INTRODUCTION.

The present volume is the third part in the same series as that published last year. Attention has already been called in the Part I to the chief Persian books of the sources of history of the Nawwābs of the Carnatic. Of these, Tuzak-i-Wālājāhī of Burhān ibn Ḥasan, has been done into English and issued in two parts.¹ The present volume comprises a major portion of the English translation of Saiṯaniḥūt-i-Mumtaẓ? This Persian manuscript gives us a detailed history of the reign of Ghulām Ḥusayn Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur Nawwāb Wālājāh II (1795-1801 A.D.) with an account of the last years of the reign of his father, Muḥammad Alī Nawwāb Wālājāh I, together with a summary of the events in the reigns of Tjmdattul-Umarā Bahādur's successors, Azīmu'd-Dawla Bahādur Nawwāb Wālājāh III, A'zam Jalī Bahādur Nawwāb Wālājāh IV, and Ghulam Muḥammad Ghawth Khān Bahādur Nawwāb Wālājāh V.

The author of this manuscript is Muḥammad Karīm Khaynu'd-Din Hasan Gjiulam Zamin, son of Iftikharud-Dawla Ḥātig Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur Ṣamsām Jang and a grandson of Muḥammad Alī Nawwāb Wālājāh I. He was born in 1194 A.H. (1780 A.D.), received the titles, Shahiūd-Dawla Jalddat Jang in 1210 A.H., Khurshidu'l-Mulk in 1231 A.H., and on his father's death in 1236 A.H. (1820 A.D.) Iftikharu'd-Dawla Muhammad Nasir Khan Bahadur Ṣamsam Jang.

In the beginning of the month of Rajab in the year 1249 A.H. (1834 A.D.), Muḥammad Karīm, while living at Madras, paid homage to Nawwāb Agīm Jāh Bahādur¹ who directed him to write up a history of the Nawwāb's great ancestor, Ghulām Ḥusayn TJmdatrfl-Umarā Bahādur Nawwāb Walajāh II, similar to the poet Abjadi's famous *Amuarnama*² Muhammad Karīm set to work, and finished the writing of this book in 1252 A.H. (1837 A.D.).

This book is, in the language of the author, composed of four gulzars (parts) and each gulzar is divided into four guldastas (chapters). Thus there are in all sixteen guldastas. Each guldasta is adorned with a number of rangs (sections).

The present volume includes the translation of the first three parts and a few chapters of the fourth part of Sawanihat-i-Mumtaz, and carries the history of the Carnatic-Nawwābs from the last years of the reign of Muhammad Ali Nawwāb Walajāh I to the death of his son, Ghulam Ḥusayn TJmdattfl-Umara Bahadur Walajāh II. This period, comparatively short as it is, includes the history of one of the most interesting personages in the family of Anwar that ruled the Carnatic. This Part III in the series may not have such considerable historical importance as the Part II, but it is superior to the latter in details of social life of the period to which it relates. On the whole, it may be safely said that, allowing for the great crisis through which the country was passing, when European trading companies, especially the English East India Company, were beginning to dominate the land and lord over the native rulers, the period of Umdatul-Umara Bahadur Nawwāb Walajāh II is not without its significance either social or historical. Before passing to the consideration of these details, a brief sketch may be given of Umdatul-Umara Bahadur Nawwāb Wālājāh IL

Ghulam Husayn Umdatul-Umara Bahadur was the eldest son of Muḥammad All Nawwāb Wālājāh I by his first wife Khadija Nawwāb Bēgam, born in Muḥarram 1161 A.H. (31st December 1747 A.D.). He was named Abdu'l-Walī by Nawwab Anwaru'd-Din Khan, his grandfather, who got for him the title Umdatul-Umara from the imperial court of the Pādshah at Delhi.

He was forty-eight years of age when he became the ruler of the Carnatic. His political relationship with the English East India Company was never happy; but he was enthusiastic in his love and affection for Ṭippū Sultān, the ruler of Mysore.

Umdatul-Umara Bahadur was a scholar, and a poet. He must have been practising the art of poetry from his younger days. He has a *diwān*¹ to his credit. Some of his verses are included in the appendices to this book. From what we have of his works, it will be fully apparent how intensely conventional and artificial the style of poetry was in his days.

A close reading of the book gives us the impression that Umdatul-Umara Bahadur was an amiable, but a weak ruler, ill-fitted to grapple with the fearful peril which overshadowed the last years of his father and finally overwhelmed him. He was a good scholar, devoted to books, gentle and very considerate towards his relatives but, on the other hand, timid, undecided and ignorant of state-craft. Of the many instances, his relationship with Nawwab Sultānu'n-nisa Begam, his sister, is such as to justify this view. Buḡhī Bēgam, known as Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisa Begam² was the third daughter of Muḥammad Ali Nawwāb Wālājāh I by Khadija Nawwāb Bēgam.

HISTORY OF THE NAWWABS OF THE CARNATIC III

Suljāntfn-nisā was junior to Muḥammad Anwar Sayftfl-Mulk, the third brother of *Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur. She was married to a nephew of Muḥammad Alī Nawwāb Wālājāh I, by name Abdu'l-Hadi, with the title Samsamu'd-Dawla, and had children. One of her sons was Ra'Isu'l-Umarā Bahādur.

Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam enjoyed the confidence of her brother, Umdatul-Umara Bahādur Nawwāb Wālājāh II. There is a great interest as to the part played by this sister of the Nawwāb. It is unnecessary here to recount the various incidents which show that she was really the power behind the throne. It may be conjectured that the Nawwāb could have promised his sister or at least made her believe that he would nominate her son, Ra'Isu'l-Umarā Bahādur, as his successor to the throne of the Carnatic. Yet the matter is doubtful, and will, in all probability, never now be certainly cleared up. Convinced at last that she was deceive! by her brother, Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam grew very angry and her relationship with him in his last days became unpleasant. On his death, she even refused to allow his coffin to be carried through the Karnāndarwāza of Nuṣrat-maḥall towards her palace.

There is a good deal of doubt about his religious views. His leanings to Shl̄hism seem to be evident from the various accounts given in the book. Whether or no there was any truth in the rumour that Umdatul-Umara Bahādur was converted to Shl̄hism, he consistently observed the celebrations in the month of Muḥarram. Yet at the end of his life we have also his confessions to Mawlānā Abdul-All ṣāhib, that he never deviated from Sunnism, the faith of his ancestors. If we exclude consideration of this point, TJmdatul-Umarā Bahādur was a strict Muslim observing punctiliously the prayers five times a day, and not careless of other religious observances.

Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur had also his hobby. He was an ardent student of alchemy and used to work daily in his alchemy house from 10 o'clock in the morning till noon. Every day he prepared gold weighing about five hun and distributed it among the poor and the needy at his gate through his attendant, Muḥammad Ma'şūm.

Among the various details of the reign of Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur, we get a full account of the last years of Muḥammad Aḡī Nawwāb Wāfājāh I till his death in 1795 A.D., and the elaborate ceremonies accompanying the burial of his coffin in Trichinopoly under the vault of Ḥazrat Natthar Wall.

To those who believe that Muḥammad Aḡī Nawwāb Wāfājāh I was a self-seeking ruler, always dependant upon the English for increasing his own power and position, the account of his last years given in this book will give altogether a different picture. It will be clear that his rule was inspired throughout by considerations of the other world rather than of this.

The death of Muḥammad Aḡī Nawwāb Wāfājāh I destroyed the outward semblance of unity which had hitherto existed between the Carnatic Nawwābs and the English East India Company. From the very moment of his accession to the throne, Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur's readiness to quarrel with the English was apparent, and it became much more conspicuous as time went on. Lord Hobart, the Governor of Madras, was deeply offended by Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur's neglect to inform him of Muhammad Ali Nawwab Walajah's death and more particularly of the celebration of his own coronation. Worse trouble, however, came when Lord Hobart proposed to Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur that certain taluks should be made over to the English in return for the qisṭ money due to them. Nawwāb ṣāhib insisted that he would pay the qisṭ in cash in accordance with the agreement made with Lord Cornwallisin 1792 A.D., and he was naturally incensed at the unreasonable demand of Lord Hobart. Sir John Shore, the Governor-General, condemned the conduct of Lord Hobart "as repugnant to the treaty of 1792, by which the Nawwāb's rights were guaranteed, and as, in fact, involving a breach of faith".

HISTORY OF THE NAWWABS OF THE CARNATIC III

Lord Hobart appealed to the Directors of the Company in justification of his conduct, and Sir John Shore wrote to Dundas, the President of the Board of Control on 12th January, 1796, that the conduct of Lord Hobart was "most unjustifiable, violent, and indefensible on every principle" and also protested that Lord Hobart's attitude "would suggest to the country powers that convenience was the measure of our good faith". Thus the Governor was foiled in his endeavour and Nawwāb ṣāḥib won his point. Lord Hobart received a letter from Sir John Shore, the Governor-General, instructing him to accept the payment of qist in cash in accordance with the practice observed during the reign of Muḥammad AII Nawwāb Wālājāh I. The Governor was further directed to meet the Nawwāb and offer congratulations on his accession to the throne.

There was also another chief reason for the growing dissatisfaction of the Governor with Nawwāb ṣāḥib. One Mr. Barrett, of Portuguese extraction, who was thoroughly proficient in writing and reading English, became the diwān of the Nawwāb. Messrs. Webb and Close¹ give a most unfavourable account of the man. He was, according to them, "of the worst type of native Portuguese; equally destitute of education, manners, and knowledge". But from this book, Mr. Barrett appears to be a wise, prudent and clever man. He won the esteem of the Nawwāb in the following manner. On one occasion the date prescribed for the payment of the qist by the Nawwāb to the Company drew near and the Nawwāb had no money. Mr. Barrett, who met the Nawwāb in those anxious days, undertook to arrange for the payment of the qist a day before the appointed date. After taking leave of the Nawwāb,

(1) After the death of Ghulam Husayn Umdatul-Umara Bahadur Nawwāb Wālājāh II, Messrs. Webb and Close were appointed by the English Company as commissioners to interview the Nawwāb's heir and ascertain the conditions under which his accession would be allowed.

INTRODUCTION

Mr. Barrett arranged with an English banker for the payment of the qist to the English Company, got the treasury receipt for the amount paid, and brought it to the Nawwāb. As soon as the Nawwāb saw the receipt, he was very much delighted and from that day Mr. Barrett became his dlzvān. The Nawwāb honoured him with the titles Colonel and Bahadur. Rai Reddi Rao and Rai Anand Rao became the peshkārs under Mr. Barrett. The position occupied by Mr. Barrett, and the profound influence that he began to exercise over the administration must have made Mr. Barrett unpopular with the officers of the English East India Company, and this might have developed into one of the chief causes of friction between Nawwāb ṣāhib and the Madras Council.

That the English Company, later on, might have overcome its prejudices against Mr. Barrett, is clear from the fact that Mr. Barrett was responsible for the entry of the English army into the Bagh, the Nawwab's residence, when Umdatul-Umara Bahādur was on his death-bed.

The arrival of General Harris¹ and Mīr Ālam Bahādur² at Madras after the subjugation of the Fort of Seringapatan and the death of Ṭippū Sultān, and their interview with Nawwāb ṣāhib are worthy of note. The information of General Harris, the victorious English general, about the fall of Seringapatan, inflamed the Nawwāb with anger against the English, and stirred up his sympathy for Ṭippū Sultān, his late powerful contemporary, but, timid as he was, he composed himself before the English General to show ostensibly his joy at the victory of the English. In the account of the interview of Mīr Ālam, Umdatul-Umara Bahadur displayed his vanity, the usual characteristic of the Indian rulers of his day. He says that the suba of the Carnatic is 'a powerful state, for we are distinguished from others by the manṣab i.e., wizarat-i-ṣhibadar of the suba of the Carnatic,' and that he will not be satisfied merely with the civilities and etiquette prevalent in the *Aşof-jahl darbar

The machinations of Sultānu'n-nisa Begam to prevent the recognition of Tāju'l-Umara Bahadur as heir-apparent, Ja'far All's attempt to kill Nawwāb şāhib, and the Company's interest in the succession afford interesting reading. Umdatul-Umara Bahādur sets forth the position beautifully thus: "I intend my son for the throne; Sayfu'l-Mulk* intēnds that the throne is for him; my senior sister has in mind that her son is meant for the throne after me; and the frangs are waiting for their opportunity. But it shall be as the supreme Ruler wills"

The serious illness of the Nawwāb, the increase of the English influence and their interest in the question of succession, the Nawwāb's waşiyat-nāma written in his own hand in the name of Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur, his son, the consequent displeasure of Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam, and the misunderstanding between herself and her brother,—these details make the last pages of the book specially interesting.

The present volume is valuable again in that it contains accounts of a number of marriage celebrations which show how matches were made, the character of the celebrations essential to different members of the royal family, and the amounts spent on such festivities. The book also abounds in details in regard to the ceremonies at the time of the betrothal, wedding, gifts to the bride, procession of the bridegroom and home-coming of the bride.

The numerous trips, picnics, and visits to shrines and tombs described in several pages of the book show the nature of the life led by aristocrats of the day. They also indicate that the Nawwāb had personal relationship with every member of the family and that he was the favourite of the people at large.

It may be said in conclusion that the period of Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur marks, on the whole, the transformation not only of political power from one hand to another, but also of transmigration of ideas in our land. Politically, it is true, the Carnatic ceased to enjoy a separate national existence being merged in the growing British power, but in the intellectual domain also it began to lose its Muslim identity and declare itself in favour of alien culture and ideas.

Sawanihat-i-Mumtaz, the original Persian manuscript from which the English translation is made, is written in a style, not very good, at times very colloquial, and even careless and is marked by many forms of expression peculiar only to the author. The translator has attempted to give the correct forms in the glossary at the end of the volume.

The editor is highly indebted to the ready and generous help of Rao Sahib C. S. Srinivasachariar, M.A., Professor of History, Annamalai University S. India, for the valuable historical notes.

SAWANIḤAT-I-MUMTAZ

In the name of Alldh, the Beneficent, the Merciful.

PLENTIFUL praise and. profuse thanks are due to the Lord, the Glorious, and the Powerful Who invested every corner of the world in beautiful robes of variegated colours, Who in His perfect wisdom illuminated the earth and the heavens with two lamps namely the sun and the moon, Who settled His creations—genii, mankind, animals, plants and minerals—in the world to worship Him and celebrate His praise, and Who lighted up the lantern of the body of man in particular with the light of wisdom.

* O Lord I Thou alone art Potent and Majestic;

O Lord I Thou alone art the Eternal Judge;

Thou alone art the Creator of the heavens;

Thou alone art the Creator of the earth;

Thou alone art the Creator of the prophets;

Thou alone art the splendour of the universe;

Thou alone illuminated the spheres;

And lit the land and sea,"

HISTORY OF THE NAWWABS OF THE CARNATIC III

In praise of the chief of the apostles, the last of the prophets, vis., Muḥammad the chosen. (May Allah's peace and blessings be on him, his family and his followers.)

A thousand salutations are due to the chief of the apostles Aḥmad the select, Muḥammad the chosen, to his family which is pure, and to his followers who are great, for, says the Lord of the Universe: ^M But for you I would not have created the various spheres."

The author's supplication for assistance, from the Exalted Creator

O Lord! In the names of the noble Prophet, his respectable family, and his revered followers, grant long life to the patron of this book, keep him safe and sound for ever; his name is Azīm happily coupled with Jah; he is the refuge of the distressed.

O Merciful Lord! I proclaim the name of the author of this book; his original name is Muḥammad Karim; fulfil his needs quickly. This is my desire night and day.

O Lord! In the name of Muḥammad the chosen, pardon all our sins.

Reason for compiling this chronicle

This humble servant was born in the year 1194 A.H. [1780 A.D.] and the chronogrammatic name is Ghulam Al-i-Muḥamraad. His noble parents blessed him with the name of Muḥammad Karim Khayru'd-DIn Hasan Ghulam Zāmin. His father's name was Iftikharu'd-Dawla Hafiz Muhammad Nasir Khan Bahadur Samsam Jang (peace be on him) son of Muhammad Khayru'd-DIn Khan Bahadur the elder (peace be on him), son of Abdu'l-Ḥakim Khan Shahid, son of Shaykh Muḥammad Khayrullih, son of Shaykh Abdul Wall, the eldest son of Shaykh Muḥammad Munawwar, a resident of Gopāmaw.

to the boundless grace, kindness and favours of the Nawwāb, great hope of attaining further distinction in view of my rank, dignity, and the happy completion of this book Sawanihat-i-Mumtaz.

On Thursday the first of the auspicious month of Rajab, in the year 1249 A.H. [Nov.-Dec, 1833 A.D.] this humble servant, a resident of the town of Madras, had been to the exalted Nawwāb Azīm J'ah Siṛaju'l-Umāra Bahādur (may his bounties last for ever) to pay his respects at 9 o'clock in the morning. The benevolent Nawwāb, who was perusing the chronicle dealing with the administration of Nawwāb Wālājāh Muḥammad Ali Khān Bahādur (nestled in paradise), was gracious enough to address this humble servant as follows:

" All the events relating to the reign of your grandfather namely Nawwāb ṣāhib (nestled in paradise), are published through the official gazettes, and in the history of Tūzak-i-Wāldjīhi, which was compiled by the order of Janāb Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur*, your uncle. Other details relating to the reign of that Nawwāb, which Mir Ismāil Khān Abjadī had written in his Anwarndtna are also well known. But as for the events pertaining to the reign of Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur Wālājāh II, your senior uncle, nothing is known, for the events in that reign were not chronicled; nor did any one write the history of that period. So if a book containing the events in that reign, and the happenings of that period is compiled, it will give me immense pleasure. By the grace of God, there is none at present in the Wālājāhī family like you who has seen those days and who is honourable. You are also an expert in the knowledge of most of the facts of the period of your senior uncle, Janāb Nawwāb Umdatu'l-Umara Bahādur (peace be on him). You have thus a very good knowledge of the subject, and it behoves you to chronicle those details which you had witnessed and heard in that period."

I, an ignorant man, accepted the command of the Nawwāb with great respect, and submitted, "All the affairs relating to the reign of my senior uncle and most of the events that happened during that glorious administration, had been entered in the registers in chronological order, by the tnutaşaddls in the office of the sarkār. But the facts which have come to the knowledge of this ignorant man through investigation, will be reduced to writing, even though this suppliant is not acquainted with the art of writing history, and never had an opportunity to do such work. Yet, by the grace of the Generous Lord, the support of the Prophet of the Merciful (peace be on him) and the favour, benevolence and kindness of the Nawwab, I have strong hope knowing the wisdom contained in the verse, 'Attempt the task with a stout heart, the thorns yield themselves to become a nosegay/ The Great Gardener will water this young garden of hope, which may eventually bring forth beautiful flowers. But there is the saying, 'Man is a compound of mistakes and forgetfulness/ If any omission or mistake in these useless pages strike the fortunate eye of the Nawwab or of the intelligent the kindness of the exalted Nawwab is relied on to overlook them in his liberality and forgiveness, for 'To err is human, to forgive divine/ Thus there is the hope that he would forgive and honour me."

The Nawwāb was gracious enough to address me further thus; "From every point of view you have an expert knowledge of these events. On this assumption I entrust this work to you; I also appoint as your assistants Muhabbat Ali Khan, son of Raḥmān Alī Khān the elder (peace be on him) who is an intelligent person and an old servant of the sarkār, and Mir

PART I

1209-1210 A.H. [1794—1796 A.D.].

FIRST CHAPTER.

The initiation of Nawwab Umdatul-Umara Bahadur in spiritual discipleship by Nawwāb Muḥammad Jill Waldjah Bahadur and other details.

It was the practice with the exalted Nawwāb Muḥammad All Wāfajāh Bahādur to decorate every year for seven nights from the 11th to the 17th of the holy month of Rabru'th-thānī Kalas-maḥall with farsḥ and green bāndt, and light it with chandeliers, kanwal, and hanging branched candlesticks of several colours. The outer hall towards the ḥawz would be furnished with a highly decorated pavilion, and a throne of green colour with embroidery. Two green banners in the name of Hazrat Maḥbūb Subḥānī (may greetings and salutations be on his forefathers) would be erected in front of the two pillars of the pavilion. The arrangements of these would be in the hands of Sālār Jang Muḥammad Najīb Khān Bahādur. Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur would be appointed to collect all those who had the good fortune to become disciples; and Shāh Qudratullah Sahib to lead the thanksgiving prayer performed in two genuflexions. Finishing the after-sunset-prayer in congregation, the Nawwab came to the ibadat khana every night from the 11th to the 16th at about 8 o'clock, sat on the prayer carpet, invited to his generous presence through Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur all those who sought happiness, gave them guidance and advice in accordance with the regulations of the Faith, and thus admitted them as his disciples.

On the 17th night of the month of Rabl'u'th-thānī in the year 1209 A.H. [11th November 1794 A.D.] he arranged to furnish the building with adornments of more than usual splendour. All the lanterns were lit with wax-candles. The shaykhs, the learned, and the pious were assembled together. As he was wont to do for years, he put on, after finishing the after-sunset-prayer, the green dress of shaykhs, wore the crown of the khilafat, and round his happy neck the rosary composed of one hundred big onyx stones, a holy relic of his religious guide, and held in his hand an ordinary olive rosary for the purpose of saying his salutations. He took in his company Shāh Maḥmūd Ṣāhib Sāwf, and other shaykhs; he adorned the throne with his presence, and requested Mawlānā Abdu'l-Ali Ṣāhib to sit on his right. Then he called to his presence Shah Qudralullah Sahib and spoke happily as follows:

"Formerly I honoured you with the khilafat of Qadiriyya.1 By the grace of Allāh, exalted be He, I desire at present to bestow glory on the light of my eye, the fortunate and the intelligent Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur, the crown prince, by granting him the khilafat of the illustrious Chishtiyya* family." Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur, who was then present in

(1) This is an ascetic order of faqirs instituted by Sayyid Abdu'l-Qadir al-Jilani, 561 A.H. [1165 A.D.] surnamed Pir dastagir, whose shrine is in Baghdād. It is the most popular religious order amongst the sunni Muslims in India and elsewhere in Asia.

The Qadiriyya order practise both the silent and the audible form of service, reject music and singing, wear green turbans, and one of their garments must be ochre-coloured. The recital of the blessing of the Prophet (durud) is a conspicuous part of their rites.

(2) The Chishti trace their origin to Abu Ishaq, ninth in succession from Ali, son-in-law of the Prophet, settled at Chisht in Khurasan. One of his disciples Khwaja Mu'Inu'd-Din settled at Ajmer (1142-1236 A.D.). His successor was Qutbud-Din Bakhtyar Kaki, buried near the Qutb Minar in Old Delhi. The dargah at Ajmer was constantly visited by the Emperor Akbar.

the assembly, was honoured with the rank of the khilafat of Chishtiyya, and initiated into the teachings of that sect. He also invited Ḥafīg Muḥammad Naṣīr Khān, Ghulām Asadullāh Khān. Muḥammad Karim Khān. Ḥabibuliāh Khān, Abdu'l-Ḥusayn Khān, his own five grandsons, and other persons who sought the honour of discipleship, gave them guidance and advice in accordance with the regulations of the Faith and thus exalted them by admitting them as his disciples. Then he honoured Shāh Qudratullāh Ṣāḥib by choosing him to lead the thanksgiving prayer offered in two genuflexions.

Section 1.

Nawwāb Azīmu'd-Dawla Bahādur, Sālār Jang Bahādur, Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur, and other persons, had already been favoured with the distinction of discipleship by the exalted Nawwāb. Abdul Qādir Khān Bahādur, Ḥazrat Ḥafīg Muḥammad Naṣīr Khān Bahādur, Mubārīz Jang Bahādur, Ḥaṣḥmat Jang Bahādur, Ṣādiq All Khān Bahādur, and others who had attained already the happiness of discipleship from Ḥazrat Raḥmatullāh Ṣāḥib, Shāh Abū Said Ṣāḥib, Shāh Abu'l-Layth Ṣāḥib, and others became the disciple of the exalted Ḥazrat Nawwab sahib, with a view to please him, and move along with the times.

After finishing the generous work of initiation, the exalted Nawwāb ṣāḥib, continued to sit in the same happy majlis on the throne under that flag, shook hands with his disciples from the highest to the lowest, and then said the holy fatiha. Then he distributed to every one, high and low, through Sālār Jang Bahadur, Muhammad Jawid Khan, Muhammad Bashir Khan.

Members of this order are partial to vocal music, for the Khwaja, their pir, in one of his religious reveries said that singing was the food and support of the souk the offerings over which fatiḥa was said in memory of the holy Hazrat Mahbub Subhani¹ (peace be on him).

After dissolving the assembly Nawwab sahib fixed daily allowances for his poor and needy disciples, caused orders to be written to the officers of his prosperous government directing them to pay such allowances from the income of different taluks, through Shāh Quḍratullāh Ṣāḥib after informing Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur. The Nawwāb affixed his signature and seal to these orders. He also asked all his disciples to be present every Tuesday at about 8 o'clock in the morning to attain happiness by partaking of the sweet khichṛl offered to Hazrat Maḥbūb Subḥānl. The superintendent of this holy majlis was Hāji Hafiz Muhammad Maghribi Sahib.

Section 2.

Every year on the 24th of the month of Shawwāl, his happy birthday, the Nawwāb weighed his dress used in the past year including white nim-astins and distributed them as sacred relics through Shah Quḍratullah Sahib.

Section 3.

One day the exalted Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur composed a few verses in Hindi, got them written in big letters on a gold-strewn paper, and presented it in great joy and happiness to the Nawwāb, his exalted father, and spiritual guide, as an acknowledgment for the grant of the rank of the khilafat-i-chishtiyya. The exalted Nawwab perused it and smiled, and handed it over to Mubārīz Jang Bahādur, All Dil Khan, Sadiq Ali Khan, Nuru'd-Dīn Muhammad Khan and Hashmat Jang. The verses are:

" If you wish to see the features of Allāh
Go and look at the countenance of Walājah,

(1) Abdu'l-Qadir al-Jilanī is referred to respectfully as Hazrat Mahbub Subhani (Beloved of the Divine Lord).

CH. 2-YOUTH OF NAWWAB UMDATU'L-UMARA

It is true; Shaykhji says

That 'arifs see the semblance of baytu'llah in the butkhana.

If you wish to verify this, look at yourself.

The aspect of shahinshah is hidden in His subjects.

If any one worships him, they say it is blasphemy,

And the worshippers at the shrine are termed blasphemers.

O Mumtāz, stand up for truth, and behold the great beauty.

The semblance of the Prophet of Allāh is in All Murtaẓā."

Other details in this connection are not known to this humble servant. He has put in writing whatever he has seen or remembered. The rest of it Allāh knows better.

SECOND CHAPTER.

The details relating to the youth of Nawwab Umdatul Umara Bahadur; the summoning of Hakim Ahmadullah Khan from Haydardbad; the arrival of Ruknuldawla Bahadur from Haydarabad, and the marriage of Abdu'l-Husayn Khan Bahadur.

During the reign of Nawwāb Wālājāh Muḥammad All Khan, Nawwab Umdatul-Umara Bahadur resided from his early days in Bāgh-i-kuhna* later on known as Muḥammad-bāgh. As it was not spacious enough, he engaged himself in the year 1209 A. H. [1794 A. D.] when his father was alive, to erect a wooden building according to his own plan, and shifted his residence there. This building came to be known as Fataḥ-chawkī. Adjacent to this he got ready another building covered with tiles for the pursuit of his studies in alchemy.

(1) This may be identified with Amir Bagh built before 1796. It was the property of the Nawwab who frequently lent it to Lord Clive, Governor of Madras, for public entertainments. At a late date the Court of Sadr-i-adalat was held there. It was afterwards used by the Agra Bank. Then it became the Elphinstone Hotel and now it is the premises of the Spencer's Hotel, Mount Road, Madras.

There were always present in his company five sayyids from morning till evening and another set of sayyids from sunset till midnight who offered prayers and transmitted to him the efficacy of their prayer by the breath of their mouths. Besides these, there were servants who attended on him during the day and spent the night in the chawkl in Bāgh-i-kuhna outside the compound of Fataḥ-chawki.

Reliable attendants and managers like Mīr Ismāil Khān Bahādur son of Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur, Taqī Alī Khān the house steward, Qutbu'd-Dīn Khān the bakhshi, Rahmān All Khān Bahādur the dārngḥa of the kachahl, All Nawāz Khān the arz-begl, Muhammad Hasan Khan the mir-munshi, Asadu'd-Dīn Khān the munshī, Muḥammad Mu'īnu'd-Dīn the copyist, Sayyid Nūr Ali the news-writer in palaces, Lāla Bhawānī Prashād, and Kishan Rao the clerk, besides other clerks, and darughas of different departments, were present in the darbar of the exalted Nawwāb attending to their duties from 10 o'clock in the morning till evening.

Mr. Barrett¹ who was thoroughly proficient in writing and reading English was also an expert in handicrafts, and in repairing ghari and other articles of European make. He had great skill in his work, was very wise and sagacious, prudent and enthusiastic in the work entrusted to him. Captain Smith²

(1) The author of this book writes his name as Bard and Bart His correct name was Thomas Barrett. He was entrusted with the administration of the revenues of the Nawwāb. According to the report of Messrs. Webbe and Close, he was "of the lowest tribe of native Portugese, equally destitute of education, manners, and knowledge."

(2) The author might have meant Brigadier General Joseph Smith who was for a long time adviser to Nawwāb Muhammad All Wālijāh on all matters including the army.

was distinguished for his services as the sardar of the cavalry and armed forces. Mr. Johnson, the son of Mr. Smith, was appointed to organize and train the armed forces and the cavalry.

Muhammad Darwesh and Mir Jafar Ali presented themselves before the Nawwāb at 11 o'clock in the night at bedtime and narrated or read to him stories.

Section 1.

Daily routine of Nawwab Umdatul-Umara Bahadur.

The Nawwāb went to bed at about 12 o'clock in the night, and got up before 6 o'clock in the morning. He finished his ablutions with hot water that was got ready on a lamp near the place where wood of aloes was burnt in front of him, and said the early-morning-prayer. Then he sat facing the qibla, and said tasbiḥ taught to him by his noble mother, namely, the late honoured and revered Khadlja Begam known as Hazrat Nawwāb Begam ṣāḥiba. He said tasbiḥ counting regularly over his fingers till the rising of the sun. He engaged himself in the same manner after evening-prayer, usually till sunset, when he got up for the sunset-prayer. When he was engaged in saying tasbiḥ, he never spoke to any one. He was very regular in this duty throughout his life.

After the morning prayer was over and when the sun had risen, he sat till about 8 o'clock in the big hall of Fataḥ-chawki, giving audience to visitors. Sometimes Abdu'l-Qadir Khan Bahadur, Hafiz Muhammad Nasir Khan Bahadur, Abdu'l-Ma'bud Kuran Jamsḥid Jang, Hafiz Hasan Ali Khan Rustam Jang, Hazrat Mawlana Abdul-All Sahib, Shah Mahmud Sahib Sawi, paid a visit to the exalted Nawwāb. Qadir Nawāz Khan Bahadur came secretly once a week during the night and discussed with the Nawwāb confidential matters pertaining to the walajahi darbar.

(I) It cannot be ascertained whether Johnson was the son of Smith mentioned above.

HISTORY OF THE NAWWABS OF THE CARNATIC III-Pr. 1

At 8 o'clock in the morning Nawwab sahib came out of the hall and sat at the dining table for about three-quarters of an hour. First, he granted a portion of his royal repast to those who used to say duruḍ, and then took his meal. On alternate days, he invited Muḥammad All Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur*, the light of his eyes, his beloved son, and ate in his company. Sometimes he invited for breakfast Abdu'l-Karim Khān known as Khān Bahādur, his second son. On many occasions the Nawwāb kept him in his company, and arranged for instruction through teachers learned in every branch of knowledge. Besides, he took great care to teach him the English language also.

After breakfast the Nawwāb sat alone for an hour till 10 o'clock, smoking hookah and pondering over problems. From 10 o'clock till noon he worked in the alchemy house and prepared six bani of gold which weighed five huns. He honoured Siddi Muḥammad FIRūz Khān, an old loyal and trustworthy servant of the sarkar with the appointment of darughā of the alchemy house, and entrusted him with all the work attached to that office, and no one else had access to that place. But occasionally the Nawwab invited Abdul-Karīm Khān Bahādur, his soti, and made him work in the alchemy house. The gold which was got ready the previous day was distributed the next day as nadhṛ to Allāh among the poor and the needy at his gate through Muhammad Masuin, his attendant and an officer of the sarkar.

Section 2,

The pillow-money, amounting to five rupees per day and one hundred and fifty rupees per month, was in charge of Muhammad Ma'sum. The Nawwab sent that amount to Hazrat Mawlana Abdu'l-All Sahib through MawlawI Imam

(1) After the death of his father, Nawwab Umdatul-Umara Bahadur in 1801 at the age of 53, this prince could not accept the terms offered to him by Lord Clive. So Nawwab Azimu'd-Dawla Bahadur was elevated to the throne of the Carnatic.

Bakhsh for the purpose of distributing it among the students. Every day a rupee which was sent from the palace of Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam, was tied on the upper arm of the Nawwāb to seek protection of the Imām Zāmini (peace be on him) against disaster. Thirty rupees thus collected in a month together with the *nadh*r of five rupees to the crescent made a total of thirty-five rupees. This sum was sent as *nadh*r to Hazrat Mir Mahdī Sahib, the calligraphist, through Sayyid Nur All.

The Nawwāb took rest in Fataḥ-chawkl from 12 o'clock to 1 P.M. After waking up, he went on some days to the house of Muḥammad Ali Ḥusayn Khān's mother, Mubāra-ku'n-nisā Bēgam known as Ghasiti Bēgam, who lived near Fataḥ-chawkl. After staying there for about three-quarters of an hour he returned to his own residence in Fataḥ-chawkl, where he engaged himself till afternoon in playing shatranj with Mir Abu Ṭalib Khān and others or sometimes in reading books on history, studying anthologies or trying to compose verses.

Section 3.

Every day at about 4 o'clock he went out sometimes in a charat with a body-guard, for a drive in the big garden as far as the gate of the daritl-amara of the big *diwan-khana*² of

(1) Zamin means 'one who is responsible for another, or enters into bail for him.'

Yak rupaya babat zamanat-i-Imam Zamin, means 'a rupee worn as a protective against disaster or death/

It is a general custom when a person is about to travel, or when evil befalls him, to tie a copper coin and a metal ring in a bit of cloth dyed with turmeric in the name of the personal guardian, the saint Imām Zāmin, and to wear this tied on the left upper arm. When the person reaches his destination in safety or gets rid of trouble, he takes off the coin, and sometimes adding a few more coins to it, buys sweets, or makes cakes or stew and offers the fatiḥa in the name of the saint.

Kalas-maḥall; sometimes he drove in zsuksdwan with two armed guards, two orderlies, two mace-bearers, a corporal and two attendants and got down near the mango tree at the gate of Kalas-maḥall. He opened his knapsack and put on his full dress: a gown made in Europe, or a flower-painted gown with green borders made in Bengal, and a waist-band from Guzerat. He wore a silk rūmāl to cover the scar of the wound on his right fore-finger which had been cut off by a gun shot.

In 1204 A. H. [1790 A. D.] a year after the demise of Ḥazrat Nawwāb Amīru'l-Umaḥa Bahādur, the men in the army under Badru'l-Isfām Khān Bahādur and Muḥammad Burhān the commandant, collected in large numbers and created disturbance at the big gate¹ of the bāgī of the Nawwāb on account of the outstanding wages. They were armed with guns, muskets, and other implements of war taken from the Ushur-khdna of the sarkar. When Nawwāb Umdatul-Umaḥa Bahādur received information of this fact, he presented himself in obedience to the command of Nawwāb Wālājāh, at the big gate mentioned above for the purpose of advising the rebels. There were also present with him Abdul-Qādir Khān Bahādur, Ḥafīz Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur, Mr. Smith the 'uhda-dār in the army of the prince, and other officers. Just then the sepoys were very clamorous and uproarious. Mr. Smith drew out his sword to threaten them. As soon as the sword was drawn out, one of the sepoys put his loaded gun on his shoulders and aimed at Mr. Smith. He moved aside, but Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur beckoned to the sepoy with his right hand. Just then the sepoy had touched the match of the gun with his fore-finger. As fate would have it, the bullet carried away the right fore-finger of Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur, passed through the back of the umbrella-bearer wounding him, and then through the left side of the body of Ḥāfiẓ, Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur tearing his skin to the extent of one span. By the grace of God, the cords of life of these men were very strong; their wounds were cured after along time by the treatment of English doctors, and Shaykh Adam the hajjām.

The Nawwāb dressed himself up in the manner described above, went to Kalas-maḥall and presented himself before the exalted Ḥazrat Amiru'l-Hind Wālājāh Umdatu'l-Mulk Sirāju'd-Dawla Nawwāb Muḥammad Ali Khān Bahādur Zāfar Jang. He paid his obeisance in accordance with the convention and then took his seat. He submitted his own petitions and the correspondence with the Governor in Council, for the prince was the wakil representing the Nawwāb. There were also present in the darbar at that time Mubariz Jang Bahadur, Salar Jang Bahadur, Ṣafdar Jang Bahādur, Ḥashmat Jang Bahādur, Ṣādiq Al! Khān Bahādur, Ali Dil Khān Bahādur, Qādir Nawāz Khān, Shāh Qudratullāh Ṣāhib, Ḥāfiẓ Ḥājī Maghribi Ṣāhib, and two or three munshīs of the Nawwāb. Every one of these submitted his affairs before the Nawwāb, while the exalted Nawwāb Umdatul-Umarfi Bahadur was a mere spectator.

Section 4.

Ḥazrat Nawwāb Shukōhu'l-Mulk Naṣīru'd-Dawla Nuṣrat Jang Bahādur presented himself now and then before Nawwāb Wālājāh about the time of after-noon-prayer. Occasionally he used to submit his own petitions to the Nawwāb. Out of his brotherly love and kindness Nawwāb Wālājāh offered qalyan to Nawwab Shukohu'l-Mulk Nasru'd-Dawla Bahadur and he always used to smoke in the company of Nawwāb Walajah.

Section 5.

The exalted Nawwab Azimu'd-Dawla Bahadur¹ always said the after-noon-prayer in the company of Nawwab Wālājāh,

(1) He was the son of Amiru'Umara, the second son of Nawwab Muhammad Ali Walajah, who predeceased his father.

Whenever Nawwāb Aglmu'd-Dawla Bahādur caught sight of Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahadur, Agīmu'd-Dawla Bahādur would overwhelm him with the kindness of a father. The paternal kindness and affection which Nawwāb Muḥammad Al! Wālājāh had for the exalted Azīmu'd-Dawla Bahādur was beyond description. On many an occasion when Nawwāb Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur was present in the majlis, the Nawwāb used to address Azīmrfd-Dawla Bahādur in great joy and happiness thus: "By the grace of Allāh, exalted be He, your forehead is exceedingly luminous and resplendent. This indicates that the Creator, Omnipotent Lord, would honour you with glorious and powerful rank by bestowing on you dominion and authority." Azīmu'd-Dawla Bahādur would pay his obeisance to the Nawwāb for this happy remark*. But such expressions were highly unpalatable to Nawwāb Tjmdatul-Umarā Bahādur. Yet out of regard for his father's feelings, he outwardly exhibited great kindness to Azīmrfd-Dawla Bahādur; whenever he met him, Nawwāb 'Umdatul-i-Umara Bahādur overwhelmed him outwardly with love.

