued on these bonds. But neither could the United States be sued, nor, as I suppose, the crown of England, in a like case. Nor would the power of suing give to the creditors, probably, any substantial additional security. The solemn obligation of a government, arising on its own acknowledged bond, would not be enhanced by a judgment rendered on such bond. If it either could not or would not make provision for paying the bond, it is not probable that it could or would make provision for satisfying the judgment.

The States cannot rid themselves of their obligations otherwise than by the honest payment of the debt. They can pass no law impairing the obligation of their own contracts. They can make nothing a tender, in discharge of such contracts, but gold and silver. They possess all adequate power of providing for the case, by taxes and internal means of revenue. They cannot get round their duty, nor evade its force. Any failure to fulfil its undertakings would be an open violation of public faith, to be followed by the penalty of dishonor and disgrace; a penalty, it may be presumed, which no State of the American Union would be likely to incur.

I hope I may be justified by existing circumstances in closing this letter with the expression of an opinion of a more general nature. It is, that I believe the citizens of the United States, like all honest men, regard debts, whether public or private, and whether existing at home or abroad, to be of moral as well as legal obligation; and I trust I may appeal to their history, from the moment when those States took their rank among the nations of the earth to the present time, for proof that this belief is well founded. If it were possible that any one of the States should at any time so entirely lose her self-respect, and forget her duty, as to violate the faith solemnly pledged for her pecuniary engagements, I believe there is no country upon earth, not even that of the injured creditor, in which such a proceeding would meet with less countenance or indulgence than it would receive from the great mass of the American people.

I have the honor to be, Gentlemen, your obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To the Duke of Rutland.

London, November 16, 1839.

MY DEAR DUKE, — I am obliged to you for the respectful manner in which, presiding at the meeting of the Waltham Agricultural Association, you were pleased to refer to our conversation at Belvoir, and I have still higher pleasure in noticing the just and liberal sentiments expressed by you on that occasion respecting the relations of our respective countries. Such sentiments, I assure you, will be heartily reciprocated on our side of the Atlantic. England and the United States are not only the two most commercial countries in the world, but they are also those two which have the greatest degree of intercourse with each other. This will strike any one who shall compare the small amount of annual trade between England and France with the great amount of that between England and the United States, and yet France is within sight of England, with thirty-three or thirty-four millions of people, and the United States are three thousand miles off, with half that amount of population; and, notwithstanding the progress which may be expected in some branches of manufactures in America, there is no reason to doubt that this intercourse will continue, and perhaps be increased by the rapid increase of population in America. While the United States continue to import British commodities, it is evidently the interest of England that her customers should increase both in numbers and in the ability to buy and consume her products. On the other hand, every intelligent person in America sees, not only the evils which would ensue from any interruption of the harmony existing between the two countries, but the embarrassments, also, which must be felt in America, whenever any disasters occur sufficient to derange the general prosperous course of trade and business in England.

The intimate relations of commerce subsisting between the two countries, the well-known laws of trade and exchange, and the important fact that both countries use, to a great extent, a representative paper currency, necessarily cause any great embarrassment which may be felt in one to be extended to the other. Your Grace was quite right, I think, in your observations on the subject of corn. America is indebted to England in various ways, and is likely to remain so, while the interest of money remains much lower in the latter country than in the former. We have this year a most abundant wheat crop; and if England should have occasion to import corn or flour, both countries would be benefited by her taking her supply from us. We should be paying so much of our debt, and she would be receiving her supply without the necessity of sending abroad specie; and it is undoubtedly true that the short crop in England last year, leading to so heavy an export of gold and silver to the Continent, most seriously affected commercial business in the United States, as well as in England.

Let us hope, my dear Duke, that between two Christian nations speaking the same language, having the same origin, enjoying the same literature, and connected by these mutual ties of interest, nothing may ever exist but peace and harmony, and the noble rivalship of accomplishing most for the general improvement and happiness of mankind.

Allow me to close this letter with an invitation, which, if given some years ago, would have passed for mere compliment; and that is, that you will come and see us. You are fond of excursions by sea. Eighteen or twenty days will take you from Belvoir Castle to the Falls of Niagara, and you may see much of America this side of the Alleghanies, and something of what is beyond, and return to England in a period hardly longer than an ordinary recess of Parliament. Nature has done much in America which is worthy to attract your notice. Man, I hope, has done something; and at any rate, you and your connections and friends would be sure of receiving that respectful and hearty welcome to which your character and your hospitality to others so well entitle you.

I have the honor to be, my dear Duke, very faithfully yours,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To M. St. Clair Clarke, Wm. S. Murphy, and Hudson M. Garland.

Department of State, March 27, 1841.

GENTLEMEN, — It is the desire of the President to be fully acquainted with the state of progress in which the public works now are, and with the degree of skill, fidelity, and economy with which these works are carried on. For this purpose he has appointed you a commission of examination and inquiry, and he wishes you to direct your attention to the following points: —

1st. What is the number of persons employed on the public buildings now in progress in the city, exclusive of laborers? This is the more necessary, as many of those persons hold offices not created by specific provisions of law.

2d. What is the respective duty of each of these persons?

3d. What prices are paid to them for their services, and whether in any case the compensation is unreasonably large.

4th. Whether there has been, or is, any just ground of complaint against those persons, or any of them, either in regard to their own diligence and skill, or in regard to their treatment of laborers employed by them.

If you have any reason to suppose that any one has been guilty of misconduct, you will state the charge to him, and give him an opportunity to answer it; and will report no evidence of which the party shall not have had notice. You will inquire into no man's political opinions or preferences; but if it be alleged that any person, having the power of employing and dismissing laborers, has used that power either in employing or dismissing with any reference to the political opinions of those who may have been employed or dismissed, or for any political or party object whatever, or in any other way violated his duty for party or electioneering purposes, you will inquire into the truth of such suggestion; and if you find reason to think it well founded, in any case, you will state the particular facts or circumstances on which your opinion is founded. It is not intended that this commission shall be of long continuance, nor be attended with any considerable expense. You will use as much despatch, therefore, as the nature of the case will allow, and make report to this department.

A reasonable sum will be allowed you for your time and service, out of the appropriated fund.

By the President's order.

DANIEL WEBSTER, Secretary of State.

To Messrs. John Haven and others.

Washington, January 3, 1844.

GENTLEMEN, — I have received your letter requesting permission to present my name to the people as a candidate for the office of President of the United States, subject to the future wise, deliberate action of the Whig National Convention of 1844.

It would be disingenuous to withhold an expression of the grateful feelings awakened by a letter, containing such a request, so very numerously signed, and coming from among those who have known me through life. No one can be insensible to the distinction of being regarded by any respectable number of his fellow-citizens as among those from whom a choice of President might be made with honor and safety to the country. The office of President is an office, the importance of which cannot be too highly estimated. He who fills it necessarily exercises a great influence, not only on all the domestic interests of the country, on its foreign relations, and the support of its honor and character among the nations of the earth, but on that which is of the very highest import to the happiness of the people, the maintenance of the Constitution itself, and the prosperous continuance of the government under it.

Our systems are peculiar; and while capable, as experience has shown, of producing the most favorable results, under a wise and cautious administration, they are, nevertheless, exposed to peculiar dangers.

We have six-and-twenty States, each possessing within itself powers of government, limited only by the Constitution of the United States; and we have a general government, to which are confided high trusts, to be exercised for the benefit of the people of all the States. It is obvious that this division of powers, itself the result of a novel and most delicate political operation, can be preserved only by the exercise of wisdom and pure patriotism. The Constitution of the United States stands on the basis of the people's choice. It must remain on that basis so long as it remains at all. The veneration and love which are entertained for it will be increased by every instance of wise, prudent, impartial, and parental administration.

On the other hand, they will be diminished by every administration which shall cherish local divisions, devote itself to local interests, seek to bend the influence of the government to personal or partisan purposes, or which shall forget that all patriotism is false and spurious which does not look with equal eye to the interests of the whole country, and all its parts, present and to come. I hardly know what an American statesman should so much deprecate, on his own account, as well as on account of his country, as that the Constitution of the United States, now the glory of our country and the admiration of the world, should become weakened in its foundations, perverted in its principles, or fallen and sunk in a nation's regard and a nation's hopes, by his own follies, errors, or mistakes. The Constitution was made for the good of the country; this the people know. Its faithful administration promotes that good; this the people know. The people will themselves defend it against all foreign powers, and all open force, and they will rightfully hold to a just and solemn account those to whom they may commit it, and in whose hands it shall be found to be shorn of a single beam of its honor, or deprived of a particle of its capacity for usefulness. It was made for an honest people, and they expect it to be honestly administered. At the present moment, it is an object of general respect, confidence, and affection. Questions have arisen, however, and are likely to arise again, upon the extent of its powers, or upon the line which separates the functions of the general government from those of the State governments; and these questions will require, whenever they may occur, not only firmness, but much discretion, prudence, and impartiality, at the hand of the national executive. Extreme counsels or extreme opinions on either side would be very likely, if followed or adopted, to break up the well-adjusted balance of the whole. And he who has the greatest confidence in his own judgment, or the strongest reliance on his own good fortune, may yet be well diffident of his ability to discharge the duties of his trust in such a manner as shall prevent the public prosperity, or advance his own reputation.

But, Gentlemen, while the office of President is quite too high to be sought by personal solicitation, or for private ends and objects, it is not to be declined, if proffered by the voluntary desire of a free people.

It is now more than thirty years since you and your fellow-citizens of New Hampshire assigned me a part in political affairs. My public conduct since that period is known. My opinions on the great questions now most interesting to the country are well known. The constitutional principles which I have endeavored to maintain are also known. If these principles and these opinions, now not likely to be materially changed, should recommend me to further marks of public regard and confidence, I should not withhold myself from compliance with the general will.

But I have no pretensions of my own to bring forward, and trust that no friends of mine would, at any time, use my name for the purpose of preventing harmony among those whose general political opinions concur, or for any cause whatever but a conscientious regard to the good of the country. It is obvious, Gentlemen, that, at the present moment, the tendency of opinion among those to be represented in the convention is generally and strongly set in another direction. I think it my duty, therefore, under existing circumstances, to request those who may feel a preference for me not to indulge in that preference, nor oppose any obstacle to the leading wishes of political friends, or to united and cordial efforts for the accomplishment of those wishes.

The election of the next autumn must involve, in general, the same principles, and the same questions, that belonged to that of 1840. The cause I conceive to be the true cause of the country, its permanent prosperity, and all its great interests; the cause of its peace and honor; the cause of good government, true liberty, and the preservation and integrity of the Constitution; and none should despair of its success.

I am, Gentlemen, with sentiments of sincere regard, your obliged and obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To the Hon. Thomas H. Perkins and others, Citizens of Boston.

Washington, April 9, 1850.

GENTLEMEN, — It would be in vain that I should attempt to express the gratification which I have derived from your letter of the 25th ultimo. That gratification arises not only from its manifestation of personal regard and confidence, but especially from the evidence which it affords that my public conduct, in regard to important pending questions, is not altogether disapproved by the people of Massachusetts. Such a letter, with such names, assures me that I have not erred in judging of the causes of existing discontents, or their proper remedy, and encourages me to persevere in that course which my deepest convictions of duty have led me to adopt. The country needs pacification; it needs the restoration of mutual respect and harmony between the people in one part of the Union and those in another. And, in my judgment, there is no sufficient cause for the continuance of the existing alienation between the North and the South. If we will look at things justly and calmly, there are no essential differences, either of interest or opinion, which are irreconcilable or incapable of adjustment. So far as the question of slavery or no slavery applies to the newly acquired territories, there is, in my judgment, no real and practical point of importance in dispute. There is not, and there cannot be, slavery, as I firmly believe, either in California, New Mexico, or Utah. And, if this be so, why continue the controversy on a mere abstraction?

The other disturbing questions respect the restoration of fugitive slaves, and slavery in the District of Columbia; and I know no reason why just and fair measures, all within the undoubted limits and requisitions of the Constitution, might not be adopted, which should give, on these subjects, general satisfaction. At any rate, we should make the attempt, because, so long as these dissensions continue, they embarrass the government, interrupt the quiet of the people and alarm their fears, and render it highly improbable that important acts of legislation, affecting great objects, and in which the whole country is deeply interested, can be accomplished. Indeed, the ordinary operations, essential to the existence of the government and its daily administration, meet with checks and hinderances hitherto altogether unprecedented. We must return to our old feelings of conciliation and regard; we must refresh ourselves at those pure fountains of mutual esteem, common patriotism, and fraternal confidence, whose beneficent and healing waters so copiously overflowed the land through the struggle of the Revolution, and in the early years of the government. The day has come when we should open our ears and our hearts to the advice of the great Father of his Country. "It is of infinite moment," said he, "that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it; accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned; and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest, or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts."

Notwithstanding what may occasionally appear on the surface, the American mind is deeply imbued with the spirit of this advice. The people, when serious danger threatens, will, in my opinion, stand fast by their government. They will suffer no impairing of its foundation, no overthrow of its columns, no disorganization of its structure. The Union and the Constitution are to stand, and what we have to do is so to administer the government that all men shall be made more and more sensible of its beneficent operations and its inestimable value.

It is not inappropriate that I should accompany this answer to your letter by the copy of a recent correspondence between the Hon. Hugh N. Smith, Delegate from New Mexico, now in this city, and myself.

I have the honor to be, Gentlemen, with profound regard, your obliged fellow-citizen, and obedient, humble servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To the Hon. Hugh N. Smith, Delegate from New Mexico.

Washington, April 8, 1850.

DEAR SIR, — I beg leave to present you with a copy of my speech delivered in the Senate on the 7th of March last, and to draw your attention to the remarks made by me on that occasion upon the general character of the country of New Mexico, and its adaptation to slave labor. You have been a resident in the country for several years, and, as I have understood you to say, have traversed it from end to end. You are a native of one of the slave States of this Union, and of course acquainted with the usual cost of slave labor, and the modes of cultivation to which it may be properly applied. You are, therefore, I am sure, quite competent to express an opinion entitled to respect on the points that I have suggested.

I will be obliged to you also to state what the fact is, at the present time, respecting the existence of slavery in New Mexico, and whether the existing laws and constitution of the country allow it.

I have the honor to be, my dear Sir, your obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To the Hon. Daniel Webster.

Washington, April 9, 1850.

DEAR SIR, — I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th instant, and reply to it with great pleasure. New Mexico is an exceedingly mountainous country, Santa Fé itself being twice as high as the highest point of the Alleghanies, and nearly all the land capable of cultivation is of equal height, though some of the valleys have less altitude above the sea. The country is cold. Its general agricultural products are wheat and corn, and such vegetables as grow in the Northern States of this Union. It is entirely unsuited for slave labor. Labor is exceedingly abundant and cheap. It may be hired for three or four dollars a month, in quantity quite sufficient for carrying on all the agriculture of the territory. There is no cultivation except by irrigation, and there is not a sufficiency of water to irrigate all the land.

As to the existence at present of slavery in New Mexico, it is the general understanding that it has been altogether abolished by the laws of Mexico; but we have no established tribunals which have pronounced as yet what the law of the land in this respect is. It is universally considered, however, that the territory is altogether a free territory. I know of no persons in the country who are treated as slaves, except such as may be servants to gentlemen visiting or passing through the country. I may add, that the strongest feeling against slavery universally prevails throughout the whole territory, and I suppose it quite impossible to convey it there, and maintain it by any means whatever.

I have the honor to be, with regard, your obedient servant,

HUGH N. SMITH.

To Hon. Isaac Hill.

Washington, April 20, 1850.

Dear Sir, — I regard such a letter from you as that of the 17th of this month as an extraordinary and gratifying incident in my life. For a long course of years, we have belonged to opposing parties, espoused opposite measures, and supported for high office men of very different political opinions.

We have not, however, taken different views of duty in respect to the maintenance of the Constitution of the United States. From your voice, or your pen, any more than from mine, there never has proceeded a sentiment hostile to "that Unity of government which constitutes us one people."

And now, when we are no longer young, a state of things has arisen seriously interrupting the harmony and good-will which have hitherto existed between different parts of the country, exciting violent local animosities, impeding the regular and ordinary progress of the government, and fraught with mischiefs of every description. And all this has its origin in certain branches of the Slavery question, which, as it appears to me, are either quite unimportant in themselves, or clearly settled and determined by the Constitution.

All this I have seen with that keen regret which you have experienced yourself, and which cannot but be a common feeling with all reflecting men who are lovers of their country.

To this unhappy state of the public mind I have felt it my duty to address myself, not in language of irritation, crimination, or menace, but in words of peace, patriotic sympathy, and fraternal regard. My effort has been, and will be, to the full extent of my power, to cause the billows of useless and dangerous domestic controversy to sleep, and be still.

I am as fully aware as other men of what is to be expected from such attempts. In highly excited times it is far easier to fan and feed the flames of passion and discord, than to subdue them; and in such times he who counsels moderation is in danger of being regarded as failing in his duty to party.

These consequences I willingly meet, these dangers I encounter without hesitation; being resolved to throw myself, with whatever weight may belong to me, unreservedly into the scale of Union. Where Washington led, I am willing to follow, at a vast distance, indeed, and with unequal, but no faltering steps.

The speech which you commend so much above its merits, I submit to the political party to which I belong, and to the wise and patriotic men of all parties, in the generation in which I live; and I cheerfully leave it, with the principles and sentiments which it avows, to the judgment of posterity, if I may flatter myself that any thing spoken or written by me will be remembered long enough to come before that impartial and august tribunal.

I am, with great regard, your obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To Edward S. Rand and others, Citizens of Newburyport, Mass.

Washington, May 15, 1850.

GENTLEMEN, — I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th of April, approving the sentiments of my speech delivered in the Senate on the 7th of March last. As considerable differences of opinion prevail, in Massachusetts, on the subject of that speech, it is grateful to receive, in a letter so respectably and numerously signed, opinions so decidedly concurring with my own.

Circumstances have occurred, within the last twenty years, to create a new degree of feeling, at the North, on the subject of slavery; and from being considered, as it was at the adoption of the Constitution, mainly as a political question, it has come to be regarded, with unusual warmth, as a question of religion and humanity.

It is obvious enough, that the government of the United States has no control over slavery, as it exists in the several States. Its proper jurisdiction, in this respect, is confined to its own territories, except so far as it is its duty to see that that part of the Constitution which respects the surrender of fugitive slaves be carried fairly and honestly into execution.

The Constitution of the United States, in the second section of the fourth article, declares: —

'A person charged in any State with treason, felony, or other crime, who shall flee from justice, and be found in another State, shall, on demand of the executive authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having jurisdiction of the crime.

"No person held to service or labor in one State, under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due."

This provision of the Constitution seems to have met with ittle exception or opposition, or none at all, so far as I know, in Massachusetts. Every body seems to have regarded it as necessary and proper. The members of the convention of that State for adopting the Constitution were particularly jealous of every article and section which might in any degree intrench on personal liberty. Every page of their debates evinces this spirit. And yet I do not remember that any one of them found the least fault with this provision. The opponents and deriders of the Constitution, of this day, have sharper eyes in discerning dangers to liberty than General Thompson, Holder Slocum, and Major Nason had, in 1788; to say nothing of John Hancock, Samuel Adams, and others, friends of the Constitution, and among them the very eminent men who were delegates in that convention from Newburyport: Rufus King, Benjamin Greenleaf, Theophilus Parsons, and Jonathan Titcomb.

The latter clause, quoted above, it may be worth while to remark, was borrowed, in substance, from the celebrated Ordinance of 1787, which was drawn up by that great man of your own county, and a contemporary of your fathers, Nathan Dane.

Mr. Dane had very venerable New England authority for the insertion of this provision in the Ordinance which he prepared. In the year 1643, there was formed a confederation between the four New England Colonies, Massachusetts Bay, Plymouth, Connecticut, and New Haven; and in the eighth article of that confederation it is stipulated as follows: "It is also agreed, if any servant run away from his master into any other of these confederated jurisdictions, that, in such cases, upon the certificate of one magistrate in the jurisdiction out of which the said servant fled, or upon other due proof, the said servant shall be delivered, either to his master, or any other that pursues, and brings such certificate or proof." And in the "Articles of Agreement," entered into in 1650, between the New England Colonies and "the delegates of Peter Stuyvesant, Governor of New Netherland," it was stipulated that "the same way and course" concerning fugitives should be observed between the English Colonies and New Netherland, as had been established in the "Articles of Confederation" between the English Colonies themselves.

On the 12th of February, 1793, under the administration of General Washington, Congress passed an act for carrying into effect both these clauses of the Constitution. It is entitled, "An Act respecting fugitives from justice, and persons escaping from the service of their masters."

The first two sections of this law provide for the case of fugitives from justice; and they declare, that whenever the executive authority of any State or Territory shall demand any person, as a fugitive from justice, of the executive authority of any State or Territory to which such person shall have fled, and shall produce the copy of an indictment, or an affidavit made before a magistrate, charging the person so demanded with having committed treason, felony, or other crime, certified as authentic by the governor or chief magistrate of the State or Territory whence the person so charged fled, it shall be the duty of the executive authority of the State or Territory to which such person shall have fled, to cause him or her to be arrested or secured, and notice of the arrest to be given to the executive authority making such demand, or to the agent of such authority appointed to receive the fugitive, and to cause the fugitive to be delivered to such agent when he shall appear; but if no such agent shall appear within six months, the prisoner may be discharged; and all costs or expenses incurred by arresting, securing, or transmitting the fugitive shall be paid by the State or Territory making the demand; and that any agent who shall receive such fugitive into his custody shall be authorized to transport him to the State or Territory from which he fled; and any person rescuing or setting such person at liberty shall, on conviction, be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, and be imprisoned not exceeding one year.

The last two sections of the act respect persons held to labor in any of the United States or Territories, escaping into any other State or Territory; and are in these words:—

"SECT. 3. And be it further enacted, That when a person held to labor in any of the United States, or in either of the Territories on the northwest or south of the River Ohio, under the laws thereof, shall escape into any other of the said States or Territories, the person to whom such labor or service may be due, his agent or attorney, is hereby empowered to seize or arrest such fugitive from labor, and to take him or her before any judge of the Circuit or District Courts of the United States, residing or being within the State, or before any magistrate of a county, city, or town corporate, wherein such seizure or arrest shall be made; and upon proof, to the satisfaction of such judge or magistrate, either by oral testimony or affidavit taken before and certified by a magistrate of any such State or Territory, that the person so seized or arrested doth, under the laws of the State or Territory from which he or she fled, owe service or labor to the person claiming him or her, it shall be the duty of such judge or magistrate to give a certificate thereof to such claimant, his agent or attorney, which shall be sufficient warrant for removing the said fugitive from labor to the State or Territory from which he or she fled.

"SECT. 4. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall knowingly and willingly obstruct or hinder such claimant, his agent or attorney, in so seizing or arresting such fugitive from labor, or shall rescue such fugitive from such claimant, his agent or attorney, when so arrested pursuant to the authority herein given or declared, or shall harbor or conceal such person, after notice that he or she was a fugitive from labor, as aforesaid, shall, for either of the said offences, forfeit and pay the sum of five hundred dollars; which penalty may be recovered by and for the benefit of such claimant, by action of debt, in any court proper to try the same; saving, moreover, to the person claiming such labor or service, his right of action for, or on account of, the said injuries, or either of them."

It will be observed, that in neither of the two cases does the law provide for the trial of any question whatever by jury, in the State in which the arrest is made. The fugitive from justice is to be delivered, on the production of an indictment, or a regular affidavit, charging the party with having committed the crime; and the fugitive from service is to be removed to the State from which he fled, upon proof, before any authorized magistrate, in the State where he may be found, either by witnesses or affidavit, that the person claimed doth owe service to the party claiming him, under the laws of the State from which he fled. In both cases, the proceeding is to be preliminary and summary; in both cases, the party is to be removed to the State from which he fled, that his liabilities, and his rights, may be there regularly tried and adjudged by the tribunals of that State, according to its laws. In the case of an alleged fugitive from justice, charged with crime, it is not to be taken for granted, in the State to which he has fled, that he is guilty; nor in that State is he to be tried, or punished. He is only to be remitted for trial to the place from which he came. In the case of the alleged fugitive from service, the courts of the State in which he is arrested are not to decide that, in fact or in law, he does owe service to any body. He, too, is only to be remitted, for an inquiry into his rights and the proper adjudication of them, to the State from which he fled; the tribunals of which understand its laws, and are in the constant habit of trying the question of slavery or no slavery, on the application of individuals, as an ordinary act of judicial authority. There is not a slave State in the Union, in which independent judicial tribunals are not always open to receive and decide upon petitions, or applications for freedom; nor do I know, nor have I heard it alleged, that the decisions of these tribunals are not fair and upright. Such of them as I have seen evince, certainly, these qualities in the judges.

This act of Congress of the 12th of February, 1793, appears to have been well considered, and to have passed with little opposition. There is no evidence known to me that any body at the time regarded any of its provisions as repugnant to religion, liberty, the Constitution, or humanity. The two Senators of Massachusetts at that time were that distinguished legislator and patriot of your own county, George Cabot; and that other citizen of Massachusetts, among the most eminent of his day for talent, purity of character, and every virtue, Caleb Strong. Mr. Cabot, indeed, was one of the committee for preparing the bill. It appears to have passed the Senate without a division. In the House of Representatives it was supported by Mr. Goodhue, Mr. Gerry, both then, I believe, of your county of Essex, (Mr. Goodhue afterwards a Senator of the United States, and Mr. Gerry afterwards Vice-President of the United States,) Mr. Ames, Mr. Bourne, Mr. Leonard, and Mr. Sedgwick, members from Massachusetts, and was passed by a vote of forty-eight to seven; of these seven, one being from Virginia, one from Maryland, one from New York, and four from the New England States; and of these four, one, Mr. Thatcher, from Massachusetts.

I am not aware that there exists any published account of the debates on the passage of this act. I have been able to find none. I have searched the original files, however, and I find among the papers several propositions for modifications and amendments, of various kinds; but none suggesting the propriety of any jury trial in the State where the party should be arrested.

For many years, little or no complaint was made against this law, nor was it supposed to be guilty of the offences and enormities which have since been charged upon it. It was passed for the purpose of complying with a direct and solemn injunction of the Constitution; it did no more than was believed to be necessary to accomplish that single purpose; and it did that in a cautious, mild manner, to be everywhere conducted according to judicial proceedings.

I confess I see no more objection to the provisions of this law than was seen by Mr. Cabot and Mr. Strong, Mr. Goodhue and Mr. Gerry; and such provisions appear to me, as they appeared to them, to be absolutely necessary, if we mean to fulfil the duties positively and peremptorily enjoined upon us by the Constitution of the country. But since the agitation caused by Abolition societies and Abolition presses has to such an extent excited the public mind, these provisions have been rendered obnoxious and odious. Unwearied endeavors have been made, and but too successfully, to rouse the passions of the people against them; and under the cry of universal freedom, and under that other cry, that there is a rule for the government of public men and private men which is of superior obligation to the Constitution of the country, several of the States have enacted laws to hinder, obstruct, and defeat the enactments in this act of Congress, to the utmost of their power. The Supreme Court of the United States has solemnly decided, that it is lawful for State officers and State magistrates to fulfil the duties enjoined upon them by the act of Congress of 1793, unless prohibited by State laws; and thereupon prohibitory State laws have been immediately passed, inflicting fine and imprisonment on all State officers and magistrates who shall presume to conform to these requisitions of the act of Congress. And these prohibitory and penal laws of the States have rendered it imperative on Congress to make further and other provisions for carrying into effect the substantial intention of the act of 1793. This is the cause of the introduction into the Senate of a bill on the subject, recently, by the Committee on the Judiciary. Notwithstanding all that may be said by shallow men, ignorant men, and factious men, men whose only hope of making or of keeping themselves conspicuous is by incessant agitation and the most reckless efforts to alarm and misguide the people, I know of no persons, in or out of Congress, who wish any thing more to be done on the subject of fugitives from service, than what is essentially necessary in order to meet the requirements of the Constitution, and accomplish the objects of the act of Congress of 1793. Whatever enactments may be deemed essential to this purpose, I, for one, shall certainly support, as I feel bound to do by my oath of office, and by every consideration of duty and propriety.

