HISTORICAL NOTE.

The Durham Colleges form one of the two Divisions of the University of Durham, the other Division being King's College in Newcastle.

The University was founded in Durham in 1832, after two abortive schemes in earlier centuries. When Henry VIII seized the property of the monasteries a scheme was proposed for the establishment of a college at Durham, but nothing came of it. Again during the Commonwealth a similar plan was made, and in May, 1657, letters patent were issued for the foundation of a corporate body to be known as "the Provost, Fellows and Scholars of the College in Durham of the Foundation of Oliver, Lord Protector," and the Provost and Fellows were actually nominated. A proposal that the College should have power to grant degrees roused the opposition of Oxford and Cambridge and Richard Cromwell promised that nothing should be done to the prejudice of the two ancient Universities. The Protectorate came to an end and so did the College.

The actual foundation was due to the efforts of William Van Mildert, Bishop of Durham, and the Dean and Chapter of Durham. From the beginning the founders contemplated a residential system on the lines of Oxford and Cambridge. "An Act to enable the Dean and Chapter of Durham to appropriate part of the property of their church to the establishment of a University in connection therewith" was passed in 1832. Temporary accommodation was provided in the house known as the Archdeacons Inn on Palace Green and the first students came into residence in 1833. By the generosity of the Bishop of Durham an Order in Council was obtained in 1837, appropriating Durham Castle, one of the palaces of the Palatinate See, to the uses of the University, which thus obtained a College Building which has few rivals in England or elsewhere.

In 1846 an attempt was made to provide for men of limited means an alternative to residence in the Castle, by the establishment of a hall of residence in which expenses were reduced by providing all meals in common at a fixed charge and by letting the rooms furnished. The name given to the new institution was Bishop Hatfield's Hall, in memory of a fourteenth century Bishop of Durham who had been a generous benefactor to university education. The new Hall was very successful and soon had to be enlarged. A second hall, known as Cosin's Hall, was opened in 1851, but it proved unsuccessful and was closed in 1864. Non-Collegiate Students were first admitted to the University in 1871 and within twenty years had grown sufficiently numerous to be an important section of the student body. They were under the charge of a Censor, and in May, 1947, the body became known as St. Cuthbert's Society. With the formation of these additional bodies of students, the Castle came to be known as University College.

In the early part of the twentieth century two private halls were founded, St. Chad's in 1904 and St. John's in 1909. These were foundations with governing bodies of their own. At first they were merely halls of residence, but in 1919 they each took the style and title of College. A similar change was made at Hatfield. Bishop Hatfield's Hall became Hatfield College, and the Principal became the Master.

Women have been admitted to Durham since the nineties. In 1895 Senate petitioned the Crown for a supplementary charter enabling degrees to be conferred on women. In Michaelmas Term, 1896 the first four women students were matriculated, all of them members of St. Hild's College. In 1899 Abbey House on Palace Green was opened as a Women's Hostel. Later other houses had to be taken as well, and by resolution of the Council of the Durham Colleges in 1919, the Women's Hostel became known as St. Mary's College. Home Students were first admitted in 1895, and in 1947 the body of women non-collegiate students became known as St. Aidan's Society, with its own Principal.

The three Teachers' Training Colleges in Durham, the College of the Venerable Bede for men, and St. Hild's and Neville's Cross Colleges, for women, have formed an increasingly close connection with the University, and now most of the students of Bede College and a proportion of those of the other two colleges, read for the degrees of the University.

The University is now controlled by new Statutes which came into force in 1937. Under these Statutes, the Durham Division is governed by a Council, an Academic Board and a Warden. Since that date the long and costly task of preserving the Castle, the fabric of which threatened to collapse shortly after the War of 1914-18, has been completed. The second extension of the Science Laboratories in South Road, which were built in 1924 and extended once in 1930, was begun in July, 1939, and after a substantial delay owing to the 1939-1945 War, was completed in 1948.

A new wing constructed for Hatfield College was opened in September, 1950, and a new building for St. Mary's College, which has hitherto been housed in seven different buildings, is in the process of erection south of the river.

The Durham Division of the University is organised on a collegiate basis and all students are admitted in the first instance to a College or a Society. Teaching is, however, organised by the Division and not by the individual Colleges. Students from all Colleges attend the same courses.

ADMISSION.

APPLICATION

All students must be members either of a College or of a Society. Members of a College normally live in College. Members of a Society normally live in approved lodgings. Students wishing to come into residence should first apply to the Secretary of the College or Society which they wish to join. They may find it advisable to apply to more than one body, but if they do so they should inform each College or Society which other bodies they have approached. While no date is fixed as the last day for receiving applications, it is advisable to apply as early as possible.

Students who are intending teachers and are not entering one of the Training Colleges (see below) should also make application to the Professor of Education, Education Department, Palace Green, Durham, for admission to that Department. These applications should be made early in the session preceding that in which the student wishes to come into residence. Particulars of the Department of Education and of the Ministry of Education Grants for intending teachers will be found in the Department of Education Prospectus which may be obtained from the Professor of Education.

Intending students in Science must also apply to the Secretary, the Science Departments, South Road, Durham. They will only be admitted if the Science Departments are able to accept them, but the final acceptance will come from the Head of the College or Society and not from the Science Departments.

DURHAM COLLEGES RESEARCH FUND

In 1938 the Council of the Durham Colleges allocated the sum of £500 for research during the Session. It proposes to make further sums of this order available each year. The fund is administered by a standing Committee of the Academic Board, and all University teachers in the Durham Division and post-graduate students, who should normally have been engaged in research for a year, are eligible for grants. The Research Fund Committee is prepared to make grants to cover or give assistance towards the cost of specific investigations. The terms and conditions under which grants may be made and other information may be obtained from the Secretary to the Durham Colleges, 38 North Bailey, Durham.

STUDENTS' ACTIVITIES.

1. STUDENTS' REPRESENTATIVE COUNCIL.

In each College there is a Junior Common Room which controls student affairs within that college and elects representatives to the central Durham Colleges Students' Representative Council. This Council is the body recognised for representing student opinion and for presenting the views of students to the Academic Board and Council through the Warden.

2. UNION SOCIETIES.

In addition to the Students' Representative Council there are two Union Societies—the Durham Union Society (for men) and the Durham Women's Union Society (for women). Membership of each Society is open to all men and women students respectively on payment of a small subscription. Membership is optional, but a majority of students are members. Both societies arrange formal debates and lectures by outside speakers, and members of both Societies are entitled to use the various Union facilities, which include a coffee bar.

3. SPORTS ORGANISATION.

All the Colleges have separate Athletic Clubs of their own, which compete against each other for inter-collegiate trophies, but the major sports organisation is on a divisional basis controlled by the Durham Colleges Athletic Union, which includes the Captains of all sports and a representative of each College. The University playing fields, covering about 20 acres, are situated on the Race-course beside the river and include a cricket ground, a rugby football ground, two Association football pitches and three hockey pitches as well as a number of tennis courts. The fields are managed on behalf of Council by the Board of Management of University Playing Fields, which consists of the Treasurer and the Secretary of the Durham Colleges and the student President of the Durham Colleges Athletic Union. Negotiations have already been completed for the construction of a further playing field on a 14-acre site at Houghall also on the banks of the river but about three-quarters of a mile further up-stream. It is hoped that these fields will be ready for use by 1952.