Section 6.

Abdu'l-Qādir Khān Bahādur, Ḥāfiz Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur and others presented themselves at the morning darbar of Nawwāb Wālājāh to pay their obeisance to him. Muhammad Nasir Khan and other grandsons of the Nawwāb usually presented themselves at the darbar in the company of Nawwāb Umdatul-i-Umarā Bahādur and ingratiated themselves into favour.

At about 5 o'clock in the evening Nawwāb Wālājāh rose from the evening darbar to say his after-noon-prayer. The exalted Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur took leave of his father and went to the palace of Suljānu'n-nisā Bēgam known as Buddi Begam sahiba, his senior sister, where he partook of the repast. On some days Hazrat Karimu'n-nisa Begam alias Chotī Bēgam, well-known as Hazrat Bēgam ṣāḥiba, the younger sister of Hazrat Nawwab Walaḥjah Muḥammad Ali Khān Bahādur, on some other days, Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, Husāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur, Naṣīru'l-Mulk Bahādur, Maliku'n-nisa Bēgam alias Daryā Bēgam well-known as Manjhī ṣāḥib-zādī* and Umdatu'n-nisa Begam alias Fatah Begam well-known as Chotī ṣāḥib-zādī, all these assembled together at the maḥall of Sultānu'n-nisa Bēgam and had their dinner. Sometimes, once or twice in a week, Nawwab Umdatu'l-Umara Bahādur dined with his nephews. After dinner the exalted Nawwab Umdatu'l-Umara Bahādur stayed there till about 8 o'clock in the night talking and smoking qalyan. Then he got into a charat or a suksawan and drove to Bagh-i-kuhna also known as Muhammad-bagh.

(1) This turned out to be a true prediction. After the death of Nawwāb Umdatul-Umata Bahadur, the claims of his son Muhammad Ali Husayn Khan Tajul-Umara Bahadur were set aside by the British and Nawwāb Agīmu'd-Dawla Bahadur was chosen as the ruler of the Carnatic in 1801.

Section 7.

Sometimes his happy temperament inclined to make special arrangements for the zenana by hanging lattice in the hall of the palace of Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam, his senior sister; he invited a company of dancing-girls and musicians including Latīfa, Tānū, Ṣājīnī known as Sōnā. He directed Amlu'd-Dīn Khān son of Muḥammad Muṣīru'd-Dīn Khān and Ram Singh Bayragī thus: •Set to music the elegant and significant verses composed by me recently in the following tunes yaman, khamaj, bahag, lalit, babhas, bharavi, aliya-bilaval, dhanasri, and asavari, and make the dancing-girls sing them in sweet and pleasant voice. Thus the Nawwāb spent the time from about 8 o'clock in the night till midnight listening to music, and enjoying the nautch. On some days in order to oblige the ladies he asked six handsome and comely dancing-girls to put on suitable dresses for a *khra*vi dance and enjoyed the tamasha.

(1) Mr. P. Sambamurti, Lecturer in Indian Music, says that the following ragas of South Indian Music closely resemble the tunes mentioned in the text: Yaman=Kalyani; Khamaj=Khamas; Bahag=Hindustani Behag; Lalit=Lalita (but F Sharp or the Prati Madhyama is not used) ; Babhis=Bhupalam; Bharavi=Todi; Aliya-bilavah=A derivative of the Dhira Sankarabharana mela; Dhanasri=Abheri; Asavari=Asaveri (both the D Natural and D Flat are used in this raga).

On the joyful occasion of the celebration of the birth of Ḥaẓrat AH, the commander of the faithful, the leader of the pious, Waliu'llah and Wasiu'r-Rasul,¹ held every year usually in the month of the revered Rajab, the Nawwāb composed in praise of Ḥaẓrat All, some verses in the Hindi language in the form of ghazal. He wrote the verses in pencil and gave them to Aminu'd-Din Kḥān with the following command: "You should, with the help of Bayrāgī Rām Singh, set these verses to music in tunes favourite with me, and train quickly Sōnā, the dancing girl, so that she may sing forthwith." In obedience to the command, the Kḥān trained her in about an hour and conducted her to the presence of the Nawwāb. The exalted Nawwāb was extremely pleased with her song. He sent for cash from the tnahall of his sister and gave a present of one hundred rupees to Aminu'd-Dīn Kljān, fifty rupees to Rām Singh, fifty rupees to Sōnā, and fifty rupees to other dancing-girls.

Dargāh Quli Kḥān, a witty person, and a companion of Nawwāb ṣāhib, was, like Aminu'd-Dīn Kḥān, of an entertaining nature. Both these amused Nawwāb ṣāhib by their drollery and pleasantry. The Nawwāb presented Dargāh Quli Kḥān also with thirty-five rupees.

Verses composed in praise of the exalted All, peace be on him.

CH. 2-CRITICISM OF UMDATU'L-UMARA'S POEM

When the marriage rites according to law were performed,

The Time spread two masnads:

One on the side of Allāh, the other on the side of the Prophet.

Thereupon the essence of Aḥmad became manifest.

To-day a son is born in the house of god,

Prophet took him as his son-in-law

Through him eleven imams were revealed,

Divinity was perfected in that house.

O God! keep us in need of their power and characteristic qualities

Through the mediation of the respectable Prophet

Mumfāz offers prayers and benedictions.

After some days Muḥammad 'Izzu'd-Din Khān Mustaqīm Jang Nāmi, son-in-law of Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba and son of Hāmid Alī Khān, wrote the following letter to Mir Ismā'il Khān Bahādur with a view to bring it to the notice of Nawwāb TTmdatu'l-Umarā Bahādur.

"To

The Khan sahib rejoicing in the possession of great benevolence and kindness.

Salāmun-'alaykum: May it be known:

I have heard that a certain poet, a stranger to this land, had been rude in criticizing the poem of Nawwāb ṣāḥib Mumtāz. He had put it in writing and sent it. He records his objection thus in a verse:

"When the son is born in the house of Allāh,

The sense in '*He begets not*¹' is marred."

I have nothing more to add but hope for your kindness."

(1) This is a quotation from the 11th *sura al-Ikhlās (the Unity).

1. Say: He, God is One.
2. God is He on Whom all depend.
3. He begets not, nor is He begotten.
4. And none is like Him.

Mir Isma'il Khan Bahadur submitted this letter to the Nawwāb at the time of his drive. On perusing this letter Nawwāb sāhib was extremely displeased and flew into a passion. He took out a pencil from his pocket, put the letter on the suksawan, and wrote on the back of that letter the following reply:

"Thou hast not understood, O stupid ass!
 In truth the birth-place of Ḥaydar is kaba.
 When the son is born in the house of Allāh,
 How the sense in '*He begets not' is marred?"

He also added:

"By God! Who has no peer! out of regard for my senior sister, I do not wish to punish you immediately; I leave the punishment to the Creator; certainly it will come.

The accursed and stupid poet is not in my presence; if he were in my presence now, I would have adorned him with an iron chain and appointed you to teach him poesy. I would have dignified you also with that ornament and sent both of you to the fort of Chandragiri so that the art may be learnt perfectly, for Chandragiri is a fit place for such accursed and mischievous men, and the teacher and the student must remain together in one place till the attainment of knowledge.

Well: In future if such foolish, absurd, and mischievous questions are brought to my notice, by the strength of Allah!, the tongue and the hand of the culprit will be cut off and he will, be kept in perpetual confinement.

God is with us and with you!

Ghulam Husayn."

Then he directed Mir Ismā'il Khān thus: "Send this letter immediately to that accursed man. In future you should not bring to our notice such absurd letters from wicked men. This does not become your position and rank."

After giving expression to his indignation, the Nawwab grove in his suksawan, and went as usual to the mahall of his senior sister for dinner. There he summoned to his presence Shah Bēgam, the wife of 'Izzu'd-Dīn Khān, gave vent to his disgust and said: "In future if such improper behaviour is shown by your husband, by' God! all considerations will vanish, and I shall immediately cause him to suffer for his offence in the darbar-i-atn." He also told his senior sister in great anger and disgust all the details, the disobedience, wickedness and foolishness of the Khān. He issued orders prohibiting the Khān from entering the gate of Fataḥ-chawkl, and visiting him. Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam also was displeased at the behaviour of her son-in-law and forbade him from entering her house, and from associating with her son Abdul-Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur.

'Izzu'd-Dīn Khān was very much aroused to a sense of danger when he read the Nawwāb's letter sent through Mīr Ismāil Khān Bahādur, and heard about the rebuke of Nawwāb ṣāhib and the exalted Bēgam ṣāhiba. He was terror-stricken, and was subject to a severe strain of sorrow and anguish night and day. He conveyed a message to Abdul-Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur through Ghulām Asadullāh Khān Bahādur seeking pardon from the Nawwāb for his own error. Five or six months later, on the occasion of the celebration of the happy birth-day of the Nawwāb, Abdu'l-Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur after great endeavour secured pardon for the mistake of 'Izzu'd-Dīn Khān and also permission for him to pay his obeisance to the Nawwāb. The benevolent Nawwāb did all these out of regard for the affection he bore towards Abdu'l-Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur. Then the Nawwāb spoke personally to his senior sister and secured permission for 'Izzu'd-Dīn Khān to have social communication with the women's apartments and also to visit the diwan-khana of Abdu'l-Ḥusayn Khan Bahadur,

Section 8.

The Nawwāb slept in the mahall of his senior sister when it was too late to go to his own palace after the nautch party and such other entertainments held in the house of his sister. He slept in the green-chair room of the bara-dari, contiguous to the maḥall of his sister. On other days he left his sister's house as usual after 8 o'clock in the night in a charat or suksawan to Bagh-i-kuhna also known as Muhammad-bagh. Whenever he or his senior sister or her son felt indisposed or took a laxative, he stayed in his sister's palace night and day.

During the sickness of his second sister or his younger sister, or sons of his sisters, and also whenever they took laxative, the Nawwāb slept at night in the room of the bara-dari contiguous to the maḥall of his senior sister. Early morning his senior sister paid him a visit along with other sisters. They all had their breakfast and dinner with the Nawwāb. After the evening dinner, Nawwab Umdatul-Umara Bahadur paid a visit as usual to Nawwāb Wālājāh, his noble father. He returned after an hour or two to the maḥall of his senior sister. At 8 o'clock in the night when the gun shot was heard, he started for the bāghj his own residence.

Section P.

Sometimes Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur visited the Nawwāb in the bāgh after 10 o'clock in the night and submitted to him in secrecy important matters and other affairs pertaining to the walajahi darbar. The exalted Nawwab also amused himself from 10 o'clock till 12 o'clock in the night, by listening to the music of Ram Singh Bayragi, an old musician who played yaktāra, and by Bhawānī Dās Bayrāgī a new musician who used to play the sarangī, and had great skill in his art. The accomplished Amīnu'd-Dīn Khān also sang the new songs composed by the Nawwāb. Now and then the sagacious Qādir Nawāz Khān was permitted to stay in that company, for the Nawwab regarded him kindly and through him he learnt many details pertaining to the walajahl darbar. The Nawwab had so much regard for him that he purchased a beautiful Hgh with a building, contiguous to the bagh of Mr. Wexi and opposite to Bāgh-i-kuhna his own residence, and made a present of it to Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur, The Khān was often there in that bagh and during night presented himself before Nawwab Umdatu'l-Umara Bahadur. The Nawwab gave permission to his companions to depart, and himself retired to his sleeping apartments. There he invited Ghulām Murtaḏa, and Muḥammad Ibrahim the commandant, and listened to their reports on every place, maḥall, and other things and gave them further instructions. Then he took hold of the keys of every place, left them on the table opposite to him, and enjoined strictly all the chawkdars who were present thus: "Whenever any commandant comes to me you must wake me up."

Then he gave the following order to the commandant:

"If any messenger from the exalted Nawwab Wālājāh, or from my elder sister, or the second sister, or the younger sister seeks for me late in the night, you must immediately get the keys from Muḥammad Ma'ṣūm and bring him to me, and at the same time wake me up."

Generally there used to be in his sleeping room women who came through Muḥammad Ibrāhim the jama'dār. This jama'dār brought them secretly in carriages and sent them after an hour or two. During the time of rest Nawwab ṣāhib always invited Mir Muḥammad Darwēsh, and Muḥammad Ja'far the romancer and story-teller, and listened to their latest tales and stories. Sometimes he seated them near his bed-chamber, and made them narrate stories. Besides his own body-guard he kept some foot-soldiers in the chawki near the gate of Fatah-chawkl in Bāgh-i-kuhna. They were very alert in their duties* Nawwab sahib always had news of their presence or absence. The chawkidars in obedience to the orders of the Nawwāb were armed and ready for action. If Nawwāb sahib got information of anyone remaining unarmed in the chawki, he rebuked him severely.

On some days if the Nawwāb was engaged in reading or writing somethings important, he used to keep awake an hour more than usual. He was always alone when he was busy reading or writing.

Section 10.

The exalted Dulari Begam sahiba the eldest daughter of Hazrat Nawwāb Shukohu'l-Mulk Nasiru'd-Dawla, was the wife of Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahadur. She resided in the old building contiguous to Shādi-mahall on the highway to the big mosque at Tirmalkān (Triplicane). This building was purchased from Mubāriz Jang. Nawwāb sahib was displeased with his wife for some reason or other. He used to go to her palace on occasions of necessity like the offering of fatiha during the month of Rajab and such other occasions. But the exalted Suljanun-nisa Begam sahiba invited her to her own palace during the festive celebration on the birthday of the Nawwāb. In great pomp and magnificence, she seated both the Nawwāb and his wife on the throne and asked Umdatul-nisa Begam, her own younger sister, to adorn them with flowers got for the occasion. Suljanun-nisa Begam presented her younger sister with five hundred rupees cash, and a tray containing khilat made of silk and cotton.

Section 11.

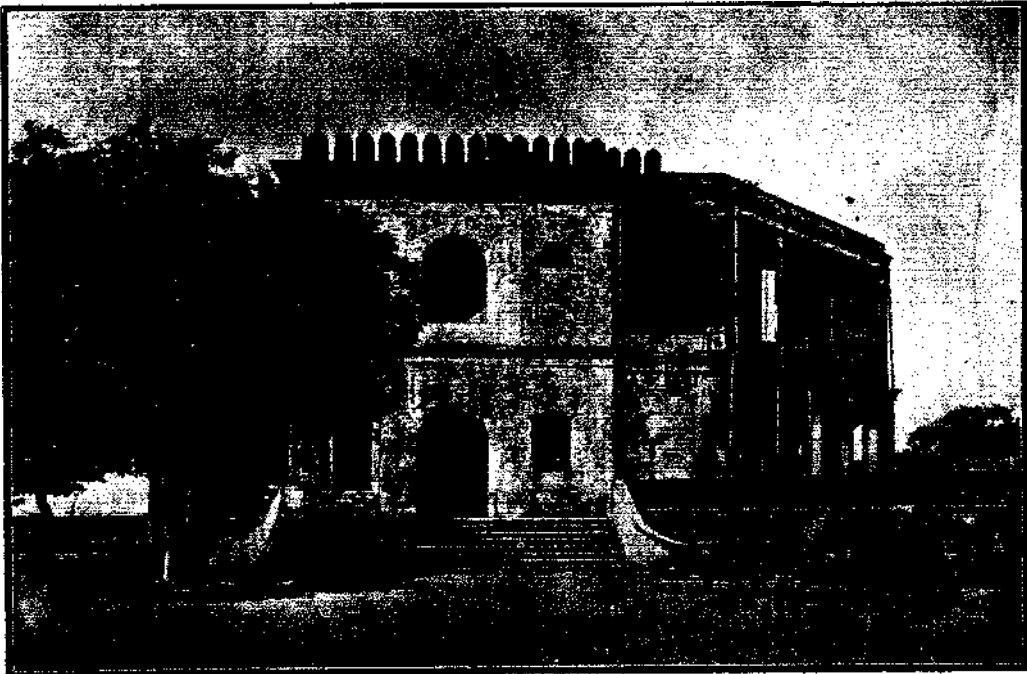

Generally during summer months the exalted Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahadur made arrangements for the zenana either on the terrace of the palace of his second sister or in the diwan-khana of Iftikharu'd-Dawia Hafiz Muhammad Nasir Khān Bahādur, took in his company the senior sister, other ladies, guests, and others, designing to go to the beach on moonlight nights or to see the rising of the sun or the moon.

He went to the beach by the side of Haht-banglai adjoining the Bāra-darL. In Haht-bangla at about midday he seated the two new-come vfyā singers opposite to the windows of the women's apartments and listened to the sarang rag.

The Nawwāb went in the afternoon to the house of his senior sister and had his dinner. Once in a month or two he invited to his own bagh his sister's children and others, sat on the terrace and enjoyed the tamāsha of tigers, bears, elephants, camels, horses, and the wrestling matches among *pahlawdn*s from 9 o'clock till 11 o'clock. Sometimes he gathered all of them one night in the palace of his senior sister, and from nine till about midnight engaged them in playing the game baha-kunt which was played consecutively for four nights. On the final day the Nawwāb honoured them all with large presents.

Section 12.

The celebration of the holy 'urs' of the exalted Hajrat Imam Husayn (peace be on him) had its commencement from the first of Muharram. The Nawwāb gave instructions on that day to decorate Bāgh-i-kuhna known as Muhammad bagh with lanterns and wax-candles, planted the ancient banner of Haydar, and directed the rawza-khwans to be busy in their prayer till 9 o'clock in the night. Nawwab sahib slept every night till the 10th of Muharram in the room behind the holy ensign. On the night of the 10th, he summoned the khallasi from the Company who set up innumerable lights. At about midnight he carried that banner of Haydar in a howdah going on a procession from the bagh as far as Tirmalgan and returned at about 3 o'clock in the morning. On the morning of the 10th of Muharram after the early-morning-prayer the holy banner was washed and entrusted to its owner. Then the Nawwāb appointed Mīr Ismāil Khān Bahādur, Taqī Ali Khān Bahādur, Quṭbu'd-Dīn Khān, Raḥmān All Khān Bahādur, Shujāʿat Alī Khān, and distributed charities in the name of Ḥaẓrat Sayyidu'sh-shuhada' (chief of the martyrs, peace be on him) to all misklins and the needy giving each a piece of khddland a rupee. In the same manner the anniversary of the death of Nawwāb Bēgam ṣāhibā, his noble mother, was celebrated on the 14th of Jumādiu'l-awwal and charities were distributed in his own presence at Bāgh-i-kuhna through the persons mentioned above. The cash and the cost of cloth distributed on those occasions amounted to four thousand and five hundred rupees per fatihā. These charities were distributed in front of the building in the bāqḥ while the Nawwāb and his companions sat in the upper storey of the building. There used to be a huge crowd; although alms were distributed from morning till evening, there would be still some omissions, and it would be continued next day by order of the Nawwāb.

Section 13.

Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Naṣīr Khān Bahādur, the first son of Nawwāb Umdatu'n-nisa Begam sahība, was suffering from epilepsy. The yunanl and misri hakims and doctors felt helpless, and illness increased day by day. One day Nawwāb Umdatu'l-Umarā Bahādur spoke respecu'ully to the exalted Nawwāb Amīru'l-Hind Wālājāh Muḥammad All Khān Bahadur about the strange illness of his own eldest nephew. Next day Nawwāb sahib went to visit the sick person in the house of Nawwāb Umclatu'n-nisa Begam sateiba, his younger daughter, along with Nawwāb Umdatu'l-Umarā Bahādur, Mubāriz Jang, Sālār Jang and Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur. He saw the sick person, and offered fatihā for his recovery. As he was a vigorous youth, the Nawwāb felt great sorrow for him, shed tears and then returned to his own residence. Next day he suggested to Nawwab Umdatul-Umara Bahadur and Mubariz Jang that they should call skilful hakims from Haydarabad. He gave orders for writing an arlza to the exalted Nawwab Aşaf Jāh Niẓāmu'd-Dawla Bahāduri, besides another letter to Miishīru'l-Mulk Ariştu Jah², the chief minister of Aşaf Jāh, and sent these through his vakil to Haydarabad. When the hrlza reached Nawwāb Aşaf Jāh Bahādur, an order was issued forthwith to send, immediately to Madras, H̄kīm Aḥmadullāh Khān Bahādur, a skilful hakim who was a great success in his profession, and rejoiced in the possession of a good rank. The hakim started to Madras, and had come as far as the taluk of Palnār; just then Nawwāb Wālājāh Muḥammad All Khān Bahādur joined to divine mercy by the decree of Allah, and the exalted Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur succeeded his father.

CH. 2-ARRIVAL OF HAKIM AHMADULLAH KHAN

Hakīm Aḥmadullāh Khān Bahādur reached Madras, stayed at the bāgh of Dādī Shāh Şāhib, and reported himself to Nawwab Umdatul-Umara Bahadur. Six days later, Nawwab şāhib sent Qādir Nawāz Khān and H̄kīm Aḥmād Khān Bahādur to the bāgh, to invite H̄kīm Aḥmadullāh Khān and received the H̄kīm şāhib at the green-chair room in the house of his senior sister. The hakim submitted to the Nawwāb as *nadh*r forty rupees and a bound and gilt book being a short treatise on Khulasatil-hikmat ba mujmal-i-khulasat'htl-ashyā written by himself. The Nawwāb spoke with him kindly for about an hour. When the hakim took leave of the Nawwāb he observed the civilities rendered to guests by presenting him with itr, pandan, and gulab-pash, and asked Qadir Nawaz Khān Bahadur and Hakim Ahmad Khān to act as escorts to him as far as the house of his younger sister where Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Hāfig Muḥammad Naṣīr Khān Bahādur, the patient, stayed. He assigned to the hakim the jaglr of Kuli Nellore which yielded an income of twelve thousand rupees per year. Thus the hakim was appointed to treat Hāfiz Muḥammad Naṣīr Khān Bahādur.

Hāfiz Muḥammad Naṣīr Khān Bahādur recovered his health in a short while after undergoing the treatment at the hands of Hākīm Aḥmadullāh Khān Bahādur. Nawwāb Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur felt happy and was graciously pleased to confer on the hakim the title Maliku'l-hukamda (king of hakims).

Section 14.

The talk of marriage for the son of Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam began nine months before the demise of Nawwāb Wālājāh. Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā, with the permission of her father and brother, had correspondence with Bakhshī Bēgam ṣāhibā, the wife of Nawwāb Nizāmu'd-Dawla Bahādur. As Bakhshī Bēgam ṣāhibā asked for some poems composed by Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur, Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam sent her some of his verses along with presents to Ḥaydarābād.

Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam fixed the marriage of Ra'īsu'l-Umarā Bahādur Abdu'l-Ḥusayn Khān, her son, with the daughter of Ghulām Ashraf Khān Bahādur. He was related to the late Ruknu'd-Dawla Bahādur the elder. Both these were high officials in Ḥaydarābād. Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam invited Ghulām Ashraf Khān and his family with great grandeur and magnificence. When he arrived at Madras, he stayed at the bagh of Dadi Shah Sahib. In a little while, the new bagh well-known as the bagh of Mr. Oakes was set apart for the residence of guests. After a few days Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā sought permission of the exalted Nawwāb Amīru'l-Hind Wāfajāh Muḥammad Ali Khān Bahādur, through Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur, to fix the marriage on the 15th of Sha'ban in the year 1209 A. H. [7th March, 1795 A. D.] and she made everything ready for the marriage.

During the night the bridegroom went in a procession with all paraphernalia and with a number of torch-bearers and dancing-girls. Nawwāb Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, nobles and persons of high rank went to the house of the bride, while Sulṭānfn-nisā Bēgam sāhibā also went there with all her sisters and other female relations. The ceremony was over and the bridegroom went back to his residence in the same manner of procession as he came up to the bride's house. The bridegroom presented at his house nadhur to Nawwāb Wālājāh Muḥammad All Khan Bahadur and Nawwab Umdatul-Umara Bahadur.

THIRD CHAPTER.

An account of the sickness, and the demise of Nawwāb Walajah Muhammad All Khan Bahadur in the year 1210 A.H.

The exalted Nawwāb Amīm'l-Hind Wālājāh Muḥammad All Khan Bahādur said his after-midnight-prayer and retired to rest. He woke up on the morning of the 15th of the victorious Safar in the year 1210 A. H. [31st August 1795 A. D.] attended to the routine duties and as usual went through the wash on a raised seat. As he was getting down from the seat his foot slipped and he fell down. The thumb-nail of the left foot was crumpled up. It caused swelling and also brought on high fever. The illness increased day by day; all the yunānl ḥakims and doctors of the sarkar attended on him, exerting their skill in a thousand ways. Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur also tried his best to make arrangements for the treatment of his father. But the cord of life had become short and the time was drawing near the final journey. His venerable age was 75. All the attempts by way of treatment did not bring him through. The effects of the disease increased day by day; in a short while pus began to come from the shank up to the toe. Seeing this bad symptom all the hakims despaired of his life and secretly apprised Nawwāb Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur of this fact. Nawwāb Wālājāh Muḥammad All Khān also understood his own condition and gave up all hopes of recovery. A week before the fateful day he consoled and comforted the ladies of his family, while sorrowful tears trickled down his cheeks. The doctors of the sarkar accompanied by all the hakims presented themselves before the Nawwāb on the following day, tied up the shank with bandage, and took leave of the Nawwāb. As Nawwāb Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur was much worried, Muḥammad Jawīd Khān and other servants enquired secretly about the health of the exalted Nawwāb Wālājāh from Shaykh Adam Ḥajjām, who waited upon the Nawwāb night and day. Shaykh Adam said in great sorrow and anguish thus: "The doctors had been making gross mistakes from the beginning of the illness of the Nawwāb, which had very much impaired his health. There is pus all over the shank and the cure seems impossible. It is our bad luck that the shadow of such a compassionate, benevolent sardar over our heads be removed."

On seeing his own condition which was becoming worse day by day, minute by minute, on account of the increase of the disease, and the decline of strength and energies, Nawwāb Wālājāh addressed Nawwāb Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur in the presence of Sayyid Asim Khan Mubariz Jang Bahadur, Sālār Jang Bahādur, Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur, and Ḥāfiẓ Ḥāji Maghrib! Ṣāhib as follows:

"Take profound interest in what I say and act up to it without fail.

"All that has a place in the domain of reality will cease to live, according to the verse 'Everything on the face of the earth will be annihilated'. It is necessary that every traveller from the invisible valley to this visible world should return to the everlasting world in accordance with the divine command, 'Return unto thy Lord'. For, all prophets, preceptors, saints, the learned, the virtuous, shaykhs, reformers, kings, and persons of high rank in all the seven iqlims, amirs, aliens, faqlrs, miskins, sages, old and young never deviated from this inevitable course. It is necessary for us who tread on the path of firm faith promulgated by Muḥammad the chosen, the great leader in both worlds and the last of the messengers (peace be on him, his family and his companions) that in our last moments the glorification of Alīah and praise of the Prophet should be on our tongues and admonitions and exhortations of spiritual guides should be kept in our minds.

CH. 3-MUHAMMAD ALI WALAJAH ADVISES HIS SON

"It is necessary for you just now, in my last moments, that you should bring together by my side Hazrat Mawlānā Abdu'l-All, Ṣāhib, Shāh Maḥmūd Ṣāhib Sāwī, Shāh Qudratullāh Ṣāhib, Ḥāfiẓ Ḥājī Maghrib! Ṣāhib, and other holy persons who mind their duty to the Lord of the Universe, and who employ their tongues for the glorification of the Prophet; they would occupy themselves in reciting verses of the Qurān, narrating traditions of the Prophet and relating the miracles of Maḥbūb-Subḥānī and I could give my mind to thoughts on my Creator and His beloved messenger. Ḥāfiẓ Ḥājī Maghribī Ṣāhib may be requested to read aloud as far as possible the sara yasm in a pleasant voice, so that it may bring about my salvation and the remission of my sins. I had followed Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Naṣir Khan Bahādur on many occasions when he led the tarawih prayer in the holy month of Ramāzan. It is necessary for him that after my death he should read the Quran every day till fortieth day of mourning and offer this as a present on my behalf to the Prophet, the leader of the world, and Maḥbūb Subḥānī, the pure soul, so that its benefits may come to me." Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Naṣir Khan Bahādur who was present then listened to these directions and was extremely pleased."

The Nawwāb again addressed those present thus: "After my death, it would be best if Nawwāb Umdatul-Umarā

HISTORY OF THE NAWWABS OF THE CARNATIC III-PT. I

Bahadur, my beloved son, could send my corpse to Baytullah and bury it underneath the steps of the ka'ba. If by chance this is not possible you must suggest to Nawwāb Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur, my beloved son, heir and successor, tint he may send it to Nattharnagar, and inter it near the exalted tomb of Ḥaẓrat Ṭabl-i-Ālam Nattharwali, Ṣahib (peace be on him) for my Bēgam also is interred under the benign shade of that tomb. If this also be not possible at present, it may be buried for sometime under the roof of Ḥaẓrat Dastglr Ṣahib Sāwī (peace be on him) in Mylapore. May my dust return to the dust of which it was made/'

After giving them instructions about the shrouding and furnishing for his funeral, he advised them on matters relating to the administration of government. He addressed Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur thus:

"O! My beloved son, O! my happy successor, listen attentively to the advice of this traveller to the everlasting kingdom and act up to it as long as the bridle of authority rests in your hand.

"First: to discover a thing for the first time and to bring it under your control is the most arduous of all tasks. It is equally so with a kingdom. Mīr Abjadi, Ṣahib, your teacher, has said that in his Anwarnāmd. You should have known clearly how the Supreme Ruler favoured this faqlr, the slave of Hazrat Maḥbūb-Subḥānī, with sovereignty over the kingdom of the Carnatic. Therefore when you succeed to my throne it is incumbent on you to attend to every work with wisdom and sagacity, prudence and foresight keeping an eye on the success of the undertaking, for it is said 'Far-sighted man is a wise man/ To draw in the well-wishers of your authority is to strengthen the pillars of the building of sovereignty; to understand correctly the worth of persons of rank is to ensure permanency of the foundation of the edifice of government. The minds of subjects should be kept happy and cheerful by means of justice and equity. For Shaykh Sa'di says: 'Nōshirwān chose justice and his name is remembered now.' Good government is the result of kindness on the part of the ruler, and the happiness of subjects is ensured by justice, as the saying is 'The kingdom is maintained by benevolence, and not by oppression', for, the Lord of the Universe is the real Judge and His prophets and messengers are His munsifs and administrators of justice.

"It is necessary for my son that he should carry on correspondence with the English king and the authorities of the Company and cultivate friendship with them so that they may be pleased with him; not even a trifling error should be allowed to come in between. He should not countenance any deed which is not acceptable to them, for, this would give strength to his authority. He should pay into the treasury of the Fort at Madras the stipulated amount of qist as done at present in accordance with the agreement without any excuse or dispute. He should not allow even an inch of land under his authority to come into the possession of others except by way of jagirs.

"My beloved son! By the grace of Allāh! you are learned and wise, prudent and discreet; it looks as though I am teaching wisdom to Luqmān. 1 It is said, 'Every person knows how best he can meet the exigencies.'

Next day at about 10 o'clock in the morning, Nawwāb Shukōhu'1-Mulck Naslru'd-Dawla Bahādur went to enquire about the health of Nawwāb Wafājāh Muhammad Ali Khān Bahādur, his elder brother. On seeing the condition of his brother who had reached the last moments of his life, he drew deep audible breath expressive of sadness, and shed tears of grief although he outwardly comforted and consoled his sick brother. Then the Nawwāb returned to his house.

Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur learnt the extremely serious condition of his father and came out weeping from Kalas-mahall. He told secretly Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur to have the care of palaces, treasury, tōshak-khāna, kachahri, offices, and other departments of the sarkar and instructed him thus : "I shall be in the house of my senior sister. Every minute you should send me information about the affairs in this place and also the state of health of the exalted Nawwāb sahib."

He instructed Sālār Jang Bahādur thus: "You must inform the Nawwāb that the doctors entreat him not to remain in the zenana, but to lie down in the mardana, for the women in the zenana will weep on seeing the extreme bodily suffering and that will bring forth more weariness and restlessness, which in his present condition will not be good enough, and increase the illness." In obedience to the command of Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur, Sālār Jang conveyed the views of doctors to Nawwāb Wālājāh Muḥammad Aḡ Khān Bahādur. Nawwāb Walajah in accordance with the advice of doctors gave up all arrangements for the zenana in his room; he also understood that his life was despaired of.

When the arrangements for the zenana were abandoned, the three daughters of the Nawwāb, and Karīmu'n-nisā Bégam sahība known as Hazrat Begam, the younger sister of Nawwāb Wālājāh, endeavoured to get permission from Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur to go and see the exalted Nawwāb Walajah. But Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur replied to them thus: "It is not the desire of Nawwāb Walajah to permit women to his apartments for such is the instruction of doctors. I am helpless. It is better you stay in your houses and pray for the recovery of the Nawwāb."

CH. 3-LAST MOMENTS OF MUHAMMAD ALI WALAJAH

Section 1.

Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur ordered Abdu'l-Qādir Khān Bahādur and Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Naṣir Khan Bahadur as follows: "You brothers must go immediately to Kalas-maḥall and be present at its gate." He commanded Muḥammad Najib Khān Bahādur Salar Jang and Muḥammad Jawid Khan thus: "Be present before Nawwab sahib, so that nothing may worry or annoy the patient/'

Section 2.

In brief, when the sun set on the 28th of the month of Rabī'u'l-awwal in the year 1210 A. H. [12th October 1795, A. D.] and darkness of the night of the 29th prevailed, Nawwāb ṣāhib showed signs of great restlessness. At about 9 P. M. Nawwāb ṣāhib understood that he was passing through the agonies of death, and addressed Salār Jang and Muḥammad Jāwīd Khān as follows: "My condition seems to be very different now; it is necessary that you conduct to my presence Ḥāfiẓ, Ḥājī Maghrib! sahib for the purpose of reading sura yasin and invite quickly Mawlānā Abdul Alī Ṣāhib and Shāh Qudratul-lāh Ṣāhib."

On hearing this shocking news, the exalted Nawwāb Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur immediately presented himself before his noble father, saw with his own eyes the condition of the Nawwāb, shed tears of grief, gathered together Mawlānā ṣāhib and other elders and addressed them as follows:

"Please kindly be present near Nawwāb ṣāhib, my father, and occupy yourselves with continual prayers to the Nourisher of the World, with glorification of the names and attributes of the Supreme Being and recitation of the miracles of Muḥammad the chosen (peace be on him) and of Ḥazrat Maḥbūb Subḥānī." He gave orders secretly to Qādir Nawāz Khan Bahādur to attend to the management of the government. He addressed Sayyid Asim Khan Mubariz Jang Bahadur as follows:

"The Nawwāb is in a precarious state of health. You must all be attentive to your work. If you think it is necessary that you should employ watchmen and chawkidars for keeping watch in different places, do it now after consulting with Qādir Nawāz Khān. At present I am in no mood to attend to anything. I do not think it is necessary that I should inform the Governor of Madras about the state of the Nawwāb's health; for I am the eldest son and the heir apparent. After the fatiha on the third day, I can, on my own authority, succeed to the throne of my father. By the grace of God, I do not think that this communication to the Governor of Madras and the members of the Council will serve any purpose."

Mubāriz Jang submitted boldly, "Your highness' opinion is excellent. What can your devoted servants say on this? But your highness may give a hint of this to the Governor if you deem that this would do. Even if this is not done, we, who wish you well, are desirous to obey you."

Nawwāb Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur replied in great vexation of spirit, "Khān ṣāhib! Where is the necessity for informing any one about the demise of my father?" He then turned to Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur and said:

"I have already given strict orders to Mr. Bātī in the AngrSzlddrHUinshd that as soon as the good soul of Nawwāb ṣāhib departs from life, he should write a ḥukm-naḥna to Lord Hobart, Governor of Madras, (1794-1798) requesting him that he should arrange to fire seventy-five salutes proportional to the venerable age of Nawwāb ṣāhib. As soon as the coffin is taken out, the salutes should be fired from the fort of Madras and in the same manner from all other forts in the kingdom. It strikes me that the communication to the Governor of Madras in regard to the condition of the Nawwāb's health just now will not be useful. By the grace of Allāh, exalted be He, on the day of my coronation a salute of guns from my bagh expressing homage to me will become perceptible to the ears of the Governor. It is necessary that you enjoin strictly on the men in the Angrezi-dariil-inshd not to write any letter conveying the serious illness or the death of Nawwāb ṣāhib to the Governor of Madras."

CH. 3-DEATH OF MU'AMMAD ALI WALAJAH

After these directions to them, Nawwāb Umdatu' l-Umarā Bahādur went to the house of his senior sister and rested there for the night in his own room.

The whole night Nawwāb Amīru'l-Hind Wālājāh Muḥammad All Khān Bahādur suffered pangs of death.

Section J.

On Tuesday morning, the 29th of Rabī'u'l-awwal in the year 1210 A. H. [13th October, 1795 A. D.] at about 7 o'clock the good soul departed this life. 'Verily, we are for Allāh and to Allāh we return.'

The news of Nawwāb ṣāhib's death spread immediately and there arose sounds of lamentation and loud excited utterances of grief in the mardāna, zenana, and in all palaces, the houses of the three daughters of the Nawwāb, the big bdgh, lanes, bāzār, and houses in every part of the town. The violent sorrow and distress of mind caused by the death of Nawwāb ṣāhib seemed to reach as fār as the heavens.

When things were in that condition Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur, and Riṣā Yār Khān, in accordance with previous orders of the exalted Nawwāb Umdatu'l-Umarā Bahādur Amīru'l-Hind Wālājāh II, arranged to close all the doors of the bdgh and posted sentinels to guard every door, the treasury, tdshak-khdna, kachahri, and the doors of other palaces wherever necessary and awaited further orders from the Nawwāb.

In the meanwhile, the exalted Nawwāb heard this destructive and dreadful news, came out of his sister's house staggering with a tear-stained face, got into a suksawan that belonged to Ram Rao, the mutaṣaddi at the house of his senior sister, reached the big diwān-khdna in the Humāyūn-maḥall and sat in the room of Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur. He called Mubāriz

Jang Bahādur and sent him in company with Mir Ismāil Khān Bahādur to seal the treasury and the offices.

Section 4.

The Nawwāb chose Mawlānā Abdu'l-AH Ṣāhib, Shāh Qudratullāh Ṣāhib, Shāh Mahmūd Ṣāhib, Ḥāfiẓ Ḥāji Maghribi Ṣāhib, Abdu'l-Qādir Khān Bahādur, Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur, Abdu'l-Ma'būd Khān Jamshid Jang, Muḥammad Najib Khān Bahādur Sālār Jang, Muḥammad Jāwld Khān, Muḥammad Mifṭāḥ and others to attend to the details in regard to burial. Some experienced Abyssinians were given for their assistance. The Nawwāb invited his nephews and seated them by his side. He showed favour to Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur by asking him to send quickly a trooper to Mylapore with the following message to Nawwāb Shukōhu'l-Mulk Naṣru'd-Dawla Bahādur. "The carriage of your highness' elder brother is ready to march to the eternal kingdom. May you be pleased to come and give your elder brother a send-off." Another trooper may be sent quickly to Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur and Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur so that they may come immediately. Finally he gave orders to write a condolence letter to Nasiru'l-Mulk Bahādur in Nattharnagar.