As I have already said, the act of Congress of 1793 made no provision for any trial by jury in the State where the arrest of a fugitive is made. I have considered the subject with a conscientious desire to provide for such jury trial, if possible, in order to allay excitement and remove objections. There are many difficulties, however, attending any such provision; and a main one, and perhaps the only insuperable one, has been created by the States themselves, by making it a penal offence in their own officers to render any aid in apprehending or securing such fugitives, and absolutely refusing the use of their jails for keeping them in custody till a jury could be called together, witnesses summoned, and a regular trial had. It is not too much to say, that to these State laws is to be attributed the actual and practical denial of trial by jury in these cases. These ill-considered State laws it is which have absolutely deprived the alleged fugitive, as the case now stands, of any trial by jury, by refusing those aids and facilities without which a jury trial is impossible.

But at the same time, nothing is more false than that such jury trial is demanded in cases of this kind by the Constitution, either in its letter or in its spirit. The Constitution declares, that in all criminal prosecutions there shall be a trial by jury; the reclaiming of a fugitive slave is not a criminal prosecution. The Constitution also declares, that in suits at common law the trial by jury shall be preserved; the reclaiming of a fugitive slave is not a suit at the common law. And there is no other clause or sentence in the Constitution having the least bearing on the subject.

I have seen a publication by Mr. Horace Mann, a member of Congress from Massachusetts, in which I find this sentence. Speaking of the bill before the Senate, he says: "This bill derides the trial by jury secured by the Constitution. A man may not lose his horse without a right to this trial, but he may his freedom. Mr. Webster speaks for the South and for slavery, not for the North and for freedom, when he abandons this right." This personal vituperation does not annoy me, but I lament to see a public man of Massachusetts so crude and confused in his legal apprehensions, and so little acquainted with the Constitution of his country, as these opinions evince Mr. Mann to be. His citation of a supposed case, as in point, if it have any analogy to the matter, would prove, that, if Mr. Mann's horse stray into his neighbor's field, he cannot lead him back without a previous trial by jury to ascertain the right. Truly, if what Mr. Mann says of the provisions of the Constitution, in this publication, be a test of his accuracy in the understanding of that instrument, he would do well not to seek to protect his peculiar notions under its sanction, but to appeal at once, as others do, to that higher authority which sits enthroned above the Constitution and above the law.*

* I may be permitted to add, in a note, an extract from a private letter from one of the most distinguished men in England, dated as late as the 29th of January: "Religion is an excellent thing in every matter except in politics. There, it seems to make men mad; and I do not know of any people more mad than the antislavery people, on your side of the water and on ours. Up to the present time, I have no doubt they have aggravated every evil they have endeavored to mitigate or prevent. If you tell one of them what has been the result of his officiousness, he answers, 'Liberavi animam meam. I may have done wrong, but I shall go to heaven for it.' So I believe that your Abolitionists have made the state of the slave, and still more that of the free black, much worse than it would have been; and probably in many States, that of Virginia, for instance, have retarded his enfranchisement. But they care little, if they save their own souls. On the other hand, the Southerners seem as unreasonable. To require California to accept slavery seems both wicked and unjust."

In these sentences my friend means, undoubtedly, to ascribe the evils which Gentlemen, I am extending these remarks, I fear, to quite too great a length; but there is still one characteristic of this "agitation" too remarkable to be omitted.

A member of Congress from Illinois, of talent and rapidly increasing distinction,* in a speech delivered in the House of Representatives on the 21st day of February, made these very true and pertinent remarks:—

"I am not so unmindful of truth as to deny that, in respect to the subject now under consideration, some of our Southern friends have good cause to complain. But it must have been remarked by all of us, that the Representatives from those States which have really been aggrieved in this respect are not those who have threatened us with disunion. These threats have come from the Representatives of States, from which, I venture to say, on an average not one slave escapes in five years. Who ever heard of a slave escaping from Mississippi or Alabama? Where does he go to? Who helps him away? Certainly not the people of the North. Kentucky, Virginia, Maryland, and Missouri, the only States that are really sufferers by the escape of slaves, do not seem to have dreamed of dissolution as a remedy; while the Representatives from a few of the extreme Southern States, whence slaves could no more escape than from the island of Cuba, see ample cause and imperious necessity for dissolving the Union, and establishing a 'Southern Confederacy,' in the alleged fact that their slaves are enticed away by the citizens of the North."

Now, the counterpart of the "agitation" presents an equally singular and striking aspect, in the fact, that the greatest clamor and outcry have been raised against the cruelty and enormity of the reclamation of slaves in quarters where no such reclamation has ever been made, or if ever made, where the instances are so exceedingly few and far between as to have escaped general knowledge. What, and how many, are the instances of the seizure of fugitive slaves which have happened in New England? And what have been the circumstances of injustice, cruelty, and atrocity attending them? To ascertain the truth in this respect, I have made diligent in-he so truly states not to true and genuine religion, not to the religion of the Gospel, but to that fanatical notion of religion which sometimes possesses men's imaginations. The religion of the New Testament, that religion which is founded on the teachings of Jesus Christ and his Apostles, is as sure a guide to duty in politics as in any other concern of life.

* Mr. Bissell.

quiry of members of Congress from the six New England States. On a subject so general, I cannot be sure, of course, that the information received is entirely accurate; and therefore I do not say that the statement which I am about to present may be relied on as altogether correct; but I suppose it cannot be materially erroneous. The result, then, of all I can learn is this. No seizure of an alleged fugitive slave has ever been made in Maine. No seizure of an alleged fugitive slave has ever been made in New Hampshire. No seizure of an alleged fugitive slave has ever been made in Vermont. No seizure of an alleged fugitive slave has been made in Rhode Island within the last thirty years. No seizure of an alleged fugitive slave is known to have been made in Connecticut, except one, about twenty-five years ago; and in that case the negro was immediately discharged for want of proof of identity. Some instances of the seizure of alleged fugitive slaves are known to have occurred, in this generation, in Massachusetts; but, except one, their number and their history are uncertain. That one took place in Boston twelve or fifteen years ago; and in that case some charitably disposed persons offered the owner a sum of money which he regarded as less than half the value of the slave, but which he agreed to accept, and the negro was discharged. A few cases, I suppose, may have occurred in New Bedford, but they attracted little notice, and, so far as I can learn, caused no complaint. Indeed, I do not know that there ever was more than a single case or two arising in that place. Be it remembered, that I am speaking of reclamations of slaves made by their masters under the law of Congress. I am not speaking of instances of violent abduction, and kidnapping, made by persons not professing to be reclaiming their own slaves.

If this be a true account of all that has happened in New England within the last thirty years, respecting the arrest of fugitive slaves, and I believe it substantially is so, what is there to justify the passionate appeals, the vehement and empty declamations, the wild and fanatical conduct, of both men and women, which have so long disturbed, and so much disgraced, the commonwealth and the country? What is there, especially, that should induce public men to break loose from all just restraint, fall themselves into the merest vagaries, and fan, with what they call eloquence, the fires, ever ready to kindle, of popular prejudice and popular excitement? I suspect all this to be the effect of that wandering and vagrant philanthropy which disturbs and annoys all that is present, in time or place, by heating the imagination on subjects distant, remote, and uncertain.

It is admitted on all hands, that the necessity for any legal provision for the reclaiming of fugitive slaves is a misfortune and an evil; as it is admitted by nearly all, that slavery itself is a misfortune and an evil. And there are States in which the evil attending these reclamations is practically felt. But where the evil really exists, there is comparatively little complaint, and no excitement. Maryland and Pennsylvania, for example, lie, the one on the slave side of the line, the other on the free side. Slaves escape from Maryland, flee into Pennsylvania, and are there arrested. These instances are not unfrequent, and usually create no disturbance and excite no exasperated feeling. In one instance, indeed, a mob assembled to rescue the fugitive, violence ensued, and a life was lost. This of course created popular resentment, and for a considerable time agitated the neighborhood. But in general the people of Pennsylvania understand their neighbors' rights, and are willing that they should be secured and enjoyed. Massachusetts grows fervid on Pennsylvania wrongs; while Pennsylvania herself is not excited by any sense of such wrongs, and complains of no injustice. The Abolitionists of Massachusetts, both the out-and-out and the quasi, rend the welkin with sympathies for Pennsylvania, while Pennsylvania would quite as willingly be left to her own care of herself. Massachusetts tears fall abundantly for Pennsylvania sufferings, of which sufferings Pennsylvania herself knows little or nothing. No people are more opposed to slavery than the people of Pennsylvania. We know, especially, that that great and respectable part of her population, the Friends, have borne their testimony against it from the first. Yet they create no excitement; they seek not to overthrow or undermine the Constitution of their country. They know that firmness, steadiness of principle, a just moderation, and unconquerable perseverance, are the virtues the practice of which is most likely to correct whatever is wrong in the constitution of the social system. No doubt there are sometimes to be found Friends subject to the frailty of desiring to become conspicuous, or to the influence of a false sentimentality, or borne away, by the puffs of a transcendental philosophy, into an atmosphere flickering between light and darkness. But that is not a malady of the great body. They remain of sound and disposing minds and memories. I am misled by authority which ought not to mislead, if it be not true that that great body approves the sentiments to which I have given utterance on the floor of the Senate.

Between Kentucky and Ohio complaints have arisen, occasionally, on the subject of fugitive slaves; but by no means to the extent which has been represented by the Abolition societies. Slaveholders in Kentucky complain of the difficulties which they encounter in reclaiming fugitives; and the people of Ohio complain, not of the execution of the act of Congress, and reclamations under it, but of the conduct of slaveholders, in coming into the State and taking and carrying back their slaves by force, and without legal process. The State of Ohio has had the discretion not to prohibit her officers and magistrates from performing the duties enjoined on them by the act of Congress. Such duties they perform when occasion requires; yet as they may be prohibited by the legislature, and as the Supreme Court has decided that it is in the power of Congress to make complete provision, by law, for the whole subject, and to give the power of executing such law to officers of the United States; and as the prohibitory acts of some of the States make an appropriate and suitable law of the United States indispensable, such law, if passed, would of course be general, and would comprehend Ohio with other States.

The act of 1793 gives a right of action to the owner of a fugitive slave against any person who shall harbor or conceal him. Such actions have been brought in Ohio, and I have heard an eminent judicial authority say, that he has found no more obstruction to the course of judicial proceedings in these cases than in others. Ohio juries try them with as much impartiality and calmness as they try other causes.

Gentlemen, from what I know of the subject, and of the public men and the people of those two States, I fully believe, that, if left entirely to them, a law might be passed perfectly satisfactory to every body except those whose business is agitation, and whose objects are any thing but the promotion of peace, harmony, patriotic good-will, and the love of UNION among the people of the United States.

And now, Gentlemen, does not every sober-minded and patriotic man see the necessity, and feel the duty, of rebuking that spirit of faction and disunion, that spirit of discord and of crimination and recrimination, that spirit that loves angry controversy, and loves it, most especially, when evils are imaginary and dangers unreal, which has been so actively employed in doing mischief, and which, it is to be lamented, has received countenance and encouragement in quarters whence better things were looked for?

We are now near the close of the sixth month of the session of Congress. What important measure has been adopted for the advancement of the great interests of the country? For one, I hardly dare expect any progress in useful legislation, until a spirit shall prevail, both in Congress and the country, which shall look more to things important and real, and less to things ideal and abstract. That there are serious difficulties in our present condition, growing out of the acquisition of new territories, is certainly true. These difficulties were foreseen and foretold. An honest and earnest effort was made to avoid and avert them. They are now upon us. But we CAN overcome them, and still remain a prosperous, happy, and UNITED people, if prudence and conciliation shall animate our public counsels, and a spirit of forbearance, moderation, and harmony spread over the land.

I am, Gentlemen, with entire regard, your obliged fellow-citizen, and obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To Dudley C. Hall, Esq., and others, Citizens of Medford, Mass.

Washington, June 3, 1850.

GENTLEMEN, — I thank you for your letter of the 3d of May last, expressing satisfaction with the sentiments of my speech in the Senate on the great question which now divides the nation, and tendering your thanks for my services in strengthening and preserving our glorious Union.

Gentlemen, we have a country which we love, and of which we are proud. We have a government under which that country has prospered, for sixty years, in a degree surpassing every thing which has been known in the history of mankind. And this government is founded on the union of the States; which union is established, defined, and sanctioned by the Constitution of the United States. And, Gentlemen, I can conceive no rashness or folly greater than that which would either seek to overturn this Constitution, or, by unprincipled agitation, by heated local controversies, or angry mutual criminations and recriminations between different parts of the country, would effectually weaken the bonds which hold the Union together. It has been, it is, and it will be, my great object to preserve and strengthen the Union, to establish it deeper and stronger in the regard and affections of the people. I wish to see all the powers vested in the government by the Constitution administered with so much prudence, impartiality, and patriotism, that every State, and all the people of every State, should feel profoundly that the union of the States, as now existing, is honorable, useful, and indispensable to the prosperity of every part of the country. And with this purpose always uppermost in my mind and always filling my heart, I studiously avoid useless local controversies, useless abstract questions, and every thing else which unnecessarily exasperates, embitters, or wounds the feelings of any portion of the United States. I have no doubt, Gentlemen, that you and the great body of your fellow-citizens of Massachusetts approve these sentiments and opinions, and will sustain those who honestly act upon them. I have no fear that that great State, which has been among the first and foremost for UNION, from early Colonial times down to the present moment; I have no fear that that great State, which poured out her blood and her treasure like water in the Revolutionary struggle, and afterwards strained every nerve and every muscle for the establishment of the present Constitution; that State, which has enjoyed so fully and felt so sensibly the benefits derived from this united government; I have no fear, not the least, not a particle, that the Commonwealth of Massachusetts will ever expect from those with whom she has intrusted her interests in Congress any thing but uprightness and fairness, impartiality and justice, and a spirit that seeks rather to reconcile opposing interests and allay irritated feelings, than to foment discord, or to sow or to cultivate the seeds of jealousy and disunion.

I am, Gentlemen, with entire regard, your obliged fellow-citizen and obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To G. W. Warren, Esq., Chairman of the Bunker Hill Committee.

Washington, June 13, 1850.

GENTLEMEN, — You cannot doubt that it would afford me the utmost pleasure to be at Charlestown on the 17th instant, to celebrate the seventy-fifth anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill.

In addition to the great interest which the occasion itself must naturally excite, I confess I should be glad to have an opportunity of saying some words to so great an assembly of Massachusetts men as will undoubtedly meet together on that day at the foot of the monument. Those words would be few; but they would express what I think to be the duty of every Massachusetts man, and every true American, in the present crisis of the country; and they would proceed from a heart full of anxiety for the future, not the far distant future, but the immediate future, and from a spirit resolved, in the face of all perils, and careless of personal consequences, to make every practicable effort to uphold the CONSTITUTION, as it is, and the UNION, as it is; to defend them against all assault, open or covert; and to exert every faculty to persuade all honest and patriotic men, North and South, to stand between the assaults of extreme factions and the Constitution of their country, and stay the plague. But, Gentlemen, my public duties leave me no option. I must remain here.

I thank you, Gentlemen, for your civility and kindness, and remain, with true regard, your obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

Bunker Hill Monument: May it crumble to the dust, before it shall look down upon a country dishonored, disgraced, and ruined by the breaking up, by sacrilegious hands, of that UNION which has secured its liberty, fostered its prosperity, and spread its glory and renown throughout the world.

To R. H. Gardiner, Esq., and others, Inhabitants of the Cities and Towns on the Kennebec River.

Washington, June 17, 1850.

Gentlemen, — Your friendly and acceptable letter has been duly received.

It is true, Gentlemen, that I have made an effort in the Senate "to allay the spirit of sectional strife, which has threatened the destruction of our Union"; and such efforts I shall continue to make, earnestly, and with whatever ability I possess, under a deep conviction that that "spirit of sectional strife," if not checked, will ere long drive the country into a lamentable and disastrous condition. It is exceedingly to be regretted, that any part of the public press in the State in which you reside, or elsewhere, should discourage, and, as it often does, denounce, all attempts at reconciliation and peace; and should contribute, by its daily effusions, to promote ill-will, resentment, and angry contests between the North and South. That all this is done by a portion of the press, both North and South, is but too true. The conductors of these presses would seem to have lost all sense of a common country, all sentiments of patriotism, unless there may be patriotism in those local feelings in which the great Father of his Country so affectionately admonished us never to indulge. That the conductors of these presses mistake the opinions of the people, to a very considerable extent, I doubt not; but while they are so active and so zealous, who can tell how far, or how fast, their sentiments may spread?

It is no longer to be doubted, that there are persons, both in the North and in the South, who are opposed to the existence of the present Constitution of the United States, and would gladly see it brought to an end. Some in both extremes openly avow this wish, and others conceal it under very thin disguises. Nevertheless, the great body of the people, North and South, are firmly attached to the Union; their hearts are for it, and with it, and they will defend it against all open attempts for its overthrow. This is my decided opinion. The Union, therefore, we may hope, will not be rudely broken up; but this spirit of sectional strife, if it be not effectually rebuked, will produce infinite mischiefs, by embarrassing the government, thwarting and defeating useful legislation, and giving increased strength to feelings of unkindness and alienation. Who does not see, already, the alarming consequences provoked and produced by these dissensions? We are now in the seventh month of the session of Congress, and what has been done? Even the ordinary annual appropriation bills have not been brought forward, or advanced a single stage. They are at least four months behind the proper time. It has at last become indispensably necessary, it seems to me, that men of sense and intelligence, who are really lovers of their country and its union, should open their eyes to the state of things. There will be, there must be, it is in the nature of things that there should be, some shock, some cessation in the movement of the government, some disreputable irregularity, now not far ahead, unless the good men of the country, in all its parts, will rouse themselves to the performance of the duties which the exigency demands.

While so many persons and so many presses in the North send forth such loud and bitter complaints against the South, and while so many persons and so many presses in the South utter complaints equally loud and bitter against the North, neither the North nor the South states, definitely and precisely, any actual grievance, such as could justify, in any reasonable man's opinion, the most distant idea of disunion. For the most part, these mutual complaints are general, indeterminate, uttered in angry terms, but placed on no specific ground. In the speech to which your letter refers, I have mentioned what I think to be the real ground of mutual or reciprocal complaint; but, beyond all these, there is kept up a general cry of one party against the other, that its rights are invaded, its honor insulted, its character assailed, and its just participation in political power denied. Sagacious men cannot but suspect, from all this, that more is intended than is avowed; and that there lies at the bottom a purpose of the separation of the States, for reasons avowed or disavowed, or for grievances redressed or unredressed. This purpose, be it remembered, I do not consider as pervading large masses, but of its existence among the extremists, on both sides, I cannot entertain a question.

In the speech to which you refer, it was my purpose, among other things, to show that a peaceable secession of some States from the rest, or a peaceable separation of them all, was among the most improbable of imaginable events; that nature, the seas, the gulfs, the lakes, and the rivers, bound us together by ties nearly impossible to be broken; that no man could make any plan of secession or separation satisfactory to others; and, more than all, that no man could discern any thing likely to arise to any State, from secession or separation, not fraught with political evil of every description and every degree. And notwithstanding the influence and the opinions of which I have spoken, I believe that the sentiments of the great mass of Southern men concur with my own. Many have contemplated separation as a probable result; some certainly have desired, and do desire it; but, so far as I have observed, when the question is put directly home to the people, notwithstanding whatever certain presses and certain politicians say to the contrary, the people of the South are still for the Union by immense majorities. Wherever there is a truly American heart, the love of the Union is intwined with its inmost fibres. It is our duty to encourage and applaud this popular feeling; to respect it ourselves, and to take care that, by no denial of justice, by no unnecessary discussion of exciting but abstract questions, by no threat or menace to interfere with what does not belong to us, we weaken that attachment to the Union which is so indispensable to the happiness of all. And what is the duty of the North, in this respect, is equally the duty of the South. All sides are called on to exercise a far greater degree of forbearance and moderation, if we mean to transmit to the next generation the blessings enjoyed by this.

I shall do all I can to warn the country against the dangers of this intestine strife; to call both the South and the North back to a sense of their true duties and their true interests. And if I cannot allay the evil, I shall at least do nothing to promote it. I shall do nothing to cause jealousy, heart-burning, and animosity, among those whose country is one, whose interests are one, and whose destiny, whatever any of them may think of it, is, in my opinion, one; one now, and one hereafter.

Gentlemen, one of the exciting questions of the present moment respects the necessity of excluding slavery, by law, from the territories lately acquired from Mexico. If I believed in any such necessity, I should, of course, support such a law. I could not do otherwise, consistently with opinions very many times expressed, and which opinions I have no inclination to change, and shall not change. But I do not believe in any such necessity. I have studied the geography of New Mexico diligently, having read all that I could find in print on the subject, and inquired of many intelligent persons who have been in the country, traversed it, and become familiar with it.

New Mexico may be considered as divided into two parts; one lying on the east side of the Rio Grande, below the Paso del Norte, which is claimed by Texas; the other extending along the river, on both sides, from Paso del Norte to the forty-second degree of north latitude, or the boundary of Oregon. Of this part, also, that which lies on the eastern side of the river is claimed by Texas. The whole extent of both parts can hardly be less than one thousand miles, and by the windings of the river much more. The southern part is far less mountainous than the northern; it has, nevertheless, mountain peaks and mountain ridges. From San Antonio de Bexar, which is a hundred miles north of the Gulf of Mexico, and near the western line of the actual settlements in Texas, it is five hundred and seventy miles to Paso del Norte, by a track or road recently explored, keeping east of the Rio del Norte, and south of the Guadalupe Mountains, the general direction of which road is west by north. This whole country is of very little value. The mountains are barren, and a great portion of the more level country is a mere desert of rocks and sand. Sometimes prairies are met with, producing grass in more or less abundance; but the decisive and fatal characteristic of the country is the want of water. In traversing this region, travellers not unfrequently find themselves without water for twenty or thirty miles, and sometimes even for longer distances. I think an exploring expedition, which within the last year passed along this route, found no water for seventy miles. It may be truly said, that here is a country of six hundred miles in extent, which, in its general character, must be described as a barren desert. I agree that, in a considerable part of this desert, African slave labor is not necessarily excluded by the law of climate; the climate is mild enough; but then all labor, free or slave, all cultivation whatever, is excluded, for all time, by the sterility of the soil, throughout this vast arid region. There may be trifling exceptions here and there, on the banks of some of the streams; but the general character, without doubt or question, is such as I have represented it. Major Gaines, a very intelligent gentleman, lately a member of Congress, and now governor of Oregon, traversed a part of this country during the Mexican war, and this is his description of it:—

"The country from the Nueces to the valley of the Rio Grande is poor, sterile, sandy, and barren, with not a single tree of any size or value on our whole route. The only tree which we saw was the musquit-tree, and very few of these. The musquit is a small tree, resembling an old and decayed peach-tree. The whole country may be truly called a perfect waste, uninhabited and uninhabitable. There is not a drop of running water between the two rivers, except in the two small streams of San Salvador and Santa Gertrudis, and these only contain water in the rainy season. Neither of them had running water when we passed them. The chaparral commences within forty or fifty miles of the Rio Grande. This is poor, rocky, and sandy; covered with prickly pear, thistles, and almost every sticking thing, constituting a thick and perfectly impenetrable undergrowth. For any useful or agricultural purpose the country is not worth a sous.

"So far as we were able to form any opinion of this desert upon the other routes which had been travelled, its character, everywhere between the two rivers, is pretty much the same. We learned that the route pursued by General Taylor, south of ours, was through a country similar to that through which we passed; as also was that travelled by General Wool from San Antonio to Presidio, on the Rio Grande. From what we both saw and heard, the whole command came to the conclusion which I have already expressed, that it was worth nothing. I have no hesitation in saying, that I would not hazard the life of one valuable and useful man for every foot of land between San Patricio and the valley of the Rio Grande. The country is not now, and can never be, of the slightest value."

That most lamented and distinguished gentleman and officer, the late Colonel Hardin, of Illinois, entirely concurs with Major Gaines. Here is his account:—

"The whole country is miserably watered. Large districts have no water at all. The streams are small, and at great distances apart. One day we marched, on the road from Monclova to Parras, thirty-five miles without water; a pretty severe day's march for infantry.

"Grass is very scarce, and, indeed, there is none at all in many regions for miles square. Its place is supplied with prickly pear and thorny bushes. There is not one acre in two hundred, more probably not one in five hundred, of all the land we have seen in Mexico, which can ever be cultivated; the greater part of it is the most desolate region I could ever have imagined. The pure granite hills of New England are a paradise to it, for they are without the thorny briers and venomous reptiles which infest the barbed barrenness of Mexico. The good land and cultivated spots in Mexico are but dots on the map. Were it not that it takes so very little to support a Mexican, and that the land which is cultivated yields its produce with little labor, it would be surprising how its sparse population is sustained. All the towns we have visited, with, perhaps, the exception of Parras, are depopulating, as is also the whole country."

The country higher up, that is, along the Rio del Norte, from Paso del Norte to Santa Fé and Taos, is different in this respect. Through this part of New Mexico the river runs between immense mountains, with strips or ribands of land along its banks, not always continuous, which are cultivated with grains, but only by means of irrigation.

The statements of Mr. Smith, the Delegate from New Mexico, are to the same effect.

My speech was delivered on the 7th of March. Speaking of what I thought the impossibility of the existence of African slavery in New Mexico, I said, "I would not take pains uselessly to reaffirm an ordinance of nature, or to reënact the will of God." Every body knew that, by the "will of God," I meant that expression of the Divine purpose in the work of creation which had given such a physical formation to the earth, in this region, as necessarily to exclude African slavery from it for ever. Every body knew I meant this, and meant nothing else. To represent me as speaking in any other sense was gross injustice. Yet a pamphlet has been put into circulation, in which it is said that my remark is "undertaking to settle by mountains and rivers, and not by the Ten Commandments, the question of human duty." "Cease to transcribe," it adds, "upon the statute-book what our wisest and best men believed to be the will of God, in regard to our worldly affairs, and the passions which we think appropriate to devils will soon take possession of society." One hardly knows which most to contemn, the nonsense or the dishonesty of such commentaries on another's words. I know no passion more appropriate to devils than the passion for gross misrepresentation and libel. Others, from whom more fairness might have been expected, have not failed to represent me as arguing, or affording ground of argument, against human laws to enforce the moral laws of the Deity. Such persons knew my meaning very well. They chose to pervert and misrepresent it. That is all.

In classical times, there was a set of small, but rapacious critics, denominated captatores verborum, who snatched and caught at particular expressions; expended their strength on the disjecta membra of language; birds of rapine, who preyed on words and syllables, and gorged themselves with feeding on the garbage of phrases chopped, dislocated, and torn asunder, by themselves, as flesh and limbs are by the claws of unclean birds. Such critics are rarely more distinguished for ability in discussion, than for that manly moral feeling which disdains to state an adversary's argument otherwise than fairly and truly, and as he meant to be understood.

But other gentlemen, of much more acquaintance with New Mexico than I can pretend to, have expressed the same opinion as I have done, in respect to the natural causes which must for ever exclude slavery from that country; and it has been thought remarkable that an intelligent field-officer in the American army, in writing a private letter to a friend here, dated at Santa Fé, the capital of New Mexico, two days before my speech was delivered, that is, on the 5th of March, should have used this language:—

"We have no papers later than the President's message. I fancy Congress is debating about slavery in New Mexico, where slavery is prohibited by a stronger than all human laws, the law of climate, and production, and self-interest. Not more than a hundredth part of New Mexico could ever be cultivated, if water were ever so plenty, such is the soil, topography, and rock of this land. But in the centre of a vast area, without large bodies of water, the rocky surface sending what little water falls upon it rapidly down to the ocean, under an atmosphere ever thirsty, into which evaporation is marvellously rapid, not more than one part in two hundred and fifty can ever be improved."

And now, Gentlemen, I have one other consideration to bring to your minds; and that is, that the slavery of the African race does not exist in New Mexico; that it is altogether abolished; that there is not a single African slave to be found among any of its mountains, or in any part of its vast plains. The people of New Mexico, to a man, are opposed to slavery; their state of society rejects it; the use of cheaper labor rejects it; the opinions, the sentiments, and feelings of the people all reject it, as warmly and decidedly as it is rejected by the people of Maine. And it appears to me just about as probable that African slavery will be introduced into New Mexico, and there established, as it is that it will be established on Mars' Hill, or the side of the White Mountains.

Among the maxims left us by Lord Bacon, one is, that, when seditions or discontents arise in the state, the part of wisdom is to remove, by all means possible, the causes. The surest way to prevent discontents, if the times will bear it, he says, is to take away the matter of them; for if there be fuel prepared, it is hard to tell whence the spark shall come that shall set it on fire. So counsels Lord Bacon; but with us there are other advisers. Although the dispute be obviously altogether unimportant, and although the times will well bear the taking away of the matter of it, their patriotic ardor still admonishes us to continue the contest, to fight it out; if the oyster be gone, still to make fierce battle for the shell; nor give up the warfare till we obtain a joyful victory, or nobly fall.

Gentlemen, I will conclude this letter by a short reference to one other topic. A good deal of complaint has been manifested, as you know, on account of the opinions expressed in my speech respecting Texas, and the legal construction and effect of the resolutions by which she became annexed to the United States. Surprise and astonishment, and all the eloquence of capital letters and notes of admiration, have been summoned to mark the utterance of such new and startling sentiments. The truth is, however, that there is nothing new in the whole matter. The same view, substantially, of the resolutions of annexation had been taken, again and again, by myself and others.

Gentlemen, I voted against the treaty by which these territories were ceded by Mexico to the United States; and in open Senate, in a speech made on the 23d of March, 1848, I referred to Texas and to the resolutions of annexation. The speech was published in the newspapers, and circulated in pamphlet form, and read by every body who chose to read it. In that speech you will find these words: —

"Now, Sir, I do not depend on theory. I ask you, and I ask the Senate and the country, to look at facts, to see where we were when we made the departure three years ago, and where we now are, and I shall leave it to imagination to conjecture where we shall be.

"We admitted Texas as one State for the present. But if you will refer to the resolutions providing for the annexation of Texas, you will find a provision that it shall be in the power of Congress hereafter to make four other new States out of Texan territory. Present and prospectively, therefore, five new States, sending ten Senators, may come into the Union out of Texas. Three years ago we did that. Now we propose to make two States; for, undoubtedly, if we take what the President recommends, New Mexico and California each will make a State; so that there will be four Senators. We shall have, then, in this new territory, seven States, sending fourteen Senators to this chamber. Now, what will be the relation between the Senate and the people, or the States from which they come?"

You will see that here is the same opinion of the meaning of the resolutions of annexation, expressed nearly in the same words, as are contained in my speech of the 7th of March last. And this only two years ago. But nobody then expressed either surprise or astonishment. There was no call to arms, no invocation of the genius of Liberty, to resist a false construction of an act of Congress; there were no stirring and rousing paragraphs in the newspapers, no patriotic appeals to the people, and no insane declarations, such as we now hear, that the Texan resolutions are utterly void.

But, Gentlemen, I will pursue no further a topic of some little interest to myself, but of no great importance to you, or the country. I leave it with the single remark, that what was true in respect to the construction of an act of Congress in 1848, must be true in the same case in 1850; and if an individual, on his own authority, may declare one act of Congress void, he may with equal propriety absolve himself from the obligations imposed on him by all other acts; and his oath binds him only to the observance of such laws as he himself approves. How far such a sentiment is fit to be acted upon by men, or to be instilled into the minds of youth, the country must judge.

But you, and the whole country, Gentlemen, are interested most deeply in knowing what is the prospect of a settlement of existing difficulties. On this point, I am happy to say that I can speak with hope, if not with confidence. I think I see indications that the public judgment will, ere long, be brought to bear upon these troublesome and exciting questions, and that the voice of a majority of the people will hush other discordant voices. How soon this will happen I cannot say; but I fully believe that the floods will yet subside, that the troubled waters will return within their banks, and the current of public affairs resume its accustomed and beneficial course.

I am, Gentlemen, your obliged fellow-citizen and obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To the Rev. Ebenezer Price and others, Neighbors of Mr. Webster in New Hampshire

Washington, September 21, 1850.

GENTLEMEN, — I have received your letter of last month, expressing your approbation of my public political conduct, and especially of my efforts in Congress to settle questions which have long agitated the country and disturbed its peace. Happily, Gentlemen, those questions are now, I trust, disposed of, and better prospects open upon the country.

The thirty-one American States stretch over a vast extent of country running through several degrees of latitude and longitude, and embracing many varieties of soil, climate, institutions, habits, and pursuits; yet over all the Union and the Constitution still stand, everywhere giving protection and security, and everywhere cherished at the present moment with general and warm patriotic regard. The interests of the different parts of the country, though various, are not opposite; flowing, indeed, in diverse channels, but all contributing to swell the great tide of national prosperity. Under the operation of the Constitution, we have now been for sixty years free and happy; civil and religious liberty have stood firm and unshaken; popular education has received a new impulse and a wider spread, and moral and religious instruction has become characteristic of our age; agriculture, commerce, and manufactures have been steadily encouraged and sustained; and, under the blessing of Providence, general competency and satisfactory means of living have everywhere rewarded the efforts of labor and industry. And in the mean time, Gentlemen, the country has attained to such a degree of honor and renown, that every patriotic man, in addition to his own individual means of enjoyment, derives a positive pleasure from participating in the reputation of his country. Of what other country upon earth can this be said with so much truth?

Who, then, would undermine this Union? Who would raise his hand against this Constitution? Who would scoff at those political and social blessings which Providence has never before seen fit to vouchsafe, in such abundance, to any community of men? Self-love, our hopes for the future, national pride, and gratitude to God, all conspire to prompt us to embrace these institutions of our native land with all the affections of our hearts, and to defend them with all the strength of our hands. In a critical hour, and not without some personal hazard, I have discharged my duty, and freed my conscience, to its very depth, in public efforts to maintain them, limited only by the measure of my ability. And since these efforts are regarded as having contributed something to the adjustment of dangerous controversies, and to the establishment of peace and harmony among fellow-citizens and brothers, I desire no reward but the cheering voices of good men and the approbation of my own conscience.

And now, friends and neighbors, I could pour out my heart in tenderness of feeling for the affectionate letter which comes from you. Approving voices have been heard from other quarters; other commendations have reached me, high enough and warm enough to demand, as they have received, my most grateful acknowledgment and regard. But yours comes from home; it comes from those whom I have known, and who have known me, from my birth. It is like the love of a family circle; its influences fall upon my heart as the dew of Hermon Those of you who are most advanced in age have known my father and my family, and especially that member of it whose premature death inflicted a wound in my breast which is yet fresh and bleeding. Some of you were my companions in the country schools; with others I have partaken in the sports of youth, the cheerful labor of the field of agriculture, and in the associations and exercises of early manhood. I see on the list learned, and now aged and venerable clergymen; professional gentlemen and magistrates, of my own age, whom I have long honored and esteemed; and others of all classes and all pursuits in life. There are on the list, also, not a few who bear my name and partake my blood. What I was in early life you all know; towards what I may have done, at subsequent periods, for the good of the country, you have ever manifested sufficiently favorable and partial regard; and now, after I have been called upon to act a part in a more important crisis, perhaps, than any other of my life, your kind regard, your neighborly recognition of former days and former friendships, and the affectionate terms in which you express yourselves, make your letter a treasure, precious in my esteem, which I shall keep near me always while I live, and leave for the gratification of those who may come after me.

Your obliged friend and neighbor,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To Messrs. F. S. Lathrop and others, New York.

Franklin, N. H., October 28, 1850.

GENTLEMEN, — Nothing in the world but regard for the state of my health prevents me from accepting at once your invitation, and assuring you of my presence at the "Union Meeting" at Castle Garden, on Wednesday evening next. I rejoice to know that such a meeting is called; I rejoice to know that it will be attended by thousands of intelligent men, lovers of their country, party men, doubtless, but abject slaves to no party, and who will not suffer either party clamor or party discipline to dry up within them all the fountains of love and attachment to the Constitution of their country. The voice of such a meeting will be heard and respected. It will rebuke disobedience to the laws, actual or threatened; it will tend to check the progress of mad fanaticism; it will call men who are honest, but who have been strangely misled, back to their duty; and it will give countenance and courage to the faithful friends of the Union throughout the land. When the commercial interests of the great metropolis of the country speak, with united hearts and voices expressing their conviction of the presence of the great danger, and a determined purpose to meet that danger, to combat with it, and overcome it, the example is likely to rouse good men everywhere; and when the country shall be roused, the country will be safe. I concur, Gentlemen, in all the political principles contained in the resolutions, a copy of which has been sent to me; and I stand pledged to support those principles publicly and privately, now and always, to the extent of my influence, and by the exertion of every faculty which I possess. The eminent men whom you mention, and with whose names you have done me the honor to associate mine, are well worthy of the praise which you bestow on them. I shall never forget, and I trust the country will never forget, the patriotism, the manliness, the courage, manifested by them in an hour of difficulty and of peril.

The peace measures of the last session are the Texan boundary act, the act for establishing the two territorial governments of New Mexico and Utah, the act for the abolition of the slave-trade in the District of Columbia, and the Fugitive Slave Law. This last measure, Gentlemen, is not such a measure as I had prepared before I left the Senate, and which, of course, I should have supported if I had remained in the Senate. But it received the proper sanction of the two houses of Congress and of the President of the United States. It is the law of the land, and as such is to be respected and obeyed by all good citizens. I have heard no man whose opinion is worth regarding deny its constitutionality, and those who counsel violent resistance to it counsel that which, if it takes place, is sure to lead to bloodshed and to the commission of capital offences. It remains to be seen how far the deluded and deluders will go on in this career of faction, folly, and crime. There were honest and well-meaning members of Congress who did not see their way clear to support these great and leading measures of the last session. You are quite right in saying that the motives of these gentlemen ought not to be impeached. But the measures have been adopted; they have become laws, constitutionally and legally binding upon us all, and no man is at liberty to oppose them.

No man is at liberty to set up, or affect to set up, his own conscience as above the law, in a matter which respects the rights of others, and the obligations, civil, social, and political, due to others from him. Such a pretence saps the foundation of all government, and is of itself a perfect absurdity; and while all are bound to yield obedience to the laws, wise and well-disposed citizens will forbear from renewing past agitation, and rekindling the flames of useless and dangerous controversy.

If we would continue one people, we must acquiesce in the will of the majority, constitutionally expressed, and he who does not mean to do that means to disturb the public peace, and do what he can to overturn the government.

Gentlemen, I am led to the adoption of your last resolution, in an especial and emphatic manner, by every dictate of my understanding, and I embrace it with full purpose of heart and hand. Its sentiment is my sentiment. With you, I declare that I "range myself under the banners of that party whose principles and practice are most calculated to uphold the Constitution and to perpetuate our glorious Union."

Gentlemen, I am here to recruit my health, enfeebled as it has been by ten months' excessive labor and indescribable anxiety. The air of these my native hills renews my strength and my spirits. I feel its invigorating influences while I am writing these few lines; and I shall return shortly to my post, to discharge its duties as well as I can, and resolved, in all events, that, so far as depends on me, our Union shall pass through this fiery trial without the smell of smoke upon its garments.

I am, Gentlemen, with very sincere regard, your obliged fellow-citizen and obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To Messrs. William Kinney and others, of Staunton, Virginia.

Washington, November 23, 1850.

GENTLEMEN, — On my arrival in this city last evening, I had the pleasure of receiving your communication of the 7th instant. It is a refreshing, an encouraging, and a patriotic letter. You speak the sentiments which become the people of the great and ancient Commonwealth of Virginia. You speak as Wythe and Pendleton, Jefferson, Marshall, and Madison would speak were they yet among us. You speak of the union of these States; and what idea can suggest more lively emotion in the minds of the American people, of present prosperity, past renown, and future hopes? Gladly would I be with you, Gentlemen, on the proposed occasion, and, as one of your countrymen and fellow-citizens, assure you of my hearty sympathy with you in the opinions which you express, and my unchangeable purpose to coöperate with you and other good men in upholding the honor of the States and the Constitution of the government. How happy should I be to present myself in Virginia, west of the Blue Ridge, and there to pledge mutual faith with the men of Augusta and Rockbridge, Bath, Alleghany, and Pocahontas, Highland, Pendleton, and Rockingham, that, while we live, the institutions of our wise and patriotic sires shall not want supporters, and that, so far as may depend on us, the civilized world shall never be shocked by beholding such a prodigy as the voluntary dismemberment of this glorious republic. No, Gentlemen, never, never! If it shall come to that, political martyrdom is preferable to such a sight. It is better to die while the honor of the country is untarnished, and the flag of the Union still flying over our heads, than to live to behold that honor gone for ever, and that flag prostrate in the dust. Gentlemen, I speak warmly, because I feel warmly, and because I know that I speak to men whose hearts are as warm as my own, in support of the country and the Union.

I am lately from the North, where I have mixed extensively with men of all classes and all parties, and I assure you, Gentlemen, through the masses of the Northern people the general feeling and the great cry is for the Union, and for its preservation. There are, it is true, men to be found, some of perverse purposes, and some of bewildered imaginations, who affect to suppose that some possible, but undefined good would arise from a dissolution of the ties which bind these United States together. But be assured the number of these men is small; the eminent leaders of all parties rebuke them, and while there prevails a general purpose to maintain the Union as it is, that purpose embraces, as its just and necessary means, a firm resolution of supporting the rights of all the States precisely as they stand guarantied and secured by the Constitution. And you may depend upon it, that every provision in that instrument in favor of the rights of Virginia, and the other Southern States, and every constitutional act of Congress passed to uphold and enforce those rights, will be upheld and maintained, not only by the power of the law, but also by the prevailing influence of public opinion.

Accidents may occur to defeat the execution of a law in a particular instance; misguided men may, it is possible, sometimes enable others to elude the claims of justice and the rights founded in solemn constitutional compact; but on the whole, and in the end, the law will be executed and obeyed. The South will see that there is principle and patriotism, good sense and honesty, in the general mind of the North, and that, among the great mass of intelligent citizens in that quarter, the prevailing disposition to ask for justice is not stronger than the disposition to grant it to others.

Gentlemen, we are brethren; we are descendants of those who labored together with intense anxiety for the establishment of the present Federal Constitution. Let me ask you to teach your young men, into whose hands the power of the country must soon fall, to go back to the close of the Revolutionary war; to contemplate the feebleness and incompetency of the confederation of States then existing; and to trace the steps by which the intelligence and patriotism of the great men of that day led the country to the adoption of the existing Constitution. Teach them to study the proceedings, votes, and reports of committees in the old Congress. Especially draw their attention to the leading part taken by the Assembly of Virginia from 1783 onward. Direct their minds to the convention at Annapolis in 1786; and by the contemplation and study of these events and these efforts, let them see what a mighty thing it was to establish the government under which we have now lived so prosperously and so gloriously for sixty years. But pardon me; I must not write an essay or make a speech. Virginia! true-hearted Virginia! stand by your country, stand by the work of your fathers, stand by the union of the States, and may Almighty God prosper all our efforts in the cause of liberty, and in the cause of that united government which renders this people the happiest people on whom the sun ever shone!

I am, Gentlemen, yours truly and faithfully,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To J. A. Hamilton Esq., and others, Westchester, New York.

Washington, January 27, 1851.

GENTLEMEN,—I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 16th of this month, inviting me to attend a meeting proposed to be holden at Tarrytown on the 30th instant, by the people of Westchester County, without any distinction of party, who approve of the compromise measures of the last session of Congress. My public duties do not allow me to accept this invitation; but you need not doubt that I cordially approve the objects and purposes for which the people of Westchester propose to assemble.

I hope the spirit of disunion may be considered as now, in some degree, checked; but that it has existed, both at the North and the South, and does still exist to a dangerous extent, cannot, as it seems to me, be denied by any honest man.

In the South, the separation of the States is openly proposed, discussed, and recommended, absolutely or conditionally, in legislative halls, and in conventions called together by the authority of law.

In the North, the State governments have not run into such excess, and the purpose of overturning the government shows itself more clearly in resolutions agreed to in voluntary assemblies of individuals, denouncing the laws of the land, and declaring a fixed intent to disobey them.

I notice that in one of these meetings, holden lately in the very heart of New England, and said to have been very numerously attended, the members unanimously resolved, "that, as God is our helper, we will not suffer any person charged with being a fugitive from labor to be taken from among us, and to this resolve we pledge our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor."

These persons do not seem to have been aware that the purpose thus avowed by them is distinctly treasonable. If any law of the land be resisted, by force of arms or force of numbers, with a declared intent to resist the application of that law, in all cases, this is levying war against the government, within the meaning of the Constitution, and is an act of treason, drawing after it all the consequences of that offence. This is the precise case in which convictions for treason took place in Pennsylvania during the elder Mr. Adams's administration. And not only does such a spirit as this manifest itself in heated and violent public assemblies, but it is also defended, encouraged, and commended by a considerable portion of the public press; and, what is still worse, the pulpit has, in too many instances, uttered these tones of opposition to the law, instead of the voice of Christian meekness, repentance, and the fear of God. Indeed, occasions have happened in which men and women have engaged in a sort of rivalry or contest to see whether the laws of society, or the institution of religion and the authority of the Divine Revelation, could be treated with the more contempt.

It is evident that, if this spirit be not checked, it will endanger the government; if it spread far and wide, it will overthrow the government.

There are ample pledges, Gentlemen, that with you and your fellow-citizens of Westchester no other feeling will be entertained than that of zealous attachment to the Union and the Constitution, and a determination to support both to the last extremity. Among your committee I see the son of a great and an illustrious man, equally distinguished in the revolutionary and the constitutional history of his country. ALEXANDER HAMILTON was one of the twelve commissioners who met at Annapolis in September, 1786, and recommended to the country the establishment of a constitution of government "adequate to the exigencies of the Union." Here was the cradle of that form of government which has so long bound us all together, and made us so prosperous at home and so much respected abroad. Where the blood of Alexander Hamilton fills the veins, or his example and patriotic services are remembered, the language of separation, secession, and disunion will find no utterance, and purposes of violent resistance to the laws no approbation or tolerance.

Gentlemen, the mortal remains of another great man, venerated and loved through the whole course of a long life, repose in the county of Westchester; of course, I mean JOHN JAY. The public life of this illustrious man was almost entirely devoted to the preservation of the union of the States, the establishment of the Constitution, and the administration of the powers conferred by it. No man saw more clearly, or felt more deeply, the evils arising from the existence of States with entire and distinct sovereignties. No man appealed to his countrymen against such a state of things with more earnestness, eloquence, or power. He saw the beginning of a spirit very much like that which exists now; he foretold its dangers, and did as much as any man to rescue the public opinion from its pernicious grasp.

In 1785 he wrote to a friend: "It is my first wish to see the United States assume and merit the character of one great nation, whose territory is divided into different States merely for more convenient government."

In 1787 he said: "It has until lately been a received and uncontradicted opinion, that the prosperity of the people of America depended on their continuing firmly united; and the wishes, prayers, and efforts of our best and wisest citizens have been constantly directed to that object. But politicians now appear, who insist that this opinion is erroneous, and that, instead of looking for safety and happiness in union, we ought to seek it in a division of the States into distinct confederacies or sovereignties. . . . . This country and this people seem to have been made for each other, and it appears as if it was the design of Providence that an inheritance so proper and convenient for a band of brethren united to each other by the strongest ties should never be split into a number of unsocial, jealous, and alien sovereignties. . . . . They who promote the idea of substituting a number of distinct confederacies, in the room of the plan of the convention, seem clearly to foresee that the rejection of it would put the continuance of the Union in the utmost jeopardy. That certainly would be the case; and I sincerely wish that it may be as clearly foreseen by every good citizen, that, whenever the dissolution of the Union arrives, America will have reason to exclaim, in the words of the poet, 'Farewell! a long farewell to all my greatness.'"

When I am speaking of the ardent attachment of John Jay to the union of the American States, I cannot forbear, even at the risk of extending this answer beyond its proper limits, from introducing another extract from his admirable writings, as exhibiting remarkable sagacity and power of illustration. "We have heard much," said he, "of the fleets of Britain; and, if we are wise, the time may come when the fleets of America may engage attention. But if one national government had not so regulated the navigation of Britain as to make it a nursery for seamen, if one national government had not called forth all the national means and materials for forming fleets, their prowess and their thunder would never have been celebrated. Let England have its navigation and fleet, let Scotland have its navigation and fleet, let Wales have its fleet, let Ireland have its navigation and fleet, let these four of the constituent parts of British empire be under four independent governments, and it is easy to perceive how soon they would each dwindle into comparative insignificance."

When John Jay filled the seat at the head of the supreme judicature, how would one appear, who, being charged with crime, should stand up before his face, beaming equally with intelligence and benignity, and insist that he had disobeyed the law only from the impulse of his own individual conscience; that he had disregarded plighted faith, violated the most important obligations, and contemned the sanctity of oaths, only upon his reliance on the superiority of his own intelligence over that of the community, and the right of every individual to judge of constitution, laws, and compacts for himself?

Gentlemen, I am sure that you and your friends will do your whole duty, as intelligent and patriotic citizens, in upholding the institutions of your country. I purpose to do mine, and should not consent to act with any body who might be found to waver or to hesitate on this all-important question.

The President's message at the opening of the present session of Congress expresses fully and plainly his own opinion, and the unanimous opinion of all those associated with him in the executive administration of the government, in regard to what are called the adjustment or compromise measures of last session. That opinion is, that those measures should be regarded in principle as a final settlement of the dangerous and exciting subjects which they embrace; that, though they were not free from imperfections, yet in their mutual dependence and connection they formed a system of compromise the most conciliatory and best for the entire country that could be obtained from conflicting sectional interests and opinions; and that therefore they should be adhered to until time and experience should demonstrate the necessity of further legislation to guard against evasion or abuse. That opinion, so far as I know, remains entirely unchanged, and will be acted upon steadily and decisively. The peace of the country requires this; the security of the Constitution requires this; consistency requires this; and every consideration of the public good demands this. If the administration cannot stand upon the principles of the message, it does not expect to stand at all.

Citizens of Westchester! Citizens of the State of New York! The voices of your own illustrious dead cry to you from the ground. They who are in their graves beseech you, as you respect their names and memories, as you love liberty, as you value your own happiness, as you regard the hopes of your children, to hold on with unflinching firmness to the Constitution and to the union of the States; and, as if with lips still living, they conjure you, in tones of indignation, to reject all such ideas as that disobedience to the laws is the path of patriotism, or treason to your country duty to God.

For myself, I confess that, if I were to witness the breaking up of the Union and the Constitution of the United States, I should bow myself to the earth in confusion of face; I should wish to hide myself from the observance of mankind, unless I could stand up and declare truly, before God and man, that by the utmost exertion of every faculty with which my Creator had endowed me I had labored to avert the catastrophe.

I am, Gentlemen, with entire regard and all good wishes, your obliged friend and fellow-citizen,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To the New York Committee for the Celebration of the Birthday of Washington.

Washington, February 20, 1851.

GENTLEMEN, — It is a source of deep regret to me, that my public duties absolutely prohibit me from having the pleasure of accepting your invitation, in behalf of the Union Safety Committee, to attend a public dinner on the Twenty-second, in honor of that auspicious day. Auspicious indeed! All good influences, all omens of independence, liberty, free government, the creation of a nation, its prosperity, happiness, and glory, hung over the hour when the eyes of Washington first opened to the light.

You say truly, Gentlemen, that the present moment admonishes us to rally in support of his principles, to express anew our admiration of his character, and our gratitude for his parting lessons of patriotism and wisdom.

You say truly, Gentlemen, that the great duty devolving on us is that of regarding the Union as the foundation of our peace and happiness, and the Constitution as the cement of that Union. So Washington regarded them; so he conjured his fellow-citizens, in all generations, to regard them; and whenever his Farewell Address to his country shall be forgotten, and its admonitions rejected by the people of America, from that time it will become a farewell address to all the bright hopes of human liberty on earth.

Gentlemen, the character of Washington is among the most cherished contemplations of my life. It is a fixed star in the firmament of great names, shining without twinkling or obscuration, with clear, steady, beneficent light. It is associated and blended with all our reflections on those things which are near and dear to us. If we think of the independence of our country, we think of him whose efforts were so prominent in achieving it; if we think of the Constitution which is over us, we think of him who did so much to establish it, and whose administration of its powers is acknowledged to be a model for his successors. If we think of glory in the field, of wisdom in the cabinet, of the purest patriotism, of the highest integrity, public and private, of morals without a stain, of religious feelings without intolerance and without extravagance, the august figure of Washington presents itself as the personation of all these ideas.

You do well, Gentlemen, at this interesting hour, to invoke his example, to spread over all the land a knowledge of his principles among the rising generation, and fervently to pray Heaven that the spirit which was in him may also be in us.

When Washington, in behalf of the convention, presented to the old Congress and to the country that Constitution which was the production of their patriotic and assiduous labors, he made this most important declaration: "In all our deliberations upon this subject, we kept steadily in our view, that which appears to us the greatest interest of every true American, the consolidation of our Union, in which is involved our prosperity, felicity, safety, perhaps our national existence. This important consideration, seriously and deeply impressed on our minds, led each State in the convention to be less rigid on points of inferior magnitude than might have been otherwise expected; and thus the Constitution which we now present is the result of a spirit of amity, and of that mutual deference and concession which the peculiarity of our political situation rendered indispensable."

And when his public career was drawing to a close, he left to his country, as his last, best gift, his most earnest and affectionate exhortation, to uphold that Union as the main pillar of independence, and to frown indignantly upon the first dawning of any attempt to dissolve it.

The advice is heeded now, and will be heeded hereafter. But, nevertheless, there are some among us on whom it is no injustice that those frowns of indignation should fall. There are those who are altogether for abandoning the Union, and alienating one portion of the country from the rest. They avow their wishes, they disclose their purposes. They open their hearts, and in those hearts there is found no pulsation for that Union which makes all Americans one people. All is but the ebbing and the flowing of the dark, unwholesome, troubled current of secession, schism, and separation.

We have seen propositions for secession formally brought forward, and solemnly discussed in the legislatures and conventions of several of the States. Other conventions are soon to be holden, under regular legislative provisions, to consider the same subject. In one important State, recent elections show that there prevails among the people almost an entire unanimity of sentiment in favor of breaking up the Union; and this dissolution of the Union, it is supposed, may not take place without conflict in arms. Munitions of war are therefore provided, schools of instruction in military tactics established, and an armed air and attitude assumed. These apprehensions of conflict, in case secession be attempted, are not only well founded, but, in my judgment, certain to be realized. Secession cannot be accomplished but by war. I do not believe those who favor it expect any other result. Their hope is, that their cause and its objects may spread; and that other States, by local sympathies, or a supposed common interest, may be led to espouse it; so that the whole country may come to be divided into two great local parties, and as such to contend for the mastery.

But Providence has not forsaken us. This object, I believe, has been defeated by the measures of adjustment adopted by Congress at the last session, and by the spirit, ability, and success with which the friends of the Union have resisted it in the South. Nor have the efforts of your association, Gentlemen, been either unimportant or unavailing. Your voices have been heard throughout the whole land, and no man can doubt how the great commercial metropolis of the country feels and acts, or hereafter will feel and act, on questions involving public interests of such indescribable magnitude.

We have recently been informed, Gentlemen, of an open act of resistance to law, in the city of Boston; and if the accounts be correct of the circumstances of this occurrence, it is, strictly speaking, a case of treason. If men combine and confederate together, and by force of arms or force of numbers effectually resist the operation of an act of Congress, in its application to a particular individual, with the avowed purpose of making the same resistance to the same act in its application to all other individuals, this is levying war against the United States, and is nothing less than treason. Now, I understand that the persons concerned in this outrage in Boston avow openly their full purpose of preventing, by arms, or by the power of the multitude, the execution of process for the arrest of an alleged fugitive slave in any and all cases whatever. I am sure, Gentlemen, that shame will burn the cheeks, and indignation fill the hearts, of nineteen twentieths of the people of Boston, at the avowal of principles and the commission of outrages so abominable. Depend upon it, that, if the people of that city had been informed of any such purpose or design as was carried into effect in the court-house in Boston, on Saturday last, they would have rushed to the spot, and crushed such a nefarious project into the dust. The vast majority of the people of Boston must necessarily suffer in their feelings, but ought not to suffer at all in their character or reputation for loyalty to the Constitution, from the acts of such persons as composed the mob. I venture to say, that when you hear of them next, you will learn that, personally and collectively, as individuals, and also as represented in the city councils, they will give full evidence of their fixed purpose to wipe away, and obliterate to the full extent of their power, this foul blot on the good name of their city.