In a little while Say fu'l-Mulk Bahādur, and Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur reached the palace. The Nawwāb seated Sayfrl-Mulk Bahādur in the ni'tnat-khana of the diwan-khcina facing the sea, and Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur in the khalwat-khāna facing west, and addressed them as follows: "I seek your advice. I shall let you know later. Please take your seat here."

He sent for Ḥusayn Nawāz Khān through Jāwld Khan, seated him by his side, and in despite of attempts to induce him to play with three or four children he wept for his father and said every minute haju-lāL. When he wept out thus, others present also wept.

Mir Ismail Khan who was entitled to the style of Mir Asadulah Khan Bahadur, Taqi Ali Khan Bahadur, Qujbu'd-

CH. 3-PREPARATIONS FOR THE BURIAL

Din Khān Bahādur, Aḡī Nawāz Khān Bahādur, Raḥmān· Alī Khān Bahādur and Shuja'at All Khān Bahādur who were then present in his presence were asked to stay on, and to get Sayyid Mtihiyyu'd-Din, Sayyid Makhḏum the risdladār, Muḥammad Husayn, and Ghulām Murtaẓā the commandant, to his presence with three armed men and be attentive to the orders of the sarkdr.

Muḥammad Jāwld Khān and other officers collected the keys of all offices from every one and placed them before the Nawwāb. Nawwāb ṣāḥib put all the keys on the table in the room where he was seated and posted there an armed sentry and a commandant.

The Nawwāb had been, all this while, keeping himself informed of the preparations for the burial. In the meantime Nawwāb Naṣṣīru'd-Dawla Bahādur came there. At about 11 o'clock Hāji Hāfiẓ Maghrib! Ṣāḥib sent information to the Nawwāb that everything was made ready for the burial. Immediately after receiving this news Nawwāb ṣāḥib went there, placed the corpse in the coffin with the assistance of shaykhsand 'ulamd who stood according to the grade of dignity. Nawwāb Naṣṣīru'd-Dawla Bahādur and Nawwāb ṣāḥib stood on either side of the coffin giving passionate expression to their grief. Then the coffin was carried to the big dlwdn-khdna and it lay in state facing the door of ni'mat-khaṇa. The coffin was furnished with a ghilāf and shāmiydna crowded with ornaments. Nawwab sahib, Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahadur, and Husamu'l-Mulk Bahadur, came out from the diwan-fehdna of ddrvil-amdra in a style befitting their ranks, to say the prayer for the dead. They were followed by a crowd which was beyond one's reckoning, and comprised the nobility and the rank and fashion, besides the 'ulamd and sfaayklis. Nawwab sahib left the crowd to say the prayer for the dead on the way to the red-gate and himself returned to the diwan-khdno. The salutes were not fired from the fort in accordance with instructions of the Nawwāb. The coffin was carried in great state and interred for a year under the vault of Ḥaẓrat Dastgīr Ṣāhib to the right of the sepulchre adjoining the wall¹.

At about 3 o'clock gusaṃu'l-Mulk Bahādūr, Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādūr and all the men who accompanied the coffin returned and gathered together in Kalas-maḥall, offered fatifia and every person of rank proceeded to express his sympathy with Nawwāb ṣāhib. At that time Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādūr turned about and addressed Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādūr and Ḥusamu'l-Mulk Bahādūr thus:

"My grief at the separation from my father is no less than Jacob's.

But he lost a son, and I a father."

At about the time of afternoon-prayer, he invited his three sisters and Nawwāb Ralsu'n-nisā Bēgam, Nawwāb Zēbu'n-nisā Bēgam, and other wives of Nawwāb Wālājāh to Kalas-maḥall and consoled and comforted them. They wept and lamented. Nawwāb ṣāhib consoled them in all manner and sent them to their houses. Then the Nawwāb went out.

Section 5.

Nawwāb ṣāhib gave instructions to Qādir Nawāz Khān and Sālār Jang to make everything ready for the fatihā on the third day and for his coronation. Then he went to the house of his senior sister. As the fatihā on the night of the third day after the death of Nawwāb Wālājāh happened to fall on the night of the first of Rabi'ul-1-awwal, the place round about Nawwāb's grave was adorned with carpets and lights. The hafīẓs, durūdis, mawlad-khwans, and others were assembled together and they were occupied the whole night in reciting the Qufān, saying durild and singing the praise of the Prophet. Qādir Nawāz

(1) The remains were later on carried to Trichinopoly and buried in the daryah of Natihar Wall.

Khān. Mīr Ismāil Khān and Hāiiz Maghrib! and Sāfar Jang were in charge of the entire arrangement. Nawwāb ṣāhib went there at about 8 o'clock in the morning and took part with others in offering fatiha. Then he returned to the big bagh, and arranged to distribute charities near the venerable tomb and in the big bagh. Arrangements were kept up in this manner for all fatihas till the fortieth day of mourning.

Then for a period of six months Nawwāb ṣāhib offered fatiha on every Thursday in the following manner. He went out in great state by the sea-gate on every Thursday afternoon in a suksfiwan accompanied by his nephews and other trustworthy officers. He was followed by bandars, ghozanawdz, armed men, and Abyssinian horsemen. Generally Abdu'l-Ma'būd Khān Jamshid Jang used to be present at the sepulchre. Nawwāb ṣāhib smiled at him indulgently and addressed him thus: "Khān ṣāhib! you are the intimate friend and companion of the Nawwab here in this place. Please communicate to him my message and recommend me to hira. Please also convey to me what he says in reply." Then Nawwab ṣāhib participated in the fatiha and returned by the same road to his own bagh, and bade farewell to all his companions.

I have written here whatever I knew. Allāh knows the rest.

The coronation of Nawwab Vmdatvll-Umar Bahadur; the correspondence between the officers of the company and the exalted Nawwdb; the conferring of titles on Muhammad All Husayn Khan, and others; renting of the taluks of Nellore, Ongole, and Palnar to Muhammad Nasir Khan Bahadur; the exaltation of Ruknu'd Din Khan to the title of his father, and to the office of fawjdar over Muhammadpur; the marriage of Ra'lsu'l-Umar Bahadur; the grant of jagirs, and other events in the glorious darbar.

Praise be to Allāh and His favours: On Friday, the 2nd of Rabī'u'th-thānī in the year 1210 A.H. [16th October 1795 A.D.] the world-illuminating sun shone brightly and shed radiance on the universe, when the ministers of the state and officers of government, in accordance with the orders of the Nawwāb, furnished the daru'l-amara with carpets, lanterns, masnad and shamiyana. The exalted Nawwab Amiru'l-Hind Walajah 'Umdatul-Umara Bafadur, a person of light and leading, put on his full dress which comprised the following: Jahdngrl-dastār of exquisite quality with a ṭurra of pearls, every string of which was of priceless value, a gown, a nīm-dstln with embroidered border, and a shdh jahdnl waist-band fitted up with an enamel rim, and a sword studded with pearls, and with an enamelled handle. Nawwāb ṣāhib arrayed himself up thus and came out of the big diwan-khana at about 11 o'clock in the morning, when his hands rained gems, and his thanks giving to the Great Almighty had been the means of shedding perfume around the people. He caught hold of the hand of Maliku'l-TTlamā and took his seat on the Walajahl masnad.¹ Immediately congratulatory expressions were heard from all sides; hand over hand rose up with nadhr. Every one was treated kindly to 'itr, pandan, and rose-water. A round of cannons and muskets were fired. The noise of tambourine, pipe, nawbat and festive music from the bagh rose up to the heavens. Of the nadhirs that were presented, the Nawwāb took out a tray full of gold and silver and emptied it first into the skirt of Mawlana sahib; then he presented other shaykhs with plates containing gifts. The Nawwāb gave orders that the remaining nadhīr should be conveyed to the treasury.

Then he dismissed the assembly, and went to the big room facing west. This room, enclosed with tatties, was the residence of the sons-in-law of Nawwāb Walaḡāh. The Nawwāb had arranged, before the coronation, to furnish it with white carpets, chairs and other things.

In the meanwhile news was carried to him that the son of Lord Hobart was present at the diwdn-khdna. As soon as he heard this news, he understood the purpose of the visit and told Mubārīz Jang Bahādur, Sālār Jang Bahādur, Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur, Amīru'd-Dawla Bahādur, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur and others who were present as follows:—"This son of Lord Hobart has come to inquire of me. By His grace, he will return only after an unhappy interview." He commanded Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur thus: "Go and bring him to my presence." Nawwāb sahib and others were seated on chairs when the son of Lord Hobart presented himself, paid his obeisance, took his seat and submitted on behalf of his father as follows:

"It was a great surprise to me that your highness had not favoured me with the news of the demise of your exalted father. If I had that information, I should certainly have sent the army of the Company wearing such garments as sign of mourning to accompany the coffin in a style befitting the late Nawwāb's state. I should have also ordered to fire a salute of guns from the fort and other places. Furthermore you had the coronation after the fatiḡa on the third day. My father says that all this is not appropriate to the occasion. He also says that Nawwāb Wālājāh was so kind and benevolent as to acknowledge that my father was his son. Therefore it is incumbent on your highness to inform me. I should have arranged to fire a salute of guns from the fort of Madras at the time of the coronation; I should also have been present at the darbār and congratulated your highness on this happy event."

The Nawwāb ṣāhib listened to the message of Lord Hobart and said in reply: "As I was feeling sorrow at the demise of my father, I could not send information. I wonder at your friendship, love, wisdom and learning. It is incumbent on you to express sympathy with me at the death of my father. Instead of this you state your grievance to me. I am the eldest son, the heir apparent, the successor, the king chosen by my father; and I ascended the throne of my father in accordance with the usual practice in the world. There was no necessity to inform that ṣāhib about this."

After giving this reply, he gave the son of Lord Hobart leave to depart, and addressed Qādir Nawāz Khān thus: "Make all arrangements for a state drive. I wish to go the Wālājāh mosque to say the jum'a prayer." Everything was got ready immediately. Nawwāb ṣāhib rode a mahādōl and went to the mosque in great state. He was accompanied by Sayyid Āṣim Khān Mubāriz Jang and Siraḷu'l-Mulk Abdu'l-Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur. After finishing the jutnit, prayer, he offered the thanksgiving prayer in two genuflexions for his coronation. Then he returned in state and alighted at the palace of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam, his senior sister, and gave his companions leave to depart.

ated as Ḥaẓrat Bēgam ṣāḥiba alias Chōtī Bēgam, the aunt of the Nawwāb came to that palace in the afternoon and offered her congratulations. Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur who was absent at the time of the presentation of nadhṛ in the daruU amāra approached the Nawwāb who was seated on a chair decorated with green makhmal in the palace of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam and offered his nadhṛ. Sarfaraẓ All Khān Bahādur also offered his nadhṛ then. The Nawwāb addressed him thus: " I entrust with you my nadhṛ to my paternal uncle; please present it to him." Sarfaraẓ Ali Khān Bahādur, in obedience to the orders of the Nawwāb took charge of the nadhṛ, went to Nawwāb Shukōhu'l-Mulk Naṣīru'd Dawla Bahādur, his own father, presented it to him on behalf of Nawwāb Tjmdatu'i Umarā Bahādur, and reported his return to the Nawwāb in about an hour. Nawwāb ṣāḥib was then engaged discussing in private with Mubariz Jang Bahādur certain affairs of the government. Then Sarfaraẓ Ali Khān Bahādur was admitted to the Nawwāb's presence. He paid his obeisance, offered congratulations on behalf of Nawwāb Shukōhu'l-Mulk Bahādur and presented nadhṛ on his behalf. The exalted Nawwāb ṣāḥib was overwhelmed with joy and inquired of him thus: " In what direction my noble uncle was sitting in the diwan-khana when he received the nadhṛ ?" He replied, "Towards the south." Immediately Nawwāb Umdatu'l Umarā Bahādur got up from his seat, stood southwards, and in great joy offered his thanks to his uncle. Then he said to Mubāriz Jang, " My revered uncle stands for my noble father. He has conferred distinction on me by sending nadhṛ on the occasion of my coronation. For various reasons I could not go in person and present nadhṛ to my revered uncle; therefore I sent it through Sarfaraẓ All Khan Bahadur. By the grace of Allah, exalted be He, I shall pay him a visit one of these days." Then he gave the Khān and Mubāriz Jang Bahādur leave to depart and himself stayed in the palace of his senior sister.

HISTORY OF THE NAWWABS OF THE CARNATIC III-PT. I

Next morning Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur went out to the house of Hazrat Begam sahiba, his aunt, offered nadhr, and then returned.

On the following day, the son of Lord Hobart, presented himself in the big dizvdn-kjjdna for the purpose of discussing various matters unpalatable to the Nawwāb. He requested on behalf of his father that certain taluks be made over to the Company in return for the qist money due to it. The Nawwāb gave the reply thus: "The qist will be paid in cash in accordance with the agreement. Any other idea on your part will be of no avail. By the grace of God, I shall not give even an inch of land. My father in his life-time possessed himself of the throne of the Carnatic through the favour and kindness of Lord Cornwallis Bahādur. I have succeeded to the throne of my father; I have in my possession the treaty signed by Lord Cornwallis."!

(1) There were three treaties between Nawwāb Muḥammad Ali Wālājāh Bahādur and Lord Cornwallis. The first was in 1787. It stipulated that the Nawwāb should pay annually nine lakhs of pagodas in times of peace, besides twelve lakhs for his debts; in times of war, the contracting parties should each pay four-fifths of their revenues, and that in case of non-payment by the Nawwāb, he should assign certain districts to the Company as security.

The treaty concluded in 1790 laid down that the British should take direct management of the Carnatic into their hands while the war with Mysore lasted.

The treaty of 1792 stipulated that the Nawwāb should pay annually nine lakhs of pagodas to the Company; the Carnatic was to be garrisoned with British troops; the British should collect the tributes from palayagdrs on behalf of the Nawwāb; the assignment for his debts was to be reduced, and the British should take over the entire management of the Carnatic in the event of war.

The subsidy fixed by the treaty of 1792 was regularly paid by the Nawwāb, but he had to contract heavy loans to meet his liabilities and hence he assigned the revenues of his country to liquidate them.

After Umdatul-Umara ascended the throne, Sir John Shore* the Governor-General, authorised Lord Hobart, the Governor of Madras, to propose to the Nawwāb the assignment of the entire revenue to the Company. Lord Hobart apprehended the influence of European usurers on the Nawwāb*

· CH. 4-LORD HOBART'S SON INTERVIEWS THE NAWWĀB

The son of the Governor of Madras was reduced to a non-plus by this irrefutable reply, and rendered miserable. Then he took leave of the Nawwāb, returned to his father, and conveyed to him the reply he received from the Nawwāb. Then Lord Hobart communicated this news to Sir John Shore, the Governor-General in Bengal, and was devising to get possession of certain taluks in lieu of the qist due to the Company. When Nawwāb ṣahib became aware of this he was always reflecting upon methods to defeat the object of the Governor. He addressed Sālār Jang, Mubārīz Jang, and Bahrām Jang as follows:

"By the grace of Allāh, I succeeded to the throne of my father. It is not even a week since my coronation day, and I am bothered by unnecessary anxiety. Allāh, exalted be He, is the Protector and the King of kings."

The Nawwāb was grave and gloomy in the week that followed his coronation on account of his correspondence with the Governor of Madras.

and negotiated without Sir John Shore's consent, for the surrender of only one district. He addressed the Nawwāb "in terms at once offensive to his deceased father and menacing to himself by pressing upon him unseasonably the immediate payment of a debt due to the Company, and other claims real or disputable by threatening compulsory measures."

Sir John Shore acquiesced in Lord Hobart's proposal, but condemned his conduct "as repugnant to the treaty of 1792, by which the Nawwāb's rights were guaranteed—as, in respect of some of the demands pressed on the Nawwāb, unjustifiable—and as, in fact, involving a breach of faith." The Governor-General also asserted that "the magnitude of an advantage could not warrant the prosecution of it by improper means."

Lord Hobart appealed to the Directors in justification of his conduct, and Sir John Shore wrote to Dundas, the President of the Board of Control, on 12th January, 1796, that the conduct of Lord Hobart was "most unjustifiable, violent and indefensible upon every principle." The Governor-General also protested against the principle of forcing the Nawwāb into an acquiescence by indirect means of coercion that "would soon suggest to the country powers that convenience was the measure of our good faith."

Finally the Directors resolved in October, 1797 to recall Lord Hobart.

Section 2.

On the tenth day after the coronation, the Nawwab came out of his sister's house in a suksdwan at about 9 o'clock in the morning and drove to the daru'l-amdra while he was followed by ghoza-nawaz and jawdns. He sat on the ivory chair near the window on the upper storey of Kalas-maḥall.

After the ministers, officers, munshls and mutaṣaddis paid their obeisance, Nawwāb ṣāhib assigned to each individual his work. Mubāriz Jang Bahādur was appointed diwdn, Mr. Battley to be the head of the Angrezi-daru'l-insha, and Rai Khub Chand to be the mir-munshf of Fdrsl-ddrvll-inshd. Sālār Jang, Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur and others were then present in the darbar. Nawwāb invited also Muḥammad Alī Ḥusayn, his own beloved son, Muḥammad Naṣīr Khān Bahādur, and Ghulām Asadullāh Khān Bahādur, the two sons of Sayfu'i-Mulk Bahādur, Muḥammad Abdu'l-Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur, Muḥammad Karim Khān Bahādur, Muḥammad Ḥabībullāh Khān Bahādur, Abdu'l-Karim, Nawwāb's another son, Ḥusayn Nawāz Khān I'timādu'l-Mulk, Sarfarāz Khān Ashrafu'l-Mulk, Abdu'l-Ḥamīd Khān I'tiṣāmu'l-Mulk, and others. Abdrfl-Qādir Khān Bahādur, Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur were also present in the darbar. The Nawwāb issued darbari orders and attended to the affairs of the Government. Then he turned to bestow titles.

First he wrote a royal order conferring the title Malikvīt-Vlamd upon Mawlānā Abdul-All ṣāhib and sent it through Qādir Nawāz Khān.

Another royal order containing a list of titles to be conferred upon Muḥammad Naṣīr Khān Bahādur and others was also signed by the Nawwāb: the title Naṣir Jang for Muhammad Nasir Khan, Mugaffar Jang for Ghulam Asadullah Khan Bahadur, Jaladat Jang for Muhammad Karim Khan Bahadur, and I'tisam Jang for Muhammad Ḥabibullah Khan Bahadur. In addition to the titles, the mansab of two thousand was conferred upon every one of these tarn. The Nawwāb asked Qādir Nawāz Khān to read aloud the order conferring titles upon these men and took nadhḥ from them.

The Nawwāb gave Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur another list of titles which conferred dignities upon the following: Muḥammad Abdu'l-Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur was given the title SirajUl'Mulk Dhīll-faaḥrifd-Dawla Sardar Jang, the manṣab of seven thousand and invested with privilege to nawbat and ghariyal; Muhammad Ali Ḥusayn Khan with the title Amlrul-Mulk Vmdatud-dawla Zāfar Jang, and the manṣab of seven thousand. They also presented nadhḥ to the Nawwāb.

Another royal order with the signature of the Nawwāb conferred the following titles: The title Amir Jang on Abdu'l-Qādir Khān Bahādur, Ṣamsam Jang on Ḥaḥīz Muḥammād Nāṣir Khān Bahādur and the manṣab of four thousand also was conferred upon each of them. The Nawwāb took nadhḥ from them.

Ghulām Ali, the eldest son of Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, was ennobled with the title Ghulam All Khān Bahadur Sayf Jang; Waliullah, the youngest son of Ghulām Ali, with Ghulam Rizā Khān Bahadur Ḥusām Jang; Abdu'l-Karim another son of the Nawwāb, with Khān Bahādur; Ghulām Aṣḥraf Khān Bahādur with Ruknītd-Dawla Bahadur. Of the two brothers-in-law of the Nawwāb, one was honoured with the title Wizarat All Khān Bahadur, and another with Dawūd All Khān Bahadur.

Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur was dignified with the title Bahram Jang, the mansab of two thousand and invested with privilege to wear nīm-asthn, and tie a rumal shḡl; Mir Ismā'il Khān with Mir Asadullah Khān Bahādur; Abū Ṭālib Khān, Aminu'd-Din Khān, Yāsin Muḥammad Khān, Shujā'at Ali Khan, Dargah Quli Khan, Taqi Ali Khan, Quḥbu'd-Din Khan, and Rahman Ali Khan, with Bahadur. All these persons presented nadhḥ to the Nawwāb.

Then the Nawwāb signed three orders which conferred the title Nawwab on his three sisters and sent them through Sālār Jang Bahadur.

Amīru'l-Mulk Bahādur All Ḥusayn Khān, and Sirāju'l-Mulk Bahādur Abdu'l-Ḥusayn Khān, were invested with privilege to rls, and tambour in kdts. The Nawwāb's other nephews and Amīr Jang Bahādur, Šamsām Jang Bahādur and Bahrām Jang Bahādur were invested with privilege to rls only. The Nawwāb accepted *nadh*r from them and gave them all leave to depart.

Section 3.

Nawwab sahib was always ruminating over the correspondence with the Governor of Madras. By the grace of Allāh, a ḥukm-ndma from Sir John Shore, Governor-General of Bengal, reached the Governor of Madras two months after the coronation of the Nawwāb. It read thus:

"Your proposal that certain taluks should be made over to the company in return for the qist is not plausible. Please accept the payment of qist in accordance with the practice observed during the days of Nawwāb Muḥammad Alī Wālājāh'1.

"The exalted Nawwāb Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur Wālājāh II took the right step to ascend the throne after his father. Immediately after reading this ḥukm-ndma you must meet Nawwāb šāḥib and tender my congratulations to him on his accession to the throne and order to fire salutes from the fort of Madras and ships expressing joy on the event."

In obedience to the ḥukm-nāma, the Governor of Madras informed Nawwab sahib of his intention to visit him and on the appointed day the Governor and the sardars of his Council presented themselves in the big diwan-khana of Kalas-mahali and congratulated the Nawwāb on his accession to the throne. A salute of guns was also fired from the fort and ships. The Nawwāb also was very much delighted in receiving the Governor and his companions and gave orders that a salute of guns should be fired in his own bagh expressing respect to the Governor. The Nawwāb treated the Governor and others to pan, itr and flowers and gave them leave to depart. Next day;

CH. 4-UMDATU'L-UMARA VISITS THE GOVERNOR

at 11 o'clock Nawwāb ṣāhib sat in a mahadōl and went in great state to the fort to pay a return visit. He was accompanied by his son, nephews, and the officers of the Government. The Nawwāb returned to his residence after meeting the Governor. A salute of guns was fired from the fort in honour of Nawwāb ṣāhib's visit.

Section 4.

Generally Nawwāb ṣāhib held his morning darbfir in the dlwan-khana of the daritl-amara, and the evening darbar in the diwān-khāna of Siraju'l-mulk Muḥammad Abdu'l-Iḥusayn Khān Bahadur at the palace of Nawwab Sultanu'n-nisa Begam sahiba.

During the early part of his reign before the completion of the building of Fataḥ-chawkī, the Nawwāb had his residence at the palace of his senior sister in the green-chair room. Every day at about six in the morning he drove a chdrat and went out for a walk till 7 o'clock. After breakfast he drove a chdrat drawn by four horses and reached Bāgh-i-kuhna, the residence of the mother of Amirū'l-Mulk Muḥammad All Eḥusayn Khān Bahādur and made inquiries about her health. Thence he went to his alchemy house, and occupied himself with the alchemy work. He rested there for a while in the noon. Then in the afternoon he returned to his sister's house and had his dinner.

Section 5.

Nawwāb ṣāhib got hold of the keys of certain rooms used by Nawwāb Muḥammad Aḥī Wālājah Bahādur, from the officers who were charged with their care, and also the key of the library in charge of Jāwīd Khān. He removed from these rooms to his residence such things as he found useful and left the rest in their respective rooms. He locked the doors and kept the keys in his own box.

Section 6.

The Nawwāb always strove to get a letter from the English king confirming his own government and sent many letters to England in regard to that. To achieve his end, he employed shayMp who had practised ability in incantation. He also engaged pious men to repeat daily prayers, and read the holy Qurān a number of times.

Section 7.

From his young days Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahadur did not like Mubāriz Jang Bahādur. But out of regard for Nawwāb Wālājāh he pretended to be very courteous to him. When he came to power, Mubāriz Jang Bahādur continued as dlwan to all appearance, but Nawwāb ṣahib looked after all affairs taking work from whomsoever he chose. Mubāriz Jang Bahādur, who understood the pleasure of the Nawwāb, did not interfere in any matter. His visits also became infrequent. He used to be present in the morning assembly and pay his obeisance to the Nawwāb. If there was any indispensable duty he attended to it after permission from the Nawwāb.

Section 8.

Three months passed after the coronation; one day at the darbar the Nawwāb ratified the orders of the sarkdr, and then arranged to grant lease of the taluks of Ongole and Palnar to Iftikharu'd-Dawla Bahadur. Then the Nawwāb invited Iftikharu'd-Dawla Bahādur, entrusted him with rent-service and took nadhr from him. After some time he invited Ruknu'd-Dīn Khān and conferred on him the title Nizamvld-Dīn Ahmad Khan and also honoured him with the office of fawjdar of the suba of Muhammadpur known as Arcot.

Section 9.

Nawwāb Sulṣnu'n-nisa Begam sahiba who was busy making due preparation for the marriage festivities of Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur, made everything ready by Jumadirfth-thani in the year 1210 A.H. She distributed toras through Yasin Muḥammad Khān, and Mir Mahdl Khān, and kfcilht through

CH. 4-MARRIAGE FESTIVITIES OF RAISU1--UMARA

Rai Hanmant Rāi Bahādur and Ram Rao. The festivities were begun with the permission of the Nawwāb. Officers like Sālār Jang Bahādur, Bahrām Jang Bahādur, and others were in charge of all arrangements. Every one from the highest to the lowest was presented with gifts; even the broom and groom were given each a share of khilbts with embroidered work. Such distribution of presents was kept up till the month of Rajab. Teachers, ataliq, and others were each presented with embroidered robe, shawl, duṣhdla and vari-coloured clothes that befitted the observances of ceremonies like the ceremony of rang, sharbat, bañ, bardt, and chawthi. All the first-rate courtesans, qawwāls, and mldrthls in the kingdom of the Carnatic who had come from different towns were also honoured with such presents. The diwdn-khdna of Ra'īsu'l-Umarā Bahādur behind the green-chair room in the house of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Begam sahiba was converted into the mdnja-khdna of the bridegroom. It was decorated; the walls were adorned with painting of rose flowers of golden hue and other colours which excited the envy of gardens in early spring. On the 13th of Rajab, the marriage ceremonies were begun. Every day at about 9 o'clock in the night the bridegroom was seated on a peacock throne, and led in a procession from the mdnja-khdna with all paraphernalia, many lamps, and fire-works to witness the nautch which went on till 12 o'clock. Then flowers, and pan were distributed. After this the bridegroom was conducted back to the mdnja-khdna in the same manner. Nawwāb sahib honoured the majlis by his presence in the first two or three days. Afterwards he could not be present at the nautch party or at other marriage festivities in the palace of his elder sister because of the pain caused by the boil in his leg. On the 2nd of Sija'ban when the ceremony of sanchaq was performed, all the officers, ministers and servants and others clad themselves in vari-coloured robes and walked in procession from the big Walajahl bagh to the house of the bridegroom in the new garden well-known by the name of the Garden of Oakes, along with 500 chaw ghaṛas for the ceremony of śdnchaq; some of these ghafas were painted with gold and silver; some were adorned with paintings of azure colour. Thus the entire procession presented the appearance of a garden. It was a marvellous sight; no mortal eye had seen such a sight before or could ever see it in future.

The following is a description of the procession at night :

Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba sought permission of Nawwāb Umdatu'l-Umara Bahādur Wālājāh II to engage Bahrām Jang Bahādur to supervise the arrangements with regard to the procession at night. About five hundred lights were lit in a ladder-like arrangement; about five thousand torches were lighted and carried when the bridegroom started with all paraphernalia. Bahrām Jang arranged to repair the mahddōl and sent it on the barāt day to the palace of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam that she might ride in it along with the bride on the occasion of jalwa. Prior to this, when Karīmu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba known as Ḥaṣrat Bēgam ṣāḥiba had requested Nawwāb ṣāḥib that she might be permitted to ride in the mahāddl on the occasion of the sdnchaq ceremony, Nawwāb ṣāḥib did not give any reply but kept quiet. The Nawwāb's silence greatly afflicted Ḥaṣrat Bēgam ṣāḥiba; she thought out a plan; she returned to her house and engaged immediately the services of a workman to get ready a mahāddl in a day and a night. She fitted it with curtains made of gold thread and of embroidery, and covered every side with red banat; gold kalsds were also suspended from the top, as found in palanquins of Mughal type. She rode in it in the afternoon of the barāt day, went to the house of Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam, and addressed her thus: "Your elder brother thought that I was contemptible and unfit to ride in a mahadol, and did not permit me; he also did not reply when I sought permission to ride in a mahāddl. Well: Allāh, glory be to Him and Exalted be He, out of His grace, granted to me in a short while a new mahādōl which surpasses in beauty the mahādōl of the sarkār. I came here riding in it to accompany the barāt. Of course it befits your rank and dignity to ride in the mahādōl of the sarkar and accompany the barāt of your beloved son."

Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam and her other two sisters smiled indulgently and sent information of this secretly to their elder brother. Bahrām Jang also communicated this news to Nawwāb šāhib. The Nawwāb laughed at the news and sent the following oral message to his aunt at the palace of his sister through Muḥammad Ma'šūm and Muḥammad Rōshan.

"Nawwāb šāhib pays his respects and desires to convey the news thus: It is learnt that you have made a litter after the model of a mahādōl and had come by that to my sister's house intending to accompany the barāt of Abdu'l-Ḥusayn. Congratulations on that. But I make bold to submit that riding in a mahādōl is not suited to your rank. If you still persist in doing so, I leave it to your pleasure; men would laugh at it."

Ḥaḏrat Bēgam šāhiba sent the following reply with her greetings: "It does not matter. This humble mahādōl is superior to the mahādōl of amirs!" Nawwāb šāhib listened to this reply of his aunt and kept quiet.

As Nawwāb šāhib was indisposed on account of the pain caused by the boil in the leg, he could not visit the house of his senior sister for three or four days or be present at the marriage festivities. He stayed at Nusrat-maḥall. At about 9 o'clock in the night of the barāt day he invited to Fataḥ-chawkī Khwāja 'Aṣim Khān Bahādur Mubāriz Jang, Maliku'i-OJlamā Mawlana Abdu'l-All Šāhib, Allmullāh Shāh, Ijīd Sayyid Nurullah for the purpose of tying sehra to the bridegroom. After the arrival of the bridegroom, the Nawwāb requested these men at about 12 o'clock in the night, being the auspicious hour, to fasten the sehra; then he embraced the bridegroom and gave him leave to go to the house of his mother and drink sharbat.

Then the bridegroom came out of his mother's house riding on horseback and started in a procession in great state. Nawwāb Suljānu'n-nisā Bēgam in accordance with the orders of the Nawwab, rode on the mahaddl of the sarkar, while the other two sisters followed her in their own litters. Hazrat Begam ṣāhibā went in front of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam riding in her own mahaddl. The nieces of the Nawwāb rode on three or four bahals fitted with canopied litters behind the vehicles of the ladies. Thus the bridegroom went in great state with many lights proceeding step by step towards Nuṣrat-mahall to see the exalted Nawwab Amiru'l-Hind Walajah Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur. The Nawwāb saw his aunt's vehicle, the new mahadol, and addressed smilingly Aminu'd-Din Khan Bahadur thus: "My exalted aunt is coming by a wonderful vehicle along with the procession. She may also come by the same sort of conveyance from the bagh of the bride on the day of jalwa. All would see and laugh at it".

Next day the ceremony of jalwa was gone through and in the afternoon Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam brought the bride and bridegroom with great pomp to her house in the big bagh. Every one addressed her with expressions of joy on this event. Then she went before Nawwab Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur and expressed her gratitude to him.

In the course of marriage festivities of her son, Nawwāb Suljānu'n-nisā Bēgam was displeased with the Nawwāb because the members of the frang community were not present for the marriage. The Nawwāb, who recovered from his illness after some days, invited his three sisters to Fataḥ-chawkl on the occasion of a show by a Chinese man who had come recently from China and exhibited marvellous feats. The Nawwāb succeeded in a manner to remove the displeasure of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Begam on that occasion. The Nawwab invited the bridegroom Ralsu'l-Umara Bahadur and the bride to Fatrth-chawkl and on the occasion of the riinumā'i ceremony the Nawwāb gave a parwdna granting jāgīr to the bride, conferred on her the title Nawwāb Bēgam ṣāḥiba and also presented her with an emerald seal-ring. The ring with the words Nawwdb Bēgam ṣāḥiba inscribed on it belonged to his own mother and was in possession of his sister.

Section TO,

Nawwāb Umdatu'l-Umara Bahādur could not, after his coronation, visit Nawwāb Shukōlm'l-Mulk Naṣīru'd-Dawla Bahādur for some reason or other and present *nadh*r to him. But he sent it through his son. After some time on the 2nd of Shawwāl the Nawwāb rode a suksdwan in the afternoon and went to the house of Nawwāb Naṣīru'd-Dawla Bahādur in Mylapore to wish him a happy and prosperous 'id of Ramaḏān. He was accompanied by his nephews, while a large crowd made up of armed jawdns, orderlies, chobdars, ghoza-nawdz and others followed them. The Nawwāb reached Mylapore, paid his respects to Nawwāb Naṣīru'd-Dawla Bahādur and presented *nadh*r to him. Nawwāb ṣāḥib stayed there for about an hour and took leave of his uncle. Nawwāb Naṣīru'd-Dawla Bahādur accompanied Nawwāb ṣāḥib as far as the staircase and bade farewell to him. Nawwāb ṣāḥib then visited the zenana, greeted the inmates with expressions of joy and returned to his own residence.

Next day Nawwāb Naṣīru'd-Dawla Bahādur returned the visit. After meeting Nawwāb ṣāḥib he visited Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba in her house, and returned to his own residence. During his lifetime Nawwāb Naṣīru'd-Dawla Bahādur visited Nuṣrat-maḥall and Fataḥ-chawki two or three times, and the house of the Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam once or twice.

Section 11.

One day before the 'id in the month of Dhu'l-hajj in the year 1210 A.H., Nawwab sahib visited the daru'l-amara and called for the parwiinas for jagirs granted by Nawwāb Wālājāh to Nawwāb Ra'īsu'n-nisā Bēgam and Zēbu'n-nisā Bēgam, to Sultānu'n-nisā Begam and her two sisters. He kept these parwdnas with him and issued new ones, under his own seal to confirm the jaglr and mansab and sent the grants through Sālār Jang Bahādur. Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam šāḥiba, the second sister of Nawwāb šāḥib, did not accept, for some reason or other, the parwana sent to her. She returned it with the following message: "May Allāh, exalted be He, keep you safe and sound. Your safety is as good as parwanas for jagirs."

PART II

1211-1212 A. H. [1796-1797 A. D.]

FIRST CHAPTER.

An account of the building of Fataḥ-chawki; the grant of tenures, titles and maṅsabs to Amlriil-Mulk Muḥammad All Ḥusayn Khān Bahadur and Sirajill-Mulk Abdul-Husayn Khan Bahadur and others.

One day Nawwab Umdatul-Umara Bahadur Walajah II decided to construct a new building in the big garden for his own residence. He called Bahrām Jang Bahādur, Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur and Ḥājī Ḥāfiẓ Maghrib! ṣāhib and expressed himself thus: "I wish to demolish Fataḥ-chawki from Bāgh-i-kuhna and put another building up in the bagh where the Walajahl'darueLandra is situated." Then he directed Ḥājī Ḥāfiẓ Maghrib! ṣāhib to collect together the next day masons, carpenters and delvers of the sarkar, and the order was carried out. Early in the morning of the following day, Nawwāb ṣāhib came out before breakfast from the palace of his senior sister, went on foot accompanied by Bahrām Jang Bahādur, Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur, and Ḥājī Ḥāfiẓ Maghrib! ṣāhib, with a view to select a suitable plot on which the new building Fataḥ-chawki may be constructed. They went as far as the vine-arbour near the sweet-water pond, and selected a place with a large number of cocoanut trees, which was nearer to the palace of his senior sister.

The Nawwāb then told Bahrām Jang and others thus: "This plot is more suitable for the construction of the edifice Fataḥ-chawki." The Bahādur replied: "Your highness' decision is excellent, but a large number of cocoanut trees have to be cut down. It would be preferable if the plot behind the sweet-water pond is chosen, for it is empty of trees and also nearer to Kalas-maḥall. But the decision rests with your highness. Whatever place is chosen, may Allāh exalted be He, it will be suitable."

The Nawwāb said, "My exalted father arranged to cut down many cocoanut trees before he began the construction of Kalas-maḥall." Then he appointed Sayyid Ibrāhim the risGladār, and other men directing them to get necessary materials from Bāgh-i-kuhna for the construction of Fataḥ-chawkī. He explained to the masons and others the plan of the new building with a compound wall. When the actual work of construction began, two or three tents were pitched at the place, and every day Nawwāb ṣāhib went there in the afternoon and guided the workmen with fresh ideas as they struck him. During the period of the construction of this new building his visits to the alchemy house became few and far between; once a week he visited Bāgh-i-kuhna after breakfast and engaged himself in the alchemy work. After the new building Fataḥ-chawkl was completed in a few months, the Nawwāb took up his residence there with great joy and happiness. He got ready on the ṣaḥn of the new premises, a tile-roofed building for the alchemy work and other houses for different works, besides some with tiled roofs for the kachahl and jilaw-khana. One more building covered with tiles was got ready behind Fataḥ-chawkl for the residence of the mother of Amīru'l-Mulk Muḥammad All Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur. As Fataḥ-chawkl was not spacious, the Nawwāb got ready, in a short while, a building of two floors, called Nusrat-maḥall, for his own daru'l-amdra. This building was contiguous to Fataḥ-chawkī and bordered on the portion of the palace of his senior sister occupied by Ḥāfig Maghrib! ṣāhib.

Section 1.

After Fataḥ-chawkl and Nusrat-maḥall were furnished, Nawwāb ṣāhib made arrangements to screen one half of the Walajahi bagh for the use of the zenana, and invited his three sisters and their family for a party in the new buildings. The Nawwāb had the afternoon dinner with his sisters and distributed presents in the zenana. He treated his sisters kindly and bestowed upon them gifts. After spending a pleasant day the sisters took leave of the Nawwāb in the evening.

Section 2.