And now, Gentlemen, when projects of dissolution have taken so much of form and pressure in public bodies in the South, when lawless violence, trampling on the public authorities, stalks forth so boldly in the North, you will see that your work, highly prosperous thus far, is nevertheless not yet concluded. It is wise and patriotic, therefore, that you commemorate your love of country, strengthen your resolution to maintain the Constitution, the Union, and the laws, by uniting to celebrate the anniversary of the birth of the great Father of his Country. You do well to call to memory his services, to revive in your own bosoms his love of liberty and order, and to draw in patriotic inspirations from his principles and his example. For these principles and this example, there will be found respect and admiration everywhere, where there is a true love for the institutions of the country. And every American may well doubt the patriotism of his own heart, when he finds that in that heart veneration for Washington begins to be languishing and dying away.

Gentlemen, the path of duty before you, and before me, is plain and broad; it is to do our duty and our whole duty, thoroughly and fearlessly; it is to embrace the free institutions of our country; and to hold them up, with all our might, as if it were our last struggle upon earth. And then, if the blood of civil war shall flow, it will not stain our garments. If disgraceful outrages, gaining strength by indulgence and temporary success, shall proceed from stage to stage, till they destroy the lives of men, women, and children, pull down and demolish the temples of justice, and even wrap cities in flames, you and I, and our character and memory, both now and with posterity, will at least escape the consuming conflagration of reproach.

I am, Gentlemen, your much obliged servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

*To George P. Marsh, Esq., &c., &c., Constantinople.

Washington, February 28, 1851.

Sir, — I am directed by the President to address you on the subject of the Hungarian refugees who are now in the Turkish dominions.

It is understood by this government that Mr. Kossuth and forty or fifty others, his companions, are in confinement in Kutayieh, in Asia Minor, where they have been for a year or more, and that they continue to feel an earnest desire to come to the United States.

By a despatch of my predecessor you were instructed to offer to the Sublime Porte to receive Mr. Kossuth and his companions on board of one of the national ships of the United States to convey them to this country.

It would have been extremely gratifying to the government and people of the United States if this proposition could have been at that time accepted; but it is understood that its not having been complied with by the Sublime Porte did not arise from a wish on his Imperial Majesty's part to detain them, or from any unwillingness that they should proceed to the United States, but was in consequence of the Sultan's offer to Austria to detain these persons for one year; at the expiration of which time, unless further conventions should be entered into to prolong their detention, they should be at liberty to depart.

If this be so, the time is near at hand when their release may be expected, and when they may be permitted to seek an asylum in any part of the world to which they shall be able to procure the means of transportation.

It is confidently hoped that the Sublime Porte has not made, and will not make, any new stipulation with any power for their further detention; and you are directed to address yourself urgently, though respectfully, to the Sublime Porte on this question.

You will cause it to be strongly represented, that, while this government has no desire or intention to interfere in any manner with questions of public policy or international or municipal relations of other governments, not affecting the rights of its own citizens, and while it has entire confidence in the justice and magnanimity and dignity of the Sublime Porte, yet, in a matter of such universal interest, it hopes that any suggestions proceeding from no other motives than those of friendship and respect for the Porte, a desire for the continuance and perpetuity of its independence and dignified position among the nations of the earth, and a sentiment of commiseration for the Hungarian exiles, may be received by the Porte in the same friendly spirit in which they are offered, and that the growing good feeling and increasing intercourse between the two governments may be still further fostered and extended by a happy concurrence of opinion and reciprocity of confidence upon this as upon all other subjects. Compliance with the wishes of the government and people of the United States in this respect will be regarded as a friendly recognition of their intercession, and as a proof of national good-will and regard.

* This letter should have been inserted among the Diplomatic Papers, in the preceding division of the work.

The course which the Sublime Porte pursued, in refusing to allow the Hungarian exiles to be seized upon its soil by the forces of a foreign state, or to arrest and deliver them up itself to their pursuers, was hailed with universal approbation, it might be said with gratitude, everywhere throughout the United States. And this sentiment was not the less strong because the demand upon the Sublime Porte was made by governments confident in their great military power, with armies in the field of vast strength, flushed with recent victory, and whose purposes were not to be thwarted, nor their pursuit stayed, by any obstacle less than the interposition of an empire prepared to maintain the inviolability of its territories, and its absolute sovereignty over its own soil.

This government, jealous of its own territorial rights, regarded with great respect and hearty approbation the firm and lofty position assumed by his Imperial Majesty at that time, and so proudly maintained under circumstances well calculated to inspire doubt, and against demands urged with such gravity, and supported by so formidable an array. His Imperial Majesty felt that he should be no longer an independent prince if he consented to be less than the sovereign of his own dominions.

While thus regarding the political position and conduct of the Sublime Porte, in reference to other powers, his Imperial Majesty's generosity in providing for the wants of the fugitives thus unexpectedly, and in so great numbers, throwing themselves upon his protection, is considered equally worthy of admiration.

On the other hand, it is not difficult to conceive what may have been the considerations which led the Sublime Porte to consent to remove these persons from its frontiers, require them to repair to the interior, and there to remain for a limited time.

A great attempt at revolution against the established authorities of a neighboring state, with which the Sublime Porte was at peace, and with which it desired to preserve friendly relations, had only then been suppressed. The chief actors in that attempt had escaped into the dominions of the Porte. To permit them to remain upon its frontiers, where they might project new undertakings against that state, and into which, if circumstances favored, they could enter in arms at any time, might well have been considered dangerous to both governments; and the Sublime Porte, while protecting them, might certainly also prevent their occupying any such position in its own dominions as should give just cause of alarm to neighboring and friendly powers. Their removal to certain localities might also be rendered desirable by considerations of convenience to the Sublime Porte itself, upon whose charity and generosity such numbers had so suddenly become dependent.

The detention of these persons for a short period of time, in order that they might not at once repair to other parts of Europe to renew their operations, was a request that it was not unnatural to make, and which it was certainly in the discretion of the Sublime Porte to grant, without any sacrifice of its dignity or any want of kindness towards the refugees.

But at this time all possible apprehension of danger or disturbance, to result from their liberation, has ceased. It is now more than a year since the last Hungarian army surrendered, and the attempt at revolution and the establishment of an independent government, in which they were engaged, was most sternly crushed by the united forces of two of the greatest powers of Europe. Their chief associates are, like themselves, in exile, or have perished on the field, or on the scaffold, or by military execution. Their estates are confiscated, their families dispersed, and every castle, fortress, and city of Hungary is in the possession of the forces of Austria.

They themselves, by their desire to remove so far from the scene of their late conflict, declare that they entertain no hope or thought of other similar attempts, and wish only to be permitted to withdraw themselves altogether from all European association, and seek new homes in the vast regions of the United States. For their attempt at independence they have most dearly paid; and now, broken in fortune and in heart, without home or country, — a band of exiles, whose only future is a tearful remembrance of the past, whose only request is to spend their remaining days in obscure industry, — they wait the permission of his Imperial Majesty to remove themselves, and all that may remain to them, across the ocean, to the uncultivated regions of America, and leave for ever a continent which to them has become more gloomy than the wilderness, more lone and dreary than the desert.

The people of the United States expect from the generosity of the Turkish monarch, that this permission will be given; they wait to receive those exiles on their shores, where, without giving just cause of uneasiness to any government, they may enjoy whatever of consolation can be afforded by sympathy for their sufferings, and that assistance in their necessities which this people have never been late in offering to any, and which they are not now for the first time called upon to render. Accustomed themselves to high ideas of national independence, the people of the United States would regret to see the government of the vast empire of Turkey constrained by the force of circumstances to exercise the duty of keeping prisoners for other powers. You will further say to the Sublime Porte, that if, as this government hopes and believes, Mr. Kossuth and his companions are allowed to depart from the dominions of his Imperial Majesty at the expiration of the year commencing in May, 1850, they will find conveyance to the United States in some of its national ships, now in the Mediterranean Sea, which can be spared for that purpose; and you will, on receiving assurances that these persons will be permitted to embark, ascertain precisely their number, and immediately give notice to the commander of the United States squadron on that station, who will receive orders from the proper authorities to be present with such of the ships as may be necessary, or can leave the station, to furnish conveyance for Kossuth and his companions to the United States.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To George Griswold, Esq., and others, in Reply to a Letter transmitting an Invitation signed by more than five thousand Citizens of New York, "Friends of the Union, without Distinction of Party."

Washington, May 9, 1851.

GENTLEMEN, — I have received your communication by the hands of Mr. Williams, and I acknowledge myself overwhelmed by this new proof of regard from the city of New York. An invitation to visit that city, from so many thousands of "friends of the Union, without distinction of party," as much surpasses my merit as it exceeds my expectation. I have read the names, and, as you suggest may be probable, many of them are known to me, and I know them to be men of high honor and character, of business and industry, possessing a great stake in the country, and active supporters and props of all the institutions of benevolence and charity, morality and religion, literature and science, which adorn the great commercial metropolis of the United States.

Gentlemen, I have no wish to appear in public for purposes of ceremony or entertainment; nor can I say that I feel the necessity of any occasion at present to express my sentiments in regard to public affairs. All that I think, and all that I feel, on the great topics of the hour, is concealed from nobody. But, notwithstanding all this, and notwithstanding that my public duties are likely to demand my attention rather imperatively for some weeks to come, I yet cannot persuade myself to say that I may not, at no distant time, make an effort to meet my friends in New York.

One thing, Gentlemen, is certain, that, if I address you at any time, you will hear no change of sentiment, nor any faltering of voice, in support of that cause which is so dear to your hearts and to mine.

With grateful and profound regard, I remain, Gentlemen, your friend and obliged, humble servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To a Number of Friends at West Dennis, Mass.

Washington, July 14, 1851.

Gentlemen, — I have received your friendly letter of the 4th of this month, and am highly gratified with the patriotic sentiments expressed therein. Indeed, I should have expected nothing else, because such sentiments are worthy of those Pilgrim Fathers from whom you are descended, as well as of the general character of your community.

It will give me much satisfaction, if circumstances should allow, to accept your invitation to pass a day among you. In the mean time, I shall be most happy to send to each of you such productions of mine as may fully explain my sentiments in respect to the great questions of the present time.

With some of you, I have the pleasure of being personally acquainted, as I have often been in your good town of Dennis, as well as in all the other towns on the Cape. I see also attached to your letter many names not personally known to me, but belonging to families with which I have had acquaintance in former times. I have always found the air of your county delightful in summer, and there are many sea views remarkably fine; and I suppose I ought to confess, also, that in these my pleasant visits I did not entirely neglect the streams, so highly estimated by the anglers who have thrown the fly in them.

Gentlemen, the nature of your population is somewhat peculiar. I have often been struck by the very great number of sea-captains, as well as other mariners, which the county of Barnstable and the neighboring islands furnish. On the Cape and on the islands, I have frequently conversed with persons who seemed as well acquainted with the Gallipagos Islands, the Sandwich Islands, and some parts of New Holland, as with our counties of Hampshire and Berkshire.

I was once engaged in the trial of a cause, in your district, in which a question arose respecting the entrance into the harbor of Owhyee, between the reefs of coral rock guarding it on either side. The counsel for the opposite party proposed to call witnesses to give information to the jury concerning this entrance. I at once saw a smile, which I thought I understood; and suggested to the judge, that very probably some of the jurors had seen the entrance themselves; upon which seven out of the twelve jurors rose, and said that they were quite familiarly acquainted with it, having seen it often.

The occurrence, I dare say, is remembered by that most worthy man and eminent judge, now living, as I am happy to know, and enjoying in advanced life the affection of friends, and the respect of all who know him; I mean Judge Putnam. This incident shows the nature of the employments pursued by your neighbors and yourselves.

With the more elderly gentlemen of your county I have had the pleasure of frequent conversations concerning early Revolutionary times, and especially respecting that extraordinary man, James Otis. I have been where he lived, and examined such of his papers as I could find; but in the latter part of his life he destroyed most of his correspondence. Mr. Tudor has written a very good history of his life, and you all know the emphatic eulogy pronounced on him by the elder Adams, namely, that it was James Otis who set the ball of the Revolution in motion. Warm, eloquent, and highly impassioned in the cause of liberty, his brilliant life was terminated by a stroke of lightning.

None were earlier to begin, none more cordially embraced, or more zealously struggled to maintain, the cause of the Revolution, than the people of the Cape. All the region about the birthplace of James Otis, and the Thomas's, and the other true-hearted patriots of those times, is to me a sort of classic ground; remote from large cities, scattered along an extensive coast, there was yet, I think, in no part of the country, a more fervent devotion to the patriotic cause than was manifested by your ancestors.

Gentlemen, I am sure you ascribe quite too much merit to my efforts in behalf of the Union and of the Constitution. I can only say, I have done what I could, and all that I could; and that I shall not slacken my hand. Perhaps it is natural that you should be attached to free and regular constitutions of government, since all know that the first written constitution in the country was composed and signed on board of the Mayflower, while she was riding at anchor in one of the harbors of the Cape. Your own prosperity, Gentlemen, the success of all your leading pursuits, the prosperity of your county, and of the whole State of Massachusetts, are at this moment living monuments of the benefits conferred by the Constitution of the United States, and the administration of government under it.

Your soil has always been a free soil; as such, you and your ancestors have cultivated it for centuries; it needs no new christening. But what the people of Massachusetts wanted, and your country among the rest, before the adoption of the present Constitution, was FREE SEAS; free seas, on which their industry could be displayed, and their national rights protected. By the blessing of Providence they have enjoyed this freedom and this protection for a long course of years, and have flourished and prospered under them beyond all former example.

What if your soil be not of the richest quality? What if it be not fertile, like Western New York and the Western States? I still hardly know a part of the country in which the people enjoy more substantial comfort. I have traversed the whole, from the "outside" in Provincetown to the line of Plymouth, without seeing an instance of ragged poverty or of absolute want. Your labors are on the sea. In a more emphatic sense than can be said of any other people, your home is on the deep. Nevertheless, the home of your families, the home of your affections, the home to which you return with so much gladness of heart, is in the various towns on the Cape, "where all your treasures be."

I trust that there is not a man among you who does not feel and see that the prosperity of his labor is mainly connected with the administration of the government of the United States; and therefore I trust that the political air of the Cape will always remain as healthy as its natural atmosphere, and that it will be as free from faction and fanaticism as that is from fogs and vapors.

If your hardy and enterprising young men go eastward, pursuing their employment, to the Bay of Chaleur, the Straits, or the Grand Bank, do they not receive a positive protection and encouragement from the laws of the United States? If they take a wider range, and, in pursuit of larger objects, coast along Brazil, double the Cape, and thence steer west, or south, or north, in the vast Pacific, do they not find that they are safely covered by the shelter of their flag, which no power on earth ventures to treat with disrespect?

My friends of West Dennis, discourage fanciful ideas, abstract notions, and all inconsiderate attempts to reach ends, which, however desirable in themselves, are not placed within the compass of your abilities or duties. Hold on, my friends, to the Constitution of your country, and the government established under it. Leave evils which exist in some parts of the country, but which are beyond your control, to the all-wise direction of an overruling Providence. Perform those duties which are present, plain, and positive. Respect the laws of your country, uphold our American institutions as far as you are able, consult the chart and the compass, keep an eye on the sun by day, and on the constellations, both of the South and the North, by night; and, always feeling and acting as if our united constitutional American liberty were in some degree committed to your charge, keep her, so far as it depends on you, clear of the breakers. Whatever latitudes you traverse, on whatever distant billows you are tossed, let your country retain her hold on your affections. Keep her in your hearts, and let your carol to her ever be, —

> "Lashed to the helm,
> Should seas o'erwhelm,
> I'll think on thee."

I am, my friends, with sincere regard, your obliged fellow-citizen, and obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To Mark A. Cooper, Esq., Macon, Georgia.

Marshfield, October 6, 1851.

MY DEAR SIR, — I have received the friendly invitation addressed to me by you as the organ of the Southern Central Agricultural Association, to meet its members at their Agricultural Fair in Macon. I thank you for your kindness in thus remembering me at the approach of an anniversary so interesting to all engaged in agriculture.

I am a farmer, on a small scale, on the sea-coast of New England; a very different occupation from that of him who possesses a rich cotton or rice plantation in Georgia. Attention to agriculture has been one of my ruling propensities from my earliest years; and I like to see it, and to study it, in whatsoever form it is prosecuted. Your rice-meadows and cotton-fields it has afforded me great pleasure to visit; and I am aware that in other parts of Georgia the great staple of wheat is produced in an abundance that we do not witness in New England. For these reasons, my dear Sir, it would give me much gratification to accept your invitation to attend the fair.

But there is another reason. Men are more important than things. Those who own the soil, and cultivate it, are mor interesting than the soil itself. My chief pleasure, therefore, in such a meeting would be, to see an assembly of the people of Georgia; to exchange with them the congratulations of countrymen; to assure them that I rejoice in their prosperity, and feel towards them the proper sympathies of a fellow-citizen.

Let me take the occasion to add, my dear Sir, that, as the forms and products of your agriculture are quite different from ours, as your soil and climate are different, and as your social and domestic institutions are also different, it was never intended by the Constitution under which we live, that so foolish and impracticable a thing as amalgamation, in these respects, or any of them, should be attempted between Northern and Southern States. The States are united, confederated; —

> "Not, chaos-like, together crushed and bruised,
> But, like the world, harmoniously confused;
> Where order in variety we see,
> And where, though all things differ, all agree."

My prayer to Heaven is, that, in the midst of all this "variety" pervading the several States, "order" may still be preserved among them all; and that the Constitution of this country, the main foundation on which this "order" rests, may be always loved and venerated by all, and continue for ever, as the greatest civil blessing for us and our posterity. And since my public duties will not allow me to be present at the fair in Macon, I pray you, my dear Sir, to present, not only to the committee, but to all who may be assembled, my cordial regards and good wishes.

I am, Sir, your obliged fellow-citizen and obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To Mr. J. T. Woodbury, Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements for the Celebration at Acton, Mass.

Marshfield, October 15, 1851.

My dear Sir, — If my public duties would permit, there is no occasion of the kind which I would attend with more pleasure than the erection of a monument to the memory of Isaac Davis. His brief public history and untimely grave not only called forth my admiration, but enkindled my enthusiasm, in youth; and in later years, when I have conversed respecting him with those who saw him on the morning of that eventful 19th of April, marked the undaunted courage with which he marched up and met the fire of the foe, the manner in which he received the fatal shot, and the complacency and beauty of his manly countenance as he lay a corpse, with wounds still fresh and bleeding, my heart has melted within me, and my eyes gushed out with tears.

I have read all that I could find, and gathered up all that I could learn, of his high and noble character. He fell in his early manhood, one of the very first martyrs in the cause of liberty, and, if I mistake not, the first American officer who sealed his devotion to the cause with his own blood. In the scene at Concord Bridge, he seems to stand out in marked, prominent, and bold relief. I have had the pleasure of speaking of his character as I thought of it in the Senate of the United States; and most happy should I be in passing a day with those who are the children of fathers who were his neighbors, and perhaps with some who may remember to have seen him.

Let me ask you to present, in my name, the following sentiment to the company: —

Isaac Davis: An early grave in the cause of liberty has secured to him the long and grateful remembrance of his country.

I am, my dear Sir, with high regard, your obedient servant,

Daniel Webster.

INDEX.

INDEX.

A.

Aberdeen, Lord, on the right of search, VI. 375.

"Accede," a word not found in the Constitution, III. 453.

Act respecting coasting trade explained, VI. 21.

Act respecting fugitives from labor (1793), VI. 552.

Adams and Jefferson, coincidences in the death and lives of, I. 114; members of the committee to prepare the Declaration of Independence, 126; their respective administrations, 144.

Adams, John, eulogized, I. 31, 32; birth and education, 118; admitted to the bar, 119; defends British officers and soldiers, 119; a remarkable letter of, 120; Delegate to Congress, 123; important resolution reported by, 125; power in debate, 129; knowledge of Colonial history, 131; supposed speech in favor of independence, 133; Minister abroad, 137; Delegate to Convention, and presiding officer, 137, 138; Defence of American Constitutions, 138; Vice-President and President of the United States, 138; his description of the first prayer in Congress, VI. 162.

Adams, J. Q., I. 88; liberality of his inaugural address, 157; his nominations to offices postponed by the Senate, 259, 359; opposition to his administration, 363, II. 10, 11; message relating to the Northeastern Boundary, V. 84.

Adams, Samuel, Delegate to Congress, I. 123; anecdote of, VI. 162

Addition to the Capitol, address at the laying of the corner-stone of the, II. 595.

Adjustment Measures, necessity of, II. 557, 571.

Admission of Texas, speech on, V. 55.

Ad valorem Duties, objections to, IV. 259; not the policy of this government, V. 170; an unsafe principle of finance, 157.

African Slave-trade, part taken by the United States respecting, VI. 352.

African Squadron, provided for in treaty of Washington, V. 143, VI. 354

Agriculture, regarded by Washington, I. 228; its importance, 436, 457; of England, 441; remarks on, at Boston, 443; of England and the United States, II. 177; its interests aided by protecting manufactures, 243; advantages of home over foreign market, V. 232.

Aguesseau, D', extract from, II. 301.

"Aiding and abetting," defined, VI. 74, 77.

Airs, the Martial, of England, IV. 110.

Aix la Chapelle, stipulation in regard to slaves in the treaty of, II. 573; congress of sovereigns at, influenced by English and American policy, III 195.

Alabama, policy in respect to exchange and banking, VI. 125.

Albany, N. Y., speech of Mr. Webster at a mass meeting at, 27th August, 1844, II. 219; speech delivered to the young men of, 28th May, 1851, 569; memorial from, IV. 13; commercial character of, 15.

Aldham, Mr., referred to by Mr. Webster; his reply, II. 215.

Allegiance, doctrine of perpetual, VI. 320; doctrine of the United States in respect to, 454; duties of persons residing temporarily in a country in respect to, 526.

Allen, Lieut., killed by pirates, VI. 514.

Allied Sovereigns, claims of, III. 66; effect of their meeting at Laybach on the people, 72; their course toward Greece, 81.

America, her contributions to Europe, I. 104; duty of, in regard to religious belief, II 521; familiarity with republican principles at the commencement of the Revolution, III. 89; and Europe compared, 192.

American Government, elements of, I. 103; principles of, in respect to suffrage, VI. 223; general theory of, 537.

American Labor, to be protected, I. 283, 353; contrasted with European, II. 24, 175, 467; as affected by the tariff of 1846, V. 205.

American Legislation conservative, VI. 221.

American People, prepared for popular government, I. 73; their duty in respect to republican principles, III. 76; restraints imposed on themselves, VI. 224.
American Policy, its true object, III. 96.
American Political Principles, summary of, II. 601.
American Power, foundation of, III. 134.
American Republicanism, remark of Jefferson concerning, II. 91.
American Revolution, its purpose, III. 16; effect of, 460; organization of government in the time of, VI. 225.
Ames, Fisher, his speech on the British treaty, II. 484; quoted, 501; favors the establishment of a bank, IV. 342.
Amiens, treaty of, remark of Mr. Windham respecting, V. 363.
Amistad, case of, letter respecting, VI. 391.
Ancestry, respect for, I. 6.
Andover, Convention at, 9th November, 1843, speech of Mr. Webster, II. 159.
Anglo-American race, extent of its power, II. 214.
Animus manendi, chief point to be considered in determining allegiance, VI. 523.
Annapolis, meeting at, in 1786, IV. 335; object of delegates assembled at, VI. 10; recommendation of the Convention at (1786), 227.
Antimasons, character of, IV. 42.
Antislavery Conventions, proceedings of, II. 559.
Anville, D', map of, II. 143.
Appleton, Nathan, speech of, commended, II. 176.
Appointing and Removing Power, speech on, IV. 179.
Apportionment of Representation, remarks on, III. 370.
Apprentices, fugitive, restored, V. 435.
Appropriations by Congress, required to be specific, II. 96, IV. 224; duties of the House of Representatives in respect to, III. 186.
Arbitration, opinion of Mr. Polk respecting, II. 324; of the King of the Netherlands, between United States and Great Britain, V. 84.
Architecture, improvement in, I. 187; Gothic, 189.
Army of the Revolution, its services, patriotism, and claims, III. 226.
Army of United States, wisdom of its organization, II. 613.
Ashburton, Lord, character of, II. 122, 134; his correspondence on impressment, 540; his negotiation with Mr. Webster, 586; mission of, V. 98, VI. 271–273; accepts the proposed boundary line, 288; letters of, respecting payments to Maine and Massachusetts, 289; the Caroline, 295; maritime rights, 313; impressment, 326; results of his special mission, 348.
Asiento, stipulation respecting slaves in the treaty of, II. 573.
Attainder, provisions regarding, V. 493.
Auction sales of public lands, objections to, IV. 396. See Public Lands.
Austria, financial experiment in 1809, III. 46; agent of the United States respectfully received by, VI. 502.
Austria and Russia, feelings of, towards the United States in 1781, VI. 503.
Austins, the early settlers of Texas, VI. 449.

B.

Babylon, astronomers of, I. 221.
Bache, A. D., his Report on Education quoted, VI. 172.
Bacon, Lord, I. 115; maxim of, VI. 573.
Badger, G. E., motion of, against ceding New Mexico and California, II. 444.
Bahamas, treatment of American vessels at, VI. 305.
Balance of trade explained, III. 118; of power, necessity of, in a mixed government, IV. 109.
Baltimore Convention, resolution relative to Oregon, II. 321; to American industry, 464.
Bangor, reception of Mr. Webster at, I. 309; its position, 309; its growth, 310.
Banking, new principles of, IV. 37; alleged dangers of, 362; effect of, upon the industry of the people, 364; system of the United States and England compared, IV. 442; explained, VI. 127.
Bank-notes, convertibility into specie an indispensable requisite, IV. 89; irredeemable, impolicy of issuing, 412; mode of determining the excess of circulation of, 445; evils of a diminished circulation of, 447; power of Congress to authorize use of, in government transactions, 485; Mr. Calhoun's course in respect to, 489.
Bank of Amsterdam, IV. 360.
Bank of England, error of, II. 60; effect of its suspension in 1697, III. 41; resumes specie payments, 101; chartered for limited periods, 549; established by William the Deliverer, IV. 91; increases its capital, 360; its foreign operations, VI. 114; origin and nature of, 127.
Bank of the United States, Gen. Jackson's opinion of, I. 245; classes affected by its discontinuance, 247; bill for its recharter, 268; branch of, in New Hampshire, 366; suspends specie payments, 389; expiration of its charter, 393; bill for its recharter passed by Congress, 1832, 367; administration of, II. 67; speech on, Jan. 2, 1815, III. 35; instructions in respect to, moved by Mr.

Webster, 35; object of I. 408, III. 101, 427, IV. 341, 346, 460; speech on the bill to recharter (1832), III. 391; charter vetoed, 418; time for renewal of charter, 421; comments on veto of charter, 424; advantages of, in war, 429; its constitutionality settled, 435; proposition for establishing (1833), 513; its credit, 515; modification of charter, 515; executive opinions respecting, 547; violation of its rights, IV. 11; object of its recharter (1834), 31; opinion of Congress respecting, 37, III. 431; act incorporating is a contract, IV. 50; its right to the deposits, 52; remedies for mal-administration, 59; alleged misconduct of, 67; speech on continuance of charter, 82; prejudice against, 95; by what States advocated, 97; explanations of bill to continue (1834), 99; advantages of, 201; when created, 325; duties performed by, 327; opinions of Madison and Ames respecting, 342, 461; of Washington's cabinet, 343, 461; facilities for exchange provided by, 334; preamble of the bill to establish the first bank, 344; extract from report of Secretary of the Treasury respecting, 348; popular opinion of, 419; consequence of removal of deposits from, 443; course of Messrs. Webster and Calhoun in relation to (1815), 504; against W. D. Primrose, argument in the case of, VI. 106; against Deveaux, comments on case of, ib.