Daily routine of the Nawwāb in Fatah-chawki

Nawwāb ṣāhib got up from his bed early in the morning. After attending to the routine duties he rode on a chārat followed by a trooper and a janīa'ddr; he went as far as Rōshān-bāgh and at about 7 o'clock returned to Fatah-chawki. Till 8 o'clock he sat at the table enjoying his breakfast. Then he took his seat in the outer hall opposite to the gate of Fatah-chawki, where ministers, officers, 'ulamās, and others were present, busied himself till 11 o'clock in listening to petitions and representations and issuing orders. After dissolving the assembly, he rested for a while in Fatah-chawki. He woke up, worked for a while in the alchemy house and then held the darbār at Kalas-maḥall. He broke up the assembly in the afternoon and went to the house of his senior sister for dinner. Then he returned to Fatah-chawki by suksGwan and sat in the outer hall facing west, on a couch fitted with makhmal, and checked the accounts rendered by Muḥammad Ma'ṣūm, for the expenditure of the daily allowance of one thousand rupees. This work kept him busy till 6 o'clock. Then he rode a suksawan followed by ghpza-nawāz and went to the house of his senior sister. He chatted with his sisters or sometimes played a game of chawsar till 8 o'clock and after the gun-shot he returned to Fatah-chawki, where he busied himself as usual in writing or reading matters important to him, composing verses or reading poetical works. At about 12 o'clock he retired to bed in the room on the second floor of Fatah-chawki.

Section 3.

The Nawwāb held the darbar one day on the second floor of Kalas-mahall and sat on an ivory couch fitted with makhtnal. He summoned Salār Jang Bahādur, Bahrām Jang Bahūdur, and Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur, and invited Amlru'l-Mulk Muḥammad Aḡī Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur, and Sirāju'l-Mulk Abdu'l-Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur. The Nawwāb conferred on Amfru'l-Mulk Bahādur the title Nawwāb Tdjul-Umarā Umdatul-Mamalik Amirul-Mulk with the privilege to the music of nawbat, and to wear jawahirat; and appointed him to be the khansaman and the bakhshi. Riza Nawaz Khan was chosen as the na'ib of Amlru'l-Mulk to look after the affairs pertaining to the office of the bakhshi. Sirāju'l-Mulk Bahādur was dignified with the title Nawwāb Ra'isu'l-Umara Sardaru'l-Mamalik Siraju'l-Mulk with the privilege to wear jawahirat, and was appointed to be the bakhshi of the office of khitabat. He was also permitted to maintain a risala comprising five hundred armed men. Shuja'at Aḡī Khan Bahādur was chosen as his na'ib. The Nawwāb got from the royal treasury two thousand rupees and presented Amlru'l-Mulk Bahādur and Sirāju'l-Mulk Bahādur each with one thousand for *nadh*r and other purposes. Each of these Bahādures presented twenty-one muhr as *nadh*r to the Nawwāb who sent them in great state to the houses of his sisters to offer them *nadh*r.

Next day the Nawwāb conferred titles on his other nephews. The title Vizuddu'd-Dawla was bestowed upon Naṣīr Jang Bahādur; Majdiid-Dawla Bahādur on Muzaḡffar Jang; Sahibuid-Dawla on Jalādat Jang Bahādur; Nāṣiruld-Dawla on Ptiṣām Jang Bahādur, and each one of them was honoured with the mansab of 4,000. Mr. Barret was honoured with the title Major, Rai Khūb Chand with the titles Bahādur and Rai Rayan, and Hanmant Rai with Rai Bahādur. Some mutasaddis and officers were favoured with the titles Khan, Bahādur and Rai.

SECOND CHAPTER.

An account of the letter that arrived from the English king confirming the title to the succession of Nawwab Umdatul-Umara Bahadur along with a portrait, a sword, and a medallion of the English prince; the Nawwab appoints Mr. Barret to be the diwan, confers on him the title Colonel, and presents pandan to him; the death of the wife of Sayyid-Mulk Bahādur, and the affair of Ja'far All.

By the grace of Allāh, when the letter from the English king reached the Governor in Council at Madras, Lord Hobart Bahādur sent a note to Nawwāb ṣāhib on the 19th of Jumādiu'th-thātri, 1211 A. H. [19th December, 1796] informing him of the arrival of a letter and presents from England. Immediately after learning the news, the Nawwāb prostrated joyfully as a token of submission and thanksgiving to Allāh. Then he communicated this happy news to his sisters. He invited Sālār Jang Bahādur and Bahrām Jang Bahādur and told them that he was rejoiced to hear the news of the arrival of the letter and presents from England and expressed thus: "By the grace of the eternal Lord, a letter has arrived from 'the Prince of Wales' (English king?)i my kind friend and affectionate brother. I wish to take delivery of it on the auspicious Friday, the 20th of this month, at about ten in the morning at the Wāljāhl dāritl-amāra". Then he ordered a note to be written to Lord Hobart about that.

He gave orders to Sālār Jang and other officers that the diwan-khāna of the darvtl-amara should be furnished on

(1) King George III, was active and steady in the year 1796, and his eldest son was not acting then as regent. His eldest son, the Prince of Wales, afterwards George IV, was regent during the insanity of his father in 1788 when he recovered before the regency bill was passed, and from 1811 till the death of George III in 1820.

The Prince of Wales always kept up a rival Court with great pomp at Carlton House.

Thursday with carpets, banat, masnad, canopy, couch, and chairs taken from all the offices to provide accommodation for all the frang sardars who might come to deliver the letter, and that arrangements should be made to distribute pan, flowers, 'itr and other things suggestive of the joyful occasion. The mir-munshi of the Farsl-daru'l-insha, was instructed to write letters to all the members of the royal family, the nobles and officers inviting them to put on rich dress and be present in the daru'l-amara at the appointed time.

Then he directed Bahrām Jang Bahādur to arrange to get together early in the morning all the paraphernalia for a state drive, to put a silken chair in the royal howdah and send these at 8 o'clock to the residence of the Governor so that the letter of the English king might be brought in that howdah to the daru'l-atnara; to fire a salute of twenty-one guns on the arrival of the letter to the bāgh, a salute of twenty-one guns after reading the letter and a salute of nineteen guns at the time of the Governor's arrival to and departure from the bagh. Bahrām Jang Bahādur carried out all these instructions.

On the morning of the 23rd, when the sun tore the veil of darkness and shed light on the earth and sky, Nawwāb ṣāhib put on rich robes, decked himself with jewels, glittering arms, and a tassel of priceless pearls on his turban. At about 9 o'clock in the morning, he drove from Fataḥ-chawkl to the dārdn-khfina of the dārūt-atndra which was thronged with all officers, nobles, munshis, mutafaddis, servants and others; he arranged a relay of troopers between his big bāgh and the bagh of the Governor to bring information about the party which carried the letter. In this manner the Nawwāb waited for the arrival of the letter. In the meanwhile news came about the departure of the party carrying the letter from the garden of the Governor and in a short while the letter, the portrait of the 'prince' and presents which were carried on the howdah, entered the bagh in great state, accompanied by members of the council and others. Immediately a salute of guns was fired from the bagh and the fort. The howdah, where the son of Lord Hobart sat holding the letter, made a halt in front of the diwdn-khāna, when Nawwāb sāhib went towards it. Lord Hobart and other sardars who came by charats, alighted from their carriages outside the door of the diwan-khana, and advanced to the howdah. Lord Hobart took the letter from his son, went into the diwdn-khdna and delivered it to Mr. Fākna^r* who was by the side of the masnad. Then he opened the box and took out the medallion and the sword. He decorated the Nawwāb's neck with the medallion and added lustre to Nawwāb's hand by placing on it the sword. Then the order was given to read aloud the letter. Mr. Fākna^r stood on the chawkl furnished with makhmal and read out the letter. Then the Governor handed over to the Nawwāb the Persian version of the letter. The Nawwāb gave that to Rai Khūb Chand Bahādur the mir-tnunshi, and ordered him to read it. Rai Khūb Chand Bahādur stood upon the same chawkl, read it eloquently and then resumed his seat. Immediately after this a salute of guns also sounded in the bagh, in the army quarters of the sarkar and the company. Lord Hobart and other sardars congratulated the Nawwāb on this happy event. Then the Governor brought the box that contained the portrait of the Prince, and showed it to him. Immediately the Nawwāb ordered his men to suspend it on the eastern wall of the diwan-khdna. He very much commended the merits of the 'prince*'; he touched the portrait with his hand and said "Thanks to Allāh, by the kindness of this affectionate brother the letter confirming my title to the throne reached me soon". Then Nawwāb sahib sat upon the masnad and received nadher. After the distribution of flower, 'itr, and pan, all the frang sardars and others took leave of the Nawwāb. Then he rode the mahadol in great state accompanied by Ra'isu'l-Umara Bahadur and Taju'l-

Umari Bahadur and visited the Walajahl mosque to say the juma prayer. After finishing the prayer, he went to the palace of his senior sister. He received nadhr from all his three sisters and others, and distributed large presents in her palace. In the afternoon Nawwāb Shukōhu'l-Muik Bahādur visited the Nawwāb and felicitated him on the happy news. Ḥaṣrat Bēgam sahiba also shed lustre on the company by her presence and prayed for long life and prosperity of the Nawwāb. Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahadur also presented his nadhr with expressions of joy on the occasion.

Section I.

The date prescribed for the payment of the qisṭ to the company drew near and there were only four or five days left. Nawwāb ṣāhib how-much-so ever tried to find money, but it was of no avail. He sent information to Mubāriz Jang Bahādur thus: "The qisṭ has to be paid to the company in four or five days' time. I could not do anything. If you could manage it by any means, I will feel great joy." Mubāriz Jang appeared before the Nawwāb and submitted as follows: "I tried all means. As there are outstanding debts from the days of Nawwāb Muḥammad Afi WaḤajah, the bankers desire fresh securities and they will not lend money without them." On hearing this news, Nawwab sahib became more pensive, went to the house of his senior sister and told her that the time for the payment of the qisṭ to the company was drawing near and Mubariz Jang Bahādur could not manage it. But his sister also feigned ignorance. In the meanwhile Mr. Barrett, who had taken the Chinese ghariyal for repairs, brought it and communicated the news of his arrival to the Nawwab. Nawwab sahib came out, received the ghariyal and felt very happy. But Mr. Barrett noticed signs of anxiety and deep thought in the face of Nawwab sahib, and made bold to enquire of him about it. The Nawwāb replied:

"My friend! what shall I say? I am in a fix. How to express myself? By the grace of the eternal Lord, everything turned up as I expected; but some mischief-makers look out for an opportunity to bring shame upon me in my relationship with the Company. It happens thus: the time prescribed for the payment of the qist to the company is fast approaching. If it is not paid in time, it will bring discredit upon me. Mubārīz Jang Bahādūr has spoken clearly on the subject; my sister also is apathetic. I am very much agitated and worried about this, for I shall appear a breaker of promise in the eyes of the government, and misunderstanding will arise between the Company and myself. Certainly this should not be. Many matters in which I have interest, are on the tapis of the English king and the Company, and non-payment of the qist will be to the prejudice of my rights."

Mr. Barrett submitted: "It is a great wonder that Mubārīz Jang Bahādūr, in spite of his high position, cannot find the means to provide with the money needed. But the Nawwāb has simply to give an order to anybody that it should be done and the power derived from his majestic order will remove a thousand worries in the twinkling of an eye."

Nawwāb ṣāḥīb was very much pleased by this reply and said, "You are wise, sagacious, and learned. I am sure you can manage this work." Mr. Barrett replied, "I am your old loyal servant. If the order is given, the qist money will be paid a day before the appointed date, and the receipt of payment from the company's treasury will be brought to you." Nawwāb ṣāḥīb was very much pleased to hear that assurance, and felt very happy. Then he said, "Mr. Barrett, if you can manage this affair it will give me great joy, while it will make my enemies look black. By the grace of Allah you will be appointed diwan".

Then Mr. Barrett paid obeisance and took leave of the Nawwāb. Mr. Barrett succeeded in his endeavour to get an English banker as surety for the payment of the qist in the treasury of the Company, secured the treasury receipt for the amount paid and brought it to the Nawwāb. As soon as the Nawwāb saw the receipt, he was delighted and rejoiced at it. He embraced him, applauded and praised him. Then said the Nawwāb, "You alone could do it, and you are the man. From to-day you are the representative of my authority". Mr. Barrett paid obeisance and returned home.

The Nawwāb ṣāhib commended the merits of Mr. Barrett in the darbar, in the house of his senior sister and in other places thus: "None of my officers can make arrangements for the payment of the qist to the Company. But one Chattā-pdsh made arrangements for it, brought to me the treasury receipt for the payment of the qist to the Company. In return for this service I made him the agent of my kingdom, and in future this Chattakar shall look after the affairs of my government.

Section 2.

Next day at about 10 o'clock in the morning, Nawwāb sahib visited Humayun-mahall and ordered Mir AsaduUah Khan Bahādur that he should immediately send for Mr. Barrett. In obedience to the order the Bahādur presented Mr. Barrett to him. Then the Nawwāb advised Mr. Barrett, as required by convention, conferred on him the title Colonel Barrett Bahddur and granted him a jagir, a pandan in token of the grant, appointed him to be the diwan and presented him with a dignified khilat and a white dushala of great value. A ḥukm-nāma signed by the Nawwāb was granted to Mr. Barrett confirming his appointment. Colonel Barrett, who was thus honoured with the manṣab and appointment, submitted 125 asbrafi as nadhr.

In accord nee with the order of the Nawwāb, Colonel Barrett had his office in the big diwan-khdna. His room was opposite to the gate of Kalas*maḥall. He appointed Rāi Reddi Raoi and

(1) Rii Reddi Rao served as the Sariṣhtaddr of the Nawwab. He was implicated in a charge of having forged the Carnatic loan bonds in collusion

Rai Anand Rao¹ as peshkars and enjoined on Rai Khub Chand the mlr-munshh that he should be present by his side. He furnished his own room with an almirah, some chairs and a table with drawers and locks—all taken from the karkhana of the sarkar. He presented himself at the morning darbar from 10 o'clock to 12 o'clock, and spent the rest of the day in the dlwdn-khana of Kalas-mahall. After the completion of Fatah-chawki, Colonel Barrett presented himself at the morning darbar in the daru'l-amara of the chawki; after meeting the Nawwab, he sat in the vestibule of Fatah-chawki and attended to the affairs of the government. When the Nawwab held the evening darbar from 6 o'clock to 8 o'clock, Colonel Barrett waited for him from sunset at the palace of Nawwab Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam, in the green-chair room of the Nawwab. At about 7 o'clock in the evening, the Nawwab left Fatah-chawki and went as usual to his room in the palace of his sister. He took his seat on the green chair and discussed with Colonel Barrett the affairs of the government for about an hour. Then the Nawwab entered the palace of his sister. Colonel Barrett ordered the tnunshs and others attached to the darbar to close their kachahri in the diwan-khana of Ra'isu'l-Umaia at 8 P.M. and himself returned home. All the munshis, mutasaddis, and others were obedient to the Colonel and were attentive to their duties. Nawwab ṣāhib did not consult anyone except Colonel Barrett on matters of government.

One day the Nawwab expressed to Bahrām Jang Bahādur and Mir Asadullāh Khān Bahādur thus: "The Creator has bestowed favour on my administration, by reason of which my authority is maintained and peace of mind is secured. Colonel Barrett Bahādur is a brilliant man, sagacious and ingenious; he cleverly contrived to pay the qist to the

with Mr. Battley, the English secretary to the Nawwab and was committed to trial before the Supreme Court (1807—8 A.D.)

Company and paid the stipulated amount into the treasury of the Company in a short while." Bahrām Jang Bahādur submitted to the Nawwāb, "Your highness' opinion is excellent/'

The exalted Amlru'1-Hind Wālājāh NawwSb IJmdatu'1-Umarā Bahādur out of nobleness of mind conferred distinction on his officers, servants and others by granting them good situations, according to the rank and status of each person. He appointed suitable men to be fawjddrs and atnls in the taluks of the Carnatic. Colonel Barrett Bahādur also was honoured with the grant of jdglrs and titles.

Section 3.

On the occasion of the marriage of Majdu'd-Dawla Bahādur, Nawwāb Umdatu'1-Umara Bahādur visited one day the palace of Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam šāhiba and endeavoured to remove the misunderstanding that had come in between them for some reason or other. She had declined, on account of the misunderstanding, to accept the parwana for jaglr granted by the Nawwāb. He advised and comforted her; he showed her great kindness by giving her a parwana for jaglr and presenting her with ten thousand rupees for the expenses of the marriage and two thousand rupees to humour her. He appointed Sālār Jang Bahādur to make everything ready for the marriage. Seeing the kindness and favour of her brother, Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam cleaned the sorrow-stricken mind with the wave of her sisterly affection. She accepted the parwana and the cash. She spoke lovingly to her brother for some time and sent him away.

Muḥammad! Bēgam, the daughter of Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam, was married to the writer of this chronicle three years before the demise of Nawwāb Muḥammad Ali Wālājāh Bahādur. The marriage was celebrated in a grand style at a cost of forty-thousand rupees, under the supervision of Iftikharu'd-Dawla Bahidur, On the day of the marriage ceremony Nawwāb

CH. 2-MARRIAGE OF MAJDU'D-DAWLA SAHADUR

Muhammad A'li Wālājāh rebuked Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur for his extravagance. But Nawwab Umdatul-Umara Bahadur intervened in this affair and procured pardon for Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur who was then enabled to go with the bridegroom during the shab gash.

The marriage of Majdu'd-Dawla Bahādur with the daughter of Nawwāb Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahāduri was settled. Sālār Jang and others made everything ready for the marriage, in accordance with the plan of Nawwāb ṣāhib. After obtaining the permission of the Nawwāb, Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhiba took steps to furnish and decorate the mānja-khāna through Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur in his own diwān-khāna. Every plan was carried into effect. On the day of shab gash Nawwāb ṣāhib accompanied by his nobles paid a visit to the house of the bride, remained there for the ceremony of jalwa and bestowed honour on the party.

Section 4.

Badru'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhiba, the daughter of Nawwāb Shukohul-Mulk Bahadur, and the wife of Nawwab Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur was taken ill when she heard the news that Husamu'd-Dawla Ghulām Riza Khān, her youngest son, went away to Nattharnagar to see his wife without informing his parents. She was shocked at this news and in a period of one week she passed away on the 14th of Sha'bān in the year 1211 A.H. Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur paid two thousand rupees for the funeral expenses. The coffin was sent to Nattharnagar with great honours, in accordance with the wishes of Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahadur. Nawwab sahib expressed sympathy with Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur and told him as follows: "Do not give way to grief. I shall send for Husāmu'd-Dawla from Nattharnagar." After he had consoled Sayful-Mulk Bahādur, the Nawwāb returned home with his sisters and others.

(1) He was one of the sons of Nawwāb Muframmad All Walajah.

He gave orders at the Fdm-adrvll-in$hd that an inayat-nama should be sent by dak to Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur at Natthar-nagar with the following contents: "Ḥusāmu'd-Dawia, your son-in-law, ran away from here to see his wife without informing his parents. He has gone over to your place. He must be sent back to Madras immediately after the fatiha for his mother on the third day."

When this inayat-nama reached Husamul-Mulk, he sent Ḥusārau'd-Dawla to Madras soon after the fatiha on the third day was over.

Ḥusāmu'd-Dawla reached Madras in a short time, took up his residence at Rōshan-bāgh and conveyed the news of his arrival to Nawwāb ṣahib. The Nawwāb rejoiced at the news and communicated it to Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur through a trooper. Then he took a pencil and wrote in his own hand the following note to the author of this book.

"To

"Ṣāhibu'd-Dawla Karīm Miṣān, most precious son! May he enjoy long life and prosperity!

"By the grace of Allāh, exalted be He, Ḥusāmu'd-Dawla, the pleasant youth, youngest son of Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, has come from Nattharnagar as desired by me. He is residing at Rōshan-bāgh. I intend to send you tomorrow to bid him welcome. It behoves you to get the permission of your mother and junior aunt and present yourself at Fataḥ-chawkl. Allāh is with us all.

"Ghulam Husayn Umdatu'l-Umara Amiru'l-Hind Wala-jāh."

Nawwāb sahib entrusted this letter to Sayyid Ibrahim, and directed him thus:—"Deliver this letter to Sahibu'd-Dawla. Inform my second sister on my behalf that the youngest son of Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahadur has come from Nattharnagar and is residing at Rōshan-bāgh. I wish to send her son-in-law, who is younger in age, to bid him welcome; she should also give him permission to go, and, before he goes, she should ask him to present himself before me." The risaladar delivered the letter to me, the indigent person, and communicated the oral message to the Nawwāb's sister. The noble mother of this author learnt the contents of the Nawwāb's letter and asked me to take the permission of my aunt and go.

Nawwab Maliku'n-niṣa Begam ṣāhiba sent the following oral reply to Nawwab sahib:

"My dear brother,

"I send my greetings to you. Your idea is excellent. We have the greatest respect for it. But Ḥusāmrfd-Dawla takes pride in being the grandson of Nawwab Muḥammad All Wālājāh Bafiadur. If some one of adequate rank and tnaṣab is chosen, it will conduce to his happiness. Although Ṣāhibrfd-Dawla, the prosperous son, is not in the first degree, yet he has also the pride of place. He is your sister's son, and also takes pride in being your slave. You may do as you please. Whomsoever you may choose, it will confer dignity upon him."

The risāladdr went before the Nawwāb and conveyed the message of his sister. The Nawwāb wrote on a piece of paper the following verse and sent it with a message to the house of his sister at about 9 o'clock in the night.

"Those who pride themselves on ancestry

Are verily the dogs that are contented with bones."

The following message of the Nawwāb was conveyed to his sister by the nsaladar :

"By the grace of Allāh, I have decided to send to your palace a suksawan carved with the design of a lion's head, two armed pahras, two troopers, six bandats, besides ghoza-nawaz, and six orderlies for the transport of your son-in-law. Please send him quickly to that place, so that he may escort Husamu'd-Dawk from Roshan-bagh to our presence at Nusrat-tnahatt in Bagh-i-khass,

HISTORY OF THE NAWWABS OF THE CARNATIC III-Pt. II

Maliku'n-niṣā Begam listened to the communication of Nawwāb ṣāḥib and sent the following message with her greetings and salutations.

"Saliibud-Dawla, the prosperous son, will faithfully carry out the orders of the Nawwāb."

Next morning at about 7 o'clock this obedient servant went to Rōṣhan-bāgh in great state, took gjuṣāmu'd-Dawla in his company and presented him to the Nawwāb at Nuṣrat-maḥall in Bāgh-i-khāṣṣ. The Nawwāb rebuked Ḥuṣāmu'd-Dawla and sent him along with Bahrām Jang to the house of Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur. Bahrām Jang Bahādur was instructed that he should tie Ḥuṣāmu'd-Dawla's hands together with a rutnal before he introduced him to his father, and let him lie at the feet of his parent while Bahrām Jang should say on behalf of the Nawwab thus: "I have taken to task this guilty person. Now I am sending him to you. Allāh is the real Forgiver; He forgives all sinners. I shall be happy if you can pardon this offender." Bahrām Jang carried out the instructions. Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur also forgave his son for his offence.

Section 5.

On Wednesday, the 2nd of Shyabān, Nawwāb ṣāḥib came out of Fataḥ-chawkī to have his customary drive. The chawkidars paid their obeisance. Suddenly Ja'far AH, one of the chawkidars, drew his sword, came neare; to the Nawwāb in the twinkling of an eye, caught hold of the Nawwāb's skirt and took aim at him. But Muḥammad Ibrihm, the jama'ddr, hastened to him and removed the sword out of the hand of Ja'far Ali. In the course of this act, Muhammad Ibrahim was injured in his hand. In the meanwhile, other orderlies also came, tore off the portion of the Nawwab's garment that was in the hand of Ja'far Ali* led the Nawwāb inside Fatafr-chawkl, fluid closed its doors. Then Ja'far Ali was taken into custody. This news spread everywhere in the town.

CH. 2-JA'FAR ALI ATTEMPTS THE LIFE OF THE NAWWAB.

Nawwāb ṣāhib honoured Muḥammad Ibrāhim by appointing him to be a fiḥāddr. Orders were given that all the doors of the bagh should be closed, and neither the guard nor any other person be allowed to get into the bQgh. This order remained in force for two or three days. A large number of relatives, officers and others stayed for about a week or ten days at Fataḥ-chawkī in the presence of the Nawwāb. After some days Nawwāb ṣāhib summoned Ja'far All and made enquiries about his conduct. Bahrām Jang was appointed to enquire into the case. Bahrām Jang and Taqī All Khān called Ja'far All and told him thus: "u' you give out the true facts, it will be better for you; else you will suffer severe imprisonment."

Ja'far All submitted: ' Whether you believe me or nou' I shall submit the facts as they are:

"Ashraf All, on behalf of All Ḥusayn Khān reported that if the exalted Nawwāb Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur comes to the throne, every one of the sayyids will be appointed to good situations and we can lead comfortable lives. Under this regime, we suffer extreme poverty and death is better than starvation. Muḥibb All and Muḥammad All were also present at that time. This was the motive that induced this slave to act. I came with the idea that death is better than starvation. This slave who has not the strength to endure hunger may be punished with death. The intention of this slave was not to kill the Nawwāb."

Bahrām Jang stated full particulars about Ja'far AK to Nawwab sahib who flew into a rage and said:

"If Sayfu'l-Mulk has the desire to come to the throne after me, it is a vain hope. I intend my son for the throne ; Sayfu'l-Mulk intends that the throne is for him; my senior sister has in mind that her son is meant for the throne after me; and the frangs are waiting for their opportunity*! But it shall be as the supreme Ruler wills/¹

Then he directed Bahrām Jang Bahādur that Ja'far All, Muhibb Ali, Aṣṣhraf All and Muhammad Ghawth, should be bound in chains and led to Chandragṛi; that one jama'dar, and two armed guards, should be sent along with one or two miyana to take All Ḥusayn Khān as prisoner, put him in the miyana, and lead him captive beyond the boundaries of the river Krishna, with the warning that he must not return to this land lest he should be put in bonds.. In accordance with the order, Bahrām Jang imprisoned Ja'far All and others and banished All Ḥusayn Khān from the town.

Then Nawwab sahib summoned Mir Asadullah Khan Bahādur and ordered him to communicate the following message to Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur. "You have set your mind on the throne. It is vain to do so. If you cling to that idea it will prove that you are ungrateful to the Almighty Lord. It is better to put out of your mind such useless ideas. Else it will bring shame upon you."

On hearing this rebuke, Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, took with him a copy of the holy Qurān, went to the house of Sulṭānu'n-nisa Begam sahiba with great apprehensions, and denied the charges. When Nawwāb ṣāhib visited that place, Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur swore solemnly by the holy Qurān that he was innocent, and made himself clear of suspicion. He fell at the feet of Nawwab sahib, who raised him from his feet, embraced him and said: "Surely, you will not have such intentions. But All Ḥusayn Khān, your companion, is a mischievous man. I will not forgive him." Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur submitted: "Your

As this suspicion gained strength from the year 1796, the desire of the British to take over, the entire administration of the territories under the Nawwab was more distinctly pronounced.

Majesty's pleasure. This slave will be always obedient to you/'
Yet, the Nawwab was reserved with him, and showed to him courtesy as required by convention.

THIRD CHAPTER.

The revolt of the army against Qutbiid-Din Kaan the bakhshi; the appointment of Husamu'l-Mulk Bahadur as shabadar of Muhammadpiir; grant of mansabs and situations to officers; the building of Mubarak-chawki, knozyn later on as Rdshan-chawki; the birth of Muhammadi-miydn; and reasons for payment of the qist to the Company by the sarkar.

As monthly allowances were not paid to the jawāns in charge of Qutbu'd-Din Khān for about six months, they petitioned to the Khān for the settlement of arrears. But the Khān was evading with some excuse or other. The jawāns, who were suffering from extreme poverty, decided upon revolt.¹ On the morning of the 22nd of Muharram in the year 1212 A. H., they brought out cannons from the armoury, placed two on the red gate, and two on the big gate, and looked out for Qutbrfd-Din Khān.

The Khān rode his horse and was going to the darbar.
The jawans unseated him from horseback and took him in their custody. They seated him on the cannon and dragged it round the bazar and streets for two or three days and thus degraded and disgraced him. Then they brought him to the gate of the bagh, and kept him as a captive. The access to the bagh was impossible till the revolt which continued for three or four days was over.

(1) Such tumults followed by rioting on the part of the sepoys for the settlement of arrears of pay were common not only in the Carootic, but also in other Indian darbars, like Haydarabad, Kashmir, Nepal and other places.
See R. Temple: Journals kept in Hyderabad, Kashmir and Nepal, Vol. I, Introduction, p. 16 (1887).

When the information about the revolt of the army reached his ears, the Nawwāb sought of the Company an army to protect himself. The army was encamped in the garden, and the doors of the garden were ordered to be closed. Every day one hundred hūn was paid as bhattā for the maintenance of the army through Riza Nawaz Khan, the bakhshi. There was no prospect of suppression of the revolt unless by payment of the arrears. So the Nawwāb gave an order that the treasurer should furnish the necessary amount from the treasury to be distributed to the jawans through Sayyid Muḥiyū'd-Din Nawaz Khan the risaladar and Sayyid Makhdum the risaladdr, who would get receipts for the payment. The treasurer executed the order and liberated Qutḥu'd-Dīn Khān from captivity. The Khān went before the Nawwāb weeping out thus: "It is not decent or respectable for this slave to live in this town any longer. Please permit me to go to the holy Makka." Nawwab ṣahib comforted him, presented him with a green dushala from his wardrobe and conferred on him the title Himmat Jang Bahādur.

Section I.

Nawwāb Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur was often trying to get the post of ṣūbadar of Muhammadpūr through the mediation of Colonel Barrett. The Colonel represented frequently to the Nawwab that Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur may be appointed as subadar. Nawwab sahib called Nawwab Husamu'l-Mulk Bahādur on the 14th of Rabi'u'l-awwal in the year 1212 A.H., to the darbtir, gave him the appointment, presented him with khilat, and jawahirat. Nawwab Husamu'l-Mulk Bahadur presented nadhrr to the Nawwab and then submitted: "Murtaza Ḥusayn Khān hopes that your highness will bestow favours on him, that he will be dignified with the titles Bahadur and Jang and be permitted to wear jawahirat, play nawbat and ride on an elephantllh a canopied litter." The Nawwāb smiled indulgently and said "My brother! this is not easy or free from difficulties. If he could present to me five thousand huñ as nadh̄r, he may indeed be dignified with such honours. Nawwāb Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk consented to this proposal of the Nawwāb. Next day he presented himself at the darbar in Fataḥ-chawkl and submitted thus to the Nawwāb: "Your slave is ready with nadh̄r, as desired by you. May your highness be pleased to look upon him with kindness." The Nawwāb took into account the recommendations of Colonel Barrett Bahādur and the feelings of Nawwāb Ḥusāmul-Mulk Bahādur. So he conferred on Murtaʿa Ḥusāyan Khān the title MuUzzam Jang Bahādur, permitted him to wear jawahirat, nim~astin, and rumal, to ride on an elephant in a canopied litter, and to play nawbat. The Nawwāb also appointed him to be the nd'ib ṣābaddr of Muḥammadpur.

Section 2.

Sometime later Nawwāb Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur, in consideration of the kindness of Colonel Barrett who always endeavoured to recommend him to the Nawwāb's favour, purchased Mubārak-bāgh from the Colonel. He renovated the building and furnished it with adornments. Then one day he invited Nawwāb ṣāhib, his sisters, nephews, and others to a sumptuous meal in the morning. Different sorts of dishes were made, fruits from all parts were procured, and the whole thing was done in good style. Thousands of rupees were spent by way of presents to the servants of the Nawwāb. The Nawwāb ṣāhib was very much delighted with it. He spent two hours pleasantly in the baqh̄ after the morning food. Then he ate his evening meal in the company of his sisters and then returned to his own residence.

Later on, Ḥusāmul-Mulk Bahādur bestowed Mubārak-chawkl upon his daughter-in-law, the wife of Mutahhar Ali Khān, as a gift.

Section 3.

One day Nawwab sahib started out of Humayun-mahall after dissolving the darbar, intending to go to the house of his second sister. When he reached the pool behind the diwan-hhflnaoi Kalas-mahall facing Sabz-bangla, the idea to construct an wooden building at that place came to the Nawwab. Immediately he called the Phulchery mistr and other masons of the sarkar, and explained to them the plan of the building. He directed Muhammad Ma'sum to bring cash for the purpose of purchasing the necessary building materials. When the money was brought, he entrusted it with Sayyid Ibrahim the shibadar and enjoined on him and the Pulcheri mistr that they should quickly complete the building. In accordance with the instructions of the Nawwab, Sayyid Ibrahim and others finished their work in a short time. After the completion of the building, the Nawwab frequently went there after dissolving the darbar at Humayun-mahall and stayed there a long time. He got ready a small boat providing accommodation for ten or twelve men, and left it in the pool. At noon he made some men row in that boat and enjoyed the tamasha. As this new building was contiguous to the house of his second sister, the Nawwab visited her house frequently. By the grace of Allah, one day the Nawwab made arrangements for the screening of the area from the house of his second sister and his last sister and from the diwan-khana of Kalas-mahall as far as the gate of Charat-fekana; then he invited his sisters and others at about 8 o'clock in the morning, had breakfast with them, and spent the whole day in seeing the boat-tamasha and other tamashas. Then he gave away large presents.

The Nawwab told his second sister thus: "This building is put up here because it is nearer to your house."

"When the ridge-piece was put, I tied to the beam a red piece of cloth with rice and other things in it. Of the dushala one I gave to the darugka, the other to the mestri".

CH, 3-BIRTH OF MUHAMMADI MIYAN

The sister told the Nawwāb in reply: "May Allah exalted be He, make you fortunate in this new building! May it be agreeable to you! May Allah grant you long life and happiness!"

As soon as the Nawwāb heard his sister utter the word Mubārak (Fortunate) he said, "I give the name Mubdrak-chawkl to this building, because you mentioned that word in your talk."

The royal repast was brought from his own palace and from the house of his sister. They all had their afternoon dinner. Then the sisters took leave of the Nawwāb while he went to Fataḥ-chawkl. The Nawwāb sent for Taḥu'l-Umarā Bahādur and enjoined on him as follows:

"Every morning after breakfast you should go to Mubārak-chawkl with your friends and teachers and remain there till the time of after-noon-prayer."

In obedience to the order of his father, Taḥu'l-Umarā Bahādur spent his time in Mubārak-chawkl from 9 o'clock in the morning till evening, and then returned. Sometimes Nawwāb ṣāhib also visited that place.

Nawwāb ṣāhib intended that Mubārak-chawkl should excel the diwan-khāna of Kalas-maḥall. But he had neither the time nor the opportunity to carry out his plan.

Section 4.

Muḥammadi Miḥān, the son of the author of this chronicle, was born at 7 o'clock in the morning of the 18th Rabi'u'l-awwal, 1212 A.H, in the house of Nawwāb Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam sahiba, his grand-mother. As the child was born in the 7th month, Nawwāb Maliku'n-nisa Begam sahiba was very much worried. She inquired of every one about the case of a child born in the 7th month, whether there would be any trouble for that child.

All her sisters tried in whatsoever manner to meet her doubts adequately, yet Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam did not find satisfaction in their explanations. Nawwāb ṣāhib also stayed at her house with his sisters, and spoke consolatory words to her.

When hakims visited the house, Nawwāb Tjmdatū'MJmarā Bahādūr called Mubārīz Jang Bahādūr and said to him: "Console Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam. She is subjected to severe strain of mental pain, because of the birth of the child in the seventh month."

The Bahādūr sent the following message to Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam: "Exalted Bēgam ṣāhiba! You should not give way to grief or doubt. Many babies are born in the seventh month; this slave also was born in the seventh month. You need not have any anxiety. A male child born in the eighth month does not live." Bēgam ṣāhiba was comforted a little by the assertions of Mubārīz Jang Bahādūr. Nawwāb ṣāhib sent for Mir Abū Ṭālib Khān Bahādūr and Amlnū'd-Dln Khān Bahādūr also to the house of his sister and said to them: "Mubārīz Jang Bahādūr has sent news to my sister predicting prosperous life for the new-born babe; you also convey to her whatever ideas you have on this."

The two Khāns communicated the following news to the Bēgam ṣāhiba: "The child born in the seventh month will be lucky and blessed with long life. Dargāh Qull Khān also was born in the seventh month. A momentary look at him will dispel all your fears. You may be at peace; there is no need for anxiety. This child will be lucky and prosperous."

Nawwāb Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam in accordance with the advice of experienced men, spread cotton on a plantain leaf and laid the baby on it and tended it carefully. Nawwāb Umdatū'l-Umara Bahādūr Wāfajāh II visited joyfully the lying-in-chamber, took out of his pocket a piece of shabnam cloth, a very thin and beautiful fabric, white in colour, containing the length of two rūmals used by Nawwāb Muḥammad All

CH. 3-BIRTH OF MUSAMMADI MIYAN

Wālājāh Bahādur and gave it to Muḥammadatu'n-nisā,¹ the daughter of the Bēgam ṣāḥiba for covering the child so that it may bring luck. Then he said: "Allāh, exalted be He, has blessed my dear sister with this grandchild. You should not have any anxiety. By the grace of Allāh, this beloved grandchild will develop into a man of honour and fame. Be happy. I have given him the rtirnāls worn by your noble ancestor; let the babe be covered with them. No other child was honoured by such a lucky gift, but your child has this unique honour. By the grace of Allāh, it is certain that the child will be lucky."

Nawwāb Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam rejoiced at this lucky gift and the encouraging speech of Nawwāb ṣāḥib; she thanked her elder brother and submitted: "He will be under the shadow of your exalted highness, and looked after affectionately. He will be a lucky man, with your favours."

Karīmu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba known as Ḥaẓrat Bēgam, Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba, XJmdu'tu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba, ladies of the family of Najibullāh Khān Bahādur, women belonging to different families from Gopamaw, Prasan BI ṣāḥiba and others stayed in the house of Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba from the date of confinement till the ceremony on the sixth day. Nawwāb ṣāḥib also took up his residence in the dlwan-khSna of Majdrfd-Dawla from the date of the birth of the child. Everyday he had his breakfast there along with his nephews, and then attended the darbar held in Mubarak-chawki known as Roshan-chawkl. After dissolving the darbar he returned to the house of his second sister and had his afternoon dinner. He kept up this practice till the ceremony on the sixth day. Nawwāb sahib got two thousand rupees from Muhammad Madura and sent that amount through his senior sister to Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam for her expenses. On the occasion of the ceremony on the sixth day, the Nawwāb wrote thus on a paper strewn with gold dust.

(1) The mother of the baby.

" 27th Rabl'u'l-awwal, 1212 A. H. ¹

"By the grace of Allāh! eminent is His glory! Ghulām Muḥammad Ali known as Muḥammad! Miyān, the grandchild of Nawwab Malikrfn-nisā Begam, my dear sister, be ennobled with the title Nasibu'd-Dawla Ghulam Mujtabd Khan Bahadur Asad Jang, and the mansab of two thousand, blam, naqqara and be distinguished by the favours of nīm-astin, rumal, *jawdhir-i-murasfa, and pearls. Allāh, the Glorious, and the Most High, will make these large gifts agreeable to the grandchild of my dear sister.