Bank Paper, effect of discrediting, II. 77; credit destroyed by over-issue, III. 45.

Bankruptcy, power of Congress respecting, IV. 320, V. 5; on a uniform system of, 3; acceptation of the term, 6; voluntary and compulsory, provision to be made for, 18; State laws concerning, ineffectual, 19.

Bankrupt law, appeal for the passage of, II. 24; object of, V. 8; nature of, 10; benefits of, not to be confined to traders, 11; of New York considered, VI. 25.

Bankrupt laws to be established only by the national authority, VI. 25, 37.

Banks, suspension of, I. 375, 385; effect of suspending specie payments, 406, IV. 361; security of the public against excessive issues by, II. 60; to what extent useful, III. 37; their issues should be redeemable in gold and silver, 41; depreciated currency of (1816), 51, 411; issuing of small notes by, to be discouraged, 400, 538; power of a State to create, questioned, 414; their history belongs to that of commerce and liberty, IV. 91; for whom made, 94; efforts of, to resume specie payments, 420; instruments of the credit system, 433; encouraged to discount liberally in 1833, 443; proper rule for regulating, 448; impolicy of the issue of small bills by, 457; alleged evils of a connection between, and government, 469.

Barings, Messrs., letter to, on power of the States to contract loans, VI. 537.

Barre, Col., quotation from his speech respecting American Colonists, III. 287.

Bartlett, Josiah, character of, II. 506.

Bell, Gov. P. H., letter to, respecting the boundaries of Texas, VI. 479.

Benson, Judge, Commissioner at Annapolis, I. 199.

Benton, Thomas H., on the Oregon question, II. 322; on Foot's resolution, III. 248, 270; commendation of Hayne's speech alluded to, 273.

Berkeley, Bishop, I. 221, II. 510, 595.

Berkeley, Gov., letter to Gov. Winthrop on the restoration of slaves, V. 434.

Berrien, J. M., remarks upon proposition of, V. 257.

Biddle, Com., anecdote of, V. 322.

Bill of exchange on French government, protested, IV. 72.

Bills of credit, nature of, IV. 336, VI. 538; States prohibited from issuing, IV. 337.

Bissell, Col., remarks of, VI. 559.

Blacks from Northern States, oppressive treatment of, by South, V. 360, 432.

Blanc, Sir G., quoted, III. 139.

Bocanegra, his mistaken idea of the power of the United States in war, VI. 456; complaints of, answered, 446.

Border disturbances, suppressed by treaty of 1842, V. 140.

Borland, agent of Massachusetts, II. 147.

Boston, its port closed, I. 67; feeling in honor of, 174; Mechanics' Institution of, 175; citizens of, present a vase to Mr. Webster, 319; patriotism of her merchants, 429; reception of Mr. Webster at, 30 Sept., 1842, II. 109; and New York, 416; resolutions of, in 1820, commented on, IV. 509; violation of law in, VI. 589.

Boston Protest, character of its signers, IV. 10.

Boundary, Northeastern, advantages of its final settlement, V. 101; proposed conventional line of, VI. 276; proposal by Mr. Webster, 283; explanation of, 347.

Bounties, fishing, alleged payment of, in irredeemable bills, IV. 377.

Bowdoin, James, delegate to Congress, I. 123.

Breck, Hon. Samuel, II. 307.

Brimstone, manufacture of, destroyed by tariff of 1846, V. 199.

British Constitution, in respect to the judiciary, III. 27; not analogous to the American, IV. 141.

British Parliament, its power over charters, V. 469.

British special mission, results of, VI. 347. See Ashburton; Boundary; Northeastern Boundary; Treaty of Washington.
Brooks, A. S., falls in Florida, II. 505.
Brooks, Governor John, first president of Bunker Hill Monument Association, I. 65; beloved and distinguished, II. 505.
Brougham, his approval of the Monroe declaration, III. 204.
Buchanan, James, his measures on the Oregon question, II. 321, et seq.; extract from his letter to Mr. Slidell, 331; remark of, respecting Gen. Taylor, 450; on the sub-treasury and tariff, 454; his speech respecting ad valorem duties, V. 171.
Buena Vista, Gen. Taylor at, V. 285.
Buffalo, Mr. Webster at, I. 279, 281; its rapid growth, 281, II. 534; its trade, I. 282; present from the mechanics of, to Mr. Webster, II. 534; public dinner at, 21st May, 1851, and speech of Mr. Webster on the occasion, 533; reception of Mr. Webster at, 22d May, 1851, and speech delivered on the occasion, 544.
Bunker Hill Battle, address to the survivors of, I. 65; its effect, 69; survivors of, present at the completion of the Monument, 85; described, 90; militia at, II. 335.
Bunker Hill Monument, I. 55; laying of the corner-stone described, 58; described, 108; associations with, 220; toast on, VI. 565.
Burk, of S. C., an advocate of protective duties, III. 501.
Burke, Edmund, remark of, quoted, I. 414; opposes the issue of small notes, III. 399; provisions of his bill relating to economical reform, IV. 520, quotation from, V. 412.

C.

Cabot, George, notice of, II. 205.
Calderon, Don A., his course commended, VI. 507.
Calhoun, J. C. (Vice-President), report of the Memphis Convention prepared by, II. 344; extract from his speech in favor of protection, III. 348; extract from his report on roads and canals, 351; his course in respect to a national bank commended, 392, IV. 487; resolutions of, respecting State sovereignty, III. 448; his course in favor of the tariff of 1816 commented on, 503, IV. 512; an honest nullifier, 328; at the head of a committee to provide a national currency, 348; an alleged advocate of Continental money, 359; resolution of, relating to slavery in the District of Columbia, 371; argument of, in support of a national bank, 461; bill introduced by, respecting the collection of the public revenue, 462; opinions of, upon national bank, 461, 469; public and personal relations with Mr. Webster, 467; advocacy by, of State rights, 475, 478, 482; extract from remarks of, upon tariff of 1824, 475; course of, in regard to election of General Jackson, 475; sudden change of views upon sub-treasury system, 481; a supporter of Mr. Van Buren, 483; speech upon power of Congress as to the public revenue, 484; view of, as to powers granted by Constitution, 490; his denouncement of the measures of government, 498; attack upon Mr. Webster, 500; alleged adherence of, to State-rights party, 511; bill for internal improvements prepared by, 514; comments on his speech of Feb. 5, 1840, 528; his remarks in regard to annexation of Texas, V. 344; commendation of his remarks on Mexican war, 263, 264; obituary tribute to, 368.
California, establishment of a local government in, V. 328; formation of States from, 291; its declaration of independence, and discovery of gold in, 326; slavery excluded from, by nature, 350; expediency of early admission into the Union, 386, 405, 415; probable result of refusing admission to, 388; public lands and boundaries, 386, 388, 396, 401; nature of the country, ib.; irregular proceedings in forming constitution of, 414.
Canada, effect of its cession on New England Colonies, I. 33; its military roads, V. 108; invasion of, 112; rebellion in 1837, 117; supposed annexation of, 353; hostile movements in, VI. 258.
Canals, II. 410; transportation on, as affected by the "experiment," IV. 19.
Canning, his opinion of European and American governments, III. 192; his policy in respect to Spain and her colonies, 202; his approval of the Monroe declaration, 264; remark of, on the trade of the United States with the West Indies, 361.
Capital, distribution of, in United States, IV. 428; relation between, and labor, 428; investments of, difference between United States and England in regard to, 430.
Capitol, extension of, II. 603; foundation laid by Washington, 616.
Caroline (steamer), destruction of, 1837, V. 116, 128; VI. 355; capture of, a public transaction, 250, 253, 263.

Carrol, Charles, last survivor of signers of Declaration, I. 147.
Cass, Lewis, political opinions and services of, II. 440; character as a statesman, 440; resolutions of, respecting Oregon, disapproved, V. 61; Mexican speech of, 276; his letter to M. Guizot approved, VI. 345; his construction of the treaty of Washington referred to, 372, 374; his objection to the stipulation respecting the African squadron answered, 380.
Catharine the Second, of Russia, policy in respect to Greece, III. 82.
Channing, W. E., letter of, on subject of slavery, May 14, 1828, V. 366.
Chapman, Jonathan, Mayor of Boston, his address to Mr. Webster, II. 113.
Charities, legal definition of, V. 272, VI. 142; colleges included under, ib.; granting charters, in cases of, ib.
Charles the Second, I. 27, II. 443; his mode of destroying chartered rights, III. 28.
Charleston, S. C., arrival of Mr. Webster at, 7th May, 1847, II. 373.
Charters, to alter or vacate not legislative acts, V. 469; power claimed by British Parliament over, 469; effect of, upon the property of the corporation, 482; of the nature of a contract, 495.
Chateaubriand, quotation from his speech respecting the Holy Alliance, III. 73.
Chatham, Lord, his colonial policy, I. 33; his opinion of the first Congress, I. 123, 200.
Chicago Road, President's opinion in respect to appropriation for, I. 269.
China and the Sandwich Islands, VI. 463; letter to the Emperor of China, July 12, 1843, 475.
Choate, Hon. Rufus, II. 203.
Christian Charity defined, VI. 141; spirit of, 157.
Christianity, expediency of a declaration of belief in, as a qualification for office, III. 4, 6; and civilization, their reciprocal influence, 75; importance of teaching children the elements of, VI. 161; a part of the public law of Pennsylvania, 175.
Christian Ministry established by Christ, VI. 150; work of the, 151.
Christian Ministry and Religious Instruction of the Young, speech on, in the Supreme Court, VI. 133.
Church, grants to, cannot be rescinded, V. 483.
Circuit Courts of United States, as originally constituted, III. 153.
Circulation, paper, effects of a contraction of, IV. 447. See Banks, Currency.
Civil Law, maxim of, in regard to slavery, V. 309.
Claims for French Spoliations, justice of, admitted, IV. 162; relinquishment of, 169.
Clay, Henry, author of the American system, I. 244; remarks respecting, 157; his land bill, 1832, 251; his character and political services, II. 280; defence of his course respecting the South American states, 214; report of, on the French claims, quoted, IV. 156; resolution of, relating to slavery in the District of Columbia, 371; opposition to preëmption rights, 396.
Clayton, J. M., resolution of, on the tariff bill of 1846, V. 236; his explanation of Mr. Mann's mission, VI. 492.
Clergy, eulogium on, VI. 140.
Clinton, the New York and Erie Canal his monument, IV. 18.
Coal, abundance of, in Pennsylvania, II. 259; remarks on the reduction of duty on, and expediency of a duty on foreign, IV. 304, 307; cost of foreign, V. 210; value given to it by labor, 211.
Coasting Trade of the South secured from violation, V. 146.
Coin, banished by paper issues, III. 399.
Coinage, power of Congress over, and consequent power to regulate currency, IV. 460. See Banks, Currency.
College Livings, sacred character of, V. 489.
Colleges, eleemosynary corporations, V. 471, 477.
Colonial System of England made more liberal, III. 115.
Colonies, establishment of Greek, I. 15; of Roman, 18; New England, 19; West India, 19, 20; American, aim at independence, 26; New England, retarded, 27; English and Spanish, compared, 97; relations of the individual inhabitants of, with each other, VI. 111.
Colonists, English, character of, I. 101; required charters, 102; their allegiance to the king, 127.
Columbia, S. C., reception of Mr. Webster at, May, 1847, II. 395.
Columbia, Pa., described, and memorial from, presented, IV. 30.
Columbia River, use of, by England, V. 73, 76.
Columbus, portrayed, I. 60, 96.
Comity, nature of, defined, VI. 117; illustrations of, 119; law of, its existence between the several States, 121; of nations, not to be established by each state for itself, 125.
Commerce, during the existence of the Confederation, II. 173; committed to the care of the general government, 163, 205, IV. 368, 462, 464, VI. 18; its national character, II 206, III. 120; diversity of opinion relative to the regulation of, II. 231; extent of power of Congress to regulate, between the States, IV. 339, 425; centralization of, 470; unity of, 492, 495; recommendations of Old Congress, and resolution of House of Delegates of Virginia, in regard to, 493; as affected by danger of war, V. 61; with East Indies, as affected by tariff of 1846, 194. See Congress.

Commercial Credit, a modern creation, IV. 88; influence on liberty, 91.
Common Schools in New England, I. 403.
Commonwealth Bank, Boston, remarks on, IV. 377; deposits of the United States in, 384.
Compact and government as distinguished from each other, III. 467.
Compromise Bill, remarks on, 17th June, 1850, V. 381.
Compromise Measures, speech on, 17th July, 1850, V. 412; advantages from the passage of, 420.
Confederation, object of, II. 548; a compact, III. 346; historical notice of, 454; condition of the country under, 462, VI. 34, 101; styled a league, III. 466.
Confessions, how to be regarded, VI. 96.
Confidence, nature of official, III. 187.
Congress of Delegates at Philadelphia, 1774, I. 123; sat with closed doors, 130.
Congress of the United States, has no power over slavery in the States, I. 356, II. 94, III. 281; duties in respect to currency, I. 420, 425, II. 161, III. 56, IV. 22, 459; object of the first petition to, after the formation of the Constitution, an imposition of duties, II. 232, 286; power of declaring war vested in, 334; its recommendation in respect to public lands, III. 254; its power always continuous, 443; extent of its powers, 482, VI. 19; proceedings of the first, in respect to protective duties, 499; duties of both branches of, IV. 118; power of, in respect to the public moneys, 129, 485; medium in which public dues are to be paid regulated by, 272; power of, in respect to bankruptcy, V. 4; its power in regard to increase of States, 310; members of, instructed by State legislatures, 356, 423; its power to regulate commerce, VI. 8, 11, 15; and the States, argument respecting concurrent power of, 14; paramount authority of its laws, 19.
Congress of Verona denounces the Greek struggle, III. 83.
Connecticut, tenure of its judiciary, III 29; cedes her public lands to the United States, 255; law of, respecting steam navigation, VI. 7.
Connecticut River, beauty of the valley of, II. 417.
Consolidation disclaimed, I. 295; defined, III. 256, 303; Washington's idea of, 257.
Constitution of the United States, character of its founders, I. 203; Madison's opinion of, 204; executive view of, 271; designed to protect American labor, 284; meeting in Boston, in favor of adopting, 303; peculiarities of, 329; founded on compromise, 331; mode of settling its meaning, II. 164; the powers which it assigns to the general government, 225; to be maintained as a whole, 580; effect of, 582, VI. 575; provision of, in regard to fugitive slaves and apprentices, II. 549, 550, 574; beyond the power of, to bring more slave territory into the United States, 551; importance of a written, III. 29; violated by collecting the revenues in a depreciated currency, 51; to be interpreted by the judicial power, 335, 479; not a compact between sovereign States, 448; what it says of itself, 465; maintenance of, not a State, but an individual duty, 469; preamble of, 477; objections of Mr. Martin, 499; its provisions in respect to appointments and removals, I. 258, IV. 189, 192; powers conferred by, not always expressly granted, 490; originated in the necessity of uniformity in commercial regulations, II. 174, IV. 492, 494; first step towards establishment of, taken by Virginia, 494; balance of, deranged by admission of new slave States, V. 58; impaired by addition of territory, 292, 300; recognizes existence of slavery, 305; provides a medium for the payment of debts, and a uniform mode of discharging them, VI. 36; rights of citizens of different States under, 112; in reference to the States and the United States, 122; does not use the term Federal government, nor Sovereign States, 222; in respect to domestic insurrection, 237.
Constitution and the Union, speech for, 7th March, 1850, V. 324.
Constitutions of the States, mode of amendment, VI. 227.
Constructive presence defined, VI. 80.
Consul at the Sandwich Islands, salary recommended for, VI. 469.
Contraband of War, traffic in articles of, VI. 451.
Contract, nature of, includes grants, V. 493.
Contracts, obligation of, defined, VI. 26, 28; the law not a part of, 29; object of the constitutional provision respecting, 34; to be construed by the law of the place of contract, 123.
Convention, at Andover, 9th Nov., 1843, II. 159; at Valley Forge, 275; of Massachusetts, speeches in, 1820, III. 1; of 1787, remarks on the proceedings of, 473, 498; Harrisburg, character of, IV. 42; at Annapolis, in 1786, 494.
Convention, negotiated in London, 1774,

IV. 82; between France and England, articles of, relative to slave-trade, 149; ratification of, between France and the United States, 175.
Cooper, Mark A., Macon, Georgia, letter to, October 7th, 1851, VI. 598.
Copper Manufacture, injured by tariff of 1846, V. 194.
Corporations, system of, explained, II. 353; power to create, dependent on State legislature, V. 469; royal prerogative in regard to, ib.; power of, over funds possessed by them, 471; divers sorts of, ib.; eleemosynary, nature of, disposal of funds of, 471, 473, 478; private, right of visitation in, 472, 473, 475; franchises of, 479; property of, private property, 482; statutes creating private, cannot be repealed by legislature, 495; their charters to be considered contracts, ib.; supposed dangers arising from the independence of, 498; powers of, beyond territorial jurisdiction of the authority by which created, VI. 113; aim of, 123.
Corsica, wages in, II. 26; clothing, ib.
Cotton Manufactures, importance of, III. 136; of England and the United States, 138; extract from Calhoun's speech in favor of, 349; advantages for, in the South, V. 233.
Cotton, remarks of Mr. Moore respecting, in South Carolina, II. 237; influence of its production upon the South and upon slavery, V. 338.
Courts, opinions of, in respect to the fugitive slave law, II. 577; fixed terms for holding, V. 520.
Court of Errors of New York, practice of, III. 168.
Court of King's Bench, judgments of, how reversed, III. 168.
Crawford, W. H., IV. 422; circular of, respecting ad valorem duties, V. 175.
Credit, nature of, IV. 89; alleged dangers of, to liberty, 362; essential to Southern interests, 433.
Credit and Confidence, IV. 407.
Credit System, character of, in the United States, IV. 427, 432; its excess, V. 28.
Creole, case of, VI. 303.
Crews of United States merchant-vessels, rule respecting, V. 146.
Crittenden, J. J., instructions to, in reference to the McLeod case, V. 130.
Cuba, declaration respecting, III. 207; invaders of, pardoned by Captain-General, VI. 516; domiciliation in, 524.
Cube, duplication of, I. 182.
Cumberland Road Bill, approval of, IV. 219; advocated by Mr. Calhoun, 514.
Currency, defined, IV. 270; interference with, I. 362, IV. 404; its derangement, I. 373, 377, II. 15, IV. 20, 238; soundness of, I. 374; duty of government in respect to, 391, 425, IV. 314, 324, 331, 345, 366, 378; under the Confederation, I. 407, constitutional power respecting, not to be surrendered, 425; condition of, at the close of the war of 1812, II. 10; its restoration an object of the revolution of 1840, 132; the power of Congress over, 161, 237, IV. 22; the opinion of Washington and Madison, II. 237; evils arising from its depreciation, III. 51; prediction respecting, 542; specie basis of, how to be increased, IV. 100; important question respecting, 328; cannot be maintained by the States of uniform value, 340; power of Congress to regulate, extracts from Mr. Madison's message in regard to, 370, 426, 459, 461, 462; state of, in 1838, 441, 445; of the United States and England compared, 441, 445; impracticability of an exclusively metallic, 450, 451; alleged expansion of, in consequence of protective duties, 529.
Cushing, Thomas, delegate to Congress, I. 123.
Cushing, Caleb, appointed minister to China, VI. 467; instructions to, respecting his mission, 469.

D.

Dallas, George M., his casting vote on the tariff bill, II. 468; opinion of, respecting the power to coin money, IV. 336.
Dane, Nathan, drafted the Ordinance of 1787, III. 264, 277, VI. 552; apostrophe to, V. 425.
Danemora, iron from mines of, III. 142.
Dartmouth College, argument in the case of, V. 462; merits of its original charter, 499.
Davis, Isaac, eulogium on, VI. 601.
Davis, John, referred to, I. 418.
Davis, J. P., letter of, on the manufacture of hemp and cordage, V. 189.
Davy, Sir H., his analysis of soils, I. 445.
Dean, Prof. J., on apportionment of representation, III. 384, 389.
Dearborn, Gen., resolution respecting election of Senators, III. 8.
Debt, public, in 1840, IV. 546; responsibility of administration for, ib.; abolition of imprisonment for, V. 23, VI. 533; danger of incurring, in consequence of Mexican war, V. 155.
Declaration of Independence, I. 125; authorship of speeches in support of, and in opposition to, 149; foundation of the political rights of the U. States, II. 146; its celebration in Philadelphia, July 4, 1788, 353; anniversary of, 599.

Dedication, law of, VI. 204; English cases of, 208; Boston mode of, 211.
Defender of the Constitution, to whom belongs the title, I. 326.
Delaware, breakwater in, I. 162.
Democracy, questions on the true principles of, II. 35; abuse of the term, 92; policy of Northern, V. 343, 345.
Deposit Banks, remarks on, IV. 235; financial statements of, ib.; regulations of, 254; insufficient for the regulation of exchanges, 288.
Deposits, removal of, I. 368, IV. 106, 443; effect of, I. 421; remarks on, III. 506, IV. 3, 63; generally disapproved, III. 521; object of, 544; report on, IV. 50.
Deposits of public moneys, law regulating, I. 369; where to be made, IV. 51; power of the Secretary of the Treasury over, 51, V. 48; speech on the regulation of, IV. 200; requisitions of the deposit law, VI. 124.
Dexter, Samuel, character of, III. 329.
Dickinson, D. S., reply to, V. 109.
Diplomacy of the United States, I. 141.
Direct tax, declaration respecting, II. 32.
Disbursing officers, tenure of their office, IV. 182.
Discrimination in laying duties denied by South Carolina, III. 497.
Dissolution of the Union, evils of, I. 231; sentiments of the South on, V. 429.
Distress, occasioned by the removal of the deposits, III. 508; caused by political measures, remedy for, IV. 26.
Distribution of the surplus revenue, speech on, IV. 252.
District of Columbia, power of Congress in, III. 443, IV. 372; House of Representatives resolution respecting slavery in, 232; remarks on slavery in, 371.
Diversity in the races of men, II. 211.
Divine Right, a doctrine of the Holy Alliance, III. 70.
Dix, J. A., his vote for the admission of Texas, V. 343, 345; reply to remarks of, 104.
Domestic Industry, not limited to manufactures, III. 129.
Domicile, a right to change, VI. 523; decision of the Supreme Court in respect to, 523.
Domiciliation in Cuba, provisions relating to, VI 524.
Dorr, Thomas W., at the head of the revolutionary party in Rhode Island, VI. 218; convicted of treason, 234.
Downs, Mr., resolutions offered by, on the death of Gen. Taylor, V. 407.
Drainage, in England, I. 450.
Duane, W. J., his removal disapproved, IV. 105.
Duché, Rev. Mr., anecdote of, VI. 162.
Duke of York, coal mine of, 305.
Durfee, Chief Justice, extract from charge of, VI. 235.
Dutch Loan, approved by the executive, IV. 94.
Duty upon imports, the object of the first petitions presented to Congress, II. 232, et seq.; on tea and coffee, to supply revenue for Mexican war, V. 153.

E.

Eastern States not opposed to the West, III. 261.
East India Company, extent of its trading operations, VI. 113.
Education, effect of its diffusion, I. 41, 306, 403; its true aims and purposes, II. 107, 108; in the new States to be encouraged by the government, III. 292; tendency of the system in Girard College, VI. 147.
Eldon, Lord, opinion of, in the case of Bedford charity, VI. 170.
Elections, freedom of, I. 263.
Eleemosynary Corporations, nature of, V. 471, 478.
Electors and the elected, restraints on, VI. 225.
Ellsworth, Oliver, speech on adopting the Constitution of the United States, III. 475; on the Constitution, 485.
Elmore, F. H., resolution of, supporting Mr. Polk, II. 261; his address to Mr. Webster, 373; tribute to, V. 371.
Embargo, I. 145; Mr. Hillhouse's opinion of, III. 326; opposed by Massachusetts, 327; its constitutionality denied by Mr. Dexter, 329.
Emigration, a common incident, I. 14: Grecian, 17; the extent of, to this country, II. 538; of artisans, English opinion in respect to, III. 117; England benefited by, VI. 321; to Texas, 454.
Employment, the source of a people's prosperity, V. 227, 231.
England, its ties to the United States, I. 438; agriculture of, 446; unsettled questions with, II. 139; increase of its power, 212; exercise of the veto power in, 336; tenacious of protective principles, 350, III. 107; paper system of, and its effect on prices, 101; policy in respect to paper currency, 109; warehouse system of, 116; policy of, in regard to shipping interests. 147; provisions of register acts of, 148; claim respecting her colonial trade, 363; power of, IV. 110; maritime power of, in the late war, 505; supposed reference to bankrupt laws of, by framers of Constitution, V. 7; responsibility of the destruction of the Caroline assumed by, 128; commercial arrangements with, regulated, 136; opposed to ad valorem duties, 178; representative system of, VI. 223; subjects of, permitted to engage in foreign wars, 257; law of, respecting slavery, 309.

English Corn Laws, effect of the repeal of, V. 240.
English Language, its correct use in United States, I. 102.
English Race, its extension, II. 211.
English Revolution of 1688, how effected, III. 16; organization of government in the time of, VI. 226.
Evans, Geo., V. 164.
Euclid, geometry of, I. 183.
Europe in the nineteenth century, I. 63; her power annihilated in America, ib.; effect of the pacification of, in the United States, III. 265; distinction in, between capital and labor, IV. 428.
European Colonization, declaration respecting, III. 206.
Everett, Edward, Governor of Massachusetts, remarks of, at a public dinner given to Mr. Webster in Faneuil Hall, 24th July, 1838, I. 413; his mission to England, II. 127; his letter respecting the northeastern boundary, V. 98.
Ewing, Thomas, moves a resolution to rescind Treasury Circular, I. 371, IV. 265; his plan for a national bank, II. 132.
Exchange, necessity for providing for, II. 135; cause of difference in, III. 43, IV. 332; rate of, 127; influence of Bank of United States on, 403; derangement of, 510, IV. 283, 408.
Exchequer Plan, presented to Congress, session of 1842, II. 134; opinion of Mr. Webster of, 135.
Executive of United States, extension of its power, I. 257, 357, IV. 13; its power over the press, I. 266; refuses to execute a law of Congress, 269; change in the fiscal system effected by, 368; difficulty in regulating the power of, II. 87; responsibility of, in respect to foreign missions, III. 182; money borrowed by, by, 116; instructions of, in respect to France, 167; doctrines of the Protest respecting, 136; power defined, 186, V. 283; cannot interfere directly with judicial proceedings, VI. 252; communications to Congress by, not the subject of diplomatic correspondence, 492.
Experiment" with the currency, its operation, I. 389; result of, III. 537, 545, IV. 326, 413; universality of distress occasioned by, IV. 17; failure of, 35.
Exportation, as affected by protection, IV. 537.
Exports from the United States, III. 98.
Ex post facto laws, provision of the Constitution regarding, V. 493.
Expunging Resolution, Constitution violated by, IV. 295.
Extradition of Criminals, provisions in treaty of Washington respecting, V. 140; imitated by foreign governments, 142; provided for, VI. 354; in the absence of treaty stipulations, a matter of comity, 405.
Eyre, Lord Commissioner, opinion of, respecting chartered charities, V. 476.

F.

Faneuil Hall, dinner at, I. 163; proceedings of public dinner at, 413; speech delivered in, 24th October, 1848, previous to the Presidential election, II. 449.
Farrow, Mr., his address to Mr. Webster, on behalf of the students of South Carolina College, May, 1847, II. 395.
Featherstonhaugh, Mr., retains the Mitchell map, II. 144; publications of, 152.
Featherstonhaugh and Mudge, report of, V. 91, 108.
Federalist, authors of, I. 199; the independence of the judiciary, III. 31.
Festival of the Sons of New Hampshire, 7th Nov., 1849, II. 497.
"Fifth Monarchy Men" of Cromwell's time, II. 582.
Fillmore, President, address to, II. 620; communication from, announcing death of General Taylor, 10th July, 1850, V. 407.
Finances, state of, during Mr. Polk's administration, II. 355; deplorable condition of, III. 49, source of the difficulties in, IV. 238; speech on the state of the, in 1841, V. 40.
Financial Policy, propositions respecting, III. 512; of General Jackson, 517.
Fire at New York, duties on goods destroyed by, to be refunded, I. 379.
First Commandment of the Decalogue the fountain of all revealed truth, VI. 153.
Fisheries, effects of the tariff of 1846 upon, II. 467.
Fishing Bounties, paid in irredeemable bills, IV. 378.
Fitch, John, exclusive right of steam navigation granted to, VI. 5, 16.
Fitzsimmons, Mr., an advocate for protective duties, III. 499.
Flagg, George, his painting of the Landing of the Pilgrims, I. 51.
Flax, production and manufacture of, as affected by tariff of 1846, V. 192.
Florida, acquisition of, I. 355, II. 551, V. 339; admission of, into Union, V. 285.
Foot's Resolution, Mr. Webster's first speech on, III. 248; second speech on, 270; last remarks on, 343.
Foreign Capital, effect of, IV. 261.

Foreign Labor, preference given to, by the tariff of 1846, V. 188, 202.
Forsyth, John, moves to reduce duty on cotton, III. 298; his explanation of the "experiment," 536; correspondence with Mr. Fox respecting the northeastern boundary, V. 87, 89.
Fortification Bill, speech on the loss of, IV 205.
Fortifications of United States, II. 613.
Forty-bale Theory, result of the discussion of, IV. 529.
Foster, John, extract from his Essay on the Evils of Popular Ignorance, VI. 163.
Fox, H. S., correspondence of, with Mr. Forsyth respecting the northeastern boundary, V. 87, 89; his letter respecting Alexander McLeod, VI. 24.
France, subdivision of landed property, I. 36, 52; remarkable prediction respecting its government, 37; patronage of the press in, by the government, II. 90; popular instruction in, 108; invasion of Spain by, III. 78; entrance of the allies into, its effect on prices, 100; conference of the Minister of, with Continental Congress, 197; alliance with, declared void, 458; her complaints against the United States, IV. 170; letters of marque and reprisal recommended, 228; articles of convention of, with England, relative to African slave-trade, V. 149.
"Franchises," definition of term synonymous with "liberties," V. 479.
Francis the First, remark of, to the Hungarian Diet, VI. 495.
Franklin, Benjamin, I. 27, 126; his letters to the Count de Vergennes, II. 143; meeting at the house of, 167; on protection, IV. 510.
Franklin, State of, constitution of, and its provisions in relation to currency, IV. 520.
Frauds on the Revenue, V. 185.
Free Blacks from the North, treatment of, by South Carolina, V. 360, 432.
Freehold Suffrage, examples of, VI. 241.
Free Institutions, the work of time, II. 392.
Free Press, its importance, I. 264.
Free Soil Party, platform of, II. 433.
Free States, remonstrances of, against the Mexican War, V. 254.
Free Trade, its consequences, Ireland an example, II. 351; opinion of English Parliament in respect to, III. 111.
Freight, rates of, III. 105, 147; of iron from Sweden, 144; on articles manufactured and unmanufactured, V. 217, 223.
French Chambers, occurrence in, I. 223; a member rejected from, for giving pledges to constituents, V. 424.
French Government, bill of exchange on, protested, IV. 72.
French and Indians, New Hampshire settlements attacked by, II. 501.
French Spoliations, the history of, II. 347, IV. 160; bill for the indemnification of the sufferers under, vetoed by Mr. Polk, II. 348; speech on, IV. 152.
Friends, Society of, political preferences of, II. 475; character of, IV. 44; their moderation commended, VI. 561.
Frothingham, Richard, his History of the Siege of Boston, I. 58, 81.
Fugitive Slave Bill, remarks on presenting, V. 373.
Fugitive Slave Law of 1850, II. 558; the two objects of, 576; more favorable to the fugitive than the law of 1793, ib.; treasonable proceedings in reference to, 577.
Fugitive Slaves, rights of the South, and duties of the North, in regard to, V. 354; few cases of reclamation of, 433, VI. 560; early admission of the justice of restoring, 434; provision for the surrender of, VI. 552.
Fugitives from justice, provisions in regard to, in treaty of Washington, V. 139, 142.
Fugitives from labor to be surrendered, II. 550.
Fulton, Robert, his right to navigate the North River and Sound, IV. 464.
Fulton and Livingston, right of steam navigation granted to, VI. 6.
Fur Trade of Hudson's Bay Company, value of, V. 103.

G.

Gage, Gov., his rejection of John Adams, I. 122.
Gaines, Major, his account of New Mexico, V. 295, VI. 570.
Gallagher, W. D., his account of the growth of Western trade, II. 606.
Gallatin, his course respecting the removal of deposits, IV. 66.
Gardner, George, letter of, respecting duty on sulphuric acid, V. 200.
Gardiner, R. H., and others, letter to, VI. 566.
Gedney, Lieut., Amistad taken by, VI. 402.
General Government, should not interfere with the distinct duties of the State governments, II. 94; the only authority that can furnish a uniform currency, 163; prohibited from all interference with slavery in the States, V. 311; powers of, 387.
Georgia, her patriotism, II. 403; the abundance of her resources, 404.
German Emigrants, taxes on, VI. 414.
German Zoll-Verein, object of, VI. 409

Ghent, commissioners of, by whom instructed, III. 191; treaty of (1814), in regard to northeastern boundary, V. 84.
Gibbons, Thomas, anecdote of, II. 399.
Gibbons v. Ogden, the case of, II. 402; remark of Judge Wayne respecting, 399; argument in the case of, VI. 3.
Gilman, Nicholas, II. 507.
Girard, Stephen, suit of his heirs, VI. 133.
Girard College, provision of Girard's will respecting, VI. 135; scheme of, presumes that Christianity is not necessary to morality, 152; no Sabbath in, 155.
Glass, policy of duty on, III. 136.
Goodhue, Jonathan, II. 205.
Goodridge, improbability of the robbery of, V. 446, 456.
Gorham, Benjamin, I. 166.
Government, its nature and constitution, I. 35; difficulty of establishing, 73; its permanency, 77, 205; its objects, 190, 283, III. 13, IV. 314, 330; its influence on the moral and religious feelings of a people, II. 106; connection with property, III. 15; absolute or regulated, the question of the age, 65; sovereignty of, a European idea, 469; immunity of individuals acting under the orders of, VI. 264.
Government, American, its origin and character, I. 35, 203, III. 321; its protection to persons and property, 206; conflict between general and State, 209; its organization by Washington, 228; in respect to education, 305; its duties, 346, IV. 518; its power over State banks, III. 53; protection afforded by, to the West, 251; powers of, in respect to internal improvement, 291; its relations to individuals not to be dissolved by State authority, 477; its judicial coextensive with its legislative power, 483; its effect on credit, IV. 90; its duty respecting the currency, 331; systems of, mode of changing, VI. 224; national and State limited, 224.
Government Press, its power, II. 90.
Grafton, N. H., speech on the opening of the Northern Railroad to, II. 409.
Graham, Major, report on communication between Maine and Canada, V. 109.
Grain, demand for, in England, V. 231; consumption of, in Massachusetts, 232.
Granite, its use in architecture, I. 189.
Grants, included under contracts, V. 493; of lands by legislature, for religious purposes, cannot be rescinded, 483.
Greece, its interesting condition, I. 75; liberty of, II. 600; our obligations to, III. 61; condition of, 78; insurrection in, 85; congress of, its authority, 86; has accomplished much, 89; propriety of the appointment of agents to, 90.
Greeks, limited political knowledge of, I. 15; sympathy for, III. 90.
Green Dragon Tavern, resolutions at, II. 169.
Griswold, George, toast proposed by, in honor of Mr. Webster, II. 203.
Grotius, his opinion of the object of government, III. 14.
Guizot, speech on the doctrine of instruction, V. 423.

H.

Hall's Stream, secured to N. Hampshire, V. 113.
Hall, Dudley C., and others, letter to, on the Union, VI. 563.
Hamilton, Alexander, his services, I. 198.
Hamilton, Gen. James, speech of, at a dinner given to Mr. Webster, II. 384.
Hamilton, J. A., and others, letter to, VI. 582.
Hancock, J., recommends association for protecting navigation, I. 301; presides over Congress, 132; signature to the Declaration, 137; notice of, II. 204.
Hanover, treaty with, VI. 412.
Hapsburg, House of, its possessions, VI. 496.
Harbor Bill, opinion of the executive respecting, I. 270; object of, II. 338; vetoed by President Polk, 337; his reasons, as expressed in his messages, 340; copy of the bill, with its several objects, 359.
Harbors, the power of making, II. 344.
Hardin, Col., his account of Mexican territory, V. 298, VI. 570.
Harrington, quoted, I. 37; object of his Oceana, III. 14.
Harrisburg Convention, nomination by, II. 73; memorial from, IV. 40.
Harrison, Wm. Henry, confidence in, II. 52; popularity of, 101; opinion of, respecting the Caroline and the imprisonment of McLeod, V. 123, 133.
Hartford Convention, design of, III. 314.
Harvard College, I. 29; object of its foundation, 43.
Havana, execution of Americans at the, VI. 508, 510.
Haven, Messrs. John, and others, letter to, VI. 543.
Hayne, Robert Y., eulogium on, II. 387; speaks on Foot's resolution, III. 248, 270; rejoinder to, 343; his votes on internal improvement, 301.
Haywood, of N. Carolina, V. 212.
Heber, Bishop, extract from, II. 394.
Hemp, growth of, to be encouraged, III 145; effect of increased duties on, 146; objections to increased duty on, 243; effect of the proposed tariff of 1846 on the manufacture of, V. 189.

Hendricks, W., upon the claims of Indiana to public lands, V. 390.
Henry the Seventh, colonies planted in the reign of, I. 93; his internal policy, 93.
Henry, Patrick, II. 85.
Hermitage, supposed visit of its occupant to the Senate Chamber, IV. 483.
Highway, modes in which land becomes public, VI. 186.
Hillard, Mr., his remarks in Massachusetts Senate commended, V. 356.
Hillhouse, Mr., his opinion respecting the embargo, III. 326.
History, God's providence in human affairs, II. 399.
Hoar, Samuel, V. 432.
Holland, arbitration of the king of, II. 150; its commerce with the United States, III. 121.
Holmes, Oliver W., quoted, II. 616.
Holt, Lord, extract from, respecting the power of visitors, V. 473.
Holy Alliance, its origin, III. 67; principles of, 69, 74, 84, VI. 228.
Home Market, effect of manufactures on, III. 106.
Home Valuation, compared with foreign, V. 171.
Homestead, attachment to, IV. 432.
Hooker, his eulogy on Law, VI. 122.
Horner, II. 134.
House of Representatives, its duty respecting foreign missions, III. 184; first apportionment of, 384.
Hudson's Bay Company, value of its fur trade, V. 103.
Hülsemann, J. G., letter of, to Mr. Webster, Sept. 30, 1850, respecting Mr. Mann's mission, VI. 488.
Hume, his remark on the administration of justice, I. 208.
Hungarians, arrival of, in the United States, VI. 498.
Hungary, her efforts for freedom, II. 514.
Hunt, B. F., speech of, at a dinner of the New England Society, II. 378.
Huskisson, II. 134; in respect to the nature of commerce, III. 121.

I.

Immigration, American system in respect to, II. 539; encouraged by Mexico in her wars, VI. 455.
Immortality, yearning of the soul for, VI. 155.
Impeachment, power of, vested in the Senate, from analogy of English Constitution, V. 505; law governing, 512; in cases of, there must be a breach of a known law, 515; definition of the term, 513; nature of proceedings in, ib
Importations, letter addressed to the tradesmen and manufacturers of Massachusetts, by the mechanics of Boston, relative to, II. 193, 194; by whom made, 459; extravagant desire for, IV. 555; increase of, by change of tariff, V. 162; means of paying for, 165.
Imports, excess of, over exports explained, III. 119; duties on, alleged to fall on exports, IV. 528; classes of, V. 218; tables of, 219.
Impressment, correspondence with Lord Ashburton in respect to, II. 541; how affected by the correspondence connected with the treaty of Washington, V. 145; rule of the United States respecting, VI. 325; letter of Mr. Webster to Lord Ashburton respecting, 318; letter of the Secretary of State, 356.
Imprisonment for Debt, views respecting, V. 22; letter respecting, VI. 533.
Imprisonment of free blacks at the South, V. 432.
Inauguration of Washington, I. 201.
Independent Treasury, II. 77.
India Cottons, largely imported, VI. 512.
Indian Treaties, I. 240, V. 44, 50.
Indian Wars, nature of the service, V. 410.
Indiana, its growth, I. 401; internal improvements of, 402; claims a right to the public lands within the State, V. 390.
Indians and French, dangers from, II. 501.
Indictments, precision in, V. 514.
Indorsement, practice of, checked by bankrupt bill, V. 29.
Indorsers, not to be preferred, V. 29.
Ingersoll, C. J., reply to speech of, V. 133.
Ingham, Mr., resolution of, respecting ad valorem duties, V. 175.
Insolvents, unfortunate position of, V. 20.
Insurance, rates of, III. 105.
Insurance Companies, VI. 124.
Insurrection in the States, duties of the general government in respect to, VI. 231.
Interference, by force, a violation of international law, III. 74; right of, claimed at Laybach, 71; not to be inferred from the expression of opinion, 91; abstinence from, by the United States, VI. 496.
Internal Improvements, in New England, I. 34; in United States, 167; appropriations for, constitutional, 169, 347; constitutionality of, denied by Gen. Jackson, 256; influence of, 310; principles to be regarded in appropriations for, 405; power of Congress over, II. 238; objections of Mr. Polk to, 340; progress of, III. 99; when attention was directed to, 296, IV. 513; general advantage of, III. 289; at the West, opposition of the South to, 293; a doctrine of South Carolina, 297; Mr. Calhoun's question respecting, 302; necessity of appropriations for, IV. 249, 506, 552; effect of, IV. 261.

Internal Trade, one of the most important interests, II. 7; its movements, 8.
Invoices, fraudulent, V. 176; remarkable provision respecting, 181; statutes respecting, 183.
Ireland, an example of the impolicy of free trade, II. 351; cause of her misfortunes, I. 299, V. 227.
Irish, emigration of, to America, II. 538.
Iron, a product of Pennsylvania, needs protection, II. 261; effects of the tariff of 1846 on the manufacture of, in Pennsylvania, 469, III. 137; effect of increased duties on, 146; trade in, as affected by ad valorem duties, V. 203; labor employed in manufacturing, 207.
Irrigation, in England, I. 452.

J.

Jackson, Gen., letter of, to Mr Monroe, I. 153; opinions respecting tariff, 242; refuses to approve bill for the payment of claim of Massachusetts for militia expenses, 254; his exercise of the veto power, 267; his course relative to nullification, 292; intercourse with, 345; called a representative of the whole American people, 360; policy in regard to the Bank of the United States, 364; inconsistent in his opinions respecting currency, 421; sole opponent of Mr. Adams, not elected to overthrow the currency, his opinion of the constitutionality of the United States Bank, II. 11; cause of his change of views, 12; involved in a controversy with the United States Bank, 43, 452, IV. 12; his re-election, II. 62; character and policy of, 315; and James K. Polk, the difference of their policy on the subject of protection, 316; on duties on imports, 317; Mr. Webster's support of the administration of, in the case of South Carolina nullification, 585; vetoes the Bank bill, III. 416; protest of, IV. 103; admits the duty of the government to provide a national currency, 351; in favor of a judicious tariff, 477; his efforts to settle the northeastern boundary, V. 84.
James the First, signal instance of his tyranny, IV. 120.
James the Second, resisted in New England, I. 28.
Jay, Chief Justice, his treaty with England, V. 338; remark of, VI. 222; eulogium on, 583; extract from his writings, 584.
Jefferson, Thomas, his death, I. 111; birth and education, 124; elected a member of the First Congress, 125, 140; Governor of Virginia, 139; Notes on Virginia, ib.; minister abroad, 140; Secretary of State, ib.; Vice-President, 141; President, ib.; Manual, ib.; his old age, ib.; founds University of Virginia, ib.; opinion respecting removals from office, 259; his correspondence respecting the Confederation, III. 473; rule of, respecting citizenship, VI. 325.
Jewish Talmuds, VI. 165.
Johnson, Mr. Justice, his opinion in the Fulton case, IV. 465.
Johnson, Hon. R. M., his efforts for the abolition of imprisonment for debt, V. 23.
Johnston, Samuel, III. 474.
Jones, Sir William, extract from, II. 602.
Joseph the Second, VI. 494.
Judge, the elevated character of an upright, II. 391.
Judges, should be constantly employed, III. 160, 173.
Judicial decisions, protest against disregard of, II. 49.
Judiciary of United States, its functions, I. 208; vacancies in, how filled, 212; independence of, 214; Washington's regard for, 228; anticipated change in, 276; its mode of action, III. 7; independence of, 26, 31; remarks on the, 1826, 150; history of the, 151, 156; plans for improving, 158; main support of the government, 163; extent of its powers, 482, V. 130; Madison's opinion respecting, III. 483; Pinckney's opinion of the, 484; bill for its organization introduced by Ellsworth, 486.
Juries, mode of addressing, II. 393.
Jury, trial by, not provided for in fugitive act of 1793, VI. 557.
Justice, the great interest of man on earth, II. 300; administration of, the great end of human society, 391.

K.

Kearney, Gen., takes possession of New Mexico, VI. 482.
Kendall, G. W., case of, VI. 423, 429.
Kennistons, defence of, V. 441; historical note on the trial of, ib.
Kent, Chancellor, remarks at a dinner in New York, I. 193; eulogized, 214.
Kentucky, accumulation of business in the United States courts in, III. 157; complaints of slaveholders in, VI. 562.
King, Gov., proclamation of, referred to, VI. 218.
King, Rufus, resolution of, in 1785, regarding slavery, III. 283; on impressment, VI. 218, 323.

Kinney, Messrs. William, and others, of Staunton, Virginia, letter to, VI 573.
Kossuth, Louis, demanded of Turkey by the Emperor of Austria, II. 614; his communication to the American chargé d'affaires, VI. 498; application for the release of, 591.
Ko-tou, instructions respecting, VI. 470.
Knapp, J. F., argument on the trial of, VI. 41.
Knowledge, diffusion of, in United States, II. 614; progress of, during the century, IV. 437.

L.

Labor, respectability of American, II. 175, V. 226; the source of wealth, II. 259; how to be protected, III. 103; different prices of, 141; the great interest of the country, 534; diminished price of, IV. 19; relation between, and capital, in the United States, 428; its ramifications, 434; necessity of employment of, 536; advantages of high wages of, 537; gives value to manufactured articles, V. 211.
Laborers, character of Northern, V. 360; on the public works, VI. 542.
Lafayette, at Bunker Hill, I. 58, 69; noticed, 85.
Land, its subdivision favorable to liberty, I. 37; price of, in England and Massachusetts, 445.
Landing at Plymouth, II. 201.
Land Titles, judicial decisions respecting, III. 171.
Lands, Public, appropriated in aid of internal improvements, I. 169; distribution of proceeds of, 363; inconsistent legislation respecting, II. 178; disposition to be made of, 541, 542, III. 250; whence obtained, I. 350, III. 253; the crown, 254; Northern and Southern mode of disposing of, 263; policy in respect to sales of, I. 352, 353; doctrine of appropriations from, for local improvement, III 291; reduction of price favored by New England, 294; augmented sales of, IV. 261; large settlements on, 393; objection to auction sales of, without preëmption rights, 396; right of preëmption to actual settlers on, 391; remarks on the graduation of the price of, 523, 526; estimated increase of sale resulting from reduction in price, V. 155; proceeds of, to be devoted to the colonization of the free blacks, 364; control of a nation over, 389, 393; decision of Supreme Court, upon authority of United States over, 395, 402; taxation of, by States, 405.
Langdon, John, descendants of, II. 507.
Lathrop, Messrs. F. S, and others, New York, letter to. VI. 577.
Law, the profession of, II. 390; the basis of public liberty, 392; Mr. Webster's acknowledged indebtedness to the profession of, 394; defined, VI. 38.
Law of Nations, its universality, VI. 122.
Law of the Land, defined, V. 487.
Laws, executive opinions in respect to, I. 269; resistance to, recommended by South Carolina, III. 324; validity of, not to be determined by the motives for their passage, 496.
Laybach, circular of sovereigns at, III 69, 202, VI. 228, 495.
Lay preaching and lay teaching, VI. 148.
League, defined, III. 457.
Lebanon, N. H., opening of the Northern Railroad to, 17th Nov., 1847, speech of Mr. Webster on the occasion, II. 414.
Lee, Richard Henry, resolution of the 7th of June, 1776, I. 125.
Legal Currency, speech on, III. 48.
Legislation, state of society to be regarded in, III. 138; necessary to give effect to the Constitution, 175; for conquered country, not in the power of the executive, V. 263, 268; will of the people to be ascertained by, VI. 227.
Legislative day, duration of, IV. 218.
Legislature, tendency of, to encroachment, III. 11, 29; its two branches to be checks on each other, 10, 12; cannot rescind grants, V. 483.
Legislatures, restrictions on, V. 500.
Lexington, I. 68.
Liberties, defined, V. 479.
Liberty, love of religious, I. 11; the creature of law, II. 393; exists in proportion to wholesome restraint, 393; influence of commerce on, IV. 91; characteristics of, 122; contests for, 133.
Lighthouses, Washington's opinion respecting, II. 239.
Lincolnshire, Pilgrims in, I. 13.
Linseed Oil, manufacture of, statistics respecting, V. 191.
Literature, its influence, I. 49; advantages of a love for, 143; advance of the United States in, II. 611.
Livermore, Samuel, II. 507.
Liverpool, Lord, II. 134.
Livingston, Chancellor, his services, I. 126, 201, VI 6.
Loans, power of States to contract, VI. 537.
Local association, its power, II. 277; differences, the bane of the country, 93; institutions for local purposes, and general institutions for general purposes, 207; partialities, denouncement of, IV. 498.
Localisms, cannot destroy our system of government, II. 526.
Log Cabin, origin of the term, II. 29.

Lombardy, elements of Christian religion taught in, VI. 163.
Lopez, instigates the invasion of Cuba, VI. 513; intercession for survivors of his expedition, 515.
Louisiana, acquisition of, I. 145, 355, V. 137, 339; Jefferson's opinion in respect to, II. 551; convention with France respecting, IV. 177; admission of, into the Union, V. 285.
Louisville Canal, remarks on the purchase of the stock in, IV. 247.
Lowndes, Mr., character of, IV. 422.
Lumber, trade in, at Albany, IV. 18.
Lunt, Henry, letter of, on the laying of the corner-stone of the Capitol by Washington, II. 621.
Luther v. Borden, questions presented by the case of, VI. 231.
Luther's Reformation, I. 94.
Luxuries, duties on, diminished by tariff of 1846, V. 237.

M.

MacDuffie, his opposition to Western settlements, III. 267; speech on internal improvements referred to, 299.
Machinery, not labor-saving but labor-doing, IV. 439.
Madison, James, I. 199; his public services, 202; knowledge of the Constitution, 204, III. 305, 319, IV. 301; on nullification, I. 205; respecting removal from office, 258, II. 89; on impeachment, I. 359; on a national bank, 391, IV. 342, 483, II. 17; the duty of Congress respecting the currency, I. 420, II. 63; messages of 1814 and 1815, on the currency, 10, 17, III. 529, IV. 370; on coining of money, II. 153; duties on imports, 236, III. 500; on the judiciary, III. 483; instructions of, to Mr. Pinkney, IV. 175; wisdom of, 421; admission of new States, V. 285; on slavery, 334.
Maine, tenure of its judiciary, III. 29; on French claims, IV. 154; border difficulties in 1839, V. 93; agreement with Gen. Jackson's administration, in 1832, 97; patriotism of, in settlement of the northeastern boundary, 101, VI. 273; advantages gained by the settlement of the northeastern boundary, V. 102; interests of navigation in, 224; legislature of, convened, VI. 275.
Maine Commissioners, Mr. Webster's letter to, VI. 279.
"Majority must govern," a republican principle, III. 486.
Mann, A. D., instructions to, VI, 499.
Mansfield, Lord, opinion of, on colleges, V. 47; on chartered rights, 470.
Manufactures, Washington's regard for, I. 228; act of 1824 respecting, 297, III. 131; in Virginia, II. 195; first law for protection of, III. 503.
Manufacturing Interests, not local, II. 178.
Map of Graham, Talcot, and Renwick, V. 108.
Maps, singular discovery of, II. 144; controversy upon, 149.
Marathon, battle of, I. 7.
Marcy, Gov., in relation to Texan boundary, II. 327.
Maritime Rights, letter to Lord Ashburton respecting, VI. 303.
Market, comparative advantages of foreign and home, IV. 535, V. 232.
Marriages, validity of, VI. 307.
Marsh, Geo. P., letter to, respecting Kossuth, VI. 591.
Marshall, Chief Justice, anecdote of, II. 334; opinion of, in the case of the United States Bank v. Deveaux, VI. 114.
Marshall, J. G., address of, I. 400.
Marshfield, speech at, Sept. 1, 1848, II. 425; case of non-user in, VI. 208
Marston, Stephen W., account of the Kenniston case furnished by, V. 441.
Martial Airs of England, IV. 110.
Martial Law, nature of, VI. 240.
Martin, Mr., opinion of, respecting the judiciary, III. 483; his objections to the Constitution, 499.
Maryland, its settlement, I. 60.
Mason, Jeremiah, obituary remarks of Mr Webster, II. 479.
Mason, J. M., commendation of, V. 337.
Massachusetts, her participation in the English Revolution, I. 28; commerce of, 29; claim on general government for militia expenses, 253; her duty, 277; soil, 445; agricultural capacity, 458; boundary between, and Nova Scotia, II. 146; products of other States consumed by, 245; natural productions of, 404; character of legislation in respect to property, III. 19; cedes her public lands to the United States, 255, policy respecting the tariff, 305; eulogium on, 317, IV. 295, V. 435; opposes the embargo, III. 327; form of its ratification of the Constitution, 476; breadstuffs produced by, 536, V. 232; products of, in 1837, IV. 435; silver plate in, 437; general prosperity of, 439; correspondence with, respecting the settlement of northeastern boundary, V. 99; commissioners appointed by, 101; as affected by treaty of Washington, 113, 137; resolutions of, on Mexican war, 255; opposed to acquisition of territory, 256; her interest in the settlement of the slavery question, 426; attachment of, to the Union, 435.