" Allāh is with us all.

" Ghulam Husayn Umdatul-Umara Walajah."

The Nawwāb also wrote another chitty relating to the Parwana for the grant of jagir of Balkudam², known as sahib-nagar yielding an annual income of one thousand and two hundred hun to Muḥammadatu'n-nisā Begam, the daughter of Maliku'n-nisa Begam. He signed the parwana, arranged to affix to it his own seal and stamps of the officers of kachahri in accordance with the rules and left it in the office of Colonel Barrett Bahādur. In accordance with the orders of the Nawwāb, Colonel Barrett sent the parwana through Mir Asadullah Khan Bahādur to Nawwab ṣahib in the house of Maliku'n-nisa Begam at the time of the ceremony on the sixth day. Nawwab bagh had kept with him the farman, and the parwdna. In the course of the ceremony, the Nawwab placed the farman for titles in the hands of the baby, and the parwana for jagir in the hands of his mother. The jagir was in possession of this humble person till the kingdom of the Carnatic was confiscated.

(1) Calculating the date mentioned in section 4, (p. 89) it ought to be 23. It is not clear which of the dates mentioned is wrong.

(2) This may probably be identified with Volcondah in the Trichinopoly District

CH. 4-NAWWAB GRANTS APPOINTMENTS

FOURTH CHAPTER.

Nawwab favours his servants with appointments; this humble author suffers from small-pox; the marriages of Shahsawdr Jang and Tajtid-Dln Khan, the younger son of Nizdmitd-Dm Ahmad Khan Bahādur, the feast to Nawwab Umdatul-Umara Bahadur Walajah II in the garden of Bahram Jang Bahādur, and Shah Mahmud sahib Sawi; the Nawwab's displeasure with Nūru'd-Dln Khān Bahadur Hashmat Jang.

After he ascended the throne Nawwāb ṣāhib often used to confer dignity upon everyone by granting appointments and manṣabs appropriate to the rank of each person. These appointments were made either at his own sweet will or through the recommendation of his senior sister, or at the suggestion of Colonel Barrett Bahādur, his adviser and diwdn.

For example: Ali Nawāz Khān, the hrz-bēgl for a long time, was dignified with the title Bahādur and appointed to be the qiladar of Muhammadpur. As he stood high in royal favour, he was able to procure for Mīrzā Ghazanfar All, his brother's elder son, the title Hadl All Khān, and the post of hrz-bēgl. He also secured for Ṣafdar All, his brother's younger son, the title Haydar Nawds Khan, and the post of na'ib to the qiladar of Muhammadpur. Then All Nawaz Khan started with his nephew to Muḥammadpūr.

Shahsawār Jang always remained in the presence of the Nawwab and was also in charge of the mewa-khana and the royal stable.

Mir Mahdi All Khān was honoured with the title Bahadur and appointed to be the darugha of buildings where elephants and camels were stabled.

Latif Beg was the darugha of horses used for charat and by troopers.

Mīrzā Haydar Ali was the darūgha of shikar-khana.

Quṭbu'd-Dīn Khān Bahādur Himmat Jang was appointed to be the atnln over the affairs of Nattharnagar, till the differences between Ḥuṣānu'l-Mulk Bahādur and Nafirrfi-Mulk Bahādur settled down, and sent to Nattharnagar as Nawwāb's representative to settle disputes between the two brothers.

Thus the Nawwāb honoured everyone with appointments suitable to his rank and capacity. All these details were given in the registers kept in the office of the dīwan, bakhshi and mir-samGn.

As I do not know other details, they are not recorded here.

Section I.

The writer of this chronicle had high fever on the 11st of Ramaḡān in the year 1212 A.H. and three days after that he had an attack of small-pox. In a week, the entire body from head to foot was full of eruptions of small-pox. All the yūnani and rniṣri ḥakims in the service of the sarkār were present throughout night and day. As usual the Nawwāb took up his residence in the house of his younger sister because of the illness of his nephew; the Nawwāb's aunt and his other sisters also stayed there. Nawwāb ṣāḥib made arrangements for the distribution of daily allowance to the ḥakīms and others according to the rank of each person. He ordered that fifteen yūnani and six rniṣri ḥakims should be on duty at the house of his sister. He gave instructions that dinner be served up twice to Malikrf-l-ḥukamā Ḥakīm Aḥmadullāh Khān Bahādur from the royal kitchen. Thus the Maliku'l-ḥukamā continued to visit my mothers house till this humble person recovered from his illness.

When Nawwāb ṣāḥib came to see me in my sick bed, he granted me a daily allowance of five hun-kuruk. One day he spoke to me kindly thus: "Mention what you want, I shall grant it." In obedience to this order, I expressed my desire that I should be favoured with the presents of nirn-Hstln, green riṭnal-shal with the dūshāla worn by the Nawwāb; a pocket watch of the Nawwāb, one fars̄hl ghariyāl, one Bengali suksawan and one chār at with horses inclusive of board-wages. On the following day the kind and compassionate Nawwāb favoured me with all things asked for. He complied with the wishes of my mother till I was quite recovered from my illness.

In brief, the small-pox developed day by day. One day Nawwab Umdatu'n-nisa Begam sahiba, my mother, despaired of my life owing to the severe attack of small-pox, and felt deep sorrow for me. When the two sisters saw her in that condition, they sent word to the Nawwāb. Immediately, the Nawwāb sent for English doctors, brought together yandnl and mişrl ḥakims, and visited the patient along with these men and Ḥakīm Aḥmadullah Khān Bahādur. When the condition of the patient was examined, the Nawwāb asked Ḥakīm Aḥmadullāh Khān. "When will he get better?" The ḥakim said in reply thus: "Six months ago I met Ṣāhibu'd-Dawla in the dlwan-khāna of Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur and told him in the presence of Ḥakīm Aḥmad Khān and Ḥakīm Abdu'r-Razzāq Khān as follows:

"It can be known from your face that you will have a severe attack of small-pox. It will be better for you to phleb atomize. If not, it will go hard with you and the small-pox will do you much harm. It may not be possible for the ḥakims to bring you through, and it will endanger your life. I also conveyed this news to his mother. But they did not pay heed to the advice of this humble slave. Allāh is great, His Glory is eminent, and His favours are universal. He is the absolute Ḥakim, His institution for the care of the sick is endowed with the ability to cure all. The patient may recover. But symptoms are not encouraging!"

After listening to this, Nawwāb ṣāhib lost hope of the patient's recovery and secretly informed his senior sister about this. Next day he called in two or three doctors through

Colonel Barrett Bahādur, and sent them to examine the patient. They returned immediately after entering the room, and submitted to the Nawwāb, "We have neither seen nor heard of such a case. It is certain that the patient cannot be recovered to life. Whenever your highness intends to visit his room, let a bottle of grape-vinegar be sprinkled first on the wall and then your highness may get into the room." Immediately Nawwāb ṣāhib sent for many bottles of grape-vinegar, sprinkled them as per directions of doctors and then took them inside the room. After examining the condition of the patient they came out and informed the Nawwāb of the extremely serious condition. After hearing their opinion Nawwāb sahib also lost all hopes of the patient's recovery. He stayed night and day in the house of his sister and exerted himself to save the sick person.

The patient gradually lost his power to resist the growing disease and became very weak. His condition became worse on the twentieth day. He lost all his senses; he could neither speak nor hear, and to all appearance he was a corpse. On seeing this condition, Nawwāb Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam was extremely distressed, lost all hopes of his recovery and resigned herself to the mercy of Allāh. She got leaves of the nīm tree, soaked them in hot water, took them out after a time and produced a paste by grinding them. She went with that paste to the patient's room, followed by two or three maid-servants, and plastered his body with it. About an hour later, she slowly washed the body with tepid water exposed to the sun's heat with nīm leaves soaked in it, and cleaned the pus and other matter. Then she closed the doors of the room and burnt aloes wood. By the grace of Allāh, his condition became better by the evening.

* During the illness of this humble servant, his wife was in the sixth month of pregnancy. She was very much worried and distressed on account of the precarious condition of her husband. She wept for him and resigned herself to the mercy of Allāh, Who is the refuge of the distressed, and supplicated to the Prophet, the chief of the world. After midnight she saw in a dream a venerable person wrapped up in green cloth. He said "O! the slave of Fāṭīma, if you hold the life of the elder more dear, then abandon the life of the younger one that is in your womb. When the child is born it will not live." She submitted in reply: "Of course the life of the elder is dearer than that of the younger. I wish my husband recovers his health."

"By the grace of Allāh", he condescended to say, "From to-day your husband will be restored to health. Let him be given the name Ghuldm Zdmīn; he will attain great benefits by means of that name."

The suppliant woke up very early in the morning, performed ablution, and said the obligatory early-morning-prayer and the thanksgiving prayer in two genuflexions for the joyful tidings she received in her dream. She spoke to a sayyida about her dream and made inquiries about her husband's health.

The bountiful Lord showed mercy on the patient from that day, and he recovered his health gradually. My mother-in-law was always in attendance night and day with the wives of chawkidders and administered to my comfort.

The beneficence and liberality of His prophet (peace be on him) was the cause for the recovery from this illness in about a week.

My noble mother and aunt offered thanks to the true Ḥakīm saying thus: "Praise be to Allāh! A thousand thanks to Him! A week before, there was absolutely no hope, for his life was despaired of by all the hakims. But the absolute Healer preserved him by His power."

The hakims also were surprised to learn the news of his recovery. They submitted thus to the Nawwāb: "It can only be said that this is God's grace; the cord of his life is strong. Else how can he recover from this serious illness? It is absolutely impossible." The Nawwab sahib said to them as follows: "Of course the cord of his life is strong. Besides, his mother and wife expressed much grief for him and supplicated to Allāh for his recovery. Finally, Allāh, glory be to Him and exalted be He, took notice of the drudgery and distress of his mother-in-law and showed mercy on the patient."

In brief: Two months later I had my bath after recovery from illness and my mother offered food and alms in the names of holy men. On that day Nawwab Umdatul-Uinarā Bahādur made a present of two thousand rupees to my mother for the expenses of fatihās and gifts to ḥakīms and chawkīddrs. Nawwāb Maliku'n-nisā Begam sahiba, my mother-in-law, also arranged a sumptuous feast in her house.

Three or four months passed, then a son was born to this author and he was given the name Abdu'l-Wall. Nawwab sahib granted one thousand rupees to meet the expenses on the occasion, but the child joined to divine mercy within a week.

Section 2.

Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba obtained the permission of Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur to fix up the marriage of Shahsawār Jang with the daughter of Muḥammad Hayat Qadir Ali Khan, the son of *Ismat Bibi. She invited the Bibī to her own house, settled up the alliance finally and communicated the news to Nawwāb ṣāḥib.

In accordance with the order of the Nawwāb, Sulṭānu'n-nisā Begam secured four thousand rupees from the treasury of the sarkar for the expenses of marriage on both the sides. She sent two thousand rupees to Qādir Ali Khān, and appointed Yasin Muḥammad Khān to make everything ready for the marriage. The house of 'Ismat Bibī was set apart for the bride's party; the house of Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam for the ladies of the bridegroom's party; the diwan-khāna of Sirāḡu'l-Mulk for the manja-khāna of the bridegroom. Sultānu'n-nisā Begam invited the mother of Shahsawār Jang and fixed her lodging.

CH, 4-MARRIAGE OF SHAHSAWAR JANG

She appointed Mīr Mahdi AH Khān and Shujaat AK Khān to provide the guests with necessary things. Thus Nawwāb Suljān-u'n-nisā Bēgam was in charge of all arrangements for the marriage.

She invited her two sisters and relatives to a feast and commenced the marriage celebration. All the ceremonies relating to the bride and bridegroom were punctiliously observed. Nawwāb's sisters came every day to the ihādi-khāna and attended to the ceremonies. Nawwāb ṣāhib conferred dignity on the shāddl mahfil by his presence with his ministers on two or three nights. Those who were invited to the party came there every night. On the barat night, Nawwāb ṣāhib invited the bridegroom to his palace, fastened the sihra, and sent him back on horseback. On the day of jalwa, Nawwāb ṣāhib visited the house of the bride with Sayfrī-Mulk Bahādur and his own nephews in response to the expressed wish of Nawwāb Sultān-u'n-nisā Bēgam sahiba and joined the majlis of aqd, and in the rastn of jalwa.

After the completion of the ceremonies, Nawwāb ṣāhib addressed Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, directing his attention to Qādir Aḡ Khān, smiled sweetly and said "Look at the generosity of Qādir Ali Khān! how noble he is! Out of regard for me he agreed to give his daughter in marriage to Shahsawār Jang."

Then he spoke to Qādir Aḡ Khān thus: "Khān sahib! I am very glad that you gave your daughter in marriage to Abdu'l-Karīm. Today I confer on you the title Bahādur and raise your allowance from fifty rupees to one hundred rupees; by the grace of Allāh the sum of one hundred rupees will be paid to you month after month." Qādir Aḡ Khān submitted a nadhr of five rupees, paid his obeisance and submitted as follows:

"May Allih, exalted be He, grant you long life! We wish you well. Our ancestors got sustenance from this family of Anwar. By all means you will be pleased to keep a sustained effort for our subsistence."

On the occasion of the rUnuma'l ceremony, Nawwab Şāhib presented to Qādir Ali Khān one thousand rupees on his own behalf and on behalf of his sisters, and then returned to his own residence.

'Işmat BibI led the bride and bridegroom to the house of Nawwāb Suljānu'n-nisā Bēgam sahība with all the paraphernalia. She made the bride prostrate before Nawwāb sahib, Suljānu' n-nisā Bēgam şāhibā and her other sisters and submitted: "She has been my grand-daughter till this day. Now she has become a slave in your house. I hope that the compassionate Nawwāb will always bestow his kindness on this slave." Nawwāb raised her from his feet, folded her affectionately in his arms and presented her with some jewels set with precious stones during the runumd'i ceremony. All the sisters paid their obeisance and presented *nadh*r to u'ie Nawwāb. In accordance with the orders of the Nawwāb, Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam sahība called the mother of Shahsawār Jang and consigned the bride to her care, addressing her with expressions of joy. On the fourth day after the completion of the ceremony of chawthi, they sent away the bride and the bridegroom along with the mother of Shahsawār Jang,

Section 3,

The marriage of Taju'd-Dīn Khan, the younger son of Nigamu'd-Dīn Ahmad Khan Bahadur, was fixed up with Raziya Bēgam, the daughter of Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur by his mistress attached to Mahtāb Bēgam. It was celebrated in the same splendid manner as the marriage of Shahsawār Jang. In accordance with the order of Nawwāb şāhib, Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam sahība conducted the marriage. She arranged with Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur that his dlwan-khāna be the nianja-kijfina and dlwan-khāna of the bridegroom, and with Shāh Bēgam, her own daughter, that her house be the house of the bride. She received seven thousand rupees from the sarkdr for the expenses of marriage on both the sides. She spent three thousand rupees on behalf of the bridegroom and four thousand rupees on behalf of the bride. The marriage was celebrated in a fitting manner. The number of ladies who were guests and other women were more on this occasion than was the case in the marriage of 'Shahsawār Jang Bahādur. At the time of jalwa, Nawwāb ṣāhib was present with Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, Amlru'd-Dawla Bahādur, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur and other relatives. After finishing the ceremony of chavithi, they sent the bride and the bridegroom with all the paraphernalia to a separate house adjoining the residence of Mahtāb Bēgam.

Section 4.

One day Nawwāb ṣāhib said to Bahrām Jang, "I learn that you have arranged your garden in a beautiful manner delighted in by many. I propose to visit your bāgh one day after my morning drive and wish to have my breakfast there/'

Bahrām Jang Bahādur paid his obeisance and submitted: "The bāgh is yours and I am your humble servant. Your highness¹ visit to the bāgh will confer upon this slave great honour and distinction and it will cause the tree of my desire to blossom out into a fruit tree."

Since that day Bahrām Jang Bahādur was forming plans for the feast, and fitting up the garden for the occasion. After finishing all arrangements he represented deferentially to the Nawwāb on the 3rd of Shawwāl in the year 1212 A. H. thus:

"If your highness could shed light on the small garden of this slave by your presence with princes and nephews after the morning drive, I will be the most favoured slave." Nawwāb sahib gave a smiling consent.

In response to the invitation, Nawwāb sahib shed radiance around the garden of Bahrām Jang by his presence with Tājū'l-Umaṣā Bahādur, his son, and nephews, after the morning drive on the 4th of Shawwāl. In obedience to the orders of the Nawwab, Mīr AsaduUāh Khān Bahādur, Taqī Ali Khān Bahādur, Shujaat AK Khān, Mīr Abū Ṭalib Khān, Muḥammad Amīnu'd-Dīn Khān, Dargah Qulī Khān, and Ali Nawwāz Fhīm were also present at that place. Then the Nawwāb gave orders to send quickly a trooper to invite Ḥazrat Mawlahā'Abdu'l-AH Ṣāhib, 'Ashūrī Lillāht, Amīru'd-Dawla Bahādur, and Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur. In response to the invitation these persons also arrived at the bagh in a short while. The Nawwāb sat together with these persons and had his breakfast. Afterwards he went round the bagh. The Nawwāb's warm approbation of the excellence of the garden made the rose-buds blossom.

Bahrām Jang Bahādur presented to the Nawwāb 121 rupees, some trays of *khilht, and a number of trays containing fruits by way of *nadh*r. Nawwāb ṣāhib gave orders to distribute the fruits to all those present there. After spending an hour, Nawwāb ṣāhib returned to his residence and bade farewell to his companions.

Section 5.

One day Nawwāb sahib spoke affably to Shāh Maḥmūd Ṣāhib Sāwī in the darbār as follows: "It is long time since this humble person partook of food in your house. I wish I have dinner one day."

The Shāh ṣāhib made everything ready for the feast in about two or three days and then submitted to the Nawwāb as follows: "If your highness could kindly come tomorrow afternoon at dinner time with princes, and the officers who were present at the bagh of Bahrām Jang, it will add lustre to the house. This will be an act of kindness to the poor and destitute/'

(1) Khilfet is presented by the superior to the inferior. The practice via versa is opposed to established custom.

CH. 4-SHAH MAHMUD ENTERTAINS THE NAWWAB

In response to the request of Shāh sāhib, the Nawwāb started the next day at the appointed time to go for dinner. Other guests also accompanied him. The Nawwāb said the fatiha for Shāh Dastglr sahib, and came to the dlwān-khāna. After partaking of the food served with different kinds of dishes, he praised the daintiness of food. Then he returned to his residence.

In response to the invitation of Shāh Maḥmūd sāhib in the month of Rajab, Nawwāb sāhib who hid very high regard for him, attended the fātiḥa for Shāh Dastgir sāhib in the early morning and gave leave to his companions to partake of the food.

Section 6.

Ḥaṣḥmat Jang Bahādur failed to pay the qisṭ money in the kachahl of Colonel Barrett Bahadur, the dīwan, as per the iqrar-ndtna. The ryots also complained to the Nawwab of his tyranny and acts contrary to the orders of the Nawwāb. Therefore the Nawwāb recalled him from his office and kept him as a prisoner in the garden of Māskilth. His personal effects and other things were removed in about twelve carts to the house of his elder sister. After some time Bahram Jang and Colonel Barrett Bahādur, endeavoured to recommend to the Nawwab that Ḥaṣḥmat Jang might be pardoned for his faults. The compassionate Nawwab agreed to their proposal. Ḥaṣḥmat Jang was released from the prison, and his personal effects that were in the custody of his sister were restored to him. As Dharmasam Mudali stood surety for him, he was appointed by the Nawwab to another taluk.

Section 7.

Ttibār Khān was earnestly desirous to get from the sarkar the title Jang, and presents of riiyнал-shal, and mm-astin through the mediation of Nawwab Sultanu'n-nisa Begam fāḥiba. One day she happened to find suitable occasion to broach the subject to the Nawwāb. She got the following reply: "Colonel Barrett is highly displeased with him, for I'tibār Khan does not pay the qist, as per agreement. If I'tibār Khān could pay twelve thousand rupees as nadh̄r to the sarkar, he may perhaps be distinguished by such honours as desired by him. Nawwab Sultānū'n-nisā Begam sahība informed I'tibār Khān about the views of the Nawwāb. The Bahādur who had already agreed to give 5,000 rupees as nadh̄r to Nawwāb Sulṭānū'n-nisā Begam ṣāḥiba, consented to pay also this additional nadh̄r.

One day Nawwāb ṣāḥib invited I'tibār Khān Bahādur to the green-chair room. The Nawwāb came out of the house of his senior sister after dinner in the afternoon, called I'tibār Khān to his presence, conferred on him the title Babar Jang, and presented him with nirn-āstin and white rūmāl-ṣhal from his own wardrobe. He received the nadh̄r through Colonel Barrett Bahādur in secrecy.

PART III.

1213-1214 A.H. [1798-1799 A.D.]

FIRST CHAPTER.

The Nawwab favours Iftikharu'd-Dazyła Bahadur with the post of fawjdar of the taluk of Nellore; the marriage of Tājtl-Umara Bahādūr; the Nazwāb receives a letter from Shāh Ghāzī Pādshāh of Delhi at Kalas-mahall.

Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādūr agreed to pay one thousand rupees as *nadh*r to Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba and submitted through her a petition to the Nawwāb asking humbly for the following: the post of fawjddr of the taluk of Nellore, the privilege to nawbat, to ride on an elephant with a canopy, to maintain a trooper and the right to confer titles on his employees. When the Nawwāb went through the list he smilingly said: "Colonel Barrett Bahādūr is invested with full authority to deal with affairs of the Government. This petition has to go to the Colonel. I shall also speak to him. Of course it may be favourably received by him. Other things rest with me to decide. If Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādūr consents to pay five thousand rupees as *nadh*r for all the favours asked for, surely he will be favoured with the appointment of fawjddr as well as the other privileges mentioned in the petition." In accordance with this generous view of the Nawwāb, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādūr made a separate petition to Colonel Barrett Bahādūr for the post of fawjddr of the taluk of Nellore. He importuned and solicited Colonel Barrett Bahādūr for the appointment and paid frequent visits to his office.

One day Colonel Barrett Bahādūr informed Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādūr thus: "By the grace of Allāh I have submitted to the Nawwāb your petition for the post of fawjdār. I shall get it sanctioned. Please keep ready the nadjfar." Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur replied, "I have reliance upon your kindness. After I am appointed to be the fazyjddr, I shall be favoured with khilto from the royal wardrobe and jaivahirāt. Thus I shall become eminent among the nobles and my equals."

Next day Colonel Barrett Bahādur invited Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur to Fataḥ-chawkl at the time of darbār and got him to execute a qarār-nāma in accordance with the regulations of the sarkdr. Then he introduced him to the Nawwāb and dignified him with the order of appointment to the post of fawjdār, with khiVat and other things asked for in the petition. Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur paid his obeisance to the Nawwāb and submitted one thousand rupees as nadhr.

Considering the recommendations of his sister and the opinion of Colonel Barrett Bahādur, Nawwāb ṣāhib invested him with privilege to nazvbat, to ride on an elephant with a canopy, to maintain a trooper and other rijhts sought for in the petition. The order granting these was signed by the Nawwāb. Iftikhārtd-Dawla Bahādur paid secretly to the Nawwab five thousand rupees through Chīnā Mūdālī. Then the Nawwab made an order that Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur should ride an elephant, followed by nawbat and troopers and go in that manner to the house of Nawwab Sultānu'n-nisā Begam ṣāhiba, submit nadhr to her and then return to his house.

In obedience to the order of Nawwāb ṣāhib, the Bahādur went to the house of Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhiba, sent her twenty-one rupees as nadhr-dastl and made over the payment of one thousand rupees, the promised amount of nadffitr to Sultān-ifn-nisā Bēgam, to Kishnasāml Mūdālī her banker, and took leave of her. Then he went to the house of Nawwāb Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhiba, submitted five rupees as nadhr and returned to his house. He arranged to give presents to every 'uhdaddr and others wha were present in the procession and bade them all farewell. He met his wife and told her in detail the favours he received from the Nawwāb. Then he came out of the zenana and entered his diwtin-khdna where he received congratulations from all.

CH. 1.-IFTIKHARU'D-DAWLA APPOINTED TO BE FAWJDAR

Next day he went to the bāc/h of Colonel Barrett Bahādur to express his gratitude for the favours of the Nawwāb and the kind endeavour of Colonel Barrett Bahādur. The Colonel addressed him with expressions of joy on his appointment and said "It is necessary for you that you should always remember the favours of the Nawwāb, and never fall short of enthusiastic loyalty to the Nawwāb. You should be hearty and persistent in all your duties and show no sign of exhaustion or discomposure. You should neither be a transgressor nor give room for complaints. You must start quickly to your taluk."

In accordance with the suggestions of Colonel Barrett Bahādur, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur made preparations for his journey in a week. He sent necessary things in advance and looked forward to the day when he would bid farewell to the Nawwāb. In the meanwhile the compiler of this chronicle had an attack of small-pox. A detailed account of it has already been narrated in Part II, chapter 4 of this book. After my recovery from illness, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur delayed further because some important affair prevented his journey. Then he took leave of the Nawwāb and went post-haste to his destination. He reached his taluk and assumed the reins of government. He ennobled his companions by conferring upon them the titles Khān, Bahādur, Jang, etc., as per his list endorsed by the Nawwāb. He was always industrious and attentive to his duties.

Section 2.

Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur Wāfājāh II was busy forming plans for the marriage of Taju'l Umara Bahadur, his beloved son. In accordance with the suggestion of his senior sister, he invited Sarfarāz Ali Khān Bahādur, son of Nawwāb Shukōhu'l-Mulk Naṣīru'd-Dawla Bahadur to her house one day, created a feeling in him that he will be elevated in rank and dignity and said to him thus:

"I have a desire that my beloved son should attain the status of the son of Raḥmatu'n-nisā Bēgam, your sister, through your mediation. If you could settle this affair I shall rejoice at it."

After listening to the Nawwāb, Sarfarāz All Khān took his leave, went to the house of his sister and informed her all about the interview with the Nawwāb. They were much worried. They did not know whether they should accept or decline the offer. It was difficult to settle it either way. They were fully susceptible to the inconvenience that would result from the acceptance of the offer and also to the displeasure of the ruler that would ensue on the refusal. Nawwāb ṣāhib again sent a message to Sarfaraz All Khān Bahadur through Bahrāin Jang Bahadur and Mir Asadullah Khan Bahadur. Sarfaraz Ali Khān Bahādur, having no alternative, wrung consent from his sister, wrote out an 'arḥ' seeking information on certain points and sent it to the Nawwāb. Nawwāb ṣāhib read through it and gave his assent to it. He immediately went to the house of his senior sister, invited his other sisters there and after consulting with them all, he made the match and fixed the 13th of Rajab as the first day of the marriage festivities. In accordance with the advice of his senior sister, the Nawwāb sent a large sum of money to Sarfarāz All Khan Bahādur through Salar Jang for the expenses of marriage on the side of the bride. He fixed upon the dlwan-khana of Ra'isu'l-Umara Bahādur for the chamber of the bridegroom; the dlivān-khana of Kalas-mahall for majlis in the night and the house of his senior sister for the women of the bridegroom's party. Then he gave orders for decorating these places. He said to his elder sister thus: "I invest you with authority to conduct this marriage. I expect that you would pay attention to all details big and small. From beginning to end this marriage must be conducted in a manner appropriate to my rank. You may get from the treasury whatever amount you may need and I have instructed Colonel Barrett Bahādur to pay you."

He ordered Sālār Jang Bahādur to look after the arrangements for lights and decorations of the big diwdn-khdna. He appointed Bahrām Jang Bahādur to supervise the arrangements for lights and procession every day when the bridgroom starts from mdnja-khdna to the big diwdn-khdna and from the diivdn-khana back to the manja-khdna. He gave instructions to Bahrām Jang Bahādur that at about 9 o'clock in the night the bridegroom should be carried in a mahddol with all paraphernalia, accompanied by lights and display of firework to the diivdn-khdna. After witnessing the nautch, and the distribution of betel leaves, flower and other things, the bridegroom must be led back to the mānja-khdna in the same manner of procession.

In obedience to the orders of the Nawwāb, the diwdn-khdna, palace and women's apartments were furnished, by the first of Rajab, with carpets, lights, masnad, shdmiydna and other necessary things. The walls of the mānja-khdna were painted in a variety of colours which presented the appearance of a fresh spring garden.

Nawwāb šāhib visited Fataḥ-chawkī on the second of Rajab at about 9 o'clock in the morning, asked for a sheet of paper strewn with gold dust and wrote upon it the invitation, embellished with flowers of rhetoric, to Lādli Bēgam šāhiba, his own aunt, the wife of Nawwāb Shukōhu'l-Mulk Bahādur, requesting her to be present at the marriage of Tāju'l-Umarā, his beloved son. He adorned it with his own signature and sent it through Bahrām Jang Bahādur with the following instructions:

"You should read this invitation for marriage with good intonation and expressively to those present in the darbar-i-ttm at Fataḥ-chawkl; then take four copies of this, send three copies to the three sisters and the fourth to Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, my brother. Then you should take the original with you to the house of my exalted aunt, and after paying obeisance, deliver it to her." Bahrām Jang Bahādur executed the orders of the Nawwāb.

When Bahrām Jang read the letter at the darbar, Mawlānā Ṣāḥib, Shāh Qudratullāh Ṣāḥib, Shāh Maḥmūd Ṣāḥib Sāwī, and other shaykhs, Amīru'd-Dawla Bahādur, and other nobles and officers of the Government were present. The character and tone of the letter, the picturesqueness and the ornate style of the Nawwāb, won high praise from the audience. In the meanwhile the Nawwāb himself added lustre to the darbār by his presence. All those present paid their obeisance to him. Some of the nobles submitted: "The invitation letter is written in a delighu'ul style; the letter is a gulistdn; the cheerful details contained in it bears the semblance of a bus-tan. It increases the delight. Every sentence is a gem, which will be a source of pleasure to those versed in all branches of learning; every word in it is a touchstone for testing the elocution of an orator. We hope that we will be permitted to take copies of it."

The following order was issued to Bahrām Jang Bahādur: "Whoever has the desire to take a copy of it, he may be permitted to do so." Bahrām Jang obeyed the orders of the Nawwāb. Then the Bahādur took the original with him to the house of the noble mother of Dilēr Jang Bahādur Nawwāb Naṣru'd-Dawla II, paid obeisance on behalf of the Nawwāb and sent in the invitation to her. She sent back the following reply:

"I wish the Nawwāb joy and luck. May Allāh make this affair a source of happiness to Nawwāb ṣāḥib, his friends and well-wishers."

CH. 1-MARRIAGE OF TAJU'L-UMARA BAHADUR

At the time of compiling this chronicle the author endeavoured to get a true copy of the original letter of invitation from the office of Diler Jang Shukohu'l-Mulk Nasiru'd-Dawla Bahādur II through Sharafu'l-Umarā Anwāru'd-Dawla Bahādur. The copy of the letter was delivered to the writer of this chronicle by Muḥabbat All Khān, son of Rahmān Alī Khān. It is included in this book.ⁱ

Before the marriage festivities were begun, khil'at and tōrah were distributed to the Governor and other sardars of his council, to Nawwāb's brothers, sisters, relatives, and women, ministers, nobles and all officers high and low. Letters were sent inviting every one to be present from the commencement of the marriage with the ceremony of chitr on the 14th of Rajab till the last day of the celebration. In response to the invitation, Ḥusāmu'l Mulk Bahādur from Muḥammadpūr, and Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur from Nellore reached Madras before the marriage festivities began. The rasm of mdnja was observed on the 13th of Rajab, 1213 A.H. The rasm of chitr was gone through in the presence of Nawwāb ṣāhib on the 14th of Rajab at the big dizvān-khāna of Kalas-maḥall where a large crowd assembled.

Every day people assembled in the mdnja-khāna, had breakfast and dinner in the company of the bridegroom and spent the whole day there from morning till 9 o'clock in the night, listening to music. In accordance with the order of Nawwāb ṣāhib, Bahrām Jang Bahādur went to the mānja-khāna at about 10 o'clock, adorned the bridegroom from head to foot with fresh khilht and ornaments set with precious stones. Then the bridegroom was decked with flowers at the palace of Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam. After this Bahrām Jang

(2) Another name for Arcot. During the time of Nawwāb Muḥammad Alī Wafājah, Arcot was named Muḥammadpūr and surnamed Daru'n-Nūr. See Dr. S. M. IL Nainar, Sources of the History of the Nawwabs of the Carnatic, Part I, p. 60.

Bahādur helped the bridegroom to get into the mahaddl and escorted him with all paraphernalia, innumerable lights and firework to the dlwdn-khāna of Kalas-mahall, where arrangements were made for dance and music. First, flowers and betel leaves were distributed. Then dance and music began. Musicians who would enliven the spirits, and heart-ravishing dancers were assigned different places in the dlwan-khana. The bridegroom witnessed the dance and then returned to the winja-khdna in the same manner of procession.

Now and then Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur added grace to the ntajlis by his presence. He took up his seat behind the masnad of the bridegroom and witnessed the dance and music. Then he would go away sometimes before the party broke up or sometimes along with the bridegroom. The ceremonialism that pertained to the bride and the bridegroom were observed with all paraphernalia to and from the big garden of Mylapore.

One day during the marriage, Nawwāb ṣāhib intended to invite the members of the Governor's council for dinner and thus create an opportunity to remove the displeasure of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam, his sister, who was annoyed because the sardārs of the Governor's Council were not invited to the marriage of Ra'īsu'l-Umarā Bahādur.* The Nawwāb instructed Colonel Barrett Bahādur to write a letter in English as if addressed by the Governor to the Nawwāb and to get it translated into Persian and bring both these during his stay at the palace of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam. The English letter read thus: "It came to my knowledge that the festivities in connection with the marriage of the Prince of high rank have been begun since a few days. We wish to associate ourselves in the function. We desire to be present in the majlis and express our joy on the event. The Governors of Bengal,¹ and Bombay and some sardars also look forward to participate in the happy function with others. If a day could be fixed and information is sent to us, we will come."

In accordance with the order of the Nawwāb, Colonel Barrett Bahādur got ready the English letter along with its Persian translation and submitted these to the Nawwāb when he was present at the house of his sister. The Nawwāb went into the zenana with the letters and told his sister thus: "The Governor of Madras and other sardars of the Council seek permission to come one day and be present in the majlis and offer congratulations on the marriage of my beloved son. They had addressed a letter to me on the subject. Now it is necessary to invite them to our house. It would be better if Colonel Barrett Bahādur could arrange for expenses on the occasion."

Next day everything was got ready for a liberal reception of the guests, and invitations were sent to all the sardars. The dīvān-khāna which was already furnished with adornments was further decorated with more lamps, couches and chairs. A plau'orm covered with embroidered makhmal was put up underneath the shdmīydna and a masnad adorned with jewels was placed on the plau'orm for the bridegroom. Salār Jang Bahādur, Bahrāin Jang Bahādur and Colonel Barrett Bahādur were entrusted with these arrangements.

On the appointed day, Nawwāb šāhib put on rich dress and ornaments set with precious stones. He wore a sword, a pesh-qabz, and other arms. He carried in his hand a dhōp used by Nawwāb Muḥammad Aḥ Wālājāh Bahādur, his father, and added lustre to the majlis by his presence. The bridegroom was conducted from the manja-khāna to the diwan-khāna and seated on the masnad. The Nawwāb took his seat on the couch and waited for the arrival of the sardars. At about 9 o'clock the Governors of Bengal, Madras and Bombay with about fifty sardars entered the majlis. They were conducted to their seats, either couch or chair, according to rank. Nawwāb ṣāḥib sat on a couch along with the Governors and kept himself busy in talking with them and seeing the dance. The sardars also enjoyed the tamasha of dance.

(1) Lord Mornington (later Marquis of Wellesley) was in Madras from the beginning of January to September, 1798, in connection with the war in Mysore. He was the Governor-General of Bengal.

All the officers were attentive to the duties entrusted to them.

In the course of the conversation, Nawwāb ṣāḥib mentioned the name of Taḥju'l-Umarā Bahādur, his son and heir apparent, and then addressed Lord Wellesley Mornington Bahādur, Governor-General of Bengal thus: "I believe implicitly in your kindness and friendliness; you are steadfast in your friendship and perfectly straight in all your dealings. I believe that the heir apparent will attain the honour of succeeding to the hereditary throne as per the custom."

The Governor ṣāḥib replied: "If such is the wish of your highness, God willing, it shall be in the same manner. I have to make a request. If certain taluks in the Carnatic could be transferred to the Company in lieu of the qisṭ payable to them according to the terms of agreement, it will give evidence of your kindness, friendship and love. If this request is fulfilled, the affairs with regard to the succession will be managed in accordance with the wishes of the powerful leader, the representative of the glorious family."

Nawwab sahib was annoyed at this improper reply and then said: "It is well known to these ṣāḥibs that my father had undergone many trials before he subjugated this kingdom. He exercised authority over this territory as long as he lived. It is incumbent on me to extend my dominion from day to day with the help of such sincere and sagacious friends liké you, so that it will justify the reputation of your friendship and my strenuous exertions.

CH. 1-NAWWAB'S CONVERSATION WITH THE GOVERNOR

"The acceptance of your request will show ignorance and lack of credibility. It is certain that this proposal is opposed to rule. It will be repugnant to the taste of intelligent and wise men as well as the rulers elsewhere."

The Governor ṣāhib became silent as the grave at this suitable reply. Nawwāb sahib continued: "This kind of talk is not suited to this happy and joyful majlis. It is better to enjoy the dance."

The Governor replied: "All this magnificence and splendour of living are due to your highness' majestic personality. May Allāh grant you long life and prosperity."

The assembly broke up in about an hour and all the sardars adjourned to the big room on the western side where the table was spread with every luxury. They rose from the table after about two hours, took flowers, itr, and pandan and then went to see the tamasha of firework at the back of the big dlwan-khana in the sahn of Sabz-bangla. They spent about an hour there and then took leave of the Nawwāb.

Nawwāb ṣāhib sent the bridegroom to the mānja-khana and himself retired to Fataḥ-chawkl. He was very much worried and made unhappy on account of the conversation he had with the Governor.

On the day of rasm-i-sharbat Nawwāb sahib granted to the mother of Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur an elephant and two thousand rupees on his own behalf and three thousand rupees on behalf of his sisters.