Massachusetts Charitable Mechanic Association, I. 81, 83.
Mass Meeting at Saratoga, 19 Aug., 1840, speech at, II. 5; at Albany, 27 Aug., 1844, speech at, 219.
Mathematics, its objects, I. 180.
Mayflower, compact signed in her cabin, I. 22; object of her voyage, 84; importance of the voyage of, to human society, II. 525.
McCall, Lieut.-Col., instructions to, VI. 480.
McCleary, I. 70; fell at Charlestown, II. 505.
McCulloch, Mr., on the importance of high wages, II. 176; opinion of, respecting Ireland, V. 229.
McDowell, Gov. James, V. 358.
McKinley, opinions of, concerning public lands, V. 392.
McLane, Louis, his amendment to the resolution respecting the Panama mission, III. 178; instructions to, in respect to colonial trade, II. 435, III. 357.
McLeod, Alexander, the case of, II. 119, 120, VI. 247; arrest of, in New York, V. 116, 120, 133; letter of Mr. Webster respecting, 125; proceedings in respect to, VI. 254, 266.
Maysville Road, bill for, vetoed, I. 267.
Mechanical Philosophy, defined, I. 178; its history, 181.
Mechanics Institution of Boston, lecture before, I. 177.
Melville, Major, removal of, from office, I. 260.
Members of Congress, appointment of to office, I. 263.
Memphis Convention, resolutions and report of, II. 343.
Mercantile Classes, II. 205.
Mercantile Profession, its distinguished representatives, II. 204.
Merchants' Meeting in Wall Street, New York, 28th September, 1840, speech delivered at, on the currency and State banks, II. 55.
Merchants of Boston, benevolence of, I. 431.
Merchant Vessels, national territory, VI. 320.
Merrill, Benj., his introductory note to the argument on the trial of J. F. Knapp, VI. 41.
Merrimack River, valley of, II. 417.
Message of Gen. Jackson, 1829, his views of banking, I. 365; of J. Q. Adams, respecting northeastern boundary, V. 84; of Millard Fillmore, announcing the death of Gen. Taylor, V. 407; respecting the Caroline, VI. 293; transmitting the treaty of Washington, 347; respecting the right of search, 376, 378; relating to China and the Sandwich Islands, 463.
Metallic Currency, inconsistency of the administration respecting, IV. 450.
Methodist Church v. Remington, decision in the case of, VI. 175.
Methodist Episcopal Church, division of, V. 331.
Mexican War, territory acquired by, unfit for slavery, II. 555; its declaration by Congress anticipated by the President, 329; expense of, V. 155; objects of, 157, 254, 271, 273, 280, 328; remarks on, March 1st, 1847, 253; worthlessness of territory acquired by, 294.
Mexico, cause of war with, II. 319; war with, 326; government of, 327; condition of, 327; explanation of vote on the treaty with, 443, 554; necessity of granting supplies for prosecuting war with, V. 152; embassy to, recommended, 157, 159; unreasonable conduct of, 158; warlike efforts of, 213; legislation for, by the executive, 263, 268; appropriations of treasures of, 264, 268; peace with, on what conditions to be obtained, 266, 280; treaty with, 265; forced to cede territory, 273, 281; character of country and people, 298; relations with, VI. 422; conciliatory policy recommended to, 424; objections to the release of Kendall by, 431; conquest of Texas by, hopeless, 434; treatment of Americans, 435; American captives in, 439; her encouragement of foreign immigration, and her wars with Spain and Texas, 455; American hostility to its power, 456; responsibility of, for the war, 457.
Middlesex Canal, by whom planned, II. 410.
Miles, W., letter of, on tariff of 1846, July 20th, 1846, V. 224.
Military Academy, remarks on the appropriation for, IV. 207.
Military Achievements, their influence in republics, II. 429.
Military Road in Maine, misconceptions respecting, V. 107.
Militia, plan of the Van Buren administration respecting the training of, II. 48; of the States, power of Congress over, 95; its adaptation to the defence of the country, 613.
Mill, description of, for sawing, I. 184.
Mineral Lands, sale of, IV. 526.
Mines, right of government to, V. 404.
Minimum Principle in the tariff of 1846 opposed by Massachusetts, V. 240.
Minimum Duties, opposition to, IV. 259.
Mirabeau, remark of, II. 92; respecting words, III. 453.
Miscellaneous Letters, VI. 533.
Misrepresentations of the South and North V. 428, 435.
Missionaries in Georgia, I. 269.

Mississippi, navigation of the River, II. 339; secession in the State of, 609; valley of, future centre of the country, impossibility of dividing the river in case of dissolution of Union, V. 362.
Mitchell's Map, used by Mr. Oswald, II. 143; copy found among the papers of Mr. Jay, 144.
Mixed Currency, most useful and convenient, II. 56; danger of, 56.
Mobile Bar, II. 239.
Mobs, assembling of, universal, VI. 509.
Modern Civilization, slavery referred to tribunal of, V. 304.
Molasses, effect of tax on, III. 236; tax, how to be appropriated, 239.
Monastic Institutions abolished, VI. 170.
Money, scarcity of, II. 451; a universal representative, IV. 87; design of, 455; executive use of, without appropriations by Congress, V. 264.
Monmouth, associations connected with, I. 220.
Monroe, Colonel, proclamation of, referred to, VI. 480.
Monroe, James, his administration, I. 157; quotation from message respecting Greece, III. 63; respecting foreign interference, 201, 202.
Monterey, militia at, II. 335.
Montesquieu, on separating the departments of government, III. 11; opinions on government, 14.
Montgomery Road, bill for, vetoed, I. 267.
Moore, amendment to the Bank Bill, III. 407.
Mothers, vocation of, II. 107.
Morris, Robert, II. 204.
Morris, Commodore, V. 117.
Morse, Professor, II. 419.
Morton, Perez, eulogy on Gen. Warren, I. 57.
Motion, its universality, I. 178.
Mousseline de Laine Manufacture, as affected by tariff of 1846, V. 198.
Mudge and Featherstonhaugh, report of, V. 91; value of survey of, 107.
Municipal sovereignty, VI. 121.
Murder, two classes of, VI. 75.
Murphy, correspondence in respect to Texas referred to, V. 345.

N.

Napoleon, domestic policy of, III. 132.
Nashville Convention, V. 363; character of the address of, 429.
Naval Architecture, improvement in, I. 187.
Navigation, proceedings in Boston respecting, I. 301; condition of that of the United States, 104, 111, 133; regulation of, included under that of commerce, IV. 464; of Hudson River and Long Island Sound, exclusive claim of Fulton to, by steam, 464; interests of, in connection with domestic manufactures, V. 217. See Commerce.
Navy, United States, admirable elements of, II. 612; Mr. Webster's early support and defence of, in the war of 1812, IV. 605.
Navy Island, invasion of, VI. 297.
Neapolitan Indemnity, payment of, anticipated, I. 379.
Netherlands, King of, arbitration between United States and Great Britain, V. 84.
Neutrality, adherence of the government to, II. 201, VI. 449; no breach of, to send minister to Congress of Panama, III. 197; duties of, VI. 258; course of the United States in respect to, 259; observed by the United States, 449; municipal regulations of the United States in respect to, 451.
Neutral Nations, duties of, prescribed by the law of nations, VI. 451.
Newark, prosperity of, injured, IV. 333.
Newburyport, character of its citizens, V. 445.
New England, first settlement of, I. 5, 9, 11, 210; population of, in 1720 and 1820, 30; American Revolution commenced in, 33; union of Colonies in, 64; its support of Washington, 172, III. 308; obedient to the laws, I. 173; its early attention to manufactures, 187; common schools of, 403; example of a mechanic of, II. 23; its gifts to America, 207; estimated imports from other States of the Union, 289; contrasted with South Carolina, 325; interest in Western improvements, 340; the part performed by, in the Revolution, 503, III. 229; in the French War, II. 503; symbolized by the Mayflower, 525; condition of, in 1824, III. 97; early opposition to a protective policy, 229, 262, IV. 509, V. 187; forced into manufactures, III. 230; and Western settlements compared, 251; liberal policy towards the West, 265; Hayne's attack on, 286, 308; when, how, and why, in favor of measures favorable to the West, 293; opposition of, to the embargo, 327; change in the policy of, V. 240; youths of all denominations educated at colleges of, VI. 161.
New Granada, treaty with, in regard to Isthmus of Panama, V. 317.
New Hampshire, the home of Mr. Webster in, II. 30; the social condition of, 418; festival of the sons of, 7 Nov., 1849, 497; form of its ratification of the Constitution, III. 477; advantages gained by, in the treaty of Washington,

V. 113; acts of the legislature of, in regard to Dartmouth College, V. 460, 468, 470, 484, 493; claim of, VI. 349.
New Jersey, conduct of the House of Representatives in the case of, II. 47, 100; its declaration respecting the public lands, III. 255; sagacity of, in enlarging the powers of the Commissioners, in 1786, IV. 495; act of, in respect to steam navigation, VI. 7.
Newmarket, stoppage of manufactures at, IV. 87.
New Mexico, unfitted for slavery, II. 555; formation of States from, V. 291; nature of the country, V. 296, 379, VI. 569; character of its people, V. 296, 299, 382; slavery excluded from, by nature, 350, 352, 421; necessity of defining boundaries of, 376, 379, 417; portions of territory claimed by Texas, 377; necessity of a government for, 378.
New Orleans, account of excesses in, VI. 508.
New States, agriculture in, I. 207; duty of government towards, 208, III. 251; public lands claimed by, I. 350; admission of, 356.
New York, dinner at, I. 191; reception of Mr. Webster at, in 1837, I. 337; the natural features of the State, II. 535; its vote necessary to the admission of Texas, 553; opinion of, in respect to a national bank, IV. 23; remarks on presenting a petition from the merchants of, 298; its opinion of the sub-treasury system, 415, 417; consequences of the great fire in, V. 31; advantages gained by the treaty of Washington, 110, 112; border difficulties of, in 1842, 140; ownership of lands in, 395; laws of, in regard to steam navigation, VI. 7; its grant to John Fitch, 16; law of 1845 respecting convention referred to, 229.
New York Committee, letter to, on the character of Washington, Feb. 20, 1851, VI. 586.
Niles, J. M., his amendment respecting the duty on coal, IV. 304; votes for the admission of Texas, V. 343, 345.
Non-combatants, presumption respecting, VI. 427.
Non-intercourse Acts, explanation of, IV. 166; doctrine of, how impaired, VI. 259.
North, complaints of, against the South, V. 353, 359; sentiments of, ib.; interest of, in regard to territory acquired from Mexico, 420, 426; prejudices of, on subject of slavery, 432.
North Carolina, effect of molasses tax on, III. 238.
Northeastern Boundary, remarks on, made at a meeting of the New York Historical Society, 15 April, 1843, II. 145, 153; history of the question, V. 81; proposal to settle, 97; delay in the settlement of, VI. 274; advantages of the proposal, 278, 350. See Ashburton; Treaty of Washington.
Northern Democracy, policy of, V. 256.
Northern Men, unjust slanders against, II. 93, III. 281.
Northern Railroad, importance of, II. 415.
Nova Scotia, boundary between, and Massachusetts, II. 146; coal trade of, V. 210.
Nullification, Madison's letter on, I. 205; how supported, 210; dangerous tendency of, 272; not to be suppressed by illegal means, 275; the principle of, 295; right of, denied, III. 320; never proposed in New England, 332; practical operations of, 337, 459, 461, 491, 504; modes of, 493; reasons for, in South Carolina, 495; consequences of its success, 504; exposition of, IV. 478.

O.

Oath, nature of an, VI. 168.
Obscure Origin, not a matter of reproach, II. 29, 30.
Odor of nationality, application of the term, II. 59.
Office, removals from, I. 258, 333; nominations to, rejected, 262; conductors of the press appointed to, 265; no man possesses a right to, III. 4; creation of, without authority of law, IV. 111; power of Congress respecting the tenure of, 196.
Offices are public trusts, I. 335, IV. 183.
Ogden, A., his exclusive right to navigation by steam in New York, VI. 6.
Ogden, D. B., letter to Mr. Webster, I. 340; remarks at New York, 342.
Ogden and Saunders, case of, VI. 24.
Ohio, suits pending in United States courts, III. 158; astonishing increase of, 552; in respect to the fugitive slave law, VI. 562.
Ohio River, I. 169; obstructions in, IV. 248.
Old Colony Club, I. 3.
Old Thirteen, their public lands, I. 350; appeal to, II. 609.
Ontario County, description of, IV. 17; its rapid growth, 27; memorial from, 27.
Opening of the Northern Railroad from Franklin to Grafton, N. H., 28th Aug., 1847, speech of Mr. Webster on the occasion, II. 409; opening to Lebanon, N. H., 17th Nov., 1847, speech of Mr. Webster on the occasion, 414.
Ordinance of 1787, benefits of, III. 263, 278; drawn by Nathan Dane, 277; its lofty spirit, 282; organizing Northwest territory, V. 335; unanimity of opinion upon, in regard to slavery, 336, VI. 552.

Oregon, controversy respecting, II. 320; resolution passed by the Baltimore Convention relative to, 321; remarkable characteristic of the settlement of the boundary of, 322; vote on the establishment of the Territory of, 445; remarks on, V. 60, 63, 70; probable result of negotiations concerning, 67; claim to, put forward by President Polk, 71; necessity of settling boundary of, 72; forty-ninth parallel recommended as the northern boundary of, 73, 76.
Ormichund v. Barker, case of, VI. 168.
Orphans, education of, in Girard College, VI. 136.
Oswald, Mr., map used by, II. 143.
Otis, James, his speech on writs of assistance noticed, I. 121; eulogium on, VI. 596.
Outrages at New Orleans disapproved of, VI. 509.
Over-production, remarks on, V. 165.
Oxford, meeting of Agricultural Society at, I. 435.

P.

Pacific Ocean; progress of the people towards the, II. 212; importance of a connection between the Atlantic and, V. 313, 316, 322.
Pacific Republic, prediction concerning, V. 387.
Paine, Robert Treat, delegate to Congress, I. 123, 137.
Paine, Thomas, attack on Christianity, VI. 159.
Pakenham, Mr., letter to Mr. Buchanan on the adjustment of the Oregon question, II. 323.
Palmerston, Lord, remark of, on the treaty of Washington, V. 105; on the Caroline, 128.
Panama, history of Congress at, III. 195; ministers to the Congress of, not to be instructed by the House of Representatives, 189.
Panama, Isthmus of, its neutrality guarantied, V. 317.
Panama Mission, speech on, III. 178.
Panama Railroad, remarks on, V. 313; advantages of, 318; estimated cost of, 319.
Paper Currency, remarks on, II. 162; evils attending irredeemable, III. 53, 397; power of a State to issue, doubted, 413; liability to depreciation, IV. 89; distinctions of, 269.
Parable of the prodigal son, its simplicity and power, II. 609; of the poor widow referred to, VI. 157.
Parliament, power of, over the Colonies, I. 128; not named in the Declaration of Independence, II. 512.
Parmenter, Mr., votes for the tariff of 1842, II. 130.
Parthenon, mournful immortality of, I. 231.
Parties, origin of, III. 309, IV. 181; violence of, III. 311.
Party Spirit, Washington's exhortation against, I. 229; its tendency, II. 42; dangerous to a free government, 281.
Paterson, N. J., condition of, IV. 86.
Patronage, dangers from executive, IV. 179; effect of, 180, I. 333.
Patterson, W., propositions of, in convention, III. 473.
Payments, public, not to be made in notes not equivalent to specie, IV. 379, 383; extract from appropriation bill of 1836 in regard to, 379; necessity of uniformity in, 381.
Peace, the policy of the United States, II. 382.
Pecuniary pressure (1824), causes of, III. 100.
Peel, Sir Robert, extract from his speech relating to the settlement of northeastern boundary, V. 95.
Pekin, desirable for the United States mission to reach, VI. 470.
Penn, William, "great law" of, VI. 175.
Pennsylvania, its loyalty to the Constitution, I. 212; its need of a protective tariff, II. 257, et seq.; its debt, 261; natural advantages of, 310; political contest in 1800, 313; tenure of its judiciary, III. 29; proposes to amend the Constitution, 353; in favor of the renewal of the Bank charter, 421; her part in establishing the Constitution, IV. 47; interest in manufactures, ib.; coal mines of, 306; position in regard to the tariff of 1846, V. 204; iron and coal trade of, as affected by ad valorem duties, 203–210; of Christian origin, VI. 145; public policy of, 174; course in regard to slavery, 561.
Pensions, act concerning (1828), I. 166; payment of, in specie, IV. 379, 383, 385; illegal payment of, 384; compensation received by agents for paying, 386, 389.
Peonism, existence of, in New Mexico, V. 341.
People, source of power, III. 321, 323, VI. 221; right of, to free discussion, IV. 120; in what respect sovereigns, VI. 22; their will to be ascertained by legislation, 227.
Perkins, Thomas H., eulogized, I. 85.
Petition, object of the first, to Congress, II. 232.
Philadelphia, Whig Convention at, 1st

October, 1844, II. 249; position of, 310; proceedings of citizens of, IV. 3.
Pickering, Timothy, amendments of, to Mr. Calhoun's bill for internal improvements, IV. 514.
Pilgrim Fathers, I. 7, et seq.; hardships of, II. 520; progress of their descendants, 525.
Pilgrim Festival in New York in 1850, speech of Mr. Webster at, II. 519.
Pinckney, H. L., letter of, on the tariff, II. 267.
Pinckney, Thomas, opinion of judicial power, III. 484; negotiations of, with Spain, IV. 175; remarks on the seventh article of the treaty with Spain, VI. 529.
Pirates, improper application of the term, VI. 256.
Pitt, proposes the issue of one-pound notes, III. 399.
Pittsburg, Mr. Webster's reception at, I. 285; letter of citizens of, 287; address of Mayor of, 288; interest in manufactures, 297; visit to, mentioned, IV. 45.
Pledges of candidates for office, V. 424.
Plymouth, oration in commemoration of the landing of the Pilgrims at, 22d Dec., 1820, I. 3; 22d Dec., 1843, II. 203.
Poinsett, Mr., his conference with the Mexican minister, III. 205.
Political Inconsistency, IV. 480, V. 186.
Political Power, importance of defining its extent, I. 313.
Political Parties, dissolution of old, I. 153; union ticket supported by, ib.; circumstances affecting, 156; defined, ib.
Political sentimentality, illustration of, IV. 481.
Polk, James K., on the tariff, II. 240; effect of his election on the tariff, 269; on the annexation of Texas, 285; on duties on imports, 316; difference between, and Andrew Jackson, 316, 319; the Mexican War, the result of the administration of, 319; course of, on the Oregon question, 321, et seq., V. 71; veto of the harbor bill, 337; French spoliation bill vetoed by, 348; avowal in respect to acquisition of territory, 328; message respecting New Mexico, VI. 482.
Poor, the, and the Rich, III. 532.
Popular Government, foundation of, III. 489.
Popular Knowledge, progress of, IV. 438.
Popular Opinion, power of, IV. 102.
Popular Power, beauty of its regular action, VI. 226.
Portugal, progress retarded by bad government, IV. 90.
Post-Office Department, money borrowed by, IV. 116, 149; remarks on affairs of, 148; alleged change in contracts by, 149; extra allowances by, 150; removal of postmasters by, ib.
Preëmption rights, bill to grant, IV. 391; advocated, 302; not to be limited to native-born citizens of the United States, 394. See Lands, Public.
Prescott, Judge James, defence of, V. 502.
Prescott, William, I. 33, 65, 70, 85.
President, duties of, II. 426; answers of Congress to the, III. 64; cannot decide the constitutionality of laws, 433; oath of, IV. 131; responsibility of, 143; custom of, on the last day of a session of Congress, 217; not the sole representative of the people, 144, 245; former practice of, to address Congress in person, 115; duty of, respecting official communications, 222; consequences of unlimited confidence in, 228; reasons for calling an extra session, 354; in respect to the public debt (1841), V. 41, 46, 52; duty of, in respect to New Mexico, VI. 486.
Presidential Protest, speech on, IV. 103.
Press, influence and position of conductors of, I. 264; the government of the country should be separated from, II. 90; violence of the Northern and Southern, V. 358; freedom of, essential to free government, ib.; rebuke of Mr. Hülsemann's charge against, VI. 497.
Preston, Hon. W. C., President of South Carolina College, II. 395.
Prices, reduction of, III. 102.
Prince of Orange, III. 71.
Prisoners, treatment of, VI. 437.
Privateering, interests of United States opposed to, III. 212.
Probate, duties of Judge of, in early times, V. 505.
Proclamation of Gen. Jackson commended, I. 293.
Proscription, exercised by Gen. Jackson, I. 260.
Protection, incidental, II. 256; an object of the formation of the Constitution, 232; to be limited, III. 116; inexpediency of immoderate, 130; first advocates of, IV. 309; competition produced by, 534; effect of, on Southern interests, 538.
Protective Policy, denounced by General Jackson, I. 241; upon what founded, II. 287; constitutionality of, when first questioned, III. 503; interests guarded by, V. 186.
Protest, against disregard of judicial decisions, II. 49; of Gen. Jackson referred to, IV. 47; doctrines of, 129, 131, 145; character of, IV. 126.
Providence Railroad Company, argument in the case of, VI. 185.
Prussia, its lead in the Customs Union, VI. 410.

Public, definition of the term, VI. 209
Public Debt, lands pledged for payment of, III. 259.
Public Opinion, its power, I. 75, III. 77.
Public Policy, how established, VI. 176.
Puffendorf, III. 68.
Pulszky, Francis, Secretary of State of Hungary, VI 498.
Punishment, object of, VI. 59.
Putnam, General, I. 33, 65.

R.

Railroad, first in America, I. 63.
Railroads equalize the condition of men, II. 411; idle prejudices against, ib.; directors and projectors of, not enthusiastic lovers of landscape beauty, 412; their dependence on way travel and transportation, V. 321.
Raleigh, Sir W., referred to, I. 94.
Rand, Edward S., and others, citizens of Newburyport, Mass., letter to, 15th May, 1850, VI. 551.
Randolph, Gov., on domestic slavery, III. 279.
Randolph, Jefferson, proposition of, respecting slavery, V. 357.
Randolph, John, motion of, on slavery in the District of Columbia, IV. 232.
Ratio of representation, III. 382.
Reception of Mr. Webster at Wheeling, I. 381; at Madison, Indiana, 395, 397; at Boston, 30th Sept., 1842, II. 109; at Columbia, S. C., May, 1847, 395; at Savannah, 26th May, 1847, 398; at Buffalo, N. Y., 22d May, 1851, speech delivered on the occasion, 544.
Red-line map, II. 143, 153.
Regiments, object of raising additional, V. 278.
Register, attendance of, on probate courts, V. 523.
Register Acts, provisions of English, III. 148.
Regulate, meaning of the word as used in the Constitution, II. 342.
Regulations of trade, II. 166.
Religion, an indispensable element in any great human character, II. 490; a communication and a tie between man and his Maker, 522; necessity of, to man, 615; the only conservative principle, VI. 165.
Religious Instruction, supported by property, III. 18.
Religious Disputes, warmth of, V. 331.
Removal of deposits, predicted effect of, I. 389; a cause of embarrassment, III. 509; object of, 544; remarks on, IV. 3; consequences of, 12, 110; tendency to increase executive power, 13; reasons for, considered, 63; its effect on the Bank, 79; on internal trade, 86; responsibility of, assumed by the President, 106; agreement of Mr. Calhoun and Mr Webster respecting, 467.
Removal from office, power of, I. 258; decision of Congress respecting, 259; to whom the power belongs, 335; power in the Constitution in regard to, II. 89; argument for, from precedent, III. 432; act of Congress in 1789 respecting, IV. 185, 190, 193, 196, 198; mode of, 189; incident to the power of appointment, 190, 192, 198; effect of a nomination on, 191; not often necessarily sudden, 194; expediency of assigning reasons for, 196.
Representation, American system of, I. 40; in connection with government, 222, VI. 223; popular governments in the United States established on the basis of, II. 601; by towns, peculiar to New England, III. 20; to be fixed by mutual concession, 24; advantage in respect to, enjoyed by the Slave States, 281; report on apportionment of, 369; and taxation considered, 374; not susceptible of perfect equality, 375; Prof. Dean's letter and table respecting apportionment of, 389; its basis, suffrage, VI. 223.
Representative Government, a new experiment, I. 223; in Europe, II. 512.
Representative System of England, origin of, VI. 223.
Representatives, commencement and termination of term of office of, IV. 217; duty of, 121.
Representatives, House of, their resolution on war with Mexico, V. 274.
Republican Government, capable of existing over a great country, II. 220; salutary tendency of, 221.
Repudiation, condemned, II. 138.
Resolutions, adopted in New York, I. 339; adopted at the Andover Whig Convention, 9th Nov., 1843, II. 157; of the town of Boston, 169; passed in Massachusetts, relative to the tariff of 1846, 365; adopted at Buffalo, respecting revenue, protection, and customs, 463; of the Baltimore Convention, relative to American industry, 464; adopted by the Suffolk Bar on the death of Mr. Mason, 480; in respect to public lands, referred to, 542; for the appointment of an agent to Greece, III. 60; respecting Panama mission, 178; of Mr. Foot, in regard to public lands, 248, 270; respecting slavery, adopted by First Congress, 280; of Mr. Calhoun, 448; adopted at Columbia, IV. 31; of Senate, of 28th March, 1834, quoted, 47; relating to money borrowed by the Post-Office Department, 151; of 1816, explanation of, 244; respecting specie circular, 265; of 1816, provisions of, respecting payment of public dues, 274; of Mr. Webster, relating to the Commonwealth Bank of Boston, 377; respecting the collection of the revenue, 488; of the House of Delegates of Virginia in 1786, in respect to uniform regulations of commerce, 493; of city of Boston commented on, 509; of Mr. Ingham, respecting ad valorem duties, V. 175; respecting slavery, from State legislatures, 355; of Indiana, in respect to the public lands, 390; of Mr Webster, on the announcement of the death of Gen. Taylor, 407; offered by Senator Downs on the death of Gen. Taylor, ib.; of citizens of Washington, respecting Mr. Webster's speech on the Girard will case, VI. 134; of the House of Representatives respecting Mr Thrasher, 521.

Retaliation, acts of, suggested by Mr. Hülsemann, and reply thereto, VI. 504.

Retrospective laws, character of, V. 484; prohibited, 485; extract from Chief Justice Kent, in regard to, ib.

Revenue, views respecting, I. 353; diminished by receiving irredeemable paper, III. 45; ought not to be collected in irredeemable paper money, 57; diminished receipts of, in 1834, IV. 85; collection of, through banks, 469; public, power of Congress to deposit in banks, 484; to be increased by duties on luxuries, 553; from public lands very fluctuating, 555; reductions of, V. 49; new sources of, to be provided for prosecuting war with Mexico, 152.

Revere, Col., his character, I. 303; remark of, 430, II. 173.

Revolution, right of, III. 320; defined, 456, 459.

Revolution, American, its causes, 24; commenced in New England, 33; commemorated by Bunker Hill Monument, 61; survivors of, addressed, 66; character of the state papers of, 69; peculiar principle of, 92; officers and soldiers of, pensioned, 161, state of the country at the conclusion of the war of the, II 223; originated in a question of principle, IV. 109.

Revolution, English, its effect on the Colonies, I. 28; commenced in Boston, ib.; gave independence to the judiciary, III. 28.

Revolution in Greece, speech on, III. 60.

Revolution of 1840, its objects, II. 129.

Revolutionary Officers, speech on the bill for relief of, III. 218; defence of, 219; arguments for the relief of, 222.

Rhode Island, her interest in the settlement of the slavery question, V. 426; argument respecting government of, VI. 217; proceedings of the Dorr government, 233; new constitution of, 234; benefits arising from agitation in, 240; error of charter government of, 241.

Ricardo, quoted, III. 529.

Rich, who are the, in this country, II. 22; and poor, III. 532.

Richmond, Va., speech of Mr. Webster at, II 83; remarks to the ladies of, 5th Oct., 1840, 105.

Riflemen, mounted, comparative expense of, V. 155.

Right of search, VI. 329; statement of the British claim to, 335; not distinct from the right of visit, ib.; by what means effected, 338.

Rights, legal, not confined to matters of pecuniary profit, V. 481.

Rio Grande, maintained by the United States to be the western boundary of Texas, II. 329, 330; effect of ordering the United States army to, 333; worthlessness of the valley of the, V. 295.

Ritner, Gov., letter of, alluded to, II. 292.

Rivers of the United States, character of, IV. 248.

Rives, W. C., his amendment respecting the Panama mission, III. 178; constitutional opinions of, 467.

Road, either public or private, VI. 189.

Roads and Canals, extract from Calhoun's report on, III. 351.

Robbins, Rev. Chandler, suggests the celebration of the anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims, I. 3.

Robbins, Senator, eulogium of Washington, I 232.

Roberts, Hon. Jonathan, II. 277.

Robinson, Rev John, I. 12, 14.

Robinson, Mr., speech of, in English Parliament, referred to, III. 149.

Roman or civil law, II. 394.

Rome, policy of, I. 17; colonies of, ib.; fall of, 18; her government, 40; liberty of, II 600; classification of its people, III. 14; power in, unconnected with property, 15.

Ropewalks in the city of Boston, VI. 186.

Rotation of crops in England, I. 446.

Rouse's Point, secured to United States by treaty of Washington, its importance as a military post, V. 110, 115; ascertained to be in Canada, VI. 278; relinquishment of, by Great Britain, 349.

Ruiz and Montes, imprisonment of, VI. 404.

Russia, responsibility of emperor of, to the tribunal of the world, II. 514; instigated the Greeks to rebellion, III. 81; American trade with, 122; price of labor in, 142; addressed by the United States respecting the war of Spain with her colonies, 210.

Rutland, the Duke of, letter to, VI. 540.

S.