Everyday Nawwāb ṣāhib stayed from sunset till 9 o'clock in the house of his elder sister and he kept up this habit till the marriage festivities were over. He appointed Bahrām Jang Bahādur, and Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur to supervise the arrangements for the rasm-i-stinchaq. After the observance of the rastn-i-rattgbaṣṭ in the big dizudn-khtina, he set about to send the sanchaq in great splendour, accompanied by nobles, relatives and officers. The Nawwāb rode a mahdddl and shed light on the bride's house by his presence before the sanchaq party arrived there. On the day of bardt; at about 11 o'clock in the night, he brought together in Nusṛat-mahall Mawlānā Abdu'l-Alī Ṣāhib, Ṣhāh Maḥmūd Ṣāhib Sāwṭ, Allmullāh Ṣhāh Ṣāhib, Mubāriz Jang Balfādur and some venerable sayyids who were durād-khwḍns. Then he called the bridegroom and sehra was fastened to him by their auspicious hands. Then the Nawwāb helped the bridegroom to ride a horse and himself held the bridle in his hands and walked in procession as far as the big gate of his own bagh in the midst of innumerable lamps arranged in ladder-like manner, and display of firework. When he got into a suksdzvan at the big gate, Ḥuṣāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur caught hold of the bridle and escorted the bridegroom as far as the house of the bride. The feet of the exalted Bahādur swelled a little on account of the pain caused by walking. Nawwāb ṣāhib who was pleased with this news, gave Ḥuṣāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur an (indyat-ndma) appointing him as the permanent subadar of Muhammadpur. The Bahādur was ever grateful for that.

The sisters of the Nawwāb, the bridegroom's mother and other relatives gathered at the house of the bride on the occasion of the rasm-i-jalwa and it was gone through in the presence of all. They distributed cash and jewels on the day of rūnumd'i ceremony and escorted in the afternoon the bride and bridegroom with all paraphernalia to the house of the bridegroom and observed all the ceremony pertinent to the occasion. Two or three days later the ceremony of chavthl was performed; and then the bride and bridegroom were conducted to the house of the mother of Taḥjul-Umara Bahādur adjacent to Fataḥ-chawkl Nawwāb sahib was at all times pleased and delighted with his daughter-in-law. He was very affectionate towards her.

Section 2.

By the grace of Allāh, when a royal letter addressed to the Nawwāb by the Emperor of Delhi came with presents of imperial garments, the Nawwāb gave orders that the diwan-khdna of Kalas-maḥall should be decorated with carpets, lamps, masnad, and shāt̄niyāna, and such other decorations that it might have the same appearance as that of the imperial darbar. He also ordered that all the amirs and officers should be present on the appointed day at 11 o'clock in the morning in the big dhvān-khdna.

The orders of the Nawwāb were executed. All the officers, high and low, were present in the diwan-khdna on the appointed day and hour. In accordance with instructions of the Nawwāb, Bahrām Jang Bahādur placed the royal letter on a ndkl and started from Nusrat-maḥall with all paraphernalia and entered the big dliwān-khdna. At that time the Nawwāb, who arrayed himself up with the imperial garments presented by the Emperor, was seated in the darbar. As soon as he heard about the arrival of the exalted farmdn, a salute of twenty-one guns was fired as per orders of the Nawwāb. Then Nawwāb ṣāhib set out towards the ndkl, took out the letter, carried it on his head as far as the shdmīydn and handed it over to Mubāriz Jang Bahādur asking him to stand with the farmdn in his hands held over the masnad underneath the shdmīydn. Then the Nawwāb made his way to dddgdh, bowed deferentially at every step in accordance with conventional rules of making obeisance in the imperial court# came as far as the masnad, got the letter from Mubāriz Jang Bahādur and got upon the masnad with the letter placed reverently on his dastdr like a kalghi. Then he handed the letter over to Raja Khurb Chand Bahādur, the mir-munshi, and ordered him to get upon the chawki furnished with red makhmal and read it aloud. The mlr-munshi did as he was bidden. Immediately after the reading of the letter a salute of twenty-one guns was fired. The Nawwab received *nadh*r from those present. Flowers and betel leaves were distributed and then the Nawwab dissolved the darbar. There was a social gathering that night.

SECOND CHAPTER.

An excursion to mind-bazar in Bagh-i-khass; feast to the sisters in the diwan-khāna of Kalas-mahall and Mubarak-chawki; the receipt of a letter from Asaf Jah Nizatnīl-Mulk Bahadur; the marriage of Nasiru'd Dawla Muḥammad Ḥambulldh KMn Bahadur.

One day in accordance with the desire of his sisters, Nawwāb sahib gave orders to the kotwdl of Tirmalkarī (Triplicane) as follows:

"A market is to be held round about Sabz-bangla, Mubārak-chawki and the big dizvdn-khdna, where jewellers must offer for sale jewels set with precious stones; traders who deal in shdl, fruit-sellers, corn-chandlers, sweetmeat vendors, and others must put on the market, goods proper to each of them to the value of about fifty thousand rupees. I wish to buy in the market and provide recreation for the ladies. Therefore you should give instructions to every one of the traders to get ready in a period of three or four days all the commodities pertaining to their trade and to depute their respective wives to sell them. It should be also notified that no male member over six months of age be permitted to enter the area. This market with chazvk and bazar should come into existence the very moment I order for it."

The Nawwāb appointed Bahrām Jang Bahādur also to attend to this work.

CH. 2-EXCURSION TO MINA BAZAR

The kohval executed the orders of the Nawwāb within the prescribed time and sent information about this to the Nawwāb through Bahrām Jang Bahādur.

Next day Nawwāb ṣāhib made arrangements to screen the area from the house of his elder sister as far as the big diwdn-kbfina and from the houses of his two other sisters, to erect tents wherever necessary, and to post on all sides armed pahra. He invited all his three sisters, their family, other ladies and relatives to Mubārak-chawkl before sunrise. He got ten kharlṭa full of coins from a room in Mubārak-chawkl and distributed thus: elder sister, 2,000 rupees, the other two sisters 1,000 rupees each, their daughters and daughters-in-law 200 rupees each, ladies of rank belonging to their family 100 rupees each, some slave-girls from 20 rupees to 5 rupees each; the nephews 200 rupees each, ṭablṭrnl and such others 2 rupees each.

Then he told them thus: "Each of you should go to the shops and buy what is best in your view. Grains and other necessary things for the morning and evening meals also should be purchased from the shops. You may buy and eat whatever you like."

He gave thirty hfm to his sisters asking them to arrange for his meals.

In obedience to the order of the Nawwāb all went about to make purchases. They bought provisions for cooking food, besides jewels and clothes which they took a fancy to. Then they cooked their food. Thus they spent the time from morning till evening. Goods to the value of nearly 40,000 rupees were sold on that day. The Nawwāb had his afternoon dinner with his sisters in the big dlwan-khana. Then he gave the ladies leave to depart and removed the arrangements for the zenana.

HISTORY OF THE NAWWABS OF THE CARNATIC III.-PT. III

The Nawwāb asked Bahrain Jang Bahādur to find out from the kotei'al the quantity of goods that were sold out and the quantity left unsold in all the shops. Next morning Bahrām Jang Bahādur turned his attention to this; he appointed two or three mutasaddls of the sarkdr to go round with the kotzvd and take stock. After stock-taking it was ascertained that some jewels, shāls worth about seven thousand rupees, a small quantity of grains, sweetmeats and such other things alone were left unsold. When this report was sent to the Nawwāb he gave orders that jewels and shāls be bought for the sarkdr and the same be entrusted with Muḥammad Ma'ṣūm; that the price for other commodities also be paid by the sarkdr. Then he gave orders to remove the shops from the bagh by the evening. Bahrām Jang Bahādur executed the orders of the Nawwāb and the shops were removed.

Section I.

On the 14th of the month Nawwāb ṣāhib gave orders that arrangements should be made for the zenana from the dīwān-khāna of Kalas-maḥall and Mubārak-chawkl as far as the houses of his two sisters, for the purpose of seeing the full moon on the sea-shore. He gathered together at about 5 o'clock all the ladies in the big dīvdn-khdna and had his evening meal at Mubārak-chawkl with his sisters and their children. Then he got up the terrace of the Sabz-bangla with his sisters and waited for the rising of the full moon. He also invited the widows of Nawwāb Muḥammad Alī Wālājāh to that place and received them with great respect. Then he presented humbly Nawwāb Ra'isu'n-nisā Bēgam and Nawwāb Zēbu'n-nisā Bēgam, the mother of Husayn Nawāz Khān Bahādur, and Sarfarāz Khān Bahādur each with 500 rupees; he presented his three sisters with 500 rupees each, and also gave presents to their dependents according to rank. After fruits and other things were distributed, he bade them all farewell at about 10 o'clock and removed the arrangements for the zenana. Then Nawwāb ṣāhib returned to Fataḥ-chawkī.

Section 2.

Nawwāb Aṣaf Jāh Niẓāmu'i-Mulk Bahādur addressed an inayat-nama to Nawwab Umdatul-Umara Bahadur, congratulating him on the marriage of Tāj.u'l-Umarā Bahādur, his son, and sent it to Madras with presents of khilht and jawahir through Sa'īdu'd-Dawla Bahādur, the Aṣaf-jāhī vakīl. When the news of the arrival to Madras of the 'inayat-nama reached Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur, he gave orders to Bahrām Jang Bahadur that he should arrange to decorate the diwan-khāna of Kalas-maḥall and instruct all the officers to be present there at 11 o'clock on the day of the arrival of Saldu'd-Dawla Bahādur.

In accordance with the order of the Nawwāb, all the officers and servants were present in the darbar at the appointed time. The Aṣaf-jāhī vakīl was given a warm welcome and the inayat-nama and khilht were received with high respect. The mlr-munshi was asked to read the Inayat-nama and the Nawwab rejoiced to hear the contents. He presented the vakīl with a sarpēch set with precious stones, an expensive scarlet dushdla, pandan, gulab-pash and itr-dan, and bade him farewell.

Section 3.

One day in the month of Dhu'l-haij, 1213 A.H. Nawwab ṣāhib paid a visit to his second sister to inquire how she was after she took the laxative. The Nawwab's other sisters also went with him. In the course of the conversation, reference to the matrimonial alliance of Nasīru'd-Dawla Muhammad Habibullah Khan Bahadur, son of Iftikharu'd-Dawla Muhammad Nasir Khan Bahadur, was made. Nawwab Sultanu'n-nisa Begam said; "It will be very commendable to fix up the marriage of Nasīru'd-Dawla with the daughter, of Ghulam Jilani Khan. Umdatul-nisa Begam ṣāhiba, the mother of Nasīru'd-Dawla submitted, "If this is the decision of the elders, I will conform to it." Immediately Suljānu'n-nisā Bēgam šāhiba communicated the decision to Bachnūbl, who belonged to the nobility of Gōpamaw and was the mother-in-law of Ghulām Jilānī Khān, through Fāṭima Bēgam, the daughter of Najlbullāh Khān. Bachnūbl sent the following reply: "I have no concern with this affair. Ghulām Jilānī Khān, the father of the bride, has interest in this." Then Fāṭima Bēgam invited Ghulām Jilānī Khān to the house of his mother-in-law and communicated the news of the proposed matrimonial alliance.

The Khān was reduced to perplexity and replied: "I have not got a daughter deserving to be of this relationship. How can poor people like me aspire for a matrimonial alliance with amirs." When Fāṭima Bēgam heard these plain words, she returned to Nawwāb Suljānu'n-nisā Bēgam šāhiba, and communicated to her the reply she received from Bachnūbl and Ghulām Jilānī Khān.

At that time Nāṣiru'd-Dawla became impulsive, as young men are, and importuned Nawwāb šāhib, his uncle, thus: "My dear uncle, at any cost my marriage alliance should be fixed up with that family only. It should be settled this very day." The Nawwāb was moved to laughter and then he asked his sisters: "Why does Ghulam Jilānī object to this alliance?" The sisters submitted, "There seems to be no other reason except his own malignancy. They are vain people. Well, we will fix up the marriage with some other family."

Nawwāb šāhib said to them, "There should not be malignancy to the ruler. You may all remember how his father behaved badly towards Nawwāb Muhammad AH Wālājāh Bahādur, my father, when he proposed the marriages of my brothers, Husāmu'UMuik Bahādur and Naṣlrul-Mulk Bahādur, with the sisters of this Ghulām Jilānī Khān. But his father was treated with indignity and put in prison in the taluk of Neltorej then only he gave his consent to the proposed matrimonial alliance. Ghulām Jilānī is his son; perhaps he will also give his consent after undergoing the experiences of his father." . Then continued Nawwāb ṣāhib, "By any means this matter should be settled today. The rastn-i'aqd* must be performed and other ceremonies pertaining to marriage also should be gone through in the course of this Dhu'l-ḥajj month."

Then he called at once Bahrām Jang Bahādur and Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur and conveyed through them the following message to Ghulām Jilānī Khān. "Today is an auspicious day, I wish to settle the marriage of Nāsīru'd-Dawla Muḥammad Ḥabībullah Khān Bahādur, my nephew, with your eldest daughter. It is desirable that the ceremony of hqd is gone through today, and the marriage also may be celebrated this very month; for, in a week it will be the sacred month of Muḥarraro/'i Ghulām Jilānī Khān was very much agitated and troubled at this imperious message of the Nawwāb. Then he sent the following reply: "It may be presumptuous on the part of this humble slave if he ventures upon a reply instead of giving a tacit consent to the proposal. I submit that you are a lord of bounty, a beneficent master, a ra'is, and an absolute ruler. But this slave is one of those slaves and despicable men who hang about your generous door-steps. Alliance with slaves is no good alliance. Therefore this slave had not the courage to accept the proposal."

The two Bahādurs conveyed the reply of Ghulām Jilānī Khān to Nawwāb ṣāhib.

(I) Mukarram lit. "That which is forbidden" ; any tiling sacred. It is the first month in the Muslim calendar. The first ten days of this month are observed in commemoration of the martyrdom of Uusayn, the second son of Fatīma, the Prophet's daughter. The ceremonies of the Mukarram differ much in different places and countries.

The Nawwāb spoke furiously thus:

"GhuSm Jilānī Khān also wants to undergo the same unpleasant experience as his father did when the marriage of his daughters was proposed. His father was put in fetters and kept under restraint. God willing, today the engagement will be decided upon by any means, irrespective of Ghulām Jilānī Khān's wishes."

The Nawwāb called Muḥammad Ibrāhīm the risdladdr, gave him 5 hūn from his own pocket, and said: "Get ready at once a tray of khilht, four trays full of sugar candy, dates, betel, flowers and other necessary things for marriage and another tray of iron fetters."

The risāladdr immediately got ready the things and brought them before the Nawwāb, who sent them to the house of his second sister for the inspection of all his sisters.

Then he sent for the trays and kept them with himself. He told Bahrām Jang Bahādur and Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur thus: "Both of you go again to Ghulām Jilānī Khān, apprise him of my anger and frighten him into submission by saying as follows: "Your objection and obstinacy in this affair will be of no avail. Your father also put forth meaningless objections when Nawwāb Muḥammad Aḡi Wāfajāh Bahādur proposed the marriage of my brothers with your sisters. But his impudence was of little avail. It is necessary that he should recall the past to his mind and not deviate from the path of obedience. He must agree to the proposal and give satisfaction to me. The consequence of this will reveal itself in future."

The Bahadurs went again to the house of Ghulām Jilānī Khān and informed him about the views of the Nawwāb. As the Khān was already informed that fetters had been got ready, he had to get over his rebellious mood and he gave his consent to the proposal with certain conditions. They were:

CH. 2-MARRIAGE OF NAŞIRU'D-AWLĀ

(1) "Your highness may be pleased to shed lustre on the house of this poor man by your presence and then the matter can be fixed up in your presence.

(2) "TJmdu'tu'n-niṣā Begam sahiba, the mother of the bridegroom, should pay a visit to the house of this humble slave on the day of jalwa and raise me in the estimation of others.

(3) "This servant must be granted an allowance of five hundred rupees every month.

(4) "If the status of this humble servant be raised by conferring upon him the titles Bahādur and Jang, it will not be incongruous with your highness' favour."

The Bahādurs represented to the Nawwāb that Ghulām Jilānī Khān had acquiesced in the proposal on certain conditions. As soon as the Nawwāb heard that Ghulām Jilānī Khān had agreed to the marriage proposal, he asked the risaladar to take away the iron chains. He consented to fulfil the conditions of Ghulām Jilānī Fhān and also sent information of this fact to his sisters. Then out of regard for the feelings of his own nephew and the recommendations of Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur, the Nawwāb started that very moment with Bahrām Jang Bahādur and others, to visit Ghulām Jilānī Khān. He gave orders to Bahrām Jang Bahādur thus:

"Let Ghulām Jilānī Khān be honoured with the title Jkhtiyār Jang Bahādur, and be given an allowance of five hundred rupees every month."

In accordance with the order of the Nawwāb, Bahrām Jang Bahādur took steps to carry out the formalities of the law and the Khān was honoured with the title and a monthly allowance.

Ghulām Jilānī Khān submitted twenty-one rupees as *nadh*r to the Nawwāb and kissed his feet. The Nawwāb raised him from his feet, and said: "Be at ease; the bridegroom's mother will go over to your house on the day of jalwa and take the bride in her company."

Then the Nawwāb commanded the risaladār thus: "Bring here at once the four trays of sugar candy, flowers, and other things, from the house of my second sister with music of naivbat!" The risaladar returned in about an hour with all the things.

The Nawwāb told Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur as follows: "You are an'a/ṭim read under Mawlānā Abdu'l-Alī sahib. You can conduct the marriage ceremony of the daughter of Ghulām Jilānī Khān Ikhtiyār Jang Bahādur, with Muhammad Habibullah Khan Nasiru'd-Dawla Bahadur, the son of Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur. Bahrāin Jang will be the vakil for Muḥammad Habibullāh."

The marriage ceremony was thus gone through about an hour before sunset, and those present addressed one another with expressions of joy. Nawwab ṣahib put Ghulām Jilānī Khān Ikhtiyār Jang Bahādur at his ease, and also communicated his joy to Jilānī Khān's wife with the following news: "Three thousand rupees will be sent to you today through my senior sister for the expenses of marriage. It is necessary to begin marriage celebrations from tomorrow and finish them early; for, the holy Muḥarram is fast approaching."

Then the Nawwāb left that place and went to the house of his second sister and congratulated them all. He called aside Nasiru'd-Dawla and hugged him with affection. He sent for eight thousand rupees from the treasury and sent three thousand rupees to Ghulām Jilānī Khān, on behalf of his senior sister, through Muhammad Ibrahim the risaladar, with instructions that everything should be got ready for the marriage and the celebration finished in the month of Dhu'l-ḥajj. He gave five thousand rupees to his younger sister with directions that arrangements be made as quickly as possible and in such a manner that the rastn of chazvthl be finished by the afternoon of the 29th of Dhu'l-hajj, and the bride be sent to her father's house before the crescent moon was sighted.

In accordance with the orders of the Nawwāb, Ghulām Jllānl Khān made everything ready, and on the 22nd of Dhu'l-hajj commenced the marriage celebrations which were brought to an end as desired by the Nawwāb.

During these celebrations the Nawwāb shed lustre on the happy majlis twice by his presence. He visited the tnanja-khana of the bridegroom on the day of the rastn of sānchaq at the time of rang-bāzi, when a drop of coloured water fell on his nīm-astin of white shaL. Iftikhār'n'd-Dawla Bahādur offered to wipe that off with his own robe. Immediately Nawwāb ṣāhib doffed his nīn-dstin along with contents of the pockets: garīyāl, ganj, muhr-i-jebi, about one hundred hūm, and made a present of the nīm-aṣtln to Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur. The Bahādur paid his obeisance for these gifts, put on the nīm-astin and paid nadhrr to the Nawwāb. Next day the Nawwāb asked Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur to return the rnuhr-i-jebi and keep the rest of the articles found in the pockets of nīm-aṣtln. The Bahādur returned the muhr on which was inscribed the naqsh-i-buddah.

On the eve of shab-gasht Nāwwāb ṣāhib visited the house of his younger sister to inspect the arrangements in charge of Muḥammad Kifāyatullah, an old servant of the sarkOr, whose ancestors had served from the days of Nawwāb Anwaru'd-Dfn Khān Shahld. He was in the service of Amlru'd-Dawla Bahādur and was appointed to assist Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur in this marriage. Muḥammad Kifāyatullah managed everything with great economy and prudence, which pleased Nawwāb ṣāhib very much. He invited Muḥammad Kifāyatullah to the manja-khfina and conferred on him the title NajabaU All Khan Bahadur and took nadhrr from him.

When everything was made ready for shab-gasht, sehra was fastened to the bridegroom, in the presence of Nawwāb Ṣhib, by Amīru'd-Dawla Bahādur, Sālār Jang Bahādur and Bahrām Jang Bahādur. The Nawwāb took the bridegroom in his company, went to the zenana, where the rastn of sharbat-ndkhi was gone through. Then he came out with the bridegroom, made him sit on horse-back and sent him away. On the morning of jalwa, Nawwāb 'Umdatu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā, the mother of the bridegroom, rode in a mahādōl along with her sisters' daughters, and went to the house of Ghulām Jilāni Khān Ikhtiyār Jang Bahādur. At that time Nawwāb ṣāhib also shed light on this house by his presence and returned to his happy residence after the completion of the ceremony.

Umdatrfn-nisa Begam sahiba performed the rasm of riinumai and salāmi, and conducted the bride to her residence in a separate carriage in the company of Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam's daughter, her own niece and daughter-in-law. The two sisters of Umdatu'n-nisa Begam who were present at her house for the marriage, gave presents to the bride on the occasion of runuma'i. Nawwab Sultanu'n-nisa Begam sahiba presented the bride with a chand sisphul set with precious stones, and Nawwāb Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā with a bāzū-band adorned with jewels. The bride and bridegroom were sent to the bride's house on the 29th of Dhu'l-hajj where the ceremony of chazythl was gone through. Then Umdatu'n-nisā Bēgam led them back to her own house, and sent away the bride alone to her father's house in the afternoon on that day. She conducted the bride to her own house on the 15th of Muharram.

CH. 3—NAWWAB'S TRIP TO THE VINE-YARD

THIRD CHAPTER.

The trip to the vine-yard, and the seashore; the dispatch of an hrīṣa along with presents to the English King requesting him to recognise the claims of Tajtīl-Umard Bahadur, his son, to succeed to the throne after him; the sending away of the coffin of the late Nazwadb Muḥammad All Wadajah Bahadur to Natthamagar.

During the spring when the vine-yard yields good grapes, Nawwab Umdatul-Umara Bahadur arranged, in accordance with the desire of his sisters, to make everything ready for an excursion to the vine-arbour. One morning he made arrangements for purdah from the houses of his sisters as far as Nuṣrat-maḥall, Fataḥ-chawki, and the courtyard where a pulley was fixed to draw sweet water contiguous to the vine-arbour. Then tents were pitched in the secluded area. He invited all the sisters and their dependants. The Nawwāb enjoyed himself. The sisters were much enlivened; they plucked fruits which were collected and distributed along with other kinds of fruits after the royal repast. The excursion lasted till noon. Nawwāb ṣāḥib presented every one with cash ranging from a rupee to five ashrafi, gave them all leave to depart and himself returned to Fataḥ-chawki.

Section 1.

During the summer Nawwāb ṣāḥib gave Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur one thousand rupees to get ready a thatched house on the sea-shore opposite to the sea gate contiguous to the house of his younger sister, in order that it might be useful on occasions of excursions to the sea. He was instructed to form plans for a lofty building with straw-covered roof, floor paved with bricks, walls painted in rose-coloured lime, rooms devised in a manner pretty to look at, extensive courtyards, and compound enclosed with bamboo tatty fitted in an elegant style. He was also to arrange to furnish the house with carpets got from forraih-khdna and lights from tabhur-khana.

In obedience to the order, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur got ready such a building and communicated the news of its completion to the Nawwāb. Nawwāb sahib and his sisters with their dependants visited that house every day at 11 A.M.; he took his afternoon dinner there with them all and then distributed fruits and presents. He stayed there till 8 o'clock in the night and then returned. This practice was continued for twenty days.

In the course of his trips to this new building every day, he was planning to send a letter to the English King in regard to the claims of Tāju'l-Umarā, his son, to succeed to the throne after him and was collecting a number of presents for the English King. He always consulted with Colonel Barrett Bahādur in this affair whether it might be sent to the English King (George III) through the exalted Prince (later on, George IV) the agent (Regent) to his majesty the English King.

When the Nawwāb had finished his collection of presents, he brought these to Fataḥ-chawkī. One evening he sat in the thatched house and invited Colonel Barrett Bahādur, Bahrām Jang Bahādur and a few other ministers to his presence. He sent for the boxes that contained all the articles collected at Fataḥ-chawkī; a pair of horses of good breed from the royal stable with trappings, and saddles fitted with makmal and embroidery. He got ready a golden nolka for the letters. Among the gifts there were some set with precious stones and unbored pearls. These were packed in small boxes in the presence of a vakil, one of the English sardārs. The trappings were packed in big boxes. All these were locked, wrapped in wax-cloth and sealed. The Nawwāb went with the boxes containing precious gifts and letters as far as the boat, entrusted them to the vakil, while other boxes of gifts and horses were shipped in his presence. At the time of getting into the suksawan,

CH. 3-DISPATCH OF NAWWAB WALAJAH'S COFFIN

Nawwab sahib spoke thus to the officers: "This is a matter connected with long distance. It is not known whether the treacherous time will practise deceit. Allāh is the Preserver and Protector of all." Then he took leave of the officers and others and returned to his palace.

Section 2.

The Nawwāb made everything ready for sending the coffin of Nawwāb Muḥammad Alī Wālājāh Bahādur, his noble father, to Nattharnagar. On the morning of Thursday, the 3rd of Rabl'uth-thām, 1213 A. H., the Nawwāb went to the house of Shāh Maḥmūd sahib Sāwī with the officers and got ready all the retinue. He gave orders to Sālār Jang Bahādur, Bahrān Jang Bahādur, and Ḥājī Ḥāfig Maghribī, ṣāhib, thus: "Get the respectable coffin out of the tomb, bring it to the courtyard of the mosque and then send word to me. I shall be present when it is sent off to Nattharnagar."

In obedience to the order of the Nawwāb, Bahrām Jang Bahādur and others brought the coffin out of the tomb, filled the pit with wheat and dried flowers that were there and levelled it. They opened the coffin, perfumed it with itr and other rich perfume, and rose water and closed it. They brought it to the courtyard of the mosque, and communicated the news to the Nawwab.

The Nawwāb went to the mosque. As soon as he saw the coffin, sorrowful tears trickled down his cheeks. He adorned the coffin with a cloth woven with golden threads, covered it with flowers, and placed it under a canopy supported on silver pillars. Then he sent the coffin in great state to the mosque in Sayyidabad, (Saidapet) followed by all nobles, shaykks hafizs, durud-khwans of the sarkar as well as those in the employ of the daughters and widows of the late Nawwāb, and a large crowd. He also gave instructions thus:

"Keep the coffin in the mosque of Sayyidabad for two days till other arrangement* are made ready for the journey and the manzils are fixed. I shall go over there day after tomorrow about the time of afternoon-prayer and then send it."

Then the Nawwāb left that place, and visited the newly-built house of Mubārīz Jang Bahādur facing the sea and contiguous to the house of Shah Mahmud sahib Sawi. About 9 o'clock in the night the Nawwāb gave orders to lay the table and sent for trays of food brought from the houses of Shah Mahmūd ṣāhib Sawi, and Mubārīz Jang Bahādur. He had his dinner in the company of his nephews and some trustworthy companions and returned to Fatah-chawkl. He wrote from this place a huktn-dnta, with details in a list, in regard to the dispatch of the coffin, in the name of Bahrām Jang Bahādur. The list contained names of halting places en route, instructions to establish rest-houses at every stage for the comfort of travellers, and orders for the grant of four kani of land as inam to every one of the rest-houses in these halting places. Next day he called Bahram Jang Bahadur, gave him the list and a few thousands of rupees for expenses on the way and instructed him thus:

"Get two or three tents from the farrash-khana, put the load on elephants and send them to Sayyidābād. The tents will be useful in the stages. Go to the mosque in Sayyidābād early in the morning and make everything ready for the journey. I shall go over there in the afternoon after dinner, and dispatch the coffin."

Bahrām Jang Bahādur carried out the instructions of the Nawwāb and reached Sayyidābād. Nawwāb ṣāhib arrived at that place at the time of afternoon-prayer and dispatched the coffin to its destination. Bahrām Jang Bahādur was directed by the Nawwāb to pass along every manzil as per programme and to summon the troops of the English and the sarkar when the coffin reached the limits of Nattharnagar and then enter the fort gate followed by a large army. The Bahādur took leave of the Nawwāb and started on his journey.

During that period Nasiru'l-Mulk Bahadur was at Nattharnagar. As the news of the departure of Bahrām Jang Bahadur with the coffin was already communicated to Nasjīru'l-Mullc Bahādur, he went out of the fort with all shaykhs, 'ulam, and fuzald on the day of the arrival of the coffin and followed it as far as the entrance to the shrine of Hazrat Nattharwall sahiband made arrangements for the burial to the right of the holy shrine, with the assistance of shaykhs and ndatnd. He made elaborate arrangements for fātiḥa on the 3rd, 10th, 20th, and 40th days after burial, and for the distribution of charities. Lighting arrangements were excellent on these occasions.

After the fātiḥa on the 40th day, Bahrām Jang Bahādur made all arrangements at the place as per instructions of the Nawwāb and returned to Madras. He appeared before the NawwSb, and gave a continuous account of his journey to Nattharwall and the burial of the coffin of Nawwab Muḥammad All Walajāh Bahādur. His dexterity and good will pleased the Nawwab who presented him with a white shal and a rumal from his own wardrobe.

FOURTH CHAPTER.

General Harris Bahadur pays a visit to the Nawwab; Mir Alam Bahādur and his son seek an interview with the Nawwāb through General Harris Bahādur.

After the subjugation of the fort of Seringapatan and the death of Tippū Sulṭān Shahīd, the successor to the Bahādur well-known as Haydar Naik, General Harris Bahādur¹ reached Madras and had an interview with Nawwab Umdatul-Umara

(1) Lieut. General George Harris succeeded Clarke in March, 1797, as Commander-in-chief of Madras. On the 21st February, 1798, he became provisional Governor and held that office until the arrival of Lord Clive in August, 1798. General Harris commanded the Madras army at Vellore in February 1799, against Tippu Sulṭān. The English army were joined by the Nizam's army commanded by Mir 'Alam. On the 5th April, the allied forces appeared before Seringapatan, drove in the enemy's outposts, and began the siege. A month later, on the 4th May, the assault was delivered by General David Baird, and the fortified city was carried by storm with great slaughter of the defenders. Tippū Sulṭān shot through the head, was found amid a heap of slain. The standards of Mysore were brought to Fort St. George Bahādur after obtaining permission to meet him at 11 A.M., on the 14th of ṣafar 1214 A.H. The interview took place in the diwan-khana of Kalas-mahall. General Harris jubilantly gave him a continuous account of the battle, the subjugation of the fort of Seringapatan, his own exertions, and attempts to master the enemy, and the endeavours of other frang sardars. He also revealed the feelings of Mir 3.1am Bahādur to gain distinction by meeting the Nawwāb.

The Nawwāb observed: "Success and victory for friends* are equivalent to our success and victory which provide an occasion for our rejoicing. May Allāh, exalted be He, make this victory agreeable to you and all our friends." Then he took out ten hun-kurk from his pocket, and gave it to Bahrām Jang Bahādur directing him to purchase immediately sugar for that amount and distribute it. With regard to the meeting of Mir 'Alam Bahādur, Nawwāb ṣahib said: "I shall meet Mfr alam after five or six days. I learn that he is affected with leprosy. I wish to meet him by the side of staircase to avoid giving him trouble. I shall send word to him two days before the date of meeting."

The Nawwāb presented General Harris with pāndān, itedan, gulab-Pash and bade him farewell. Then the Nawwab spoke as follows to Bahrām Jang Bahādur with a tear-stained face: "It is a pity, a thousand pities, that a powerful Muslim ruler, a source of strength and power to the followers of the religion of Muḥammad, (peace be on him) has departed from this impermanent world to the everlasting abode. 'Verily we are for Allāh and to Allāh we return.' The ten hun-kurk I gave you in the presence of General Harris for the purpose of purchasing and distributing sugar, was to show ostensibly my joy. But my real intention was that the arhount should be by Lieut* Harris of the 74th Regiment, son of the Commander-in-Chief, and presented with great ceremony to the Governor-General.

distributed to faqirs and misklins in the name of that Sulṭān Shahd for the benefit of his soul¹."

Section 1.

A few days after General Harris* interview with the Nawwāb, Mīr 'Ālam² was asked to meet him. The dlwān-khdna of Kalāṣ-maḥall was furnished with carpets, lamps, and shcimi-ydna. All the nobles and officers were instructed to put on white and clean robes and be present at the dxwān-khīma on Saturday, the 23rd of Ṣafar, 1214 A.H. The retinue also was ordered to be feady at the daru'l-amara. At about 7 o'clock on the appointed day, the Nawwāb arrayed himself in rich robes, came out with Taḥu'l-Umarā Bahādur and Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur and other nephews, and all nobles, and spoke thus to Mubāriz Jang Bahādur and Bahrām Jang Bahādur:

"Owing to the kindness and favour of A'zarrml-Urnarā Mushfru'l-Mulk Baḥādur and the endeavour, and encouragement of Ḥashmat Jang Bahādur, the Resident³ at Ḥaydarābād, Mīr

(1) Su appendix C for the chronogram which gives the date of Tippū Sultān's death.

(2) Mir 'Alam (Sayyid Abu'l-Qasim) represented the Nizam's government at Calcutta in 1786 A.D. When Aristojāh A'zamu'l-Umarā, the minister of Nizām All Khān was taken prisoner by the Mahrattas, Mir 'Alam acted as minister. He supported the cause of the East India Company against Tippū Sultān in Mysore between the years 1791 and 1799, and was present when Seringapatan was taken by the English. After a temporary eclipse Mir 'Alam succeeded Aristojāh as minister in 1804 and held that office till his death in 1808. He constructed the well-known lake, named after him, at Haydarābād,

(3) Colonel James Achilles Kirkpatrick was the British Resident during the reign of Nawwāb Nizām All gaān Bahādur (1761-1803). During the eight years (1797-1805) Colonel Kirkpatrick occupied the position of the Resident in Haydarābād, he was very friendly with the Nijām of Haydarābād and his Prime Minister named Aristojāh A'zamu'l-Umarā. Major Kirkpatrick lived in oriental magnificence. The Nizām bestowed on him the title Ḥashmat Jang (magnificent in battle). He married a Muslim girl known as Khayru'n-nisa Begam (excellent among women). His marriage with Khayru'n-nisa Begam forms an interesting episode in the story of Anglo-Indian romance. Of this union were born two children, a son and a daughter. It was arranged with the mother's consent that the two children aged four and three years should go to England to be brought up there. They found an English home in the house of their paternal grandfather and afterwards with one of their cousins. They were, however, destined never to see their parents again, for a little later

Alam attained high rank and supreme mansab in the darbar of Aṣaf Jāh. He was appointed fawjdār to render assistance to the English troops at Seringapatan. He became victorious and is now on his way back to Ḥaydarābād. He expressed his desire through the Governor to meet me. He may have in view the customs prevalent in the AṣafJdhl darbar. Perhaps he may not know the customary dignity pertaining to this darbar. By the grace of Allāh, exalted be He, glory be to Him, and by means of the favours of Shāh Slam Bahādur Pādshāh Ghāzī, the Emperor at Delhi, this government also ranks among other governments. This is a powerful state, for we are distinguished from others by the manṣab, i.e., wizarat-i-ṣubadār of the ṣūba of the Carnatic. Therefore when Ḥamlu'd-Dawla and Hādiu'd-Dawla reached Madras from Ḥaydarābād, during the reign of Muḥammad All Wāfajāh Bahādur, he kept in view his own rank and rendered to them civilities at the meeting according to their rank. There is no indication in what way Mir SLlam intends to meet me. But he is afflicted with leprosy and this offers an excuse for meeting him by the side of the staircase."

Mubāriz Jang Bahādur and others submitted: "Your highness* idea is exceedingly nice."

The Nawwāb gave orders to put a couch of green makhmal for himself and three chairs opposite to the couch in pish-dālān verging on the edge of the carpet for his beloved son and others, ten chairs and another one for Colonel Barrett Bahādur behind the couch.

Major Kirkpatrick died in Calcutta (1805) and his Muslim widow returned and stayed at Haydarabad. The name Sahib Begam Bibi Sahiba (our little princess and English lady), which her Indian mother had given her daughter, was changed into Catherine Aurora (better known as Kitty). She died at the age of 87 and left many children, while her brother died young leaving a widow with three children.

Kitty was the most fascinating of women and she has been enshrined in English literature. "She is the Kitty Kirkpatrick of Carlyle's 'Reminiscences' and the 'Blumine' of his Sartor Resartus." The famous Scott describes her in one place as "a half Begam: a semi-Oriental Englishwoman."

They arranged seats as per instructions and awaited the arrival of Mir 5.lam Bahādur. At about 9 o'clock the trooper brought the news that the conveyance of Mīr Siam had entered Bāgh-i-khāss. Meanwhile, the conveyance arrived and it was followed by his retinue composed of retainers, bdnddrs, chdbddrs, armed jawans, najib-troops, numbering about one hundred men. The retinue were left outside the gate of the diwan-khana of Kalas-mahall. Only two suksawans occupied by Mir Alam and Mīn Dawrān, his son, reached in front of the dalan of the big diwan-khana followed by his select companions, servants, chobdars and bandars. At the request of the Nawwāb, the suksdivan of Mīr Alam was brought as far as the edge of the staircase near his own couch. When Mīr Siam got down from his suksdivan, the Nawwāb rose, caught hold of the hand of the Bahādur, and conducted him up the stairs. Mir Alam observed all the formalities at the time of meeting the Nawwāb; who also embraced him after the oriental fashion, and requested him to take his seat. Then Mīr Siam presented Mīr Dawrān, his son, to the Nawwāb. Mir Dawrān submitted a nadhr of five muhr and thus took a pride in meeting the Nawwab. Mir Alam sat on a couch near the Nawwab, while Mir Dawran was seated on a chair. Then Mir Alam introduced some of his own companions to the Nawwāb, intimating to him the mansabs held by each one of them. They all submitted nadhr to the Nawwab. Among the companions of Mir Alam there was one who had the title Bahrām Jang. After the formal presentation of this companion of Mir Alam, Nawwāb shāhib was silent for a while and then called Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur by his title Bahrām Jang Bahddur on the pretext of giving orders, but in reality to indicate that title to Mir Alam. Immediately Bahrām Jang, the companion of Mīr Alam, thought that he was wanted by Nawwāb shāhib and got up from his seat. The Nawwab remarked: "I called my own Bahram Jang Bahadur," Mir Alam smiled at this and also Nawwab sahib, who observed thus to Mir Alam Bahadur. "This Qadir Nawāz Khān, in my government also, is virtuous, intelligent, learned, affable and good-natured, and the title Bahram Jang is conferred upon him." Bahram Jang paid his obeisance to the Nawwāb. Mīr Alam submitted: "I have heard of the praiseworthy qualities and good disposition of this person, for everyone is loud in his praises."

Then Nawwāb sahib inquired about the war, the subjugation of the fort of Seringapatan, and other facts about IJaydariibād and spent about an hour in conversation on these topics. At the time of leave-taking the Nawwāb presented Mir Siam with some trays: one set contained duskala and khilat, and another jawahirdt. There were also other gifts like garīyal, and ganj set with jewels, mandila, and a suksdwan made in England with the decorative design of a lion's mouth.

Three suksdwans were got from England during the time of Nawwāb Muḥammad Ali Wāfājah Bahādur. Of these, one was presented by Nawwab Umdatul-Umara Bahadur to Taju'l-Umara Bahadur and another to Ra'isu'l-Umara Bahadur. The Nawwab got back the suksawan of Taju'l-Umara Bahadur and presented it to Mir Siam Bahādur.

Then the Nawwāb conferred dignity on Mir Alam Bahadur by offering to him 'itrdan, pandan, gulab and flowers personally and bade him farewell. The Nawwāb sent to Mir Alam Bahādur in the afternoon fifty trays containing various dishes of food.

A week later Nawwāb ṣāhib sent information of his return visit to Mir Alam Bahādur. The Nawwāb started on the appointed day with Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur, Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur, and other nephews and some of the nobles. The Nawwāb was dressed out thus: a jama of white shal, a rumal tied to the dastar, a Guzarati qamar-band and a dagger with an embroidered handle stuck in it, a mandila round his waist, an aliband of pea-green colour around the neck, and a sword, the hilt of which was set with precious stones. Tiju'l-Umarā Bahādur and others who accompanied the Nawwāb put on rich dress as per instructions and joined the Nawwāb. He sent in advance armed jaw tins, servants and Abyssinians. He drove a charat drawn by twelve horses, with Taju'l-Umarā Bahādur, and Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur, while his other nephews and some of the nobles drove in two chārais. They were followed by four female camels, fifty troopers, and a number of pipers and standard-bearers. They all went to the camp of Mīr 'Alam Bahādur, As soon as the conveyance of the Nawwāb reached the camping ground, Mīr 'Alam Bahādur descended from the upper storey and received the Nawwāb at the foot of the staircase. He took hold of the Nawwāb's hand, and conducted him to the upper storey furnished with carpets and chairs. The Nawwāb stayed there for about an hour. At the time of leave-taking Mir Alam Bahadur offered to the Nawwab 'itr, pan and gulab personally, while Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur and other nephews of the Nawwāb were treated to pan, 'itr and gulab by Mīr Dawran in person, and the nobles by Bahrām Jang, the companion of Mīr Alam Bahādur. Then Mir Alam Bahādur accompanied the Nawwāb and his party when they descended from the upper storey and bade them farewell.

When Mīr Alam Bahādur started back to Ḥaydarābād after some days, the Nawwāb sent him some trays containing food, and provisions for the journey.

PART IV.

FIRST CHATTER.

Miscellaneous incidents in the reign of the Nawwab; trips to the Pulimadavaram tank, Mahbiib-bagh belonging to Iftikharu'd-Dawla Bahadur, and Frangikonda and its hill; the illness of Nawwab Umdatul-Umara Bahadur; the arrival of Nawwab Husamul-Mulk Bahadur from Nattharnagar to inquire after him.

Every year on the 6th of the holy Muharram, Nawwāb ṣāhib changed his usual dress and put on green garments. He tied langar-i-mannat round his loins in the house of Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā. Then in the afternoon he started from there with Bahrām Jang Bahādur, Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur and some other servants followed by his own retinue and a crowd of faqlrs to the house opposite to the big gate in Bāgh-i-kalān where the banner of 'Alī was installed with great ceremony on the night of the first of Muharram and kept on flying till the tenth of that month. During the night the Nawwāb made arrangements for the passage of the zenana to the place where the banner of Alī was installed and went with Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam sahība and some of his own ladies. He kept the langar there and paid nadhṛ. On the following days Nawwāb ṣāhib went there sometimes with ladies and sometimes with officers. He paid nadhṛ and said fatiha.

Section 1.

Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā, after obtaining permission from the Nawwāb, arranged to decorate the diwan-khdna of Ra'isu'l-Umara Bahadur and kept it ready for the birthday celebrations of the Nawwab from the 20th to the 24th of the holy Muḥarram. She distributed trays containing various dishes of food and special khil'at to nearest relatives and officers like Bahrām Jang Bahādur through her servants. At 11 A.M. on the 25th of Muḥarram the rasm of rang was gone through; in the afternoon she weighed the Nawwāb in the zenana. Then in the evening she got up a festive majlis to celebrate the event.

On the occasion of the birthday celebrations of Nawwāb Muḥammad Alī Walaḥ Bahādur, it was the custom to fire a salute of guns in proportion to the age of the Nawwāb. But Nawwāb Imdatu'l-Umaḥ Bahādur dropped this custom because his senior sister prevented him from observing it, as unpropitious, a salute of guns in proportion to the number of years completed being usually fired for the dead. Instead of that he ordered that a salute of 21 guns be fired in the morning before the ceremony and another salute of 21 guns in the evening after the completion of the ceremony.

On his birthday, at 8 o'clock in the morning, the Nawwāb ordered for one hundred trays containing various dishes of food to be brought to Nuṣrat-maḥali, invited his nephews, nobles and nearest relatives and entertained them in his presence. After the ceremony was gone through, he took nadhḥr in the zenana from his brothers and sisters; sometimes he received nadhḥr from a few at Fataḥ-chawkī, and sometimes in the green-chair room. He permitted some to submit the nadhḥr to Tajrfl-Umara Bahādur and some to pay it at the house of his senior sister.

Section 2.

Bahrām Jang Bahādur dispatched, as usual, on the 7th of Safar, tents, carpets and such other things, culinary articles, men connected with each work and guards to the dargah of PirPahlawan sahib. He went therein person on the 8th of that month, arranged to pitch tents on the sea-coast, decorate the place; and get ready provisions, and then communicated the news to Nawwab sahib. The Nawwab started to that place with his sons, nephews and trustworthy servants at 6 o'clock in the morning of the 10th. Bahrim Jang Bahādur made everything ready for the breakfast in the big tent and awaited the arrival of the royal party. The Nawwāb arrived at 7 o'clock and had breakfast with Tāju'l-Umaṛa Bahādur and others. After this, other men partook of the food in the big tent. The Nawwāb went to the dargāh at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, offered fatiḥa, paid five hundred rupees as nadhṛ and went back to his tent. He had his afternoon meal there and then returned to his palace.

Section 3.

Similarly Bahṛām Jang Bahādur sent, on the 7th of Jumadiu'l-awwal, tents, all culinary articles, and other things necessary for the 'urs of Budūshahid ṣāhib (peace* be on him) in the bagh of Frangikonda. Next day he went there in person, arranged to pitch tents and decorate them and awaited the arrival of Nawwāb ṣāhib. On the 9th, the English guards in that place were appointed to guard the tents. Nawwāb ṣāhib arrived there in his charat accompanied by the same men who were with him in his trip to the dargah of Pir Pahlawān sahib. The party halted at the bagh of the commander in that place.

As soon as Nawwāb ṣāhib entered the limits of Frangikonda, a salute of twenty-one guns was fired. Nawwāb sahib met the commander and had tea with him. Then he reached his own tent and had breakfast. He sent away the children for a ramble round the hill of Frangikonda*. He also went out, and in the course of the walk he gave presents to the padri of the place. At about 12 o'clock, the commander paid a return visit to the Nawwāb. After he went away the Nawwāb sent to him at dinner time some trays containing fruits and various dishes.

of food. In the afternoon he went by sukṣdwan to the dargdh of Budū Shahīd with his beloved son and some officers, followed by armed jawans, bdnddrs and pipers. He offered fātiha, with five hundred rupees as nadhṛ and returned to his tent. He distributed bhatta to all children, the English guards, his own companions and men in different works according to rank. He had his dinner and returned home at the time of afternoon-prayer, when a salute of twenty-one guns was fired. The total amount of expenditure on these trips was about eight thousand rupees.

Section 4.

The Nawwāb used to send to Dādē Shāh ṣāhib every month a sum of one hundred and twenty-five rupees for the purpose of offering fatiha to Maḥbūb Ṣubḥānī with all formality on the 11th of each month. He granted to Dādē Shāh ṣāhib every year one-hundred and twenty-five hun to meet the expenses for the 'urs celebrated on the 11th of the month of Rabl'uth-tḥānl. In the course of his morning drive Nawwāb sahib would attend the urs* celebrating the anniversary of Aṣhrāf Shāh sahib whose respectable remains were interred in a tomb on the way to the spring in Mylapore, known as the Great Spring. He offered fatiha with one hundred and twenty-five rupees as nadhṛ and returned home. The Nawwāb had great faith in that saint. Likewise, the Nawwāb attended in the course of his morning drive, the 'urs celebrating the anniversary of FattṢḥ Shāh ṣāhib whose holy tomb was contiguous to the Cathedral mosque in Muthialpet, and offered fatiha with one hundred and twenty-five rupees as nadhṛ.

Section 5.

Generally during summer Nawwāb sahib fixed upon the house of his senior sister to enjoy the sight of the full moon, when he would gather his sisters and others. One day he said to his senior sister tu'bs: "Tomorrow is the full-moon day, I wish to enjoy the sight for two or three days. It beho^s on you to arrange to clean the ṣaḥn and dalan of your house, to furnish them with chdndni-farsh of immaculate white colour, and to instruct singers and other guests to dress themselves in white robes for the occasion. You should send invitations to ou'ier sisters, and their children Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahadur and Nasiru'l-Mulk Bahādur. They must also be dressed in white robes for the occasion. Maid servants also should be present, as usual. Trays full of flowers like mogra and shabbo must be got ready, and also bowls.

Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba got ready every thing as per instructions of the Nawwāb. Nawwāb ṣāḥib went to her house at about 8 o'clock in the night, and sat in the ṣaḥn till 12 o'clock busying himself in playing various games with his brothers, sisters and nephews. Silver coins were scattered on all sides. One day he seated all his sisters and others present in a circle round the edge of the carpet with a little space between one other. He also sat with them. Then he sent for some pillows and said: "Pass these pillows quickly from one hand to another without allowing them to fall on the ground. Whoever fails to catch, will be loaded with all the pillows and punished. Now, I shall begin the game/" This game lasted for about an hour.

Sometimes Sayfu'd-Dawla, Ḥusāmu'd-Dawla, Ḥusayn Nawāz Khān, Abdrfl-Ḥamīd Khān, Sarfarāz Khān, Shahsawār Jang, also took part in this game.

One day after the games the Nawwāb sent for a small box containing old silver coins, from Fataḥ-chawkl and told his brothers and sisters thus: "Each one should take out a handful of these coins and place them before me. I shall find out which hand brought out more coins/" Each tried his hand at that. It was found when counted up that no hand took out more than forty rupees. Then the Nawwāb himself took a handful and counted up. There were fifty-one rupees! He smiled sweetly and said, "Praise be to Allāh: My palm is the palm that has the ability to rule, because it is the broadest, biggest and most extensive of ail hands!" He thanked Allāh for that. He increased the amount of coins taken out by his nephews, sisters and brothers in the ratio of one to two, one to three, and one to five respectively; for example, if ten rupees had been taken out by his nephew, he added twenty rupees and made it thirty; thirty rupees were added to the ten rupees taken out by his sister, to make forty; fifty rupees was added to the ten rupees taken out by his brother, to make sixty. He added ten rupees for every rupee taken out by him and distributed the whole amount among the guests, attendants and musicians.

Generally during the moon-light night, the Nawwāb, in compliance with the wishes of his sisters, took them in a royal chGrat drawn by four horses, Taĵu'l-Umarā, Ra'Isu'l-Umarā and others in one chār at, and his nieces and other relatives in another chārat. They started from the palace of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam at 9 o'clock in the night followed by two pahras. Some horses marched to the right, some to the left, and some in front as per regulations. In this manner they went sometimes to the tank in Sayyidābād, and at other times to the tank in Nungambakkam. He gave orders to the pahras that they should vacate the people in those areas; then he got down from the charat with his sisters and went on foot enjoying the tamasha in the tanks. He spent about two hours in this manner. He started back at about 11 o'clock, came to the house of his senior sister, and bid them all farewell, while he rested for the night either at the house of his sister or at Fataḥ-chawkl.

Sometimes he gave orders to pitch tents either on the side of the sea, or in other baghs. He made arrangements for the seclusion of the area with qannat and saracha and then went there with his sisters. He also invited Sayfu'l-Mulk

HISTORY OF THE NAWWABS OF THE CARNATIC III-Pt. IV

Bahādur, the sons of his sisters and brothers, and fixed daily bhatta of one hun for each of them. After dinner in the afternoon, he arranged to pitch tents on the broad portions of the fahḥ. He went out for a walk that side for a while, then sat on a chair and said: "I wish to have a test in running race: two of you must stand shoulder to shoulder and then run." In this race Sayfu'd-Dawla was matched with Majdu'd-Dawla, I'tizādu'd-Dawla with Ḥusāmu'd-Dawla, Aẓīmu'd-Dawla with sahibu'd-Dawla, Ra'Isu'l-Umara' with Naṣīru'd-Dawla, and Tāju'l-Umara' with Ḥusayn Nawāz Kḥān. Some of these were well matched, and some were not. When Nawwāb sahib girded up his loins and contested with Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, the Nawwāb won the race. He asked his sisters also to race with some one. But they put forth lame excuses and did not compete. Then he called other ladies present and made them run in a pair. He told Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur thus: "I shall compete with the children in running. When we stand shoulder to shoulder, give the command to run, making a loud noise so that startling may be simultaneous with the command." Thus Nawwāb faḥib had race with children but none went ahead of the Nawwāb though some kept pace with him, while many lagged behind. After the game the Nawwāb distributed presents to every one according to rank through his senior sister. -

Section 6.

Nawrfa was celebrated every year in the house of his senior sister, who, in obedience to the order of the Nawwāb, got ready all things necessary for making merry, namely, eggs worked with gold and silver and such other works in different colours. She got ready the royal repast in her own house. Nawwāb sahib gathered all his sisters, brothers and their children at dinner time and dined with them all. Then he made them play with eggs. Sometimes he himself took part in the game. At other times he amused himself in ponja-kashi with boys, and also wrestling with them in jest. The boys placed their hands underneath his and said: "Our strength is not equal to yours". *The Nawwāb was very much pleased at this remark and gave them all presents.

Di. I-EXCURSION TO FULIMADAVARAM

Section 7.

Nawwāb Umdatul-Umara Bahādur, in compliance with the wishes of his sisters, made up his mind to go on an excursion to the Pulimādavaramtank, He sat on the green chair and wrote a ḥukm-nama to Bahrām Jang Bahādur giving all details in regard to the arrangements for the journey. He summoned the Bahādur, gave him the ḥukm-nama with the following instructions.

"Get a sum of five thousand rupees from the treasury with the help of Colonel Barrett Bahādur for expenses of the trip, and make very good arrangements for the journey in about five or six days. Take with you requisite things from farrdsh-khdna, bdwarchl-khdna, and tabliir-khdna, arrange to pitch tents in suitable places behind the bagh of the Governor near the tank and furnish them with carpets and other things. Order Htzayar Klran, the bakhshl, to keep ready there five hundred armed jawdns, fifty troopers, besides risdladders and commandants; direct Muhammad Riza, the kotwdl of Tirmalkāri to send there about twenty shops including corn-chandlers who deal in different kinds of corn, and others who deal in other necessary things. I shall camp out there with ladies and others for about a week or ten days and none should have any difficulty for* provisions. God willing, send information to me after making everything ready. Then I shall arrive there with the ladies. All the officers, 'ilaqadars of the sarkdr and servants of all grades must be enjoined strictly not to cause any kind of damage to the Governor's bagh or the baghs of other sardars; severe punishment will be inflicted on those who disobey this order."

In obedience to the order, Bahrām Jang Bahādur conveyed all things necessary for arranging the camp. He also sent Ri?āyār Khān, the bakhsht with an army, and the kotwil with shops. Then he went to PuHmādavaram and carried out the instructions of the Nawwāb by erecting tents, and establishing shops in suitable places. He posted guards to ensure safety in every place. Then he sent information to the Nawwāb about the completion of all arrangements.

The Nawwāb sent another ḥukm-ndtna in the name of Bahrām Jang Bahādur with the following contents:

"If the sons of Nawwāb Muḥammad Ali Wālājāh Bahādur, the sons of Madārul-Mulk Amlrul-Umarā Bahādur my brother, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur, Amīru'd-Dawla Bahādur or any other relative reach that place before my arrival, you must receive them and provide accommodation thus: Iftikhāru'd-Dawla and Amīru'd-Dawla in one tent; the sons of Nawwāb Muhammad Ali Wālājāh Bahādur and the sons of Amlrul-Umarā Bahādur in one tent. If some of my other relatives come, accommodate them in one tent. All these tents must be erected outside the boundary of the tents of the sarkSr, near your tent. One big tent should be erected opposite to mine to serve as dining hall. Five or six tents and some bechdba must be got ready to the right of my tent for Tajul-Umarā, Rā'isul-Umarā and other nephews and arrangements made to send tdras of food twice to the ladies. You must keep ready on the day of my arrival fifty trays containing various dishes to be sent to the Governor at the time of mid-day meal."

Bahrām Jang Bahādur attended to every detail and sent information of it to the Nawwāb.

The Nawwāb gave order's to Sālār Jang Bahādur thus: "God willing, I intend to go on an excursion to the Pulimadavaram tank with the ladies tomorrow at 6 o'clock. I shall camp there for about ten days. Please stay at Bāgh-i-khāṣṣ night and day, and get news of the welfare of the widows of Nawwāb Muḥammad All Wāfajāh Bahādur, family of my sisters and others, written in detail by the clerk of the diwan-i-khass, and send it on to me daily through the camel-messengers."

CH. 1-EXCURSION TO PULIMADAVARAM

Riza Nawaz Khan was given the following instructions: "You must supervise the guards placed at the chawkl, the gates of Bāgh-i-khāṣṣ, and palaces and be present near Colonel Barrett Bahādur. You should also enquire all news about kachahl and other places, and get it written by Lachman Prasad, the munshi, with the knowledge of Colonel Barrett Bahādur. You must find out from him whether any letter or message has been received from the Governor of Madras and send it to me along with other news through Sālār Jang Bahādur."

Nāwwāb ṣāhib gave the following order also to Sālār Jang Bahādur: "The sons of Nawwāb Muḥammad All Wāfajāh Bahādur, the son of Madāru'1-Mulk Bahādur, and some other children also have permission to go to Pulimādavaram. If they apply for carriages it is necessary that you give them each a suksawan with a bhiiṛi and an armed jawān and send them off before I start."

After these instructions the Nawwāb went to the house of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam at dinner time and had his food. Then he spoke thus after dinner:

"Bahrām Jang Bahādur, in a short while, made everything ready for the trip to the tank. He has erected tents in different places for the use of zenana and mardāna. Tents for various works have also been erected. I have received an 'arzi from him on the subject. God willing, I propose to start with the ladies day after tomorrow morning before sunrise, and wish to camp there for about ten days. I had already sent to you two thousand rupees through Taqī All Khān Bahādur. You must distribute the amount in the following maimer: 600 rupees to two sisters, 150 rupees to the second sister, 150 rupees to your daughter, and 100 rupees to each of the daughters-in-law. They should be instructed to arrange for carriages for their use as well as for their guests, get provisions ready and reach your palace at the time of sunset prayer tomorrow so that we might all start together the following morning. You need not provide for Tāju'l-Umaṛa Bahādur and others. I have supplied them with necessities."

Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam distributed the sum as per directions of the Nawwāb. All the ladies assembled in her house at the appointed time. During the last part of the night of the 24th of RabPuth-thām, 1215 A.H., Nawwāb ṣāhib started with all of them to Pulimādavaram.

Bahrām Jang Bahādur who was in charge of the arrangements in the camp, sent tōrahs of food, got ready over night, to the ladies, sons of Nawwāb Muḥammad AlīWālājāh Bahādur and the nobles who had arrived at Pulimādavaram earlier. He also gave instructions to the ddrugha of the kitchen that he should send tōrahs of food to Nawwāb ṣāhib and his companions after their arrival. Then at about 7 o'clock in the morning Bahrām Jang Bahādur rode his horse followed by troopers and armed jatvans and other julus, and went an hour's distance in advance to welcome the Nawwāb.

At about 9 o'clock the carriage of the Nawwāb, followed by a large retinue, came in view. Bahrām Jang Bahādur dismounted from horse-back and submitted eleven rupees as nadhṛ. He respectfully told him all the details: the arrival of the ladies, the arrangement for various works and the completion of every item of work entrusted to him. The Nawwāb was very much pleased with him. He applauded him, commended his merits and presented him with a green rumal-shal, and nim-astln from his own wardrobe. Bahrām Jang Bahādur submitted twenty-one rupees as naghr for these honours and paid obeisance. Then he followed the Nawwab's suksawan walking a little distance representing important details for his consideration. Then the Nawwābsaid, "I have an engagement with Lord Clive Bahādur;¹ I shall meet him and then come to the camp. You mount on horse and follow me."

CH. I-NAWWAB'S VISIT TO THE GOVERNORS' GARDEN

Nawwāb ṣāhib arrived at the garden of the Governor with his followers and had breakfast with him. He went round to see the garden at the request of the Governor. The garden was full of mango trees and grafted varieties of the best quality, and other kinds of fruit trees, sandal-trees, clovetree, nutmeg, and different kinds of flowers, English as well as Indian. The Nawwāb was delighted to see the garden and said to the Governor thus:—

"I have not seen such wonderful trees in my life. You have afforded me an opportunity to see this marvel!"

The Governor ṣāhib said, "The cultivation of these trees in this country is an arduous task, because the soil and climate are not quite suitable. I got these trees after great endeavour and planted them. I supervised the work with great care and thus got ready this sayrgāth. The mango trees have begun to yield this year; they will attain their full growth in a short period.

"I hope for favours from your highness. The encampment of the sarkdr is contiguous to the bāgh of this humble servant. Your officers may be enjoined strictly not to cause any kind of damage to the garden." Immediately Nawwāb ṣāhib gave orders to Bahrāin Jang Bahādur that he should attend to this matter. Then the Nawwāb got into a boat with the Governor and spent about an hour in boat excursion. When he alighted from the boat he gave a present of fifty rupees to the footmen

(1) Edward Clive, son of the first Lord Clive, was born in 1754. He succeeded to his father's Irish Barony in 1774, and sat in the House of Commons until he was, at the age of forty, created a peer of England as Baron Clive of Walcot. On Lord Hobarts' recall Clive was appointed Governor of Madras, and he reached the Presidency on the 31st August, 1789.

and others through Bahrām Jang Bahādur, bid farewell to the Governor and reached the encampment.

He inspected the tents erected in different places for men and women and was delighted with the arrangements. He went into the zenana, and spent about an hour in conversation with his sisters. Then he came out, enquired about the name of the occupant of each tent and went into his own tent. He called Bahrām Jang Bahādur and expressed delight in his knowledge of business and knack of doing things adroitly, applauded him and said: "You must be at this place as long as I camp here and attend to all the work. There is the tamlar treasury in my tent. Get the key from the guard through Muḥammad Ma'ṣūm and take out money for necessary expenses. Send 350 rupees everyday to my senior sister for the expenses of the ladies and keep the remaining amount for expenses of the kitchen, and payment of bhatta and gratuities to men as per my ḥukm-nama. You must send everyday, morning and evening, at the appointed time tdrahs of food for the royal repast, and for the repast of the ladies, nobles and others according to rank. Other officers of the sarkar should be served food in the big tent in our presence. You must be attentive to other duties as well. If the tents are not adequate in number, write to Colonel Barrett Bahādur for more. I shall also send orders in regard to this."

Muḥammad Ma'ṣūm was ordered thus: "If Bahrām Jang Bahādur requires money for expenses of the sarkdr and asks for the key of the tamlar treasury kept with us, you must get him the key from the guard and let him take from it the sum needed; the account must be entered in the daftar of Lala Lachman Prasad."

Meanwhile a suksāwan carrying the private money of the Nawwab and a cart carrying the tamlar treasury reached the Nawwab's tent from Bagh-i-khass with Muhammad Ibrahim the risaladar, Shaykh Imam the jamasar and two armed guards acting as escorts. The Nawwab gave orders to leave the suksawan behind the masnad and near his own suksāwan, and the cart carrying the tamlar treasury in the fah̄n of the tent opposite to his own, and appointed a trooper^to guard these.

Next morning he breakfasted with his sons at about 8 o'clock. Then he made arrangements for the pardah and went with the ladies to see the indigo factory and silk farm which were contiguous to his encampment. The silk worms were reared in rooms fitted with glass-cases and fed on mulberry leaves. He spent two or three hours in seeing the tamasha. He presented the workmen in these two places with one hundred rupees and returned with the ladies to the tents. He spent the whole day in shikār or other recreation.

At 10 o'clock in the night the Nawwāb invited to his tent Taju'l-Umarā^ Ra'isu'l-Umarā, Majdu'd-Dawla, I'timādu'l-Mulk, Ḥusayn Nawāz Khān, Nāşiru'd-Dawla and the writer of this chronicle, and asked them to sleep there. Ttizādrfd-Dawla did not come with this party because of his illness. Therefore the Nawwāb, before he started on this trip, drew his attention to the care of his health, and presented him with three hundred rupees and a gold garīyāL. He also deputed a trooper to report to him about the condition of his health. The trooper inquired about the condition of the patient from Maliku'l-hukama Aḥmadullāh Khān, and reported the news to the Nawwāb at about 11 o'clock.

Every morning the Nawwāb went through the ablution and finished his usual religious duties by 7 A.M. Then he had breakfast in his tent with his son and busied himself in playing chess with Abū Ṭālib Khān and a Brahman Acharya. At about 10 o'clock he went to the tent of his sister and distributed presents in the zenana. Sometimes he listened there to the music of mirathīyan and other singers. He returned to his own tent at about 12 o'clock and smoked qaiyan and found recreation in reading history and anthologies for about an hour. Then he took a nap. He woke up at about 2 o'clock, spoke in a humourous vein with his sons, and Amtnu'd-DIn Khān and Dargāh Quli Khān, and distributed fruits to ladies and others. He visited his sister's tent after 3 P.M. and had his dinner there. When he came out after dinner, he arranged sometimes for the tamasha of pahlawans or he got into a suksawan and went with his sons and companions to different gardens in that area. He spent thus an hour or two, purchasing fruits available in the gardens. He distributed half the quantity to all those present there and sent the other half to the ladies. He granted presents to gardeners and watchmen and returned to his own tent.

Sometimes Nawwāb ṣāhib got into his nalki at the time of afternoon-prayer and made an excursion to the lake while his sons rode in suksdwans. One day during his trip to the lake, he went near the Governor's garden when he saw a gardener standing in the middle of the road. He held in his hands two very big unripe mangoes and was demanding justice saying thus: "Some one in the employ of the sarkar had plucked these two mangoes from the Governor's garden; when this slave attracted his attention, he threw away the mangoes and took to his heels. This slave pursued him demanding an explanation of this unjust act which was contrary to the orders of the Nawwāb. The offender talked abusively and ran away. Therefore this servant is on his way seeking the presence of your highness for redress. I hope that justice will be done. Your highness may be pleased to issue orders to hold an enquiry, catch the culprit and punish him severely." After listening to this well-founded complaint Nawwāb sahib was very much roused. He left one of the jawāns who followed him with instructions to come with the gardener and present him at the camp.

The Nawwāb reached his encampment in the evening. He summoned Bahrām Jang Bahādur and spoke to him in great anger thus: "I had repeatedly told you at the request of the Governor that you should proclaim that none should cause any damage to or ravage the garden of the Governor or other sardars. Who is this shameful man who plucked two big mangoes from the garden of the Governor, abused the gardener, and ran away, leaving him in the middle of the road to complain to me? What have I to say to the Governor?"

The Bahādur replied thus while his face had a shrunken look: "As soon as I received the orders I announced publicly that if any one behaved contrary to the orders of the Nawwāb he would be punished severely. Every one, from the young to the old, is aware of that order which was repeated frequently. Despite this, a shameless fellow had done this work which the Nawwāb had prohibited." In the course of this discussion the jawdn arrived there with the gardener who brought the mangoes.

The Nawwāb directed Bahrām Jang Bahādur to inquire into this matter and report to him. The Bahādur called the gardener and enquired about the name and other particulars about the culprit. The gardener replied, "I do not know the name, but he may be described as a lean man wearing a jāma with a fine dastdr." Bahrām Jang Bahādur* narrated to the Nawwāb the particulars about the miscreant which he gathered from the gardener. The Nawwāb said: "When the gardener complained to me, the names of the son of Madaṛu'1-Mulk Bahādur and the sons of Nawwāb Muḥammad Alī Wālājāh Bahādur passed over my mind. Now it appears from the description of the gardener that it may not be the son of Madarrfl-Mulk Bahādur but it may be the sons of Nawwāb Muḥammad All Wālājāh Bahādur." Then he summoned Aglmu'd-Dawla Bahādur. He had already got information of the Nawwāb's wrath, and went before him in great dread. On his way he knocked against a tent-rope and fell down. As his great toe was injured, he had to limp and thus reached the presence of the Nawwāb. The Nawwāb said, "Perhaps you may know who went to the garden of the Governor and plucked the mangoes." He replied, "I am not aware of such an incident. If I had known it, I would have spoken the truth. This slave had never been that side. If it is proved by the gardener and the witnesses that I am the offender, then this slave deserves punishment." Nawwāb ṣāhib believed in his statement. He noticed that Azīmu'd-Dawla Bahādur was struck with extreme fear. Nawwāb ṣāhib called him by his side, embraced him and comforted him thus: "Be at ease! I heard that the sons of Nawwab Muhammad All Waajah Bahadur frequently visited the gardens. The particulars supplied by the gardener indicate that it may be the sons of Nawwāb Muhammad Alī Walājāh Bahādur." Then he directed Azīmu'd-Dawla Bahādur thus: "Go and fetch immediately the sons of Nawwāb Muhammad All Walajah Bahadur. Take my carriage; jama'dar also will follow you." He came back with them in a short while. The Nawwāb told Qawī Jang Bahādur and Sber Jang Bahādur thus: "The Governor's gardener suspects that you plucked the mangoes. If you did that, speak the truth." They were struck with awe and replied • "This crime was not committed by us. We never heard about that garden nor do we know where the Governor's garden is. If we are found guilty then we deserve censure and severe punishment." The Nawwāb replied, "By God! Immediately after I ascertain the truth, I shall imprison the offender and nothing shall stand in the way." He ordered thus: "Get the gardener, let him identify them." When the gardener came, Nawwāb sahib told him thus: "You must not have regard for any one in this group. Whoever he may be, point him out without any anxiety." The gardener looked at them one by one and submitted: "This slave can easily discover the offender, for the face will point out the crime. But the offender is not in this group. It is certain that he will be found out with the help of your highness' favour." Then the Nawwāb gave orders to Bahrām Jang Bahādur that he should appoint one commandant and four armed jaztns with instructions to go to every tent with the gardener and discover the offender. If the offender was pointed out by the gardener he was to be dragged to the Nawwāb's presence without any fear or anxiety.

Therefore the commandant, jazvnds and the gardener proceeded from tent to tent. The gardener was able to identify the offender. He was Alī Mardān. This Alī Mardān had the title Nuṣrat All Khār. He was a person of rank, one of the old servants of the sarkar in the employ of Ra'isu'l-Umara Bahadur. He was sitting in the tent of Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur busy in a game of chess, while his master was in the zenana. As soon as the gardener pointed out Nuṣrat Alī Khān, the jazvnds dragged him before the Nawwāb.

The Nawwāb was wild with excitement; he did not inquire about his case, but directed the orderlies thus: "Tie the hands of this disgraceful man together to his dastar, and beat him." In obedience to that order Nuṣrat Alī Khān was severely beaten. The Nawwāb said, "O! Disgraceful man! Don't you know me? Didn't you understand my order? Didn't you dread to face my anger? Did you trifle with my command? As you sow, you will reap. If my beloved son or some one from among the nobles had committed this crime, I should have fettered him and whipped him." He gave the whip to Bahram Jang Bahādur and said: "Ask this shameful wretch why he plucked the mangoes; if he speaks the truth, good; otherwise beat him till he confesses his guilt."

Nuṣrat Alī Khān was fettered and imprisoned in the maykat. The Nawwab said to Bahram Jang Bahadur "This is a disgraceful man, a despicable person. By God! I don't wish to show mercy to him. It is necessary that he should be kept in confinement the whole night and sent tomorrow morning to the jail in the bagh. Let the risaladar be instructed to load him quickly with more heavy fetters and lead him captive to the fort of Chandragiri in the prison-van with two armed guards and one howaldar; the gardener be presented with fifty rupees, and instructed not to inform the Governor of this incident." Fahrām Jang Bahādur gave the gardener money and advised him not to inform the Governor of the incident. Then Nawwāb sahib expressed himself thus: "There is none to equal Taḡju'l-Umarā and Ra'isu'l-Umarā in social rank and high station. Yet if this offence were committed by either of these I would have meted out the same punishment to him without any scruple. This bastard! What did he think of himself? Why did he act contrary to my command? He got the punishment for his offence."

Meanwhile Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur returned to his tent and learnt the details from his companions. He went before Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā weeping out, and related to her every detail about Nusṛat Alī Khān. About an hour later Nawwāb ṣāhib visited the tent of his elder sister and spoke furiously against Nusṛat Alī Khān. The sisters submitted, "Well, the unworthy person deserves more severe punishment. As your highness is merciful and generous, severer punishment is not inflicted upon him."

These remarks appeased the anger of Nawwāb ṣāhib to a great extent. The sisters got some women who were adepts in pleasantry and could talk wittily, and introduced them to the Nawwāb. These women engaged him in pleasant conversation exciting laughter and mirth and thus removed completely the rust of anger formed on the mind of the Nawwāb. He returned to his tent in about an hour, spoke as usual to Amiṇu'd-Dīn Khān and Dargāh-Qull Khān and then retired to rest.

Next day after breakfast Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur went before the Nawwāb weeping out as per instructions from his mother and aunt. He fell on the feet of the Nawwāb and succeeded in obtaining pardon for Nusṛat Alī Khān who was then released from imprisonment. The Khān, out of the consciousness of the sense of shame, left Madras in a short while for other cities.

The Nawwāb stayed in the camp till the 1st of Jumādiu'l-awwal, 1215 A. H. He returned to town with the ladies on the 2nd of that month. Thousands of rupees were spent on this excursion.

Section 8.

Some days later, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur formed plans to give a feast to Nawwāb šāhib and ladies in Maḥbūb-bāgh.

This bagh belonged to Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur and was situated on the way to Mylapore near the bagh of Sir George Henry Kalam.¹ It was purchased by Sharafu'l-Umarā Anwāru'd-Dawla Bahādur at a later time.

After the Nawwāb accepted the invitation, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur decorated the entire bagh beautifully. He got tents from the sarkār and erected them in suitable places at the back of the garden. When he made everything ready, he screened the garden from the public view on the 9th of Shawwāl, 1215 A. H. He bought fruits from the bazaar, arranged half of them in trays, while he fastened the remaining fruits to the genus of trees to which they belonged in a manner not to appear unnatural but to give the semblance that they hung naturally from the branches. Then he requested the Nawwāb to shed lustre on his garden by his presence and look at the bagh and the fruits on the trees. In response to the invitation Nawwāb šāhib shed light on the bagh by his presence with his sisters and other dependents. He spent two days there enjoying the tamasha. Twice in a day thirty trays of food were sent for the royal repast at the appointed time. A large quantity of food was sent into the zenana and the mardana. Zunnardar, bhu'i, and others in the employ of the sarkār were given bhatta allowed for them by the sarkar. This trip lasted for two days. Nawwāb šāhib presented his sisters with two thousand rupees for expenses.

(1) This person has not so far been identified.

The Nawwāb, before leaving the garden on the 11th of Shawwāl, 1215 A.H., presented IftikHāru'd-Dawla Bahādur with one thousand rupees and permitted him to play nawbat, to maintain, besides a guard in uniform, a trooper who would follow his sawānī in taluks, and to play tambūr at the time of taking leave of the Nawwāb as also on occasions of his return from the taluks. Then the Nawwāb returned to his palace with his sisters.

Section 9.

As Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā was suffering from palpitation of the heart, Nawwāb ṣāhib decided to go to Frangikonda and its hill, and stay there for five or six days. He gave orders to Bahrār Jang Bahādur thus: "Send some tents to Frangikonda and arrange to erect three or four tents in the garden of the sarkar and one big tent up the hill; request Colonel Barrett Bahādur to write a letter to the Colonel in charge at Frangikonda asking him to place guards around the tents for a period of one week, the period of my stay there; obtain from Colonel Barrett Bahādur six thousand rupees for immediate expenses pertaining to the kitchen and other works, and more money from Muḥammad Ma'ṣūm in case that six thousand rupees is not sufficient."

Bahrār Jang Bahādur made everything ready and communicated the news to the Nawwāb. Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā in accordance with the desire of the Nawwāb invited her sisters and other ladies. The Nawwāb started with the zenana and marddna for the bagh in Frangikonda on the morning of the 1st of Dhul-ḥajj, 1215 A.H. Each guest was assigned a tent. Tōrahs of food were sent both in the morning and evening at the appointed time. Daily bhatta ranging from one rupee to one hundred rupees was paid in the zenana through Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā and in the marddna through Bahrār Jang Bahādur. Thus the total expenditure per day was nearly two thousand rupees. This continued for eight days. At 9 o'clock in the morning of the fifth day of the stay, the Nawwāb went up the hill of Frangikonda. He returned to his tent at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon and had his meal as usual in the zenana.

Next day the Nawwāb started in a nālki after his dinner in the afternoon for the top of the hill at Frangikonda, while Tājū'l-Umarā Bahādur, Ra'isū'l-Umarā Bahādur, Husayn Nawāz Khān Bahādur, etc., Amīru'd-Dawla Bahādur, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur, and his (the Nawwāb's) nephews, Bahrāin Jang Bahādur, Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur, and some other trustworthy officers accompanied him on foot. He reached the hill top and stayed there in the house of Johnson, the padre, for about an hour and rested his companions. He presented the padre with fifty hūn and the men in that place with thirty hūn. Then he left the place on foot. After; walking a short distance he spoke to Tājū'l-Umarā Bahādur thus: "Babd Jān! You are very weak. Get into my nālki!" Then he turned towards Amīru'd-Dawla Bahādur and others and addressed them as follows: "Alī Husayn is not in a fit condition of his health. He was down with fever for a week during last month. He has not completely recovered from his illness. His face indicates that he is convalescent. If he walks at this stage his weakness will increase. Therefore I think it is expedient that he should get into the nālki, and you all excuse him for that."

Then the Nawwāb ordered for his nālki and helped his son to get into it. When the nālki descended the hill slowly step by step, the Nawwāb followed it placing his hands on it with a view to confer dignity upon his son. Nawwāb sāhib spoke to his companions in great joy as follows. "The Creator of the universe and the Chercher, by the favours of the Prophet, has conferred this dignity upon my beloved son. I wish to conduct him in this manner as fa* as his tent. It behoves these persons not to mind their walking a little distance to reach the tents which are all very near."