Sabbath, observance of, a part of Christianity, VI. 155.
Safety Fund System referred to, IV. 94.
St. Asaph, Bishop of, II. 596.
St. John, free navigation of, V. 102, VI. 278, 349.
Salem, magnanimity of its citizens, I. 67.
Salvage, principles of, early established by Spain, VI. 402.
Sandwich Islands, interesting condition and locality of, VI. 463; letter respecting the independence of, 477.
San Jacinto, battle of, VI. 449.
Santa Fé, letters respecting American citizens captured at, VI. 422.
Sargent, Henry, his painting of the Landing of the Pilgrims, I. 51.
Savannah, reception of Mr. Webster at, 26 May, 1847, II. 398.
Scammel, Col., falls at Yorktown, II. 505; monument to the memory of, 506.
Schools of New England, I. 41.
Science, application of, to art, during present century, II 610, IV. 438.
Scio, massacre at, III. 84.
Scotland, farming in, I. 450; suffers from a dependent judiciary, III. 28; its commerce and agriculture as compared with Ireland, V. 230.
Scott, Gen., eulogium on, V. 277.
Search, alleged right of, as affected by correspondence accompanying the treaty of Washington, V. 143; identical with right of visit, VI. 336.
Secession, of individual States an absurdity, II. 591; of Virginia, improbability of, 608; defined, III. 454; impossibility of a peaceable, V. 361, VI. 568; propositions for, 588.
Selectmen, duty of, respecting highways, VI. 189.
Senate, of Massachusetts, remarks on basis of, III. 8.
Senate of the United States, a body of equals, III. 274; its opposition to Gen. Jackson, IV. 103, 229; constitutional provisions respecting its journal, 293.
Sewall, Jonathan, I. 149.
Seward, Gov., course of, in the McLeod case, V. 133, 138.
Seybert, Dr., his opinions respecting discriminating duties, III. 246.
Sheep, immense number in England, I. 449.
Sherwood Forest described, I. 452.
Shipping Interest, prosperity of, II. 23; erroneous views in regard to, III. 246.
Silk, manufacture of, in England, III. 113.
Silks, importance of duty on, IV. 553; and wines, duty on, V. 50, 53.
Silsbee, Nathaniel, I. 165.
Slaveholding States, advantages of, in respect to representation, III. 281, V. 57; rights of, in regard to new territories, 308, 310.
Slave Labor, its relation to free, V. 309, increase of, 316.
Slavery, its character, I. 356, III 279; recognized by the Constitution, I. 356, II. 549; interference of Congress with, 294; abolition of, in Pennsylvania, 271; not introduced by the generation that achieved American independence, 573; petitions for abolishing, presented to First Congress, III. 279; in District of Columbia, remarks on, IV. 230, 371; unanimous opinion of the North, respecting, 232; peculiarity of American, V. 304; exists by local laws, 309; discussion of, in regard to California and New Mexico, 328; sentiments of Mr. Madison on, 334; changes of opinion in respect to, 337; character of all the territory of the United States fixed beyond control by government, 340, 381, VI. 536; excluded from California and New Mexico by nature, V. 350, VI. 569; effect of Abolition societies at the North, V. 357; mode of extinguishing, 364; consistency of Mr. Webster's course in regard to, 384; adjustment of the question by compromise, 420; English law respecting, VI. 309.
Slaves, emancipation of, in District of Columbia, IV. 375.
Slave Territory, acquisition of, how to be regarded, V. 259.
Slave Trade, its character, I. 45; proceedings of the House of Representatives respecting, III. 184; convention of 1845, between France and England, respecting, 144; correspondence relating to, VI. 290; American policy respecting, 368, 374.
Smith, Gen., his vote on the bank question, III. 430.
Smith, Mr., of South Carolina, advocates protective duties, III. 501.
Smith, Hon. Truman, speech of, V. 297, 423.
Smith, Hon. Hugh N., letter of, respecting New Mexico, VI. 548.
Smithsonian Institution, establishment of, II. 617; not a charity, VI. 173.
Soulé, P., reply to, in respect to public lands and the boundaries of California, V. 388.
Sound Dues at Elsinore, VI. 406
South, rights of the, to be maintained, II. 547, III. 354; preponderating influence of, V. 339; complaints of, against the North, 353.
South America, its revolutions, I. 75; early Spanish colonies in, 76; combination of European sovereigns against, III. 76.

South American Republics, effect of their establishment, III. 192; trade with, V. 220.
South California, nature of the country V. 398; its opposition to slavery, 400.
South Carolina, nullification threatened in, I. 239; protective duties on hemp advocated by, II. 237; ancient union of Massachusetts with, 376, 379: in respect to internal improvements, III. 297, 304; attack on, disclaimed, 313; eulogium on, 316; in 1775 and 1828, 325; convention in, recommends resistance to the laws, 325; claim of, to decide an alleged violation of the Constitution, 474; rights of minorities in, 488; advocates protective duties, in the First Congress, 501; the tariff of 1816, IV. 502.
Southern Confederacy, impossibility of, V. 562.
Southern Democracy, policy of, V. 257.
Southern Slavery, a domestic policy, III. 279.
Southern Union Men, character of, V. 430.
Sovereignty, nature of, as applied to States, V. 389.
Spain, French invasion of, III. 78; effect of her internal policy, 132; her wars with the South American States, 194; asks the coöperation of the Holy Alliance, 202; its progress retarded by bad government, IV. 90; relations with the United States, 391, VI. 514; decisions of her tribunals acquiesced in by the United States, 403; consul of, at New Orleans, under the protection of treaty stipulations, 509; rights of subjects of, in the United States, 511; royal decree of, respecting domiciliation, 524.
Specie, its use, I. 375; unusual call for, III. 101, 125; inability of the government to pay its dues in, IV. 383; principles which govern the import of, 532.
Specie Circular, I. 370; reasons for issuing, 371, IV. 263; operation of, I. 387; speech on, IV. 265.
Specie Payment, suspension of, by the banks, IV. 324. See Banks.
Spence's Anecdotes, quotation from, III. 14.
Staël, Madame de, remarks of, II. 504; her reply to Bonaparte, 107.
Standish, Miles, I. 8.
Stark, Gen. John, I. 65; reminiscences respecting, II. 502.
State, American idea of, VI. 222.
State Banks, issues of, II. 58; their numbers, 67; local character of, 162, III. 396, 524, IV. 255; objects of, III. 47; distrust of, 530; alarming increase of, IV. 22; scheme respecting, 44; incapacity to furnish a general currency, 203.
State Credit, national credit affected by, II. 179.
State Debts, assumption of, by general government, II. 10, 69, 71; aggregate amount of, 68.
State Executives, power of, reduced, III. 10.
State Interposition, destructive of the powers of Congress, III 481.
State Law, ex-territorial power of, VI. 116.
State Laws, revision of, by Congress, III. 484.
State Legislatures, instructions from, to be discouraged, V. 356.
State Loans, constitutionality of, VI. 537; security of, 539.
State Rights Party, declaration of Mr. Calhoun respecting, IV. 469; policy of, 483.
State Sovereignty, limits of, III. 322.
State Securities, attack of the administration on, II. 95.
States, power to issue a paper currency questioned, III. 413; taxing power of, limited, 445; alleged concurrent powers of, VI 12; sovereign powers exercised by, 121.
Steam, its use, I. 186.
Steamboats, general use of, VI. 4.
Steam-power, as an engine of improvement, II. 404, 405, 411.
Stiles, Mr., correspondence of, relating to Hungary, VI. 497.
Stillingfleet, argument of, respecting visitors, V. 475.
Story, Mr. Justice, eulogium on, by Mr. Webster, before the Boston bar, II. 297; obligations of English lawyers to, 299; universal sentiment of grief for, ib.; martial law defined by, VI. 240.
Strogonoff, declaration of, to the Porte, III. 84.
Stuart, Prof. Moses, speech of Mr. Webster at Andover dedicated to, II. 158.
Sturges v. Crowninshield, decision in the case of, VI. 26.
Sublime Porte, application to, for the relief of Kossuth, VI. 592.
Sub-treasury, remarks on the provisions of, II. 18, IV. 410; operation of, II 456, IV. 458; speech on, Jan. 31, 1838, IV. 402; opinion of, in New York, 415, 417; second speech on, 424; inconsistent with the issue of treasury notes, V. 156; remarks on, 244.
Suffrage, the basis of representation, VI 223.
Sugden, Sir Edward, on ambiguities, VI. 198.
Sullivan, William, eulogized, I. 84.
Sultan, proclamation of, III. 86.
Supreme Court of the United States, its decision nullified in Georgia, I. 239, 269; its functions, II. 402, III. 161, 163;

number of its judges an advantage, 163, 175; its decision on the constitutionality of a bank, 435; its decision in the case of Fulton, IV. 461; on public lands within the States, V. 395, 402; on dedications, VI. 212; on the duties of State officers, 556
Surplus Revenue, proposed distribution of, II. 69; distribution of, as a settled practice, dangerous, IV. 256.

T.

Talcott, Capt., report of, respecting the disputed territory, V. 102, VI. 277.
Tallmadge, Judge D. B., reviews the case of McLeod, V. 129, VI. 266.
Taney, Secretary of the Treasury, 1833, deposits removed to State banks by, II. 21.
Tariff, of 1824, how passed, I. 298; of 1828, 164; of 1832, 240; Jackson's opinion of, 242; supported by (1824), 244; opinions respecting, 166, III. 323; favors every interest of the country, II. 174, 177; policy of, 287; necessary for defence against foreign competition, 351; of 1846, resolutions passed in Massachusetts relative to, 365, 368; effect on South Carolina, 460 et seq.; of 1828, defects of, III. 235, 240; advantage of, to the wool-grower and wool-manufacturer, 241; of 1816, supported by South Carolina, 297, 502, IV. 512; bills of 1842, and 1846, extract from, in regard to undervaluation, 181, 183; of 1824, opposed by Massachusetts, 241; protective, alleged to have been overthrown in 1833, by State interposition, 475, 478; judicious, Gen. Jackson in favor of, 477; Mr. Webster's course in relation to, 508; speeches on, V. 161, 236; of 1846, conduct of the friends of, VI. 169.
Tax on Tea and Coffee, suggested by the executive, V. 153.
Taxes, levying of, in Mexico, not a right of war, V. 268.
Tax-payers and tax-consumers, distinction between, IV. 491.
Taylor, Gen. Zachary, character of his public services, II. 426 et seq.; instructions to, in regard to the Rio Grande, 330, 333; remarks on the illness and death of, V. 406; his military renown, 408; integrity, firmness, and mildness, 409.
Tea, increase of its consumption, III. 94; no duty should be laid on, V. 554; tax on, suggested by the executive, V. 153.
Tenets, defined, VI. 149, 166, 167.
Tennessee, business of the United States Courts, III. 158.
Ten Regiment Bill, remarks on, V. 262.
Territory, desire for the acquisition of, not easily satisfied, V. 294; acquisition of, by Mexican War, by whom advocated, 258, 265, 273; northwest, cession of, by Virginia, 335.
Texas, its history, I. 354, V. 288, 299; annexation of, to the United States, I. 355, II. 327, 552, V. 55, 289; by whom promoted, II. 437, V. 259; extract from speech of Mr. Webster respecting, II. 552; constitution of, in respect to slavery, V. 58; mode of annexing, 293, 340; course of Mr. Webster in relation to annexation of, 346, 348; its boundaries, 375, 383, 418; independence of, acknowledged by the United States, VI. 434; and other powers, 450; its dispute with the United States, and not with New Mexico, 485; boundaries of, 479.
Thornton, Dr. M., a signer of the Declaration, II. 506.
Thrasher, J. S., case of, VI. 518.
Three Million Bill, speech upon, V. 253.
Timber, respecting English duties on, III. 114.
Time is identical, VI. 82.
Toleration, justice of religious, I. 12; duty of America in respect to, II. 521.
Tonnage, no State can lay duties on, II. 22; duty on, a direct tax, III. 244.
Tooke's view of the Russian Empire, III. 142.
Totten, Colonel, V. 116.
Town Representation, a measure of expediency, not one of right, III. 21.
Trade, direct and indirect, III. 126; affected by increase of manufactures, V. 219; of the United States with North of Europe, 222.
Traders, bankrupt law in reference to, V. 8, 9.
Treason, defined, II. 577, III. 339; nature of, VI. 582; doctrine respecting, 526.
Treasury, state of the, in 1834, IV. 84; in 1840, 541, 546; has no control over deposits with the States, V. 48.
Treasury Circular, should be repealed, I. 379.
Treasury Department, defined, IV. 410.
Treasury Note Bill, speech on, IV. 540.
Treasury Notes, a revival of the old Continental currency, IV. 318; tendency to an excessive issue of, 474; objections to issue of, 543, 546; issue of, for prosecuting Mexican war, V. 153, 156.
Treasury, Secretary of, evils caused by the measures of, IV. 8; his control of the public deposits, not absolute, 53; his rights and duties, connected with the Bank of the United States, 56; his reasons for the removal of the deposits considered, 63; extract from report of, respecting a national bank, 348; advice of, to the deposit banks, 357.

Tripoli and Tunis, hard money in, indispensable, II. 90.
Tudor, William, urges the erection of Bunker Hill Monument, I. 58; eulogized, 84.
Turkey, its oppression of Greece, III. 79.
Turkish Government, its internal administration, III. 80.
Turnips, culture of, I. 447.
Tyler, John, at Bunker Hill, I. 88; expression of his confidence in Mr. Webster, II. 120; annexation of Texas a measure of his administration, V. 256; his course in respect to the Rhode Island difficulties, VI. 237.

U.

Undervaluation, fraudulent, necessary result of ad valorem duties, instances of, V. 175; penalties imposed on, 180.
Unit of commerce, how established, II. 582.
Uniform Currency, its importance, II. 8; chief object of the Constitution, 9.
Union of the States, importance of, I. 83, 229; necessity of, 95, 193; one of the objects in the formation of the Constitution, 312; dangers to, 292, 314; declaration of the Constitution respecting, II. 224; military power resulting from, 335; different views respecting, III. 258; not a league, 457; not a temporary partnership, 479; variety of productions and wants of the States a bond of, IV. 434; unity of commercial interests resulting from, IV. 496; speech for the preservation of, V. 325; impossibility of drawing line of separation in the event of the dissolution of, 362; fidelity of the South to, 430; relations of foreign powers with, VI. 240.
United States, their rapid growth, I. 63; duties of citizens of, 147; principles established by, 159, 213; diverse interests of, 160; condition of, during European wars, 167; public lands of the, 249; anxiously regarded by European nations, 277; condition at the close of the war of 1812, 311; not exposed to danger from without, 330; ties of, with England, 438; trade between, and the English possessions, II. 122; foundation of the rights of, 146; consequences of the proximity to Europe, 509; the safety of the government of, 511; universal toleration in, 521; consequences of the disunion of, 527; progress of, in arts and science, 610; military resources of, 612; peaceful policy of, III. 64; neutral policy of, 187, 198, 199; policy in respect to Cuba, 207; influence on the South American states, 217; advantages resulting from the credit system, IV. 91; dangers to the government of, 123; policy of, in 1798, 163; reciprocal claims with France, 170; decision of Supreme Court of, on authority of government over public lands within States, V. 395, 402; course of, in respect to non-intervention and neutrality, VI. 259; right of search not admitted by, 341; course of, respecting the slave-trade, 380; duties of, in respect to Americans in the war between Texas and Mexico, 436; protest of, against the treatment of captives in Mexico, 437; trade with China, 465; their interest in the diffusion of popular principles, 494; their position in respect to the Holy Alliance, 495; public faith of the several States, 540.
United States Bank, official documents relative to it; objects of its incorporation; opinion of Washington, II. 9; its reincorporation in 1816; branch of, at Portsmouth, New Hampshire; movements for effecting a change in officers, 12; the result of the executive veto on, 63.
University of Virginia not a charity, VI. 173.
Utrecht, treaty of, III. 196.
Updegraph v. Commonwealth, extract from the opinion of the court, VI. 182.
Upshur, in respect to the annexation of Texas, V. 345.
Utah, no occasion to make a provision against slavery in, I. 382; unfitted for slavery, II. 555.

V.

Valley Forge, associations connected with, II. 278; convention of Whigs at, 3 Oct., 1844, 278.
Van Buren, Mr., opinions of, respecting the currency, I. 424, II. 62; condition of the country after his inauguration, 15; policy of his administration, 31 et seq.; respecting the training and disciplining of the militia, 48; his treatment of the States, 66; increase of executive power during his administration, 86; his instructions to Mr. McLane, 435; nomination for the presidency by the Free Soil party, 435; views of, relative to slavery in the District of Columbia, 436; the sub-treasury scheme of, 453, 455; letter of Feb 28, 1843, 463; remarks on the nomination of, as minister to England, III. 357; his views respecting the public moneys, IV. 355; policy of his administration, 483; message of, on subject of northeastern boundary, V. 86, 88, 89, 92; arbitration proposed by, 114; extract from message of, on subject of Canadian difficulties of 1837, 117.

Vansittart, Mr., II. 134.
Vase, presentation of, to Mr. Webster, I. 317.
Vattel, on the power of nation over public lands, V. 392; referred to, VI. 122, 269.
Vermont, advantages gained to, by treaty of Washington, V. 113.
Verona, Congress at, 1822, III. 83, 201.
Vessels, object of licensing and enrolling, VI. 20; national jurisdiction over, 306; entry of into foreign ports, 306.
Veto, by Gen. Jackson, I. 240; its abuse, 267; its exercise by different presidents, 267; of the United States Bank bill, III. 416, 419.
Veto Message, consequences resulting from its principles, III. 446.
Veto Power, II 137; its origin, 336.
Vienna, Congress of, III. 198.
Virginia, the political character of her people, II. 84; statement of manufactures in, 195, 198; improbability of the secession of, 608; resolutions of 1798, III. 319, 383; cedes her public lands to the United States, 255, V. 335; proceedings of the legislature of, respecting the judiciary of the United States, III. 352; ratification of Constitution by, 476; resolution of House of Delegates of, in 1786, recommending consideration of commercial regulations, II. 9, IV. 493, VI. 10; encomium on, IV. 494; early feeling of, in regard to slavery, V. 357.
Visit and Search, identical, VI. 336.
Visitation, the power of, V. 472; extract from Exeter College case, in regard to, 473.
Volney's Ruins, quoted, VI. 159.
Voltaire, followers of, not excluded from the Girard College, VI. 146.
Voluntary bankruptcy, V. 18.
Volunteer Force, speech on the organization of, V. 151.
Volunteers, eulogium on, II. 335; patriotism of, V. 156; difficulty of enlisting, 278.

W.

Wages, high rate of, in the United States, II. 176; advantages of high, IV. 537.
Walker, R. J., statement of public and private payments and receipts, IV. 329.
War, duties imposed by, II. 335; of 1812, its effect on prices, III. 100; Mr. Webster's defence of his course in, IV. 501; effect of rumors of, upon commerce and trade, V. 61.
Warehouse Bill, V. 154.
Warehouse System of England and the United States, III. 116.
Warren, Gen Joseph, I. 38, 70; honor to, 57; apostrophe to, 65.
Warren, G. W., letter to, on the Constitution and the Union, VI. 565.
Washington, Gen. George, I. 70, 159; his remark respecting the battle of Bunker Hill, 92; his death, 111; resolutions of John Adams respecting, 134; inauguration at New York, 201; eulogized, 210; difficulties in administering government, 208; centennial celebration of, 219; head of first representative government, 222; basis of his character, 225; Fisher Ames's remark respecting, ib.; foreign policy, 226; domestic policy, 227; exhortation of, against party spirit, 229; sanctions the establishment of a bank, 391, II. 163; an advocate of a uniform currency, 9, 10; the commencement of his administration under the present Constitution of the United States, 228; his first speech to the two houses, 229, 230; at Valley Forge, 273; the embodiment of the idea of a patriot President, 583; lays the foundation of the first Capitol, 616; monument to, 617; his farewell address commented on, III. 213; administration of, by whom supported, 310; his objections to an apportionment bill, 385; comments on his measures by Congress, IV. 115; first speech of, to Congress, 341; regarded by the continent of Europe as an illustrious hero, 502.
Washington, Treaty of, Aug. 9, 1842, VI. 356.
Washington City, its favorable situation, II 617.
Way, whether public or private, VI. 189.
Wayne, Gen., effect of his victory in 1794, III. 252.
Wayne, Mr. Justice, high tribute of, to Mr. Webster, II. 399.
Webster, Daniel, President of the Bunker Hill Monument Association, I. 61; invited to deliver the address at completion of Bunker Hill Monument, 81; last interview with John Adams, 139; letter of, respecting the supposed speech of John Adams, 149; dinner at Faneuil Hall in honor of, 163; invited to a public dinner at New York, 193; defence of the Constitution, 211; the circumstances of his birth, 214; respect of, for the New York judicature, 215; visits Buffalo, 281; address to the citizens of Buffalo, 281; to the mechanics and manufacturers, 283; letter to citizens of Pittsburg, 288; address to, 291; in favor of protecting American labor, 298; address to citizens of Bangor, 309; vase presented to, by the citizens of Boston, 319; public reception of, at New York, 339; letter of, to D. B. Ogden, 340; his intended resignation, 345; reception of, at Wheeling, 383; reception of, at Madison, 397; letter to citizens of Louisville, 398; invitation to a public dinner in Faneuil Hall, 413; speech at Faneuil Hall, 417; visit and speech at Oxford, England, 435; addresses a meeting in Boston on the agriculture of England, 443; visit of, to Saratoga, II. 3; his early home, 30; remarks of, at a convention at Bunker Hill, 40; his course in England in respect to State debts, 71; visit of, to Richmond, 105; public reception at Boston, 1842, 111; letter to the citizens of Boston, 112; offered by President Harrison the Secretaryship of the Treasury, 119; delicacy of his position in 1842, 124; opposition to his remaining in the Cabinet, Sept., 1841, 125; addresses the New York Historical Society on the north-eastern boundary, 1843, 143; addresses a convention at Andover, 158; letter of, to Prof. Stuart, ib.; personal remarks made by, 178; a native of New England, but a son of the United States, 204; speech of, at a mass meeting at Albany, 214; at Whig Convention at Philadelphia, 251; at Valley Forge, 277; invited to a public dinner at Philadelphia, 305; letter to citizens of Philadelphia, 306; visits Charleston, S. C., 371; at the dinner of the New England Society at Charleston, S. C., 378; toasts at Charleston, 383, 384, 388; at the dinner of the Charleston Bar, 389; reception of, at Columbia, 395; at Savannah, 398; first speech in favor of internal improvements, 409; addresses the citizens of Marshfield, 423; letter of, to the citizens of Marshfield, 424; at the Festival of the Sons of New Hampshire, 498; at the Pilgrim Festival of New York, 1850, 519; at Buffalo, 1851, 531; addresses the young men of Albany, 567; important services of, detailed by Mr. Spencer, 585; his account of the laying of the corner-stone of the Capitol, 605; instructions moved by, in respect to the Bank of the United States, III. 35; introduces a resolution for the appointment of an agent to Greece, 60; chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, 1826, 164; refers to his prediction respecting a protective policy, 229; unfounded charges against, IV. 386, 502, et seq.; his respect for Mr. Calhoun, 467; his services and devotion to the United States, 499; defence of his course in the war of 1812, 502; in his first speech in Congress urged the importance of greater attention to the naval service, 505; charges against, in regard to slavery, 507; to the tariff, 508; to the currency, 517; a hard-money man, 518; extract from the letter of, respecting McLeod, V. 125; purpose of his public life, 300; letter of, to Mr. Fox, respecting the release of Alexander McLeod, VI. 2; letter from, to citizens of Washington, relative to his argument on Girard's will, 134; to Gov. Fairfield, 272; to the Commissioners of Maine and Massachusetts, 276; to Lord Ashburton, proposing a boundary line, 283; to Lord Ashburton, respecting payment to Maine and Massachusetts, 289 letter of, to Captains Bell and Paine respecting the slave-trade, 290; to Lord Ashburton, respecting the Caroline, 292, 302.

Webster, Hon. Ezekiel, lamented death of, VI. 576.

Webster, Fletcher, appointed Secretary of the mission to China, VI. 474; letter of, as Acting Secretary of State, to the Chevalier d'Argaïz, 393

Weir, Robert N., his painting of the Embarkation of the Pilgrims, I. 51.

Wesley, John, anecdote of, VI. 143.

West Chester, appeal to the citizens of, VI. 586; pledges of its attachment to the Union, 583.

West Dennis, letter to citizens of, VI. 595.

Western Emigration not opposed by New England, III. 266.

Western Interests, supported by New England, III. 265.

Western and New England settlements compared, III. 251.

Western New York, character of its inhabitants, II. 545.

Western States, interested in internal improvements, I. 305; accumulation of business in the United States courts, III. 157; effect on, of vetoing the Bank of the United States, 419.

West India Colonies, I. 19; no reciprocity with English, III. 358.

West Indies, trade between, and the United States, II 122, III. 237, 364; policy of the United States respecting it, 365.

Westphalia, treaty of, III. 196.

Wheat, average crop of, in England, I. 449; decrease in its price, IV. 19.

Wheaton, H., opinion of, respecting the slave trade, V. 143; treaty negotiated by, VI. 412.

Wheelock, Rev. E., founder of Dartmouth College, V. 463.

Whigs, declaration of principles and purposes of, II. 41; convention of, at Richmond, Va., 83; in Boston, 125; at Philadelphia, 253; at Valley Forge, 277; doctrines of, in respect to protection, 254; Gen. Taylor nominated by, 429.

White, Bishop, extract from his writings, VI. 178.
White, Capt. Joseph, Mr. Merrill's account of his murder, VI. 41; speech to the jury in the case of his murder, 51.
White-lead, manufacture of, injured by tariff of 1846, V. 197.
Whipple, William, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, II. 506.
Wilkins, Mr., tariff bill introduced by, III. 448.
Wilmot Proviso, friends of, advocates for the admission of Texas, V. 343; remarks respecting, in a speech of Mr. Webster at the Springfield Convention, 1847, V. 349; inutility of, in regard to certain Territories, 352, 382, 421; not to be urged merely as a reproach to Southern States, 352.
Windham, Mr., remark of, V. 363.
Wine, importance of duty on, IV. 554.
Wines of Portugal, letter respecting duties on, VI. 415.
Winslow House, a part of Mr. Webster's estate, II. 424.
Witherspoon, Mr. motion of, in Congress, VI. 10.
Witchcraft, Blackstone's remark respecting, 207.
Wolf, Gov., effect of opinion of, IV. 7.
Woman, how she performs her part in free government, II. 107.
Wood, Sir Charles, on the British claim to the right of search, VI. 338.
Woodbridge, Gov., remarks of, on border disturbances of Canada and Michigan, V. 140.
Woodbury, Levi, his letter to Mr. Ingham relative to the President of the Branch Bank at Portsmouth, N. H., II. 12; extracts from treasury report relative to unproductive labor, 25; report of, referred to, IV. 352.
Woodbury, J. T., letter to, 15th October, 1851, on the Acton celebration, VI. 601.
Wool, English opinion respecting duties on, III. 117; policy of duty on, 135.
Wool, Gen., report of, on military communication in Maine, V. 108, 115.
Woollen Manufactures, whence imported, II. 466; of England and the United States, III. 137; not benefited by the act of 1824, 231.
Worcester, convention at, I. 237.
Wright, Silas, on the Van Buren administration, in respect to the banks and currency, II. 64; on the distribution of the surplus revenue, 69; votes in favor of the tariff, 130; opinions of, respecting the bank, III. 616; remark of, respecting popular opinion, 531.

Y.

Young Men, appeal to, II. 562, 592.
Ypsilanti, Alexander, heads the popular outbreak in Moldavia, III. 85.

Z.

Zoll-Vercin, states included in it, VI. 411.

GENERAL DIVISION.

Biographical Memoir, by Edward Everett.—Vol. I. pp. xi.–clx.

Speeches delivered on Various Public Occasions.—Vols. I. and II.

Speeches in the Convention to amend the Constitution of Massachusetts.—Vol. III. pp. 1–32.

Speeches in Congress.—From Vol. III. p. 33 to Vol. V. p. 438.

Legal Arguments and Speeches to the Jury.—From Vol. V. p. 439 to Vol. VI. p. 212.

Diplomatic and Official Papers.—Vol. VI. pp. 213–530.

Miscellaneous Letters.—Vol. VI. pp. 531–601.