Thus the Nawwab followed the nalki, while the nobles and other officers walked around him. When they reached the tent in this manner, Taḡu'l-Umarā Bahādur dismounted from the nalkī on the right side and kissed the feet of his father, submitting twelve ashrafl as nadhr. Nawwāb sahib accepted the nadhr, clasped his son with great affection while tears fell down the cheeks, and said, "May Allah, exalted be He, bless you and make you worthy of this mansab. May He preserve you from the evil eye of the envious. May He help you to attain your wish and make you prosperous and happy." Immediately all officers and nobles concluded that this was an indication of the right of succession to the throne. This incident became public and got to the ears of Nawwāb Sultanu'n-nisa Begam. It was also reported to her in detail by Ra'isu'l-Umara Bahadur in great secrecy. Nawwab Suljtanu'n-niṣā Bēgam was perplexed and perturbed. She despaired of her brother's promise and assurance and was displeased with him. His other sisters also were filled with wonder at this incident. They were surprised at the unworthy act of their brother. They imagined that the Nawwāb, may God forbid, lost hope of the expectation of life. This suggestion gained strength in their minds and they also despaired of his life. They always occupied themselves with this thought.

At about 7 o'clock in the evening, Nawwāb ṣāhib was talking to his sisters in the zenana as usual. Nawwāb Suljānu'n-niṣā Bēgam was hinting at her displeasure right through. Nawwāb sahib noticed her ironical expressions, which offended him, yet he was courteous outwardly. Next day Nawwāb Maliku'n-niṣā Bēgam ṣāhibā and Nawwāb Tjmdatu'n-niṣā Bēgam ṣāhibā inquired of the Nawwāb about the incident in secrecy. They remarked: "If you consider that your dear son should succeed to the throne after you, there is still a lot of time and there is no necessity to express it now. The eldest sister is much perturbed oh this." The Nawwāb replied, "You have a wrong opinion. The fact is that All Husayn was ill for some days; he is still weak, not in a position to walk. It is for this reason I made him get into the ndlki. The right of succeeding to the throne will devolve certainly upon my son in accordance with law. His sawdrl by nalkl yesterday had nothing to do with the idea you express now. Allāh, exalted be He, is Supreme and All-powerful. He will place whomsoever he chooses in high rank and power. The eldest sister is displeased with me without any reason."

Off. 1-ILLNESS OF NAWWAB UMDATU'L-UMARA

The Nawwāb returned to his tent, had a mirthful and humorous conversation with Abu' Ṭalib Khān, Amīnu'd-Dīn Khān and Dargāh Qull Khān and then retired to rest for the night.

On the 7th morning Nawwāb ṣāhib had an attack of fever, and there appeared two or three boils, one below the neck and two on the right arm. He had a little breakfast without any inclination to eat. In the afternoon he went by suksftwan to the zenana. After dinner he returned to his tent and spent the night there. Next day all things were sent back. Some carriages of the ladies also left that day. The Nawwāb started with the ladies on the evening of the 9th at about sun-set and reached Bāgh-i-khāṣṣ at about 8 o'clock in the night and then went to the palace of his senior sister.

Section 10.

Next morning happened to be the arafa day. The Nawwab told Bahram Jang Bahadur thus: "To-morrow is idu'z-zuha*. I do not think I shall be able to go to the mosque to-morrow. I have instructed Ṭāju'l-Umarā Bahādur to go there. You must keep ready as usual the retinue, etc., near the gate of Fataḥ-chawkl."

All the nobles and members of the government came in their carriages, one after another according to rank, on the morning of the Id and stood at the gate of Fataḥ-chawkl. The Nawwāb said to Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur thus: "Go to Fataḥ-chawķī; sit in the mahddōl together with Taĵu'l-Umaril Bahādur; seat Bahram Jang Bahadur opposite to yourself and proceed in that manner to the mosque." Taĵu'l-Umarā Bahādur and Ra'Isu'l-Umarā Bahādur sat together in the mahddōl, while Bahrām Jang Bahādur sat opposite to Ra'Isu'l-Umarā Bahādur. They went thus to the cathedral mosque followed by a large crowd. After the prayer they returned to Fataḥ-chawķī where qurbani was offered. Then they went to the house of Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam with the same paraphernalia and presented nadhhr to the Nawwāb and his sister. Some of the nobles sent their nadhhr to the Nawwāb in the zenana. The Nawwāb authorised Taĵu'l-Umarā Bahādur to receive nadhhr on his own behalf from some men, while mutaṣaddis were asked to submit their nadhhr to Ra'Isu'l-Umarā Bahādur in the dlwdn-khdna. They carried out the orders of the Nawwāb while a salute of guns was fired as usual. Nawwāb Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, the two sisters, and their children went to the house of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam and presented nadhhr to the Nawwāb.

Nawwāb ṣāhib was restless because he had a sensation of pain and heat due to the boil and fever. Seeing the condition of her brother Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā felt very uneasy. Ḥakīm Aḥmadullāh Khān, Maliku'l-ḥukamā Ḥakīm Aḥmad Khān, Ḥakīm Alī Naqī Khān and Ḥakīm Muḥammad Wāṣil, attended on the Nawwāb both in the morning and evening. Besides these, Ḥakīm Kamaṭu'd-Diḥ Khān, Ḥakīm Askri Khān, Ḥakīm Abdul-Razzāq Khān, and such other yandni and miṣri ḥakims were invited and the state of the Nawwāb's health was explained to them. Ḥakīm Aḥmadullāh Khān was diligent in his treatment for fever and boil. Another boil shot out on the back inflicting great pain. His sisters spent their nights in Fataḥ-chawķī. Colonel Barrett Bahādur presented himself during the hour appointed for men visiting the Nawwāb, inquired of him about his health and wrote to Dr. Fazāl about it inviting him to visit the patient. The doctor went at 11 o'clock and examined the Nawwāb. He also made inquiries about the treatment by the hakims. He spoke to Colonel Barrett Bahādur thus: "Three or four boils have shot out in the region from the neck to the back, but the boil on the back may cause peril to his life. The sooner it is treated the better it will be. Else it will be fatal/" Colonel Barrett Bahādur represented the opinion of the doctor to the Nawwāb.

Nawwāb ṣāhib said: "The doctor examined with care the boil on the back. Perhaps it is a cancer". Colonel Barrett Bahadur replied, "Though the boil is on the back, it is not at the particular spot associated with cancer. Your highness need not have any anxiety. The doctor is of opinion that your highness should stay in a house where there is free passage of air. He thinks that it would be agreeable to your health if you could take up your residence in the upper storey. It would be better and more beneficial if your highness could shift to Nuṣrat-maḥall." The Nawwāb said "My sisters do not wish to be separated from me even for a minute/" Colonel Barrett Bahādur submitted: "There is no difficulty on that score. The zenana may be kept at the back of Nusrat-maḥall. They will be nearer to your highness."

The Nawwāb told his sisters thus during the hour assigned to women for visiting him. "The doctor is of opinion that I should not stay in this house. He thinks it would be better if I take up my residence in Nusrat-maḥall." Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam and other sisters said: "Wheresoever you may desire to shift your lodging, we will be also present there. But we do not desire the doctor to treat you for the boil, because the doctor's method of treatment is very severe. We are very apprehensive of the result." Nawwāb ṣāhib said: "Doctors only can treat for such boils, for it is surgical work and doctors are experts in surgery which is not possible for yunanl hakims."

Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam sent the following oral message in secrecy to the Maliku'l-ḥukama through Majdu'd-

Dawla Bahādur regarding the Nawwāb's decision in favour of the treatment by doctors. "It is a great wonder why you are helpless despite your consummate skill in your profession to treat for a boil. You are abandoning him to doctors,"

The Maliku'l-ḥukamā sent the following reply. "This boil is not fatal. This humble slave has treated for more serious boils. It is not expedient that Nawwāb ṣāhib should decide in favour of the treatment by doctors, despite the availability of devoted ḥakims who are paid thousands of rupees. There is great risk in the treatment by doctors. Let this humble servant be given freedom to settle the course of treatment. God willing, by the beneficence of the most bountiful Lord, the supreme Ḥakīm, the absolute Healer, the Nawwāb will recover from his illness in a short while. May God forbid! In case this helpless slave fails, doctors may treat him. You can decide as you like."

Majdu'd-Dawla Bahādur conveyed the message of the Maliku'l-ḥukamā to Nawwāb Sulḡānu'n-nisā Bēgam. She and her two sisters wept out, prostrated before Nawwāb sahib and said: "Your highness must approve of the choice of the Maliku'l-ḥukamā in the matter of the treatment for the boil. Allāh, the absolute Healer, will restore you to health."

The Nawwāb said, "God has decreed that a doctor should treat for this illness and not yūnāni ḥakīms. I have decided to go to Nuṣrat-maḡall to-morrow morning; then I shall appoint a doctor to treat me for the boil. I have fixed up a house at the back of Nuṣrat-maḡall for your residence/'

Next day early in the morning, the Nawwāb went by a small nālki to Nuṣrat-maḡall. Dr. Fazāl came at about 11 o'clock. Govind Rao was the apothecary and surgeon in the employ of the sarkar. The treatment for the illness was begun from that day. About eleven leeches were stuck on the sides of the boil.

Next day Nawwāb Sulḡānu'n-nisā Bēgam and her sisters shifted their lodgings to a room in Nuṣrat-maḡail, which was very close to the Nawwāb's room. Ḥakim Aḥmadullāh Khān and other ḥakims stayed always in Fataḥ-chawkī and went to Nuṣrat-maḥall in the morning and evening to inquire how the Nawwāb was progressing. The male relatives and officers went to Fataḥ-chawkī twice a day, to inquire about the health of the Nawwāb.

Tāju'l-Umaṛa Bahādur, Ra'Isu'Umaṛa Bahādur and other nephews stayed in Fataḥ-chawki from morning till midnight in obedience to the order of the Nawwāb spending their time in listening to story tellers who narrated stories or read for them Ḥamla-i-Ḥaydari.¹ The story tellers were appointed by the Nawwāb in batches of two and every batch worked by turns for three hours. The Nawwāb assigned to each batch two hundred rupees which they got from Muḥammad Ma'ṣūm through the princes and utilised for necessary expenses.

Mawlānā Abdu'l-Ali ṣāhib paid a visit to the Nawwāb once in two days along with shaykhs and duṃd-khwāns. They occupied themselves in reciting verses of the Qurān, and narrating traditions of the Prophet. They offered prayers and transmitted to him the efficacy of their prayer by the breath of their mouths. Then they returned in about an hour. During his illness Nawwāb ṣāhib continued to observe the religious duties both in the morning and evening, and sent gifts and offerings to shaykhs and sayyids in the name of Allah. Sheep, rams, cows, elephants and camels were given away as ṣadqa in accordance with the advice of astrologers.

One day Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhiba provided four of her own slave girls with beautiful clothes and jewels and gave them each fifty rupees. Then they were put in separate carriages and set at liberty on behalf of the Nawwāb, one at Patan (Georgetown), another at Tirmalkaṛī (Triplicane), the third at Mylapore and the fourth at Pulimādavaram. An alms-house was opened by the sisters and food was distributed twice a day to faqhrs. This practice was continued right through the period of the Nawwāb's illness which lasted for three months.

The doctor visited twice a day in the morning and evening and was very attentive to his duties. But there was no symptom of the boil being cured. Therefore the doctor suggested an operation. He comforted the Nawwāb in every possible way and performed the operation of the boil. During the operation the Nawwāb suffered severe pain; he wept out uttering "Allāh! the Bountiful! O! the Almighty, the pain enough! I have had enough! I don't possess greater power, strength, self-control and patience than this." After the operation was over, the doctor comforted and consoled Nawwāb ṣāhib and directed Govinda Rao to tie up the wound with bandages. Then he came out of the room, narrated the details to Colonel Barrett Bahādur and went away.

After the doctor left, the Nawwāb explained the condition to his sisters and had a little food in their presence. The sisters shed tears on seeing the condition of their brother. But Nawwāb ṣāhib said: "God is bountiful. He will show mercy to me." Notwithstanding his suffering from severe pain, the Nawwāb recited verses solitarily both in the morning and evening during the hour when it is supposed that prayers are granted by God. These verses, the Nawwāb's own composition, were expressive of supplication to the Almighty through the intercession of the Prophet (peace be on him). The Nawwab recited these prayers with tears in his eyes. Then he would apply the tear-drops to the boil as a remedy, for he had faith in their efficacy.

The doctor did his utmost for ten or twelve days after the operation to heal the wound, but of no avail. He was very much perplexed. One day the doctor informed the Governor of the second operation that he was going to perform for the boil, and went to the Nawwāb's residence in the afternoon with two other doctors and opened out in three places. After the removal of the pus, the wounds were tied up with bandages. The Nawwāb suffered severe pain in the process of operation and cried out from the pain.

Colonel Barrett Bahadur was present every day at 5 o'clock in the evening, told the Nawwāb in English all about the affairs of the government and carried out the orders of the Nawwab. Generally Nawwāb Sayful-Mulk Bahādur paid a visit to the Nawwāb in the afternoon to inquire after him and stayed for about an hour. When Colonel Barrett Bahādur and the doctor entered the Nawwāb's room, Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahadur retired into the room of Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam from where he, in accordance with her instructions, listened with attention to the talk among Nawwāb ṣāhib, Colonel Barrett Bahādur and the doctor and informed the Bēgam ṣāhiba of it. When Nawwāb ṣāhib got information of it he was displeased a little and stopped his consultations with Colonel Barrett Bahādur.

When the doctor informed the Governor of the serious condition of the Nawwāb's health, the Governor directed the Town Major, that he should visit the palace twice a week, to inquire how the Nawwāb was progressing. The Town Major went to the kachahl of Colonel Barrett Bahādur at 11 in the morning or sometimes at 5 in the evening. Colonel Barrett reported his arrival to the Nawwāb and then presented the Major, who made inquiries about the Nawwāb's health on behalf of the Governor and went away. Before receiving the Major, Nawwāb ṣāhib tied round his head a rūmāl shāl, wrapped himself up with a malmal chādar, sat up with great difficulty and spoke loudly and steadily with a view to hide from the Major the nature of his illness, weakness and febleness, so that he might get a good impression of the state of his health. After the Major went away, the Nawwāb expressed the idea he had in his mind and spoke thus: "Although I considered that I should behave in the manner I did, yet it was of no avail. The Major would give a detailed report of my illness to the Governor. The supreme Ḥakīm, the absolute Healer, would recover me from this illness."

In brief, the sickness increased day by day. In due course the holy month of Muḥarram approached. The Nawwāb gave orders to Tāju'UJmarā Bahādur and Ra'īsu'l-Umarā Bahādur that they should erect as usual the standards of Alī immediately after seeing the crescent moon. The Bahādurs made everything ready and hoisted the standards of Alī on the night of the 1st of Muḥarram, 1216 A.H. The sisters kept company with the Nawwāb from morning till the time of afternoon-prayer and then went away to their houses to attend to the work in regard to their respective tishūr-khāna.

Victuals for distribution among the faqirs in the name of Nawwāb ṣāhib were got ready on the 6th of Muḥarram. These were carried before Nawwāb ṣāhib in the afternoon, an earnest supplication was made to the Almighty for his recovery and then they were taken by Bahrām Jang Bahādur to the house where the standard of Alī was hoisted. Ladies from the house of Nawwāb Sulṭānrfn-nisā Bēgam also went there, said fātiḥa presenting nadhīr and then returned. Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur and Ra'īsu'l-Umarā Bahādur went there on the 10th night as directed by the Nawwāb, and appointed Amīru'd-Dawla Bahādur, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur and Bahrām Jang Bahādur to supervise the arrangements for lamps and other paraphernalia and remain there till the standard of Alī was brought back after procession.

The anniversary of the Nawwāb's birthday was celebrated on the 26th of Muḥarram as described in the earlier pages. Nawwab sahib was restless owing to his illness,

CH. 1-BUSAMU'L-MULK VISITS THE SICK NAWWAB

Section II.

When Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur heard of the illness of the Nawwāb, he started from Trichinopoly with Muṭahhar Alī Khān Bahādur, his beloved son, for Madras. Armed jawdns, troopers, and infantry numbering about two hundred men with two cannon followed Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur and his son on their journey for protection against waylayers, and palayagdrs who were highway men. A day before his arrival to Madras, Nawwāb ṣāhib had shifted his lodgings from Nuṣrat-maḥall to the house of his senior sister on account of the palpitation of his heart due to sickness. Next day Nawwāb Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur left the jawdns and others in Mubārak-bāgh and went with his son to see the Nawwāb and presented him with nadhhr. Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur felt very happy to meet the Nawwāb, other brothers and sisters. He took up his residence in his own old bagh as desired by the Nawwāb.

Colonel Barrett Bahādur got information about the armed jawdns who accompanied Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur and told the Nawwāb secretly thus: "Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk has brought with him a large army and cannon on the pretext of protection against waylayers on his journey. But in reality Sulḡānu'n-nisā Bēgam had directed him to do so, with ulterior plans which are useless and not workable. His army is now in Mubārak-bāgh."

Nawwāb ṣāhib was very much displeased with his sister. Next day he spoke to her thus: "I don't wish to change my residence from this place, for I feel much better after coming over here. But the doctor is of opinion that the air here is not suitable. He has informed Colonel Barrett Bahādur of this and suggested that the upper storey in Nuṣrat-maḥall would be better because the air is well suited for my health. Therefore, I wish to shift from here to Nuṣrat-maḥall to-morrow early in the morning. You must also move in there as usual."

Suljānu'n-nisā Bēgara replied, "Wheresoever you may go we will also come," The Nawwāb went from the palace of his senior sister to Nusrat-maḥall on the 14th of Ṣafar, 1216 A. H. The Nawwāb's sisters, hakims and servants went there as usual. The treatment by doctors was continued. The Governor inquired frequently of the doctor about the condition of the Nawwāb's health.

SECOND CHAPTER.

Ṭk? serious illness of the Nawwāb; the treatment by the doctors; the scheme to write a waṣiyyat-nama in the name of Tajvll-Umara Bahādur; the displeasure between Sultāniln-nisd Bēgam and Nawtvab Vmdat'uiU Umarā Bahadur; the English army taking possession of Bftgh-i-khaṣṣ, and the demise of the Nawwab.¹

The illness of Nawwāb ṣāhib took a serious turn day by day. The doctors did their utmost by performing operations, and exerted their skill to heal the wound. Yet they could not bring him through. They dressed the wound twice a day. During the time of cleaning the wound and the removal of pus, the Nawwāb felt severe pain, and in that distressed condition he spoke imploringly to the doctor in English. Everyone present in his room was ill at ease like fish out of water, and melted "into tears like candle. The doctor always spoke words consolatorily to him. One day, after the doctor had gone, the Nawwāb told his sisters that his life was despaired of. Seeing his weakness, the sisters wept tears bitter of remorse, although they outwardly comforted their brother thus: "The absolute

Section I.

Next day Nawwāb ṣāḥib invited Colonel Barrett Bahādur, Sālār Jang Bahādur and Bahrām Jang Bahādur to his room at about the time of after-noon prayer, and expressed to them the extremely dangerous condition of his own health. They suggested that a waṣiyyat-nama should be written by the Nawwāb. Therefore Nawwāb ṣāḥib wrote with a strong mind the waṣiyyat-ndtina in his own handwriting in the name of Taḥju'l-Umarā Bahādur, his son. Sālār Jang Bahādur and Taqī All Khān Bahādur were mentioned as witnesses. Then under some pretext he sent for the muhr-i-khdṣṣ which was with his senior sister, set his seal to the ivaṣiyyat-ndma and entrusted it to Taḥju'l-Umara Bahādur in the presence of Colonel Barrett Bahadur and others and spoke thus to his son with a tear-stained face.

"O, my son, my darling, the Almighty, the eternal Lord, has, by means of His grace, conferred upon you this dignity and maṣab. It behoves on you to be watchful and cautious not to let the cord of wisdom slip from your hands. As you attend to every affair in the best manner possible, so must the bridle of government remain in your hands, for you have to face very sagacious and prudent men. You take counsel with friends like Bahrām Jang Bahādur, Sālār Jang Bahādur, Colonel Barrett Bahādur, and Mīr 'Asadullāh Khān Bahādur. Other facts are given in detail in the waṣiyyat-naṅta. You will understand them if you read it. Allah, exalted be He, has custody of my beloved son. He will protect him from the envious and keep him safe from harm/'

He told Sālār Jang Bahādur, Taqī All Khān Bahadur, and Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur thus:

"Take the waṣiyyat-ndma from Taḥju'l-Umarā Bahādur, go over to his mother's house and communicate to her my message: 'The Lord of the universe has, by the intercession of the Prophet, the last of the messengers, conferred upon your son the dignity of headship over the kingdom of the Carnatic, and it shall bring happiness to you. It is necessary that you should take care of your son and it must bring happiness to you'/'

He called Ri?ā Nawāz Khān, the bakhshī, and said to him thus: "Allāh, exalted be He, has conferred dignity upon All Iṣusayn by making him my successor. You should always remain in his presence night and day with some jawans."

He told Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur thus: "From this day, you must be by my side at all times; come and go in the morning and evening to inquire after me." Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur acted up to the wishes of his father from that day.

Sālār Jang Bahādur, Bahrām Jang Bahādur, Taqī Alī Khān Bahādur, and Mir Asadullāh Khān Bahādur, remained in the presence of Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur night and day in accordance with the command of the Nawwāb.

The news about the waṣiyyat-natna was already well-known. When Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam heard it, she was very much depressed and enraged. She complained of her brother to Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur thus: "Nawwāb ṣāhib has neglected us. He has not kept his promises made to me. He will get retribution for his faithlessness from the absolute Qazī/' Sayfrīl-Mulk Bahādur replied, "My sister, these unworthy words do not become you. Do not reveal your feelings to others, for it is improper." Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam was ill-disposed towards Nawwāb ṣāhib; her displeasure became manifest whenever she met the Nawwāb and had a talk with him. Nawwāb ṣāhib understood it, and wisely feigned ignorance of it. One day the Bēgam ṣāhiba expressed her feelings strongly thus: "If my brother harbours any doubt or suspicion against me, let the royal repast be got ready elsewhere," Nawwāb ṣāhib replied, "I am neither displeased with you; nor I have any doubt about you. You are entertaining such feelings in your mind."

CH. 2-ILLNESS OF NAWWAB UMDATU'L-UMARA

The Nawwāb from that day made arrangements for his food with the mother of Tajū'l-Umarā Bahādur. Generally he had his dinner in the maxīma and occasionally in the zenana. The Nawwāb and his sister kept up friendly relations outwardly but there was displeasure in their hearts. When Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam made secret enquiries of hakims about the health of the Nawwāb and learnt that his life was despaired of, she transported to her own house the things and boxes of the sarkār that were in her custody, while she, at every moment, expressed outwardly her deep grief for her brother.

Section 2.

The frangs designed from the earliest time to bring the kingdom of the Carnatic under their control, but it was not possible to do so. Now they found a favourable opportunity in the illness of the Nawwāb. They were keeping in touch with the doctors and ascertaining the condition of the Nawwāb's health. One day the Town Major came to Fataḥ-chawkl to inquire after the Nawwāb as usual. He was admitted into the Nawwāb's room along with Colonel Barrett Bahādur. Then the Major inquired secretly of the Colonel about certain things, told him also something and then went away. The same day Colonel Barrett Bahādur presented himself purposely before the Nawwāb at about the time of sun-set prayer and submitted in secrecy thus:

"Hearing that your highness' life is despaired of, Nawwāb Suljānu'n-nisā Bēgam, during the past two or three days when prayers were offered for the recovery of your highness, had collected one hundred armed men in the diwan-khana of Ralsu'l-Umarā Bahādur. As per the advice of Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam, Ilusāmu'd-Dawla also had brought with him from Nattharnagar a large army, cannon and cannon ball, gunpowder, and other implements of war, and had left these in Mubārak-bagln In these circumstances, it is not known what kind of mischief will crop up. This slave had acquainted your highness with the facts."

The Nawwāb was very much disturbed at this painful news, and said, "My friend, what shall we do for this?" The Colonel replied, "It seems to me that a small army may be sought of the company, and they may be placed as guards in Fataḥ-chawkl and the bagh wherever necessary till your highness recovers from illness. This is a prudent measure. The army may be sent back when your highness recovers your health."

After careful consideration Nawwāb ṣāhib replied: "I do not think it is advisable to do so. I do not want the English army in the bagh" The Colonel submitted: "Your highness is not in peril of anything. This is a good and wise plan, and there is no impropriety about it. On the other hand, it is the proper way to deal with the seditious and rebellious people. It will guarantee security and tranquillity for your highness and the prosperous prince." The powerless Nawwāb said: "Choose the proper thing and do it in the proper way."

Next day, on the 16th of Ṣafar, 1216 A.H., Colonel Barrett Bahādur presented himself before the Nawwāb early in the morning, inquired how he was, got renewed the order to bring the English troops into the bagh, went to the garden of the Governor, and requisitioned an army. Then he returned to Bāgh-i-khāṣṣ and enjoined on the guards at the gate to let the company's forces and their sardars into the bāgh as they had the permission of the Nawwāb to enter.

The English army, which was already in readiness at the Governor's bagh, marched at once under Colonel McLean and other sardars with two elephant-loads of tents, cannon, cannon-ball, gun-powder, and other implements of war, besides manacles, and ten or fifteen ntiyana. They entered Bāgh-i-khāṣṣ at about 10 o'clock, immediately after Colonel Barrett Bahādur reached Fataḥ-chawkl, and stationed themselves at its gates,

CH. 2-THE ENGLISH ARMY AT THE BAGH

Nawwāb sahib was very much perplexed after the arrival of the English troops. He conveyed his salam and the following message to Colonel McLean through Colonel Barrett Bahādur.

"Your pahra may be stationed along with the pahra of the sarkar in places assigned to them by Bahrām Jang Bahādur and Sayyid Riza Nawaz Khan, the bakhshi. Enjoin them not to quarrel or to create mischief. Whomsoever the pahra of the sarkar stops from entering the high or permits to enter it, the English pahra also should follow them and act in the same manner. Whomsoever they attack, the English pahra also should do so."

Bahram Jang Bahādur and Sayyid Rizā Nawāz Khān, the bakhshi, were told thus:

"The Governor ṣāhib, out of his kindness, has sent an army under Colonel McLean as a precaution to ward off certain evils. I have also given Colonel McLean a hint of some matters. You also meet him and form plans to pitch tents for the English army opposite to the sahn of the old building contiguous to the big gate of the bagh. You must also take steps as early as possible to clean the old house and provide- quarters for Colonel McLean. Let one English guard be posted at the big gate, two at the other gates of the bagh, and four at the gate of Nuṣrat-mahall, facing the house of the elder sister. One English guard and a pahra of the sarkar should be posted at Fataḥ-chawki. Cannon and such other things must be kept in front of the army quarters." The Nawwāb was busy giving these orders till the time of sunset prayer. He gave orders to Colonel Barrett Bahādur that he should arrange to send bhatta to Colonel McLean through Taqi Ali Khan Bahadur in accordance with the regulations for the expenses of the Company's army, and that he must attend to all their needs."

As soon as the news about the arrival of the army spread in the bagh, everyone was thrown into a fright. The Nawwāb's sisters who got information about the arrival of the English army with implements of war, felt grief about it and spoke thus to the Nawwāb:

"May Allāh, exalted be He, keep you safe and sound in life for many years, and make you the medium for bringing about our happiness. It is not known why the English army has come into the bāgh?"

Nawwāb sahib attempted to console them thus, while tears trickled down his cheeks: "Don't take the alarm. It is reported that palayagars and others in this country are disposed to rebel and defy lawful authority in different areas. So the Governor of Madras, out of kindness and good will, has sent an army of the Company for our protection. Do not be anxious and give way to any kind of fear." The sisters expressed their deep sorrow for their brother, fell at his feet, supplicated to God for his health and took leave of him.

In brief, the illness developed day by day. The Nawwāb's strength and endurance decreased. However much the doctors endeavoured to treat him for the boils, it was of no avail. The Nawwāb was restless day and night on account of the bodily pain. One day he sent for Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur and spoke to him some words mixed with good advice. He told him thus:

"Agīmu'd-Dawla¹ is humble and meek. It is necessary that you stay always with him and inquire after him. Dine with him and do not leave him alone. Every work must be attended to with skill and intelligence. Everyone should be treated politely and in a friendly manner."

Taju'l-Umara Bahadur, in accordance with the advice of his father, kept company with Agimu'd-Dawla Bahādur and was very courteous to him. Taju' l-Umarā Bahādur went twice in a day to inquire after his father, followed by armed jawns and chobdars. He remained in the presence of his father for about (1) See pages 23-24 in this book.

CH. 2-SERIOUS ILLNESS OF NAWWAB -UMDATU'L-UMARA

aa hour and then returned. Sometimes Sayyid Riza Nawaz Khān the bakhshl, at other times Taqī All Khan Bahadur and Sālār Jang Bahādūr also went with Tajū' 1-Umarā Bahādūr.

Section 3.

When the illness reached a stage in intensity, the strength and vitality of the Nawwāb declined. He was having a sensation of heat and pain due to the boils. During the morning hours he recited in solitude verses expressive of humble supplication to the supreme Healer and the true Ḥakīm for his recovery. He would recite one hundred verses and then say istighfar; then he would repeat the words tawba, and d-bfw, while tears trickled down his cheeks. His supplication and lamentation reached downstairs and those present there expressed their deep sorrow for the Nawwāb. Whenever Mawlānā Abdu' 1-All sahib, Sayyid Shāh Karīmullāh ṣāhib, and Shāh Maḥmūd ṣāhib Sāwī, paid a visit to the Nawwāb, he entreated them to pray for his recovery and said: "I am in a precarious state of health and cannot be recovered to life." They comforted the Nawwāb thus: "Your highness need not be disturbed. Allāh, exalted be He, is the supreme Ḥakīm, and the true Healer. His institution for the care of the sick is endowed with ability to cure all. Allāh, glory be to Him, will keep your exalted highness safe and sound for many years. The present suffering will not last for more than two days, for says A115h, 'Surely with difficulty is ease: With difficulty is surely ease!' " Then they recited some verses from the Quran and transmitted to him the efficacy of their recitations by the breath of their mouths and then took leave of the Nawwāb. The exalted Nawwāb called back Mawlānā ṣāhib, seated him nearer to his pillows, took hold of the Mawlānā's hands, placed them on his own head and eyes and said:

"This old slave is named Ghulam Husayn. This name was chosen for this decrepit man by his venerable mother who got the guidance in istikharo. The exalted Nawwab ṣāhib, my father, gave me the name Ghulam Wall. But men without understanding think that I do not conform to the faith of my ancestors because of my name Ghulam Ḥusayn, and my raising the standard of All during the month of Muḥarram. But the truth of it is as follows: During the reign of my exalted father, my dear brother Nasiru'l-Mulk Lalumiyan, used to hoist the standards in the month of Muḥarram with my permission in our residence. I also gave my influential support to that. On the night of the 10th of Muḥarram, the standards were taken out in a procession on a howdah with lights and retinue. During my reign also, permission was given to hoist the standards in the old house, opposite to the gate of Bāgh-i-kalān, out of regard for the wishes of my senior sister. She used to go to the old house with langar-i-mannat of the ladies as well as of myself and hoist them. If 'ulamS saw in it reason to suspect the strength of my itndn, then Allāh knows what is what. I never deviated from the right course even for a minute. I make a confession of my faith to you. Allāh is my witness. I declare that I follow the religion of my father. I am certain that I shall not recover from this terrible illness, for it increases day by day; weakness has taken hold of me; I am sinking. God wills that it should be so. We have to submit to His will. I trust that your holiness will be by my side in my last moments, and teach me the names of Allāh, the Creator, and His prophet. You must also ask Shāh Alīmullāh ṣāhib to read the sura-i-yasin. After the spirit takes flight, supply me with provisions for my journey to the next world in the same manner as was done for my forefathers, so that I might find my salvation."

Mawlānā ṣāhib came out with a tear-stained face, and recounted the talk he had with the Nawwab to Amlru'd-Dawla Bahadur, Iftikharu'd-Dawla Bahadur, Salar Jang Bahadur, Bah-rām Jang, Bahadur, Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur and others.

CH. 2-THE NAWWAB'S LAST DAYS

Next day the doctor also lost hope of the Nawwāb's recovery. He told Colonel Barrett Bahadur thus: "Today the condition of the patient seems to be that the boil cannot be healed, for the heart is infected with it. He will be alive for two or three days. It is a pity that all the treatment has been wasted. I had great hopes of his recovery."

After listening to the doctor, Colonel Barrett Bahādur was very much disturbed. He went with Sālār Jang Bahādur, and Taqī All Khān Bahādur to Taḥju'l-Umarā Bahādur in Fataḥ-chawkl and communicated to him the opinion of the doctor. Then they consulted with one another and decided to arrange for certain things.

Two or three days passed in the same restless condition for the Nawwāb. On the 2nd of Rabī'u'l-awwal, 1216 A.H., Nawwāb ṣāhib felt great restlessness, and underwent pangs of death. Ḥakīm Aḥmadullāh Khān and some other ḥakims, all officers and relatives remained there from sunset till next morning. The sisters were inquiring every minute after the condition of the pulse.

Section 4.

The world-illuminating sun appeared on the 3rd morning, but the veil of restlessness and sorrow was not lifted up and the hearts of the people were rent by pain. Sālār Jang Bahādur, in accordance with the order of Taḥju'l-Umarā Bahādur, invited Mawlānā ṣāhib, Shāh Alīmullāh ṣāhib, and other elders and gathered them together before Nawwāb ṣāhib to recite verses of the holy Qurān, and traditions of the Prophet, so that the Nawwāb might give ear to the sound, strengthen his Iman and find his salvation.

Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur who was affectionately devoted to the Nawwāb, recited the sūro-i-yasin. When the sisters heard the sound of the reading of the sura-i-yasin, they wept out in the zenana. This depressed Taḥju'l-Umarā Bahādur. He went into the zenana and admonished his aunts thus: "You are close by the mardana. The life of the Nawwab is sinking. Weeping and availing in this way are not proper, for the noise is heard outside. You may go to your houses." Nawwāb Suḡānu'n-niṣā Bēgam and her sisters were displeased at this stern rebuke. They immediately got into their conveyances, and went to their houses, from where they were constantly inquiring about the health of their brother. Every minute Hakim Ahmadullah Khan and other hakims were feeling the pulse of the Nawwāb. They told Sālār Jang Bahādur and others as follows:—"It is a thousand pities that the state of the Nawwāb's health has come to such a pass. The doctor lost hope a week ago. If he had withdrawn his treatment a month earlier, we could have treated the Nawwāb. We have good wishes for the Nawwāb, but we did not have the good luck. Such an independent ruler as he is, has one foot in grave."

Nawwāb sahib suffered the pangs of death from early morning till about 8 A.M. Then just as the flame of a candle, that is about to die out, emits much light, the Nawwāb recovered from the agony of death and spoke in aloud voice thus;

"Why all this noise and confusion and such a large crowd around me. ? Get out 1" Immediately all went out. About an hour later Muḡammad Ma'ṣūm and Muḡammad Rōṣhan, who were present near the Nawwāb, came out in great excitement and informed Mawlānā ṣāhib and Sālār Jang Bahādur that Nawwab ṣāhib had reached his last moments. Immediately the Bahādur and Mawlānā ṣāhib went near the Nawwāb with Hakim Aḡmadullah Khan. The hattm felt the pulse, and permitted others to come near Nawwab sahib's bed. Allmullah Shāh sahib and others assembled there, and began to recite the verses of the holy Quran. Aralru' d-Dawla Bahadur, Iftikfairu' d-Dawla Bahādur, and Bahrām Jang Bahādur did not come, for they were afraid of the Nawwab's displeasure. In the mean* while Colonel Barrett Bahādur came with the doctor and wanted to led the pulse. Mawlana sahib sent word through Salar Jang Bahādur that it was not the proper time for the doctor to feel the pulse. Sālār Jang Bahādur approached Colonel Barrett Bahādur and the doctor, and explained to them in a way and managed to send them away from Nuṣrat-maḥall. When Nawwāb gusāmu'l-Mulk Bahadur entered the Nawwāb's room in Nuṣrat-maḥall with Amlru'd-Dawla Bahādur, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur, and Bahrām Jang Bahādur, Hakīm Ahmadullah Khan who was feeling the pulse, turned about and said loudly with a sorrowful and inconsolable voice, 'Verily we are for Allah and to Allāh we return.' Then the hakim rose from his seat.

Immediately after hearing this heart-rending news, the confusion caused by pain and sorrow reached the heavens. Great tumult, as on the judgment day, arose in all palaces, houses, lanes, baḏars, and everywhere. Nawwāb Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur, got by the side of the dead body with his nephews and gave passionate expression to his grief. In the meanwhile Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur went into the room and fell at the feet of Nawwāb Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur overcome by deep sorrow. The Nawwāb lifted him up, embraced him, consoled him and conducted him to Fataḥ-chawki, his residence, and took leave of him. Then Nawwāb Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur, with a tear-stained face, accompanied the nephews to the house of the senior sister. He consoled all the sisters and their daughters, who lamented for the late Nawwāb and returned to his own residence. An hour or two later, Colonel McLean, the commander in the bagh, in accordance with the orders of the Governor, posted armed jawāns at all gates of the palaces, and at the gate of the baḡh, in addition to the jawāns already posted in those places. After making all arrangements, Colonel McLean returned to his quarters.

Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur called Bahrām Jang Bahādur and gave orders that he should get quickly three thousand rupees from Colonel Barrett Bahādur, make ready everything for the funeral in consultation with Mawlana Abdu'l-Ali sahib and send the coffin of Nawwab sahib in great splendour to Nattharnagar in the company of Hefiz Ahmad Khan. Bahram Jang Bahadur received the amount from the Colonel, and busied himself in washing the dead body and shrouding it under the guidance of Mawlana sahib and other flints.

i Nawwāb Suljānrfn-nisā Bēgam had a discussion with Taju'l-Umarā Bahādur through the mediation of Mir Asadullah Khān Bahādur in regard to the sending of the coffin by kamdn-darwdsa of Nuṣrat-maḥall towards the palace of the Bēgam ṣāhiba. The washing of the dead body and other religious rites were gone through An hour before sunset. As the Bēgam ṣāhiba did not permit the coffin to be carried through the kaman-darwaza, the coffin, adorned with ghildf and ṣhdmýdnā, was left the whole night with guards in the daldn of Nusrat-mahall opposite to the kaman-darwaza. Next day at about 7 o'clock in the morning, funeral service was held in the ṣahn of Nuṣrat-maḥall. Then the wall behind Nuṣrat-maḥall was demolished in accordance with the order of Taju'l-Umara Bahadur and the coffin was carried through that way in great splendour followed by a retinue and julas and was dispatched to Nattharnagar in the company of Ḥafiz Ahmad Khān. A salute of fifty-six guns in proportion to the age of the Nawwab was fired from the fort of Madras and the ships.

The Governor of Madras wrote to the commander in Nattharnagar thus: "The coffin of the exalted Nawwab Umdatul-Umara Bahādur Wāḥajāh I I . has been sent to Nattharnagar. The army must follow the coffin as far as the burial ground and a salute of guns should be fired from all forts in the kingdom as far as Nattharhagar."¹
